PREFACE.

THE Charters and Documents printed in this volume are all, I believe, that are of essential importance for the history of the Burgh of Paisley, down to the year 1665.

Among the documents of special interest besides the two relating to the erection of the Town into a Burgh of Barony, are the following, which have not been printed before: the Charter by which Abbot George Shaw conveyed to the newly erected Burgh the Heyt House for use as a "Common Tolbooth;" the Ratification by the Diffinitors of Clugny of the same Abbot's endowment of thirty crowns of gold to provide a Common Pittance for the Monks, which endowment was with others transferred by James VI. to the Grammar School; the Charter of James Craufurd founding the Chaplainry of SS. Mirin and Columba; the Charter of the Grammar School; the Charter of 29th July, 1587, which reinstated Lord Claud Hamilton in the temporalities of the Abbey and made him a Lord of Parliament; and the Charter by which the Magistrates and Town Council founded and endowed an Hospital for six aged poor men.

Appendices III., IV., and V. have been printed before, but with many inaccuracies.

The Extracts from the Town Council Records are brought down to the year 1620. Had space permitted, many more of equal interest might have been given; and I am not without hope that they may be continued in another volume. More than anything else do the Records of the Town Council illustrate the social history of the Burgh.

The first six volumes of the Town Council Records which are known to have existed are lost, and the extant series going back to 10th September, 1594, is not continuous, the volumes for the years 1614-1616, 1638-1645, 1660-1666, being wanting. The Town Council is fortunate in possessing a transcript of the first two extant volumes of its Records, made by Mr. Gavin Lang, at one time Town Clerk, and presented by him to the Burgh, on 6th December, 1842. On the whole, it is very accurately done, and in making the extracts I have found it of great assistance, many passages in the original MSS. being now faded and undecipherable.

My best thanks are due to the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council for giving me access to their invaluable muniments, and also to the Town Clerks and their assistants for their uniform courtesy and kindness. I have also to thank my friend, the Rev. J. D. MacKenzie, B.D., the minister of Kilbarchan, who has read the proofs of the Introduction and given me valuable suggestions; and especially James Robertson, Esq., Convener of the General Committee of the Free Library and Museum, for many

INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

DURING the Roman occupation of Great Britain what is now known as the County of Renfrew was inhabited by the Damnonii, a fierce and warlike tribe related to the Dumnonii, who were then in possession of Cornwall and Devon. They belonged to the first or Goidelic immigration of the Celts, and were thus unlike the rest of the inhabitants of Strathclyde, who belonged to the second or Brythonic. Whether at the coming or during the time of the Romans they had a settlement at Paisley is altogether uncertain.

The remains of military works, said to have been in a fairly good state of preservation down to the middle of the eighteenth century, show that the Romans had a station on Oakshawhead with outposts at Castlehead and Woodside.¹ The positions were admirably chosen, since the view from them commands almost the whole of the lower reaches of the Clyde. Vanduara,² the name which the Romans are supposed to have given to their station, is probably nothing more than a copyist's mistake for Vandogora.³ Vandogora is connected with Vindogara, the Bay of Ayr, and has been identified as the name for the Roman camp, not at Paisley, but at Loudon Hill on the Irvine.¹ The earliest name by which Paisley is known is Passeleth, Passelet, Passlet, and Passelay,² or some other form of Paisley, and there is no indication of its having borne any other.

² Chalmers was the first to suggest that Vanduara was the Roman name for Paisley. "His reasons are very inconclusive—viz., that there are said to have been Roman remains at Paisley, and that Vanduara is probably derived from the Welsh Gwendwr, or White Water, and the river at Paisley is called the White Cart. But rivers do not change their names. If it had been called Gwendwr, it would have borne the name still; and to rest the identity of Vanduara with Paisley upon a mere conjectural etymology is the reverse of satisfactory."—Skene, Celtic Scotland, i. 73.

³ In some editions of Ptolemy's Geography, Vanduara is read for Vandogora; but the latter is the word used in all the best editions.

When it emerges into the light of documentary history, Paisley is associated with the name of St. Mirin and in possession of a church dedicated to his name.³ According to the legend, St. Mirin was a Dalriadic or Ulster Scot, who, after studying under St. Comgall at the Monastery of Bangor, and being Prior there, took to wandering, like most of the Irish monks of the time, and finally settled at Paisley, where he devoted himself to the preaching of the Gospel and to the civilisation of the people.⁴ If the tradition be correct, he would be acquainted with St. Columba; and if the meeting recorded by Jocelin⁵ between St. Columba and St. Kentigern took place, he would be a contemporary of the latter, and, like him, a subject of Roderick the Liberal, King of Strathclyde. Some have gone so far as to doubt his existence altogether; but there is no reason for doing so. However wild the legends about a Saint may be, the Saint himself is always the substantial element among them. Imagination may invent the miracles, but it does not invent the Saint.⁶ St. Mirin appears to have laboured long and successfully, and to have left behind him in Paisley the memory of a holy life. If tradition may be trusted, and in this it probably may, he was buried in the church in which he ministered and which was probably built by his own hands.¹ The date of his death is unknown, but by the middle of the twelfth century, when David I. was restoring the Cathedral Church of Glasgow and founding his royal burgh of Renfrew, it was sufficiently remote for honorific titles to be assigned to him and for his church to have had a parochial territory marked out for it.²

For the first five or six hundred years after the death of St. Mirin absolutely nothing is known of the history of Paisley. Even the history of Strathclyde is obscure, only a point here and there emerging from the darkness, and usually at widely distant intervals. All that need be said here in this connection is that Strathclyde was the last district in Scotland to accept the Roman rite, and the last to be permanently united to the Scottish Crown. This took place in 1124, when David, Prince of Cumbria or Strathclyde, ascended the Scottish throne as David I.

Among the members of David's court none was more devoted or esteemed than Walter Fitz Alan. Walter had come under the notice of David at Oxford and at the siege of Winchester, in 1141, where the Scottish King was actively supporting the cause of his niece, the Empress Maud. Alan, Walter's father, was the son of Flaald, second son of Alan, Dapifer of Dol, in Brittany. A great

² Reg. Glasg., i. 60. Contemporary Lives of Saints are usually brief and unadorned with miracles, and ascribe few, if any, honorific titles. As the day of the saint's death recedes and new editions of his Life are compiled, the number of miracles with which he is credited increases, and the more honourable are the titles he receives. The lateness of the Life of St. Mirin in the Aberdeen Breviary is, therefore, obvious. He is designated Abbot, Bishop, Confessor, but he was simply the last. There is a Kirk Mirin in the parish of Kelton, in Kirkcudbrightshire, a St. Mirin's Chapel in the parish of Kilmaronock, a St. Mirin's Well at Kilsyth, a farm called Knock Murran in the parish of Coylton, and a Murran Burn on the south side of the North Esk.—Kals. Scot. SS., 398.

magnate of the county of Salop and owner of the lordship of Oswestry, Alan Fitz Flaald stood well at the court of Henry I., and in course of time married, not, as has been alleged, the daughter of Warine, Sheriff of the county of Shropshire, but Aveline, daughter of Ernulf de Hesdin, a great Domesday tenant.¹ They had three sons, of whom Walter was the third.² This fact may have helped to determine him to seek his fortune in the North, where so many knights from the South had already found a home and were prospering. Be that as it may, when David was obliged to retrace his steps to Scotland, the Shropshire knight followed or accompanied him. David showed his appreciation of his services by appointing him Hereditary Steward of Scotland and by conferring upon him vast estates, among which were the lands of Renfrew and Paisley.³ Walter stood equally high in the esteem of Malcolm, David's grandson and successor, who, besides confirming to him by charter the gifts of his predecessor, gave him the lands of Inchinnan, Steinton, Hassendean, Legerwood, and Birchinsyde, as much land in Perth as King David had held in his own hand, together with a full toft for his entertainment in every one of his burghs and demesnes throughout his kingdom, and with every toft twenty acres of land. For these princely gifts Walter and his heirs were to render the King and his successors the service of five knights.⁴

Walter lost no time in settling his estates with his followers. He built a castle for himself at Renfrew and a manor house at Blackhall, near Paisley. It is also said that he built a castle at Neilston. Most of Strathgryffe, as the chief part of his Renfrewshire estates was called, he portioned out among his followers, and many of its eminences were soon surmounted by their castles, while the lands around them were brightened by the homes of their retainers and brought under cultivation by the natives, many of whom passed from owner to owner along with the land.

² The others were Jordan Fitz Alan and William Fitz Alan from whom descended Fitz Alan, Earl of Arundel. Simon, "brother" of Walter, occurs as a witness in the Foundation Charter (p. 4), "but his name is very low on the list," as Mr. Round observes, "and he may have been only a uterine, or even a bastard brother."

In Scotland the twelfth century was an age of convent building. During the first half of it no fewer than twenty religious houses were founded. Among them were some of the most magnificent ecclesiastical monuments in the country. More than half of them owed their existence to David I. alone. He was the founder of Jedburgh, Kelso, Melrose, Holyrood, Newbattle, Cambuskenneth, and others of less note. Several were built by his subjects: as, for instance, Kilwinning and Dryburgh by Moreville, the Constable; and Dundrennan, Tunland, and Soulseat, by Fergus, Lord of Galloway. Malcolm was by no means a "a sair sanct for the croun," like David, but he founded the Cistercian Abbey of Cupar in Angus, a nunnery of the same Order at Manuel, in Linlithgow, and a hospital for "pilgrims, travellers, and poor folk" at Soutra, on the borders of Lothian and Lauderdale. These great examples Walter the Steward was not long in following. Less than six years after he had received his charter from Malcolm, and while on a visit with him to Fotheringay Castle¹ in Northamptonshire, he executed the charter which laid the foundation of the Monastery of Paisley.²

According to this he undertook for the soul of King David, etc., and to the honour of God to build a House of Religion according to the Order of the monks of Clugny on his lands at Paisley. He was to have thirteen monks³ from the House of Wenlock in Shropshire for the purpose of starting his monastery, the right of appointing the Prior was to be in his own hands and in the hands of his successors, and, except in the general recognition of the Order, the proposed House at Paisley was to be independent of the House at Wenlock. On the other hand, Humbald, the Prior of Wenlock, with whom the agreement was made, was to procure for the new foundation the recognition of the Cluniac Order, and especially that of the Abbot of Clugny and of the Prior of La Charite.¹ In return for these services he was to receive property in Renfrew and fishing rights on the Clyde, among them that of catching herring.

Humbald experienced no difficulty in fulfilling his part of the agreement. The consent both of Suaricius, Prior of La Charite, and of Stephen, Abbot of Clugny, was cordially given; and the latter, who, as Abbot of Clugny, was the head of the Cluniac Order, in recognition of Walter's generosity, received him into the fraternity, made him partaker of the prayers of the Order, and decreed that if at the time of his death he had not already become one of their monks, the same prayers and offices should be said for him as for one of themselves.

The thirteen monks from Wenlock arrived at Renfrew in 1169, Humbald himself accompanying them. They were received by the High Steward, and lodged on an island called the King's Inch,² at a church dedicated to SS. Mary and James. Here they continued to reside until their new home was ready to receive them. With the consent of Walter, Osbert, one of their number, was appointed Prior, and Humbald, having exchanged the gifts Walter had bestowed upon him in Renfrew for Manwede, in Sussex, returned to Wenlock. Though known as the "Holy Humbald," it is doubtful whether he was altogether without guile.

Founders of Religious Houses, or those by whom they were guided, in the Middle Ages, had a keen eye for the beautiful, and always planted their buildings in situations of great natural beauty. The site chosen by Walter for his monastery at Paisley was excellent. It stood on the edge of a plain, in the centre of his Renfrewshire lands, nearly midway between Neilston and his castle at Renfrew, and not far from his manor house at Blackhall. On two sides it was protected by a tidal river. To the north and east stretched a dense wood through which communication could be had with the Cathedral Church of Glasgow and the Steward's castle at Renfrew. In front were the shelving banks of the White Cart, covered with the virgin forest of Paisley, overtopped on the north-west by the wooded heights of Oakshaw, and stretching away to the south and west to the wood of Stanely and the forest of Fereneze, full of all manner of birds and beasts of the chase. On the south-east was the little village of Paisley, with its mill standing where the Cart falls over a ridge of rock, its village green,¹ and its church and churchyard dedicated to the memory of St. Mirin, while in the background to the south-east were the tree-covered heights of Saucel and Hunter hills and the rising ground at Hawkhead.² Few quieter or more beautiful spots could have been chosen in the district, and none more suitable for the planting of a House which was intended to serve as the centre whence the blessings of civilization and religion were to be spread throughout the Steward's Renfrewshire estates.

² This has given rise to the quite untenable opinion that the Monastery of Paisley was first situated on this island. The place was used merely as a temporary abode.

Though the exact date at which Osbert and his monks left Renfrew and took up their residence in their new abode is not known, it cannot have been later than 1172. What is known as the Endowment Charter of the Monastery was granted somewhere between the years 1165 and 1172; certainly not later than the last mentioned date. And from this we learn that at the time it was drawn up the church of the Monastery, or Priory as it was then, had already been dedicated to SS. James,¹ Mirin, and Milburga,² that services were being carried on daily within it, and that the dormitory of the monks had been built.

The charter referred to was granted by Walter, the High Steward, and founder of the Monastery. It contains a list of the first of the many pious benefactions which afterwards made the Monastery of Paisley one of the richest in the kingdom. Among the donations mentioned are the church and mill of Innerwick, the churches of Legerwood and Cathcart, all the churches of Strathgryffe, with the exception of Inchinnan,³ the carucate of land formerly held by Grimketel, another at Hassendean, a piece of land adjoining the monks' dormitory, a house at Blackhall, an island opposite Walter's castle at Renfrew, certain fishings on the Clyde, the mill at Renfrew, a full toft in Renfrew; the churches of Monkton and Prestwick, with certain lands near the latter; permission to grind corn at the mill of Paisley, a tenth of that mill and of all the mills Walter possessed or might thereafter possess, together with rights of hunting and pasturage, and along with other dignities and liberties, sac,⁴ soc,⁵ them,⁶ and infangtheof.⁷

² The House at Wenlock was dedicated to St. Milburga, or Milburgh, as she is more commonly called. Her day is February 23. She was the grand-daughter of Penda, the Saxon King of Mercia, and was held in great reverence, especially in the south and centre of England. For her story see Butler's Lives of the Saints and Baring-Gould's Lives under February 23rd. The Priory of Wenlock was founded by Roger the great, Earl of Montgomery, upon the site of an older foundation said to have been built by the Saint herself. A descendant of Montgomery was in the train of Walter the Steward, and received from him the lands of Eaglesham.

³ The church at Inchinnan belonged to the Templars.

⁷ Jurisdiction over a thief caught within the limit of the estate to which the right belonged.—Stubbs, Select Charters, 545.

The donations granted by this charter were alienated from the family of the Steward for ever. This was the Catholic usage. On the other hand, "the Columban

Two of the donations mentioned in the charter require to be especially noticed. One is the gift of two carucates of land near the church of Paisley. The church referred to was the original church of St. Mirin, or another built in its place, and previously described as already existing and possessing a parochial territory. This territory there is reason to believe had been assigned to it as far back as the beginning of the century. The other donation is the piece of land which Walter and his son perambulated for the monks, and afterwards caused to be marked out by trusty men from the wood on the other side of the Cart—illam terram ultra Kert ex parte nemoris, etc. From this it is evident that what there then was of the town of Paisley was on the same side of the Cart as the Priory and that the opposite side of the river, which is now covered with streets, was then forest, and uninhabited.¹

It was fortunate for the village of Paisley that the monks chosen by Walter for his Monastery belonged to the Order of Clugny. The Cistercians were then in great favour, and Walter was urged by some to invite them to colonise his Monastery. Had his choice fallen upon them, the result might, and probably would, have been entirely different. The Cistercian monasteries were always self-sufficing; every possible craft was carried on by the monks or their conversi, and as a consequence it often happened that their houses remained in the solitude in which they were built, without a town or village growing up around them. The Benedictines, on the other hand, were, as a rule, not handicraftsmen, and thus when one of their houses was set down in the country, or in the wildest solitude, a town soon grew up around it monasteries were endowed with land which was not alienated from the family which granted it, and the Abbot was always selected from among the blood relations of the founder; the one who was highest in the community was to succeed. It frequently happened, however, that a lay brother succeeded, or even a member of the clan, who had made no monastic profession at all; and thus the lands of the monastery became secularised."—Cunningham, Growth of English Industry and Commerce, 68.

to supply its wants.¹ It has been said that the monks of Paisley gave no encouragement to the growth and prosperity of the village near which they were settled. The probabilities are all the other way; as a matter of fact, indeed, when the foundation of the Monastery took a practical shape, and as a consequence, Paisley began to grow and prosper. The building of the Monastery would occasion an influx of masons and of all manner of artificers. The little village would at first be thrown into a state of excitement, but in a short time it would settle down to the serious work of making provision for its increasing population and for meeting the growing requirements of the Monastery.

After the arrival of the monks, the history of Paisley is for a long time bound up with that of the Monastery. The history of the latter was for a century or more one of rapid growth in wealth and prosperity. Eschina, heiress of Molla and Huntlaw in Roxburghshire, and wife of Walter the Founder, followed the example of her husband, and gave to the Priory a carucate of land and pasture for fifty sheep. The land is admirably defined in the charter, and a touch of pathos is introduced into the dry legal document. After enumerating others for whose sake the donation is made, the wife of the Founder adds, "and for the soul of Margaret my daughter, who is buried in the chapter house of Paisley."²

Alan, the son of Walter and Eschina, was also a liberal benefactor of the Priory. He gave to it the mill of Paisley and a piece of ground for the miller's house, taking as annual rent only four chalders of wheaten flour and four of grain. Five merks of silver, which the convent of Melrose used to pay him for his lands of Maphelim,³ he transferred to the monks of Paisley. He gave them also the lands of Moniabrock with rights of fishing in the loch of Lochwinnoch; also the church of Kingarth, in the Island of Bute, with all the chapels, and "the whole parish of that island, together with the whole of those lands of which the boundaries, said to have been fixed by St. Blane, are still apparent from sea to sea."¹

Alan's son and successor, Walter, was, if anything, more liberal still. Four years after his father's death he gave the Monastery all the lands between the two streams still known as Altpatrick and Espedair, "as Altpatrick falls into Kertlochwinoc and the Espedare falls towards the lands of the monks, lying between the Black Lyn and the Kert of Paisley"; but, a great hunter, like most of the Stewards, he excepted birds and beasts of game, and prescribed penalties for any of the monks' cattle found trespassing within his forests, and especially within the forest of Fereneze. Further, he gave the brethren wood for building and dead wood for fuel from his forests, and pasture for a hundred swine there for one month in time of mast. He also gave them the land between the Maich and the Calder and a piece of land on the east of the mill of Paisley, "to the burn on the south of the Cross of our Lord as that burn rises at the boundaries of the monks and falls into the Cart."² Imitating his grandfather, the first Walter, Walter the Second, as he is named in some of the charters, founded, in 1229, a monastery at Dalmulin, on the north bank of the Ayr, for canons and nuns of the Order of Sempringham,³ and endowed it with lands, mills, fishings, and many churches and chapels in Ayrshire. After remaining in it for about nine years, the canons and nuns quitted the place and returned to the Mother House at Syxle in Yorkshire; whereupon Walter transferred the monastery, with the whole of its endowments, to the monks of Paisley.¹ Dalmulin then became a cell of the Priory, and its great wealth passed into the hands of the Paisley chapter, burdened only with the nominal payment of forty merks yearly to the Master of Sempringham, as head of the Gilbertines, who waived his rights to all the property. This was Walter's last and greatest donation to the Priory.

About 1250, Alexander the High Steward finished enclosing the park for deer which he had begun in his father's time, near to his house on the west of the Espedair,² and, having taken in some of the lands belonging to the monks, he gave them in return land near their chapels of Innerkip and Lochwinnoch. He also gave them permission to draw water from the Espedair for the use of their mill.³

Among the other benefactors of the Priory was Henry de St. Martin, who, with the consent of his overlord, Walter the Steward, bestowed upon it the whole land of Penuld or Fulton in Kilbarchan, and himself entered the convent.⁴

But the most princely of the Priory's benefactors at this time was Maldowen, Earl of Lennox. He bestowed upon the monks the Church of St. Patrick, with all its possessions in the county of Dumbarton—Cochmanach, Edinbernan, Buchan, Finbelach, Cragbrectalech, Dumcreve, etc.⁵ All these, and other donations and possessions, etc., are enumerated in the Transumpt of Clement IV., which, while not professing to be an inventory of all the property of the Priory, proves that within a hundred years after its foundation the monks were in possession of much valuable property in different parts of the country. Among other possessions the

In or about the year 1245, the Priory was raised to the dignity of an Abbey. Humbald had not long been gone from Renfrew, after exchanging his property there for Manwede, when it was discovered that he had either purposely or negligently withheld from the knowledge of Walter the fact that whoever was appointed to rule the new foundation would have no power, according to the rules of the Cluniac Benedictines, to receive regular professions or to admit new members into the brotherhood. This, with other matters which the "Holy Humbald" had neglected or otherwise failed to make known, was felt to be a serious drawback and hurtful to the prosperity of the House. Attempts were made to get the rule relaxed, but the Abbot of Clugny refused to yield. He demanded that the rules requiring reports to be constantly sent from the House at Paisley to Clugny, and obliging every novice to attend personally at the latter place and there make his profession before he could be admitted into the Order, should be strictly observed, and would not in the least abate his prerogatives as head of the Order. Accordingly King Alexander, doubtless prompted by his counsellor the Steward, applied to Pope Honorius III., setting forth the loss the Convent had sustained through the want of an Abbot, and how the monks had not been able to make regular professions, "to the great danger of their souls, the destruction of order and the loss of their property," and asking the authority of his Holiness for the creation of an Abbot. In the year 1219 Honorius appointed a commission to examine into the matter, and empowered the Commissioners, if they thought proper, to allow the monks to proceed to the canonical election of an Abbot in the Monastery. The Commissioners met at Jedburgh,² and summoned the Prior and Convent of Wenlock to appear before them and to state whether they had any objections to the proposed change in the House at Paisley. They failed to appear, but sent letters in which they stated that they had no objections. The Commissioners, therefore, with reservation of the rights of others, decreed that the monks of Paisley might proceed to the election of an Abbot.¹ The High Steward gave his consent, but the Abbot of Clugny had still to be reckoned with. When applied to, he refused to concur in the finding of the Papal Commissioners, and it was not till between the years 1243 and 1258—probably in 1245—that Stephen, the Arch-Abbot, on the solicitation of a number of Scottish bishops, gave his sanction to the change. Nearly a hundred years had to elapse before the Abbot of Paisley obtained the right to wear the mitre and the ring.

The first Abbot was probably William, though it is quite possible that the title was assumed by Roger, his predecessor, as the Head of the House. William proved himself an energetic defender of the privileges and possessions of the Monastery. He resisted with partial success the claim made by the Bishops of Glasgow and St. Andrews to tax the revenues of the churches belonging to the Monastery and to exact from them certain dues in name of "procurations,"² and repelled completely the attempt on the part of Duffgal to wrest from the Abbey the lands which, in 1227, his brother Maldowen, Earl of Lennox, had bestowed upon it.³ Under his energetic rule the prosperity of the Convent was thoroughly established and consolidated. From the Pope he obtained several Bulls which conferred special privileges upon the House. These privileges were afterwards extended and gave power to the Monastery to hold its own against all who might seek to molest it.

The Abbey, and doubtless Paisley itself, shared in the prosperity of the good times of Alexander III. At the battle of Largs, Alexander the High Steward, who, like his ancestors, was a liberal benefactor of the Monastery, was present, and, according to the Norwegian as well as the Scottish accounts, was a gallant and prominent figure. In Bellenden's graphic picture of the fight he is designated "of Pasley," and it is not unlikely that among the men of Strathgryffe who supported him were men from Paisley. "Incontinent," says Bellenden in his rendering of Boece, "Alexander Stewart of Pasley came with ane bachment of freshe men to the middleward, quhair King Alexander was fechtand aganis King Acho with uncertane victory. The Danis seand this Alexander cum, gaiff bakkis, on whome followit the Scottis, with gret cruelte, throu all Cunninghame, and maide ithand slauchter on thaim, quhill the nicht put ane end to all their labor."

During the War of Independence the Abbey took the patriotic side, and steadily adhered to it. Walter the Abbot did indeed, in 1296, sign the Ragman Roll and swear fealty to Edward I., but only because, like many others, he was compelled. From first to last the Abbey was regarded by the English as "rebellious." Elderslie was within the Parish of Paisley, and there can be little doubt that among those who followed Wallace were some who were parishioners of Paisley, and in happier times had worshipped with him in the Parish Church. Wallace was executed 22nd August, 1305; in 1306 Bruce, the friend and ally of the Stewards, began his contest with the power of England; and the fate of Paisley and its Abbey in the following year is told in the Scotichronicon in a single but pregnant sentence—"In this year, viz., 1307, the English burnt the Monastery of Paisley."¹ Only the Monastery is mentioned, but we may be sure that Paisley went with it, and that both town and Abbey were left in ruins. Three years later, on October 15th, Edward II. penetrated with his army as far as Renfrew, burning and wasting the country.² In 1314 came Bannockburn, when

Walter was then but twenty-one, but evidently he knew how to bear himself in the fight.

Meantime the monks had probably been lodging in Glasgow,¹ and attempts, not in all cases unsuccessful, had been made to deprive them of their property. Their estates in Dumbartonshire were again a source of trouble,² but fortunately Robert Wishart, the patriotic Bishop of Glasgow,³ came to their aid and used all the power of his office to protect them. The contest lasted some three or four years, but the times were troublous, and though in 1294 Wishart excommunicated⁴ the assailants of the monks, neither party appears to have obtained a very decided victory, and many years had to pass before the Monastery was made absolutely secure in the gifts of Maldowen.

An incident is said to have happened in 1308 which, if the narrative be true, shows the esteem in which Walter the Abbot of Paisley was held, and that Paisley was visited at the time by some heroic figures. The murder of the Red Comyn before the high altar in the Church of the Franciscan Friars in Dumfries lay heavy upon the conscience of the Bruce. It is said that he was absolved by Wishart, the Bishop of Glasgow, before he assumed the crown, but not satisfied with this, he desired the assurance of forgiveness from the Pope, and sent messengers to obtain it. One of the messengers, it has been conjectured, though probably on insufficient grounds, was the Steward; but whether he was or not, in the year mentioned Cardinal Berengarius, according to the document cited by Fordun, acting with the authority of Pope Clement V., issued a Commission¹ to Walter Abbot of Paisley to absolve "Robert de Bruce, layman of Carrick," and his accomplices, and to appoint them penances proper for their crime. If the penitential ceremony took place, it would in all probability be performed in the Abbey Church, whose walls, still black with the fires lighted by the English, would lend an additional effect to the scene.

³ Wishart, or Wishard, was one of the most notable figures of the time. He did homage to Edward and transgressed it; “he swore fidelity over and over again to the King of England, and as often broke his oath. He kept no faith with Edward. He preached against him; and when occasion offered, he buckled on his armour like a Scotch baron, and fought against him. . . . When Wallace, almost single-handed, set up the standard of revolt against the all powerful Edward, the Bishop of Glasgow immediately joined him. When Robert Bruce, friendless and a fugitive, raised the old war cry of Scotland, the indomitable Bishop supported him. Bruce was proscribed by Edward, and under the anathema of the Church. The Bishop assoilzied him from the sacrilegious slaughter of Comyn, and prepared the robes and royal banner for his coronation.” He was taken prisoner in the castle of Cupar, which he had held against the English, in 1306, and was not liberated till after Bannockburn, when he had become blind. He survived his liberation two years, and died in November 1316.—C. Innes, Reg. Ep. Glas., I., xxxv.

On the 16th of July in the following year, James the Steward died. He was the staunch friend of Bruce, and, if the conjecture alluded to above be correct, his powerful advocate with the Pope. Like a number of his ancestors, he is said to have been buried in the Monastery of Paisley. Seven years later, or two years after Bannockburn, his son Walter, who had distinguished himself in that famous fight, buried his young wife Marjory, daughter of the Bruce, and commonly known as "Queen Blear-Eye," in the same place. According to tradition, her death was due to an accident she met with while hunting at the Knock, a small rising ground midway between Paisley and Renfrew. Until a few years ago, the spot upon which the accident is said to have occurred, was marked by an octagonal stone column resting upon a solid pedestal, also eight-sided, known as "Queen Blearie's Cross." In the Abbey, Walter caused a "faire monument" to be erected to her memory. From the Register we learn that he also caused prayers to be said for the repose of her soul, and that inspired by love, and for the salvation of his own soul and the soul of Marjory his wife, and for the salvation of his ancestors and of all the faithful departed, he gave to the Abbey of Paisley the Church of Largs, in Ayrshire, with all its tithes and properties. The donation, however, was not to take effect until the death or resignation of Sir William de Lyndsay, the rector of the benefice. On his promotion to be Archdeacon of St. Andrews Sir William resigned the Church at Largs, 3rd February, 1318, when the Chapter of the Cathedral, the See of Glasgow being then vacant, before putting the monks in full possession of the Church, bound them over to place in it a vicar with a yearly stipend of seventeen merks sterling, six acres of land and four wains of hay, to pay the procurations of the bishop and to provide wax for the lights of the Church.¹ In 1318, Walter was appointed Governor of Berwick, and eight years after was buried by the side of his wife Marjory. In his quaint way, Barbour tells how he was mourned.

Robert, the son of Walter and Marjory, was the first of the Stuart Kings.

When the Abbot and Convent, after the defeat of Edward II., set themselves to restore the dilapidated fortunes of the Abbey, and to reinstate it in its former prosperity, they met with much sympathy. Abbot Walter had been succeeded by Abbot Roger, and Abbot John had succeeded Abbot Roger shortly before the death of the Bruce. In 1327, Brother Andrew, "Minister of Argyll," as he called himself, commiserating the common table of the monks, and in answer to their earnest request, gave to Abbot John and his brethren, with the consent of his chapter, the rectorial tithes and dues of three churches in his diocese, viz., Kilfinan, Kilkeran, and Kilcolmanel.¹ About the same time the Bishop of Glasgow, in consideration of the great damage which the Monastery had sustained during the dreadful war (diram guerram) which had so long continued between the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, confirmed and conceded to it the Church of Largs and the chapel of Cumbrae, with all their dues, both great and small. He did more. He relieved the monks from the charges with which the gift had formerly been burdened,² his own fees excepted, and allowed them to hold the Church without presenting a vicar, provided they served the Church by priests placed and removable at their pleasure.¹ Earl Malcolm of Lennox also came to their aid. Once for all, in 1330, he secured the Monastery against any further litigation or trouble in connection with its Dumbartonshire possessions by confirming them inalienably to the Monastery and giving the Abbot and Convent power to have courts of life and members, and escheat at the death of a man, in all their Dumbartonshire lands. He provided, however, that when any were condemned to death, they should pay the penalty at his own gallows of Lennox.² From the Pope also came a mark of sympathy, which would cheer the monks not a little. John, the Abbot, sent a petition to Benedict XII., begging that the honour of wearing the mitre and the ring might be conferred upon him and his successors, and in 1334 a Bull was issued at Avignon, where Benedict was then residing, granting the Abbot permission to wear the insignia desired, and to bestow the accustomed benediction after Masses, Vespers, and Matins in his Monastery and in all priories and other places subject thereto, as also in parochial and other churches under his jurisdiction, provided that no Bishop or Legate of the Apostolic See was present.³

But by this time war had broken out again. Edward Balliol had been crowned in 1332, and the disastrous battle of Halidon Hill had been fought. On that unhappy field the Steward, though but a boy of sixteen or seventeen, had led one of the divisions of the Scottish army. His estates in Renfrewshire had been given to David Hastings, Earl of Atholl; and at Christmas in the year that Abbot John received his much coveted honours from Avignon,

Edward Balliol was holding high court and festival in the Steward's castle at Renfrew. For twenty-three years the country had again to endure the miseries of war. The Steward, after an attempt to regain his Renfrewshire lands, took refuge in Bute. Thence he passed by night to Dumbarton Castle, where he collected what forces he could, and, joined by Campbell of Lochow, stormed Dunoon Castle. Then crossing the Clyde, he regained for the King Annandale and the lower part of Clydesdale, Cunningham, Carrick, and Renfrew, and though but twenty years of age, was rewarded by being appointed joint-Regent of the Kingdom, first with Randolph, and after his capture by the English, with Sir Andrew Moray. On the death of the latter in 1338, he became sole Regent. For three years he ruled the country for David II., and, in 1341, on the King's return from France, resigned his office. At the unfortunate battle of Neville's Cross, though his was the last division¹ of the Scottish army that remained intact, with the exception of the King's, his enemies did not scruple to say that he failed in his duty. During the King's captivity he was again Regent, and again honourably preserved the Kingdom. After his return, the King, who accepted the statements of the Steward's enemies, and was not without feelings of jealousy towards him, made several attempts to change the succession, and in 1369 threw him and his son into Lochleven Castle; but in 1370, in spite of the intrigues of his enemies, the Steward ascended the throne as Robert II.

The Abbey in the meantime had not been without its troubles. In 1336, Edward III. seized the fruits of the Church of Legerwood "on account of the rebellion of the Abbot of Paisley."² Five years after the newly acquired mitre had descended to Abbot James, who succeeded Abbot John, the Monastery became involved in a controversy with "Lord Martin," the successor of the "Brother Andrew," who had styled himself "Minister of the Church of Argyll." Under the pretext that the churches of Kilkeran, Kilfinan, and Kilcolmanel were in need of repairs, Lord Martin seized the revenues which Bishop Andrew had made over to the Convent for the supply of their table and to help them in their adversity. Both sides fought tenaciously, and it was only after a bitter conflict of ten years that the Abbey obtained its own.¹

With the accession of Robert II. a new era began in the history of the Abbey. No great endowments like those which marked its early days flowed in to enrich it, but the property it possessed was well husbanded and carefully consolidated. The Sempringham pension, which for more than a century had been a serious grievance, was finally settled, though not before Sir William More of Abercorne, to whom it had been transferred by the Master of Sempringham, had plundered the lands of the Monastery and invaded its sacred precincts, breaking doors and windows, striking the men and servants of the Abbey, and wounding a man in the village of Paisley.²

In 1384, John de Lithgow became Abbot, and ruled in the Monastery for at least fifty years. Under him the restoration of the monastic buildings went on apace.³ A vigorous ruler, and jealous of his rights, he defended the privileges of his House and Order against the pretensions of the Bishop of Glasgow, and severely punished John of Auchinleck for attacking and brutally wounding one of his monks. Under him, too, the Monastery received the last of its endowments. This was bestowed upon it in 1403 by Sir Hugh Walas, a descendant of the patriot, and one of the King's esquires, who, "for the salvation of Robert, King of Scots, of good memory, deceased, and the souls of his ancestors, and for the salvation of our Lord the King,⁴ and of all his successors, and for the salvation of the donator's own soul, and all his ancestors and successors, with the consent and assent of William Walas, his brother, gave for the glory of God, the Virgin, SS. Mirin and James of Paisley, and for the monks there, the ten merk land of Thornle, lying within the Barony of Renfrew and the Sheriffdom of Lanark."¹ A few small endowments had been received shortly before, but this ten merk land of Thornley, which closed the record, was the richest that had been received for many years.

Neither Robert II. nor Robert III. conferred upon the House with which their family was so closely identified, any considerable endowments, probably for the sufficient reason that they had none to give. But, if they did not show their favour towards it in this way, they did in others. Robert II. frequently interposed in its behalf, while his son and successor conferred upon it two charters of great importance.

By the first he erected all the lands of the Monastery situated in the counties of Renfrew, Ayr, Roxburgh, and Peebles into a free barony of regality.² This was in 1396. Fifteen years before, Robert II. had done the same for the lands of the Abbey in Dumbartonshire.³ The donation of regality was about the highest gift the Sovereign could bestow upon a subject. To adopt the language of Cosmo Innes, "it took as much out of the Crown as the Sovereign could give. It was, in fact, investing the grantee in the sovereignty of the territory, and it raised up those formidable jurisdictions which too often set the Crown at defiance."⁴ The only return that had to be made for the grant in this case was the prayers of the monks and their successors in all time coming for the King and his heirs. In the case of the Dumbartonshire regality, there was an annual charge of five chalders of oatmeal for the watchmen of the Castle of Dumbarton.⁵

Three classes of individuals are mentioned in the charter as dwelling upon the lands of the Monastery—tenants (tenentes), bondmen (bondi), and natives and their followers (nativi et eorum) sequelae). The tenants were evidently freemen holding lands under the Monastery, and paying in return rent and "certain duly stipulated and recorded services, such as sheep-shearing, harvest-work, and cartage." The bondi and nativi were unfree, but to distinguish between them is not easy. That the bondmen differed from the natives or neyfs, seems to be evident; but how, or to what extent, is not exactly known. The name of the latter, as used both in Scotland and in England, points to the fact that they were regarded as descendants of the original inhabitants who had been reduced to slavery by invaders. Two classes are distinguished among them—neyfs in gross, and neyfs regardant. The first were "out and out slaves"; the second were astricted to a certain land. Both were born slaves; so were their children (sequelae), and on large estates stud-books were kept showing their pedigrees for generations. Various means were used to prevent their escape from thralldom, but if a slave entered the Church or acquired a borrowage in a royal burgh and lived upon it a year and a day without challenge from his lord, he was free. The neyf in gross might be transferred from one owner and place to another; but the neyf regardant, while he might change owners with the land on which he lived, could not be removed to another estate, even though the estate belonged to the same lord. It is doubtful whether even the neyf in gross could be sold, except in cases of necessity.¹ A neyf or native might become a tenant, or he might act as his lord's bailiff.² The bondi or bondmen may have been men who, though born free, had been reduced to slavery through being unable to meet their debts, or to pay the fines by which a breach of the peace was redeemed, or they may have been broken men who had sold themselves and their families into slavery in order to avoid starvation.³ They could farm lands apparently on their own account, and could be transferred with the land to a new owner.¹ Another class mentioned in some of the charters were the Abbot's men. These were men who, whether they held land from him or not, recognised the Abbot as their lord.

By his second charter, Robert III. did all he could to secure the Convent in the peaceable enjoyment of its possessions. First, he took the Abbot and monks, their men, and all their possessions under his own firm peace and protection, so that any hurt or injury done to them became an act done against the Crown. Secondly, he prohibited any one from distraining the goods of either the monks or their men, except for their own personal debts or obligations.² And thirdly, he enjoined all justiciaries, provosts, and bailies to compel the debtors of the monks or their men to pay, without delay, the just debts they owed to them.

The name of Robert's successor, James I., occurs only once in the Register of the Abbey. It appears there in connection with a dispute between the Convent and a certain Godfrey Nisbet regarding the lands of Achinhoss in the Barony of Renfrew. The King in Council heard both parties in the month of December in the year of his return from the long captivity he had endured in England, when Nisbet, "moved by his conscience," fell from his pleas, and judgment was recorded in favour of the Abbot.³ But in the Monastery itself the name of James I. was known in another way. The evils St. Bernard of Clairvaux had complained of as prevailing in his own day among the monks of Clugny, had by this time spread among the Cluniac brotherhood in Scotland, and in 1424 the King took the extraordinary step of addressing a letter to the Benedictine monasteries and to those of the Augustine Order, which seem to have been in a similar case, exhorting them "in the bowels of the Lord Jesus Christ to shake off their torpor and sloth, and to set themselves to work to restore their fallen discipline and to rekindle their decaying fervour so that they might save their houses from the ruin that threatened them.”¹

The monks of Paisley were not without need of this royal exhortation and warning. The Abbot at the time was Lithgow, who, being now an old man, had for his coadjutor William de Cheshelme. Before he was made Abbot, Cheshelme had acted vigorously in defence of the Monastery, particularly in resisting the demands of the vicars who served its churches for an increase of their stipends. To some of them the Convent had been in the habit of giving doles over and above what it legally owed them, and the Chapter authorised Cheshelme to try and induce them to be contented with their bare legal stipends, and, in the event of his succeeding, gave him leave to keep what had been paid in excess for his own use, in return for his trouble and expense in negotiating the business, any statutes and customs of their Order to the contrary notwithstanding. This was quite at variance with their vows and the customs and statutes of their Order, yet in 1388 they boldly and shamelessly set this whole business down in their grant to Cheshelme, and affixed the seal of the Chapter to it.² How long Cheshelme continued to be the ruling spirit of the House is not known, but there can be little doubt that at this time the condition of affairs in the monastery was such as to justify the statement of the old Chronicler that the place was “out of all gude rewle.”³

After Cheshelme, Lithgow had for his coadjutor Thomas Morwe. He is first heard of in 1418, when he received from Henry V. of England a safe conduct for himself and six companions to visit the King's brother, John Duke of Bedford. The passport was to last from 6th July to 3rd August.⁴ On the death of John de Lithgow, in 1440, Morwe was still Abbot. Four years later he was succeeded by Richard de Bodwell.

The next year, 1445, Thomas de Tervas, a monk of Arbroath, was appointed Abbot, and for fourteen years proved himself one of the most capable and best Abbots the Monastery ever had. He stood high in the favour of James II., who, in 1451, granted him a new charter of regality.¹ In this he confirmed the former charters of regality, formed the whole lands of the monastery into a barony to be called the Barony of Paisley, and in connection with the regality in Dumbartonshire granted the four points of the Crown, which had hitherto been reserved.² In the same year he gave to the Abbot a charter of replegiation.³ This enabled the Abbot of the Monastery, in the event of any of his tenants or rentallers or men being indicted, attached, or arrested for any crimes or transgressions in the royal courts of justice, to demand that they should be given up to him to be tried before the courts of the Monastery, which courts the Abbot was authorised to hold, and also to levy fines and inflict punishments in them. It is expressly laid down, however, that the Courts were to be held at the close of the Chamberlain's Court, that the Chamberlain or his deputy was to be summoned to assist as assessor, and that the prisoners were to be tried by an assize or jury of the King's burgesses. The fines levied the Abbot was authorised to retain and use for the repair and restoration of the fabric of the Monastery, "because," as the charter bears, "of the great merits of the said Thomas and of the reformation of the said Monastery made by him." For the same reasons, James gave to the Abbot another, and as it seems in the present, a very curious and dubious privilege—the privilege, namely, of holding in all time coming a tavern and selling wine within the gates of the Monastery. At the time, a tavern could not be held and wine could not be sold outside a burgh, except in a town or village that had a knight for its lord.¹ The privilege, therefore, was one at least of considerable distinction, and probably of considerable profit, though of scarcely so much as has been imagined. The ordinary drink of the time was beer,² and the population was insufficient to create much of a demand for the dearer beverage. As for holding a tavern, it was no unusual thing for Monasteries to serve as hostelries. Most of them were not far from the great high ways, and most, if not all, of them had their guest-houses, and at a time when hotels were non-existent and inns were rarely to be found outside the towns, travellers were glad to accept the hospitality of the monks, and to pay for it.³

Abbot Tervas finished the triforium and clerestory of the Abbey Church. He finished also the roof, built a great part of the steeple, and erected the gate-house, which is said to have been of a stately character.⁴ In 1453, he set out for Rome to visit the shrines of the Apostles. Three years later he was present in Parliament, and died 29th June, 1459. When he returned from Rome, Tervas brought with him many sumptuous furnishings for the Abbey Church, which, together with his character and work, are quaintly described by the Chronieler in the following : " The quhilk [Abbot] was ane richt gude man, and helplyk to the place of ony that ever was, for he did mony notable thingis, and held ane nobil hous, and wes ay well purvait. He fand the place al out of gude reule, and destitute of leving, and all the kirkis in lordis handis, and the kirk unbiggit. On the death of Thomas de Tervas, the revenues of the Monastery were seized by Pope Pius II., who appointed Henry Crichton, a monk of Dumfermline, Commendator. Crichton was directed, under pain of excommunication, to pay a pension of 300 gold florins out of the revenues to Cardinal Pietro Barlo of St. Mark's, Venice, and to account to Rome for his intromissions with the rest of the revenues. For a time Crichton appears to have done this ; but after he had got fairly settled in the Abbey he declined to pay the pension, and was excommunicated and deposed, when Patrick, Bishop of St. Andrews, was appointed by Pope Paul II. to exercise in commendam sole jurisdiction over the Abbey as long as he lived. In 1469, however, Crichton had made his peace with Rome, and was raised to the full dignity of Abbot of Paisley. He proved an energetic and skilful ruler. Among other good works he had new copies of the Abbey's charters made, took in hand the careful management of the Abbey lands, kept an excellent Rental-Book,¹ and got his way with Lawmund of Lawmund, a pugnacious Highland chief who had given the Abbey much trouble, in connection with the church of Kilfinan in Argyllshire.² Like his predecessors, Abbot Crichton sat in Parliament, and was often employed in affairs of State. The roof of the Abbey Church, which Abbot Tervas had only "theekit with sclats," he covered with lead brought from the Castle of Bute, and given for the purpose by the King. Another token he received of the King's favour was his promotion to be Abbot of Dumfermline in 1473.

This event, together with the King's appointment of his successor to Paisley, caused a great stir throughout the kingdom. Legally the appointment of Abbots was in the hands of their own Houses, and their election by them had always been jealously, though often ineffectually, guarded. In October, 1462, an Act had been passed by the Scottish Parliament declaring any nomination to an Abbey or a Cathedral, even by the Pope, invalid, and asserting the right of the monks and clergy to elect their own dignitaries.³ By the appointment of these two Abbots, the King was himself the first to violate the Act. Fortunately for Paisley, this arbitrary and self-contradictory act on the part of the Crown turned out to its great advantage. The individual appointed was not even a Benedictine. He was a parish priest, George Schaw, Rector of the Church of Minto, in Roxburghshire. A man of learning, sound sense, and great ability, he did honour to his appointment, and proved himself the most illustrious of the Abbots of Paisley. His father was Hereditary Keeper of Stirling Castle, and played a prominent part in the politics of the time. Shaw himself, immediately after his appointment to the Abbey, was entrusted by James III. with the education of his second son, the Duke of Ross, and appears to have discharged his duties as the Prince's tutor and governor with skill and fidelity.

James IV., immediately on his accession, conferred upon the Abbot and Convent a new Charter of Regality, alledging as his reason the great favour and love he had for Abbot George Schaw, "our chief counsellor," for the faithful service he had rendered in the past, and especially in the virtuous education and upbringing of his brother, James, the Duke of Ross.¹ In this Charter the King confirms to the Monastery all its gifts, immunities, privileges, and regalities, received from "Walter and Walter Stewart, Stewards of Scotland, from Malcolm and Malcolm, Earls of Lennox," from all his own ancestors, and from many others. To the Abbot is confirmed the right to hold courts for the trial of offences committed by his own tenants, to repledge them when indicted before the royal courts, and to try offences committed by others within his own regality. The four points of the Crown—"rapine, rape, murder, and arson"—are specially granted, and power is given to punish both those who steal green wood and those who catch or kill "le reidfish," i.e., salmon, during the close or prohibited time. The power conferred upon the Abbot was great. Within his own regality, he was little short of a sovereign prince. He had his bailie and his officers; his courts and his prisons; he could levy fines and inflict punishments; and he had his pit and gallows, the one for drowning women who were doomed to death, and the other for the execution of men.

Meantime, for a period of close on three hundred years, the town of Paisley had been completely overshadowed by the Monastery, and very little is known of its history. In 1487, however, it suddenly appears in the Law Courts. All we have to go by is a letter from the King directed "to oure justices on the Southalf the watter of Forth;"² but reading between the lines one has no difficulty in making out the situation. With the prosperity of the Abbey and the restoration of its buildings, the town had grown in extent and population. Part of the Abbey lands on the west of the Cart had been cleared and brought under cultivation. The monks had their mill on the Espedair;¹ a little to the north of it was the Abbot's Orchard, and west by north, again, was the Prior's Croft. Here and there, too, in the immediate neighbourhood, and on both sides of the Cart, the land, which had once been virgin forest, was dotted over with the houses of farmers and cottars, the Abbey's tenants. From the admirably kept Rental Book of Abbot Crichton we learn that Ferguslie was let to Widow Matilda de Craig, Meikleriggs to William Bully and Thomas Robert, Bredilands to Robert Hale, Carriagehill to William Henryson, Todholm to Thomas Love and John Slater, Thornley to the Lord of Hawkhead, Castlehead to Thomas Mathie, Causeyend to John Dule, Oakshawside, or Oxschawside as it is called, to William White, Thomas Shields, and Arthur Small, the Prior's Croft to Thomas Shields, William White and John Denby, Sclatarisbank, or Caversbank, to Percival Steel, Durschatside to Thomas Wilson, Greenlaw to Thomas Rae Love, Le Snawdon, or the lands of Sneddon, to Nigel Luffy, part of Seedhill to Christina de Moray, Lylesland to Thomas Love, the Bornyarde, now School Wynd, to Thomas Shea, Over and Nether Gallowhill to John Bull, Jack's Yard to Robert Smith or "Smytth," and Nether Crossflat to Robert Slater. Other places in the vicinity are also mentioned. On the west of the Cart "Mos Raw" was then in existence, so also were Brigend, St. Mirren's Wynd, the High Street, and Bladoyaird. Across the Cart was the Seedhill, with its village green, and adjoining it was Crossflat, where, among other feuars, were Sir John Vane, Sir William Wilson, Lord Hawkhead, Dr. Gilchrist, and Robert Semple. Emma Logan had her house "next to Causeyside." The district around the Monastery, in short, had become what for the times might be called a populous place, while the presence of the Monastery and its increasing reputation as a resort for pilgrims were rapidly making Paisley a place of importance.

However gratifying all this might be to the Abbot and his Convent, to the neighbouring towns it was a cause of jealousy. All of them, with one exception,¹ were Royal Burghs enjoying numerous rights and privileges and possessed of considerable power. Close at hand was the Royal Burgh of Renfrew. To the east was the ancient Royal Burgh of Rutherglen. To the west were the Royal Burghs of Ayr and Irvine; while close to the Lennox part of the regality of the Monastery was the Royal Burgh of Dumbarton. Though often quarrelling among themselves as to their individual privileges, in respect to their common rights, they were all thoroughly united and quite prepared to use their power to assert or defend them. Chief among these burghs, so far at least as Paisley was concerned, was Renfrew. It had been made a royal burgh by Robert III. in 1396,² the year in which he had granted a Charter of Regality to the Monastery of Paisley. It could claim, however, to have been a royal burgh as early as the time of David I.³ At any rate it had always been the head burgh of the Barony of Renfrew. By the charter of Robert III. it had the right to collect the petty tolls and customs both within the burgh and throughout the barony. The charter also declares that no markets were to be held in the barony except within the burgh. As the Monastery of Paisley apparently stood within the barony, the magistrates of Renfrew had thus, as they believed, the right to levy toll and custom upon all the Abbot's men and tenants who lived within the boundaries of the barony. Whether the possession of a Charter of Regality barred this, was a point they did not stop to consider. For a century the magistrates of Renfrew had exercised what they believed to be their undoubted right,

A reminiscence of the siege of Duchal occurs in the Lord High Treasurer's Accounts, where the following entry occurs: "Item, to the Larde of Hillus to ga to Payslay to get werkmen with spaidis and schwillis, July 22, 1489."¹ Two years later, in the dark days of November, 1491, the King was again in Paisley. The death of his father was still weighing heavy upon his heart. At his own instance and at the instance of those who had been concerned in the crime, a petition had been sent to the Pope, and in reply to it, Innocent VIII. had issued a Bull authorising the Abbots of Paisley and Jedburgh and the Chancellor of Glasgow Cathedral to restore him and his co-petitioners to the communion of the Church; and the King now came to be absolved and to make his peace with the Church, and, if possible, with himself.² What penances were appointed him is not known. He had then been to Whithorn on a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Ninian.

Like the other great abbots, Abbot Shaw was a great builder, and did much to improve the Monastery and its surroundings. He built a refectory and other conventual buildings and surmounted the principal gateway with a lofty tower. The church, the precincts of the convent, the gardens and a small deer park, he enclosed with a wall about a mile in length, of excellent workmanship and adorned along its summit with statues, and on the north side with three shields. The shield in the centre bore the royal arms, that on the right the arms of the Stewards, and the other the arms of the Abbot himself. At the angles of the wall were curiously wrought niches, in one of which was a statue of St. James the Apostle, and in another an image of the Virgin. Underneath the latter was carved:—

Hæc ne vade nisi dixeris Ave Maria :
Sic semper sine via, qui non tibi dicet Ave.³

¹ Accounts of Lord High Treasurer, i. 116.

² Ibid., i. 183.

³ "Go not this way unless you have said Ave Maria: let him be always a wanderer who will not say Ave to Thee."

When King James visited the Abbey in 1491, building operations were going on, and he appears to have gone round inspecting them. At any rate he gave the men who were engaged upon them drink-money; for in the Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer appears this entry: "Item, 21st Novembris, to the masonis of Pasla, . . . x s."

Three years before this, however, in 1488, some months after he had arranged with the burgesses of Renfrew as to their mutual boundaries, and on the very day he received from James IV. the new Charter of Regality, George Shaw had received from the King a charter of a different kind. This was nothing less than a charter erecting the town or village of Paisley—villam de Pasleto—into a Free Burgh of Barony.¹ The charter runs upon the same narrative as that of the Regality, and besides erecting the town into a Free Burgh of Barony, grants to its inhabitants full and free liberty to buy and sell within the Burgh, wholesale and retail, wine, wax, woollen and linen cloths, and all other merchandise coming to the town, with liberty to have bakers, brewers and butchers, and men of the other crafts, also to have a Market Cross and to hold a market every Monday and two fairs every year, one on St. Mirin's day, and the other on the day of St. Marnock; but

Writing of the wall a hundred years later, Bishop Leslie describes it as "a verie magnifike wal, al hail with four square stane . . . abone a myle garte, stiking and standeing out verie fair images and verie mony of thame."—Hist. of Scotland, i. 15. Lauder writes: "The wals of the yard may almost passe for a miracle because of their curious workmanship and extent."—Journal, p. 184.

On the wall at the Walneuk was a tablet with the following inscription:—

Tha callit the Abbot Georg of Schaw,
 About this abbay gart make this waw;
 A thousande four hundereth zheyr,
 Auchty ande fywe, the date but veir.
 [Pray for his saulis salvacioun]

the right of choosing the Provost, Bailies, Town Councillors, and other officers of the Burgh is given to the Abbot and his successors, who if they deem it expedient may remove any of them during their term of office, and appoint others in their place without any other election of the burgesses or community. It is specially provided, too, that the rights and privileges are to be the same and to be enjoyed under the same conditions as those of the burghs of Dunfermline, Newburgh, and Arbroath.¹

This charter could not, of course, come into operation all at once. The formal sanction of the Abbot and Convent was required; permission had to be obtained from the Pope to feu the land, and several other preliminaries had to be arranged. Doubtless the Abbot had long had the matter before him, and for some time had been preparing for it. As early as 1483 he had applied to the Pope for permission to feu the Monastery lands,² and doubtless his arrangement with Renfrew respecting the boundaries, in 1488, was part of the same purpose.³ The Pope referred the question of feuing to two commissioners—John Crichton, Precentor of Glasgow Cathedral, and Walter Abernethy, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Dumbarton—whom he authorised, in the event of their being satisfied that it would be to the advantage of the Monastery, to grant the desired permission. The Commissioners met within the Abbey on the 10th November, 1488, about three months after the charter had been obtained, and decided in terms of the request.⁴ When the King came to the Abbey in July, 1489, Abbot Shaw would be busy making the arrangements necessary for giving effect to the Charter of Erection, and on the 2nd of July, 1490, he issued his Charter by which Paisley became a free Burgh of Barony.⁵

The Charter, it will be observed, defines the boundaries of the burgh, lets certain lands to the Provost, Bailies, burgesses, and community, assigns common lands for common pasture, grants the right of winning peat, stone, and coal, recites the privileges and liberties enumerated in the King's Charter, defines the government of the Burgh, also in terms of the King's Charter, prescribes the oaths to be taken by burgesses and stallingers, viz., to the King, to the Stewards of Scotland, and to the Abbot and Convent, and requires all the inhabitants of the burgh to carry what grain they have for grinding to the mill of the Monastery, and to no other. The Abbot and Convent obviously dealt as liberally with their new burgh as was in their power.

The 2nd of July, 1490, was unquestionably a great day for Paisley, the greatest, indeed, in its history. But it would be a mistake to suppose that because the Town had been erected into a burgh by a Royal Charter, it had been placed in the front rank of the burghs of Scotland, or that its burgesses were put in possession of all the rights and privileges that were then possible to burgesses in Scotland. It was not a royal burgh, and between a burgh of barony, which was all that Paisley was made, and a royal burgh, there was a considerable difference. Royal burghs were represented in Parliament and in the Convention of Royal Burghs; burghs of barony, as a rule, were not. Burgesses in a royal burgh held of the King, and were the King's men; the burgesses of Paisley were tenants of the Monastery, and were the Abbot's men. Possession of a borrowage in a King's burgh and residence upon it for a year and a day, unchallenged by his lord or his lord's bailiff, made a slave free for ever; the possession of a feu in a burgh of barony with residence upon it for any length of time, had no such effect. In a royal burgh the burgesses had the absolute right of electing their own provost and

The other has apparently been lost. Its discovery would settle the somewhat vexed question as to what are really the arms of the burgh. For those at present in use, see the Marquess of Bute's Arms of the Royal and Parliamentary Burghs of Scotland, 306.

magistrates without the intervention of any one; in Paisley the elections might be vetoed by the Abbot, and the Provost, Bailies and Town Councillors might be stripped of their offices and others appointed in their places at the will of the Abbot. To many royal burghs large districts were assigned, over which they had an exclusive right to trade and levy toll and custom. The right of Renfrew was said to extend over the whole of the Barony of Renfrew. Rutherglen, at one time, had the right to levy toll and custom over a district which comprehended the city of Glasgow and, until prohibited by a royal decree, was in the habit of levying them up to the gates of the Cathedral. Perth had the exclusive privilege of certain trades throughout the whole of Perthshire. The monopoly of Inverkeithing extended over a territory which included the burghs of Kinross, Burntisland, Kinghorn, Kirkcaldy, and Dysart.¹ But the town of Paisley, though it was to have its market cross and weekly market, and was a free burgh of barony, could trade and levy toll and custom only within its own boundaries. Most royal burghs, again, had the right to have a merchant gild and crafts; but in the charter of Paisley no mention is made of a gild.²

One privilege which Paisley had in common with royal burghs was of great importance, and that was the privilege of holding two yearly fairs. Scottish mediæval fairs have been described as perfect saturnalia. To some extent they were. All the same they were of great value. At the fairs the towns privileged to hold them were thrown open to traders from all quarters. In many places those attending and leaving them were protected by the King's peace; and whoever attended them were sure to be welcomed. Extensive preparations were made to receive them, and while the fair lasted goods and merchandise from France, Flanders, Germany, England, and Ireland, as well as from other parts of Scotland, might be seen exposed for sale upon the streets or in booths erected for the purpose. Chapmen and packmen, whose interest it was to attend such gatherings, were there in considerable numbers. Jugglers, acrobats, mountebanks, and charlatans of all kinds drove their trade; friars and monks were here and there to be met with in the crowds; frequently there were scenes of revelry. Special Courts—Courts of Dustyfoot, or Piepowder—were held for the speedy trial of offenders against the laws of the fair or against the King's peace, and in royal burghs no slave could be arrested so long as the peace of the fair lasted. By means of these fairs, indeed, the greater part of the internal trade of the country was carried on.¹

² There is no mention either of Crafts or Trade Associations. In the royal burghs both the Gilds and the Crafts were important factors. Their relations to each other and to the burghal authorities often occupied the attention of Parliament, and in the town-life of the Middle Ages they played an important part.

The first Bailies were Alan Stewart and John Whiteford. When they and the Town Council and officials of the new burgh were appointed is not precisely known; but if it is not certain, it is not at all unlikely that they were appointed either on or immediately after the 2nd of July, 1490. With so methodical a man of business as George Shaw at their head, it may safely be assumed that they were appointed at the earliest moment, and that when they met for the transaction of public business in the Heyt House, which the Abbot had recently presented to the town to be used as a Tolbooth, a careful record was kept of their proceedings. The earliest record now extant is dated 10th September, 1594; but from an entry in the Town Council Records under date 8th April, 1606, it appears that there were then in existence records of the proceedings of the Head Courts going back to 25th February, 1507. This was only seventeen years after the erection of the burgh, and taking into consideration the habits and customs of the times, and the ease with which skilled clerical assistance could be obtained from the Monastery, it may safely be assumed that records were kept from the beginning.

As might be expected, no sooner had the inhabitants of the new burgh obtained permission to have a Market Cross than they began to set about its erection. But they were soon to learn that their enjoyment of the rights and privileges of which their "Merket Croce" was the symbol, was not to be undisputed. Jealous eyes were upon them. The burgesses of Renfrew, though satisfied with respect to the marches, looked upon the erection of Paisley into a burgh with feelings decidedly hostile. They regarded the erection as an encroachment upon their own rights and privileges. For a hundred years, even though the lands of Paisley had been erected into a regality, they had levied toll and custom throughout the whole of the barony of Renfrew. Their right to do so had never been challenged; but the erection of the Market Cross in Paisley was a distinct challenge of their right, and if markets were allowed to be held around it, they would inevitably prove injurious to the markets at Renfrew and deprive them of an increasing amount of revenue.

All the Scottish burghs, whether royal or otherwise, were intensely tenacious of their privileges, and were well known to be extremely unwilling to admit any new aspirants into their number. It was on this account, and probably in consequence of what was reported to him as being contemplated, or at any rate in order to protect the new burgh from the jealousy of the neighbouring burghs, that James IV., towards the end of the year in which he had granted the Charter of Erection to Abbot Shaw, issued a Precept under the Privy Seal,¹ warning the burghs of Ayr, Irvine, Renfrew, Dumbarton, Rutherglen, and Glasgow,² against molesting the burgh of Paisley, under pain of his highest displeasure.

² The inclusion of Glasgow among the burghs is remarkable. It was itself in perpetual conflict with the royal burghs in the neighbourhood, and one would have thought that it at least would have been friendly to the new burgh and in no need of the warning.

The Precept does not appear to have had the desired effect. The town had scarcely been erected into a burgh when the men of Renfrew and others, possibly freemen and burgesses from other burghs, stole into Paisley "under silence of night" and destroyed the stones and "hewin werk" that were being prepared for the "merket croce."¹ The Abbot was indignant, and the King coming soon after to the Abbey, a complaint was laid before him concerning the outrage, and upon the 23rd of December, 1490, he addressed a letter to the Earl of Lennox and his son, Lord Darnley, directing them to make public proclamation at the Market Cross of Renfrew, and other "needful" places, of the liberties and privileges granted to the town of Paisley, and forbidding any one to impede or hinder the town in the full and free enjoyment of them. The Earl and his son were also instructed to search for those who had taken part in the attack upon the town, and in the event of their apprehension to punish them with "al rigour in exemple" to others.²

The result of the search, if any took place, or whether any apprehensions were made, is not known. Probably neither the Earl of Lennox nor his son was particularly anxious to make any. But be that as it may, royal precept, letter, and proclamation were of no avail. The men of Renfrew were still of opinion that they were legally entitled to levy toll and custom on all goods offered for sale in Paisley as well as in any other part of the county.³ They refused to acknowledge the right of the King to deprive them of any of their privileges, and resolved to test the matter. Accordingly, within twelve months of the foregoing date, a number of them, acting under the authority of the Bailies and community, proceeded to Paisley, and in open market seized "a quartar of beyf takyn for a penny of custume, ane cabok of cheyss takyn for a half-penny of custum, and a wynde of quhitclaith for a penny of custum.”¹ This time, however, the Abbot's bailies, Alan Stewart and John Whiteford, were on the alert, and gathering their men, they forcibly re-took the pointed goods, and the men of Renfrew were obliged to return to Renfrew empty-handed. Thus worsted, the Bailies and burgesses of Renfrew raised an action against Stewart and Whiteford, the Abbot's bailies, before the Lords Auditors, for defrauding the King of his customs, usurping the privileges of their burgh, and taking from their “custumars and officiers” the goods they had pointed for their customs in the town of Paisley.² The case was postponed from time to time, but on the 13th June, 1493, judgment was delivered in favour of the Abbot's Bailies, and against the Bailies and burgesses of Renfrew, on the ground that the town and lands of Paisley had been erected into a free barony and regality at a date preceding the infestment made to the town of Renfrew, and that the town of Renfrew was privileged only within the town of Renfrew and the barony thereof, and was not entitled to levy toll and custom within the town and regality of Paisley. On the 22nd of the same month the finding of the Lords Auditors was confirmed by the King.³

The victory he had thus obtained Abbot Shaw resolved to follow up. In 1494 he raised an action against the Bailies and burgesses of Renfrew, in which he sued them for the damage done in connection with the market cross during the midnight raid upon the new burgh.⁴ Subsequently the scope of the action was enlarged, and according to the summons issued, 22nd December, 1495, he sued them for the tolls and customs they had levied within the regality of Paisley during the past hundred years, for the expense he had been put to in connection with the late action, for interfering with the fishings of the Monastery on the Clyde, and for the wrecking of a house belonging to the monks in the town of Arkleston.¹ The action does not appear to have gone beyond the issue of this second summons. It may be that the Bailies and burgesses of the Royal Burgh were alarmed at the damages they were likely to be cast in, and made their peace with the Abbot. Anyhow, no more is heard of their claim or of the Abbot's action against them for damages.

While this conflict was going on, Abbot Shaw had been attending to the welfare of his monks. They were already in receipt of their pittances—doles of food of a kind superior to their ordinary allowances and served out to them on the recurrence of special solemn services and high religious festivals; and in order to increase these doles, the Abbot proposed to assign to them the sum of thirty gold crowns from feu duties in the burgh for a Common Pittance. The feu duties, however, were the property not merely of the Abbot and Convent; along with all the property of the Abbey they belonged to the Corporate Society of the Cluniac Order, and before the gift could take effect it had to be sanctioned by the Abbots and Priors of the Cluniac Houses, or rather by the officials known as the Diffinitors of the General Chapter of the Order. The consent of the Abbots and Priors requisite was obtained, and the deed sanctioning the gift was finally signed by one of the Diffinitors on 14th May, 1492.² Years afterwards, as we shall see, the rents set apart by Abbot George Shaw to increase the comfort of his monks, formed part of the original endowment of the Grammar School.

Ten years after the erection of the burgh an event happened which must have been highly gratifying to the Abbot, and appears to have caused no small stir among the inhabitants. Like many other monastic churches, the Abbey Church at Paisley, with the exception of the choir, which here, as elsewhere in similar cases, was reserved for the monks, was used as a parochial church. In it were altars dedicated to Our Lady, St. Peter, St. James, St. Ninian, St. Nicholas, St. Anne, and St. Katherine. All of them were endowed, and each of them had its own priest or chaplain. During Abbot George's rule, James Crawford of Kylwynat,¹ a burgess of Paisley, and his wife, Elizabeth Calbraith, devoted the savings of their industry to the building of St. Mirin's Chapel, for a long time known as the Sounding Aisle, and to the erection within it of an altar to the memory of St. Mirin and St. Columba, and on the 15th of July, 1499, they executed a deed whereby they founded and endowed the chaplaincy of the Altar.² By this time the beautiful chapel was probably finished. At any rate it was finished by the fourteenth of August in the following year, for on that day a deed was executed in it.³ As will be observed from the deed of mortification, the endowments consisted of the outfield lands of Seidhill and the lands of Wellmeadow, with their pertinents. The patrons of the Chapel, after the death of the founders, were to be the Bailies of the town; if they failed to present within twenty-four days after the vacancy occurred, the right of presentation devolved upon the Prior and Convent. If possible the chaplain was to be a native of Paisley. Six days after the deed of endowment was executed, it was handed over, at ten o'clock in the morning, within the Town House or Tolbooth of the Burgh, to the Bailies, Allan Stewart and Stephen Wess, as patrons. James Crawford and his wife were present; so also were Master William Stewart, who is the first Town Clerk mentioned, and the community of the burgh.⁴ Before the end of the year, James Crawford, the munificent donor, died. His tombstone may still be seen in the nave of the Abbey Church, bearing the pious words—Orate pro anima ejus.

In the meantime Abbot George Shaw, though his name appears in James Crawford's deed of endowment, had retired from the abbacy. In 1495 King James IV. had appointed him Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, but after holding the office for two years, he resigned it, and in the following year, 1498, being then an old man and desirous of rest, he entered into an arrangement whereby his nephew, Robert Shaw, son of the Governor of Stirling Castle, was appointed Abbot, while he himself retired to Blackston by the banks of the Black Cart, one of the Abbey Granges. There he spent the remaining seven years of his life, and was known as "the Pensioner of the Abbey." He was beyond question a wise and prudent man, and the debt of gratitude which Paisley owes to him is great.

Robert Shaw, who succeeded him, was, at the time of his appointment, Vicar of Monkton, but before his admission to the Abbot's stall, he became a member of the Cluniac Order, and assumed the black habit a little before he assumed the mitre.

Like his predecessor, Abbot Robert had to resist the claims of his diocesan. Robert, Archbishop of Glasgow, had for some reason seized the fruits of several of the Abbey's churches, and the rents of some of its lands. He had also refused the monks "letters of justice" against certain individuals who were refusing to pay their tithes, and had in other ways injuriously interfered with the property of the brethren, and disregarded their rights as members of the Order of Clugny. In his distress the Abbot appealed to the Pope, and on 14th August, 1500, his appeal was taken before William Steward, Notary Public, in the Chapel of St. Mirin.¹ The result of this appeal is not known; but the probability is that the decision was in favour of the Abbot, and that the privileges of his Order were again upheld.

Like his uncle, Abbot Robert appears to have been in great favour with the King, and frequently received visits from him. The first of the royal visits was paid in 1491. In 1507, the King was accompanied by his Queen, Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. of England. Buildings were then in progress at the Monastery. The King inspected them and gave "drink silver" to the masons. He and his Queen were then making a pilgrimage to the tomb of St. Ninian, at Whithorn. On their return they spent eight days at the Monastery. During their stay the festival of St. Anne occurred. They visited the altar founded in her honour, and made various offerings. Among other gifts they gave a sum of money to Sir John Makbrek,¹ for distribution among the poor.

James was fond of music; perhaps because it soothed that restlessness of mind that sent him to all parts of the country on pilgrimages, and kept him perpetually moving from place to place. Occasionally music gave place to plays. In August, 1489, the Treasurer paid three pounds twelve shillings "to Patrick Johnson and his fallowis that playt a play to the King in Lythgow,"² and in the same official's accounts for the following year we have the entry "Item, on Fryda the xxiiij Julij, in Dundee, to the King to gif the Fransche men that playt, xx^{li} unicornis, xviiij li."³ But the payments in this connection are usually for "harpers," "fithelaris," and "lutaris." Once a payment of nine shillings is made to "the brokin backit⁴ fitular of Sanct Androis," and there are others "to the maddens of Forres that dansit to the King." In 1504, when the King was visiting Abbot Robert, the good Abbot amused him neither with "dansing maddens" nor with a "brokin backit fitular;" but Lord Semple, the Sheriff of the Barony of Renfrew, brought his famous minstrel, John Haislet, to the Abbey to entertain the King, and the following entry in the Treasurer's accounts occurs: "1504, Item, the last day of Junij, in Paysley, to Lord Sempille's harper—xiiijs." When in Paisley with his Consort in 1507, other payments were made from the royal purse, in addition to those already mentioned. The following is a list of them, taken from the third volume of the Lord Treasurer's Accounts :—

Item, ix day of July, to ane man to pas fra Pasley to Dunbertane with ane letter to Andro Bertoun	ij s.

The first three of these payments were made as the royal couple were on their way to Whithorn; the rest were made on their return during their stay of eight days.

After the calamity of Flodden, Abbot Shaw appeared frequently at Court, and was there a prominent figure. Margaret at first distrusted him, but they were soon in agreement. In 1524 the See of Moray became vacant by the death of James Hepburn. The Earl of Arran desired the bishopric for his natural son, John Hamilton, a monk of Kilwinning; but the Queen, with whom at the time the disposal of the Church benefices in reality lay, could not pass over the claims of Abbot Robert, and in the end Robert was appointed to the See of Moray and Hamilton to the Abbey of Paisley. The approval of the Pope was requisite for both appointments, and over the appointment of Hamilton, who "being of tender age and bastard," His Holiness seems to have hesitated. Anyhow, the approval was long in coming, and Abbot Robert and his friends grew alarmed at the delay. In May the Abbot wrote to Wolsey, commending his "loyal service" both to him and to his royal master, and begging the Cardinal to use his influence at Rome to further his promotion. James V. had already written to the Pope in Abbot Robert's favour, urging also the appointment of Hamilton to Paisley. Henry VIII., on the urgent representations of Dr. Magnus, his ambassador in Scotland, had done the same. At last the approval came, and, on the 19th of October, 1525, Abbot Robert was received in the cathedral of his northern diocese, and John Hamilton, "a yonge thing," as Dr. Magnus called him, became Abbot of Paisley. The published State Papers of the time reveal many curious intrigues on the part of those who were then making the history of Scotland, and none of them is more curious than those referred to above.¹

John Hamilton was the last, most famous, and, according to some, the most notorious of the Abbots of Paisley. When he received the mitre, Paisley was one of the five great places of pilgrimage in Scotland. The others were Whithorn, Dundee, Scone and Melrose.² The shrines of St. Mirin and of Our Lady of Paisley were held in high veneration, and in the Lord Treasurer's Accounts of James V. there is a disbursement to "thirteen chaplains to say mess afore oure Ladye of Paislay." Paisley itself was a thriving town, and, as we shall see further on, was gradually extending its limits. For some time after his appointment, Hamilton left the management of the Abbey and Burgh to his deputy, the Prior. In January, 1529, he seems to have contemplated issuing a commission to certain "noble and powerful men" to act as his bailies, commissioners and procurators throughout the regality; but as the names of these "noble and powerful men" are not inserted in the commission, it is probable that it was never issued.¹ He attended the Parliament of 1535, which prohibited the introduction into Scotland of the works of Luther and other Reformers, and forbade all discussion of the new doctrines, except with a view to their refutation. He was in Parliament again in 1540; but soon after he left Scotland for France, for the purpose, it is said, of pursuing his studies at the University of Paris.²

On his return, in 1543, rich gifts awaited him in London at the hands of Henry VIII., while in Scotland his arrival was awaited with anxiety. The Reformers hoped and expected that he would place himself on their side, or, at least, that he and his companion, David Panter, "wold without delay the one and the other of thame occupye the pulpit and trewly preach Jesus Christ."³ These hopes and expectations were based upon the reports which had reached the Kingdom "of the learning of the two, and thare honest lyiff, and of thare fervencye and uprychtnes in religioun." But on their return both of them at once joined the opposite party, and Hamilton became the stoutest champion of the old Church and the leading spirit among the Queen's adherents. At Court his influence was great. He reconciled his brother, the Regent, to Cardinal Beaton, induced him to rejoin the old Church, got the two Protestant preachers dismissed from the Court, and infused new life into what had seemed a dying cause. His influence may perhaps be best measured by the violence of the language which Knox uses when speaking of him. He calls him a "hypocrite," represents him and his friends as acting from the lowest motives, as repairing "to the Court as ravenes to the carioun," and says that "his wicked counsall led" the Regent "so far from God, that he falsefeid his promeise, dipt his handis in the bloode of the Sanctes of God, and brought this commoun welth to the verray poynt of utter ruine. And these war the first fruitis of the Abbot of Paisley."¹ This extravagance of language is itself evidence that Knox felt that in Hamilton he had one whose influence was great and to be feared. He admits as much. The obedience given to Hamilton, he says, "was nothing inferiour to that obedience that any King of Scotland of many yearis had befor him." The English ambassador, Sadler, who was in constant touch with the Reformer, bears similar evidence, frequently mentioning him as the leader of the French party and as the trusted adviser of the Regent. "Ever since his brother, the Abbot of Paisley, came home," he writes in 1543, "he [the Regent] hath been chiefly ruled and counselled by him, who, they assure me, is altogether at the cast of France, and the Cardinal's great friend; and whatsoever they do mind with the Governor to-day, the Abbot of Paisley changeth him in the same to-morrow."²

At Paisley, Hamilton entertained his brother, the Regent, on more than one occasion. The Abbot was passionately fond of building, but the only piece he is reported to have attempted at the Monastery was unfortunate. At great expense he built a tower to the Abbey Church; but, the foundations being insecure, it was hardly finished when it fell by its own weight.³ The year after his return, the Abbot was made Lord High Treasurer of Scotland,⁴ and in the following year his brother, the Regent, acting for the Queen, nominated him to the vacant See of Dunkeld. His title to the See was contested by Robert Crichton, Provost of St. Giles, Edinburgh, who produced an alledged decree from the Pope, bearing that the promotion of Hamilton was to be conditional upon his own appointment to the See of Ross. An appeal was taken by the Abbot to Rome, where, in 1546, he successfully vindicated his appointment.¹ It is doubtful, however, whether he was ever installed.

Meanwhile he had taken steps for the protection of his Abbey and its adjoining lands. Abbot George Shaw had appointed John Lord Semple bailie of his regality, but apparently only for a term of years or during his pleasure. For some reason, now unknown, Abbot Robert Shaw had called upon Semple to give an account of his intromissions in connection with his office, and seems to have discontinued him in it.² In 1508-9, Semple appealed to the Lords of Council to confirm him in the bailiery; but they refused,³ and for a number of years the office was apparently vacant. Between 1509 and 1545, however, the condition of the country had rapidly grown worse. In 1540, William, Master of Glencairn, had succeeded his father, Cuthbert, in the Earldom. His loyalty to the Crown had never been sure, and his presence in the castle of Finlaystone, was anything but a guarantee for the safety of the Abbot and his lands. In 1543-4, along with the Earls of Lennox, Cassillis, and Angus, he had invited Henry VIII. to send a "main army" into Scotland,⁴ assuring him of his own and of his friends' support, and in the following year so intolerable had his turbulence and treason become that Mary issued a commission to Argyll and others to seize Finlaystone and keep it in her name.⁵ In this state of affairs the Abbot fell back upon the Semples, who were still loyal to the Queen and to the old Church. William Lord Semple was already hereditary bailie of the Sheriffdom of Renfrew, and in 1545 Hamilton appointed Robert, his son and apparent heir, bailie of the greater part of his regality. According to the narrative of the instrument of his appointment, Robert Semple had already rendered signal service to the Monastery and its monks by protecting them and their property against the "madness of heretics" and "the insults of powerful tyrants." The bailiery covered the whole of the regality with the exception of the lands in Ayrshire. The office was to be hereditary, and the fee three chalders of oatmeal yearly and the lands of Glen in Lochwinnoch. The Semples on their part undertook to defend the Monastery against all comers, barring their duty to the Crown, and in the case of failure to resign the infestments and office.¹ Hamilton is said to have had another connection with the Semples, but upon that we need not here dwell.

Ten days after Hamilton had won his appeal to Rome respecting the See of Dunkeld, Cardinal Beaton was murdered. Hamilton seems to have had no expectation of succeeding him in the primacy, for in April, 1547, the year after the Cardinal's assassination, Stewart of Cardonald, one of his own tenants, and a spy in the pay of the English Government, reported "The Abbot is to go secretly to France to get the King's consent to the Governor's desire to have the Princess, and to get the red hat to himself to be Cardinal, and the Bishopric of Mirypois in God."² Whether the Abbot went to France is not known, but he got neither the Cardinal's hat nor the See of Mirypois, which had been held by Beaton. Other honours were in store for him. On the 28th of the following November, the Pope, through the influence of the Governor, appointed him Archbishop of St. Andrews, and Primate of Scotland.

By a singular arrangement, Hamilton was to retain possession of the Abbey, notwithstanding his promotion to the Primacy. But some years later, in the year 1553, the year in which his Catechism,³ one of the finest pieces of prose writing in the Scottish language, was issued, having obtained the sanction of the Pope, Julius III., he resigned the Abbacy into the hands of his nephew, Claud Hamilton, who was then seven years old.

In the Roman Camera the whole revenues of the Abbey were at this time valued at 600 golden florins, and according to the Pope's Bull, the young Commendator, after deducting a fourth, if he kept a separate establishment, or a third, if he lived in the monastery, for the upholding of the fabric, for charity and for the purchase of ornaments for the Church, was to have what remained of the revenues at his own disposal. Until he was twenty-three, the temporal and spiritual affairs of the Abbey were to be administered by the Archbishop, his uncle, and in the event of the Prelate's death, by the Claustral Prior. Anyway, "the yonge thing," to apply to the nephew the phrase which the English Ambassador had formerly applied to the uncle, was well provided for. Probably the Archbishop saw what was coming and determined to secure while there was yet time, something out of the general ruin for his family.¹

¹The estates which the Archbishop secured for his nephew were extensive and rich. As far back as the year 1265 the Abbey owned thirty parishes, and at the time of the Reformation twenty-nine of them were still in its possession, eleven of which were in Renfrewshire. According to the Rental-book of the landed estates of the Abbey, the Lordship of Paisley yielded in 1525, 1130 bolls, 2 firlots of grain, £217 12s. 7d. in money, 120 capons, and 1120 hens; the Lordship of Glen, in Lochwinnoch, 24 bolls of grain, £34 4s. 4d. in money, and 285 hens; the Lordship of Kilpatrick, 53 bolls of grain, £67 13s. 4d. in money; the Lordship of Monkton and Dalmulyn, £114 9s. 2d. in money, 205 capons, and 135 hens. When the rental of the Abbey was given up in 1561 for the assumption of the thirds of the benefices for the Reformed Clergy and the Crown, the whole money was £2,467 19s. 0d.; the meal 72 chalders, 3 bolls, 3½ firlots; the bear 40 chalders, 11 bolls; the horse corn 43 chalders, 1 boll, 1 firlot, 1 pint great meate; the cheese five hundred, five score and six stones. Among the deductions were 7 chalders of meal yearly for the Almoner's weekly doles to the poor; £473 8s. 7d. for the maintenance of the convent kitchen expenses and clothes yearly according to the accounts of the cellarer and graniter; £38 for the fees of the graniter and cellarer and their under servants; £13 6s. 8d. for the Archbishop's claim of procuration now converted into money; and £550 2s. 8d. for the contribution to the Lords of Session and for pensions settled on the Abbey. From this enumeration of the Abbey possessions, the monks would appear to have had more than two-thirds of the soil of the parish, lying chiefly on its northern and western sides.—C. Innes, Orig. Par., i. 70.

In the second year of Claud's commendatorship, 26th July, 1555, the Abbey of Paisley was attacked by men from Lennox. "Mat. Stewart, Barscube, and others, twelve persons in all, came," we are told, "to the Monastery of Paisley, by way of hame-suckin, and there invaded John Hamilton, son of Hamilton of Ferguslie, 'grynter' of Paslay, for his slaughter, and for mutilating him of his arm, and sundry other crimes."¹ Six years later, 1561, Glencairn, along with others, received a commission to destroy all "monumentis of ydolatrie" in the West. Among other places he visited Paisley, and left the Monastery in ruins. Archbishop Hamilton, whose cathedral church at St. Andrews had already been sacked, chanced to be in the Abbey at the time, and according to Knox "narrowlie eschapit."² According to Sadler, the Abbey had been visited before this, in 1559, by a party who burnt "all the ymages and idols and popish stuff in the same."³ Whether this was the case or not, Glencairn made sure work of what he had in hand. All the treasures Tervas had brought from Italy were destroyed, the tombs of Kings were violated, and the choir and northern transept of the Abbey Church were wrecked. The Semples, who had undertaken the defence of the Abbey, did not interfere, the people of Paisley were unable, and when the fanatical horde swept in among them, they had enough to do to protect their own.

It was probably at this time that other chapels or churches in Paisley and its immediate neighbourhood were ruined or destroyed. There is no exact list of them, but the following are alluded to in various charters and documents. In the village of Fernese, situated within the parish of Paisley, was the chapel of St. Conval. It belonged to the Semples, and was bestowed by them upon their collegiate church at Lochwinnoch.⁴ The Stewards had a chapel at their manor place of Blackhall, which may have stood upon the neighbouring Chapel Hill and given its name to it. The chaplain of this chapel witnessed a charter in 1272.¹ As early as the year 1180, Robert Croc of Crookston and Henry de Ness, retainers of the Stewards, obtained permission to construct oratories or private chapels in their courts for celebrating divine service for their families and guests. The chapels were to be served from the Abbey and the offerings were to be sent to the Mother Church. About the same time permission was granted to the sick brethren of the hospital built by Robert Croc, apparently on the west side of the Levern, between old Crookston and Neilston, to have a chaplain. The Mother Church was to suffer no loss in oblations, and the bodies of those dying in the hospital were to be buried in Paisley without mass being said in the chapel. In the Seedhill was the Church of St. Mirin,² the original parish church of Paisley, and near to Seedhill was a Lady Church,³ from which the Lady Burn took its name. At the west end of Wellmeadow and on the south side of it stood the Church of St. Roche or Roque.⁴ The seven roods of land which belonged to it were subsequently given by King James VI. as part of the endowment of the Grammar School. A chapel may also have stood in the neighbourhood of what is now Lady Lane, and one dedicated to St. Nicholas was situated on the south side of the School Wynd. Its site was subsequently occupied by the original Grammar School. What happened to these chapels is not precisely known. Those of them which are mentioned during or after the time of the Reformation were, from the references made to them, evidently in ruins, and it is not unlikely that they were destroyed or rendered unfit for use by Glencairn and the sacrilegious mob by whom he was accompanied.

Neither the spoliation of their splendid Monastery nor the dispersion of their kindly superiors, the monks, appears to have made the people of Paisley in any way disposed to receive the new Faith. John Knox preached in the neighbourhood, and paid a visit to Finlaystone, but, so far as is known, he did not visit Paisley. Whenever the preachers of the new doctrine came to the town they were coldly received, and the church doors were "stepped" against them. The Archbishop and a few of the monks who still lingered about the Abbey treated the new order of things with contempt. Hamilton boldly heard confession and celebrated mass in the church, and in consequence had, on 21st March, 1563, to appear with thirteen others before the Court of Session,¹ then but recently established, and only escaped the capital punishment they were liable to through the favour of the Queen. Three years later Hamilton baptized the Queen's son, James VI., with all the pomp of the ancient ritual. But though strongly supported by the Queen and by the whole of the Catholic and died in 1327. After his death he was recognised, and soon began to be invoked against the dreaded plague and infectious diseases. Who dedicated the church to his name in Paisley is unknown; nor is it known when it was built. It is probable that it was erected to him as the deliverer of those who suffer from plague and infectious diseases, and may probably be taken as indicating that in Paisley the diseases referred to were in former times frequent and virulent.

party, the cause of the Archbishop was losing ground. After the battle of Langside he was proscribed, and the Regent Moray bestowed the property of the Abbey upon the Semples, who in the meantime had deserted the Queen and gone over to the Protestant side.

On the 17th of January, 1570, soon after the assassination of Moray, the outlawed Prelate returned to Paisley, took possession of the Abbey, seized Lord Semple and kept him prisoner. Lennox, who was then Regent, and entertained an hereditary hatred against the Hamiltons, which he was never slow to gratify, was not long in coming against him.¹ The Archbishop escaped, but thirty of his supporters, who surrendered on condition that their lives should be spared, were mercilessly hanged. Soon after, the Archbishop himself fell into the hands of his enemies. He was charged with the murder of Darnley, with conspiracy against the King, with participating in the murder of the Regent Moray, and with other offences. His judges were Lord Ruthven, Lord Justice Clerk, and Mr. George Buchanan, Pensioner of Crosraguel. Hamilton denied the charges, but was found guilty, and on 7th April, 1571, "as the bell struck at six hours at even he was hangit at the mercat cross of Stirling upon the jebat." His body was quartered, and some of his remains may have been carried to Paisley and interred in the Abbey Church, where a tablet is still shown bearing the Archbishop's coat of arms, his initials, J. H., and the motto: "Misericordia et Pax." Hamilton was an able and a brave man. He had great faults, but he was no hypocrite. He did at least what many in his day did not do, he stuck to his Queen.

Claud, the Commendator, who, like his uncle, had fought at Langside on the side of the Queen, was also outlawed. After the execution of the Archbishop, he led a wandering life. He was one of the leaders who surprised Stirling on 4th September, 1571.

Captain Calder, who shot the Regent through the back and killed him, afterwards said that he had acted according to the orders of the "Abbot" or "Lord of Paisley," as the Commendator was called. In July, 1572, the Commendator was again in the neighbourhood of Paisley, when he attacked the Semples in the hope of regaining possession of the Abbey. But what he failed to win by force he obtained in another and more satisfactory way. The Commission appointed after the Treaty of Perth in 1573, recalled his forfeiture, and ordered his estates to be restored to him. Lord Semple, who was then in possession, refused to surrender them. The Abbey was besieged in the name of the King by the Earl of Argyll, Semple was driven out, and Lord Claud was reinstated.¹

On 31st August, 1574, Lord Claud married a daughter of Lord Seton, and took up his residence at the Place of Paisley, but through the influence of the Regent Morton, he was again forfeited,² and a Commission was issued "to search for and administer justice to him." The Abbey was again besieged, and in 1579 it was surrendered to the Master of Glencairn; but the "Abbot," it was found, had "conveyed himself quietly to sic pairt as no man knawis."

After this the Abbey and its lands passed from holder to holder. Immediately after Lord Claud's forfeiture a lease of the temporalities was given to Alan Lord Cathcart, Master of the King's Household. In the same year they seem to have been in the hands of John Earl of Mar. On the 24th September, 1579, his nephew, William Erskine of Balgownie, Parson of Campsey, appeared before the Privy Council as the Chancellor of Paisley, and complained that the Master of Semple was obstructing him when collecting the dues of the Abbey. The case was remitted to the Lords of Session; but on the 20th November following, Erskine received a grant of the Abbey and its lands, with the title of Commendator, and continued in possession till the 11th May, 1584, when, in consequence of his being concerned with the Earls of Angus and Mar in the seizure of Stirling, he was forfeited and banished.

To the Town of Paisley the Reformation so far had done no good. Its Monastery was in ruins, and the kindly, if not over-religious, monks were dispersed. The clang of arms was continually heard within its gates, and a reign of oppression had set in. Its temporary Superiors were as rapacious as the ancient Abbots had been forbearing. The new officials, appointed to collect the revenues of the confiscated estates of the Abbey, though slow to pay them into the Treasury, were swift to collect them, and often oppressive in their exaction. Beatrice Livingstone, who had been assigned a life rent of thirty merks out of the thirds of the Abbey, complained to the Privy Council in 1567, that Michael Chisholm, "one of the new made collectors of the thirds of the Abbey of Paisley," was withholding the payments which were legally due to her.¹ John Gilchrist had obtained a charter and heritable infestment of the lands called Knaiffis.

land, Clayfauld, Guishouslandis and Housward, with the houses and gardens occupied by George Marshall and the office of Forester of the Wood of Monkshaw. His charter had been confirmed under the Great Seal. But Lord Semple, who, as we have seen, was at one time Bailie of the Regality of Paisley, but had now risen to be Commendator, proposed to set Gilchrist's charter aside, and to confer the properties it secured to him upon his own nephew, and was only restrained by a decret of the Privy Council forbidding the Keepers of the Seals to pass the charter which he had already had drawn up and was desirous of having confirmed. This was in 1572.¹ The following year the same Lord Semple was put to the horn for forcibly expelling Thomas Jack from the parish of Eastwood, to which he had been appointed by the King, and intruding into it John Hamilton, "his servant," "a Papist preist."

By the Reformers religious matters in Paisley appear for some time to have been entirely neglected. The Monasteries were dissolved in 1560, but for twelve years the town of Paisley was without a Protestant minister. This may have been partly due to the activity of Hamilton, who, though Archbishop of St. Andrews, still acted as Abbot of Paisley, and from time to time, as we have seen, was present at the Abbey, and did not hesitate to say mass and hear confessions. Probably it was also due to the temper of the people. Their experience of the new religion had not been such as to attract them to it, and for a long time the place was regarded as a "nest of Papistry." However, in 1572, a minister was appointed to the town and parish in the person of Patrick Adamson.

Adamson had been educated for the law, but not succeeding in his profession, had turned to the Church. In 1570, he had preached before the Regent Morton, who, being favourably impressed by his abilities, secured his appointment to Paisley. In 1576, Morton appointed him one of his chaplains, and on the death of Archbishop

Douglas, raised him to the Archbishopric of St. Andrews, not, however, before he had put the revenues of the Archbishopric into his own pocket.¹ Adamson was not a favourite either with his brethren or with the people, and lived a troubled and unhappy life. He was a favourite, however, with the King and with Morton, and probably it was through his influence, as some maintain, that, in 1576, the year in which he was translated to St. Andrews, King James granted the charter erecting and endowing the Grammar School of Paisley.

The charter² runs upon the narrative "that it becomes us to provide by all honest means that a school and study of letters be erected and the poor within the burgh of Paisley be sustained, so that the youth may be instructed and formed in good manners, and in the knowledge of letters and virtue, not only that they may serve and be useful in the ministry of the word of God, but that they may be able and necessary instruments for the profit and well being of our said burgh," and is given by the advice of James Earl of Morton, Regent of the Kingdom. For the maintenance of the school the charter sets aside the endowments of the seven altars in the Abbey Church, viz., those of SS. Mirin and Columba, and of SS. Mary the Virgin, Ninian, Nicholas, Peter, Katharine and Anne, the Chapel of St. Roche with its seven particates of land, the rents which Abbot George Shaw had given to provide a common pittance for the monks, and the obit money the latter had formerly levied. Existing rights were reserved, but as the prebends fell vacant the dues were to be taken over by the Bailies, Town Council, and Community, who were appointed Trustees, and to be formed into a fund to be called "Our Foundation of the Grammar School of Paisley." The proceeds were to be applied to the maintenance of a Grammar School and the sustenance of a preceptor and master, and for the education of the boys and youth of the Burgh and adjacent country. Four poor boys of the Burgh, and residing in the school, were to be paid out of the funds forty merks yearly for five years. Any or all of them might be continued beyond the five years, but the number of foundationers was always to be kept up, and each was to receive his ten merks a year. Some provision had been made for the education of the young in Catholic times, for a priest, Sir Thomas Robeson, who acted as a witness at the trial of Archbishop Hamilton, is designated "the schoolmaster of Paisley;"¹ but what the provision was is uncertain. An idea of the royal endowment for the Grammar School may be obtained by referring to the list of the rents given for the Common Pittance by Abbot George Shaw on pages 133-37.

Adamson was succeeded as minister by Andrew Polwarth. Neither he nor Adamson was able to find a lodging in Paisley, and the names of both of them appear in the list of those who were "delaited" to the General Assembly in 1575, as "non-resident and dilapidators." After an incumbency of a little more than two years, Polwarth was promoted to the sub-deanery of Glasgow, and was glad to leave Paisley, both because of the unkindly treatment he received and on account of the decidedly hostile attitude of the people towards the new doctrine. In 1578, he was succeeded by Thomas Smeaton.

Smeaton's early career had been somewhat remarkable. Brought up in the Catholic faith and educated at St. Andrews, when the Reformation broke out he was unable to make up his mind as to which of the contending parties he ought to cast in his lot with. Joining the Jesuits in France, he passed several years among them, and visited a number of their schools or colleges. At last he fell into a fever, "was cast into perplexitie of bodie and minde and fought a fearfull battell in his conscience." On recovering, he threw in his lot with the Protestants. At Paris, he nearly perished in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, but found refuge with Walsingham of gift and donation under the Great Seal, practically restoring to him his former estates and dignities. This letter was approved and ratified by Parliament in the following year,¹ and, on the 29th of July, 1587, he received a new charter of infeftment, by which he and his heirs and successors were put in possession of the ancient properties of the Abbey, with certain exceptions which are specified. By the same instrument, the temporalities of the Abbey were erected into a temporal lordship, and Lord Claud was made a lord of Parliament with the title of Lord Paisley. By the same instrument also, the King resigned the thirds and monks' portions of the Monastery, all of which became the property of the Hamiltons.²

The charter was executed between seven and eight o'clock in the morning of the same day in which an Act of Parliament was passed by which, with a few exceptions, all the Church lands within the kingdom were annexed to the Crown.³ As will be seen on referring to the charter, it was the intention to exclude the whole of the lands of the Monastery of Paisley from the operations of that Act, but, by some mistake, only the lands in the "Toun" of Paisley were mentioned among the exemptions, and on the 5th June, 1592, an amending Act was passed by which the word "temporalitie" was substituted for the word "toun."⁴ Thus, after years of trouble and exile, "stern Claud" obtained once more the lands and possessions of his Commendatorship, and sat more securely in them than he had done before.

The year after his return, Lord Claud took up his residence at the Place of Paisley, and, when not abroad on political affairs, continued to reside there during the rest of his life, watching over the interests of the Burgh. Though he sided with the Protestant party among the nobles and was in favour with the King, his conduct was regarded by some as not always above suspicion.

He was suspected of Spanish tendencies and a report was spread that "the King was minded to do justice upon him and Maxwell,"¹ though neither was supposed to stand in much danger.

In July, 1597, ten years after he had received his new charter of infeftment, Lord Claud was honoured by a visit from Anne of Denmark, the King's Consort. The report of her coming raised quite a flutter in the Town Council. The Kirk and Ports were ordered to be decorated and a "pyntour" was sent for from Glasgow "for drawing of sum draughts in the Kirk, as sall be thocht maist necessar for the present."² Twenty years later, 24th July, 1617, the King himself was in Paisley. By this time, however, Lord Claud had retired from public life. In 1598, the year after the Queen's visit, he had granted a commission to his eldest son, who, in 1606, was created Earl of Abercorn, to act for him,³ and when the King came, he was too old to take part in the gaieties. His Majesty was received by the young Earl in the "great hall" of Abercorn, and a "pretty boy," a son of Lord Semple of Beltrees, delivered before him a bombastic address, in which he spoke of himself as "your Majesty's own old parrot" and the King as "our royall Phœbus." There were doubtless great festivities, but festivities of a somewhat different kind from those to which the King's ancestors had been entertained on their visits to the Monastery. The Earl, in whose name these festivities were given, died in 1618. The death of his father, Lord Claud, took place three years later in 1621.

About the time that Lord Claud arrived in Paisley to take up his permanent residence in the Abbey, there arrived also Mr. Andro Knox, formerly minister of Lochwinnoch, to take charge of the spiritual affairs of the Parish. He belonged to the Knoxes of Ranfurlie, and had neither the moderation nor sweetness of his predecessor, Smeaton. His zeal for the new faith was fanatical, and his skill in searching out Catholics commended him to the more zealous and sour spirits of the Church, who imagined, like the Dominicans in Spain, that non-conformity could be stamped out by imprisonment and fines and bitter persecution. Soon after his settlement in Paisley, the most stringent measures began to be used against those who did not conform. By his iron rule a sort of outward conformity was obtained, but, as might be expected, no good was done to religion. The Presbytery of Paisley was not formed till the year 1590, and unfortunately its extant records do not go further back than the year 1602. Among other persons, the following were dealt with by the Presbytery between the years 1602 and 1605 :—Maxwell of Stainlie, Lady Glencairn, Mr. Patrick Walkinshaw, Luke Stirling, John Logan and Agnes Ralston of Raiss, Jean Knox Lady Duchal, John Knox of Ranfurlie, Muir of Rowallan, Semple of Brintshields, and A. Maxwell of Kilmacolm.¹ They did not all belong to the Parish of Paisley, but as they were all cases of suspicion and non-conformity which were judicially dealt with by the Presbytery of Paisley in the course of little more than a couple of years, their number alone is sufficient to show the spirit by which that reverend body was animated. Lord Claud Hamilton was reported to the General Assembly of 1588 as a receiver of Jesuits, and his wife was so distressed by the treatment she received at the hands of Mr. Andro and his co-presbyters that she was almost driven to despair and appealed to the King for protection against them.²

But all his own way Mr. Andro Knox did not get even in Paisley. He was charged before the Privy Council with malicious persecution and slander by John Gilchrist, the Reader and Schoolmaster of the Town. Gilchrist's complaint, which was also against the Presbytery, ran that Knox, having conceived hatred and malice against him, because he would not dispone to him his lands of Boigsyd and Sandisfurd, "hes be all indirect meanis procurit and wrocht the said compleneris wrack, discredit and sclander," by removing him without any warrant of the Kirk "fra his service and cuir" in the Kirk of Paisley, wherein he was placed with the consent of the Kirk, by causing the Bailies of the Town to displace him "fra teiching of thair scule," and by laying to his charge the crime of adultery with Margaret Ralston, daughter of the Laird of Ralston, and using "ane extraordinar and preposterous forme of proceeding" to get his conviction. Knox had induced the ministers of the Paisley Presbytery to raise an action against Gilchrist before themselves for the crime of adultery, "quhairin thay pretend," says the petition, "to proceid agains him, and in the tryall thairof to use the depositionis and testimonie of wemen-husies and bairdis." Moreover, Knox, it is alleged, is the only informer or pursuer, and John Vaus, the husband of Margaret Ralston, has no suspicion of her having committed any such crime, esteems her "ane honest and faithfull wyf," will not concur in "ony sic persute agains her," and altogether dissents from it. It is further urged that the charge being criminal the Presbytery has no jurisdiction. The Privy Council found for Gilchrist, in so far that it discharged the Presbytery of all proceedings against him until the crime should be justified before the Justice.¹

On another occasion Knox's hot temper, if not his fanatical zeal, brought him under the discipline of the Presbytery, and the biter was severely bit.

On the 1st of October, 1604, he was obliged to appear before the Court in the Tolbooth, craving protection against Gawine Stewart, a burgess of the Town, who was bound over to keep the peace and to leave the minister unmolested under a penalty of one hundred pounds. Unfortunately, Stewart let fall some words which so incensed Mr. Andro that he incontinently struck him on the head with a key to the effusion of blood in the full presence of the Court. For this, on the fourth of the month, he was suspended by the Presbytery. On the ninth he appeared before the Court of the Burgh, and declared himself not only penitent, but also willing to place himself in the will of the Provost, James Lord Abercorne, but the Court refused to absolve him and continued the case until such time as his Lordship should be present. On the 26th, the Presbytery met and declared itself dissatisfied with his "supplications" and with his having administered the sacrament of baptism during his suspension. By the 9th of November, Knox seems to have been thoroughly cowed, and on the 16th of the same month the Presbytery, with the advice of the Session and Town Council of Paisley, ordained "that the said Mr. Andro sall sit in the maist patent place of the Kirk of Paisley upon Sunday nixtocum befor noone, being the 19 day of November instant, and ther, efter Mr. John Hay, appoyntit be the brethrein to supplie the place that day, hes delaitit the fault and offence of the said Mr. Andro to the people, the said Mr. Andro in all humilitie sall confess his offence to God, his brethrein, and the partie offendit, and sall sit down upon his kneis and ask God mercie for the same. The same being done the Baillies and sum of the honest men of the parochin sall receive him be the hand." To do the Presbytery justice, the members were as impartial in their punishment of offenders as they were in the objects of their persecution.¹

This was not the first time Mr. Andro had been in trouble. On 18th May, 1599, he had been summoned before the Bailies and Town Council for encroaching upon his neighbour's property, when the magistrates found against him.²

One good work, however, must be recorded in his favour. In 1597, the news reached him that Hugh Barclay of Ladyland had seized Ailsa Craig, with the intention of provisioning and fortifying it preparatory to handing it over to the Spaniards. Knox immediately gathered together a band of men, not one of whom, however, belonged to Paisley, and invaded the island. By Knox and his followers Barclay was pressed so hard that, rather than be taken, he jumped into the sea and was drowned. For this Mr. Andro suffered with the just. His good was evil spoken of. Barclay's friends took the matter up, and notwithstanding Mr. Andro's commission, for he had received one from the King authorising him to seek out and apprehend papists and traffickers with the King of Spain, they began "to pursue the said Mr. Andro and his associates," and to make the execution of his commission a ground of deadly feud. It was Knox's turn now to be alarmed, and in his alarm he appealed for protection to the King, who caused a proclamation to be issued charging all magistrates and others within burghs to protect him.¹ He did signal service also in connection with the Spanish Blanks.²

In July, 1605, Knox was appointed Bishop of the Isles, but Paisley did not get rid of him for more than a couple of years. He desired to be a pluralist, and asked to be allowed a coadjutor; but neither the Town nor the Presbytery would listen to him.³ At last, on 12th November, 1607, after much negotiation, and as near as may be under compulsion, he voluntarily demitted his charge in Paisley, and took himself off to the Isles to indulge in his favourite pastime. He was one of the bishops who rode to Parliament in 1606. The author of some satirical lines on the bishops, published in 1609, says: "The Yles loves to deceive." Calderwood describes him as "ane aged man" in 1613.⁴ In 1611 he was translated to Raphoe in Ireland, and died in 1632.

Meanwhile, other things had been happening in Paisley. The origin of the Bridge of Paisley is unknown. Conjecture has assigned it to the fifteenth century, and to any one of the Abbots of that century. But, whoever its original builder was, at the end of the following century the bridge had become ruinous, and the Bailies and Town Council, unable to provide for its repair out of the Common Good, in consequence of the many other demands made upon that fund, sought and obtained an Act of Parliament authorising them to levy tolls at the bridge for the purpose of its maintenance. The Act is dated 16th January, 1598, and authorised the levying of toll upon every horse, cow, and sheep that crossed the bridge during the next nineteen years.¹

In 1601 occurs the first mention of leprosy in the burgh.² This, however, was probably not its first appearance in the town. The disease was common in Scotland from the earliest times. Enactments concerning it occur among the most ancient laws of the Kingdom, and many years had to elapse before it was finally rooted out of the country.³

In the following year mention is first made in the extant Records of the Town Council of a more dreadful scourge. This was the plague. That this was not the first appearance of the plague in the Burgh is known from the Records of the Town Council of the City of Glasgow. According to these, it was here in 1588. Probably it had been a frequent visitor before. Its presence in the country is mentioned as far back as the seventh century.⁴ In 1348, a third part of the population of the country is calculated to have been carried off by it. An equally large number is supposed to have fallen before it in 1361. It was raging in Edinburgh in 1468, and again in 1514 and 1545; and in 1585 and 1587 it returned. The country, in short, was seldom free from it.⁵ The measures taken by the Town Council against

³ The measures taken to stamp out this and other diseases were at one time extremely cruel. "He that was trublit with the falling evil, or fallin draft or wod, or havand sic infirmitie as succeedis be heritage fra the fader to the son, was geldit, that his infeckit blude suld spreid na furthir. The wemen that was fallin lipper, or had ony othir infection of blude, was banist fra the cumpany of men; and gif scho consavit barne under sic infirmitie, baith the scho and hir barne war buryit quik" (alive). it, which were similar to those adopted in other parts of the country, will be seen on pages 248-50, 253, 264-65.

Among the names occurring in the Town Council Records for the year 1602, is that of Sir James Semple of "Bultreis." He appeared before the Town Council on the 9th March, and produced a commission from Lord Robert Semple, Sheriff Principal of Renfrewshire and Bailie of the Regality of Paisley, appointing him "his Sheriff and Baillie Depute of the Sheriffdome and Regalitie of Paislay." The commission was dated at Leith, the 17th of February, 1602. Sir James "gave his aith for the full and trew administratioun of justice in the said office and for ministering justice therein during the haill years and space therein contained." The oath was taken in presence of "the Richt Honourable James, Maister of Paisley, Provost of the samin, and the Baillies."

On the 14th October, 1603, the Master of Paisley again presided at the Town Council, when the Bailies were elected "by the Auld and New Counsale thairof and utheris." The appointment was as usual for one year and was made with the special advice and consent of the Master of Paisley. At the Head Court in October, 1616, Lyners were first appointed, and in the following October an act was passed directing Town Councillors to wear hats at Kirk and Council. The hats were not the plain black funnel-shaped things now in vogue. They were of a more elaborate description and much more costly than the homely bonnet.

In 1618, the same year that the Earl of Abercorn, "Lord Provost" of Paisley, died at Monkton, the Magistrates and Town Council endowed an hospital or alms-house for poor men. It was situated just outside the West Port on the High Street at the east corner of the road leading up to Orr Square, and had been built in 1613 with stones taken from the Church of St. Roche, which had long been in a ruinous condition. The endowment charter provides for the maintenance of the building and the support of six or more poor old men, feeble and unable to work, burgesses and inhabitants of the town, who were to be clad in gowns reaching to their ankles, tunics and bonnets, black or blue according to the taste of the Bailies and Council. Besides lodgings in the house, they were to have forty merks a year from the Common Good, sixty loads of peat and thirty loads of coal. In return they were to pray for the peace of the Church, for the King and Queen and country, for the Lords of Paisley, and for the prosperity of the Magistrates, Town Council, burgesses and Burgh of Paisley; they were also to ring the Hospital bell at 5 a.m. and 10 p.m., and the last bell of the day of preaching and prayers, and to keep the Hospital clean and its garden cultivated with herbs and flowers. The date of the charter is September 30, 1618.¹ According to the Town Council Records, the Earl of Abercorn on March 8th, 1618, fifteen days before his death, directed that "the annuals and obit silver which were paid of old to the priests in the Kirk of the said Burgh be annexed to the funds of the hospital." The annuals and the obit silver here referred to had been directed by the King, as has already been mentioned, to be set aside as part of the Grammar School Endowment. Probably the Earl was of opinion that he had as much right to dispose of the revenues of his Commendatory as the King.

The year after, an incident occurred in connection with a Paisley family which caused a considerable sensation in Ireland as well as in Scotland. While in France, John Hamilton, natural son of Alan Hamilton of Ferguslie, fell in with a Frenchwoman named Jaqueline Quenlie. According to Jaqueline's first story Hamilton had married her, and she had brought to him "great sums of money" and "twa cofferis full of silkis, sattine and velvette," and with these they had set off to Ireland on their way to Scotland. In Ireland Jaqueline suddenly found herself deserted. Hamilton had gone and married "ane Scottis woman, dochtir to umquhile Hercules Stewart," and had carried off the "twa cofferis." Jaqueline was in sore straits, but with the help of "sum Scottische and Englische," she made her way to Glasgow. There she enlisted the active interest of the Archbishop. The Chancellor Dunfermline was written to, Ferguslie House was searched, the two "cofferis" were found in it, and a warrant was issued for the apprehension of Hamilton and the "Scottis woman." When the warrant arrived in Edinburgh, where the pair appear to have been living, Hamilton had gone to Paisley but the "Scottis woman" was caught, and out of her "cloak bag" were produced "three elnis of crimsone velvet, twa elnis and ane quartar of grey changeing cullorit camelet, twa elnis of orange course Indiane satine, ane elne and three quarteris of quhite course satine, three quarteris rid damask, with some sarkis and linning cloathes." The case was brought before the Lords, and Jaqueline appeared, when to the astonishment of their Lordships, she protested, in spite of her former declarations, that she had never been married to Hamilton. On promising not to molest him, she was allowed to carry away the "twa cofferis."¹

In 1620 the Paisley Races were instituted. Attempts had been made before to start them. An Act was passed in the Town Council, on the 27th April, 1608, by which it was "concludit that ane silver bell be made of 4 oz. weight with all diligence for ane hors raiss yeirly." Nine years later, 8th May, 1617, mention is made of the "hand chenyie" and silver bells made for the horse race, but apparently the Acts were "not effectuat." It may be that the first Earl objected to the races and forbade them. The second Earl took them under his especial patronage. Associated with him were the Lords Semple, Ross, and Blantyre.²

² The first horse race in Scotland appears to have been held at Haddington in 1552. The practice was encouraged by James VI., but in 1621 an Act was passed to restrain betting in connection with racing as well as at card playing. The Act is somewhat curious. "Considering," it says, "the monyfold evillis and inconvenientis whiche ensue upoun carding and dyceing and horse races whiche ar now over muche frequented in this cuntrey to the gryit prejudice off the liegis; and becaus honest men ought not to expect that anye wyunning hade at anye of the games abonewritten can do thame guid

During his minority, the young Earl had spent most of his time in France and England, and the business of the family had been managed by Marion Boyd, his mother, the first Countess of Abercorn, a woman of great energy and determination. In 1624, in the absence of her son, she presided over the Town Council, when met for the election of Bailies. For a long time she had conformed outwardly to the established religion, but all the time had had strong leanings towards the Catholic Church, and after her husband's death, in 1618, she made little attempt to hide them. Mr. Andro Knox had long gone to the Isles, and the Protestants were fighting among themselves, but the Presbytery of Paisley had not forgotten how to persecute. Some of its earlier records are lost, but when those which are extant take up the story on 20th April, 1626, the Presbytery is found "dealing" with James Stewart of Caversbank, John Baillies and Johnet his spouse, "anent their not frequenting the house of God for hearing the word of God preached and for not communicating at occasioun offered," and with two "servitors to the Countess of Abercorn," who, because they neither attended preaching nor communicated with others of the congregation, "gave just occasioun of their apostacie and defectioun from the true religion," etc.¹ Fifteen days later a process was started against the Countess herself—a proceeding of which she had already been warned by authority of the Synod and Assembly held at Glasgow on the fourth of the preceding month.

The minister of the parish at the time was a relative of her own, Mr. Robert Boyd of Tochrig, one of the best scholars of the day. On his appointment the Countess had received him coldly and refused him possession of the manse. He was lodged instead in the "forehouse" of the Abbey, into which, one Sunday afternoon, while he was absent preaching, the Master of Paisley and some others broke, flung the minister's books down upon the floor, and locked the doors. A complaint was laid before the Privy Council, but on the Master expressing his sorrow, at the intercession of the minister, the matter was allowed to drop. Soon after, the Bailies attempted to put the minister in possession of his manse, but on going to it they found the locks filled with stones and other things. As Boyd went away he was attacked and abused by a rabble of women. The Archbishop complained, and the case was carried to Edinburgh; "and there the matter being handled in Council and reasoned where the Bishop of Glasgow was and five or six other bishops were, all that was resolved upon by the Council was, that it was promised by the Earl and his brother [the Master of Paisley], and their friends, that the minister, Mr. Robert Boyd, should be repossessed, and no more impediments made to him, and no order taken with the delinquents and contempt done by the rascally women."¹ But Boyd had had enough of Paisley, and absolutely refused to remain its minister. He was succeeded by Mr. John Hay, minister of Killellan.

Though the case against the Master of Paisley was settled, the process against the Countess, his mother, still went on. One of her servants, Thomas Algeo, who was believed to be a priest, was prosecuted with the utmost rigour. Time after time the Countess also was visited, summoned, and prayed for. In her distress she fled to the Archbishop for protection, who for some time managed to restrain the Presbytery. But in the beginning of 1627, her son, the Earl, returned, and openly declared himself a Catholic, when the scandal so increased, that the Archbishop was no longer able to screen her. The Earl was included in the same condemnation as his mother, and the proceedings against them and their servants dragged on slowly and bitterly. On the 20th January, 1628, the Countess was excommunicated.¹ The Earl fled the country. The Countess sought refuge in Edinburgh. There she was apprehended and cast into the Tolbooth. Her imprisonment caused her to suffer from "many heavy diseases, so that this whole winter she was almost tied to her bed, and she now found a daily decay and weakness in her person." For six months more she was confined in the Cannongate Jail. At last in March, 1631, after being some three years under restraint, she was permitted to go to Paisley "for the outred of some weighty affairs," on condition that while there she should not "reset Thomas Algeo nor no Jesuits, and return by a certain day, under penalty of five thousand merks."² The poor lady never returned. She reached Paisley utterly broken down, suffering from squalor carceris, and died shortly after her arrival, the victim of an odious persecution, as cruel in its spirit as that of the Netherlands and Spain.

The process against the Earl, her son, though dropped for a time, was, on his return to the country, immediately revived. His wife also was proceeded against. The Assembly took in hand to superintend the education of their children. As late as the year 1647, the Commission of the General Assembly was still "dealing" with the Earl, and on the 8th July in that year it directed the Presbytery of Edinburgh to confer with him as long as he remained in Edinburgh, and "if he go to his house in the countrie" it recommended the Presbytery of Paisley to confer with him there.³

The Earl was present at the annual election in Paisley, 4th October, 1630, when, according to custom, he chose one of the Bailies, the other being chosen by the Town Council.

In the year 1634, the Earl proposed to quit all the superiorities of the great vassals of the Abbey lands and to retain those only which did not exceed in yearly value the sum of five hundred merks. He proposed further to resign his interest in the regality so far as the higher class of vassals were concerned. These proposals he laid before the King, who wrote to the Lord High Treasurer that he intended to accept them ; but nothing came of the negotiations until the year 1642, when the feu-duties and casualties of the great vassals were renounced by the Earl in favour of the King. The same year, the King granted him a Charter of Confirmation and Novodamus, and promised to ratify the same in the next Parliament.¹

In 1645, towards the end of the year, the plague, which for some time had been more or less prevalent in various parts of England, broke out again in Paisley, and raged with great virulence. It was accompanied by a great scarcity of all kinds of provisions, the year being one of those years of dearth with which the country was then frequently visited. The people were reduced to great straits, and application was made to the neighbouring city of Glasgow for assistance. Glasgow was then free from the plague, though two years later it suffered so heavily from it that a proposal was seriously entertained for the temporary removal of the University to Paisley ; but in December, 1645, when the Council met to consider the application from the neighbouring burgh, it was resolved that in "consideratioune of the lamentable estaite and conditioune of the poore people within the toune of Pasley, and of the hard strait they ar brought to by God's visitatioune of the plague of pestilence lying upon them now this long tyme, for their present supplie . . . to bestow upon thame twentie bolles meill."² Later on a petition was presented to Parliament by the inhabitants, praying that they might be exempted from all public burdens "in respect of their present distress and condition till they recover some strength."¹ Whether the prayer was granted is not known. The probability is it was not, as no further mention is made of it. In the spring of 1646, the plague began to abate; and, in the month of June following, it had entirely disappeared, though it was still raging in Glasgow and elsewhere.

Before the burgh had thoroughly recovered from the effects of this dreadful visitation, the Earl of Abercorn, moved by some reason not stated, though it is not at all improbable that he was moved thereto by the treatment he was receiving at the hands of the Presbytery, began to assert his right to exercise the prerogatives and privileges which belonged to him as the superior of the town and the successor of the ancient Abbots, and the relations between him and the Town Council, which apparently had hitherto been cordial, at once became strained.

When the Head Court met in 1647 to make the appointments for the year, the Earl claimed the right to appoint both the Bailies; the Town Council, on the other hand, maintained that the appointment of one of the two belonged to them. Legal advice was taken by the Town Council in the matter, but in the following year the Earl appointed both the Bailies. He also proposed to encroach further upon the Town's liberties, and in particular to curtail the rights of the Town in regard to the mosslands. His factor or steward, indeed, had already taken possession of that part of them known as the "Monks' Roomes," and the inhabitants began to feel that the liberties which they had enjoyed for over a hundred and fifty years were in danger of being taken from them. Legal advice was again sought; much consultation followed, and on 11th May, 1648, the ancient charters of James IV. and George Shaw, by which the Town was erected into a free burgh of barony, were ratified by Parliament.² This, however, was regarded as a merely temporary measure. According to both these charters, as well as according to the charter of infestment granted to Lord Claud Hamilton in 1587, the Earl and his successors had still the right to veto the election of the Town Council, of the Bailies, and of any of the Town's officials. They had also the power to remove any or all of them, and to appoint others in their places, without requiring the consent of the inhabitants of the Burgh. The Bailies and Town Council were now no longer contented with the ancient order of things. They were desirous of a larger freedom, and on 26th November, 1649, "it was concluded be the Baillies and Counsell that with all possible diligence there sal be ane means and endeavour used for obtaining ane new Charter of the Burghe, with ane other new Charter of all the tenements that are holden be the Toune of the Erle of Abercorne formerlie, with the teinds includit, to be holden of the King's Majestie." Some steps were taken to give effect to this resolution, but the distracted state of the country rendered its speedy accomplishment impossible, and a number of years had to elapse before the liberties of the Town were placed upon a satisfactory footing.

For the present, indeed, and for some time to come, the Bailies and Town Council were fully occupied with other matters. During the early part of the Civil War the town sided with the English Parliament and against the King. When the Covenanting army marched on Duns Hill the Presbytery sent one of its number to act as chaplain; when Leslie crossed the Border the prayers of the Presbytery followed him; and, again, in 1643, when the Puritans sought the assistance of the Scots, among the three thousand men with whom Leslie entered England were both soldiers from Paisley, and ministers or chaplains from the Presbytery. But when Charles II. was proclaimed King by the Marquess of Argyll on condition of his strict observance of the Covenant, both Town and Presbytery espoused his cause; and when the Parliament, to whom they had hitherto rendered help, resolved to send Cromwell to invade the country, it was "concludit be the Baillies and Counsell that all inhabitants within the town sall be restraint in tym coming during tym of levying to tak on to be sodjours with ony bot the towne," and further, "that twa hundred pundis for the outreik of ane troupe horse sall be imposed on the burgesses, heritors, and inhabitants of the towne." This "troupe horse" was present on 3rd September, 1650, at the battle of Dunbar, which, in consequence of the fanaticism of its ecclesiastical leaders, ended so disastrously for the Scottish army.

Later on, under the guidance of its ministers, the Town joined the Remonstrants, whose headquarters were at Kilmarnock and Dumfries. Cromwell was in Glasgow in October, 1650, and again in the following April, but the Bailies and Town Council still went on with their military preparations. Assessments were laid upon the inhabitants for the support of the King and for the maintenance of the royal army, the town was "put in a position of war," guard-masters were appointed, and troops were drilled under the command of Colonels Strachan and Kerr. Between Cromwell's two visits to Glasgow, on 1st December, 1650, Kerr attacked the English lying at Hamilton, when he was wounded and taken prisoner, and his troops scattered and pursued to Paisley and Kilmarnock. Four months later the English were in the town. Their stay, which was apparently short, seems to have been profitable rather than otherwise, at least to some. They had plenty of money, and the shopkeepers and others took the opportunity of raising their prices and thus secured a good share of it. They had also plenty of loot, which, being left behind on their departure, many of the inhabitants carefully concealed, probably with a view to appropriating it. When the Magistrates and Town Council heard of this, they were indignant and sent round the drummer to denounce the practice, and to order restitution to be made by the inhabitants of all goods which had been brought in to the town by the enemy from the surrounding farms.

After the defeat of the royal forces at Worcester, 3rd September, 1651, Paisley, like most other places in the Lowlands, was occupied by English troops. Their commander was one Captain Robeson, who, along with his officers, seems to have preferred the lodgings afforded by Castle Semple to residing in Paisley. The inhabitants had groaned under the assessments levied for the support of the royal army, but those levied by Robeson appear to have been heavier. In vain did the Town Council petition that their burdens might be lightened. Neither Robeson nor Major-General Deans, who commanded in the district and had his headquarters at Dumbarton, would abate them in the least. The demands of the soldiers were perpetual, and on one occasion Captain Robeson, not contented with the beds he had at Castle Semple, sent an order to the Town Council to provide him with three feather beds. The Magistrates and Town Council were now grown desperate, and flatly refused. It would almost appear as if they were of opinion that they had the law on their side, for they boldly challenged the captain to come into the town and take them, resolving that if he did, the cost should be borne by the whole of the householders, "but prejudice of remedy whenever it may be had."

Little respect was shown by the English soldiery either to Town or Presbytery. For a time the burgh was in a state of complete disorganisation. The Tolbooth was in the hands of the soldiery, the authority of the Bailies and Council was ignored, the Court hitherto held by the Bailies for the settlement of disputes among the tradespeople was abolished, and the elections formerly made at the Head Courts were suspended. On the 10th of August, 1653, the Presbytery, which had for so many years been almost all powerful in the Town and neighbourhood, was unexpectedly "invadit" by "Captain Greene, one of the English army," who "by violence interrupted their sitting, carried the members present out to a house in the town, and detained them as prisoners, alleging that all Presbyteries were discharged and had no power to sit." A month later the same Captain Green appeared among them again, "declairing that he was come to sit with the Presbytery," and "exhibited a warrant from Colonell Lillbure for that purpose." In the Town things went from bad to worse, and on 4th January, 1655, "the Council nominated John Wallace, notar, one of their number, to go with all expedition to Edinburgh or Dalkeith to General Monk, and to supplicate him for liberty to choose their own Magistrates and to administer justice, and do others of the Town's necessary affairs, in respect that one of the Baillies is deceased, the other in all appearance on the point of death, and they like to have no obedience of the inhabitants."¹ Wallace was successful. Order was once more restored in the Town, and justice administered, though, on the death of Bailie Vaus, recourse had again to be had to General Monk for permission to elect a Bailie in his place. The permission was granted, and John Kelso was elected, the election being held in the presence of the Knight of Nether Pollock, 7th May, 1655.

By this time the English troops had been removed from the Town. By this time, too, another change had taken place. Amid all the wars and vicissitudes through which the country had been passing, neither the Presbytery of Paisley nor the General Assembly had abated in the least degree their desire for absolute uniformity in religion or their zeal to find out and prosecute those who refused to conform. If anything, indeed, their tempers had become more grim and fierce. At anyrate, the proceedings which had been instituted against the Earl of Abercorn by the Presbytery of Paisley, and then carried to the Assembly, had never been allowed wholly to drop. They dragged their slow length along until at last the Earl, having refused to satisfy the Assembly on certain points, was in 1649 excommunicated by that Court and ordered to transport himself out of the Kingdom.

This sentence of banishment was actually enforced, and the Earl, in consequence of the persecutions to which he and his family were subjected, was compelled to part with his estates and to leave the country. In 1652, he sold the lordship of Paisley to the Earl of Angus for the sum of £160,000 Scots.² About a year later the greater part of the lordship was purchased from the latter by Lord Cochrane,³ who was shortly afterwards created Earl of Dundonald.

In the beginning of 1656, the Town Council made another attempt to carry out their project of getting rid of a mid-superior and holding their burghal property directly of the Crown. Negotiations were entered into with Lord Cochrane and his son, the Master of Cochrane. They were continued for upwards of two years, and on 3rd May, 1658, the agreement¹ entered into between the two parties was finally completed and signed. On 5th December, 1665, a new charter² based upon the Cochrane Contract was granted to the Town by Charles II., "which is regarded as the Magna Charta of the rights and liberties of Paisley." According to the custom of the time, four dozen new trenchers, an article for the manufacture of which Paisley was then famed, were sent to Lord Warniston, and two dozen to Judge Ker, for the services they had rendered the Town in connection with the new charter.

In 1690, two Acts were passed by Parliament in favour of the Town. By the first, the Magistrates and Town Council were authorised to hold two additional yearly fairs, one on the first Thursday of February, and the other on the second Tuesday of May. The privilege was granted in order that by means of the increased revenues the fairs were expected to bring, the town might be enabled to pay its debts, and to restore its broken fortunes.³

The other Act was passed for the purpose of placing the Town Council in the same position as the Town Councils of royal burghs with respect to ruinous houses, and especially in respect to the house of James Stewart of Caversbank. Stewart's house is described as "lyeing in the most publick place of the High Street . . . in view of the Cross and mercat place." It had been in ruins and uninhabited for upwards of thirty years, and the Act gave the Magistrates power, on the failure of the owner, to pull it down and to rebuild it under certain conditions.⁴ It speaks well for the condition and prosperity of Paisley that this was the only house complained of. In most other towns of the time ruinous houses were numerous.

The burgh, as delimited by Abbot George Shaw, extended from the east side of the bridge of Paisley upon the Water of Cart along the High Street, or the "King's Highway," to the vennel opposite the Wellmeadow, at the head of Lady Lane, then north by the ditch of the lands of Oakshawside to Oakshaw Wood, where, turning east, the boundary ran along the ridge of Oakshaw as far as Stoney Brae, "the passage to the Common," where it again turned north till it reached, at the foot of the brae, Snawdun Burn, whence it ran to the Broom Dyke, and along that to the Cart. On the south side, the boundary of the Burgh was the Espedair to about the foot of South Campbell Street, thence to Espedair Street, along the west side of which it ran to St. Ninian's Cross, which stood at the head of Causeyside Street. The boundary then ran west through St. Ninian's Croft to above the west end of Whitefauld, then north to St. Mirin's Burn, where it turned west for some distance, and then ran north to the ditch of Oakshawside. The burgh included also the old town in the Seedhill.

The Town had its ports or gates. The East or Brig Port stood at the east end of the bridge; the West Port was between what is now No. 34 on the south side of the High Street and No. 83 on the north side. The South Burn or St. Mirin's Port, stood at the foot of St. Mirin's Wynd. Opposite what is now No. 14 Moss Street stood the Moss Raw Port. In the Barn Yard or School Wynd, probably at the head of Stoney Brae, was the Barn Yard Port. The Town was not walled; but for its protection every feuar was required to protect his "yard" with a strongly built dyke on the side open to the country. There were houses beyond the Ports or Gates, but these may be regarded as being in the suburbs. The streets and localities mentioned down to the seventeenth century are the "King's Highway," or High Street, Wellmeadow, Brumelands, St. Mirin's Vennel, Calsasyd, Longait, which formed part of the present Canal Street, Daws Gait, the Orchart, Orchard Yaird, the Common Passage or Kert Walk, Bladoyard, Moss Gait or Raw, Barnyarde, Sclatbank or Caversbank, Oakshawhead, Oakshawside, Snawdun or Sneddon, Kelso-land, Castlehead, Causa-end, Causeyside, Crossflat, Easter and Wester Gallow Hill, Prior's Croft, Quarrel Hill, Gaistlaw, and Whitefald, Murray's Mayling, Guldly Acre, the Smyddis, Smyddyhill, Fisherraw, Lylesland, Seedhill. In Seedhill no vennels or streets are mentioned from the fact, perhaps, that there are no feu charters in connection with it, but that it contained passages or vennels is certain. As before remarked, there was a village green there.

A few of the houses were probably built of polished ashlar stone, but the greater part of them were built of rough stone faced with wood. The roofs were thatched and rigged with turfs, but two at least were covered with tiles. One was a house built by Sir John Mous, and occupied before 1606 by Robert Lord Semple. It was near the Market Cross on the north side of the street. The other stood near to it on the same side of the street, between the tenement of John Inglis on the east and the tenement of Sir John Mous on the west and north. Elizabeth Carlhill was infested in them by Archbishop Hamilton, in January, 1556. Each house had its own yard or garden, and these were sometimes of considerable extent. At the Cross was the "Heyt House" or Tolbooth, or Town Hall—Pretorium it is often called—which Abbot George Shaw gave to the burgh, and where the Town Council held its meetings and the business of the burgh was transacted.

The population appears to have consisted of burgesses, non-burgesses, stallingers, widows, and what were called single women. Burgesses were those whose names were entered upon the burgess roll of the burgh, and who as a rule were the owners of tenements. Stallingers were men who, without becoming burgesses, had purchased the right to carry on their trade or business within the burgh for a specified period. The non-burgess class included the sons of burgesses who had not yet been enrolled, labourers, and orray men. Single women were unmarried women who were not servants. They were forbidden to live alone or together, and were obliged either to take service or leave the burgh.¹ Now and then Egyptians or gypsies are mentioned, but then as now they were birds of passage, though the visits of some of them seem to have been frequent. The priests of the altars in the Abbey Church also resided in the burgh, as well as one or two noblemen and their servants.

One, if not the principal, industry carried on by the inhabitants of the burgh was farming. Other industries carried on are indicated by the following designations which occur in the Town Council Records:—Merchant (shopkeeper), wright, smith, tailor, cordiner, tanner, weaver, baker, flesher, miller, cook, saddler, chapman, herd. There were also maltsters, bleachers, alehouse or tavern keepers, dyers, fullers, masons, and in connection with the Abbey a sculptor is mentioned. George Marshall, and after him James Gilchrist, held the office of forester of the wood of Monkshaw. Forests and game imply the existence of gamekeepers, huntsmen, and woodmen.

Wheat, oats, beir, and beans are mentioned. So also are hay, "ait stray," hens, sheep, ky, oxen, a horse, a "meir," a "soril hors," a "grey naig," "fat sheep."

Among implements of husbandry mentioned are the plough (pleuche), pleuch-bemis, a graip, "shoills" (shovels), barrows.

Of textile fabrics we have harding, linen, "lint," small lyming, buckram (a bukrom aprone), gray cloth, Yorkshire claith, London cloth, flannel, damask, satin, silk, velvet.

Other goods are "merchant geir," "aik burdis," a "kist," "cofferis," a saddle. We hear, too, of silver spoons, gold rings, and a "silver hart" sold by a chapman, a "barkit kowhyd," whingers, and pistolats. A "blew bannat" occurs; and "a barel of saip" is mentioned.

We hear of a "stand of claithes" valued at ten pounds, a bed "furneist with claithes, price aucht punds," a "dudie scheit," "ane trein pynt stoip," a "lang settil," a "chandeir," a “spyning quheile,” “a peit creil,” a “baik brod,” a brass pan, a “pewdir plait,” a brass pot.¹ Beyond these there are few references to household furniture or to articles of clothing except aprons and shoes.

The drinks were ale and wine. Wheat meal as well as oat meal was used. Beef, mutton, and hens were used for food; and of fish, mention is made of salmon and herring. There are traces of salmon poaching, and of a close time for salmon.

According to the Charter of Erection, the Abbots retained the right of appointing and dismissing the Provost, Bailies, and Town Council in their own hands. Their power to dismiss seems never to have been used. As a rule, they appear to have left the burgesses pretty much to themselves. Down to the time of Lord Claud Hamilton there was no Provost. He and the two Earls of Abercorn were called Provost or Lord Provost, but no Provost was chosen by the Town Council until 5th October, 1812. In the absence of Lord Claud, the Earl of Abercorn, and the Master of Paisley, the two Bailies presided over the Town Council. If one of the Bailies was also absent, the other presided alone. From the beginning, the custom appears to have been for the Abbot Superior to appoint one of the Bailies and for the Town Council and community to elect the other. The second Earl of Abercorn claimed the right to appoint both, and, on more than one occasion, did appoint them. The Bailies were elected for a year, and were eligible for re-election, but by an Act passed in 1633, any Bailie who had served in two successive years was ineligible for re-election for a third year. The Town Councillors held office for a year, and were eligible for re-election. During their first year of office they could be chosen Bailies, but in 1633 this was prohibited, and no Town Councillor was allowed to be a Bailie unless he had previously served on the Council for at least a year.

The Town Council met once a fortnight, and as often as was necessary. The Head Court met three times a year, after Michaelmas, Yule, and Easter, when all the burgesses were required to be present wearing their armour and carrying their weapons. Those who were absent without sufficient excuse were fined.

The Bailies and Town Councillors were not always punctual, nor were they always attentive to their duties. In 1601 an Act was passed by which a fine of six and eightpence was imposed upon Town Councillors and of thirteen and fourpence upon Bailies who were absent after having received notice to attend the meeting the night before. Little order or method appears to have been observed in the conduct of business. Often there was much talking and interruption, and little attention to the business in hand, and on 15th October, 1601, an Act was passed by which "all . . . that in tyme of voiting speiks unspieirit at or above thair voce" were ordered to be fined eightpence for every offence.

The Town's officials were the Town Clerk, the Procurators-Fiscal, and the Treasurer. One year there were four Procurators-Fiscal, all holding office at the same time; frequently there were two. The Treasurer was chosen every year, "for the ingadding of the commoun guidis of the burghe," and was allowed five pounds for "doing his diligence thairin." There were also the master of works, pinders, lyners, tasters, appreciators of flesh, visitors, measurers, the sergeants or officers, the drummer, piper, and herd.

Besides administering justice, the Bailies and Town Council attended to the feuing of the lands belonging to the burgh, the management of the Commonland, the levying of tolls and customs, the admission of burgesses and stallingers, the regulation of the markets and fairs, and the price of bread, ale, candles, and other commodities. They were responsible for the peace of the town. In accordance with the Charter of Erection, they took as their administrative code the Laws and Customs of the Royal Burghs, and enforced the Acts passed for Royal Burghs by the Three Estates.

The offences they had to deal with were peat-stealing and turf-stealing, pykry, flyting, assaults, injury to property, and deforcement of officers. They acted as a Small Debt Court, and as a court for the administration of wills. After the Reformation they dealt with cases of Sabbath desecration and non-attendance at prayers, preachings and communion, with cases of fornication and adultery, and with other offences formerly dealt with by the Church.

The punishments they inflicted were fines (unlaws), imprisonment, confinement in the stocks and joughs, carting through the town, branding with a hot iron, banishment, confiscation of goods, forfeiture of holdings. The fines, as need hardly be said, were in Scots money. In cases of imprisonment in the Tolbooth, offenders were at first given the key and told to go and incarcerate themselves. Later it was found necessary to give them in charge to the officer with instructions to lock them up and to make him responsible for their safe custody. Carting, branding, and banishment were apparently reserved for great or incorrigible offenders, most of whom, singularly enough, appear to have been women. Offences of the lighter sort were sometimes purged by a slight fine or by a public confession. At times the fine was dispensed with, when public confession of guilt and request made on bended knees for pardon from the individual offended were deemed a sufficient punishment. One punishment, because of its tremendous effect, was seldom inflicted, viz., the "crying down" of the freedom of a burghess. With the crying down of his freedom, a burghess forfeited all his privileges in the burgh and became practically an outlaw.

The rule of the Bailies and Town Council was paternal, careful, and prudent, and appears to have given general satisfaction. The few complaints that were made against them were evidently ebullitions of temper rather than well-founded or deliberate charges, and were invariably withdrawn when challenged. In matters of religion the Bailies and Council acted according to their lights. Their public spirit was unquestionable, and they laboured diligently and successfully in the defence and enlargement of the liberties of the burgh.

Carta hereditarii officii senescallatus Scotie et de diversis terris.¹

MALCOLMUS rex Scottorum, episcopis, abbatibus, comitibus, baronibus, justiciis, vicecomitibus, prepositis, ministris, cunctisque aliis probis hominibus, clericis et laicis, Francis et Anglis, Scotis et Gallowidensibus, totius terre sue tam presentibus quam futuris, salutem. Notum sit vobis omnibus quod priusquam arma suscepi, concessi, et hac mea carta confirmavi Waltero filio Alani dapifero meo et heredibus suis de feodo et hereditate donationem quam rex David avus meus ei dedit, scilicet Renfrew et Passeleth et Polloc et Talahec et Kerkert et le Drep et le Mutrene et Eglissham et Lochinauche et Innerwick, cum omnibus istarum terrarum pertinentiis. Et similiter ei hereditarie dedi et hac mea carta confirmavi senescalliam meam, tenendam sibi et heredibus suis de me et heredibus meis liberaliter in feodo et hereditate ita bene et ita plenarie sicut rex David ei senescalliam suam melius et plenarius dedit et concessit, et sicut ipse eam melius et plenarius ab eo tenuit. Preterea ego ipse eidem Waltero in feodo et hereditate dedi et hac eadem carta confirmavi, pro servitio quod ipse regi David et mihi ipsi fecit, Prethe quantum rex David in manu sua tenuit, et Inchenan et Steintum et Halestonesden et Legardsuode et Birchinsyde; Et preterea in unoquoque burgo meo et in unaquaque dominica gista mea per totam terram meam, unum plenarium toftum ad hospitia sibi in eo facienda, et cum unoquoque tofto virginti acras terre. Quare volo et precipio ut idem Walterus et heredes ejus in feodo et hereditate teneant de me et heredibus meis in capite omnia prenominata, tam illa que ipse habet ex donatione regis David quam illa que ex mea habet donatione, cum omnibus eorum pertinentiis et rectitudinibus, et per rectas divisas omnium prenominarum terrarum, libere et quiete, honorifice et in pace, cum sacca et socca, cum tol et them et infangtheeffe, in villis, in scallingis, in campis, in pratis, in pascuis, in moris, in aquis, in molendinis, in piscariis, in forestis, in bosco et plano, in viis, in semitis, sicut aliquis ex baronibus meis liberius et quietius feudum suum de me tenet: Faciendo mihi et heredibus meis de illo feudo servitium quinque militum. Testibus Ernaldo episcopo Sancti Andree, Herberto episcopo de Glasgow, Johanne abbate de Kelkow, Willelmo abbate de Melros, Waltero cancellario, Willelmo et David fratribus regis, comite Gospatric, comite Duncano, Richardo de Moreuill, Gilberto de Umphramvill, Roberto de Bruis, Radolpho de Soulis, Philipo de Colueill, Willelmo de Sumervilla, Hugone Riddell, Davide Olifard, Valdevo filio comitis Gospatric, Willelmo de Moreuill, Baldwino de la Mar, Liolfo filio Maccus. Apud arcem de Roxburgh, in festo Sancti Johannis Baptiste, anno regni nostri v^{to}.

Malcolm, King of Scots, to the bishops, abbots, earls, barons, justices, sheriffs, provosts, officials, and all other good men of his whole land, clerics and laics, French and English, Scots and Galwegians, present and future, greeting: Be it known to you all that before I received knighthood I granted, and by this my charter I have confirmed, to Walter Fitz Alan, my steward, and to his heirs in fee and heritage, the donation which King David, my grandfather, gave to him, namely Renfrew and Passeleth and Polloc and Talahec and Kerkert and the Drep and the Mutrene and Eglisham and Lochinauche and Innerwick, with all the pertinents of these lands. And likewise I gave to him in heritage, and by this my charter I have confirmed to him, the office of my steward to be held by him and his heirs of me and my heirs freely, in fee and heritage, as well and as amply as King David gave and granted to him his stewardship, and as he himself best and most amply held it from him. Moreover, I myself have given, and by this same charter have confirmed, to the same Walter in fee and heritage, for the service which he rendered to King David and to myself, Prethe as much as King David held in his own hand, and Inchenan and Steintun and Halestonesden and Legardsuode and Birchinsyde; and farther, in every one of my burghs, and in every one of my demesne dwellings, throughout my whole land, a full toft to make him a residence there, and with each toft twenty acres of land. Wherefore I will and command that the same Walter and his heirs hold in fee and heritage of me and my heirs in chief all the forenamed subjects, both those which he has by gift of King David and those which he has of my gift, with all their pertinents and rights, and by the right bounds of all the foresaid lands, freely and quietly, honourably and in peace, with sac and soc, with tol and them and infangtheeffe, in vils and shealings, in plains, in meadows, in pastures, in moors, in waters, in mills, in fishings, in forests, in wood and plain, in roads and paths, as any one of my barons most freely and quietly holds his fief of me; Rendering to me and my heirs for that fief, the service of five knights. Witnesses, Arnold, bishop of St. Andrews, Herbert, bishop of Glasgow, John abbot of Kelso, William abbot of Melrose, Walter the chancellor, William and David the King's brothers, Earl Gospatrick, Earl Duncan, Richard de Moreville, Gilbert de Umphramville, Robert de Brus, Ralph de Soulis, Philip de Colville, William de Somerville, Hugh Riddell, David Olifard, Valdev, son of Earl Gospatrick, William de Moreville, Baldwin de la Mar, Liolf, son of Maccus. At the castle of Roxburgh, on the feast of St. John the Baptist, in the fifth year of our reign.

Carta foundationis monasterii de Pasleto.²

SCIANT presentes et futuri, quod ego Walterus filius Alani, dapifer Regis Scotie, pro anima regis David et regis Henrici, et comitis Henrici, et pro animabus omnium parentum meorum et benefactorum, et pro salute corporis et anime regis Malcolmi, necnon et mei ipsius, ad honorem Dei, ipsius operante gratia, constituam quandam domum religionis infra terram meam de Passelay, secundum ordinem fratrum de Wenloc, videlicet secundum ordinem monachorum Cluniacensium, communi consensu et assensu Prioris et conventus de Wenloc. Et ad domum illam construendam habeo de domo de Wenloc xiii. fratres; et prior qui de illis xiii. predicte domui regende preficietur, per me et per meum consilium eligitur: et si contingat ipsum priorem vel per mortem vel per criminalem prevaricationem a prioratu suo deponi, per me et per meum consilium deponetur, et qui ei in prioratum prefatum succedet per me et per meum consilium eligitur, et hoc de fratribus ipsius domus quam fundabo, si in ea inveniri poterit persona discreta et conveniens ad dignitatem talem suscipiendam; sin autem, de fratribus predicte domus de Wenloc quemcunque voluero, excepto Priore ipso, eligam ad regendam domum quam statuam: et ita quod domus illa non erit respiciens de ulla re ad domum de Wenloc, nisi tantummodo de recognitione ordinis. Has quidem libertates, ad opus domus illius quam statuam, impetrabit mihi Prior et conventus de Wenloc ab Abbate monachorum Cluniacensium, et a Priore de Charitate, qui easdem libertates religioni de Passelet cartis suis confirmabunt. Pro hiis autem libertatibus habendis, domui predicte de Wenloc dabo in perpetuam elemosinam unam plenariam maysuram in burgo meo de Renfru, et unum rete piscatorium ad salmonea capiendos per proprias aquas meas, et vi. retia ad allecia capienda, et unum batelum. Libertates autem iste servabuntur illibate inter me et fratres de Wenloc et alios Cluniacensis ordinis, et post decessum meum, inter heredes meos et predictos fratres presentes et futuros. Testibus istis, Engelrano cancellario Regis Scotie, Abbate de Rievallo nomine Aielred, Simone Cellar de Wardun, Ricardo capellano Regis Scotie, Simone fratre Engelrani cancellarii, Roberto de Costentin, Simone fratre Walteri filii Alani. Apud Fodrigeiam.

Know all present and to come, that I, Walter, son of Alan, Steward of the King of Scotland, for the soul of King David, of King Henry, and of Earl Henry, and for the souls of all my parents and benefactors, and for the salvation of the body and soul of King Malcolm and of myself, to the honour of God and by the power of His grace, will establish a certain house of devotion on my lands of Paisley, according to the Order of the brethren of Wenlock, that is, according to the Order of the monks of Cluny, with the common consent and assent of the Prior and Convent of Wenlock. And for the forming of that house I [shall] have thirteen brethren from the house of Wenlock; and the Prior, who shall be preferred from among these thirteen to the rule of the aforesaid house, shall be chosen through me and through my counsel; and if it happen that the prior be deposed from his priorate, either by death or by criminally betraying his trust, he shall be deposed by me and by my counsel; and he who shall succeed him in the priorate shall be chosen through me and by my counsel, and that from the brethren of the house that I shall found, if a person of prudence and suitable for receiving such a dignity can be found therein; but if not, I shall choose from among the brethren of the said house of Wenlock, the Prior himself excepted, whomever I will for governing the house which I shall establish; so that it shall not be dependent in any way upon the house of Wenlock, except as to recognition of the order. These privileges for the use of the house I shall found, the Prior and convent of Wenlock shall obtain for me from the Abbot of the monks of Clugny and from the Prior of La Charite, who shall confirm these privileges to religion in Paisley by their charters; and for obtaining these privileges I shall give to the aforesaid house of Wenlock, in perpetual alms, one full measure of land in my burgh of Renfrew, and one fishing net for taking salmon in my waters, and six nets for catching herrings, and one boat. And these privileges shall be preserved uninjured between me and the brethren of Wenlock and others of the Clugniac Order, and after my decease, between my heirs and the brethren foresaid present and to come. Before these witnesses: Ingelram, chancellor of the King of Scotland; the Abbot of Rievaux, by name Ailred; Simon, cellarer of Warden; Richard, chaplain of the King of Scotland; Simon, brother of Ingelram the chancellor; Robert of Costentin; Simon, brother of Walter the son of Alan. At Fotheringay.

secundum Pulprestwic usque in mare, et a mari secundum torrentem inter terram Arnaldi et terram de Prestwic usque ad divisas Simonis Loccardi; Et illam ecclesiam de burgo meo de Prestwic cum omnibus pertinentiis suis; Et totam salinam in Kalenter que fuit Herberti camerarii. Dedi eis similiter et confirmavi decimam plenariam de venatione mea cum coriis, et preter hec, omnia corria cervarum quas cepero in Forineisun; Et quatuor solidos ad luminare ecclesie de molendino de Passelet; Et ut molant ibi absque multura, proximi illi quem molentem invenerint, preter meipsum de blado quod exierit de proprio granario meo; Et preter hec, plenariam decimam de ipso molendino de Passelet, et de omnibus molendinis que habeo vel habiturus sum. Dedi eis insuper et concessi et hac mea carta confirmavi decimas de cunctis vastis meis, et de omnibus terris que in foresto meo edificate sunt vel edificabuntur; Et omnia aisiamenta foresti mei de Passelet; Et pasturam in eo, domui sue et animalibus suis et porcis suis propriis, sicut mihi, et suis hominibus ut meis. Si autem contigerit quod ego vel aliquis heredum meorum peccora nostra infra forestum habere voluerimus, providebitur eis una pars de foresto que sibi et animalibus suis sufficere possit. Huic autem predicte elemosine mee, cum ceteris dignitatibus suis, has libertates concedo et confirmo, scilicet, sac et soke, tol et them et infangentheof. Testibus, Engelrano Glasguensi episcopo. Ricardo episcopo Sancti Andree, Johanne abbate de Kelcou, Osberto abbate de Jeddwrte, Magistro Marco Salomone decano, Elia clerico, Magistro Johanne, Alano filio meo, Roberto de Mundegumbri, Baldwino de Bigres, Roberto de Costentin, Gaufrido de Costentin, Roberto filio Fulberti, Yweno filio Dovenaldi, Waltero de Costentin, Nigello de Costentin, Alexandro de Hesting, Hugone de Pad'inan, Ricardo Wal', Roberto Croc, Rogerio de Nes, Ricardo clerico meo, et multis aliis.

Walter, son of Alan, Steward of the King of Scotland, to all sons of Holy Mother Church present and to come, greeting Know that I have given and granted, and by this my charter have confirmed, to God and Saint Mary and the church of Saint James and Saint Mirin and Saint Myldburga of Paisley and to the Prior and monks of the same serving God there, according to the Order of Clugny; for the soul of King Henry of England and for the soul of King David and King Malcolm and Earl Henry and of my departed forefathers, and for the salvation of my Lord King William, and David his brother, and of myself and of my wife, and my heirs, in perpetual alms, free from all temporal service, the church of Ennyrwic with all its pertinents, also the whole mill of Ennyrwic, except a merk of silver in it which I gave to Randolph of Kent; also the church of Ledgerwood with all its pertinents; also a carucate of land in Hastendene which Walter the chaplain held, by the same boundaries by which he held it; also the church of Cathcart with all its pertinents; also all the churches of Strathgryfe with all their pertinents, except the church of Inchinnan; and that carucate of land which Grimketel held by the same boundaries by which he held it, and the Drep with all its pertinents by land and by water according to the boundaries by which William held it; and the church of Paisley with all its pertinents, and two carucates of land, measured and perambulated by the river Cart beside the church, and that land beyond the Cart from the wood, which I and my son Alan perambulated for them, according to the boundaries by which we perambulated it with honest men, and that portion of land which is below the dormitory of the monks, and all the land which Serlo held and by the same boundaries, with the house above the rock where my hall was built; and the whole island near my town of Renfrew with the fishing between that island and Partick, and a full toft in Renfrew, and half a merk of silver from the rent of that Burgh for lighting the church, and a net for salmon, and the mill of Renfrew; and the land where the monks first dwelt; and that carucate of land which is between the Cart and the Gryfe, and the church of Prestwick with all the land which Dovenald, the son of Ywen, perambulated for them between the land of Simon Locard and the land of Prestwick as far as Pulprestwick and along Pulprestwick to the sea; and from the sea by the torrent between the land of Arnold and the land of Prestwick to the boundaries of Simon Locard; and that church of my Burgh of Prestwick with all its pertinents; and all the salt pit in Kalenter which belonged to Herbert the chamberlane. I have likewise given and confirmed to them a full tenth of my hunting with the skins; and besides these, all the skins of the deer which I slay in my forest of Ferenese; and four shillings from the mill of Paisley for the lighting of the church; and that they may grind there without multure, next to him whom they find grinding there, except when I myself am grinding the corn which comes from my own granary, and besides this, a full tenth of the same mill of Paisley and of all the mills which I have or may hereafter have. I have given and granted to them also and by this my charter have confirmed to them a tenth of all my waste lands and of all my lands in my forest of Paisley which have been or may be reclaimed, and all easements of my forest of Paisley, and the same right of pasture in it for the cattle and swine of their house as belong to me and my men. But if it should happen that I or any of my heirs wish to have our swine in the forest, part of the forest sufficient for their animals shall be provided for them; and in addition to this, my aforesaid alms with their other honours, I grant and confirm to them these privileges, sac and soc, tol and them and infangtheof. Witnesses—Engelrane bishop of Glasgow, Richard bishop of St. Andrews, John abbot of Kelso, Osbert abbot of Jedburgh, Master Mark Salomon deacon, Elia clerk, Master John, Alan my son, Robert de Montgumbri, Baldwin de Bigres, Robert de Costentin, Gaufrid de Costentin, Robert the son of Fulbert, Ewen the son of Donald, Walter de Costentin, Niel de Costentin, Alexander de Hesting, Hugh de Padinan, Richard Wallace, Robert Croc, Roger de Nes, Richard my clerk, and many others.

ex dono quondam Roberti de Loudoniis fratris quondam Regis Scotie obtinetis ; Et annum redditum unius marche argenti quem percipitis apud Kilbride ex dono quondam Philippi de Valons ; Ex dono quondam Maldoveni comitis de Lennax piscariam super aquam de Lewyn que Linbren vocatur, cum terra que jacet inter predictam piscariam et magnam viam per quam itur apud Dumbertan sicut vobis eam assignavit, cum pertinentiis suis ; Et terras cum pertinentiis suis quas habetis in comitatu de Lennax que Coupmanach, Edinbernan, Bacchan, Finbelach, Cragbrectalach, Druncrene, Dallenenach, Drumtoucher, Drumteyglunan, Drumdeynanis, Cultbwy et Reynfod, vulgariter nuncupantur, sicut in litteris inde confectis plenius dicitur contineri ; Et totam terram quam habetis in loco qui dicitur Monachkenran cum pertinentiis suis ; Et terram cum pertinentiis suis quam monasterio vestro contulit apud Moydirual quondam Thomas filius Tankardi ; Et terram cum pertinentiis suis que vocatur Garyn quam monasterio vestro contulit quondam Rodulfus de Cler ; Ex dono quondam Duncani comitis de Karric totam terram de Crosragmol et Sutheblan cum pertinentiis suis ; Ex dono nobilis viri Alexandri monasterii vestri patroni duas celdras farine quas percipitis de farina de Inchinan pro exchange multure de le Rass ; et annum redditum duarum marcharum argenti quem percipitis pro molendino de Thornton, prout in litteris inde confectis dicitur contineri, cum terris, pratis, vineis, nemoribus, usuagiis, et pascuis, in bosco et plano, in aquis et molendinis, in viis et semitis, et omnibus aliis libertatibus et immunitatibus suis. Sane novalium vestrorum que propriis manibus aut sumptibus colitis de quibus aliquis hactenus non percepit, sive de vestrorum animalium nutrimentis, nullus a vobis decimas exigere vel extorquere presumat. Liceat quoque vobis clericos vel laicos liberos et absolutos e seculo fugientes ad conversionem recipere, ac eos absque contradictione aliqua retinere. Prohibemus insuper ut nulli fratrum vestrorum post factam in monasterio vestro professionem fas sit sine abbatis sui licentia de eodem loco, nisi artioris religionis obtentu, discedere ; discendentem vero absque communium litterarum cautione nullus audeat retinere. Cum autem generale interdictum terre fuerit, liceat vobis, clausis januis, exclusis excommunicatis et interdictis, non pulsatis campanis, suppressa voce, divina officia celebrare, dummodo causam non dederitis interdicti. Crisma vero, oleum sanctum, consecrationes altarum seu basilicarum, ordinationes clericorum quorum ordines fuerint promovendi, a diocesano suscipietis episcopo, siquidem catholicus fuerit et gratiam et communionem sacrosancte Romane sedis habuerit et ea vobis voluerit sine pravitate aliqua exhibere. Prohibemus insuper ut infra fines parrochiarum vestrarum si eas habetis nullis sine assensu diocesani episcopi et vestro capellam seu oratorium de novo construere audeat, salvo privilegiis pontificum Romanorum.

Ad hec novas et indebitas exactiones ab archiepiscopis et episcopis, archidiaconis seu decanis aliisque omnibus ecclesiasticis secularibusve personis a vobis omnino fieri prohibemus. Sepulturam quoque ipsius loci liberam esse decernimus, ut eorum devotioni et extreme voluntati qui se illic sepelliri deliberaverint, nisi forte excommunicati vel interdicti sint aut etiam publice usurarii, nullus obsistat, salva tamen justitia illarum ecclesiarum a quibus mortuorum corpora assumuntur. Decimas preterea et possessiones ad jus ecclesiarum vestrarum spectantes que a laicis detinenter redimendi et legittime liberandi de manibus eorum et ad ecclesias ad quas pertinent revocandi libera sit vobis de nostra auctoritate facultas. Obeunte vero te nunc ejusdem loci Abbate vel tuorum quolibet successorum, nullus ibi qualibet subreptionis astutia seu violentia proponatur nisi quem fratres communi consensu vel fratrum major pars consilli sanioris, secundum Deum et beati Benedicti regulam, providerint eligendum. Paci quoque et tranquillitati vestre paterna in posterum sollicitudine providere volentes, auctoritate apostolica prohibemus ut infra clausuras locorum seu grangiarum vestrarum nullus rapinam seu furtum facere, ignem apponere, sanguinem fundere, hominem temere capere vel interficere, seu violentiam audeat exercere. Preterea omnes libertates et immunitates a predecessoribus nostris Romanis pontificibus monasterio vestro concessas, necnon libertates et exemptiones secularium exactionum a regibus et principibus vel aliis fidelibus rationabiliter vobis indultas, auctoritate apostolica confirmamus et presentis scripti privilegio communimus. Decernimus ergo ut nulli omnino hominum liceat prefatum monasterium temere perturbare aut ejus possessiones auferre vel ablatas retinere, minuere seu quibuslibet vexationibus fatigare, sed omnia integra conserventur eorum pro quorum gubernatione ac sustentatione concessa sunt usibus omnimodis pro futura; salva sedis apostolice auctoritate et diocesani episcopi canonica justitia. Si qua igitur in futurum ecclesiastica secularisve persona, hanc nostre constitutionis paginam sciens, contra eam temere venire temptaverit, secundo tertiove commonita, nisi reatum suum congrua satisfactione correxerit, potestatis honorisque sui careat dignitate, reamque se divino judicio existere de perpetrata iniquitate cognoscat, et sacratissimo corpore ac sanguine Dei et redemptoris nostri Jhesu Christi aliena fiat, atque in extremo examine districte subiaceat ultioni. Cunctis autem eidem loco sua jura servantibus sit pax Domini nostri Jesu Christi quatinus et hic fructum bone actionis percipiant et apud districtum Judicem premia eterne pacis inveniant. Amen.

Clement Bishop, servant of the servants of God, to his beloved sons, the Abbot of the Monastery of St. James and St. Mirin Confessor of Paisley, and the brethren there as well present as future in all time coming following the monastic life. It is proper that the Apostolic protection be given to those choosing a religious life, lest, perchance, any indiscretion draw them off from their purpose, or, which heaven forbid, impair the strength of their holy religion. Wherefore, beloved sons in the Lord, we graciously assent to your just demands, and receive the Monastery of St. James the Apostle and St. Mirin Confessor of Paisley, in the diocese of Glasgow, in which you are vowed to divine obedience, under the protection of St. Peter and our own, and fortify this ordinance by the present writing. In the first place, we ordain that the Monastic order which, it is known, was instituted in that Monastery according to God, and the rule of St. Benedict, and the institution of the Cluniac order, be observed there inviolably in all time coming. Moreover, let whatever property and whatever goods the said Monastery may at present justly and canonically possess, or may in future acquire by the concession of Popes, the bounty of Kings or Princes, the oblation of the faithful, or in other just methods, by the favour of God, remain sure and inalienable to you and to your successors: of which things we have reckoned the following worthy of express mention:—The place in which the said Monastery is situated, with all its pertinents, and the chapel of Lochwinnoch with its pertinents, the churches of Innerwick, of Ledgerwood, of Cathcart, of Rutherglen, of Carmunnock, of Pollock, of the Mearns, of Neilston, of Kilbarchan, of Eastwood, of Houston, of Killelan, of Erskine, of Kilmacolm, of Inverkip, of Largs, of Prestwickburgh, of the other Prestwick [Monkton], of Cragie, of Turnberry, of Dundonald, of Sanquhar, of Auchinleck, of Kilpatrick, of Rosneath, of Killynannan, of Kylkeran, of St. Colmanel, of Scybinche, with their chapels, lands and other pertinents; the chapel of Kilmor at Kenlochgilpe with its pertinents, and the land with its pertinents which Duncan, the son of Ferchard, and Lauman, his cousin, gave to your Monastery there; and all that whole land lying on both sides of the Cart, as the late Walter Fitz-Alan, Steward of the King of Scotland, founder of the Monastery himself bestowed it; and the carucate of land with its pertinents which Grimketel formerly held, and which is now called Arkleston, and the carucate of land with its pertinents which you possess between the Cart and the Gryfe, which is now called the Inch; and the whole land of Drumloy and Swynschawis, and the Graynis, which is now called Drumgrane, and the whole land of Hakhyncog of Dalmulyn with its pertinents, and the land which you have in the manor of Pollock; and the whole land of Drepss, which the late William, son of Maduse, held at ferm of the Monastery; and a carucate of land at Huntly with its pertinents which the late King William of Scotland excambed with lands which you had in the manor of Hastendene; and the carucate of land with its pertinents which the late Eschena de Molla, wife of the Founder, bestowed on your Monastery there, and the fishing which you have on the water of Clyde between Partick and the island which is commonly called the Island of Renfrew, and an annual of half a merk of silver which you have from the ferm of the Burgh of Renfrew, and the mill which you hold in the tenement of that Burgh, with the water courses and all its pertinents, and a full toft in the town which is called Renfrew, and one net for salmon which you have in the River Clyde at Renfrew, and the land which you possess there near your mill, and the lands of Hillington and Castleside with their pertinents, and the whole mill of Innerwick, with the water courses and all the pertinents; and the whole land of Prestwick with its pertinents which is commonly called Monkstown, and the land of Moniabrock as it is said to be held in the deed of gift, and the land of Cnoc, and the mill of Paisley with its full sequel which you hold by the gift of the late Walter son of Alan, Steward of the King of Scotland, the Patron of your Monastery, and half the fishing at the issue of the loch of Lochwinnoch, with that liberty of fishing in the lake itself which Walter, the founder of your Monastery, granted to you, and the whole land of Penuld with its pertinents which is called Fulton, as Henry de St., Martin, with the consent of his lord is said to have conferred it upon your Monastery; and the land situated between the Mach and Caldover with its pertinents; and that part of the land where the mill of Paisley is situated, which the said Walter the Steward granted to you by certain boundaries; and the land beyond the Cart, between the Espedair and Auldpatrick, as the said Steward gave it to you with all liberties and easements in the forests of Paisley and the Seneschathir as far as is said to be contained in the letter of donation; and the land at Carnebro which you have from the gift of the late Uctred, son of Paganus; and the land with its pertinents which the late Walter called Murdhac bestowed on your Monastery at the Orde; and the annual rent of a chalder of wheat which you have from the gift of the late Patrick Earl of Dunbar; and the annual rent of a chalder of wheat and of half a merk of silver which you have at Cadiou by the gift of Robert de Loudon, brother of the late King of Scotland; and an annual rent of one merk of silver from Kilbride by the gift of the late Phillip de Valons; that fishing which you have from the gift of the late Maldoven, Earl of Lennox, upon the water of Leven which is called Linbren, with the land between it and the highway leading to Dumbarton as he assigned it to you with its pertinents; and the lands with their pertinents which you have in the County of Lennox, which are commonly called Coupmanach, Edinbernan, Bacchan, Finbelach, Cragbrechalach, Druncrene, Dallenach, Drumtoucher, Drumteyglunan, Drumdeynanis, Cultbwy, and Reynfod as is said to be more fully contained in the letters relating thereto; and the land which you have in the place called Monachkenran, with its pertinents; and the land with its pertinents which Thomas the son of Tankard, conferred on your monastery at Moydirual; and the land with its pertinents called Garyn which your monastery received from the late Rodolphus de Cler; and the whole land of Crosraguel and Sutheblan with its pertinents from the gift of Duncan, Earl of Carrick; and two chalders of meal from the meal of Inchinan which you received by donation from Alexander a noble patron of your monastery, in exchange for the multure of the Rass; and the annual rent of two merks of silver which you receive from the mill of Thornton as is said to be contained in the letters relating thereto, with lands, fields, vineyards, woods, customs, and pastures, in wood and plain, in waters and in mills, in roads and paths, and in all other liberties and immunities. Let no one presume to demand or extort from you tithes of your newly reclaimed lands which you cultivate with your own hands or at your own charges, of which no one has hitherto received tithes, nor from your animals' food. It shall also be lawful for you to receive as converts, free and unfettered, clerical or lay persons fleeing from the world, and to retain them without any contradiction. However, we forbid any of your brethren after making his profession in your Monastery to depart thence without leave of his Abbot, unless he joins a stricter Order. But let no one dare to detain a person departing without authority of your common letters. It shall also be lawful for you when a general interdict is laid on the land, provided that you yourselves do not give cause of interdict, to perform Divine services with closed doors, excommunicated and interdicted persons having been excluded, but without ringing of bells and with suppressed voice. You will receive also chrism, holy oil, consecration of altars or churches, ordinations of priests for administering of rites, from the bishop of the diocese, if he is a Catholic and has the favour and communion of the Holy Roman See, and is willing honestly to give them to you. We forbid any one to dare to build chapel or oratory within the bounds of your parishes, if you have any, without your consent and that of the Bishop of the diocese, reserving the privileges of the Roman Pontiffs. We forbid entirely all new and unjust exactions to be made upon you by archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, deans, and all persons ecclesiastical or secular. We decree also the burial ground of that place to be free; that no one resist the burial of those who, in their devotion, or by their last will, have desired to be buried there, unless they are interdicted or excommunicated or public usurers, saving the just rights of those churches by whom the bodies of the dead are claimed. You are also permitted by our authority to recall to the use of the churches to whom they belong the tithes and possessions pertaining to your churches which are detained by laymen, and to redeem and lawfully to free them from their hands. And when you the Abbot of this place or any of your successors go away, no one shall be placed there by cunning or by violence except him whom the brethren shall have elected by common consent or the greater part of the brethren of wiser counsel according to God and the rule of St. Benedict. We, wishing with paternal solicitude to provide for the future as also for your peace and tranquility, prohibit by Apostolic authority, within your enclosures or granges all rapine or theft, fire-raising, shedding of blood, rash seizure or slaying of men, or exercise of violence. Moreover, we confirm all the liberties and immunities made to your Monastery by our predecessors the Roman Pontiffs; also liberties and exemptions from secular exactions granted to you for good reasons by Kings or Princes, or by others of the faithful, we confirm by Apostolic authority and fortify with the ordinance of this present writing. We therefore decree that it shall not be lawful for any one soever to rashly disturb the said Monastery, or to take away any of its possessions, or to retain them when taken away, to diminish them, or to annoy it by any vexatious acts; and that all things which have been granted for any future purpose whatsoever shall be preserved entire for the discipline and maintenance of its inmates, reserving the authority of the Apostolic See and the canonical rights of the bishop of the diocese. If therefore in future any secular or ecclesiastical person, knowing this writ of our constitution, shall attempt rashly to contravene it, let him, after being twice or thrice admonished (unless he shall atone for his fault by a suitable satisfaction), be deprived of the dignity of his power and honour; and let him know that he stands charged by the Divine Justice with the iniquity so committed; and let him be cut off from the most Sacred Body and Blood of our God and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, and let him lie under His severe vengeance at the last judgment. But upon all who shall preserve for the said place its rights, let the peace of our Lord Jesus Christ rest, so that here they may receive the fruit of their good deeds, and obtain at the hands of the Righteous Judge the rewards of eternal peace. Amen.

5.—Donation of Regality by Robert III., King of Scotland, of Kyle and of all the Lands of the Monastery of Paisley.—LINLITHGOW, 5th April, 1396.

Donatio regalitatis Roberti tertii regis Scotie, de Kyll et de omnibus terris monasterii de Passelet in unam baroniam.⁵

ROBERTUS Dei gratia rex Scotorum omnibus probis hominibus totius terre sue clericis et laicis salutem. theame, infangandthef et outfangandthef, et cum aliis omnibus libertatibus, commoditatibus, aisiamentis et justis pertinentiis et emolumentis quibuscunque ad dictas terras cum pertinentiis spectantibus seu juste spectare valentibus quomodolibet in futurum, tam non nominatis quam nominatis, tam sub terra quam supra terram, ita libere et quiete in omnibus et per omnia sicut aliqua baronia in regno Scotie per quoscunque predecessores nostros reges ejusdem quibuscunque religiosis domibus in liberam regalem concessa liberius tenetur et possidetur seu teneri debet vel etiam possideri. Quare omnibus et singulis justiciariis, camerariis, vicecomitibus, prepositis et eorum ballivis, coronatoribus et ceteris ministris regiis, tenore presentium firmiter prohibemus ne predictos religiosos vel eorum successores, terras suas predictas aut earum incolas, quibuscunque futuris temporibus, contra presentem concessionem nostram sic salubriter per nos factam, vexent, molestent, impediunt, perturbent, aut aliquo modo inquietent, sub pena omnium que erga nostram regiam majestatem amitti poterunt quoquomodo: Faciendo inde nobis et heredibus nostris dicti religiosi et eorum successores imperpetuum orationum suffragia tantum pro omni alio servitio seculari. In cujus rei testimonium presenti carte nostre nostrum precipimus apponi sigillum. Testibus, venerabilibus in Cristo patribus Waltero et Matheo Sanctiandree et Glasguensis ecclesiarum episcopis, Roberto comite de Fyf et de Menteth fratre nostro carissimo, Archebaldo comite de Douglas domino Galwidie, magistro Duncano Petyt archidiacono Glasguensi cancellario nostro, Jacobo de Douglas domino de Dalketh, et Thoma de Erskyn, consanguineis nostris dilectis, militibus. Apud Linlithcu quinto die Aprilis anno regni nostri sexto.

Robert, by the grace of God, King of Scots, to all good men of his whole land, clerics and laics, greeting. Know that for the salvation of our soul and of the souls of our predecessors and successors, kings and stewards of Scotland, we have given, granted, and by this our present charter have confirmed to God and the Blessed Mary, to the blessed Apostle James and to St. Mirin Confessor, as also to the Abbot and monks of Paisley, present and future, all and singular their lands, rents and possessions lying in our barony of Renfrew in the county of Lanark; Also all their lands, rents and possessions lying in our barony of the Stewartry of Kyle in the county of Ayr; Also their five mark land of Molla, and Huntlaw in the land of Hassynden, in the county of Roxburgh; And their lands of Orde in the county of Peebles; In one whole and free barony and in pure and perpetual royalty or regality; To be held and had by the said religious men and their successors in perpetuity of us and our heirs freely, quietly, fully, wholly and honourably, well and in peace, in moors, marshes, meadows, grazings, and pastures, ways, by-ways, waters, ponds and fish-stanks, hawkings, huntings, and fishings, mills, multures and their sequels, with courts and profits of courts with tenandries and services of free tenants, with bondmen, their holdings and services, natives and their sequels, with smithies and breweries, with pit and gallows, sok, tholl and theame, infangthef and outfangthef, and with all other liberties, commodities, easements and just pertinents and emoluments whatsoever belonging to the said lands with their pertinents or which may at any time or in any way in the future belong to them, as well those not named as those named, both under the ground and upon the ground, as freely and quietly in all and by all as in any barony in the kingdom of Scotland by whomsoever of our predecessors, Kings of Scotland, the same has been granted to any religious houses in free regality, is most freely held and possessed or ought to be held and possessed. Wherefore we strictly prohibit justiciars, chamberlains, sheriffs, provosts and their bailies, coroners and other royal officers all and singular by the tenor of these presents from vexing, molesting, hindering, troubling or in any other way disturbing the aforesaid religious men or their successors, their aforesaid lands or inhabitants thereof in all time coming contrary to our present grant, freely made by us, under penalty of everything which can be incurred towards our royal majesty; the said religious men and their successors rendering therefor for us and for our heirs in perpetuity the suffrages of their prayers only in place of all other secular service. In witness whereof we have directed our seal to be affixed to this our present charter. Witnesses, the venerable Fathers in Christ Walter and Mathew, bishops of the churches of St. Andrews and Glasgow, Robert Earl of Fife and Menteith our dearest brother, Archibald Earl of Douglas Lord of Galloway, Master Duncan Petyt archdeacon of Glasgow, our Chancellor, James de Douglas Lord of Dalkeith, and Thomas de Erskyn our beloved kinsman, knights. At Linlithgow the 5th day of April in the sixth year of our reign.

6.—Grant by Robert III. King of Scotland to the Abbot and Convent of Paisley of perpetual protection under the Three Clauses.—STRATHTYRUM, 11th January, 1398.

Robertus Dei gratia rex Scotorum. Perpetua protectio trium clausularum.⁶

ROBERTUS Dei gratia rex Scotorum omnibus probis hominibus totius terre sue salutem. Sciatis nos religiosos viros Abbatem et conventum monasterii de Passeleto, terras suas, homines suos, et universas eorundem possessiones, ac omnia bona sua, mobilia et immobilia, ecclesiastica et mundana, sub firma pace et protectione nostra, juste suscepisse; quare firmiter prohibemus ne quis eis malum, molestiam, injuriam seu gravamen aliquod inferre presumat injuste, super nostram plenariam forisfacturam. Concessimus etiam eisdem religiosis ut nullus namos suos aut hominum suorum capiat pro alicujus debito, plegiagio vel forisfacto nisi pro eorundem proprio debito, plegiagio, vel forisfacto ; Salvis burgis nostris ; Firmiter inhibentes ne quis contra hanc concessionem nostram ipsos vexare presumat injuste, super eandem nostram plenariam forisfacturam. Mandamus insuper et firmiter precipimus justiciariis, vicecomitibus, prepositis et eorum ballivis ad quos presentes littere pervenerint, ut omnes illos in eorum balliis seu burgis qui debita debent predictis religiosis ad eadem debita eis vel eorum certo actornato latori presentium juste et sine dilatione reddenda, secundum quod idem religiosi vel dictus eorum actornatus dicta debita sibi deberi ab eisdem rationabiliter probare poterunt vel poterit coram eis, prout justum fuerit, compellant, ita quod pro eorundem defectu amplius inde justam queremoniam non audiamus. In cujus rei testimonium has litteras nostras predictis religiosis imperpetuum duraturas sibi fieri fecimus patentes ; apud Stratyrum undecimo die Januarii anno regni nostri octavo.

Robert, by the grace of God, King of Scots, to all good men of his whole land, greeting : Wit ye us to have justly taken under our protection religious men, the abbot and convent of the monastery of Paisley, their lands, their men, and the whole of their possessions, and all their goods, movable and immovable, ecclesiastical and worldly : Wherefore we straitly prohibit every one from presuming unjustly to bring upon them any evil, molestation, injury, or grievance, under our full forfeiture : We have granted also to the same religious men that no one shall distrain their goods, or those of their men, for any debt, pledge, or forfeit, except for their own proper debt, pledge, or forfeit : our burghs being excepted : Straitly prohibiting any one from presuming unjustly to vex them contrary to this, our grant, under our same full forfeiture : moreover, we command and firmly charge justiciars, sheriffs, provosts, and their bailies, to whom the present letters shall come, that they compel all those in their baileries or burghs, who owe debts to the aforesaid religious men, justly, and without delay, to render the same debts to them or their certain attorney, bearer of these presents, according as the same religious men, or their said attorney are able reasonably to prove before them that the said debts are due to them from the same persons, according to justice ; so that we may not any more hear just complaint from them in default of the same : In witness of which thing, we have caused these letters to be made patent to the aforesaid religious men, to endure for ever : At Strathtyrum the eleventh day of January in the eighth year of our reign.

7.—Donation of Regality, by James II., King of Scots.—EDINBURGH, 13th January, 1451.

James, by the grace of God, King of Scots, to all good men of his whole land, clerics and laics, greeting: Be it known that for the singular respect we have for the glorious confessor St. Mirin and our Monastery of Paisley, founded by our most illustrious progenitors, where many of the bodies of our ancestors are buried and are at rest, and for the singular favour and love which we bear to the Venerable Father in Christ, George Schaw, now Abbot of the said Monastery, our very dear Counsellor, and for the faithful service rendered to us in many ways by the said Venerable Father in times past, and particularly for the virtuous education and upbringing of our dearest brother James Duke of Ross, in his tender age, we have made, constituted, erected and created, and by the tenor of our present charter do make, constitute, erect, and create the village of Paisley, lying within our Sheriffdom of Renfrew, a Free Burgh of Barony. We have also granted to the present and future inhabitants of the said Burgh full and free liberty of buying and selling in the said Burgh wines, wax, woollen and linen cloth, wholesale or retail, and all other goods and wares whatsoever coming to it, with power and liberty of having and holding in the same place, bakers, brewers, butchers, and sellers both of flesh and fish, and workmen in any of the crafts belonging or that may hereafter in any way belong to the liberty of a burgh of barony; We have likewise granted to the burgesses and inhabitants of the said Burgh of Paisley to have and possess therein for ever a cross, and a market every week on Monday, and two public fairs yearly:—namely, one on the day of St. Mirin, and the other on the day of St. Marnock, with tolls and other liberties pertaining or that may hereafter pertain to fairs of this kind; of holding and having in all time coming the said village of Paisley a mere and free Burgh in barony with the foresaid privileges, liberties, grants, and all other liberties, profits, commodities, easements, and just pertinents whatsoever as well not named as named that pertain or may hereafter justly pertain to a burgh of barony, and as freely, quietly, fully, entirely, honourably, well and in peace, in all and by all, as the burghs of Dumfermline, Newburgh, and Arbroath, or any other burgh of barony in our kingdom in any time past is more largely endowed or held; Moreover, we have granted and by the tenor of our present charter do grant to the said Venerable Father and his successors, Abbots of Paisley, the right and power of choosing annually the provost, bailies, and other officers of the said burgh and of removing the same as often as may be necessary, and of appointing others anew in their place as it shall seem to the Abbot and his successors more expedient, convenient, and opportune, without any other election of the burgesses or community of the said burgh and without any revocation or contradiction from us or our successors made upon any grounds whatever in future. Wherefore we strictly enjoin all and singular whom it concerns or may concern and command that they do not presume to do anything contrary to our said grants or to encroach in any way upon them under every penalty that may be incurred towards our royal majesty. In testimony whereof we have directed our great seal to be affixed to this our present charter. Witnesses:—The reverend Fathers in Christ, Robert bishop of Glasgow, George bishop of Dunkeld, our beloved kinsmen Colin Earl of Argyll, Lord Campbell our chancellor, Archibald Earl of Angus, Lord Douglas, &c., Patrick Lord Hailes Master of our Household, Robert Lord Lyle our Justiciar, Andrew Lord le Gray, Lawrence Lord Oliphant, John Lord Drummond, the Venerable Father in Christ John prior of the monastery of St. Andrews, Keeper of our Privy Seal, William Knollis Preceptor of Torfichin, Knight, our Treasurer, Master Alexander Inglis, archdeacon of St. Andrews our Comptroller and our Lord Clerk Register, &c., and Archibald Whitelaw subdean of Glasgow our Secretary. At Stirling the nineteenth day of the month of August, A.D. 1488, and the first of our reign.

To all who may see or hear this Indented Charter, George Schaw, Abbot of the Monastery of Paisley and Convent of the same place, of the Order of Clugny, in the Diocese of Glasgow, wishes everlasting safety in the Lord. Be it known to your university, That forasmuch as we have the village of Paisley made and created by our most Excellent Lord the King into a free Burgh to us and our successors, as is more fully contained in a charter granted thereupon under the Great Seal: Therefore we, careful treaty having been had beforehand upon this matter, and the utility of our said monastery foreseen and considered on every side, with the consent and assent of our whole chapter chapterly assembled, have given, granted, set, and in feu-farm let, and by this our present Charter have confirmed, and hereby give, grant, set, and in feu-farm let, and by this our present charter confirm to our lovites, the Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of our Burgh of Paisley, ALL and WHOLE our said Burgh of Barony, with the pertinents lying in our regality of Paisley, and within the sheriffdom of Renfrew, within the bounds and limits underwritten, to wit, Beginning at the end of the Bridge of Paisley, upon the water of Cart, and so extending by the King's highway towards the west to the vennel opposite the Wellmeadow, and from thence equally ascending towards the north by the ditch of the lands of Oakshawside to the wood of Oakshaw between the said wood, as also the passage to the Common of the said Burgh and the Broomdyke, which extends by the lands of Snawdon, from the Common of the said Burgh to the water of Cart on the north and the said water of Cart as also the torrent of Espedair on the east part, and the Mustard-yard and way extending on the south side of the house of John Murray, and so by the hedge extending above the west end of the Whitefauld on the south and the said Whitefauld, as also a part of the common of the said Burgh and the said Well-

meadow and ditch of the said lands of Oakshawside on the west upon the one side and other for the erecting and building of tenements, mansions, and yards for the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses and Community, as is specially assigned, or may hereafter be assigned to every one of them by us and our said Convent, by our charters of feu-farm, together with certain acres of the nearest lands lying within the limits and bounds aforesaid, assigned or to be assigned to every tenement, mansion, and yard, according to the tenor of our said charters made or to be made thereupon. Moreover, we annex and incorporate the toft, houses, buildings, mansions, and yards of the lands of Seedhill to the liberty and privilege of our said Burgh of barony of Paisley, to be possessed perpetually in all times coming. Likewise, we have given, granted, set, and in feu-farm let, and also give, grant, set, and in feu-farm let to the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of our said Burgh of Paisley and their successors for the time being, our lands underwritten, whereof one part of the said lands lies at the west end of our said Burgh towards the south, between the lands of Causeyside and the lands of Thomas Leitch, called the Bank, on the east, and the lands of Castlehead, and the lands of Sir Henry Mous, John Whiteford, and the Stobs of Riccarsbar on the south, and the end of the Ward called the bottom of the Ward on the west, and the tail of the Broomlands, and the Wellmeadow and Prior's Croft on the north; and the other part of the said lands lies on the north of the said Burgh, between the lands of Oakshawhead and the Wood of Oakshaw and the croft of Robert Cavers, called the Scattbank, on the south part, and the lands of Snawdon and water of Cart and the holm of Wardmeadow on the east, and the march dyke of Inch and the Common Moss of Paisley on the north, and the said Moss on the west upon the one side and the other, for the common of their said Burgh, to be possessed for ever for the common pasturage of the cattle of the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community; And also, we have given and granted free licence and power to the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community and their successors for the time being, to win and take their fuel from any of our petaries of Paisley, for sustaining the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community, and their successors in perpetuity, and to win and take stones from our quarries, for the construction and building of the said Burgh as often as it may please them, provided we have what is necessary for ourselves in the said petaries and quarries when we please. And if the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, or Community of the said Burgh, shall find or gain a coal-pit or coal-pits in their Common of the said Burgh, we will and ordain that we and our successors shall have thence what is necessary for us, on making payment on our part of the expenses of gaining the said coal-pit or coal-pits, as the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of the said Burgh pay for their part thereof, or shall be willing to pay. And further, we give and grant to the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of the said Burgh, a common passage of the breadth of twelve ells, on the north side of St. Ninian's Cross, extending from the said part of the foresaid common lands up to the other part thereof; To have and hold all and whole the foresaid Burgh of Paisley in a barony, with the tenements, mansions, yards, acres of lands, bounds and limits thereof, assigned or to be assigned by us to them, with common pasturage for their cattle upon our Moss of Paisley, and licence in our petaries and quarries aforesaid, as the same lie in length and breadth, to the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of the foresaid Burgh, and their successors, in feu-farm heritably for ever, by all their right meiths and divisions, limited or to be limited by us to them; with power of buying and selling within the said Burgh, wines, wax, cloth, woollen and linen, wholesale or retail, and any other goods and merchandise whatever coming thereto; with the petty customs and tolls, and with all and sundry other liberties, commodities, profits, and easements, and just pertinents whatsoever, belonging, or which may justly hereafter belong to the said Burgh in Barony; With power of choosing and making Burgesses and Stallingers, according to the custom, laws and statutes of burghs made thereanent: which Burgesses and Stallingers, and every one of them shall, at their entry, swear that they will be faithful to our supreme Lord the King and his successors, Kings of Scotland, as also to the Steward of Scotland and his heirs and successors, and to us the Abbot and Convent and our successors, and to the said Bailies and Community, and common utility of the said Burgh, in the same manner as burgesses in other burghs do, or have been in use to do. Moreover, we give and grant to the Provost and Bailies of the said Burgh, to be elected by us for the time, and their successors, free power of holding, convening, and fencing the Burgh courts of the said Burgh, and of continuing the same as often as may be needful, of levying the issues and amerciaments of the said courts, of fining absentees, punishing transgressors and delinquents according to the statutes and laws of burghs; and to choose serjeants, officials, officers, tasters of ale and wine, and appreciators of flesh, and other servants whomsoever necessary for a burgh, as is enacted and ordained in other burghs, according to the strength, form, and tenor, so far as concerns the extension of the foresaid liberties, as is at length contained in the Charter of our said Sovereign Lord the King, granted to us and our successors concerning the said Burgh of Barony. And further, we give and grant to the Bailies of the said Burgh, to be chosen by us and our successors, full power or faculty of taking and receiving resignations of all and sundry lands, acres, and tenements, lying within the said Burgh, and to give and deliver heritable state and seisin, as is the use in burghs, to the wives of the possessors, or their true heirs; provided they give seisin to no other person, neither receive a resignation without our consent and assent sought and obtained thereto. It is also our will, that the said Provost and Bailies of the said Burgh be annually chosen by advice of us and our successors, at the term and court limited by law within burghs, and that they shall be deprived as oft as need be, without any obstacle whatsoever. And further, we will and grant that the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of the said Burgh, shall for ever have, for sustaining the common purse and profit of the said Burgh, the fines of all burgesses and stallingers of the said Burgh, to be made in all times coming, together with the petty customs and tolls of the said Burgh, as is the custom in other burghs. Rendering yearly the said Provost, Bailies, and Community of the said Burgh and their heirs and successors, to us and our successors, for the said tenements, mansions, yards, and acres of land within the bounds and limits of the Burgh before-written, the burghal-farm and service of courts used and wont, with the yearly rents thence owing, according to the tenor of our rental and register, and as is at more length contained in our foresaid charters made and granted, or to be made and granted, upon the feu-farm tacks of the said tenements, mansions, yards, and acres; and that the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of the said Burgh, and their successors, shall come with their grain, of every kind, in so far as they shall grind, to our mill of Paisley, and not to any other mill, paying to us multure at dish thirty-one, as men abiding forth of our lands; for every other burden, exaction, question, demand, or secular service, which can be justly exacted or required by any one of the said Burgh of Barony, tenements, mansions, yards, and acres, lying within the said Burgh, with the pertinents. In witness whereof, the common seal of the chapter of our said Monastery is appended to the part of this indented Charter remaining with the said Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, and Community of the said Burgh; and the common seal of the said Burgh of Paisley is appended to the part of the said indented Charter remaining with the said Abbot and Convent. At the Monastery and Burgh aforesaid, the second day of June, in the year of Our Lord one thousand four hundred and ninety, Before these witnesses, to wit, James Schaw of Sawchy, David Schaw his son, Thomas Stewart of Craigenfeoch, Robert Semple, John Ralston of that Ilk, John Schaw, Sir Alexander Clugston and James Young, notaries public, with many others.

To all who shall see or hear this charter, George, by the divine permission, abbot of the monastery of Paisley, and of the convent of the same place, of the Clugniac order, and diocese of Glasgow, everlasting safety in the Lord. Wit ye us, careful treaty having been had beforehand upon this matter, and the utility of our said monastery foreseen and considered on every side, with consent and assent of our whole chapter, chapterly gathered together for that purpose, to have given, granted, set, and to feufferme dimitted, and by this our present charter to have confirmed: also to give, grant, set, and to feufferme to demit, and by this our present charter to confirm, to our lovites, the provost, bailies, burgesses, and community of our burgh of Paisley, and their successors, all and whole that our House, commonly called the Heyt House, with vaults, booths, and others its pertinents as well under as above, in this manner, that is to say, that in the same house, there shall henceforth, in all times coming, be a common Tolbooth to be used for us, abbot and convent and our successors, in the Courts of Justiciary of our lord the King, and our other courts of regality to be held and had in the same: also to be used for the same provost, bailies, burgesses and community of the said burgh, and their successors, as often as may be needful, or expedient—lying and situated within our burgh aforesaid, between our tenement on the west, and the tenement of John Logane on the north, the common place of the market of the said burgh on the east, and the common passage of the foresaid burgh on the south, with power to build, construct, repair and alter the said house, as well under as above, at the pleasure and will of the before written provost, bailies, burgesses, and community and their successors: which house, with pertinents, we will and grant that it may have the liberty and privilege of our burgh of Paisley within the regality of the same, to be possessed, as a free burgage in all times to come, in virtue of our infestment of the said burgh and burgages of the same, made to us and our successors thereupon, by our sovereign lord the King. To be holden and to be had all and whole the aforewritten house, with pertinents, by the same provost, bailies, burgesses, community, and their successors, of us, abbot and convent of the aforesaid monastery. and our successors, in free burgage and feufferme heritably for ever, as it lies in length and breadth, by all its right meithes, old bounds and divisions, with free entry and ish, with all other sundry liberties, commodities, profits and easements, and their just pertinents whatsoever, as well not named as named, under the earth as above the earth, far and near, belonging or that may in any way justly belong in future to the said tenement of burghal land of the aforesaid house with the pertinents, freely, quietly, fully, wholly, honourably, well and in peace, without any keeping back, revocation or contradiction: Rendering therefor yearly, the said provost, bailies, burgesses, and community and their successors, to us, abbot and convent, and our successors who for the time may be, four pennies for the burghal ferme of the said tenement or said house; and nineteen shillings and eight pennies of usual money of the kingdom of Scotland, at the two usual terms of the year, that is to say, at the feasts of Pentecost [Whitsunday] and Saint Martin in winter, by equal half portions, in name of annual rent of feufferme, for the sustentation and repair of the light of the altar of Saint Mirin and tomb of the same only, for all other burden, exaction, quest, demand, or secular service, which from the aforesaid house with the pertinents, could be justly exacted or required by anybody whatever. Moreover, we will and ordain that it shall not be lawful for the aforesaid provost, bailies, burgesses, and community, and their successors, to sell, alienate, wadset, give or assign the afore-written house with the pertinents, or any part thereof, to any person in time coming, but to their true heirs and successors, without our special license and that of our successors having been asked and obtained: and if the contrary be done, we will that this assedation of feufferme be made of no force or moment, and that the said House or tenement, with the pertinents, revert to us and our successors in fee and heritage, without any contradiction whatever: And we, truly, the said abbot and convent, and our successors shall warrant, acquit, and for ever defend all and whole the aforesaid House, or the fore-written tenement, with pertinents, to the aforesaid provost, bailies, burgesses, and community of the said burgh and their successors, as freely, quietly, well and in peace, in all things and by all, as said is, against all mortals. In witness of the which thing the common seal of our said chapter is appended to this our present charter, at our monastery aforesaid, the twenty-first day of the month of May, in the year of the Lord one thousand four hundred and ninety-first: before these witnesses, Thomas Stewart of Mynto, Robert Symppl of Foulwod, John Ralston of that ilk, Sir Henry Mouse, with many others.

said convent every year for ever, from subjects lying within the said burgh of Paisley and there about; and all other and sundry things contained and declared in the letters above mentioned, according to the humble supplication of the said abbot and convent of Paisley, so far as we can and ought to do by law, and so, and so far as they are duly and lawfully done; and by these presents do interpose our authority and decree in the same: For the rest, we will, yea rather by the authority aforesaid which we exercise, we do by all means interdict and prohibit the said rents to be divided or distributed among the religious of the said convent in particular, but to be laid out and applied in common for their pittance, according to the mind of the aforesaid founder. In confirmation, faith, and testimony of the which premises, we have appointed the seals of the lords of the convent of Clugny, Soucilanges, Abbatisville and De Ponte Monachorum, in the absence of the rest of our co-definitors, to be appended: Given at the monastery of Clugny, in the definitory chamber, on the 14th day of the month of May, in the year of the Lord a thousand four hundred and ninety-two.

To all the sons of Holy Mother Church who shall see these presents, James Crawford of Kylwynnat, burgess of Paisley, and Elizabeth Calbrayth his spouse, greeting in Him who is the true salvation of all: Wit ye all that we, the said James and Elizabeth, having been led in that behalf by the affection of pious devotion, for the help of divine praise and the sustentation of ecclesiastical persons; and with the consent, authority and license of a venerable father in Christ, George, by the Divine permission abbot of Paisley, and of the convent thereof, as superiors of our lands underwritten, asked before hand and chapterly obtained; also, with the confirmation, ratification, and approbation of a very reverend father and lord in Christ, Robert, by the Divine mercy archbishop of Glasgow, and of the chapter thereof, have of new founded, constituted and ordained, and have made and procured to be founded, erected and ordained, in the manner and form underwritten, one chaplainry, with the chaplain thereof for ever, erected by us in the parochial church of Paisley, on the south side thereof, at the altar of Saints Mirin and Columba, confessors, endowed by us from the lands, tenements, rates and annual rents underwritten, to the praise and honour of Almighty God the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and of His glorious and Virgin Mother Mary, and of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and in praise and veneration of the saints, the higher citizens; also of the souls of the most excellent prince, the late James the Third, King of Scots, and of our most illustrious prince James the Fourth, now king, and of their predecessors and successors; and of the souls of us, James and Elizabeth, and of Mr. Archibald Crawford, vicar of Erskyne, our special counsellor, actor and procurator in this behalf; and of our parents, kinsmen, friends and benefactors, our ancestors and successors, and of all the faithful dead; and particularly those of whom we hold any goods, and have not made due satisfaction: For the support of which chaplainry, and of a qualified chaplain thereof, there to celebrate Divine service in all times coming, and for the repair of the altar, and the honest and sufficient sustentance of the chaplain, we have given, granted, and in pure alms (as any alms is freely given and granted within the kingdom of Scotland) have donated and assigned from us, our heirs and assignees, and have delivered over by mortmain, and have for ever bestowed, those tenements, burghal and field lands, which have come to us by our own pure conquest and industry, and which we have, possess, and have acquired by the help of our parents and friends, with all and sundry their pertinent and commodities; of the which tenements burghal and field, as they are commonly set down, the names do follow, as in the instrument and instruments of this donation is more fully contained: In the first place, all and sundry the burghal tenements and whole burghal lands of Seidhil, with their pertinents, lying in the burgh of Paisley, on the south side of the same, near the mill of the said lords abbots of the monastery of Paisley; and also all the field lands of the said lands of Seidhil, with the pertinents, profits and easements as is more fully contained in the charters, instruments and evidences thereof; also all and sundry the lands of Welmedow, with pertinents, lying on the west side of the aforesaid burgh, above the public highway, on the south side thereof, as also is more amply and perfectly declared in the charters, instruments and evidences made thereupon: To be holden and had, and possessed, the aforesaid burghal tenements, and all and sundry the field lands of Seidhil and Welmedow, with the pertinents, by the aforesaid altar, and the chaplain thereof who for the time shall be, as shall be more amply made manifest below, in pure and perpetual almsgift, with all their freedoms, commodities, easements, and their just pertinents whatsoever, belonging, or that may in any way hereafter justly belong to the said tenements, burghal and field lands, as freely, quietly, fully, wholly, honourably, well and in peace, in all and by all, as any lands, burghal or field, within the kingdom of Scotland are given and granted in perpetual alms to any chaplainry and chaplain; Reserving to us, and to all above expressed, living and dead, the suffrages of Divine prayers only; of which chaplain the presentation, imposition, and giving, shall wholly belong and in perpetual times coming shall pertain to us, the said

James and Elizabeth, while we live in this world, and thereafter to the bailies and community of the burgh of Paisley for the time being, and their successors, by pure and simple giving and delivery of the book, chalice, and ornaments of the altar, so that in such giving of the said chaplainry, no other superior shall have any interest: Which bailies and community aforesaid of the aforesaid burgh, after the death of us, James and Elizabeth, shall be bound, within twenty days from the time of the vacation of the aforesaid chaplainry, to impose, institute and admit a chaplain, suitable, sufficient, and of good conversation, and above all, a native of the burgh of Paisley, to the said chaplainry: And if the said bailies and community, patrons of the said chaplainry, shall, after our death be negligent in presenting a qualified chaplain to celebrate at the said altar of Saints Mirin and Columba, situated in the south part of the parochial church of Paisley, as beforesaid, within twenty days from the time of the vacation of the same chaplainry, then, in that event only, shall it be lawful for the prior, convent, and chapter of the monastery of Paisley, who for the time shall be, to impose and institute a chaplain qualified and sufficient, and especially a native of Paisley, in the same chaplainry, the consent of the said bailies and community of the burgh of Paisley being in this event only, not had or required thereto: We will also and ordain that neither the said patrons of this chaplainry, nor our heirs, shall have power to retain in their own hands the aforesaid burghal tenements, and burghal and field lands of Seidhil and Welmedow, nor any parts of the same tenements or lands, or to apply them to their own use or uses; or in any way whatever to alienate them from the sustentation of the said chaplain and repair of the altar, or in any case to present another chaplain to the aforesaid altar, otherwise than is before stated: which chaplain, so presented, imposed, and admitted, shall personally make continual residence at the said parochial church of Paisley, and shall every day when he may be disposed, celebrate for our souls and the souls aforesaid, a solemn mass, signally and wisely performing his sacred office at the said altar of Saints Mirin and Columba, confessors; and shall there diligently make pious commendation of the souls before written: which chaplain also, if he shall, without licence of the patrons of the said chaplainry asked and obtained, and also, without reasonable cause, absent himself from the aforesaid church, and from divine service at the said altar, and shall not be careful to make his dwelling or residence therein beyond fifteen days together, or shall have obtained another benefice of any sort, curate or not curate, forthwith the same chaplainry shall, ipso facto, be deemed thenceforth to be vacant, by his absence, or peaceable possession of another benefice or office; and another fit chaplain shall of new be admitted and instituted in the same, by the said patrons, as is aforesaid, who shall be careful to fulfil the office committed to him with vigilant diligence: But if this office of chaplainry be trampled on or neglected in any way, by the absence, insufficiency, negligence or sloth of the chaplain thereof, the aforesaid very reverend father and lord in Christ, the archbishop of Glasgow, and his officers, in whom we have singular confidence, will, for the sake of divine charity, carefully provide for and attend thereto; and in all their visitations yearly, they shall diligently examine the same chaplain, and enquire concerning his administration and other things premised, by which he renders himself unfit for the same chaplaincy, and shall correct him according to the measure of his fault: and if, for the third time in their going out, he shall be delated for notable vice, and having been found guilty shall not desist, we will and ordain the said chaplaincy to be thenceforth vacant in point of fact: In faith, testimony, validity, and approbation of the foundation of the which chaplaincy or divine office, confirmation of the rents and lands of this our gift and grant, we have, with instance, procured the seals of the aforesaid very reverend father and lord in Christ, the archbishop of Glasgow, and of his chapter, and ours, together with the common seals of the said lords abbot and convent, and of the said burgh and community of Paisley, to be set to this present writing, and to our foundation; and for the rest, we shall be careful by ourselves or another to be procured in our name completed and founded by our command. At Paisley, on the fifteenth day of the month of July in the year of the Lord, one thousand four hundred ninety-nine, the second indiction, and seventh year of the pontificate of the most holy father in Christ and our lord, Alexander the Sixth, by divine providence Pope.

W. PURVES, Cl.

JAMES by the grace of God, King of Scots to all worthy men of his whole land clerics and laics greeting, Wit ye that whereas we are mindful of our bounden duty about the service of God, and for the great zeal which we bear towards the observance of polity and good order among our subjects, and specially within our burgh of Paisley; And that above all in virtue of our office we are bound to fulfil the worship and service of God by whose providence we are promoted to the government of this our kingdom: And that it becomes us to provide by all honest means that a school and study of letters be erected, and the poor within our said burgh be sustained, so that the youth may be instructed and formed in good manners, and in the knowledge of letters and virtue not only that they may serve and be useful in the ministry of the word of God, but that they may be able and necessary instruments for the profit and well-being of our said Burgh; Therefore with advice and consent of our right faithful cousin James Earl of Mourton Lord of Dalkeith, regent of our kingdom and of our lieges, and of the Lords of our Secret Council, we have given granted and freely disposed, and by this our present charter do give grant and freely dispoise to our lovites, the bailies, councillors, and community of our said burgh of Paisley and their successors for ever, all and sundry the altarages of the chapels, lands and manse underwritten, fermes annual rents or revenues, profits, and duties thereof, pittances, obit money or obit silver and the common dues, under specified, lying within the burgh parish and liberties of Paisley viz.: the altarage of Saints Mirin and

Columba, the altarage of Saint Ninian, the altarage of Saint Mary the Virgin, the altarage of Saint Nicholas, the altarage of St Peter, the altarage of Saint Katherine, the altarage of Saint Anne, the Chapel of Saint Roche, and seven particates or roods of lands, or thereby, pertaining and adjacent to the said chapel, together with the pittances, obit money, or obit silver, or commons, which before were wont to be levied and received by the monks of the Monastery of Paisley: To be holden and had all and sundry the aforesaid altarages of chapels, lands and manse above written, fermes, annual rents, profits and duties thereof, annual rents or provents, pittances obit money and commons above specified, to the said bailies, councillors and community of the burgh aforesaid and their successors for ever, as they lie in length and breadth with free entry and ish, and with all other and sundry liberties, commodities, profits, easements and their just pertinents whatsoever belonging or that may in any way justly belong in future to the said altarages of chapels, lands, manse, fermes, annual rents, profits and duties of the same annual rents or provents, pittances, obit money, and commons above-written, with the pertinents belonging or that may in any way in future belong to them, freely, quietly, fully, wholly, honourably well and in peace without any revocation contradiction or obstacle whatsoever: With power to the saids bailies, councillors and community and their successors by themselves and their collectors appointed and deputed by them to levy and receive all and sundry the fermes annual rents, fruits, duties and emoluments whatsoever above specified, where-soever the same were wont to be levied and received and also to let, set in tack, and uplift, as to them shall seem good, in likemanner and as freely in all respects as any prebendary or chaplain set the same before, to be applied and converted to the repair and maintenance of a Grammar School, and the sustenance of a Master or preceptor for the instruction and education of boys and youth of the said burgh, and of the country adjacent to the same; and the sum of forty merks to be paid to four poor boys within the said burgh, and residing in the school, yearly, for the space of five years: that is to say, to each of the said poor boys the sum of ten merks; and after the expiry and outrunning of the said five years the said boys may be removed, and others put in their places by the said bailies and councillors, to remain in the said schools during the space aforesaid, and the foresaid sum to be paid to each of the said needy or poor boys, as is beforesaid. And that the said order be observed in all time coming in manner aforesaid. Moreover with consent aforesaid by the tenor of our present charter we unite and incorporate all and sundry the foresaid altarages, lands, chapel, manse, above-written fermes, profits and duties of the same, annual rents, pittances, obit money and commons or common rents above-written, into one body, in all times coming to be called Our Foundation of the Grammar School of Paisley: And also with advice aforesaid we do will and grant and for us and our successors for ever decern and ordain, that one sasine only, to be taken by the said bailies or any of them, at the Tolbooth of the burgh aforesaid, shall be as valid and sufficient in all time coming as if particular sasines had been taken at every part of the altarages, lands manse and others above written, and notwithstanding the distance of place: Furthermore we will that the prebendaries or chaplains who before the alteration of religion were provided to the said altarages and chapel shall in no wise be prejudiced by this our infeftment, but that the use of them shall be reserved to them during their lives: Wherefore we command our comptroller, collectors of the thirds of benefices now present and for the time being, and others to whom it effeirs, in general and in particular, that none of them presume to levy and receive the foresaid fruits, annual rents or provents and others above specified, or cause any impediment to the saids bailies, councillors and community of the burgh aforesaid, and their successors, in the peaceable possession of the same: Requiring and ordaining the Lords of our Council and Session to grant and direct our letters in all the four forms at the instance of the said bailies, councillors and community, and their successors for causing them to be promptly answered of the said annual rents, fruits, and other dues above specified: We command also the intrmitters with the said annual rents, fruits and dues above specified, astricted in payment of the same, and the occupiers of the lands and tenements from which the said annual rents or profits were wont to be taken, to answer readily to the saids bailies, councillors and community, for the same, in the fullest manner without any summons beforehand: Providing nevertheless, that if the saids bailies, councillors and community should not lay out or apply the said annual rents, fruits, and others above written in the manner and to the effect foresaid, the same being sufficiently examined and proved by declaration following thereupon, that this our present infeftment with all that may follow thereon shall be decerned to be retreated, rescinded, cancelled, annulled and of no value, force and effect: In witness of which thing we have commanded our great Seal to be set to this our present Charter: Witnesses, the reverend father in Christ, Adam bishop of Orkney, commendator of our monastery of Holyrood near Edinburgh, our dear cousins William Earl Marishall, Lord Keith, John Lord Glamis our Chancellor; the Venerable father in Christ Robert Commendator of our Monastery of Dunfermline, our Secretary, our beloved familiar councillors, Masters George Buchanan, pensioner of Crossraguel Keeper of our Privy Seal, James Makgill of Rankelour Nether Clerk of our Rolls Register of Council, and Alexander Hay Director of our Chancery. At Holyroodhouse the third day of the Month of January the year of the Lord one thousand five hundred and seventy six and of our reign the tenth.

[On the back.] Precept of Sesing of Chancellarie To the Baillies and Counsale and Communitie of Pasley, of the pittance silver, obit silver and altarages of St. Mirren and Columbi, St. Mare, etc., daited 3 January, 1576.

James by the grace of God, King of Scots to the sheriff and his bailies of Renfrew, with our lovites John Vaus, Thomas Inglis bailies of Paisley—and each of them conjunctly and severally our sheriffs of Renfrew in that part, greeting. Whereas we having in mind our due office about the service of God, and for the great zeal which we bear towards the observance of polity and good order among our subjects, and specially within our burgh of Paisley; And that above all, in virtue of our office we are bound to fulfil the worship and service of God, by whose providence we are promoted to the government of this our kingdom: And that it becomes us to provide by all honest means that schools and studies of letters be erected, and that the poor within our said burgh be sustained so that the youth may be instructed and formed in good manners, and in the knowledge of letters and virtue, not only that they may serve and be useful in the ministry of the Word of God, but that they may be able and necessary instruments for the profit and wellbeing of our said burgh: Therefore with advice and consent of our right faithful cousin James Earl of Morton, Lord of Dalkeith, Regent of our kingdom and of our lieges, and of the Lords of our Privy Council, we have given, granted and freely disposed to our lovites the bailies, councillors and community of our said burgh of Paisley, and their successors for ever, all and sundry the altarages, of the chapels, lands and manse underwritten, fermes, annual rents or revenues, profits and duties thereof, pittances, obit money or obit silver, and the common dues under specified, lying within the burgh, parish and liberties of Paisley, viz: the altarage of Saints Mirin and Columba, the altarage of Saint Ninian, the altarage of Saint Mary the Virgin, the altarage of Saint Nicholas, the altarage of Saint Peter, the altarage of Saint Katharine, the altarage of Saint Anne, the Chapel of Saint Roche and seven particates or roods of lands or thereby pertaining to the said Chapel together with the pittances, obit money or obit silver, or commons, which before were wont to be levied and received by the monks of the monastery of Paisley. Moreover with consent foresaid we unite and incorporate all and sundry the foresaid altarages, lands, chapel, manse above-written, fermes, profits, and duties of the same, annual rents, pittances, obit money and commons or common rents above written, into one body, in all time coming to be called Our Foundation of the Grammar School of Paisley: And also with advice aforesaid we do will, grant and for us and our successors for ever decern and ordain, that one sasine only to be taken at once by the said bailies or any of them, at the Tolbooth of the burgh aforesaid, shall be as valid and sufficient in all time coming as if particular sasines had been taken at every part of the altarages, lands, manse, and others above-written, notwithstanding the distance of places, as is more fully contained in our charter granted hereupon: We charge and command you that without delay ye justly cause the said bailies, councillors and community or their certain attorneys, bearers of these presents, to have sasine of all and sundry the foresaid altarages, chapels, lands, manse, above written fermes, annual rents or provents, pittances, obit money, and commons above specified, with pertinents, according to the form and tenor of our foresaid charter, which they have thereof: And this ye in no wise omit: for the doing of which we commit power to you and each of you, conjunctly and severally, our sheriffs of Renfrew in that part. Given under the testimony of our Great Seal at Holyrood house the third day of the month of January, the year of the Lord one thousand five hundred seventy six, and of our reign the tenth.

James, by the grace of God King of Scots, to all good men of his whole land, clergy and laity, greeting: Wit ye that forasmuch as God in his boundless mercy was pleased to remove from this our nation the horrid darkness of papistical superstition, and the public profession thereof, for which before He had been earnestly entreated, and for repressing the same, it was found that the erections of monasteries and sustentations of convents, which as garrisons and nurseries of those professing these impious superstitions, were not only useless and unnecessary, but also extremely hurtful, if they should still remain in such a state: which monastic institution, and the order thereof, is by the Divine providence and goodness, not only wholly abrogated and subverted, but also by the laws of our kingdom abolished and taken away; In consideration whereof, and also that all the lands, mills and temporal rents of the monastery underwritten, or the greatest part thereof, have hitherto been let to various persons in feu ferme or emphiteosin heritably,—therefore our beloved and faithful kinsman Lord Claud Hamilton, usufructuary of the monastery of Paisley, and Claud Hamilton his son, now commendator of the same, by virtue of the lawful provision made to him thereupon containing express reservation of all lands, fruits, rents, fermes, duties, jurisdictions, dignities, and others whatsoever pertaining to the aforesaid monastery, to the said Lord Claud Hamilton for all the days of his life, with consent of the economus and administrator of the said commendator, and with the unanimous consent and assent of the convent of the same monastery, have resigned and dimitted all and sundry the underwritten lands, baronies, mills, multures, woods, fishings, coals, coalheuchs, mansions, manors, towers, fortalices, annual rents, burgh of barony, tenements, mosses, regalities, offices and privileges of the same, and others particularly underwritten, with tenants, tenandries, fermes, cains, customs, dues and all others below specified which now and formerly belonged by right to the aforesaid monastery of Paisley and its patrimony, and to the abbots commendators and convent thereof, and in whose possession they were in any times past, for this new heritable infestment of the same to be made by us thereupon in the manner underwritten to the aforesaid Lord Claud Hamilton his heirs male whatsoever and their assignees, and for erecting the same into a temporal lordship (as follows) only, and not otherwise: Which resignation also, and dimission of the same to the effect aforesaid, we have admitted and accepted, and have again given, granted and delivered the same lands, baronies and others below specified, to the aforesaid Lord Claud Hamilton, his heirs male and assignees aforesaid heritably, according to the form and tenor of the aforesaid resignation and dimission, and of this our charter and infestment following thereupon, and that on this present day between the seventh and the eighth hour of the morning, before the conclusion and publication of the act and constitution of our present parliament, which is ordained to be made and promulgated for the annexation of all church lands within our kingdom to our crown: Knowing, besides, that the said Lord Claud Hamilton derives his descent from our blood royal; and also calling to mind how well the same Lord Claud has ever thankfully, honourably, and most dutifully served as well our late dearest mother as ourselves, not only within the bounds of our kingdom, but also in foreign nations, whither he went for our advantage and at our wish and request, and there remained many years, whereby the said Lord Claud has sustained great charges and expense, not without great risk even of his life, for the honour of our royal estate and the public good of our kingdom: Moved by which reasons, and having knowledge now by experience itself of the same Lord Claud's promptitude and steadfast affection towards us and our service, and as we are sufficiently persuaded that he will perpetually continue constant in every kind of such duties with the utmost loyalty and obedience, we have deemed it alien from our royal majesty to defraud the said Lord Claud, and his so thankful service, of money any more than of merit, but that we may be seen to satisfy these in some measure, whereby we may afford to him the greater occasion to go on constantly in performing the like and more arduous services hereafter, and that he may be rendered the more able to undertake such charges for the common weal of our kingdom as the occasion and the time may demand; We therefore, and for some other causes and considerations justly moving us thereto, after our lawful and perfect age of twenty-one years complete, have given, granted, disponed, and confirmed, and by the tenor of this our present charter, for us and our successors, do give, grant, dispone and confirm to the aforesaid Lord Claud Hamilton and his heirs male whatsoever and their assignees heritably all and sundry the aforesaid lands, baronies, mills, mul-

tures, woods, fishings, manors, castles, towers, fortalices, coals, coalheuchs, burgh of barony, tenements, peat mosses, annual rents, regalities, offices, privileges of the same and others particularly underwritten, with all their tenants, tenandries, and services of free tenants, fermes, cains, customs, dues, parts, pendicles, pertinents, commodities, garbal teinds below specified, included, and others whatsoever underwritten pertaining to the aforesaid abbacy of Paisley or which did in any way in times past pertain to the same monastery and patrimony of the same, that is to say, all and whole the burgh of barony and regality and town of Paisley, with lands, burghal acres, crofts, tenements, fermes, burgh fairs, markets, privileges and others whatsoever belonging and pertaining to the same, with the power of electing, creating, removing and changing provosts, bailies, officers and other members of the said burgh of Paisley, and of having and holding within the said burgh a free market weekly on the Saturday in all times coming, together with the public fairs to be held there twice in each year, that is to say, on the twenty-fifth day of the month of July called Saint James the apostle's day, and again on the twenty sixth day of the month of October called Saint Marnoc's day yearly in all times coming, with all tolls, customs, privileges, jurisdictions, commodities and immunities whatsoever pertaining to the said burgh or that may in any way pertain thereto, or to any other burgh of barony within our kingdom: And also all and whole the marsh or peat-moss of Paisley, lands of Seidhill, with mill of the same, mill lands, multures, sequels and knaifship thereof, and the waulkmill of Seidhill and its commodities and pertinents, lands of Wardmedow and Wellmedow, Sneddon, Quhitheid, Hilheid and Bromelands with all their annexes, connexes, parts, pendicles and pertinents lying within the said burgh of Paisley, liberty and territory thereof, Lands of Over and Nether Walkinshawes and Insches with their pertinents, all and whole the lands of Marksworth, Cuningair, Brown's Acre, Monkshaw and Monkshaw Wod, Nether Ward, Over Ward, Goosehouse-land, Barnyard, Mekilcrofts, Little Crofts, Caudranes, Quhytcruik, Oxshaw, Darskeith and Blakistoun with mansion, manor, and fortalice of Blackstoun, yards, orchards, pigeoncots, wood and mosses of the same, together with all and sundry the garbal teinds included of the aforesaid lands of Marksworth, Cuningair, Brown's Acre, Monkshaw, Monkshaw Wod, Over Ward, Nether Ward, Goosehouse-land, Barnyard, Crofts above written, Caudranes and Quhytcruik, with annexes, connexes, parts, pendicles and pertinents of the same: And also the lands of Over Clayfauld, Nether Clayfauld, Nether Gallowhills, Knaif's land, Over Gallowhills, Arkleston and wood of the same, Hillington, Ingliston, and mill thereof, with mill lands and multures of the same, Lands of Greenlaw, Easter and Wester Corsflatts, Easter and Wester Gaitflatts, Panet Land, Brabloch, Lylesland, Todholm, Carriagehills, Riccartbar, with loch of the same, Corsebar, Braidielands, Meikleriggs, Newtown, Barskevane, Lincleif, mosses of the same, Wodsyde, Ferguslie, Ruchebank, Thornelie Paisley and the muir of the same, Drumgrane with mill, mill lands and multures thereof, Lands of Granes, Auchingoun, and mill of the same: Fultounes, with the mill of Fultoun, mill lands, multures, sequels, knaifship, coals and coalheuchs of the same, Lands of Middletoun, Linwood,

To all who shall see or hear this charter, We the bailies, councillors, burgesses and community of the burgh and town of Paisley subscribing, for ourselves, and taking the burden on us for our successors, bailies, councillors and community of the said burgh, now and that shall be in time coming, everlasting salvation in the Lord. Whereas by virtue of our letters of obligation of the date of these presents made, granted and subscribed, to the effect following, making mention in them, that for the honour of Almighty God, and for the aid and support of the poor, but especially of some of the old and feeble poor of our fellow burgesses and neighbours, indwellers of our said burgh of Paisley, with mature deliberation and good advice had beforehand, we have taken full resolution, with the Divine help, and by His good pleasure, to found, erect and mortify in our said burgh and town of Paisley a place of hospital, or hospice, commonly called the almshouse or hospital, now at our expense erected and built, at the west part of our said burgh, on the north part or side thereof, with yard lying contiguous thereto, containing in length and breadth, and bounded and limited as follows, that is to say, between the tenement and land now pertaining to Master John Vaus, on the east, the King's public highway on the south, the new road or passage now by us newly made and ordained, ascending from the said public highway to the road and passage of Oxshaw, between the said hospital yard and our land on the east, and the lands of James Stewart called of Caversbank, and burgess of the said burgh, on the west, containing in breadth land on the west: And the said lands now pertaining to us on the north parts: containing in the fore front towards the south in breadth, and in length from the said public highway to our said lands

In which hospital or dwelling place, vulgarly the almshouse or hospital, six poor old men, feeble and unable to work, or more if it should happen, according to the power of the sustentation following, of our co-burgesses, and inhabitants of our said burgh of Paisley: who with their successors shall be clad in gowns reaching to their ankles, tunics, and bonnets, black or blue, by the prescription of the said bailies, councillors, and their successors: For the sustentation of whom in apparel and provision, in all necessary things as follows, we, for us and our successors have given, granted, disposed, mortified, endowed and for ever confirmed, and by the tenor of these presents do give, grant, dispoise, mortify, endow and for ever confirm, in pure and perpetual alms, to the aforesaid six old poor men, and their successors, or more according to the power of the sustentation underwritten, set and placed in the said hospital or lodging place by us and our successors, as undoubted heritable patrons of the foresaid hospital or lodging place, vulgarly the almshouse or hospital—the foresaid place, mansion, and house of the said lodging place and hospital by us formerly constructed and built, with yard thereof and their sundry parts, privileges, enclosures, walls, hedges, and other pertinents belonging and pertaining to the said hospital or lodging place, bounded and lying as is premised: Together with the yearly dues particularly under expressed, namely, to each of the said six old men yearly, forty merks money of the Kingdom of Scotland, to them and their successors, old men remaining in the said hospital and lodging place, to be paid by us and our successors, by particular portions and divisions daily and weekly, or every month, at the pleasure and option of us and our successors, but to be received and uplifted yearly from the first and readiest of the rents, fruits, and common goods of the said burgh of Paisley, and specially (without prejudice, however, of the generality before-written) to be paid from all and whole the customs of the said burgh, and from the yearly stents of our common works, or common burdens, and from the fruits and rents of our common lands of the said burgh, and from the first and readiest thereof, by us disposed in pure and perpetual alms as is before said: Also we do give, grant, dispoise, mortify, endow, and for ever confirm to the aforesaid six old poor men and their successors, placed and remaining in the said hospital or almshouse, sixty loads of peats and thirty loads of coals yearly, by us and our successors, in the said hospital or almshouse for fire and hearth for the necessary use and comfort of the said poor men at the usual terms, and especially necessary: To be holden and had all and whole the aforesaid hospital or almshouse, with the yard thereof and their sundry pertinents before-written, together with the said yearly duties, rents, peats, coals, and others aforesaid yearly and termly to be taken and levied as is premised, to the afore-mentioned six old poor men placed and remaining in the said hospital or almshouse, and their successors, of us and our successors, undoubted heritable patrons of the aforesaid hospital or almshouse, in pure and perpetual alms for ever; by all their right ancient measures and divisions as they lie in length and breadth, in houses, buildings, yards, orchards, closes, walls, hedges, free entry and ish, and with all other and sundry liberties, commodities, profits, easements, and their just pertinents belonging, or that may in any way justly belong in future to the said hospital or almshouse, and to the yearly duties, stents, and rents above-written, with their pertinents, freely, quietly, fully, wholly, honorably, well and in peace, without any impediment, revocation, contradiction, or obstacle whatever: Making therefor yearly the said six old poor men and their successors, prayers and suffrages day and night to the Lord God Almighty, for the keeping and defence of his universal Church; Also for the health and safety of our Sovereign Lord James by the grace of God King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of his Queen and their most noble posterity, and for the protection of this Kingdom of Scotland, together with the increase and prosperity of the noble and potent Lord Claud, Lord of Paisley, James Earl of Abercorn, etc., and his nephew, and his heirs male Lords of Paisley, our superiors, and for the increase of the prosperity of our said Burgh; and for the everlasting salvation and daily prosperity of the magistrates, bailies, councillors, and all the burgesses and inhabitants of our said burgh of Paisley: Also by ringing the bell of the said hospital daily, at the fifth hour of the morning, and the tenth hour of the evening, and the last bell of the day of preaching and prayers, as it shall happen, in their turns, and as may be prescribed to them by the said bailies and their successors, bailies of our said burgh: And by keeping the said hospital well cleansed, and the yard cultivated and planted with flowers, herbs and vegetables, in all time coming; and we, truly, and our successors foresaid shall warrand, acquit, and for ever defend all and whole the foresaid hospital or almshouse with yard thereof, annual rents, duties, and others above expressed, with their pertinents, to the said six poor old men there by us placed and lodged, and remaining there, and their successors for ever, in all and by all, in form and effect as is premised, against all mortals. Moreover to our lovites and each of you conjunctly and severally our bailies in that part specially constitute, greeting: we command and strictly charge that as soon as ye see these presents ye forthwith give, deliver, and cause to have, without delay, state and sasine heritable and real, actual and corporal possession of all and whole the aforesaid hospital or almshouse, with yard thereof, and their sundry parts, pendicles and pertinents, together with the said duties, rents, stents, peats, coals, and others before-written, yearly and termly to be received, levied, and paid as is premised as attorney and in the names of the said six old poor men, for them and their successors for ever, by giving of earth and stone of the ground of the said mansion, and one penny as use is in Scotland, and this in nowise ye omit: We will also and grant and for us and our successors do decern and ordain that one sasine taken now at the gate of the said hospital or almshouse (without any reiteration of the said sasine in future) shall be a sufficient sasine to the said poor men and their successors, for the aforesaid hospital and almshouse with yard thereof, and their pertinents and for the above-written yearly dues, rents, stents, peats, coals, and other profits foresaid, notwithstanding whatever impediments acts, statutes, laws, and other laws and customs, which can be objected in the contrary; and we by these presents do dispense with all defects following thereon. And for doing this, we by these presents do commit to you and each of you conjunctly and severally, our bailies in that part, our full and irrevocable power: And for the greater corroboration of all and sundry the premisses We ordain this present charter to be entered and inserted in the court books of the said burgh, therein for ever to remain: In testimony of which thing, to this our present charter (written by John Greenlees, notary public, clerk of the said burgh), subscribed with the hands of the saids bailies councillors, and community, of the said burgh of Paisley, the common seal of the said burgh is appended at the said burgh in the Tolbooth of the same the last day of the month of September the year of the Lord one thousand six hundred eighteen. Before these witnesses Mr. Robert Park, master of the Grammar School of the said burgh, Patrick Mosman, John Henryson, tailor, Robert Park, younger, all burgesses of the said burgh.

33.—Letter from King Charles I.—Greenwich, 16th May, 1634.³³

LETTER to the Treasurers, narrating an offer made by the Earl of Abercorn, of freely quitting all the superiorities, etc., of the great vassals of the Abbacy of Paisley, being those above 500 merks Scots of yearly value, provided he may retain the small vassals whose rents do not exceed that sum yearly; also, that he had offered to resign his interest in an ancient regality of the said Abbacy, so far as regarded the higher class of vassals; which offer his Majesty intends to accept, but defers until further progress be made concerning erections; Wherefore he forbids any new signature for the small vassals so reserved to pass the seals, lest the same should disappoint the purpose.—Greenwich, 16th May, 1634. Signed by the King.

William, Lord Wellenden of Wrugistoune, our Depute in the same offices, and remanent Lords Commissioners of our Exchequer of our said Kingdom, have given, granted and dispoened, and by this our present Charter have confirmed, and by the tenor of the same, give, grant, dispoene, and for ourselves and our successors, for ever confirm to our Lovites the Bailies, Treasurer, Council, and Community of the Burgh of Paisley, and their successors, all and whole the Burgh and Town of Paisley, with Burgh Acres, Crofts, Tenements, Houses, Burgh Mails and Lands of Seedhills, annexed thereto, within the boundaries after-mentioned, and territory of the same (excepting the Mills, called the Seedhill Mills, corn-kilns thereof, mill-hills or shilling-milns of the same, and astricted multures of said Burgh of Paisley, and knaveship thereof, according to use and wont, and of the lands after-mentioned, within the territory of the said burgh): All and Whole the Feu Duties of old addebtet, obliged, and usual to be paid to the Abbot and Convent of the Abbacy of Paisley for the time being, and now to the Lords of Erection of Paisley, their Factors and Chamberlains, in their names, of and for the said Burgh of Paisley, houses, biggings, yards, tenements, acres, portions and parcels of lands thereof, westward from the east end of the Bridge of Paisley, and Mustardyaird dyke, including and comprehending the lands of Calsieside, Orchard, Bladoyardis, Sneddon, Hutheid, Wellmeadow, Broomlands, and others, within the bounds, territory and limits of the said burgh of Paisley, property and commonty of the same (excluding the Feu Duties of the lands commonly called Oxshawwood, Hutheid and Wardmeadow, which are in no ways comprehended in this present charter) with the former and accustomed privileges and liberties of that part of the Glebe of the Moss of Paisley, and bounded betwixt the marches of the Lands of Ferguslie and the lands of Merksworth, according to the ancient rights and titles thereof, granted to the said Bailies, Treasurer, Council, and Community of the said Burgh of Paisley, and their predecessors, and their possession use and wont; together with fairs, markets, and their privileges, and any other pertinents whatsoever, belonging to said Burgh; with power to appoint, elect, remove, and change the Provost, Bailies, Burgesses, Officers, and other members of the said Burgh of Paisley, and of having and holding there a free weekly market, on the Friday in all time coming, and also of holding there two public fairs every year, one of them on the twenty-fifth day of June, commonly called St. James the Apostle's Day, and the other on the twenty-sixth day of October, commonly called St. Marnoch's Day, yearly in all time coming; with the tolls, customs, privileges, jurisdictions, commodities and immunities whatsoever, belonging, or that may justly belong to the said Burgh of Paisley; and particularly without prejudice to the said Generality, with the privilege, liberty, and power of buying and selling within the said Burgh, wine, wax, cloth, woollen and linen, wholesale and retail, and other goods and merchandise brought thereto, with the power and liberty of having and holding therein, bakers, brewers, fleshers, and sellers of fish as well as flesh, and craftsmen of any of the crafts belonging to the said Burgh and Liberty thereof; which Burgh and Town of Paisley, Burgh acres, crofts, tenements, houses, Burgh mails, and lands of Seedhills, annexed thereto, within the bounds and territories above mentioned (excepting as is above excepted), said Feu Duties of old addebted, obliged, and usual to be paid now and formerly to the persons respectively above-mentioned, forth of and for the said Burgh of Paisley, houses, biggings, yards, tenements, acres, roads and parcels of lands thereof, within the bounds above specified, comprehending as is above comprehended, and excepting as is above excepted, with the ancient and accustomed privileges and liberties of that part of the glebe, the Moss of Paisley, bounded as above and specified in rights granted to the said Bailies, Treasurer, Council and Community of the said Burgh, and their predecessors, with power, rights, and privileges above more fully narrated, formerly belonging heritably to William, Lord Cochrane, William Master of Cochrane, his eldest son, and the said Bailies, Treasurer, Councillors and Community of the said Burgh of Paisley, or one or other of them, and were by them, or their Procurators, specially appointed for this purpose, in their names, in virtue of letters patent, and procuratories of resignation, resigned purely and simply by staff and baton, as use is, into the hands of the Commissioners of our Exchequer, having power of receiving resignations in our name and of granting new Infeftment conform thereto, in favour of, and for this our new Infeftment, to be made and granted by us and our Commissioners of Exchequer in our name, to the said Bailies, Treasurer, Councillors and Community of the said Burgh, and their successors in the same offices, at Edinburgh, 25th day of November last bypast, as is more fully contained in the authentic instruments of the above-mentioned resignation relating thereto, taken in the hands of Mr. Robert Wallace, N.P. Moreover, we, with the advice and consent foresaid, have ratified, approved, and by this our present Charter have confirmed, and by the tenor hereof ratify, approve, and for our successors for ever confirm a contract of alienation, entered into and perfected between the said William Lord Cochrane, William Master of Cochrane, both with one consent and assent on the one part, and William Greenlees and John Park, Merchants, at that time Bailies of the said Burgh of Paisley, William Love, Treasurer, and the Councillors for the time being of the said Burgh, thereto subscribing for themselves, and taking the burden for the Community of said Burgh on the other other part, on the third day of May, 1658, by virtue of which contract, the said William Lord Cochrane and William Master of Cochrane, his eldest son, renounced, dimitted, and gave from them all right of Superiority over the said burgh of Paisley, within the bounds specially above-mentioned, excepting as above excepted, to the effect expressed in the said contract. Moreover, the said William Lord Cochrane, and Wiliam, Master of the same, both with one consent, as said is, by virtue of the said contract, have renounced, simpliciter upgiven, and given away from them, their heirs and successors, to and in favour of the said Bailies, Councillors, Treasurer, Community, and Inhabitants of said Burgh of Paisley, and their successors, all right of property and of the magistracy of the said Burgh, and of election of Bailies, Councillors, Clerks, Burgesses, Officers, and other members of the same, in all time coming, and of the tenements, lands and others within the said Burgh and lands of Seedhills thereto annexed, within the bounds and territories of the same above-mentioned (excepting as is before excepted); to the effect the said Bailies, Councillors, and Community of the said Burgh, and their successors, may bruik, enjoy, and possess the same conform to their respective rights, and may be capable and able to elect, remove, and continue their Magistrates, Bailies, Councillors, Treasurer, Clerks, Officers, Burgesses, and all other members usual and necessary, within the said Burgh, as to them shall seem expedient. As also, the said William, Lord Cochraue, and William, Master of the same, both with one consent and assent, for themselves and their foresaids, sold, disponed, renounced, assigned and overgave from them and their foresaids, to and in favonr of said Bailies, Councillors, Treasurer and Community of said Burgh and their successors, for the public use of the same, All and Whole the feu-duties above written, of old addebted, obliged, and usual to be paid and from that time to the persons respectively above-named, forth of and for the said Burgh of Paisley, houses, biggings, yards, tenements, acres, roods, and parcels of land thereof, bounded, comprehending and excluding, as said is, with the former and accustomed privileges of that part of the Moss of the said Burgh of Paisley, bounded as above expressed, in all the heads, articles, and circumstances of the same whatsoever, in so far as the said contract can establish a title, and furnish, support, corroborate, and fortify the said resignation, made into the hands of our said Commissioners of Exchequer; and especially this our present Charter and Infetments, and rights to be expedited and granted hereon to the said Bailies, Treasurer, Councillors, and Community of our said Burgh of Paisley, and their successors, to be holden and had, all and whole the said burgh and town of Paisley, burghal acres, crofts, tenements, houses, Burgh-mails, and lands of Seedhills thereto annexed, the said feu-duties and Moss, lying bounded and excepted as above-written, and power and privileges of the same specially above-mentioned, by the said Bailies, Councillors, Treasurer, and Community of said Burgh, and their successors, of us and our successors, as Princes and Stewards of Scotland, in free blench and heritage for ever, by all their right meiths, old and divided, as the same lie, in length and breadth, in houses, biggings, woods, plains, muirs, marshes, ways, paths, waters, pools, rivers, fields, meadows and pastures, mills, multures, their sequels, hawkings, huntings, fishings, petaries, and turbaries, rabbits, rabbit warrens, doves, dovecotes, smithies, kilns, breweries, whins, woods, groves and plantings, trees, bushes, stone and lime quarries, with courts and their issues, herezeldes and bludwites, with pit and gallows, sock, sack, thole, thame, wrack, wair, waith, vert, venison, outfangtheiff, infangtheiff, pit and gallows, with common pasturage, and free ish and entry, and with all their other and singular liberties, commodities, profits, easements, and just pertinents whatsoever as well not named as named, above ground as well as below the ground, far and near, with the pertinents that belong or that may hereafter in any way justly belong to the said lands, freely, quietly, fully, wholly, honourably, well and in peace, without any revocation, contradiction, impediment, or obstacle whatever; paying therefor yearly, the said Bailies, Councillor, Treasurer, and Community of the said Burgh of Paisley, and their successours, to us and our successors, as Princes and Stewards of Scotland, the sum of seven pounds money of this our kingdom of Scotland yearly, at the Feast of Pentecost, as a proportional part of the blench-duty of the lordship of Paisley, for every other burden, exaction, question, demand, or secular service which can be exacted or required by whomsoever, in any manner of way, from the said Burgh of Paisley, for the feu-duties, privileges and others specially before expressed. Moreover, we will and grant, and for ourselves and our successors we decern and ordain, that one seisin to be taken at the market cross of the said Burgh of Paisley, or within any part of the said burgh by the Bailies, Councillors, Treasurer, and Community thereof, shall stand and be a sufficient seisin for all and whole the said burgh and town of Paisley, burghal acres, crofts, tenements, burgh mails and lands of Seedhill thereto annexed, feu-duties and moss, lying, bounded and excepted, as said is, and the power and privileges of the same, specially above-mentioned, in all time coming, notwithstanding the same lie discontinuous, and in different parts, and with which we for ourselves and our successors, have dispensed, and by the tenor of this our present charter dispense with for ever; but declaring that this our Charter is granted without prejudice to the right of superiority and others belonging to us, by the act of annexation, made in the year 1633. In witness whereof, we have commanded our Great Seal to be appended to this our present Charter, before these witnesses, our well-beloved cousins and Councillors, William Earl Marischal, Lord Keith and Altrie Marshal of our Kingdom, and the Keeper of our Privy Seal, John Earl of Lauderdale, Viscount Maitland, Lord Thirlestane and Beltoun, our Secretary, our beloved Privy Councillors, Sir Archibald Primrose of Dalmeny, Keeper of the Rolls, Clerk of Council and Session, Exchequer and Parliament, Sir John Home of Renton, our Justice Clerk, Knights, and Sir William Ker of Hoddin, Knight, Director of our Chancery, at Edinburgh, 8th December, 1665, and seventeenth year of our reign.

DUMFERMLINE, 9th September, 1491.

ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF DUMFERMLINE CHARTERS.²

In the Name of GOD. AMEN.

BE it evidently known to all men by this present public instrument, that in the year our Lord's incarnation fourteen hundred and ninety-one, on the ninth day of the month of September, in the ninth Indiction, in the eight year of the most sacred Pontificate of our Father and Lord in Christ, Innocent the eighth Pope, by the providence of God. In presence of the notary public and the witnesses underwritten, the honourable and discreet men personally appointed being present, viz. Robert Ker, bailie of the borough of Paisley, and Andrew Payntour, burgess of the same borough, earnestly intreated the venerable and religious man, viz., Mr. William Forstar, professed monk of the monastery of Dumfermline, at that time keeper of the charters of the said monastery, to shew to them what liberties the said monastery possessed in its boroughs belonging to the foresaid monastery, for and because that lately our Lord, King James the Fourth, had erected the foresaid village of Paisley into a borough, with the like liberties which the said village of Dumfermline enjoys. Which religious man, by order and desire of the prior and convent, shewed to foresaid Robert and Andrew, in the hall of that monastery, some charters, the tenors of which follow in these words.

And first, the same religious man produced a charter of David of blessed memory, formerly King of Scotland, son of the blessed Queen Margaret, containing the following clauses.

“ In the name of the sacred and undivided Trinity, I David, by the grace of God, King of the Scots, by my royal power and authority, with the assent of Henry my son, and Queen Matilda my spouse, with the confirmation and clear testimony of the Bishops, Lords, and Barons of my kingdom, and the people also agreeing to it, I grant and confirm, by a perpetual peace, to the church of the sacred Trinity of Dumfermline, founded by the love of my predecessors for piety and bounty, all the underwritten,” etc. Then are narrated all his gifts and those of his father and brethren; then he adds, “ I grant all the foresaid gifts to the foresaid church as freely and quietly as I possess my own proper lands (the defence of my kingdom and regal justice excepted). If the Abbot, by any negligence of his, shall fail to do justice in his court,” etc. Then is inserted, “ Moreover, we discern the often-mentioned church, with all which the mercy of God bestows upon it at present, as this present privilege very well witnesseth, and shall be able to acquire by the same mercy in time to come, to continue in the greatest tranquility of peace very free from all subjection or exaction of ecclesiastical or secular duty, except only that canonical obedience which every church throughout the world owes to its mother; and that it possess for ever, by an unalterable law, the same liberty in all things which the church of St. Andrews has.”

The same religious man produced another charter of Robert de Bruce of worthy memory, formerly King of Scotland, containing word by word these things,

ROBERT, by the Grace of God, King of the Scots, to all honest people of his Country, greeting:

“ KNOW ye that we, for the salvation of our own soul and the salvation of the souls of our predecessors and successors, Kings of Scotland, have given

“and granted, and by this present charter confirmed to God, to the blessed Virgin Mary, and to the church of the sacred Trinity and of St. Margaret at Dumfermline, and to the monks there serving God and that shall serve him for ever, the right of patronage of the vicarage of Innerkeithing, with the pertinents thereof, as freely, quietly, fully, peaceably and honourably as the predecessors of Rodger de Mowbra, Knight, who forfeit against us the said right of patronage more freely, quietly and honourably in all things formerly held and possessed it, giving to us but his word by suffrage only. Besides, we give and grant, and by this present charter confirm to the foresaid monks, our whole new great custom of all their land within our kingdom viz. as well of the boroughs of Dumfermline, Kircaldy, Musselburgh and Queensferry, as of all their other lands whatsomever; so that the said monks may have and use their own proper cocket, according to the liberties of their regality and this our present grant, in all their foresaid lands; which cocket is to be admitted and acknowledged by all our burgesses and people, and foreign merchants throughout our whole kingdom, without the impediment of our chamberlains or any other of our ministers whatsomever who may for the time be, without the petitioning of any other allocution or clearance. In testimony of which, we have caused our seal to be put to the present charter, before these witnesses, the venerable fathers, William, bishop of St. Andrews, William, bishop of Dunkeld; Bernard, our Chancellor, Abbot of Aberbrothick; Duncan and Thomas Ranulfs, Earls of Fife and Murray; John Lord Monteith; James Lord Douglas; David Barclay; Alexander Seton, Robert Lawder, Knights, and others.”

Then the same religious man likewise produced another charter of David of happy memory, formerly King of Scotland, containing verbatim,

DAVID, by the Grace of GOD, King of the Scots, to all honest Men of his whole Country, Clergy and Laity, greeting:

“KNOW ye that we, by iuspecting the charters which the religious men, abbot and convent of the monastery of Dumfermline, have from our ancestors, Kings of Scotland, have more fully understood the rights and liberties of their regality, and likewise of their boroughs: We also, for the salvation of our own and of the souls of all our predecessors and successors, have given and granted, and by this present charter of ours grant them freely, and lawfully to buy and sell in each of their boroughs, viz. Dunfermline, Kircaldy, Musselburgh and Queensferry; and also that in their own boroughs of whatever bounds and extent, and within the boundaries and limits of the whole regality of these religious men, through our whole kingdom, for markets to be lawfully held, both for wool, hides, and skins, and for all other merchandize whatsomever without the impediment of our ministers or burgesses whatsomever (so, however, that they do not exceed the bounds and limits of their said boroughs, or their regality aforesaid), saving always to us the great custom of wool, hides, and skins, and other merchandise growing without the limits and boundaries of the said boroughs and regality “ aforesaid, positively forbidding any other men, our burgesses or merchants, “ of any of our boroughs whatsoever, or any other men, burgesses or merch“ ants of any other whatsoever, in any way whatsoever to usurp within “ the boundaries of the regality of the said religious men their right and power “ of merchandizing or exercising the premises in time to come, to the prejudice “ of the foresaid religious men or their boroughs or burgesses, or to the contra“ diction of this our present declaration and confirmation.

“ In testimony of which thing, we have ordered our seal to be put to this
 “ our present charter, before these witnesses, the venerable Fathers in Christ, “ William, bishop of St. Andrews, and Patrick, bishop of Brechin, our Chan“ cellor ; Robert, our steward of Scotland, Earl of Strathern, our grandson ;
 “ William Earl of Douglas ; Robert Erskine, our Lord Marshal ; Archibald
 “ Douglas and John Harris, Knights. At Edinburgh, the twenty fourth day “ of October, the thirty-fourth year of our reign.”

Afterwards the same religious man produced a certain ancient roll, word for word, to this purpose :

To all Men who shall see or hear this Charter, JOHN, by the Grace of GOD, Abbot of Dunfermline and the Humble Convent at that Place, wishing eternal Salvation in the Lord.

“ KNOW ye that we unanimously, with consent and assent, have given and “ granted, and by this our present charter have confirmed for ourselves and “ successors, to our burgesses at Dumfermline and their heirs for ever, the gild “ of market, with all the liberties, rights and privileges belonging to the free “ gild of market, or that may of right belong to it, together with the houses “ anciently belonging to the said gild, saving the right of every one our “ burgesses and their heirs, having and holding of us and our successors, in “ buying and selling, and all other premises, as freely, quietly, fully honour“ ably, well, and in peace, as the burgesses of our Lord the King, in the burghs “ of our same Lord do hold and possess, preserving for ourselves and those “ that obey us, and their ministers for our use, and the use of those that obey “ us, buying, and others formerly in use, according to justice. In testimony “ of which thing, the common seal of our chapter is put to the present Charter, “ the Chapter being witnesses.” After the reading of which Charters and evidences, the saids Robert and Andrew instantly petitioned me, notary public underwritten, to reduce a copy of these charters and evidences into the form of a public instrument ; and at the instance of the said Robert and Andrew, for a copy of them I wrote it. These things were done within the monastery of Dunfermline in the hall of the same, at seven o'clock in the morning, in the year, month, indiction, day, and pontificate before-mentioned, being present there the venerable and honourable men, viz., Messrs. Thomas Forton, presbyter, and Thomas Logan, subdeacon ; likewise Mr. John Cockburn of Freton, knight ; John Cockburn his grandson ; Robert Murray, John Elder, Andrew Cockburn, and Walter Strathly, with divers others, being specially called and asked to the premises. And I John Allan, presbyter of the diocese of St.

Andrews, by royal authority notary public, was personally present at all and each of the foresaid premises, as is observed, while they were read, said, done, and transacted, together with the forenamed witnesses ; and I thus read, said, saw, knew and heard and took a note of all and each of them : Therefore, this present public instrument written by my own proper hand, I finished and reduced into this public form and sealed and subscribed by my accustomed and usual seal, name and subscription, being called and required for the faith and testimony of the truth of all and each of the premises.

Summa xxs

* This is the first mention of the pest or plague being in the Town which occurs in the existing Records, but it was not the first time that it was here. According to the Records of the Town Council of Glasgow, the Town was subject to this dreadful visitation in the year 1588, when stringent methods were taken for preventing the infection being introduced into the neighbouring city. There can be little doubt that, previous also to this date, the plague had been here. The Records of the Town Council of Edinburgh allude to its prevalence in the East of Scotland in 1497; and, from the following Act of Parliament passed in the year 1456, it would appear to have been then generally prevalent throughout the County;—"Item, as to the feird artikill belangand to the pestilence and governance thereof The Clergy thinkis that thar sulde na man to land nor to burghe that hais gudis to serf him self ande his menyne be put out of his awin hous less than he will nocht remane nor may nocht be cloyt within his awin hous. And gif he disobeyis his nychtbouris, in that caiss he sall be compellyt to pass out of the towne. And gif thar be ony pur folkis that hais na gudis to fynde thame self or put furth of the towne, thai of that towne suld fynde thame an nocht lat thame pass away fra the place quhair thai war depute to remane to fyle the cuntre about thame. And gif ony sik folkis put furth of ony towne walde steyle away, thai of the towne that put thame out sulde ger folow thame and bring thame agane and compell thame to remane and punyss thame for thair away-passing. And that na man sulde byrne ane uther manyis hous bot gif it may be done but hindering or skathing of his nychtbouris. And at the prelatiis make generale processioniis throu out thair dyoceis twyss in the wolk for stanching of the pestilence and grant pardone to the priestiis that gangis in the said processioniis" (Act. Parl. Scot. II., 46). The earliest mention of the plague in the British Isles is in 547, and the second in 664.—Annales Cambr., ii. 1; Bede, H.E., iii. 27; Adamnan's Life of St. Columba, ii. 47.
