Issue—(1) Edward the Confessor.
(2) Alfred.
(3) ÆLFGIFU (or Elgiva), who married Uhtred Earl of Northumberland.
(4) Edmond.

Uhtred (or Uctred), Earl of Northumberland. Died 1016.
Married Ælfgifu (or Elgiva), daughter of Ethelred II. Received his father's Earldom from the King. Slain by Canute's orders.
Issue—EALDGYTH (or Alghatha), who married Maldred.

Maldred.
[Son of Crinan Abbot of Dunkeld, and brother to Duncan I. King of Scotland 1034-40 (see Skene).] His son Gospatrick became cousin (paternally) to the Scottish Kings and (maternally) to the English Kings (see Cockayne).
Issue—Cospatrik (or Gospatrick), who founded the present line of Dunbar (see head of centre column). For centuries before this the powerful race of Dunbar is frequently mentioned by Buchanan in his annals of Scottish history, but all family records were lost in the destructive wars which flooded the kingdom with blood over and over again.

Patrick (sixth Earl of Dunbar, in reality the seventh Earl). Died 1248.

Eldest son of the fifth Earl. Succeeded his father in 1231. Made grants of property to the monks of Dryburgh. Commanded the army sent in 1135 against the Scots. Acted as a guarantor in the treaty between Alexander II. and Henry II. at York, 1257. Joined the crusade of Louis IX. of France in Egypt, and died at the battle of Mansourah, 1250. Steward of Scotland and ancestor of the royal line of Stuart. With her he obtained the lands of Birkenyside in Lauderdale, first granted by Malcolm IV.

Issue—PATRICK, who succeeded him.

Patrick (seventh Earl of Dunbar, in reality the eighth Earl). Died 24th August, 1289.

Son of the sixth Earl. Succeeded his father at the age of thirty-five, having then a son aged five years. Rescued Alexander III. and his Queen from the hands of the English. Nominated in the Roxburgh treaty in September, 1255. Commanded left division of the Scottish army, defeating the Norwegians at Largs, 1263. and King Eric of Norway, 25th July, 1281. Buried in Dunbar Church. Married Christian, only daughter of Robert Bruce de VI., by whom he had three sons.

Issue—(1) PATRICK, who succeeded him.

(2) John.

(3) Sir Alexander.

Gave receipts for his fee 21st September and 26th November, 1288. Was a witness at Dunbar in November, 1318.

Patrick (eighth Earl of Dunbar, in reality the ninth Earl). Born 1242; died 10th October, 1308.

Eldest son of the seventh Earl. Succeeded his father in 1289, at the age of 47 years. Appeared in the Bingham parliament summoned in March, 1299 as 'Comes de Marchia'—the first instance of the Dunbars being so entitled. He was sometimes styled 'Comte de la Marche d'Ecosse' and 'Comte de la Marche de la Marche d'Ecosse'. He was one of the thirteen competitors for the crown, as great-grandson of Ada, daughter of William the Lion, but withdrew and appeared as a nominee of his English adherents to the English side. Married (circa 1282) Marjory Cumyn (or Corbyne), daughter of Alexander Earl of Buchan.

Issue—PATRICK, born 1284 (?), who succeeded his father.

Patrick (ninth Earl of Dunbar, in reality the tenth Earl). Born 1284 (?); died 1368.

Son of the eighth Earl. Succeeded his father at the age of 24. Adhered to the English interest. After the battle of Bannockburn, received the fugitive King Edward I. into his house. Contributed to the capture of Berwick from the English in March, 1318, while Sheriff of Lothian. Signed the letter to the Pope asserting the independence of Scotland. Besieged by Edward III. while Governor of Berwick Castle. His Countess, 'Black Agnes,' successfully defended the ancestral home of the Dunbars. His wife's brother, John third Earl of Moray, being killed at the battle of Neville's Cross, 1346, the Earl of Dunbar inherited his vast estates. He was Lord of the Isle of Man, the lordship of Annandale, the baronies of Morton and Tibbers in Nithsdale, of Mortlingtoun, Longformacus, and Dunse in Berwickshire, and of Clydesdale. He helped to secure the liberation of David II. and became a surety for him. David II. thereupon granted him the castles of all his other lands. He died in his favour in 1369. He married Lady Agnes Randolph, daughter of Thomas Randolph first Earl of Moray, regent of Scotland, sister and heiress of John Randolph.

Issue—(1) George, who succeeded his father.

(2) JOHN, who became Earl of Moray.

(3) Lady Margaret, who married William first Earl of Douglas.

(4) Lady Agnes, who married James Douglas, Lord of Dalkeith.

(5) Lady Elisabeth, who married John Maitland of Leithington, ancestor of the Earls of Lauderdale. When the second Earl of Lauderdale died, she was the only heiress of the house.

(6) Lady Mabella, who married William fifth Earl of Sunderland (?).

[* The accuracy of this is doubted by Sir R. Douglas.]

John Dunbar (first Earl of Moray, of the Dunbar line). Died 1394.

Second son of Patrick ninth Earl of Dunbar and March. Created Earl of Moray on the 9th March, 1371-72, obtaining from King Robert II. a charter which included Scotland in the treaty between England and France. He received one thousand livres (francs) in 1385 as his share of the money brought over from France. He acted as guarantor in a treaty with the English in 1390. In 1394 he was killed in a tourney with the Earl Marshal of England. Married 11th July, 1370, notwithstanding the fact that they were related within the fourth degree of consanguinity.

Issue—(1) THOMAS second Earl of Moray.

(2) Alexander Dunbar of Frendraught, who married Matilda (or Maud) Fraser, heiress of Frendraught, last of the Frasers of that ilk, whose daughter married James second Earl of Moray.

Issue—JAMES DUNBAR, fourth Earl of Moray, who succeeded his uncle, Thomas third Earl of Moray.

(3) ——— Daughter [name at present untraced].

(4) ——— Daughter [name at present untraced].

Thomas Dunbar (second Earl of Moray).

Eldest son of John Dunbar, first Earl of Moray. Married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Seton and Elizabeth, heiress of Gordon.

Issue—THOMAS third Earl of Moray, who died unmarried in 1425 (?).

Thomas Dunbar (third Earl of Moray). Died 1425 (?).

Eldest son of Thomas Dunbar, second Earl of Moray. Died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew James fourth Earl of Moray.

James Dunbar (fourth Earl of Moray). Died 10th August, 1429.

Son of Alexander Dunbar of Frendraught. Succeeded to the Earldom in 1429 upon the death of his cousin Thomas third Earl of Moray, who died without issue. His annual income was reckoned at five hundred marks. He was murdered at Frendraught 10th August, 1429 [see Aberdeen Records]. Married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Gordon, Earl of Huntly, by whom he had two daughters.

Issue (by first marriage)—ALEXANDER DUNBAR, the rightful heir to the title and estates, his succession being prevented by more powerful interests.

Issue (by second marriage)—LADY JANET, married James second Lord Crichton, only son and heir of Sir Crichton, Chancellor of Scotland.

LADY ELISABETH, married Archibald, third son of James seventh Earl of Douglas. The latter, by the then prevailing law, was the rightful heir and also of Lady Janet, the precedent daughter, but the estates were not held long by the latter.

by the Crown in 1455.

Alexander Dunbar, Baronet (of Westfield and Mochrum). Born 1429 (?); died 10th March, 1497-98.

Only son of James Dunbar, fourth Earl of Moray. Although unjustly deprived of the Earldom and estates of Moray, that act was partly compensated for by the fact that he was created Baronet of Westfield and Mochrum, which gave the family of Dunbar for ever a seat in the House of Lords. He was Sheriff of the County of Moray, and her beloved brother, anno 1455, thus proving his claim to the title. In another document he is referred to as 'Sheriff of the County (Moray) and her beloved brother, anno 1455,' thus proving his claim to the title. By nine other charters he had conferred to him the lands and estates of Conzie, Barlow, a portion of Fochabers, and others, from Kings James II. and III. By marriage he obtained the lands of Cluny and Clova, formerly the property of the Dunbars, and others, from the Dunbar branches of Scotland are descended. He was married to Elizabeth (or Isabel), daughter of Alexander Sutherland, Baron of Duffus, from which union all the Dunbar branches of Scotland are descended. He was married to Elizabeth (or Isabel), daughter of Alexander Sutherland, Baron of Duffus, from which union all the Dunbar branches of Scotland are descended.

Issue—(1) Sir James, knighted by James IV., who appointed him Sheriff of Elgin in 1498. Married before 1474 Euphemia, daughter of Patrick Dunbar of Mochrum. Died 1503.

(2) John, married before 1474 Margaret, daughter of Sir Patrick Dunbar of Mochrum. Died 1503.

(3) Sir Alexander, obtained from his father the Barony of Conzie and Kiltubiach. Killed in a quarrel over a debt by Alexander Sutherland in 1503.

(4) Gavin, appointed Dean of Moray 1487, Bishop of Aberdeen 1518-32, wrote 'De Ecclesia Aberdeenensi,' completed Bishop Elphinstone's chapel and a hospital. Gave to Aberdeen Cathedral, among many other pieces of church plate, a chalice of pure gold, engraved with the arms of the See. Was one of the Scottish priests who resisted the decree of Rheims forbidding marriage. Died 1531-32.

Issue—ALEXANDER.

(5) SIR DAVID, obtained the estate of Durris from his father and succeeded him there.

(6) Patrick, appointed Chancellor of Aberdeen diocese, Rector of Kilmure, ancestor of the Dunbars of Bennagefield. Like his brother Gavin, he was a distinguished scholar.

(7) Isabel (or Janet), married Sir William Keith of Innerrugie.

David Dunbar, Baronet (of Durris). Died 23rd February, 1521-22.

Fifth son of Sir Alexander Dunbar of Westfield. Obtained Durris in patrimony in 1495, founding the line of Dunbars of Durris and Grangehill. Upon the death of his father he was created Baronet of Durris, Drummin, and other lands.

Issue—ALEXANDER, who succeeded him.

NOTES.

'No name in Scotland can boast of a more noble origin than that of Dunbar, being sprung from the kings,' says Sir Robert Douglas. This famous antiquary might have taken a wider area, for it would be hard to find another name which is apart from royalty. Its etymology is significant, whether in Gaelic or English. It means 'strength on the height,' and the name, like the family fastness, was a veritable tower of strength for centuries a kingdom and throughout a long period when men's lives and property largely depended upon their own strength and valour. In the pages of our British annals no family is more truly renowned for martial prowess. For hundreds of years Dunbar Castle (first mentioned A.D. 835), a sea-girt fortress crowning a precipice in Haddingburgh, was an impregnable stronghold. After the ever-memorable battle of Bannockburn, Edward II. saved his life by a headlong flight thither, while Mary Queen of Scots found it a convenient retreat more than once. The name of Dunbar men over and over again whose names illumine thrilling chapters of Scottish and English history. A large portion of Scotland's romantic and tragic story is to be found in the biography of the Dunbars. For nearly a thousand years, through an unbroken chain of twenty-nine generations, one may follow the name of Dunbar to the English throne itself. At a later period, towards the close of the

... of Home. Margr. Brady, h. woman of County, by whom she had no issue. Married (secondly) her cousin William (son of Patrick, the second son of Caspatrik) at the surname of Home, progenitor of the House of Home.

at the age of 47 years. Appeared in the Bishops parliament summoned in March, 1290, to betroth Margaret of Scotland to the son of Edward I., and is recorded in the Chronicles of 1290. He was sometimes styled 'Cite de la Marche d'Escosse' and 'Comte de Lancaux' (see Cockayne). After the demise of Margaret, he was guardian of the young King William the Lion, but withdrew and appeared as a nominee of his grandfather, Robert Bruce de VI. In the struggle between the Scots and Marjory Cumyn (or Comyn), daughter of Alexander Earl of Buchan.

284 (?) died 1268. Adhered to the English interest. After the battle of Bannockburn, received the fugitive Edward II. at Dunbar Castle, and safely contrived his escape by sea to Edinburgh in March, 1318, while Sheriff of Lothian. Signed the letter to the Pope asserting the independence of Scotland in 1320. Commanded one of the armies under the Castle. His Countess 'Black Agnes' successfully defended the ancestral home of Dunbar Castle against a siege lasting nineteen weeks by the English under the command of the Nevilles & Grahams. The Earl of Dunbar inherited his vast estates and assumed the additional title of Earl of Moray. He also obtained Marston and Tibbers in Nithsdale, of Mertonington, Longformacus, and Dunse in Berwickshire, Mochrum in Galloway, Cumnecan in Ayrshire, and Blantyre in and became a surety for him. David II. then upon granted him the castles of all his lands, an annuity of £40, and converted Dunbar town into a free burgh in the reign of Thomas Randolph first Earl of Moray, sign of Scotland, sister and heiress of John Earl of Moray.

the rightful heir to the title and estates, his success being prevented by more powerful interests. James second Lord of Douglas, 1429, son and heir of the 1st. The latter, by the then prevailing interests of his family, claimed and obtained the Earldom of Moray in prejudice to her and also of Lady Jean, the prebent daughter, but the estates were not held long by the Douglas clan. Owing to their rebellion the earldom was forfeited, and annexed to the crown in 1455.

1429 (?) died 16th March, 1497-98.

1st son of James I. deprived of the Earldom and estates of Moray, that act was partly compensated for by King James II. In 1450, Sir Alexander obtained from his brother-in-law the barony of Westfield (together with other lands), which gave the family of Dunbar for many years its chief title. In that charter he is designated 'brother of the Sheriff of the County (Moray) and her beloved brother, anno 1455, thus proving his claim beyond doubt. From the King he obtained a large estate, was knighted, & made a baron. By nine other charters he had confirmed to him the lands and estates of Comrie, Colford, Durris, Bainsburgh, Magness, Tarras, Clavock, Carnoustie, Clonkie, & Duffus, from which union all the Dunbar branches of Scotland are descended. He was succeeded by his fifth son. Married by contract dated 3rd January, 1453, appointed him Sheriff of Elgin in 1498. Married before 1474 Euphemia, daughter of Patrick Dunbar of Galloway. Died 1505.

NOTES.

'No name in Scotland can boast of a more noble origin than that of Dunbar, being sprung from the kings,' says Sir Robert Douglas. This famous antiquary might have taken a wider area, for it would be hard to find another name to match it apart from royalty. Its etymology is significant, whether in Gaelic or English. It means 'strength on the summit,' or the 'fort on the height,' and the name, like the family fastness, was a veritable tower of strength for centuries in a kingdom and throughout a long period when men's lives and property largely depended upon their own personal strength and valour. In the pages of our British annals no family is more truly renowned for martial prowess. For hundreds of years Dunbar Castle (first mentioned A.D. 835), a sea-girt fortress crowning a precipice in Haddingtonshire, was an impregnable stronghold. After the ever-memorable battle of Bannockburn, Edward II. saved his life by a sixty miles headlong flight thither, while Mary Queen of Scots found it a convenient retreat more than once. The race of Dunbar produced men over and over again whose names illumine thrilling chapters of Scottish and English history. No inconsiderable portion of Scotland's romantic and tragic story is to be found in the biography of the Dunbar family. For nearly a thousand years, through an unbroken chain of twenty-nine generations, one may follow the blue blood of the Dunbars to the English throne itself. At a later period, towards the close of the middle ages, the family was intimately connected by marriage with the Scottish throne more than once, and may therefore claim royal descent from the sovereigns of two kingdoms. As G. E. Cockayne remarks, 'From the year 1115 until the rise of the house of Douglas under Bruce (three centuries later), the heads of this princely house (Dunbar) held the foremost rank in Scotland. After that era their vacillating policy (perhaps partly owing to their English possessions, which compelled them to do homage to the king of that hostile dominion) hastened their downfall.' Despoiled of the family title as Earls of Moray by the house of Douglas, and deprived of their estates by the Scottish king, small wonder that their star, so long resplendent, began to wane. For more centuries than existing records seem to cover, representatives of this house appear to have upheld proud Scotland's honour in peace and war, in church, senate, and on the battlefield.

As may be seen from a bare recital of the names, titles, honours, and family connections, the Dunbars furnish enough nobility to fill a 'peerage and baronetage' of their own. In addition to kings, queens, princes and princesses of England and Scotland, the family pedigree includes the noble families of Banff, Bargany, Beaumont, Blasonberrie, Buchan, Crawford, Crichton, Dalkeith, Douglas, Duffus, Dundas, Dunglas, Erskine, Fife, Findlater, Greenlaw, Home, Hume, Huntingdon, Huntly, Lauderdale, Lovat, Mar, March, Marchmont, Melrose, Melville, Menteith, Moray, Northumberland, Polwarth, Redbraies, Ross, Seton, Sunderland, Torphichen, Ulster, Zetland, and others.

It will be conceded that the claims of the Dunbar pedigree to a permanent and handy form of record are indeed strong. So before 'hungry time makes a glutton's meal' of the more fragile links of evidence, as quaint old Fuller says, I venture to submit this little roll, bearing their remarkable genealogy, together with some of their more striking achievements, trusting it may help to preserve the ancient lustre of an illustrious race.
