MISS EVELINE GUTHRIE DUNN.

Preface.

Appreciating to the full the kindness of all who have assisted us in collecting these records, we wish especially to tender our thanks to Mrs. M. Harriet Griffin and Mrs. H. M. Martin, of Chicago, also Miss Harriette Mary Tugby, of Frampton, Cotterell, England, for much valuable aid. Other data of the Guthrie family we have reluctantly been obliged to forego the pleasure of incorporating in this publication by reason of indefinite connections. We trust at no far distant date to issue a second edition, also to publish a historical record of the Dunn family, and shall be pleased to receive communications from any who may be interested.

The Guthrie Family.

The name of Guthrie is an ancient and honorable one, the name of a family of great antiquity in Scotland like the most ancient is of local origin, being assumed by the Chief when such designations were adopted from his lands in Forfarshire.

In the year 1299, after the great Sir William Wallace had resigned the guardianship of Scotland and retired to France, the Northern Lords of that Kingdom sent Squire Guthrie to desire his return, that he might assist in opposing the English. Guthrie embarked at Aberbrothock, landed at Sluis from whence they conveyed Wallace and his retinue back to Montrose.—Life of Sir William Wallace.

Crawfurd in his lives of the officers of State says, "That the Guthries held the Barony of Guthrie by Charter from King David the II.; but that they were men of rank and property long before the reign of James II., is manifest by the fact that Master Alexander of Guthrie, is a witness, in a charter granted by Alexander Seaton, Lord of Gorden, to William Lord Keith, afterward Earl Marshall, dated Aug. 1, 1442. and that he obtained the lands of Kilkandrum in the Barony of Lower Leslie, and Sherifffdom of Forfar, to himself and Marjory Guthrie, his spouse, by charter from George, Lord Leslie, of Leven, the Superior, dated April 10, 1457. By the above-mentioned Marjory, he had three sons, David, James, and William, of whom the eldest, Sir David Guthrie, Baron of Guthrie, was Sheriff of Forfar in 1457. He held the situation of Armour Bearer to King James III., and was constituted Lord Treasurer of Scotland in 1461; in which post he continued until 1467, when he was appointed Comptroller of the Exchequer."

In 1469 he was made Lord Register of Scotland; and in 1472, we find him one of the ambassadors on the part of Scotland, who met those of England on April 25, in that year, at New Castle, and concluded a truce until the month of July, 1473. In 1473 he was constituted Lord Chief Justice of Scotland.—From Burke's History of the Landed Gentry.

Guthrie Castle is still entire; an enshrined bell is preserved within the castle.

Anderson, in his "History of Scotland in Early Christian Times," describes the bell as follows:

"The other example of an enshrined bell is that preserved in Guthrie Castle in Forfarshire; the Church of Guthrie having been a dependency of the Cathedral of Brechin.

"The bell is of hammered iron, measures $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches high including the handle, and $5\frac{1}{2}\times 4\frac{1}{2}$ inches across the mouth. The decorations of the shrine or case which is of bronze or brass, consists of silver work, and niello with traces of gilding, and the remains of settings of precious stones; it possesses none of the zoomorphic features which distinguish earlier work.

"In the centre of the front of the shrine is a representation of the crucifixion in the style of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

"Above the crucified figure is a representation of God the Father in the manner in which He was usually represented as King in the fourteenth century, viz:—Crowned and bearded and half length. On each side is the figure of a bishop robed and mitred.

"One figure on the side of the shrine is in a much ruder style of art than the others, and may have belonged to an earlier covering than that which now encloses the bell. At the bottom of the case is an inscription in lettering, apparently of the fourteenth century:"

"Johannes Alexandri Me Fieri Fecit."

The Rev. Thomas Guthrie in his autobiography says: "The name of Guthrie is an ancient one; the name of a very old family in Forfarshire." Greater honor still in these words:

"Famous Guthrie's Head."

It stands on the Martyr's Monument in the Greyfriars Church-yard of Edinburgh, being, with the exception of GREYFRIARS' CHURCH, EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND.

Argyle's, and Renwick's, the only name of the eighteen thousand who perished in the days of the Covenant that has the honor of standing on that famous and sacred stone.

Chambers' describes Greyfriars Church-yard, Edinburgh, in the following manner:

"This old cemetery,—the burial-place of Buchanan, George Jameson, the painter, Dr. Blair, and many other men of note,—whose walls are a circle of aristocratic sepulchers, will ever be memorable as the scene of the Signing of the Covenant; the document having first been produced in the church, after a sermon by Alexander Henderson, and signed by all the congregation from the Earl of Sutherland downward, after which it was handed out to the multitudes assembled in the kirk-yard, and signed on the flat monuments amidst tears, prayers, and aspirations, which could find no words; some writing with their blood. Near by, resting well from all these struggles, lies the preacher under a square obelisk-like monument; near also rest in equal peace, the Covenant's enemy, Sir George Mackenzie.

"The inscriptions on Henderson's stone was ordered by Parliament, to be erased at the restoration, and small depressions are pointed out in it, as having been inflicted by bullets from the soldiery when executing this order. With the 88 came a new order of things, and the inscriptions were then quietly reinstated."

James Guthrie was described by Oliver Cromwell as "The short man that would not bow."

Chambers in his "History of Eminent Scotsmen," says: "James Guthrie, the Martyr, one of the most zealous of the protesters as they were called during the religious troubles of the seventeenth century, was the son of the Laird of Guthrie. He became teacher of philosophy, and was much esteemed, as well for the equanimity of his temper as for his erudition.

"He was minister at Stirling and executed on account of his writings in Edinburgh June 1, 1661."

On account of the religious persecutions under which the family suffered, James, John and Robert Guthrie decided to leave Edinburgh and seek security and repose in the New World.

They first settled in Boston. The earliest record of James Guthrie we find from Suff. Pro. VI. 416, in the will of John Richardson, dated May 7, 1683, in which he says, "I give and bequeath unto James Guthrie all I have in the world except twenty shillings to buy John Harris a ring and ten shillings to buy John Kyte a ring."

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH,
Stratford, Conn.

All, all our anguish hath its period fixed,
 Ere hence we go; not any joy but mixed.
 Rear grace which makes the life of man the best,
 This young man lived to God, and now is blest.
 Come parallel this saint; now far exceed,
 Omit no means that may true goodness breed.
 Our trials come, bestowed for days of need?
 The Lord his widow bless and take his seed."

— From Hawley Genealogy.

Joseph Guthrie, son of James (6), was born in 1760. He removed with his parents to Lenox, Mass., in 1770, where he enlisted as drummer-boy in the War of the American Revolution at the age of sixteen years, and served seven years.

He married Phœbe Abbott, Nov. 10, 1784. They removed to Sherburne, N. Y., in 1792, where he became an active and public-spirited citizen. At the first election, he was elected Justice of the Peace, which office he held for twenty-eight years, and though a man firm in his idea of right and justice, he was of a gentle disposition; his grand-children not remembering a harsh rebuke or severe command. He was Lieutenant of Militia, organized April 11, 1796; also Captain of the One Hundred and Fifth Regiment in 1803. He was one of the organizers of the First Baptist church, of Sherburne, and a member; but in after years he was known as a Restorationist. He was ever ready to respond to appeals for aid; and the destitute strangers were always directed to Squire Guthrie. In his declining years when feeble and susceptible to the cold, he would not have a fire built in the fire-place of his room until late in the fall, when he was sure the last swallow had flown from the chimney for the season. He died in Sherburne, Jan. 20, 1845.

Inscription on his tombstone:

“ I came in the morning, it was spring, and I smiled,
I walked out at noon, it was summer, and I was glad,
I sat me down at even, it was autumn, and I was sad;
I laid me down at night, it was winter, and I slept,”

OLD HOMESTEAD—SACKET'S HARBOR, N. Y.

Residence of Dr. Samuel Guthrie at the time of the discovery of chloroform. The old homestead is in an excellent state of preservation. At the right of the house there still stands a large red cedar gate post, which guarded the passageway to the laboratory. The laboratory stood on the bank of a brook about five hundred feet in the rear, and which was built almost in the shadow of a pine forest (see map of Sacket's Harbor, next page), has long since gone to decay: but around the old site are scattered powdered charcoal and fragments of glass from broken retorts, to mark the spot where that historic structure stood.

Prof. Silliman, in mentioning the work of Dr. Guthrie, in the American Journal of Science and Arts, said: "I presume it was little suspected that such great things were doing in a remote region on the shore of Lake Ontario."

cine with his father, and shortly after attaining to the dignity of M. D., removed to Sherburne, Chenango Co., N. Y., where he began the practice of his profession."

He married Sybil Sexton in Smyrna in 1804. He was one of the original members of the Second Calvinistic Congregational Society of Sherburne. This society was organized at the home of his grand-father, James Guthrie, Tuesday, the 25th of November, 1800.

FROM MEMOIRS OF DR. SAMUEL GUTHRIE, BY OSSIAN GUTHRIE.

"The years of Jenner's struggle, from the conception to the successful demonstration of the great principle of inoculation, 1790 to 1803, were contemporaneous with the student years of our embryo doctor. Inspired with confidence in Jenner's discovery, he carried it with him to his first professional home. Dr. Waterhouse, of Cambridge, Mass., who in 1803, had introduced it into this country, had no more enthusiastic or daring disciple than he. His first subject was Sarah Guthrie, his cousin.

"A fortuitous case of small-pox afforded the doctor the coveted opportunity, in which his zeal was eclipsed by the fortitude of his subject. Sarah Guthrie volunteered to act as nurse and both she and the doctor passed successfully and triumphantly through the ordeal; and thenceforth his advance to distinction was rapid.

"During the winter of 1810-11 Dr. Guthrie attended a course of medical lectures in New York, and again at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

"His diary, kept (31 days), shows 275 closely written or illustrated pages; some of the pages, where no illustrations occur, contain about 200 words.

"He found time even then, to criticise or commend his professor according to the impressions made upon his mind by the lecture.

"During the war of 1812, Dr. Guthrie was examining surgeon in the army.

"In the year 1817 he removed with his family to Sacket's Harbor, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where, after the war, he had established a vinegar manufactory for supplying Madison Barracks, a military post established in 1812; here he also

“He manufactured the first practicable percussion powder ever made, and at Madison Barracks, near by, fired the first cannon ever fired by that agency, with powder of his own manufacture.

“He was widely known, his priming powder being almost universally used throughout the United States and Canada, the manufacture of which began in 1826. It was put in tin canisters of one ounce, and labelled, ‘Water-Proof, Percussion Priming, S. Guthrie, Sacket’s Harbor. Agents, Van Buren, Wardell & Co., N. Y.’

“He removed to Jewettsville, a hamlet about a mile from Sacket’s Harbor, and where as the Encyclopædia Britannica expresses it, ‘Samuel Guthrie, of America, produced chloroform.’

“Dr. Guthrie devoted his time largely during the years 1830 and 1831 to experimenting in his laboratory, the results of which were quite fully given in Vols. xxi. and xxii. American Journal of Science and Arts. As a contributor to this journal, judging from the frequent and complimentary notices by the editor, Prof. Silliman, he was among those most highly esteemed. About one-eighth of Vol. xxi. was devoted to his work.

“Under the head of ‘Chemical Products formed by Mr. Guthrie,’ the editor says, p. 92, v. XXI:

“‘I add a notice of the following facts, communicated by Mr. Guthrie in his letters, not for publication, but which I conceive are honorable to the rising chemical arts of this country. I presume it was little suspected that such things were doing in a remote region on the shore of Lake Ontario.’

“‘Mr. Guthrie’s method of preparing it (chloric ether) is ingenious, economical and original.’ Ibid., p. 69.

“‘The above notices (Pure Oil of Turpentine and the manufacture of Chlorate of Potassa), as matters of fact, will probably be interesting to the chemical public of this country.’ Ibid., p. 93.

“‘Mr. Guthrie’s preparations have all arrived, and although I reserve the trial of most of them, to my winter course of experiments, I am impressed with admiration both at his skill and intrepidity.' Ibid., p. 295.

“Referring to the important communication of Mr. Guthrie, upon chloric ether (p. 64 of this vol), I proceed to quote, etc. I am not aware, however, that this trial had been anywhere made, and probably the subject would have slumbered, had it not been for the very ingenious, and as far as I know, original process of Mr. Guthrie, etc.’

“Dr. Guthrie’s liberality having placed it in my power, I have recently distributed several bottles among medical friends, and the report as far as it has been received, is highly satisfactory.’ Ibid., p. 405.

“An interesting fact in this connection, is, that Prof. O. P. Hubbard, Professor of Chemistry at Dartmouth from 1836 to 1883, was Prof. Silliman’s assistant at Yale in 1831, and received and opened the packages containing the chemical products above referred to. Prof. Hubbard, now after a lapse of fifty-six years, furnishes the writer a small quantity each of the ‘chlorate of potassa,’ ‘potato molasses’ and ‘gunpowder,’ mentioned on pages 92 and 93 (Silliman’s Journal), the labels on the original packages, having been written and placed upon them by him in 1831.”

DISCOVERY OF CHLOROFORM.

“The honor of priority of discovery of chloroform has become a matter of National interest, and has been variously awarded to ‘Guthrie, in America,’ ‘Soubeiran, in France,’ and ‘Liebig, the celebrated German chemist,’ (see Encyclopædia Britannica), and generally according to the nativity of the writer, until, with the writers of disinterested nationality, in their order of crediting the discovery, the possibilities of permutation have been nearly or quite exhausted.

“In this instance, a double motive may lead the writer to search thoroughly for facts to establish priority in America; an effort will be made, however, to place before the reader a history of the discovery of chloroform.”

GUTHRIE'S CLAIM.

“Art. VI, page 64, Vol. xxi., American Journal of Science and Arts—‘New mode of preparing a spirituous solution of chloric ether, by Samuel Guthrie, of Sacket’s Harbor, N. Y.’

“MR. EDITOR:—As the usual process for obtaining chloric ether for solution in alcohol is both troublesome and expensive and from its lively and invigorating effect may become an article of some value in the Materia Medica, I have thought a portion of your readers might be gratified with the communication of a cheap and easy process for preparing it. I have therefore given one below, combining these advantages with unerring certainty in the result.

“‘Into a clean copper still, put three pounds of chloride of lime and two gallons of well-flavored alcohol of sp. gr. .844 and distil.

“‘Watch the process and when the product ceases to come highly sweet and aromatic, remove and cork it up closely in glass vessels. The remainder of the spirit should be distilled off for a new operation.

“‘These proportions are not essential; if more chloride of lime be used, the ethereal product will be increased, nor is it necessary that the proof of the spirit should be very high. but I have commonly used the above proportions and proof and have every reason to be satisfied with them.

“‘From the above quantity I have usually obtained about one gallon of ethereal spirit. (See Note A.)

“‘Note A. The affinity of chlorine to lime is so weak, and to alcohol so strong, that the chlorine is all taken up, long before the distillation is over; hence, the absolute necessity of watching the process, so as to know when to set aside the ethereal portion.

“‘By re-distilling the product from a great excess of chloride of lime, in a glass retort in a water bath, a greatly concentrated solution will be obtained. This new product is caustic and intensely sweet and aromatic.

“‘By distilling solution of chloric ether from carbonate of potash, the product is concentrated and refined. By distilling it from caustic potash, the ether is decomposed, and muriate of potash is thrown down, while the distilled product consists of alcohol.' ”

Samuel Guthrie.

Unfortunately Art. VI. is without date, but is preceded by Art. V. bearing date July, 1831, and followed by another dated July 2, 1831. (See page 69 same vol). Hence, may we not reasonably assume the date to be about July 1st? Let it be also understood that Vol. xxi. contains two parts, numbers one and two. Number one containing eighteen articles and sixty pages of miscellanies—200 pages in all. Page 200 bearing date October 2nd.

Dr. Guthrie says, Page 65: “During the last six months a great number of persons have drunk of the solution of chloric ether in my laboratory, not only very freely, but frequently to the point of intoxication; and so far as I have observed, it has appeared to be singularly grateful, both to the palate and stomach, producing promptly a lively flow of animal spirit and consequent loquacity, and leaving after its operation, little of that depression consequent to the use of ardent spirits.

“This free use of the article has been permitted, in order to ascertain the effect of it in full doses on the healthy subject; and thus to discover as far as such trials would do, its probable value as a medicine.

“From the invariably agreeable effect of it on persons in health, and the deliciousness of its flavor, it would seem to promise much as a safe, quick, energetic and palatable stimulus.”

Thus, if our assumption of date be admissible, we get back close to the year 1830 as the date of Dr. Guthrie's discovery of chloroform.

In Art. VI. No. 2, Page 295, same Vol., under date of September 12, 1831, Dr. Guthrie says: “A bottle and phial contain alcoholic solution of chloric ether. The contents of the phial are as strong as I could conveniently prepare them, but not equal to some which I made not long ago.” This shows conclusively, that Prof. Silliman was familiar with chloric ether prior to September 12, 1831, and in a measure, vindicates our assumption of July 1st as the date of Art. VI., Page 64. Again, Prof. Silliman on Page 407 says: "Having been requested by some of our physicians to obtain a supply for regular use, I have written to Mr. Guthrie and received from him an answer, dated Sacket's Harbor, December 24, 1831, from which the following is an extract: 'I have been confined by sickness most of the time since the 7th of October, but am now recovering rapidly, and hope within a very few days to be able to go into my laboratory, when I shall prepare and forward to the care of Van Buren, Wardell & Co., New York, the chloric ether you advised me to send, and they will immediately forward it to the gentlemen you designated. The price of chloric ether, you must be aware, will form no objection to its general use as a medicine.'" Note by the Ed.: "Mr. Guthrie even names a price at which it may probably be afforded, and although it might be premature to mention it now, I may remark it is very low." It is clear that the distribution, to this time, had been gratuitous.

Journal of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, Vol. iv., Page 116, 1832:

"A third species of chloric ether is formed by distilling alcohol from chloride of lime. It resembles the first species, but has been analyzed by its discoverer, Soubeiran, who has ascertained it to be a compound of two proportions of chlorine, two of hydrogen, and one of carbon; or two atoms of chlorine and one of bi-hydroguret of carbon.

"A self-taught American chemist on the shores of Lake Erie, has the credit of first isolating this very curious and interesting species of ether.

"Soubeiran obtained, etc.

"While Soubeiran was making these researches in Europe, the subject was engaging the attention, in a ruder manner to be sure, of Guthrie, in this country,"

CHLOROFORM, DISCOVERY AND HISTORY.

Chloroform was discovered by Samuel Guthrie, of Sacket's Harbor, N. Y., in 1831, and about the same time by Soubeiran, in France, and Liebig, in Germany.

Guthrie obtained it, etc., elsewhere quoted.

In a subsequent letter to Prof. Silliman, dated Feb. 15, 1832, Mr. Guthrie states that the substance which he had obtained, "distilled off sulphuric acid, has a specific gravity of 1.486. or a little greater, and may then be regarded as free from alcohol; and if a little sulphuric acid, which sometimes contaminates it, be removed by washing it with a strong solution of carbonate of potassa, it may then be regarded as ABSOLUTELY PURE.

"It is thus evident that Mr. Guthrie obtained, in a pure state, the substance now called chloroform."

In relation to the priority of discovery of chloroform, it is important to note, that Dr. Guthrie's process of obtaining it, was in the publishers hands, and the substance itself in the hands of Prof. Silliman for distribution among the medical profession before Sept. 12, 1831 (probably as early as July 1st), and as early as Feb. 15, 1832, a month earlier than Liebig's publication, he had obtained it in a pure state (see U. S. Dispensatory above-quoted), which neither Soubeiran nor Liebig had then done. Not only this, but Dr. Guthrie's process was repeated and verified by Prof. Silliman, at Yale, before the close of the year 1831, while Soubeiran's publication in the Journal de Pharmacie appeared in January, 1832, and that in the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, the one upon which his claim to priority over Liebig is based, did not reach the public until February.

See Liebig's "History of the Discovery of Chloroform."

In relation to its introduction as a medicine, the Drs. Ives and others, through his instrumentality, had been enabled to experiment during the last half of the year 1831, and in the language of Dr. Bourbaugh, elsewhere quoted, "they rested under the shade of the tree, but neglected to pluck its fruit."

"So near and yet so far!" Dr. Eli Ives, in 1831, in a case of pulmonic disease, administered chloroform by inhalation, and the writer, in his childhood, had free access to Dr. Guthrie's laboratory, where he was frequently attracted by the agreeable and never to be forgotten odor of chloroform.

SOUBEIRAN'S CLAIM.

Soubeiran's claim to priority of discovery of chloroform is based upon the publication in Vol. 48, p. 113 (Annales de Chimie et de Physique), October, 1831, translated by Prof. Griscom, and published in Vol. xxiii, first series American Journal of Science and Arts.

Art. XXI. "Action of Chloride of Lime on Alcohol by M. E. Soubeiran." "When chlorine is passed through alcohol, the products are hydro-chloric acid, a little carbonic acid, a small quantity rich in carbon, and a peculiar ethereal fluid, constituted agreeably to Despretz, of one atom of chlorine, two atoms of percarburetted hydrogen.

"In the supposition that the compounds called chlorures d'oxides are combinations of chlorine with oxygenated bases, the same products ought to be obtained by bringing them into contact with alcohol, the acids being saturated as fast as they are formed.

"To be certain of this, I mixed a solution of chloride of lime, very concentrated, with alcohol; the mixture grew warm and an odor of chlorine was manifest; in raising it to ebullition, an abundant white precipitate was formed and a liquid passed over, of a very sweet odor and a sugary taste." Omitting that part of the article not essential to this investigation, we will proceed to quote: "The bi-chloric ether is an ethereal liquid, very limpid and colorless, with a penetrating and very sweet odor. When breathed, the vapors which penetrate to the palate develop a taste decidedly saccharine. It may almost be said to have a saccharine odor." On account of the revolution then prevailing, the publication of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique was delayed until January or February, 1832, one article therein contained, bearing date January, 1832.

In the Journal of Pharmacie, of which Soubeiran was one of the editors (Vol. xvi. pp. 657, 672, No. xii., December, 1831), appears an article entitled, "Some Combinations of Chlorine, by M. E. Soubeiran." No mention is made of the action of chlorine on alcohol, but the article is "to be continued." In the January number, 1832, the article is continued, and the action of chloride of lime on alcohol is treated, and the results given as in the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, already quoted. Thus we show Soubeiran's claim, in his own language, in two different publications, of one of which he was one of the editors, that chloroform was the last of a number of products from chlorine combinations, and was not made public before January, 1832.

The following—for the translation the writer is indebted to W. R. Orndorff, of Johns Hopkins University, of Baltimore—is given without comment, except to call attention to the fact that the article in the Journal de Pharmacie, to which reference is made, was to be continued, and was continued in the next number, and the action of chlorine on alcohol treated, as before stated by the writer.

CONCERNING THE DISCOVERY OF CHLOROFORM.

It is perhaps useful to note the fact, that the Paris Annales de Chimie et de Physique, in consequence of the political condition in the years 1870–1871, appears very late; so that the double number, September and October, 1871, of this journal first reached us in Munich in the middle of February, 1872.

It is easy to see that, of two works on the same subject by a French and a German chemist, which were printed at the same time, the one in the Paris journal, the other in this Annalen, the first, e. g., in the November number, 1871, of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, the other in the March number, 1872, of this Annalen—it is easy to see, how, under these circumstances, the author of a hand-book would ascribe a priority of three months to the work of the French chemist.

The history of the discovery of chloroform affords an example of the influence of such a shifting of the dates of publication.

In the description of chloroform L. Gmelin says (Handbook 1848, 4, 275): "Described by Soubeiran in 1831 as 'ether bichlorique,' by Liebig in 1832 as 'chlorkohlenstoff' (carbon chloride)." In fact the work of Soubeiran, on "ether bichlorique," did appear in the October number of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, 1831, while mine on chloral was published in the February number of this Annalen 1832 (Annalen 1, 182), and it hence appears to be a fact beyond dispute, that Soubeiran's work was completed four months before mine.

But in the year 1831, in consequence of the July revolution a political condition resembling that of the years 1870-1871 had arisen in France, and which, in relation to the publication of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique, acted in precisely the same way. In the postscript to my work on chloral, in the February number, 1832, of the Annalen der Physik, published by Poggendorff, I said: "When I was about to send the above work to Prof. Poggendorff, I received the October number, 1831, of the Annales de Chimie et de Physique. This contains two articles, one by Soubeiran, the other by Dumas, which are very closely connected with my work.— But in relation to the body, which I have described as a new chloride of carbon, one finds in its method of preparation with bleaching powder a great resemblance to the method, which Soubeiran has given for his 'ether bichlorique.' But Dumas has convinced me that I communicated to him the discovery of this body six weeks before Soubeiran made known his work."

The correct date of this discovery may be easily confirmed by the fact that Soubeiran's work on the salts of chlorous acid was published in the Journal de Pharmacie, of which Soubeiran was the co-editor.

In the "Journal de Pharmacie," the article of Soubeiran is NOT published in the OCTOBER NUMBER, 1831, as in the "Annales de Chimie et de Physique," but in the JANUARY NUMBER, 1832, and it may be proved from the proceedings of the Pharmaceutical Society that Soubeiran, in November, 1831, still had no knowledge of the "ether bichlorique." In the proceedings of the meeting of the Pharmaceutical Society of November 9, 1831, it is mentioned that Soubeiran communicated some detailed statements on the lower compounds of chlorine and oxygen (published in detail in the December number of the "Journal de Pharmacie, 1831), but of the discovery of "ether bichlorique," no mention is made in this communication. In Soubeiran's presence, Serullas remarked in the same meeting, that he (Serullas) had again confirmed the formation of acetic acid from alcohol by the action of chlorine, without Soubeiran contradicting him. But Soubeiran begins his article upon "ether bichlorique" in the "Journal de Pharmacie" (January, 1832), with the DESCRIPTION OF THE ACTION OF CHLORINE UPON ALCOHOL. He says, "that hydrochloric acid, a little carbonic acid, a small quantity of a material rich in carbon, and a peculiar ethereal fluid are formed. The last according to Despretz consists of one atom of chlorine and two atoms of carbon." It is certainly evident that had Soubeiran made this experiment before the November meeting in 1831, above-mentioned, he would hardly have let Serullas' statement of the formation of acetic acid by the action of chlorine upon alcohol pass uncorrected, since he (Soubeiran), himself, had not proved this formation. But I had already communicated, in the November number, 1831, of Poggendorff's Annalen (23,444), in a note, which escaped L. Gmelin, the result of my work upon the decomposition of alcohol by chlorine, and said among other things:

5. By aqueous alkalies chloral is changed into a new chloride of carbon (chloroform) and formic acid.

6. The new chloride of carbon may also be easily obtained by distillation of alcohol with excess of bleaching powder.

It is also formed by distillation of bleaching powder with acetone.

It is hence very plain that my work on chloral was already completed in November, 1831; but it comprised the investigation of the action of chlorine upon several other bodies so that thereby its publication was delayed.

JUSTUS VON LIEBIG.

CHICAGO, February 6, 1888.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Chicago Medical Society:

Your committee appointed to consider the subject of the discovery of Chloroform would respectfully submit the following report:

There are three claimants to the honor of the discovery, Liebig, of Germany; Soubeiran, of France; and Guthrie, of America.

LIEBIG'S CLAIM.

Liebig claims to have published his discovery in November, 1831 (see Liebig's Annalen, Vol. 162, Page 161).

SOUBEIRAN'S CLAIM.

Soubeiran claims to have published his paper on ether bichlorique, in October, 1831, in the "Annales de Chimie et de Physique."

Liebig shows (see Liebig's Annalen, Vol. 162, Page 161), that the October number of the "Annales de Chimie et de Physique was delayed in its publication, and that it did not appear until January, 1832. It certainly is evident that it was not published in October, as it contains the meteorological report for the entire month of October.

GUTHRIE'S CLAIM.

In the January number, 1832, of "Silliman's American Journal of Science and Art," we find an article by Dr. Samuel Guthrie, dated September 12, 1831, in which he says, "A bottle and phial contain alcoholic solution of chloric ether. The contents of the phial are as strong as I could conveniently prepare them but not equal to some which I made not long ago."

In the October number, 1831, of the same journal (Page 64, Vol. xxi.), we find an article by Dr. Guthrie, without date, upon a "New mode of preparing a spiritous solution of chloric ether," in which he says, "During the last six months a great number of persons have drunk of the solution of chloric ether, not only freely but frequently to the point of intoxication."

We find a notice to contributors in Prof. Silliman's journal in which he says, "Communications to be in hand six weeks,

CHICAGO NORTHWESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE'S NOTICE OF THE GUTHRIE PAMPHLET.

We seldom hear the mention of chloroform without an instinctive "Thank God!" The surgeon is so intent on his delicate work, with knife in hand, that he has less space to view the sentimental and sympathetic side of the anæsthetic. We were in the old Army of the Potomac at the time when it was doing some of its most desperate work. The memory of the Seven-days battles, of Malvern Hill, of the first campaign in the Wilderness, of Antietam, of Bull Run, and Gettysburg, is fairly saturated with gratitude for the chloroform that made life less a hell for the mangled but grandest boys that ever dared death and living dissection in behalf of a country worthy of such heroes. As terrible as were the mangling and physical martyrdom of those awful days, the gentle, limpid, clear, and divine anæsthetic that trickled down as if from beneath the very throne of the pitying Father of suffering men, made the horrible hospital more like an evangel than a slaughter pen. There are tens of thousands of citizens who never think of the inspired chemist that owe the survival of their wounded relatives as directly to chloroform as if Dr. Samuel Guthrie had actually descended from the skies to superintend the resurrection of their dead. Had it been possible, amid the haste of battlefield duties, we could have made a large roster of men who were delivered as by miracle by reason of the fact that the anæsthetic saved them from the "shock" of amputations, and thereby almost awarded the otherwise forfeited precious human life. We remember one bloody half-day, and the entire bloody night following, in which our hand administered chloroform to thirty-nine splendid American boys, who lost either an arm or a leg. As far as one can foresee, just about all of the grim sufferers would have died had not they been spared the additional strain inevitable in surgical operations of the kind. Very often have we tried to balance the comparative honor due to the general who won the battle and him who saved the wounded patriots from needless pain.

Some eloquent orators have declared that the God of this republic prepared liberty for its defense by disclosing the hidden mines of gold and silver needed to establish national credit. We see even a grander preparation in that chloroform was made ready in large amounts to alleviate the suffering pangs of Freedom, when she brought forth her latest born. The intelligent historian will not neglect to set over against the terrible missiles of war, the ministering angels who brought physical redemption to the ranks and files of men who were not responsible for that human waste and suffering. The claim of Dr. Samuel Guthrie, as precedent inventor of chloroform, entitles him to a place close beside the benefactor who shall finally abolish war. He ministered to the gospel of peace in that he preached tenderness even in the very presence of violent and premeditated attack on sacred human life. Still more—the blessed alleviation meets men at the very threshold of human existence, and ministers to the precious mother, who almost gives her own life in order that another may live. This double service brings an ample benediction to the man who blesses his brother when he begins the race, and pours balm in his wounds when he is maimed in the weary way. Sleep restores nature. Happy he who can summon sleep in behalf of a wounded army and make the bruised veteran dream of heaven even while the cruel knife is searching his very vitals to remove the seeds of dissolution.

“The versatility of Dr. Guthrie’s genius and his indomitable energy were not circumscribed by the walls of his laboratory. The wilderness in which he located, soon disappeared, and clay from a neighboring bank was transformed into a comfortable dwelling, to which, the ‘penstock’ conveyed a never-failing stream of pure water from the ‘sand hill’ perhaps a quarter of a mile distant. His highly cultivated garden supplied every fruit and vegetable indigenous to the climate, and his vineyard was hardly second to any in the state.

“Stone which impeded the plow were utilized in making not only substantial but ornamental walls around his well cultivated fields.

“As would naturally be inferred, the doctor’s library received much attention. In it were to be found the standard medical and chemical works, the scientific journals, the Edinburgh Encyclopædia, Shakspeare, and some novels; Rasselas. Gil Blas, Don Quixote, etc., and, last, but not least, the Bible, in which he was well read."

He was a stock-holder in one of the first woolen mills established in Watertown, N. Y., and assisted in establishing the Houndsfield Library, and was one of the trustees.

He died Oct. 19, 1848, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Cynthia Guthrie Burt, Sacket's Harbor, N. Y.

"Many who knew him can bear testimony to the kindness of his disposition, and the generosity of his nature."—From Sacket's Harbor Observer.

Judge Robinson, of Sherburne, said of him: "He was a great man; but his greatness was not to be compared to his goodness." His devotion to his mother being the admiration of all.

DIED.

In this town, on Monday, the 10th instant, Mrs. Sybil Guthrie, wife of Dr. Samuel Guthrie, aged 52 years. In the death of this loved woman, her relatives and friends have sustained a loss long to be lamented. Her guardian watchfulness over all committed to her charge was unbounded and extreme; there was no limit to the kindness and zeal with which she ministered to the wants and comforts of the members of her family; and scarcely less in relieving the wants and distresses of others.—Sacket's Harbor Commercial.

Sybil (Sexton) Guthrie's parents were Elijah and Sybil (Spencer) Sexton, they were married at Somers, Conn.

Sybil (Spencer) Sexton was born in 1764; and died in 1804, in Sherburne; Elijah Sexton was born in 1754, at Somers. He was the son of Joseph and Mary (Sexton) Sexton, Mary, his mother, was born in 1715, and died in Somers, April 27, 1806, aged 91 years.

Her funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Levi Collins, in it he said:

“Joseph and Mary Sexton had eleven children, seventy-eight grand-children, and sixty-eight great grand-children.” Joseph Sexton was a revolutionary soldier, enlisting in Somers, Conn.

Elijah Sexton, father of Sybil (Sexton) Guthrie, was one of the original members, and one of the trustees of the Second Calvinistic Congregational Society, of Sherburne. In 1798 he was appointed one of the Justices of the Peace. He was Sergeant in the Twenty-second Company of State Militia previous to the Revolution. He was a Revolutionary soldier, enlisting in Somers, Conn., his journal kept while marching to Boston, dated May 29, 1775, is as follows:

Alfred Guthrie, son of Dr. Samuel, Jr. (59), was born in Sherburne, March 31, 1805. He removed with his parents to Sacket's Harbor, where he married Nancy Piper, Oct. 2, 1823. She died July 20, 1855, in Chicago, Ill. He married second, Phœbe A. Guthrie, March 31, 1857, in Sherburne.

He was a man of genius and learning, having inherited the inventive qualities of his father to a considerable degree. He designed the "Hydraulic Works," of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, for supplying the summit level (thirty miles long), with water from Lake Michigan. This was the first work ever erected for such a purpose, and was capable of raising a larger quantity of water than any other establishment then in existence, and for twenty-three years, and until 1871, when the canal deepening was completed, never failed to perform the duties required.

ALFRED GUTHRIE.

These works, in point of economy of construction and efficiency of operation, were among the most successful public works of the time, and were for many years under his direction.

The terrible steam-boat disasters of 1851 so impressed him, that he conceived the idea of laying the foundation for National legislation to control the construction and management of steam-vessels. To this end, and at his own expense, he examined about two hundred steam-boats.

By various devices he secured opportunities to note unskillful and dangerous management, and take notes and measurements of defective parts. He made drawings of faulty boiler connections, safety valves, feeding apparatus, etc., and gave particular attention to the methods of engineers during exciting races.

The results of these investigations were embodied in a memorial to Congress, accompanied by the data he had collected, and drawings he had made. He drafted a bill which was substantially the "United States Steam-boat Law" of today; it included also the life-saving service. His efforts were met by strong opposition from steam-boat owners, and delegations were sent by them to Washington to defeat the passage of the bill, but his work had been so thoroughly done as to leave no doubt of the necessity for a law, and the bill he had prepared was passed without material change. He was appointed supervising inspector under its provisions by President Fillmore and again by President Lincoln.

Ossian Guthrie, in the memoirs of his grand-father, says of his father, Alfred Guthrie: "The old precept, 'Spare the rod and spoil the child,' notwithstanding its source, and the halo of antiquity by which it was surrounded, he spurned from his household; and at school, the brutal argument of the whip, was never applied to his children. In this respect may we not claim for him that he was among those who more than half a century ago set an example for the enlightened government, now prevailing in our public schools?"

Following is a note Alfred Guthrie recorded in his journal at the time his father's estate was settled:

"To-day came to me the things given me by my father, whilst they bring to mind scenes of a joyous and happy youth, of kind and affectionate parents; they but remind me that I in turn must do by mine, as they have done by me."

He died in Chicago, Ill., Aug. 17, 1882.

Nancy Piper, wife of Alfred Guthrie, was the daughter of Thomas and Hepzibah (Jewett) Piper. She was born in Rindge, N. H., April 7, 1805; removed with her parents to Sacket's Harbor, in 1814, where she united with the First Presbyterian church. She died in Chicago, July 10, 1855.

She was a woman of serene and noble character, with a mind cultured and refined; who made a happy home not only for her own children but also for an orphan nephew, Sylvester Piper, son of Thomas Piper, a deceased brother. She was one of ten sisters, whose devotion to one another is recorded in the following article from the New Hampshire Sentinel, Rindge, July, 1854:

THE SISTERS' VISIT.

"How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood!"

"To persons of strong local attachments, perhaps no place on earth possesses greater interest, or revives more pleasing recollections than the home of their childhood and youth; and especially interesting are such remembrances if their childhood days were bright and sunny, and the season of youth dawned upon them bright and rosy, in whose pathway came joy and gladness like an overflowing stream. If, after a long interval of years, a person visits his early home, the place where the sun first shone upon him, and he first listened to the singing of birds and murmur of the water-fall; and busy life first presented itself to his view; where thoughts and purposes first took possession of his soul, and affection stole in unawares upon his heart, and looking over the past, he sees, as upon a well-painted landscape, his childhood and youth presented in their freshness and beauty. But suppose several members of the same family should visit together the home of their youth, and each, with his own peculiar characteristic adds incidents and beauties to the scenes; what was before only a landscape, appears as a long panorama of years upon whose broad canvas comes the morning of life accompanied with its own peculiar incidents, numberless, monotonous; yet ever new.

In the month of May last, seven sisters, daughters of the late Thomas and Hepzibah Piper, met in Rindge, their native town. Considering their number, age, and residence; and the time which has elapsed since their removal from this place, the meeting was remarkable. Two of them reside in New Hampshire, one in Vermont, two in New York, one in Michigan, one in Illinois. The oldest is 67 years of age, the youngest 49. Their aggregate age is 391 years. Forty years ago the family moved from Rindge, since which time the sisters had not all met till May of the present year. One of the sisters resides in this town, and the family of another, deceased, who, at her death fourteen years ago, left thirteen children, all of whom are now living.

Of agreeable social habits, and still possessing many of the vivacities of youth, these sisters passed a fortnight with relatives and acquaintances, amidst the scenes of their olden home, as happily as seldom falls to the lot of dispersed families. The pleasures of youth, added to the experience of age, seemed to come at their call; and even youth itself seemed returning. The place of their youth had doubtless changed in bringing forth and conveying away a whole generation; but still, enough remains to distinctly point out the place of their residence, and the residences of neighbors and acquaintances. Indeed, the dwelling they last occupied, has externally at least, changed but little since they left it. In children and grand-children whom they had never seen before, they recognized traits and resemblances of those long since passed away.

And not the least worthy of notice in this visit was the pleasure and gratification it afforded their relatives and acquaintances. To contemporaries, it was like a revision of their own early history, to those younger, they appeared as the representation of a former generation with which they were glad to become more fully acquainted.

These sisters are not an unbroken band. Their number was originally ten three are deceased: one died in early youth, and two later in life. Each of the seven is a wife, mother, and grand-mother. Two of the deceased had families. The number of their children including those of the deceased is 63.

"As arrows in the hands of a mighty man, so are the children of the youth.

"Happy is the man that hath a quiver full of them."

These sisters have left behind them many pleasing recollections, and their visit will long be remembered as a happy occurrence in the vicissitudes of social life. Happy, thrice happy, are the families whose bond of union is love and friendship.

In the same pleasant home we dwelt;
When life and hope were new;
At the same mother's knee we knelt,
When night her curtain drew.

Through many a long, long year we toiled,
And slumbered side by side.
Though streams and mountains intervene.
What can our hearts divide?

Captain Edwin Guthrie, son of Dr. Samuel, Jr. (59), was born in Smyrna, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1806. He removed with his parents to Sacket's Harbor, where he married Adaline Jewett, Sept. 7, 1827. Just before that time, Captain John Page, of the Fourth U. S. Infantry, was killed at the battle of Palo Alto, by having his under jaw shot away.

Alfred, upon learning of his brother's intention to join the army, wrote him, calling his attention to the fate of Page, and urging him to abandon the idea. The following letters dictated by Edwin, and written by his son, tells the rest:

Well, Brother Alfred, I have indeed met the fate of Page. I have been wounded, and am to die in the Castle of Perote ——. A few hours closes my earthly career.

EDWIN GUTHRIE.

MY DEAR BELOVED SISTER:—The physicians have been in this evening and told me there is no earthly hope, a few hours closes my life on this earth. Accept a brother's dying love.
EDWIN GUTHRIE.

From Parkersburg, West Va., Sentinel:

OBITUARY.

The announcement in the Sentinel several days ago of the serious illness of Dr. C. C. J. Guthrie, of Belpre, was the first intimation many of his friends had of his illness. He was on this side among his patients last Friday, and remarked to some of his friends, "that he never felt better." He was taken ill on Saturday, and dangerous symptoms developed. His malady baffled the skill of the attending physicians; he was in a comatose condition for several days. His death occurred at 6:25 o'clock last evening. Christopher Columbus Jarrett Guthrie, was the son of Rev. Francis Guthrie, a noted circuit rider of the M. E. church, and was born in this state, March 10, 1828. He was a brother of Judge Guthrie, of Point Pleasant, West Va., and Prof. D. P. Guthrie, of Belpre, Ohio. A sister, Mrs. A. P. Cook, died just a year ago. The deceased leaves a wife and two children, a son and daughter. The son, D. P. Guthrie, resides at Covington, Ky., and the daughter, Mrs. Philip Cole, resides with her husband at Belpre. Dr. Guthrie was considered one of the most eminent and thoroughly versed physicians in this section, and since he entered the profession, made seven trips across the ocean, and attended lectures at London, Paris, and Vienna. He has resided at Belpre for about thirty years, and his practice was very extensive and lucrative on both sides of the river. Socially, he was a genial and pleasant gentleman, whose friends were numbered by the thousand; politically, he was a thorough Democrat.

DR. GUTHRIE.

Opening the gate it seemed
That I surely must have dreamed,
For before me, blazing brazen in the morning sunlight gleamed
As it had in days of yore—
Back in days of sixty-four—
That same polished sign of metal he had screwed upon the door:

DOCTOR GUTHRIE.

I was startled, for you know
Twenty years or more ago
Harry Davis had said to me when we met down in Mexico:
“Who, of all the world, do you Think is dead?” And I said, “Who?”
And he told me: “One all Belpre loved because it was his due—
Dr. Guthrie.”

Harry Davis, then, and I,
Talked of years that had gone by,
And we joined in the opinion that in sparing men to die
Belpre had surrendered to Death the rarest one she knew,
One whose heart was like a woman's and whose spirit aye was true—

Dr. Guthrie.

It was sad, you see, for there
Were hosts easier to spare—
Charlie Johnson or Teed Druse or old man Archibald McNair—
Yet, as Harry Davis said,
They lived on while he was dead.

Dr. Guthrie.

Therefore, what was my surprise,
When before my startled eyes
I beheld that little brass sign like a blazing promise rise:

“Dr. Guthrie”

And I jingled at the bell,
 And in joy I murmured: "Well,
 I will have a splendid story of the strangest sort to tell
 Dr. Guthrie."

As the door swung gently back
 In response to my attack
 At the threshold stood a woman, silver-haired and dressed in black,
 And the sweet face, troubled-lined,
 But to suffering resigned
 Was the face of one familiar, for it was, as I divined, Mrs. Guthrie.

Somehow I can scarcely say
 What impelled my tongue to stay,
 But I only faltered: "I'm a stranger come from far away;
 One whose boyish griefs and cares
 You reduced by pantry wares;
 Tell me, friend of vanished childhood, how ye prosper and how fares
 Dr. Guthrie?"

Past the door I entered, and
 Took the proffered waxen hand,
 And the dear old lady murmured, "Ah, I see you understand,
 For your question tells that you
 Do not count their words as true
 Words of those whose souls are earthen and who through the deathlight view
 Dr. Guthrie.

"Yes, they speak of him as dead
 And the tree above his head
 Blossomed ten years since and painted all the grave lot glowing red,
 And I know he's resting there;
 So they smile when I declare
 That I often see reclining in the dear old leather chair
 Dr. Guthrie.

"Twenty years ago in May
 Was it that he went away
 With a heart as light as hearts of little children at their play,
 But I never have allowed
 That the coffin and the shroud
 Held the best of what was given when our dear Lord Christ endowed
 Dr. Guthrie.

MRS. DR. C. C. J. GUTHRIE.

“For his spirit has not died
 And with me it shall abide
 Just as in that spring-time season on the day I was his bride,
 And the blessing and the grace
 Which the grave cannot efface
 As I dream on them, before me ever smiling is thy face,
 Dr. Guthrie.

“That is why upon the door,
 Polished as in days of yore,
 Is the little sign you boys knew when you saw it years before,
 And I’ll keep it bright till when I shall pass away, and then
 With no space of interruption I shall join my king of men—
 Dr. Guthrie.”

* * * * *

Harry Davis did not know,
 When we met in Mexico,
 Of this dear old heart in Belpre waiting for the call to go,
 Else he had not made his dole,
 Had not said that on the roll
 Of the dead and of the perished was this bride-groom of a soul,
 Dr. Guthrie.

Letter from Joseph Guthrie to Eveline G. Dunn:

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept., 1897.

DEAR MISS DUNN:—

If I am right in my surmise, and you are the grand-daughter of Alfred Guthrie, what a train of memories that relationship brings to my mind; it takes me back to the time when my father returned to his native heath, after an absence of years, dating from the time when he left a callow youth to seek his fortune; and now he has brought it home in the shape of a wife and two children, a girl of ten years, and a boy of eight, who is your humble correspondent. We had lived in the City of New York, where I had attended school, and although so young, I had advanced so that reading to me then, was as easy as now, I think of the feast of reading matter I found in the old Guthrie mansion, and being very small for my age, I was the marvel of the dear old people, who wondered at that mere child sitting and reading most of the time just like older people. It seems as if it were but yesterday, so deeply engraven in my mind is that expression made by aunt. Aunt Betsy, the eldest, a tall, fine-looking lady, very quiet and kindly in disposition, with a certain grace about her every action which seemed to speak the goodness of her heart. Then there was Aunt Sally, not quite as tall as Aunt Betsy, but with a heart big enough to take in all the world.

I could easily give you a good map of the old place from memory, with a description of the old house which I think, when built, was considered quite a mansion; how it was built into the only hill on the place high enough to make the cellar in the back of the first story, making it three stories in front, and two stories back, four rooms on a floor, a large hall running through from west to east, above all, was the great rambling garret, the delight and terror of we children. This garret was filled with paraphernalia for spinning and weaving, it contained the most complete outfit I have ever seen; spinning-wheels for linen, cards for carding wool, flax-breaks, and two looms. The old kitchen was as we find represented in some old-fashioned pictures, with strings of apples, and bunches of herbs, sage, thyme, pepper, and spearmint, with wormwood and horehound of bitter memories attached to a cold.

Then the orchard, where the apples of all colors and flavor grew; the great barn piled with hay and grain; may be there was no fun in that old barn. Then the old cob that Uncle Justus would let me ride, my short legs scarcely reaching across his broad fat back; but I have never taken a ride since with so much enjoyment; and the Chenango River, with its fishing and swimming. Sister and I attended the little wood-colored school-house, a mile and a half north, where Cousin Phoebe taught school.

The woods were a continuous source of wonder to me. In the very thickest of these woods a remnant of the Oneidas' camped in true aboriginal style, and like their fathers before them, looked upon the Guthries as their particular friends. One whose name I remember, Abe Tusknott, was wont to spend many hours by the chimney corner in the Guthrie home during apple-paring time. Old Abe could make a paring-machine blush, so evenly would he pare an apple. I am told the original settlement was a mile square. A beautiful tract of land, pleasant to look upon. Commencing at the west branch of the east fork of the Chenango River and running back some three-quarters of a mile to the west line, which was lost in a fine tract of timber, called the sugar-bush, which furnished fencing, fuel, and sweetness for the family. A beautiful homestead in the beautiful Chenango valley, which although unsung as is the Mohawk, will safely bear comparison with any; and which, for so many years, was the home of our race, but knows no more the foot-steps of a Guthrie. The memories of my boyhood days around that old homestead come nearer to elysium to me than any chapter of my life. I have never seen any country to compare with that beautiful valley. I may be excused for giving expression to my thoughts, especially as I think that in writing to you, I write to one, who, like myself, is proud of the name and race of Guthrie.

I must allow the imagination to wander to the old church on Sherburne Hill, where, in the cemetery back of it, so many of our race are buried. If I had any particular desire touching the final resting-place of this mortal clay it should be when the signal for my release is given, that it might be laid in that quiet spot.

Eveline Guthrie, daughter of Alfred (143), was born in Sacket's Harbor, N. Y., June 26, 1824. She removed with her parents to Chicago, in 1845, where she married William M. Dunn, Sept. 12, 1852. He was born in Meadville, Crawford Co., Pa., Oct. 29, 1823. His parents removed to Illinois in 1835, settling in Geneva, Kane Co. The next Spring he accompanied his brother, Dr. James Anson Dunn (who had previously graduated from Yale College), to Buffalo, N. Y., to attend school. He settled in Chicago, in 1845, where he was elected assistant city collector in 1859; and was twice elected street commissioner in 1858, and again in 1860. He was appointed postal agent, between Chicago and Milwaukee, which position he resigned to enter the quarter-master's department, as captain of the government dispatch boat "Dime," stationed at Natchez, Miss. He laid down his life on the altar of freedom, leaving his wife with four little children, the only son, William, being two years of age at the time. Soon after her husband's death she, with her brothers, engaged in the ice business, under the firm name of O. & W. Guthrie Ice Company. She so managed her estate, as to enable her to maintain a comfortable, peaceful and happy home. The beauty and strength of her character is acknowledged by all who know her. When we, her children, look back upon our childhood days, we need not say how highly we prize the great blessing bestowed upon us in having such a sweet and gentle mother; never hearing her speak an unkind word to any one; having a cheerful and happy disposition, rearing her children with gentleness and love, and enabling us to say, as our grand-father said of his youth, we have had "a joyous and happy youth." She made it a rule never to have her children leave home for school in an unhappy frame of mind; and on their return, to greet them with a smile. On retiring at night, no unnecessary tear ever dimmed their eyes. Her children can truly say, "if all mothers were like our mother, there would be no unnecessary heart-aches in this world."

LETTER WRITTEN BY CAPTAIN WILLIAM M. DUNN, WHILE ON BOARD THE U. S. T. "DIME," STATIONED AT NATCHEZ.

NATCHEZ, MISS., Sunday, Oct, 23, 1864.

MY DEAR DAUGHTERS, AND MY DEAR LITTLE WILLIE BOY:—Pa has just got through breakfast, and scarcely got on deck, before Sam called out, "Captain, here comes a boat." I instantly made up my mind to write, if but a few lines, to my dear girls, and my dear little Willie boy. Now, I should like to write something pleasant and interesting, but really cannot think of anything at this moment but what would be so long, that I would not be able to finish before this steam-boat, which is about two miles off, will be at her landing; freight discharged and received, and passengers aboard, who are going North to see dear ones. Oh, don't I wish I was one of the number standing upon the levee, now in-waiting for this boat which is to make so many hearts glad. Yes, what is it I would not give, if now, at this moment, I was with you. I know around our home there would be a day of jubilee and rejoicing. Never mind, my time will come. Well, here the boat is not a St. Louis packet, but the government transport, "Shingless." I am not disappointed as some I see standing, carpet-sack in hand, big trunks by their sides, and who, a moment before, strained their eyes to see if they could not distinguish the name of the boat. One remarking, "it is the 'Missouri,'" another it is the "Handy Andy," all very good boats, and moderately fast. I know if I were in the crowd I could point out some disconsolate beings, every now and then exclaiming, "Oh, I do hope it is the 'Atlantic;' she is so much faster than the 'Missouri,' or 'Handy Andy.' If it is the 'Atlantic' we will be in Cairo Thursday morning, and by any other it will be Tuesday noon." All this time this great object of attraction is drawing nearer and nearer, sending forth great volumes of smoke from her tall chimney; her wheels revolving with lightning-like speed, and every exhaust of her mighty propelling power seems to say, "I am coming, I am coming, be ready to get on board, prepare your letters for I have not a moment to spare. I am the messenger that plows this mighty father of waters, carrying glad tidings; or that of sorrow to the hearts of loved ones at home." Still she comes; now she rounds Natchez Bend; at this moment, breathless and still they stand, to be disappointed, for it is not a New Orleans and St. Louis packet, but a government transport. I shall have my letter finished before a boat arrives; and at the longest, this day week my dear ones will be gathered around ma, listening to her reading this letter from pa who loves and thinks of them all the time. See Angelia and little Charlie, tell them you had a letter from pa, and that he is well, and sends his love. My other girls, Susie, Matie, Rebecca and Nettie, see one and all. Tell Susie I received her good kind letter, and she may expect a letter from me every week. I intend to spend all my time,—when the boat is laying still,—in writing to loved ones. Kiss all for pa. Good bye, my sweet ones.

William M. Dunn was drowned at Natchez, Miss., on the night of Nov. 1, 1864, while in the performance of his duty in the government service, having received an important message to proceed to the relief of a sinking boat, also in the government service.

In going from the upper to the lower deck, the ladder gave way; he was thrown into the river and injured in the fall (it being a stormy night, and the current swift), he sank before relief arrived. His remains were recovered, brought to Chicago, and interred in Graceland Cemetery. An unfinished letter was found on his desk, which he was writing to his family at the time he received the message, in responding to which, he lost his life.

His death brought sorrow to many homes. His refined, genial and sympathetic nature, his attachment to his relatives and friends, and his great tenderness of feeling, made him many true and faithful friends.

His five nieces, whom he mentions in the above letter, are now Mrs. Susan Fyfe, of Chicago; Mrs. Delancy Richardson, of Milwaukee, Wis.; Mrs. Nelson Brunson, of Callender, Iowa; Mrs. Frank Farnsworth, of Washington, D. C., and Captain William M. Dunn, was the son of John Dunn, who was born in York, Pa., in 1775. John Dunn settled in Meadville, Pa., where he married in 1805, Ann Harkins. He was an earnest patriot, son of a Revolutionary soldier, and was one of ten bearing the name of Dunn, who participated in the War of 1812, from the little village of Meadville. He died in Rockton, Ill., Oct. 2, 1846. Ann Harkins, his wife, was born in Hagerstown, Md., in 1789. She was the daughter of Daniel and Susan (Clayton) Harkins. She died in Rockton, Ill., in 1869. Susan Clayton was the daughter of William Clayton, grand-daughter of William, and great grand-daughter of William Clayton, Jr. William Clayton, Sr., arrived in the ship, "Kent," from London, as one of the commissioners sent out by the proprietors of New Jersey. He settled in Marckus Hook, where he became a rich and extensive land-owner. He was a Quaker, and took a prominent part in political affairs. He presided at the first court held in Pennsylvania under Penn, Aug. 3, 1681, the day on which a government was first established for the province of Pennsylvania.

John Dunn was the son of William and Sallie (McKinstry) Dunn. William Dunn was a civil engineer, and was one of a party of surveyors, who went from York to Northumberland Co., Pa., to lay out the Francis Allison land. He became one of the most extensive land-owners of the West Branch Valley of the Susquehanna. His famous plantation, known as the Great Island, figures more prominently in history than the balance of his possessions, and is regarded as the most important of all the historical land-marks of the West Branch Valley. William Dunn made improvements on the island about 1770, which is recited in his warrant for the entire island, dated Oct. 13, 1785, in which he agrees to pay the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania at the rate of thirty pounds per one hundred acres.

This island is still in possession of the family, being owned by the widow of Judge William Dunn, grand-son of the original owner.

William Dunn laid out and was the founder of the ancient village of Dunnstown, Clinton Co., Pa. The centennial anniversary was celebrated Sept. 5, 1894.

A MEMORABLE EVENT.

DUNNSTOWN CELEBRATION A GREAT SUCCESS.
 FIVE THOUSAND PEOPLE CROWD INTO THE VILLAGE TO WITNESS THE CEREMONIES OF THE DAY—ORATOR
 HIPPLE'S EXCELLENT HISTORICAL ADDRESS—
 FLAG RAISING AND H. T. HALL'S PATRIOTIC REMARKS.

Dunnstown was ablaze with glory yesterday and fully 5,000 people participated in the ceremonies of the day. The town was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Arches spanned the road and streets leading to and in the village, one or two double arches being among the number. Nearly every house in the little town was trimmed with bunting, flags and evergreens.

About 1 o'clock the various organizations of this city began moving from their headquarters to the place of formation, Jay and Water Streets. The varied colored uniforms and regalia, the waving flags and the music of the bands and drum corps presented a very enlivening scene. About 2 o'clock Chief Marshal Barker gave the word and the parade moved. First came the police force, then the firing squad of Company H, the Good Templar band, and the carriages containing Mayor Mayer, Orators T. C. Hipple and H. T. Hall, and associate judges.

The first division was commanded by J. Schuyler, Jr. Behind him came the old soldiers of John S. Bittner Post and the Union Veteran Legion, stepping to the martial airs as rendered by the Farrandville drum corps. These were followed by the military ranks of the various secret societies, whose bright uniforms made an excellent showing.

The second division was made up of the subordinate lodges of O. U. A. M., P. O. S. of A., K. G. E. and I. O. O. F. The Military band furnished the music, and Captain J. W. Fredericks was in command.

JUDGE WILLIAM DUNN.

GREAT ISLAND HOME.

The third division was composed of the brave fire laddies, with Chief Engineer C. C. Curtin as commander. The Lockport drum corps furnished the marching airs.

The carriages containing the county officials, city council, school board and citizens made up the fourth division, with Colonel W. H. Sanderson at the head.

When the head of the military and civic column arrived at the double arch, the rope which had been stretched across the street to prevent carriages from crowding the approach to the field where the oration was to be delivered, was removed and the column marched through the smooth grassy street up into the Daniel Myers' lot to the speakers' stand. After the various organizations had been ranged around the seats, the committee of arrangements, orators, descendants of William Dunn, county and city officials, and representatives of the press took seats in the speakers' stand.

Colonel W. W. Richie was the master of ceremonies and made the announcements. The Good Templar band first rendered the overture, "Crown of Victory," with good effect; Rev. B. P. King invoked the divine blessing, and the crowd sang the well-known and popular national hymn, "America," led by Rev. Mr. Shoemaker. T. C. Hipple, Esq., was then introduced. The scene that presented itself to the speaker's eyes was an inspiring one. Before him was a great crowd of people—men, women and children, full of life and activity; just on the other side of the lot was the beautiful and sacred enclosure of the Dunnstown dead from whose graves rose the high monuments of those who had run life's race; then came the river flowing peacefully down the valley; then the fields from which the harvest had just been gathered, while rising like a protector was the Bald Eagle Mountain, causing suggestive thoughts of the land of the living and the home of the dead. Mr. Hipple was in good trim, his voice being strong and his utterances distinct. His oration showed careful and laborious research, and the succinctness with which the historical facts were stated highly delighted those who were within the sound of his voice. That it was favorably received was attested to by the many approving nods, the smiles that spread over the countenances of his hearers when he injected a dash of humor in his remarks, and the applause with which he was greeted when he closed. So many favorable comments have been made as to the worth of the address that it has been deemed wise to publish the historical sketch.

EXTRACT FROM HISTORICAL ADDRESS.

As nations and communities grow older and more mature, so there develops a disposition to attach increased weight and sanction to the transactions and occurrences of early years, and thus it has become almost custom to halt awhile at the century line; at the hundredth year mark in the grand march of time and events, for review and commemoration.

In accordance with this sentiment, the people of Dunns-town have assembled to-day, to celebrate with those who have been pleased to join them, the centennial or one hundredth anniversary of the founding of their town.

When the question of locating the county-seat came up in 1795, William Dunn having foreseen it and having prepared for it, by laying out his town in 1786, and thus making it the oldest town of all the claimants, boldly entered the contest with Williamsport and Jaysburg (now part of Williamsport) for the prize. He claimed Dunns-town was farther west than the others, and was more conveniently located for the people of the new center. This argument would to us, now seem somewhat amusing when we remember that the territory of the country extended west to the Alleghany River, but in that day the country was not settled westward and he doubtless had in his mind the population largely east of here. He set aside a lot of ground and yet known here as the "Court House Lot," which he proposed to donate to the new county for Court House and public building purposes. The contest between Jaysburg and Williamsport was bitter to the extreme, and at one time it looked as if Dunns-town with its munificent offer of a lot of ground would secure the location, but Williamsport alarmed at this prospect, made a final grand effort and donated four lots, two for the Court House and two for the jail, and this carried the question.

William Dunn was, however, but a type of the men and people who came here as early settlers. They were men of positive traits, and characters, and the kind who leave their impress wherever they abide. Their lots were cast by circumstances in this beautiful valley; and the numerous descendants of William Dunn can regard with pride the record of his doings as one of the early settlers of this section. To illustrate the sterling qualities, intelligence, and loyal impulses of our valley pioneers; and to show how they kept abreast of, and in line with, the current events, although located so remotely from the center of action; it will not be amiss to state a fact of which we may all be proud. On the fourth day of July, 1776, the West Branch settlers assembled a few miles below here on the plains of Pine Creek; and formerly renounced their allegiance to, and declared themselves entitled to be free and independent of the mother country. This was on the very day the world-famed Declaration of Independence was proclaimed at Philadelphia; but we must remember that in those days there was no telephone or telegraph or even mails, and the patriots at Pine Creek, could not have known what was transpiring two hundred miles away; nor could they have guessed that on that same day, liberty's voice would be heard in the distant City of Brotherly Love, in tones and words so much like their own, as to make one seem the echo of the other.

MISS MENETTA DUNHAM FYFE,

These men, of course, had known in a meagre way, of the agitation among the colonies; they had thought and reasoned here in their frontier homes; and having sprung from sturdy stock they came to their own conclusions without waiting to be led; and thus did it seem as if liberty had found spontaneous tongue, and as if the air was surcharged with love of freedom. There are valuable teachings in these things and on this occasion for us. May they strengthen our sense of duty as citizens, stimulate our patriotism and love of country; and imbue us with the sentiment that inspired the closing hymn you sang to-day:

“Long may our land be bright,
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God our King!”

At the close of the address the Military band rendered a popular air, when one of the most pleasing incidents of the day took place. It was the introduction to the audience of William Stanley Dunn, the great-great-great-grand-son of the founder of Dunnstown. The little fellow was held aloft so that the crowd could obtain a full view of him.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. R. King, when the vast audience repaired to the school-house, where the flag-raising ceremonies, under the auspices of the O. U. A. M., took place. H. T. Hall, Esq., District Attorney of Clinton County, delivered an address which was replete with patriotic sentiments and eloquent references to the pioneers who came here to found homes where they could be free from the oppression of foreign rulers.

When his address was concluded the consolidated bands played the National airs, and while the strains of the “Red, White and Blue” were echoing and re-echoing along the valley, the Misses Blanche Bollinger, Grace Nowell, Pearl Williams and Grace McCloskey began pulling at the rope that played through the pulley at the top of the high pole, and a moment later the stars and stripes were waving, the people cheering, and Company H's firing squad saluting the colors with volley after volley of blank cartridges. When the enthusiasm had subsided, Mr. Adde, in behalf of Clinton Council O. U. A. M., in a few appropriate words, formally presented the flag to the Woodward School Board, and Mr. C. H. Nowell, President of the Board of Directors, accepted the gift on the part of the Board.

This closed the day's proceedings, which marked the beginning of a new epoch in the history of Clinton County.—Lock Haven Democrat.

"In the days when the red man roamed fearless and free over the hills and through this lovely valley, the spot where Dunnstown now stands must have been a place of picturesque beauty. Situated, as it is, on the bold bluff facing Bald Eagle Mountain and overlooking the Great Island, the scene presented to the eye is one of enchanting loveliness. Nature has done much for the place; numerous springs of cool water, wide-spreading trees and prolific soil, made it a fairy land and paradise to the Indian."—From "History of West Branch Valley," by John F. McGinness.

William Dunn was appointed one of a committee of safety previous to the Revolution, and was a Revolutionary soldier, participating in the battle of Germantown and Trenton. He married second, Margaret McClellan, of Philadelphia. He died a peaceful death in April, 1806, at his home on the Great Island, and his body was laid to rest in the burial-ground here in Dunnstown, in the midst of many of the scenes of his busy life; overlooking his island-home.

Among the earliest settlers of this beautiful valley were Hon. John Fleming, great grand-son of the Earl of Wigton, of Scotland, Dr. Francis Allison, Colonel Chatham, Samuel Harris, son of the founder of Harrisburg, Pa., and Hon. William McClay, great American statesman elected to the United States Senate in 1789, being the first man on whom this great office was conferred by Pennsylvania,

Ossian Guthrie, son of Alfred (143), was born in Turin, N. Y., Feb. 28, 1826. He removed to Chicago in 1846. He married first, Martha Betts, daughter of William and Mary (Hitt) Betts, of Saratoga Co., N. Y.; second, Lois R. Osgood, of Blue Hill, Maine; third, Eunice Hoxie, of 378.—Ossian.

Ossian Guthrie has won fame as a geologist and mechanical engineer. He has lived in Chicago over fifty-two years, and during that time has been identified with all the projects to drain the city and its environs. When eighteen years old he made the pattern for a steam engine which afterward propelled the first tug up the Chicago River. Three years later he was placed in charge of the construction of machines to pump water from the Illinois and Michigan Canal. The next year he was master mechanic of the building of the old Bridgeport pumping works, which at that time had the largest capacity of any in existence. He afterward was chief engineer of the plant for many years. Mr. Guthrie has always wrestled with the question of how to clarify the Chicago River, and was one of the first to suggest the sanitary canal now in course of construction as the most feasible remedy. His geological researches have been most important and have enabled him to give valuable advice regarding drainage matters. He is a firm believer in the glacial theory and has established the fact, to the satisfaction of all experts, that glacial ice extended as far south as this latitude. His contributions to the literature of this subject have been extensive and original. He made the first suggestion to the Citizens' Association with regard to the present drainage system and was chairman of the original committee which in 1885 drafted the first report of the plan. He has worked day and night to promote the great enterprise and labored at legislatures, water-way conventions, and even with Congress in its behalf.

He received the Republican nomination for drainage trustee at the first election, but a citizen's ticket was elected. Mr. Guthrie, together with such men as E. L. Corthel, one of the most eminent engineers in the United States, and John Spry, a successful business man and an old citizen of high character, were defeated. He is also the author of the Memoirs of Dr. Samuel Guthrie, with a history of the discovery of Chloroform (see page 23-27).

Letter from W. B. Camp, Vice-President (now President) of the Jefferson County Historical Society.

SACKET'S HARBOR, N. Y., January 25th, 1887.

Mr. O. Guthrie, Chicago.

MY DEAR SIR:—The Jefferson County Historical Society is gathering material for record and preservation, and at the very outset finds most important matter demanding its attention.

The fact that chloroform was discovered here is not generally known.

Last summer I had the satisfaction of securing the battlefield of 1812 for our Historical Society, and it is the intention to erect there a monument in honor of Dr. Samuel Guthrie, the discoverer of chloroform, and also secure national aid in erecting a monument in honor of the 1,700 buried there in 1812.

Knowing that your relations with your grandfather were more intimate than those of any other person now living, and feeling assured of your cordial co-operation, it seems timely and appropriate that I should now ask you to write his memoirs and aid the society in such manner as you can in this commendable work.

Please show this letter to the Hon. Geo. H. Harlow, and give him my respects. I am sure he will be proud of a good deed in honor of his native town, and cheerfully aid our undertaking.

With kind regards, sincerely yours,

W. B. CAMP.

V. P. Jeff. Co. H. S.

The Historical Society of Jefferson County, New York, where Dr. Samuel Guthrie discovered chloroform, and where he manufactured the percussion priming powder with which he fired the first cannon ever fired with percussion priming powder, paid him the high honor of commemorating these events upon the seal of the society. The chloroform still is shown, and he is represented in the act of igniting the priming powder with a blacksmith's hammer and punch.

Dr. Guthrie was of dark complexion, medium stature slender build, slightly stooping figure and thoughtful mien. His head was well formed, features slightly oval and nose prominent, the distinguishing features were his expressive eyes, later in life the tic douloureux contracted the muscles of the left side of his face, to this is due the fact that his daguerreotype was never taken.

Letter from J. W. Hanson:

To the Misses H. N. and E. G. Dunn. Authors and Publishers of the "Genealogy of the Guthrie Family."

CHICAGO, July, 1899.

I have learned that you are preparing the lineage of the Guthries, and thinking that you may not be fully aware of the many varied and important services rendered by Mr. Ossian Guthrie, I venture to suggest that your work will be made more valuable by a brief reference to some of them.

Mr. Guthrie's heredity should indicate his inventive genius. The grandson of the inventor of chloroform, and of detonating powder, ought to possess the inventive faculty, and this Mr. Guthrie has inherited to a remarkable degree, as he has demonstrated in several directions.

He has made great geological acquisitions, on which he was able to base original observations and deductions, and thus rendered valuable services in projecting the great Drainage Canal. Careful observations and ingenious deductions of his own led to investigations and measures that are now nearly completed in this stupendous enterprise. He was chairman of the first committee of the Citizens' Association in 1885, and his valuable services were acknowledged by them.

His microscopical eye and rare powers of generalization have enabled him to trace glacial action and results. He has demonstrated the fact that nearly all the boulders scattered over the country were carried by glaciers, and not by icebergs, as many geologists have contended. He has abolished the "terminal moraine" of the schools. In fact he has revolutionized glacial Geology, and yet all his knowledge has been acquired outside of scientific schools.

He is inventor of a device for forming and preserving ice. In this department he stands alone, for his name only appears in the Patent Office Reports on this subject. He discovered that nature had placed within man's easy reach the means of increasing the production and improving the quality of ice in all small inland waters, and that the cold of winter can be stored in ice, and kept in summer. His device applied to ice-houses, is an original method, simple, ingenious, and effective. By his device ice can be preserved indefinitely, by using the means that nature has provided wherever natural ice is found—means unrecognized until Mr. Guthrie detected them.

Besides his practical labors as a first-class mechanical engineer, Mr. Guthrie has been a frequent contributor to the literature of his chosen themes, and during his 53 years in Chicago he has labored day and night for its material, scientific and political progress and prosperity. But "Virtue has been its own reward," literally, for no other enrichment has come to him than the consciousness of serving his day and generation.

An original investigator, a fine generalizer, an ingenious inventor, an accomplished, practical engineer, a genuine patriot, an honest man and valuable citizen, he stands prominent among the level-headed, public-spirited men for which Chicago has been famous.

I wish I could tell his kin and the world, in detail, in a volume, instead of so meager a form in the few lines to which I am restricted, the story of a life that has been a valuable factor in the development of this great city.

Faithfully yours,

J. W. HANSON.

Mr. Guthrie is a member of the Illinois Society Sons of the American Revolution, in direct descent by three branches.

Mrs. Guthrie is a descendant from the Massachusetts Aldens, and is one of the Daughters of the Revolution.

SAMUEL GUTHRIE (216).

216.

Samuel Guthrie, son of Alfred (143), was born Dec. 11, 1828, in Sacket's Harbor, N. Y. At the age of twenty-one he was appointed assistant engineer of the Hydraulic Works at Chicago. He afterwards attended Harvard College, graduating in law. He practiced several years in Chicago, the law firm name being Hopkins & Guthrie, and was among the best known and most popular lawyers of early Chicago. In 1860 he removed to San Francisco, California, where he now resides.

He was appointed Supervising Inspector of Steamboats by President Grant. He is a staunch Republican, and has always taken an active part in political affairs. He married Mrs. Fannie Mallory Case, daughter of James P. and Francis (Mallory) Ashley, of Kentucky, and niece of Gen. Ashley, U. S. A., who was at one time commander at Jefferson Barracks.

Wardell Guthrie, son of Alfred (143), was born April 29, 1831, in Sacket's Harbor, N. Y. He married Caroline Pomeroy in Lockport, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1855.

At the breaking out of the Rebellion he raised a company and was elected Captain of Company I, Fifty-sixth Illinois Infantry. The regiment was afterwards mustered out. He then entered the quartermaster's department as engineer of a government boat, which was taken to St. Louis and thence to Vicksburg. At Vicksburg he was transferred to the tug "Dime," and made a captain, whence he was recalled to St. Louis and appointed harbor superintendent. After this at one time and another, he served as captain of five different steamers in the transportation department, navigating the Mississippi, Missouri, the Ohio, Tennessee Cumberland and White Rivers. He remained in the service until the close of the war, when he returned to Chicago, and was appointed United States Local Inspector of Steamboats, which position he held for three years, and resigned to engage in the ice business. The firm of O. & W. Guthrie Ice Company was well known for many years. While steam-boat inspector, he drew up, and secured the passage of the City Boiler Inspection Ordinance now in vogue. He was appointed Boiler Inspector by Mayor Roche, which office he held one term without a single accident occurring. He was appointed a member of the Board of Examiners of Engineers by Mayor Washburne, which position he retained until the election of Mayor Harrison. He was also Secretary of the Board of Examiners for Engineers, under Mayor Swift.

Caroline Pomeroy, wife of Wardell Guthrie, was born in Lockport, Niagara Co., N. Y., Nov. 30, 1833. She was the daughter of Jabez B. and Phœbe (Hopkins) Pomeroy.

Jabez Backus Pomeroy, one of the pioneers of Western New York, was born in Somers, Conn., Aug. 5, 1794. He married in Hamilton, N. Y., Phœbe, daughter of Chillingsworth and Eunice (Tucker) Hopkins, April 21, 1821. He died in Lockport, N. Y., Feb. 26, 1879. He was a lineal descendant of Eltweed Pomeroy, who came from England in 1630, and settled at Dorchester near Boston, later removing to Windsor, Conn. Eltweed traced his ancestry to Ralph De Pomeroy, whose name is enrolled in Battle Abbey and who, in 1072, built the Castle of Berry Pomeroy, now a noted ruin of Devonshire, England.

Phœbe (Hopkins) Pomeroy was born in Hamilton, N. Y., Sept. 13, 1799, and died in Kalamazoo, Mich., Sept. 10, 1870. She was of Colonial and Revolutionary ancestry. Tracing her lineage to Thomas Prence, who for nearly twenty years was Governor of Plymouth Colony, and also to Stephen Hopkins and William Brewster, pilgrims of the "Mayflower."

Alfred Guthrie spent most of his early days at the old homestead in Sherburne, N. Y. At the age of thirteen he was forced to leave school owing to poor health. He early developed a love for study and research. His wish always was to follow in the footsteps of his forefathers and become a physician. No opportunity offered itself until at the age of thirty-four, when he entered the Chicago College of Dental Surgery. Graduating as a D. D. S., on April 2, 1895, after a three-years course standing-tie for second place in a class of one hundred and twenty-five students.

The Western Electrician said at the time of her death:

“The announcement of the death of Mrs. Davies will be received with regret. Mrs. Davies belonged to a distinguished family, and was a grand-daughter of the distinguished American chemist, Dr. Samuel Guthrie, of Sacket's Harbor, N. Y. From her childhood she was greatly interested in scientific subjects, and in late years gave particular attention to electricity and chemistry. She proved a valuable assistant to Prof. Davies in all his researches and experiments. In 1885-6, in company with her husband, she visited

Europe, and met many distinguished scientists, among them, Sir William Thomson, and Lady Thomson. On her return from Europe her health failed, and she grew gradually worse until last Spring, when she underwent a surgical operation. She never rallied, but sank rapidly. Mrs. Davies had been a lady of great personal beauty, as well as rare accomplishments. She bore her sufferings with great fortitude; and died, as she had lived, a devout Christian.'

The following is from the Chillicothe Gazette:

“A large and cultivated audience gathered at the Third Presbyterian church last evening, to witness the Elocutionary Entertainment of Mrs. Anna Guthrie Cole, of Parkersburg, West Va. It is impossible to give a detailed account of her style and method. It is sufficient to say that her true artistic instinct was everywhere apparent, and that her command over her vocal organs was simply wonderful. ‘The Echo,’ and the ‘Ferry,’ which was perhaps the most difficult of her selections, brought out her powers very fully, and the applause that followed it was sufficient testimony of the audience’s appreciation.”

IN MEMORIAM.

Like a flash of lightning in a clear Summer sky came the announcement to the people of this beautiful little city—Wednesday morning, May 28, that Mrs. C. T. Brady had died. At half-past nine o'clock on Tuesday evening, her attendant physician, Dr. Arthur Conrad, saw her and found her condition entirely satisfactory. She was bright, cheerful, and hopeful, spoke tenderly, lovingly of her future in her new home, surrounded by her family, a devoted husband, and three dear little children. Her husband bade her "Good Night," and peace and quiet reigned over the Rectory.

At half-past eleven Mrs. Brady awoke and said to the nurse who was sitting by her bed-side, "Call Mr. Brady, I'm going." Mr. Brady was called, came immediately into the room only to find her insensible, indeed passing away. There was no one with her when she died but Mr. Brady and the nurse. It is thought she recognized her husband, if she did, it was only made perceptible by a slight pressure of the hand. In five minutes after she awoke from what was seemingly a healthful sleep, she was sleeping the sleep that knows no waking, and thus quietly, peacefully, in keeping with her own beautiful life, she "entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God that shall be forever."

The immediate cause of her death was a clot of blood that had formed in or about the heart, an ailment not incident to child-birth, but one that might come to any one at any moment. Neither human skill nor human love could have averted this terrible bereavement. Drs. Conrad and French were summoned by telephone and came immediately. Every thing their skillful knowledge could think of was done, but it was too late, the vital spark had gone out forever. Mrs. Brady's body was in darkness, her spirit in the realms of eternal light.

It was the writer's privilege to know her well. She was a member of his family, loved and respected as one of his own children. Beautiful in character as she was in person.

"A perfect woman, nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort, and command,
And yet a spirit warm and bright,
With something of an angel light."

A mind stored with everything that was pure and good an intellect cultivated and refined, a personality that made itself loved and remembered wherever it was seen and known, it seems very hard that in the Spring-time of life she should be called hence, and that hearts in which she was enshrined should sit in sadness and sorrow, and mourn because she is not.

Mrs. Brady was a devoted mother, a loving and affectionate wife, a help-mate in every deed and act of her life to her husband, always ready with a word of encouragement, an apposite quotation, or a kindly suggestion about, or a criticism of his ministerial work. Deeply attached to the Episcopal church of which she was a member, Trinity Memorial church of this city had a tender place in her heart now so still and quiet. Though she was an Episcopalian, there was nothing sectarian about her, nor was she at all bigoted. Anything that had for its object the advancement of Christ's kingdom, the better and clearer development of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man had her hearty, cordial and sincere support.

Mrs. Brady was a poetess of rare merit, but in her this was a flower that was "born to blush unseen," because she seldom allowed her poetry to be published. How beautiful was the poem she wrote for Easter and printed in the supplement of the Reaper.

"Something else that Christ has worn." Aye, white robes, and Sidney is wearing them to-day.

On Christmas, 1886, she presented to her husband a book in which in a poetical gem she wrote she concluded with the following:

"In all things beautiful and dear,
Told as you love to read them here,
May some small voice of your well loved sea
Fail not to speak a word of me."

It will be remembered that Mr. Brady is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, and the allusion to the sea in the above will then be understood.

"To speak a word of me." Aye, daughter, as the years glide by and memory calls to our minds your physical and mental perfections, the loveliness of your personal character, your many womanly attributes, and everything else that contributed in you to make the loving wife, the affectionate mother, and the darling daughter, we will think of you, and as we gather round the family hearthstone you shall be with us in spirit though your glorified body is sleeping the years of your young womanhood away in the Riverside Cemetery, near this pleasant little city.

This morning just before the interment, Dean Gardner, of Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, baptized the new-born babe, it's name, Sidney Guthrie Brady, being given by Mrs. Southwick Guthrie, of Washington City. Mrs. Brady's mother. It was an impressive sight, one that will never be forgotten by those who were present. One Sidney Guthrie Brady lying still and quiet in her last home covered with beautiful flowers that loving friends had sent, her life ended and her work done; another Sidney Guthrie Brady in the morning of life with all its pleasures and pains, before him. Can we tell which is the better off, the one that has just gone or the one that has just come?

At ten o'clock Trinity Memorial church was filled with the sympathizing friends of the family. The solemn burial service was read by Bishop Worthington, Canon Doherty and Rev. John Hewitt participating. The choir of the church sang with much feeling the music incident to the service, also that grand old hymn "Rock of Ages," and "Abide with Me." Evidence of the high estimation in which this lady was held, was given by the fact that there was not a dry eye in the church. From the grey-headed grandsire, who perhaps missed some of his own loved ones, down to the little children, members of the little guild, came touching sobs of grief and many tears were shed.

None knew her but to love her,
None named her but to praise.

The services at the church over, the solemn cortege made its way to Riverside Cemetery, and there, in a beautiful lot overlooking this city which she had learned to love so dearly, and in which she was so dearly beloved, we left her whom we mourn so deeply. Mrs. Brady's friends in this city, Omaha and Wilber, sent exquisitely beautiful flowers. The casket was covered with them and they were put away with her, some of them were used in decorating the chancel and altar of the little church.

From the time the final summons came until our darling was placed in her last home a sympathy has been extended to this bereaved family, assistance never equaled under similar circumstances has been rendered and whatever human hearts or hands could suggest or do, has been done to mitigate this great sorrow. The writer has been in many places where has been much of sadness and sorrow, but has never seen the generous sympathetic kindness of the good people of Crete equaled. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me." Mr. and Mrs. Southwick Guthrie, of Washington City, and Mr. Grant Guthrie, of Harrison, Neb., father, mother and brother of Mrs. C. T. Brady, and Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Brady, and Mr. Cyrus Townsend, of Leavenworth, Kansas, father, mother and uncle of Mr. C. T. Brady, came to this city to do honor to her whom they love and mourn.

There is a lesson in this sorrow. Her life teaches the beauty of the religion she professed. God grant that we may profit by it so that, when we shall have served thee in our generation, we may be gathered unto our fathers, having the testimony of a good conscience, in the communion of the Catholic church, in the confidence of a certain faith; in the comfort of a reasonable, religious and holy hope; in favor with Thee, our God, and in perfect charity with the world.

The visiting friends will go to their respective homes.

The duties of life call them there. Part of their hearts is left here. The newly-made mound in the cemetery will be ever present to them. Daughter, wife and mother, Sidney, farewell.—J. E. Brady, in the State Vidette, of June 12, 1890.

The following poem was written by Mrs. Brady a few weeks before her death:

EASTER DAY.

Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself and saith unto Him, Master. John xx: 16.

“Mary!” Gently ringing down the ages,
Over holy land and storied sea;
Folded too within our Bible pages,
Comes our Saviour’s voice to you and me.

Do our hearts in glad surprise beat faster?
Will we turn from all earth’s joys and needs?
Answering only, simply, humbly, “Master?”
Happy just to follow where He leads,

“The Lord is risen.” And clustered lilies standing,
All pointing upward seem the path to show,
And glorious song and Christ himself commanding,
Make heavenward, look the easiest way to go.

But oh my sisters, oh my toiling brothers,
Yet pause a little on this radiant morn,
And in the pathway trodden by our mothers,
There rises something else that Christ has worn.

A crown of thorns! But, taken with His meekness,
It will not pierce;—“the shadows flee away,”
And tear-dimmed eyes shall see, past mortal weakness,
The dawn of an eternal Easter day.

—Sidney.

History of the Descendants

...of...

Robert Guthrie

...by...

Mrs. Martha Guthrie Doughty Lyster.

The family of Guthrie is of Saxon descent. The name has been extant since about 1200. The patent of nobility is in Castle Stirling.

There are five crests of the Guthrie family, four Scotch, and one English.

Copy of a letter from George Wilkins Guthrie, Esq., of Pittsburg, Pa., dated June 29, 1893, to Mrs. William J. Lyster, nee Miss Martha Guthrie Doughty, wife of Colonel William J. Lyster, late Colonel of the Ninth United States Infantry. Mrs. Lyster is an own cousin of George W. Guthrie:

MY DEAR MARTHA:—

In 1872, Uncle James Guthrie sent to my father (John B. Guthrie), a paper in the hand-writing of his grand-father, John Guthrie, and it was indorsed in the hand-writing of his father, James Verner Guthrie, showing the descent of the Guthrie family from one Robert Guthrie, who was born in the City of Derry, Ireland. In his letter Uncle James said, "There was another letter or record containing the Scotch Guthrie branch back to 1702 in Scotland, before leaving for Ireland, but I cannot find it, which I very much regret." The paper which I have is in the hand-writing of John Guthrie, our great grand-father, and indorsed in the hand-writing of James Verner Guthrie, our grand-father, and dated 1807. It begins with Owen Dougherty, of Cardonough, County Donegal, Ireland, who is said to have been engaged in the wars; to have been blind for fifteen years, and then to have recovered his sight, and to have died at the age of 120 years. He left two sons, (1) Edward, commonly called "Eman Mone," on account of his remarkable size and strength, and (2) John, and four daughters, (1) Rose, (2) Bridget, (3) Sarah, and (4) Mary. Bridget Dougherty was born in Donegal, Cardonaugh County, in 1711. She married Robert Guthrie in 1736. Their first son, Robert, was born in 1737; their second son, James, in 1739; and a daughter, Jane, in 1741 (the daughter died when she was three years of age). Robert Guthrie, born perhaps 1700, even earlier, and his son, Robert, came to America in 1744, and were followed by his wife and son, James, in 1745. They settled and lived for three or four years in Philadelphia, and from there removed to Lancaster, Pa., where John Guthrie was born Jan. 11, 1749. When John was a year old they moved to Carlisle, Pa., and there they had a daughter, Margaret, who was born May 6, 1753.

James Guthrie, the second son of Robert and Bridget, died in 1763; Robert, the father, died in 1782, and Bridget, the mother, in 1794.

John Guthrie was married to Sarah Davis; in 1775; Margaret Guthrie was married to George Brown, in 1774, and had a son called George, in 1775, and died in Carlisle, in 1795.

Robert Guthrie, the eldest son of Robert and Bridget, died in Pittsburg, in 1804. John Guthrie and Sarah his wife, had the following children:

1.—Robert, b. in Carlisle, Feb. 15, 1776.

- 2.—James, b. in Carlisle, June 27, 1778.
- 3.—Margaret, b. in Carlisle, Nov. 16, 1781.
- 4.—Prudentialis, b. in Annapolis, May 4, 1789.
- 5.—Sarah, b. in Unity Township, Westmoreland County, April 4, 1792.
- 6.—Eleanor, b. in Meadville, Crawford County. Aug. 27, 1797.
- 7.—John, b. near Meadville, Nov. 3, 1800.

John Guthrie was a Lieutenant in Colonel Broadhead's Regiment of the Pennsylvania Line. This I learned from my father who told me so on several occasions, and the information is corroborated by the fact that he was at his death buried with military honors, which would not have been done if he had not been an officer in the army. After the war, John Guthrie served in the Border Troubles for two years, and was appointed by Washington, a Captain of the Army for his distinguished services, but he declined the appointment. John Brandon was a Lieutenant in the New Jersey Line, and was wounded at the Battle of Monmouth.

The letter in possession of George W. Guthrie, of Pittsburg, is yellow with age, and is carefully kept in a safe in his office.

Captain John Guthrie was with Colonel Broadhead's Expedition against the Six Nations. He was in Morgan's Rifle Command, and with Massey Harbison in the Border Troubles. An account of his Company of Rangers is given by Massey Harbison, in his "Narrative of Sufferings from Indian Barbarity." In Pennsylvania Archives can be found a list of the officers of the Westmoreland Company, who were with him. Captain John Guthrie was Captain of the Westmoreland Company. In Pennsylvania Archives also N. S. Vol. iv, P. 64, is a Muster and Inspection Roll of Captain John Guthrie's Company in the War of 1812, inspected July 12, 1812. He was appointed and confirmed a Captain in the Regular Army by Washington, but declined it. On the Regular Army list of appointments is the name of John Guthrie, Ensign, 1775-6, (Hammersley's List).

Captain John Guthrie, third son of Robert Guthrie, Sr., was born Jan. 11, 1749, in Lancaster. Pa. He married Sarah Davis in 1775, and died in Pittsburg, Aug. 12, 1852.

The following is from the Pittsburg Gazette, of Friday, Aug. 17, 1852:

"Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilson and their large family connection are regarding the naval operations of the present crisis with deep interest. Their only daughter, Edith, a petite and charming young woman, married a few years ago, Ensign Wm. M. Crose, of the U. S. Navy. Mr. Crose was appointed from Indiana to Annapolis, and graduated fifth in his class of thirty-five. He is a fine-looking fellow, with a capacity for work which cannot fail to tell in his future career. Mr. Crose's first cruise was on board the "Marion," then one of the Asiatic Squadron, and the first U. S. warship to make a cruise among the Philippines. He has been all through Manila and the adjacent country to Java, Sumatra, and has explored Yokohama and the Yangtsekiang. He has cruised in Cuban waters, has been twice to Honolulu; and last year served his fourth detail in Alaska. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Crose was ordered to Sitka, Alaska, and Mr. and Mrs. Crose made the voyage their honey-moon trip. Their life there was a series of interesting experiences, and there their little daughter, Janet, a lovely curly-haired child was born. Mr. Crose last year was ordered to Seattle, expecting to cruise with the "Charleston," and Mrs. Crose, after a short visit in California, came to Cincinnati to be a guest of her mother until Mr. Crose was again on shore duty. The order, however, was changed, and such is the uncertainty, almost the worry of a sailor's life. Mr. Crose was sent back to Alaska. He is now on duty on the "Wheeling," at present anchored off Seattle, eagerly awaiting orders for a less peaceful service."

AN OLD TIME RELIC.

"Visitors to the Ladies' Centennial Festival will find in the log-cabin an old clock, one of those monster time-measures of the long box pattern. It has gone far into the second quarter of its second centennial and is still as perfect as the day its manufacturer pronounced it complete and ready for sale. The clock was a bridal present to Mrs. Mary McCord nee Graham, the great grand-mother of Mrs. G. W. Wilson. It was brought over from London in 1750, and counted the hours for its possessors who then resided in

New Jersey. After doing good service there it went with members of the family to Pittsburg in 1778, then to Urbana, Ohio, and from there to Cincinnati, where it now keeps time for Mr. Wilson's family. IN MEMORIAM.

“Carelessly taking up the newspaper the other evening in the twilight we were unexpressibly shocked to read the announcement of the death of Mrs. Mary Kilbreth, one of whom it has been our privilege long to know and to love. Mrs. Kilbreth was a woman of rare character; all who approached her felt she was no common person, wherever thrown, and whoever with her presence and her influence made a marked impression, and always for good. Sympathizing, charitable, firm, consistent, gentle, true, in her were united all the highest womanly attributes exhibiting that perfection of Christian and feminine character which is so strong and yet so tender. Her loss is one to be deeply felt not only by her family but by the community, and especially by the poor and all needing aid who may truthfully say, ‘they will not look upon her like again.’

“Mary Kilbreth, the subject of this memoir, wife of James P. Kilbreth, and daughter of James Verner and Martha (Brandon) Guthrie, was born in Pittsburg, March 24, 1817. She was married to her now bereaved husband, Aug. 4, 1834. She removed at once to Cincinnati and up to July 18, 1871, the day of her death, resided there. While yet in school in Cincinnati she became a subject of saving grace and joined the Methodist Episcopal church at Wesley chapel, in Feb., 1832. Rev. Thomas A. Morris, now the venerable bishop, being at that time in charge. For more than thirty-nine years she remained a devoted member of the church of her early choice, exemplifying even the highest graces of Christian and cultivated womanhood. It would be difficult to exaggerate the estimate formed by the writer, of the noble qualities of this dear friend of thirty years, and this but agrees with the sentiment of the whole community in which she lived so many years. To the greatest gentleness she added a sterling firmness and dignity of character. She was at once the impersonation of strength and delicacy, tenderness and justice; graceful in manner and voice and person, unwavering in fidelity to her convictions of right, but acquiescent and yielding in things indifferent to serve the comfort and pleasure of others.

“Mrs. Kilbreth was ever ready to use her influence, which was never small, to promote kindness, harmony, and good will in all the circles in which she moved. Her example gave force to her charity. She wrote the foibles of her own friends in the sand, printed their virtues on the rock; none but the persistently perverse ever got beyond her forbearance and even then pity took the place of blame. Devotion to these humane and Christian enterprises which in her life she loved so well in her own church and outside of it, was a conspicuous feature of her character. To feed the hungry, clothe the naked, smooth the brow of pain, and to make the friendless feel there were some still to care for them, were high objects of her unselfish ambition. She was interested in everything calculated to win souls to the Saviour, but shrank from prominence for herself. With health undermined a score of years ago, and at times under great weakness and pain she ignored ease and the ample comforts of her own home, wherever want or suffering of mind or body called for succor or sympathy. It was among the tenderest of her griefs for more than a year past that failing health disabled her for an efficient part in these labors of love. She enjoyed the luxury of doing good. As to Mrs. Kilbreth’s religious character none could doubt but that she was one of the brightest jewels of the blessed Saviour. By nature so pure, so gentle, so conscientious, so free from envy, jealousy, ill-will or worldly vanity, her change from nature to a state of grace was scarcely visible to the naked eye. She was often throughout life harassed with sore temptations and doubts. Within the past several years, her religious comforts became more settled and uniform. Yet she could scarcely be led at any time to profess more than to say she 'rejoiced with trembling.' During the past year especially, has she given evidence in the midst of affliction of a growing trust in the blessed Saviour and a gracious strengthening of that hope which proved at last an 'anchor to the soul.'

"Mrs. Kilbreth's last hours came more suddenly than her friends expected, notwithstanding the warnings of Providence for some time past. For months prior to her death, an occasional remark dropped from her lips, indicating her own apprehensions that the end was not far off. A more than usual solicitude for her husband and children during the past month was in many touching ways frequently expressed. When three days before her death intense pain called for use of powerful remedies a semi-delirium soon followed and continued with some intermissions up to the closing hour. Satisfactory conversation became difficult. But during the brief hours spontaneously and in answer to questions, especially on the night preceding her death, she expressed herself in terms of sweet resignation and holy trust. At one time reviving as from a reverie she repeated that touching expression of trust in Christ:

" 'Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me.'

"The most emphatic and among the last of her utterances was the beautiful verse of which she repeated:

" 'Jesus protects, my fears are gone,
What can the Rock of Ages more?
Safe in thine arms, I lay me down
Thine everlasting arms of love.'

"In the death of our dear friend a key-stone has been removed from the domestic arch, a strong and beautiful column from the social edifice, a comely and loving disciple from the bosom of the church. Many hearts besides those most saddened deeply feel the stroke. But shall we therefore complain? We dare not, while we sorrow, we must likewise rejoice. She has gone to the land of the immortals to join many loved ones, and to await the coming of those who now weep. May her dear ones follow the bright path she has left into the heaven to which she has ascended."—R. S. Foster, Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1871.

From the Cincinnati Press:

"Died on Tuesday morning, Dec. 29, 1857, at his residence in Newport, Ky., Captain Presley N. Guthrie, aged thirty-eight years.

"The funeral ceremonies of Captain Presley N. Guthrie, late of the United States Army, will take place this afternoon at half-past two o'clock as appointed. The funeral arrangements are in the hands of the 'Guthrie Grays,' who have made all the necessary preparations. The Newport Barracks turn out a company of the United States troops, who in connection with the Rover Guards, will attend as mourners. The Masons and Odd Fellows will be in attendance and the probability is that the ceremonies will be large and imposing.

"Captain Guthrie was beloved by all who knew him and probably at this moment a brief history of his career would not be devoid of interest to many of our readers.

"Presley Neville Guthrie was born Aug. 1, 1819. From his youth upward he evinced great interest in military affairs and early in life joined the Dequesne Grays of Pittsburg which corps he subsequently commanded. On March 4, 1847, he was appointed a captain of the Eleventh Regiment, United States Infantry, the country being then at war with Mexico, and with four other companies of his regiment he landed at Vera Cruz in June the same year, and marched with reinforcements under command of the gallant Major Lally, fighting their way to the City of Puebla, where they joined General Scott. Left Puebla in Aug., 1847, for the City of Mexico, his regiment being then in command of

WILLIAM W. GUTHRIE.

CAPT. PRESLEY N. GUTHRIE.
COL. JAMES V. GUTHRIE.

Lieutenant Colonel W. Graham. He participated in the actions of Aug. 18, and 19, before Contreras and Churubusco. For his gallant conduct in these actions he was promoted. At the desperate battle of El-Molinos-del-Rey he was dangerously wounded, having been twice shot down while leading on his men. This action alone was sufficient to shed a halo upon his name that will endure as long as the granite hills of his native state. Here it was that the gallant Colonel Graham was killed, together with all the commissioned officers of the Eleventh Regiment. After peace had been declared Captain Guthrie returned to his family then residing in Pittsburg, where his regiment was disbanded and he retired to private life. The Legislature of his native state passed resolutions expressive of gratitude for his chivalric conduct upon the battle-fields of Mexico. About this time he removed to Cincinnati, Ohio.

“His military spirit was not yet subdued, and he there joined a volunteer company subsequently taking command of a new corps, who showed their appreciation of his conduct by taking upon themselves the name of ‘Independent Guthrie Grays.’ To the advancement of the interests of this company he devoted all his military talent and imbued its members with an es-prit de corps that has rendered it one of the first companies of America.

“When the Indian War broke out in the Territories of Washington and Oregon, Congress authorized the permanent organization of two additional regiments of infantry, and President Pierce knowing the merit and capacity of Captain Guthrie, immediately sent him a captain's commission in the Ninth Regiment United States Infantry.

“In the Fall of 1855, the troops received orders and immediately sailed for the seat of war. During one of the campaigns Captain Guthrie was seized with paralysis, which disabled him from active service for nearly six months. But like the caged eagle his fiery spirit chafed at the inactivity which his illness imposed upon him, and he resumed his command when but partially recovered. The severity of the climate however proved too much for a constitution already impaired by wounds and disease, and he returned home that he might die in the bosom of his family, soothed in his last moments by affectionate brothers and sisters and a loving wife and children. His deportment in his last moments were such as befitted a brave and good man who had dedicated his life to the service of his country. Being sensible of his dissolution he put his house in order and awaited the summons of that mighty commander, Death. His last request was that his body be followed to the grave by that corps, which in life had been so dear to him—the company bearing his name.

“No praise, no honor can move him now.

“‘Can stoned urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honor’s voice provoke the silent dust
Or flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?’

“Yet while his soul has returned to God who gave it, his fame is his country’s, and his early death will long be mourned by his friends.”

Captain Robert Bruce Guthrie, seventh child of James Verner and Martha (Brandon) Guthrie, was born Feb. 4, 1822; married Catherine McKee, April 22, 1850. She was born Aug. 29, 1829, daughter of Alexander McKee, of McKee’s Rocks, Pittsburg, Pa. These Rocks were famous as the burial-place of the Indians.

Catherine (McKee) Guthrie died April 8, 1866; Robert Bruce Guthrie died Oct. 1, 1874.

From a Pittsburg paper, Oct. 3, 1874:

OBITUARY.

“The many friends of Robert B. Guthrie in this city will regret his demise, which occurred at his residence at McKee’s Rocks, on Thursday. Mr. Guthrie is well known as an old citizen of Pittsburg, having been born on Fifth Avenue in 1822, where he resided for some thirty-five years. When the Mexican War broke out he enlisted in the Duquesne Grays, and served for some time as orderly sergeant. However falling sick at Vera Cruz, he was compelled to relinquish service, and receiving his discharge, returned home. During the Civil War he served as captain of one of the United States supply-boats running between Cincinnati and Memphis.

“About fifteen years ago he retired to his farm, consisting of about two hundred acres at McKee’s, where he has resided ever since. His wife has been dead for the past seven years, but he leaves a family of six children, with whom a large circle of friends join in mourning his loss.”

IN MEMORIAM.

At a meeting of the school held Wednesday morning, Dec. 2, 1896, the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That inasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God in His wisdom to remove from earthly life our beloved friend and former school-mate, Kenneth Graydon Painter, we are here met together to record our deep sympathy with his afflicted parents and our own sense of personal loss.

Resolved, That in his course here, in his unselfish devotion to school interests and in his loyalty to the school, he set us a worthy example to follow.

Resolved, That in his patient struggle without murmuring, during his long illness, he has set forward the true standard of goodness and left us all a precious legacy for our encouragement.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be printed in the next number of Hermes.

OBITUARY.

Kenneth Graydon Painter, was born May 22, 1878, in Alleghany City, Pa., and died there Nov. 21, 1896. The illness that eventually caused his death was due primarily to a severe fall from horseback, when Kenneth was eleven years of age. He had, however, apparently escaped all evil consequences of this accident and attended subsequently the Shady-Side Academy, of Pittsburg. He came to Belmont in 1893, entering the Fourth Form and was therefore a member of the class of 1896. Of a quick, impetuous nature, Kenneth fretted at first under the restrictions of boarding-school life, and it was not until his election to the board of Hermes, in the Spring of '95, and later to the foot-ball team that his spirit found its legitimate environment. His physical strength, however, was not as great as his intellectual. His work on the school paper, and the readiness and ease with which he successfully mastered difficulties in his studies, particularly in the advanced mathematical courses, gave indication of an intelligence above the average. His power of discrimination was excellent, his observation quick and accurate. His rank in scholarship was good, but his ability always surpassed his rank in school. He seldom worked up to his full limit. Kenneth had passed his preliminaries for Harvard in 1895, and was preparing for his finals in 1896, when early last April he was taken ill and forced to leave the school, expecting at that time, simply to postpone his examinations until the Fall. During the last two months of the scholastic year, although he then knew well the nature of his trouble, and had abandoned all idea of going to college, he continued to write for the school paper and to manifest the greatest interest in Belmont's affairs. Gradually, too, perhaps almost unconsciously, the awful truth must have dawned upon him during this last Summer in some of his lonely hours, but his brave spirit showed no sign of fear. He murmured not. His letters during this period were full of hope and of interest in others. He spoke little of himself. He wrote a story for his dear Hermes at this time. He was particularly concerned, as the time approached, about the result of the "Milton game." Every true Belmont boy will appreciate this sentiment. And there is something strangely pathetic in the fact that his death occurred at five o'clock on the morning of the Milton game (in which he himself had participated just one year before), and that the Hermes, containing his last story had just reached his bedside in time to greet his dying eyes.

Surely his simple earnest life tells us all another story, too deep for words. "In your patience possess ye your strength;" "Fortiter occupa Portum;" these sentiments found in Kenneth a fitting example, and we believe he has at last entered the gates of "The Heavenly Jerusalem" that he learned to love so well.

EDITORIAL.

It is our mournful task to record the death of Kenneth Graydon Painter, the former editor of this paper and our first graduate editor. He was elected to the staff of HERMES in May, 1895, and proved himself an unselfish and efficient worker. Even after he was forced to leave school in April, 1896, by the illness, which has so soon proved fatal, he continued to send us contributions. A peculiarly sad interest will always be attached to his last story, which appeared in the first number of this current volume and which as Graduate Editor, he wrote on his sick bed in Alleghany City. And it is gratifying to know that he was able to read it in HERMES before the end came. Kenneth's interest in the paper was unaffected. As a writer of stories, his style was lucid and his descriptions lively and vivid, possessing that charm of originality to be expected only from older pens. Nor was this all. His translations from the French were among the best that have appeared in HERMES, his editorials were always sound and his reports of school contests most complete and satisfactory. His ability gave promise of a brilliant literary career in college, had his life been spared to its fulfillment. As editors of the little paper Kenneth loved so well, we extend to his afflicted family our most heartfelt sympathy.

Martha Guthrie, eighth child of James Verner and Martha (Brandon) Guthrie, was born in Pittsburg, Pa., May 17, 1824. She married William McDowell Doughty, Nov. 16, 1843. He was born in Pittsburg, Nov. 1, 1819, died Jan. 16, 1882. He was the son of Charles and Mary (McDowell) Doughty. His parents resided after leaving Pittsburg on the Kentucky side of the Ohio, at Newport. The old homestead still stands on the high bluff over-looking the beautiful river.

Martha Doughty is a lovely dainty woman, active in mind and body. She resides with her children, who are devoted to her and each claim her in turn as a privilege.

William McDowell Doughty was a large fine looking man, strong and manly in appearance. His hair a beautiful chestnut, curled and waved away from his face. His eyes were blue, small but clear and merry. He was well proportioned, dignified, without pomp, quiet and gentle, yet fond of a joke and could tell a good story, he was one of nature's noblemen. He had a sweet tenor voice, and composed a number of songs which were published by Frederic Root, of Chicago, a personal friend. He was quite an author, writing many articles for publication. He was a member of the Methodist church in Cincinnati and afterwards in Chicago; was the first general agent of the Methodist Book Concern, and the publisher of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, both of which he started in Chicago. He was one of the founders of the handsome Methodist church built on Wabash Avenue, associated with him in church and social work were Orrington Lunt and George Cook. He bought for the Book Concern a piece of property on Washington Street; established the firm and built for those days, the fine four-story building afterward occupied by the firm.

Inducements were offered him to return to Cincinnati and become a partner with his brother-in-law, James P. Kilbreth, in stocks and bonds, here he remained for some time, but unfortunate speculations caused the dissolving of this firm, and being offered the general agency of the Home Life Insurance in Cincinnati, he accepted and retained the agency until his death. He died at his residence on Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, Ohio, and was buried in Wesleyan Cemetery. His peace was with God.

DOUGHTY RECORD.

William McDowell Doughty, was the son of Charles Morris and Mary (McDowell) Doughty, who were married Aug. 18, 1812, in Alleghany, Pa. Charles Morris Doughty was born July 16, 1791, in Wileys Ferry, Pa. Mary McDowell was born Nov. 7, 1794, in Maryland. She was of the historical Scotch family of McDowell. He died Feb. 9, 1847, in Arkansas. She died Aug. 16, 1849, at Newport, Ky. He was a fine looking man, a gentleman of the old school. A portrait now in possession of his grand-son, Charles L. Doughty, of Cincinnati, represents him in the dress of the day, full ruffled shirt and cuffs of fine white embroidered lawn. A portrait of his wife gives a very pretty face, with lovely dark brown eyes and hair, and quaint dress.

Charles Morris Doughty, was the son of Christopher and Margaret (Morris) Doughty. She was of the family of Morrisania Manor and Morristown, N. Y., descended from William Morris, of Monmouthshire, England. Christopher Doughty was the son of Christopher and Elizabeth (Carman) Doughty. Christopher, Sr., was the son of John and Hannah (Sleigh) Doughty, grand-son of Charles and Elizabeth (Jackson) Doughty, and great grand-son of Elias and Sarah (Francis) Doughty. Elias was the son of Rev. Francis Doughty, who came to America, landed at Plymouth in 1630. He died in Pawtuxent, Md., in 1648. He was of the noble house of Doughty, 1066, and of the younger branch of the English family of Doughty, of Boston, Lincolnshire, England. Elizabeth Jackson was the daughter of Colonel John Jackson, Colonel of Militia and Judge of Common Pleas, member of Provincial Congress, and grand-daughter of Robert Jackson, who was one of the members who promulgated the "Dukes Laws" in 1665, which governed the colony.

Martha Guthrie Doughty, daughter of William McDowell and Martha (Guthrie) Doughty, was born in Cincinnati. She married Colonel William J. Lyster, of the United States Army, Jan. 8, 1873, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

From papers of the day:

"St. John's church was the scene of a distinguished wedding at five o'clock, yesterday afternoon, and was filled by a large number of invited guests. The groom was Brevet Colonel William J. Lyster, United States Army, Captain of the Nineteenth Infantry. The bride, Miss Doughty, of our own city. The bridesmaids were Miss Guthrie and Miss Harrison, both of Cincinnati, who were attended by Colonels Mansfield and Whelan, the former of the Engineer Corps, and the latter of the Cavalry, and like the bridegroom, in the full new and brilliant dress uniform of the service which presented a charming ensemble.

"The ceremony was performed by Right-Rev. McCosky, Episcopal Bishop of Detroit, the home of Colonel Lyster, in a manner that was impressive without being funeral, a something in which many of our ministers might imitate their hearty superior.

"Colonel Lyster, who was stationed here for a year or more and won the esteem of all who value the high qualities that go to make up a model soldier and gentleman, will at the close of his bridal-tour join his regiment.

"Miss Mattie G. Doughty, eldest daughter of Wm. Doughty, of Cincinnati, is the beautiful Miss Doughty, so well known as being one of the most beautiful and popular young ladies both here and in Chicago, and who will be sadly missed by her friends and the church of which she has but lately connected herself and who has endeared herself to all by her unassuming manners and kindness of heart.

MRS. MARTHA GUTHRIE DOUGHTY LYSTER.

“She was elegantly attired in white satin and the usual accompaniment of orange blossoms, veil, etc., and carried an ivory prayer-book, the gift of the groom. The Right-Rev. Bishop, of Michigan, came from Detroit especially to unite his young friend to the object of his choice. After the wedding, a grand reception was given at the residence of the bride. When after the festivities of the evening were over, the happy pair took the ten o'clock train for Detroit, commencing a bridal-tour of some extent and then join the colonel's regiment. May their lives be one continuous stream of happiness.”

Colonel William John Lyster, was born June 27, 1833, at Tecumseh, Mich. From the Watertown Daily Times, of June 24, 1897:

A MILITARY WEDDING.

THE COLONEL'S DAUGHTER.

LIEUT. DAVID G. SPURGIN WEDS MISS AILEEN LYSTER.

Glowing June, the month of blushing roses, has become likewise, through custom long established, the month of bonny brides. The name of this genial month has grown to be associated in the mind of man with the joining of lives together after heaven's ordinance; it has become synonymous with matrimony.

The present June has been somewhat chary of her smiles, and far too lavish of her frowns. She has been prone to chill and to repel rather than to warm and thereby render joyous. The roses that ordinarily are in bloom at her out-setting this season blossom but over the newly dug grave into which she is soon to sleep. The elements have warred and the first month of the Summer time has been bleak.

But though not so vividly the month of roses as usual, June has still been the month of brides. While certainly regretting the accustomed warmth and sunshine, the brides have through all the happy weeks of June been stepping across the threshold of maidenhood into the broader and more earnest sphere of matrimony, for the traditions of past June times have served to envelop the present June with a glamor that for the greater portion of the fickle month's living has been but reflected glory of vanished days.

But for the past few days the month has been that for which brides have ever loved it. The sunshine, the rich vegetation, the bluest of skies and the balmiest of air have redeemed it for a multitude of errors, and it has been a happy season indeed. And it fell to the lot of a happy couple wedded at Sacket's Harbor last evening to have for their nuptial day one of the fairest and brightest of them all.

It was one of those peculiarly picturesque events, a military wedding. Though one can scarcely venture to deny the beauty and impressiveness of a civic ceremonial, there is, if anything, an added touch of that which evokes admiration when one of the brave, deserving of the fair, swears to protect her for all time before the eyes of his fellowmen. The natural surroundings lend a dignity and emphasis to the scene; the medals, the gold lace, the uniforms, themselves symbolic of gallantry, are brilliancy personified.

Such a scene was enacted last evening in storied old Sacket's Harbor, and the venerable hamlet witnessed an occasion which in point of feature surpassed the most of matrimonial functions. The gallant Ninth Infantry, stationed at Madison Barracks, did the honors, while the daughter of the colonel of the regiment became the bride of a nation's defender, and the daughter of a soldier became a soldier's bride.

The bride was Miss Aileen Lyster, the daughter of Colonel William John Lyster, in command of the Ninth United States Infantry, and the groom was Lieutenant David Gilbert Spurgin, of the Twenty-first United States Infantry, stationed at Plattsburg, N. Y. The wedding took place at Christ Episcopal church, at 8 p. m., in the presence of a company of invited guests which crowded the little edifice to the doors, the delicate evening gowns of the ladies with the gorgeous uniforms of the soldiery, and the sombre black and the glossed linen of the civilians, making a picture which it were necessary to see in order to appreciate.

It lacked but a half minute of 8, when the carriages containing the bridal party drove up to the church and the ceremony occurred promptly at the hour appointed. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Burr M. Weeden, rector of the church. The best man was Lieutenant Van Deman, of the Twenty-first Infantry. There were four groomsmen, Lieutenant Frank DeWitt Ramsey, of the Ninth, Louis H. Lewis, of the Ninth, Anton Springer, Jr., of the Twentieth-first, and Charles Crawford, of the Twenty-first.

The maid of honor was Miss Florence Lyster, of Detroit, a cousin of the bride. The bridesmaids also formed a quartet and were Miss Carita McFarland, sister of the Adjutant of the Seventh Infantry, of Denver, Col.; Miss Annie Doughty, of Cincinnati, a cousin of the bride; Miss Reta Spurgin, sister of the groom, and Miss Maud Lee, daughter of Captain Lee, of the Ninth Infantry.

A peculiar interest was given to the occasion by the fact that Colonel Lyster, who gave his daughter away, retires from the command next Sunday by operation of military law, he being 64 years of age on that day, and therefore being retired from active duty. The garrison will greatly regret his departure, for he is justly popular with all who occupy it.

The bride's gown was of white satin with old duchess lace, a family heir-loom. The bridesmaids were gowned in white organdie over white silk, and the costume of the maid of honor was of like material. The bride carried a bouquet of bride's roses and the maid of honor and bridesmaids also carried roses.

The church was beautifully trimmed with daisies, and those who have never beheld the modest graces of the field save as they blossom in their native heath could hardly believe that it would be possible to weave them into such graceful forms and fancies.

The groom, who is the son of Major Spurgin, of the Twenty-first, was in uniform as were his best man and groomsmen. Every officer in the regiment was in full regalia. The church was filled with invited guests, the enlisted men, all of whom were privileged to call this veritable "daughter of the regiment" a friend, being naturally given the preference over the townspeople.

The ceremony was performed with the impressive Episcopalian service, and its solemnity and beauty were not lost upon the wedding guests.

Just before the ceremony the groom and best man came from either side of the church and stood at the chancel rail. Then up the left aisle came the groomsmen, two by two, while the Ninth Infantry orchestra, stationed in the balcony, rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march. As the groomsmen approached the altar, they separated, and the bridesmaids, also two by two, passed through, and arranged themselves at the sides. The maid of honor followed, and the bride, on her father's arm, brought up the rear.

During the progress of the ceremony the orchestra rendered the beautiful intermezzo from "Cavaliere Rusticanna." At the completion of the marriage service, the bridal procession re-formed, with the bride and groom in front, then the maid of honor with the best man, with the four bridesmaids and the groomsmen bringing up the rear, the orchestra executing for the exit, the wedding march from Wagner's "Lohengrin."

The bride presented to the maid of honor and bridesmaids artistic hat-pins of gold, made in the form of military buttons. The groom gave the best man and groomsmen sets of sleeve-buttons of attractive design. Previous to the wedding procession, the groomsmen acted as ushers.

A pleasing gift of the bride's was a magnificent silver service presented by the Ninth Infantry. The couple were the recipients of many other valuable and useful remembrances.

Upon the completion of the ceremony the wedding party re-entered their carriages and were rapidly whirled to Dodge hall, where the reception took place, followed by dancing. Dodge hall, the scene of many a festivity in the past few years, was most charmingly decorated for the occasion, the evidence of the dainty touches of women's hands being everywhere visible. The national colors were there, and daisies, inter-woven in the loveliest of designs, entranced the eye. The orchestra was stationed upon the stage, which was tastefully decorated. There was a marriage-bell of daisies under which the couple stood to receive the congratulations of their friends.

And then followed the ball, opened by a waltz led by the bride and groom, with the best man and maid of honor and the groomsmen and bridesmaids. The bride danced the first six numbers when an interim occurred for supper.

The bride's table was set with the brightest of glittering silver, and the immediate bridal party occupied seats at it. Obeying a time-honored custom, the bride's cake was cut by the lady in whose honor it had been baked, and she drew forth from its mysterious depths the imbedded ring. Then the bride and groom left the hall, and a short time thereafter a shower of rice and old shoes followed the carriage which conveyed them away from the barracks. After an extended wedding trip Lieutenant and Mrs. Spurgin will reside at the barracks at Plattsburg.

After the departure of the bride and groom, the dancing continued until a late hour.

The general management of the affair devolved upon Lieutenant Ramsey, who is a right-hand man at the barracks upon occasions of this kind, guiding the program with the genius of a general. The genial lieutenant was in receipt of many congratulations upon the success and smoothness with which the affair began and culminated. It was a ceremonial which required the closest attention to the smallest details. Guards were stationed at the church doors and at Dodge hall, everything transpired at the appointed time, and there was a beautiful clockwork precision about the whole that displayed the fact that a triumph of military discipline can be scored in the arts of peace as well as in those of war.

Lieutenant Ramsey was ably seconded by many willing workers. Lieutenant Simpson had charge of the supper arrangements, being assisted by the ladies, and had reason to be proud of the execution of his commission. Lieutenant Finley had charge of the hall decorations, and Lieutenant Rethers those of the church, the ladies extending valuable and appreciated aid to both officers.

Lieutenant Ramsey gave the gentlemen of the bridal party a complimentary dinner at his quarters on Tuesday evening, and yesterday morning Miss Lee entertained the ladies at breakfast. The bridesmaids rendered valuable aid in trimming the church and the hall.

The following were among the wedding guests:

First Lieutenant David G. Spurgin, Twentieth Infantry, United States Army, was in the grand battle of July 1 and 2, at El Caney and San Juan, and served with distinguished bravery.

Colonel Lyster died at Sacket's Harbor, N. Y., where he had been stationed in command of the Ninth Infantry as its colonel at Madison Barracks. He was retired June 27, 1897, and being too ill to leave Sacket's Harbor, went to the Earl House, where he passed away ten minutes to twelve p. m., Sept. 3, 1897, just two months after his daughter's wedding, which took place in the beautiful little Episcopal church, which church her father was afterward buried from.

Colonel Lyster's brother officers were devoted to him, and on his retirement from service last June, the officers of the Ninth Infantry presented him with a great loving-cup, as a tribute of their affection.

The ceremony was a very touching one and occurred the day after Colonel Lyster was retired. The thirty officers of the regiment gathered at the quarters of their former commander, and placing the loving-cup on a silver salver that had in 1812, been presented to Colonel Lyster's grand-father, by his brother officers of the English army in recognition of his gallant services. Colonel Ewers, the lieutenant colonel of the Ninth, presented the regiment's testimonial to its retiring commander.

The following regimental order has been issued on the death of Colonel Lyster:

Headquarters Ninth Infantry,
MADISON BARRACKS, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1897.

General Orders,
No. 23.

It is with extreme regret that the regimental commander announces to the regiment the death, at Sacket's Harbor, N. Y., on the night of the 3rd instant, of their former commander, Colonel William J. Lyster (retired).

Colonel Lyster never recovered from the serious cold he contracted in the early Spring, and at the date of his retirement was too ill to undergo a journey to his home, but he unnecessarily vacated the quarters he was occupying at the post, to move to the adjoining village, of Sacket's Harbor, where he died.

The sympathy of the entire regiment is extended to the family of the deceased in their bereavement.

By order of Colonel Powell:

WENDELL L. SIMPSON,
First Lieutenant Ninth Infantry, Adjutant.

Commenting upon the sad event, the Oswego Palladium says, editorially:

"The sad announcement comes from Watertown, of the death at Sacket's Harbor, of Colonel William J. Lyster, who was lately retired from the command of the Ninth United States Infantry, on account of age. Colonel Lyster was well known to many Oswego people. He came here last year in command of his regiment to take part in the centennial celebration of the evacuation of Fort Ontario by the British, on which occasion many pleasant relations were established. He was a gallant soldier. He went to the front as a second lieutenant at the breaking out of the War of 1861. In less than a year he was made a captain for gallant and meritorious service at the battle of Shiloh. In September, 1863, he was brevetted major for gallant conduct on the field at Chickamauga. He became a brevet lieutenant colonel in 1864 for gallant conduct at Missionary Ridge, and on the march from Atlanta to the sea with Sherman. After the war he continued in the service and until his regiment came East was constantly in service on the frontier. He was in numerous Indian campaigns and was regarded by General Miles, in whose department he was, as one of his most competent commanders. The announcement of his death will be received with the keenest regret throughout the army and wherever the colonel was known."

The following is from the Watertown Daily Times, of Sept. 6, 1897:

A MILITARY FUNERAL.

AN IMPRESSIVE MARTIAL SCENE AT SACKET'S HARBOR.

HONORS TO COLONEL LYSTER.

The little village, of Sacket's Harbor, is a place where history has been born of the travail of events of national importance, yet perhaps it never beheld a more impressive sight nor one of greater melancholy dignity than the funeral of the late Colonel William J. Lyster, United States Army, which was held yesterday afternoon.

Shortly before 3 o'clock, the hour set for the funeral, the Ninth Infantry, headed by the band and under command of Lieutenant Colonel E. P. Ewers, marched from Madison Barracks to the Earl House, where lay the body of the deceased colonel.

The regiment was drawn up in a double line along the main street of the village in front of the hotel, and the band struck up a dirge. The casket was brought down stairs by the bearers and placed on the gun carriage, while the troops stood at attention, and the funeral cortege moved slowly toward the church.

The procession was led by Lieutenant Colonel Ewers and Adjutant M. L. Simpson, mounted. Next came the band, playing a dirge, and behind it marched the full regiment with Captain Bowman in command of the First Battalion, and Captain Baldwin in command of the Second Battalion. The men marched slowly, with furled colors, in "common time" to the slow music of the dirge, and, behind them followed the gun carriage, drawn by a team of service mules, on which was the casket containing the body of the deceased. The casket was draped in the American flag, and on its top rested the colonel's sword and helmet. By the side of the carriage walked the bearers: Sergt. Young, of Co. G, Sergt. Bleire, of Co. B, Sergt. Dotman, of Co. C, Sergt. McDermott, of Co. D, Sergt. Duncan, of Co. A, and Sergt. Leaback, of Co. F. Immediately behind the gun carriage containing the casket, followed the colonel's black charger, saddled and fully caparisoned and with spurred boots reversed in the stirrups. Next followed a carriage containing the pallbearers: Col. Powell, Maj. Morton, and Capts. Lee, Foote, Regan and Carpenter.

Behind this carriage followed the ones containing the clergyman and the mourners, Mrs. Lyster and son, Theodore; Col. Lyster's son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. Spurgin, of the Twenty-first Infantry, and wife; Mrs. Lyster, of Detroit, widow of Col. Lyster's late brother, and her daughter, Miss Florence Lyster; Mrs. Doughty, Mrs. W. J. Lyster's mother, and her daughter.

The funeral cortege halted in front of Christ church, and the soldiers stood at attention while the mortal remains of their late commander were borne into the church.

The chancel was beautifully decorated with flowers, and near the casket, supported by an easel, stood a beautiful floral piece, a shield with blue field and red and white stripes, surmounted by two crossed rifles. It was a testimonial from the officers of the Ninth, and in token thereof a floral figure 9, was suspended between the palm-leaf bayonets and the rifles.

The church-edifice was filled with people of Sacket's Harbor and Watertown, friends of the dead colonel. Rev. Burr M. Weeden, the pastor of the church, read the solemn and impressive Episcopal service for the dead, and Mr. D. K. McCarthy, of Syracuse, sung with touching effect two solos: "Jesus, Thou art Standing," and "Softly, Now the Light of Day,"

The casket was carried slowly, reverently to the gun carriage in waiting at the church door, and the march was resumed to the cemetery.

The regiment was drawn up in a long double line facing the grave, which was dug under the peaceful shade of four drooping willow trees, and was lined with evergreens, the bank beside it being covered with evergreens and roses.

The band played "Nearer, My God to Thee," as the bearers lowered the casket into the grave, and the pall-bearers, bearers, and orderlies stood with bare, bowed heads as the clergyman read the service at the grave.

There was a vast concourse of people, soldiers, civilians, villagers, mourners, and those who had come merely to observe a novel sight, but such was the impressiveness of the scene that a casual cough or whisper rang out as a vibrant note of discord on the serenity of a perfect autumn afternoon. All felt the solemnity of the occasion, and every word of the service could be heard on the outskirts of the crowd.

When the service was finished the crowd withdrew, and the regiment fired three volleys above the open grave. The three deafening volleys sounded as three single reports. Then a bugler sounded "taps" (lights out), the last night call, above the grave, and the regiment filed out of the cemetery at a quick step, keeping time to a lively air.

It was over. They had laid to rest all that was mortal of a good man and true, an officer and a gentleman in the best and truest sense, and as the sun that had shed its fullest glare upon the martial scene declined toward the Western horizon they turned their footsteps and their faces once more toward the work-a-day world. A little while they had stepped aside from the beaten path of routine. With heads bowed in sorrow they had marched to the solemn rhyme of a funeral dirge, followed to its last mortal rest the body of one they loved and honored. They had paid the last possible tribute of respect and veneration, and to the lively music of the band they marched briskly back to work and duty.

The funeral was a solemn and impressive one and withal a beautiful sight, and one which will linger long in the memories of those who witnessed it.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. DAVID G. SPURGIN.

Aileen Lyster Spurgin, only daughter of William J. Lyster, late Colonel of the 9th Infantry, and of Martha Guthrie Doughty, was born Nov. 14, 1873, at the home of her grandfather, William Doughty, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and here a great part of her youth was spent, divided between the frontier posts at which her father's regiment, the 19th Infantry, was stationed, and the home of her maternal grandparents. Here her school life was mostly spent, and many warm and enduring friendships were formed.

Coming to Plattsburgh with her parents in 1894 with the 21st Infantry, her girlhood and young married life has been spent amongst us, and we have learned to know and love Aileen, for her bright and cheerful disposition, for the perfect honesty and sincerity of her character, and above all, for that charity of spirit which never spoke an unkind word of anyone.

She was married to Lieut. David G. Spurgin, 21st Infantry, at Sacket's Harbor, June 23, 1897. Lieut. Spurgin is with his regiment, now on active service at Manila. Just two short years ago she was married, and now, on Friday, June 23, the second anniversary of her wedding day, she will be laid to rest in the quiet little military cemetery here.

Mrs. Spurgin was a devoted church member, and much interested in church work. She was for a time a member of the choir in the Episcopal church in the village. Beneath the silken folds of the regimental colors, this sweet young army girl was married, and now, in the same bridal robes, she sleeps the last quiet sleep of death. Not even the flowers that cover her fair cold form, seem as appropriate as those same stars and stripes beneath whose folds Aileen sleeps, for in the shadow of the flag she was born, lived out her young life, and now—rests forever.

LYSTER RECORD.

The family of Lister and Lyster is of great antiquity, and have held their possessions intact for seventeen generations.

Colonel William John Lyster, was the son of Rev. William Narcissus Lyster, an Episcopal clergyman, born in Sion, Wexford County, Ireland, March 5, 1805. He married Ellen Emily Cooper, of Bern, in Birch Grove, Wexford County, Ireland, March 5, 1832, came to America, and was rector of Trinity Episcopal church, Detroit, Mich. Rev. William Narcissus Lyster, was the son of William John Lyster, born Aug. 27, 1765; was a captain in the British Army, Eighth Grand Battalion. See Army list, 1817-1839. He married Martha Hatton, daughter of Mr. John Hatton, of Ireland. Captain Wm. J. Lyster, born in 1765, was the son of John, of Rock-savage, born March 30, 1725, lived at Wexford, married by special license, Jane Du Casse, Dec. 5, 1754. John, of Rock-savage, married Elizabeth, daughter of Dixie Coddington, Esq., of Holme, son of Thomas Lyster, of the Grange, who married Miss O'Kelly.

Grange, which was the first landed property of any consequence held by the family in Ireland, was in the hands of Thomas Lyster, of Grange, in 1704.

Thomas Lyster, was a grand-son of Walter Lyster, of West Riding, Yorkshire, England, who removed to Ireland about 1560. He was a descendant of John Lyster de Derby and Isabella, daughter and heiress of John De Bolton, 1312.

Charles Linton Doughty, eldest son of William McDowell and Martha (Guthrie) Doughty, was born in Cincinnati, married Anna Parvin, daughter of Holmes Parvin, Mr. Doughty is a courteous gentleman, is senior partner in the well-known publishing house of Parvin & Doughty. He is a leading member of the Methodist Episcopal church. In this church he had placed a handsome memorial window to the memory of his father, William McDowell Doughty, who was in his life-time also interested in this church. He is a member of the Apollo Club, of Cincinnati, as is also his sister, Harriet. A hospitable welcome greets every one who comes within his home circle, where he has a lovely wife and children.

Judge James Kilbreth Doughty, second son of William McDowell and Martha (Guthrie) Doughty, was born in Cincinnati. married Oct. 4, 1883, Minnie Brott. He was Judge of Probate, at Larned, Kan., and County Judge of Powers Co., Col. They had two children, Elizabeth, and Keen Dudley, who died in 1897, aged ten years.

From Powers County Paper, 1897:

“The death of Keen Dudley Doughty, a lovely boy of ten years, left his parents broken-hearted. He suffered greatly but was a hero in his hours of pain and anguish.”

Sarah Doughty, sixth child of William McDowell and Martha (Guthrie) Doughty, was born in Chicago, Ill., Oct. 21, 1856; married Charles Evans, who was Judge of Common Pleas for ten years in Cincinnati. They have one daughter, Maria, who graduated from Brown County Convent. Mrs. Evans died March 26, 1898.

From The Commercial Tribune, Wednesday, April 13, 1898:

MRS. SARAH D. EVANS.

The death of Mrs. Sallie D., wife of Judge Charles Evans, was a painful surprise. Few knew of the malady with which she patiently suffered in silence. Forecasting fatality, she disclosed the crisis to her daughter, gave maternal counsel and comfort—wifely comfort—to husband and expression to her wishes, and then, with fortitude, submitted to the knife. With high incentive to live, and radiant promise of usefulness, she died in her prime. Enriched with a superior voice, she was a charming conversationalist and singer, and her gifts were cheerfully bestowed upon friends, the interests of religion and philanthropy. As a Sunday-school teacher she fascinated children, as a choir soloist she added charm to worship. In all the suburban villages her name was an ointment poured forth. At Delhi, where she conducted a hospitable home, she reigned a social queen. Like the modest violet, she loved the shade, though capable of shining as a star. She joined the Methodist church in her maidenhood, and faith cheered her in the trial that closed her career. She married Judge Charles Evans, Sept. 12, 1878.

Her daughter, Marie, graduated last June, and promises to inherit her mother's virtues. She was born Oct. 21, 1856, and died March 26, 1898, leaving a mother, two brothers, three sisters, her husband and daughter to mourn her death. She was the daughter of Wm. M. and Martha Doughty.

Harriet Hollister, seventh child of William McDowell and Martha (Guthrie) Doughty, is a noted musician, a fine organist, and has the honor of being the only woman on the Board of Teachers of Music in the Cincinnati schools. Her fame as an organist is wide. She was for eleven years organist of Calvary church, Clifton, Cincinnati. Miss Doughty is a great social favorite.

Maria Cook Doughty, eighth child of William McDowell and Martha (Guthrie) Doughty, married Dr. Wm. C. Gorgas, now Major of the Regular Army United States. They have one daughter, Aileen Lyster.

Dr. William C. Gorgas, is Surgeon United States Army with rank of Major. He is an eminent surgeon and physician, and has gallantly offered his services to go to any yellow fever infected part of the country. He and his wife both were attacked with yellow fever while at Fort Brown, Texas, where Colonel Lyster and family were also stationed, and all had the fever except Mrs. Lyster.

During the late war he went as assistant surgeon United States Army on the hospital ship "Relief," being second in command. When he reached Santiago and Siboney, he was placed in charge of some of the fever camps. He contracted typhoid fever and returned on the hospital ship "Missouri." He was appointed chief surgeon in charge at Porto Rico, but as he has not yet recovered, the order has been changed.

Dr. William C. Gorgas, is the son of the late Colonel Josiah Gorgas, Ordnance officer of the United States previous to the Civil War, but at the breaking out of hostilities he left the service and went South with the Confederacy. His wife was Miss Gayle, daughter of Ex-Governor Gayle, at one time Governor of Alabama, well-known and of distinguished connections throughout the South. General Gorgas after the war resided in Tuscaloosa, Ala., until his death, where his widow, daughters, and son, Richard, reside.

Isabella Johnson Guthrie, ninth child of James Verner and Martha (Brandon) Guthrie, was born in Pittsburg, Pa., in 1827; she married Rev. Asbury Lowrey, D.D., Dec. 6, 1845. He was born at Goodwin's Point, on Cayuga Lake, N. Y., March 20, 1816, son of Rev. John and Mary (Mack) Lowrey.

The Rev. Asbury Lowrey resided in Germantown, Pa., with his wife and his daughter by his first wife, who was Miss Mary Connabla, descendant of Governor English, of New Haven, Conn. His daughter is Mary Frances, widow of James Jackson. They had two children: (1) Lowrey Jackson; (2) Isabella Jackson.

From the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Monday, August 8, 1898:

OBITUARY

The Rev. Asbury Lowrey, D.D., a prominent Methodist Episcopal clergyman, died at his home, 45 Phil-Ellena Street, Pelham, Germantown, on Friday night. He was born at Goodwin's Point, on the shore of Lake Cayuga, N. Y., in 1816, and received his early education in the common schools and the once famous Lima Academy in New York. He entered the Genesee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in 1838, and about a year later, at his own request, he was permitted to withdraw from the Conference, and went to Ohio, where, in 1840, he joined the Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church.

When the Ohio Conference was divided, by reason of its overgrowth, and the Cincinnati Conference was formed out of it, Dr. Lowrey was drafted with the Cincinnati Conference and remained a member until his death. He was a leader of the Conference, and frequently was a delegate to the General Conference. In 1856 he was a delegate to the Indianapolis Conference, and took a prominent part in the debate on "Slavery," which question subsequently divided the Methodist church, the Conferences of the South separating from the North.

Dr. Lowrey was a number of times selected a fraternal delegate of the General Conference to various representative Methodist Episcopal Conferences. In 1869 and 1870, he was sent as fraternal delegate to the Wesleyan Conferences in Canada, where he was received with distinguished consideration. During his connection with the Cincinnati Conference, Dr. Lowrey filled most of the prominent charges within the bounds, and was successively the presiding elder of every district in that Conference. During his early life, Dr. Lowrey was connected with the Wilberforce University, near Peoria, Ohio, established University, near Xenia, Ohio, established for colored men, and was at one time its president.

In 1874, Dr. Lowrey retired from active work in the ministry, and accepted the editorship of the Christian Standard, published in Philadelphia. His connection with the paper continued for about eighteen months. In the latter part of 1876 he went abroad, and, with his family, travelled through Europe, and the Holy Land. While visiting his sons, at the University at Leipsic, he made such an impression upon the students and professors, both German and English, that he was requested to act as chaplain, a position he was obliged to decline, owing to the fact that he could not conscientiously ask for the necessary license. In London he was introduced to the Wesleyan Methodists by Dr. Punshon and Dr. Jarvis Smith, who invited him to make the opening prayer at the China breakfast, the representative gathering of Methodists in England. The prayer offered, together with the sermon delivered in the City Road Chapter, the home of Methodism, and his address to the Wesleyan Conference, was largely instrumental in bringing about the present cordial relations between the home church and the church in the United States.

While in England Dr. Lowrey formed with the Rev. Asa Mahan, D.D., LL.D., the project of publishing a paper, afterward named Divine Life, and from 1878 to 1896 was engaged in editing and publishing that paper in New York City. In 1891 he suffered a stroke of partial paralysis, and after months of suffering he recovered sufficiently to continue the publication until 1896, when he dissolved connection with the paper and went to reside in Germantown.

Although he did not receive a college education, Dr. Lowrey was considered a remarkable scholar, especially in Greek and Latin. He published "Positive Theology," which was translated into various European languages, including Japanese; also "Possibilities of Grace."

In all his religious and other work he had the sympathy and effective cooperation of his wife. They travelled abroad together, and brought to bear upon their investigations and observations their combined intelligence; and we had abundant occasion to know that few travellers acquired more information or formed more judicious opinions than they.

It is not necessary to say to the Methodists of New York and vicinity, where they spent many years, that the presence of Dr. and Mrs. Lowrey at the various meetings which they attended, was always a delight. Their obvious concurrent sympathies and tastes, their stately dignity and serene but not gloomy gravity, and their attention to all the proceedings made them notable additions to the company.

Impressed with his dignity and noble physique, we have noted his slow decline. He has seemed like a tall oak gradually denuded of its branches, smitten by lightning, but still standing, scarce bowing to the storm.

A widow, Mrs. Isabella G. Lowrey; a daughter, Mrs. Mary L. Jackson, and two sons, Dwight M. Lowrey, of this city, and William K. Lowrey, a well-known Chicago lawyer, survive him.

The funeral service will be held this afternoon at his home in Germantown, and will be conducted by the Rev. Frank P. Parkin, D.D., pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church, of Germantown, assisted by the Rev. Dr. A. B. Leonard, a life-long friend. The remains will subsequently be taken to Cincinnati, where the funeral will take place on Wednesday, at St. Paul's church, and will be in charge of a committee of the Cincinnati Conference. Interment will be at Spring Grove.

Mary Hays Painter, daughter of Park and Eleanor (Guthrie) Painter (see Page 132), was born April 3, 1875; baptized in Trinity church, Pittsburg, June 30, 1875; confirmed in Trinity church, by Bishop Whitehead, D.D., April 3, 1892.

From the Pittsburg Dispatch, Thursday, Oct. 20, 1898:

WEDDED IN TRINITY.

ANOTHER FASHIONABLE WEDDING IN THAT OLD CHURCH

PROVES ONE OF THE SEASON'S PRETTIEST.

Old Trinity's chimes never rang for a prettier wedding than that of Mary Hays, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Park Painter, of Ridge Avenue, Alleghany, to Hartley Howard, Jr., yesterday at 12 o'clock noon. Rev. Alfred W. Arundel, D.D., rector of Trinity, officiating. The stately edifice was filled with an assemblage of the most fashionable people of the two cities and every detail of the wedding was perfectly carried out.

The period of expectancy between the arrival of the party and the procession to the altar was filled in with a brilliant programme of music rendered by Walter E. Hall. The decorations of the church were white chrysanthemums and palms, the latter gracefully grouped about the chancel and outlining a pathway for the bridal party to the altar. Large bunches of white chrysanthemums adorned the altar and interspersed the smilax festoons about the pulpit. The procession was led by the ushers, including S. W. B. Moorhead, W. J. Patton, Alexander Chambers, Albert Broadhead, of Bethlehem, Pa.; Percival Drayton, of Philadelphia; Starling W. Childs, Blair Painter and Harry G. McCandless. Following came the bridesmaids: Miss Eleanor Guthrie Painter, Miss Elizabeth Chambers, Miss Martha Warren, Miss Willa Forsyth, Miss Marion Leech, of Washington, D. C., and Miss Emily Baer, of Reading. The maid of honor, Miss Alice Blair Painter, immediately preceded the bride, the latter being conducted by her father. At the chancel rail the bridegroom and his best man, Alexander C. Howard, a brother, awaited their coming.

Certainly a more beautiful and picturesque wedding never has been seen in Trinity. The bride, the point of beauty from which the lesser lights reflected, wore a gown of moire peau de siene, the latest Paris fabric, made specially for brides and brought over a few months ago in anticipation of the occasion by an Alleghany importer. The skirt was fashioned with full court train and the bodice high, with a yoke and bertha of pointe applique lace. The bridal veil was fastened with a crown of orange blossoms, from the center of which rose a white aigrette. She carried a bouquet of Kaiserene roses.

The gown worn by the maid of honor was white silk, embroidered in pink rosebuds, with revers and belt of rose-pink velvet. Her hat was a Virot pink velvet, slightly suggestive of the empire period, with its spiral bows of black velvet and stoles of pink satin, which hung straight down the back. This effect was heightened by the real renaissance lace which trimmed her gown, completing one of the prettiest and most picturesque costumes imaginable. She carried white chrysanthemums, tied with pink ribbon. The bridesmaids' gowns were of coral pink silk, with insertions of renaissance lace and tiny ruffles edged with narrow black velvet. The bodices opened both front and back over a V-shaped yoke of white shirred chiffon bordered with lace. There were numerous other intricacies about them. The ensemble effect was quaintly graceful and picturesque. The costumes were completed by broad Gainsborough picture hats of black chiffon and velvet, heavily trimmed with black ostrich plumes and set well back on the pompadour coifs. All carried bouquets of pink chrysanthemums.

Mrs. Painter wore a black gown and bonnet of uncut velvet, trimmed with jetted aigrettes. Mrs. Llewellyn P. Warren, mother of the groom, wore pearl-gray poplin, with trimmings of cut steel passementerie. Mrs. A. E. W. Painter's gown was mauve satin under black embroidered net.

About 1,000 guests were present, which represented the exclusive social circles of both cities. Not more than 100 guests were invited for the reception and wedding breakfast which followed at the Painter home, Ridge Avenue, Alleghany. All were permitted to view the presents, beautifully arranged on white velvet-covered tables in a large room on the third floor. Everything was there in silver, Dresden and Sevres that taste could suggest or fancy devise. Rows of crystal goblets, bowls and cups, clear as emerald or as tenderly tinted as the rainbow and cut as delicately as diamonds; salad bowls so solid that strength would be required to lift them; solid silver dinner and tea sets, crystal clocks, silver comports, inlaid, teakwood tables, a grand piano, and a hammered-brass woodbox were a few of the beautiful things among the dazzling array.

Among them all none was more appreciated than the simple note of congratulation from Ethelbert Nevin, with a bar of music heading the page. The summons to the wedding brought to the mind of the now famous composer a fresh instance of the flight of time and a reminiscence of the time when the bride of yesterday was a wee lady of only a few Summers. He recalled the May-day party given by her mother in honor of her birthday, and at which she led all the children in beauty, brightness and high spirits. The party was a famous one. Mrs. Painter was among the first to recognize the budding genius of the young composer; he was asked to contribute appropriate music for the party, and it proved to be his first commission. It was a bar of this original conception that graced the note of congratulation.

Miss Painter made her debut in society a few seasons ago, and has since been one of its favorites. She is related on her mother's side to the Guthries and McKees, and through both parents to half of aristocratic Alleghany and Pittsburg. Mr. Howard is a graduate of Lehigh University, and a popular club man as well as a man of affairs.

Mr. Howard is a son of Mrs. Llewelyn P. Warren, of Ridge Avenue, Alleghany, and is connected with the Chambers Glass Company at Arnold. He is a grand-son of Mrs. Alexander Chambers, of Fifth Avenue, Shadyside.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard will make their home in a new residence at Arnold Station, which Mr. Howard has just had erected.

Among out-of-town guests at the wedding breakfast were Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Guthrie, Mrs. Ferris and Mrs. Crose, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Frederick Leech, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. F. P. Rodgers, of Bethel, Pa., Mr. Howard's aunt; and Miss Reppert, of Marietta, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard left yesterday afternoon for a wedding trip of several weeks. They are expected to be in New York on Nov. 1 to say farewell to Miss Alice Painter, who sails for Dresden on that day.

TO STUDY ABROAD.

Miss Painter and the Misses King, daughters of Thomas M. King, of Baltimore, are going abroad for a year's study in Dresden. They will meet Ethel Upjohn, of Germantown, Pa., there, and with a German chaperone will occupy the entire floor of a handsome residence in Dresden, and will be introduced in Dresden society by the United States Consul at Dresden, a personal friend of Mr. King.

John Guthrie, brother of James Guthrie, served as fifer in the same company.

Letter from George C. Guthrie to Eveline G. Dunn:

PAPINEAU, ILL., Sept. 22, 1897.

MISS DUNN:—

I received a letter not long since from my brother, J. B. Guthrie, of Kankakee, Ill., enclosing a letter from you which he desired me to answer, as I have more time than he, and being at home have access to old family papers and documents. I am the son of Christopher Steadman Guthrie, whose father was Henry Pigg Guthrie, a soldier of the War of 1812. I am told that he held a captain's commission, and enlisted when only nineteen years old. From my aunt, Mrs. Sarah Guthrie Pratt, of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, formerly of Burr's Mills, Ohio, I have procured a letter, written by my grand-father, Henry Pigg Guthrie, to her, which gives nearly all that we know of the early history of

GUTHRIE CHURCH, FORFARSHIRE, SCOTLAND.

As an ecclesiastical foundation dates from Culdees. In fifteenth century it had a Provost, three Prebendaries, two Canons. In 1793 the church was described as "an elegant building which may stand for a thousand years to come." Present parish church forty years old on a hillock, opposite entrance to Guthrie Castle.

our branch of the family. I copy it verbatim:

MARTIN'S FERRY, OHIO, March 12, 1867.

Mrs. Sarah F. G. Pratt,

Burr's Mills, Ohio:

MY DEAR DAUGHTER:—Believing it would be agreeable to you to know something of your ancestors, I propose to give you some account of what I have learned by tradition.

I am informed by tradition that my paternal great grand-father obtained a grant for a tract of land in America, emigrated from England sometime in Cromwell's Rebellion and located his grant on the north side of York River, in Poropotank Neck, in Statten, Major Parish, King and Queen's Co., Virginia; and that he had four sons, and lived to be old, and that he danced a jig when he was one hundred and five years old, and lived to be one hundred and ten years old. At his death he bequeathed sixty acres of land to each of three sons, and the balance to my grand-father, who was the oldest son, and who left it to my father, being the homestead where I was born. The farm is surrounded on two sides by a branch of Poropotank Creek. I have often heard of my father being the Heir of Laws in this country, and if there should be any thing coming from England he would be the heir.

My maternal grand-father, George Pigg, was a surveyor, and I have heard it said, was born in the year one, that is, 1701; but don't know at what time he emigrated from England. He was in this country when he was twenty-five years old, and stood as god-father for my grand-mother, according to the rules of the Episcopal church, and when she was twenty-five years and he was fifty years old they were married. They had six children, three sons and three daughters, of whom Rachel Pigg, the second daughter, was my mother, who was born in 1760. I am not positive what my maternal grand-mother's maiden name was, but think it was Murie. I have heard it said that my grand-father in surveying, called the neighborhood where King and Queen's Court-house now stands, the frontiers, which is not more than forty or fifty miles from Chesapeake Bay. He procured a beautiful farm on York River, a few miles above Poropotank Creek, which he left to his oldest son. His two oldest sons enlisted and served three years at the North in the Continental Army, and returned in the year 1780, that remarkably cold Winter, when it was said a beef could be roasted on the ice. George, the second son, again enlisted and went South where he died of excessive heat and fatigue.

My father and one brother enlisted in the Continental

Army for three years and was through the New England states. He was sergeant and returned in the Winter of 1780. He was married three times, my mother being his third wife. I was born February 23, 1793.

I have given you, dear daughter, that which I believe will be of interest to you, being the principle facts I have derived from tradition. Your father,

HENRY P. GUTHRIE.

My grand-father, the author of the above letter, lived in the Old Dominion until 1828, when he removed with his family, consisting of a wife and child to Jefferson Co., Ohio. His wife's maiden name was Mary C. Stedman, who I am told, was a woman of culture and considerable property. The reason given for his removal from Virginia, was that he disliked the institution of slavery, and most emphatically predicted the crisis which darkened the land during the exciting period of rebellion. Every thing he possessed was disposed of, excepting a female slave, who answered to the name of "Aunt Harriet," and who for many years performed the duties of a servant with honesty and integrity. She is still living (1897), at Mount Pleasant, Ohio, and although bent with age, is still able to cook a good dinner for my aunts when they make their annual visit to childhood's scenes. "The great white ladies," as she calls them, are made to feel at home in Harriet's cottage, and many times reminded ere they depart, that they are as dear to her heart as her own "chilluns," and "I've toted ye 'round many a time when youse was little toddlers."

Henry Pigg Guthrie, although a man of considerable education and experience, was not a financier, at least, his business ventures were never very successful ones. Doubtless, this was partly due to the fact, that he was unused to the manners and customs of a free state, and an innate honesty which caused him to be less watchful of his interests than he should have been. Being the soul of integrity himself he never suspected deceit in other men, and as a result, his fortune, which was considered ample in his day, was by the time of his death, greatly reduced. His death occurred in 1869.

There were nine children in my grand-father's family, four sons and five daughters. The eldest son, Cincinnatus, died in infancy. Sarah F., the second child, was married to Dr. Daniel Pratt, during the early fifties; to whom was born a son, Henry Guthrie, who became a successful lawyer, and after practicing in Kansas a few years, returned to Martin's Ferry, Ohio, where he still resides. Shortly after returning to Martin's Ferry, he married Miss Lena Rosseller, with whom he became acquainted while in the West. To them has been born a son, Carl Rosseller. Dr. Pratt departed this life April 9, 1891, aged 86 years, since which time Mrs. Pratt has made her home with her son at Martin's Ferry.

Henry, the third child, was married in 1874 to Mrs. Steadman, to whom was born a son and daughter, Edwin and Helen. The latter passed from this life in 1892. He now lives at East Liverpool, Ohio.

Lizzie, the fourth child, was married to John Robb, of New Cumberland, West Va., where they still reside. They have four children, two sons and two daughters, all of whom are still living.

Mary Jane, the fifth child, never married. She resided for many years in Martin's Ferry, Ohio. In 1895 she disposed of her property, since which time she has made her home with her sister, Lizzie.

Catherine, the sixth child, lived to womanhood, when she was called to rest. She never married.

Christopher Steadman, the seventh child, lived in Ohio until 1857, when he went West and located in Kankakee, Ill., being at that time seventeen years of age, and where he engaged in farming. In 1861, when it became known that the American people were about to engage in "a great Civil War," he sold his corn at ten cents a bushel, and, following the patriotic examples of his ancestors, enlisted in the Fifty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He participated in all the battles in which the Army of the Tennessee was engaged until July 12, 1863, when Laurman made the famous charge on the Confederate works at Jackson, Miss. Here the Fifty-third Regiment were nearly all killed or captured, among the latter, unfortunate, being our subject. For the next three months he enjoyed (?) the hospitality of Libby prison and Belle Isle, being paroled some time in October. The Southern people may be good cooks, but all demonstrations in that direction, he thinks, were most studiously avoided while he was their guest. After recuperating at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, he rejoined his regiment in time to participate in the Atlanta campaign and the celebrated "March to the Sea," famous in story and in song. He was mustered out of service at Goldsborough, N. C., in March, 1865, and returned to Kankakee, Ill., where he engaged in farming. On Christmas day, 1865, he led to the altar, Miss Mary J. Warden, who was born near Greencastle, Ind., and who for several years was a successful teacher in Kankakee and Iroquois Counties, Ill. To them have been born six children, five of whom are living.

Frances Isabel, the eldest child, was a teacher in Iroquois County for a number of years, when she married John Gerber, of Dennison, Texas. They have two children, a son and daughter, George Leslie, and Frances Ruth.

Henry, the second child, after acquiring an education, took up teaching as the serious calling of life, in which profession he is still engaged.

James Bliss, the third child, is a travelling salesman, in which vocation he has been very successful. He married Miss Ina Washington in 1894.

Laura, the fourth child, died in infancy.

George Christopher, the fifth child, was educated at the Northern Indiana Normal School, and Central Normal College, also of Indiana, and is now engaged in teaching. He also devotes considerable time to writing for the press.

Katherine Malinda, the sixth child, still makes her home with her parents, and devotes much of her time to the study of music.

Robert, the eighth child of my grand-father's family, went West a few years before the war, and located at Monmouth, Ill., where he died some years later. He is said to have been a very industrious and ambitious young man.

Isabel, the ninth child, was married to Marion Cullen, of New Cumberland, West Va., a soldier of the late war, shortly after his return from the South in 1865. Mr. Cullen is the present Mayor of New Cumberland, a gentleman of many excellent attainments. whom one delights to meet. Although never ambitious to acquire fame as an author, he has been quite successful in that line of work. Seven children blest this union.

Charles Guthrie, the oldest child, was possessed of the sturdy virtues which characterized his ancestors. While on a trip to Cincinnati in Feb., 1892, he fell from the tow-boat, "George Shirias," and before he could be rescued, was drowned.

Robert, the second son, died when nearing man's estate.

William Dexter, the third son, resident of New Brighton, Pa., is a genial companion, a "Bill Nye" humorist, and a worthy young man.

Minnie, Paul, Lucy and Anna, still live with their parents. After graduating, Paul and Lucy engaged in teaching, which calling they still pursue.

My father, Christopher S. Guthrie, who takes great pride in showing old family relics, has in his possession the wills of George Pigg and his two sons, George and John, referred to by my grand-father, Henry Pigg Guthrie, in his letter to my aunt, Mrs. S. F. G. Pratt. These papers indicate that the authors were men of great piety and scholarly instincts. He also has a duplicate copy of a paper, issued by Thomas Corwin commissioning his father, H. P. Guthrie, Justice of the Peace. On the back of this paper is a personal letter from then Gov. Corwin, in his own hand-writing. Mr. Corwin signs himself, "your friend," and the tone of the letter leads one to believe they were intimately acquainted. He also has other papers in his possession, which bring to mind the stormy days of the Revolution, when Youth and Old Age fought side by side with tireless energy for freedom and liberty. One enjoys reading of Paul Revere's ride, and yet the time of that famous ride seems far away in the dim and misty past; but, in handling and reading these papers, these old family relics, soiled and yellow with age, which give glimpses of the events of those sublime years, the record of which the historian has sacredly preserved, a feeling of awe and reverence is experienced, and with enlarged vision and understanding, one appreciates as never before, the sufferings which were undergone, the blood and tears that were shed, the sacrifices that were made, in the struggle for American independence.

In reviewing the traditional history of our branch of the family, I am impressed with the fact that all have been God fearing men and women with true religious instincts. I am also impressed with the fact that they have ever been intensely patriotic, and eagerly responded to their country's call in the hours of her peril and danger. They have tried to do their duty, and act well their part, content to keep the "even tenor of their way," practicing that broad altruism which earns respect and wins life-long friends.

Hoping that your "History of the Guthrie Family" may be favorably received by all bearing that name and those connected, I remain, yours very respectfully,

GEORGE C. GUTHRIE.

Descendants
William Guthrie, of Pennsylvania.

William Guthrie of Milltown, Mill Creek Hundred, New Castle County, Delaware, was born about 1740. According to theory, he was a descendant of James Guthrie, of Boston, one of the three brothers who emigrated from Edinburgh about 1683, (see page 4.)

William Guthrie had sons, (1) John, (2) William, (3) Robert, (4) James and (5) Alexander.

William Guthrie (2), born about 1766; had sons, (1) James, (2) Nehemiah, (3) William.

William Guthrie (3), born in Chester County, Penn Married Martha Bishop, of colonial and revolutionary ancestry. She died in 1863. He died in 1864.

Sylvester Guthrie, only son of William and Martha (Bishop) Guthrie, was born in 1844. He was graduated from the Millersville Normal Academy, Lancaster, Penn., and enlisted, when seventeen years of age, in Co. H, 1st Regiment of Pennsylvania Rifles, later called the "Old Buck Tails," 13th Pennsylvania Reserves, commanded by Col. Fred Taylor, with whom he was a great favorite, and was the first to reach him when he fell mortally wounded at the battle of Gettysburg. He participated in twenty-eight battles, and was severely wounded May 8, 1864; was honorably discharged June 28, 1864. He is a member and Past Commander of Governor Harvey Post No. 17, G. A. Letter from James Guthrie to Eveline Guthrie Dunn:

PHILADELPHIA, May 3, 1899.

Dear Cousin:

Which I believe you are, though several times removed; I am very glad indeed you have taken the interest to publish the records, and I hope you will be amply repaid, pecuniarily and otherwise, for the trouble and expense incurred.

I have a claymore which tradition says was carried on the field of Flodden by one of the Guthries; also a large chest of yew wood, which came from Scotland with the emigrant who came to Pennsylvania and settled in Milltown, Mill Creek Hundred, New Castle County, Delaware. They were Presbyterians, one of whom was an elder in the Mill Creek Presbyterian church of Delaware. They were related to the Virginia branch. J. E. B. Stuart, of Virginia, the confederate general of cavalry, my father said was his 2nd cousin. The above Mill Creek church was the 2nd of that denomination organized in Delaware.

I would like very much to have the descent straightened out, but after more than two hundred years of imperfectly kept records will find, as you have found, no doubt, much difficulty. You are certainly entitled to much credit for the work you have published, and especially from those whose lineage you have there traced. I have not as yet had an opportunity of making a thorough investigation of our branch, which I intend to do by an examination of the deeds, wills, etc., on record in New Castle County, Delaware, also of Chester County, Pennsylvania.

Delaware was supposed to be part of the original tract granted to William Penn by the 2nd Charles Stuart, king of England, during whose reign the eighteen thousand you speak of suffered martyrdom, and our ancestor or relative lost his head. In one or the other, or possibly both of these counties, I hope to find something of interest.

If I had taken the interest I now feel during my father's life of 81 years, he no doubt could have told me much I do not at present know. I know the emigrant came from Scotland, and the chest and claymore which I have, came with him.

Dr. Dewit Clinton Guthrie, brother of Dr. George Guthrie, of Wilkesbarre, Penn., lives near me. We have come to the conclusion that the Guthries of Chester and New Castle Counties are the same. My theory is we are descendants of the emigrant James, of Boston. My great-grandfather William was born about 1740. He had sons, John, William, Robert, James and Alexander. My grandfather William, born 1766, had sons, James, William and Nehemiah. My father James, born 1796, had sons, John, James and Newlin. My mother's name was Deborah Pawling Newlin, whose ancestor, Nicholas Newlin, settled in Concord, Delaware County, Pa., in 1683. I have two sons, William and James.

Very respectfully, etc.,

JAMES A. GUTHRIE.

Letter from John C. Guthrie.

MEXICO. MO., July 28, 1899.

Miss E. G. Dunn:

Dear Madam:—I have just examined your book, giving a history of the northern branch of the Guthrie family, but I fail to find any connecting link of my origin. I have no definite or authentic history of my ancestry but will give the best I have. My grandfather, Robert Guthrie, was born in Lincoln parish, La., about 1750, and died in Williamson county, Tenn., about 1835. He married Jane Taylor of Louisiana. In the early history of Kentucky they moved to that state and settled in Madison county, near Richmond. My father, Samuel Taylor Guthrie, was born there June 3, 1793. In 1805, grandfather (Robert Guthrie) moved from Kentucky to Williamson county, Tenn. My father, Samuel Taylor Guthrie, had four brothers, viz.: David, William, Robert, Findley and one sister, Margaret, who married Mr. Gary, both died in Missouri. Uncle Robert settled in St. Charles county, Mo., in 1816. He married Matilda Maury, sister of Matthew F. Maury, author of Maury's Physical Geography, and Genl. Dabney Maury, of Confederate fame. His family were John M.

Guthrie, Matthew F., Robt. M. Maury and Mary Eliza. Uncle William Guthrie died in Paris, Tenn.; uncle Finley died in Mount Pleasant, Tenn., childless. My father, Samuel T. Guthrie, served in the War of 1812. He moved to Missouri in 1818 and settled in Callaway Co., in 1821, where the village of Guthrie is situated on the C. & A. R.R., about twelve miles north of the state capitol. He died in April, 1872. My mothers name was Sally Philips, born in Casey Co., Ky. and came to Missouri in 1818 and married in Dec. 1821. My brothers and sisters, are Robert Ewing, James Perry, Addison Taylor, Mary Jane, Samuel Newton, Thos. Franklin, Martha Ann. Sarah Elizabeth, Nancy Caroline, John Appleton and David Baxter. My son, M. B. Guthrie, 29 years and married, who has traveled extensively, brought me your "Guthrie Book," as we term it, from Chicago, is the product of this letter and I am much gratified in its casual perusal. He went with the Wharton expedition to the Holy Land at the age of 20 years. Rode horse back from Jerusalem to Bayrout, via Damascus, took about 250 kodak views, gathered a large collection of relics from Alexandria, Cairo, Jerusalem, Gibraltar, Constantinople, Damascus, Athens, Naples, Bayrout, Heidelberg, Paris, London and Edinburg. I will close by saying, I was born in the state of Missouri, am in my 60th year, V. P. of the Northern Bank of Mexico, Mo.; treasurer of the Bapt. State Mission Board and Hardin College End. Funds; Supt. S. S.; ex-Co. Judge, etc.

Very truly,

JOHN A. GUTHRIE.

James Guthrie, the great American statesman and politician, secretary of the treasury, 1855-1857, was born near Bardstown, Ky., Dec. 5th, 1792, died at Louisville, Ky. March 13, 1869.

Appendix.

Mrs. Martha G. D. Lyster, wife of the late Colonel William J. Lyster (see Page 137), is a daughter of the Revolution, was regent of the Sacket's Harbor Chapter, and was offered the regency of South Dakota and Nebraska, but was obliged to decline them; she is also a Colonial Dame and eligible to the Society—1812, as is also her mother, Mrs. Martha (Guthrie) Doughty.

Captain Edwin Guthrie (see Page 55), was appointed from Iowa, Captain Fifteenth United States Infantry, April 9, 1847; died July 20, 1847, of wounds received in action at La Hoya, Mexico. His remains were brought home and buried with military honors. Guthrie County, Iowa, was named in his honor.

Judge Francis Guthrie (see Page 70), was in the battles of Cedar Mountain, Va., Aug. 9, 1862; Rappahannock Station, Aug. 20 and 21, 1862; Chantilly, Va., Aug. 29, 1863; Antietam, Md., Sept. 17, 1862; promoted to First Lieutenant Nov. 20, 1862; promoted to Captain March 30, 1865; battle of Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, 2, 3, 1863; discharged at Valley Forge, Va., Aug. 2, 1863, to bear date of July 30, 1863; date of enlistment, Sept. 10, 1861. Adjutant General's report of Pennsylvania for the year 1866, shows the history of Captain Guthrie, Company E, One Hundred and Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. He received a medal for bravery during the battle of Antietam, and one of the Lieutenant's who served with him during the entire time of service states that Francis A. Guthrie was given his several promotions from merit as a good soldier and that while an officer of the company was a close disciplinarian in camp and on the field of march, but never asking that his company should do more than he as its leader.
