P R E F A C E.

THE object of this Publication, is to recover some ancient Records of Scotland known to be missing; and the basis of it is an Index, compiled about the year 1629, and a very ancient Quarto Manuscript on vellum, lately discovered.

These materials came to the knowledge of the Editor by the following means.

The Lord Clerk-Register for Scotland, Lord Frederick Campbell, some years ago, in attending to the duties of his office, observed the perishing condition of the Parliamentary Records of Scotland, and formed the design of getting them printed for the public benefit, as the Journals of both Houses and the Parliamentary Rolls had been done in England.

Preparatory for this Work, the Editor transcribed, with his own hand, as much of the earliest and most decayed part of these Parliamentary Records as would make up two Folio Volumes; and was directed by the Lord Register, as soon as the business of his office would permit, to make an accurate research in the Tower of London, and in the Chapter-House at Westminster, to ascertain whether these ancient repositories contained any materials, from which the defects in the Parliamentary Records of Scotland might be supplied, it being well known, that King Edward I. had carried to England all the Records prior to the reign of King Robert I.

In the mean time, Mr Astle, one of the Trustees of the British Museum, whose knowledge in historical antiquity is not less known than his anxious endeavours to make it useful to the public, informed the Lord Register, that he had discovered some curious Manuscripts in the British Museum respecting Scotland, and in particular the Index now printed.

He likewise informed the Lord Register of a still more important discovery, which he had made as Keeper of his Majesty's State-Paper Office, which was a Quarto Manuscript on Vellum, written in a character of great antiquity, and which, besides Transcripts of many Deeds relative to Scotch affairs, contained Minutes of several Parliaments of Scotland antecedent to the earliest Parliaments mentioned in the printed Statute-Book.

In consequence of this very important information, the Lord Register directed copies to be immediately made, both of the Index in the Museum, and the Quarto Manuscript in the State-Paper office, pressing the Editor to repair to London as soon as he conveniently could, for the purpose of more effectually carrying on the intended research in all the above-mentioned repositories.

The Editor accordingly, in August 1793, repaired to London, where his first care was to collate the two copies above mentioned with their originals.

The Index of Charters was found to be No. 4609. of the Harleian Manuscripts at the British Museum; and on the first page of that Index, at the top of it, there is written as follows.

“ This Book contains Lists or Inventories of several Rolls or Records of Charters, granted by King Robert I. King David II. King Robert II. and King Robert III. successive Kings of Scotland (a).

“ This List is the more valuable, as several of these Rolls are lost.”

On an attentive examination, this Index was found to comprehend Twelve Rolls and One Book of Charters which now exist, and have always been kept with the other Public Records of Scotland.

But besides these, it comprehends and relates to a much greater number of Rolls and Books of Charters which are not now to be found in the Public Records of Scotland. The number falling under this description is no less than Fifty-one Rolls of Royal Charters, and Three Books, consisting partly of Charters, partly of Decrees in Parliament.

These Fifty-one Rolls and Three Books, together with Two Rolls of Decrees in Parliament, (mentioned in page 28. at the top), though proved by this Index to have been known and patent to inspection in the year 1629, have been mislaid or disappeared during so long a period, that neither the Editor, nor any person known to him, had any knowledge of their having ever existed, till he had access to and perused the Index which makes the subject of the present publication.

The Fifty-one Rolls and Three Books above mentioned as not now existing in the Public Records of Scotland, seem to have contained about 1845 Charters and 30 Decrees in Parliament, exclusive of the contents of the two Rolls of Decrees in Parliament mentioned page 28. which do not appear to be particularly stated in the Index.

The Manuscript discovered by Mr Astle in the State-Paper Office was, on examination, found to be the most ancient Book of Scottish Record now known to exist, and in every respect so curious and important, that the Lord Register thought it incumbent on him to endeavour to recover it, for the purpose of its being preserved in the Records of that part of the Kingdom to which it incontestably appeared to have belonged.

(a) It contains also Charters granted by Robert Duke of Albany as Regent of Scotland.

For this purpose a petition was presented to his Majesty, who was graciously pleased to order the Manuscript Book to be removed from the State-Paper Office at London, with which it had no connection, and to be delivered to the Lord Register of Scotland, that it might be deposited in the General Register-Office kept at Edinburgh for the preservation of the Public Records belonging to that part of the Kingdom.

This Manuscript Book having been brought by the Lord Register to Scotland in November 1793, it was judged proper that it should be submitted to the examination of the Supreme Court of that country, in order to its receiving the sanction of that Court.

Accordingly, in the month of December 1793, a Committee of the Judges was, in consequence of a petition presented to the Court, appointed to inspect the Manuscript, and to report their opinion; who reported,

“ That the Book is an authentic Record of Writings, Public and Private, relating to Scotland.”—Whereupon the Court made the following Resolution, to wit, “ Approve of the Report; appoint the Manuscript Volume to be lodged among the other Public Records in the custody of the Lord Clerk-Register and his Deputies; and request the Lord President, in name of this Court, to return thanks to the Right Honourable Lord Frederick Campbell, Lord Clerk-Register of Scotland, for the trouble which his Lordship has taken in recovering to the public so valuable a Book of the ancient Records of this country. They further take this opportunity of expressing the high sense entertained by the Court of the benefit the public has derived from his Lordship’s unremitting assiduity and eminent services in the execution of his office as Lord Clerk-Register, and particularly in the great attention which he has bestowed upon the construction, fitting up, and completing of the New Repository for the Public Records, as well as the internal arrangement of the business there; and last of all, in having solicited and obtained, by the favour of his Majesty, a permanent establishment for the preservation of the building, and for defraying the necessary expence attending the security and safe custody of the Records (a); and appoint the Report, with this Commission, to be inserted in the Books of Session run.”

With regard to the Index before mentioned, discovered in the British Museum, it was judged proper that it should be printed for the information of the public; and accordingly the Lord Register gave orders for that purpose, as the most likely means of exciting the public attention to the Rolls and Books of Royal Charters which have been abstracted from the General Records of

(a) In November 1768, Lord Frederick Campbell was appointed Lord Clerk-Register of Scotland. On 27th June 1774 he laid the foundation-stone of the General Register-House. On 13th August 1787 his Lordship’s Deputies for keeping the Records took possession of their apartments there, and began to remove the Records thither from the two vaults under the Court of Session, called the Laigh Parliament House, where they were formerly kept. On the 5th of October 1791 the Records were finally removed from those vaults, and arranged in the General Register-House. And in January 1792 his Lordship obtained, by the bounty of his Majesty, a permanent establishment of L. 500 a-year for the support of the fabric, and for defraying various contingent expences necessarily connected with it.

I N T R O D U C T I O N.

THE Index of Charters, which is the principal subject of the present publication, has been fully mentioned in the Preface. It exhibits a state of the Charters granted by the different Sovereigns of Scotland, from the accession of King Robert I. in the year 1306, till the 8th year of the regency of Robert Duke of Albany, in 1413, a period of about 108 years.

There are now in Scotland no Records of any kind anterior to the accession of King Robert I. (a)

The loss of our more ancient Records was one of the unhappy consequences of the fatal dispute about the succession to the Crown of Scotland in the years 1291 and 1292, which resulted from the failure of the direct line of the Royal Family of Scotland in the person of the infant grand-daughter of King Alexander III. commonly called the Maiden of Norway.

Fortunately, however, such monuments of those ancient Records are still preserved, in different Instruments drawn up on that occasion, as prove incontrovertibly, that Scotland, prior to the dispute about its Crown, had reached a pitch of internal polity not inferior to that of any kingdom in Europe at the same period.

King Edward I. of England having been chosen to decide on the claims of the different competitors for the Crown, issued a writ (b), directed to the Bishop of St Andrew's, to the Constable

(a) The ancient Book of Record discovered in the State-Paper Office, as mentioned in the Preface, appears to have been written in the reigns of King Robert I. King David II. and King Robert II. It contains indeed some Instruments that fall not within the period of those reigns; viz. the Discharge by King Richard I. to King William, p. 104. No. 13.; the Bull by Pope Boniface VIII. p. 100. No. 3.; the Remissio seu abolitio criminis by King Robert III. p. 104. No. 12.; and the renewal of the ancient league with France by the Regent Robert Duke of Albany, p. 111. No. 61. But the appearance of those entries in the Book, the Bull of Pope Boniface alone excepted, clearly evinces that they were not inserted there when the rest of the Book was written.

(b) “ Rex et Superior Dominus Scotiz, venerabili in Christo patri W. eadem gratia Episcopo Sancti Andreæ in “ Scotia, et dilecto et fideli suo Radulpho Basset de Drayton consilulario Catri sui de Edinburgh, et Willielmo de “ Dunfres Custodi Rotulorum regni Scotiæ, et omnibus ballivis et fidelibus suis ejusdem regni ad quos, &c. salutem :

 “ Edinburgh, et dilectum et fidelem nostrum Johannem de Lithegreynes, Magistrum Willielmum de Lincoln, et Tho-
 “ mam de Fifeburn, ad investigandum, ferendum, videndum, et examinandum Chartas, Instrumenta, Scripta, Literas “ Papales, Compositiones, Rotulos et Irrotulata, et omnia alia munimenta, jus petentium in regno Scotiæ et similiter
 “ nos et regnum quoquomodo tangentia, in Castro de Edinburgh, et alibi in eodem regno existentia, et ad ea recipienda, “ deferenda, et deponenda in locum per nos ad hoc assignatum ; et ideo vobis mandamus, quod eisdem Abbatibus, “ Johanni, Willielmo, et Thomæ, vel prædictis Johanni, Willielmo, et Thomæ tantum, cum prædictis Abbates ad “ hoc vacare non contigerit, intendentes sitis et auxiliantes quotiens ex parte nostra super hoc fueritis requisiti ; et vos, of the Castle of Edinburgh, and to the Clerk Register for Scotland, commanding them to deliver such records as were within the Castle of Edinburgh, or any where else in Scotland, to certain persons named in the writ, whom he had appointed to inspect and to investigate such of them as had any relation to the claims of the competitors, or to himself and his kingdom; and whom he had authorized to receive those Records, and to convey the same to a place which he had pointed out.

In obedience to this order, many of the Records of Scotland appear to have been carried to Berwick-upon-Tweed, and to have been deposited there the 23d of August, in the 20th year of the reign of King Edward I. viz. 1292.

Of the Records thus conveyed to Berwick, there is a Catalogue still preserved in the Chapter-house at Westminster. In the Index of the Instruments in that Repository made up by Mr Agarde between the years 1603 and 1625, the title of that Catalogue is entered in these words, viz. “Indentura de Evidentiis localibus et aliis inventis in Castro de Edenburgh, 23. Augusti, et illinc defertis usque Berwick, 20 Edw. I.”

That Catalogue was seen by the Editor in the Chapter-house at Westminster in September 1793; and it is printed in Sir Joseph Ayloffe’s Calendars of ancient Charters (a), in the following words, some inaccuracies of the press being here corrected, and a few observations added in the form of notes. The corrections are inclosed in parentheses, and printed in Italic characters.

 “ mini 1291” (b), (1292).

(a) See Fordoun's Scotichronicon, vol. I. p. 307.

(b) Should probably be 1292; and yet as the Vigil. S. Barth. is 23d August, if the year be 1292, the docquet, if not erroneous, has been sealed at Edinburgh the very day the deeds were deposited at Berwick. This is improbable: and there must either be an error in the date of the deposition, or in that of the docquet. But in every view 1291 seems wrong.

Again, after King Edward had pronounced his award in favour of Balliol, and after that unfortunate King had in the usual manner been crowned at Scone, and proclaimed King of Scotland, many of the Scottish Records appear to have been delivered by certain officers of King Edward to Alexander Balliol, the Chamberlain of Scotland, for the use of the King of Scots. A Catalogue of those Records is likewise inserted in Sir Joseph's Calendars (a); and among the "Rotuli Scotiæ" in the same book (b), the precept authorising that delivery occurs in these words: "De rotulis liberandis regi Scotiæ:" And in Mr Agarde's Repertory of the Tractatus Pacis, &c. the title of the Catalogue is entered in these words: "Indentura facta inter dictum Edvardum regem Angliæ superiorem dominum regni Scotiæ, et Dominum Johannem regem Scotiæ, de Bullis, Scriptis, Libris, Rotulis compotorum vicecomitum et aliorum ministrorum dicti regni Scotiæ, et de aliis memorandis inventis in castro de Edenburgh in regno Scotiæ, in manu Domini regis Angliæ existente, et liberatis per preceptum dicti regis Angliæ predicto regi Scotiæ. Dat. 30 Decembris, 21 Edw. I."

This Catalogue is singularly curious and interesting. It mentions, though in very general terms, a vast number of Records. It seems to be totally different from the Catalogus Munimentorum deposited at Berwick, which has been just laid before the reader; and it evidently indicates a second removal of Records in the same year 1292, not to Berwick, but to the Castle of Roxburgh. It affords a presumption too, that the Instruments, Jewels, &c. contained in that first Catalogus were not returned. It is conceived in the following words, viz.

"MEMORANDUM. "Quod in isto chirographo continentur omnia & singula quæ dominus Radulphus Basset, custos castri puellarum constitutus per serenissimum principem dominum Edwardum regem Angliæ, dominum Hiberniæ, ducem Acquitaniæ, & superiorem dominum regni Scotiæ, ipso regno in manu dicti Domini regis existente per mortem Alexandri quondam regis Scotiæ defuncti, venire fecit, de dicto castro usque ad castrum de Rokesburgh, per mandatum R. It is well known, that King Edward I. by reiterated personal insults against Balliol individualy, as well as by various national indignities against the people of Scotland in general, deliberately, as it should seem, forced both the King and kingdom of Scotland to fly to arms.

This gave King Edward the opportunity he desired, of attaining possession of the country by conquest. He entered Scotland in the year 1296, at the head of a powerful army; and by the victorious progress of his troops, he quickly extorted from Balliol a formal surrender of his crown and kingdom, and obtained full and uncontroled possession of the country of Scotland.

It cannot be doubted that, along with the kingdom, King Edward got possession likewise of its Records, with which his officers, who had so lately seen and examined them, were minutely acquainted. This seems to be proved by three schedules, entered in Mr Agarde's Index of the Traclatus Pacis et Trugarum in the Chapter house at Westminster, in the following words, viz.
 “ Tres schedulæ facientes mentionem de bullis, chartis, et aliis memorandis inventis in thesauro regis Scotiæ apud Edinburg, 20 Edw. I.’ (b)

(a) Some error probably in this name.

() Calendars of Ancient Charters, &c. p. 290. Instead of 20th it should be 24 Edw. I. as is proved by the principal schedule itself, printed in the same book, p. 337. to be immediately laid before the reader.

Two of those Schedule, namely, a larger in the form of a roll, and a smaller written on parchment and much decayed inclosed in the larger, were perused in the Chapter-house by the Editor in September 1793, and again in April 1796. The larger contains all that is printed in the Calendars from p. 337. to the end of the first nine lines on the top of p. 346. inclusive : and an inventory of instruments inspected by the order of King Alexander III. in 1282 in the treasury at Edinburgh, is inserted in that larger schedule, of which it forms the most important part.

Omitting the paragraph in the middle of the 338th page of the Calendars, beginning with the words, “ The following schedule,” which is not in the manuscript, and correcting a few errors of the press, the Roll or Schedule, as printed in the Calendars, runs thus, viz.

No authentic instrument has hitherto been discovered that affords direct information how King Edward, after his conquest of Scotland, disposed of the other Records of that kingdom mentioned in the two first schedules or catalogues here printed. But is it not reasonable to suppose that the Records themselves accompanied those catalogues? Is not the conclusion in some measure unavoidable, that the other Records of Scotland continued to be kept along with King Richard's charters to King William, "de redditione castrorum de Rolburgh," &c. and "de feodo præstando regi Scotiæ de conductu suo," &c.; with the "obligatio nobilium & magnatum Scotiæ," (a) &c.; and with various other instruments evidently belonging to Scotland, entered in different parts of Mr Agarde's Repertory of the Traclatus Pacis, and in the Fædera?

It is certain that King Edward I. from the year 1296 till his latest breath, regarded Scotland as part of his dominions. It cannot therefore be supposed that so politic a Prince would intentionally destroy Records essentially necessary to the government and to the general interests of the country, as well as to the private interests of many of the greatest landholders, who supported his pretensions to the last (a). Indeed if the Records themselves had been destroyed, those catalogues of them must have shared the same fate. But the preservation of the charter by King Richard discharging the concession of superiority extorted by his father from King William, than which a more decisive refutation of King Edward's claim of that superiority could not be devised, affords, of itself alone, demonstration almost that King Edward destroyed none of the Records of Scotland.

Nor can the disappearing of those Records surprise us, when we consider the slovenly and careless manner in which the Records of England itself were kept (b): And if many of the most important Records of that country have been lost, we cannot wonder that the Scottish Records, which may have been carried into England, attracted still less attention and care.

It is however a remarkable circumstance, that in the famous treaty of Northampton, (p. 101. &c. of this Index), concluded only about twenty-one years after the death of King Edward I. no notice is taken of the ancient Records which that King had ordered to be removed from the Castle of Edinburgh, &c. Are we thence to conclude that they were then believed to be irrecoverably lost? or rather that the leading men at that time in Scotland having obtained grants of the large estates of those who had been forfeited for their adherence to the Balliol and English party, did not wish to recover Records that might revive and perpetuate the pretensions of the former proprietors or of their heirs (c)?

Before concluding it may not be improper briefly to mention, that the problematical fate of those ancient Archives of Scotland did not escape the attention of the present Lord Clerk-Register, Lord Frederick Campbell.

It has been stated in the Preface, that preparatory to an intended publication of the existing Parliamentary Records of Scotland, the Editor, at Lord Frederick's desire, and under his patronage, undertook a research in England, in the hope of finding there materials from which the defects in those Records might be supplied.

(a) It is proved by King Edward's edict in 1305, "pro stabilitate regni Scotie," printed in Pryane, vol. 3. p. 1053. and in the Rotuli Parliamenti, vol. 1. p. 267. and 268. that he intended to govern Scotland by its own laws.

(b) Many of them fell into the hands of private persons; some were deposited in the castles of Pontefract, Tuttenham, and Tunbridge, and in monasteries, &c. See the Introduction to Sir Joseph Ayloffe's Calendaris passim. The following passage is transcribed as a sample. "In the 3d year of King Edward VI. a great number of Records were 'casually discovered in an old empty house within the Tower, which; by lying damp, and many of them being piled 'up against the walls, were much damaged and eaten with the lime," page 27.—Nay, it appears from notandums on different parts of Mr Agarde's Repertory, which was carefully perused by the Editor, that many instruments which existed in his time have been mislaid since.

(c) It seems clear by No. 13. page 179. vol. 1. of the Rotuli Parliamenti, that in the 1305, the 33d year of King Edward I. the Records of Scotland were existing, and that they were in the custody of the Governor of Berwick, who was likewise Chamberlain of Scotland. The writ here referred to relates to the prior of Coldingham; and we read there as follows, viz. "Et quia Dominus Rex vult plenius certiorari in premissis, mandatum est custodi partium de "Berwick & camerario Scotie, quod ferretis rotulis & aliis memorandis in custodia ejusdem camerarii existentibus, & "etiam capta inquisitione diligenti per probos & legales, &c. inquirent de statu regna Scotie temporibus preteritis, "qualem videlicet habere consueverunt in dicto prioratu," &c.

In the prosecution of that research at London and Durham (a), in August, September, and October 1793, those more ancient archives which were in Scotland when King Alexander III. died, formed a principal and leading object. Every avenue that seemed likely to lead to a discovery of their fate was traced with the utmost assiduity and care (b). But the enquiry proved in a great measure fruitless. The Catalogues of them here presented to the reader were indeed found, together with the discharge by King Richard I. to King William of the extorted concession of the superiority of the kingdom of Scotland; the obligation by the greater barons of Scotland to receive the Maiden of Norway for their Queen; and some other detached original instruments; but no discovery of the rest could be attained.

Now although it be possible that those ancient Records, thrown aside in some dark unexplored corner, may still remain preserved, and that on a future occasion some fortunate accident may restore them to light; yet it seems, on the whole, but too probable, that they are now irrecoverably lost.

(a) See page 152. of this book.

(b) Here it was intended to have given some excerpts from the diary of the Editor's different proceedings relative to that investigation. But as the present publication should by those excerpts have been swelled much beyond the size originally intended, they are omitted; especially as to many readers they might seem to favour too much of egotism and ostentation.

NOTE on line 34. of page 12. and lines 24. and 25. of page 16. of the preceding INTRODUCTION.

“ Unus rotulus de antiquis statutis regni Scotiæ ;”—And again,

“ In uno facculo continentur 46 rotuli magni & parvi, quorum quidam sunt de debitis quæ debebantur domino regi, & duo de legibus & affis regni Scotiæ, & de legibus & consuetudinibus burgorum Scotiæ, & de quibusdam statutis editis per reges Scotiæ.”

THESE two entries prove indisputably, that in the year 1292, when the inventory in which they occur was drawn up, there existed among the Archives of Scotland Rolls of Scottish Statutes accounted ancient at the early period when those Rolls received their titles, which probably happened several, perhaps many years before 1292, the date of the inventory.

Supposing the titles on those rolls to have been written no earlier than the reign of King Alexander III. it is not likely that the statutes contained in them were those of that King's father, or those of his grandfather King William, or even those of his granduncle King Malcolm, between whose death and the accession of King Alexander III. about eighty-four years only had intervened. For statutes of a date not more remote than a century prior to the time when those rolls received their titles, could with no propriety be denominated ancient.

Under what King, then, or under what Kings were the statutes recorded in those rolls enacted? And do any traces of those statutes now remain?

Undoubtedly there is in Scotland a collection of ancient laws known during the space of more than 370 years by the name of Regiam Majestatem, a name formed of the two first words of the book,—that collection having been clearly and unequivocally recognised as a book of Scots law by a public statute in the year 1425.

In the sequel, perhaps, we shall be able to show, that that collection, though under a different name, was, many years before 1425, regarded as a genuine collection of the laws of Scotland. But it is certain, that from that year at least, it has been regarded by the lawyers of Scotland, with very few exceptions, as a system of the more ancient law of that country.

This code of law, if it may be called such, is attributed to King David I. who filled the throne of Scotland twenty nine years, viz. from the year 1124 to the year 1153; a supposition which seems to derive support from the personal character of that King, from internal evidence in the book itself, and from a memorable edict of King Edward I. of England, of the most unquestionable authority.

But that collection must not be considered as containing only the laws enacted by King David himself. Its great basis must have consisted of the statutes and usages of preceding times, collected under King David's authority, improved no doubt and enlarged by some statutes of his own.

If we look into history, we shall perceive, that in point of personal character no King perhaps ever lived whose disposition was by nature better adapted to legislation.

His unbounded liberality to the church and to churchmen has given occasion to much animadversion. In our eyes, indeed, it should seem to border on profusion. But ignorant in a great measure of the inductive circumstances that may have operated on King David's mind, we ought to view his conduct in that matter with candour, and to speak of it with diffidence and reserve.

Now although much of King David's liberality to churchmen may be justly ascribed to motives of innate piety, yet some part of it may probably, with equal justice, be imputed to a commendable political motive, namely, to soften and to humanise his subjects by religious sentiments. For a King so zealous about the spiritual concerns of his people, could not be regardless of their moral conduct, nor of their civil interests.

This natural propensity of King David to legislation may reasonably be supposed to have derived additional energy from the example of his maternal ancestors. His mother's granduncle King Edward the Confessor, and King Edgar, the grandfather of that Edward, were both distinguished legislators.

If then King David may be supposed to have had the inclination to civilize his subjects, and to regulate their conduct by laws, it cannot be denied that he possessed leisure and opportunity to carry his intentions into effect. For excepting the contest for the Crown of England between his niece Maud, the only child of his eldest sister, and Stephen, the husband of his other niece the daughter of his youngest sister, in which, during a few years, he was occasionally involved, his reign, upon the whole, was passed in uncommon tranquillity.

But on this point we are under no necessity to reason from conjecture founded on the general tenor of history.

King David's character has been drawn in striking colours by Baldredus abbot of Rieval in Yorkshire. That monkish historian was cotemporary with King David; and he seems to have been intimately acquainted with him, and to have been honoured with his patronage and friendship (a). We must therefore believe him to have been a man of integrity and veracity.

Baldred's account of King David appears to be a species of funeral oration, written immediately after the King's death, while the writer's mind was deeply impressed with that melancholy event, to the circumstances of which he had been an eye-witness. He addresses it to a distinguished personage who had seen and conversed with King David, and who must have been minutely informed of every particular advanced by the monk. This personage was King David's grandnephew, Henry Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, and Earl of Anjou, who, eighteen months after David's death, succeeded to the Crown of England.

Baldred's narrative, therefore, seems on the whole to be superior to all suspicion.

The abbot speaks of King David as a man "qui non sibi vivebat sed omnibus, omnium curam agens, omnium salutis prospiciens, rector morum, censor scelerum, virtutum incentor, justitiæ speculum."—"Unde tota illa gentis illius barbaries mansuescens, tanta se mox benevolentia et humilitate substravit, ut naturalis obliuia sevitie legibus quas regia mansuetudo dicebat colla submitteret." (b)

Baldred indeed did not enter into a particular description of King David's laws. As those laws were at the time universally known, a particular detail of them was unnecessary. But his words, though general, are clear and unambiguous.

That Baldred had no intention to enter into any detail of King David's laws, is evident from a subsequent passage in his narrative, where he is incidentally led to mention the Leges Burgorum. For when enumerating the bishopricks and the various religious houses founded by King David, he writes thus, "Et, ut quidam ferunt, monasterium sancti monialium Sancti Bartholomei juxta Kacerleil, et canonicos Præmonstratenses Novi Castri, et ibi monasterium nigrorum monachorum, et aliud monialium ibi, ut patet in prologo ejus super statutis burgorum, et etiam ad Dumfermelyn tresdecim monachos, scilicet conventum, introduxit de Cantuariâ, ac plura alia plena religiosis fratribus ordinata reliquit." (c)

Thus much in general on King David's title to the character of a legislator.

The book itself, too, without insisting on the words of its introductory chapter, contains direct evidence that King David was a legislator. For it presents us with several statutes expressly bearing to have been enacted by that King;—a circumstance which affords strong presumptive evidence, that the rest of the original collection was made under the authority of the same King David.

But the remarkable edict by the English Justinian King Edward I. to be afterwards noticed, seems to place this matter beyond all controversy.

In later times, however, in the course of the present century especially, the authenticity of Regiam Majestatem has been called in question by several writers, at the head of whom may be ranked the Lord Chief-Justice of England Sir

(a) "Ego autem, licet peccator et indignus, memor tamen beneficiorum tuorum, dulcissime Domine et Amice (addressing himself to King David's spirit) quæ mihi, ab ineunte ætate mea, impendisti, memor gratiæ in qua me nunc ultimo suscepisti (viz. when David was on his deathbed) memor benevolentia qua me in omnibus petitionibus meis exaudisti, memor munificentia quam mihi exhibuisti, memor amplexuum et osculorum, in quibus me, non sine lacrimis, omnibus qui aderant admirantibus, dimisisti, libo pro te lacrimas meas, resolve affectum meum, et totum refundo spiritum meum." Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 310.

(b) "By these means the barbarity of the nation was softened into such gentleness, humanity, &c. that the people, forgetting their natural fierceness, bowed their necks to the laws which the royal clemency dictated." Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 300.

Matthew Hale. It has been by those writers held forth as little better than a servile transcript of a reputed digest of English law, said to have been written towards the end of the reign of King Henry II. when Ranulph de Glanville was Justiciary of England, by whose name that digest is generally called.

The principal circumstance that seems to have induced those writers to form this general conclusion, is the similarity of the matter in the two books, which is stated to be so very strong, as could not have happened unless the one had been copied from the other, or both from some common original; and no such common original having been pointed out, a variety of topics are adduced to prove that Glanville (by which name the English work shall be called on this occasion) is the original, and Regiam Majestatem the copy.

The similarity shall, for argument's sake, be admitted; for at present it is by no means intended to investigate all the minute particulars that have been advanced on this subject. At some other time, perhaps, such an investigation may be attempted; previously to which the two books must be collated with care, as in a question of this nature discrepancies that at a first glance might appear immaterial, may, when more deliberately considered, powerfully influence a final determination.

Nor will it be then less necessary to inquire.—Whether the English compilation was really digested when Glanville was Justiciary of England?—Whether it actually contains the laws of England as they stood at that time (a)?—and, Whether its authenticity was ever sanctioned by any English statute?

These inquiries again will introduce several subordinate questions intimately connected with them,—What is the precise or the probable date of the most ancient manuscript of Glanville now to be found?—What is the most ancient book or manuscript in which Glanville is mentioned?—and, Does Glanville contain any reference to any law, or to any historical fact, relative either to England or Scotland, of a date later than the year 1189, when King Henry II. died?

On the other hand, we know certainly, as observed before, that more than 370 years ago Regiam Majestatem is under that very name mentioned in a public statute of Scotland as a book of Scots law. It is impossible, therefore, to believe that it could have obtained that solemn parliamentary sanction, if it had not been deemed genuine and authentic for time immemorial antecedent to that period. This consideration seems effectually to overthrow the opinion of some writers, who fix the introduction into Scotland of that supposed pilfered edition of Glanville to the reign of King David II. For that King having died only fifty-five years before the date of the act of parliament 1425, many persons were probably then alive who had been men before the conclusion of King David II.'s reign, and knew exactly the character of authenticity which Regiam Majestatem then bore. Hence again it seems necessarily to follow, that it bore the same character for time immemorial prior to that King's reign; and that therefore its introduction into Scotland, and its adoption there as a system of law, must have happened at a period more early by many years than that King's reign.

But at whatever time that adoption took place, it must appear a very extraordinary event; for one of two consequences seems unavoidable, viz.

Either that the Scots then laboured under a total privation of municipal law; an idea as absurd in theory as it shall be shown to be false in fact:

Or that the Scots at once abandoned all their former usages and laws, and substituted this English code in their place.

In an abstract point of view, it is a violent supposition, that any nation, however uncivilized, would at once adopt in the gross the juridical system of a different country. Laws are the gradual result of necessity and social experience. Even among a people but just emerging from barbarity, established customs, however rude, bend slowly and reluctantly to the milder institutions of a more refined state of society.

Certainly at whatever time this adoption of Glanville's system can be supposed to have taken place in Scotland, the people of that country must have attained a state of civilization altogether incompatible with such an adoption. Between the accession of King Edgar in 1098, and the death of King Alexander III. in 1286, a period of nearly two centuries, that nation appears to have enjoyed, both externally and internally, a state of peace and quiet unprecedented in the history of any nation of Europe during the same period. On some few occasions indeed their Kings were engaged in disputes with those of England. But those disputes were of very short duration, and could not have disturbed the general tranquillity in any material degree. In fact, the catalogue of Scottish records now before us, unaided by any other circumstance, affords demonstration, that the general polity of Scotland had, before the formation of that catalogue, reached a degree of perfection not inferior to that of any European state in the same age.

(a) "We have no authentic records of any acts of parliament before 9 Henry III.; and those we have of that King's reign are but few. Nor have we any reports of judicial decisions in any constant series of time before the reign of Edward I. though we have the Plea-rolls of the times of Henry III. and of King John in remarkable order." History of the Common Law of England by Sir Matthew Hale, second edition, p. 58.—"The original or authentic transcripts of acts of parliament are not before the time of Henry III.; and many that were in his time are perished and lost."—And again, "And in the next age the statutes made in the time of Henry III. and Edward I. were lost." Ibid. p. 66.—"Tis true, we have no record of judicial proceedings so ancient as that time," (viz. of King II.), "except the Pipe-rolls in exchequer, which are only accounts of his revenue." Ibid. p. 138.

Under such circumstances, it is incredible that the people of Scotland should at once have assumed for their juridical system the laws of a different kingdom; and those too, not as detailed by Bracton, a later and more perfect work than Glanville (a); nor as contained in the still later and much more perfect system of King Edward I. (b); nor as exhibited in the public subsisting statutes of that kingdom; but as presented in the anonymous compilation of a private individual (c), which at the time of its supposed introduction into Scotland was in a great measure diffused and antiquated in the kingdom from which it was borrowed (d).

But the learned Lord Chief-Justice carries the matter much farther. He maintains, that the laws of Scotland in general were imported from England. Nay, he argues, contrary to every degree of probability, and to the judgment of the fondest antiquaries, that the laws of Normandy, as exhibited in the Grand Coutumier, were likewise borrowed from the laws of England.

Here it may be observed, that if the feudal customs, instead of being gradually introduced into the different countries of Europe, as is most agreeable to the ordinary course of things, were at once adopted in the gross by any nation, it is most likely that they would be copied from the system esteemed at the time the best and the most complete.

The learned Judge adduces various reasons for the general importation of the English laws into Scotland,—the contiguity of the two countries, and the intercourse between the inhabitants resulting from that contiguity;—"the superiority and interest that the Kings of England obtained over the Crown and kingdom of Scotland;"—and finally and chiefly, the policy of King Edward I.; on which last point the words of the Chief-Justice himself shall be afterwards stated.

On the circumstance of the contiguity of the two kingdoms, more stress perhaps is laid than on deliberate reflection it may appear to be entitled to, or than the fact will justify. For that contiguity, by furnishing perpetual occasion for mutual injuries and encroachments, was more likely to produce animosity, discord, and hostility, than an adoption of each other's laws; a consequence too clearly proved by the histories of both countries.

It is unnecessary here to enlarge on the trite subject of the Scottish dependence. Providentially it is now a subject totally inconsequential. It has become a point merely of curious investigation among antiquaries; and every liberal and candid Englishman—and candour and liberality are now among the most prominent features of the character of an English gentleman—will listen to any discussion on that subject with the coolest impartiality.

When, it may be asked, did this dependence originate?—When the Romans possessed South Britain? No; their two celebrated pretences evince the contrary.—Was it obtained by the Britons after the Romans relinquished the island? By no means. On the contrary, the incursions of the inhabitants of North Britain forced the Britons to the desperate resource of calling in the Saxons for their protection.

Was North Britain subjected by the Saxons? No such event is mentioned in history. A conquest by such barbarians over a people still more barbarous than their conquerors, must, like the conquest of the Britons by the same Saxons, have been marked, if not by an entire extirpation or expulsion of their opponents, at least by indelible traces of blood; and a heavy tribute, if not absolute slavery, must have been the lot of those who escaped the sword. Feudal homage was the child of a later and somewhat more civilized age.

It is probable, indeed, that the Saxons repulsed the northern barbarians from England, and, on the east side of the island especially, drove them perhaps beyond the pretentures. But it is improbable that they passed the Scottish Sea or Frith of Forth. The territory of South Britain presented to them a less difficult as well as a more inviting prey, and immediately attracted their avidity. In conjunction with the very barbarians whom they had been hired to oppose, they turned their arms against those whom they had come to defend; and after a long and a severe struggle, they destroyed the greater part of the ancient Britons, and of the rest, forced some to abandon the island entirely, and cooped up others in Wales, Cornwall, and Cumberland.

Hardly had the Saxons formed themselves into seven separate governments, called in history the Heptharchy, than they began to quarrel with one another; and before those quarrels were concluded by the union of those seven governments under one head, the Danes had repeatedly committed depredations on the sea-coasts of England, and had commenced those invasions which they prosecuted without intermission, and with inexpressible loss to the Saxons, till their leader Canute attained the throne of England.

Hence the Saxons do not appear to have had leisure either to subdue North Britain, or to render it tributary.

It may be true that the Conqueror, by whom it is generally thought the feudal law was introduced into England, and his immediate successors, obliged the cotemporary Kings of Scotland to hold the estates they possessed in England by feudal tenure, and for those estates to subject themselves to the feudal solemnity of homage and fealty (a). But that the Scottish Monarchs became feudataries to those Kings of Norman extraction for the kingdom of Scotland, is as destitute of probability as it is of proof.

Of the ancient independence of Scotland as a kingdom, an indirect, and negative indeed, but at the same time a forcible argument arises from the formal concession extorted (b) by King Henry II. from William King of Scots when King Henry's prisoner; by which King William became the liege-man of King Henry, and performed fealty to him as his liege-lord, for Scotland and all his, William's, other lands. For that declaration (c) contains not a single word

(a) Not to mention other acquisitions in England by the Scottish Kings, it is certain, (if any faith at all can be given to the monkish historians of those early times), that as far back as the year 944, the province of Cumberland, which had formerly belonged to the Kings of Scotland, but had been wrested from them by the Saxons, (Ford. vol. 1. p. 199.), was granted by King Edmond, the son of Athelstan, to the apparent heirs of the Scottish Crown. "Unde "Malcolmi regis auxilium, et animum placabilem firmiter sibi junctum contra Danos habere desiderans, totam Cumbriam in perpetuum, sub fide jurata, tradidit possidendam."—"Provinciam, quæ vocatur Cumberland, regi Scottorum Malcolmo, rex, sub fidelitate jurisjurandi, commendavit."—"Postmodum vero statim inter eos concordatum est et amborum concilio decretum, ut in futurum pro bono continuandæ pacis utriusque regni, Malcolmi regis proximus heres Indulfus, cæterorumque regum Scottorum hæredes qui per tempore fuerint, Eadmundo regi suisque successoribus Angliæ regibus hominum pro Cumbria facerent ac fidelitatis sacramentum." Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 205.—"Malcolmus autem rex cum Eadredo pacem habuit, facto sibi prius hominio pro Cumbria per Indulfum."—"Ad Cumbriæ dominium, eo coronato, promotus est Duffus, regis Malcolmi filius, Eadredo regi solita fidelitatis fide facta." Ibid. p. 206.—"Eo quoque statim coronato, Malcolmum filium Duffi successioni proximum, si visisset, in regulum Cumbriæ libenter Eadgarus suscepit, sub sacramento fidelitatis consueto. Hujusmodi mutæ pacis et amicitie pactum inter reges et regna, feliciter a regibus Malcolmo Scottorum, et Anglorum Eadmundo primitus initum, absque contentione strepitu, jugiter et inconcussa centum viginti perseveravit annis et amplius etiam, usque Willielmus Bastardus invasit Angliam et obtinuit." Ibid. p. 209.

(b) "Præterea quietavimus omnes pactiones quas bonus pater noster Henricus rex Angliæ, per novas cartas et per captionem suam" (viz. Willielmi regis Scotiæ) "extorfit." Fœdera, vol. 1. p. 64.

that, in the most distant manner indicates any prior dependence of the kingdom of Scotland. But when it comes to mention the dependence of the church of Scotland, it is thus expressed, viz. "Quod ecclesia Scotticana talem subjectionem amodo faciet ecclesie Anglicane qualem illi facere debet et solebat tempore regum Anglie predecessorum suorum." The prior alleged dependence of the church being thus pointedly stated, we may reasonably presume, that the prior dependence of the whole kingdom, had any evidence or even tradition of such prior dependence then existed, would have been likewise mentioned in terms equally explicit, especially as it would have afforded a colourable pretence for that new declaration of dependence.

It will be recollected, that this extorted concession was most solemnly discharged to the same King William by King Henry's son and successor King Richard I. in the year 1189, immediately after King Richard succeeded to the Crown of England.

This discharge is printed by Mr Rymer in the Fœdera (a). It was one of the Scottish deeds carried into England by King Edward I. and it still remains therein wonderful preservation, considering its antiquity, now more than 608 years (b).

No renewal of this feudal dependence having ever been obtained by any King of England anterior to the competition for the Crown of Scotland in the year 1292, the claim of superiority set up on that occasion by King Edward I. with King Richard's discharge in his pocket, is one of the grossest and most indefensible instances of usurpation that occurs in history. It is the more indefensible still, that in the marriage-articles between King Edward's eldest son and the infant Queen of Scots, only two years before, viz. in 1290, it is expressly declared, "Quod regnum Scotie remaneat separatim et divisum, et liberum in se, sine subjectione a regno Anglie, per suas rectas divitas et marchias, sicut a retro hæcenus extitit observatum, volentes et concedentes expresse quod deficientibus prædictis Edwardo et Margareta vel eorum altero absque liberis," &c. "regnum prædictum, integre, libere, absolute, et absque ulla subjectione, revertatur et restituatur eisdem," (viz. proximioribus heredibus) (c).

But viewing this question in the light the most unfavourable for Scotland, and supposing that country to have really been at some remote period a fief of England, certainly it was singularly glorious for the Scots, not only to have reconquered the territory between the two pretentures, but likewise to have decisively shaken off that dependence in a contest with the ablest and the most powerful of the English Monarchs.

But it is a wonderful circumstance, that the Scots, during this sanguinary contest, while prodigal of their blood for the independence of their own country, were in fact fighting against the English for the independence of England itself. For if the Scots, instead of combating the armies of England, had, as their auxiliaries and allies, displayed their banners in conjunction with them against the power of France, that kingdom, in all human probability, should have been subdued, the seat of government should have been transferred to Paris, and this noble island should have become a province dependent on France.

On the whole, if this supposed dependence of the kingdom and Crown of Scotland on the English Kings had been uniformly maintained by the English Monarchs, and enforced by the exaction of aids, scutages, and the other casualties resulting from feudal subjection, and if that dependence had been as uniformly acknowledged, and the exaction of all the feudal casualties voluntarily complied with by the Scots nation, it might have had a powerful influence in assimilating the laws of the dependent to those of the dominant kingdom. But as no vestiges remain of any of those feudal casualties having been ever demanded from the Scots, and as the alleged dependence appears to have been always strenuously denied and reprobated by that nation, except in the compulsory declaration extorted by King Henry II. in consequence of the unfortunate captivity of their King, and that extorted by King Edward I. on occasion of the still more unfortunate competition for their Crown, the claim of dependence was more likely to have an effect directly opposite.

But the policy of King Edward I. furnishes the principal argument to the learned Chief-Justice for the introduction and establishment of the English jurisprudence in Scotland. On that head Sir Matthew expresses himself thus.

(a) Fœdera, vol. 1. p. 64.

(b) Page 105. and 106. of this Book. The preservation of this instrument, the most unfavourable to King Edward's pretensions of superiority that could be devised, will not allow us to suppose for a single moment that King Edward either meant to destroy, or did in fact destroy, any of the Scottish archives.

(c) Fœdera, vol. 2. p. 483.

" King Edward I. having thus obtained the actual superiority of the Crown of Scotland (a), from the beginning of his reign until his 20th year, and then placing John de Balliol in that kingdom, and yet continuing his superiority thereof, and keeping his courts of justice, and exercising dominion and jurisdiction, by his officers and ministers, in the very bowels of that kingdom, and afterwards, upon the defection of this King John in the 24th of Edward I. taking the whole kingdom into his actual administration, and placing his own judges and great officers there, and commanding his courts of king's bench, &c. to issue their process thither, and continuing in the actual administration of the government of that kingdom during life; it is no wonder that those laws which obtained and were in use in England in and before the time of this King, were in a great measure translated thither; and possibly either by being enacted in that kingdom, or at least for so long time put in use and practice there, many of the laws in use and practice here in England, were in his time so rivetted and settled in that kingdom, that it is no wonder to find they were not shaken or altered by the liberal concessions made afterwards by King Edward III. upon the marriage of his sister; but that they remain part of the municipal laws of that kingdom to this day.

" And that which renders it more evident that this was one of the greatest means of fixing and continuing the laws of England in Scotland is this, viz. This very King Edward I. was not only a martial and victorious, but also a very wise and prudent Prince, and one that knew very well how to use a victory, as well as to obtain it; and therefore knew it was the best means of keeping those dominions he had powerfully obtained, by substituting and translating his own laws into the kingdom he had thus subdued. Thus he did upon his conquest of Wales, and doubtless thus he did upon his conquest of Scotland; and those laws which we find there so nearly agreeing with the laws of England used in his time, especially the statutes of Westminster 1. and Westminster 2. are the monuments and footsteps of his wisdom and prudence," &c.

" If, as Sir Matthew argues, the contiguity of the kingdoms, and the feudal dependence of Scotland on England, had naturally produced an introduction of the English laws into Scotland, what occasion was there for all this profound policy of King Edward?

But overlooking this seeming defect in the deduction of Sir Matthew's argument, and supposing that King Edward, from those political motives, had really intended to establish the English jurisprudence in Scotland, why should he have preferred the antiquated system of Glanville, as transcribed in Regiam Majestatem, to the more perfect and later system of Bracton? or to his own system so much more improved than even that of Bracton? (b)

(a) Common Law of England, p. 200. " King Edward I. having formerly received the homage and fealty of Alexander King of Scots, was taken to be superior Dominus SCOTIÆ REGNI." To this assertion the words of the instrument itself shall, without any commentary, be opposed; " Et idem rex Angliæ homagium ejusdem regis Scotiæ recepit, salvo jure et clameo ejusdem regis Angliæ et hæredum suorum de homagio prædicti regis Scotiæ et hæredum suorum de REGNO SCOTIÆ, cum inde loqui voverint." And a little further, " Ego Alexander rex Scotiæ portabo bonam fidem Domino Edwardo regi Angliæ et hæredibus suis rebus Angliæ," &c. " debita de terris et tenementis quæ teneo de rege Angliæ supradicto." Federa, vol. 2. p. 126.—In the year 1237, by a solemn agreement between King Henry III. and King Alexander II. (Federa, vol. 1. p. 375.), the latter resigned in favour of King Henry the shires of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland, and had in lieu of them accepted ducentas libratas terre within the shires of Northumberland and Cumberland. These without question are the lands and tenements mentioned in the above act of homage and fealty.

(b) " Touching the former, viz. Bracton's Treatise, it yields us a great evidence of the growth of the laws between the times of Henry II. and Henry III. If we do but compare Glanville's book with that of Bracton, we shall see a very great advance of the law in the writings of the latter over what they are in Glanville." History of the Common Law of England, p. 136.—" We now come to the time of Edward I. who is well styled our English Justinian, for in his time the law, quasi per saltum, obtained a very great perfection."—And a little further—" The laws did never in any one age receive so great and sudden an advancement; nay, I think I may safely say, all the ages since his time have not done so much in reference to the orderly settling and establishing of the distributive justice of this kingdom, as he did within a short compass of the thirty-five years of his reign, especially about the first thirteen years thereof." Ibidem, p. 157. and 158.—Here it may be observed, that King Edward had no opportunity of interfering in Scottish legislation till after the competition for the Crown, which began in the 20th year of his reign, about seven years, according to Sir Matthew Hale, after he had brought the English laws to their perfection. Glanville's compilation was more than an hundred years old when King Edward interfered in the affairs of Scotland.

The reasoning of the learned Lord Chief-Justice on this point furnishes an instructive lesson to every reader, "not rashly to assent to arguments merely theoretical, however ingenious and plausible."

For it shall here be shown, on the most unquestionable authority, viz. that of King Edward the English Justinian himself,

That when he intermeddled with the affairs of Scotland, the Scots nation had laws of their own; and

That King Edward never intended to establish any system whatever of English law in place of those Scots laws.

That the Scots had municipal laws of their own, and that they were particularly anxious that no innovation should be made in those laws by the interference of this same King Edward and his successors Kings of England, is evident from the remarkable instrument before alluded to, printed in the Fœdera, vol. 2. p. 482. and 483.

It will be recollected, that on the death of King Alexander III. without any other descendant of his body than an infant grand-daughter, the Maiden of Norway, King Edward employed all his influence to obtain her for wife to his eldest son, and by that means to effect an union of the two kingdoms. In this negotiation King Edward was successful. The marriage-articles were drawn up and ingrossed in the instrument here referred to, dated 18th July 1290, in the form of a declaration by King Edward's plenipotentiaries.

Of that instrument the very first article is expressed in the following words, viz.

"Cum, inter cetera, quæ contingunt negotium et tractatum, habitum inter excellentissimum principem, dominum nostrum supradictum, ex parte una, et venerabiles patres custodes, et ceteros episcopos, abbates, et totum clerum, nobiles viros comites et barones, totamque communitatem regni Scotiæ, ex altera, super matrimonio contrahendo inter dominum Edwardum, filium et hæredem predicti domini nostri regis, et dominam Margaretam, natam egregiæ principis domini Erici regis Norwagiæ, et ejusdem regni Scotiæ hæreditariam reginam, a nobis esset petatum ex parte eorundem custodum prelatorum, nobilium, et communitatis ipsius regni Scotiæ, quod pro domino nostro predicto," (viz. Edwardo) "et hæredibus suis, eis concederemus et firmaremus jura, leges, libertates, et consuetudines dicti regni Scotiæ, tam ecclesiasticas quam seculares, hæcenus usitatas et optentas, nos, habita confideratione diligenti ad pacem et tranquillitatem utriusque regni, et mutuum dilectionem habitantium in iisdem cunctis temporibus remanuram, concedimus nomine et vice domini nostri predicti et hæredum suorum, quod jura, leges, libertates, et consuetudines ejusdem regni Scotiæ, in omnibus et per omnia per totum ipsum regnum, et ejus marchias integre et inviolabiliter perpetuis temporibus observentur."

In different parts of the same instrument the leges et consuetudines Scotiæ are repeated: and special provision is made in it for the safe custody of the relics, charters, privileges, and other monuments touching the royal dignity and the kingdom at large.

Can a more irrefragable proof be desired, that prior to the 1290 the Scots nation had a system of laws peculiar to themselves?

To prove again that King Edward, after having apparently conquered Scotland by his victories at Berwick and Dunbar in the year 1296, after having obliged King John Balliol to execute in his favour a solemn resignation of his crown and kingdom, and after quelling several formidable insurrections of the Scots, by which Scotland seemed to be completely subjected to his authority, was far from entertaining the design imputed to his wisdom by the Chief-Justice, but on the contrary was determined to govern the Scots by their own laws, the words of King Edward himself shall be here laid before the reader. The words shall be taken from an edict issued by King Edward for the government of Scotland, "pro stabilitate regni Scotiæ," printed in Prynne, vol. 3. page 1053. and in the Rotuli Parliamenti of England, vol. 1. p. 267. and 268. It is dated in the year 1305, and contains this remarkable passage. "Eudroit de leis et usages pur le gouvernement de la terra d'Escoce, ordenee est, que l'usage de Scot et de Bret (a) desorendroit soit desfendu, si que mes ne soit usez. Et ordene est ausint, que le Lieutenant le Roi; del heure qu'il ferra venuz en la terre d'Escoce, face assembler les bones gentz de la terre, en aucun certyn lieu le quel il verra que a ce soit convenable, et que illoques, en la presence de lui et de gentz quil y ferraient assemblez, soient rehezees les leis que le roi David fist, et ausint les amendementz et les addicions q'un estle puis faites par les Rois," (b) &c.

(a) The nature of this usage is now unknown; but it should seem to have been peculiar to Scotland.

(b) "In regard to laws and usages for the government of Scotland, it is ordained, that the usage of Scot and Brit be for the future prohibited, so that they may be no more used. And it is also ordained, that the King's Lieutenant, immediately on his arrival in Scotland, cause the good men of the country to assemble in any certain place

These words afford the most satisfactory evidence,

That King Edward had no intention of introducing into Scotland the laws of England; and

That King David I. was a legislator, and that his laws were regarded as the basis of Scottish jurisprudence: and it is humbly conceived, that those laws of King David, with the amendments and additions by succeeding Kings, convey so exact a description of the book called by the general name of Regiam Majestatem as can scarcely be mistaken.

Thus, in a connected point of view, we see, that in the year 1292 there were among the archives of Scotland "rolls of the ancient statutes of the kingdom of Scotland, of the laws and usages of that kingdom, and of the laws and usages of its burrows;"

That in the year 1305 King Edward directed "the laws of King David, with the improvements and additions made in those laws by succeeding Kings," to be publicly read in presence of the people of Scotland;

And that in the year 1425 a public statute was enacted, appointing a committee, consisting of eighteen of the states of Parliament, to "see and examine the bukis of law, yat is to say, Regiam Majestatem and Quoniam Attachamenta, and mend the lawis that needis mendment."

Little doubt, therefore, it is humbly thought, can be entertained, that the Regiam Majestatem and Quoniam Attachamenta mentioned in this statute, are the latus of King David, with the improvements and additions of succeeding Kings mentioned in King Edward's edict just an hundred and twenty years before; and that the Rotuli de Antiquis Statutis Scotie, &c. put into King Edward's hands in 1292, thirteen years before his edict, contained those laws of King David, and the subsequent improvements and additions, &c.; in other words, that those three different references denote precisely the same thing, viz. the Regiam Majestatem.

No verbal or theoretical criticisms, however ingenious, can shake a weight of written evidence so firmly connected, and so direct.

The earliest manuscripts of Regiam Majestatem at present known, do not appear to be more ancient than the beginning of the fifteenth century, two hundred and fifty years at least after King David's code must have been compiled.

To assert that Regiam Majestatem, as contained in those manuscripts, is precisely the same with that drawn up by King David's directions, were very rash indeed. The amendments mentioned in King Edward's edict oppose such an idea. But without insisting on that expression, it is obvious, that before the invention of printing, interpolation and alteration could be practised with so little chance of detection, that the monkish transcribers had much latitude, both to alter the original text, and also to insert here and there passages suggested by their own fancies. Nay, in various instances a marginal observation or reference on a more ancient copy, might, by a later clerk, have been innocently mistaken for part of the text, and as such inserted in the body of the work, without any intention to deceive.

Under such circumstances, it were extraordinary indeed, if in the numberless transcripts of King David's code, which must have been made during the long period of two centuries and a half, the original manuscript had remained totally unaltered, without mentioning the intentional and deliberate alterations made by subsequent laws.

Certain passages from the Civil law, which appear suspicious to some; and other passages from the Canon law, and some references to Glanville, which prove a stumbling-block to others, have most probably found their way into the body of the work by such means.

At the same time, to suppose that before the discovery of the Pandects in one entire connected work, whether at Amalphi in 1137, before the middle of King David's reign, or at some earlier period; or that before particular promulgations of the Canon law, no fragments of the Civil or Canon law were any where preserved, is extremely improbable (a). Many unquestionable proofs of the contrary could, if necessary, be produced.

"that he shall see convenient for the purpose, and that there, in presence of him and of those who shall be there assembled, be rehearsed the laws which King David made, and also the amendments and additions which have since been made by the Kings," &c.

(a) "These laws of King Henry I. are a kind of miscellany made up of those ancient laws called the laws of the Confessor and King William I. and of certain parts of the Canon and Civil law." History of the Common Law of England, p. 135.—See also the authorities quoted by Lord Lyttleton, in support of the following passage, viz. "The law of England being a barrier against the whole system of Papal power, the prelates, who were become subservient to that power, and continually appealed to it in the affairs of the church, had recourse to the Canon and Civil laws, the authority of which they endeavoured to exalt above that of the former. A professor of them, named Vacarius,

If then such fragments were known in Europe before, or in the days of King David, some of the foreign ecclesiastics brought into Scotland to inhabit the various monasteries founded by the father and two elder brothers of that King, and by himself, must undoubtedly have imported such knowledge along with them. It cannot therefore appear in the least extraordinary, that traces of those laws might be discernible in any digest of laws formed by King David.

Nor was it at all necessary, as some writers seem to have supposed, that the people of Scotland should have derived their knowledge of the Civil and Canon law from England. The intercourse directly between Scotland and the continent of Europe in general, and Italy in particular, must, by means of the different churchmen, as well as by commerce (a), have been abundantly frequent; and it can hardly be doubted that the Scots would, on subjects of so high importance, prefer information flowing immediately from the source, to circuitous information transmitted through the channel of a hostile nation.

It has been urged as a suspicious circumstance, that in Regiam Majestatem, a code of laws supposed to have been altogether framed by King David, some particular statutes, not to be found in Glanville, occur, bearing expressly to have been enacted by that King.

But it is absurd to suppose, as has been already observed, that Regiam Majestatem contained nothing besides the acts of King David. It is much more reasonable to regard it as a general collection made by King David's authority of all the subsisting laws of preceding Kings, enlarged, no doubt, and improved by several acts of his own. Even in the former view, the objection has little force. In the latter, it has no force at all. On the contrary, in such a general collection it was proper to distinguish the particular enactments of David from the other laws in the book; and that circumstance, instead of throwing discredit on Regiam Majestatem, confers on it additional authenticity.

If, however, we may for a moment suppose the rolls of ancient Scottish statutes now under consideration to have fallen into the hands of some English monk, who observing in them a general resemblance to the ancient laws of England, and actuated by some illiberal motive, had formed the resolution to transcribe them, to alter the arrangement, and to exhibit them as an English compilation, such a man would be careful to omit every particular that might lead to a detection of his plagiarism, and of course would studiously omit those statutes of King David.

It has been urged too as a proof of Regiam Majestatem being a copy of Glanville, that the latter is not only the most methodical book of the two, but likewise in various respects the most perfect and complete.

Now, whether we shall suppose some private person in Scotland deliberately sitting down to copy Glanville, with a view to pass his copy on the world as an original digest of the ancient laws of his country, or several persons, by authority of the Parliament of Scotland, adopting Glanville in the lump as a body of Scots law, it is utterly incredible that in either case the copy should have been intentionally made more immethodical, or more imperfect than the original. No stronger argument, perhaps, can be adduced in support of the originality of Regiam Majestatem, than its being less methodical and less perfect than Glanville. (b)

"was called over from Italy in the year 1148 by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and under his patronage they were taught in the Archbishopal Palace and in the university of Oxford. Some of the books brought and commented on by Vacarius contained 'notions and maxims,' &c. " V. Johan. Salib. Policraticon, five de nugis curial. l. 8. c. 12.—Gerv. Actus Pont. (a) The Abbot Baldredus, the author of the eulogium on King David, referred to above, has the following remarkable passage. "Tu quondam (viz. terra Scotie) caterarum mendica terrarum, cespite duro fanem incolis ingerbas, nunc ceteris mollior atque fecundior, ex tua abundantia vicinarum regionum inopiam allevias. Ipse (viz. rex David) portus tuos peregrinis mercibus facundavit, et aliorum regnorum civitas tuis deliciis aggregavit." Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 305. at the bottom.—The two following passages, though foreign to the present question, are so curious that we are induced to insert them in this place. "Ita enim populum illum" (viz. Scoticanum) 'rudem et agrestem ad moris compositos et edomitos illicere satagebat, ut non solum de magnis regni sui causis, verum et de minimis quibusque, utpote de hortis, arboribus, et pomariis curam gereret, ut eos ad similia suo exemplo provocaret." Page 302.—And in another place, "Et ut nihil illi ad vitam honestam desisset, etiam hora conveniente honesto alicui operi, hoc est aut herbas plantandas, vel furculos a sua radice excisos, alieno trunco inscruenda operam dabat." Page 305.

(b) Lord Lyttleton, in his history of King Henry II. writes thus; "I will only add, that the high encomiums on the then reigning King, in the prefaces to both these books," (viz. Regiam Majestatem and Glanville), "or

But in truth this whole matter is confined within limits so clear and so precise, as appear effectually to exclude all difficulty and misapprehension.

On the one hand, the statute 1425 must be admitted to carry back the character of authenticity attached to Regiam Majestatem fourscore years at least prior to that time.

On the other hand, the laws of King David, with the amendments and additions by succeeding Kings, ordered by King Edward's edict in 1305 to be publicly read in a general convention of the Scots nation, could be nothing else than those contained in the rolls of the ancient statutes of Scotland, of the laws and assise of the kingdom of Scotland, and of the laws and usages of the burrows of Scotland, put into King Edward's hands only thirteen years before, the contents of which must have been universally known.

That public rehearsal, again, in 1305, of those rolls, without mentioning the written documents of them, that, in consequence of so solemn a transaction, could not fail to have been spread through the country, must certainly have transmitted and preserved the perfect knowledge of them fourscore years at least after that rehearsal.

No time therefore seems to be left for the introduction into Scotland of this imperfect immethodical bungled transcript of Glanville, and for the adoption of it there, under the title of Regiam Majestatem, as a genuine system of the ancient laws of the Scots nation.

On the other hand, little doubt can be entertained that Regiam Majestatem, recognised by a public statute of Scotland in 1425 as a book of laws, consisted of the "rotuli de antiquis statutis regni Scotiæ—de legibus et assisibus regni Scotiæ—et de legibus et consuetudinibus burgorum Scotiæ—et de quibusdam statutis editis per reges Scotiæ," mentioned in the inventory 1292; and that those rotuli again were "the laws which King David made, and also the amendments and additions which have since been made by the Kings," ordered by King Edward's edict 1305 to be publicly rehearsed in a general convention of the people of Scotland.

It is proper too to keep in mind, that no more than an hundred and thirty-nine years had intervened between the death of King David in 1153 and the year 1292, the date of the inventory in which those rolls were mentioned; and but an hundred and twenty years between the date of King Edward's edict and the 1425, when the statute was enacted; the longest period of the two being no more remote than from the Restoration to the present time, and, to use an expression of Sir Matthew Hale, perfectly within time of memory. Those indeed who lived in the reign of King Alexander III. cannot be supposed to have been ignorant of the laws of King David, enacted only about an hundred years before the commencement of that reign. Nor could those who lived in the time of King James I. have been ignorant of laws publicly rehearsed in a convention of their countrymen only an hundred years before King James's accession to the Crown.

Let it not then be deemed presumptuous to request, that before the severe sentence of final condemnation be pronounced against Regiam Majestatem, of being a spurious and bungled copy of Glanville, the question may be candidly and dispassionately reconsidered.

"account of victories gained by him, and successes in war, the FAME OF WHICH HAD FILLED ALL LANDS, are very ill applicable to David I." Vol. 2. p. 269.—It is painful to remark, that on this point the Noble historian seems, through inadvertency, to have expressed himself less accurately than he certainly would have wished. The passage in Regiam Majestatem which he alludes to, is in these words: "Quam eleganter, quam strenue, quam calide, hostium obviando insidiis et malitiis, hostilitatis tempore armatam exercuit militiam, nemini venit in duum." Will this passage admit the bold paraphrase of Lord Lyttleton?—But let us hear what King David's cotemporary, Baldred, says on this subject. "Quoniam gressus hominis a domino diriguntur, qui regem invidiosissimum, qui tot jubi barbaras jubavit nationes, qui de Moravienfibus et insularis parvo labore triumphaverat." Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 304. Such are the words of a writer cotemporary with King David, addressed to a cotemporary Prince, Henry Plantagenet, King David's grand-nephew.

NOTE on line 1. of page 15. of the preceding INTRODUCTION.

“Videlicet, in uno sacculo continebantur 23 rotuli magni et mediocres, de compotis vicecomitum, ballivorum, firmariorum, thanorum, burgorum, et aliorum, diversis temporibus regum Scotiæ.”

FORMERLY almost the whole kingdom of Scotland is said to have been divided into thanedoms (a).

Of those thanedoms about twenty-seven are mentioned in the following Index (b), all situated in those provinces of Scotland which stretch along its eastern coast.

Of all the twenty-seven, one only, viz. that of Kinross, is situated on the south side of the Tay, and not one of them on the south of the Forth.

Thane, Thanedom;—Earl, Earldom;—Shire, Sherifdom;—are all terms of general and of high import, and confessedly of Saxon extraction.

How came those terms to prevail so universally in Scotland?—and in particular, how came thanes and thanedoms to be so widely diffused over the eastern provinces situated north of Tay?

That that tract of country was anciently possessed by the Picts seems to be an agreed point. Were the Picts then a tribe of Saxons?—and did their posterity continue to possess the eastern provinces of Scotland, after the destruction of their Royal Family, and the conquest of their kingdom by Kenneth Macalpine, about the year 853?—or were the Picts either utterly extirpated or expelled from those provinces, as the Britons who possessed the champaign provinces of England were by the Saxons, as the general practice of savages appears to render probable, and as the Scotichronicon seems to indicate?—and did tribes of Saxons, driven from England by the Norman conquerors, seek an asylum in Scotland, and, under the protection of the Scottish Monarchs, gradually insinuate themselves into the Pictish territory, rendered by the extirpation or expulsion of its former possessors in a great measure perhaps a solitary desert?

By whatever means it happened, there can be no doubt that those countries have been for many ages possessed by a race of men descended of Saxon ancestors. Their language, as different from the Celtic language of the Scots (c) as one language can be from another, their dress, their thanedoms, earldoms, and shires, without insisting on a variety of more minute discrepancies in their domestic manners, supply here the silence of history, and prove the fact to demonstration.

But it is truly wonderful, that those Scots and Saxons, two nations so diametrically opposite to one another in the great and prominent features of the human character, coalesced so perfectly under the same government, that instead of reading of intestine wars between them of any material consequence, we find them on all occasions acting with unanimity and perfect cordiality against their common enemies.

(b) Viz. Aberbuthnot, Aberkerdour, Aberlachwich (supposed to be erroneously written), Aberlemno, Aberluthnot, Alyth, Balhelvie, Boyne, Collie, Dingwall, Donny, Down, the abthanedom of Dull, (see Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 226.), Durris, Fetterairn, Fromartin, Glamis, Glendowachy, Kinalty, Kincardine, Kinelevin, Kinross, Kintore, Monifeith, Morphy, Newdolsie, Scoon, and Tannadyce. Various thanedoms besides these might be enumerated from other authorities, such as those of Refs, (Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 532.), the thanedom of Fyfe, of Calder, of Conweth, of Kinmylie, of Kalentir, &c. &c. That of Kalentir alone, in so far as is at present recollected, seems to be situated on the south side of the Forth.

(c) Baldredus writes thus in his eulogium of King David I. “Et delectabatur in multitudine pacis, quam inter barbaras gentes et diversitates linguarum et morum sibi contrarius, et propter mutuas mortes et vulnera sibi invicem inimicifimas, tanta cautione composuit, tanta auctoritate servavit, ut inter cognatas gentes, ejusdemque generis et lingue homines tale fœdus tanto tempore vix aliquando viderimus custodiri.” Fordoun, vol. 1. p. 300.

THE introduction of the terms shire and sheriff, if not anterior, was probably at least coeval with those of thanedom and thane.

It is likely that shires comprehended at first districts of much smaller extent than the territories denoted by those terms during the last five hundred years.

In one of King Edgar's charters to the priory of Coldingham (a), we find Coldinghamshire mentioned.

In the chartulary of the abbey of Dunfermline we find mention made of Dunfermlingshire, Dolorshire, Newburnshire, Muffelburghshire, and the shires of Gelland and Gaitmilk. In the charter of King William in 1178 (b), founding the abbey of Aberbrothock, the shires of Aberbrothock, of Dneebyn, of Kingeldrum, and of Athyn occur. And in the following Index we find Herbertshire, and the shires of Scoon and Kinghorn. Of this many other proofs might be adduced.

In Prynne's collections, and in Mr Rymer's Fœdera (c), we find the following shires of Scotland mentioned, viz. Aberdeen, Ayr, Angus, Argyle, Banff, Berwick, Clackmannan, Crumbachy (Cromarty), Dumfries, Dunbarton, Dynguale, Elgin, Edinburgh, Fyfe, Forfar, Forres, Haddington, Jedburgh, Invernairn, Inverness, Kincardin, Kinross, Lanark, Linlithgow, Mernis, Oughterarder, Perth, Peebles, Roxburgh, Rotherglen, Ross (d), Selkirk, Stirling, and Wigton.

Bute seems to have been then included in Argyleshire, Renfrew in the shire of Lanark, and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright in the shire of Dumfries.

It is uncertain whether Caithness and Sutherland were then separate shires, or included in that of Ross. But whether they were then separate shires or not, we know that they, as well as Ross, were more than three hundred years after 1296 included in Inverness-shire.

Orkney and Zetland did not belong to the kingdom of Scotland till many years after 1296.

It is equally uncertain at what time the office and dignity of Earl was first used in Scotland.

About the year 994 we observe the name of a Crucne Earl of Angus (e).—We find a Malpedir Earl of Mernis mentioned about the year 1095 (f).—We read of an Earl of Gowry, an uncle of King Edgar and King Alexander I. (g).—Of an Angus Earl of Murray (h).—and of the earldom of Garioch (i), in the reign of King David I. possessed by David Earl of Huntingdon, that King's youngest grandson.

From the time of King Malcolm IV. about 1160, downwards to the year 1286, we find the collective term Comites frequently used in the Scotichronicon (k).

In the same period we find mention made of different Earls of Angus (l), of Fyfe (m), of Strathern (n), of March,

NOTICE TO THE READER.

THE Old Index is in many places a strange mixture of Latin and Scots, and it abounds with errors (a). As even records are not exempted from mistake, several of those errors occurred no doubt in the records themselves, and have thence been copied into the Index. But most of them are certainly imputable to the framer of the Index. Proper names indeed may in many instances puzzle the most skilful reader. Of this Prynne's Collections, especially his Ragman's roll (b), furnish a striking proof. Nor are even the Fœdera immaculate. The letters i, m, n, u, and all their combinations with one another, unless carefully formed, occasion great uncertainty in reading proper names; and t and c are generally written so exactly alike, that the acutest eye cannot distinguish the one from the other. Before an i this similarity occasions little inconvenience; but before the other vowels, and the consonants b, r, and w, it is apt to mislead. It may be remarked, in general, that in ancient writing it is not the antiquity, but the badness of the character, which, to a person moderately conversant in old manuscripts, creates difficulty. The same is the case with modern writing. Many familiar epistles, no older than yesterday, will embarrass a man who could peruse with facility a charter of high antiquity.

The contents of the 1st roll still preserved will be found on the bottom of page 4. the top of page 9. and on the four intermediate pages. The alterations made on the Old Index of that roll are taken from the original record itself, and are printed in Italics.

Of the other eleven existing rolls the Index is printed in a smaller type than that of the rolls which are missing; and all the proper names in those eleven rolls are corrected, and many names, not set down in the Old Index, are added from the rolls themselves; but the connecting words of the Old Index are retained, uncouth as they are. Of the first book of the record of charters still preserved, an index entirely new is given, for the reason mentioned page 70. It is printed from page 70. to page 98. inclusive, in the same small type in which the index of the eleven existing rolls is printed.

Many charters contained in the Index appear to have been twice recorded, and some of them oftener. It is not easy in every case to conjecture the reason of this.

The letter B seems to stand for the word bleuch in some places, as p. 38. No. 14. 15. 22. 23. 29. 37. ;—p. 40. No. 17. ;—p. 42. No. 21. ;—p. 67. No. 3^d. 2^d.

Archidiaconus has in two or three places been erroneously translated Archdean instead of Archdeacon. The Editor is indebted for this correction to the suggestion of a learned and very respectable friend.

Of the 331 charters in Book 1st, the first 276 were granted by King David II. and the last 45 by that King's nephew, King Robert II. the first King of the Stewart family.

Such of the witnesses to those charters as are mentioned in the record are set down in the several entries in the Index; and they will be found entered again in the alphabetical list of the Names of Persons.

Of some of those charters the places at which they were dated are not expressed in the record. Of the rest about one hundred and sixty were dated at Edinburgh, sixty-four at Perth, seventeen at Aberdeen, fourteen at Scone, ten at Dundee, nine at Stirling, nine at Montrose, six at St Andrew's, five at Lindores, four at Kindromy, three at Dun-

(a) The Editor is reluctantly drawn to make this remark; for though he flatters himself, that the few to whom he is known will not impute those errors to carelessness or inattention on his part; yet the many to whom he is unknown may possibly be disposed to judge less favourably of his accuracy.

(b) Viz. the roll of that multitude of Scots of all ranks who swore fealty to King Edward I. Prynne's Collections, vol. 3. from page 648. to page 666. inclusive.

donald, three at Melrofs, three at Spynie, two at Aberbrothock, two at Dunfermling, and one at each of the following places, viz. Coupar in Fife, Dunbartane, Drumelzier, Elgin, Invercaefs, Irwine, the Forest of Kintore, Kinlofs, Kilwinning, Lochleven Castle, Linlithgow, Lochfreuch in Strathbawn, Methuen, and Reffenet.

Of the 276 charters by King David II. two, viz. No. 93. and 136. are dated in the 29th year of his reign; one, No. 168, in the 31st; two, No. 89. and 167. in the 32d; and the rest in the 33d, 34th, 35th, 36th, 37th, 38th, 39th, 40th, and 41st years of his reign; and they appear in the Index pretty nearly in chronological order. The 45 charters in that book granted by King Robert II. are dated in the 1st and 2d years of his reign.

Of the charters in Roll 4. the index of which is printed on pages 130, 131, and 132, fix are dated at Edinburgh, thirteen at Perth, four at Scone, and one at each of the following places, viz. Coupar in Fife, Dundee, Dundonald, Kilwinning, and Lochfreuch. The years of the King's reign in which the charters in that roll were granted, and the names of the witnesses to the only charter in it that mentions the witnesses, are prefixed to the index of it on page 130.

All the names contained in the first roll still preserved, of which the index will be found on pages 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th, are printed there, and again in the alphabetical lists.

Of the other ten rolls now in the General Register-House, the places where, and the years of the King's reign in which they were dated, together with the witnesses named in them, are respectively prefixed to the index of each of them, on the following pages, viz. 113. 117. 118. 123. 125. 127. 128. 132. 134. 150. 160. 161. and 165.

THE Editor has peculiar satisfaction in here announcing to the Public, that the printing of the following Index, aided by the manuscript alphabetical lists of the persons and places contained in it, has already, even before publication, led to a material discovery in relation to the rolls that are missing.

There is in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh a large manuscript folio volume, consisting of several manuscripts, which seem to have been originally separate and detached. This large volume bears, on a blank leaf prefixed, the following words, viz.

“A Collection of Charters, Evidents, and Antiquities, collected by E. Hadinton.”

And it has always been regarded as a collection made by Thomas Hamilton the first Earl of Hadinton (a).

From an attentive perusal of that manuscript, and a minute comparison of it with the Old Index here laid before the public, it is evident, that almost all the missing rolls,—and thence probably the whole of them,—had been in the hands of the Noble Collector, and had been by him very carefully inspected.

It is likely that those rolls, as well as the other books of the record of charters passed under the great Seal, and the twelve existing rolls, from which this manuscript has been chiefly formed, came into the hands of the Earl of Hadinton in the year 1612, when he bore the office of Lord Clerk-Register.

The first 566 pages of the manuscript volume now under consideration contain copies of many curious charters taken from the 2d and 19th and all the intermediate books of the great-seal record, the 17th book only excepted.

On the top of the 567th page is written as follows, viz. “Charteris by King Robert Bruce, King David, and subsequent Kings.” From the top of page 569. to the middle of page 579. we find several titles, and many full abstracts of different charters contained in the lost rolls, and of a few in the first existing roll. From the middle of page 579 to the word “Omissa,” near the bottom of page 582. we observe notes and short abstracts of a considerable number of charters in the 3d, 7th, 9th, 10th, 15th, 16th, 18th, and 19th books of the records of the great seal.

(a) This was one of the most remarkable men of the age in which he lived. He was bred to the bar, and was equally distinguished as a lawyer, as a judge, and as a statesman. Between the years 1592 and 1636, he passed through the different offices of his Majesty's Advocate, a Senator of the College of Justice or Lord of Session, Lord President of the Court of Session, Lord Clerk-Register, Principal Secretary of State, and Lord Privy Seal; and he generally discharged more than one of those high offices at the same time. He was, for example, both principal Secretary of State and Lord President of the Court of Session, from the year 1616 to the year 1626. In the year 1595 he was named one of a celebrated junto of eight statesmen, known in the history of Scotland by the name of Osburnians. He first received the honour of knighthood, and was next raised to the dignity of the peerage by the style and title of Lord Binning. He was afterwards created Earl of Melrois, and lastly Earl of Hadinton. Hence it is evident, that his abilities were of the first rate: and his various manuscripts, especially that now before us, prove, that his industry and application corresponded with his eminent abilities, and enabled him not only to execute the duties of those important public offices, but to prosecute likewise the study of different objects of law and antiquity.

Under the title "Omiffa," are short abstracts, or rather perhaps full titles, of ten charters in the missing rolls. The rest of page 583. and the top of page 584. contain notes of sixteen charters in the 2d and 19th books of the great-seal record.

A manuscript of fifty pages follows next. These fifty pages consist of notes taken from a great number of charters in the 2d, and 19th, and all the intervening books of the records of the great seal.

This is followed by another short manuscript, of only four pages, entitled, "Chartæ Jacobi bus Primus," containing notes from several charters in the 2d, 3d, and 4th books of the records of the great seal.

After this we find a fourth manuscript, entitled "Catalogue Minute of the Register of Dummerling." It is not regularly paged, but seems to contain about forty-two leaves or folios, of which two or three are blank. Of the fate of the books to which this part of the volume relates the Editor is ignorant. Many particulars contained in it seem worthy the attention of an antiquary.

Eight pages follow, entitled, "Extractum de rotulo infederationum Rob. Re. I. 1324 ante et post." On those eight pages we find full abstracts, intermixed with some shorter titles, of the charters contained in the missing roll "Rob. I. E." of which the Index is printed on the bottom of page 10. and on the four subsequent pages of this book. It is observable, that my Lord Hadinton seems to give us notes and abstracts of fourteen of the first eighteen charters in that roll, which are said in the Old Index to have been illegible, of which eighteen his Lordship omits only the first four.

After this follows another manuscript, neither paged nor titled, consisting of about twenty-six leaves, of which three or four are blank. On the first four leaves, and down to the marginal note "begins 1424," on the first page of the fifth, we find brief entries of many charters in the missing rolls. From that place to the end we find short entries of many charters contained in books 2d and 30th, and all the intermediate books of the records of the great seal.

We now arrive at the concluding part of this large volume, and the most important and interesting part by far. It is a manuscript of 146 pages. It contains full copies of many charters which were recorded in the missing rolls, and in the twelve rolls still preserved, and ample abstracts of many more. If therefore those missing rolls shall prove to be irrecoverably lost, this valuable collection by the Earl of Hadinton will in so far supply that great loss.

It is proper likewise to remark, that my Lord Hadinton's titles of the charters in those missing rolls, even where he inserts the titles only, are in general more particular than the titles of the same charters in the Old Index, and also apparently more accurate.

We here subjoin a brief view of most of the charters in the missing rolls which seem to be fully copied in this precious manuscript, pointing them out by the pages of the printed Index, and the relative number on the different pages. It is judged unnecessary to insert those copied from the twelve rolls still remaining in the General Register-house.

A List of those Charters recorded in the missing Rolls, of which full Copies seem to be inserted in the Earl of Hadinton's Collections.

(a) In the Library of the Faculty of Advocates there are two Duplicates, written on parchment, of the Chætulary of the Bishoprick of Murray. The above remarkable Charter is inserted in each of those Duplicates. In the Duplicate that appears to be the more ancient, it will be found on the verso of Folio 91. In the other it is written on the verso of Folio 68.—My Lord Hadinton's copy has been carefully collated with both those Duplicates, and some apparent inaccuracies of little consequence have by that means been corrected. The various readings adopted from the Chætlary are printed in Italics within parentheses.

(c) In the Museum copy it is Margaret.

(d) Something is omitted here.

(e) The word Michis is, in the Index, marked as contracted. Perhaps it stands for Michaelis, i. e. some kirk dedicated to St Michael; such as Kirkmichael or Crofmichael.

(f) The blunders here, as well as in many other entries in this Index, are fo grofsly ungrammatical, that it is likely the original compiler of the Index did not understand Latin. Similar blunders are fo frequent and fo glaring, as neither to admit nor to require to be particularly pointed out.

Ane Book in Parchment, containing the Charters following, granted by King David.

The first page cannot be read. N. B. This is the first Book now in the General Register-House.

THE Old Index, in so far as it respects this Book, is far from being accurate. The Editor, therefore, has, from the original Book of Record itself, formed an Index entirely new, which he lays before the Public, as a specimen of the manner in which he proposes to print an Index of all the Books of the Record of the Great Seal, if such an undertaking shall receive the Public approbation.

In this first Book of Charters, as well as in the twelve Rolls now in the General Register-House, the Witnesses to the Royal Charters, which were not then so uniform as they became afterwards, are seldom inserted. Where they are inserted, their Names are given in the Index. The Names too of the Resigners, in Charters of Resignation, are given. And in Charters of Confirmation, the Names, as well of the Granters of the Charters confirmed, as of the Witnesses to those Original Charters, are set down. This, with the two Alphabetical Indexes of Lands and of Persons subjoined to the whole, will exhibit an Historical View, as Useful as it will be Curious, of the Property and Families of Scotland, by means of which both Lands and Persons may be traced with accuracy and ease.

IT is true, as is said in the Old Index, that the first page of this first book of record is almost totally illegible.

- 1 The title of the 1st charter is, "Confirmatio carte Johannis de Grahame," and its conclusion is, "nri xxxiii^o," which probably denotes its having been granted in the 33d year of King David's reign.
- 2 The second deed begins, "Officium coronatoris," and it concludes, "xxvito die Martii, anno regni nri xxxiii^o."
- 3 The title of the 3d charter is, "Confirmatio capellanie fundate, per Willielmum de," and from the body of the deed, the name of the founder seems to have been "Fentoun;" the commencing word "David" is legible and at the end, the figures "xxxiii^o" are hardly legible.
- 4 The 4th begins "Officium," and after two or three decayed words, "parte australi aque de Forth," may be read.
- 5 The 5th has for title, "Lra" (litera) "data Jacobo Mulekyn monetario." The word "David" at its beginning is legible, and the grantee is, in the body of the deed, designed "De Florence."

- 6 Not a single word of the 6th deed is legible on the first page of the book; but the greater part of the two concluding lines engrossed on the top of the second page are plain enough, viz. (com-) "potis suis annuis, "vis ipsius Nigelli literis de recepto, plene volumus allocari et hoc nullo" ----- "rei testium, &c. apud Kyndromy, septimo die Septembris, anno regni nostri xxxiii°."

This "CHARTARIUM, ANE PARCHMENT BOOK, TOGIDDER WITH PARLIAMENTS," as it is intitled in the old Index, appears to be the Book of Record recovered in November 1793 from the State-Paper Office at London, by Lord Frederick Campbell, in his official character of Lord Clerk-Register for Scotland, as is more particularly mentioned above in the Introduction.

THE Frammer of the old Index has only taken notice of the few Charters contained in this important Record, without troubling himself either about the other very curious deeds which it contains, or about the Parliamentary Proceedings inserted in it, one Parliament only being briefly mentioned by him, viz. "Par. Rob. III." and that erroneously; for none of the Parliaments entered in the book in question are of that King. It is proper, therefore, to give a particular Index of this Book.

A QUARTO MANUSCRIPT ON VELLUM, DELIVERED BY HIS MAJESTY'S COMMAND, FROM HIS STATE-PAPER OFFICE AT LONDON, TO LORD FREDERICK CAMPBELL, AS LORD CLERK-REGISTER FOR SCOTLAND, IN NOVEMBER 1793.

THE Volume, before being Bound in its present Form, appears to have consisted of seven or eight, or perhaps more different Parts; and either before being Bound, or since, it seems to have suffered some Mutilations. In the Binding too, either from ignorance, or carelessness, or both, some of the Leaves have been misplaced. It still consists of 74 Folios, or 148 Pages, of a Quarto Size, very closely written.

WE proceed to give a particular Index of this valuable Record. It contains as follows, viz.

Folio.

TREATIES, PARLIAMENTS, &c.

- 3 A Bull of Pope Boniface VIII. sent to Edward I. King of England, asserting the independency of the kingdom of Scotland, dated 5. Kalend. Julii, pontificatus nostri anno quinto, (i. e. 27th June 1300.)
- 4 An embassy from King Robert II. of Scotland to King Charles V. of France, dated 31st January 1374, (i. e. 1375), soliciting the French King's interposition with the Pope and Cardinals, to procure a favourable decree in a suit prosecuted before the Papal Judicatory, at the instance of Margaret Logy Queen of Scots, and demanding reparation for depredations on Scots traders by Norman pirates.

Folio.

'The deed is in the form of a notorial instrument, in which King Robert's letter, and the answer by King Charles, both in the French language, are verbatim inserted. King Robert's Ambassadors were, Mr Adam de Tynnyngname Dean of Aberdeen, Sir Duncan de Walloys, and Sir John de Edmondstoun, Knights.—This deed is evidently misplaced in the binding; and after it, two leaves appear to have been cut away.

5 "Factum Norvagiæ." (This is the original title in the record: what follows here, printed in Italics, is written in a character three centuries at least more modern, viz.) "Concordia inter Alexandrum Regem Scotie et Magnum ejus nominis 4, super infulis regni Scotie." This is a confirmation by King Robert I. of Scotland and Haquin V. King of Norway, executed at Inverness, the first Sunday after the festival of Symon and Jude, (28th of October), in the year 1312, of a prior treaty, dated at Perth, in the church of the Preaching Friars, on the Friday first following the festival of the Apostles Peter and Paul, (6th of July) 1266, between King Alexander III. of Scotland, "ibidem cum clero et proceribus regni sui majoribus personaliter comparente," and King Magnus IV. King of Norway, by his Ambassadors; by which King Magnus ceded for ever in favour of the King of Scots, "Manniam, cum ceteris infulis Sodorensibus, et omnibus aliis infulis ex parte occidentali et australi magni Haff," &c. "exceptis infulis Orcadie et Yhetlandie, quas idem Rex Norwagiæ specialiter reservavit;" in consideration of which cession, the King of Scots, and his heirs for ever, were to pay to the King of Norway, and his heirs, 100 marks yearly, "bonorum et legalium Sterlingorum, secundum modum et usum curie Romane, ac regnorum Francie, Anglie, et Scotie," within St Magnus church in Orkney, "terra scilicet Domini Regis Norvagiæ;" together with 4000 marks Sterling more, within the space of four years then first following; the payment of the first 1000 marks to be made about the 24th of June 1267, and the fourth and last 1000 at the same term in the year 1270. To the duplicate of the original treaty, which was to remain in possession of the King of Norway, was appended the seal of the King of Scots, together with the seals of Gamelinus and of John Bishops of St Andrew's and Glasgow, and of Alexander Comyn Earl of Buchan, and of Patrick, William, and Adam, Earls of Dunbar, Marre, and Carric, and of Robert de Meyneris, a Baron. The foresaid treaty is, as observed above, confirmed by King Robert and King Haquin; and King Robert binds himself and the kingdom of Scotland, to pay King Haquin and the kingdom of Norway, 100 marks Sterling yearly. King Robert's seal, together with the seals of Henry, David, Thomas, and Ferquhard, Bishops of Aberdeen, Murray, Ross, and Caithness, and of William, David, and Thomas Ranulphi, Earls of Ross, Athole, and Murray, were appended to the duplicate of this confirmation, which was to remain with King Haquin.

8 An acquittance by the commissioners of said King Haquin to King Robert, for the 100 marks due for the year 1312, in terms of the above confirmation, and for 500 marks more due for the five years preceding, dated on the Thursday immediately before the festival of the Annunciation (25th of March) 1312.

9 "Collo, sic. Tractatus pacis firmate." This deed is in French. It is a ratification by King Edward III. of England, "et totum consilium," dated at Northampton, the 4th of May, in the 2d year of that King's reign, viz. 1328, of a treaty, which is verbatim transcribed in the ratification, concluded at Edinburgh on the 17th of March 1327, (i. e. 1328), between Robert King of Scots and the Plenipotentiaries of said King Edward III. viz. Henry Bishop of Lincoln, William Bishop of Norwich, Henry de Percy, William de la Souche de Asheby, and Geoffry le Scrop (a). By this treaty it is agreed, 1mo, That a marriage should be solemnized as soon as possible between David, eldest son and heir of the King of Scots, and Johanna, sister of the King of England, both being then under age; that the King of Scots should assign, in name of dowry, during her life, to the said Johanna, lands within Scotland to the amount of L. 2000 of yearly rent, with the knights-fees, patronages of churches, and other pertinents; but reserving to the King of Scots, and his successors, the patronages of Abbies, Priories, and Hospitals, and his regal rights; providing, That although David should die before the solemnization of the marriage, Johanna should nevertheless enjoy her said dowry, of which the King of Scots is bound to grant her charter and seisin before the festival of the Ascension then next; that if Johanna should die before solemnizing the marriage, in that event, the King of England should have the power of marrying David with the Lady nearest to him, the King of England, by blood, who is to have the same dowry; that if David should die before solemnizing the marriage, the King of England should have the heir-male of the King of Scots for husband to Johanna, or failing her, to the Lady nearest by blood to the King of England; that Johanna should be put into the hands of the King of Scots, or his Commissioners, at Berwick-upon-Tweed, on the 15th of July then next; but if David should die before the marriage should be solemnized, Johanna should be at liberty to abide with and to return (a) to her brother the King of England, unless she should be with child (b), in which event, she should not be at liberty to depart without consent of the King and Barons, ("sans congee du Roi et du Barnage"). 2do, That the said Kings, their heirs, and successors, should be faithful allies, and as such, should assist each other, saving, on the part of the King of Scots, his alliance with the French King; but declaring, That if, in consequence of that alliance, the King of Scots should make war on the King of England, the latter should likewise be at liberty to make war on him, the King of Scots; and that in case war should be levied in Ireland against the King of England, or in the Isle of Mann, or the other islands, against the King of Scots, neither of those Kings should assist the enemies of the other. 3tio, It is covenanted and agreed, That all writings, obligations, instruments, and other muniments touching the subjection of the people or country (terre) of Scotland to the King of England, (which were, by a written deed (lettre) of the King of England, declared null and void), and all other instruments and deeds touching the freedom of Scotland that might be discovered, should be delivered, as soon as they could be found, to the King of Scots, according to a special indenture or inventory to be made of the same; but in case the writing or deed granted by the King of England, annulling those instruments, should become ineffectual and void (c), the instruments and other deeds so to be delivered to the King of Scots, should be by him given back to the King of England by a similar indenture or inventory. 4to, That the King of England should endeavour to obtain any suits instituted in the Court of Rome or elsewhere, by the Pope's authority, against the King of Scotland, his kingdom, or subjects, to be dismissed, recalled and annulled. 5to, That the King of Scots and his kingdom, and the prelates and other inhabitants (gens) thereof, should be obliged to pay to the King of England L. 20,000 Sterling in the space of three years, by three termly payments, at Tweedmouth; in relation to which payments, the King of Scots, his prelates, and other subjects, should grant a public instrument in writing, subjecting themselves to the Pope's jurisdiction. 6to, That the laws of the marches should be well and faithfully kept, and contraventions thereof by the subjects of either kingdom justly redressed; and that if any case not clearly provided for by those laws should occur, the same should be referred to the said Kings themselves, and their respective councils, or to commissioners to be specially appointed by them. 7mo, The plenipotentiaries of the King of England become bound to procure letters-patent from that King, under his seal, approving and ratifying the said treaty in all its circumstances, and to deliver the same to the Mayor of Berwick at the festival of the Ascension then next; declaring likewise, That by the said treaty, no prejudice was, by either King, intended to Holy Church. 8vo, and finally, Hugh Earl of Ross, and Robert de Lawedre Justiciary of Lothian, in presence of, by the special command, and on the fowl of the King of Scots, swore on the Holy Gospels, to the faithful performance of the stipulations relative to the marriage, and all the other articles of the treaty; and Henry de Percy took a similar oath, by the authority of and on the fowl of the King of England; and the King of Scots immediately approved and ratified the treaty.

(b) If David died before the marriage should be canonically solemnized, it was indelicate to suppose that Johanna could be with child.

- 51 Discharge by King Edward III. of England, "Domino David, Dei gratia, Regi Scottorum, illustri fratri nostro karissimo," for 10,000 marks Sterling, in full payment of 30,000 marks, due to King Edward by the treaty of peace between him and Robert King of Scots, father to King David; the discharge is dated 10th January, an. reg. Edwardi 4to, i. e. 1331 (a).
- 11 Confirmation and ratification by King Edward III. of England, dated at Northampton, the 4th of May, an. reg. sui 2do, (i. e. 1328), of a treaty concluded at Edinburgh, the 17th of March 1327, (i. e. 1328), between Robert King of Scots, with consent of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, "aliorumque procerum" and Commons (communitatum) of the kingdom of Scotland, in Parliament, on the one part, and Henry Bishop of Lincoln, William Bishop of Norwich, Henry de Percy, William la Zouche de Asseby, and Geoffry le Scrop, Commissioners and Ambassadors of said Edward King of England, on the other part; by which treaty, in the 1st place, The King of Scots obliged himself to pay, at the term of Michaelmas, in the year 1328, at Tweedmouth, to the King of England, L. 100,000 Sterling (b); and in case he should fail, then he the said King of Scots, with consent foresaid, grants and agrees, That the deed or letters-patent (littere patentes) of the King of England, dated at York, the 1st of March, in the 2d year of his reign, (i. e. said year 1328), which are verbatim transcribed in the said treaty, should be null and void, and should be given back to the King of England, and the matters mentioned in those letters-patent in relation to the kingdoms of England and Scotland should return to the same state and condition in which they were before the granting of those letters-patent by the King of England, and the obligation for paying the said L. 100,000 should in like manner become null and void. In the 2d place, It was agreed, That if a marriage should take place between David, eldest son and heir of the King of Scots, and Johanna, sister of the King of England, within six months after they should arrive at marriageable age; or if such marriage should fail and not take place through any other cause than the fault of said David, then the obligation for payment of the L. 100,000 should be null and void, and should be given back to the King of Scots within the space of six months, and yet the letters-patent of the King of England should remain in full force and effect; and the Ambassadors of King Edward further become obliged to get the said indenture or treaty ratified and confirmed by the King of England, under his great seal; and that the ratification should be, about the festival of the Ascension then next, put into the hands of the Mayor of the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, to be by him delivered to the King of Scots. The letters-patent of said King Edward, made the basis of and inserted in the above treaty, bear, That as the attempts made by him, King Edward, and by some of his predecessors, Kings of England, to attain the superiority (jura regiminis domini, seu superioritatis) of the kingdom of Scotland, had been productive of severe misfortunes to the inhabitants both of England and Scotland, by grievous wars, slaughters,

(a) This deed is evidently misplaced in the book.

(b) This confirmation seems to refer, not to the principal treaty mentioned above, but to a different treaty of the same date, meant as a counterpart of the principal treaty.

and devastations; therefore, in order to avoid similar calamities for the future, and to establish a solid and durable peace between the two kingdoms, he King Edward, with the advice and consent of the Prelates, Nobles, Earls, Barons, and Commons of his kingdom in Parliament, agreed and declared, That the just limits (recte marchie) of the kingdom of Scotland should be held and preserved to the said Robert King of Scots, and his successors, the same as they were in the time of Alexander King of Scots, who last deceased, and should ever remain separate in all respects from the kingdom of England, entire, quit (quietus), and free from every claim of subjection or dependence; and King Edward, for himself and his successors, renounces, in favour of King Robert and his successors, every claim of right to which he or his ancestors had made pretensions; and he declares all obligations, agreements, and stipulations made and granted at any times by any kings, or inhabitants of Scotland whether clergy or laity, in relation to the subjection of the kingdom of Scotland, altogether invalid and ineffectual: And King Edward says, That by separate letters-patent, he had specially authorized the said Henry de Percy and William la Souche of Assleby, or either of them, to swear on his, King Edward's soul, to the faithful performance of the premises.

12 The Letters-patent or commission, mentioned in the conclusion of the last deed, by King Edward, proceeding on the narrative, That he had granted letters-patent in favour of Robert King of Scots, declaring, That he, King Robert, was to possess the kingdom of Scotland according to the same boundaries by which it had been possessed in the time of Alexander King of Scots, who last deceased; and that he had made a renunciation to the same King Robert of every pretension of right to the kingdom of Scotland acclaimed by him, King Edward, or any of his predecessors: Therefore, in order to confirm and corroborate the premises, he authorized Henry de Percy and William la Souche of Assleby, or either of them, to swear on his, King Edward's soul, to the faithful performance of the same; dated at York, the 1st of March, in the 2d year of King Edward's reign.

72 "Remissio seu abolitio criminis concessa Roberto Duci Albanie et Archibaldo Comiti Douglas, propter mortem illatam Davidi filio primogenito Roberti III. Regis Scotie." ——— This is the title prefixed to the deed in the book. But the character in which that title is written is later, by two centuries, than the character in which the deed is recorded. Nor is the title perfectly just; because the deed, instead of being a remission of the crime, is more properly a declaration that the parties were guiltless of the crime: For after mentioning that Prince David had been arrested by command of the Duke of Albany and Earl of Douglas, and committed prisoner to the castle of St Andrew's, and afterwards removed from thence to Falkland, and detained in confinement there, it has these words: "Ubi ab hac luce divina providentia et non aliter migraffe dinoscitur." It then mentions, that the conduct of the Duke and Earl in this business had been arraigned, at the King's instance, and tried before the King and a general council or Parliament, holden at Edinburgh the 16th May 1402, and that, for certain reasons touching the public utility, judged improper for insertion in the deed, the arrest of the Prince had appeared justifiable. The deed is dated the 20th of that month of May, and it was authenticated by the Great Seal.

N. B. The above deed appears to be recorded on a blank page of the book, and far out of its proper place, according to the chronological order of the transaction and of the date of the writ.

43 A declaration by King Richard I. of England, That he had restored to William King of Scots the castles of Berwick, Roxburgh, Edynburgh, and Strivilyn, as belonging to King William by hereditary right; and that he had likewise discharged all concessions and compacts which King Henry (II.), the father of King Richard, had extorted from King William in consequence of King William's captivity; that King William was to perform to King Richard what William's brother, King Malcolm, had been obliged to perform for his lands in England to King Richard's predecessors; that King Richard was in like manner to perform to King William, and his successors, whatever King Richard's ancestors had been, by ancient usage, obliged to perform, in relation to the treatment of the Kings of Scots while going to the court of England and returning home again, and during their residence at court, as should be ascertained by four English Noblemen to be chosen by King William, in conjunction with four Scots Noblemen to be chosen by King Richard; that all usurpations by Englishmen within Scotland posterior to the time when King William was made prisoner, should be restored; and that King William and his heirs should possess all his estates within England, as well his demesne lands as those holden under him in vassallage, (sive dominicis vel feudis), either in the earldom of Huntingtoun or elsewhere, in the same manner as King Malcolm, the brother of William, had possessed them; that King Richard had renounced to King William the allegiance of his subjects, and had delivered back all the writs which King Henry had received from him in consequence of his captivity, and if any were omitted and should be afterwards found, they were to be altogether invalid and ineffectual; and finally, that King William had become the liege-man of King Richard, and had sworn fealty to him for all the lands within England, for which King William's predecessors had been the liege-men of King Richard's predecessors. "Teste meipso, anno regni nostri primo (a)."

Here again a leaf appears to have been cut away.

(a) This deed, as recorded here, differs in some circumstances from the copy printed by Mr Rymer in the Fœdera, vol. 1. p. 64. In this record, King Richard, among his other titles, has that of "Dominus Hibernie," which is not in Mr Rymer's copy. Here too the restoration of the castles of Edinburgh and Stirling is mentioned, as well as of Berwick and Roxburgh, which two last only are inserted in Mr Rymer's copy. Here again, after the words "et a quatuor proceribus Regni Scotie a nobis electis," these words are added, viz. "postquam Willielmus Bastard, Conquestor disti regni Anglie, et heredes sui re nunc Anglie optinuerunt;" a palpable interpolation, not superfluous only, but even utterly unconnected with the tenor of the deed. Lastly, instead of the "teste meipso," copied above, the testing clause in Mr Rymer's copy is full and complete, and such as a transaction so solemn demanded. It is thus expressed, "Ut autem ratum et firmum sit istud in perpetuum, presenti carta et sigillo nostro id roboravimus, testibus Balduino Cantuariensi et Waltero Rothomagiensi, et J. Dublinensi. Archiepiscopis; et Hugone Dunelmensi. Hugone Lincolnensi. Godofrido Wintonien. Huberto Sarisburiensi. Reginaldo Bathonien. Episcopis; et Domino Johanne fratre nostro; R. Comite Leicestrie, Hugone Comite de Waren. H. Bardol. Stephano de Longo Campo, dapifero nostro, et aliis multis; quinto die Decembris, dat. per manum W. Elyen. electi cancellarii nostri, apud Cantuari. regni nostri anno primo." And Mr Rymer subjoins the following remark, which proves the seal to have been still entire when he made the copy, viz. "Sigillum integrum pendet de serico, filis aureis et argenteis intertextis." From these last words it is evident, that the deed copied by Mr Rymer was truly the original deed itself; and this question obviously results, How came this writ, which belonged to the King and kingdom of Scotland, to be found among the English archives? To this the Editor is enabled to give a satisfactory answer, namely, that the deed in question was one of those carried off from the castle of Edinburgh by the orders of King Edward I. of England, and lodged at Berwick on the 23d of August, in the 20th year of that King's reign, i. e. 1292, previously to his giving judgement about the succession to the Crown of Scotland. This is established by a roll still preserved in the Chapter-house at Westminster, perused by the Editor on Friday the 24th of September 1793, and again on the 26th and 27th of April 1796, and printed in the book, intitled, Calendar of Ancient Charters, published by Sir Joseph Ayloffe, anno 1774, page 327, under the article "Catalogus monumentorum que capta fuerunt in Thesauria de Edynburgh," &c. The fifth article of which monumenta is, Litera Ricardi Regis Anglie de redditione castrorum de Roxburgh et Berwick. On page 340. article second, it occurs again in these words: "Carta ejusdem Ricardi Regis de restitutione jurium et castrorum, libertatum, et literarum Regis Scotie." But the same deed is more fully entered on the 287th page of that book, under the head of "Tractatus pacis et treugarum," &c. copied from an index of papers in the Chapter-house, made up between 1603 and 1625, by Mr Agarde, who, from that index, which was likewise carefully perused in the Chapter-house by the Editor, appears to have been a man of uncommon fidelity and accuracy. In that 287th page of the Calendar of Ancient Charters, the instrument under consideration is entered in these words, viz. "A. D. 1189. Litera Regis Ricardi Primi de redditione castrorum de Roxburgh et de Berwick, et de restitutione omnium libertatum quas habuerunt Reges Scotie, ante captionem Regis Willielmi, et de literis restitutis et restituendis si que fuerint invente, et quod litera invente et non restitute omnino non valeant, dat. 5. Decembris, 1. Ric. 1." — It is, on the whole, sufficiently clear, that the deed in this book has been recorded posterior to 1292, when the original charter by

- 14 A treaty of alliance between King Robert I. of Scotland and King Charles IV. of France, called Charles le Bel, dated at Corbeil in April 1326. The following expressions on the part of King Charles, in the preamble, are remarkable, viz. " Et voulenz croistre l'amitie et la beneveillance qui a este de " longs temps entre nos predecesseurs Roys de France et notre royaume, et entre les Roys d'Eſcoce " et le dit royaume d'Eſcoce." The commissioners for King Robert were, his nephew Thomas Ranulph Earl of Murray and Lord of Annandale and of Mann, Robert de Keth Marischall of Scotland, with three churchmen, Mr James Beu Archdean of St Andrew's, Adam Murray, and Walter de Twynham a canon of Glasgow; but the Marischall does not seem to have gone to France.
- * After this deed, two leaves seem to have been cut away.
- 15 A letter from King John of France, addressed to the clergy, earls, barons, et communitatibus villarum et parvium regni Scotie (a), thanking them for having, at a recent conference with the English, rejected the solicitations of the latter to break their old alliance with France, and promising to make a powerful diversion in favour of the Scots. King John's letter is dated at Paris, the 8th of August 1352.
- Another letter from the same King John to the Bishop of St Andrew's, commending, in strong terms, the fidelity of the Bishop in particular, and of the Scots nation in general, in persisting in their alliance with France; intimating a truce between the French and English, concluded in the hope of a peace; and assuring the Bishop, that if a peace should take place, the interests of the kingdom of Scotland should be by him as faithfully consulted in the treaty as those of the kingdom of France. This letter has no date.
- A declaration or remission by the said King John in favour of Edward Balliol, Knight, bearing, that although on account of the war carried on against the Scots, the allies of him King John, by the said Edward, at the instigation of the English, Edward's estates within France had been per gentes nostras, (viz. King John's), sequestrated and annexed to King John's domains; yet as Edward was reported to have an intention of returning to his allegiance to King John, and to the friendship of the Scots; therefore King John promises, in that event, to restore Edward's estates, or to confer on him something more valuable in their stead; dated at Paris, 28th September 1361.
- Another letter of King John of France, addressed to the Regent, and to all the prelates, chiefs, (principibus) barons, and nobles of the kingdom of Scotland, expressing, in strong religious terms, his sorrow for the late slaughters and devastations inflicted on Scotland by the English; and exhorting them to persist in their resistance; but in case their efforts should finally prove ineffectual, and their country should be subdued, he assures them of a kind reception in the kingdom of France.
- 16 Another letter from the same King John, expressing the deepest sorrow for the sufferings and misfortunes of the Scots, his faithful allies, in consequence of the repeated advantages obtained over them by the King Richard was carried out of Scotland by the command of Edward I.; and that in recording it an inaccurate copy has been followed. It appears, too, to have been, like the Remissa last noticed, recorded on a blank page, and still much farther out of its proper place, according to its date; for, according to chronological order, it ought to have been the first in the book. In all the material points, however, the deed, as here recorded, agrees with the original charter as printed in the Fœdera.

Postscript. The charter itself is still in the Chapter-house at Westminster, where it was carefully perused by the Editor, and collated with the printed copy in the Fœdera, on Tuesday and Wednesday the 26th and 27th of April 1796. The seal is still perfectly entire, hanging by the silken cord described by Mr Rymer; but the writing is in a rapid state of decay, though still legible, excepting a few words here and there in the folds. In Mr Rymer's printed copy there are some inaccuracies, but not of any material importance.

(a) David King of Scots is not here mentioned, because, having been made prisoner at the battle of Darham in October 1246, he was at this time detained in captivity in England, where, about four years after, King John of France arrived in the same unfortunate situation.

more numerous forces of their enemies the English, and promising to send to their aid 500 armed knights, and an equal number of archers, on his own expence.

- 16 A writ by the said King John, directed to his Admiral and all his officers of justice, informing them, that he had taken under his special protection all Scotsmen, particularly Scots merchants trading to the ports of France, and therefore commanding those officers to act accordingly: and as it was reported that a Scots trading vessel had been seized and plundered by some French pirates, he directs restitution to be made of such of the effects as could be recovered, under pain of severe punishment.

These three last entries seem, from the record, to have been all of the same date with the fourth preceding, viz. 28th September 1361.

After this last writ, another leaf of the book has evidently been cut away.

- 17 "Copia alligantie Regis Francie facte cum Anglicis in nostri prejudicium." Such is the title prefixed to this deed in the record. The deed itself is an engagement of alliance by King John of France in favour of the King of England, by which all the treaties between France and Scotland are expressly declared to be annulled and retracted by King John, under the sanction of the Pope's authority, obtained at his instance and that of the King of England; and King John obliges himself, and his heirs and successors, to assist the King of England against all his enemies, saving his alliances with the Pope and the Emperor. It is remarkable, that nothing reciprocal is stipulated to be performed in return by the King of England, whose name is not once mentioned in the whole instrument; and it is plain, that the principal object was to break off King John's connection with the Scots; and that King John's concessions were the effect of mere compulsion. The instrument is witnessed by many of the first nobility of France, and is dated at Boulogne, the 26th of October 1360:

- 19 "Prime treuge et liberatio regis." This is the treaty for liberating King David from his captivity in England, where he had been now detained prisoner eleven years, ever since the battle of Durham. His ransom was, by this treaty, fixed at 100,000 marks Sterling, payable, by equal portions, in the space of ten years, at the rate of 10,000 marks each year; and twenty hostages, for the more sure payment, were to be sent to England, of whom the first named is Johan Seneschal. Three of the following seven noblemen were always to be of the number of those twenty hostages, viz. the Steward of Scotland, the Earls of March, Marr, Ross, and Sutherland, the Lord Douglas, and Thomas de Murray; that in the mean time, during the whole period of the said ten years, an inviolable truce should subsist between the two kingdoms and the isle of Man; in which truce were to be included, Monsieur Edvard de Balliol et Johan des Isles, et tous autres aliez et adheranz of the King of England; and that John, eldest son and heir-apparent of the Steward of Scotland, (Jolan, aysne filz et heir-apparent du Seneschal d'Ecosse), one of the forefaid hostages (a), should remain in the company of the Lord of Percy or of Neville till the first payment should be made, after which, the immediate younger brother of said John should come and remain as hostage in his brother's place until the next annual payment of 10,000 marks should in like manner be made. The treaty is dated at Berwick-on-Tweed, the 3d day of October 1357. It is in the French language, and in various respects highly curious.

- 22 A confirmation by King David of the preceding treaty, containing a personal obligation on him, King David, to fulfil the same in all its articles.
- 23 A ratification of the same treaty by the bishops of Scotland, containing an obligation on them to enforce the performance of the same by ecclesiastical censures, particularly by the sentence of greater excommunication; and containing likewise a subsidiary obligation on them and their fees for payment of the ranfom. By this ratification, the following earls and barons appear to have become bound to compel King David to perform the conditions incumbent personally on him, viz. Patrick Earl of March, Thomas Earl of Angus, and William Earl of Sutherland, Thomas de Murray, James de Lyndefay, David de Grahame, Robert de Erkyne, William de Levyngftoun, David de Wemys, Thomas Byfet, William de Vaux, and William de Ramefay, Knights, and Roger de Kyrkpatrick Domicellus, dated at Edinburgh, the 26th of September, and at Berwick-on-Tweed, the 6th of October 1357.

25 A fimilar ratification by Patrick Earl of March, Thomas Earl of Angus, William Earl of Sutherland, Thomas de Murray, Panetarius of Scotland, William de Levyngftoun, and Robert de Erkyne, Knights, for themselves, as well as for the other great barons, in virtue of fpecial powers from them for that effect; by which too, they, like the prelates, oblige themselves and their heirs fubfidiarly in payment of the ranfom. Of this deed the date is not fet down in the record.

— A bull from Pope Innocent VI. dated at Avignon, 11. kalend. of July, (21ft of June), in the 6th year of his Pontificate, addreffed to King David, declining to give his fanction to the obligation for paying the ranfom, to which the bifhops, abbots, priors, and other ecclefiaftics of Scotland had fubjected themselves, their effects, fees, chapters, and monafteries.

26 Proceedings of a parliament holden at Scone, the 6th of November 1357. Here, apparently with a view to levy money for paying the King's ranfom, a general account is ordained to be taken of the true value of all the lands and revenues, both of the ecclefiaftics and laymen, throughout the whole kingdom, and of all corns, cattle, and other goods, of whatever kind, exceptis albis ovibus, equis domitis et bobus, domorum utenfiliis, et bladorum decimis; in relation to which, very particular directions are given. Here too all grants by the King, of lands and revenues belonging to the Crown, and of wards and other royal cafualties, are revoked. On the whole, the proceedings of this Parliament are very remarkable and interefting.

27 An instrument, dated at Invernefs, 15th November 1369, by John of Yle Lord of the Ifles, by which, in confideration of the pardon of his former tranfgreffions, granted by King David, he becomes bound to make fatisfaction for all injuries or damages done by him to the King's fubjects, to give obedience to the laws himfelf, and to oblige his fons, and his vaffals, and all the inhabitants of his eftates, to do the fame, and to anfwer readily to the King's officers for all taxes and contributions impofed or to be impofed. For fulfilling the premiffes, he engages to deliver as hoftages, within the caftle of Dumbarton, his fon by a daughter of the Steward of Scotland, named Donald, a grandfon named Angus, being the fon of his deceafed fon John, together with a natural fon of his own, named Donald; and further, the Earl of Strathorne Steward of Scotland becomes furety for him, and appends his feal to the instrument, along with the feal of the faid John Lord of the Ifles.

28 A renewal of the truce by King Edward III. for four years certain, dated 20th of June 1365. The instrument expreffes a penal fum of L. 100,000 Sterling, payable by the Scots on account of the arrears of the ranfom; but declares, that the payments to be made by the Scots fhall be imputed towards the extinction of 80,000 marks, the balance of ranfom ftill really unpaid. The instrument is in French.

29 An instrument by King David to the fame effect, dated at Edinburgh, 12th of June 1365. This deed too is in the French language.

Here another leaf feems to have been cut away.

30 A convention, dated 1ft September 1367, at Muirhouflaw, and from thence adjourned to Roxburgh, relative to the affairs of the marches, between Thomas de Beauchamp Earl of Warrick Marfchall of England, the Lord Percy, and Henry Percy his eldeft fon, on the one part, and the Bifhops of St Andrew's and Glasgow, Patrick Earl of March and of Murray, William Earl of Douglas, Robert de Erskyn, Walter de Leffey, Walter de Haliburton, and Hugh de Eglintoun, Knights, on the other part.

Folio.

- 31 A prolongation of the truce, containing an obligation for payment of 56,000 marks, the balance of the ransom still due, at the rate of 4000 marks each year; on complete payment of which 56,000 marks, all former obligations in relation to the ransom, particularly that for the penal sum of L. 100,000 above mentioned, were to become null and void.

Here another leaf, on which the concluding part of this deed was recorded, has been cut away.

- 32 Commission by King Edward, dated 13th June, in the 45th year of his reign, i. e. 1371, to certain persons to receive 4000 marks Sterling, which was to be paid him at the feast of St John the Baptist then next, 24th of June, by Robert King of Scots, as part of 52,000 marks, the balance of ransom still unpaid.
- 33 Another commission by King Edward, dated 13th June, in the 46th year of his reign, 1372, to the persons contained in the preceding commission, to receive 4000 marks more, to account of 48,000 marks, the balance of the ransom then due.
- 34 A receipt and discharge by King Edward for the last-mentioned 4000 marks, dated 26th of said month of June 1372, at Westminster.
- Another receipt for the same sum by King Edward's commissioners, dated at Berwick-on-Tweed, the 23d of June 1372.
- A very formal protestation by the commissioners of King Robert, in relation to certain alledged informalities in the receipts for the partial payments of the ransom then and formerly made, dated at Berwick-on-Tweed, 23d of June 1372.
- 36 An indenture relative to the same informalities between William and George Earls of Douglas and March, the Scots wardens of the east marches, and the Bishop of Durham and Henry Lord Percy, the English wardens, dated at Lylyet-crofs, the 18th October 1372.
- Two commissions of wardenship by King Edward, the one for the east, the other for the west marches, both dated at Westminster, the 16th of October, in the 43d year of his reign, i. e. 1369.
- 37 Another commission of wardenship for the east marches by King Edward, dated at Westminster, the 25th of June, in the 45th year of his reign, 1371.

After this, two leaves appear to have been cut away.

- 39 A parliament holden at Scone, 4th of March 1363-4. Here the three estates gave a flat negative to certain proposals, not particularised in the minute, which had been agitated between King David and some persons present with him at London, and the council of the King of England, of which the tendency may be easily perceived from the words of the minute: "Et responsum fuit expresse per tres com-
" munitates ibidem, quod ea que per tunc fuerant per Regem Anglie et suum consilium, ut prenotatum
" est, nullo modo voluerunt concedere, nec eis aliquatenus assentiri; veruntamen ad omnia que possent

- 40 A parliament holden within the house of the Preaching Friars at Perth, on the 13th of January 1364-5. The attention of this parliament seems to have been entirely employed about establishing either a solid peace with England, or a long truce, and about paying the balance of the King's ransom, of which 20,000 marks had been already paid. The different instructions prescribed by this parliament to the ambassadors employed in the negotiation are here set down, and are very remarkable, particularly the proposal of giving to a younger son of King Edward mille libratas terre within Galloway, which had been the property of the deceased Edward Balliol, together with the island of Mann, estimated at 1000 merks more.
- 42 An act of a parliament holden at Perth, the 14th of January 1365-6, in relation to the weighing of wool, intitled, "De trana et tronariis."
- A parliament holden at Perth, 24th July 1365, within the house of the Preaching Friars. Here an additional instruction is given to the ambassadors sent into England to negotiate a peace, in relation to assistance to be reciprocally given by the two kingdoms to each other in case of invasion; viz. that the Scots would agree to assist the English in Ireland.

- 43 Another parliament holden within the monastery of Holyroodhouse, the 8th of May 1366. Here we find a resolution relative to the negotiations with King Edward III. of England, which contains the following remarkable clause, viz. "In primis cum super quatuor punctis, videlicet, homagio, successione, regni demembratione, ac subsidio gentium armorum perpetuo per regnum Scotie, regno Anglie, et modo infra propria duo regna, et ultra per regnum Scotie extra regnum Anglie impendendo, fuisset aliquamdiu tractatum, finaliter refutatis primis tribus punctis tanquam intollerabilibus; deliberatum extiterit, fore super quarto puncto tractandum," &c.—Subjoined, we find an act in relation to a new coinage of money of the same fineness with the money then current in England.
- 44 Proceedings of a parliament holden at Scone, the 20th of July 1366. This part of the record is highly curious. In order to levy equally, from persons of every description, money for paying the expences and debts of the King, the expences of the ambassadors employed in England, and the balance of the King's ransom still due, a return had been laid before parliament, in consequence probably of the directions of the parliament 1357, both of the old extent and of the true worth, veri valoris, of all the revenues of the church, and of all the lands within the kingdom; but the directions of that parliament relative to moveable (a) or personal property not having been complied with, therefore an account of all the effects of the inhabitants of the boroughs and of the country, "omnia bona burgenfium et husbandorum," is appointed to be reported against the festival of the Nativity of the blessed Virgin, (the 8th of September). Then is subjoined in the record a state of the values of the bishopricks, specifying the general amount of each, both according to the old extent, and likewise according to the verus valor or present value; and this is followed by a similar state of the values of the different shires. To show the proportion between the old extent and the present worth, the following particulars are here exhibited, omitting the shillings and pence, viz.

- 47 A parliament holden at Scone, in the month of September 1367. Here is given a state of royal casualties and domains granted away by the King, and still remaining in the hands of those to whom they had been granted, notwithstanding the revocation by the parliament 1357; and this parliament passes various resolutions in relation to such grants.—Here we have a proclamation by the King, under the authority of parliament, relative to the coin; and a statute directing how fine of lands within such parts of the country as were still possessed by the English, should be given to the heirs of the former proprietors, who had deceased loyal subjects. This act proves, that at this early period justice was attended with the same symbolical ceremonies with which it is attended at the present moment.

52 A parliament holden at Perth, the 6th of March 1368-9.

54 A parliament holden at Scone, 20th of June 1368.

55 A parliament holden at Perth, 18th February 1369-70. A variety of regulations enacted by this parliament are inserted in the record.

58 Here the coronation of King Robert II. the first King of the family of Stewart, is particularly mentioned. It appears to have been performed at Scone, the 26th of March 1371, being the 32d day after his uncle's death, which happened on the festival of St Peter's cathedral, viz. 22d February 1370-1.

— The names of the prelates, earls, and barons, who did homage next day, 27th March 1370-1.

— Ordinance by the King and Privy Council in relation to the living or economy of the King and Queen, and the keeping and support of the royal houses and castles, conceived in very general terms, 3d May 1371.

— A parliament holden at Scone, "secundo die mensis Marcii anno gratie millesimo trecentesimo septuagesimo" "secundo, et anno regni ipsius Regis primo." (a) 60 Further proceedings of the same parliament, 2d of March 1371-2, in the second year of the reign of King Robert II.

61 A renewal of the league between France and Scotland, by King Charles VI. of France and Robert Duke of Albany Regent of Scotland, dated 9th February 1406-7. In corroboration of this treaty on behalf of the King of France, Louis King of Jerusalem and Sicily, Duke of Anjou, and Count of Provence, Forcalquier, Maine, Pimont, and Roucy; together with John son of the King of France, Duke of Berry and Auvergne, Count of Poitou, Destampes, Boulogne, and Auvergne, swear on the soul of the King of France to the faithful observance of the same.

This treaty, the deed of the latest date in this book of record, appears to have been recorded in a character different from that of all the rest of the book, on three pages originally left blank.

In this part of the book again, two, if not three leaves have evidently been cut off.

63 Settlement of the succession to the Crown of Scotland by King Robert II. with consent of a parliament holden at Scone, the 4th of April 1373, in the 3d year of his reign.

— Obligation by William Earl of Douglas to resign the privilege of a port at North Berwick, granted him by King Robert II. if the same should be found detrimental to the King, or to the community in general, or to the burrows in particular, dated 26th April 1373.

64 Renewal, in the French language, between King Robert II. of Scotland and King Charles V. of France, Charles le Sage, of the ancient league between their two kingdoms. The duplicate by King Robert is dated at the castle of Edinburgh, the 28th of October 1371; that by King Charles, at the castle of the wood of Vincennes, near Paris, the last of June 1371.

68 Obligation by King Charles relative to the same treaty, and of the same date with the duplicate executed by him, viz. last of June 1371, by which he engages to advance 100,000 nobles of gold, to enable King Robert to pay the balance of King David's ransom, still due to the King of England, or a greater sum, if a greater balance should be found to be due; and in case King Robert should not be found obliged to pay that balance, then he, King Robert, was to employ those 100,000 gold nobles in levying war against the English, provided the Pope should absolve the King, Prelates, and Lords (Seigneurs) of

(a) In the record, the date of this parliament seems to be erroneously entered, by a transposition of the words secundo and primo out of their proper places into the places of one another; for instead of being written as in this place, it ought to have been written as we find it on the verso of folio 60. viz. "Anno gratie millesimo trecentesimo septuagesimo" "primo," (i. e. 1371-2) "et anno regni ipsius Regis secundo."

Scotland from the oaths they had sworn to keep the truce with England, and should declare the truce itself null and void. King Charles further obliged himself, prior to the commencement of hostilities by the Scots, to send armour for 500 knights and squires, and also for 500 serjeants; and to be at the charge of a certain number of soldiers for a certain period, as is particularly mentioned in the obligation.

69 A renewal, in general terms, of the same treaty, by King Charles VI. of France, son to King Charles V. dated 8th April 1383.

— Confirmation by the same King, of the obligation by his father relative to the subsidy, in case the Scots should make war on the English, dated 15th June 1383.

70 Relative obligation by King Robert II. on the subject of the war to be prosecuted in consequence of that treaty of subsidy, dated 20th August 1383.

Here another leaf appears to have been cut away.

71 "Quedam ordinatio facta in consilio Regis super diversis articulis et punctis considerandis et servandis in exercitu faciundo per Gallicos et Scotos similiter."

The instrument itself is in French, although its title be in Latin. It is an indenture, dated at Edinburgh, in the beginning of July 1385, between King Robert II. of Scotland, his eldest son John Earl of Carrick, and several other earls and barons of Scotland, on the one part; and a noble seigneur, John de Vienne Admiral of France, Lieutenant du Roi de France, in Scotland and England, together with several other noble and brave knights and seigneurs of the kingdom of France, sent, for the special purpose contained in the indenture, by the King of France, to his ally the King of Scotland, on the other part. Its tendency is to regulate all matters that might occur in the course of an invasion of England on the side of the marches, to be prosecuted by an army composed of Scots and French soldiers in conjunction. Several of the articles are singular and remarkable.

Ane Roll of Robert II. marked on the back, Ro. II. B. Fleming of Biggar, Fleming of Leinzie.

N. B. This is the second Roll now in the General Register-Houfe. The Editor has, from the original roll, corrected the inaccuracies in the old index; and from the charters of confirmation, he has added the names of the original granters of the charters confirmed, together with the names of the witnesses to those charters. The old index contains the names of most of the resigners in the charters of resignation.

The witnesses to only four of the charters by King Robert II. in this roll are inserted in the record, viz. No. 4, 10, 64, and 65. The following persons are witnesses to all the four, viz. William Bishop of St Andrew's, Patrick Bishop of Brechin, John, the King's eldest son, Earl of Carrick and Steward of Scotland, Robert Earl of Fyfe and Monteith another son of the King's, William Earl of Douglas, and John de Carric, a canon of Glasgow, Chancellor: Hugh de Eglyntoun, Knight, is a witness to No. 4, 64, and 65: James de Lyndfay, a nephew of the King's, is a witness to No. 64, and 65: Robert de Erkyne, Knight, is a witness to No. 4, and 10: And Alexander Stewart, another of the King's sons, with Alexander de Lyndfay, Knight, are witnesses to No. 4.

The charters in this roll are dated in the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th years of the reign of King Robert II. as follows, viz. No. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 24, in the first year of his reign: No. 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 20, 23, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 53, and 56, in the second: No. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 29, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 58, 59, 60, and 61, in the third: No. 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 57, 61, 62, 63, 65, 66, 67, in the fourth: And No. 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, and 75, in the fifth year of his reign.

In this roll, the charters are, like those in Book I. dated at a variety of different places, namely, fourteen of them at Edinburgh, fourteen at Perth, eight at Stirling, seven at Dunfermling, four at St Andrew's, four at Scône, three at Kirkoswald, two at Aberdeen, two at Dunbretane, two at Are, two at Kilwinnine, two at Methven, two at Kinghorn, two at Inveiketlyne, one at Deundovenald, one at Clony, one at Kyndrochit, one at Arncle, and one at Cumbray; and in two of them, the places at which they were granted are not mentioned.

In the old index, the charters in this roll are numbered as if it had consisted of five different parts. This peculiarity, if adopted in the printing, might have been productive of confusion in forming the indexes of the persons and lands; and therefore the numbers of the charters are printed in a continued series from 1 to 75, as they certainly ought to have been in the old index.

- 4 — to Marion de Cardny, and the issue procreated or to be procreated between the King and her; whom failing, to the heirs of Marion's body lawfully to be begotten, of the twa Clyntres, Weltoun, and Watirtoun, in Aberdeenshire, cum nativis "et eorum sequelis," &c.
- 5 — confirming a charter by Thomas Fleming formerly (alias) Earl of Wigtoun, to Archibald de Douglas Knight, Domino Galwydie ex orientali parte aque de Creth, of the earldom of Wigtoun, in consideration of a large sum of money; the said Thomas having been induced to sell it on account of grievous feuds that had arisen between him and the more powerful of the ancient indigenous inhabitants of the earldom, ("maiores indigenas comitatus predicti"). The original charter is dated at Edynburgh, the 8th of February 1371-2; witnesses, Walter Abbot of Holywood, William Monypeny rector of the church of Cambuslang, Neil de Conyghame, Thomas de Rath, and Nicolas Smerles, burgeses of Drumfres.

King Alexander's charter is dated at Strivelyne, the 20th of January, in the 27th year of his reign, before these witnesses, Alexander Steward of Scotland, James his son, and Richard de Setoun.

7 Carta confirming the above-mentioned original charter itself by Neil Earl of Carryk, to Roland de Carryk. 8 — apparently intended as a confirmation of a remission by King Robert I. in favour of Gilbert de Carryk, Knight, for furrendering the castle of Louchdone to the English, and for delivering (probably to the English too) Cristofer de Setoun that King's son-in-law. King Robert's charter has neither place nor date; but it has the following witnesses, viz. Here the record stops short, and of course the usual confirming clause is omitted.

N. B. Each of the three immediately preceding charters, viz. No. 6, 7, and 8, has on the margin of the roll these words in an ancient character, "Confirmatio Johannis Kenedy;" and all the other charters in this roll have similar marginal titles written by the same hand.

(a) Six charters founding and endowing the priory of Coldingham, on the coaft of Berwickfhire, and annexing the fame to the fee of St Cuthbert or Durham, are the moft ancient Scots deeds now known, with certainty, to exift.

The firft of thofe charters was granted by King Duncan II. a fon of King Malcolm III. denominated Cármore. This Duncan filled the throne of Scotland eighteen months only, viz. from about May 1094 till towards the end of the year 1095. He is faid to have been illegitimate, and is regarded as an ufurper.

The other five charters were granted by King Edgar, a legitimate fon of the fame Malcolm. Edgar reigned in Scotland from October 1098 till January 1106-7.

Thofe fix charters, together with a progrefive chain of pofferior deeds by fucceeding Kings and fome Noblemen of Scotland, in relation to the fame priory, are preferved among the archives of the Deanry of Durham, to which the priory was annexed. Thus depofited in England, thofe ancient deeds efaped the ruin in which the papers, as well as the edifices themfelves, of the religious houfes in Scotland, were involved by the deftructive phrenzy of our ruffian Reformers.

Facsimiles of King Duncan's charter, and of two of King Edgar's, are exhibited in the Diplomata Scotie, by Mr Anderfon.

The above charter of confirmation, No. 22. which gives occafion to the prefent note, contains a verbatim tranfcript of three of Edgar's charters, of which thofe engraved in the Diplomata are two.

In the beginning of October 1793, the Editor, on his way from London to Edinburgh, halted a few days at Durham, where, in confequence of introductory letters from Lord Frederick Campbell, to the now deceased Dr Hinchcliffe Bifhop of Peterborough, then Dean of Durham, and to fome of the Gentlemen of the Chapter, he was received with the moft obliging politeneff, of which he will ever entertain a grateful recollection, and was indulged with free and unconfeined accefs to the archives of the Deanry.

The Editor, by thefe means, had an opportunity of perufing, among a great number of other curious ancient deeds, thofe fix Scots charters, and of infpecting and confidering them with the moft careful deliberation. Not having it then in his power to confult either the charter of confirmation or the Diplomata, he could not difcover which of thofe charters were engraved, or which of them were ingroffed in the charter of confirmation. But being pretty certain, that neither the Diplomata nor the charter contained all the fix, he, at a venture, tranfcribed, with his own hand, the charter by King Duncan, and three of Edgar's;—and, by fingular good fortune, he happened to copy the two charters by Edgar which are not inferted in the charter of confirmation.

Hence he is enabled to infert, in this place, copies of all thofe fix charters;—and the reader, it is hoped, will not be difpleafed to fee fubjoined a few fhort obfervations, made by the Editor, on the four copied by him, when the originals were before his eyes. The points and the capital letters ufed in the original charters are retained in the printing. But thofe who wifh to be acquainted with the written characters ufed in the originals, muft have recourfe to the Diplomata.

- 23 Carta Con. of a grant by James de Douglas of Dalkeith, to James de Douglas his son and heir, of the castle and town of Dalkeith, in the shire of Edinburgh, and of lands to the extent of 500 marks not specified in the confirmation.

N. B. It has a seal appended at the right-hand corner, on brownish wax, with the impression of a warrior on horseback; and there has been a circumscription, of which the greater part is now crumbled off; but "signum" or "orum," is still legible.— On the whole, there cannot, in my humble opinion, be the least doubt as to the authenticity of this most curious charter.

N. B. All the three seals above mentioned have been on a whitish wax, now become brownish; and none of them have had any reverse.

Of late the authenticity of the charter by King Duncan has been called in question, and it has been represented as a forgery.

But as every forgery must have an object, it may be asked, For what purpose was the charter in question fabricated?

The granter, real or pretended, has always been regarded as illegitimate, and as an usurper; and his reign was but of eighteen months duration. Now, although usurpers give away lands and offices, and execute all other acts of administration just as if they were lawful Sovereigns, yet as their deeds are, by succeeding Kings, ever deemed illegal and ineffectual, to forge charters or grants by such usurpers appears to be highly preposterous.

But if so absurd a fabrication could be at all attempted, it surely could be attempted only during the actual reign of the usurper, not after his dethronement or death.

- 28 Carta to Allan de Ereskine, and his spouse, of ane annual rent of ten marks ten shillings eight pence Sterling furth of the lands of Crambeth, in Fifeshire, on his own resignation.

- 30 — to the Abbacy of Holyrude house, of the barony of Broughtoun, in the shire of Edinburgh, in ane regality.
- 31 — Con. of infeftments granted by Thomas Mautalent of Halyntoun, to William Mautalent his son, and Elizabeth Watfon, William's spouse, of the lands of Scheylynlaw, Traquair, and Inverlethane. In the roll the date of this charter is omitted.
- 32 — to William de Lindfay, of 40 marks Sterling out of the customs of Edinburgh and Hadingtoun, redeemable by paying him 400 marks Sterling, or by infefting him heritably in 40 marks of land any where in the Lowlands.

- 36 — to William de Camera burgesses of Aberdeen, of ane annualrent of 40 s. Sterling furth of the barony of Fyndoun, in the shire of Kyncardyn, on the resignation of John Crabb.
- 37 — Con. of a charter by Norman Lesly of Balnabreich, to John Ramfay of Colluthye, of the lands of Balmadyside and Pettachop, blench, to be holden of Leslie. This charter proceeds on a verdict pronounced at Glenduky, 5th July 1390, by the following jury, viz. Andrew de Ramefay de Redy, John de Kynnere, William de Berclay, John de Camera, Alan de Lochmalony, Walter de Ramefay, Maliseus de Kynynmond, John de Kyndeloch, William Stirk, William de Ferny, John de Ramefay, William de Lochmalony, Robert Lyel, Andrew de Camera, and John de Arous.
- 38 — to Hew Wallayas, of ane annual rent of 40 s. out of a tenement in Edinburgh.

The charter, therefore, by King Duncan, if really forged, must be presumed to have been forged during Duncan's usurpation, that is, between 30th April 1094, and 1st November 1095.

If so, it seems to follow, 1st, That Duncan was in the practice of giving charters; 2d, That the fabricator would not fail to imitate some true and genuine charter.

This consideration, it is humbly thought, tends powerfully to obviate the objections to the authenticity of this charter, derived from its form and tenor.

The words "constans hereditarie Rex Scotie," are by the objectors judged improper, and are therefore stated as indications of a forgery.

One cannot easily assent to this conclusion. It is far from being improbable, that Duncan, sensible of labouring under a defect in point of birth, would employ an expression calculated to disavow the imputation of illegitimacy, and to impress posterity with a different belief. But to a forger, unless, as hinted above, he was at the moment following a genuine charter as a model, such an expression could hardly have occurred.

The objection to the seal, as having an impression on one side only, appears, with submission, to be equally inconclusive. If Duncan's seal has no reverse, neither has Edgar's; and it is generally admitted, that Edgar's brother and successor, King Alexander I. was the first King of Scotland whose seals had an impression on both sides.

Duncan, it is true, appears on his seal in the figure of an armed warrior, whereas Edgar is represented on his, sitting on a throne, and crowned. But what inference unfavourable to the authenticity of the deed can reasonably result from this? At that early period, Kings, it is likely, were in this matter influenced more by fancy than by precedent.

More might be advanced on this subject; but for the present further enlargement seems neither necessary nor proper.

The charter, on the whole, may perhaps warrant this conclusion, That whether forged or genuine, it was framed during the short reign of King Duncan II. and consequently, that that Prince was in the practice of giving charters.

INDEX to the Religious Houses, Corporations, &c. to which the Charters are granted, and to all the Persons, excepting those Witnesses to the Royal Charters and to the Charters by the Regent Robert Duke of Albany pointed out in a separate Arrangement subjoined to the Introduction.

THE figures followed by commas denote the pages; the figures following the commas, and divided from one another by points, denote the entries in the different pages.

When the same numerical figures occur more than once, prefixed to different entries, in the same page, (as in page 23. where each of the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, occurs thrice), the second and subsequent entries of each figure is pointed out by the small figures 2, 3, 4, &c. placed at the upper right-hand corner of the figures so repeated, like the figures indicating the square and cube roots, &c. in algebraical notation. Thus, in page 23. the figures 3² after the name Keith shows, that Keith is mentioned in the second marginal entry marked by the figure 3; and 3³ after Blunt shows, that the name Blunt will be found in the third marginal entry marked by figure 3.

Some entries in different pages of the book have no marginal figures prefixed. Such entries are here referred to by the number of the line in which they occur, the letter l being prefixed to the figure. Thus, under Aberbrothock Abb. will be found 156, l. 20. which shows that the Abbot of Aberbrothock is mentioned in the 20th line from the top of the 156th page.

Instead of copying all the varieties in which the same name, either of person or place, is written or spelt in different places of the book, the most usual orthography is adopted.

When the Latin word filius is added to a Latin Christian name, as filius Duncani, filius Donaldi, filius Willielmi, filius Walteri, filius Roberti, filius Petri, &c. the name is here given in English as it is used in modern writing, viz. Duncan's, Donald's, William's, Robert's, Peter's, &c.

A P P E N D I X,

OBSERVATIONS, by the Editor of the preceding Index, relative to an Act of Settlement of the Crown of Scotland, passed in the First Year of the Reign of King Robert II. 27th of March 1371.

Of which remarkable Instrument a Fac-simile has been engraved, by the direction and at the expence of LORD FREDERICK CAMPBELL, Lord Clerk-Register for Scotland.

THE succession to the Crown of Scotland, anterior to the days of King Malcolm III. appears not to have been directed by any fixed rule.

The succession, to the crown of Scotland, anciently irregular,

The sceptre, indeed, seems to have been always swayed by the descendants of the same family. But we see brothers succeeding to brothers, and nephews to uncles, much more frequently than sons to fathers (a).

Even on the supposition that superior merit, and greater ability for government, were, by the usage of that remote period, understood to constitute a preferable title to the throne, still it is obvious that cabal and faction must have had a powerful influence on the elevation of the different Sovereigns to the regal dignity. Hence plots, assassinations, and all the miseries of civil war.

To avoid those calamities, ruinous to the public in general, and productive of perpetual disquiet and alarm to the reigning Prince in particular, it became an object of most anxious desire to the whole nation, that the right of succession to the crown should be ascertained by some clear and certain rule.

Various attempts accordingly appear to have been made to attain an object in every view so desirable: But private ambition for a long while combated the general advantage with too much success.

At length, however, the crown of Scotland seems to have become strictly hereditary in the descendants of King Malcolm III. by his Queen Margaret, of the Saxon royal family of England.

Becomes at length strictly hereditary.

The more effectually still to guard the public tranquillity from the effects of private intrigue, a custom became prevalent, during a period of more than two centuries, of making a public declaration, during the life of the reigning sovereign, in favour of the prince who was to succeed him in the throne.

Customary for the reigning King to declare his successor.

Thus we learn from Fordoun, that King David I. the third and youngest son of King Malcolm III. immediately after the death of his only son Henry Earl of Northumberland and Hunting-

King David I. orders his grandson Malcolm to be proclaimed his successor.

(a) Of five and forty kings who are stated to have reigned in Scotland between King Fergus II. and King Malcolm III. only three are said to have been succeeded by their sons.

don in the year 1152, ordered Malcolm, the eldest son of that Henry, to be conducted through the provinces of Scotland, and proclaimed heir of the kingdom (a).

That King Malcolm died prematurely, in the 26th year of his age.

King William, the brother and successor of King Malcolm IV. followed with peculiar care the example set him by his grandfather King David.

As early as the year 1195, during a tedious illness of King William at Clackmannan, the greater Barons (Magnates) having been assembled there, swore fealty to a daughter of King William's named Margaret, as his true heiress, in case he should not have a son by his Queen Ermengarde. Afterwards in the year 1201, the greater Barons in like manner swore fealty, at Mufelburgh, to King William's son Alexander, then an infant only three years old: And about four years after, David Earl of Huntingdon and Garioch, King William's brother, did homage to the same Alexander. Finally, we are told by Fordoun, that when King William was on his death-bed, his son Alexander was, by the Bishops, Earls, and Barons, again recognised as heir of the kingdom (b).

It is likely that King Alexander II. used the same precaution, although our inaccurate historians have overlooked the circumstance.

Alexander III. actuated by the same motives, rendered still more urgent by an alarming emergency, namely, the death of his eldest son, and, by that event, the probable extinction of the male descendants of Malcolm III. obtained from the Earls and greater Barons a formal obligation to receive as their Queen, and as rightful heir of the kingdom, his grand-daughter Margaret, called the Maiden of Norway, and the issue of her body, in the event of his dying without leaving a son or daughter begotten of his own body, or of the body of his son (c). This, though overlook-

(a) That historian relates the transaction in the following words: "Rex autem David, dissimulato mœore super mortem unici filii sui Henrici, erat enim sapiens valde, et ex præcedentibus futura cupiens præcavere, attendens idem Seneca de Moribus, Quicquid a sapiente diligenter providetur, cum ad rem agendam pervenium fuerit, facilius superatur atque decernitur. Melius est enim ante tempus occurrere, quam post vulnus datum remedium querere: nam serum est cavendi tempus in medio malorum. Hæc ipse. Timebat enim, propter variabilitatem quæ emerferat in regno suo per patruum suum Douwaldum Banum, et fratrem suum Duncanum Nothum, rixantes pro regno, et legitimos hæredes exilantes, et paulo post in Angliâ, in Stephano regni nepotis sui Henrici filii imperatricis sororis suæ invasorem: propterea tulit continuo Malcolmum primogenitum filii sui prædicti, dato eidem rectore Duncano Comite de Fife cum exercitu cupido, quia ipse fœnerat, et sine detrimento corporis regnum peragrarè non poterat; jubens eundem suum nepotulum per provincias Scotiæ circumdaci ac æretem regni proclamari." Book 5. cap. 44. vol. 1. p. 296.

(b) Scotichronicon, vol. 1. p. 509. 516. 519. and 535. where we read as follows, viz "Ubi de die in diem viribus deficiens, et aliquandiu languens, filio suo Alexandro ab episcopis, comitibus, et baronibus, in regem futurum commisso et recepto, rebus excessit humanis plenus dierum et senectute bona."

(c) The preferring of any daughter to be begotten of King Alexander's body, to the daughter of his eldest daughter the deceased Queen of Norway, was not only repugnant to the Scots law of representation, by which, in heritable succession, a child comes in place of its deceased parent—the ground on which Baliol's pretensions to the crown were afterwards founded—but was likewise a direct contravention of the marriage-articles between the King of Norway and his Queen; by which it was expressly stipulated, that, failing King Alexander without a son, or without issue of a son, the Queen of Norway and her children should succeed to the throne of Scotland. "Si vero con-

ed likewise by our historians, is proved by an original instrument still extant in the Chapter-house at Westminster (a), expressed in the following words, viz.

(a) This instrument is one of those which were carried away from Scotland by the orders of King Edward I. as appears from Catalogus Monumentorum Scotiæ, (printed in Sir Jo. Ayloffe's Calendas of Ancient Charters, page 327.) where it is entered thus, viz. “ Obligatio Magnatum Scotiæ, facta Regi Alexandro, quod tenebant Domuellam Norwagiæ pro Domina et Regina Scotiæ.” See Introduction, p. 11. l. 10. But it is more fully entered among the Treatatus Pacis et Trugorum, p. 288. of the same book, in the following words, viz. “ 1283.—Obligatio Nobilium et Regis Scotiæ, genitam de Domino Erico Rege Norwagiæ, in Dominam suam, et rectam hæredem regni Scotiæ, et ad manutendam prolem legitimam ex ea descendendam, casu quo contingerit dictum Dominum Alexandrum Regem sine filio aut filia de corpore suo legitime procreat. morituum.—Sub 34. hylis.—Dat. 5 February, 11 Edward 1.” i. e. 1283-4.

(b) The rest of the instrument contains an engagement by the barons faithfully to carry into execution the last will and testament of the King. It is therefore immaterial to the present question.

“testimonium, plures de nobis abponi fecerunt sigilla sua huic scripto. Dat. apud -----on quintis “Februarii anno Gratiae millesimo ducentesimo octuagesimo tertio, et anno regni Domini nostri Regis “tricesimo quinto (a).”

But the sudden death of King Alexander III. followed a few years after by that of his infant grand-daughter, rendered those precautions abortive and unavailing; and the nation was involved in all the miseries of a disputed succession to the crown, aggravated by the artful policy of that powerful monarch King Edward I. of England, their ambitious and enterprising neighbour.

We find King Robert I. conducting himself with still greater anxiety in regard to this matter of the succession to the crown; and the peculiarity of his situation demanded extraordinary circumspection. Baliol's pretensions to the crown had been, by King Edward's decision, found preferable to those of Bruce's grandfather; that decision was acquiesced in by the nation; Baliol himself was still alive; a powerful party in Scotland was secretly attached to him; and he had a son, named Edward, whose right could hardly be invalidated by his father's misconduct, or rather, perhaps, by his misfortune.

Besides, Bruce's personal title to the crown could not, at the time when he assumed the government, stand in competition with either that of Baliol or of Baliol's son. For the plea of Bruce's grandfather against Baliol, disclaiming the principle of representation, rested entirely on his being nearer by one degree to the common stock than Baliol was. But the grandfather, as well as the father, of Bruce being at this time both dead. Baliol was now nearer to the common stock than Bruce was; and Baliol's son, who was in the same degree with Bruce, had the advantage of being descended of the elder branch.

King Robert therefore, aware of all this, after having attained the throne, and vindicated the independency of his country by a persevering intrepidity almost without example, availed himself of the first moments of tranquillity to obtain from the different states of the kingdom a solemn acknowledgement of his own right to the crown, through the medium of the right of his grandfather.

This measure appears to have been carried into execution in a general council assembled at Dundee in February 1309-10, where the original question about the right of succession to the Crown, as it stood at the time of the competition, having been resumed, an instrument, still preserved in the General Register-House at Edinburgh, was drawn up in the following terms, viz.

*“Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quorum notitiam præsens scriptum pervenerit: Episcopi, Abbates, “Priores, ac ceteri de clero in regno Scotiæ constituti, salutem in salutis Auctore. Noverit universitas

The States of Scotland declare the right of King Robert I's grandfather to their crown to have been preferable to that of John Baliol, and admit King Robert himself for their Sovereign.

This instrument was authenticated by twelve seals, appended by labels of parchment. But the seals are now all crumbled away. Even four of the labels are entirely gone, and part of a fifth. On the remaining labels we see written as follows, proceeding from the left hand corner, viz on the first, “St Andr.” 2d, “Abirdonens.” 3d, “Moraviens.” The 4th label is gone; that part of the 5th on which the inscription has been written, is torn off; on the 6th, “Glasguens.” the 7th is gone; on the 8th, “Brechenens.” on the 9th, “Dunke dens.” on the 10th, “Lismorens.” the 11th and 12th are quite gone. Hence the seals seem to have been those of twelve bishops (a).

(a) In the British Museum there is a book consisting of three manuscripts, formerly separate, but now bound together.
(B)

But, besides this declaration by the whole body of the clergy, the bishops executed a separate instrument by themselves, exactly in the same words, mutatis solummodo mutandis, and concluding with the word aponi, the date being by that means omitted.

This instrument too still exists in the General Register-House at Edinburgh, though much decayed. Like the former, it was authenticated by twelve seals. Of three of those seals the greater part still remains, namely, those of the Bishops of St Andrew's, Aberdeen, and Murray. But the rest are crumbled away; and three of the parchment labels are likewise gone (a):

King Robert next judged it necessary, in imitation of preceding kings, to ascertain the order in which the descendants of his body should succeed to the throne.

With this view, two different acts of parliament were passed; the first in the end of April in the year 1315; the second, in the beginning of December in the year 1318, a few weeks after the death of Edward King of Ireland, King Robert's only brother.

The originals of those two acts are not now among the other records in the General Register-House at Edinburgh. Whether they still exist any where else is uncertain. They are both inserted in the MS. of Fordoun's history, who was cotemporary with the event. Copies of both are likewise in the MS. of Sir James Balfour above mentioned, viz. No. 4694 of the Harleian gether, viz. No. 4693, 4694, and 4697 of the Harleian collection, which appear to have been written by Sir James Balfour of Kinnaird, Lyon King at Arms, about the years 1628 and 1629; and which were attentively perused by the editor in August 1793.

On folio 1. of No. 4694 (which is the second part of the book as now bound) there is a copy of the above instrument; and in a different part of the same manuscript there is another copy of it, to which this singular remark is subjoined by Sir James, viz. "This declaratione is vorde for vorde formerly fett doune in fol. 1. wich I had out of ye castell of Edinburgh; and this preceding declaratione is verbatim the same wich I my selve extracted off a double kept by Sr Robert Cotton in his thesaury of antiquities at Veltmister; wich I did, to lett posterity see yat ye tuo declarations ar all one, and differs not, though one be kepte by us and ane uther in England."

The editor wished to see this original instrument among the Cottonian manuscripts; but being informed that it was lost, he made a transcript from Sir James's copy, on the 28th of August 1793. And here justice forces him to observe, that Sir James, though a very industrious, appears to have been a careless transcriber, and that his copies abound with inaccuracies. Between Sir James's copies and the original instrument in the General Register-House a striking and material discrepancy occurs. Both his copies of the declaration are "dat. in parlamento tento apud Sanctum Andream in Scotia, 17 die Martii anno Gratie mcccviii," (i. e. 1308-9.) Sir James adds, "Ses sigilla cere viridis episcoporum sunt appensa." Whereas, in the original instrument, the date is thus expressed, viz. "dat. in concilio generali Scotie cano, in ecclesia Fratrum Minorum de Donde, xxiiii die mensis Februarii anno Domini mccc nono, celebrato et anno regni ejusdem quarto," (i. e. 1309-10.) And instead of six seals, the number mentioned by Sir James Balfour, twelve seals appear to have been appended to this original instrument.

(a) The commencement of this instrument, containing the names of the bishops, is expressed thus, viz. "Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quorum notitiam prefens scriptum pervenerit: Willielmus de Lambertoun ecclesie Sancti Andree, Robertus Wyseard ecclesie Glasguensis, Willielmus ecclesie Dunkeldensis, Henricus le Chen ecclesie Abirdonenis, David de Muravia ecclesie Moravienis, Nicholaus de Balmyle ecclesie Dumblanensis, Thomas de Donde ecclesie Rosensis, Ferchardus Delegannibe ecclesie Cathanenensis, Johannes de Kyninmonth ecclesie Brechinensis, Andreas ecclesie Lismorensis, Thomas ecclesie Candide Cae, et Alanus ecclesie Sodorensis, Dei gratia Episcopi, salutem in Domino sempiternam cum benedictione diuina. Noverit universitas," &c. verbatim et literatim like the preceding instrument to the word aponi, with which word this instrument concludes.

collection; and from the words subjoined to Sir James's copies, particularly to his copy of the second, he appears to have made those copies from the original acts themselves, which therefore must have been then existing, and in his custody.

In Sir James's copies there are, as usual, various inaccuracies. But, correcting those inaccuracies by Fordoun, (vol. 2. p. 257. and 290. where the instruments seem to be accurately printed), the tenor of those instruments may be exactly ascertained. The first is expressed in the following terms, viz.

“ Declaratio Parlamenti quod Eduardus de Bruce debet succedere, hæredibus masculis

“ Roberti Bruce Regis Scotorum deficien. (a)”

“ *In nomine Sanctæ et Individuæ Trinitatis, Patris, Filii, et Spiritus Sancti, Amen. During the reign of King David II. the son of King Robert I. It was found unnecessary to make any declaration concerning his successor. The acts of settlement by King Robert were judged sufficient, as is proved by the instrument immediately to be mentioned.

But no sooner had King Robert II. the first King of the family of Stewart, mounted the throne, than he thought it proper, following the example set him by his grandfather King Robert I. to obtain a similar act of settlement. He was crowned at Scoon on the 26th of March 1371. Next day the solemn declaration contained in the instrument, of which a fac simile is here presented to the reader, was passed; the acts by King Robert I. mentioned above having been first produced and read in parliament. Of this instrument a copy is here given in modern printed characters, for the ease of those who may be unacquainted with the ancient characters in which the original is written.

On the back of the Instrument the following words are written by way of title, viz. “Declaratio Parlamenti ubi Johannes primogenitus Roberti habet succedere in regnum 1371.” The Instrument itself is expressed as follows, viz.

“In nomine Sancte et Individue Trinitatis Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti Amen. Anno ab incarnatione Domini millesimo trecentesimo septuagesimo primo secundum morem et computationem eccle-

(a) The instrument concludes, in Fordoun, with the word apposuerunt. What follows here, to the end of the paragraph, is taken from the manuscript of Sir James Balfour,

To this instrument fifty-six parchment labels have been appended, evidently for the purpose of receiving as many seals. But five of those labels are now gone; and there are seals on twenty only of the remaining labels*.

Those labels are disposed in three rows; and on the outside of each label, the penult of the lowest row alone excepted, is written the name of the person whose seal was to be appended to that particular label. Most of the labels have inside inscriptions likewise. But as all the seals still remaining correspond with the outside inscriptions; and, excepting the last of the upper row (which has "Prior sti Andr." both on the outside and inside) not one of them with that on the inside; it is pretty certain that the inside inscriptions were erroneous and were neither intended nor expected to be seen. They have evidently been occasioned by a conjectural preparatory operation of the person who cut the labels. Perceiving, however, in the course of the actual appending of the seals, that those preparatory inscriptions were inapplicable, he naturally folded the label the opposite way, and wrote the inscription right.

But the engraver, anxious to exhibit every circumstance connected with the instrument, has engraved the inside inscriptions, as well as those on the outside. This gives rather a confused appearance to the representation of the labels in the engraving.

For the ease, therefore, of those who might be puzzled in this matter by the Fac simile, the outside inscriptions are printed here in the common character, keeping the order and arrangement of the labels†.

* Whether seals were originally put on all the other labels, is uncertain; but that this was intended, is clear from the words of the instrument; and on some of the labels, at which there are now no seals, minute remnants of wax are still visible. It is not improbable, however, that on some of the labels no seals have ever been put, because (as a learned and ingenious friend of the Editor's observes) some of those, "perhaps, whose presence on that occasion was expected, did not attend, and others might not have brought their seals with them."

In the introductory part of the instrument it is said, that the customary oaths of homage and fealty had, previously to passing the act, been taken by the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and others of the clergy and people who happened to be present.

As illustrative of this fact, and as intimately connected with the whole transaction, the reader will not be displeased to peruse the following passage, extracted from the most ancient book of record relating to Scotland at present known to exist (a).

The passage is as follows, viz.

appearance to the representation of the labels in the engraving.

For the ease, therefore, of those who might be puzzled in this matter by the Fac simile, the outside inscriptions are printed here in the common character, keeping the order and arrangement of the labels †.

* Whether seals were originally put on all the other labels, is uncertain; but that this was intended, is clear from the words of the instrument; and on some of the labels, at which there are now no seals, minute remnants of wax are still visible. It is not improbable, however, that on some of the labels no seals have ever been put, because (as a learned and ingenious friend of the Editor's observes) some of those, “perhaps, whose presence on that occasion was expected, did not attend, and others might not have brought their seals with them.”

In the introductory part of the instrument it is said, that the customary oaths of homage and fealty had, previously to passing the act, been taken by the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and others of the clergy and people who happened to be present.

As illustrative of this fact, and as intimately connected with the whole transaction, the reader will not be displeased to peruse the following passage, extracted from the most ancient book of record relating to Scotland at present known to exist (a).

The passage is as follows, viz.

" *Anno ab incarnatione Domini millesimo trecentesimo septuagesimo primo, die vicesimo sexto mensis Martii apud Sconam. “ dicto Domino nostro Regi. et j.amenta fidelitatis singillatim. Propter Dominum Episcopum Dunbl.
nensm et Dominum Archibaldum de Douglas, qui presterunt juraamenta fidelitatis tantum.”

But the same King Robert II. in order to obviate as far as possible all disputes about the succession to the Crown among the descendants of his five legitimate sons, judged it proper, about two years posterior to the former act, to pass a second act of settlement more special and precise.

The original act is among the archives in the General Register-House at Edinburgh. It is indeed deplorably decayed; but by a patient perverance it may be still read, excepting a few words in different parts of it which are quite worn away. These, however, may be supplied with perfect accuracy by means of the ancient book of record just mentioned, where the act is fairly entered (a).

It is expressed in the following terms :

The Second Act of Settlement
by King Robert II. and his Parliament.

“ In nomine Domini Amen, Anno ab incarnatione eiusdem millesimo trecentesimo septuagesimo ter- tio, et regni Regis Roberti secundi anno tertio, mensis Aprilis die quarto. Presens Rex Robertus,

 “ die superius annotatis.”

This instrument was authenticated by the King's great seal, suspended by a hank of unwoven brown filken threads; by a set of seals suspended by strong woven cords of green silk; and by another set of seals, suspended by more slender woven cords of red silk. The great seal is now crumbled to pieces: Of six of the other seals, some considerable bits still remain; and five of those that had been attached by the greenish cords, being pretty entire, have been cut away, and are kept in the General Register-House, perfectly distinguishable by the remnants of the greenish filken cords by which they had been appended (a).

(a) A copy, too, of this last instrument, is inserted in Sir James Balfour's manuscript, No. 4694. of the Harleian collection, before referred to; but it is by no means correct.
