PREFACE

THIS volume represents some ten years voluntary work undertaken for the National Register of Archives since that body was first formed. It has involved the examination, calendaring and indexing of all documents prior to the year 1600 of the following collections presently lodged in the Register House: Charters of the Earl of Galloway, Lochnaw (Agnew) Charters, Logan (McDowell) Charters, and Barnbarroch (Vaus) Charters; in addition to the following collections, still in private hands, Mochrum Park (Dunbar) Charters, Myrton (McCulloch) Charters, Monreith (Maxwell) Charters, the Craichlaw and Shennanton Papers, and the Cardoness and Kirkconnell Charters, as well as much unpublished material in the Scottish Record Office. I have to express my thanks to the owners and custodians for giving me the necessary access and facilities. In the presentation and editing of these documents I have received ready assistance from many quarters, but I would fail in my duty if I did not mention especially Mrs. A. I. Dunlop, LL.D., and Dr. Gordon Donaldson, who have ungrudgingly drawn on their wide experience as archivists, and Mr. Athol Murray, LL.B., of the Scottish Record Office, who has called my attention to documents and entries in the public records and even undertaken a search of the Registers of the Archbishops of York. Above all I must acknowledge, on matters relating to the pre-Reformation Church, my indebtedness to the Rev. Father J. O'Dea for generously placing at my disposal many appropriate transcripts from the Vatican archives, especially relating to Glenluce. Dr. E. W. M. Balfour-Melville, as Secretary of the Society, has added to many past services by reading the proofs and saving the author from some blunders and omissions.

INTRODUCTION

I. THE FEUDALISATION OF GALLOWAY

It has been said that 'the history of Galloway is a blank from the time when the father of Kenneth I was slain upon the borders of Kyle (844) until the days of David I.'¹ The intervening three centuries supply a minimum of data on which it is almost impossible to form any clear conclusions. The same must be said of its once powerful neighbour the ancient kingdom of Strathclyde, which at one time had extended from Clyde to Solway, embracing, linguistically at least, what is now the modern Galloway. But by the year 756 Strathclyde had become subject to Northumbria,² and though it made several efforts to throw off that suzerainty the pedigrees of its kings seem to end with Run, son of Arthgal.³ In 870 Alclyde now Dumbarton, the capital of the kingdom, after a four months' siege by the Northmen, was taken and destroyed.⁴ In 875 a new foe swept into Strathclyde from the south when Halfdan the Dane made great slaughter of the Stracled Wealas, as the Strathclyde Britons are called in the Saxon Chronicle, leaving desolation and destitution in his wake and rendering Carlisle uninhabited for two centuries. In 878 Eochaid, son of Run, king of the Strathclyde Britons, is stated to have been expelled from the kingdom.⁵ He can have left but little kingdom behind him. The wretched Britons, assailed on all sides, were that year deprived of the support of their kinsmen in Wales by the death of Rydderch ap Mervyn. So the men of Strathclyde, who refused to be absorbed by the English, decided to forsake the ancient country of their forefathers and go to Gwynedd. A considerable body under the leadership of a man named Constantine set forth for a new home in Wales. Constantine fell in battle at Lochmaben attempting to force a way south. But his followers, undismayed by his loss, persevered in their enterprise, arriving—perhaps by sea—in time to assist the northern Welsh to win the great battle of the Conway.¹ They had been promised by king Anaraut to be allowed to settle in his domains if they could drive out the English. ‘Thus Gwynedd was freed from the English through the might of the Men of the North.’² It seems as if the remnants of the population of Strathclyde were deprived not by conquest but by devastation of their richer lands and larger settlements, sinking, it may well be, lower in the scale of civilisation and nursing in song and legend the tradition of a greatness that had passed away—of the heroic days of Coel Hen and Urien of Rheged—until today such songs are only represented by folklore or remembered in nursery rhymes, such as Old King Cole. In the 10th century, as the probable result of Irish-Norse invasions of western England, a notable expansion of the British or Cumbrian kingdom of Strathclyde occurred. As late as the reign of Edward the Confessor the district defined by the Derwent, the Eamont, the Pennine range and the marshes at the head of Solway were covered by the phrase the ‘lands that were Cumbrian’³. Whether this area was recovered by the king of Scottish Strathclyde or established its own autonomy has yet to be established.⁴ But in 945 there was a Dunmail, king of Cumbria, who was defeated by king Edmund, successor to Athelstan, and has been claimed⁵ as none other than the Strathclyde king Dun-

These Norsemen from the Isles were a hybrid race from Norse fathers and Gaelic mothers. They seem to have settled in the Whithorn area early in the 10th century and spread along the coasts and up the valleys. The tombstone of one of them is still to be seen as a lintel of Wamphray church. Their presence in modern Galloway has been the subject of a careful study by W. G. Collingwood.² But for the counties north of Dumfriesshire and Galloway we must await the further volumes of the Ancient Monuments Commission and a future historian. The collapse of Strathclyde was the Norse opportunity, and at the opening of the 11th century it was possible for a chronicler to describe the south of Scotland as 'From the Tweed to the great river Forth are Looinne (Lothian) and Galweya.'³ The Norse from the west must have penetrated and spread over the thinly populated and largely desolated lands of Strathclyde, from the west coast almost to the forest of Selkirk.⁴ Whithorn was their centre in the south and soon after the battle of Clontarf (1014) an Icelander came thither and spent the winter with the Norse Malcolm, earl of Argyll.⁵ In 1034 is recorded the death of Suibne, Kenneth's son, king of the Galwegians.⁶ Suibne or Sweeny: the Norse would have probably called him a jarl or an earl, the Irish equivalent term being king. This 'king' was followed by Thorfin the Mighty, who according to the Orkneyinga Saga possessed not only a large riki in Ireland and all the Isles but also nine earldoms in Scotland.¹ These earldoms are not specified, but they almost certainly included Dumfriesshire and a Galloway greatly extended northwards and eastward. The Saga says 'he resided in turn in Caithness and in what is called Gaddgedler, where England and Scotland meet'. But after his return from Rome he must have spent most of his time at Birsay. So powerful was he that on his death, c. 1065, king Malcolm married his widow Ingibiorg to conciliate the large Norse element within his kingdom. Thorfin certainly was in Galloway in 1041-2 for he sent a foraging force into England which was destroyed by the English² and in 1054 his Galwegians had to repel successfully the sons of Harold who had slain Godfrey, king of Man, and wished to subdue the coast of Galloway. So vigorous was the resistance that on returning to Man the invaders in revenge slew all the Galwegians who dwelt there.³ This may refer to the actions of the Norse fleet that year, mentioned in the Irish Annals—the fleet of the Gallgaedel, Arran, Man, Kintyre and the sea-board of Alban, under the command of MacScelling a Norwegian.

Skene⁴ recognised the great extent of Galloway in the days of Thorfin and published a conjectural map of it as at the commencement of the feudal era. But he perpetuated an anachronism in so far as his modern Galloway is assigned to the southern Picts, whilst Gallweia covers Annandale and the shires of Lanark, Renfrew and Ayr—the ancient Strathclyde. There is no evidence at present of a regular Norse settlement in that extensive area. They probably claimed it and did what they liked within it. But it must have been somewhat of a no-man's-land and no doubt the remarkable conditions in Annandale revealed in David's Inquest were equally applicable to all ancient Strathclyde in the 12th century.

⁴ 'The name of Gallweia in its more extended sense consisted of the districts extending from Solway to the Clyde.' Fordun, Scotichronicon (ed. Skene), ii, 431.

Some weight can be attached to this racial alignment from the opening phrases of David's charters. They are normally addressed to named sheriffs and the like or to omnibus baronibus suis et amicis suis, Francis et Anglis. But in several instances this is varied. Thus a grant to Wetheral in 1139 is addressed to *Francis, Anglis et Cumbrensibus*¹ and a very wide protection to the English priory of Tyne-mouth in 1138 is addressed to Francis et Anglis et Scotis et Galwensibus.² Where there was a material Galloway (or Norse) element in the population the charter would include a reference to them. It is rather remarkable that there is no mention of Galwegians in the first Annandale charter to Brus. That element may not have been present in any strength in Annandale. Yet the c. 1150 charter to Brus of forest rights in Annandale is addressed to Francis et Angliis et Galweensibus. The foundation charter to Melrose in 1143-4 also is addressed to Francis et Anglicis et Scottis et Galwensibus, doubtless because Melrose had lands in Nithsdale, then in Galloway.³ As late as 1158 Malcolm IV in a charter addressed to French, English, Scots and Galwegians confirmed a grant by David I to Walter fitz Alan of Paisley Abbey lands.⁴ The same formula figures in David's charters to Dryburgh of the churches of Lanark and Pettinane in 1150.⁵ Doubts have been thrown by Lawrie⁶ on another charter of David confirming the rights of Kelso which included 'the tithe of beasts and pigs of the can of the four cadrez of that (part of) Galloway which during the lifetime of king Alexander, I (i.e. David) had'. The exact meaning of cadrez is not clear, but it must refer to the four districts of Galloway mentioned in David's charter to the church of St. Kentigern at Glasgow in 1139-41, namely Strathgryfe, the ancient name for Renfrewshire, Cunningham, Kyle and Carrik. It is significant that this Glasgow charter was addressed to the barons of the whole realm tam Gawensibus quam Anglicis et Scotis.¹ It should be noted that Galloway is given the priority of mention perhaps because the charter related to the can or render of Galloway. The four districts named were at that date or had been a part of Galloway and not Scotland.² Even stronger evidence is found in a precept of Malcolm IV addressed to Uchtred and Gilbert, sons of Fergus, and to Radulf and Dovenald, sons of Dunegal, and to all their men in Galloway and in Clydesdale not to molest anyone going to or returning from the lands of Dunrod which Fergus had given to Holyrood.³ Lastly there is the 'fosse of the Galwegians' on Kersope burn mentioned in a charter c. 1130.⁴ T. B. H. Graham suggests it was an early boundary betwixt the English barony of Liddle and Scottish territory.⁵

These documents go some way to establish the wide-spread area of Galloway at the commencement of the feudal era. Some three-quarters of this area were bounded by sea or water. The land boundary was quite undefined and therefore always a menace to the Lothians. The obvious policy of the Crown was to complete the encirclement on land of this enlarged Galloway, prevent the spread of disturbance outwith it and then gradually to contract the circle. Equally essential was it to keep open the Roman road from Carlisle to the western end of the Antonine Wall.⁶ That was the problem presented to David and the policy carried out by himself and his successors, namely territorial curtailment followed by conquest. The first step was the grant of Annandale to Brus, c. 1124, to be held by the service of 10 knights. Based on the great mote of Annan, it was a key position and was placed in strong hands.

² The charter was attested by Fergus of Galloway and Radulf and Dovenald, sons of Donegal of Nithsdale, who had to pay that can.

⁶ For the use made of Roman roads in mediæval Lanarkshire see some suggestive remarks by J. T. T. Brown in his Royal Burgh of Rutherglen (Scottish Historical Review, xxiii, 242-57).

Nithsdale was left in Galloway, from which it was detached in a later reign.¹ The king's castle of Lanark must have been erected shortly after (certainly by 1150 when the church was gifted to Dryburgh), for by 1161 it was in the hands of Baldwin de Biggar, possible ancestor of the Fleming family. Renfrewshire by 1161 was firmly in the hands of Walter, son of Alan, rendering the service of five knights,² and, if Kilwinning Abbey was founded in 1140, Cunningham must by then have been granted to Hugh de Moreville, and Ayrshire north of the Irvine Water was no longer in Galloway.³

At what date Kyle was taken over by the crown is not known, but Carrick was still a part of Galloway. How much of this was due to the three campaigns in a year of Malcolm IV is not clear, but these invasions of Galloway may perhaps be interpreted as a combined operation by three separate forces, the obvious strategy to employ over the wide area of an enlarged Galloway. It was followed by the strengthening of the central frontier in Upper Clydesdale by the settlement there of numerous Flemings, the most renowned fighting troops of the period—Tancred at Thankerton, Wice at Wiston, Robert, probably a son of Wice, at Roberton, Lambin, his brother at Lammington, whilst Baldwin the Fleming was placed at Biggar to control the gap there on the immemorial east-west route across the Lowlands.⁴ In the next reign William the Lion completed the task. C. 1186 he created the burgh of Dumfries and deprived Galloway of Nithsdale and in 1197 he severed Carrick from Galloway by establishing his new castle at Ayr, the sheriffdom of Ayr stretching as far south as Laich

Alpin on the Wigtownshire border. From that moment the boundaries of Galloway have been unchanged.

Fergus of Galloway (pre-1136-61) is generally reputed to have introduced feudalism into his domain.¹ He is supposed to have married an illegitimate daughter of Henry I, with whom he certainly had some kinship.² His work for the church, however, clearly indicates that he had come under Norman influence. That he introduced Anglo-Normans into Galloway must be accepted, for a rising after his death drove them all out.

Such innovations were naturally resented by the Galwegians and there was even trouble in the family of Fergus. In the Life of Ailred of Rievaulx it is recounted how Ailred succeeded in reconciling the family, for there had been much bloodshed between Fergus and his sons as well as betwixt his two sons.³

No charter of Fergus has survived, yet he must have introduced military tenure at least in part, for there is reason to believe that he infest the greatest feudal vassal in Scotland in the lands of Borgue. For c. 1150 Hugh de Moreville, who held all Cunningham and Lauderdale and was Constable of Scotland, granted to Dryburgh for the soul's welfare of his father and himself his church of Worgis (Borgue).⁴ It is not known how Hugh acquired

¹ Fergus was of purely native stock. His father is believed to have been named Somerled, a common Gaelic-Norse name. Miss M. D. Legge suggested this identification in her Notes on the Roman de Fergus (D. and G. Trans., xxvii, 163). It was adopted by Mr. Raleigh Radford (Ibid., xxviii, 95).

² Scots Peerage, iv, 135.

⁴ The date is that of the editor of Registrum de Dryburgh, No. 68. In the register this grant is described as 'prima donatio'.

Borgue, but it may well be that owing to the troubles king David had with Fergus he may have insisted that Fergus should grant Borgue to Hugh de Moreville in order to maintain order in eastern Galloway. If so, it must surely have been held by knight service. Some twenty years later, c. 1170, Sir Ralph de Campania was the feudal owner and he too granted the patronage of the church to Dryburgh, renouncing 'whatever right I have or may have'.¹ This was followed, c. 1230, by a confirmation by Nicolas de Campania of a gift of his grandfather Radulf. The family of Campania probably supported Balliol at a later date and forfeited their estate.²

² The Campanias may be descended from Warner de la Campaign who in 1171 had a duel concerning land in Saxby in Lincolnshire (Farrer, Early Yorkshire Charters, 1914, iii, 220). In c. 1207 Sir Ralf de Campania witnessed a charter by Alan, son of Roland, to Kelso along with Sir Patrick de Culwen and Sir William de Geveleston (Liber de Calchou, p. 203), and c. 1240 along with Sir Roger de Quenci the Constable, a grant to Soltre (Charters of Collegiate Churches, Bannatyne Club, p. 18). By 1233 as Constable of Roxburgh he witnessed a Melrose grant. c. 1210 a Bertram de Champayne witnessed a grant to St. Bees of a half mark yearly from the mill of Kirkandrews in Borgue (J. Wilson, Reg. of St. Bees, p. 7), and a few years later a Randolf de Caude Campania witnessed another grant to the same monastery (ibid., p. 98). At the same period there were two brothers Robert and Henry, the former being seneschal to John, earl of Huntingdon, figuring as witnesses to an Arbroath document (Reg. de Arbroath, pp. 57, 97), and a Walter Campania with other clerks of Alan of Galloway witnessed an obligation (Reg. Episcopatus Glasguensis, i, 117). Peter la Champayne in 1234 was attorney for Christiana, wife of William de Albermarle, to seek her share of the earl of Chester's lands (Bain, i, 1342). Another Peter, clerk, was ordained by William Fraser bishop of St. Andrews to receive from the prior of St. Andrews £100 for which the prior substituted the liferent of the barony of Kirkness (Reg. Prioratus de St. Andree, p. 177). He must have been the parson of Kynkel whose lands were restored to him in 1296 by Edward I (Rot. Scot., i, 24b).

It is possible that the first Campania married an unrecorded daughter of de Moreville and so got Borgue, a lordship that was remote from the other Moreville lands. Sir Robert de Campania, son and heir of Nicolas, quitclaimed Borgue to Dervorgilla in 1282 in perpetuity under penalty of £208, 13s. 4d. of silver (Bain, ii, 212-14); the lands had been in ward since his father's death. In 1295 Mabilia de Champayne appointed an attorney as she was setting out for Galloway (ibid., ii, 53) and the following year Sir Ralf de Campania and a William de C., both of the county of Wigtown, rendered homage to Edward I (ibid., ii, 198, 730 and p. 200). It seems that some other member of the family must have reacquired Borgue, for in 1306-7 Hugh de Champagne petitioned Edward I for mitigation of the relief for his lands in Galloway wasted by the war, failing which he would be obliged to sell them (ibid., ii, 1984). He was dead that March and his heiress was married to Dougal McDowell younger (ibid., ii, 1905). The last of the family was Thomas Caumpaignes, valet in Scotland, who held

The gift of Fergus to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem in England must not be omitted, though there is nothing to show that it was held on military service. The tantalising reference in Dugdale (1661, ii, 551)—Fergus rex Galwitensium dedit terram de Galwyte—tells us very little. It occurs in an account of the Hospital of St. John in England of 1434. It must refer to Galtway, an extinct parish adjoining Kirkcudbright. The church of Galtweid belonged to Holyrood and was part of the spirituality of that abbey's daughter house, the Priory of Trail. Its church is mentioned in a papal bull of 1193 and the lands of Galtweie are said to be enclosed by the great road (magna via) and the sea.¹ The lands or part of them, were given by Fergus to Holyrood.² In 1192 Alan, prior of the Hospital in England, granted to Holyrood that priory's land in Galloway called Artun (or Irtona) and Hirtun with all the liberties which Roland had confirmed to the English house, rendering yearly 40s.³ Galtway was a £10 land divided into two halves—the grants of Fergus to the Hospital and to Holyrood. At the Reformation the Crown granted to James, lord St. John, the lands and baronies of Torphichen, etc., and Galtua for '10,000 crowns of the sone,'⁴ and Galtway was feued to members of the McClellane family.⁵

On the death of Fergus (1161), his two sons Uchtred and Gilbert succeeded. It is suggested here that eastern Galloway was controlled by Uchtred and western Galloway a great place (locum) there and had suffered great damage and scaith in Edward's service for which he was given £10 of victuals in 1341-2 (Rotuli Scotiae, i, 623b), and in June 1343 he was granted 12d per diem till he could recover his lands in Scotland lost for his adherence to Edward III (Bain, iii, 1415). This 'locum' may well be the triangular earthwork site within which stands the much later remains of Pluntoun, the castle of the Lennox (D. and G. Trans., xxvi, 198).

by Gilbert. Uchtred favoured the feudal system; Gilbert evidently would have nothing to do with it. Uchtred carried on the feudalisation of eastern Galloway and in his short life as lord of Galloway (1161-74) has left us several recorded charters. One of them, published in 1916, has hitherto escaped the attention it deserves.¹ The Rev. F. W. Ragg translates it as follows: ²

c. 1170. Charter by Uchtred son of Fergus addressed to

² Mr. Ragg made some valuable comments on this document which he reproduced in facsimile, but he has made one misreading. Mr. G. W. S. Barrow has pointed out (per litt. 21 June 57) that this passage is not chaan del cro et de defense joan which does not make sense and that the true reading is as rendered above. The grant does not refer to cro as a seigniorial claim to penalties of crime (cro = literally 'blood'), but to a place or district, and that Defense Joan also relates to another district. It certainly is not likely that Uchtred was speaking of chaan (tribute) in two different ways i.e. qualitatively and territorially, in one phrase. It is not possible to be dogmatic, but it seems that Uchtred was referring to the two portions of the deanery of Desenes that were shortly to be dissevered (see D. and G. Trans., xxxiv, 105). One was certainly known as Desenes-Mor or Big Desenes (Charters of Holyrood). This western portion between Urr and Cree, if we accept this reading of the charter, was known also as Desenes-Joan—perhaps St. Eogan's Desenes (see Watson's Celtic Place Names of Scotland, p. 164) or named after some earlier unremembered lord. Dr. A. O. Anderson suggests it stands for John. Cro in this charter must be taken as a place name and it is suggested here that it is applied to the smaller portion between Nith and Urr, of the ancient deanery of Desenes. There was a parish in eastern Desenes, transferred later to Glasgow diocese, called Kirkpatrick Cro (Miscellany of the Scottish History Soc., v, 104) which might mean 'Kirkpatrick in the area called (le) Cro'—to distinguish it from Kirkpatrick Durham and the Kirpatrick parishes in Annandale. Bagimont's Roll (1274) for the deanery of Desenes records inter alia both Kirkpatrick Durham (or Durand, sometimes called sub Mora) and Kirkpatrick Cro as parishes in that eastern deanery annexed to Glasgow. In the neighbouring deanery of Annan were two other parishes Kirkpatrick Juxta [Moffat] and Kirkpatrick Juxta Gretenov (p. 96), now Kirkpatrick Fleming. Logically and geographically Kirkpatrick Cro must be identified with Kirkpatrick Irongray and not with Brimgray in the deanery of Nith (p. 102), which is a misreading of Drumgrey, an extinct parish next to Garwald. It is suggested here that the earliest name of Irongray parish was Kirkpatrick [in le] Cro and that le Cro represented the Glasgow deanery of Desenes. A charter dated c. 1320 by the editor in his Tabula of the Register of the Bishopric of Glasgow (i, 229), bears to be witnessed by Adam de Holdena, rector of Kirkpatrick-Domamdo, and Walter de Southayk, rector of Kirkpatrick-Croc: Andrew de London, rector of Kirkpatrick Cro, was ordained a priest on 20 May 1307 (Halton's Register, p. 281) and Mr. James Carlyle, son of John, lord Carlyle, as prebendary of Kirkpatrick Cro, witnessed his father's testament on 12 Nov. 1500 (Historical Manuscripts Commission, 15th Report, Part viii, p. 49).

all his men and friends, French, English and Galwegian, granting with consent of Roland his son and heir to Richard son of Troite and his heirs the whole land of Lochenelo to be held in fee and heritage for the service of one knight, and as long as I [have to] render the payment of chaan del Cro and of Desense Joan he shall give me yearly for his free service £8 of silver, and by this he shall be free and quit of all service and customary dues to the king of Scotland, to me and my heirs; and when I shall be free and quit from the payment of (del) chaan he shall hold freely the aforesaid lands by the service of one knight. Witnesses—Christian the bishop, Robert his archdeacon, Gilbert the chaplain, John his nephew, Thomas the clerk of Torpenhow, Robert the sheriff's clerk, Robert son of Troite, Robert son of Sungeva,¹ Ralf the clerk of Carlisle, David son of Terri, Norman the hostage, Nicholas son of David, Augustine his brother, Ivo de Stoches,² William son of Reinbold, Herbert son of Hugh the Marshal, William de Cantilou(p), Andrew de Dumfres, Henry son of Hodard, William the clerk of Lochmaben, Simon brother of Richard the Marshall, Gillecathfar, Gilbert his son, Gilmore Albanach, Gilcohel, Macherne and many others.

Here is to be seen feudalism in the making. By this charter Uchtred makes Lochinloch, or New Abbey, a knight's fee for an incomer from Cumberland, Richard, son of Troite,³ but is hampered by the ancient burden of chaan

² Perhaps a son of Roger de Stoch, who in the Pipe Roll of 1180 owed 2 coursers for the land and houses that were of Gueri the Fleming in Carlisle.

Troite, Truite or Tructa, had another son David who possessed the vill of Haliburton (Berwickshire) and was ancestor of the Lords Haliburton of Dirleton. c. 1176 David gave the church of Haliburton to Kelso Abbey due to the Scottish Crown. This he clearly hopes to be rid of, but until he is rid of it Richard must both do knight's service and pay £8 yearly, a heavy rent. But whenever Uchtred is quit of chaan, the £8 is to be remitted to Richard and knight service alone will acquit the tenant.

Both Uchtred and Gilbert remained peaceful subjects of the Scottish Crown till 1174, when they accompanied William the Lion on his invasion into England which ended in that king's capture at Alnwick and the disintegration of his army. No sooner were the brothers back in Galloway than they threw off the overlordship of the Scottish Crown and invited the English king to govern them. They expelled the officers of king William, slew all foreigners in Galloway and destroyed their castles. There is little doubt that the action was mainly the work of Gilbert, for a chronicle says that Uchtred was a true Scot who would in no wise be turned against king William.¹ So Gilbert murdered Uchtred and further feudalisation came to an abrupt end.

When king William was released at Falaise, he was no longer free to take action against Gilbert. Henry II was his overlord whose consent was necessary to any such action; for, not content with holding 'the three great castles of Lothian'—Edinburgh, Berwick and Roxburgh—Henry exercised his suzerainty in quite a positive way,² and till his death in 1185 Gilbert adroitly defied king William.³

Roland, son of Uchtred, 'upheld by the king's help' (Fordun), at once raised forces, mainly in Cumberland, and pro anima domini Cospatricii comitis who must have been his overlord (Liber de Calchou, i, 222). When his son Walter confirmed David's gift, Haliburton was a chapel dependent on the church of Greenlaw.

¹ Liber Pluscardensis (ed. Skene), ii, p. 20. Cf. Fordun op. cit., ii, 261: 'Uchtred was a true Scot and could not be shaken'.

² See G. W. S. Barrow in Scot. Hist. Rev., xxxvi, 141.

reconquered Galloway. His murdered father had married Gunnild, daughter of Waldeve or Waltheof, lord of Allerdale in Westmorland, who was second son of Gospatrick, earl of Northumberland.¹ By this marriage Uchtred had acquired a large estate in Allerdale. Indeed Mr. Ragg² boldly calls it the Galloway Lordship of North Westmorland. Its full extent is yet unknown, but it certainly included Newbigging³ and Torpenhow, the church of which was granted by Uchtred and his wife to Holyrood.⁴ It is probable that on Uchtred's death Gunnild and her children may have taken refuge in Allerdale and the youthful Roland would have made friends with the younger scions of Cumberland families and, when the moment of his return to secure his inheritance came, he naturally enlisted many of his supporters there.

Significant corroboration of this is derived from a comparison of the witnesses of Uchtred's charters with those of Roland's. In Uchtred's charters the native Gaelic-Norse names predominate, but in Roland's native names are almost absent. Feudalism was reimposed in all its rigour. It is to this period that most of the Galloway motes may be ascribed. Apart from one or two doubtful structures, such as at Terally,⁵ the Historical Monuments Commission records eleven motes in Wigtownshire and twenty-six in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright. The majority are situated on the sea-coast or the navigational limits of rivers. The obvious inference from these structures is that they were erected by intruders who arrived by sea and who were at first prepared to face the hostility of the local inhabitants and to preserve a line of retreat in the event of a serious rising. In the absence of documentary evidence it is not possible to associate them with any particular family. But they are clear evidence of a new order in the state, which was much more firmly established in the Stewartry than in Wigtownshire. It has been suggested on the analogy of the Brus motes of Annan and Lochmaben that the earliest type of mote was associated with a bailey or forecourt.¹ If that argument be applied to the Galloway motes, the numerical analysis would seem to bear it out and those with baileys should be assigned to the era of Fergus and Uchtred. Out of eleven motes in Wigtownshire only Dromore and perhaps Cra Loch show evidence of baileys; a third, Ardwell, is not certain. Agricultural operations may have obliterated others. Of twenty-six motes in the Stewartry only three are classified as motes with baileys. Urr, the finest sample in Scotland, has been attributed to Walter de Berkeley but, when its long delayed excavation is ultimately completed and the final report published, some earlier date may have to be accepted.² Perhaps Uchtred himself may have been its constructor.

Amongst these Anglo-Norman settlers was one David, son of Terri, who was lord of Over Denton in Gilsland. To him Roland must have granted Anwoth and what is now the Cardoness estate. Indeed his descendants or successors adopted the name of de Cardones. David is the only settler who may be said definitely to have held by ward relief and marriage. His mote—The Green Tower mote on Boreland farm—and perhaps his memorial cross at Anwoth Kirk are still to be seen. At some unknown date before 1450 the estate passed to the McCullochs, who held by the same service as late as 1528. The fee stretched from the Fleet to Kirkmabreck. David, as patron of a moiety of Over Denton, granted that church to Lanercost and followed it with a gift of the church of Anwoth and the chapel of Culenes to Holyrood abbey.³

³ Holyrood Charters, p. 39. The Responde Book 1528 records that the lordship extended to a 135 merkland in ward to the Crown, the annual fermes being £180 (Ex. Rolls of Scotland, xv, 671). In 1559 its extent was 104½ merklands and in 1582 it is described as a 84 merkland (E.R.S., xix, 446, and xxi, 478).

Another grant of Roland must have been the lordship of Urr to Walter de Berkeley, Great Chamberlain of Scotland.¹ As the churches of Urr and Buittle had been gifted to Holyrood by Uchtred and in 1262 the mote itself was a burgh with two named burgesses, Adam Clerk and Hugh Sprot, it is almost inconceivable that Walter held it other than by knight service.² Indeed, following the usual practice of subinfeudation, Walter infeft one William, son of Richard, in the lands of Croswaldef (which Mr. Barrow is inclined to identify with Corswadda in Lochrutton parish) for the service of half a knight. This important local charter deserves reprinting.

1189-1196

Walter de Berkelei, chamberlain of the King of Scots, to all his friends and men, present and to come, Greeting. Know that I have given and granted and by this my present charter have confirmed to William, son of Richard [the lands of] Croswaldef, by its rightful bounds, for his service, in wood and field, in meadows and pastures, in lakes and mills, in moors and marshes, and in all its other pertinents: To be held to him and his heirs of me and my heirs, freely and quietly, fully and honourably, rendering the service of half a knight. Witnesses: Richard, son of Uctred,³ William de Moreville, Constable, Alan, son of Walter, Adam Harenc,⁴ Henry Inglis⁵

³ Perhaps an unrecorded son of Uchtred, son of Fergus, which would explain his priority in the list of witnesses in front of the Constable and Steward of Scotland.

(Anglico), Walter de Wellam,¹ Ivo de Heriz, Peter subprior of Jeddewrth, William de Norwiz, Hugh the Cellarer, Roger de Heriz, Adam de Gundevill, Robert the clerk, who wrote this charter, and many others.

Two brothers of another Cumberland family were also introduced to Galloway by Roland. Thomas, son of Gospatrick of Workington, according to Denton's Accompt of Cumberland (1887), p. 35, was granted by 'Rolland son of Uchtred son of Fergus sometime lord of Galloway, the great lordship of Culwen (Colvend) in Galloway in Scotland, in which grant the brothers of the said Thomas—Alexander and Gilbert, sons of Gospatrick, and Thomas and William, sons of the said Gilbert—are mentioned as witnesses'. Denton must have seen this grant or a copy of it. Its whereabouts is unknown, but this Thomas, son of Gospatrick, was a munificent benefactor of religious houses and founded Shap Abbey. From his new lordship Thomas gifted to the priory of St. Bees a salt pan in Culwen inter Duffpol et castellum, which Canon J. Wilson would identify with Castle Hill Point at the mouth of the Urr.² Culwen was a £20 land.³

The other brother was Gilbert de Suthaik (Southwick), who must have received a grant of that parish from Roland, unless it was included in the lordship of Culwen. There is a much denuded mote at Southwick.⁴ The descendants of both brothers adhered to England and after who figures in the Pipe Roll of 1178, and in turn had a son named William who c. 1231 witnessed a charter to Byland by William le Fleming of lands next to those of Robert, son of Durand (ibid., ix, 266-9). A Richard L'Engleys son-in-law of Archill of Revigill witnessed a charter c. 1180-90 to the hospital of St. Peter at York. He was called on to pay a fine for being concerned in the surrender of Appleby in 1174. Henry L'Engleys may have been associated with either Ingliston mote of Kelton or Ingliston mote of New Abbey.

¹ He was lord of Carnsalloch. In 1260 Walter de Welham, probably his son, renounced in favour of Melrose a disputed particle of land between his lands of Garsalauch and the monks' lands of Brunscayth. The monks had made him a payment. The dispute had begun in the days of his forebears (Reg. de Melros, p. 279).

Bannockburn were forfeited. Some younger sons may have remained in Scotland, for a Gilbert de Suthayk was Chancellor of Glasgow cathedral in 1337. In England the name has become Curwen, a family that still owns parts of Workington.¹

Another Anglo-Norman was Gamell of Twynam, whose son William, when Alan was lord of Galloway, gifted with consent of his son, Walter de Twynam, all the rights he had in the church of Twynam to the monks of Holyrood.² This was just confirmatory to Uchtred's previous grant of that church to Holyrood.³ The charter is witnessed by Robert and Gamell, brothers (indexed as brothers of the granter William). At that period there were several Gamells in Cumberland, including Gamell le Brun of Burghon-sands, but identification is not possible. There are two motes in the parish, but the mote of Twynam rather than that of Trostrie is more likely to have been the residence of Gamell. Its summit is 47×38 feet. The family faded out at Bannockburn, but continued in Cumberland.⁴ Some other Anglo-Normans must have been followers of Roland. One had a holding in the lands of Kirkandrews (Borgue), for a Bernard de Rippelay and his wife Margaret granted to St. Bees a half-mark yearly to maintain the lamps that lit by day and night the reliquary of St. Bega there. Amongst the witnesses were John de Suthak and Bertram de Champaine.⁵ This family owned lands in, and the advowson of, Ripley (Yorks) and two brothers Richard and Bernard made grants to Fountains.⁶ A man of this name witnessed charters of Alexander II in 1245, 1247 and 1248-9.⁷ His headquarters may have been at Netherhall in Kirkandrews.⁸

The barony of Gelston too, with its deserted church nestling close to the mote hill, must have been a feudal holding of an early date, though the connection of its lords with Cumberland has not been clearly ascertained. Its earliest record is c. 1217, when Sir William de Gevilston witnessed a charter by Alan, lord of Galloway.¹ The church of Gelston had been given by John de Gemelston, son and heir of Sir John de Gemelston, to Whithorn.²

In 1282 John witnessed a quitclaim relating to Borgue along with his neighbours Sir Bertram de Kerdernesse and Sir Walter de Twynham.³ In 1296 he rendered homage to Edward I.⁴ In a list of Scots holding lands in England (1296) seized by Edward I occurs 'John of Gevelestone holds the ward of Hoton-John (Cumberland) valued at £12.6.8.'⁵ The same year, as Sir John, he served on two of the Zouche assizes.⁶ Sir John only held the ward of the deceased William de Hoton and had assigned it to his son Donegal de Gyvileston, to whom Edward I restored it.⁷ Donegal, described as Edward's valet, remained in the English service and in March 1314-5 was granted lands in Knapdale forfeited by the treason of John de Menetethe, a Scot.⁸ By 1319 Donegal, as esquire of Alan of Argyll, was in Newcastle, having previously been at York.⁹ Finally, when David II was on the throne, there is this ominous entry—the lands of Gevylston in Galloway, forfeited by John de Gevilston rebel, are granted to James Boyd.¹⁰

Kirkdale also may be regarded as an Anglo-Norman holding, for a tradition, none too authentic, connects its remarkable mote, figured in the Historical Monuments Commission's Inventory for Kirkcudbright (No. 12), with the castle of Craggleton in the days of Alan, son of Roland.¹ But not till 1296, when Michael de Kirkdale served as a juror, is the family named. They may well have been of the de Kerderness family, for Kirkdale lay within that lordship. A Nicholas de Kirkdale held those lands, being clerk of the spices at the Scottish court, and died in 1449.²

But all the followers of Roland did not come from Cumberland and the south. There was a sprinkling of Norman Scots amongst them. Thus Roger Masculus or Maule³ was rewarded with an unknown holding in Colvend held of de Colwen, for when Roland granted c. 1196 a salt-pan in Preston to St. Bees, Roger Masculus also granted that priory a salt-pan 'in my half of Kulwen'.⁴ Roger came of a Norman family already well established in Scotland, being lords of Lochogov in Lanarkshire⁵ and of Foulis.⁶

There is little doubt that many Anglo-Norman families must have been introduced into Galloway by Roland, and in future years further documentary evidence may be forthcoming, such as the grant by Alan, son of Roland, to Adam, son of Gilbert, Despensar, whose association with Gallway is otherwise unknown. To Adam was granted prior to 1237 the land of Adarie or Airdrie within the lordship of Preston for the service of one-tenth of a knight.⁷ It was a £10-land and by 1444 was in the possession of the Rerrik family.

The evidence for the feudalisation of Wigtownshire is distressingly meagre. Even in the case of Sorby, where we seem to be on sure ground, there is nothing conclusive. In Sorby there were two churches, Sorby-minor dedicated to St. Michael and Sorby-major dedicated to St. Foylan. Both churches belonged to the de Veteripont family and were probably erected by them on some older foundation of the tribal church. Ivo de Veteripont, with the consent of his overlord Roland, granted Sorby-major to Dryburgh. At a later date, during the lifetime of Alan, son of Roland, Robert de Veteripont granted Sorby-minor to Dryburgh, his father, Alan de Veteripont, confirming his gift. Robert followed this up with a further gift of land adjacent to the church. None of these grants are dated and in the Register of Dryburgh the witnesses are omitted.¹ It is clear that the family were feudal vassals of Roland and may have been introduced into Galloway by him, but it is possible that they belong to the era of Fergus. William de Veteripont (i), the father of Sir Ivo, who was the first known possessor of Sorby and who died in 1239, married Mahald or Matilda de Morville and may have received with her in marriage the lands of Sorby from the Morvilles. If so, Sorby may have been acquired by the Morvilles at the same time as Borgue, in the days of Fergus and king David. In the Wars of Independence the Galloway de Veteriponts disappear and Sorby may have reverted to the Balliols. It is not known when or how the Hannays acquired it.

For the rest of Wigtownshire vague surmises must take the place of documentary evidence. It may have been less thoroughly feudalised than the Stewartry. The Marshals certainly held Toskerton, an extinct parish now in Stoneykirk. There were two main stems of the family of Marshal in Scotland—Galloway and Lothian. They took their surname from that state office before the Keiths were granted it by Bruce. They were steady adherents of Balliol and England. Sir John le Marescalus was head of the Galloway branch and Sir David le Maresculus head of the Lothian family.² When Dervorgilla founded Sweetheart Abbey in 1273, her charter was witnessed by two of her knights, Sir David Marescal and Sir Robert Marescal.³ There is nothing to show where their lands were situated. But as the abbots of Glenluce and Saulset were also witnesses, the lands of these knights may have been in Wigtownshire. When Balliol resigned the throne after Dunbar, Edward I gave the lands of Tocstruther (sic), forfeited by John le Marescal of Toskerton, to Robert Hastings but later restored the lands to John, who had come to his peace.¹ Sir John le Marescal of Toskertone in Wigtownshire swore fealty to Edward at Montrose on 10 July 1296 and on 28 August rendered homage at Berwick.² His seal has survived—three horse-shoes, 2 and 1, in a crusilly field.³ Another member of the family was Sir Fergus le Mareschal, who held the barony of Dalmellington *in capite*⁴ and rendered homage in 1296.⁵ Sir John may have been succeeded by another John le Marescal, who, in the first year of the English occupation of the southern counties under grant of Edward Balliol, received from Edward III the rents of the town of Kirkcudbright till that king could provide him with a 20-merk land in Scotland. This grant may have been a doubtful asset, for Kirkcudbright was lying waste at the time of this compotus.⁶ That year (1335) this John, the grantee, must have died, for Herbert Mareschal, his son and heir, petitioned Edward to restore to him the lands of his father in Scotland, narrating his losses by ransoms and the deaths and losses of his ancestors in supporting Edward's rights to Scotland. Endorsed on the petition is 'to show his charters'⁷ In June 1335 Mauduca, widow of Sir John le Marescal, knight of Scotland, and her children received from Edward £20 and again in 1346 'for his good services'.⁸ In 1342 she was granted 20 merks, increased next year to 40 merks and in February 1347-8 stabilised as an annuity of £15 for her three daughters Johanna, Margery and Margaret.⁹ These Marshals cannot be proved to have been feudal vassals of Roland, yet they must have arrived in Galloway in his era as the name figures in Uchtred's charter of Lochenelo.¹

One other feudal family of Wigtownshire has proved incapable of being placed in the county. The Askeloos would seem to be of native origin and, like the McCullochs and the McDowells, no early date can be assigned to them. They certainly had connections with Cumberland. In 1291 Willelma, widow of Gilbert Askelok of Galloway, received a protection from Edward I, probably to proceed to that province.² In 1296 Fergus Askole of the county of Wigtown rendered homage and the seal of Roland de Ascole is still appended to Ragman Roll, 'an open right hand in pale'.³ In the index to this volume Bain suggests that this seal is that of Roland McGachen, who certainly signed the Roll (p. 198), whereas Roland de Askelok or Ascole did not. Yet in the same year Roland Askeloche and his son, Hector, served on an assize relating to the Zouche lands in Galloway.⁴ Roland forfeited his lands and in 1305-6 Henry de Percy petitioned Edward that John de Wygeton be given the lands of Rouland Asklot.⁵ His son Hector rendered fealty to Edward, and his seal, two lions passant to dexter, is still extant.⁶ He may have been a follower of Bruce, then in the English interest, for at the request of the Earl of Carrick a pardon under the Great Seal was issued to Hector for causing the death of Cuthbert of Galloway and other offences in Cumberland and England, and breaking prison at Carlisle.⁷ Finally Hector settled down and married Florence de Wigton (Cumberland) and figures in the great lawsuit between the heirs of John de Wigton, baron de Wigton, who c. 1284 had married Dionysia, daughter of Sir John de Lovetot, and died in ¹ c. 1325 Bruce granted to William Hurchurche a 100s. land of Brigend and Toskerton, rendering an archer and three suits at the head court of the sheriffdom at Wigtown. Toskerton was a 42-merkland (R.M.S., i, 321, 322).

1313. Florence was a sister of John de Wigton and, if John's daughter Margaret could be proved illegitimate, Florence was one of several sisters who would divide the substantial Wigton estate. In the end the lawyers ate up all the estate.¹

But knight service never took the same root in Scotland as in England and gradually it gave place to feu-ferme. So in 1370 Thomas de Culnehathe (Conheath) is found resigning the land of Kelwode and Bourland for a new Crown grant, rendering a pair of gilt spurs yearly as albe-ferme, in place of his former feudal dues tantum pro wardis, releviis, maritagii et omnibus aliis serviciis quibuscunque.²

¹ C. and W. Trans., N.S., xix, 42-64. There remains the feudalisation of Upper Nithsdale (formerly in Galloway): such as the half knight's fee of Bridburgh, Auldgirith held till 1247 by Anselm de Camelyne (Book of Caerlaverock, ii, 405), the unknown extent of the fee of Morton held by Hugh the Gloveless (sine manibus) at the close of the 12th century (Liber de Calchou, i, 16), and the very indefinite holding of the Lindsay family in the Kirkconnel area (Reg. Ep. Glasg., i, 238). These must be reserved for future treatment.

II. THE FEUDAL COURTS OF GALLOWAY

Nowhere in Scotland were the old Celtic customs and laws adhered to with greater tenacity than in Galloway. Most of the disturbances in that province in the 13th century can be directly traced to infringement of these customs by the newly arrived Anglo-Normans, who naturally tried to establish the feudalism of their own southern lands. An interesting petition relating to Galloway has survived, which momentarily lifts the curtain and gives a glimpse of conditions there. Certain Crown dues were payable by the province whilst David I was still an earl, probably a continuation from the days of the Norse occupation. The Orkney Sagas state that earl Thorfinn the Mighty held inter alia seven earldoms of the Scottish Crown. One of them must have been Galloway and some unspecified dues must have been payable from that earldom to the Crown. They may have been difficult to collect when the Crown was weak, and may not have been paid. But in David's time the Crown was strong and the successors of Thorfinn were weak and divided. It is unlikely that David imposed these dues, but he certainly collected them, for c. 1120 he endowed his newly founded abbey of Selkirk with a tithe of the cheese rendered to him from that province.¹

This tithe of cheese was part of the dues known in early charters as can or renders in kind due to the king whenever he entered Galloway. The corresponding due known as conveth was supply exigible to maintain his representative on journeys within the province to hear pleas and carry out the administration of the law. Everyone, whether holding by free or servile tenure, was liable to the tax. Under the old Welsh laws gwestfa was due from free communities and food gifts from servile communities. The principal constituents were flour, beef, mead or other liquors, and oats for the horses of the king and his entourage from the free communities, and meat, mutton or pork, cheese, butter and loaves of bread from the servile communities.¹

It seems perfectly clear that the payment of can had always been due to the Crown from the inhabitants of Galloway by their customary laws. No doubt similar burdens were due by them to the ancient lords of Galloway and they resented the further renders to the Crown, and this may have been a predominant factor in their desire for complete independence from the Scottish Crown and the frequent appeals to England to free them from it. It is almost certain that the payment of can ended when at Alnwick in 1174 William the Lion was taken prisoner and it may not have been re-enforced till 1189 when the treaty of Falaise was abrogated. But no sooner had Roland, on the death of Gilbert, reconquered his ancient patrimony of Galloway than the inhabitants of that province sought to get the Crown's can abolished. That claim was heard at Lanark in the king's court held by the judges (judices) of Galloway presided over by Roland himself and the decision of the court was in favour of the king's right to enforce payment of can in that territory.²

A parallel to this obnoxious levy of can was *conveth*³ or supply to the king's representative on his official journeys. The amount due from anyone liable to pay was for maintenance for a night or nights when the official was in the neighbourhood of the payer. It was often most burdensome, depending on the length of stay of the official and the number of staff and followers. To collect a tax in Galloway in the 13th century must have required a considerable escort. The clergy would naturally be expected to provide better billeting prospects than the wattle huts of the tribal farmers. At least the earl of Carrick (formerly part of Galloway) and the earl of Lennox had been accustomed to levy a *corredium ad opus servientum suorum qui kethres nuncupantur*¹—an aid or subsidy for the use of their sergeants or officers here called kethres.²

² Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, i, 378.

³ For conveth compare convivium, a feast. Robertson (op. cit., p. 297) suggests affinity to the Irish coimbíodh, equivalent to 'victualling'. It may have been a tribesman who held his land by a tenure of victualling the king during his progress.

The bishop of Glasgow in 1225-6 forbade the earls to impose this corrody on the clergy of the respective deaneries, which suggests that in the past the earls had claimed or exercised the right of billeting their officers or sergeants on the clergy or to expand their right so as to include their sergeants. One may compare 'the evil custom or rather tyranny and corruption by which the nobles and powerful men of those parts in their journeys occupy the canons' houses and, driving out their households, therein eat and sleep', mentioned in a letter from pope Clement VI to John bishop of Moray dated Ides of June 1350.³

Yet another instance of this conservative tenacity of the people of Galloway is demonstrated in a petition from the 'community of Galloway.' When Edward I appointed his own officers to administer Scotland, he issued at the request of Thomas of Galloway letters patent to the 'goodmen and whole community of Galloway', granting them all their liberties and customs as in the time of king David and of Alan, father of the said Thomas. Edward even agreed to the relaxation of a certain amount of their rent as would content them.⁴ This was on 6 March 1295-6. But that was only a general declaration by Edward. It could not have satisfied the men of Galloway who within a decade (c. 1306) supplicated that king and his council that they were grieved by a strange and 'ycortenuse' law called 'surdit de sergaunt', disused since the time of king Alexander II (1214-49) and for a year before his death, which the barons and great lords of Galloway were then enforcing. The supplication was made by the 'Community of Galloway'¹ and following the English procedure was made to the English Parliament.² Shire courts in England, composed of freeholders rendering suit in the shire court, had the right to supplicate Parliament, and it is possible that this is the earliest mention of a steward court in Galloway and that it was taking advantage of English parliamentary procedure to obtain redress of grievances.

² These kethres may have some connection with the four Kadrez of Galloway—here evidently regions—of the great charter of Kelso. But the connection, if any, is obscure.

The law called 'surdit de sergeant' presents a formidable problem. The text is probably corrupt and it may be surmised that 'surdit' = aforesaid (supradictus). Some word—a noun like 'droit'—has perhaps fallen out of the text at some stage at the hands of the medieval scribes.³ But some sort of imposition by the sergeants of the overlords is clearly implied. We may never know just what it was. Parliament referred the matter to the Lieutenant and Chamberlain of Scotland for enquiry and report, but their findings are not known to have survived.⁴

Of the activities and functions of the sergeants in Galloway nothing is known. They were an Anglo-Norman importation and parallels can only be sought from English records. In England they were known as sergeants of the

⁴ It is quite possible that this petition may be referred to in an undated memorandum on business to be transacted by the King's Council, as follows—'To hear the people of Galloway concerning the matters which they have to show' (Palgrave, i, 294).

peace and have been studied by Mr. Stewart Brown.¹ The organisation was confined to the palatinates and the Border areas by contrast to the frank-pledge system in the rest of the country. These peace officers—the earliest form of police—included county sergeants, those of the hundreds and the forests and of the baronies. This Galloway petition implies that they were officers of the baronies. Apart from their duties as messengers they served writs and official notices and made proclamations. They were expected to maintain the peace and bring offenders to trial with powers of enforcement of fines and distraint. They had powers of arrestment, collected evidence and presented the offenders to the court. Most offences were punishable by fine. At first they received no fixed pay but had a share of the fines, known as 'pelf'. Their maintenance consisted of enforced billeting on the public, known as 'puture'. The 'master sergeants' held, as part of their office, small particles of land.² Their duty of taking sureties for suspected persons to submit themselves to justice was a tempting source of irregular extortion. In the case of robbery the penalty was death, and sergeants had, and exercised, the ancient right to behead a robber instantly if caught in the act or if sufficient evidence was forthcoming at once. For each robber's head taken to the castle of Chester a shilling fee was obtained and for a master-robber's head sometimes an extra was provided—a salmon from the river Dee. A Northumberland assize roll of 1256 records a sergeant arresting a malefactor who had robbed and assaulted a hermit. The hermit, by direction of the serjeant, decapitated the robber—a fair example of making the punishment fit the crime. But the door for malpractice and extortion was wide open. The serjeants lived on the country, and in Shropshire in 1221

² In 1199 Adam, son of Orm de Kellet, was confirmed in the sergeantry of Lonsdale as custos, holding 3 carucates. He was fined for failing to attach the first finder of a dead body and the persons who had stripped the dead man of his clothes. The sergeantry of Bernard de Penred (Penrith), for which he ought to carry the king's writs and the mandates of the sheriff, are recorded as alienated in part (Victoria County History, Cumberland, i, 433).

they could be bribed for not seizing cattle for the king's use and had even opened up taverns and forced people to come to them for their ale. The system ended in 1296 when two paid officials called 'capitanei et custodes pacis' were appointed.

In the Westmorland Assize Roll of 1256 there is a complaint of the men of the baronies of Kendal that whereas the sheriff had two horse sergeants only and two foot sergeants for his lawful business, now there are four of each, and not content with the customary competent lodgings they extort many lodgings and as many payments as possible for each lodging and cause innocent people to be molested for larcenies and to be imprisoned and detained until heavy ransoms are extorted from them.¹ The public hatred of these minions of the sheriff naturally caused odium to be displayed towards the sheriff himself and that office was in consequence not the object of everyone's ambition and often exemption from that office, entailing a payment to the Crown, was sought. The burden of feudal duties always lay heavily on the feudal tenant. Thus in Westmorland in 1255 there was a dispute between Gilbert de Lancaster and his overlord. Gilbert owed the dues of $\frac{2}{10}$ part of a knight's fee and had to attend at the overlord's court at Barton every three weeks and to provide for the lord's land-sergeant whenever he passed through Gilbert's lands on his legal duties. The dispute ended in agreement that Gilbert should in future perform the duties for a $\frac{1}{10}$ part of a knight's fee and no longer provide for the land sergeant. His future connection with his overlord's court is minutely recorded.² It is suggested here that the petition of the Community of Galloway referred to somewhat similar abuses as were rampant in parts of England.³

² Feet of Fines, 40 Hen. III, and C. and W. Trans., N.S., x, 402 and 442 Early Sources, ii, 422, equates 'sergants of horse' with esquires (feudatory vassals) and 'sergants of foot' with yeomen.

When Alan died in 1234, Galloway was divided into three parts for his three daughters. It has been generally assumed that the three divisions were definite units and not scattered groupings. Elena, the eldest daughter, married Roger de Quenci and her share must have been the most westerly and may have covered most of Wigtownshire. Dervorgilla received the eastern portion, probably from Nith to Fleet. Between these must have been the portion of Christina who married the earl of Albermarle. But there may have been odd estates or particles of land outwith the clear-cut divisions; thus the Balliols owned lands in Glasserton and the heirs of Elena held lands in Troqueer, Girthon and elsewhere.¹

Christina died without issue in 1245 and her sister Dervorgilla was declared her heir. Normally Christina's two sisters should have shared her portion, but some family arrangement must have been arrived at whereby Dervorgilla got most of Christina's portion. In 1304 John Comyn, earl of Buchan, in a petition to Edward I mentions that king John Balliol before the war that ended at Dunbar on 27 April 1296 gave to Buchan the Thanage of Fermartyn in recompense for the earl's right in Balliol's land in Galloway of which Balliol had more than his share, and also for the earl's rights in the lands belonging to Thomas, bastard son of Alan of Galloway.² Such an exchange must have been everyman of Galloway in any action on complaint of a kings sergeant (supendicto sergandorum) of Galloway shall have good and faithful assize of his country and shall not be held for trial by compurgation according to the ancient laws of Galloway. But if any sergeant of the crown, when acting in the name of the crown, be accused of anything touching his office he shall acquit and purge himself by the full and accustomed acquittal of Galloway, and in other things touching the peace he shall reply as his neighbours are held to do, according to the said laws of Galloway.³

¹ Bain, ii, 1338, 824. In 1237 Roger de Quenci in right of his wife held some land in Kirkcudbright itself for which he had licence to import from Ireland corn and victuals through the medium of one Erkin a merchant of Kirkcudbright (ibid., i, 1372).

² Ibid., ii, 1541. The extent and location of these lands are unknown. They can have been of little use to Thomas. His experience of life must have been a melancholy one. He was the cause of the Galloway rebellion on Alan's death in 1234. He was kept a prisoner of Alexander II and may never have been released. He is not reported to have participated in the rebellion against de Quenci in 1249. The Lanercost Chronicle says that when John Balliol married Dervorgilla in 1233 the bastard Thomas was given him for custody 'and he remained til decrepit old age, shut up in reached with the full approval of the Crown bent on establishing the sheriffdom. This petition established the fact that on the death of Christina both of her surviving sisters should have shared her inheritance, though in fact Dervorgilla acquired the major portion. Buchan's claim, as son of Elena, was eventually settled by Balliol's cession of Fermartyn. Therefore from c. 1245 the Balliols must have been lords of the Stewartry of Kirkeudbright whilst the heirs of Elena were lords of Wigtownshire.

Now as soon as feudalism came to Galloway its lords must have conformed to the new conception and established a court presided over by their steward or seneschal and, though there is no mention of such an official, Uchtred, if not his father Fergus, must have had a steward and a steward court. Every feudal lord had his court, from the king down to the holder of a manor. When the lordship became divided amongst heirs, each part would have its own court and steward. So, on Alan's death there would normally have been three steward courts in the province. Christina's court may have been of brief duration, being absorbed by exchange and adjustment in the jurisdiction of Balliol's court. Thus from her death or earlier Galloway had two steward courts.¹

But the Crown, in addition to the king's feudal court (curia regis) covering the whole of Scotland, was trying to the interior of Barnard Castle'. In an inventory (1292) of missing documents occur these two items:—(i) letters of John Balliol concerning the surrender to the king of Scotland of Thomas of Galloway, his wife and son; (ii) certain rolls of negotiations between John of Balliol and Thomas of Galloway (A.P.S., i, 9). When Balliol was crowned, Thomas must have been transferred to the care of Edward I as a precaution, for in 1286 he was brought to Edinburgh by Edward's messengers 'his release from prison having been sought by Sir John de Balliol son of the older noble of that name' (Lanercost Chronicle). His appeal to Edward on behalf of the community of Galloway for their ancient liberties and customs in 1296 may have been purely formal for next day he was transferred from the care of William de Huk and lodged in Carlisle castle—a pawn in Edward's policy (Bain, ii, 728, 729).

set up local courts on a shire basis on the English model, controlled by a Crown official or sheriff. As long as a local lord was strong and loyal, the Crown would not interfere, but when a local lord was disloyal or weak, such as in the case of a minority or a division amongst heirs, it was the policy of the Crown to try to replace the steward court by a sheriff court. The jurisdictional position in Galloway was ripe for a change, for the stewards were proving unable to cope with the conditions. When Alan died, there had been an insurrection against the division of Galloway amongst his daughters, which had to be suppressed by Alexander II. Later, in 1247, Roger de Quenci, husband of Elena the eldest daughter, was forced to seek refuge with the king and it is difficult to believe other than that Alexander only re-established Roger on his own terms. De Quenci had no heirs male, only three daughters, and it was obvious that on his death the situation in Galloway was bound to deteriorate with further subdivisions of his steward court's jurisdiction. A strong local centralisation was essential, and Roger's reinstatement must have been conditional on acceptance of the royal policy. He died on 25 April 1264,¹ and that same year occurs the first reference to a sheriff of Wigtownshire in the person of Alexander Comyn, earl of Buchan, who married the second daughter of de Quenci. He was the wealthiest and most influential man in the kingdom and therefore most suited to maintain order in Wigtownshire.²

A sheriffdom implies a royal castle and to this period must be assigned a castle at Wigtown that has now totally disappeared.³ Until 1305 the Comyn family held that office,

² Ibid., ii, 255.

Alexander's son John, earl of Buchan, being sheriff in 1290, whilst John's brother, Sir Alexander Comyn, whose daughters were to share the earldom and the shire of Wigtown, was sheriff in 1266.¹

In 1341 David II rewarded his faithful follower Sir Malcolm Fleming with the earldom of Wigtownshire. This comprehended the lands of Farynes and Rynnes—here called Mulerennysnage—, the two ecclesiastical deaneries in the shire.² This charter was renewed to the grantee's grandson, Thomas, earl of Wigtown.³ In 1371 Thomas sold both earldom and title to Sir Archibald Douglas, lord of eastern Galloway, Crown confirmation following on 7 Oct. 1372.⁴ But before Douglas could take over Galloway it was necessary for the Crown to eliminate any other claims to that province. The accompanying chart illustrates how the rights were divided up and ultimately extinguished. Of Alan's three daughters Christian died without issue and left her share to Dervorgilla, whose enlarged share was forfeited by her grandson Edward Balliol. The third and eldest daughter married Roger de Quenci and left three co-heiresses. Of these Margaret, Countess of Derby, had no issue, and an inventory of missing documents records that she resigned into the hands of king Alexander the office of Constable and the rights she had in diverse lands therein for infettment of Alexander Comyn, earl of Buchan.⁵ Elena de Quenci was spouse of Alexander de Zouche, an Englishman whose heirs forfeited her half of the de Quenci inheritance. Elizabeth carried her share to her husband Alexander Comyn earl of Buchan whose son John, earl of Buchan, was succeeded by his nieces, daughters of Sir Alexander Comyn who had just predeceased him. Alicia having married an Englishman, forfeited her half share of the heritage. Her sister Margaret Comyn was more lucky and, marrying c. 1309 Sir John Ross, succeeded to half of the earl of Buchan's heritage in Scotland. Their son William, 5th earl of Ross, who died in 1372, inherited half of the earldom of Buchan, including unspecified lands on Wigtownshire. His interest in Galloway was practically nugatory, but he had a definite claim, for his share of Buchan's lands there had never been forfeited. The Crown had to eliminate the claim before it could hand over the Galloway lands to the Douglasses. So, in Parliament at Perth on 23 October 1370 William, earl of Ross, resigned all his lands of his earldom in Scotland for a new infeftment that omitted his lands in Aberdeen, Dumfries and Wigtownshire. The grant was to himself, then to Euphemia, his eldest daughter, spouse to Sir Walter de Leslie, and their heirs.¹ Euphemia was married on 13 September 1366 and the spouses had a Crown charter of the new forest in the shire of Dumfries.² Leslie died in 1382 and Euphemia that year married secondly Alexander Stewart, the Wolf of Badenoch, fourth son of Robert II.³

But there was another claimant to be dealt with. After the death without issue of Sir John Ross his widow Margaret, countess of Buchan, married secondly Sir William Lindsay of Symington, who seems to have died sine prole, for his lands went to his great-nephew Sir James Lindsay of Crawford and Kirkmichel.⁴ Sir William's claim can only have been in right of his wife, whom he predeceased,⁵ and was probably put forward owing to the general confusion of the times by Sir James Lindsay who had sufficient influence at court⁶ to secure a Crown charter dated 21 April 1372 of the lordship of Wigtown and its burgh except the barony of Carnismule, resigned on 19 April by Thomas Fleming⁷ and to call himself for a while lord of Buchan.⁸ There is at present no evidence to show that the charter was ever acted upon and the opposition of Archibald the Grim must have prevailed.

Yet another claim may have been made by the earl of Dunbar for the lands of Mochrum. This barony covering the whole parish must have been acquired by Patrick, 8th earl of Dunbar, when he married Marjorie, sister of John Comyn, earl of Buchan. It was far distant from Lothian and in the Wars of Independence may have been of little use to Dunbar. So Mochrum had been granted c. 1342 by king David II to Sir Malcolm Fleming. This must have been challenged by Dunbar and the earl of Wigtown was granted Cardoness by the Crown in exchange for Mochrum.¹ George, 10th earl of Dunbar, in 1368 received a crown grant of Mochrum together with Cumnok, Blantyre and Glenkens from David II.² Another sister of John earl of Buchan married Sir Nicholas de Soulis and must have received on marriage part of the lands of Cruggleton. His son, Sir William, was forfeited, but not before he had granted a third part of these lands to Whithorn Priory.³

These earls of Buchan did not reside in the royal castle of Wigtown, which was held in their name for the Crown by a custos, keeper or constable.⁴ Their residence was at Cruggleton, the ancient stronghold of Fergus and later of

Alan,¹ a fortress which earl John repaired or perhaps rebuilt in 1292. That June he obtained leave from Edward I to dig for lead in the king's mine on the Isle of Man to cover the turrets of his castle at Craggleton.² When John Balliol surrendered his crown, the Comyns at once made their peace with Edward, and Sir Alexander Comyn may at first have continued as sheriff. He died about 1308,³ but in 1305 Edward I, who was reorganising the government in Scotland, appointed his own nominees, Sir Richard Syward as sheriff of Dumfries and Thomas McCulloch (Makulagh) as sheriff of Wigtown.⁴ But that office can have been no sinecure with the partisans of Bruce devastating Galloway. Indeed it was not till 1424 that the next sheriff of Wigtown is heard of,⁵ in the person of William de Douglas who must be identified with the lord of Leswalt.⁶ In 1452 Andrew Agnew of Lochnaw, who, as bailie of Leswalt, was the right-hand man of Douglas, was created hereditary sheriff, an office enjoyed by that family with one brief interlude⁷ till the abolition of heritable jurisdictions in 1747.

⁷ The interlude occurred in January 1498-9 when the sheriff was placed under curators (Registrum Secreti Sigilli, i, 319), Sir Alexander McCulloch of Myrton functioning as sheriff, followed by John Dunbar of Mochrum (E.R., xi, 331, 338, etc.). By 1502 Patrick Agnew, son of the afflicted Quentin, was sheriff (Lochnaw Charters).

III. THE EARLY CHURCH IN GALLOWAY

Very little is known about the church in Galloway before the days of Fergus. Like the church of St. Ninian, the earliest organisation of the church in Saxon England was based on the monastery. This was natural, seeing that Northumbria had been Christianised from Celtic sources. In England these monasteries were termed minsters. The Celtic monastery and the Saxon minster alike consisted of a community of clergy whose primary function was to convert the district and then provide for its religious needs. The brethren resident in the minster would serve the surrounding district at outlying spots, marked by a cross of wood, later of stone, around which was an enclosure consecrated as a cemetery. Service at first was in the open. There would follow an oratory of wattle and mud or of wood. The definite parish with a church and resident priest was a later development. The names of the Northumbrian bishops at Whithorn are known from c. 730-802, though the limits of the diocese are uncertain, and the church certainly survived through what is known as the Viking Age.

But not till the days of Fergus, lord of Galloway, was real progress achieved in the organisation and reformation of the church in Galloway. The monasteries or minsters, regarded by the reformers as houses of secular canons, were converted to houses of regular canons, Augustinian or Praemonstratensian, and their outlying possessions—cemetery, cross and oratory—were developed into parishes with resident priests and churches built and endowed by the major landholders.¹ Kirkmadryne in the Rhinns must have been such a monastery or minster broken up into a number of small parishes in the twelfth century, itself declining into an ordinary parish church. There is no record of these happenings, which must have occurred in the episcopate of Gillealdan, of whom all we know is that he was elected bishop c. 1125 and consecrated at York in 1128.¹ The date of his death is unknown.

The first step of the reformers was to ascertain and get back into the hands of the Church all the lands and possessions it had formerly owned, for many of the monastic abbots were laymen holding in hereditary the monastic lands. The Crown most properly showed a good example when Alexander I made the grant of Cursus Apri to St. Andrews which has been described as 'a grant which must be regarded not so much in the light of an original donation as a restoration to the Church of the lands which had been alienated to the royal family in their capacity of hereditary abbots of the old monastic establishment'.² Alexander's brother, earl David, c. 1123 took a similar step when he held what is known as David's Inquest to ascertain what were the rights and possessions of the ancient church of St. Kentigern.³

The Anglo-Norman Church may well have prevailed on Fergus to take similar steps. At its advent in the 12th century there was a further development of these rudimentary parishes. Both the Celtic and early Anglian churches were largely tribal. The office of Archpriest, sometimes called an abbot,⁴ had often become hereditary and in some instances (in the north) they had become laymen. But in the 12th century the tribal Church gave place to the feudal Church. The tribal lands were broken up into feudal estates or knight's fees and upon the new owners was imposed the obligation to erect, endow and in part maintain churches, unless they had found in situ a church of a previous age. Some of the new proprietors started with a proprietary chapel, though no written evidence has survived in Galloway. But an example can be quoted from Tryermain, a property of the de Vallibus (or Vaus) family, now in the parish of Walton, close to Lanercost Abbey. The unpublished register of Lanercost narrates how Gillemor, son of Gillanders, the native lord of Treverman and Torroc, made a chapel of wickerwork (capella de virgis)—no doubt plastered with mud—and procured the divine services there with consent of Eigelwine, bishop of Durham, who died in 1071.¹

³ It took Glasgow a long time to regain full possession. In Annandale it was not till c. 1170 that Brus ceded his rights to Glasgow and in the case of Hoddam it was not till c. 1212 that Udar de Hoddam surrendered his rights of patronage (D. and G. Trans., xxxi, 183). It was after 1186 that Glasgow incorporated in that diocese the district between Nith and Urr then dissevered from the see of Galloway (Ibid., xxxiv, 105).

The enclosure was usually of a circular form. A rectilinear layout was foreign to the early Celtic Church and indicates the Gaelic-Norse influence. The priority of the enclosure over the chapel is attested at several sites in the Isle of Man and at Chapel-Finnian in Mochrum where is a similar sequence with an irregular enclosure probably of 6th century and a rectangular chapel of the 10th or 11th with mortared walls.² Such sites often developed into parish churches. The enclosure was primarily a cemetery, though at Chapel Finnian there was no trace of burials, and was marked by a wooden cross such as that described in the 8th-century Saxon Life of St. Willibald, 'for it is the custom of the Saxon people to erect on the estates of nobles, not a church but the Standard of the Holy Cross set up on high for the frequency of daily prayer'. At the foot of just such a cross St. Willibald was dedicated by his parents to the religious life. Mr. Raleigh Radford's suggestion that proprietary chapels in Galloway may in many cases have originated in the Norse period, is borne out by the number of parish churches in the neighbourhood of Whithorn which have fragments of Norse crosses of the late Whithorn school.

In Norse Orkney we find a chapel on each ounceland built by the proprietor,³ a correlation that is generally accepted and holds good for other Norse lands. The principle is explained for the similar occurrence in Iceland—‘ This which was promised by the clergy made men very eager in church building, namely—that a man should have room in the Kingdom of Heaven for as many men as could stand in the church he had built ’.¹ Gillemor’s chapel, gifted to Lanercost, never acquired parochial status. Neither did St. Malachy’s chapel at Larbrex Bay,² for the essential features of the medieval parish were that it had not only a cemetery but also fixed boundaries, a resident priest and endowment.

³ The ounceland was the basis for the payment of tax known as Skat in Norse times and represents the Pictish davach.

There is however at least one parish church in Galloway that seems to have started as a proprietary chapel. The Anglo-Norman mote at Monygoff is surrounded by a deep and wide ditch. The occupants must have had a proprietary chapel alongside the mote, where they would bury their dead. And to this day the parish still buries its dead at the same spot, for within 40 yards of the verge of the ditch surrounded by tombstones stand both the ruined shell of the pre-Reformation church and the present parish church, side by side.³ There is nothing more permanent in history than a cemetery. The mote of Kirkclaugh is perched on a sea cliff.⁴ From this site was removed a century ago a late Anglian cross, classed by the late W. G. Collingwood as ‘ rusticated ’ and late. It is now in a shrubbery at Kirkclaugh House. Collingwood dated the mote to the close of the 11th century, adding ‘ no doubt it had a chapel attached ’. The cross he dated a little later along with the crosses of Monygoff and Anwoth. At Anwoth there may have been no proprietary chapel, for its cross is in the parish kirkyard, half a mile away.⁵ The inference is that Anwoth had some sort of church before the coming of David son of Terri who we believe erected or at least resided at the Green Tower mote about the year 1180. Conversely it may be argued that the church of the now extinct parish of Kirkdale was later than the cross at Kirkclaugh. But it is not possible to venture further into the church epoch that preceded Christian, bishop of Galloway.

Gillealdan's successor, Christian 1154-86, continued in the reformed church of Galloway the tradition of the Northumbrian episcopate. He and his successors were suffragans of York until 1472¹ and during his episcopate, which covered the lifetimes of Fergus, Uchtred and Rolland, lords of Galloway, was completed the 12th-century reformation of the church of Galloway. The sixth bishop (1255-1293) was Henry, abbot of Holyrood, who had taken the vows of a Crusader² and whose ¹ Dowden, p. 353. But see Dr. Donaldson on the bishops of Galloway (D. and G. Trans., xxvii, 127). The last Scottish bishop who was suffragan of York was Michael Mackenlagh, who died in 1359.

² This does not mean that the bishop actually went to the Crusade. In the fervour of the moment great numbers took the vow, but the Church was always willing to release crusaders from their vows by dispensation which implied a payment to the Crusade fund. The Register of Archbishop Giffard (Surtees Soc., vol. 109) gives lists of contributors, many of whom had been fined for civil and ecclesiastical offences and their fines transferred to the Crusade fund. Thus William de Driffield in the East Riding had been excommunicated for assaulting two priests and received absolution on condition that he personally went to the Crusade (1275), whilst Sir Simon Constable as a penance for adultery with a married woman was fined the very large sum of £100 sterling or else was ordained to establish his contrition by passing to the Holy Land on Crusade (ibid., 282). No wonder that Lord Hailes (ii, 210) allowed himself the cynical comment—'a crusade was the South Sea Bubble project of the 13th century, as by one men hope to gain riches without industry, so by the other they hoped to gain Heaven without repentance'. One way or another large sums were collected. A friar preacher of Ayr named Ivo collected in the south-west of Scotland a rather meagre sum and deposited it in 1262 in the priory of Whithorn to await transmission to the Templars' church in London or to a firm of Florentine merchants. Master Leonard, precentor of Messina, papal chaplain and nuncio, was sent to Whithorn to collect it. The prior, however, not only refused payment but beat up Master Leonard when he exhibited his papal mandate. In 1266 the pope excommunicated the prior and warned him to deliver the money and to appear at Rome and answer for the injury and contempt (Calendar of Papal Letters, i, 384-5). All the money collected did not reach Rome. In 1311 the archbishop reported that he had collected in his diocese £491, 11s. 5½d., from which £228, 3s. 4½d. had been deducted for expenses. Expenses of nigh 50 per cent. imply some leakage. He adds that a further sum of £25, 14s. 8d. had been collected from those who had been allowed to change their vows of going to the crusade (Letters from Northern Registers, p. 200).

election and that of his predecessor and successor have been the subject of an admirable study by Mr. R. J. Brentano.¹

His successor was Thomas de Kirkeudbright or de Dalton, for he figures in both forms in the extant registers of the archbishops of York. His election in 1294 was made the subject of a contest between king John Balliol and Robert de Brus. He was clearly the nominee of Brus to whom he acted as chaplain, which accounts for much of his treatment within his diocese of Galloway. King John Balliol even suggested that he had secured election by simony. His consecration is discussed by Dowden.² From the York Registers some new light on Bishop Thomas is obtained. Shortly after his enthronment he was reproved by Archbishop le Romeyn for not delivering the arrears from the church of Kirkcolm sede vacante, the rector of which was one P [].³ Thomas may have had some difficulty in raising funds for his papal confirmation, for the bishop of Carlisle, as collector of the papal tithe for the Holy Land, allowed his sub-collector, the abbot of Tunland, in 1294 to lend Thomas, elect of Whithorn, £40 from the funds in his hands.⁴

The problem of loyalty—often difficult to decide by an individual—must have caused Thomas much anxious concern. He had to choose between his country and his church. At first he tried to serve both God and Mammon. The clergy of Scotland met in a National Council on 24 February 1309-10 within the church of the Minorites at Dundee and published a Declaration in favour of Robert I, now king of Scotland.⁵ There are two versions of this document, both printed in Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland (i. 460 : red lettering). The first of them, which appears in the National MSS. of Scotland and in A Source Book of Scottish History, i, 124, runs generally in the name of the clergy without naming individuals, but the second version gives the names of all the bishops as parties to the Declaration, including Thomas, Ecclesie Candide Case episcopus. The original of the second version is in the Register House.¹ It is a very peculiar document. All twelve Scottish bishops are named in the body of the document. Twelve slits were made at the foot for the insertion of seal tags ; nine seal tags are still in place, each with the name of a see written on it, including Candida Casa. But there are only three seals—St. Andrews, Aberdeen and Moray—and it would be hard to be confident that all, or indeed any, of the other tags ever had seals attached to them.

A few years later there is record of William de Parlington as rector of Kirkcolm receiving from Bishop Halton ordination to the priesthood on 7 April 1302 on letters dimissory from bishop Thomas de Kirkeudbright. He was in the English courts on July 1312 facing a claim for 10 merks by John de Markingfeld and a debt to the barons of the Exchequer (Reg. de Halton, ii, 62).

If one is to get a little nearer to an understanding of the mystery of these two versions it must be noted that the bishops named in the second version—each with appropriate tags—include the bishop of Glasgow, who seems to have been continuously a prisoner in England from 1306 until after Bannockburn, and also the bishop of Argyll, who was driven out of his diocese and was in England certainly in 1311 (see p. lvii), as well as Thomas, bishop of Candida Casa.

The late Dr. Hunter Marshall² discussed these documents and drew the conclusion that the Declaration belongs to a later date than 1310—after Bannockburn, when he thought that the consent of all the bishops might have been obtained. Some writers have considered that a meeting of clergy in 1310 was impossible because Dundee was then in English occupation, but, if the supposed Council of clergy consisted only of three bishops, the episode can be seen in a different light. Dr. Donaldson's view is that the second version was drawn up in Dundee in 1319 and is really the first in order of date ; that only three bishops were present and that only those three ever appended their seals to it; that the document was drawn up with a view to collecting as many episcopal signatures—or rather seals—as possible, but that the Scottish bishops, other than the three whose seals are appended, did not venture to attend at Dundee, so that it was considered more discreet to substitute the other version, which contained no names of individual bishops. If this is so, it is remarkable that the superseded version was not destroyed.¹

As a suffragan of York, Thomas never forgot that his primary loyalty was to it and to his fellow suffragan of Carlisle and, though he remained bishop of Whithorn for 25 years, he seems to have spent most of his days in England, being represented in Galloway by a vicar-general who issued letters dimissory to the bishop of Carlisle in 1312 to ordain Brother Richard de Merlagh, monk of Dundrennan, to the priesthood.² Such ordinations of a cleric outwith his own diocese were a convenience of which bishops made much use and in 1310 York issued similar letters to Whithorn to ordain Robert de Jarun, clerk, as rector of Bootel (Buittle).³

Thomas lived to work for four archbishops. His formal profession of obedience was made to John le Romeyn on 30 May 1294. A like profession to Thomas de Corbridge followed on 16 April 1302 and was witnessed by two of his clerks, Alexander de North Berwick and John de Galwidia.¹ His profession to Greenfield was on 22 June 1306.²

Suffragans were expected to visit their archbishop once a year, but perhaps owing to the distance involved, Thomas was given dispensation for triennial visits and at the same time was given leave to confirm and dedicate altars in the diocese of York and sede vacante to dedicate churches and reconcile cemeteries.³ During the reign of John Balliol he seems to have been at his post in Galloway, but by 1306 he had retired to Yorkshire. On 28 August 1296 Thomas along with the bishops of Glasgow and Aberdeen swore allegiance to Edward I and on 2 September following had the lands of his bishopric restored to him.⁴ The prior of Whithorn and Alexander de Puntunby, parson of Kirkcolm in the Rhinns, also received restitution. But Thomas, unlike most Scots, remained firm in his allegiance; his ecclesiastical connection with York ensured that. He was still in Galloway when in February 1303-4 the archbishop wrote to him that Alexander de Brus, son of Robert de Brus, the future king, and rector of Kirkinner, had been despoiled of his effects in that parish and his goods carried off by some unknown persons.⁵ The episode was to have its repercussions.

The hostility of the inhabitants of Galloway to this rector is easily accounted for, when it is remembered that John Balliol, chief lord in Galloway, was the rival and enemy of Robert de Brus and represented the ancient princes of that district. Edward I, with Scotland now firmly in his grip, presented to Kirkinner in 1298 an English nominee, Robert de Beverlaco (Beverley).⁶ But the murder of Comyn in February 1306 set all Scotland ablaze and there must have been severe fighting in Galloway and great destruction. The bishop's estates may have been singled out for attack and by that September he had to forsake his diocese, for his property was plundered and his manors ravaged and reduced to nothing by the Scottish war. His stocks and goods were abducted and consumed so that what was left was unable to sustain the incumbency or afford hospitality. In his urgent necessity the bishop retired to England ('in partibus Anglie'), there being no place in his diocese where to maintain his status in decency. Such is the description in an ecclesiastical document of 20 September 1306.¹ The Balliols and Comyns alike were against him because he had been a Brus nominee, and Brus, now King of Scots, was also against him because he was a suffragan of York with allegiance to Edward. So his position was not an enviable one when, in execution of the papal Bull of Clement V, the archbishop of York on 11 May 1306 directed Thomas to cite personally Robert Wisheart, bishop of Glasgow, who had been present at the crowning of Brus, to appear in Rome within 40 days and meantime suffer suspension.² So, armed with a protection from Edward³ and accompanied by the English-appointed Chancellor and Chamberlain of Scotland, Thomas started on this unwelcome task, only to be baffled by swift-moving events. Wisheart with other enemies of Edward, had seized Cupar Castle, where in turn they were besieged by the English, and Wisheart was a prisoner. Thomas may never have reached Cupar, for on his return he had to report that, as Wisheart was a prisoner, he had been unable to serve the citation. Edward had refused permission to cite and would send messengers to Rome to explain to the Pope his refusal.⁴ This unexecuted citation bears to be inscribed to bishop Thomas or his (unnamed) vicar-general, which presupposes the absence of Thomas from his diocese. Indeed, in his introduction to Greenfield's register the editor writes of Thomas as follows "The bishop of Whithorn was a most useful suffragan whose work lay largely within the diocese of York and whose habitual residence was within its limits." For the rest of his episcopate Thomas remained in England. It is not known where he resided, certainly not at York. But there is a parish of Dalton in Yorkshire which may have given him his English surname. He had no fixed incumbency there, but as suffragan to the archbishops he did a lot of work for them. The primates took a kindly interest in him, which he returned with good and willing service. He was authorised to dedicate churches, such as the newly built one at Jarum (Yarm) on 3 May 1308,¹ and consecrate altars, as at Hexham on 12 June 1310.² In 1309 he received a mandate to act on behalf of the archbishop in blessing William, abbot of Egleston, on his consecration. In May 1311 he consecrated Richard Kellawe, the new bishop of Durham,³ and, with the bishop of Carlisle and Andrew, bishop of 'Argail,⁴ who had been driven out of his own diocese, he received the profession of obedience from the successor of Anthony Bek.⁵ That July he was called on to perform the delicate task of receiving from prison Walter Langton, bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, and bringing him before an ecclesiastical court charged with homicide.⁶

For all this varied work Thomas received official fees or 'procurations' thus eking out such of the fruits of Whithorn as his vicar-general could remit to him. But the main source of procurations seems to have been reconciliations. Where any consecrated ground—church or cemetery—was defiled by the shedding of blood, no further use of that ground was permitted by canon law till it had been reconciled. The service of reconciliation is given in the *York Pontifical*⁷ and it was laid down that it should be performed by a bishop or delegated by him to the parson of the church, provided that the holy water used for the service had been exorcised by the bishop. The procurator fee for the service was standardised at 40s. In mediaeval times such a service must have been quite a common event, for church and cemetery were the only gathering places in the parish. Most of the business transactions of the inhabitants were transacted there, providing ample scope for disagreements and disputes leading to heated action, violence and reprisals. Far from being spasmodic such disturbances seem to have been a regular feature of parish life and bishop Thomas, throughout his residence in Yorkshire, was kept quite busy repairing the consequences of bloodshed. Thus in 1307 he reconciled Great Driffield church and received his procurator of 40s.,¹ and at Ripon where the cemetery had been polluted by blood arising from a fight between Mabel del Bank and Agnes de Miton, Thomas collected another 40s. What happened to the Amazons is not recorded.² Other reconciliations occurred at Pickering in October 1310, Newark in April 1311 and Beckingham in September 1312.³ The archbishop had just gone abroad and his mandate to reconcile Beckingham and exercise general episcopal functions in the diocese was accompanied by a private letter to Thomas that he could look for his procurations to the archbishop. Procurations for reconciliation had to be paid by the affected parish rather than by the offenders and were not always promptly paid. When in 1314 Thomas effected the reconciliation of Blyda (Blyth), the procurator was not forthcoming and he had to suspend the celebration of divine services till it was paid.⁴ On another occasion at the cemetery of St. Mary at Nottingham the archbishop himself had to inhibit the burial of the dead under pain of excommunication until the parishioners paid the procurator.⁵ The principle of reconciliation was sometimes carried too far. At Full Sutton two boys were playing in the cemetery with a ball which hit one of them on the nose, causing bleeding. A special inquisition was held by the archbishop, which solemnly found that Robert Dautre had caused the nose of Henry de Haler to bleed and, as the youngsters had been playing (incaute ludendo), no reconciliation was called for.¹

By mid-1310 preparations were being made in York for the trial of the northern Templars. There seems to have been some hesitation, for the northern Provincial Council displayed none of the ferocity and savage cruelty that elicited the confessions of the Templars in the French courts. Bishop Thomas took a prominent part in the trial at York. As early as February the dean and skilled lawyers of the chapter had been called in for the preparation of the case. The archbishop directed his receiver to pay 100s. to Thomas for a suitable hospice at York during the pending Council.² The following May Thomas certified that the persons in his diocese cited to appear at the trial had been warned to do so.³ Twenty-six Templars, all named, had been held for months in the castle of York. None of them seems to have had any connection with Galloway. There had been frequent and lengthy adjournments. The archbishop had left to attend the Council of Vienne. Anthony Bek, bishop of Durham, was failing and did not attend. Bishop Halton of Carlisle, as custos of that town and castle, had his hands full with Scottish raids and was shortly to take refuge in Lincolnshire at his manor of Horncastle. So, on the last day of the hearing, when the Council had dwindled to a handful, bishop Thomas delivered the sentence of the Council after the Templars had abjured their alleged heresies. They were then brought to the south door of the cathedral, where Thomas, supported by the dean and chancellor of York, the archdeacon of Cleveland and the abbot of St. Mary's, gave them absolution. The Templars were then brought into the chapter-house and delivered out of the king's custody and handed over to that of the church.⁴ The sentence delivered on 30 July was mild. The Templars were ordered to be distributed amongst English monasteries and 4d. per day was allowed to each in his appointed monastery. One of them was even allowed a month to attend to his private affairs. In April 1314 the archbishop cited Thomas to attend on his behalf a convocation in June anent a subsidy for repelling the Scots, who under Brus had laid the Marches under tribute and occupied many towns and castles.¹ On 23 July 1314 Thomas was at Furness abbey, where he granted an indulgence of 40 days to all of his diocese who should say the Lord's Prayer and the Salutation of the Virgin for the soul's repose of the late cellarer of Furness and the same for one, Richard Carpenter, buried in St. Andrew's cemetery at Calder Abbey.²

So far this account of Thomas de Dalton is derived from published sources. Dowden says he must have died by the end of 1319, but there is admitted obscurity concerning his death and the election of his successor, Simon de Wedale, abbot of Holyrood. In the hopes of clearing up the difficulties the unpublished registers of the archbishops of York, 1319-1398, have been searched.³ The result reveals further complications. At some date prior to April 1323 the archbishop emitted a protest to the pope against an unnamed bishop-elect of Whithorn being confirmed and consecrated at Rome. Further, the archbishop circulated his protest to nine cardinals of the Curia, and next day protested afresh that the bishop-elect should be sent back from Rome to receive his consecration from the archbishop, just as his predecessor had been sent back to archbishop Thurstan (referring apparently to Gilla Aldan). That there was a vacancy is proved by the action of the archbishop in appointing Mr. Robert de Oustoun as official of Whithorn to act during the vacancy.

This implies that Thomas was either dead or had resigned. But the next extract from the register shows that he must have been alive, for an archepiscopal summons to attend a Council was directed to T., bishop of Whithorn (who could have been none other than Thomas de Dalton), in view of the rumour that he had adhered to Sir Robert de Brus who lay under sentence of greater papal excommunication. If Thomas had had any communion with Brus he also would have incurred a similar sentence. Indeed, it looks as if at the close of his life, seeking to return to his home land Thomas may have approached Brus (now firmly on the throne and shortly to be recognised by England under the treaty of Northampton) for a safe-conduct, but nothing is known of any negotiations. Probably death intervened. But the summons addressed to bishop T. in 1324 would never have been sent out by the archbishop if the see of Galloway was known to be vacant, and the protest contained in it rather precludes the idea of it having been sent out in error. On the other hand the documents of 1323 are circumstantial, though they give no indication of the name of the elect or of his election. Dowden, who knew of the 1323 documents but not of the 1324 protest, suggests that Simon's first election c. 1322, or earlier, was by 'clergy and people'.

Can it be that Thomas resigned c. 1322 but the resignation was not accepted by York till a Scottish nominee, in the person of Simon de Wedale, had agreed to a profession to and consecration at York? Simon clearly tried to side-step York by going to Rome, hence the archbishop's protests in 1323. Canon J. S. Purvis (per litt. 13 May 1958) points out that the electus is never named nor an initial given, but the archbishop had heard a rumour and was anxious to get in quickly at the court at Rome and prevent any proceedings going further. The suggestion that Bruce was trying to get in a rival bishop may be the answer to the problem.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO WHITHORN

THE history of Whithorn as an ecclesiastical centre has been treated in the Whithorn volume of the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Natural History and Antiquarian Society (vol. xxvii), where there is a full account of the excavations at the cathedral church. A further report on the 17th-century remains is printed in Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland (vol. 85, p. 117), and a final report figures in the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Transactions, 1954-5 (vol. xxxiv, p. 131). The following documents supplement our knowledge in some details.

It is known that early in the 15th century there were considerable alterations to the cathedral structure which is stated in 1408 to have been unsound, mean, old and unfitting for such a church. At any time reconstruction would have been a heavy strain on both priory and diocese, and Elisaeus the bishop was anxious to give a helping hand. But the prior and convent were reluctant to proceed, though the bishop affirmed that they were well able to do so, seeing that there were only 12 canons at that date with an income of 500 merks.¹ As at the reformation a monk's portion was assessed at 20 merks plus victual of about the same value, the bishop's contention would seem to have been reasonable; so in April 1408 the pope issued a Bull (see No. 1) to compel the convent to pay half of their revenues for ten years towards the reparation of the structure.

Elisaeus was also concerned to find that there was no adequate episcopal residence in Whithorn available for him, so that he had to live in a house on his episcopal estate some twelve miles from Whithorn—perhaps at Clarie which is reputed to have been a residence of the bishops.¹ In reply to the petition the pope commissioned the Provost of Lincluden to enquire as to the facts and, if ascertained to be true, to order some ruinous buildings belonging to the chapter to be used for that purpose. Of the bishop's palace or residence there is now no trace, but in 1502 occurs a reference to his 'Castle of Balnespik at the church of Candida casa' and the 6 merkland of Balchure associated with it (see No. 2). It is possible that it may have been sited in what is now known as Castle Street. Like much else, the castle must have disappeared long ago.

Elisaeus Adougan was succeeded in 1414 in the episcopate by Thomas de Butil, who may have had some difficulty in getting possession of the lands that belonged to the episcopal mensa, for the following year the pope issued a mandate to the sub-dean of Glasgow to protect the new bishop in his temporalities. The lands therein stated are not readily identifiable (see No. 4). They were of course distinct from the temporal possessions of the priory. Another papal petition indicates a further list of the bishop's temporalities, mainly in the Whithorn area, Balhechra no doubt being the 6 merkland of Balchure. These lands before 1459 had been leased to Robert de Vaus of Barnbarroch (see No. 8).

A complete list of the lands forming the episcopal mensa of the bishops may perhaps never be recovered, but the following notes may give some indication of their very considerable extent.

INCH

The lands and island of Inch with the manor thereon,
 The office of Bailie of the bishop's lands above Cree,
 £5 lands of Killinpoti,
 £4 lands of Culcady and Balyett,
 40/ lands of Innermessane,

¹ Clarie was twelve miles from Whithorn. The Bishop's manor house at Inch, perhaps the earliest residence, was twenty-four miles from Whithorn.

formerly belonging to the bishop of Galloway were in 1605 feued by the crown to John earl of Cassillis with single sasine (including Saulset) at the new castle of Inche (R.M.S. 1594/1608-1633).

5 merkland of Dalzarrane (Gargarrane in 1489), Little Tung and Meikle Tung of 'le Seuchance', had been granted before 1489 by the bishop to Andrew Agnew, sheriff of Wigtown (Lochnaw Charters).

£5 lands of Marsalloch, Kirrunray and Clannery granted on 5 July 1556 by bishop Alexander Gordon to Patrick Agnew sheriff, for which Patrick paid £1000 (R.M.S. 1580/93-1231).

40/ lands of Achrocher, held of the bishop by Quintin Boyd (R.M.S. 1580/93-2231) and formerly leased for 19 years in 1531 to Ninian Boyd and Mariota Arnot (Lochnaw Charters).

The grain and fuller milns of Innermessane granted in 1566 by bishop Alexander Gordon to Quintin Boyd of Arco-rocher who in 1592 resigned in favour of John Neilson of Craiggaffie and his wife (R.M.S. 1546/80-2694 and 1580/93-2136).

PENNINGHAME

10 merkland of Grange of Penninghame,

5 merkland of Clarie,

5 merkland of Over Bar,

5 merkland of Barchelauchlyne,

5 merkland of Barquharrane, all lying in the Merse of Cree, were granted on 20 May 1564 by bishop Alexander to Alexander Stewart of Garlies and Katherine Stewart spouses (Galloway Charters). Clarie and Over Bar had previously been leased for 19 years by bishop Andrew Durie on 1 June 1557 to Walter Stewart of Barcly (Galloway Charters).

5 merklands of Baltersan, leased in 1538 by bishop Henry to John Vaus of Barnbarroch,

5 merklands of Barvanan and the miln of Penninghame, leased pre-1545 to John Vaus rector of Wigtown.

- £5 lands of Bordland of Penninghame, feued in 1566 for 2000 merks to William Gordon of Murefad and Helen Stewart spouses (R.M.S. 1580/93-187).
- 5 merkland of Carnestik and Polchullie, feued on 20 May 1564 by bishop Alexander Gordon to Mr. John Stewart and Egidia Gordon spouses (Galloway Charters).
- 10 merkland of Balschalloch, leased by bishop Alexander in 1558/9 to John Gordon of Lochinvar (Reg. House Charters, 1773).

KIRKCOLM

- 4 merkland of Grange,
 5 merkland of Trave,
 4 merkland of Bartrachane, formerly held of the bishop and in 1592 of the crown by Hugh Gordon of Grange, grandson of Alexander Gordon of Barquhill (R.M.S. 1593/1608-937).
- The lands of Lekkingurum and Achyfe, granted in 1448 to Thomas McDowell younger of Garthland (Galloway Charters). These may be the same as
- 6 merkland of Clachanis and Auchtafie, granted by the crown, in place of the bishop, to sir John McDowell of Garthland (R.M.S. 1593/1618-1358).
- 2 merkland of Ervie,
 4 merkland of Knokcowat, feued on 6 April 1566 to Uchtred McDowell of Garthland (Galloway Charters).
- 20/ lands of Kairromannock, feued by bishop Alexander to John McDowell, grandson to deceased Fergus McDowell of Freuch and his heirs male, whom failing Thomas McDowell of Dunance, dated 19 Dec. 1575 (Reg. of Deeds, viii, f. 194).

WHITHORN

- 5 merkland of Bishoptoun,
 6½ merkland of Balyequhoir,
 granted in 1582 by bishop John Gordon to his brother

Laurence Gordon commendator of Glenluce, who disposed the same in 1592/3 to sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies (R.M.S. 1580/93-638, 2244).

£5 land of Balnеспik,

6 merkland of Ballichur, feued by bishop Henry in 1539 to Patrick Dunbar of Clugstoun (Galloway Charters).

5 merkland of Rispyne,

5 merkland of Craig,

feued by bishop Alexander on 12 May 1564 to Robert Maxwell in Garorie and his wife (Galloway Charters).

5 merkland of Balcray, feued by bishop Alexander on 28 Jan 1564/5 to Roger Gordon dean of Dunblane (Galloway Charters) who was a younger son of William Gordon first of Craichlaw (Wm. Macmath, The Gordons of Craichlaw, p. 4).

In addition to the above lands in Wigtownshire the bishops of Galloway held the barony of Kirkerist in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright.

KIRKCRIST

8 merklands of Kirkerist, feued in 1537 by bishop Henry to the tenant James Kennedy of Blairquhan for 450 merks needed by the bishop for papal taxation (R.M.S. 1513/46-3254).

£5 lands of Nuntoun,

4 merklands of Bishoptoun.

3 merklands of Kirkeoch which apparently had belonged to the extinct nunnery there (D. and G. Trans., xxiii, 190).

20/ lands of Auchengassil,

The multures of the 6 merkland of Newtown, all the above were granted in 1535 by bishop Henry Wemys to Wm McClellane late tutor of Bombie (Reg. House Charters, 1108). The office of bailie of the barony of Kirkerist had long been held by the McClellanes who in 1591/2 were appointed by the crown as both justiciars and bailies of the barony (R.M.S. 1580/93-2050).

GIRTHON

7½ merklands of Endrig and mill granted on 28 Feb. 1558/9 by bishop Alexander Gordon to John Gordon of Lochinvar (Reg. House Charters, 1773).

A list of bishops by Dr. Gordon Donaldson has been published (D. and G. Trans., xxvii, 127). With two exceptions all the bishops of Galloway died in harness. A few were promoted to other sees. Bishop Alexander Vaus (1422-50) resigned. But David Arnot (1509-1525) had to resign under compulsion though he was allowed to retain half of the fruits of the bishopric till his death in 1536/7.¹ Arnot is believed to have belonged to the family of Arnot of that Ilk in Fife.² He certainly had a brother named Walter.³ He must have attracted the notice of the Crown, for his advancement in the Church was rapid. The Crown presented him to the rectory of Kirkforthir in 1497. The next year he became archdeacon of Lothian and two years later Provost of Bothwell, and in 1502 he was provided to the abbey of Cambuskenneth, resigning the prebend and canonry of Ayr in Glasgow cathedral. He became bishop of Galloway in 1509, to which was added in 1510 the commendatorship of Tunland, the latter being to sustain him as Dean of the Chapel Royal of Stirling.

He at once commenced a series of actions against some of the leading feuars and tenants of the episcopal lands, challenging, rather unsuccessfully, their rights. On 13 March 1510/11 he brought an action against Patrick Agnew, sheriff of Wigtown, anent his occupation of the lands of Seuchane and others,⁴ which he must have dropped. A similar action against Patrick Dunbar of Clugstoun, relating to Bishopston and Bailiewhir, he deserted with leave of the court.⁵ In 1518 he intervened in the dispute between Wigtown and Whithorn and protested that the decision of the court should not prejudice his rights or those of the burgh of Innermessane.⁶ That November he brought an action against Sir Robert Gordon of Glen anent the fruits of the kirk of Monygoft for the previous year. Gordon produced a lease dated 31 Jan. 1513/14 and the decret was adverse to the bishop.¹ Against the same defender he brought an action relating to the lands of Endrig in the parish of Girthon 'belonging to the cathedral church of Whithorn'.²

But bishop David was on far stronger ground when in 1522/3 he successfully charged John earl of Morton, with despoiling, after the field of Flodden, Damien de Falcusis, canon of Tungland and later the abbot of that monastery, of 54 ounces of gold worth £8 scots per ounce. As commendator of the abbey he had every right to demand restitution.³ From these actions emerge the picture of an impulsive, determined and aggressive personality, characteristics which may well have deprived him of royal favour and support. His downfall seems to have been the result of his forceful episcopal visitation of Glenluce abbey, which, being of the Cistercian order, was exempted by papal indult from such visitation. The manner of the visitation and the resulting damage to the abbey at the hands of the bishop's entourage, are narrated elsewhere in this volume (see p. 47). The bishop was at once in conflict with the pope, and both abbot and bishop issued letters of cursing against each other.⁴ Even the Archbishop of St. Andrews was dragged into the dispute. In a letter of 1529 James V states that David had been contumacious, showing contempt for frequent papal censures. The bishop had even been excommunicated and was deprived of all that he held, and the Crown asked the pope to give Tungland in commendam to Mr. William Stewart canon of Glasgow and rector of Lochmaben.⁵ The bishopric was given in 1525 to Henry Wemys who in place of Tungland received in 1530 the commendatorship of Dundrennan. As the impulsive ex-bishop was allowed to retain half of the fruits of the bishopric, so he is found as an interested party consenting to the actions of his successor.

Dr. Gordon Donaldson has also published a list of the priors of Whithorn.¹ Amongst them is William Douglas, whose existence has hitherto been denied² and confounded with William Douglas of Leswalt. But at the fall of the Douglasses in 1456 the prior was William Douglas who had succeeded prior James on the latter's provision to the abbey of Holyrood in May 1446. William first figures as a witness in Aug. 1447.³ He may have shared the overbearing qualities of his kinsmen, the earls, though his affiliation to them has not been established. But in 1450 at the request of William, earl of Douglas, he received a papal indult to himself and his successors to wear the white mitre without gems, a dignity that was to be without prejudice to the bishops of Whithorn.⁴ His clash with Dundrennan indicates a high-handed arrogance. The two convents had a dispute over the tithes of the lands called de Biskeby in the parish of Whithorn. Biskeby and the lands of Culfaldan, later known as the £5 lands of Culskaddane,⁵ had long been part of the patrimony of Dundrennan⁶ and the tithes were falsely claimed by Whithorn. But an amicable composition had been reached, only to be broken by prior William Douglas. On appeal to Rome the pope gave mandate to the archdeacons of Glasgow and Whithorn to settle the dispute without appeal.⁷ This prior took no part in the siege of Threave, during which the court was at Tunland for fourteen days, and after the surrender of the castle both king and queen visited Wigtown and also St. Mary's Isle.⁸ They were again at Wigtown for two nights in May 1458.⁹ They had gone there for the leasing of the crown lands forfeited by the earl of Douglas, being accompanied by Andrew, lord Avondale, as Guardian of the Western Marches and Mr. Thomas Vaus, secretary to the king, and the bishop of Whithorn and the chamberlain of Galloway were also in attendance. But prior William Douglas did not attend. So he was sent for, and the secretary, Mr. Thomas Vaus, is recorded to have ridden over to Whithorn to fetch him—‘tempore quo abduxerunt priorem de Quhithyrn’.¹ This sounds rather vigorous action. Yet the following year the Crown granted to prior William and to the convent the clachan of Whithorn as a free burgh of barony.² The prior is stated to have been deprived in 1466 and a later prior Roger gave William a magnificent annuity from the convent lands. The date of the gift is unknown, but it was confirmed by the Crown in 1473.³ So the Crown at that date could not have been prejudiced against the prior. Yet very definite reasons for deprivation are recorded. They were put forward by Mr. Fergus McDowell, provost of St. Bothans and official of Whithorn. The charges were that Douglas had committed fornication with his married sister [in law], had committed dilapidations and converted to damnable uses a number of goods belonging to the priory which he had obtained simoniacally. The bishop and archdeacon of Whithorn and the abbot of Saulset were ordered to investigate, and if the charges were found true, to deprive Douglas and to grant the priory to Fergus.⁴ Fergus seemed to have been quite confident of the findings of the enquiry, for on 8 May 1466, twelve days before the issue of the mandate, Fergus, who was probably then in Rome, gave a bond for the annates of the priory ‘to become void by deprivation of prior William Douglas’ in forma juris.⁵ But he was counting his chickens before they were hatched. The enquiry must have vindicated Douglas, for on 3 Sept. 1467 the pope issued a plenary remission to William Douglas prior, and Simon Douglas canon of Whithorn.⁶

It must be assumed that Douglas was persuaded to resign on his own terms, hence the unduly generous annuity and the whitewash contained in the crown confirmation of 1473.

The annuity was given for his good counsel and for his honest life and honourable support, and consisted of

- 16 merklands of Powtoun,
- $\frac{1}{2}$ merkland of St. John's croft,
- 1 merkland of the garden of Cruggetoun,
- 20 merklands of Cruggetoun,
- 10 merklands of Creachdow and Gervindon,
- $4\frac{1}{2}$ merklands of Kirkmidyn,
- 8 merkland and a merkland of the two villis called Otanys (Outoun) with a croft.

An annuity of 20 merks from the lands of Merton, and the abundant allowance of

- 300 bolls meal from the church of Glassertoun,
- 200 bolls meal from the church of Cruggetoun,
- 80 bolls meal from the mill of Powtoun, and
- 172 bolls meal from the church of Borg.

This handsome sustenance compares strangely with the provision authorised in 1312 by the archbishop of York for an ex-prior of the great monastery of St. Oswalds at Nostell ;

residence, a chamber and a cellar with a hall and 2 small gardens ; 4 servants ; Free firing and lighting. A palfrey and a pack horse and the services of a canon as chaplain. 14 white loaves and 14 gallons of better ale weekly, and half that amount for his companion ; and £20 annuity for dress.¹

Even less was the retiring allowance of Adam, prior of the cathedral church of Carlisle, who had almost ruined the convent by speculation. He got 20 merks and the tithes of the church of Langwathby.²

Throughout the reign of James IV there had never been any break with the papacy. Ever since the indult of 1487 whereby the pope agreed to await the supplication of the Scottish king before making appointments to prelacies, that policy seems in general to have been observed and James IV appears to have got most of the things he asked for. But he died under papal censures ; and after Flodden there was an infant king, and the regent Albany was more a Frenchman than a Scot. Further, the country was in a very disturbed state. Conditions were favourable to an extension of the pretensions of the papacy. The pope seized his opportunity to recover the papal power of appointment. What happened in the case of the priory of Whithorn is a good illustration.

On the death of prior Henry McDowell (c. 1516) the Governor nominated as prior Alexander Stewart of Pitcarne, a churchman whose rise to preferment followed the usual pattern. But he never secured papal confirmation and remained ' Postulate of Whithorn ' till 1518.¹ For the pope had other ideas and had provided to Whithorn one of his papal dataries in the person of Sylvius, Cardinal of Cortona, who impetrated the priory and purchased briefs in order to get possession. Albany naturally protested, and as a sop the pope offered the commenda of Scone to Alexander Stewart, thus leaving the cardinal of Cortona still technically in possession of Whithorn priory. But Albany, whilst agreeing to Stewart's provision to Scone, was determined to resist in the case of Whithorn and nominated Gavin Dunbar, then dean of Moray, to the priory on the grounds that a foreign prior in absentia could not entertain visitors to Whithorn nor protect pilgrims from pirates.² At first there seemed a complete impasse. Cortona was unable to obtain the fruits of his benefice, and the pope held up the necessary bulls for Scone and other benefices, without which no church dignitary could be inducted to a living in Scotland. A way out had to be found by the diplomats ; and Albany agreed that if Cortona resigned the priory of Whithorn, he should be recompensed with a pension of 200 gold ducats yearly from the priory.³

Gavin Dunbar agreed to implement the arrangement with Cortona, but at the last moment that wily Italian

prelate raised his price to 250 gold ducats, free of teind and charges payable at Rome at the beginning of each year, and demanded that two years' back payment should be made at once.¹ Dunbar must have been inducted in 1519 and held the priory till 1524 when he was elevated to the archbishopric of Glasgow.

When the priory fell vacant on Dunbar's elevation to Glasgow, the convent postulated a canon, John Maxwell, whom the pope had promoted to Dundrennan. A vacancy was pending at Melrose which the Crown wished for Maxwell, meanwhile asking the pope to provide the priory in titulum to Maxwell with dispensation to hold Dundrennan for life.² But it was not to be. The powerful Malcolm lord Fleming had a candidate who prevailed. The Cardinal of Cortona who had been provided in 1516 (see No. 16) resigned his rights in May 1525 on the understanding that he should enjoy the fruits for life, and Ninian Fleming, brother to Lord Fleming, was provided to the priory with the title but not the fruits (see No. 18). He was a youth and went to study at Paris for five years having been dispensed for defect of age. But Ninian did not wish to be a commendator and was determined to be a conventual. He renounced his dispensation and assumed the habit without knowing that fresh provision was necessary, whereupon Abraham Vaus, instigated by the bishop of Cassano, initiated litigation at Rome and the crown had to appeal to the pope to extinguish the suit and impose silence, so as 'to prevent scoundrels of that sort from dragging people into court'.³ During his priorship Ninian assigned to John Steinstoun a pension of £80 levied on the whole fruits of the priory. His successor, prior Malcolm Fleming, found this pension financially unsuitable and desired the burden of it to be definitely allocated. The vicarage of Mochrum was falling vacant by the resignation of an unnamed holder, a member of the convent. So the prior arranged that the resignation should be in favour of the pensioner, John Steinstoun, whilst half of the fruits and the right of appointment to the vicarage were to be annexed to the prior's mensa. This allocation, favourable to the prior, could only be effected at Rome and the Crown sought the aid of Cardinal Ghinucci.¹ These pensions, whether to cardinals or canons, could not fail to imperil the financial status of the church. Pope and king alike were steadily undermining its stability.

³ Ibid., 247.

On the death of Ninian the Crown sought papal provision for Malcolm Fleming dean of Dunblane, on the understanding that if he got the priory he should resign the deanery in favour of William Gordon. But the Crown did not forget its rake-off. Pope Clement VII had granted to Thomas Erskine, a young noble and son of the chief Secretary of Scotland, a faculty to enjoy a succession of benefices with suspension of the canons. Thomas had made no use of the faculty, for as eldest son he was to succeed to his father's estate; so the Crown had asked the pope to insert in the brief the name of John Erskine, younger brother of Thomas, 13 years of age, adding that it was a small matter with which to trouble the pope but one for which the king desired his careful attention.² So the king asked that if Malcolm was provided to the priory a pension be given to John Erskine.³ A month later the Crown sought that the pension of 400 merks be not given to Erskine but to one John Maxwell, aged 17, son of a vigorous Warden of the Western March.⁴ The Crown was not content to use church benefices for the maintenance of its civil service only. When James V came to rule for himself he inherited a control in ecclesiastical affairs which he used, not to set the church in order but to exploit its wealth for his own financial needs.

In the absence of any rental, the temporalities of the priory at the Reformation can only be listed from various sources. Many of the following lands must have been part of the original endowment of the priory. The properties acquired after c. 1300 are recorded in a Crown confirmation of 1451.¹

In 1569 Robert Stewart the commendator feued the greater part of the lands to James, earl of Moray, the regent, whose daughters and heirs disposed the lands to many others.² This feu charter lists the lands as follows.

£10 lands of Mains of Whithorn, excepting 13 crofts already feued to their named occupants,
 5 merklands of Preistrie,
 [] lands of Stennok-Corbak and Stennok-Balconeill,
 5 merklands of Isle of Whithorn,
 [] lands of Schedok,
 5 merklands of Portcarrick and its mill,
 5 merklands of Balsmith,
 10 merklands of Crugiltoun castle,
 10 merklands of Crugiltoun-Cavens, with several named crofts,
 16 merklands of Powtoun and its mill,
 5 merklands of Little Owtoun,
 5 merklands of Owtoun Corwar,
 10 merklands of Meikle Wig,
 10 merklands of Apilbie and its mill,
 5 merklands of Craigilmayne,
 5 merklands of Creochdow, which in 1558 had been takked by Commendator Malcolm Fleming to John Fleming and Margaret Hamilton therein designed his well-beloved servants for 19 years.³
 4 merkland of Little Areis,
 5 merkland of Meikle Areis,
 10 merkland of Arlis and Culmazeoch,
 4 merkland of Barnevarynok,
 £5 lands of Glenswonton, in the parish of Parton,
 10 merklands of Knok of Kirkmadin in Farnes and its crofts, 5 merklands of Cairndoun, granted to the priory by Duncan son of Gilbert earl of Carrik.

The lands of Drunkellis and Drumdath granted to the priory by Devorgill Marescallis.

All these lands were granted in regality to the priory by the Crown in 1450.² In 1530 prior Malcolm gifted to Gilbert, earl of Cassillis, the non-entry maills of the 25/ land of Craignell 'whereon the tower is situated', the 25/ land of Easter Bauch, the 25/ land of Wester Bauch and the 25/ land of Cairnwhoak—called in 1539 Grumetland—in all a £5 land.³

The question is often asked where was the parish church of Whithorn? The answer is that there was never a separate parish church in pre-Reformation days. The churches of Premonstratensian canons, like the Augustinians, whilst following the Cistercian plan, had quite a different internal layout from the Cistercian churches. Cistercian churches were always aisled churches, because the aisle was needed for movement within the church, as that order stood apart from the parochial system. The church was in two sections, the monks' quire east of the crossing and the lay brothers' quire west of the crossing. The latter comprised the whole nave, save perhaps the two or three most westerly bays. Hence the necessity for movement without passing through the lay brothers' quire.

³ Culzean Charters, No. 298, 384.

But in the churches of the canons there was no provision for lay brothers who were not a feature in the Premonstratensian and Augustinian orders. There was therefore no need for aisles and the whole nave west of the crossing was available for the public. Within the nave the parish had parochial rights. The parish used the nave and the canons the quire. The parish altar was centrally placed just west of the crossing. It was therefore a normal development at the Reformation for the nave, as at Whithorn, to be preserved as a parish church, whereas the canons' quire and all the conventual buildings were allowed to decay or be robbed for secular building uses.¹

In the 15th century the church had to grapple with a number of problems, amongst which was that of the cost of living. Many parish churches founded in the 13th century were endowed with revenue sufficient in that century but inadequate in the 15th century. According to modern conceptions there must have been abundant supply of churches and chapels for the population, yet many of them possessed but small endowments. The right of presentation to most of them had been gifted to the monasteries which had resources to maintain them and in the 15th century that trend seems to have been intensified. Thus in 1427 Alexander Vaus, bishop of Whithorn, appropriated the parish churches of Cruggleton and Clachshank to the capitular mensa of Whithorn. The stated grounds for this action were that each parish church hardly exceeded 4 merks sterling in value, on which sum two rectors could not be sustained.² Similarly, the churches of Leswalt and Sannat (Senwick in Kirkeudbrightshire) had been annexed in 1410 to Tunglad abbey to enable that convent to maintain hospitality to travellers (see No. 3), and in 1433 bishop Alexander Vaus confirmed the annexation to Whithorn of the parish church of Longcaster (see No. 6). It is therefore not surprising to find in a papal bull of 1456 the complaint that so many parish churches in Galloway, which were wont to be governed by secular clerks, had been united in perpetuity to monasteries and other regular places that few of them remained to be collated to secular clerks.¹ In Wigtownshire alone Whithorn held 12 parish churches, and as it was a Premonstratensian house, these churches could be served by its canons.²

The records of cathedral, priory and burgh alike have disappeared. General Hutton records a few deeds together with this note :

Extracts from an inventory of writs belonging to the burgh of Whithorn, in the charge of the deceased John McEwan, W.S., Edinburgh.

- (i) Translation of a charter of James IV of the priory and toun of Whithorn dated 1 May 1511.
- (ii) Charter of Whithorn dated 1 July 1511.
- (iii) Copy of charter by King James V in favour of the burgh of Whithorn dated 27 July 1518.
- (iv) Copy of two charters from James V and Charles II to the said burgh. James' charter is 1518 and Charles' 1661.

The few documents printed here are a miserable substitute for the wealth of records which both priory and burgh must once have had and they leave a lot of questions unanswered. No light can be thrown on the St. Molinor's croft and chapel on Culmalow with rights to run geese on the common there (see No. 7). It is perhaps identical with St. Morar's croft of Culmalzie (see No. 30) in Kirkyunner parish. Many of the church documents are signed by the members of the convent. In 1508 prior Henry McDowell and no less than 24 canons sign (see No. 15). It was of course the heyday of the monastery, but it is remarkable that the number should be just double that of the period when rebuilding was starting c. 1408.

² This picture of the supply of churches in Galloway may not be true for the rest of Scotland at that time, for there were many complaints about the shortage of churches and of the long distance of parishioners from their parish churches.

Another document (see No. 27) gives a glimpse of the state of society in Whithorn in 1538. Dene Andrew Stevinsone, one of the canons, had in his chamber within the dorter of the monastery a large sum of money, being 1000 merks of gold and silver which must almost certainly have been lodged there for safety.¹ Thence it was stolen by no less a person than Cuthbert Cunyngham, provost of Whithorn.

The most colourful of the documents narrates the sad case of Duncan McGoun of Skeoch, provost of Whithorn in 1547, who had to divorce his wife c. 1550 (see No. 32). In 1522 he was only a burges of Whithorn engaged in overseas trade in conjunction with two burgesses of Ayr. The practice seems to have been for merchants to accompany their goods on the ship. Their boat was captured, 'taken upon the sey' by an Englishman, Thomas German, who held all three Scots to ransom. It was arranged that the two Ayrshire men should be liberated to collect the ransom, and Duncan McGoun's fate was to remain in England as pledge for payment of the ransoms. John Mure and John Wishart were released, but once home in safety in Ayr, they ignored the ransom money. It is not known how the wretched Duncan McGoun fared, but he must have arranged payment of all three ransoms before he was released. Once back in Scotland he found that Wishart was dead, so he sued Mure for the two ransoms. The Lords of Council had no hesitation in giving him decret and the provost of Ayr and lord Cassillis were directed to call on the heirs of Wishart to pay Mure their share of the ransom (see No. 17).

¹ In the days when there were no banks this was a common practice. In 1520 Adam Reid of Stairwhite deposited a box of charters and evidents relating to the Wallace family with the warden of the Grey Friars at Ayr 'for the sake of more secure custody' (Prot. Bk. of Gavin Ros, No. 417).

1408, April 11

Commission to the Archdeacon of Glasgow to compel the Prior and Canons of Whithorn to contribute to the rebuilding of the Church of Whithorn.

The duty of the Pope's office requires that he should show the plenitude of justice to anyone who seeks for it. His venerable brother Elisaeus, bishop of Whithorn, has shown him, by his petition that the structure of the church of Whithorn, in which the body of the blessed Ninian is enshrined, and to which the people are wont to resort in great multitudes, because of the miracles which God, on account of his worthiness, frequently performs there, is unsound (debilem), mean (vilem) and old, more than is fitting for such a church. He has wished to give a helping hand (manus adiutrices erogare) from his own resources and his episcopal revenue, but they are insufficient for the building and repair required for the church. Although he has many times asked the prior and canons of the said church, who belong to the Premonstratensian Order and are well able to help, to contribute with him towards the building and repair, the canons, who do not exceed twelve "claustrales" and have an average annual revenue of 500 merks money of Scotland or thereabouts from rents, offerings, revenue and obventions, have at no time been prepared to consent to make this contribution. Wherefore the Pope has been asked by the said bishop Elisaeus to compel the said prior and canons to pay half of their revenues, offerings, rents and obventions for the next ten years towards the repair of the church. He, therefore, not having certain information about the premises, orders the Archdeacon, if he finds the above facts to be true, to compel the said prior and convent by ecclesiastical censures and other legal means, to pay half of their revenues from any sources for the next ten years. Notwithstanding any exemption from interdict, suspension or excommunication granted by the apostolic see to the said prior and canons.

1408, May 15

Commission to the Provost of the church of Lyncloudant, in the diocese of Glasgow, to assign certain ruinous property in Whithorn for the building of a residence for the Bishop.

The great devotion towards God and the Roman Church, with which his dear brother, Elisaeus, bishop of Whithorn, is known to shine, requires the Pope to favour any matter which he sees to be opportune for him. A petition presented to him on behalf of the bishop bears that there is no episcopal residence in the city of Whithorn nor has there been one hitherto. He is therefore obliged to live in a certain house belonging to his episcopal patrimony (mensa), twelve miles from the city, and when he comes to the city and the church of Whithorn, which belongs to the Premonstratensian Order, to celebrate ordinations and other divine services and to perform the pontifical functions incumbent upon him by his episcopal office he is compelled to return afterwards to a distant abode. Around the church in the city aforesaid there are also not a few streets (platee) and lodgings, ruinous, empty and uninhabited, which belong to his dear sons, the chapter of Whithorn, and which are not required for their own use, from which it would be possible to construct and build a suitable house for the use and habitation of the bishop and his successors, bishops of Whithorn. Wherefore a humble supplication was made to him on behalf of the said bishop Elisaeus, who wishes, for the good of the church and chapter aforesaid, to reside in the said city, that he should deign to order that a suitable portion of the streets and lodgings aforesaid should be assigned to him and his successors, in which they might construct and build an episcopal residence, with entry to the said church and exit therefrom and other features similar to the episcopal residences in other cities of the realm of Scotland. Therefore the Pope, not having definite information about the premises, orders the Provost, whom he specially trusts in these and other matters, to make diligent enquiry and if he finds the premises to be true, then, by the Pope's authority, he is to cause a suitable part of the streets and lodgings aforesaid to be assigned to bishop Elisaeus and his successors for the construction of the aforesaid episcopal residence, provided that the chapter are not excessively wronged. Notwithstanding any privileges to the contrary etc.¹

Commission to the Archdeacon of Glasgow to confirm the annexation of churches of Sannac and Leswat to the abbey of Toungland.

to him on behalf of his dear sons, the abbot and convent of the monastery of Tunglund, of the Premonstratensian Order, in the diocese of Whithorn, bears that in consideration of the hospitality which the abbot and convent of the said monastery continually maintained in the same, out of the revenues, which were very meagre and unable to keep up hospitality of this sort and support the other burdens resting upon them, Michael, bishop of Whithorn [1355-59], and some of his predecessors, bishops of Whithorn, in times past, with the consent and assent of the chapter of the church of Whithorn, incorporated, annexed and united the churches of Sannat and Liswalt, in the said diocese, to provide of the aforesaid hospitality and burdens and that by virtue of the union the abbot and convent of the same monastery have held and possessed the aforesaid parish churches for forty years and more, just as they hold and possess peacefully and quietly at present. Wherefore the Pope was asked to give the force of confirmation to the annexation and union aforesaid. He therefore orders the archdeacon to make inquiries and if he finds the above to be true to approve and confirm it. And, if he approves, the confirmation is to be as valid as if the Pope had made it himself.¹

Mandate to the subdean of the church of Glasgow to protect Thomas, bishop of Whithorn, in his possession of the temporalities of his See.

The Pope is very favourable to the just desires of petitioners and treats them with due favours. A petition recently shown to him on behalf of his venerable brother, Thomas, bishop of Whithorn, bears that his immediate predecessor, Elisaeus, bishop of Whithorn of good memory at the time of his decease, and their other predecessors, bishops of Whithorn, from a time whereof the memory of man knows not the beginning, peacefully and quietly possessed their possessions, lands and heritages of Innermasan, Drymor, Innysmacrinyl, Kyrkkenot, Misturi and Nicoltum, in the diocese of Whithorn.¹ However, the said

Thomas fears that many persons will molest him unduly in the possessions, lands and heritages aforesaid and the gathering of their fruits (ipsorum fructuum preceptorie). Therefore the Pope was supplicated humbly to make provision for him in this matter. The Pope therefore, not having certain knowledge of the premises but being moved by this petition, orders the subdean, if he finds the facts to be correctly stated by the said Thomas, to protect and defend the said Thomas and his successors, by apostolic authority, in the peaceful possession of the lands and heritages, not allowing them to be molested by anyone without cause.

Petition by Robert de Vaus for confirmation of grant by Thomas, bishop of Whithorn.

The reverend father, Thomas [Spens], bishop of Whithorn, for certain reasonable causes moving him thereto, with the consent, will and assent of the chapter of his church of Whithorn, gave, granted and assigned in free alms to the petitioner, Robert de Vaus of Barnebarach, layman of the said diocese, and two of his heirs, for the lives of himself and the said two heirs, in return for a certain annual payment to the said Thomas, bishop, and his successors, bishops of Whithorn, certain lands or parcels of lands, and possessions, commonly called Balzequhyr, Respin, le Cray, Appiwy, Balhechra, Balterchen and Bischopetoune, in the baronies of Quhithirne, Penyganne and Kirlecriste, lying within the sheriffdom of Wigtoune and stewartry of Kirkenbricht, and the diocese of Whithorn, lawfully belonging to the episcopal patrimony of Whithorn, and their pertinents, with all rights and appertenances of the same, as is more fully contained in the authentic letters patent made thereon and confirmed by the seals of the bishop and chapter.

¹ Geese seem to have been a more important part of rural economy in the 16th century than today. In 1521-22 no less than 6000 geese were due to the Crown from the tenants of Uchtermuchtly. They were sold at 8d. to 10d. each (Ex.R., xiv. 416.)

Since this concession and donation is known to be to the evident utility of the patrimony (mensa) aforesaid, the Pope is asked to confirm it, supplying any defects.

¹ In the 16th century there were relatively few benefices held in commendam by Italians, or which were paying pensions to cardinals. The proportion was very small compared with France, infinitesimal compared with Italy. It will be found on analysis that all the abbeyes and pensions that went to cardinals in this period were little more than remuneration for services rendered. Almost invariably they had great difficulty in getting paid and the king was by no means helpful. It may not be a rash statement to affirm that there were more Scots in French benefices than there ever were Italians in Scottish. When the cardinal got Whithorn he was papal Datary, an important person, since all Supplications passed through his hands. He had to be humoured—and rewarded. He was provided to the priory in commendam, worth £300 sterling on 14 Kal. Nov. 1516 (Reg. Vat., 1088, f. 217).

Lest the cardinal suffer by this resignation, the pope, who elsewhere has decreed that no pension could be attached to benefices without the consent of the holder, grants to the cardinal the reservation of the whole fruits of the priory during his life, together with all other benefices he may hold. The cardinal has permission to name any bishop, canon or ecclesiastical dignitary whom he chooses, to whom to concede a third of the said fruits which will be collected in the assignee's name, and Fleming has given his consent thereto. If the cardinal gets the priory in commendam, he is forbidden to alienate any of the property and will have to support all the burdens and make fitting provision for the community.

¹ The date of this document must be suspect. By the courtesy of Father W. J. Anderson it has been checked with a photostat of the Brockie MSS. The entries on either side of it are dated 1539, which seems to have been accepted in Letters of James V; but Andrew, bishop of Whithorn, was only provided to the see on 22 Aug. 1541, which points to a later date (D. and G. Trans., xxvii, 142). Malcolm became commendator early in 1539.

¹ No connection between the Hannays of Knokglass and of Sorbie has yet been established. Originally Knokglass seems to have been a McDowell property and may have come by way of marriage to the Sorbie family. As late as 1626 the superiority of Knokglass was part of the Sorbie estate. Thus on 3 Nov. 1598 Alex. Hannay of Sorbie gave a tack of the 2½ merklands of Knokglass to Uchtred McDowall of Barjarg (Monreith Charters). In 1493 Dougal Hannay of Knokglass was sued by Robert H. of Sorbie for failing to infest the pursuer in St. John's land within the lands of Ingliston of Sorbie (A.D.C., folio vol. p. 318). Dougal may well have been the King's Falconer who received a fee of £20 p.a. for life in 1498-9 (R.S.S., i, 348). In 1514 Odo H. of Knokglass was a witness to a Corswell sasine (Galloway Charters). DOCUMENTS RELATING TO GLENLUCE

IN the Archaeological Collections for Ayrshire and Galloway, vol. 5, is a valuable article by Mr. David Henry on Glenluce Abbey with plans and drawings as the structure stood in 1885 and an appendix of documents from the Culzean charter room beginning in 1560. There is now presented some further documents which with one exception are prior to that date. Yet as Mr. Henry points out, in the absence of the abbey's chartulary, Glenluce—the valley of light—is for more than three centuries a valley of darkness.¹

Founded on 21 Jan. 1192 rather than 1190² by Roland lord of Galloway, it received further endowments from Alan, son of Roland, from Edward Bruce when lord of Galloway, Malcolm Fleming, earl of Wigtown, and from the kings of Scotland. These grants are referred to without particulars in a copy of a charter of confirmation by James II of 1441, fortunately preserved in the Hay of Park Papers now in the Register House (see No. 37). The monastery was certainly heavily endowed with lands amounting to no less than a £168, lands which seem to have covered the whole parish of Glenluce with some lands in the parishes of Inch and Kirkinner. They are detailed in a feu charter, granted by Thomas Hay, last abbot to Gilbert earl of Cassillis on 17 April 1572. For this feu the earl paid no less than £10,000 Scots and an annual feu duty of £666, 13s. 4d.³ So when the abbot's son set to work to build the House of Park he can have had no anxiety as to finance.

King Robert I in a charter of confirmation (c. 1323) erected the lands into a free barony,⁴ confirming its liberties and also donating unspecified lands. King David II in the year 1356/7 confirmed to Glenluce a 5 merkland in the earldom of Wigtown and a 5 merkland of Carnemol or Kirkinner.¹ Another 5 merkland of Carnemol went to Malcolm Fleming.² Malcolm earl of Wigtown granted to Glenluce the 10 merklands of Barnes (see No. 37). The Douglasses, when lords of Galloway, are not known to have increased these endowments, but Margaret countess of Galloway in 1430 erected the lands of Glenluce and Barnes into a regality (see No. 37), which grant was confirmed by her husband Archibald, earl of Douglas and Duke of Touraine, in 1432 and further confirmed in 1441 by James II (see No. 37). On 25 Jan. 1496/7 James IV for favour towards Michael abbot of Glenluce created the vill of Ballinlach pertaining to the monastery into a free burgh of barony with cross, markets on Sundays and an 8 day yearly fair commencing on 8 Sept.³ But two years later on the representation of abbot Michael that the fair interfered with the harvest, the Crown issued a charter of novodamus altering the date to the week beginning on 2 July with markets on Saturdays. The king also gave them the right to purchase necessities from any ship that put into the shores of Lochluce or Lochryan—a right which the abbey had to sustain in the courts at a later date (see No. 38).

Mr. Henry gives a list of the abbots, to which some additions can be made.

WILLIAM, the first known abbot, may perhaps have been the head of the tiny group of Founders c. 1191, sent by the abbot of Dundrennan; 'A man of proved truthfulness and a monk of holy life'⁴ who in 1216 wrote to the prior of Melrose an account of a strange phenomenon which two of the brethren reported that they had witnessed. It is an account in which a sane and grave piety mingles with medieval credulity in a vivid and pleasant style.

By the statutes of the order every abbot was bound to appear at the annual General Chapter at the Burgundian mother abbey of Citeaux held in September, where the heads of all abbeys from every corner of Christendom met in one of the most international and democratic assemblies in the Middle Ages. There they discussed as equals, judged and were judged even in absentia. The Scottish abbots had the privilege of coming only every fourth year. In 1199, a year of strife in Galloway, William was due at Citeaux, but the abbot of Dundrennan, as father immediate, advised him to stay at home though he himself braved the undoubted terrors of the journey.¹ But his brother abbots took a severe view of William's absence and ordained the abbot of Glenluce to fast every Friday on a single meal of bread and water till he returned to Citeaux the next year and till then was forbidden to enter his abbatial stall. The abbot of Dundrennan for his advice received eight days of light penance, one of which was to be on bread and water.

GILBERT. It is not known when he succeeded, but after being abbot in the early 13th century he retired from his charge to seek the peace of ordinary monastic life at Melrose. He must have left a happy impression behind him in Galloway, for the clergy and people called for him as bishop in spite of the opposition of the canons of Whit-horn.² With the support of King Alexander and the later decision of York he remained in possession of the see till his death in 1233.³

ROBERT, 'the so-called abbot' mentioned in the Chronicle de Mailros, p. 147. Times were wild in Galloway and Alexander II was campaigning against Thomas, the illegitimate claimant to the province, and it would appear that someone—perhaps an interested outsider—aided Robert to intrude, and Jordan abbot of Dundrennan did not do his duty. But the General Chapter was alert and ordered in 1234 an investigation of the affair by the abbots of Rievaulx, Roche and Sawley, as unprejudiced outsiders.⁴ Not only was Robert removed, but Jordan was also deposed for his negligence.⁵ It was during this troubled period

(1235) that some of Alexander's soldiers 'more sons of the Devil than of Mars', took to plundering religious houses. At Glenluce they stripped a monk who was dying on the floor of the infirmary on his traditional death bed of ashes and straw, of the only sheets which covered him.¹

MICHAEL (1236-48) prior of Melrose, an experienced monk, replaced the unworthy Robert, while the monks of Dundrennan elected another Melrose monk Leonius. Michael must have been a man of high ideals, capable of restoring whatever damage had been done by his predecessors and the civil anarchy, for he died, fulfilling his duty of attending the General Chapter of 1248, at the abbey of Vaucelles in the diocese of Cambrai.²

ALAN MUSARDE, a monk of Rievaulx, was chosen to succeed Michael.³ The abbot of Dundrennan, Brian, must have overstepped his powers as visitor, for Alan complained to the General Chapter, and the abbots of Furness, Byland and Rufford were authorised to settle the matter.⁴ Another illustration of the difficulties of maintaining the salutary contact with Citeaux is given by the complaint of Euraid de Venantio, citizen of Douai in Flanders, against the abbot of Glenluce in 1259. Evidently the abbot must have been waylaid returning from the Chapter and had to borrow the money for his boat fare from Euraid. He neglected to repay and so the merchant of Flanders called on the Assembly in Burgundy to recover the debt from the Galloway defaulter.⁵

Thereafter silence falls upon the abbots for over two centuries, during which only two names occur.

BEDE, abbot of Glenluce, on 18 Oct. 1347 witnessed the grant of Buittle church to Sweetheart Abbey by Edward Balliol.⁶

ADAM, abbot of Glenluce, is referred to on 16 July 1381 in a later stage in the appropriation of the same church.⁷

One of the few monastic names known to us in this period is that of Oswald, prior of Glenluce, who was provided to the bishopric of Galloway by Urban VI at the very moment of the opening of the Great Schism. He failed to get possession against the Clementine candidate, Thomas de Rosy, though he was consecrated and acted as suffragan of York.¹ Not till 1487 does the series of abbots again emerge into a hazy light. In that year the Scottish Parliament forbade the purchase of abbeys as not belonging to the Court of Rome, one of many acts which together represent a drive against the papal reservation of Scottish abbeys which was apparently something new in the 15th century.

MICHAEL, mentioned in the charter (1496/7) that created Ballinlach into a free burgh of Barony,² and again when the date of the Fair was changed at the abbots request (see No. 38).

ROBERT BETOUN was a successful administrator and king's protégé and doubtless destined for an abbatial rather than a monastic career. Glenluce was but a stepping-stone. It is interesting to note that the king had him confirmed by a monk of Citeaux, Thomas Fasington.³ In Oct. 1500 the Crown issued to Robert Betoun, abbot of Glenluce, a precept of admission to the temporalities of that abbey.⁴ On 3 March 1501/2 the Lords ordained Thomas McClellan of Bomby to pay to Robert, abbot of Glenluce, as successor to Nychell (sic) abbot of Glenluce, 45 merks owed by him to the said deceased Nychell.⁵ By Oct. 1506 the Crown sought to transfer him to Melrose. Melrose abbey, much damaged in the wars, was in a distressing situation, no less than three individuals calling themselves abbots. Drastic action and a strong abbot was required. Robert, as crown nominee, is described as 'an experienced monastic who in a few years saved Glenluce from perishing and restored that house almost abandoned'.⁶ Probably as part of its scheme for Melrose, the Crown directed a missive to the pope on 22 Nov. 1506 on behalf of Robert Betoun, abbot of Glenluce, to be abbot of Coupar.¹ The tangled affairs of Melrose were liquidated in April 1507 by Betoun, described as postulant of Coupar, being transferred to Melrose. One of the so-called abbots, David Broun, was exiled and lived in poverty in Rome,² Mr. William Turnbull, parson of Annan, was given Coupar and Bernard Bell was bought off with a pension from Melrose.³ As this pension was at the expense of the new abbot, Robert Betoun was allowed to retain Glenluce for two years whilst enjoying Melrose.⁴ Hence Betoun figures in a Glenluce assedation in 1509 as abbot of Melrose and of Glenluce (see No. 39).

THE CARDINAL OF ST. MARK. The settlement of Melrose was greatly facilitated in Rome by the activities of the Cardinal of St. Mark, Dominico Grimani, Cardinal of St. Mark, Patriarch of Aquileia and 'Protector of Scotland'. He was rewarded with the gift of Glenluce in commendam 'as a trifling gift to the Protector of Scotland to be taken not as a full reward but only as a souvenir'.⁵ As such he probably had a previous arrangement with the king about Glenluce, for he wrote to the king's secretary, Patrick Paniter, to make all the necessary arrangements and appointed the bishop of Whithorn his procurator to take possession of the monastery.⁶ He did not even wait for the expiry of Betoun's two years.

QUINTIN McCALBERT must have been abbot for a brief time either before or during the office of the Cardinal, but it is not clear what was his date or his real status. Perhaps he was acting abbot in place of the distant Cardinal. He was dead by 1512, when some of his assets were stolen from the abbey by Sir Andro Lundy (see No. 40).

Father O'Dea points out (per litt 2 Ap. 1958) that William Turnbull was the only one effective Abbot of Melrose in 1507 having ceased to be parson of Annan since 1513. Ferrerius suggests that he obtained the abbey by shady means. Bell was always a pensioner, Brown was a worthless opportunist, a secular cleric who had been brushed off the scene 20 years previously and had seized the Crown's interference to claim a pension.

Glasgow. On 9 April 1512 James IV wrote to the Cardinal that the cession of Glenluce to Mr. Cuthbert was being prepared on the understanding that the Cardinal would suffer no loss or deprivation of revenues.¹ Later that year Cuthbert was sent to Rome to discuss with the Cardinal the business of Glenluce on the basis that the Cardinal of St. Mark might exchange his commendatorship for a pension from the abbey, thus allowing proper administration of the abbey to be exercised.² To this end Robert Betoun, abbot of Melrose agreed to abandon his suit against the Cardinal for intrusion.³ Mr. Cuthbert achieved his purpose, the Cardinal's pension being fixed at £400 Scots. So in a summons of 12 May 1513 Cuthbert is described as procurator and factor to the abbot and convent of Glenluce (see No. 41). He was given the honorary dignity of Papal Pronotary on 12 July 1512, where no mention is made of his possessing Glenluce.⁴ He cannot long have survived this settlement. He was dead before the close of 1513⁵ and by July 1517 the archdeacon of St. Andrews and the provost of Crichton were his executors.⁶ On 26 March William Baillie, brothers son and heir to the deceased Mr. Cuthbert, was sued by the widow of John Murray of [Black] barony for £1200 Scots or 1200 ducats, which Murray on behalf of Mr. Cuthbert had paid over to Jerome Frescobald the merchant banker of Florence as three years' pension of the abbey of Glenluce due to the Cardinal of St. Mark for the right to that pension.⁷ Cuthbert had a son, Bernard Baillie, legitimised on 2 June 1529. He was parson of Lamington.⁸

DAVID HAMILTON, bishop of Argyll, half-brother of Arran, who had already annexed the Cistercian abbey of Saddell (Kintyre), is described as commendator of Glenluce in March 1517/18.⁹ But in 1513 the Crown had asked the pope to give the commenda to David, 'who had ruled a wild and difficult diocese wisely and well'.¹ But the pope declined and gave Glenluce in commendam to the Cardinal of Eusebius, Scotland's 'second string' at the Vatican. Albany as Governor protested vigorously and the Cardinal was persuaded to cede the commenda to bishop David.

Meanwhile the convent, restless over the delay and free from control, seized the opportunity to exercise their centuries old right and elected Alexander Cunyngham, one of the monks, as abbot, the election being confirmed by the father abbot of the Cistercian order and supported by the Cardinal, who appointed him his procurator to administer the abbey. With armed assistance Cunyngham seized the Place and held it by force. Albany proposed the usual half-hearted solution, namely that the Cardinal of Eusebius and bishop David should agree on a reservation of fruits, i.e. a pension, so as to allow certain bulls held up by the Curia to be issued by the papal chancery, Albany guaranteeing to the Cardinal the fruits of Glenluce.² Alexander Cunyngham hastened off to Rome and litigated against bishop David and, strongly backed by the Cardinal, obtained sentence against David for contumacy.³ The sentence must have included excommunication, for in the court of Archbishop Forman Alexander stoutly denied that he had been party to the publication on church doors of the sentence of excommunication of bishop David nor had ever seen the sentence. The Archbishop thereupon excommunicated the calumniators of the bishop and pronounced absolution and rehabilitation of the bishop from the said sentence.⁴

Cunyngham had already started proceedings in Edinburgh against bishop David, who asked instrument that the court all 'tak his part contrar to the said monk because his action concerns the commone wele of the realm'.¹ On 6 June the court decerned in favour of bishop David. Both sides had powerful backers, the earl of Glencairn supporting his cousin Alexander, the earl of Arran on the bishop's side had ejected Alexander from the abbey with effusion of blood and mutilation of Alexander's hand, and lodged him in prison in Blakness in custody of the earl's brother, Sir Patrick Hamilton, because he would not renounce his claim to the abbey. The monk was removed from Blakness to the Edinburgh tolbooth, and as he then seemed amenable the chancellor gave him licence to come and go from the tolbooth in order that he might 'inform his men of law in the Cardinalis mater'. Not till 7 June 1516 was a final decret given in favour of the bishop on a supplication from 'your poor and obedient churchman and prisoner', on which is endorsed the finding of the court that Alexander be set free to return to the abbey or, on finding security not to trouble Glenluce, to go where he pleases.² An echo of the litigation was the prosecution for treason of dene Patrick Cunyngham, monk of Dundrennan, and schir Matho Cunyngham, chaplain at Kirkandrews, for sending Michael Cairns to Whithorn, where he affixed to the kirk door a pretendit process of the Cardinal.³

But though the agents of the Cardinal were thus dealt with, he still held the abbey in commendam though his revenue therefrom had been stopped at source. He still held the legal provision and could create endless difficulties between the Scottish Crown and the papal Curia. Obviously a new approach to Rome was due. In 1519 it had effect (see No. 42). On 13 May the bishop was given Dryburgh in commendam, thus clearing the way to a settlement, and Albany offered to discharge the fruits of

Glenluce to the Cardinal's satisfaction on condition that he aided the appointment to Glenluce of Walter Malynne the duke's secretary.¹

WALTER MALIM, MALYNNE or MALYNING² was abbot of Glenluce by 15 Dec. 1519.³ For over 30 years abbot Malim was to preside over and guide the affairs of the convent, and the documents printed here give some idea of the great variety of his devoted labours. From the very first he must have found himself at loggerheads with the bishop of Galloway, who had probably exercised a fairly close supervision over the abbey since the death of Mr. Cuthbert Baillie and who may have wished to continue doing so. Bishop David Arnot, a man of wide experience, must have resented the independent attitude of abbot Walter, and matters came to a head on 8 Feb. 1524 when the bishop issued letters of cursing against the abbot and convent⁴ It appears that Mr. Michael Cunyngham had secured the letters of cursing at Rome for the bishop.⁵ The bishop followed this up with a visitation in person on the abbey.⁶ Under canon law the monastery or church visited had to

² There are so many variants of the surname that it may well be that Malim was a foreigner—perhaps French. But one suspects that he was some relation of the Downy Malumy or Malynne, a crown messenger c. 1470-90, much employed by James I, who was paid £6, 13s. 4d. for passing to Kintyre to summons Sir John of the Isles for treason (L.H.T., i, 237-8). In 1491 a Tristram Malynny was an Edinburgh witness (Pt. Bk. of James Young, 461) whilst Katherine Malwyn, spouse of Anthony Bryssat, was infest in a tenement on the south side of High Street in 1519 to which Mr. Walter Malwyn was a witness (Pt. Bk. of John Foular, iii, 6). In addition to his M.A. degree, Mr. Walter was in 1516 a canon of Dulmoak and also of Rothven (R.S.S., i, 2610, 2795). He was frequently employed as an agent and ambassador by Albany c. 1520, being sent to Denmark, and later, with lord Fleming the Chamberlain and the Danish ambassador, he went to France to induce Albany to return to Scotland. In 1522 the abbot of Glenluce was paid £250 when he crossed to Denmark for the king (Ex.R., xiv, 461). Dr. Gordon Donaldson, who favours a Scottish origin, points out that Mallen and Malleny are both Scots names and he has also come across Mallin.

⁶ This may not have been intended as a formal episcopal visitation, however it may have been construed by the convent. Though certain orders were exempt from visitation, it was a practice for a bishop to pay a call ratione primi adventus on such houses after his enthronement (Reg. of Wm. Greenfield, ii, introduction xvii).

bear the cost of entertaining the bishop and his attendants. These visitations were a heavy burden on the monasteries and the popes had had to limit the retinue of all bishops when on visitation. On this occasion the papal injunctions must have been ignored. In view of the strained relations bishop David brought with him a strong contingent of lairds and their followers—James Gordon of Lochinvar, Alexander Stewart of Garlies, Thomas McClellan of Bomby and Uchtred McDowell of Garthland, with a man of law in the person of James Spens of Condie. This party planted themselves on the abbot on 3 July and remained till the eighth, and, apart from the canonical sustentation, did a lot of damage and even theft; carrying away blankets, sheets and pillows, barrels of soap and horse trappings. They broke open locked doors, knocked down dykes and let their horses eat the corn. The abbot at once appealed to the courts. Damage and loss was admitted and Lochinvar affirmed that he had compensated the abbot, and produced a number of witnesses who were unable to prove it.¹ The defence made plea that the case could not proceed till the letters of cursing were withdrawn and offered to produce other cursings against the abbot. But the lords brushed this plea aside and decerned that the abbot ought not to be repelled from pursuit of the summons of spulzie.² The subsequent decret for the abbot is given here in full (see No. 45). I am indebted to Father J. O'Dea for the following comment.

This can never have been a true 'visitation' in the canonical sense of the word—a periodic examination of the temporal and spiritual status of a monastery by a competent superior with a view to encourage, aid and correct. The bishop was the normal 'visitor' even of religious, but as he would have little understanding of the discipline of the monks and his interference would be unwelcome and accompanied by the exaction of heavy fees, the greater orders devised a more apt system of visitation by their own members. Thus in the 12th century Pope ALEXANDER III allowed the Cistercian Order full exemption from the control and visitation of the bishop as it was perfectly equipped to control and guide its own members. An annual visitation was made by the Father Abbot of the Mother House (which in the case of Glenluce, was Dundrennan) and the authority of the annual General Chapter of Citeaux acted as a higher control. Despite the general difficulty of the times, this system was still functioning in the 16th century. The pernicious practice of appointing commendators, weakly allowed by the Roman Curia (though as an abuse it dates back to the Merovingian Kings) and eagerly pounced on and exploited by the Scottish kings, cut across this system for it meant that often the 'superior' of the Mother House was little more than a layman, often a minor. Even here, however, the machinery that functioned for four and a half centuries had an expedient—the General Chapter nominated some true monk to visit all the houses in a certain province—thus Walter Malim himself was appointed for three years in 1530 (see Statuta and also No. 46). No Scottish bishop on record ever seems to have made a visitation in face of the Cistercian privileges—though time and again powerful prelates on the Continent had attempted such measures. Lochinvar and the Bishop evidently intended a full-blooded Galloway raid right from the beginning—hence the massive re-inforcements. Probably Gordon was the leader and brought the bishop along (perhaps only too willing) to lend a species of justice to the affair. The excuse of making a visitation was only a flimsy 'face-saver', post factum, and it was treated as such by the Court.

Shortly after this decret the abbot was relieved of bishop David, who was removed from that dignity and pensioned (see p. 43). The abbot was not only free from episcopal visitation but was able in 1530-1 to obey a commission from the head of his order to visit Cistercian houses in Scotland (see No. 46). Melrose, however, tried to make difficulties and Walter asked instruments that the lords had ordained an officer of arms to pass with him and assist in the visitation, conform to the king's writings.¹ He proposed also to visit the Cistercian nunneries and at once the archbishop of St. Andrews protested that past memory of man he and his predecessors only had the right of visiting nunneries. The court decreed that Walter should not visit nunneries till he had established before the lords his right to visit.¹

To uphold the rights and privileges of his convent was a constant preoccupation of abbot Walter. Thus the seven merkland of Clanary, in the parish of Inche, had been leased for some generations to the McCullochs of Myrton. In 1531 Symon McCulloch of Myrton was the tenant, being entered in the rental book on 30 May as to himself and his named assignees, one of whom was John Vaus of Barnbarroch. In May 1539, just before his death, Symon assigned the lease to John Vaus and Janet McCulloch spouses. The abbot unwisely contested Symon's right to make the assignation and warned the spouses to flit and remove. John Vaus, however, was quite equal to the occasion. He must have had some strong influence in court circles, for the king's advocate entered a protest that the abbot should have no process 'as he had not paid his contribution to the seat of Justice and had deforced the kings officer'.² Further the Crown wrote to the abbot neglected his task, and Walter was appointed Collector of the fund to defray expenses in defence of the order's privileges. Scotland had neglected this duty plus aqueo. Melrose was called on to pay 10 ducats, Dundrennan 3, Glenluce 2 and Dulcicor als Novum Monasterium 1. In 1533 (No. 47) the abbots of Cupar and Glenluce are again commissioned as Visitors, and lastly in 1535 (No. 32) the General Chapter encouraged its two commissioners who had convoked the abbot of Melrose on the question of reform. He had refused to compear and they were instructed to proceed with vigour and see that the regulations laid down by the abbot of Chaalis—a French abbey—in 1531 were enforced. These references indicate the confidence of the order in Malim and throw light on his ecclesiastical activities.

¹ A.D.C., xlii, f. 24 and xviii, f. 17^v. There were innumerable convents in medieval times calling themselves Cistercian. Of these a select group were closely bound to the Order and subject to its rule and visitation. Many others were only very lightly attached, having chosen the Cistercian Rule and habit at their foundation, others merely used the name without any jurisdictional link. Evidence of any close connection between the so-called Scottish 'Cistercian' nuns and the order of Citeaux is lacking, and hence abbot Walter, like the commissary in 1506, was misled by the name and overstepped his powers [O'Dea] (cf. St. Andrews Formulare, i. 56).

that the abbey had already put forth many of its tenants and was farming the lands itself, which was contrary to the public policy of having men of substance on the ground as fencible men, and urged the abbot to leave John Vaus in possession (see No. 49). The court case was heard at length on 17 and 19 June and continued, to allow the taking of deposition of a witness, schir William Baillie a monk of Glenluce, who had been taken ill at Lamington on his way to attend the court.¹ The following March the court discreetly referred the matter to the king's grace and found that John Vaus had established his case.² In May a new assedation was given to him for 19 years by the convent (see No. 55). Abbot Walter was also in conflict with Henry bishop of Galloway. The lands of Balnab in the parish of Inche belonged to the abbey. The bishop was parson of Inche and as such claimed the teinds of Balnab. The abbot claimed privilege of exemption from teinds under grant to the Cistercian order touching their lands occupied by their own goods. Both parties agreed to submit the dispute to the courts, whose decision has not been traced (see No. 51).

Mention has been made of the part played by James Gordon of Lochinvar in the spoliation of 1524. This seems the first reference to the intervention in the affairs of the abbey by that family. A branch of that family had been established c. 1500 at Craichlaw in the next parish to Glenluce and was no doubt made use of by Lochinvar as an excuse to intervene. The Reformation was in full swing in England by 1540, and to any ambitious, far-seeing and unscrupulous person it was obvious that Scotland would shortly follow suit. Further, after the death of James V, the Regent Arran attempted a brief experiment along reforming and Anglophile lines which may have brought a new sense of insecurity to the religious houses. At any rate James Gordon saw an opportunity to land-grab and was prepared to muscle in at Glenluce, where already the earl of Cassillis had staked out a firm claim, having in 1543 obtained for five years a commission of bailliary over the lands of the barony of Glenluce.¹ It would seem that abbot Walter may have tried to play off Lochinvar against Cassillis.² Conflict between the two parties was inevitable, but it was temporarily assuaged on 8 July 1546 by arbitration. Both parties had tried to seize the abbey. Part of the agreement was that the Place of Glenluce be delivered to William Hamilton of Sanquhar as a neutral man for both parties and, if the arbiters could not agree, the lord Governor was to decide (see No. 52). James Gordon was slain at Pinkie in Sept. 1547, where also fell John McDowell of Garthland, baillie depute of Glenluce (see No. 58); and John Gordon of Lochinvar inherited the dispute with Cassillis. The decision of the arbiters in 1546 is not recorded. It may never have been delivered, for a fresh attempt to arbitrate was made in August 1555. By that date abbot Walter was dead. He must have died the previous year.

Walter Malim must have been a man of considerable culture, for in 1545 he was 'incorporated' in the university of St. Andrews and may have influenced his successor to follow his example.³ In 1547 Walter resigned his office but retained the abbatial dignity (see No. 56). He had inherited in 1533 from his sister Katherine Mallumby a tenement in Edinburgh which in 27 October he renounced.⁴ Such property the monks were not allowed to own, so on 21 March 1552/3 schir William Halkerstoun, monk of Glenluce, with consent of abbot Walter resigned a tenement in the Cowgait inherited from his father Alexander Halkerstoun.⁵

³ Early Records of St. Andrews, S.H.S., p. 252. Father O'Dea points out that Dr. Easson in his preface (p. 32) of his Religious Houses, Scotland, suggests that Malim had been called on by a Church Council to complete his presumably backward education by a tardy frequentation of the University of St. Andrews. But the fact is that Malim was an M.A. of thirty years' standing, having been at the University 1512-13 and had won the commendation of his own General Chapter and of the Italian humanist, John Ferrerius. He could scarcely have served Albany as he did without such qualifications. He must have been one of the most accomplished of Scottish ecclesiastics of his day.

JAMES GORDON, brother to John Gordon of Lochinvar, is described on 22 Aug. 1555 as titular of Glenluce¹ (see No. 59). He must have been a churchman, for he is called 'dene James Gordon'. He may even have been a monk of Glenluce. He must be identified with James Gordon of Hardlands² rather than an unrecorded illegitimate son of James Gordon of Lochinvar, for he is mentioned as lawful son of Lochinvar in abbot Walter's procuratory of resignation in his favour.³ He was a minor when he received his Bull in 1547, though he may have reached the age of 22 prescribed by canonical law by 1555 when abbot Walter died. Like his predecessor, abbot James Gordon was 'incorporated' at the University of St. Andrews in 1552. By May 1557 as abbot he was granting leases of the abbey lands (see No. 60) and on 18 March 1558/9 he gave a feu charter to the earl of Cassillis of the office of bailie of the abbey (see No. 62). His appointment as abbot must have been regarded as a triumph for the Lochinvar party, though he adhered to the decret arbitral made at Dumfries on 22 Aug. 1555 to which he was a party (see No. 59). He died before March 1560. His death must have been totally unexpected, for there can be little doubt that he would have been expected to help Lochinvar in his scheme to get possession of the abbey lands. Lochinvar at once seized the abbey, ejected the monks and garrisoned the place. The monks took refuge at Maybole, where they were sustained by Cassillis. When the next abbot sought induction, the ceremony had to take place in the parish church of Glenluce in presence of a handful of monks to represent the chapter.⁴

But the necessary feu charter in favour of Lochinvar had never been signed or even prepared. If he was to get possession Gordon had to produce evidents, and some papers in the Ailsa Collections¹ establish how he tried to do this. Cassillis had held a tack of the bailiery of the abbey which was turned on 18 March 1557/9 into a grant of that office in heredity (see No. 62). This was later declared by the convent to be the only feu charter ever granted by abbot James Gordon with their consent. This charter was never handed to the earl owing to his hasty departure to France, but remained in the hands of the abbot, then on his last bed of sickness. In July 1561 the earl of Moray, as sole arbiter between the parties, held his enquiry at which Gordon produced his evidents, a grant of bailiery containing precept of sasine in a 168 merkland of the abbey, with a great feu charter and sasine of the same. These evidents were at once declared to be forgeries by the Kennedies, who brought evidence to prove it. This consisted of a confession by dene Michael Leirmont, one of the monks, that 'to discharge his saule and conscience in presence of Almichty God and to stop the schedding of mekill bluide' he had forged the documents (see No. 66).

This was accompanied by his deposition narrating how he had been tempted by John Gordon of Lochinvar and agreed to do his will if Gordon could produce the necessary seals. A few days later Gordon returned from Kennivar (sic) with seals attached to other writs, and on a Sunday morning the two conspirators met in Leirmont's 'chalmer in the dorter' and proceeded to forge the documents. The great feu charter was written by Leirmont, who forged the names of the consenting monks, the last four names being added by Gordon. The method whereby the old charter was in part erased and rewritten is fully described. Gordon must have had some hold over the monk and did not hesitate to make use of it. Leirmont was an ageing man, in ill health. He had been debarred by Gordon of his living 'and put forth of his place'. Further, the convent had fled to Maybole where it was installed by November. The ailing monk must have been left behind alone and dependant on Gordon from November to February 1561. He was in despair, a ready victim to the unscrupulous Gordon. The scheme and its execution was Gordon's, the monk being an unwilling tool. Gordon himself could write and even forge signatures, but he was not competent to forge a charter. His Latinity may not have been equal to the task and he would be ignorant of formulas. It was essential that the deeds should be drawn in proper form, and though Leirmont is not known to have been a notary he must have been employed by the convent in the frequent task of drawing the many documents required for a great estate. His handwriting must have been familiar to them all. The art of forgery must have been a new experience to the monk, for Gordon had to tell him what to do, and apart from writing the documents Gordon, surely from past experience, did the rest. Lochinvar 'tuik his awin knyf and with his awin hand raisit [erased] ane lyne and ane half of the said chartour and causit me to raise the laif [rest]'. And again 'and als anent the seiling the laird had ane xix zeir tak of James Kennedeis as is foirsaid fra the quhilk the laird tuik the seill and held the faice of the sele to ane wet claith and pat the bak of it to the fyir and I tuik it fra the tak and put it to the greit charter'. Leirmont was a handy amanuensis acting under duress; Lochinvar would seem to have supplied the experience and the only motive. Nothing was overlooked. At that date there were no land registers, but it was the custom for the notary who drew up the grants to record them in his protocol book, which was valid evidence in the courts of law. So the protocol book of the deceased schir James Halthorne notary in Glenluce, who in 1556 had been clerk of the baron court of the abbey,¹ was produced by one of Gordon's henchmen and a forged entry of the faked charter inserted therein. The date on the forged charter was 31 Jan. 1557/8.² The confession and deposition of Leirmont was fortified by a declaration signed by the prior and convent to the effect that the only feu charter signed by them, in the abbotship of abbot James, was the charter of bailiery to Cassillis on 18 March 1558/9, and that Gordon had never sought or obtained a feu charter (see Nos. 66-68).

With all this evidence before us it seems remarkable that tradition, preserved in the anonymous Chronicle of the Kennedies, should have reversed the charges, alleging that the earl, having effected the forgeries, procured a carl named Carnoquhen to 'stick' the monk, and then got Bargany to accuse and hang Carnoquhen on some trumped up charge of theft. And 'so the landis of Glenluce was conquest'. But however apprehensive of Gordon may have been dene Michael Leirmont, he was not 'stickit', but lived to sign an abbey charter on 14 Sept. 1572.¹

THOMAS HAY was instituted as abbot on 29 Sept. 1560, one of the witnesses being significantly Cuthbert Kilpatrick, captain of the monastery and servant of the laird of Lochinvar.² Mr. Henry deals at length with this abbot, printing many documents from the Culzean muniments. Thomas Hay was dead by 1580 when the vacant commendatorship was conferred by the Crown on Mr. Gilbert Moncreif, H.M. Physician in Ordinary,³ who however only held it for a year, resigning in favour of Laurence Gordon, pensioner of Whithorn, who was about to cross the seas and was in ill health.⁴ Lest he should die before his return, the Crown appointed as his future successor William Gordon (of Glenquicken and Garrocher third son of sir John Gordon of Lochinvar).⁵ But Laurence Gordon survived his travels and made his will at Tunland on 5 Feb. 1620.⁶

With the advent of the Reformation the monks were left undisturbed. Some may have joined the reformed church. They were still a corporate body as they had to be convened to sign charters, but monastic life must have ceased very soon after 1560. They still were entitled to and claimed their 'monks portion'. In Dec. 1565 dene Robert Galbraith, 'ane of the convent professit in the abbacie of Glenluce', brought an action against Mr. Thomas Hay. Robert had been a monk for 26 years, and till 1559, when it was withheld, had received his portion. It amounted to 8 bolls of meal worth 30/ each boll, 8 bolls of beir worth 40/ a boll, £20 of money, 2 stones of butter and 2 stones of cheese each worth 12/ per stone, and 30 loads of peats worth 10d. a load. Robert won his case.¹ The same year dene Robert Broun a monk of Glenluce for 20 years was equally successful.² At Tunland abbey there were some variations of portion successfully claimed by dene Michael Cousing, canon thereof for five years before the reformation³; whilst at Sweetheart abbey the donator of the escheat of the deceased David Wryt, who had been given a monk's portion on 2 Nov. 1550, or alternatively was entitled to £40 yearly—perhaps as a pension—was also successful.⁴

³ Ibid., f. 114.

⁴ Ibid., f. 148. See Dr. Gordon Donaldson's valuable paper 'The Galloway Clergy at the Reformation,' in D. and G. Trans. (1950-1), xxx, 38. In this case it is doubtful if David Wryt was a monk. On 2 Nov. 1550 the Abbot had given bond to provide David with a monk's portion in meat, drink, fire, candle and bedding with £10 p.a. as fee. There was a clause for registration and failing the abbot's compearance for registration he was to pay £40 yearly to David or his assignees. Registration took place without the abbot's compearance and he was charged with payment under the clause. So he brought an action of improbation against the Crown and the donator on the grounds of forgery of the bond and won his case. The court annulled the bond but found the donator not liable in expenses. The transaction may have been the purchase of an annuity from a religious house by payment of a lump sum in return for which the purchaser got maintenance and pocket money. This was quite a common device for raising money in English religious houses.

General Confirmation of charters in favour of Glenluce Abbey.

Charter of confirmation by James II, dated at Edinburgh, 31 May, 1441, and witnessed by James, bishop of St. Andrews, John, bishop of Moray, William, lord Crechtoun, chancellor, Alexander de Montgomery, kt., Mr. William Trumbull, 'dominus prebende' (prebendary or laird of Provand), and Mr. John Scheuleu (Scheves), clerk of the rolls and registers, confirming—

Charter of confirmation by Archibald, duke of Touraine, earl Douglas etc., dated at Wigtoun, 3 April, 1432, and witnessed by Alexander, bishop of Whithorn, William de Dowglas of Leswalt, John Dunbar of Mochrum, Patrick M^cclellane of Gebilstoun, Gilbert M^cdowell of Spottis, John M^cduile of Egerness, Alexander Nemo and Elias M^cculloch of Myrtoun, confirming—

Charter of confirmation by Margaret, duchess of Touraine, countess of Douglas etc., bearing that she has inspected a charter of confirmation by King Robert III, her father, confirming charters of Roland, Alan and Edward Bruis, lords of Galloway, and a charter of confirmation by King Robert de Bruis, with donation of lands to the Holy Virgin Mary of Glenluce, and the abbot and convent thereof, in the diocese of Whithorn, erecting the lands of Glenluce into a barony. She has also inspected a charter of confirmation by King David II, confirming a charter by Malcolm Fleming, earl of Wigtoun, erecting the said barony into a regality, and another charter by the said earl, granting 10 merks lands of Barnes. All of which she ratifies and grants in pure and perpetual alms, for the souls of James I, Robert III, Archibald, duke of Touraine, her spouse, her own soul and the souls of Archibald, her son and heir, and James, her son. The said abbot and convent performing no service for the lands except only the suffrage of prayer. Wishing to give to, rather than take away from, the Lamb of God, and to provide for the monastery and abbot and convent of Glenluce, to the honour of Almighty God and the Blessed Virgin Mary, and from further charity, she erects the said lands of Glenluce and Barnes into a pure and perpetual regality and barony, with all the usual liberties of secular and ecclesiastical regalities, to be held as freely as she holds the lordship of Galloway. Inhibiting, under pain of full forfeiture, all interference, except where necessary for the wars of the Lord King or for those of herself or her successors.

Witnesses : William de Dowglass of Leswalt, sir John Betoun, doctor of decreets, rector of Dalry, her clerk, Alexander Hepbron, esquire and sir Nigel and sir Gilbert Agnew, monks of Glenluce.

Charter erecting the vill of Ballinclauch into a burgh in barony.

Charter of novodamus by James IV, bearing that he had formerly erected the vill of Ballinclauch, belonging to the monastery of Glenluce, into a free burgh in barony, with all liberties and a public fair on the day of the Nativity of the most glorious Virgin Mary. But now it has been shown to him by the venerable father in Christ, Michael, the abbot, and the convent of the same, that the fair could not be held on that day well and easily, without grave damage and loss to the said abbot and convent and the lieges resorting to the same, in their harvests which are commonly at that time and which would be impeded by the fair. Therefore they have begged that the fair be changed from the day of the Nativity of the B.V.M. to the day of her Visitation, which is considered more convenient for holding the same. And he, having reached his perfect and lawful age of twenty-five years, after his general revocation, understanding this petition to be reasonable and according to justice, and for the special devotion which he bears to the B.V.M., patron, of the said monastery, and for the singular favour, zeal and love, which he has towards the said abbot and convent, and for the accommodation of the lieges gathering there, therefore of new erects the said vill of Ballinclauch, in the barony of Glenluce and sheriffdom of Wigtown, into a free burgh in barony, with power to the inhabitants to buy and sell wine, wax and broad and narrow cloth of linen and wool, and to have bakers, brewers, fleshers, sellers of flesh and fish and other tradesmen pertaining to the liberty of a free burgh in barony. Also he has conceded that they shall be burgesses and have power to elect bailies and other officers necessary for the government of the burgh, and that they shall have a cross and market on Saturday each week, with tolls and other liberties pertaining thereto, and a public fair on the day of the Visitation of the B.V.M. and the Octaves thereof. Further he has conceded that if, in future, any ships or small vessels shall put into the shores of Lochluce and Lochryan, the said father and convent shall have free power to buy things necessary for themselves and the said monastery from the merchandise in the same.

Witnesses : William, bishop of Aberdeen, keeper of the Privy Seal, George, earl of Huntlie, lord Badzenach, chancellor, Archibald, earl of Argyle, lord Campbell and Lorne, master of the Household (Patrick), earl of Bothuill, lord Hales, Alexander, lord Hume, great chamberlain, Robert Lundy of Balgonie, kt., treasurer, Mr. Richard Muirheid, dean of Glasgow, secretary, and Mr. Walter Drummond, dean of Dunblane, clerk of the rolls and registers and of the council.

Leo X to Dominic, Cardinal bishop of Porta.

Provision was made to Dominic by the pope to the abbey of Glenluce in commendam then vacant in a certain way. The Cardinal resigned this commenda before any bulls were issued hence the pope provided Walter Malynny sub certo modo et forma. Yet lest the cardinal suffer by such resignation and in order that he may be able to live up to the high dignity that is his, he reserves for him the entire fruits of the abbey with regress if Walter dies or cedes. If the abbot fail to pay the fruits or that price for which the cardinal will have agreed, then the cardinal to have regress. The cardinal is assured he will suffer no injury from the intrusion of bishop David of Lismore or any other.

Mandate to the bishop of Caserta, archdeacon of St Andrews and Gilbert Strathachin canon of Moray.

Reg. Vat., 1119, ff. 8-9

*Leo X to Gualterus Malynny, abbot of Glenluce.*¹

The abbey of Glenluce being vacant certo modo the pope had conferred it to be governed and administered in commendam for life by Dominic cardinal bishop of Porto who today has resigned this commenda irrespective of whether he achieved possession or not. Also David bishop of Lismore who claimed a right to the said commenda today renounces whatever right he may have. The pope now seeks a suitable person to whom he may entrust this charge and as Walter seeks to pursue a higher way of life, and as John Duke of Albany Governor of Scotland, whose secretary he is, has warmly recommended his virtue and zeal, he confers on him the abbey (taxed at 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ florins in the books of the Camera). The pope overrules any complications arising from general reservations or from the way in which the abbey may have been vacant viz. :

- i. by the death of Cuthbert Balze who had already carried off a definite sentence (sententia definitiva) against bishop David with whom he was litigating anent the said abbey
- ii. by the death of Alexander Cunyhamewith the Roman Court
- iii. by their resignations
- iv. or the free resignation of whatever right bishop David may have had

The pope provides Walter as long as no final sentence has been given and an abbot canonically appointed. With derogation from the Statutes of the order which decree that none but a professed monk, a priest, duly elected and confirmed shall hold abbatial office. Walter is to be received by the community, given the habit of the order and make his religious vows. However before he is invested with power he must take the oath of fidelity to the Holy See and forward it signed and sealed to Rome. If he does not take habit etc within a year the provision is null.

profession and taking the habit, on condition that he accomplished those duties within the given year, at the same time the pope by other letters reserved all the fruits of the said abbey to Dominic cardinal of Porto. Walter however has replied to the pope that as long as such a reservation continues he cannot see his way to accept the monastic obligations. The pope, in view of his person and his merits, wishes to do him a favour and allows him to continue to hold the abbey, though the obligation of taking the habit etc. does not bind until the year following the cessation of the reservation of fruits. Meanwhile he may hold the abbey licitly.

¹ Papal confirmation of Walter's faculties as visitor was granted on 30 Sept. 1530 both as to men and women—empowering him to use the papal authority on monks, seculars and commendators (Minuta Brevium, 931). Malim seems to have carried out his visitations conscientiously and with great vigour. Amongst the Laing MSS. (III, 21, f. 168-9) are copies of supplications by the Archbishop of St. Andrews in 1556 against the Abbot of Glenluce, one directed to the Pope, the other to the Cardinal promoter, both telling the same story. They state that Walter, abbot of Glenluce, having power of visiting in Scotland committed to him by the principal house of the order, abused his power by using 'the profane force of laymen' to seize, six monks from the Abbey of Newbattle, and after beating them he imprisoned them in vile prisons in which thieves and other criminals had been accustomed to be confined. I am indebted for this reference to Dr. Donaldson.

Paul III to Walter Malim (sic) abbot of Glenluce.

Today Walter has resigned his abbey of Glenluce and the pope has provided James Gordon who will hold the abbey in a certain manner and fashion for a time and then be provided as abbot. Walter will however hold the abbey and administer all its goods, fruits, revenues and property, and direct its monks and all things attached and will retain full status as abbot—title, stall in choir, and jurisdiction over the monks—all as if he continued normally, and James Gordon may interfere in no way. James Gordon has given his consent and he will have full rights when Walter cedes. If Gordon die or cedes, Malim will have full rights.

In order that James be enabled to live up to his new dignity, abbot Walter will assign to him such a portion as he may need—if he need it.¹

1547, Dec. 9. To James Gordon cleric Candida Casa diocese 'Apostolice Sedis providentia circumspecta. . .' It is the duty of the Holy see to take vigilant care that all monasteries and churches be provided with suitable pastors and especially that they should not suffer the inconveniences of a long vacancy. Since today, WALTER MALIM, until lately abbot of Glenluce ('nuper abbas') C.C. DIOCESE has resigned the abbey into the pope's hands and the pope seeking for a suitable pastor has chosen him, James, who is a minor, but to whose virtues, fitness and promise for the future, trustworthy witnesses have borne testimony, and for whom also Mary, Queen of Scots, with the consent of her guardian, the Earl of Arran, has petitioned. Therefore, the pope in consistory, with the advice of the cardinals, has provided him to the abbey 'in commendam' until he reach his 22nd year. He will then receive the monastic habit and make the accustomed profession (i.e. make the vows of the Cistercian Order) and be received into the community as their lawful abbot, notwithstanding his defect of age, the constitutions of the Cistercian Order which require that none but expressly professed priests of the Order, of at least 30 years of age be chosen as abbots, the decrees of the Holy See and the privileges of the abbey of Glenluce. The pope wishes however, that on account of this derogation, the normal fulfillment of the divine office and the monastic duties to be in no way injured, and that none of the obligations of the monks and the abbey be neglected. Hence he decrees that $\frac{1}{3}$ of the common table, or $\frac{1}{4}$ of the Abbatial, if that be separate, be laid aside annually for the maintenance of the community, the upkeep of the buildings and the divine service, and for the alms of the poor according as necessity will demand. Mandate to the Bp. of C. Casa, and Bp. of Dunblane. Before installing him they will receive his oath of fidelity to the Holy See.¹

1549, No. 19. Uchtred McDowell son and heir of the deceased John McDowell of Garthland v. Gilbert earl of Cassillis bailie

This usage was common from 1490 to 1562. In theory it could do away with a lot of the disputes at the vacancies of prelaties or other benefices, but it could give rise to many abuses. It was abolished by the council of Trent.

In the above case it was obviously the Gordon friends who used their influence at court to have resignation in favour of James 'suggested' to Walter Malim and because of the support of the royal letters it was accepted without question at Rome. Note that this bull makes no mention of the fact that Walter was granted full retention of the abbey and the abbatial dignity (which he had in a bull addressed to himself and which effectively prevented James Gordon from using his title until the death or free cession of Walter). Hence things at Glenluce would continue as if nothing had happened—only James would have a title to the abbey dating from 1547. This loose use of the above title, without paying much attention to the canonical niceties of the situation, explains the apparent conflict of the later documents.

1555/6, Jan. 14. Registration of a decret arbitral, dated at Dumfries 22 Aug. 1555, anent the wrongs done betwixt the parties viz. Gilbert earl of Cassillis his brethren, kith and kin on the one part and John Gordoun of Lochinvar for himself and for dene James Gordon titular of Glenluce his brother and their kith and kin on the other part. The Regent of Scotland is chosen as the sole oversman to hear the earl's claim to the feu fermes of the bailliery of Glenluce and the £10 land of the same and the restitution of the laird of Garthland to his steading of [] in Galloway and also the claim of the laird of Lochinvar for restitution of his tacks of the kirks of Kells and Balmaclellane, the lands and bailliery of Erlstoun, and for his friends the £5 lands of Mule of Galloway alleged to be their kindly steading. The decret decerns Lochinvar to obtain infestment of the earl and his successors, to the bailliery of Glenluce with its unlaws, escheats etc just as the earl had held it in tack before, provided he appoints two deputes residing within the bailliery. Lochinvar is to infest the earl in the best £5 land within the bailliery and as shall best please the earl, excepting the ferme lands used for sustentation of the Place (of Glenluce) and the lands occupied by the following friends of Lochinvar viz. William Gordon of Creachlaw and his bairns, Patrick McCrekane in Seuchane and his bairns, Patrick Agnew sheriff of Galloway, Alexander McCulloch of Killasteris and Robert McKye in Glenluce: the said £5 land to pay to the Place the former dewties. Full title to the same to be given when dene James Gordon as titular shall enter to full administration of the said abbey or have power to set lands in feu, or sooner if the earl obtains consent of Walter now abbot of Glenluce and that before any other lands are set in feu. Lochinvar to obtain as well the consent of the convent under conventual seal which must be ratified by the said titular who is to enter James Kennedy and Hew Kennedy brothers to the said earl in the steadings that they presently occupy viz—the 5 merkland of Enerlay pertaining to the said James and the £5 land of Carskreach pertaining to the said Hew, at the mails and dewties due and wont and give them 19 years tacks therof.

And the earl is to labour and solicit the two parsons of Kells and Balmaclellan to set both the parsonage and vicarage to Lochinvar and his friends who had the same before, on the old terms, they paying entry silver; and the earl having right to the abbacy of Salset shall not alter Lochinvar and his friends in the just possession therof. The earl to help Lochinvar to a reasonable address at my lord Robert's hands for tacks of his three kirks which Lochinvar is obliged to obtain to the laird of Bomby. The earl to assign to Lochinvar a tack by the countess of Bothwell of the lands and bailiery of Eristoun, and Lochinvar is to find caution for the rent to the countess in place of the earl. The earl's claim concerning the laird of Garthland's steading is to be reformat and Lochinvar's claim to the £5 lands of Mule is to be superceded.

No. 66

1561, July 15. Instrument in the hands of Herbert Andersone, priest of Glasgow diocese, notary public, narrating that Dene Michael Leirmonth, professed monk of Glenluce, of the order of Cistercians, of his own free will, not compelled by my lord of Cassillis nor any other man in his name, for 'exonerating and dischergeing of his saule and conscience in presens of Almichty God and for to stop the schedding of mekill innocent bluide' declared that he had forged a charter, precept of sasine, instrument of sasine and five year tack of the fruits of the abbacy of Glenluce, with an instrument of ratification by the convent of the same. The said Dene Michael has presently written with his hand the manner of the same and has subscribed it, which writing was also subscribed by certain witnesses. Upon which Gilbert, earl of Cassillis, asked instruments.

Done at the monastery of Sauleseat, in the abbot's chamber, at the ninth hour before noon or thereabouts.

Witnesses : John Maxwell of Terreglis, knight, John, abbot of Newabbay, Finlay Campbell of Corswald, Uthred Mcdowll of Garthland, James McClellane of Mcartoun, John Makknaycht of Kilquhonite, Master Thomas Makillelane of Blakmerk, and John Glendonyng of Drumrasche, Neill Makdowell, notary, also subscribes.

1561, July 15. At Sauleseat. Dene Michael Leirmonth, monk of Glenluce, testifies that John Gordoun of Lochinver came to him on 7 November, 1560, or thereabouts, and said that he had been informed that my lord of Cassillis had obtained a feu of the lands of Glenluce from the abbot and convent. Then he passed to the abbey kirk and took Leirmonth with him to the north side, before St. Ninian's Aisle, where he desired him to make him a feu charter of part of the lands of Glenluce and he would never permit him to want. Leirmonth, who had not yet fully recovered from the sickness which had troubled him, and who had been debarred by Gordoun from his living and put forth of his place, agreed to do this, because of his extreme poverty. He asked Gordoun where the seals might be obtained, to which he replied that he had an old charter of bailiary granted to my lord of Cassillis and a 19 year tack to James Kennedy of the lands of Arehullen, sealed with the common seal and subscribed by the abbot and convent, which he promised to bring out of the Kennivar within eight days. He came from Kennivar and sent for Leirmonth on a Sunday morning and delivered the two documents to him in the chamber called 'the Abbotis Chalmer'. On the same Sunday afternoon he came in person to Leirmonth's chamber in the dorter and erased one and a half lines of the charter with his own knife, then caused Leirmonth to erase the rest down to the subscriptions and also to scrape the back 'anent' (behind) the subscriptions, so that the whole parchment might be the same thinness. Because the space was so limited ("so little of bounds") Gordoun made him write a precept of sasine above the subscriptions, containing 168 merk 10s. lands, to be given to him and his heirs in feu and heritage, after the form and tenor of a charter to be made thereupon. Alexander Gordoun of Mindork delivered two skins of parchment, on one of which Leirmonth wrote a 'great' feu charter and forged the subscriptions of all the monks, save four, whose subscriptions the said laird forged. On the other skin he wrote an instrument of sasine, purporting to be by Sir James Halthorne, who died long ago and forged his sign and handwriting. Roger Gordoun of the Cuill brought Halthorne's protocol book, which was procured from the laird of Killasser, into which Leirmonth inserted the instrument, as if Halthorne had done so. The seal was taken off the tack, by holding the face to a wet cloth and the back to the fire, and then it was put on the charter. This was done in the old abbot's chamber and the forgeries were completed in the month of February (1560/1). Gordoun also caused Leirmonth to make out a five year tack of the whole fruits of the abbacy, forging the handwriting of the abbot, who was then dead, and also an instrument, purporting to be by Sir James Halthorne, whereby the convent ratified this tack, which was witnessed by Roger Gordoun of Troquhain, who was dead, Patrick Agnew, sheriff of Wigtoun, Alexander Gordoun in Barquhill and Roger Gordoun of the Cuill.

This he testifies before Sir John Maxwell of Terraglis, knight, Finlay Campbell of Corswell, Uthrid M^cdowell of Garthland, Richard M^cke of Martoun, James M^cclellane of M^curtoun, John M^cknecht of Kilquhonite, Master Thomas M^cclellan of Blakmark, John Glendownyng of Drumrais, John Gordoun in Barnbord, Master Patrick Waus, parson of Wigtoun, Sir Hew Kennede of Girvan Manis, knight, and the notaries, Sir Neill M^cdowll, parson of Steinkirk, Sir Herbert Anderson, vicar of Keltoun, and John, abbot of New Abbay.

Holograph ratification of the above by the said Michael Leirmonth, Master Patrick Richertsone, in name and behalf of Gilbert, earl of Cassillis, having asked instruments. The said Michael binds himself to appear before any judge or judges competent to raify the same.

'This testimoniall is maid for informatioun and to schaw the verite to the nobilite of this realme and lordis of Counsel and all utheris quhome it efferis and in speciall to the lordis commissioneris betwix the lord of Cassillis and the lard of Lochinver.'

The prior, subprior and remanent of the convent of Glenluce make known that they have learned that John Gordoun of Lochinvar has produced before the lords commissioners for concord between him and Gilbert, earl of Cassillis, a feu charter of the greater part of the lands of Glenluce. They have never granted, nor indeed has Gordoun ever asked for, such a charter. But when concord was made between him and the earl, Gordoun bound himself to obtain for the latter a charter of bailiary, together with a £10 land of the lands of Glenluce, and a tack of the 5 merkland of Arehullen for James Kennedy, the earl's brother. By virtue of this agreement, when James Gordoun, his brother, became abbot on the death of abbot Walter, Gordoun drew up the deeds and presented them to the abbot and convent. Although the abbot subscribed them in the Queen's presence, the convent would no wise consent to do so until they knew the Queen's mind. Accordingly the prior and Dene Alexander Cairnis rode to Edinburgh and consulted the Queen, who desired the same to be expedite. They remained in Edinburgh and wrote telling the convent to seal the documents and to send them to Edinburgh. Alexander Gordoun of Mindork brought them to Edinburgh, where the prior and his brother subscribed, the prior last of all, contrary to the usual practice. But the charter and tack were never delivered because of the earl's hasty departure for France.

Long afterwards, alleging that he had lost the first, Gordoun presented another charter and tack. He procured the Queen Dowager Mary's "requeistis" that the same should be subscribed and sealed, which was notified to the prior and convent by Ross Herald. The charter, with its precept of sasine, and the tack were sealed and subscribed by the convent and delivered to the abbot (James Gordon), who was then lying sick. Therefore the prior and convent make known that they subscribed and sealed no feu of any lands of Glenluce for any man (especially Gordoun, who never asked for a foot of the lands of Glenluce) other than the feu of the bailliary. This was the only charter in whole or in part given or consented to by abbot James in his lifetime and if any other feu charter is produced it is false and forged.

No. 69

1561, Nov. 4. Decreet arbitral dated and recorded in the Books of Council and Session, 4 November, 1561, by James, commendator of the priories of St. Andrews and Pittenweem, judge arbiter between Gilbert, earl of Cassillis and John Gordoun of Lochinver, their friends and servants; whereby it is ordained:

(1) John Gordoun is to remove himself and his servants from the Place and Yards of Glenluce by 10 November and to deliver the same with the registers, evidents, letters and rentals and the insight plenishing to the said Earl as bailie of the abbot. He is also to deliver the 'bowsteidis' and 'stoirsteidis' of the abbey, together with cattle, corn and plenishing, conform to the 'Beltyme Buikis' [Beltane Books] and his own receipt, providing that if there shall not be sufficient on the lands, he shall make up the deficiency at the sight of the arbiter.

(2) As both parties claim the lands of the abbacy of Glenluce, according to their respective charters, John Gordoun is to renounce in favour of the Earl and his heirs male, all the lands contained in his feu charter, dated 31 Jan., 1557 (8). And the Earl will discharge him, and procure a discharge from the abbot and convent, for all his intromissions therewith preceding 10 August, 1561, excepting the plenishing of the Place and the present crop, which he shall deliver, deducting necessary expenses.

(3) The Earl is to grant John Gordoun a 19 year tack of his lands of the Mule of Galloway, at a rent of £7 : 10s., with entry at Whitsunday next, and vacant possession. He shall grant warrandice and procure a discharge from his aunt, Jonet Kennedy, and Alexander Waus of Barnebarrocht, her spouse, of all their rights thereto. The tenants are to make payment to Gordoun of the 'fermes' of the Mule of Galloway. Gordoun shall cause a gentleman of his house to dwell on the lands, who shall serve the Earl at his own expense in the Queen's wars and at other times at the Earl's expense.

(4) The Earl shall grant feus of their tacks and rooms to Gordoun's 'anciantt' friends:—Patrick Agnew, sheriff of Wigtoun, Alexander Gordoun in Barquhill, James Gordoun in Barneill, Gilbert Agnew, the laird of Craychlayiss and his brethren, Alexander Macculloch of Killasseris, Patrick M^ccrekane and his son, Roger Kylpatrik and Roger Gordoun in the Cuile, for payment of the duties in the rental, with augmentation conform to the custom of the realm. Any disputes arising therefrom are to be referred to the arbiter.

(5) The Earl and Gordoun are each to choose two, three or more judges arbiters for all disputes involving the friends of both. In case of disagreement the present arbiter will nominate an oversman. The causes are to be accepted before 30 November and are to be decided within six months.

(6) The parties are to be reconciled and are to stand in all time coming in 'perfyte lufe, amitie, kyndnes and Cristeane nychbourheid'. They are to take each other's part in all things.

(7) The Earl and his heirs, as having right to the abbacy of Salsett, are not to disturb Gordoun and his friends in their just possessions.

(8) This decret is to stand in fulfilment of all prior contracts and communings between the parties, whether recorded in the Books of Council or otherwise.

(9) The arbiter reserves to himself the interpretation of this decret, and his interpretations are to be as valid as if they were inserted therein, and he ordains the decret to be recorded in the Books of Council.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO SAULSET

THE site of Saulset Abbey will always be associated with St. Malachy, whose Life,¹ composed within a few months of his death, was written by St. Bernard in whose arms the saint died. He had carried out great reforms in Ireland, where he was bishop of Down and had three times traversed Galloway, and though neither Fergus nor bishop Gille-aldan is directly mentioned in the Life it is incredible that St. Malachy did not meet them or visited Whithorn. Practically nothing is known of the outward journey of the saint's first visit to Rome in 1139. But Malachy must have kept his eyes open and learned much of the ecclesiastical conditions in Galloway. He does not seem to have met King David, but it is possible that he passed through Annan, met Brus there and delivered his curse on that family and house as recorded by the Lanercost chronicler.² On his way back from Rome he stayed at Clairvaux with St. Bernard, and we may be sure that church matters both in Ireland and in Scotland were fully discussed. It is probable that it was with the approval of St. Bernard that Malachy decided to extend his reforming efforts into Galloway. The decision may well have been made at Clairvaux, and to St. Bernard—that great Cistercian—must be attributed the inspiration that caused Malachy to found in 1142 the first Cistercian monastery in Ireland at Mellifont.

But if Malachy was to extend his influence into Galloway it was essential, from his Irish experiences, to seek the cooperation and active assistance of the church and rulers of Galloway. The moment seemed propitious, for Fergus, lord of Galloway, had been reconciled to King David after a long estrangement. But it was obvious that Malachy should visit both of them if his scheme was to make progress. His recorded movements on his return journey from Clairvaux indicate this policy.

‘Malachy having set out from us [i.e. Clairvaux] had a prosperous journey through Scotland, and having found King David, who is still alive today, in one of his castles and whose son [prince Henry] was sick unto death etc.’

Malachy cured the sick prince and so earned and received the respect and veneration of King David. It must have been with the king’s approbation and perhaps letters of credence that the saint set forth to visit Fergus, if he had not already done so. One may expect a stay of several days at Cruggleton and Whithorn. In the Life, however, is no mention of Fergus but only of his village of Cruggleton. This implies a detour from the direct line from Cree to Glenluce. Its object surely is obvious.

‘As he passed therefore through the village of Cruggleton a dumb girl met him.’

There can be little doubt that he saw Fergus and Gille-aldan and sought their help and concurrence with his plans. The sequel will show with what success.

‘Then he entered a village which they call St. Michaels church . . . and cured a woman mad and bound within cords.’¹

¹ Sir Herbert Maxwell, quoted by Lawlor, asserts that Mochrum church, some twelve miles from Cruggleton, on the direct route from Cruggleton to Stranraer, was anciently dedicated to St. Michael. I have been unable to check that identification, but it seems reasonable, though there might be other claimants. Thus the church at Glenluce was dedicated to St. Michael and the church of Longcaster, though described on 1 Jan. 1433/4 as the parish church of St. Nicholas of Longcaster (Barnbarroch Charters), figures in another document from the same source as ‘the high altar of St. Michaels kirk of Longcaster’ (dated 27 June 1546). Longcaster, which goes back to the 10th century on the evidence of the cross now in Whithorn Museum, was probably dedicated in the beginning to St. Michael. Built into the barn of the farm of Boghouse of Mochrum—the ancient Kirklands—are two or three corbels which in 1950 were very dilapidated, belonging to what is known as a corbel table that ran externally round the top of the walls of a church, supported at intervals by carved blocks or corbels. In the 12th century it was a course of stone projecting some six to twelve inches. This was a regular feature of English Romanesque practice during

Till he reached the coastal port we learn no more of Malachy's movements. But he must have passed through the parish of Inche always on the look out for a suitable centre for his future activities. And beside the Green Lake he decided to plant a community. Its choice may have been influenced by the fact that it lay within a mile or so of the manor of Inch, which was a seat of the bishop of Galloway and perhaps the earliest endowment of the bishopric. If so, one may detect the hand of Gille-aldan in its selection. Then Malachy passed on to the coast.

'But when he came to Portus Lapaspari he waited for a passage some days. But the time of delay did not pass idly. In the interval an oratory is constructed of twigs woven into a hedge, he both giving directions and himself working. When it was finished he surrounded it with a wall and blessed the enclosed space for a cemetery.'

Lapaspari is obviously the genitive of Lapasper a corruption of Lapis Asper (rough stone). Lawlor suggests that this is a Latin rendering of Cairngarroch = carn garbh, which name occurs three times on the shores of Wigtownshire. It is clearly not Cairngarroch Bay close to Dromore. Ireland is invisible from this point and the dangerous currents round the Mull, well known to shipping, renders this site most unlikely. Lawlor selects Cairngarron Bay between Portayew and Money Head, south of Portpatrick. Agnew on the other hand (p. 59) strongly states the claim for a the second half of the 12th century. In the museum at Whithorn are some similar corbels, larger, finer and earlier examples from that 12th-century cathedral, one depicting a cat's head that is remarkable. There is also a voussoir built into the byres at Boghouse c. 1200. That Romanesque church at Mochrum may not have been the church visited by St. Malachy. But there must have been a previous church there—perhaps of wood, for in Whithorn cathedral museum are two 12th-century tomb slabs with crosses on them, rescued by the late Sir Herbert Maxwell from a farm at Boghouse (see Official Guide, Nos. 53 and 63). Only four parish churches in Galloway can be assigned on architectural grounds to this period—Mochrum, Cruggleton erected in the second quarter of the 12th century (D. and G. Trans., 3rd series, xxviii, 94), Dunrod (Inventory, No. 217) and Kirkeudbright, in which museum is a capital and other fragments from St. Michael's Church now in that town's Museum, c. 1150 or a little earlier. Mr. Raleigh Radford has suggested that there are possibly some 12th-century remains at the Chapel of Isle of Whithorn, and at the Cathedral.

site at the southern end of Larbrex Bay. A recent survey of that site and the suggestion of an even earlier track from Lochryan directly aligned on Larbrex Bay seem to justify the identification.¹

Not till 1148 did Malachy feel free to fulfil his plans in Galloway. But in the eight years that had passed since he was in that province he can never have forgotten that objective. In May the Synod of Innispatrick authorised him to go to Rome to bring back the pall for Ireland. He must have set out from Bangor, but was driven back by a storm.

‘on the third day [the first day after landing in Scotland] he reached a place which is called Viride Stagnum which he had caused to be prepared and leaving there some of his sons our brothers, as a convent of monks and abbot—for he had brought them with him for that purpose—he bade them farewell and set out.’²

From this statement of St. Bernard it has been properly inferred that St. Malachy planted at Saulset a convent of the Cistercian Order, and the fact that until 1393 Saulset is not known to have had any parish churches forming its spirituality, supports this inference. Yet there is nothing to show that Malachy brought brethren from Mellifont the first Cistercian house in Ireland.³ The difficulties he experienced there would scarcely encourage him to draw on its ranks, which admittedly were not sufficiently instructed for an establishment at Saulset. It is possible that Malachy may have drawn on Clairvaux itself, but in that case he is not likely to have appointed as first abbot of Saulset, Michael, who is definitely stated by St. Bernard to have been cured of recurrent dysentery by Malachy at Bangor, adding monastery in the parts of Scotland; and this was the latest of all Malachy's foundations.'

‘and at present, as we have heard, he presides over a

If Michael came from Bangor, he must surely have been an Augustinian.¹

But whether Augustinian or Cistercian, the venture could not have been successful. If insufficiently trained Cistercians were brought from Mellifont, it is more than likely that the new foundation proved unsatisfactory after Malachy's death and bishop Gille-aldan must have intervened to establish a new order at Saulset. That bishop who is today credited with the establishment of Augustinians at Whithorn may have done the same at Saulset, especially when the predeliction of Fergus for that order at Holyrood is borne in mind.² But there is no evidence of this. Gille-aldan may have been quite unacquainted with Premonstratensians whose first known appearance in Scotland was at Dryburgh in 1152. It has been claimed that Saulset was the first Premonstratensian house in Scotland and even that Fergus c. 1150 brought the Canons from Prémontré, but our knowledge of the church in Galloway at this date does not permit any conclusion. Yet it is clear that Saulset was the mother house of Premonstratensian Whithorn and that Whithorn went over to that order c. 1177. Mr. Raleigh Radford is of opinion that both Saulset and Whithorn became Premonstratensian in the episcopate of Christian (1154-86).³

² There is no evidence to associate Fergus with the Premonstratensian Order other than the obits in which he is commemorated as founder of Whithorn and Saulset. This could equally apply to his benefactions before those monasteries became Premonstratensian. The Whithorn evidence points to this having happened some years after the death of Fergus.

Saulset was a small abbey geographically isolated in a remote part of Scotland. It was a poor benefice that could not compare with the wealthy abbeys of other orders in Scotland. Yet its early foundation and the fact that it was the mother church of Whithorn gave it a status in the circary of the Premonstratensian order. It has been suggested that Saulset consequently claimed the right of visitation of all the houses in Scotland, but there is little evidence of such a claim having been made. It seems to have been the practice of the General of the order—the abbot of Prémontré at Laon in France—to have granted commission to a Scottish prelate of the order to visit and reform the houses within the circary; but no house seems to have been granted this particular privilege. During the papal schism Scotland supported the anti-pope, England, which then dominated France, adhered to the pope. So the commission of the General at Prémontré was invalid in Scotland. Such were the conditions in 1414 when no visitations of the Scottish houses took place. Robert, duke of Albany, as Governor accordingly petitioned the anti-pope to appoint visitors and the abbots of Dryburgh and Holywood were given papal commission (see No. 72).

Henry McDowell, who became prior of Whithorn in 1503, persuaded the Crown in 1505 to ask the General of the order to support the claim of Whithorn to the power of visitation which the abbot of Saulset had recently exercised, mainly on the ground that Whithorn was the richest house of the order in Scotland in buildings and equipment and that the Crown desired to see the pre-eminence of Whithorn increased.¹ The General complied with the request of the Crown and granted to the prior of Whithorn a commission of full jurisdiction in visitation and reformation which the abbot of Saulset, despite his much inferior status, then held. But Dryburgh took exception apparently on the ground that it was the first Premonstratensian house to be founded in Scotland,² and in May 1507 James

² The Premonstratensian Order came to Dryburgh 10 Nov. 1150 from Alnwick (Early Sources, p. 210), but the Chronicle of Melrose says that the order came to Dryburgh 13 Dec. 1152 and Roger was first abbot.

IV again wrote to the General stating that his previous letter of 1505 had been extorted from him by prior Henry McDowell and he was not alive to what he wrote at the prior's supplication.¹ The prior must have made good use of the royal pilgrim when at Whithorn.

The very same day the Archbishop of St. Andrews also wrote to the General desiring that the old pre-eminence of Dryburgh should be revived and its former authority in visitation and reformation restored; the prior of Whithorn had presumptuously and illegally resorted to harsh treatment, not mere correction, and now exercised superiority in his province of St. Andrews encroaching on Dryburgh's old freedom. It seems that the powers of visitation were not so much objected to as the methods adopted by prior Henry in his reforming zeal. The General's reply is unknown, but he probably yielded for the moment; for in 1524 Quentin, abbot of Saulset, is described in a Crown letter as 'father superior of the Premonstratensian order in Scotland'.² Again in 1532 David, abbot of Saulset, received Crown letters ordaining everyone in authority to assist and protect him in visitation of the order's houses on commission from the father abbot and general chapter of Prémontré. He dreaded that the houses would not obey him without Crown assistance.³

The site of Saulset abbey—on a spit of land jutting into the Green Loch of Saulset—may well have been an early Celtic Christian community long before the 12th century, but there is nothing on record or on the site to warrant the suggestion. Surface indications are of a cruciform church of normal Premonstratensian type, with transepts of two bays and an aisleless nave. It is possible that the back half of the present manse is built on the line of the west range. A certain amount of indiscriminate excavation, of which no record was kept, was done on the site many years ago.⁴

THE ABBOTS

Father Backmund has given a list of the abbots, recording merely the names.¹ He commences with 'Christian, 12th century'. But there seems little to support this inclusion and one suspects some confusion with Christian, bishop of Galloway, who died on 7 Oct. 1186 and was buried at Holm Cultram at his own request.² The first known certain abbot was

JOHN, abbot of Saulset, who on 10 April 1273 witnessed the foundation charter of Sweetheart Abbey.³ Thereafter is a distressing gap of over a century.

FINLAY, abbot of Saulset, in 1393 secured the annexation of the parish church of Kirkmaiden in 'le Rynnys' to the abbey on the grounds that the fruits of the abbey could not sustain the abbot and convent in comfort and that owing to the wars the conventual edifice was in a dilapidated condition. The moment was appropriate because Finlay Ahannay had just resigned the living (see No. 71). Ahannay cannot have held Kirkmaiden long if he was the same person as the Finlay Ahannay 'of Scotland', a canon of Whithorn and for three years a scholar of civil law, who in 1390 petitioned for a benefice in the gift of the bishop and convent of Whithorn.⁴ Thereafter Kirkmaiden was served by a canon of Saulset. But within fifty years of this annexation Cornelius Macmaken, the then vicar of Kirkmaiden, died and for a long time no one was inducted in the cure, so long indeed that John abbot of Prémontré the parent foundation claimed the right of collation and provided to Kirkmaiden Gilbert Makdonyl, canon of Saulset. The new vicar is recorded to have been a son of a priest and an unmarried woman, and to regularise his illegitimacy and set at rest any doubts as to the validity of his provision, Gilbert obtained papal dispensation and ratification.⁵ Three years later Gilbert appears again on the scene complaining of the inadequacy of his parochial stipend. Kirkmaiden is stated to have been worth £20,¹ but this, after annexation, went to Saulset abbey and the vicar was paid only £3 sterling by the abbey augmented perhaps by his canonry. Still, £3 was a poor reward for a cure of souls in a parish 'eight Italian miles around and very populous'. So Gilbert petitioned to be allowed to hold another benefice as well. This was granted, provided the benefice was governed by the canons of Whithorn or the monks of Holywood but not exceeding 25 merks sterling.²

PATRICK MAKCHQUHIRTY was abbot prior to 1458. That November he was transferred to Tunglund abbey and consequently resigned Saulset.³ In his place

GILBERT MCWILNANE was admitted by the Crown to the temporalities of Saulset⁴ and would no doubt receive papal provision.

GILBERT KENNEDY, abbot of Sauleseat, is mentioned by Dr. A. I. Dunlop in her Life and Times of James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews as figuring on 8 April 1460 in the Acta of the Faculty of Arts. No other reference to him has been found.

QUENTIN VAUS, abbot of 'sedes Animarum', in 1493 received a Crown grant of a croft called 'the croft of the Blessed Virgin Mary' in the parish of Kirkmaiden resigned by Nevin Agnew of Creach.⁵ Its name implies that the croft had been church lands alienated at an earlier date and now restored to the abbey. In 1500 abbot Quentin disposed to one Ninian Vaus the 3 merkland of Cullintach or Cullinganoch in the barony of Saulset (see No. 73), and in 1504 added to this the 2½ merkland of Tibberquharrane in the parish of Whithorn (see No. 74). Ninian's place in the Vaus pedigree is still undecided, but he was clearly a member of the Barnbarroch family, for in 1538 he transferred these lands to John Vaus of Barnbarroch in a document wherein many members of the Vaus family are recorded (see No. 79). In 1521 Quentin gave a feu charter to John McGowin, burgess of Whithorn, of some croft land in Whithorn adjoining the 5 merkland of Skeoch (see No. 75). In 1525 abbot Quentin was getting old and infirm and took to himself a coadjutor and successor.¹

DAVID VAUS, abbot of Saulset, having been coadjutor to Quentin, succeeded him by the end of 1529. The following January he received a Crown gift of the ward of the lands of the deceased Patrick McDowell of Logan.² By 1533 abbot David was dead, and in the absence of the appointment of a successor three churchmen acting as administrators on behalf of the convent claimed that David till his death enjoyed the ward and that John Vaus was an intruder. They also sued Henry McCulloch for his possession of some of the abbey lands and charged them both with despoiling the place of Saulset and going off with its jewels, charters and evidents (see No. 77). The charge of spulzie does not seem to have been denied; perhaps John Vaus had secured these valuables to preserve them during the interregnum. As one of these administrators of Saulset was schir John Lawsoun, vicar of Johnston, it would appear that he had been appointed to represent the Commendator designate pending induction. Another of the administrators, schir Andrew Quhyte, was chaplain to Henry bishop of Galloway.³

In 1531 abbot David had been infeft in the lands of Dumbreddan held of the laird of Myrtoun.⁴ He died between 24 July and 21 Sept. 1532.

³ In 1527 David as 'coadjutor' acted as arbitrator for Ninian, prior of Whithorn, whilst Michael McQuhon, burgess of Edinburgh, figured as such for David and Archibald Dunbars, anent the lands of Portyarrok and Over Wig (A.D.C., vol. 38, f. 61). David seems to have had right to half of the fermes of the priory and had given a lease thereof to the prior (A.D.C. et Sess., vol. 8, f. 136) whilst McQuhon was assignee of the prior of the other half (A.D.C. et Sess., vol. 7, f. 66v). The collection of the fermes from the two halves seems very involved and it is by no means clear how David secured his rights unless from prior Gavin Dunbar before his elevation to the archbishoprick of Glasgow. For on 11 Aug. 1530 Malcolm, lord Fleming, as factor for prior Ninian, called on Michael McQuhon for himself and for David, abbot of Saulset, to prove before a competent judge the violence which they alleged had been done to them, amounting to £487, 7s. 4d., in uplifting the fruits of the Priory (Inventory of the Charter Chest of the Earldom of Wigton, No. 73).

⁴ Hereditary Sheriffs, i, 349.

On the death of David Vaus there is some uncertainty as to the new provision, for the Vatican registers record on 19 July 1533 the provision to Saulset of James Thonson, canon of Sympyll, to whom the bull was directed (see No. 78). The text implies that Thonson, otherwise unknown, was to be the new abbot. But there must be a clerical error and the surname of Johnston must have slipped out of the text, for he is described as of noble parents on both sides and legitimate. There seems to be no other reading of this puzzle.

JAMES JOHNSTON, lay parson of Johnston and brother to John Johnston of that Ilk, on 18 Sept. 1532 received a Crown gift of the temporalities of the abbey 'till the samyn be lawfully providit with a pastour',¹ and on 21 Sept. the Crown requested the pope to provide Johnston as commendator to Saulset 'whose elder brother acts with great vigour on the Borders', also seeking that he should retain the rectory of Johnston along with Saulset.² Papal provision must have been forthcoming, for by 1539 James, commendator of Saulset, was feuing some abbey lands to John Vaus of Barnbarroch (see No. 80). A lease of the 5 merkland of Skeoch was given to Duncan McGowin (see No. 81) and of Oldbrek in the barony of Drummaston to the sheriff of Wigtoun (see No. 82). In 1532 royal letters were issued to the abbots of Saulset and New Abbey and the prior of Whithorn to send their households to the border to join the king's lieutenant on 7 Feb. and remain there a month for defence.³ Sauseat's fighting quota is stated to have been 20 men who were liable to be called up for service by the Crown.⁴ The taxation imposed on the abbey must have been a severe strain on its finances, and in 1536 commendator James was summoned by letter to account to the auditors for his tax.⁵ This may have been a variable amount from year to year. In 1533 and 1534 it was £35, 6s. 8d.,⁶ the entry for 1531—£16—can only refer to a second payment of a balance owing.⁷ In 1512

it had been £46, 13s. 4d.,¹ whilst in 1502 it had amounted to £66, 13s. 4d.²

It is suggested in Scots Peerage, i, 242, that this commendator was an illegitimate son, as there was another son of James Johnston of that Ilk named James Johnston of Wamphray, who was undoubtedly legitimate. This commendator could have been but little at Saulset. There are frequent references to his actions on the Border. In Lord Wharton's well-known report of 1542 he figures as 'the abbot of Salsyde, his house of £100 yearly, his pledge James Johnston his son and heir—for 20 men'. He may therefore have been taken prisoner at Solway Moss. This is the only reference to his son, who may have died in confinement in England. The commendator became an 'assured Scot'. In 1544/5 Wharton offered him a bribe of 100 crowns. He probably accepted, for his chief and brother accepted one of 300 crowns.³ Neither brother fought at Pinkie, for both were captured at the Wamphray ambush⁴ when Lochwood was taken. Carleton at once released the commendator and delivered Lochwood to him 'whom I have found the best sort of Scots since they were won'. In 1548 he was called on as 'sometime abbot of Saulset to answer a charge of treason'.⁵ He resigned the commendatorship in 1546 seeing that he had recently contracted a lawful marriage, and Arran on behalf of the queen of Scots asked the pope to confer the abbey on John Johnston and to sanction a pension of 40 merks from the abbey for the resigning prelate (see No. 84). But the position of Arran was very insecure, faced with the hostility of the queen mother and the constant scheming of Cardinal Beaton. To strengthen his position, Arran wanted to win over Cassillis to his party. Cassillis demanded his price. So on 29 Dec. 1548 Arran, ignoring his previous recommendation on behalf of ² Ibid., ii, 191. This was in no sense annual taxation. Until much later taxation was imposed only at irregular intervals and the amount naturally varied. In the 1530s there was the special Great Tax, imposed not by the Crown but by the Pope for the use of the Crown; many religious houses were in arrears for years with the payment of this tax.

John Johnston, urged the pope to confer the abbey on James Kennedy, legitimate son of the Earl of Cassillis (see No. 85). It was by no means rare that two royal letters should go from Scotland to Rome demanding in the name of high heaven and the privileges of Scotland that two different persons be appointed to the same prelacy, and these cases were multiplied in the regencies of Albany and Arran. James Kennedy who may be identified with James Kennedy of Uchterlure was not successful and seven years later was to try again.

JOHN JOHNSTON, commendator, but really abbot of Saulset. On 30 April 1545 the Crown requested Cardinal Beaton, who had papal authority to confer certain monasteries in Scotland, to give to John Johnston, priest, Saulset, void by the demission of James Johnston last possessor thereof,¹ and on 11 Dec. 1546 the proctor of commendator John Johnston obliged himself for the annates of Saulset with a mandate in form of a notarial instrument recalling all previous resignations and mandates anent the commendatorship in favour of 'John etiam Johnston cleric of Glasgow diocese'.² He was a son of Cuthbert Johnston of Courance and was closely allied to the Johnstons of Wamphray. A few months after his induction he granted a charter to James Johnston, the previous commendator, of a 10 merkland in the parish of Whithorn receiving 1000 merks in return (see No. 83). This may represent some arrangement for the change of commendatorship. James Johnston had already placed several of the Johnston clan on the abbey lands, one of whom, Mr. Gilbert Johnston of Uchterlure, had been slain at Pinkie, and in 1550 abbot John issued precept for infestment of Robert Johnston as brother and heir of Mr. Gilbert in those lands (see No. 86).

In 1555 the Kennedies returned to the attack. They charged John Johnston, with simony probably in connection with the resignation of James Johnston. No royal letters in support of their claim seems to have been issued, but the pope could not ignore such an accusation and referred it to the provosts of Dunglas and Corstorphine with the official of St. Andrews to hear and decide the case. James Kennedy, however, confidently obliged himself, by proctor at Rome, to pay the annates of Saulset (valued at £70 sterling) vacant certo modo.¹ The decision must have been in favour of Johnston, for he remained abbot undisturbed, thereby earning the undying enmity of the Kennedies.

Unlike so many of the prelates of the church at the Reformation, abbot John remained true to the ancient faith and was charged with celebrating mass 'on prelatical fashion'. He was kidnapped by the Kennedies and Adairs and tortured in the castle of Dunskey.² But like the abbot of Crossraguel, who also suffered from the Kennedy's tortures, he lived long enough to take action against his tormentors. He died in 1600, having made his testament on 14 April. He had two illegitimate sons, one if not both by Janet Cristison—John a student, dead by 27 June 1606,³ and Mr. William Johnston, parson of Lochmaben, who was slain on 4 March 1596 by the Johnstons of Hesilbray.⁴

The names of a few later commendators can be given, but they had no connection whatever with the pre-Reformation church. They were just laymen to whom the Crown gifted the remaining emoluments of the abbots.

Mr. JOHN KENNEDY younger of Baltersane received a Crown charter of the commendatorship on 25 Oct. 1598.⁵

By 23 March 1598/9 Mr. JOHN JOHNSTON, advocate, had succeeded Kennedy.⁶ He had lent 3500 merks in 1590 to Kennedy which may not be altogether unconnected with the commendatorship. Mr. John Johnston demitted office before Sept. 1601, probably on appointment to the more important commendatorship of Holywood.⁷

WILLIAM ADAIR younger of Kinhilt on 3 Sept. 1601 received Crown grant of the commendatorship.⁸

JOHN HAMILTON, eldest lawful son of the deceased Gavin Hamilton, bishop of Galloway, was granted in 1612 by the Crown the commendatorship.¹ In 1630, when a new church was being built at Portpatrick and the abbey, of which little could have remained, was dissolved, the emoluments were transferred to the new church, the rights of presentation being retained by the Crown. Thus terminated the commendatorship of Saulset. The 'new' church is now a ruin, whilst of the abbey not a stone remains.

THE TEMPORALITY

From some inventories amongst the Culzean papers we learn that the abbey lands consisted of a 40 merkland 'above and beneath Luce' with some other small properties.

ABOVE LUCE

This was a 25 merkland surrounding the abbey and must represent the original endowment. It consisted of

- 2 merkland of Kerrimanoch,
- 3 merkland of Culmen,
- 1 merkland called Smith's merkland,
- 20/ land of Barsolis and its mylne,
- 1 merkland of Drumdoith,
- 2½ merkland of Barmulto,
- 2½ merkland of Glenquhapill,
- 2½ merkland of Culhorn,
- 5 merkland of Aird,
- 2 merkland of Kilmoring,
- 2 merkland of Makilquhair.²

On 20 Nov. 1545 abbot John Johnston granted the above lands to James Johnston of Pocornel, later of Wamphrey, brother to John Johnston of that Ilk, who on 12 Feb. 1548 gave a feu charter of them to Gilbert, earl of Cassillis. On 7 March 1575 James Johnston of Wamphray, as heir to his father, was infest by Crown precept owing to the refusal of abbot John to issue a precept of clare constat, and in 1598

BENEATH LUCE

This 15 merkland lay in the parish of Whithorn and was gifted to the abbey by Robert I. Of the charter only a note survives—‘of the lands of Skeagmorechky and Tyber in free barony’.¹ The entry is corrupt and the place-names probably refer to Skeach and Tybberquharrane, which are known to have lain in what later was called the barony of Drumastoun. The lands consisted of

- 5 merkland of Skeoch,
- 5 merklands of Dunnace and its myln,
- 2½ merkland of Drumastoun,
- 2½ merkland of Balnab.²

On 20 Nov. 1545 abbot John granted these merklands to James Johnston of Wamphray for 1000 merks. Papal ratification followed at Kirkcudbright, 20 May 1546.³ In 1575 James Johnston of Wamphray, as son and heir of the late James, was infeft on Crown precept in the 15 merkland on the abbot's refusal. In 1598 Gilbert Johnston of Wamphray infeft the earl of Cassillis therein and later that year disponed to him the superiority.

There is a note in the Culzean papers dated 1633 stating that

- ‘Skeoch, feued by Cassillis to John McGowine,
- Dunnance feued by Cassillis to Fergus McDowell,
- Balnab feued by Cassillis to Patrick Ahannay of Kirkdale,
- Drumastoun and Chipperwharane feued by Cassillis to Anthony Houstoun.’

MAINS OF SALSET

It would appear that this 6 merkland was not comprised in the 25 merkland ‘above Luce’, for it had a very different destination. With it went St. John's mylne and apparently ¹ R.M.S., 1306/1424, app. ii, 750.

Barsollis mylne, for the Mains and the mylns on 5 Aug. 1557 were granted by abbot John to Thomas Johnston son to the deceased Cuthbert Johnston in Courance, and confirmed by the pope in Nov. 1557.¹ Thomas Johnston, who is believed to have been a brother of the abbot, was dead by 1598 and his brother John Johnston succeeded,² having sasine on 22 May 1599.³ That June John Johnston renounced the feu in favour of Ninian Adair of Kinhilt under Great Seal charter, and Ninian's grandson, Sir Robert Adair, in 1628 disposed the lands to the earl of Cassillis.⁴

OLDBRECK AND LITTLE GANOCH

In 1543 James Johnston, commendator of Saulset, gave a 19 years' lease of the 2½ merklands of Oldbreck in the barony of Drumastoun to Andrew Agnew sheriff of Wigtown. It was turned into a feu on 6 Sept. 1575, with it went the office of bailie of the barony of Saulset.⁵

The 40/ land of Little Ganoch 'in the parish of Inch and lordship of Saulset' was also a part of the abbey lands and had been acquired by the Adairs of Kinhilt. Little Ganoch provided a patrimony for William Adair, a younger son of the Kinhilt family and his decendants.⁶ It must be distinguished from the 20s. lands of Ganoch in Glenluce held by a branch of the Kennedy family.

UCHTERLURE AND ST. JOHN'S CROFT

This 5 merkland abbot John granted on 21 Nov. 1545 to Mr. Gilbert Johnston, and in 1550 Robert Johnston of Newton (Moffat) was served heir to Mr. Gilbert, who had been killed at Pinkiecleuch.⁷ Robert Johnston and his brother John were tutors to John and Janet, natural children of the deceased Mr. Gilbert, and the tutors disposed whatever interest the minors might have had for 360 merks to James Kennedy son of Gilbert 2nd earl of Cassillis.¹ Mr. Gilbert must also have had a lawful daughter, Agnes Johnston the heiress of Uchterlure, who married the above James Kennedy. Their grandson Gilbert Kennedy in 1627 disposed the property to sir John McDowell of Garthland, who a year later transferred the lands to the earl of Cassillis. On 16 Dec. 1617 Gilbert Kennedy gave a charter of St. John's croft to the provost and bailies of Stranrawer, who in 1627 infest sir John McDowell therein.²

Commission to John, abbot of Dryburgh, and William, abbot of Holywood, in the dioceses of St. Andrews and Glasgow, to visit the Houses of the Praemonstratensian Order in Scotland.

The Pope willingly turns his mind to matters relating to the condition of churches, monasteries and other ecclesiastical places and persons, especially those serving the Lord in regular habit, so that they may conform to rules and discipline, both in head and members. He understands that the abbot for the time being of the monastery of the Praemonstratensian Order, in the diocese of Laon, used to appoint a certain visitor or visitors and corrector or correctors of the monasteries, priories and other ecclesiastical places of the said order in the realm of Scotland and the persons living in them. But the said monastery [of Prémontré] is in a region tainted by schism and the abbot is disobedient and a rebel against the Pope and the Holy Roman Catholic Church and the abbots of the said order in the said [Scottish] realm, being from the realm of England, are also disobedient and rebels. Since he wishes, with God, to provide, as far as is possible, for the said churches, monasteries, priories, places and persons, in the realm of Scotland, who are, as he perceives, clearly much in need of correction both in head and members, and also being moved by the dutiful requests of his dear son, Robert, Duke of Albany, Governor of the Realm of Scotland, he orders the two abbots to visit the said churches etc. in person and to correct and reform by his authority, in head and members, whatever they find in need of correction and reform, according to the ordinances, constitutions and statutes of the said Order; dealing with those guilty of opposition and disobedience by ecclesiastical censures, without appeal, and doing all things in the premises which the visitors deputed by the abbot of the said monastery of the Praemonstratensian Order were in the habit of doing. Notwithstanding any privileges to the contrary. Also he wills and commands them strictly, in virtue of Holy Obedience, to visit each other's monastery and reform it and the persons therein in like manner. The present commission is to lose all validity when the aforesaid abbot of the Praemonstratensian Order has been brought back to due obedience to the Pope and the Roman Church.

¹ The family of Hannay claim descent from Gilbert de Hannethe and Gilbert Hannethe, both of whom figure in juxtaposition in Ragman Roll (Bain, ii, 205), perhaps a clerical redundancy. The same man served on the assize at Berwick a day or two earlier that served Alan la Zouche as heir to Elene la Zouche (Bain, ii, 824). Gilbert is supposed to have been lord of Sorbie. That parish, however, belonged to the Veteriponts from c. 1186. In 1251 it is on record that they held it of John Baliol and that half of that manor had been wadset to John de Fraunceys. They must have lost the lands in the Edwardian wars. Till mid 15th century there is only record of churchmen. In 1390 Fynlaw Ahanna of Scotland, canon of Whithorn and for three years a scholar of civil Law, petitioned for a benefice in the gift of the bishop and convent of Whithorn and in 1394 Brice Ahanna priest sought a benefice in the gift of Paisley (Papal Petitions, i, 574, 591).

The earliest known member of the family to own Sorbie was Ethe Hannay of Sorbie, who witnessed an obligation by George Douglas of Leswalt in March 1459/60 and as late as 22 Jan. 1484/5 served on an assize with William Hannay of Kippenach and others (A.D.C., 1478/95-97). He was succeeded by a Robert Hannay, who must have been his son. But there is a puzzling entry in A.D.C., p. 118, where a Robert Sorby (sic) son of the deceased Odo Sorby (sic) is stated to have leased the 4 merkland of Ingliston of Sorby to schir William Hannay chaplain, a lease disputed in 1488/9 by Robery Hannay of Sorbie. There is insufficient material to decide who this Odo Sorby was, but it is not possible to say he was the Odo Hannay of Sorbie mentioned by McKerlie.

Robert Hannay of Sorbie must have been a man of substance for he acted as a curator for Quentin Agnew, sheriff of Wigtown 1498/9, who was non compos mentis. He shared the curatorship with Nevin Agnew, son and heir of William Agnew of Creich (R.S.S., i, 319). Robert Hannay was dead by July 1503, when the ward of Sorbie and the marriage of his son Patrick was granted to Alexander and the parson of Parton. Alexander was an uncle of the minor (R.S.S., i, 965), a burgess of Wigtown and acquired from his nephew Patrick in 1539 the 4½ merkland of Kilantringan in the parish of Inch (R.M.S., 1513/46-1970) and was ancestor of the Kirkdale family. Patrick Hannay of Sorbie succeeded his father Robert, but was not infest till 1520 in the 15 merklands of Sorbie and the 20 merklands of Craigboy in the parish of Inch (Ex.R., xiv, 623). By 1543 he had been slain by Patrick McClellan of Gelston (R.S.S., iii, 1242, 1383), leaving three known sons. William Hannay of Kirkdale, burgess and later provost of Wigtown, secured the ward of Sorbie and the marriage of Alexander the son and heir in 1545 (R.S.S., iii, 1222). Alexander was infest in the lands in 1569 and had two brothers, Patrick Hannay of Sorbie (sic) a tax defaulter in 1553 (R.S.S., iv, 2175) and Andrew a son natural. For later generations see the chart on p. 167 of this volume based on the researches of Major S. F. B. Francis, who is compiling a fully documented history of the family.

papal provision made to John Johnston was nullified because of the inability of John—probability arising from his being involved in simony (ex symoniaca pravitate forsan proveniens). Despite this John held the monastery for over a year though his title was invalid (ut asseritur). The pope who elsewhere decreed that in disputed successions he who is in peaceful possession for over a year shall have priority of claim, now derogates—if necessary—from that decree and by apostolic power provides Kennedy to the monastery 'in commendam'. Mandate to the provosts of Dunglas and Corstorphine and the official of St. Andrews to convoke the parties and hear the accusation. If they find that Johnston is already deprived then they are to provide Kennedy and install him, expelling if necessary Johnston. If he is not already deprived they are to examine the accusations and if found true are to deprive Johnston and provide Kennedy. With absolution etc. In order that divine service and monastic duties do not suffer in the event of such commendation, 1/3rd of the common tables or 1/4th of the abbatial if that be separate is to be reserved for the upkeep of the community, the maintenance of the buildings and the embellishment of the divine service and the alms of the poor.¹

Considering that the said James Kennedy had no heirs male and that Agnes Johnston his wife was not likely to have more children and considering that James had had and has great yearly assistance from the earl, his brother's son, therefor the abbot ordains that James should infest the earl and his heirs male in the lands of Ochterlour and the 5 merklands of Stranraer and Marscluvy, reserving liferent to the said Agnes Johnston and James Kennedy spouses. DOCUMENTS RELATING TO THE BURGH OF WIGTOWN

WRITING to General Hutton on 8 April 1789, William McConnell, commissary of Wigtown, stated that the burgh Charters of Wigtown were largely destroyed by vermin thirty years before that date.¹ Wigtown is a burgh that has allowed its records to rot away through neglect. A similar fate has overtaken the earlier sheriff court records kept at Wigtown. The earliest known charter of 1457, which has happily survived, was produced on 8 Sept. 1656 by provost Thomas Stewart for registration in the books of the Exchequer and then for nigh a century it lay in Wigtown endangered by vermin. But in 1749 Alexander McConnell, town clerk of Wigtown, seems to have realised the importance of records of the past and took to Edinburgh the 1457 charter as well as the confirmation of 1661 for registration in the register of Probative Writs. He must have had some genuine interest in the papers, for he also seems to have taken with him a number of fascicules of proceedings in the burgh court as well as some rentals and the like. He must have permanently lodged them at the Register House, for the burgh court papers and the rentals were bound up in two volumes and became part of the Public Records. The two charters in an envelope were placed in a press and then forgotten, till recently they came to light at the Register House. Today we are grateful to the shade of Alexander McConnell for saving these few records. Some other papers relating to Wigtown have been published by Gordon Fraser in his Lowland Lore (1880), pp. 53-70. They cover 1580-1603 and were supplied to him 'by a leading county gentleman'. They were apparently loose official records of the burgh before the bound Minute-Books commence.

The earlier history of the burgh has been dealt with in

*Notes on Pre-Reformation Wigtown*¹ and the origins and status of the burgh have been admirably studied by Professor G. S. Pryde.² The burgh ferme was £20, the same as Dumfries. The royal charter of 1457 (see No. 89) confirmed all previous grants, though none of them are mentioned, and it lists the burgh lands. The limits of the burgh's privilege to control the right of buying and selling merchandise are clearly stated as 'from the midstream of the water of Cree to the sea of Ireland', i.e. up to the Ayrshire coastal boundary.

Of the other documents printed here, most refer to the transmission of tenements within the burgh. They are not sufficient to indicate the layout of the town, nor do they throw any light on the sites of the convent and the castle. In 1559 the burgh council came to an agreement with Patrick Agnew, the sheriff, to lease to him their 3 merklands of Culquhork on condition that all the courts held by the sheriff should be held in Wigtoun and that that important official should take a 'sincere' part in all actions concerning the town. The sheriff was charged the singularly modest rent of 4½ merks for the land, perhaps to ensure that he exercised a sincerity beneficial to the burgh (see No. 103), for a previous sheriff in 1524, Mr. Mathew Agnew, had shewn a reprehensible disregard for his duties in a dispute with the rector of Wigtown relating to the lands of Gallowhill, which are here shewn to have been part of the kirklands of Wigtown (see No. 97). These kirklands prove that the rectory was well endowed amounting in all to a £10 land which included the 5 merkland of Maidland (see No. 105).

The church of Wigtown was dedicated to St. Machutus (St. Malo), and Mr. Raleigh Radford has suggested that the parish dates from Norse times and illustrates the connection between Galloway and the Isle of Man. On geographical grounds he argues that the parish of Wigtown was originally embraced in the older Celtic ecclesiastical district of Pennyngham, which extended between the rivers Cree and

² D. and G. Trans., xxix, 86.

Bladenoch, from the sea to the moors.¹ The church had within it at least two chapels on the south side, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Ninian, founded by Mr. William McGarve, vicar of Penningham, and endowed with burgh tenements.² It had been a rectory from the earliest times and the Crown or the lords of Galloway must have been the patrons. In April 1298 Edward I presented to the church of Wygeton an Englishman, John de Stokis, under letters to the bishop of Galloway.³ Edward Bruce, when lord of Galloway, granted the benefice to Whithorn. It still belonged to Whithorn in 1451.⁴ But the appropriation must have been revoked by the earls of Douglas, though no record of it has been found. In 1307/8 the abbot of Sweetheart petitioned Edward II for a gift of the church of Wigtown to compensate the convent for its losses at the hand of Edward's army.⁵ In 1420 the earl petitioned the pope that Alexander de Cairnis, provost of Lincluden and prebendary of Lyntoun, who had held the church for seven years, should be allowed to hold it for another period of three years.⁶

Hugh Kennedy rector of Wigtown was dead by 1454 when the rectory was stated to be £30 sterling of value for taxation.⁷ Papal provision was then made to Gilbert Smerles, vicar of Inch in the diocese of Aberdeen, but for some reason he cannot have taken possession.

William Hereis, rector of Wigtown and son of Herbert Hereis of Terregles, on 25 Oct. 1459 paid the annates of the parish church to the apostolic camera void by the death of Hugh Kennedy.⁸ He was dead by 1463 and the Crown put forward a nominee for succession, but Ninian, bishop of Whithorn, had already collated a rector in the person of Gilbert Magdonale, the rectory being void by the death of Hereis,⁹ But Magdonale's provision was not to hold good, for Gilbert Smerles at last got possession on paying on 29 May 1464 the annates, and was collated therein 'through restitution'.¹

Mr. Peter Vaus parson of Wigtown was a witness in 1477.²

George Vaus was rector in 1481.³ He was tutor to Patrick Vaus of Barnbarroch and became bishop of Galloway shortly after.

Schir Alexander Scott was rector in 1484.⁴ He was son of Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and clerk register till 1488.

Mr. Henry McDowell, rector of Wigtown, was a witness on 3 Nov. 1500.

Dom. Allan Adare (Adair) resigned the rectory in 1506 and Mr. John Vaus was inducted (see No. 93). Vaus must have been an old man when he resigned in 1545. It is possible that he was a layman, for during his rectorship vicars of Wigtown appear. Mr. Richard Aikenhead was vicar in 1510⁵ and the deceased John McCrakane vicar of Wigtown—probably long dead—is mentioned in 1551⁶; Patrick McClellane was vicar on 4 Sept. 1547,⁷ whilst Mr. Patrick McCulloch was vicar till the Reformation.⁸

Mr. Patrick Vaus, the last rector, was certainly a layman, and on the death of his brother Alexander Vaus in 1568, succeeded to the Barnbarroch estate. He was quite young when he became rector in August 1545, having been at school at Musselburgh, and in 1549 he obtained leave to go to Paris to study. After a distinguished career as Commissary of Wigtown, Senator of the College of Justice, ambassador and knight, he died in 1597. In his testament sir Patrick directed his body to be buried 'in my Iyle att Wigtoune'.⁹

Of the Dominican convent, no vestige now remains.

Even the site is uncertain. But it must have been a feature of the burgh. Very few friaries were endowed with lands of consequence. One of the rules was poverty, and the community was maintained not from a landrent roll but from humble gifts, often of a few shillings drawn as annual rents from the tenements of devout burgesses and others. At the Reformation the convent consisted of a prior and certainly four friars, who in 21 Dec. 1560 gave to sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies a feu charter of their possessions for £1000 Scots, containing a long list of their meagre endowments, the bulk of which consisted of bolls of meal for their sustenance (see No. 107). The fishings on the Bladenoch must have been an important asset. They had long possessed the south side of those fishings by an early royal grant. In 1526 the Crown gave them a thirteen-year lease of the north side as well, which was twice renewed and then turned into a gift in 1541 (see No. 101). On this fishing stood the mill of Bladenoch, which in or before 1471 had been destroyed by floods. It was held of the Crown.¹ The floods seem to have seriously damaged the fishings, for when the friars renewed their fishing lease in 1474, they complained of 'the sterility of the water of Bladenoch'.² It seems that the mill had not been repaired by 1500.³ Prior to 1441 there had been a series of wooden bridges over the water mainly for the use of pilgrims, but they had all been swept away by 'the dangerous river of Bladnau' and Margaret, countess of Galloway, got a papal indulgence to those who assisted her to build a stone bridge.⁴ It may have been sited between 'lie But' and Culmanoch, which were the limits of the fishing rights (see No. 107). King Robert I had granted to the friars 12 bolls of oats from the grange of Baldune⁵ perhaps only for a term of years, for it is not recorded in the rental of 1560 (see No. 107). In 1528 the Comptroller allowed £10 to the Friars.⁶

The names of only 5 priors are recorded, viz.: 1479, Ninian Schankis (Ex.R., viii, 640); 1506, William Dee

Another edifice of the Reformation burgh has also disappeared though it must have been a feature in its day. William Ahannay, burgess of Wigtown in 1549, must have been a prosperous merchant in the burgh, for he sought and received from the Crown a licence to crenellate his house 'to rais and sett furth the heid of his hous lyand within the burgh on the north side of the Hie Gaitt fornentis the Mercate Cross with bataling and corbell sailzie (projecting) in the maist honest and substantious maner he plesis', i.e. adding another storey with corbelled battlements.¹ It is a pity that this imposing structure has not survived.

A number of the more important lairds may well have had houses in the county town. The sheriffs, for instance, living at Lochnaw must have had some residence in Wigtown when engaged on official work there. It may well have been the house that formerly pertained to Gilbert Wricht, chaplain, alias Mak-Murray, bastard, and later to Dom. John Wricht, chaplain, his son, gifted by the Crown on the chaplain's death to Patrick Agnew, sheriff of Wigtown.² The laird of Bomby and the McCullochs of Torhous also owned property in the burgh. Some younger members of the Carlile family also figure in the vicinity intermarrying with the McCullochs and other families. Their advent may be due to the Crown gift in 1473 to Sir John Carlile of Torthorwald of a tenement and garden in Wigtown formerly belonging to William Murray, bastard son of John Murray, burgess of Kirkcudbright. When a bastard died intestate, his effects were escheated to the Crown as ultimus heres.³

Though Wigtown must have been a considerable port⁴

there are only occasional references to shipping in the existing records. Thus in 1512 there is a reference to a ship of Biscay called the St. Marie de Biscay, which unloaded at Wigtown and Whithorn.¹ An earlier reference in 1483 relates to a dispute over a charter party. John Tapy, merchant of Spain, sued the master of a ship called the Mary of Guerrand named Oliver Boddo or Laboddo and the consignee, Bartholomew Cairns, for 405 crowns. The shipment was 15 tuns of wine bought by Cairns from Tapy and transported to Wigtown, where there was some hold up or dispute. The court ordained the master to deliver the wine to Cairns, and Cairns to pay Tapy for it within 15 days, and also to pay 4½ crowns, valued at 10s. Scots per crown, for the freight of each tun of wine. The decret judiciously included a provision for leakage and any wine drunk by the crew, which may have been a material factor in the dispute.²

Only a tentative list of the provosts of Wigtown can be offered :

1457, April 28. Charter of confirmation by King James II, ratifying all grants made and conceded by his predecessors in times past to the burgesses and community of his burgh of Wigtoune, as well of their lands of Borowmers, Culquhork, Braidefeilde, Clachary, Creveny and Philliplande, near the said burgh, and the rest of the acres of the common lands of the burgh and of the mill and fishings of the said lands, as of all other concessions, donations, liberties, privileges and profits conceded by his predecessors in the past to the said burgh. To have and to hold the said lands and acres of lands and the mill and fishings, with lesser customs, burghal fermes, tron, market and cross and all other profits and liberties pertaining to the said burgh, of him and his successors in fee and heritage for ever, with power to buy and sell merchandise and other goods appertaining to the burgesses of a burgh, as freely as the said burgh was infeft by his predecessors in times past. Also he wills that in future the burgesses shall in future possess all and singular their limits and bounds from "le mydstreme" of the water of Cre to the sea of Irelande . . . [illegible] . . . as they have used and enjoyed these bounds in the past. Rendering annually to the King . . . [illegible] . . . and other services anciently due from the burgh.

Witnesses: (George, bishop of Brechin), chancellor, . . . [illegible] . . . Andrew, lord Avandale, the king's guardian, James de Levingstoun, great chamberlain, William de Edmondstone of Luntrethin, knight, . . . [illegible] . . . of Tulibardin.

1503, Sept. 23. Instrument of resignation at the hand of John Wrycht N.P., narrating that Simon Makcristin of Corsregan resigned into the hands of John Makcoullach, then bailie of Wigtown, his manor house or habitation of Monkhill¹ with orchard and meadow and the mote of Monkhill in favour of Margaret Schaw, his spouse, in liferent, who was then infest therein by the said bailie.²

² The family of McCristin is one of the oldest in the burgh, John McCristin, burgess and provost of Wigtown, received in 1471 a charter from Gilbert McDowell of Remiston, of the 2 merkland of Carsregane in the parish of Kirkecowan 'from the midstream of Bladnacht to the midstream of Duffpoll' (R.M.S., 1424/1513-1624). He was succeeded by his son Simon, who in 1484 had a charter from the provost and bailies of the lands of Monkhill resigned by his father (R.M.S., 1424/1513-1623). In 1499 he acquired from Patrick Dikonson of Clontis and Mariot Hannay spouses, the 4 merkland of Kilsture in the parish of Sorbie, resigning to the spouses a 2 merkland of Clontis which Simon held on charter from Gilbert Dikonson, father of the said Patrick. Gilbert had been infest in 1461. Much earlier at the close of the reign of Robert I the Crown had gifted these lands to one Richard McGuffok (R.M.S., 1306/1424, app. i, 101). property came into the possession of the McCristins. It was a $7\frac{1}{2}$ merkland and included Kilsture (a 2 merkland) and Blair (R.M.S., 1424/1513-769). Gilbert's son Patrick in 1491 received from his father a grant of the whole property (R.M.S., 1424/1513-2056). In 1506 Patrick finally sold out to Simon McCristin of Carsregane and Monkhill (Ibid., 2975). As early as 1497 Simon had been a baillie of Wigtown (Ex.R., xi, 62) and figured again as such in 1510 when he and Cuthbert Cunyngham were joint customars of Wigtown (Ex.R., xiii, 373, 379). In 1513 Simon along with Dominick McClellane had to compound in the Justice Ayre for the oppression of the community of Wigtown. They had taken the best merchandise coming in ships to Wigtown, hiding it in their cellars, ingathering the profits of the town and burgh lands and the common liberty of the community. They were also charged with oppression of the McKies (Pitcairn, i, 98). There were many temptations for a customar. Simon must have died in 1513 when William McCristin was infeft in the $7\frac{1}{2}$ merkland of Clontis (Ex.R., xiv, 589). William in turn was dead by Nov. 1517, when the Crown gifted the ward of his lands, as to half, to his widow Elene Gordon along with William Gordon of Craichlaw, and as to the other half to his brother Simon (R.S.S., i, 2943). William apparently had no issue and was succeeded by his brother Simon, who in turn was followed by his son William, who had a lawsuit as to Carsregane on the death of Gilbert McDowell of Freugh, the superior (A.D.C., xxix, f. 74, and xxx, f. 221^v). His son John McCristin in July 1584 resigned Kilsture for a new infeftment with Egidia Kirkpatrick his spouse (R.M.S., 1513/46-1991). John died in 1545 and the ward of Clontis, Kilsture and Blair with the marriage of his son John was gifted to a relation, John McCristin, burghess of Wigtown, whilst the ward of Carsregan was granted to Fergus McDowell of Freugh (R.S.S., iii, 1346, 1999). Two sons are recorded, John and Simon. John McCristin of Monkhill was dead by 1624, having married Jean Cunyngham. His son John was served as his heir in 1630 (Retours). The later history of this well-known family can be easily followed.

¹ The lands of Torhous were a 20 merkland divided amongst three families, the 10 merkland of Torhous—McCulloch the 6 merkland of Torhous—Mure and the 4 merkland of Torhous—McKie. Before division the lands must have belonged to the McDowells, for in 1459 Affrice McDowell had sasine (Ex.R., ix, 666-7). In 1495 she was described as 'Affrik dochter of Makkdowall, lady of Torhous' (R.M.S., 1424/1513-2273) and in 1500 as 'Affrik, McDowell(s) dochter, lady of Torhous' (A.D.C., 1496/1501-438). Her husband was Finlay McCulloch of Torhous, in right of his wife, a Crown tenant of some lands in Leswalt (Ex.R., viii, 298, and ix, 122). She apparently married secondly prior to 1491 Patrick McKie of Camlodan, who may have given his name to Torhous-Kie. Finlay McCulloch had 4 sons, George (Acta Aud. i, p. 3-4), Norman, mentioned as son and heir of Affrice (A.D.C., 1496/1501-438), and Elise, described as brother to Norman (Ibid.). Norman married Mirabell Adair (A.D.C., xiii, f. 89v) with 2 sons, Finlay McCulloch of Torhous, infest in 1503 (Ex.R., xii, 712), and Norman McCulloch of Larglecastell. Charter of confirmation with clause of novodamus by King Charles II, with the consent of the principal treasurer and depute of his realm of Scotland and the rest of the lords and commissioners of his Exchequer, in favour of his burgh of Wigtoun, and the provost, bailies, councillors and community thereof, confirming all charters, donations, acts and ratifications by his predecessors to the said burgh and the magistrates and inhabitants thereof, of all and singular their lands, acres, tenements, gardens, mills common possessions, lesser customs, deanery (decanatu) and all other things appertaining to the common good of the burgh and of their accustomed annual and weekly markets; and he wills that this confirmation shall be as efficient and sufficient as if all the lands etc. were contained in his present charter. Furthermore, for the good and commodity of the said burgh and for the increment of trade there he of new gives them all the liberties, privileges, profits, emoluments and casualties which they possess or have possessed and especially their deanery (decanatum suum) without prejudice of the generality (generalitatis), that is to say 6s. 8d. annually 'de unoquoque lie frie stallage' and 13s. 4d. 'pro unoquoque alio zithiario lie breware' for visiting and inspecting their jars and measures and annually bringing them to a just measure 'lie Jugg', with 'lie bludewites lie bloodes batteries' and the ameracements of the said burgh and the usual custom of 2s. for each bullock or cow or other cattle bought within the liberty, taken out of it or sold in the market, and 12d. for all beasts brought into the burgh or liberties thereof, or passing through. Also he grants them their annual fair, called the Palmefair, Midsummerfair, Lambas and Mertimas fair, and two other horse fairs on the Tuesday before lie Midsummer and the Wednesday before the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, lie Lambas, a weekly market on Thursdays from 1 May to 25 December, for the buying and selling of all kinds of cattle, sheep, wools, butter, cheese and other country produce, and a weekly market on Mondays for the selling of victual of all sorts, especially barley, meal, oatmeal (polenti avenarum), wheat, beans peas and rye, both growing and for sale (tam crescentium et venalium), and for selling victual brought into the bounds of the said burgh, with customs, tolls and book money (libri moneta) 'lie buiking silver' of the said annual fairs and weekly markets. He prohibits all other markets and buying and selling anywhere else within the liberties of the burgh of Wigtoun, outwith the market of the same, granting power to levy customs and casualties and to apply them to the common good of the burgh, to restrain all buying and selling and holding of markets elsewhere, to take and sell all goods offered for sale outwith the market, and to punish and fine transgressors; commanding the Lords of Session and Exchequer to direct letters of horning and pointing at the instance of the treasurer and procurator fiscal of the burgh on a charge of three days to command payment as above and observation of the premises under pain of rebellion.

Witnesses: William, earl of Glencairme, Lord Kilmawers, chancellor, William, earl Mariscall, lord Keyth and Altrie, marshall of the realm and keeper of the privy seal, John, earl of Lawderdaill, viscount Maitland, Lord Thirlestane and Boltoun, secretary, Sir Archibald Prymrois of Chesters, knight clerk of the rolls, registers, council, session, exchequer and parliament, and Sir William Ker of Haddin, knight, director of chancery.

At Whitehall, 23 May 1661.

(In dorso). Note that the charter was presented for registration in the register of probative writs for the shire of Wigtoun, 15 April 1749, by Alexander McConnell, town clerk of Wigtoun. Original in Reg. House. Not in R.M.S.

WIGTOWN v. WHITHORN

THE following papers relate to litigation between Wigtown and Whithorn concerning their trading rights.¹ The 'freedom and liberties' of a Scottish burgh were always jealously guarded and preserved, though they were not always clearly described in their charters. The problem of jurisdiction was always a thorny one and the Court of Session was frequently called on to adjudicate on conflicting claims. The 'freedom' of a burgh was of course the very antithesis of freedom to trade. It was in reality a rigorous protection. Wigtown's jurisdiction extended from the Ayrshire boundary to the Cree, and from the Cree to the Nith was the freedom of Kirkeudbright. Both burghs were frequently called on to defend their rights.² These rights included the collection of customs, a valuable source of burgh revenue. Wigtown did not directly collect the customs, but seems to have followed the practice of Kirkeudbright, which leased the customs to the highest bidder, retaining a sub-custumar at Monygaff.

But the coast-line of Wigtown's freedom was far longer than that of Kirkeudbright and the surviving records are silent as to how Wigtown managed to control its area. Perhaps its control was inadequate, for in 1500 the Crown appointed custumars in so far as exports and imports were concerned. The innovation was resented by the burgh and that year John Lindsay, custumar of Wigtoun, was de-forded by Thomas McClellan of Bomby, Alan McClellan, provost of Wigtown and a number of burgesses.³ Three years later the Crown appointed John McKie of Myrtoun custumar within the burghs of Wigtown and Innermessan and all other places in the sheriffdom.⁴ Apart from the 'freedom and liberties of the burgh', the Crown reserved the right to license traders. Thus a burghess of Wigtown in 1541 was licensed to 'fraucht' a ship from Brittany with fish from the Outer Isles.¹ In internal trade Wigtown, like all burghs, fought a losing battle. Within its huge liberty the burgh claimed that all trading should take place at her mercats. But the chapmen carrying their packs could easily avoid payment of dues. In 1503 Crown letters were issued to the sheriff and provost prohibiting all chapmen from selling and buying wax, iron, tar, skins or victuals under pain of escheat, half of which was to go to the Crown and half to the burgh.² This was renewed in 1517 against chapmen and other unfree traders who buy or sell in landward places and do not bring their goods to the burgh mercats, thus defrauding the customs and rights of burghesses.³

Similar steps were taken with regard to overseas trade and at once there was a clash with Whithorn. At the close of the 15th century that cathedral city had come into prominence as a centre for pilgrimages rendered almost fashionable by royal exemplar. In 1499 the Crown granted to Patrick Vaus, prior of Whithorn, and to the convent and his successors, the customs of all skins, hides, fish, cloth and wool and for all other their goods transported in their own ships. This was a ratification of a previous grant dated 3 January 1491/2.⁴ A definite limitation was imposed probably to protect Wigtown. But the prior and burghesses of Whithorn cannot have been content with the grant and soon began to stretch and outreach the limitation. They sought to have similar trading rights to Wigtown. In 1510 Wigtown brought an action against Whithorn for diverting shipping to the Isle of Whithorn. Whithorn retorted with an unspecified counter-action. There the matter rested till 1513. That year Wigtown brought a fresh charge of making merchandise with men from Ireland and the Isle of Man. Whithorn declared that Mungo Murray of Broughton, customar of Wigtown, was irregular in his dealings with an Englishman, one Thomas Bavirlaw. Wigtown even alleged that the burgesses of Whithorn had deforced the provost and bailies of Wigtown within the haven of Wigtown and taken goods to the Isle of Whithorn and marketed them there. The Crown called for production of charters. On 14 July 1518 decision was given in favour of Wigtown by default, Whithorn not being represented in court. But the jubilation of Wigtown was short-lived, for the record was speedily deleted and on the margin is inscribed 'This act orderit not to be pronouncit'. By 25 August the parties were as fully engaged as before. Early in 1519 the Crown continued the case in the hopes that Symon McCristin and Patrick McKie for the burghs could reach agreement. But that failed and Wigtown produced its charter of 1457. Litigation burst out afresh in 1532, when Whithorn produced two charters, one of 1325¹ and the other of 1511,² the latter confirming the former in even stronger terms. As Wigtown could produce no earlier charter than 1457, Whithorn's charter of 1325 had to prevail and Wigtown, which had claimed 2000 merks damages, lost the case.

In 1535 the Crown issued letters in favour of Mr. Archibald Stewart, parson of Kirkmahoe, and Mr. Peter Stewart, his cousin, appointing them customars of both the burghs of Wigtown and Whithorn 'between Glennop and the water of Cree and the west seycost of the oceane sey and Lochryane and the Rynniss of Galloway' for seven years, relative to all customable goods passing in or furth the said bounds, paying yearly to the Exchequer 48 merks scots.³

No. 114a

1518/19, March 15. Mr. Francis Bothwell for the toun of Quhitherne asked instrument of the date and reign of the king contained in the charter produced by the toun of Wigtoun, which was at Stirling 28 April 1457 and of the reign of James ii 21 years.

Mr. Thomas Hamilton for the toun of Quhitherne protested that since the community of Wigtoun had summoned the community of Quhitherne for wrongful drawing of ships to their port of Quhitherne and that he produced a title, he desired a term to prove the points of the summons. Mr. Thomas Hamilton protested that the summons might be first called. Mr. Adam Otterburn in name of the toun of Edinburgh asked instrument and protested that if the lords would admit the toun of Quhitherne ane free burgh, that it was or should be by virtue of evidence making them a burgh, before the evidence and privilege of burgh granted to the said toun of Wigtoun.

A.D.C., xxxii, f. 127

No. 115

1532, Dec. 2. The lords by sentence interlocutor decern that they are competent judges in the summons raised at the instance of the community of Wigtoun v. the community of Quhitherne for reducing their instruments notwithstanding the exceptions proponit. Mr. John Letham for Wigtoun asked instrument that Mr. Thomas Marjorybanks for Quhitherne granted he would use no dilators against the relevancy of the summons. The date of the charter of king James ferd making Quhitherne a free burgh was at Edinburgh 1 May 1511; the date of another charge given to the said toun by king Robert the Brus was at Arbroath 20 May a.r.20 (1325). The date of the charter of Wigtoun as a free burgh, at Stirling 28 April a.r.21 (1457).

The lords continue to last of January the summons by the provost of Wigtoun v. the provost of Quhitherne and Ninian now prior of Quhitherne anent production of the charters of Quhitherne.

A.D.C. et Sess., ii, f. 19-20

No. 116

1532/3, Feb. 5. 'The said Maister (Robert Leslie) exceptit again ye summons raised be the toune of Quhitherne allegand yat the said summons was intentit at the kingis instance and at ye instance of the toune of Wigtoun againis Quhitherne and ye actioun myt not be dividit and therefore ye lordis myt not proceed without ye kingis advocate wald persew ye summons. The lordis by sentence interlocutor decerns yat yai myt proceid because the kingis advocate was present and was redy to persew for ye kingis grace insafer as the summondis concernit his hienes.'

Mr. John Letham for Wigtoun asked instruments that the charters of Quhitherne bear that James ferd created the toun of Quhitherne and its bounds a free burgh to be called the burgh of Quhitherne with the port of the same and that the charter confirmed previous donations by the kings predecessors and was enough to verify the first point of the summons.

'Mr. Robert Leslie procurator forsaid askit instruments upoun ye second allegeance.

Mr. John Letham perlocutor for the toun of Wigtoun askit instruments that the charter of king Robert Bruceis producit be ye men of Quhitherne purportit and contenit yir wordis in effect—concedimus etiam confirmamus eisdem villam de Quhitherne que dicitur clauchance quam predictus frater noster dedit eis in liberum burgum cum die fori singulis septimanis et die nundinarum semel in anno et ex dono ejusdem fratris nostri sex petras cerce percipiendum annuatim de Cregiltoun et de Mochrome ad lumenare Sancti Niniani etc.'

Mr. Robert Leslie for Quhitherne protested that Wigtoun was created a free burgh by James ii and his predecessors by a reserving charter of that king and therefore if Wigtoun could produce no other evident they should have no place for production of others in time to come, and offered to prove that Quhitherne had been in peaceful possession as a free burgh before James ii ans sensyne past prescription. The lords continue the matter betwixt Wigtoun and Quhitherne till Tuesday next.

No: 116a

1532 3, Feb. 18. In the action of Wigtoun v. Quhitherne and the prior thereof, to produce charters creating Quhitherne a free burgh for retractation because Wigtoun was made a free burgh by James ii with all priveleges within the bounds of Quhitherne and Galloway from mid stream of Cree west to the Ireland sea and the inhabitants of Wigtoun had been in possession of that freedom past memory of man which freedom it will not give over to Quhitherne.

The provost and bailies of Quhitherne had been wrongfully buying of skins, wool, hides, cloth and other staple goods to landwart within the freedom of Wigtoun thus defrauding Wigtoun of small customs for which they pay the crown yearly 10 merks and get no profit therefrom; and for drawing of strangers and their ships from the havens in the freedom of Wigtoun to the Ile of Quhitherne, Portzarrok and other places, making merchant there, lousing and lading ships. This infraction had gone on for 28 years and especially 2 ships yearly in 1513, 14, 15, and 3 ships in 1516 and 2 ships yearly since then, laden with wine salt etc from the haven of the said burgh called Innerwell. The lords assoilzie Quhitherne from the petition of Wigtoun because the crown and Wigtoun had not verified nor proved the points thereof. Damages between 2000 and 3000 merks were claimed.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO CRUGGLETON

THE story of Crugiltoun Castle and the lands associated with it has already been told in some detail.¹ The following documents throw some further light on the struggle for possession of castle and lands. Robert Stewart, illegitimate son of James V, the commendator was an absentee and the affairs of the priory were administered by a chamberlain also named Robert Stewart whose identity has not been established. From 1525 to 1568 the Fleming family had held the priory in the persons of Ninian and Malcolm Fleming. Lord Fleming desired to keep the commendatorship in the family and supported his relative William Fleming who claimed the priorship under Privy Seal gift of 1566 of the reversion of the priory on the death of his uncle Malcolm Fleming last prior who died in 1568. The Crown had promptly gifted the office to its illegitimate offspring Robert Stewart in commendam. The times were troublous and Whithorn was a long way from the capital. Fleming seems to have been in possession of the priory whilst Robert Stewart the chamberlain held Crugiltoun for the commendator. Early in 1569 the Regent wrote urgently to sir Patrick Vaus of Barnbarroch to the effect that Lord Fleming with an armed force was attacking Crugiltoun castle and prayed sir Patrick to collect his friends and go to the assistance of the chamberlain 'and releve our said brother of the said assege'.² Barnbarroch must have arrived too late for in 1578 it is stated that Lord Fleming had held the castle for about ten years.³ The commendator took legal action, the plea being referred to the Commissaries of Edinburgh. That court was so dilatory that in 1578 at the instance of the Regent the Crown issued a summons to the commissaries to show cause for the delay. Accompanying the summons is a bundle of memorials, defences, answers thereto and papers in the process.

² Correspondence of Sir Patrick Vaus, i, 62.

It was claimed that William Fleming had never been lawfully provided to the priory before Malcolm's death and that the gift bore no name of the donee nor a date, contrary to Act of Parliament anent annulment of gifts purchased on blanks, and it was alleged that William Fleming's name had been put in the register by another hand long after the date of entry and death of Malcolm. The resignation by prior Malcolm to William Fleming was at the hand of the deceased Patrick Porterfield. All the witnesses were dead except John Fleming of Boghall, who had been convicted of treason and so was unable to bear witness. The notary was said to have confessed the forgery of the resignation in presence of a number of his neighbours. Today the Register of the Privy Seal (vol. xxxiii, f. 107) reveals that no name of a donee is filled in and that there is inserted in the register a slip with a special royal command to make the entry.

Such was the case that the commissaries of Edinburgh were called on to decide. Their decision has not been found, but it surely must have been adverse to the claims of Fleming.¹

A few months later the commendator feued the castle and lands to Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree, who was dead by 10 Sept. 1578.² His widow Margaret Stewart failed at first to get access to the castle held by the chamberlain under the order of the commendator. So the chamberlain refused to obey the order of the Privy Council in favour of Margaret. But the widow must have been given possession, for in Aug. 1579 Alexander Stewart of Garlies, his sons and others, fully armed, under silence of night hid themselves in the outhouses and at dawn when the yett was opened seized the castle.¹ Again the law was invoked. Ultimately Margaret and the commendator came to terms in Feb. 1580/1.²

In the British Museum is a coloured sketch of a castle of the priors of Whithorn, reproduced by the author of Hereditary Sheriffs of Galloway, ii, p. 68. It can only apply to Crugiltoun. From this illustration the central tower is entirely a 13th-century keep with ordinary upright medieval battlements. The battlements of the enclosing wall have been modified and are low, with outward-splayed openings for use with hand guns, a typical development of the 16th century. The prominent quoins and voussoirs of the entrance are also likely to result from a reconstruction of the 16th century; in fact, it seems possible that the whole of the angular wall is a new construction of that century. The long narrow loups in this wall might be openings for hand guns of the 16th century, and not medieval arrow slits.

The medieval outer ditch—a prominent feature of the present site—survives in the foreground, but the outer wall with its flanking towers recorded in 1264 is not shewn save in one corner. It is possible that this wall was demolished to provide stone for the reconstructed buildings and to improve the field of fire. There is still some suggestion on the site of walling of an outer ward.

There is no proof on the site of anything going back beyond the 12th-13th century, though the origin of the outer ditch might be much earlier. We may attribute with reasonable certainty the 16th-century reconstruction to Malcolm, third Lord Fleming, whose family reached the zenith of its power in his lifetime. He was a court favourite and accompanied James V on his matrimonial expedition to France in 1537. He married Janet, natural daughter of James IV, and fell at Pinkie in 1547. When Gavin Dunbar, prior of Whithorn, was elevated in 1524 to the archbishopric of Glasgow, Fleming must have secured the priory for his brother Ninian Fleming (1524-1536). On

Ninian's death Lord Fleming again secured the priorship for another of his brothers Malcolm, dean of Dunblane 1536-68. Indeed, Lord Fleming may well have regarded the priory as a perquisite of his family. This may have been the reason why his son in 1566 put forward another member of the family as prior on prior Malcolm's death and held the castle till 1579.¹

1580/1, Feb. 4. Registration of Contract dated at Edinburgh Feb. 3 between Robert commendator of Quhitherne on the one part and Margeret Stewart relict of the deceased Andrew master of Uchiltree on the other part. Margaret had raised action before the lords of C. and S. against the commendator for deliverance of the castle, tower and fortalice of Crugiltoun Castell and for violent eviction from the 10 merklands of Crugiltoun Castell in the month of December 1579,—and now to staunch all debates, the commendator taking burden on him for all those named in the summons viz. Alexander Stewart elder of Garlies, Anthony Stewart, Robert Stewart and John Stewart parson of Kirkmahoe his sons, Alexander McKie of Stranord, Mr. Robert Stewart chamberlain of Crugiltoun, Alexander Hawthorne in Powtoun, William Maxwell, Gilbert Mertine, Henry Makesoune, Alexander Galbraith and Thomas Bell smith in Crugiltoun—agrees to remove from the lands, mains, castle and fishings of Crugiltoun Castell and to allow

Margaret to repossess the same and also to possess undisturbed the 5 merkland of Portcarrick and its myln and the 5 merkland of Quhithillis and its myln in time coming. The commendator is to pay Margaret the maills for 1578, 79, 80, and to disclaim any right or title to the lands under obligation made to him by the late James earl of Moray and is to ratify an infestment made to the deceased master of Uchiltree or to Margaret of the lands and castle and also of Portcarrick and Quhithillis. The commendator is to find Adam Cunynghame of Clolynane and Patrick Vaus of Barnbarroch as sureties for observance of contract.

On the other part Margaret withdraws all actions for recovery, damages, maills or duties and consents that the commendator shall have the use and occupation of a piece of green called the Ballgrene lying adjacent to the said toun and fortalice and place, estimated to be an acre of land 'without the fawsyde of the said castell for pasturing his horses or gudis ganging passing and playing thereon'. If Margaret lets the 10 merkland of Crugiltoun to tenants, she is to give the commendator a preference provided that he offers no less rent at the sight of the laird of Garthland, sir Lewis Bellenden of Auchnoul justice clerk, Patrick Vaus of Barnbarroch and the said Adam Cunynghame. Margaret is to deliver to the commendator a sufficient discharge for the money wherein he is taxed for the reparation of the Brig of Sanct Johnstoun.

DOCUMENTS ANENT PARISH CLERKS

THIS small group of documents throws some light on one of the minor offices of the pre-Reformation church. In Scotland the office of parish clerk terminated at the Reformation, though in England it continued in a very modified form as parish beadle and precentor. The term clericus signifies anyone who took part in the church services whether in major or minor orders. The parish clerk belonged to the minor orders, assisting the priest at church services, and their main function was to serve the priest and carry the Holy Water, the stoup and sprinkler.¹

The appointment of these clerks was the only spiritual patronage possessed by parishioners in papal times, for they alone in theory had the power of election. It has been suggested that their exercise of this right was perfunctory and merely nominal, but there is abundance of evidence that it was real and effective.² The office was often served by persons of family and condition. At Kirkyunner sir Patrick Vaus then a young man and rector of that parish was presented to that clerkship previously held by Patrick Mure, brother to Mungo Mure of Rowallan (see No. 125). At Longcastell William Ahannay, provost of Wigtown, had been clerk till his death in 1556 and was succeeded by Patrick Mure of Cairnfield (see No. 126). No explanation can be offered why the Crown should have presented Patrick Vaus to the clerkship of Kirkyunner in 1554. The Crown had done the same there in 1544 on the death of John Inglis,³ but the Register of the Secret Seal shows that the Crown was quite active in such presentations. The intervention of the Crown, if such it was, at Bothkennar in 1538 in favour of Troilus Stewart⁴ was reviewed by the official of Lothian who decided against the Crown's nominee.¹

The emoluments of these clerks may have varied in different parishes. In Selkirk (1489) the fee amounted to 20 merks,² but at St. Ninians near Stirling (1492) it was stated to have been worth £20 Scots.³ When in 1583 John Vaus, late parish clerk of Tostartoun, sued Godfrey McCulloch of Ardwell for his portion of his past fee, the amount is not stated. McCulloch's share of the total is declared to be only 2 pecks of oats yearly (see No. 128).

No. 123

1529, May 10. Compeared Henry Arnot, parish clerk of the Inche,¹ summonsed at instance of Mr. Walter Kennedy to produce letters purchased by him. He was ready to produce same and protested that he should not be held to answer until he was summonsed again and that his expenses should be paid since he was summonsed to this day 'as day peremptour'.

1529, May 12. Anent letters purchased at instance of Mr. Walter Kennedy, parish clerk of the Inche, against Henry Arnot, claiming said parish clerkship to pertain to him. He had 'trublit' the said Mr. Walter and the parishioners before the bishop of Galloway and his commissaries from whom they had appealed to the archbishop of Glasgow and his commissaries, where the plea was then depending. And said Henry had purchased letters charging them to answer to him for the fruits of the said clerkship, or else to enter in ward, and failing thereof to put them to the horn. Therefore said Henry was to produce the letters to see if they had proceeded orderly. 'The said Maister Walter [blank] and the said Henry lauchfullie summonsd to this action oftymis and nocht comperit,' the Lords of Council suspend the letters until they be produced.

¹ There are but few references to the church of Inche. In 1257 Master Simon de Claipol rector of Insula (Inche) in the diocese of Whithorn, chaplain of J. Cardinal of St. Laurence in Lucina, had a suit before the sub-dean of York against S. dean of Wiketon (Wigtown) in the same diocese. On appeal the pope sent letters to the abbot of Fauleset (Saulset), who remitted the cause to the Official of Whithorn. The decisions were contradictory and related to a moiety of the church of Insula. Mandate to the prior of Kelso and to the archdeacon of Tevidale to decide the dispute (P.L., i, 344).

Gothray McCulloch of Ardwell v. Cuthbert Dungalsonne son to Roger Dungalsonne burgesse of Edinburgh and John Vaus burgesse of Wigtoun tutor to the said Cuthbert narrating that Gothray had been put to the horn by the said John Vaus parish clerk of Tostartoun for payment of his clerk's fee conform to contract between the laird of Killasser and Gothray on the one part and the said John Vaus on the other part in 1548. Vaus upon an old horning had obtained pursuers escheat most craftily after it had lain over more than 30 years. Pursuer averred there was never any contract about the clerks fee and if it be for his fee that he is denounced 'then the said letters are evill execute agains him for the said clerks fie of all zeiris sen the reformatioun of the religioun' because pursuer had never been charged at his dwelling house with the said letters in four forms, at least never lawfully charged and denounced therewith and no letters or charge at the instance of the said John Vaus against pursuer had been made for 30 years for the said clerks fee; and if the horning had lain over for 30 years the same is prescribed by the law of the realm. The horning was not registered in the sheriff court books within the time appointed, and before any registration the pursuer paid John Vaus his clerks fee for all years resting owing and if anything be found unpaid pursuer has found caution in the books of council for payment. Gothray further stated that John Vaus being a papist left the office of clerkship and passed to Wigtoun where he yet remains and never exercised the office of parish clerk of Tostarton, 'but ane uther providit yrto who had servit the cure thereof sensyne; marover his fie [due] from the pursuer would never have exceedit 2 pecks of oats yearly whereof no intimation is made qulk is too mean a matter to put his whole geir in escheat'. Gothray appeared by Mr John Russell who produced an acquittance by John Vaus to Patrick Blayne burgesse of Wigtoun in name of Gothray for £8 for his clerks fee for all years bygane dated 27 June 1579 (sic).

The lords suspend the letters in four forms purchased by the said John Vaus because the acquittance produced was dated long before the registration of the lettere which was on 26 March 1579, but find the gift of escheat obtained by Cuthbert upon the horning to stand as valid in respect that the letters of horning are execute before the date of Acquittance.

Dispensation to Fergus Makduell and Margaret Conyngham

Mandate to the bishop of Whithorn to grant dispensation to Fergus Makduell, a young man of noble birth (domicellus) of his diocese, and Margaret, daughter of William de Conyngham, knight, of the diocese of Glasgow, who had contracted a marriage per verba de praesenti, which they had consummated, although they knew themselves to be in the fourth degree of consanguinity. Their petition to the Pope was supported by David, king of Scotland, whose kinswoman the said Margaret was, and it urged that if dispensation was not granted their separation would be followed by loss, scandal and slaughter. ¹ In 1331 the crown made a gift of 100s. to an unnamed rector of Penningham, but he died before the gift arrived (Ex. R., i, 358). In 1359 Gregory Macenwugan was provided by the pope to the church stated to be void because James Boyd and Thomas Macdewyll had held it successively for many years without being ordained priests and without dispensation (P.P., i, 347). Macenwugan asserted that he had been collated by the Ordinary many years before the issue of the Bull and admitted that he also had never been ordained a priest (ibid., 325). The internecine wars in Galloway clearly had caused laxity in the church. Indeed it may have been difficult to man the church adequately. John de Penigham, alias Dobynson, was rector in 1410 and the union was not to be operative till he died or resigned. This annexation of a moiety of the church may have been inoperative, for in a supplication of 1425 it is stated that the pope had agreed to annul the letters of annexation of the church to the archdeaconry as from the death or resignation of John Gray the archdeacon (Scottish Supplications, ii, 68). Gray had demitted office and at once there was a scramble for it. David Hamilton, rector of Cumnok, was in the forefront. Other competitors were Patrick Young, rector of Penningham, in 1425 (ibid., ii, 79) and John Beton, rector of Dalry, who had the archdeaconry but not the church and asserted that Young held the church and archdeaconry (ibid., ii, 209). For this complex situation see article on The Archdeacons of Galloway (D. and G. Trans., xxxiii, 70). Young finally achieved both church and archdeaconry and the union may have been effected c. 1425. It must have comprehended both moieties of the church for by 1500 it was served by a vicar.

Lochnaw Charters

Leswalt with some lands in the Rhynnes was erected into a barony in 1426 by the lady of Galloway in favour of William Douglas of Leswalt, who had already been in possession (ibid., 86). His paternity is not yet established, but it seems likely that he was close in blood to the Drumlanrig family. William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1427 was sent to England as a hostage for James I. On 9 May 1429 at Middleham as a hostage he was visited by William Douglas of Leswalt, who in Drumlanrig's confinement had been given charge for 10 years of the castle of Drumlanrig. The two Williams entered into an indenture discharging the 10 year grant, replacing it with a mutual obligation that Leswalt was to have free access to Drumlanrig castle at any time whilst the same liberty was accorded to the other party with reference to the castle of Lochnaw (Hist. MSS. Com., app. part viii, p. 10). William Douglas of Leswalt witnessed a charter on 29 July 1430 (see No. 37). There is some reason to think he may have married Katherine, daughter to Herbert lord Maxwell. He must have been dead by 1438 when Katherine became first wife of Gilbert lord Kennedy. William was succeeded by George Douglas of Leswalt, who married Christiane Ruthven and died without lawful heirs before Oct. 1463, when the crown granted his lands to the Queen Mother (R.M.S., 1424/1513-762).

By 1477 the widowed Christiane had married Sir John Campbell of Wester Loudon (ibid., 1286) and she was still drawing her terce in 1488 (ibid., 1718). At the death of George Douglas the Kennedies claimed the lands as heirs to George on the ground that John lord Kennedy and George Douglas were fratres ex parte matris and Alexander Kennedy, son of John, was given a crown feu which he resigned in 1506 in favour of his elder brother David, 3rd lord Kennedy (ibid., 2954). This charter gives the lands of the barony, outwith the parish of Leswalt, as Mule, Gartrowen, Drummokloch, Balcar, Mekill Larg, Auchmattill, Pollanregane and Culmore in the Rhynnes. In 1507 Patrick Sinclair, servitor to the crown, was granted an annualrent of £27 furth of the fermes of Leswalt. As late as 1545/6 Patrick Sinclair of Woodhouslie was still drawing this annuity when he gifted it with Woodhouslie and Spottis in Butill to his natural son John Sinclair (R.M.S., 1514/46-3198).

Barnbarroch Charters

¹ This is the foundation charter of the family of Vaus of Barnbarroch. When Nisbet was writing his System of Heraldry he found nothing of earlier date. The editor of Correspondence of Sir Patrick Vaus claimed that a John de Vallibus or Vaus was the first of the name at Barnbarroch in 1384. Nisbet on heraldic grounds affirms that the family must have descended from a younger son of the de Vallibus of Dirleton, which family ended in heiresses c. 1392. In 1422 Alexander Vaus, bishop of Caithness, was translated to the diocese of Galloway and was doubtless instrumental in obtaining this grant of Barnbarroch to Robert Vaus. A John Vaus esquire acted as a Scottish envoy in arranging a truce in London. On 26 March 1438 he was presented there with a silver gilt cup. His seal is on record (Bain, iv, 1103, 1109, 1111).

Barnbarroch Charters

¹ It has been surmised that there was a link between Vaus of Barnbarroch and the northern Vauses represented by Vaus of Lochslyn and Vaus of Many (Aberdeenshire). Lochslyn, in the sheriffdom of Inverness, is now established as a brother of Barnbarroch. The family only figures at intervals. In 1498 John Vaus of Lochslyn with Angus McCulloch of Plaids were decreed to pay to a burges of Disert 35 merks (A.D.C., 1496/1501, p. 277). In August 1512 he resigned Lochslyn for a new charter granted for good services (R.M.S., 1425/1513-3764), but the following March along with McCulloch of Plaids was called on to produce his evidents. The crown summons was deserted (A.D.C., xxiv, f. 187, 235). In 1514 along with William McCulloch of Plaids he served on an assize that served Elizabeth Sutherland as heir to her brother John earl of Sutherland (Sutherland Book, iii, 55). Perhaps a son of the same name married Elizabeth Urquhart and received a crown precept in 1536 (R.S.S., iii, 2189). He left three daughters, Katherine, Margaret and Agnes whose marriage was gifted to Mr. Patrick Vaus parson of Wigtown (R.S.S., iv, 2885). He was succeeded in Lochslyn by Jasper Vaus, burges of Inverness, in 1543 (R.M.S., 1513/46-3233) who had a gift of £10 yearly from the burrow mails of Inverness (R.S.S., iv, 2245). In March 1553/4 Jasper resigned the lands of Middlethrid of Arbol in favour of Elizabeth Dunbar (? his wife) for life (R.S.S., iv, 2474). In 1590 a John Vaus of Lochslyn served on the assize that served Alexander Gordon as 11th earl of Sutherland (Sutherland Book, iii, 167).

The family of Vaus of Many was more ancient than Barnbarroch. In 1406 Richard de Vaus lord of Mane was a witness (Reg. Ep. de Aberdeen, i, 210).

Barnbarroch Charters

² The family of Hannay claim descent from Gilbert de Hannethe and Gilbert Hannethe, both of whom figure in juxtaposition in Ragman Roll (Bain, ii, 205), perhaps a clerical redundancy. The same man served on the assize at Berwick a day or two earlier, that served Alan la Zouche as heir to Elena la Zouche (Bain, ii, 824). Gilbert is supposed to have been lord of Sorbie. That parish however belonged to the Veteriponts from c. 1186. In 1251 it is on record that they held it of John Baliol and that half of that manor had been wadset to John de Fraunceys. They must have lost the lands in the Edwardian wars. Till mid 15th century there is only record of churchmen. In 1390 Fynlaw Ahanna of Scotland, canon of Whithorn and for three years a scholar of Civil Law, petitioned for a benefice in the gift of the bishop and convent of Whithorn and in 1394 Brice Ahanna, priest, sought a benefice in the gift of Paisley (Papal Petitions, i, 574, 591).

The earliest known member of the family to own Sorbie was Ethe Hannay of Sorbie who witnessed an obligation by George Douglas of Leswalt in March 1459/60 and as late as 22 Jan. 1484/5 served on an

1471/2, February 6. Supplication by Hugh Douglas narrating complicated litigation over the church of Kirkinner before John Athilmer provost of St. Salvators,¹ between Thomas (Levingston) formerly bishop of Dunkeld and then in the universal church and Patrick Lokart. After the death of assize with William Hannay of Kippenach and others (A.D.C., 1478/95, 97). He was succeeded by a Robert Hannay who must have been his son. But there is a puzzling entry in A.D.C., p. 118, where a Robert Sorby (sic), son of the deceased Odo Sorby (sic), is stated to have leased the 4 merkland of Ingliston of Sorby to schir William Hannay chaplain, a lease disputed in 1488/9 by Robert Hannay of Sorbie. There is insufficient material to decide who this Odo Sorby was, but it is not possible to say he was the Odo Hannay of Sorbie mentioned by McKerlie.

Robert Hannay of Sorbie must have been a man of substance for he acted as a curator for Quentin Agnew, sheriff of Wigtown 1498/9, who was non compos mentis. He shared the curatorship with Nevin Agnew, son and heir of William Agnew of Creich (R.S.S., i, 319). Robert Hannay was dead by July 1503 when the ward of Sorbie and the marriage of his son Patrick was granted to Alexander and the parson of Parton. Alexander was an uncle of the minor (R.S.S., i, 965), a burges of Wigtown and acquired from his nephew Patrick in 1539 the 4½ merkland of Kilantringan in the parish of Inch (R.M.S., 1513/46-1970) and was ancestor of the Kirkdale family. Patrick Hannay of Sorbie succeeded his father Robert, but was not infest till 1520 in the 15 merklands of Sorbie and the 20 merklands of Craigboy in parish of Inch (Ex.R., xiv, 623). By 1543 he had been slain by Patrick McClellan of Gelston (R.S.S., iii, 1242, 1383), leaving three known sons. William Hannay of Kirkdale, burges and later provost of Wigtown, secured the ward of Sorbie and the marriage of Alexander the son and heir in 1545 (R.S.S., iii, 1222). Alexander was infest in the lands in 1569 and had two brothers, Patrick Hannay of Sorbie, a tax defaulter in 1553 (R.S.S., iv, 2175), and Andrew, a son natural. For later generations see the chart based on the researches of Major S. F. B. Francis, who is compiling a fully documented history of the family.

¹ John Athilmer (or Aymler) the elder, became provost of St. Salvator's College in 1450 and died in 1474 (Baxter's Copiale, p. 485).

Thomas pope Pius II surrogated (i.e. substituted) Hugh Douglas to whom he had previously provided the said church and the executors (of Thomas) proceeded against Patrick as if a sentence in favour of Thomas had been promulgated for Hugh. Nevertheless Patrick appealed (Hugh not having been called etc.) and carried off two definitive sentences, from which a procurator of Hugh then in the Curia appealed. Patrick by purchase of certain letters evicted Hugh from possession of the said church. But as Hugh was at a distance he was unaware of the foregoing he hastened to the Curia but was seduced by a certain merchant of those parts, and detained in prison until he paid some pledges formerly made by him and he was forced to return to his own parts.¹ Wishing to go again to the Curia he was detained for a long time with a quartain fever and wishing to defend his cause he sent his own messenger with his rights and sufficient money; but the messenger was captured and imprisoned for a time in the parts of England and Germany and there all Hugh's rights and money were taken from him. For the redemption of the messenger Hugh was forced to pay a sum of money beyond the foresaid moneys, and for 6 years he could not prosecute his appeal. Because the foregoing can be proved more clearly in partibus than in Curia, Hugh supplicates that the pope would call up his cause and give mandate to some good men in partibus to hear and finally determine the appeal etc. Fiat ut petitur.

¹ Lokart's painful experiences of a journey to Rome illustrates the dangers of travel at this period. Even bishops were not immune from the peril. John Donkan, bishop of Sodor and Man, had gone to Rome for his consecration. The journey was always hazardous. In France, apparently on arrival, he was seized and imprisoned in Boulogne till late in 1376 when his ransom of 500 merks was paid. To raise the money he must have given a bond to the abbot and convent of Furness for £24 sterling (Duchy of Lancaster, Ancient Deeds, i, 227). When the previous bishop of Man, William Russell, had to pay 1200 gold florins to meet the necessary expenses for consecration at Rome he had to pledge all the church property of the diocese for two years (Dowden, 283). ¹ The family of Mure first appears in Galloway in the régime of the Douglases. Their progenitor was an Alexander Mure of the Polkelly family in Ayrshire. He was Steward of Kirkcudbright in 1424 (R.M.S., 1424/1513-133) and a cousin of the Duchess of Touraine (ibid., 86). In 1448 he is described as justiciar of William Douglas, lord of Galloway (Bk. of Caerlaverock, ii, 431). He owned the lands of Bardrochat or Bardrochwood by which designation he was known. It was probably his son Alexander Mure of Bardrochat who, in a lawsuit in 1471 relating to the 6 merkland of Auchinflour, failed to prove that Archibald Mure of Auchinflour was a bastard (Acta Audit., 19). There is mention of a brief of service of the lands of Bardrochwood in an action by Alexander Mure v. William McClellane of Bomby who had distrained some of Alexander's oxen (ibid., 50). The second Alexander left an only daughter, Elizabeth Mure, who married William McClellane of Bomby. She sold to her husband's father, Thomas, the 6 merkland of Bardrochwood and the 3 merkland of Glenturk, Carsley and Chapelton in 1492 (R.M.S., 1424/1513-2138). Another son of the first Alexander Mure of Bardrochat must have been the John Mure who c. 1459 married Margaret Keith, heiress of half of the large lordship of Craichlaw, Longcaster and Barmagachan (D. and G Trans. xxi, 391) inherited by his sons, one of whom sold his portion of Craichlaw in 1498 to John Gordon of Lochinvar, from whom the Gordons of Craichlaw were descended. Yet another son of the first Alexander was Adam Mure of Drumskeacht, who failed in Feb. 1501/2 in his claim to the lands of Polkelly against his cousin Margaret Mure, wife of Robert Cunyngham of Cunynghamed (Reg. House Charters, 642). He was Chamberlain of Galloway 1462-96 (Ex.R., viii, 605). In 1486 he was given by the crown, a special grant for his great labours and the burning of his house by robbers. He died in 1504, leaving a widow Margaret Stewart. One of his sons had some claim to the 5 merklands of Chang in Mochrum parish.

1513, June 16. Obligation by John Inglis 'marschale to the king' and Margaret Cameroun spouses in favour of Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum; narrating that Alexander Mure sometime of the Chang and burgess of Edinburgh had sold heritably by charter and sasine his 5 merklands of the Chang in the barony of Mochrum to the said John Inglis and his heirs to which charter the said Sir John had given confirmation by obligation to warrant the spouses at the hand of the crown from ward, relief, recognition, forfeiture and non-entry; and the

² The date of this charter must be after 7 May 1513 (A.D.C., xxv, f. 70), though it was mentioned in court on 14 June that McDowell was still awaiting infeftment (ibid., f. 177). Dunbar was knighted just before Flodden on 9 Sept. 1513 and was alive on 17 Nov. 1513 (A.D.C., xxvi, f. 19) but was dead by the end of that year (Ex.R., vx, p. 675).

spouses had discharged Sir John of the warrandice of any alienation or tacks made by the said Alexander Mure before the date of these presents, except a tack made by Rankin Mure his brother, of the said lands of Chang of which there are still 2 years to run. The spouses had also given Sir John a letter of reversion for 300 merks gold and silver of Scotland and a letter of tack for 6 years after redemption.

The spouses now bind themselves not to make any alienation of Chang or any part thereof to Patrick Dunbar of Loch his bairns or brother except a letter of tack made of before by the spouses to Patrick for 5 years and the said tack 2 years ago which Rankin Mure has. There is mention of an instrument of compromise under the hand of Schir John McNeilly chaplain and notary made between the said Sir John Dunbar and Alexander Mure anent the lands of Chang and a decreet arbitral by Sir James Dunbar of Blakeraig and Sir Alexander Stewart of Garoleis, which documents are given to the said Jon Inglis in security of the said lands. And now lately Patrick Dunbar has produced a copy of the same before the Lords of Council who ordered the originals to be produced. Therefore John Inglis binds himself not to produce them till compelled by law. If the spouses break this obligation they are to pay to Sir John Dunbar 300 merks. At Edinburgh. Witnesses: Henry Congiltoun of that ilk, Patrick Scougal of that ilk, the said Alexander Mure, John Inglis servant to the said Patrick [Scougal] Adam Geilstoun, William Adesoun, Alexander Makneill writer, John Gray and James Young N.P.¹ Signed—John Inglis marchyall wt my hawin hand. Witnesses:

¹ John Inglis of Flashill in the sheriffdom of Fife was one of the king's marshalls, minor court functionaries. He held that office 1492-1529. In 1529 with consent of Jonet Drummond his wife he resigned Flashill and other lands in favour of his eldest son Mars Inglis (R.M.S., 1513/46-822). The marshalls of the court in 1508 numbered thirteen and each received a fee of 20 merks (Ex.R., xiii, 120). Inglis in 1492 had some interest in Culquhalze and his son William is mentioned (Ex.R., x, 728).

¹ The crown precept was dated 24 March and it is evident that Logan had refused sasine for some reason.

² The McDowells of Spottis had owned Physgill prior to 1470, in which year Andrew McDowell and his spouse resigned the lands for a new infeftment (R.M.S., 1424/1513-990). This grant to Michael McQuhon was a wadset, the letter of reversion of same date showing it was for 260 merks. The lands were not redeemed till 1574, and in 1547 Janet Rynd after her husband's death resigned the lands in favour of Catharine Rynd, spouse of Michael McCrekane, burgess of Wigtown. In 1576, following on redemption Peter McDowell, fiar of Machermore, was infest as assignee of the heirs of James McDowell of Tonotrie—viz. Beatrice McDowell, spouse of John Maxwell in Gulliehill, and Cristina, wife of Allan McCroskrie in Barquharan. ¹ These feudal dues for a 17 merkland seem rather high but have been checked by the Responde Books of the Exchequer. The amount of non-entry was the annual value of the lands multiplied by the number of years the lands had been in non-entry. Relief was the annual value. Thus when lands are in non-entry for two years the non-entry is double the relief.

1550, January 19. Julius III to William Blair, archdeacon of Whithorn. As William's merits and virtues have been made known to the Pope, it is but fitting that he see they be neither wasted nor unrewarded. Andrew Arnot has just resigned the archdeaconry of C.C. into the pope's hands by means of his procurator John Stanehous, cleric St Andrews diocese, and since the pope accepted, it become ipso facto reserved to his collation. The pope now confers on William, but has reserved the whole revenues and fruits (not exceeding £33 sterling) to Andrew who retires. Andrew however is bound to pay a yearly pension of 40 merks scots to William in two annual installments. Andrew has expressly consented to this condition. Nevertheless should he fail in payment, after 30 days from the stated term, he incurs excommunication, and if he remain pertinacious for 6 months he incurs privation of the above reservation.

² The earliest references to Stranraer are two notes in an early inventory of missing royal charters, (i) charter to Fergus Mondavilla of the lands of Stranrever c. 1323; the other note may not even refer to Stranraer, (ii) charter to Elizabeth Mundele 'begun and not endit' c. 1357 (R.M.S., 1306/1424, app. ii, 610 and 1141). Mundeville was the early form of Mundell and the family in the 13th century owned lands in Sorby. In 1503 Uchtrie McDowell, indexed as 'of Garthland' had sasine of Stronawir (Ex.R., xii, 713). Then on 20 Feb. 1518/4 Thomas McDowell, perhaps his son, was infest in the 5 merkland of Stronrawir and Markslewane (Ex.R., xiv, 537); but in July 1525 Thomas McDowell of Mundork resigned the said 5 merklans for a new crown charter to himself and Margaret Dunbar his spouse (R.M.S., 1518/46-325). complete his infeftment, so Walter Douglas of Fergustoun intervened and on 4 Nov. 1548 secured a crown gift of the non-entries (R.S.S., iii, 3003-4). At that date Thomas and Margaret were dead and in 1549 we hear of a dispute between Agnes Kennedy relict of Thomas and his son Uchtred anent his father's heirship goods (Acts and Decrees, iii, f. 279). Uchtred McDowell hastened to obtain on 12 Nov. a like crown gift of the nonentries and was duly served as heir to his father. In 1550 Walter Douglas challenged this service (A. and D., iv., f. 228) and the retour was annulled, no reason being given (ibid., f. 411). Walter claimed nonentry since 7 July 1524 (ibid., iv. f. 11). Two decreets went against Uchtred and on 23 Nov. 1556 the sheriff apprised the lands at the instance of Douglas who on 16 Feb. 1556/7 assigned them to James Kennedy of Uchtrelure and Agnes Johnston spouses (ibid., viii, f. 159). This was followed by a decret in Dec. 1558 that Douglas should warrant the lands to the Kennedies at the hands of Uchtred (ibid. xviii, f. 329). The Kennedies obtained crown confirmation (R.M.S., 1546/80-1153) and then granted letters of reversion to Douglas to redeem the lands by payment of 1500 merks. Douglas assigned the reversion to Ninian Adair of Kinhilt who obtained decret compelling the two daughters of Kennedy to renounce the lands in his favour, being infest on crown precept on 24 March 1591/2 (Protocol Book of James Glover, f. 12^v). Adair then proceeded to feu out particles of the lands with a view to establishing a burgh of barony, and the steps he took can be traced in detail in the protocol books of that burgh.

who alleged the 20 merklands of Ardwell to pertain to him in heritage, held of Symon as immediate superior and to have been infest by Symon therein. Golfreid would not show to the pursuers what the maill duties were or by what service he held the lands and had been charged to exhibit his charters and evidents and to pay the duties to Symon. Mr. Thomas McCalzeane appeared for Symon and Golfreid appeared in person and produced 2 charters of confirmation, one made by Archibald Douglas lord of Galloway and Annandale confirming a charter made by Normond McCulloch of Myrtoun to his brother Archibald McCulloch of the lands of Ardwell, another charter of confirmation made by the countess of Galloway confirming the charter made by the said Normand to the said Archibald, together with 2 instruments of sasine and 2 precepts of sasine given by Sir Alexander McCulloch and Symon McCulloch his brother lairds of Myrton to the said Golfreid's forebears of the lands of Ardwell. The lords decern that Golfreid had satisfied the letters purchased by the said Symon and assoilzies Golfreid from the petition and ordains an authentic copy of the duty and service owed by Golfreid to Symon and his mother to be delivered to Symon at his own expense. The reddendo clause is then given viz.—50/ scots at the capital messuage yearly and service due and wont.

REPORT OF THE SEVENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SCOTTISH HISTORY SOCIETY

THE SEVENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SCOTTISH HISTORY SOCIETY was held in the Rooms of the Royal Society, George Street, Edinburgh, on Saturday, 15th December 1956, at 3 P.M.

At the commencement of the meeting, Dr. E. W. M. Balfour-Melville, Chairman of the Council, occupied the Chair.

The Report of the Council was as follows :—

It is with sincere regret that the Council have learned of the death of Dr. William Angus. Dr. Angus, who joined the Society in 1910, served on the Council from 1919 to 1923, was Assistant Secretary from 1922 to 1924, Joint Secretary with Professor Hannay from 1924 to 1927, and again a member of Council from 1940 to 1949. By his articles in learned periodicals he made valuable contributions to Scottish History, and, both as Curator of the Historical Records and later as Keeper of the Registers and Records of Scotland, he gave unfailing help to numerous researchers. His sustained interest in the Society has been shown by a bequest of £100, to which his brother, Mr. James Angus, generously added the gift of seventy of the Society's volumes from Dr. Angus' library.

Members received in October as the volume for 1953-54 Calendar of Scottish Supplications to Rome, 1423-28, edited by Dr. Annie I. Dunlop from the Vatican Archives and presented by her to the Society in memory of her husband and as a tribute to the late Monsignore Angelo Mercati. Covering some of the later years of the papacy of Martin V and the early years of the reign of James I, this volume is not only of great biographical interest but indispensable for the relations of the Scottish Crown with the Papacy at a critical time.

For 1954-55 the volume will be Early Records of Aberdeen, 1317 and 1398-1407, edited by Professor Dickinson. As it is already in corrected page-proof and only awaits the index, the Council hope that it will be issued to members in the summer or early autumn of next year. It is to be followed by Miscellany Volume IX as that for 1955-56. This will include five items, viz. : Papers relating to the Captivity and Release of David II, edited by E. W. M. Balfour-Melville ; Accounts of Sir Duncan Forestar, 1495-99, edited by P. Gouldesbrough ; Report by De la Brosse and D'Oysel on conditions in Scotland, 1559-60, edited by G. Dickinson ; Diary of Sir James Hope, edited by Peter Marshall, and Account of proceedings from the landing of Prince Charles Edward to the Battle of Prestonpans, edited by Donald Nicholas. The next volume will be Wigtownshire Charters edited by R. C. Reid. The Council are also negotiating with the University of St. Andrews with a view to issuing jointly a volume containing part of the University's Matriculation and Graduation Roll.

Papers of the York Building Society, purchased by Dr. T. Graves Law when he was Secretary to the Society and used by Dr. A. H. Millar in the volume of Forfeited Estates Papers which he edited for the Society, have been placed by the Council in the Register House on permanent loan.

Intimation has been received by the Council from the Society's printers that owing to a wages award the cost of printing its volumes is increased as from January 1st 1956 by twenty per cent.

The Right Honourable Thomas Johnston, C.H., LL.D., retires from the Presidency of the Society in December. As his successor the Council recommend Dr. H. W. Meikle, C.B.E., D.Litt., LL.D., H.M. Historiographer in Scotland.

Mr. R. C. Reid has intimated his resignation from the Chairmanship of the Council for reasons of health. The Council have received this with regret and would take the opportunity of recording their high appreciation of his valuable services since his election to its membership in 1927. In his place they have elected as Chairman Dr. E. W. M. Balfour-Melville, who has been Honorary Secretary for the past twenty-five years. As he will combine for the present the chairmanship and the secretaryship, the Council have appointed Mr. Grant G. Simpson as Assistant Secretary.

Mr. R. L. Mackie has also resigned for reasons of health. The Council would record their appreciation of his services to the Society both as a member of Council since 1932 and as joint editor of Letters of James IV with biographical memoir of Professor Hannay.

Members of Council who retire in rotation at this time are Dr. H. W. Meikle, Dr. Annie I. Dunlop and Mr. H. M. Paton. The Council recommend the re-election of Dr. Dunlop and Mr. Paton and the election of Dr. C. T. McInnes and Dr. Gordon Donaldson in place of Dr. Meikle and Mr. Mackie.

During the past year 9 members have died and 2 have resigned. The names of 2 others have been removed on failure to pay their subscriptions. 16 new members have joined the Society. The membership, including 157 libraries, now stands at 415.

An Abstract of the Accounts for 1955-56, as audited, is appended.

Dr. Balfour-Melville, in moving the adoption of the Report and Accounts, referred to the resignations from the Council of Mr. R. L. Mackie, who had done much to enable a wider public to appreciate Scottish history, and of Mr. R. C. Reid, a tireless researcher in the field of local history. Rising costs continued to present a problem, but the recent generosity of Mrs. Dunlop and the continued assistance of the Carnegie Trust were helping to conserve the Society's financial resources. There had been a slight increase in membership during the year.

In seconding, Dr. C. A. Malcolm said that the work of the Society in the last 70 years compared very favourably with that done by its great predecessors, the publishing clubs of the nineteenth century, such as the Maitland and Bannatyne Clubs.

The Report and Accounts were adopted.

Dr. Balfour-Melville then moved the election of Dr. H. W. Meikle, C.B.E., D.Litt., LL.D., H.M. Historiographer in Scotland, as President of the Society for the ensuing four years. Professor J. D. Mackie seconded, and Dr. Meikle was unanimously elected.

The President then took the Chair and delivered an address on 'Voltaire and Scotland'.

'When we think of the Franco-Scottish Alliance', he said, 'it is its romantic aspects that most readily come to mind. But if it is ideas that move the world, we should not suffer the cultural relations between the two countries to be neglected.' Scottish eighteenth-century writers were extremely popular in France, and a recent bibliographical survey by Miss A. K. Bee had shown that French contemporary writers—Montesquieu, Voltaire and Rousseau—were much read in Scotland. Beginning in 1750, fifty editions of Voltaire were published in Scotland, nearly all translations. His vogue, later than in England, coincided with the literary revival in Scotland. Voltaire was honoured by being elected a member of the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh (afterwards the Royal Society) in June 1745. By the irony of fate, Voltaire was then engaged in helping his friend, the Marquis d'Argenson, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to prepare an expedition to aid Prince Charles Edward Stuart. Voltaire wrote a history of the '45 which was incorporated in his Précis of the Age of Louis XV. This account was of value as that of a 'close and acute observer with inside knowledge of the facts'. Dr. Meikle went on to comment on works of Voltaire displaying interest in Scotland—Le Café Écossais and his review of Kanes' Elements of Criticism. He also discussed the influence of Voltaire on historical writing and his admiration for Hume and Robertson. Of the many British visitors to Voltaire at Ferney, he cited the reports of Adam Smith and Dr. John Moore. An advertisement in French, inserted by W. Creech in the Caledonian Mercury for 20 February 1792, listed 36 French publications, including the works of Voltaire in 70 volumes. The war between Britain and France which began in 1793 ended the unique succession of French and Scottish authors whose works had been so popular in the eighteenth century in each other's country. Voltaire's philosophy made little or no appeal in Scotland.

'Instructive', 'agreeable' 'entertaining' are the epithets applied by Scottish critics to his history and tales, and it was these qualities which commended him to his contemporaries in Scotland.

A vote of thanks was accorded to the President on the motion of Sir Thomas Innes of Learney, K.C.V.O., Lord Lyon King of Arms.
