A word to those who receive this book.

Dear Friends and Relatives :

It gives me pleasure, in sending out this book—the result of many years of gathering, compiling and revising—to be able to send it in as perfect a condition as is herein shown. I do not claim that the book is a complete record of the McKAY family or its branches. Gaps will be observed unfilled, and “missing links” that I have not been able to find. Yet, I have taken great pains to reach all, and have inserted in the book every record that has come to me in response to my call. Some to whom I sent circulars have not responded at all, and some delayed their response so long that the book was in the hands of the printer before their response came—even some of this class will find their name and record in the book, the information sought being gained from other sources. Possibly a few typographical errors may be discovered, but on the whole the book reflects great credit upon the printer. My thanks are due, and cheerfully rendered, to all who have aided me in this work by furnishing their records and the “sinews of war,” in its publication.

If the book affords any manner of satisfaction and pleasure to those who receive it, it will be the crowning joy of all my labors in its production.

Alexander McKay and family were living at Lackawanna on the Susquehanna river, opposite to Wyoming, Pennsylvania, in 1778, at the time of the Wyoming massacre. Himself and family, consisting of wife and nine children, were prisoners of war for fourteen days in the Fort Lackawanna, an account of which follows:

THE STORY OF THE WYOMING MASSACRE AS FAR AS IT RELATES TO THE McKAY FAMILY.

The memorable Battle of Wyoming, which took place about the 26th of July, A. D. 1778, and the bloody massacre that then took place in that beautiful valley, have been embalmed in history and celebrated in song, but many thrilling incidents of interest to individuals and to families have never yet appeared in print. Alexander McKay and his family, consisting of his wife and nine children—three sons and six daughters, the eldest 19 and the youngest about 2 years of age—were participants in those exciting scenes.

THE NARRATIVE.

In the spring of 1778 apprehensions of an approaching enemy were sufficiently strong to induce the inhabitants of the Valley of Wyoming to build fortifications in various places. One fort was built near the battle ground by a Dutch settler by the name of Wintermait, another was built on the opposite side of the river from where the battle was fought and was called Lackawanna fort.

The inhabitants never suspected hostility from the Wyoming side of the river until the notorious Butler and Brant marched down at the head of a large party of Tories and Indians and found the doors of the fort, built by Wintermait, open for their reception.

At this the inhabitants were panic stricken and leaving their dwellings fled to the Fort Lackawanna for protection. The McKay family took refuge in this fort, and all possible preparation was made for defense. Our commander was Colonel Butler, a cousin of the commander of the same name on the other side. They agreed upon an open field fight, on an open plain, but a dense pine thicket would have to be passed through to reach the field agreed upon. Alexander McKay warned them against going, for fear of an ambush, but they paid no heed to his warning and went, and as soon as they entered the thicket the whole host of Indians sprang upon them and cut them down with a great slaughter. The survivors of our men stood their ground and fought valiantly until each one that was left, seeing no one near, and supposing all killed but himself, fled for life. It was indeed a dreadful slaughter. One Phineas Owen (son of Isabel, a sister of Alexander McKay, who married Daniel Owen) found himself pursued by an Indian with a raised tomahawk, and throwing away his gun, and being expert at leaping fences, gained a little upon his pursuer and jumped into a cane-brake and was out of sight, but up to his arms in a quagmire. His pursuer looked for him in vain, but seemed positive that he was near by, and as it was growing dark laid down close by and soon appeared to be asleep. But Owen believing this to be only a deception kept still until a marked change in his breathing convinced him that sleep was not feigned. He then crept out carefully and escaped as fast as his stiffened limbs would permit, making his way down the river to what was called Fort Forty, some eight or ten miles distant below, where his parents were.

(This fort derived its name from being built by forty of the inhabitants for the protection of their families.)

Meanwhile the news of the disaster had reached this fort, and its occupants made all possible preparations to evacuate early in the morning and go down the river for safety, and when in the morning they had all embarked and just about to push off, Mrs. Owen, the mother of Phineas, declared she must go back to the fort. They all remonstrated, and asked her why she must go back. She said she did not know why she must, but her mind was so wrought upon that she must go, and she went; and as she opened the door to go in on one side of the fort, her son Phineas opened the door on the opposite side. She beckoned him to hasten, and they were soon on their way down the river.

Another incident was the escape of two brothers. The banks of the river were covered with vines, and one of them trying to escape over these vines fell through, and being very tired and feeling safe, lay still. Soon his brother, going the same way fell into the same place, and it being very dark each mistook the other for an Indian, and they grappled in with each other in a terrible hug until one of them spoke and his well known voice revealed his identity, and then came the reaction from fear and they hugged for joy. They soon crawled out, swam the river and made their escape.

In the evening, after the battle, the Indians rolled up long heaps of wood and burned our dead and wounded soldiers, keeping up a war dance and hideous yells that were plainly seen and heard from Lackawanna fort, although two miles distant.

The next day a detachment of the enemy crossed the river and took possession of the Lackawanna fort, which contained the old men, the women and children, and a company of soldiers commanded by Captain Blanchard, and when they laid down their arms a Mr. Brown, an old neighbor of Alexander McKay, took McKay's gun, but too much ashamed to look McKay in the face. A number of Indians also came into the fort and put the prisoners' mark upon them, an old Indian placing it upon the old and matronly looking and a young Indian placing it upon the younger ones. This mark consisted of a spot of red paint about the size of a silver dollar painted upon each cheek. One woman refused to have the paint put upon her cheek. The next day a tall Indian with a tomahawk came into the fort, and taking this woman by the hair pulled her head backward until her face was nearly on a level, raised his tomahawk up at full arms' length and then brought it down till the edge touched her face, at the same time exclaiming "Now!" This he repeated three times, and then released her and said, "Now you go paint," and she painted.

The Indians would go into the houses about the fort and take whatever they found, especially such articles of clothing as had red or other bright colors. They discovered a red skirt on a woman and made her take it off.

Each family in the fort had their own separate meals, as best they could, for the Indians would come in and make signs to the women to give them food. One day the McKay family had some fresh meat and made a pot pie and set one to watch if any come to take it, and just as it was done an Indian came towards them, whereupon Mrs. McKay set the pot containing the dinner out on the floor and threw a feather bed over it, and sat down on one side of it. The Indian came in and made signs for victuals. She took a large pewter platter from the cupboard, which he accepted and went his way. They then ate their dinner from the pot, keeping a sentinel at the door.

After a few days the conquering army held a council of war and gave the prisoners their choice, to accompany them to Canada or be paroled. Some, who had relatives in the army, chose to go with them, but most of them chose to be paroled. So they were given liberty to depart, but before they could get themselves in readiness for so doing the order was countermanded. The next day the same scene was re-enacted. So Mr. McKay told his family to be in readiness to start the moment leave was again given. The next day leave was again given and they started at once. They had been prisoners fourteen days. The family consisted of the father and mother, with nine children, to which a tenth child—Daniel McKay, the father of the writer hereof—was born in just six weeks.

The family all had the measles at the time except one, and that one was sick with fever. Mrs. McKay's measles turned that morning. (It was August 9, forty-two days before Daniel was born, which was on September 20.)

About 10 o'clock they had to ford the Susquehanna river. The water was so deep that Elizabeth (afterwards Mrs. Alanson Edwards), then a girl of 12 years, having a new pair of shoes and not wishing to get them wet, had to hold them up quite high, and had the misfortune to drop one in the river and it was lost, which in those days was quite a calamity.

One incident connected with the family the writer hereof had related to him by this same Elizabeth after she was 60 years old and herself the mother of a large family, as follows: Mr. McKay's measles had not yet turned and they feared to have him go into the water, so Mrs. McKay carried him over the river in her arms, and then returned and carried the children over, one by one, who were not old enough to wade the river.

In the course of the day they were overtaken by others, some of whom had a cart drawn by oxen which had been kept hidden in the woods, as were also provisions and other stores, and the sickest of the sick ones were put into the cart. But the oldest of the McKay girls—Polly, afterwards Mrs. Wadsworth—then 15 years old, had to carry her sick sister, Sarah, 2 years old—afterwards Mrs. Weed. They traveled 100 miles or more before they felt that it was safe to stop.

Towards night the second day it rained very hard, and as it soon began to be very dark they prepared to camp, as many as possible under the cart, but others came along with a lantern and told them there was a deserted log house a short distance further on, and they hastened on to build a fire in advance of the rest. They had not been there long when others came pouring in until the house was literally overflowing, and when poor Polly had found a place for all the invalid brothers and sisters of her charge to sleep, there was no place for her except a small vacancy behind the door. She had but just lain down when another company came in bringing a wounded man and the inquiry arose, where shall we put him? Behind the door seemed the safest place, so Polly had to vacate her lodging place. They then found some boards and laid them on a bedstead that had been left in the house and some lay upon it, while others lay under it, but Polly found no place on the floor to sit or stand, but on the ground in the vicinity of the hearth was a cobble stone on which she sat till nearly morning, when a man awoke and changed places with her. She had slept but a little while when others began to get up, and there was no more sleeping in the noise and stir that followed.

They traveled from ten to fifteen miles a day, finding deserted houses from six to eight miles apart. They had full liberty to kill cattle for food or use whatever food they found in the houses for their sustenance. In the houses they found pork, lard and other provisions and cooking utensils, and in the woods they found cows with their calves, which furnished them with milk. Thus they arrived at the Hudson river, where they washed the paint from their faces, for the Indians gave them red paint and told them their safety depended on keeping it bright.

The McKay family stayed a short time with an aunt and then went into a school house. While here their boy Seth, 4 years old, was sent to the post office, which was kept in a dwelling house. The family at that time had considerable company, who began to question him about their captivity. He was quite animated, and balancing back and forth on one foot and then on the other, giving his body a swinging motion from side to side (a habit he had through life when animated), he said: "I had a hen with a great many chickens in the hovel, and they set fire to the hovel and burned them all up, and I cried about it, and I feel just so now, boo! hoo!" Whereupon their sympathies were wrought upon and they contributed money enough to buy another hen and chickens.

The only cooking utensil Mrs. McKay had was a frying pan with a long handle. With this she heated water for washing; and to boil her clothes she would heat large stones and put them into the tub with the clothes. One day she got a large stone very hot, and dropping it into the tub too suddenly burst the bottom out of the tub.

From the school house they went to live in an ashery, and there she had the potash kettle to use, and after a while they went to live in a Dutch settlement of rich farmers, where they found ready employment and the comforts of life more plentiful.

All the facts in the foregoing narrative were given to the undersigned by Mrs. Alanson Edwards—Alexander McKay's daughter Elizabeth—who was 12 years old when the facts transpired, and an eye witness to most of them, and to all of them that relate to the McKay family. The facts related were also corroborated by Polly, the oldest daughter of Alexander McKay, who was 16 years old, and also an eye witness to the events narrated. They can be relied on as authentic and true.

THE WEED BRANCH

OF THE MCKAY FAMILY.

- III. Sarah McKay—Daughter of Alexander McKay, married John Weed, second son of Reuben Weed, of Greenfield, Saratoga county, N. Y., May 3, 1793. John Weed was a farmer and a merchant. He died at Greenfield, April 28, 1848.

 Harriet Frances, born August 22, 1822; died April 6, 1857.
- IV. John Sackett Weed—Son of John Weed, married Sally, youngest daughter of Nathan Medbury, November 11, 1821.

She died December 26, 1823. He again married to Mrs. Amanda K., widow of Peter R. Kinsman, formerly of New York city. She had four children at the time of this marriage, as follows:

- V. Amanda, born July 12, 1830.
 Mary Adelaïd, born February 8, 1832.
 Peter Rutger, born August 20, 1833.
 Catherine, born July 2, 1837.

This marriage proved a bad union. A difficulty arose in regard to sending their children to school. He wanted them to have a good schooling and she stubbornly opposed it. After referring the matter to relatives of the children, he decided that they should have good opportunities for mental cultivation, and sent the two oldest to Galawa academy. This seemed to make the war intolerable, and resulted in a limited divorce on the 1st day of April, 1844. A strong mutual friendship, however, remained between him and the two youngest girls.

John Sackett Weed had quite a literary gift. He taught school at the age of 18; was merchant clerk and a merchant at the age of 22, but discontinued the business at the death of his first wife. Practical dentistry was his business from 1820 to 1839.

From 1830 his habits were uniformly temperate. From 1828 to 1861 he took neither tea or coffee or strong drink of any kind, nor did he use tobacco in any form. His motto was, "Feed the poor and waste nothing." He acquired a comfortable estate. For many years he was master of St. John's lodge, No. 22, A. F. and A. M., in Greenfield, and high priest of St. John's Royal Arch chapter, No. 103, of Royal Arch Masons, at the same place, and for more than twenty years he represented these bodies in whole or in part in their respective grand lodges. He delivered several Masonic orations, two of which were published, and one of them was in poetry.

IV. Sarah Weed—Daughter of John Weed, married Jesse Hanford, September 17, 1818.

He died September 2, 1823. She then lived with her father. She married Caleb M. Hoyt, January 8, 1843. He died August 31, 1858. She then went and lived with her brother, John Sackett Weed, at Saratoga, N. Y. She died in 1870, age 72.

IV. Paulina Weed—Daughter of John Weed, married Albert G. King. He died. No issue.

DANIEL McKAY.

III. Daniel McKay—Son of Alexander McKay, married Lydia Edwards, daughter of Simeon Edwards, of Northampton, Mass., September 20, 1804. She was born September 23, 1785, and died January 30, 1858.

Daniel McKay was a hatter by trade and a stonemason, and the son of a hatter. He was born just six weeks after his father's family were released from Fort Lackawanna, near Wyoming, in Pa., where they had been held as prisoners of war. (See story of Wyoming massacre.) Daniel was, at his death, the last survivor of that massacre. About the time of his marriage he settled on a farm about one mile east of Skaneateles village, N. Y. Here he lived until February, 1824, when he removed to Aurora, in Erie county, N. Y., and settled with his family upon a farm, at the junction and between the middle and the west branches of Buffalo creek. Here he lived until he sold his farm in 1835, working much at his trade, that of a bricklayer and stonemason, in which occupations he excelled. He was a strong anti-Mason. In politics he was successively a Whig, a Free Soiler and a Republican. In religion he was a Congregationalist. He believed also that the Sabbath commenced when the sun went down on Saturday, and closed at sunset on Sunday. He was always a constant, regular and interested attendant upon religious services, although he never united with any church.

His wife was an exemplary Christian all her days, yet always distrusting herself, and mourning over what she called her "inbred sins" and trying to "cast the beam out of her own eye." She was ever ready to go at any call ever made upon her for a labor of mercy, or to make any amount of self-denial for the sake of others. She made an open profession of religion, and united with the Congregational church at Griffin Mills, N. Y., in 1830. In 1831, her brother, Abner Edwards, died at Skaneateles, leaving her a set of Scott's Commentary (six volumes). This to her was a religious treasure, and for fifteen years she read them through, by course, once in each year, omitting nothing. She thus became so familiar with the Bible that she could repeat much of it, not only, but also state what Scott says about it. She was also an interested reader of Bunyon and Baxter, Dwight and Edwards and Dodridge, together with much miscellaneous reading. Her memory was remarkably retent-ive, and when the days came when she could not read the memory of what she had read before was a great comfort to her.

She died at the residence of her son, F. C. D. McKay, in Warsaw, N. Y., where she received every care that affection could bestow, yet to her last moments she manifested a characteristic trait of her life—an unwillingness to make trouble for others. Her setting sun went down in brightness and glory, in the hope of a resurrection among the just through Jesus Christ, the "resurrection and the Life." She was buried beside her daughter Lydia at Griffin's Mills, N. Y.

IV. Lydia Electa McKay—daughter of Daniel McKay, was drowned at the mouth of Smoke's creek, on the shore of Lake Erie, five miles from Buffalo, December 3, 1830.

She was on her way to Skaneateles, N. Y., expecting to spend the winter among relatives in that place. In going to Buffalo in a passenger wagon, they took the road on the beach of the lake, and that afternoon a furious gale came up from the northwest, and when they arrived at Smoke's creek the sun had set and the bridge was swept away by the gale and the waters of the lake; a black cloud arose, and it became dark all at once, and in attempting to ford the creek they were swept away, and all, in some way, except herself—four in number—escaped, but she met with death.

She was engaged to be married to a young man by the name of Lyman Stafford, and on the Sunday before her death she gave him the following lines, requesting him not to read them until "Friday," "for," she said, "I shall then be gone." On that Friday she was drowned. He did not read the lines until Sunday, and in half an hour after reading them he heard of her death:

"TO A FRIEND."

Fare thee well, fare thee well; a something comes o'er me
That whispers "forever I'm parted from thee."
Sad are its tones, for it speaks to the soul
With feelings of sorrow I cannot control;
And sad is my heart, and false is the smile
With which those around me I strive to beguile;
And hollow the laugh that rings in my heart
And wakes with its anguish the vain mirth of art.
I must go—and may my absence restore to rest
The peace that once dwelt like a dove in my breast.
You must stay, and forever may fortune still meet thee,
The voice of kind friends and love ever greet thee;
May she from whom fortune and fate bids thee part
Never waken a sorrow or sigh in thy heart.
If we never meet more, may some worthier form
Be to thee as the bow that bends o'er the storm;
May she gild with her brightness thy dark clouds of care,
Thy sorrows to soothe, thy pleasures to share.
Farewell! And when these pleasures thy steps shall attend,
Just pause for a moment and think of

A FRIEND.

FERDINAND CECIL DWIGHT McKAY.

- IV. F. C. D. McKay—Son of Daniel McKay, married Angelina J. Judd, of Marcellus, N. Y.

At an early age the subject of this article—F. C. D. McKay—evinced a decided taste and capacity for literary culture and acquirements, and having mastered the ordinary English branches taught in the schools of that day, he began the study of the Latin and Greek languages, and at 12 years of age was reading Virgil and Cicero and the Greek Testament. He taught a district school in the town of Aurora, N. Y., at the age of 14, receiving his certificate of competency from Millard Fillmore, who was then inspector of common schools for that township, afterwards president of the United States. He studied the languages and mathematics with Thomas W. Allis, in Skaneateles, and at the high school in Buffalo. In 1828 he entered upon the study of law in the office of Daniel Kellogg, at Skanateles, N. Y., and was admitted to the bar in 1833. Soon after his marriage he settled in Warsaw, N. Y., where he soon acquired a leading position and was distinguished as an advocate, and was twice chosen district attorney.

He was no less distinguished as a Christian gentleman, who amid the duties of a large professional business found time to study the Bible critically, adding to his other acquirements a knowledge of Bible history, biography and literature seldom attained even by ministers of the Gospel. For many years he was connected with the Sunday school as superintendent, and when he left that position he gathered a Bible class, which he taught for several years. He was a temperance advocate and an Abolitionist, taking an advanced stand in these reforms.

In 1860 he removed to Des Moines, Iowa, where as a business man and member of society, his activities secured to him a first position in the respect of his fellow citizens and crowned him with abundant success.

JAMES ADOLPHUS McKAY.

- IV. James Adolphus McKay—Son of Daniel McKay, married Charlotte H. Chapin, daughter of Rev. Roderick Chapin, December 1, 1844.

She was born in Warsaw, N. Y., February 8, 1819, and died in Casselton, N. Dak., November 24, 1886.

James A. McKay, the subject of this article, was ordained to the Christian ministry, October 10, 1844, in connection with the Free Will Baptist denomination by an ecclesiastical council called for that purpose. His antecedents were Congregational, and he was reared and educated in that faith and order. In 1837 he made a public profession of religion in Warsaw, and united with the Presbyterian church in that place. In 1840 he was one of fifty-two members who withdrew from the Presbyterian church, and were organized into an independent Congregational church, under the name of "The Church of Warsaw."

On the subject of Baptism he was an immersionist, believing that form of baptism to be the scriptural mode of Christian baptism, and in accordance with his declared conviction he was immersed when he united with the Presbyterian church. After the organization of the Congregational church at Warsaw, he remained a Congregationalist until his ordination in 1844, when, to avoid all controversy in regard to the baptism of infants, which at that time he could not conscientiously administer, he united with the Free Will Baptists, and was ordained by them.

In the Free Will Baptist denomination his labors in the ministry were arduous and attended with some success, but owing to the meagerness of his support he was compelled to turn aside to secular callings to gain the means of supporting himself and family, and accordingly, in 1848, he spent several months in studying architecture and in acquiring the art of architectural drawing and stair building, and for ten years he maintained himself and family in teaching these to builders, and in general architectural pursuits. During this time he was comparatively free from church and denominational bias, and spent much of his spare time in a review of the subject of baptism, studying it from the New Testament stand-point solely. The result of this study was a total change in his mind from his former views, or from immersion as the only baptism to that of Christian baptism, without regard to mode.

In January, 1858, he withdrew from the Free Will Baptist church and united with the Congregational church at Niles, Mich., where he was then living. In March, 1858, he was called to the pastorate of two home missionary churches in Allegan county, Mich. He was engaged in home missionary work with different churches until 1866, when on account of throat disease and impaired voice he was compelled to leave active ministerial work entirely. He then engaged in business, devoting much time to the study of medicine, and for many years thereafter he devoted himself to its practice.

Tryphena.

The death of Eliza was very remarkable. She was, for a long time, an invalid. She became a Christian in early childhood, only 7 years and one month old when she died. The day before her death she was sitting bolstered up in a rocking chair, her mother, the only person in the room, sitting beside her. All at once she asked her mother, "What is that I hear?" Her mother heard nothing and asked Eliza what she heard. She replied, "I hear singing," and several times during the day she heard music and talked about it. The next day also, the day she died, she heard the music often, and just before she died she exclaimed with great animation and joy, "O, I can see them!" She was asked what she saw. She replied, "O, I can see a great many little girls and they are coming towards me, and they have all got wings on, and they are singing." This was her last, and thus she died.

But little is known of this branch of the McKay family. He emigrated to the "Far West" some time in 1815 or 1816. At that time the "Far West" was no further west than Ohio. Since his emigration but little has been known of him by his relations, but from all rumors concerning him, it is rendered probable that he died some time about the year 1854. Of his family nothing is known.

He afterwards removed to Buffalo, N. Y., where for several years he worked at the mason's trade. Afterwards he engaged in the manufacture of leather in partnership with Porter, son of Seth McKay. This partnership proved unsuccessful, and was dissolved, and he removed to Bertrand, Berrian county, Michigan, where he resided five years, and from thence he removed to Rock Island, where he lived several years engaged in the manufacture of furniture and musical instruments. He left home about July 1, 1852, on a visit to his children, and on his return he was taken with cholera in Chicago, which suddenly terminated his life. He died in the full faith of a glorious immortality and was removed to Ringwood cemetery for interment. His wife died at Geneva Lake, Wis., May 31, 1874.
