

Gov. Doc.
G.B.
Com
Hi
H. Bn.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

[45]

REPORT
ON THE MANUSCRIPTS
OF

THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH AND QUEENSBERRY,
K.G., K.T.,

PRESERVED AT
MONTAGU HOUSE, WHITEHALL.

VOL. I. - II
2 vol in 1

Presented to Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.

162292.
27.5.21.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
BY EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE,
PRINTERS TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, EAST HARDING STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C., and 32, ABINGDON STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.; or JOHN MENZIES & Co., 12, HANOVER STREET, EDINBURGH, and 90, WEST NILE STREET, GLASGOW; or HODGES, FIGGIS, & Co., LIMITED, 101, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN.

1899.

[C.—9244.] Price 2s. 7d.

CONTENTS.

	Page
INTRODUCTION - - - - -	v
THE WINWOOD PAPERS - - - - -	1
THE MONTAGU PAPERS - - - - -	213
THE MONTAGU-ARLINGTON LETTERS - - - - -	418
THE HOLLES MS. - - - - -	526
INDEX - - - - -	543

---

INTRODUCTION.

---

IN November 1895, permission was given by His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry for the examination of the various collections of historical papers and documents existing in his muniment-room at Montagu House, Whitehall. Some few of these collections, as in the case of the Winwood Papers, had already been made public to a considerable extent, but not one of them has ever been completely exhausted. Many have until now remained untouched altogether. The present Report comprises four of the collections, and it is anticipated that historical students will feel greatly indebted to His Grace for these authentic and substantial additions to their stores of information.

The letters and papers in the four collections now dealt with are of various dates between the fifteenth and the eighteenth centuries. The details given in the Report at the commencement of each series will sufficiently indicate their nature and extent. Here it is intended to draw more particular attention to the illustrations which they afford of events and matters of general interest.

The Winwood Papers.

The earlier portion of Sir Ralph Winwood's collection comprises papers which relate partly to his own private affairs, but chiefly to his negotiations as Agent and Ambassador in France and in Holland. The latter portion, consisting of his correspondence while Secretary of State, may be regarded almost entirely as state papers pure and simple. Like other holders of the office, he appears to have kept many important official papers at his own private residence, including some of dates anterior to his tenure of office, and it was not then the custom to surrender them on vacating the office, whether the Secretary resigned or died in harness. Much of his correspondence has already been made familiar to historians in Sawyer's “Memorials,” but a great deal of it is here printed for the first time, and will now be described.

It may be noticed, in the first place, that Winwood was a Northamptonshire man by birth, according to Chalmers, and that his daughter married one of the Montagus of Boughton in that county, and ultimately succeeded to his property. In both the earlier and later portions of the collection we find documents showing his connexion with Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1581, Queen Elizabeth writes to the College in favour of his being made a “Fellow of that house,” at the instance of his father-in-law, John Weekes, yeoman of the Guard, whose daughter seems to have been Winwood’s first wife. In 1587, a paper, signed by the President and some of the Fellows of the same College, gives their consent to his being appointed to “a law-place,” in the room of Dr. Day.

In 1594, previously to setting out on the travels by which he designed to fit himself for the public service, he obtained a passport, describing him as Master of Arts of the University of Oxford. In 1613, the University writes to him, asking for pecuniary aid, and anticipating his speedy return to England; and on his becoming Secretary of State in the following year, the President and Scholars of Magdalen College hasten to congratulate him on the appointment.

Chalmers states that in 1599 Winwood attended Sir Henry Nevill, Ambassador to France, as his secretary. Nevill was dismissed from his post in 1601, but he had been in England for some time previously, and Winwood had been acting as her Majesty’s Resident in France. Two letters from Nevill, dated at the Lord Admiral Howard’s house at Chelsea, show that he was kept prisoner there in consequence of his being implicated in the rising of the Earl of Essex. They afford some glimpses of the household arrangements of an ambassador in those days. Henry Savile was likewise concerned in the alleged conspiracy and imprisoned for a short time; and there is a fragment of an earlier letter from him to Nevill, in 1599, relating to Essex’s proceedings in Ireland. From 1601 to 1603, Savile corresponded with Winwood about the arrangements he was making for printing * his famous edition of the Commentaries of St. John Chrysostom, and about sundry manuscript and printed versions then existing in English and foreign libraries. In August 1602, he refers to the appointment of a regular Ambassador to supersede Winwood in France; and on 2nd February 1603 he announces that Secretary Cecil had informed him of the Queen's determination to employ Winwood as Agent in "the Low Country." Winwood's formal appointment to the latter embassy was not however made till after the accession of King James, who, in a letter to Prince Maurice of Nassau, informs him that Winwood was being sent to reside with his Highness in place of the late Mr. George Gilpin.

* At Eton. See Sir Henry Maxwell-Lyte’s “History of Eton College,” pp. 182, 183. Savile was knighted in 1603. (Metcalf.)

During the latter portion of Winwood's stay in France the disputes between King Henry IV. and the Duke de Bouillon, according to these papers, chiefly occupied his attention. The Duke finally fled from France, and for a time took refuge with Frederick IV., Elector Palatine of the Rhine, at Heidelberg. There are numerous letters on the subject, but it was not thought desirable to abstract them at full length. Some of them throw light on the part which Queen Elizabeth took in the matters in dispute, and they may be compared with others printed by Sawyer. The Duke had previously expressed sympathy with Essex, and wished to see him restored to favour.

Besides acting first as Agent and afterwards as Ambassador in the United Provinces, Winwood was sworn as a Councillor of State in the States General, and the form of his oath of loyalty to the States is preserved.

The reign of James I., as appears from the correspondence, opened amid shadows of plague and conspiracy. Foreign Protestants, like Isaac Casaubon, who afterwards became a Prebendary of Canterbury, expected the same "protection" from the new King as had been shown them by the late Queen, but the Duke de Bouillon soon learned that James had no sympathy with his "persecutions," considering the claims of a sovereign to be paramount to all others; and as early as November 1603, Sir Thomas Bodley informs Winwood of a proposed match between Prince Henry and the infant daughter of the King of Spain, notwithstanding the supposed plot or "practice of priests" for the King's murder.

Bodley describes himself as "father" to Winwood, and his wife as "mother" to Winwood's wife. He had married a rich widow named Anne Ball, daughter of a Mr. Carew of Bristol, in 1587; and Winwood had married, secondly, in 1603, Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Ball, of Totnes, Anne's former husband. Winwood's office of Councillor of State in the United Provinces had previously been held by Bodley, who, it is said, took place next to Count Maurice in the Council (1589-96). According to a letter printed in the "Memorials," the Secretaryship of State was offered to Bodley in 1604-5.*

There are several letters from Bodley to Winwood, but the correspondence soon ceased, apparently. The former is, however, frequently mentioned by John More, Winwood's steward or agent in London, whose many letters on events of the day and matters of business are highly entertaining. On Winwood's behalf More carried on communications with Secretary Cecil, successively Lord Cranborne and Earl of Salisbury, through Mr. Levinus Munck, his secretary, in whose handwriting many of Cecil's letters are written. Winwood frequently had much difficulty in obtaining payment of his allowances from the Exchequer, which was always drained to the last penny in order to supply the King's constant demands, and his charges for official expenses were ruthlessly cut down by the Lord Treasurer, although his fixed salary was at the rate of only forty shillings a day. A personage of high rank went so far as to suggest that Winwood, as Councillor, had "power to help himself" by taking bribes for the advancement of English suits in Holland.

The articles of the treaty with Spain in 1604 are preserved in this collection, and the relations with Spain had in 1605 become so cordial that the Lord Admiral Nottingham was sent thither with a great train, which "made a terrible great show." Stone the fool was publicly whipped for saying, in an ordinary, that "eighty fools went into Spain" with his Lordship. A curious letter from the Earl of Suffolk emphatically denies that the Howards were "the principal means about his Majesty to draw him" to side with the Spaniards against the States General, as the latter had been informed.

---

* Bodley had also been a scholar of Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1572, Richard Ball was schoolmaster of the "song school" in that college. In 1602, Captain Ball, eldest son of Mrs. Bodley, died in the Low Countries. (State Papers.)

About this time the King among others was imposed upon by one Richard Haidocke, of New College, Oxford, who, it was said, preached in his sleep "far above the ability" he showed while awake. The King had him brought to Court, and "in his nightgown went privately to hear him two several times." The letters relating to this subject are unfortunately decayed, but some amusing details remain. The night-preaching was soon discovered to be an imposture.

In the same year, 1605, Lord Salisbury writes to Winwood about the disputes between Enno, Count of East Friesland, and his rebellious subjects, the townsmen of Emden, in which King James undertook to mediate, but without much success. Winwood was ordered to attend the negotiations at Groningen, and was commended by Salisbury for the part he took in "the treaty of Emden," but the disputes continued for many years, and there are numerous letters from the Count and others on the subject.

Count Enno endeavoured to influence the King in his favour by expressing his willingness to introduce into his province the same ecclesiastical rites as were prescribed in England. This was in January 1607. In August of the same year James expressed great sympathy with the Count, and declared his own strong views as to the duties of subjects towards their rulers, in a letter to the States of Holland, whom he rebuked for setting a bad example to neighbouring peoples by showing favour to the men of Emden.

There is nothing about "the Powder Treason" under its date, but there is an important confession by Thomas Fenwick long after, in 1616, relating to the transactions of Thomas Percie (Percy) with Francis Radcliffe and Roger Widdrington at Dilston, in Northumberland, and the conveyance thence to London of a large sum of money by Percy's "man" Tailboies. It was brought to a house near Temple Bar, where Percy called on the morning when the treason was discovered, and told Tailboies to shift for himself. The money was then taken all the way back to Radcliffe's house.

Between 1607 and 1609, there are numerous papers relating to the recognition of the independence of the United Provinces, and the treaty, or "long truce," which was negotiated between the States General, the King of Spain, and "the Archdukes" Albert and Isabella, with the aid of the British commissioners, Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, and of the French commissioners, after, as Count Enno puts it, "an internecine war of forty years." The most important part of the correspondence is printed by Sawyer. Other papers will be found in President Jeannin's Négociations.

On the conclusion of this treaty, it was anticipated that Winwood would be recalled, and his agent More took a house near Westminster School for his reception. It appears that Winwood also wished to obtain a country residence near Sir Henry Nevill. The niceties to be observed in selecting such a residence in those days are well exemplified in a letter of More's. But the troubles arising in Germany from the rival claims of the Electors of Brandenburg and Saxony, and of the Count Palatine of Neuburg, to the duchies of Cleves and Juliers necessitated the King's intervention, and Winwood was ordered to leave the Hague for Dusseldorf at the beginning of the next year, 1610. He did not arrive there till August, and stayed only a short time. Returning to the Hague, he remained to negotiate the engagement of 4,000 of the States' troops for the King's service in Cleves, but in conducting this affair he seems to have given some offence to Salisbury. The permanent English agent at Dusseldorf, acting as subordinate to Winwood, was John Dickenson, from whom there are many letters, beginning in April 1610, and ending in February 1614. As they relate mostly to German affairs, they have not been fully abstracted. Only a few of Dickenson's letters are printed by Sawyer. Mons. de Buwinckhausen came from Dusseldorf to England on the same business, and several of his letters are preserved. In July 1610, Sir Stephen Lesieur was sent to the Emperor to represent to him the complaints of the English Merchant Adventurers against the Hanse Towns. In the following years "the Princes of the Union" in Germany were very anxious to conclude a defensive league with James I. "and his realms." The "contract of alliance" was signed 25th March 1613.

In March 1611, More informs Winwood that the Parliament was "busy about the abrogating of the Wards and the Purveyors," and that the King had made them a speech in the Upper House two hours long, at the end of which he came to the conclusion that "howsoever the sovereignty of Kings was absolute in general, yet in particular the Kings of England were restrained by their oaths and the privileges of the people." His Majesty entirely repudiated the theory of absolute monarchy propounded by Dr. Cowell in his well-known "Interpreter."

The long-continued competition for the office of Secretary of State, held by Salisbury jointly with the Treasurership, is here first noticed in an important statement by John More, under date of 29th October 1611, in which he refers, on the authority of Levinus Munck, to Sir Henry Nevill's suit being supported by Sir Thomas Overbury, under the direction of Lord Rochester, who, notwithstanding "Sir Thomas's disgrace with the Queen," still had more suitors than Salisbury. This disgrace does not appear to be noticed in the "Memorials," or by historians, but it certainly was a fact, for in November Overbury was "by much suit restored to the Court, and there is hope in time to the Queen's favour," according to the State Papers. Although Nevill was regarded as one of the "patriots," it was anticipated that he would so "deal with the Lower House" as to secure better "effects" during the next session.

Winwood himself had his eye on the Secretaryship, and wrote to Rochester, referring to "his Lordship's noble designs," and expressing a hope that it would "please his Majesty to call" him "nearer to his service." Some mysterious letters in cipher relate apparently to this subject. The ciphers can probably be made out by comparison with some decipherments by Sawyer.

Salisbury died in June 1612, and in July Winwood was in England, and in communication with Nevill and Overbury, but next month he was again at the Hague, having been sent back by the King to be Ambassador resident not only in the United Provinces but in Cleves, if necessary. A letter from Nevill in September proves that Winwood had gone back with the understanding that Overbury should procure his recall as soon possible, but that it depended entirely on the King's "humour." There was much "kicking" against both Nevill and Winwood, but "all men," considered Sir Thomas Lake and Sir Henry Wotton to have no chance of becoming Secretary.

The Lord Treasurership was in like manner kept unsupplied.

Lord Lisle thought that the King merely intended, by keeping all the "Boards" vacant, to save money for the entertainment of Frederick V., the new Elector Palatine, who was coming over to woo the King's daughter. On the other hand, Sir Robert Naunton, who was a candidate for the office of Latin Secretary, writes: "Some standers-by are apt to conceive that the King meaneth to keep these places [the Secretaryships] in suspense between himself and my Lord of Rochester, as they were after Sir Francis Walsingham's death, and that meanwhile Sir Thomas Overbury may fit himself for the place" [of principal Secretary].

Both the King and Rochester were however favourable to Winwood's speedy recall, and proposed that he should return in company with the Elector Palatine; but Naunton suspected that some of "our great lords" would find excuses to detain him in Holland, or even to send him further afield, for his bluntness seems to have given general offence. Fresh complications in Cleves furnished an additional reason for the postponement of his recall. Meantime the office of Secretary of State is said to have been temporarily filled by Sir Alexander Hay, who soon tired of it, but according to the State Papers he was Secretary for Scotland only.

All these rivalries were temporarily hushed by the unexpected death of Prince Henry, of whom a remarkable story is told in respect of his proposed match with a Spanish Princess. According to Nevill, the Prince had "vowed that never idolator should come into his bed," and considered his sickness to be a chastisement "for having ever opened his ears to admit treaty of a Popish match." Naunton terms the Prince "our Palladium," and Sir John Holles some months later alludes to him as "our great and glorious North Star," who would "ever live in every understanding English heart, of what profession or occupation soever, military or civil."

After a time there was some talk of Winwood's being succeeded at the Hague by Sir Edward Cecil or Sir Dudley Carleton, yet his recall was still delayed. Rochester himself writes that he was at a loss to account for the delay, but says plainly to Winwood—"Your enemies have objected enough against you, and lastly that you are too violent, which signifies, in Court language, not malleable to their use."

At the beginning of the next year Winwood was informed by More of the serious illness of his father-in-law, Sir Thomas Bodley, who, after having even borrowed money to complete his famous Library, was in his latter days afflicted with such "miserable avarice" that his servants abandoned him, and his friends found reason to "mince the good opinion they have had of his virtues." He died on 28th January 1613. In his will he is alleged to have shown little regard to those "whose father [Mr. Ball] did provide the materials wherewith his wealth and honour were erected;" the persons alluded to being elsewhere described as "his wife's friends and children." More had some dispute with one of the executors, who refused to give up possession of Winwood's house in Little St. Bartholomew's, in which Sir Thomas had been residing; but the furniture in the house, including tapestry valued at sixty pounds, belonged to Sir Thomas. The purchase of tapestry of an equal value for the hall at Eton is mentioned a little later.

Meanwhile the intrigues for the Secretaryship had been resumed. Winwood had made some complaint about Lake to Nevill, who acquainted Overbury with it, in order that it might reach the ears of the King and Rochester. Lake was acting as under or temporary Secretary, and endeavoured to "intrude himself as far as he could into the execution of the place." Being, like Winwood, "violent and open," and contentious, he had made enemies, who managed to incense the King against him, "and the tail of this storm fell a little upon my Lord [Rochester] himself;" indeed, his conduct seems to have damped the prospects of Nevill and Winwood as well as his own. Nevill's letter about this affair is bound up with others of April 1613, but the date is uncertain, and it should be compared with Naunton's letter of 17th November 1612. They both refer to a reconciliation effected by Nevill between Lords Pembroke and Rochester.

The marriage of Princess Elizabeth to the Elector Palatine is but briefly alluded to in these additional papers. Letters from Lord Lisle and others refer to her reception at Heidelberg, and give particulars of her domestic life for some time after her arrival there. Winwood accompanied her thither, but soon after his return to the Hague he received a letter from the King, giving him permission to return to England for a while, owing to the death of Sir Thomas Bodley.

A letter from Thomas Bull, on 20th July, from the Tower relates to the imprisonment of Lady Arabella Stuart, Lady Shrewsbury, and himself. Overbury was also then in the Tower, "shut up close, and very sick." Next day, Naunton writes a cautious letter on the state of affairs, and refers to the suit by Lady Essex for nullity of her marriage with the Earl, her husband.

Although Winwood was now in England, he continued to be addressed as Ambassador until March 1614. On 7th April he was at length appointed "Secretary of State," with an annuity of 100*l.*, according to the Patent Rolls. He was, in fact, the sole "Principal Secretary" for nearly two years, and is so called in patents of 1614 and 1615, and in other documents. Some undated drafts in his own hand show that he had paid assiduous and exclusive court to Rochester, who promised to do all he could in his behalf. Sir John Ogle desired to succeed him in the embassy, and offered to make a present of 400*l.* to Lady Winwood if he obtained it by her husband's "help and counsel." Sir Dudley Carleton was however Winwood's successor at the Hague.

Sawyer's "Memorials" close before Winwood's appointment to the Secretaryship, and all the subsequent papers are noticed in the present volume for the first time. Very few occur between March 1614 and September 1615, when we come upon the original letter of Sir Gervase Helwys to the King "concerning the death of Sir Thomas Overbury," a copy of which, bearing a different date, and with some variations, is preserved among the State Papers. He does not profess to tell "the whole truth." In an original letter on the same subject, the King expresses his desire "that the guilty being known, the guiltless may go free, and the arising of rumours prejudicial to the fame of the innocent may be prevented." There is also a copy of a letter from the King to Coke authorising him to release Mrs. Turner on bail, according to her petition, if it were the custom to do so when there was "no ground of guiltiness apparent."

A few days later we find the original commission by the King to the Archbishop, Suffolk, Winwood, and Lake, to examine Sir Robert Cotton on the charge of having "amassed together divers secrets of state," and communicated them to Gondomar, the Spanish ambassador. This is followed by Cotton's "relation of his conference" with Gondomar touching the proposed marriage of Prince Charles and the Infanta Maria. Sir John Digby's "answer to the Spanish propositions" is also here.

Shortly afterwards the King took offence at "certain un-reverent and undutiful speeches" about himself by Sir John Leedes and his wife, who appear to have made fun of the King's "unwieldiness;" which he took so seriously that he formally commissioned Winwood and others to "censure" them.

The "great arrearage of debts" compelled the King to make regulations with respect to grants of rewards to his "servants and subjects." This he did in a "memorial," setting forth what matters of profit he was willing to concede to suitors, and what matters he would refuse to listen to, the latter class including "monopolies."

At the beginning of 1616 Sir Thomas Lake was created joint Secretary of State with Winwood, according to the State Papers. The Patent Rolls show that Winwood had a grant of the office of "one of the Principal Secretaries of State" on 8th January, and that Lake had a similar grant on 9th January.

A letter from Coke to the King, in February of that year, relates to the "royal power to punish murders and homicides committed by one of your Majesty's subjects upon another in a foreign kingdom." Coke had previously decided that there was no such power, but, on considering a previous case, was now prepared "to resolve the case for the Crown." In February 1617, Coke makes "proposals" for the marriage of Frances, his youngest daughter, to Sir John Villiers; if they failed, he was willing to give Sir John ten thousand marks to obtain his own "restitution." In July 1617, the King commissioned the Archbishop, Bacon, Winwood, and Greville to summon Lady Coke and Lady Withipole before them, to enquire how they had "conveyed away Frances, daughter of Sir Edward Coke," and to command them to restore her to Sir Edward's "possession and government;" otherwise they were to be committed to custody in "some alderman or citizen's house." In the King's separate letter to Winwood it is stated that Lady Coke was opposed to her daughter's marriage to Sir John Villiers.

There are many other letters to Winwood from persons residing at home and abroad during the years 1616 and 1617, intermixed with official papers. A letter from Paris, of the 19th April, 1617, details the revolting excesses perpetrated by the populace of Paris after the assassination of Concini, "Marshal d'Ancre," the favourite of the Queen Mother, Mary de' Medici. His arrest had been ordered by the young King, Louis XIII., whom the French Ambassador, in a letter to James I., on 2nd May, extols as "nostre jeune Hercules françoys, qui en l' aage de quinze ans, par sa prudence et vertu, a surmonté les plus horribles monstres."

The principal historical papers contained in the Winwood collection have been alluded to. It would take up too much space to summarise the valuable original letters and documents relating to the history of English commerce, the Merchants Adventurers, Virginia and the Company of Virginia, the East Indies and the East India Company, Ireland, Scotland, the Netherlands, Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, Venice, and Russia, most, if not all, of which have never been published before. Many references will be found to the publication of books, to Blackwell, Parsons, Garnet, Baldwin, Gerrard, and other Roman Catholics, and to eminent English soldiers of fortune in the Low Countries, including "the Lord of Buckcleughe," from whom and about whom there are several letters. A Council letter in 1604 is of great value as illustrating the history of municipal elections. The "common sort of people" at Sandwich "did pretend by charter to have choice in the election of mayor and other officers"; but the Council decided that the franchise belonged only to the common council of the town, which was not to exceed twenty-four persons, besides the mayor and jurats.

Winwood died at Mordant House, in St. Bartholomew's the Less, on the 28th October, 1617, after a fever of nine days, during which he was "much visited by the nobles." His death was attributed to Dr. Mayerne's letting him bleed too soon, and it is remarked that Mayerne was "commonly unfortunate in any dangerous disease." On his body being opened, his death seemed to be amply accounted for by decay of the vital organs; "there appeared no signs of any ill measure, as was at first generally suspected." He is acknowledged to have been "in the highest favour with the King, Queen, Prince, and principal favourite," and was "much lamented," but "had some ill willers." The following assertion is however made by Sawyer: "he bravely and generously opposed the Spanish faction, then too powerful in England, and at last, I speak it on good grounds, died a martyr to their resentments."

Winwood on his death-bed made a nuncupative will. In the previous summer, when he was expecting to accompany the King to Scotland, he had made preparations to draw up a formal will, but on being excused from attendance he did not complete it. He left three sons and two daughters, all minors, and his wife survived him. His son Richard was only eight years old, and did not sue out a livery of lands till 10th June, 1630, on his coming of age. Richard died without issue in 1688, when his estate at Ditton Park, Bucks, descended to Ralph, Lord Montagu, whose father Edward, the second Lord, had married Anne, daughter of Sir Ralph, in 1633, according to Collins.

Some writers state that Ditton was purchased by Sir Ralph, others that Richard was the first owner; but though the former may have sometimes resided there, he held merely "the office of keeper of the capital messuage and park of Ditton," given him by three patents of 7th February and 23rd December, 1615, and 21st March, 1617, the first being a grant to him and his "son and heir" James. for their lives, the second being a similar grant to him and his son Richard on the death of his son James, and the third giving the office to him and his heirs male. It was not till 24th February 1630, that Lady Elizabeth Winwood, widow of Sir Ralph, obtained a grant in fee from King Charles of "all that our park and tenement enclosed." called Ditton Park, for which she paid 1,800*l.*; and in 1632 Richard Winwood purchased the manor of Ditton from Sir Willam Russell, who had recently acquired it from the Crown.

In allusion to such of these papers as are printed by Sawyer, it must be remarked that he takes considerable liberties with his text in respect of dates and signatures. He frequently changes the former from new style to old style, or adds the letters "N.S." or "O.S.," without any indication that the alterations or the additions are his own. A few instances are given in the table of printed papers. In some cases he supplies omitted names, dates, and addresses, and gives the equivalents of ciphers. Many of Winwood's own letters are mere drafts, mostly without signatures, but Sawyer invariably inserts a formal subscription. He occasionally omits postscripts and short paragraphs at the end of letters, and does not quote endorsements, which often give the names of the bearers. Thus, in 1601 and 1602, the following persons are mentioned as conveying Winwood's letters from France to England: Peter Brown, Bakyr, Mr. Button, A. Pynchon, Mr. Farmer, Constance, Vacondary, Mr. Rooper, Farrant the post. Some errors, noticed accidentally, are corrected in the table, but Sawyer's text has not been collated.*

The Montagu Papers.

The nine volumes of the Montagu Papers extend from 1483 to 1758, and comprise the correspondence of the Montagu family of Boughton, in the county of Northampton.

There is not much before the year 1524, when "Edward Mountague, learned man," had a special licence from Henry VIII. to "use and wear his bonnet on his head" in the King's presence and at all other times and places, owing to certain "infirmities" in his head. In later papers he is described as Master Edward Mountagu, of the Middle Temple, Serjeant-at-law. He was knighted in 1537, and afterwards became Lord Chief Justice, first of the King's Bench, and then of the Common Pleas, reversing the usual order. In 1543 he was commissioned by the King to consult with other persons on matters concerning "the wealth and surety of this our realm." He died in 1556. During Queen Mary's reign the Montagus appear to have remained very quiet, although they were not perhaps altogether in disgrace, as there is a letter in 1557 from the Queen to "her trusty and well beloved" — Montague, Esquire, commanding him to attend upon herself, "or elsewhere," with ten horsemen and fifty footmen, to be chosen from his tenants, for defence of the realm at the time of the war with France.

---

* A few more corrections and notes may be inserted here. In Vol. I., p. 234, l. 15, "doth take" is "doth mean to take" in the original. P. 242, after "Right Honourable" add "my very good Lord." P. 244, l. 10 from foot, "9th" should be "10th." P. 256, l. 30, "He" should be "The Duke of Florence." P. 302, postscript; this is in Cecil's own hand. P. 308, l. 5, for "des" read "que"; l. 6, omit "je." P. 368, l. 34, "will" should be "wilbe"; the word "Postscript" is not in the original, and what follows is on a separate leaf, dated 21 Dec. P. 374, l. 4 from foot, after "armes" insert "recouvred." P. 377; the postscript is in Cecil's own hand. P. 448, l. 3, "little" is "little more" in the original. In Vol. II., p. 26, the passage from "to send" on l. 29, to "thereupon" on l. 32, is in Cranborne's hand, and is inserted in a space originally left for it. P. 84; there are sundry errors in the French. In Vol. III., p. 227, l. 24, "tres" should be "bien." P. 277; the postscript is in Salisbury's hand, except the last two lines. P. 282, l. 19, "must" should be "may." P. 385, l. 36, "Hague without any" should be "Haghe without my"; l. 48, "Viconti" is "Vicecomti," and "Avalos" is "Avalos," in the original. P. 466, l. 8, "Refuges" should be "Reffuge." P. 484, l. 8. "15th" may possibly be "13th."

The person thus addressed was no doubt Edward Montagu, of Boughton, son of the preceding Sir Edward. He was knighted in 1568, and was Sheriff of Northamptonshire several times, a Justice of the Peace, and one of the Deputy Lieutenants for the same county. In these capacities many letters were addressed to him on county business by Queen Elizabeth, the Privy Council, Lord Burghley, and others. Many of the letters refer to musters and to the levying of soldiers for the wars in the Low Countries, France, and Ireland. In 1596 the Council gave drastic orders for relieving the "dearth of grain" by compelling all owners of corn to bring "some proportions of all sorts" weekly to the markets, where the Justices were "to overrule them in their prices," by forcible means if necessary, so as to prevent the poor from starving. Any owner who should "murmur or repine" at these proceedings was to be committed to prison without any bail. It is thus evident that "corners in corn" are not a modern American invention.

In the same year "nine gipsies and four other felons" were executed at Northampton, and one man was "judged to be pressed to death," but was reprieved. Curious particulars are given touching horse-stealers, highway-robbers, thieves, and receivers, and the houses frequented by them in various towns all over England.

The second Sir Edward left six sons, namely, Edward, Walter, Henry, Charles, James, and Sidney, who all became more or less famous.

The eldest son, Edward, was appointed by Sir Thomas Cecil, afterwards Lord Burghley and Earl of Exeter, to be his "deputy lieutenant of the Forest of Rockingham," in or before 1593. In connexion with certain offices in that Forest, an interesting account is given of a visit by Sidney Montagu to Lord Burghley at his house at Wimbledon in 1599; and in the same year a number of bucks had to be provided from the Forest on the occasion of the Queen's visit to his Lordship.

The third Edward Montagu was knighted in 1603, and succeeded to the offices previously held by his father. His correspondence relates in a great measure to the business of the county, but there are also many letters to him from his brothers in the Temple and at Court, furnishing current news and gossip during an eventful period. Sir Edward was a good man of business, preserved the letters which he received, and kept drafts of many of his own, written however in a very obscure hand. In a manuscript entitled "the Northamptonshire Muster Book," not dealt with in the present volume, he caused all the letters addressed by the Privy Council, and by Lord Burghley as Lord Lieutenant, to the Deputy Lieutenants, to be entered, with sundry notes in his own hand. Few if any of the originals of those letters appear to have been preserved in this collection.

In 1605 Sir Edward appears to have entered into some controversy with King James in a matter of religious opinion, but through his brother James, Dean of the Chapel Royal,* he assured the King of his desire "to give his Majesty full satisfaction." The King however professed to find his explanations oracular and obscure. Later letters prove that, although he was a Royalist, he had adopted many Puritan ideas. He and his brother Sir Henry were authors of the Act for a perpetual thanksgiving "after our great deliverance from the Powder Treason" (p. 267).

It is clear that Sir Edward managed to retain the King's favour, for in 1613 the King took his part in a dispute with the Earl of Exeter about the custody of certain woods in Rockingham Forest. The Earl had taken "the offices" away from Sir Edward and bestowed them on Sir Thomas Brudenell, Bart., who was a recusant. It may be parenthetically remarked that Sir Thomas was afterwards created first a Baron, and then Earl of Cardigan; and that his great-great-grandson married Mary, one of the coheirs of John, Duke of Montagu, the last male descendant of Sir Edward in the direct line, and was himself created Duke of Montagu.

Just at the time when Sir Thomas was appointed to the keeperships, an order was given for disarming the Papists, and against the wearing of pocket-pistols, which Sir Edward thought would damp "the jollity of that side." Under this order Sir Edward seized Brudenell's armour, and it was expected that further directions would be given for his imprisonment. Sir Edward made a mistake, however, in sending up copies of the letters of his brother James, who was now Bishop of Bath and Wells, detailing the King's remarks about the Earl of Exeter, "for," the Bishop complains, "what the King speaks he would not hear of again," and "this will make the King more wary what he sayeth when he shall hear of it thus again."

---

* A letter from Doctor James Montagu to his mother, describing the Hampton Court conference, is preserved among the Winwood Papers and is printed by Sawyer, but no doubt it originally belonged to the Montagu Collection.

Attention was for a time diverted from this matter by the ceremonies and "sports" connected with the marriage of Princess Elizabeth to the Elector Palatine. The fireworks devised for the occasion were not universally admired, "though surely they were chargeable things;" nor were the "sea-fight" and the attack on "a Turkish castle built near Lambeth" much more satisfactory. It is recorded by Sir Charles Montagu that at the marriage service "the Palsgrave answered to all the words in the Common Prayer Book in English very distinctly." The two letters from the Princess to Sir Ralph Winwood probably belonged originally to the Winwood collection.

Bishop Montagu, offended by the publication of his letter, appears to have cooled in his efforts on his brother's behalf, but another brother, Sir Henry Montagu, Serjeant-at-law and Recorder of London, who was now coming to the front, energetically took up the cudgels against Lord Exeter and the recusants. The Earl nevertheless, "out of his churlish disposition," maintained Brudenell's appointment in spite of the King, who gave orders "that matters be thoroughly prosecuted against recusants at the next term."

In 1616 Sir Charles alludes to two matters of more general interest. On May 15: "Here is now such a hurrying to Westminster Hall to see the great lady [the Countess of Somerset] arraigned as it distracts everybody's mind from anything else. It is thought that she will make but a short day's work of it, she hath made such a liberal confession already; but it is thought tomorrow the Earl [of Somerset] will be upon stout terms, if the presence of his great auditory put him not besides his text." On June 26: "Yesterday the King had the matter between my Lord Chancellor [Ellesmere] and my Lord Cooke [Coke] in hearing for the præmunire, but what was done I have not yet heard; only I saw my Lord Cooke and his Lady come very heavily from thence."

Soon afterwards the King visited Rockingham Forest. in person, and in Geddington Woods killed "a very fat buck," which he presented to Sir Edward, who was in attendance, with orders to send it to his mother. His Majesty also had "royal sport" in Farming Woods, and while he was at Morehay, Sir Edward had two interviews with him, which he describes minutely, and during which the King exhibited much affection to him personally, and to his family in general. He took much interest in some fine needlework of "the blind Lady Montagu," Sir Edward's mother. "The great favourite," the Master of the Horse, George Lord Villiers, accompanied the King on this expedition, and was courted by Sir Edward, who "bestowed a fine horse on him."

The "Serjeant," Sir Henry Montagu, was made Lord Chief Justice in the same year, 1616, and Sir Sidney, another brother, became Master of Requests in 1618. Bishop James was translated from Bath and Wells to Winchester in 1617, and, on 1st Feb. 1618, writes from Court to his eldest brother, Sir Edward: "If you have 10,000*l.* in your purse, I think, if you know not how to bestow it better, you may have a barony for it; but you speak so of another world as I think you look for no more honour in this." The Bishop died in the same year, and part of his will was read by Sir Charles in the King's presence, "which his Majesty was much moved at." He bequeathed "a gold cup of 100*l.*" to the King, and "a ring of seventeen diamonds" to Villiers, now Marquis of Buckingham. His lands were settled on his brothers, between some of whom, in the following year, there was a suit in Chancery, probably about lands in Brigstock,* on which there is a letter to them from Lord Bacon.

At the end of 1620, Sir Charles reports to Sir Edward the bad news from Bohemia, where the King's son-in-law, the Elector Palatine and King of Bohemia, had suffered "a great overthrow"; and at the same time he announces the appointment of Sir Henry as Lord High Treasurer, and his creation as Baron Kimbolton and Viscount Mandeville, "with many protestations of love and favour" on the part of the King. His Majesty "said he did not confer this great trust upon him only for love to himself, but of all our family, who he thought loved him and were faithful to him; and though you [Sir Edward] smelt a little of Puritanism, yet he knew you to be honest and faithful to him, and said he heard you were a Parliament man; you must do him an arrant, and he would requite you, but such a one, I hear, as you need not be afraid of."

---

* See "The Montagus of Boughton and their Northamptonshire Homes," by Mr. C. Wise.

What the errand was does not clearly appear. Sir Edward was shortly afterwards, in 1621, created Baron Montagu of Boughton. Whether he paid the 10,000*l.* before mentioned, or any other sum, for the dignity, is not stated. Lord Montagu was still Lieutenant of Rockingham Forest under the Earl of Exeter, whose successor, Earl William, confirmed him in his offices within the Forest. Unknown to Lord Montagu, Sir Francis Fane obtained a warrant from the new Lord Treasurer, Cranfield, to take a hundred timber trees in the Forest in order to rebuild his house at Apethorpe, "for the more commodious entertainment of his Majesty and his company, at his repair into those parts for his princely recreation there." The execution of this warrant was opposed by Lord Montagu.

Several letters in 1624 and 1626 throw light on the manner of selecting candidates and conducting Parliamentary elections in counties and boroughs at that period.

At the beginning of King Charles's reign Viscount Mandeville, who was in attendance on his Majesty as President of the Privy Council, frequently wrote to his brother, Lord Montagu. The new King did not purpose that his first Parliament should sit long; "money" was to be granted at once, "business" to be deferred to another session; and he expressed the same opinion of Lord Montagu as his father had done—that he was "a good Parliament man, and not to be spared." As early as January 1626, Montagu writes of his "being sorry our rent country cannot be drawn up, but must be torn more and more. . . . The main [thing] is the pacification of the country, which it pleaseth not God, as it seems, at this time to effect."

In 1626 Mandeville was raised to the dignity of Earl of Manchester, and the Earl of Bristol (Digby) writes to his Lordship, apparently, for some favour in respect of his trial. The few other letters of that year relate to the King's demands, made by "privy seals," for a "free gift" and for a "loan" from Montagu. Similar demands were made of noblemen and gentlemen throughout the kingdom, and from some counties the collectors "returned with good successes." Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire appear to have been more difficult to deal with. One paper shows that Montagu first took some trouble to persuade himself that "this desire of the King's" was reasonable, and would not be "made a precedent for future times," and that he then endeavoured to incite all his "neighbours and countrymen to perform the same." In the following year Manchester estimated the total amount of the loans at 290,000*l.* Montagu further contributed to the King's needs by paying 500*l.* for the disafforestation of part of Rockingham Forest. His patent for "the woods" and "the wardenship" passed in 1628.*

In 1627 Manchester was made Lord Privy Seal, and in 1628 he announces that he had resigned the Presidency of the Council, because he had found it too irksome, and that Montagu's son-in-law, Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, had been made a privy councillor. Montagu himself again wished to be spared from attending Parliament, but the King would not hear of it; his support was evidently expected. At this time he resided during part of the year at his other seat, Barnwell Castle.

The Northamptonshire commissioners for levying "composition moneys" in respect of knighthood brought their county again into disgrace at the Council Board in 1630, and even the style of their letters was objected to; but their proceedings gave greater satisfaction than their words. Apparently as a relief from the troublesome politics of the time, Manchester urged Montagu vigorously to execute the laws concerning the poor, apprentices, rogues, idle persons, and alehouses. In his reply, Montagu says that of all the articles of inquiry at the petty sessions "the hardest is alehouses, which some have well paid for, and I think it will never be amended till the alehouse-keeper shall have no other ale in the house above a penny a quart, and if any be found otherwise, it may be given away to the poor." He then points out that Manchester had omitted to mention what he considered to be the most important article of all, namely, "the not coming to church."

---

* There are two patents to Montagu on the Patent Rolls, dated 10th July and 20th August. The former appointed him Master Forester and Keeper of the Bailiwick called "Rockingham Bayliwicke" in the Forest of Rockingham, for three lives, viz. those of Edward, his eldest son, William, his second son, and Christopher, his third son. Burke wrongly describes the last as being the eldest son. The same patent quotes a previous patent in 1 James I. to Thomas Lord Burghley, Sir William Cecil, his son and heir apparent, and William Lord Rosse (Roos), son and heir apparent of Sir William; the first and the last of these three being deceased in 1628.

In 1635 Montagu writes to certain gentlemen of the county complaining of the unequal assessment of "the ship money," but not objecting to its payment. Manchester writes thus on the same subject: "At the last assizes I hear the judges published the levies that must be this next year through the county for defraying the ships to go out, and I hear it was well digested of by the country."

Early in 1639 Montagu was summoned to attend King Charles's "royal person and standard" at York by the 1st of April, with a competent number of "horses," i.e. armed horsemen. He thereupon sent his eldest son Edward to London, and proposed writing to the Secretary, Sir John Coke, to excuse his attendance in person, on account of his great age and infirmities; but he was advised by his brother Manchester to offer the King 300*l.* instead of the horses, as had been done by the Judges, the Inns of Court, and the Clergy, "so that," his son writes, "the King will have no need of a Parliament." Some Lords had offered horses, some money, while others refused altogether. Montagu objected to furnishing money, and at first offered four, and finally six, "horses armed in all points."

A long series of letters from William Montagu, son of Lord Montagu, begins at this date, 1639, and extends to 1682, being addressed to his father and brother, the first and second Lords Montagu. His letters are mostly dated from the Temple, and contain instructive comments on the stirring events of the period, and also throw much light on the inner life of a great family in those difficult times. He was Serjeant-at-law and Chief Baron of the Exchequer (1676-86).

From one of William's letters it is clear that Lord Montagu's letter to the Secretary was not delivered, by Manchester's advice. The King now "altered his mind," and required horses rather than money. On the question of attending his Majesty, Manchester writes: "I hope this war will not be unto blood; however, if a King commands it, wherever his person goes, our allegiance ties us to follow him." But his son, Viscount Mandeville, at first entertained an opposite view, and when the King spoke of this, Manchester replied that "then he would neither acknowledge him his son nor heir." Montagu was more lukewarm, and positively refused either to send any of his sons or to compound. He found much difficulty in providing the requisite liveries, armour, and weapons for his six horsemen, owing to the great demand which had been thus suddenly created, and to the exclusive engagement of all armourers by the King. Writing on this subject, William discourses learnedly on the "distinction between cuirasses and carabine arms."

In March the King changed his mind once more, and was willing to accept money of the Lords, to excuse their personal attendance. "Had they all gone," William writes, "then I know there would have been no battle, for when was it known that the nobility were ever ventured in the first battle?" Manchester compounded, but Montagu sent his horse, and requested his grandson Lord Willoughby, son of the Earl of Lindsey, to present them to his Majesty.

At this interesting juncture there is a gap in the correspondence, but in November 1641 William Montagu commences to give City and Parliamentary news in his letters to his father, who also received several letters from his daughter Elizabeth, Countess of Lindsey, and his nephew George Montagu, a younger son of Manchester's. The details given in their letters of the struggle between the King and the Parliament are of great importance as proceeding from eye-witnesses and participators, but are too minute to be particularised here. One passage may however be quoted. William writes on 2nd December 1641: "The citizens grow very tumultuous, and flock by troops daily to the Parliament. There is scarce passage between the two Houses, the Court of Requests is so thronged with them; and there they never cease yawling and crying, 'No Bishops! no Bishops!'" This Court in olden times was frequently the scene of turbulent demonstrations, such as those which occurred during the debates on Walpole's Excise Bill, a hundred years later.

Edward Montagu, eldest son of Lord Montagu, like his cousin George, was then a member of Parliament, but there is only one letter from him to his father at this period. There are several letters of Lord Montagu himself, in one of which he rebukes the Parliament for countenancing "the sin of usury."

Under 24th March 1642, there is a curious reference to a duel between Francis Bertie—fourth son of the Earl of Lindsey, and grandson of Lord Montagu—and Sir Henry Skipwith's son "about the great widow." Only a slight notice of this is to be found in the House of Lords' Journals. On the same day William writes: "I suppose you hear from Belvoire how kindly the King took my Lord of Rutland's coach, which carried him two days, and the King sent him word he was more beholding to him than to any of his Lords in that journey; but my Lord hath accepted to be Lieutenant of Darbyshire, and that will lose his favour." The Earl of Rutland had married a daughter of Lord Montagu.

About this time Lord Willoughby was sent by the House of Lords along with a member of the Commons to present "another Remonstrance" to the King, at York; and his father, the Earl of Lindsey, having been ordered by Parliament to bring in his "patent of Lieutenantship," obtained leave of absence from London for twenty days "to fetch it." The Countess of Lindsey writes soon after that the rumours touching her son and her husband were "various," but she doubted not "they would be faithful to King and kingdom;" and again, "I have heard nothing of my Lord since he went to York; 'tis thought the King will not let him come; the House has sent for him."

In one of the last letters from Manchester to his brother we learn why their correspondence is so meagre at this time: "The intercourse of letters betwixt us is rare nowadays; you give the true reason—there is no safety in writing anything." He no longer writes as an extreme partisan of the King. In fact, all the Montagus, while anxious to show the utmost loyalty, did not conceal their sympathy with the grievances of the Parliament, and their dislike of the King's proceedings, though Montagu condemned the Parliament for carrying matters "with an over-high hand." Even Lindsey announced that he was on his return to London, but the King sent for him back, and would "not let him come." Manchester left London for York, but owing to "sickness" was obliged to stay at Hatfield, and finally returned to London.

Manchester died soon afterwards, and Lindsey was killed in the first battle. Montagu had been appointed by the King to be one of the Commissioners of Array for his own county, but was brought up to London as a prisoner, by order of Parliament; and there is a letter from Charles on "the affront and injury" thus done him. From a letter written in the Savoy in June 1643, it appears that Montagu intended to communicate to some of the Puritan divines among whom he was living the ideas on the "sin" of usury which he had long entertained. He died in the following year. It is well known that his son Edward, second Lord Montagu, was subsequently commissioned by Parliament to bring Charles from Scotland; while Edward Montagu, second Earl of Manchester, became Speaker of the House of Lords and one of the Keepers of the Great Seal during the Commonwealth.

Few letters have been found between 1643 and 1660. There is a curious letter in 1646 from Frances Monck to her brother General Monck, in Scotland; it probably belonged to the Albemarle correspondence, which forms part of this collection.

A letter and a warrant of Charles I. in 1648, and a declaration relating thereto, illustrate the shifts to which the captive King was reduced when he wished to issue a patent in favour of a supporter. The three documents taken together show that in consideration of a loan of 1,000*l.*, actually supplied to him while he was in the Isle of Wight, the King signed a warrant for the creation of Thomas Lord Brudenell as Earl of Cardigan. This and other services are specified in a statement drawn up by his Lordship on the Restoration, and in 1661 he at length obtained his patent of creation. A memorandum, dated 7th May 1660, shows the manner in which the Declaration of Breda was accepted in the country. In the same year Edward Montagu, son of Sir Sidney, was created Earl of Sandwich.

In 1661 we come upon the first letter of Ralph Montagu, younger son of Edward, second Lord Montagu, who succeeded his father in the title in 1683, and who was afterwards created Earl (1689) and Duke (1705) of Montagu; but there are very few letters of his in this collection. There appears to have been some estrangement between Lord Montagu and his elder son Edward, which was taken notice of by Lord Chancellor Hyde in 1660, and in a letter of Charles II. in 1663. Two years later this Edward was killed in an action with the Dutch fleet.

In 1672 the Duke of Albemarle writes to the second Lord touching the marriage of his cousin Betty, and, while professing respect to the memory of her father, declares that her demeanour towards himself had "not been obliging." Later on will be found many letters to the first and second Dukes of Albemarle. In 1673 and subsequent years there are several references to the marriage of Ralph Montagu with the Countess Dowager of Northumberland. He married secondly the widow of the second Duke of Albemarle. Thus the presence here of the Albemarle letters is accounted for.

From Apethorpe, in 1673, the Earl of Westmorland writes objecting to making a journey on the day after Twelfth-day, on the ground that the latter was "a day always celebrated to mirth," and obviously he did not anticipate being in a condition to travel on the morrow.

Besides the family letters, and others which will be more particularly noticed, in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., there are letters from Charles II., the Bishop of Peterborough, the Earl of Bedford, Sir Thomas Clarges, the Earl of Danby, the Duke and Duchess of Newcastle, Lord Chancellor Finch, W. Bentinck, Lord Hunsdon, Sir William Dugdale, Lord Godolphin, the Earl of Sunderland, Rachel Lady Russell, and the Duchess of Albemarle.

In or about 1673, William Montagu mentions "a base railing pamphlet of Prior's" against Lord Montagu. At the end of 1676 his Lordship obtained a patent from the King relative to Geddington Woods; and his daughter, Lady Harvey, wife of Sir Daniel Harvey, reported to William that she had supped with the King at a certain lady's house, when his Majesty expressed a desire to see her father, he being such "good company," and drank his health. It is said that he purposely absented himself from Court.* Several letters in 1676 and 1677 illustrate the various stages through which a patent had to pass before it was finally sealed and issued, and the method of amending errors in patents.

The King and Danby were so pleased with the Money Bill passed in 1677, that they "made it to be opened, and it reached from the throne to the lower end of the Lords' House. The * Bridges' Northamptonshire.

King parted with his own stick, which he said was a yard, and made one of the Lords measure our [the Commons'] Bill, his Majesty taking the White Staff himself, stopping at every yard, and reckoning the number."

On 12th April 1679, Lord Montagu was summoned to attend the House of Lords for "the trial of several peers for their lives," on pain of being taken into custody himself. Similar letters were no doubt sent to all the peers, probably because many of them, like the Duke of Newcastle, wished to avoid attendance. What trials were intended does not appear here, but the Lords' Journals show that, besides the impeachment of Danby, five lords were to be tried for complicity in the Popish Plot, namely, Powis, Stafford, Arundel of Wardour, Petre, and Bellasis.

Not long after, Edward Pyckering writes on a very different subject: "The Duchess of Cleveland is lately come over, and will shortly to Windsor, if not there already. His Majesty gave the Commissioners of the Treasury fair warning to look to themselves, for that she would have a bout with them for money, having lately lost 20,000*l.* in money and jewels in one night at play." He adds: "Nell Guin's mother was found drowned in a ditch near Westminster, on Tuesday night." There is a letter from the Duchess of Cleveland herself two years later.

In 1680 Lord Montagu absented himself from Parliament, and received a summons from the Chancellor taking notice of the fact. Next year we have a circumstantial account of the elopement of Lady Ogle, daughter of the late Earl of Northumberland, and step-daughter of Ralph Montagu, who had been secretly married to Mr. Thomas Thynne. In 1682 occur letters from and to Count Königsmark, relating to the charge against him of hiring the three assassins who shot Mr. Thynne in Pall Mall. The Duke of Albemarle congratulated him on his acquittal.

The second Lord Montagu died in 1683, and was succeeded by his son Ralph, who, having taken an active part in the Exclusion Bills, found it necessary to retire to France on the accession of James II. During his absence, his "noble house" in Bloomsbury was burnt down, and Rachel Lady Russell writes about the fire as follows: "As all great accidents do, it causes variety of discourse in the town, of what I can but wish not [to] judge of, that is, where the loss will fall. . . . Next morning, Lady Devon[shire's] woman told her they said the fire was raked up at six o'clock at night, and covered with an earthen pan. . . . I sent, as soon as my scattered thoughts could do it, to offer room for any goods [that] were saved." The second Montagu House was even more magnificent than the first, and ultimately became the original home of the British Museum.

In 1685, Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys informs Richard Winwood of the new King James II.'s desire for the election of certain members of Parliament for the county of Buckingham. Only one of the royal nominees was however returned. Other letters relate to the double return of Samuel Pepys for Harwich and Sandwich, Pepys himself writing on the subject. The King insisted on his sitting as member for the former borough. On the important question of town charters, which were then being called in question by the King, the Earl of Sunderland writes, on the King's behalf, that although his Majesty had power to remove borough officers, he had no power to nominate others in their places.

The Duke of Albemarle was sent to repress the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion, but his wife's letters show that he resented the appointment over him of Lords Faversham and Churchill, whom he had "so long commanded." In a letter of Fulke Grosvenor on the same subject, Monmouth is alluded to as "Perkin." Albemarle evidently found himself out of favour with James II., and, probably for this reason, applied for and obtained the office of Governor of Jamaica, where he remained till his death in 1688. Several letters relate to the Queen Dowager Catherine and the Queen Consort Mary.

There is very little correspondence here during the reign of William and Mary.

At the beginning of the next reign we meet with several letters from the Duke of Marlborough to his daughter, Lady Mary Churchill, who became the wife of John, second Duke of Montagu, and many from Sarah Duchess of Marlborough to Ralph Earl and Duke of Montagu, and to John Duke of Montagu. There are also letters from the Electress Sophia, Lord Godolphin, Charles Montagu, Lord Halifax, a descendant of the first Earl of Manchester, and others. In 1713 Dean Swift writes three letters to Duke John, whom he styles "Reverend Doctor." With Duchess Sarah's letters there is a statement of moneys laid out by her for Queen Anne, partly for large quantities of lace.

In the reign of George I. there are several letters from the Earl and Countess of Sunderland, the Duke and Duchess of Montagu, and others, many relating to the Opera House, and the new Theatre in the Haymarket, and to disputes between the English and French players. The Duchess travelled in France, but did not like Paris, though she found "no smoke" there; she did not admire the manners of the young King of France, Louis XV.; nor was she impressed favourably with the Duke and Duchess of Berwick, or with the fashions of the French ladies.

Five letters of Arthur Collins refer to the account of the Montagu family which he was preparing for his "Peerage," and to the labour and expense which he had devoted to that great work, the result being that he was left "in a starving condition." A curious letter from Philip Jones, York Herald, to Sir Robert Walpole, makes a proposal for "regulating the College of Arms." Some letters from and to John Anstis, Garter, at the beginning of the next reign, relate to St. John's College, Oxford, and Greenwich Hospital.

Between 1732 and 1735 there is a series of amusing letters from Lord Tyrawley, British Ambassador at Lisbon, to the Duke of Montagu, as Keeper of the Great Wardrobe, in which he relates many personal anecdotes, and describes and criticizes the manners and customs of the Portuguese. He appears to have been at the same time in correspondence with Colonel John Selwyn, father of George Selwyn, and it may well be that the latter took Lord Tyrawley for his model, as their styles exhibit many points of similarity; though, if such were the case, it must be confessed that the pupil excelled the master.

The letters of Samuel Speed, in 1740 and 1741, from Barbadoes, Jamaica, Carthagena, and Cuba, give minute particulars of the operations of the British fleet and troops against the Spaniards in the West Indies. In the latter year several forts near Carthagena were bombarded and captured. The Spaniards destroyed three of their ships of war and many other ships, but the Galicia, the Spanish commander's ship, was taken; and subsequently the Spanish Admiral's ship "at the Havana" was blown up by lightning. The British vessels landed a large number of men in Cuba, and still larger forces were expected to come from England; but the mortality among the soldiers, arising "more from want of necessaries than the inclemency of the climate," was so great that they were not "able to annoy the enemy." At the end of the year the mortality increased in a frightful manner.

The letters from General Sir Philip Honywood, Samuel Speed, and Thomas Jones, in 1743, relate to military operations in Germany against the French, and to the battle of Dettingen, in which George II. and the Duke of Cumberland took active parts.

Many other interesting letters will be found in this collection, but they are too varied to admit of a complete description. A few particulars may be noted. There are references to English commerce on pp. 249, 250, 258, 270; sayings of Burghley and Bacon, and dicta of Sir Thomas Clarges, pp. 250, 283, 320, 322; "gossips," p. 252; the examination of Sir Robert Cotton in 1629, p. 269; remarks by the Bishop of Peterborough on parsons in 1636, p. 275; the hiring of chambers in the Temple, p. 285; William Eyre's rebuke to Protector Cromwell, p. 311; an election by the freemen of Sandwich, p. 341; a duel between the Duke of Grafton and the Earl of Shrewsbury's brother, p. 345; a Latin epitaph on the Duke of Marlborough, p. 372; and to "the enchanted island" at Ditton, p. 383.

The Montagu-Arlington Letters.

In this collection we have an important contribution to the history of the negotiations between England and France between 1668 and 1678. In the former year Ralph Montagu was chosen by "the Cabal" to be Ambassador to France, probably on account of his intimate acquaintance with that country. In his letters here printed he gives many evidences of his having been a born diplomatist and an accomplished man. At first he was in sympathy both with Buckingham and Arlington, but on the estrangement which arose between his chiefs, he took sides with the latter. At the beginning Arlington was greatly distrusted in France, especially by "Madame," the daughter of Charles II., and wife of the Duke of Orleans, but, by the tact of Montagu, she became quite reconciled to the Earl, and after her death he remained in greater favour than Buckingham at the French Court. These general remarks apply to the years 1668-1672.

When Montagu was first proposed by Buckingham to the King as Ambassador to France, in 1668, his Majesty inquired whether he was not too young for the office, and suggested Lord Sunderland instead, but finally assented to the appointment. After Montagu's arrival in Paris, Madame at first openly showed her dislike to him, on the ground that he was merely the agent of Arlington, with whom she was then offended.

Montagu took an early opportunity of pointedly asking Madame her reason for being dissatisfied with Arlington. She replied that Arlington had "slighted her and her friendship," and would not answer her letters; but after Montagu's explanations, she professed to become reconciled. This was an important advantage, as it is clear that Madame fully enjoyed the confidence of the King her brother, who wrote to her on all subjects "very freely."

The French Ambassador in England, Charles Colbert, brother of Jean Colbert, the French Prime Minister, was at that time opposed to Arlington, doing him all the "ill offices" he could, and declaring that he, Arlington, was the sole obstacle to a union between England and France, and that "other ways" must be tried to effect it. "The King of France himself said that the Ambassador had had a great deal of money of him to make friends in England, and all to no purpose," owing, as he supposed, to Arlington's hostility. The French, however, reckoned on Buckingham's support, and Montagu recommended Arlington to promote an understanding, on the ground that "there is no kind of terms that the King may not have from the French." Indeed, it is constantly insisted upon that Louis XIV. was much more anxious than Charles II. for an alliance, and stood in greater need of it.

M. de Lionne, the French Secretary, had frequent interviews with Montagu. Once he inveighed greatly against the Dutch, "wondering why we were no more desirous of being revenged for all the injuries they had done us, when we might be backed by so good friends as the French." On another occasion, when Montagu assured him that Arlington was not "a Spaniard," he replied, "Nobody but a Spaniard would have made the Triple League."

As usual, the great want of Charles II. was money. Montagu, during the whole time of his embassy, had the greatest difficulty in obtaining his allowances, though "in equipage and living" he spent a great deal more than any of his predecessors. He did not however hesitate to suggest through his sister, Lady Harvey, that the King should make Madame a present of five thousand pounds, and the money was actually promised and probably paid by Charles. Truly it was not much of a gift, if, as Montagu alleges, the King had never paid her the ten thousand pounds granted to her by Parliament when she first came into England; in fact, he had "made bold with it," as Madame mildly put it. Of course the money was not to come from the English Treasury, which was always empty; it was to be paid out of "the remainder of the Queen [Catherine]'s portion," which had unexpectedly been obtained from Portugal, after being regarded as a hopeless debt. The gift was to be kept secret from the Queen Mother, Henrietta Maria, who resided in France, and whose dues from her son were likewise in arrear.

In one letter, after declining to give an opinion on the expediency of "a stricter league" with France, Montagu says that "the part of an ambassador is to be a spy and a tell-tale," and he relates some unflattering anecdotes of the French King, who once alluded to Charles as an adventurer who had been chased from his kingdom. He then boasts that Charles was being "served secretly and faithfully," whereas in Lord Clarendon's time "all the counsels of England" were betrayed to Louis; but he complains that so much money should be sent from England to pay pensions to certain English "creatures" residing in France.

The French based great expectations on the meeting of the English Parliament in 1669, as they considered Arlington would then be "a lost man," and the King would be compelled to court them. In a letter to Lady Harvey, Montagu refers to "my Lord Buckingham's jealousies and being so often ready to break with my Lord Arlington." A little later he speaks plainly of "the falling out" between them. The ground of the quarrel is stated to have been the understanding established between the Duke of York and Arlington, while his Royal Highness remained dissatisfied with Buckingham. Madame, having been entirely won over by Montagu, promised to write to the King in Arlington's favour.

While Madame was in so much esteem with her brother, which caused her to be "mightily courted" by Louis in public "for England's sake," she was in private much neglected and "ill used" by her husband and by Louis. "One of her great grievances is the Chevalier de Lorraine, who has so much credit with Monsieur [Orleans] that Madame has no more power in her family than you [Arlington] have." But at length the Chevalier fell into disgrace with Louis, and was banished from Court. This caused an estrangement between the two brothers, but in the result Madame enjoyed more consideration than she had ever done before.

Montagu tells an anecdote which goes to prove that Arlington was now, temporarily at least, in disgrace with Charles, as the French Court had once wished to believe. A French gentleman returning to France reported that "it is a custom in England that when the King is angry with anyone, he makes them be acted, and that my Lord Buckingham and Bab [Baptist] May had acted you [Arlington] to the King, and endeavoured to turn you en ridicule."

After the Queen Mother's death, in September 1669, many references occur to the disposal of her property and effects, and to the claims thereto of Charles II., the Duke of York, the Prince of Orange, and the Duke of Orleans. Charles claimed the whole under the law of England, and probably obtained it, but Monsieur at first claimed all his mother-in-law had possessed in France. Walter Montagu, "the Lord Abbot," a cousin of Ralph, had been in constant attendance on her Majesty, and a number of his letters will be found in this collection. Ralph evidently had no great opinion of him, for he says, "Abbé Montagu is just in France as my Lord Chamberlain [Manchester] is in England, and extremely useless to me, for he is grown very ignorant and out of fashion."

Under date of 9th November occurs the following paragraph, noticeable as having been written long before the exodus from France consequent on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes :

“ I suppose you know already of an order made by the King [of France], commanding all his subjects, wherever they are, that will return to France, to come back within six months. It is thought to be made upon an alarm of the Huguenots going to settle in England and Ireland.”

In the same month Louis managed to obtain a plausible excuse for being offended with Madame, and ordered her to dismiss from her service a lady for whom she had great affection. It is remarked that his “ chief pleasure here is to domineer and insult over those that are in his power,” in which respect he is said to have differed entirely from Charles, whose resentment of this insult to his sister was fully anticipated. Madame suggested that Charles should show it by not living “ so familiarly ” with Ambassador Colbert as he had done ; much to Montagu’s regret, as Colbert had become very friendly with Arlington. In acting thus, however, Charles would only be following the example of Louis, who, Montagu complains, always treated him with scant courtesy. A more important suggestion was, that Charles should invite his sister “ to make a journey ” over to England ; which he did, but for some time the visit was opposed by Monsieur.

Everybody in France, in December 1669, was “ mad for war ” with the Dutch, except Louis and his Ministers, although the latter were “ mightily set upon being strong at sea.” A comparison is instituted between the pay of the British and French armies ; the former cost much more, but were worse disciplined than the latter. In this connexion it may be noted that, on the death of the Duke of Albemarle, Montagu writes : “ My Lord General being dead, your Lordship ought, as you are Secretary of State, by the King’s directions, [to] give out all the orders to the Army, as M. de Louvoy does here ; . . . it will be an injury and diminution to your place to have it done by anybody else.” Not long after, Montagu applied for one of the Commissionerships of the Treasury, vacant by Albemarle’s death, but, though recommended by Madame, did not obtain it.

At length, in March 1670, the Duke of Orleans consented to Madame’s going over to England, and it was proposed that Charles should go to Dover and meet her there while Louis was on his way to Flanders, where he intended “ to visit all the new-conquered places and fortifications,” as Monsieur would not hear of her going so far as London. Montagu was requested to attend her to Lille, and in doing so he managed at the same time to conciliate the Queen of Spain, who wished him to accompany Louis to Flanders, for the purpose of maintaining the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. He would not ask leave to accompany Madame to England, as he disliked the idea of being subordinate to Lord St. Alban's, who was commissioned to meet her with "the yachts" at Dunkirk.

These letters do not contain any account of Madame's interview and negociations with her brother, which resulted in the Treaty of Dover. She died unexpectedly soon after her return to France, and Charles at first suspected that she had been poisoned, but seems to have found the suspicion groundless. Walter Montagu writes to remind the King of Madame's desire that he would advance Ralph's father "to the dignity of an Earldom," about which Ralph himself had previously thrown out some hints to Arlington, but the creation did not take place.

In August Buckingham went over to France, no doubt to arrange with Louis the assistance to be rendered by England against the Dutch, under the new treaty, but ostensibly to obtain satisfaction with regard to the Leeward Islands, and redress of the grievances of British merchants in respect of their woollen manufactures. "Never any man was used so well as he was here," Montagu declares after his departure; but Arlington is cautioned that the Duke was more inclined to Lords Ashley and Orrery and Sir Thomas Osborne than to himself. He is also warned against Secretary Trevor, who had caused the former disagreement between him and the Duke. In December Montagu informs Arlington of the secret mission by Buckingham of a servant to Paris, but its object is not apparent. The Duke was much annoyed at its discovery, and threatened to be revenged on Montagu for sending over the information, for communication to the King. The Ambassador however was not alarmed at this threat, knowing, as he says, that the King was of "so just a nature as that an ill office can do a man no hurt with him."

The treaty with France was kept so secret that the Dutch did not become acquainted with its existence till long afterwards. The secret was communicated to very few persons. In April 1671 Montagu obtained leave to return to England, and remained at home till September, when he had an interview at Dunkirk with M. d' Estrades, who had heard of the new alliance, and considered that the Spaniards would take part with the Dutch, in which case he anticipated that Flanders would be seized and divided between England and France; he therefore suggested that Charles should at once lay claim to Ostend, Blankenberg, and Bruges, and have them acknowledged in a proposed new treaty as his share of the plunder.

By an article of the Treaty of Dover, Charles had engaged to furnish six, or at least four, thousand men to join with the French forces, but found it difficult to meet his obligations. He therefore asked to be released from this engagement, and offered instead that permission should be given Louis to raise "ten thousand or less Englishmen at his own cost." Louis agreed to this arrangement for one year only, saying he had thought of constantly entertaining a body of English to be "a terror to his enemies." Montagu gives a minute account of the backstairs influence which he employed in order to arrive at this result. Writing to the King, he anticipates a saving of eighty thousand pounds a year, "a very popular thing to your people and Parliament."

The reason given by Montagu for this concession on the part of the French was this: they believed the command of Charles's forces would be given to Buckingham, whom they looked upon as a man ill affected to monarchy, and desirous of keeping in with the Presbyterian party, and that the latter would never concur in the destruction of Holland, where there was a Commonwealth, such as they wished to have in England. Buckingham was greatly incensed at losing the expected command, and declared to Louis that this was merely "a malicious project" of Arlington and Montagu's to deprive him of "so honourable a post." The Duke of Monmouth was proposed by Montagu as commander of the English levies to be raised by Louis.

Not content with being released from a heavy expense, Charles desired to obtain from Louis the grant of an extremely large sum of money, instead of a number of ships as agreed in the treaty, under the plausible pretext that he intended to increase his own fleet by thirty vessels, to be employed in the Mediterranean. As soon as Montagu heard of this demand, he wrote to say, "I am afraid the King here has not so much money as the world does imagine;" and he suggested that the only way to obtain the grant was for the King to write a letter to Louis, making the demand in person. He even enclosed a draft of the proposed letter. Charles accordingly wrote to Louis, who in reply told Montagu that it was impossible for him to do what was required. Arlington was however recommended by Montagu to expatiate to Ambassador Colbert on "the straits we are in," and it was hoped that Louis would take second thoughts; but Montagu then returned to England for some six weeks, and we hear no more of the matter till March 1672, when he reports that the proposition was looked upon by the wisest Frenchmen "as a trick of ours, to find some pretext to draw off of them by degrees."

Preparations were at that time being made for the invasion of Holland, and one of the French armies was set apart especially "to have an eye upon the Spaniards" in Flanders, in case they might interfere. A long discussion took place on the proposal that the French ships should take English commissions and English colours, which was objected to by Louis, and on the different manner of saluting admirals in the English and French navies. The Dutch Ambassador in Paris then took his leave, expressing to Montagu his "sorrow for the union we are in with France." As Louis was about to follow the war in person, Montagu asked for a "letter of revocation," and promised to prepare the way for his intended successor, Lord Sunderland. Louis, as a parting favour, recommended Montagu for a vacant Garter; but Charles would not grant it. The request even seems to have given offence, either owing to its extravagance or to the "ill offices" of Buckingham. Montagu declares: "The King has shown me little favour or good will; . . . upon my own account I can never expect his Majesty will think I deserve anything."

He was again at Paris in December 1672, but not in an official capacity; and in January 1673 he was at Marseilles, intending, he says, "for a little while to ramble in Italy, but I will not go to Rome lest people should think I go about business." In April he was back in Paris, writing earnestly about the creation of his father as Earl, as promised by Charles to Madame at their last interview; but Charles would not fulfil the promise. "All my enemies give out that I am disgraced," Montagu complains.

An undated letter refers to his committal to the Tower "for challenging the Duke of Buckingham in the King's presence." He admits having used the words "Follow me," but protests that he intended merely to avoid quarrelling with the Duke before the King.

In 1677 he was once more Ambassador in Paris, but there are only two short letters from him in that year, and two letters, to him apparently, from Lord Danby in 1677 and 1678. The latter relate to a proposed suspension of arms in the Spanish Netherlands. They are not the same as the two letters from Danby which Montagu produced in the House of Commons on the former's impeachment, and which were dated 17th January and 25th March 1678;* nor are they included in the Duke of Leeds' edition of his correspondence with Montagu, published in 1710.†

There is nothing to show how the two volumes of letters to Lord Arlington came into the possession of the Montagu family. It is also remarkable that there are no letters from Arlington to Montagu. Possibly they mutually returned one another's letters, for fear of accidents.

The Holles MS.

Among the numerous commissions to members of the Holles family in the seventeenth century, there are several by Charles I. between 1642 and 1644, and two by Robert Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, in 1642. If these royal commissions were ever enrolled on the Patent Rolls they are not now to be found, as Charles's Patent Rolls of that period were all burnt before the surrender of Oxford; consequently, these careful copies are of great value. There are also several commissions and grants by Charles II. during his exile, which of course are not enrolled in the public archives, and are both valuable and interesting.‡

* Rapin, ii. 697, 698. "An Explanation of my Lord Treasurer's Letter," &c., published in 1679.

† For other original letters between Danby and Montagu, and comments thereon, see Mr. Jeaffreson's Report on the MSS. of Mr. J. Eliot Hodgkin, pp. 185-198.

‡ With respect to the collection of loans for Charles in England, in 1649, compare the Report on the Duke of Portland's MSS., ii. 27, 28. In the same Report there are some Holles papers, and a commonplace book of Sir John Holles, 1597-1614.

In 1645 Colonel Gervase Holles made proposals to the Venetian Ambassador in France for raising two thousand English subjects for the service of the Venetian Republic in its war with the Turks; but the Turkish merchants in London appear to have prevailed on Parliament to forbid the levy. Next year however he obtained the Parliament's consent to his raising eleven hundred men for the service of France, "which is well disposed towards the welfare and repose of this State." Among the later commissions there are several by the first Duke of Albemarle.

---

The Calendar of these papers and this Introduction have been prepared by Mr. R. E. G. Kirk. The Commissioners desire to express their grateful obligations to Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholl, solicitor to the Duke of Buccleuch, for the facilities afforded to their inspector in his examination and report on the papers; and to Mr. Whitmore for his constant attention and help during the progress of the work.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH AND QUEENSBERRY, K.G., K.T., AT MONTAGU HOUSE, WHITEHALL.

---

I.—THE WINWOOD PAPERS.

THESE are the letters and papers of Mr., afterwards Sir, Ralph Winwood, who was Agent in France from 1599 to 1603, Resident Councillor and Ambassador in Holland from 1603 to 1613, and Secretary of State from 1614 to 1617. They came into the possession of the Montagu family by the marriage of Edward, second Baron Montagu, with Anne, daughter of Sir Ralph Winwood, and are bound up in eleven volumes, which comprise the following dates :—

- Vol. 1.—1564, April, to 1600—1, March, and a few later.
- Vol. 2.—1601, April, to 1603, June.
- Vol. 3.—1603, June, to 1604—5, March.
- Vol. 4.—1605, March, to 1606—7, March.
- Vol. 5.—1607, April, to 1609, April.
- Vol. 6.—1609, March, to 1609—10, March.
- Vol. 7.—1610, March, to 1610—11, March.
- Vol. 8.—1612, March, to 1612—13, March.
- Vol. 9.—1611, April, to 1611—12, March.
- "    —1613, March, to 1613—14, March.
- Vol. 10.—1614, March, to 1617. October; and one of 1638.
- Vol. 11.—1564—1628.

Many of these letters and papers were with others published in 1725 by Edmund Sawyer, of Lincoln's Inn, Esquire, in three folio volumes, with a portrait of Winwood, under the title of—

“MEMORIALS OF AFFAIRS OF STATE in the reigns of Q. Elizabeth and K. James I., collected (chiefly) from the original papers of the Right Honourable SIR RALPH WINWOOD, Kt., sometime one of the Principal Secretaries of State; comprehending likewise the NEGOTIATIONS of Sir Henry Neville, Sir Charles Cornwallis, Sir Dudley Carleton, Sir Thomas Edmondes, Mr. Trumbull, Mr. Cottington, and others, at the Courts of France and Spain, and in Holland, Venice, &c.; wherein the principal TRANSACTIONS of those times are faithfully related, and the Policies and Intrigues of those Courts at large discover'd: the whole digested in an exact Series of Time. To which are added two Tables—one of the Letters, the other of the principal Matters.”

The work is dedicated to Robert Walpole, Esquire, First Lord Commissioner of the Treasury; and the Preface states that Sawyer was indebted to His Grace the Duke of Montagu for “the free use of the original papers of Sir Ralph Winwood," which implies that they were in the Duke's possession, but until recently it was not known that they are still preserved at Montagu House. The Neville papers were then, in 1725, in the possession of Grey Neville, Esquire; the Trumbull papers in that of John Bridges, Esquire; and the Cornwallis papers were taken from originals or copies in "the Cotton Library."

Sawyer's volumes begin in 1596, and end at the beginning of 1614, but his first quotation from the Winwood Papers is dated 1600. The papers really extend from 1564 to 1638, though there are very few after Winwood's death, in 1617.

Even within the period comprised in his work Sawyer omits many letters of considerable interest. It was therefore found necessary, first, to ascertain what he had printed, and next to extract the unprinted materials. The following table indicates all the printed papers which are now at Montagu House, thus distinguishing them from those in the other collections with which they are intermixed, as stated on the title-page. The table will be succeeded by extracts from those which are not printed by Sawyer.

---

VOL. I.

	PAGE
134. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Paris, July 17, 1600 -	227
["Paris" is inserted by Sawyer.]
135. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, July 18, 1600 - -	230
[He signs "Nevill."]
136. — to the same, July 23, 1600 - - - - -	231
[Endorsed: Received 2 Aug. 1600.]
137. — to the same, July 29, 1600 - - - - -	232
[Endorsed: R. at Chambery, 23 Aug. 1600.]
138. The Lords of the Council to Sir Henry Neville, July 10, 1600 - - - - -	233
139. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Lyons, July 31, 1600, o.s.	234
140. Articles between the French King and the Duke of Savoy, July 30, 1600 - - - - -	236
141. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Lyons, Aug. 3, 1600, o.s.	239
142. — to the same, Grenoble, Aug. 9, 1600, o.s. - - -	242
["Grenoble" is inserted by Sawyer.]
143. — to the same, Chambery, Aug. 15, 1600, o.s. - -	244
["Chambery" is inserted by Sawyer.]
144. — to the same, Aug. 19, 1600, o.s. - - - - -	246
[A few lines at the end are omitted.]
145. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, Aug. 28, 1600 - -	248
146. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Chambery, Aug. 20, 1600, o.s. - - - - -	250
["Monsieur Villeroy," at the end, is "distrust" in MS. A few words are omitted.]
147. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, Sept. 9, 1600 - -	253

	PAGE
148. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Grenoble, Sept. 13, 1600, o.s.	255
["The Crookback'd Secretary" and a few other words are in cipher in MS.]
149. — to the same, Grenoble, Sept. 23, 1600, o.s.	256
150. — to the same, Grenoble, Sept. 30, 1600, o.s.	261
151. — to the same, Grenoble, Oct. 5, 1600, o.s.	263
152. — to the same, Valenza, Oct. 7, 1600, o.s.	264
["Vallence" in MS.]
153. — to the same, Marseilles, Oct. 22, 1600, o.s.	265
154. — to the same, Marseilles, Oct. 29, 1600, o.s.	266
155. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, Nov. 2, 1600	270
156. Mr. Beale and Mr. Edmonds's Answer to the President Richardot's Letter, — Oct. 1600	272
157. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, Nov. 15, 1600	273
158. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Lyons, Nov. 20, 1600, o.s.	275
["Lyons" and "1600 o.s." are supplied by Sawyer.]
159. — to the same, Lyons, Dec. 4, 1600, o.s.	278
160. — to the same, Lyons, Dec. 8, 1600, o.s.	281
["9 Dec." in MS.]
161. — to the same, Lyons, Dec. 21, 1600	284
[P.S. "144 is much incensed against 190, whose protector he calls resolution."]
162. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, Dec. 28, 1600	286
163. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Lyons, Jan. 2, 1600, o.s.	287
164. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Paris, Jan. 13, 1600, o.s.	289
165. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, Jan. 23, 1600	290
166. — to the same, Jan. 28, 1600	291
167. — to the same, Jan. 29, 1600	ibid.
["19 Jan." in MS.]
168. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Paris, Feb. 10, 1600, o.s.	292
["Paris" is inserted by Sawyer.]
169. — to the same, Paris, Feb. 17, 1600, o.s.	293
[No year in MS.]
170. — to the same [undated]	295
171. Monsieur Boissise to the Duke of Rohan, London, March 4, 1600	296
["1601" in MS.]
172. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, March 7, 1600	299
173. Sir Henry Neville's Case [undated]	302
["Cause" in MS. The first paragraph is written as a heading to what follows.]
174. Mr. Winwood to Sir Henry Neville, Paris, March 16, 1600	304
["Paris" is inserted by Sawyer.]
175. — to the same, Paris, March 16, 1600	305
["Paris" is inserted by Sawyer.]
176. — to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, March 17, 1600, o.s.	306

177. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, March 21 & 22, 1600	- - - - -	307
[“P.S.” is inserted by Sawyer. The last two paragraphs are dated 22 March. A few words are omitted.]
178. Queen Elizabeth to the French King, Jan. 1600	- - - - -	ibid.
179. — to the Queen of France, Jan. 1600	- - - - -	308
180. — to the French King, March 20, 1600	- - - - -	308
181. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, March 23, 1600, o.s.	- - - - -	309
182. — to the same, Paris, April 2, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	311
[This date is entirely supplied by Sawyer.]
183. — to the same, Paris, April 10, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	314
[“1600” in the text is an error for “1601.”]
184. — to the same, Paris, April 20, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	315
[“20” is supplied by Sawyer.]
185. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, April 21, 1601	- - - - -	318
186. Mr. Packer to Mr. Winwood, April 27, 1601	- - - - -	319
[This letter is signed J., not John, Packer.]
187. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, April 27, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	ibid.
188. — to the same, Paris, May 7, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	321
[“6 May” in MS.]
189. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, May 9, 1601	- - - - -	324
190. Mr. Winwood to the Secretary, Paris, May 17, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	325
191. — to the same (of the same date)	- - - - -	327
192. — to the same, Paris, May 23, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	328
[“Paris” is inserted by Sawyer.]
193. — to the same, Paris, May 29, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	330
194. — to the same, Paris, June 3, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	332
195. — to the same, Paris, June 12, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	334
196. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, June 29, 1601.	- - - - -	336
197. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, July 1, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	338
198. — to the same, July 2, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	339
199. — to the same, July 15, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	ibid.
200. — to the same, Paris, Aug. 20, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	342
201. — to the same (of the same date)	- - - - -	343
[There is also a translation of this letter in Italian.]
202. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Aug. 21, 1601	- - - - -	344
203. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Calais, Aug. 27, 1601, o.s.	- - - - -	ibid.
204. — to the same, Calais, 1601	- - - - -	345
[“Calais” is inserted by Sawyer.]
205. — to the same, Calais, 1601	- - - - -	ibid.
[“1601” is inserted by Sawyer.]
206. — to the same, Calais, 1601	- - - - -	346

	PAGE
207. Mr. Winwood to the same, Paris, Sept. 18, 1601, o.s. - - -	346
208. — to the same, Paris, Sept. 26, 1601, o.s. - - -	348
[“ The King ”—“ congratulat ”—“ his mistress ” — these words are in cipher in MS.]
209. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Oct. 4, 1601 - - -	350
210. Mr. Winwood to the Secretary, Paris, Oct. 10, 1601, o.s. - - -	352
211. — to the same, Oct. 15, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	353
[On p. 356, “ Postscript ” is inserted by Sawyer, but what follows is the draft of a separate letter.]
212. — to the same, Paris, Oct. 22, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	357
213. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Nov. 3, 1601 - - -	358
214. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Nov. 15, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	359
215. — to the same, Paris, Nov. 23, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	360
216. — to the same, Paris, Dec. 1, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	362
[A few sentences at the end are omitted by Sawyer.]
217. — to the same, Paris, Dec. 8, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	365
[“ Paris ” is inserted by Sawyer.]
218. — to the same, Paris, Dec. 21, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	367
[“ Paris,” as above.]
219. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Jan. 2, 1601 - - -	369
220. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Jan. 6, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	371
[“ Paris,” as above.]
221. — to the same, Paris, Jan. 12, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	374
[“ Paris,” as above.]
222. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Jan. 20, 1601. - - -	376
223. — to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	377
224. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Jan. 24, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	379
[“ Paris,” as above.]
225. — to the same, Paris, Feb. 3, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	381
[“ Paris,” as above.]
226. — to the same, Paris, Feb. 13, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	384
227. — to the same, Paris, Feb. 16, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	386
[“ Paris,” as above.]
228. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Feb. 27, 1601, o.s.	387
229. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Feb. 27, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	388
230. Articles between the French Ambassadors and the Com- missioners of the Queen, with the Answers of the French Ambassadors - - - - -	389
231. The English Commissioners’ Reply to the French Am- bassadors’ Answer - - - - -	391
232. Propositiones ultimo loco inter Dominos Commissarios hinc inde agitatae - - - - -	392
233. Suspendio et Prorogatio Colloquii - - - - -	394

	PAGE
234. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, March 14, 1601, o.s.	395
235. — to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	396
236. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, March 17, 1601, o.s. - - - - -	397
237. — to the same, Paris, March, 28, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	399
238. — to the same, Paris, April 1, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	402
[This is on the back of another copy-letter on the same subject, of the same date. See abstract, post. ]
239. — to the same, Paris, April 10, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
[“Colvell” on line 1 is supplied by Sawyer, there being a blank in MS.]
240. — to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	404
241. — to the same, Paris, April 14, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
242. — to the same, Paris, April 19, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	405
243. — to the same, Blois, April 28, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	406
244. — to the same, Tours, May 7, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	408
245. — to the same, Poitiers, May 15, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	410
246. — to the same, Orleans, May 25, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	412
247. — to the same, Fountainbleau, June 4, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	414
248. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, June 9, 1602 - - - - -	415
249. — to the same, June 13, 1602 - - - - -	416
250. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, June 17, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	417
251. — to the same, Paris, June 24, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	421
252. — to the same, Paris, July 7, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	423
253. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, July 17, 1602 - - - - -	426
254. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, July 21, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	427
[This letter is now in a decayed state, and much of it has perished.]
255. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Aug. 6, 1602 - - - - -	428
256. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Diepe, Aug. 7, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	429
257. — to the same, Paris, Aug. 21, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	430
258. — to the same, Aug. 30, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	431
259. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Sept. 1, 1602 - - - - -	433
260. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Sept. 15, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	434
261. — to the same, Paris, Sept. 29, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	436
262. — to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	438
263. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Oct. 1, 1602 - - - - -	439
264. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Oct. 7, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
265. — to the same, Paris, Oct. 17, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	441
266. — to the same, Paris, Oct. 18, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	442

	PAGE
267. Mr. Winwood to the same, Paris, Oct. 20, 1602, o.s. - -	443
[On line 1, "the Ambassador of Scotland" is supplied by Sawyer. On line 3, "the 29th of the last month" should be "the 17th of this."]
268. — to the same, Paris, Oct. 22, 1602, o.s. - -	ibid.
269. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Nov. 4, 1602 - -	444
270. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Nov. 9, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	445
271. — to the same, Paris, Nov. 26, 1602, o.s. - -	446
272. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Dec. 2, 1602. - -	448
273. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Dec. 2, 1602 -	ibid.
274. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Dec. 1602 - -	450
275. Mr. Winwood to Mr. Secretary Cecyll, Paris, Dec. 17, 1602, o.s. - - - - -	453
276. — to the same, Paris, Dec. 18, 1602, o.s. - -	454
277. — to the same, Paris, Jan. 2, 1602, o.s. - - - -	456
278. — to the same, Paris, Jan. 4, 1602, o.s. - - - -	458
[The entire date is supplied by Sawyer. An endorsement, "6th (?) January," has been struck out.]
279. Mr. Secretary Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Jan. 5, 1602 - -	460
280. Mr. Winwood to the Duke de Tremouille - - - -	ibid.

VOL. II.

1. His Majesty King James to the States of the United Provinces, Aug. 10, 1603 - - - - -	1
2. The Lords of the Privy Council to Mr. Winwood (of the same date) - - - - -	2
3. The Lord Cecyll to the same, Aug. 12, 1603 - - - -	ibid.
4. The Answer to Count Arembergh's Propositions - - -	3
5. The Merchants Adventurers to Mr. Winwood, Middleburgh, Sept. 1, 1603 - - - - -	4
6. The Deputy and Assistants of the Company of Merchants Adventurers to the States, Sept. 11, 1603 - - - -	ibid.
7. The Lord Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Oct. 3, 1603 - - -	6
8. Apostile of the States General in relation to the Memorial of the Merchants Adventurers, Oct. 8, 1603, n.s. - - - -	8
9. A Memorial exhibited to the States by the Merchants Adventurers, Oct. 18, 1603 - - - - -	9
10. The Lords of the Privy Council to Mr. Winwood, Dec. 11, 1603 - - - - -	10
11. The Lord Cecyll to the same, Dec. 12, 1603 - - - -	ibid.
12. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, Dec. 23, 1603 -	12

	PAGE
13. The Duke of Cleves to the same, Dec. 27, 1603 - - -	12
[Not "17 Dec.," as in Sawyer.]
14. The Duchess of Cleves to the same, Dec. 30, 1603 - -	13
15. Dr. Montagu to his Mother, concerning the Conference at Hampton Court, Jan. 18, 1603 - - -	ibid.
16. The Lord Cecyll to Mr. Winwood, Feb. 15, 1603 - -	16
17. Sir Henry Neville to the same, London, Feb. 15 (16), 1603 -	17
["16th" is correct.]
18. The Lord Cecyll to the same, March 29, 1604 - - -	18
19. ——— to the same, April 12, 1604 - - -	ibid.
20. ——— to the same, May 5, 1604 - - -	19
21. His Majesty King James to the House of Commons, concern- ing the Union, May 10, 1604 - - -	20
22. The Heads of an Answer to that Letter - - -	21
23. The Lords of the Privy Council to Mr. Winwood, May 30, 1604 - - -	ibid.
24. The Lord Cecyll to the same, June 4, 1604 - - -	22
25. ——— to the same, June 13, 1604 - - -	23
26. Sir Henry Wotton to the same, July 19, 1604 - - -	24
27. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, Aug. 13, 1604 -	25
[Original, and a copy.]
28. Sir Henry Neville to the same, London, Aug. 19, 1604 -	ibid.
29. The Lord Viscount Cranborne to the same, Aug. 25, 1604 -	26
30. ——— to the same, Sept. 4, 1604 - - -	27
31. The Private Article in the Treaty between England and Spain concerning the Inquisition - - -	29
[The accompanying translation is not in MS., and appears to be Sawyer's.]
32. Mr. Winwood to the Lord Cranborne, Middleburgh, Sept. 4 (12), 1604, o.s. - - -	ibid.
["12th" is correct.]
33. The Lord Cranborne to Mr. Winwood, Sept. 30, 1604 - -	31
34. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same (of the same date) - -	32
35. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, Oct. 18, 1604 -	33
36. The Lord Viscount Cranborne to the same, Oct. 23, 1604 -	34
37. Sir Henry Neville to the same, London, Nov. 1, 1604 - -	35
38. Mr. More to the same, Dec. 2, 1604 - - -	ibid.
39. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, Dec. 5, 1604 -	36
40. Sir William Waad to the same (of the same date) - -	37
41. Sir Henry Neville to the same, London, Dec. 8, 1604 - -	ibid.
42. Mr. Packer to the same, Dec. 12, 1604 - - -	39
43. The Archbishop of York to Lord Viscount Cranborne, Dec. 18, 1604 - - -	40
44. Mr. Chamberlaine to Mr. Winwood, London (of the same date)	41
45. Mr. More to the same, London, Dec. 21, 1604 - - -	42
46. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Jan. 1604 - - -	43

	PAGE
47. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, Jan. 26, 1604 - - -	46
48. The Bishop of Ruremond's Letter to the Mutineers, Feb. 16, 1604 - - - - -	47
49. Sir Dudley Carleton to Mr. Winwood, Feb. 20, 1604 - - -	48
50. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, Feb. (16) 26, 1604 - - - ibid. [“16th” in MS.]
51. The Lord Viscount Cranborne to the same, Feb. 26, 1604 - - -	50
52. ——— to the same, Feb. 28, 1604 - - - - -	ibid.
53. The Answer of the States General to a Letter of the Lords of the Privy Council in England, March 3, 1605 - - - 51 [Not “1604-5,” as in Sawyer.]
54. Sir Dudley Carleton to Mr. Winwood, Greenwich, March 10, 1604 - - - - -	52
55. Mr. Dickenson to the same, Skenks Sconce, March 21, 1604, o.s. - - - - -	53
[“Schencks” in MS.]
56. Mr. Calvert to the same, March 28, 1605 - - - - -	ibid.
57. Mr. Winwood to the Lord Viscount Cranborne, March 31, 1605, o.s. - - - - -	55
58. Mr. Packer to Mr. Winwood, London, April 6, 1605 - - -	56
59. Mr. Calvert to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	57
60. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, May 5, 1605 - - -	58
61. Mr. Levinus Muncke to the same, May 14, 1605 - - - - -	59
62. The Lord Hertford to the same, May 17, 1605 - - - - -	ibid.
63. The Answer of the States General to the Proposition made by the Emperor's Ambassador, May 31, 1605 - - - - -	60
69. Sir Henry Neville to Mr. Winwood, June 21, 1605 - - - - -	77
70. His Majesty King James to the same, June 26, 1605 - - - - -	78
71. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, June 28, 1605 - - - - -	81
72. A Relation of what passed between the Spanish and Dutch Ships in the Harbour of Dover, June 28, 1605 - - - - -	82
73. Monsieur Caron to Mr. Winwood, London, June 28, 1605 - - -	84
[The date is wrongly given in Sawyer. In MS. it is “Suidt Lambeth,” 27 June, 1605, o.s.]
77. Copie de la Responce de Messieurs les Estats Generaux des Provinces Unies sur la Proposition faicte par le Sieur Winwood, &c., Aug. 2, 1605 - - - - -	87
83. The Earl of Salisbury to Mr. Winwood, July 24, 1605 - - -	97
84. His Majesty King James to the Count of East Freisland [no date] - - - - -	99
88. The Count of East Freisland to Mr. Winwood, Aug. 19, 1605, n.s. - - - - -	106
[“o.s.” in MS.]
89. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Aug. 10, 1605 - - - - -	ibid.
94. The Count of East Freisland to his Majesty King James, Sept. 2, n.s. - - - - -	112
[“s.n.” and “n.s.” are inserted by Sawyer.]

96. The Consul and Senate of Emden to Mr. Winwood, Sept. 5, 1605 - - - - -	120
97. The Deputies of East Freisland to the same, Sept. 6, 1605 -	121
98. The Count of East Freisland to the same, Sept. 7, 1605, n.s.- ["s.n." as before.]	122
99. A Memorial of the Consuls and Senate of Emden, Sept. 12, 1605, n.s. - - - - -	124
104. The Consul and Senate of Emden to Mr. Winwood, Sept. 21, 1605 - - - - -	137
105. ——— to the same, Oct. 1, 1605 - - - - -	ibid.
106. The Count of East Freisland to the same, Oct. 3, 1605 -	138
108. Mr. Chamberlaine to Mr. Winwood, London, Oct. 12, 1605 -	140
109. The Count of East Freisland to the same, Oct. 22, 1605, n.s. [o.s.] - - - - - [Oct. 22–Nov. 1, in MS.]	141
110. Mr. Winwood to the Earl of East Freisland [Oct. 1605] - [Not found.]	142
113. The Earl of Salisbury to Mr. Winwood, Oct. 24, 1605 -	146
118. Mr. Levinus Muncke to the same, Oct. 29, 1605 - - -	154
131. The Lord Suffolk to the same [no date] - - - - -	174
132. His Majesty King James to the Council of State, Nov. 14, 1605 - - - - - [This copy is undated, but endorsed "1605, 4 Nov." Sawyer inserts "14th Nov.;" n.s.?)	175
133. ——— to Count Maurice (of the same date) - - - - - [This copy is undated, but endorsed "1605, 4 Nov."]	176
134. The Earl of Salisbury to Mr. Winwood, Nov. 18, 1605 -	ibid.
137. The Count of East Freisland to the same, Dec. 11, 1605 - [" $\frac{1}{2}$ Dec." in MS.]	180
138. Monsieur Aercens [Aerssens] to the same, Paris, Dec. 27, 1605, n.s. - - - - -	181
146. Archbishop Bancroft to Mr. Winwood, Feb. 9, 1605 - -	195
147. Sir George Carew to the same, Paris, Feb. 16, 1605, o.s. -	ibid.
148. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Feb. 18, 1605 - -	196
149. Sir Henry Neville to the same, March 11, 1605 - - -	197
153. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, April 5, 1606 - - -	204
154. Sir Francis Vere to the same, April 5, 1606 - - -	207
155. His Majesty King James to the Count of East Freisland, April 29, 1606 - - - - -	ibid.
156. The Count of East Freisland to Mr. Winwood, April 30, 1606, o.s. - - - - -	208
157. ——— to the same, May 21, 1606 - - - - -	ibid.
160. Sir Henry Neville to the same, June 4, 1606 - - -	216
161. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, June 7, 1606 - -	217
165. The Count of East Freisland to the same, June 22, 1606 -	228
166. The Consuls and Senate of Emden to the same, June 23, 1606 - - - - -	229

	PAGE
168. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, June 21, 1606	- 232
172. The Count of East Freisland to the same, July 4, 1606	- 238
173. — to his Majesty King James, June —, 1606	- ibid.
[“10 <sup>o</sup> ” on p. 244 is inserted by Sawyer.]
175. The Count of East Freisland to Mr. Winwood, July 21, 1606, n.s.	- 245
[“n.s.” is inserted by Sawyer.]
176. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, July 19, 1606	- 246
[Not found.]
177. The Count of East Freisland to the same, Aug. 5, 1606, n.s.	247
178. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Aug. 16, 1606	- 248
[Not found.]
180. Monsieur Hastein to Monsieur Gunterode, Aug. 12, 1606	- 253
184. Mr. Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, Nov. 18, 1606, o.s.	- 264
[Not found.]
191. The Earl of Salisbury to Mr. Winwood, Dec. 5, 1606	- 277
193. The Count of East Freisland to the Earl of Salisbury, Jan. 6, 1606, n.s.	- 279
[“1607” in MS.]
201. His Majesty King James to the Emperor, Feb. 20, 1606	- 296
202. — to the King of Spain (the same date)	- ibid.
203. — to the Count of East Freisland (the same date)	- 297
204. The Earl of Salisbury to Mr. Winwood, Feb. 21, 1606	- ibid.
205. — to the same, April 2, 1607	- 298
207. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, April 12, 1607	301
210. The Earl of Salisbury to Mr. Winwood, April 20, 1607	- 305
213. — to the same, May 8, 1607	- 309
214. — to the same, May 17, 1607	- 310
216. — to the same, June 6, 1607	- 313
218. The Duke of Holstein to his Majesty King James, June 18, 1607, n.s.	- 316
[“n.s.” is inserted by Sawyer.]
224. His Majesty King James to the States, Aug. 5, 1607	- 328
225. — to Count Maurice (of the same date)	- ibid.
226. Instructions for Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, upon their going Ambassadors to Holland, to mediate the Peace between the King of Spain, the Archduke, and the States [no date]	- 329
233. Mr. Levinus Muncke to Sir Ralph Winwood, Oct. 17, 1607	350
234. An Abstract of the Debt from the States to the King of England	- 351
[There are three copies of this. One of them is headed, “The State of the Debt of the United Provinces, by way of estimation.” The other two have no headings. They are each endorsed “Abstract,” with the date “Dec. 1607.”]

	PAGE
244. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, Feb. 3, 1607 - - - - -	369
[The names of the addressees are supplied by Sawyer.]
245. — to the same, Feb. 7, 1607 - - - - -	374
246. — to the same, March 15, 1607 - - - - -	375
247. — to the same, March 20, 1607 - - - - -	376
248. The Earl of Salisbury to the same (of the same date) - -	378
254. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, May 1, 1608 -	392
[Addressees as above.]
255. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, May 4, 1608, o.s. - - - - -	394
[This is a draft headed "4 May, by Sir Tho. Gates," i.e. the bearer. "1608, o.s." is supplied by Sawyer.]
257. Sir Henry Neville to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, May 12, 1608 - - - - -	398
260. — to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, May 21, 1608 - - - - -	403
[Addressees as above.]
261. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, May 24, 1608	405
265. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, Brussels, June 10, 1608, o.s. - - - - -	410
266. Sir Henry Neville to the same, London, June 21, 1608 -	411
267. Mr. More to the same, London, June 25, 1608 - - - - -	412
272. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, July 26, 1608 - - - - -	421
273. — to the same, July 31, 1608 - - - - -	423
275. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, Aug. 7, 1608 - - - - -	427
[Addressees as above.]
276. — to the same, Sept. 2, 1608 - - - - -	429
278. — to the same, Oct. 8, 1608 - - - - -	433
281. — to the same, Oct. 27, 1608 - - - - -	442
282. Sir Ralph Winwood's Remonstrance in the Assembly of the States General concerning the Truce with Spain -	443
[There is no heading to this paper. It is endorsed, "Remonstrance à Messrs. du Conseil, 1608."]
283. Discours Pacifique sur l'Etat present des Provinces Unies du Pais Bas [no date] - - - - -	444
284. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, Nov. 11, 1608 - - - - -	450
285. His Majesty King James to the same, Nov. 26, 1608 - - -	451
[The last two lines are in the King's own hand. His Scotch spelling has not been preserved by Sawyer.]
286. An Abstract of Sir George Carew's Letter to the Earl of Salisbury - - - - -	ibid.
[There is no heading or date to this copy in MS.; it is endorsed, "Abstract of the letter of France concerning Sir Raphe Winwood."]

	PAGE
287. His Majesty King James to the States General, Dec. 2, 1608	453
288. Count Maurice to His Majesty King James, Dec. 12, 1608	454
289. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, Dec. 4, 1608	- - - - ibid.
[The names of the addressees are supplied by Sawyer.]
290. Raport du Sieur de Preaux	455
294. An Abstract of Sir George Carew's Letter to the Earl of Salisbury [no date]	- - - - 465
[Endorsed: Sir G. Carew to my Lord concerning his conference with the French King touching the Confessor as he passed by Paris.]
295. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, Dec. 23, 1608	- - - - 466
[Addressees as above.]
297. — to the same, Dec. 31, 1608	- - - - 469
[Addressees as above.]
301. — to the same, Feb. 4, 1608	- - - - 476
[Addressees as above.]
302. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, Brussels, Feb. 11, 1608, o.s.	- - - - 477
304. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, March 2, 1608	- - - - 481
[Addressees as above.]
307. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Lords of the Privy Council, March 16, 1608, o.s.	- - - - 488
308. — to the Earl of Salisbury (of the same date)	- - - - 490
309. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, March 20, 1608	- - - - 491

VOL. III.

1. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Antwerp, March 29, 1609, o.s.	- - - - 1
[No signatures in MS.]
2. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, April 5, 1609	- - - - 3
3. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Lords of the Privy Council, Antwerp, April 6, 1609, o.s.	- - - - ibid.
[No signatures in MS.]
4. — to the Earl of Salisbury (of the same date)	- - - - 5
[No signatures in MS.]
5. Sir Dudley Carlton to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, April 7, 1609	- - - - 6
9. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, April 10, 1609	- - - - 11
12. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Brussels, April 16, 1609, o.s.	- - - - 16

	PAGE
13. Mr. Levinus Muncke to the same, April 17, 1609 - - -	17
14. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, April 26, 1609, o.s. - - -	ibid.
[No signatures in MS.]
15. Copy of a Memorial relating to the Succession of Cleves and Juliers - - - - -	19
16. A Genealogical Table shewing the Elector of Brandenburg's Title to the Duchies of Cleves and Juliers - - -	21
17. Translatio Latina e Pactis Dotalibus D. Palatini Philippi [Ludovici] et Dominæ Annæ Juliæ Principis, 27 Sept. 1574 - - - - -	24
18. Renunciatio Illustrissimæ Principis Dom. Annæ Principis Juliæncis, &c. - - - - -	ibid.
19. Translatio Latina e Tabulis Dotalibus D. Mariæ Leonoræ Prussiæ Ducissæ, 14 Dec. 1572 - - - - -	25
[“Hambachii,” in MS.]
20. The Elector of Saxony's Claim to the Duchies of Cleves and Juliers - - - - -	26
23. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, April 29, 1609 - - - - -	35
24. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, May 4, 1609 - - -	ibid.
28. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, May 15, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	40
[No signature in MS.]
29. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, May 20, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	41
[No signatures in MS.]
31. The Treaty of Dortmund, May 31, 1609, n.s. - - -	43
33. Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, May 29 (26), 1609 - - - - -	45
[“26th” is correct.]
40. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Richard Spencer and Sir Ralph Winwood, June 13, 1609 - - - - -	52
[The names of the addressees are supplied by Sawyer.]
41. King James's Manifesto for settling the Affairs of Cleves and Juliers, July 15, 1609 - - - - -	53
[The King signs “Jaques R.” There is a seal at the top.]
44. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Ralph Winwood, Aug. 14, 1609	57
[The date is at the end in MS., viz.: “From the Courte at Basing, the — day of August 1609.” “14” is supplied by Sawyer.]
45. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Aug. 15, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	58
[No signature in MS.]
46. The French King's Instructions to the Sieur de Widemartre, Aug. 25, 1609 - - - - -	60
[The heading is Sawyer's. The date at the end is “de Juin,” not “d'Aoust,” and the year looks like “1605.”]

	PAGE
47. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Delft, Aug. 24, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	62
48. — to the same, Hague, Sept. 6, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	63
49. — to the same, Hague, Sept. 11, 1609 - - - - -	64
51. His Majesty King James to Sir Ralph Winwood, Sept. 15, 1609 - - - - -	69
52. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Sept. 18, 1609 - - - - -	70
53. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, Sept. 25, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
55. His Majesty King James to the Elector of Brandenburg, Oct. 4, 1609 - - - - -	74
56. — to the Elector Palatine (of the same date) - - - - -	ibid.
57. The Marquis of Brandenburg [and the Count Palatine] to Sir Ralph Winwood, 4 non. Oct. 1609 - - - - -	75
58. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, Oct. 4, 1609 - - - - -	ibid.
59. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Oct. 4, 1609 - - - - -	77
60. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Oct. 7, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	78
61. Mr. John More to Sir Ralph Winwood, Oct. 8, 1609 - - - - - [This letter is dated "London, 3 <sup>o</sup> 8 <sup>bris</sup> , 1609." A curious postscript is omitted by Sawyer. See extract, post. ]	80
62. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, Oct. 20, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	81
63. — to the same, Hague, Nov. 2, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	83
65. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Ralph Winwood, Nov. 14, 1609 - - - - -	85
66. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Nov. 17, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	87
68. — to the Lords of the Privy Council, Nov. 25, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	89
71. Monsieur Hotman to Sir Ralph Winwood, Dusseldorpe, Dec. 8, 1609 - - - - -	92
72. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Dec. 5, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	93
73. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Ralph Winwood, Dec. 6, 1609 - - - - -	95
74. The French King's Answer to the Memorial of the Prince of Anhalt, Dec. 21, 1609 - - - - -	96
78. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, Dec. 24, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	99
80. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Dec. 30, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	102
82. — to the same, Hague, Jan. 10, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	104
84. — to the same, Hague, Jan. 21, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	107
85. — to the same, Hague, Jan. 27, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	108
88. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Ralph Winwood, Feb. 8, 1609 - - - - -	111
89. Sir Ralph Winwood's Instructions upon his Embassy to Dusseldorpe (of the same date) - - - - -	112

90. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, Feb. 10, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	115
91. Mr. Chamberlaine to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, Feb. (Jan.) 13, 1609 - - - - - [“January” in MS.]	117
95. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, Feb. 20, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	120
98. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Ralph Winwood, March 3, 1609 - - - - -	126
99. Mr. Levinus Muncke to the same (of the same date) - - -	127
104. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, March 16, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	132
106. The Marquis of Brandenburg to Sir Ralph Winwood, 5 id. Martii, 1609-10 - - - - - [“1610” in MS.]	137
107. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, March 17, 1609 - - - - -	ibid.
108. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, March 20, 1609, o.s. - - - - -	138
109. — to the same, Hague, March 24, 1609, o.s. - - - - - [This draft is in a decayed state, and the last leaf, with the date (if any), is wanting. The date at the head is supplied by Sawyer, but he omits a paragraph at the end. See extract, post. ]	139
110. Mr. More to Sir Ralph Winwood (of the same date) - - - - - [Not found.]	141
111. Mr. Trumbull to the same, March 27, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	142
112. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, March 28, 1610 - - - - -	143
114. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, April 3, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	146
115. — to the same, Hague, April 6, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
116. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Ralph Winwood, April 7, 1610 - - - - -	147
117. Mr. Dickenson to the same, Dusseldorpe, April 16, 1610, o.s. - - - - - [Not found.]	148
118. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, April 22, 1610, o.s. - - - - - [No date in MS.]	ibid.
119. Copy of a Memorial presented to the Archduke Albert by the Constable, in favour of the Princess of Condé - - - - -	150
120. Copy of a Memorial presented by the Princess of Condé to the Archduke - - - - - [On the same sheet as the preceding.]	151
121. Proposition de l'Empereur à la Diète de Prague, May 2, 1610 - - - - -	ibid.
124. Mr. Chamberlaine to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, May 2, 1610 - - - - -	154
125. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, May 3, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	155
126. — to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	157

	PAGE
129. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Ralph Winwood, May (4) 14, 1610 - - - - -	161
["4th" in MS.]
130. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, May 14, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	164
131. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Ralph Winwood, May 18, 1610 - - - - -	165
132. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, May 19, 1610 - - - - -	167
133. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, May 20, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
["Hague" is inserted by Sawyer.]
134. The Prince of Condé to his Mother, Milan, May 31, 1610, n.s. - - - - -	169
139. Mr. Chamberlaine to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, May 24, 1610 - - - - -	174
140. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, May 28, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	176
142. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, June 2, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	177
["Hague" is inserted by Sawyer.]
143. Mr. Trumbull to Sir Ralph Winwood, Brussels, June 2, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	179
146. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, June 14, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	182
147. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, June 15, 1610 - - - - -	184
148. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Hague, June 15, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	185
149. Mr. Dickenson to Sir Ralph Winwood, Dusseldorp, June 20, 1610 (1612), o.s. - - - - -	187
["1612" in MS. At the end, as a P.S.: "Mareamus noster te perofficiose salutat."]
151. Responce du Roy et de la Royne de France au Duc de Deuxponts, July 9, 1610 - - - - -	190
153. Monsieur Barnevelt to Sir Ralph Winwood, July 26, 1610 - - - - -	192
154. Mr. Pory to the same, London, July 17, 1610 - - - - -	193
156. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, July 23, 1610 - - - - -	196
157. The Project of Alliance between the Protestant Princes of Germany - - - - -	197
158. Apostiles et Conditions adjoustéz aux Articles envoyéz de sa Majesté de la Grande Bretagne, touchant l'estroicte correspondance avec les Electeurs Princes et Estats - - - - -	199
159. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, Paris, July 24, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
160. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, London, July 25, 1610 - - - - -	200
162. Mr. Dickenson to the same, Hague, Aug. 4 [6], 1610, o.s. - - - - -	202
["Postridie nonas Augusti, 1610," in MS.]
164. — to the same, Hague, Aug. 11 [3], 1610, o.s. - - - - -	204
["3 <sup>o</sup> nonas Augusti, 1610," in MS.]

	PAGE
165. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Aug. 11, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
167. Monsieur Barnevelt to the same, Aug. 22, 1610, n.s. - - -	207
168. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, Aug. 15, 1610 - - -	ibid.
169. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Aug 18, 1610, o.s.	208
171. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Dusseldorpe, Aug. 22, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	210
172. — to Sir Thomas Bodley (of the same date) - - - - -	ibid.
173. — to Mr. Chamberlaine, Aug. 23, 1610, o.s. - - - - - [Not found.]	211
174. — to the Earl of Salisbury, Dusseldorpe, Aug. 27, 1610, o.s.	212
175. — to the same (of the same date) - - - - -	ibid.
176. Sir Dudley Carleton to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, Aug. 28, 1610 - - - - -	213
178. The Elector Palatine to the same, Sept. 7 (17), 1610, o.s. - - - [“17 <sup>me</sup> ” in MS.; “o.s.” is added by Sawyer.]	215
179. The Earl of Salisbury to Sir Ralph Winwood, Sept. 9, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	ibid.
180. Mr. Dickenson to the same, Hague, Sept. 11, 1610, o.s. - - - [“3 <sup>o</sup> idus 7 <sup>bris</sup> 1610,” in MS.]	216
182. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury, Sept. 16, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	219
183. An Extract of the Earl of Salisbury’s Letter to Monsieur Buinckhausen, Sept. 19, 1610 - - - - - [A few words omitted by Sawyer at the end. The date is, “De sa maison de Westminster, le 19. 7 <sup>br.</sup> ”]	220
184. His Majesty King James to the Elector Palatine, Sept. 20, 1610 - - - - -	221
185. — to the Duke of Wirtemberg (of the same date) - - - - -	ibid.
186. The Lords of the Privy Council to Sir Ralph Winwood, Sept. 28, 1610 - - - - -	222
187. — to the same, Sept. 30, 1610 - - - - -	224
188. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Oct. 6, 1610, o.s. - - -	225
190. The Prince of Anhalt to the same, Dusseldorpe, Oct. 8 (18), 1610, o.s. - - - - - [“18 <sup>me</sup> ” in MS.]	227
197. Mr. More to the same, London, Dec. 1, 1610 - - - - -	235
198. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, Dec. 12 (22), 1610, o.s. - - - - - [22 Dec., n.s., in MS. Several lines at the end are omitted; they refer to Winwood’s wife and children, including “little James.”]	236
199. The Lords of the Privy Council to the same, Dec. 12, 1610 - - -	238
200. Mr. More to the same, London, Dec. 13 (15), 1610 - - - - - [“15 th ” is correct. The postscript is omitted in Sawyer. See extract, post. ]	239
202. Mr. Dickenson to the same, Dusseldorpe, Dec. 20, 1610, o.s.	242

	PAGE
205. Double de la Responce du Roy de France au Duc de Saxe, [&c.] par le Retour de leurs Ambassadeurs, Janvier 8, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	248
[This title is taken from an endorsement.]
208. Mr. Dickenson to Sir Ralph Winwood, Dusseldorpe, Jan. 12, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	251
[“Postridie idus Januarii, 1610, sti. vet., raptim,” in MS.]
209. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Jan. 23, 1610, o.s.	253
210. ——— to the same, Paris, Feb. 7, 1610, o.s. - - - - -	254
211. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, Feb. 8, o.s., 1610 -	256
212. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, Venice, Feb. 15, 1610 - -	257
215. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Feb. 23, 1610 - -	261
217. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, March 1, 1610, o.s. -	263
224. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, April 3, 1611 - -	271
226. ——— to the same, May 27, 1611 - - - - -	274
229. Mr. More to the same, London, June 8, 1611 - - - -	279
230. ——— to the same, London, June 18, 1611 - - - -	281
[In the last line “must” should be “may.”]
234. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, July 17, 1611 - -	285
235. ——— to the same, July 25, 1611 - - - - -	287
238. ——— to the same, Sept. 5, 1611 - - - - -	290
239. ——— to the same, Sept. 18, 1611 - - - - -	292
240. Sir Ralph Winwood’s First Remonstrance to the States against Vorstius, 21 Sept. 1611 - - - - -	293
[Not found.]
241. His Majesty King James to Sir Ralph Winwood, Oct. 6, 1611 - - - - -	295
244. Dominicus Baudius, to the same, 7 kal. Nov. 1611 - -	298
245. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Nov. 5, 1611 - -	300
246. Mr. More to the same, London, Nov. 13, 1611 - - -	301
249. Sir Ralph Winwood’s Second Remonstrance against Vor- stius, 25 Nov. 1611 - - - - -	304
[Not found.]
251. Mr. More to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, Nov. 19 (29), 1611 - - - - -	308
[“23° Nov.” in MS.]
252. Sir Ralph Winwood’s Protestation in the Assembly of the States General against Vorstius, Dec. 9, 1611 - - -	309
[Not found.]
256. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, Paris, Dec. 19, 1611, o.s. - - - - -	313
257. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Dec. 29, 1611 - -	316
259. Mr. More to the same, London, Jan. 1, 1611 - - -	ibid.
260. The Earl of Salisbury to the same, Jan. 4, 1611 - -	320
261. Sir Dudley Carleton to Mr. Trumbull, Venice, Jan. 10, 1611, o.s. - - - - -	321

	PAGE
263. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Jan. 19, 1611, o.s.	323
267. Mr. More to Sir Ralph Winwood, London, Jan. 25, 1611 -	331
272. Mr. More to the same, London, Feb. 17, 1611 - - -	337
[Not found.]
273. His Majesty King James to the same, Feb. 18, 1611 - -	339
[This is entirely in the King's own hand. It has no date. There are two seals.]
276. Sir Ralph Winwood to the Earl of Salisbury [undated] -	342
279. Archbishop Abbot to Sir Ralph Winwood, March 12, 1611 -	346
282. Mr. More to the same, London, March 17, 1611 - - -	349
[A paragraph is omitted in Sawyer. See extract, post. ]
283. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, March 26, ibid.
1612, o.s. - - - - -
[“24th March 1611,” in MS.]
284. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, March 27, 1612, o.s.	351
289. Mr. Stafford to the same [May 16, 1612] - - - -	357
296. Sir Dudley Carleton to Mr. Trumbull, Venice, May 22,
1612, o.s. - - - - -	366
298. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, Paris, June 4,
1612, o.s. - - - - -	368
300. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, June 18, 1612 - -	372
301. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, June 22, 1612, o.s.	373
305. Mr. Dickenson to Sir Thomas Lake, Dusseldorpe, July 17,
1612, o.s. - - - - -	379
[No signature in MS. Endorsed in D.'s hand: Copy of my letter to Sir Thomas Lake.]
306. Sir Thomas Edmondes to Sir Ralph Winwood, Paris, July 22,
1612, o.s. - - - - -	380
307. Dominicus Baudius to the same, July 1, 1612 - -	381
309. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, Aug. 10, 1612 -	384
310. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, Aug. 13 (18), 1612, o.s. [“18th Aug.” in MS.] - - - - -	385
311. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, Aug. 14, 1612, o.s.	387
312. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Aug. 28, 1612, o.s.	388
314. ——— to the same, Paris, Sept. 21, 1612, o.s. - - -	395
317. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, Oct. 13, 1612, o.s. -	399
320. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Oct. 27, 1612, o.s.	404
321. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, Nov. 3, 1612 -	406
322. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Nov. 12, 1612, o.s.	408
325. ——— to the same, Paris, Nov. 30, 1612, o.s. - - -	413
329. ——— to the same, Paris, Dec. 30, 1612, o.s. - - -	418
330. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, Jan. 5, 1612, o.s. -	420
331. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, Jan. 9, 1612 - -	421
333. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Jan. 21, 1612, o.s.	424
335. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, Jan. 29, 1612 -	428

	PAGE
336. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, Feb. 3, 1612, o.s.	430
337. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, Feb. 10, 1612 - -	431
338. Sir Thomas Edmondcs to the same, Paris, Feb. 11, 1612, o.s.	433
339. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, Feb. 23, 1612 - -	434
340. Sir Thomas Edmondcs to the same, Paris, Feb. 25, 1612, o.s.	436
342. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, March 2, 1612, o.s. -	438
343. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, March 5, 1612, o.s.	440
344. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, March 10, 1612 -	441
345. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, March 19, 1612, o.s. -	442
346. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, March 26, 1613, o.s.	444
347. Sir Thomas Edmondcs to the same, Paris, April 7, 1613, o.s.	445
348. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, April 9, 1613, o.s.	446
349. Mr. Packer to the same, London, April 22, 1613 - -	447
[“London” is inserted by Sawyer. The original is dated “From Mr. More’s house.” It is signed “J. P.” and endorsed by Sawyer, “I take this to be Mr. Packer’s letter.”]
350. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, April 30, 1613, o.s.	448
351. Sir Thomas Edmondcs to the same, Paris, May 5, 1613, o.s.	450
352. Archbishop Abbot to the same, Lambeth, May 5, 1613 -	451
353. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, May 6, 1613 - -	452
354. Sir Thomas Edmondcs to the same, Paris, May 14, 1613, o.s.	455
355. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, May 20, 1613, o.s. -	456
356. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, May 21, 1613, o.s.	ibid.
357. Sir Thomas Edmondcs to the same, Paris, May 29, 1613, o.s.	457
358. Archbishop Abbot to the same, Lambeth, June 1, 1613 -	459
359. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, June 10, 1613 -	460
360. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, June 12, 1613, o.s. -	461
361. Sir Henry Neville to the same, June 18, 1613 - - -	462
362. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, June 21, 1613, o.s.	463
364. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, June 25, 1613, o.s. -	466
[A few words omitted.]
365. — to the same, Brussels, July 6, 1613, o.s. - - -	467
[“ $\frac{6}{16}$ ” in MS.]
366. Mr. Chamberlaine to the same, London, July 8, 1613 -	468
367. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, July 16, 1613, o.s.	469
369. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, July 23, 1613, o.s. -	472
370. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, July 30, 1613, o.s.	473
372. The Earl of Southampton to the same, Aug. 6, 1613 - -	475
[No year in MS. Endorsed by Sawyer, “1613 q.” There is a postscript in favour of Mr. Tubb, the bearer.]
376. Sir John Digby to the same, Madrid, Sept. 4, 1613, o.s. -	479
380. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, Sept. 20, 1613, o.s.	482
[“ $\frac{10}{20}$ ” in MS.]

	PAGE
381. Sir Thomas Edmondes to the same, Paris, Oct. 5, 1613, o.s.	483
382. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Padua, Oct. 15, 1613, o.s.	484
383. Mr. Trumbull to the same, Brussels, Oct. 15, 1613, o.s.	- 485
387. Sir Dudley Carleton to the same, Venice, Jan. 3, 1613, o.s.	- 490

---

TREATY of TROYES.

1564, April [1-]11.—Copy of the Treaty of peace between the Queen of England and the King of France.

Latin, 8 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Rymer, 15, 640.

CUTHBERT SCOTT.

1564,* Oct. 11, Louvain.—Latin verses, headed: “In obitum Reverendissimi in Christo patris Cuthberti Scotti, Cestrensis Episcopi, 8 Octobris Lovanii defuncti.” With an English translation “by the author.” The verses were written on the day of his burial, as above.

4 pp.

ROBERT TALBOT, Prebendary of Norwich.

1564.*—Latin verses relating to the health of the body, extracted from a book of his, by Dr. Porye, president of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, in 1552, and re-transcribed by R. B.(?) in 1564.

2 pp.

GERMANY.

1566,† April [11-]21, Augsburg.—Declaration by the Emperor Maximilian II. touching certain privileges acquired by William, Duke of Cleves, Juliers, &c., from the Emperor Charles V., in respect of the succession to his estates.

French, 5 pp., decayed.

DEALINGS of SCOTCHMEN with ENGLAND.

1572.‡—“A Memorial of ye hard fortouns of sik as within yis 40 zeires haithe priuellie or publicklye dealt with ye Estat of England, continuing to yis present zeir 1572.

“Archbald, Erle of Angus, 1534, fleeing in England, efter he had mariet Henrie ye 8[’s] sister, & attempted monie things for ther plesour againe his natiue realme, in the end fand sick ingratitude that, returning [back] to Scotland, he said he sould rather ly deid under a dyk in S[cotland] nor to seik refuge againe in England.

---

* In Vol. 11.

† This paper is arranged with the papers of 1609 in Vol. 6 of the Winwood Papers, which also contains other papers of 1572, &c., relating to the same matter, and printed by Sawyer. A “Genealogy,” explaining the right of the Elector of Brandenburg [in 1609?], is with these papers, but is not printed.

‡ In Vol. 11.

“James Hameltoun, Erll of Arran, Duk of Chattelarault, Gowernour, be means of Sir Raf Saidiller, entred in dealing with King Henrie the 8 for maring of zoung Quein Marie with Prince Edward of England, bot hou shoine pereceaved * the said Gowernour could not performe ye said mariage; the realme of Scotland wes reducet to great extremeties; first the toun of Edinbroughe wes brout be them, & syne a battaill at Mussilbroughe, 1547, quher ther wes be England mair Scottis blood sched nor ever wes at one tyme afor or efter.

“Mathew, Erle of Lenox, competitour to the said Gowernour, wes per[su]aditt be ane Thomas Bishop, a Scottis Englis man, to rin a cours with England, attempting mony things innaturalle agains his native realme & Souverane Lady for them, till at length he wes slaine at Stirling, anno 1571.

“James Haummeltoun, zoung Erle of Arran, being in France in ye gryte[st] honour & plaice y<sup>t</sup> ever any Scottis man wes, wes persuadit be [ane?] Thomas Rendolf to quyt al wpon many goulden promeisses, specialie of the mariage of the Queine; & comminge haime he send ane honorabill lega[ti]on to England to haif promeisses fulfillet, & find[ing] hime self scornit & frustrat, he fel in a deplorabill melan[choly], quherin to this hour he languisses most pitfullie.

“Normand Leslie, Mr. of Rothes, † [and] William Kirkady, Laird of Grange, with thair complices, after the murthour of David Beton, Cardinal, and fortifeing of the Castell of St. Andrews againes the Gowernour, war assisted be England, bot so insufficiently that in end thei war pullit out be the Frenche and Scottis army, and put in the galeyis, and the said Normand careit to France, whair he dyit miserably; and the said Laird of Grange, after mony services thairefter doon be him to England, and efter mony promesis maid to him be Sir Wm. Drury, dois remaine at this hour in the handes of his eunemys, having no other hoip bot of present death.

“About that same tyme of Normand Leslies distres, was apprehendit — — Melvill, Laird of Roth, and was executed by the Gowernour for practesing with England.

“The Lord Grey, trefiquing with England and receaving thair forces within his castell of Bruchtey, besyd Dundy, fand in end sic ingratitude that he left thair course, and rendrit him self to the said Gowernour, bot with sic incommodities that his hous shall ever feall the same.

“At the beginning of the congregation the Erllis of Murray, Mortoun, the Lord Ruthven, Wm. Metland of Ledingtowne, Secretary, with sundry others, did entre in contract of freindschip with England, with na bettir succes to sic of that nombre as be alredy depairtid; for the Erll of Murray, for thair pleasour, resisting his awin sister and sovaine, was murtherit at Lithgo anno 1570; the Lord Ruthven, fleing to England, dyit of displeasour at Newcastle.

“And the said Lard of Ledingtowne, whose hoill study was to have a suer freindschip betuix the tuo realmes, at leist a particuler faction in Scotland inclyning rether to England nor France, in end, reducet to extremitie, did find all his former service lost, and not so meikle kyndnes on thair part as aines to interced for him at the Erll of Mortons hands. 1572.”

Decayed.

TREATY of BLOIS.

1572-5.—Copy of the Treaty of Blois, 19 April 1572, between King Charles IX. of France and Queen Elizabeth of England, for mutual defence; with commissions, letters from the King to the Queen of 19 April 1572, and 4 May 1575, forms of oaths, &c., 1572-1575.

* Written over “persauit.”

† From this point the Memorial is in a different hand.

Latin and French, 32 pp., partly decayed. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed at large in Le Recueil des Traictées, in 4 vols. fol.

THE LOW COUNTRIES.

1578, April 9.—Copy of Agreements between the Prince of Orange, William of Nassau, the Dutch, the Zealanders, John Count of Friesland, and the Citizens of Embden, against Edzard and Enno, Counts of East Friesland, and their posterity, and the German Empire.

Latin, 7 pp.

QUEEN ELIZABETH TO MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

1581, June 27, Greenwich.—

“By the Queene.

“ELIZABETH R.

“Trusty & welbelouid we greete you well. Wheras our welbelouid seruant John Weekes, one of our ordinary yeomen of our garde, having a sonne in law of his namid Raph Winwood, now Scholler in that Colledge called Magdalen Colledge in our Vniuersitie of Oxford, is very desyrous to haue him fellow of that house, And for the better attayning thereunto, hath made humble suite vnto vs for our lettres vnto you in his behalf, We let you wete that considering his suite so reasonable, and that he is our servant, & one whom we haue cause to think very well of, both for his good seruice & honestie, and withall that his sonne (as we are otherways credibly infourmid) is in behaiour & conversation honest, in learning well aduanced, & of good disposition otherwise, we haue condescendid to the suite made vnto vs heerin. And therefore we earnestly require you, That at your next election, ye will choose the sayd Raph Winwood to the roome of a probationer of that house, And that afterward at the due tyme, ye see him placed in the roome of a fellow peaceably & quietly, with all such duties proffittes & allowances as any other being a fellow of that Colledge hath or ought to haue. Wherin as ye shall greatly pleasure our sayd servant, and much encourage the said Winwood to the following of the good course in studies which he hath already begon, So will we also take your readines to accomplish this our request in thankfull parte, the rather because we will take the same don at our request. Gyven vnder our Signet at our Manour of Grenwich, the xxvijth daye of June, 1582,* in the three and Twentieth yeere of our Raigne.

WINDEBANK. †

“To our trustie and welbeloued the President and Fellowes of Magdalen Colledge in our Vniuersitie of Oxford.”

ENGLAND and THE UNITED PROVINCES.

1585, ‡ Sept. 4.—Agreement by the Commissioners of Queen Elizabeth with those of Holland, Zealand, and the other United Provinces, that the Queen shall “give the aid” of 5000 foot and 1000 horse, besides the presidiary troops in Brile, Flissinge, and Ramekens; &c.

Copy, Latin, 3 pp., decayed.

* So, apparently, but should be 1581.

† Thomas Windebank.

‡ In Vol. 11.

[MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.]

1587, July 30.—“Be yt knowen, &c., that we whose names are heere subscribed have geeven our voyces and consents vnto Samuel Foxe, M<sup>r</sup> of artes, for a Physitians place now voyde by the resignation of M<sup>r</sup> Boughton, and vnto Raphe Wynwood for a Lawe place now voyde by the departure of M<sup>r</sup> Doctor Day: in witnes whereof we have subscribed our names, Anno 1587, 30 Julij.

LAUR. HUMFREY, Pres.

THOMAS DROPE, Vicepres.

CHR. WADE.

RICHARD CULLE[N].

RAPH ATKINSONE, Theol. De.

JOH: FARRAR.

I, Edward Gelybrand, give my voice and consent unto y<sup>e</sup> abouewritten M<sup>r</sup> Fox and M<sup>r</sup> Winwood for y<sup>e</sup> Phisitian and Law place, if by y<sup>e</sup> Statute I haue a necessary voice therunto.

EDWARD GELYBRAND.

RIC: BOUGHTON, Deca: artium.”

ENGLAND and FRANCE.

1587-1596.†—Account of “disbursements for the transport of soldiers into France;” and also for ships at Brest.

French, 3 pp.

[SIR] JOHN NORRIS.

[1590.]—Statement of accounts between the late General John Noureys (Norris) and the States of Holland, of moneys due for the payment of eleven companies of foot and horse, from 1 Aug. 1581 to 1 April 1582; apparently drawn up in 1590, or later. The expedition to Portugal, John Williams, and Captain John Pryce are mentioned.

French, 2 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Not in Rymer.

JO. RAINOLDUS to ALBERICUS GENTILIS.

1593, July 10.—A long letter on theological and classical subjects. Gentilis is addressed as “jurisprudentiæ professori Regio.”

Latin, 3 pp.

GEORGE ELLIS to the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL OF ENGLAND.*

1594, March 4.—Understands that Anthony Nixon has made offer of some service to his Lordship. “I think that he meaneth not to do any of that part any hurt or prejudice, not by any direct means, for he hath greatly deluded this bearer, and put him to extreme charges; and when he could defer the service no longer, he left Mr. Spenser and went away with his horse, and would not be heard of till Mr. Spenser did acquaint me how the case stood. . . . He is upon a journey, messenger like, with a skuchin (scutcheon) on his breast, to apprehend by counterfeit warrant her Majesty's loving subjects, thereby to fit himself with money, and then to pass beyond the seas, and there is some other in his company. He hath been very ymportant (importunate) to have me ride with him, and if your Honour please to command or give me leave to go with him, I will appoint some place where this bearer shall by your Lo[rds]hip's warrant apprehend us, and then he may be called to account for his great abuses."

* Charles Lord Howard of Effingham.

PASSPORT by the EARL OF ESSEX and LORD HOWARD.

1594, June —.—“Whereas this bearer, ——— Winwood, master of Arts in the University of Oxford, having a desire and purpose to travel for the space of some years beyond the seas (to the end that by the increase of his experience in the world, and learning of languages, he may return the more able to do service in his own country), for his better warrant and assurance of his departure and absence in those parts without offence, hath craved this testimony at our hands; These are to make known that he goeth hence with our knowledge and good liking in lawful and orderly sort, and withall to will and require all persons, to whom these shall be shewed, quietly to suffer him to pass from place to place to the port which he shall find most convenient for his passage, and there to embark himself with such necessary provisions as he shall make, to serve him in his travel. For the which this shall be both to him and them a sufficient warrant. Dated at the Court at Thebalds, the — of June 1594.

“ESSEX. C. HOWARD.

“To all her Majesty's officers, ministers, and loving subjects to whom these may appertain, and to every of them.”

SCOTLAND and SPAIN.

1596, May and June.—“Summary of the memorials which John Ogleby, a Scotch baron, sent by the King of Scotland, [delivered] to his Catholic Majesty, in favour of a league between the two Kings, and [of] that which John Cecil, an English priest, on the part of the Catholic Earls and other Lords of Scotland, exhibited to the contrary, in the city of Toledo, in the months of May and June 1596.”

*Spanish, 12 pp., mutilated.**

CAPT. JOHN CHAMBERLAIN'S COMPANY.

1598, † May —, n.s.—“Memoires des fraudes troues en la Role de la Reueüe prins ce — iour de Maye 1598, stilo novo, de la Companie du Capt. Jhon Chamberlainie, pur billetes en le (sic) ville de Dordreth, etc.”

Under the head of “Nomes presentes et Billetes que (sic) ne sont pas notes,” &c., are 45 names. Under the head of “Nomes non cogneues et fort suspecttes,” are 9 names.

* There is a French as well as two Spanish versions of this paper among the State Papers, Scotland, Elizabeth, Vol. 59, Nos. 80—82.

† In Vol. 11.

THE EARL of ESSEX.

1598, July.—Paper containing copies of (1) a letter from Lord Keeper Egerton to the Earl of Essex, dated 18 July 1598; and (2) “the Earl Marshal’s answer to the Lord Keeper’s letter,” 19 July 1598.

3 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Both these letters are in print in the Cabalas.

ENGLAND and the NETHERLANDS.

1598, Aug. 16.—Memorandum of some points proposed on the part of her Majesty to the Deputies of the United Provinces, who promised to report them to the States General.

These relate to the number of soldiers to be maintained by her Majesty in the cautionary towns, under the Contract of 1585; the numbers of ships and troops to be furnished by the States General in case of an invasion of England by the King of Spain or his adherents; the [English] governors of the cautionary towns; and the proposal for her Majesty to send an army of 10,000 foot and 2,000 horse to Flanders.

As to the invasion of England, the Queen wishes the article to be extended to all persons who may attempt it, under whatever pretence; and to all her dominions, especially Ireland, where it is believed the King of Spain may take advantage of the present disturbances to attack her.

By order of the Privy Council.—RO. CECYLL.

Copy, French, 2 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Not in Rymer.

[ENGLAND and FRANCE.]

1598[–9], Feb. 26.—“Answers to the French Articles.” They relate to the protection of subjects and merchants, the transport of arms and provisions, the forbidding of the carriage of arms and munitions to the assistance of the Spanish King, letters of reprisal, the means of distinguishing the Queen’s ships from those of private persons, the appointment of commissioners in both countries to hear causes and give judgments, &c.

2 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Not in Rymer.

HAMBURGH.

1599, June 24, Greenwich.—Reply given by a Committee of the Privy Council to the Ambassadors (oratoribus) of Hamburgh, at the request of the Governor of the Merchants Adventurers of England, in respect of their demand for the restitution of wheat sent by them to Spain, and intercepted at sea.

Latin, 7 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Not in Rymer.

ENGLISH WOOLLEN MANUFACTURES.

1599, [June 25–] July 5.—The information of the Drapers of Paris against such manufactures of Wool as are brought out of England.

This paper also refers to the serges of Florence, Milan, &c. At the end are the following lists:—

English merchandises imported into France.

Woollen draperies.

Tin.

Lead.

Herrings (haren).

French merchandises exported.

Wines, in great abundance.

Woad.

Linen cloths, canvas, and buckrams.

Paper.

Prunes.

Lyons thread.

Tamine stuffs (estamines).

Mill-stones.

Playing-cards.

Cards for carding wool.

Oils of Provence.

Almonds.

Many drugs for the apothecaries.

Salt.

Turpentine.

Honey.

Feathers.

Rosin.

Incense.

French, 3 pp. There is also a copy of this paper, made about 1700.

H[ENRY] S[AVILE] to SIR HENRY NEVILL, Ambassador in France.

1599, * July 18, "Court."—(End of a letter, badly written.) "The other 9 parts he discovered, and commanded to serve as pioneers. 3 captains, as I hear, received their trial at Dublin, and very hardly scaped. Sir H. Harrington, being put likewise in prison, because he is of the Council there, is to be sent over hither to receive his trial. I hope we shall be more merciful here, for his Lordship's [Essex] was antiquus rigor, cui jam pares non sumus; yet God's blessing on his heart for [his] labour. Knights dubbed by my Lord, about a dozen. The new Earl of Kildare (for so Mr. Garrett now taketh his place), the Lord Gray, the Lord Morley's † heir, Sir Edw. Carye's eldest son, Mr. Vernon, my Lord[']s] cousin, Carew[,] Reynell, Mr. Maners, &c.; not Sir H. Cuff, that I know. His Lordship is totus in his northern voyage, which he meaneth forthwith to undertake, and as I hear sent Sir Coniers(?) Clifford with 3M. (3,000) by sea to come upon their back. God send them all good speed, for herein will lie a great crisis of the war."

[P.S.] Commendations to my Lady [Nevill], and others of the family (named).

Holograph, 1 p. Seal. Endorsed [by Winwood?]: From H. Savil in my cause to my Lord.

HENRY SAVILE to MR. WINWOOD.

1599, † Oct. 26, Westminster.—Touching the conveyance of lands by Savile to Winwood, and payments for the same. Winwood's brother is mentioned; also Mr. Every, Mr. Lambart, and Mr. Ketterich.

Holograph, 1 p. Seal.

FRANCE.

1599, Dec. [7-]17, Friday, Paris.—Copy of the sentence of nullity and dissolution of the marriage between Henry IV., King of France, and Queen Margaret of Valois, pronounced by the Papal judges.

Latin, 4 pp.; endorsed in Italian.

* Or 1597?

† "Morley's" is underlined, and "or Montegle, or non so che," is written over.

‡ This looks more like "1577" in the original, which is so endorsed in an old hand; but it is endorsed "1599" by Sawyer.

[THE EARL of TYRONE.]

1599.—Paper endorsed, “Tyronn’s propositions, 1599.” This is a brief summary of 22 articles, as follows :—

1. That the Catholic religion be openly preached [in Ireland].
2. That the Church be governed by the Pope.
3. That cathedral churches, &c. be restored.
4. That Irish priests, prisoners, be released.
5. That they may pass and repass the seas.
6. That no Englishmen be churchmen in Ireland.
7. An University erected upon the Crown lands.
8. The Governor at least an Earl, and called Viceroy.
9. The Lord Chan[cellor], Treasur[er], Council of State, Justices of Law, Queen’s Attorney, Queen’s Serjeant, &c. [to] be Irishmen.
10. That all principal governments of Ireland, as Connaught, Munster, &c. be [held by] Irish noblemen.
11. Master of Ordnance an Irishman, and half the soldiers.
12. No Irishmen shall lose his (sic) lands for the fault of their ancestors.
13. No Irishman ward; the living during the minority to the younger brother or sister.
14. No children hostages.
15. All statutes prejudicing the preferment of Irishmen in England or Ireland repealed.
16. The Queen nor her successors shall enforce no Irishmen to serve her.
17. O’Neale, O’Donel, Desmond, and the partakers, such lands as they enjoyed 200 years ago.
18. All Irishmen freely traffic as Englishmen in England.
19. All Irishmen travel freely.
20. Use all manner of merchandises wheresoever.
21. Use all manner of trades.
22. Build all manner of ships, and furnish them with artillery.

PHILIP II., KING of SPAIN.

1599.—“Aulcuns secrets du Roy d’Espagne Philippe deuxiesme, delaisés a son cher fils Philippe 3<sup>e</sup> de ce nom, contenant comme il se doit regler apres la mort de son père. Mis en lumière par un serviteur du S<sup>r</sup> Christofle de Mora, Garde Joyaux du Roy d’Espagne, nommé Roderigo d’A., et a present traduit de l’Espagnol par P.A.P., anno 1599.”

French, 4 pp.

The JESUITS in FRANCE.

[c. 1600?].—An order of a Court held in Paris, preliminary to the hearing of a cause between the Provincial and Company [of the Jesuits] and the School of Sorbonne, touching the instruction of youths in Paris.

French, 1 p. Endorsed: S. Sauveur.

[c. 1600?]*—“Substance de l’arrest prononcé Jeudy 22<sup>e</sup> Decembre en la grand[e] Chambre du Parlement par Mr. le premier President.

“La cause appointée au Conseil, dependant (sic) defence faict aux Jesuites d’enseigner publiquement ne couvertement eulx ne personnes appostées par eux, et respondront sur les quatre points qui leur sont objectez par la signature propre de leur General, et de tout leur ordre.

“ Ces quatre points sont—

“ S'ils croyent que le Pape est par dessus le Concile.

“ Sy le Pape a pouvoir de deposer le Roy Tres-chrestien.

“ Sy le Clergé est exempt de la puissance temporelle du Roy Tres-chrestien.

“ Sy on n'est point obligé de reveler les confessions qui concernent le Roy et l'Estat.”

ENGLISH MERCHANTS in FRANCE.

1600,* Feb. [13–] 23, in Parliament.—Extract from the Registers of Parliament [of Paris?], touching a suit between John Hazart the younger and Robert Hardiee (?), English merchants, appellants from a sentence given by the Lieutenant of the Admiralty “au siege de la Table de Marke,” 30 Aug. 1598, the Ambassador of the Queen of England intervening, of the one part, and Urban Bonhier, Goyer Bertinaud, Baptiste Mesnard, and Jehan le Court, “inthemez,” of the other part. The Ambassador asked for the observance of the treaties. The other side stated that the judge of La Rochelle had declared the barque la Roziere to be good prize, but the appellants claimed it as belonging to them and not to Spaniards. They had however failed to appeal till 3½ (sic) years had passed. The Court enjoined the people of Rochelle to observe the treaties, and not to offend the subjects of the Queen of England.

French.

The MARQUISATE of SALUZZO.

1600, Feb. [17–] 27, Paris.—Abridgment of the Treaty between the King [of France] and the Duke of Savoy concerning the Marquisate of Saluces.

French, 2 pp.

[1600?].*—Statement made on the part of the King of France to the Pope touching his claims to the Marquisate of Saluzzo, in dispute between him and the Duke of Savoy; the Pope having been constituted arbitrator by the Treaty of Vervins, 2 May 1598. Reference is made to a declaration by the King, dated 26 March 1599.

Copy, Italian, 5 pp., decayed.

ENGLAND and FRANCE.

[1600,] 42 Eliz., May 10, Palace of Greenwich.—Commission by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Henry Neville, John Herbert, Robert Beale, and Thomas Edmunds, “for the Treaty of Boulogne.”

Latin, 4 pp.

CHAMBERY.

1600, Aug. [11–]21, Army near Chambery.—Articles granted by the King of France on the surrender of Chambery.

Italian, translated from the French, 8 pp. Endorsed: Treaty of Chambery.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] to MR. WINWOOD, Ambassador.

1600, [Aug. 31–Sept.] 10, . . claucaeye.—“Jay receu vostre lettre et ven ce que me mandiez touchant les affaires de la Reyne, lesquelles ont le succes que Jen ap tousiours esperé, nayant jamais creu que le traicté deust tenir, veu son commencement. Cependant Je suis extremement aysé de ce que mescriuez, Monsr. le Comte dexcez [d'Essex] estre hors de peyne en sa maison. Je souhaitterois bien que il fut remis en tous ses estatz et dignitez, affin que en l'exercice diceux il peust randre a la Reyne le service que desirent tous ses bons seruiteurs et les amis dud. S<sup>r</sup> Comte. Je vous prie de mescrire a toutes occasions, me mandant toutes nouvelles, et vous assure mon amitye vous estre entierement acquise" (&c.).

* In Vol. 11,

MR. BEALE and MR. EDMONDS to ——— RICHARDOT.

1600, Oct. —, Richmond.—Have shown his letter of the 15th inst. to her Majesty, in order to enlighten her as to the state in which they left the treaty. Are charged to express surprise at the want of information touching his intentions, and a suspicion that there is a change of opinion and affection. Her Majesty wishes him to know that the United Provinces are firmly resolved not to listen to peace, as they have again protested to her by their agent. If the King of Spain and their Highnesses [the Archdukes] are determined not to treat with her Majesty alone, there is an end to the treaty. Submit proposals for continuing the negociations.
Copy, French, 2 pp.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to SIR HENRY NEVILLE, Ambassador leiger in France.

1600, Dec. 21, Whitehall.—Enclose a letter from the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and earnestly request him to solicit the King of France in the matter. Think the King will much mislike this practice to intercept and prevent the payment of the money, and that in regard of his amity with her Majesty he will give order for right to be done.

Nine signatures.

HOLLAND and SPAIN.

1600.*—Report sent to Mr. Edmonds of the encounter between the ships of Holland and Spain, off Dover.

French, 4 pp.

FRANCE and HOLLAND.

[c. 1600.] †—An address or speech by the French Ambassador to [the States General], referring to their letters of 15 May 1600, in reply to proposals made by the late M. de Malefont (?), then Ambassador from the King of France. He reviews the relations existing between the two countries in the 16th century, &c.

French, 4 pp., closely written.

SIR HENRY NEVILL to MR. RAFE WINWOOD, at Paris.

1600 [-1], March 5, my Lord Admiral's house at Chelsey, "where I am in a very honorable prison."—Supposes Winwood will have heard of his misfortune. ‡ Will be unable to requite his pains, faith, and love, but wishes he may find other friends.

* Note by Sawyer: "This date is certainly wrong. V. the papers temp. Jacobi R., and after the peace." See paper of 1 October 1605.

† In Vol. 11.

‡ He had been arrested for complicity with the Earl of Essex.

“Your letter by Simons I received upon my way at Rochester. Since that, I have been in trouble, and heard nothing. But I am commanded by Mr. Secretary [Cecil] to write unto you to continue your charge, till her Majesty take some other order for the supplying of the place I held there.”

Is licensed to dissolve his family there. Desires that an account be taken both of his steward and Richard Hawthorne, and that the butcher and rôtisseur be paid. Stallin to be paid 100 crowns for wages. Some of his stuff is to be sold; part had been sent to England with Hammon; the rest Winwood may have. The provisions of spice, sugar, grocery-ware, wine, lights, and such like may be sold, “and so the house discharged and my people with the stuff sent by water to Rouen, and from thence the directest way for England.” From Rouen it may be conveyed overland to Deepe, and there shipped for Dover in some safe passage, “because there is matter of charge of the Queen’s plate and mine own, among it.”

Various other directions, in which Mr. Willaston, young H. Savile, Mr. Bashe, and mine host of Orleans are mentioned.

Holograph.

SIR HENRY NEVILL to MR. RAFE WINWOOD, her Majesty’s Agent in the French Court.

1601, April 3, Chelsey.—Mr. Packer has written to Winwood to satisfy himself for his entertainment out of Nevill’s money there. Has order from Mr. Secretary to make him a further advance, and gives particulars of accounts between them.

Holograph.

POPE CLEMENT VIII. to MASTER GEO. BLACKWELL.

1601, Aug. [7-] 17, Rome.—Copy of the Pope’s letter to Master George Blackwell, Notary and Archpriest, and to the other priests and clerks and Catholic people of England, touching the appointment of an Archpriest of that kingdom, and the dissension caused thereby.

Latin, 8 pp.

RALPH WINWOOD to [SIR ROBERT CECIL].

1601, Dec. 27.—Monsieur le Conestable recommends two merchants who are parties to a cause in the Admiralty of England, relating to certain Spanish wool, which was landed for safety in England. The King has written to his Ambassador, and the Constable to the Lord Admiral, on the subject.

Draft, decayed.

PURY OGLEBY to the KING OF SCOTS.

1601.—“That coming out of Dunfermling to Edenbourg to have satisfied your desire, and finding myself pursued and searched by the magistrates and others in your name, I could do no less than eschew the first fury, and appeal with the Macedonian soldier à Philippo male consulto ad bene consultum, whereof I crave your Majesty’s pardon. . . . I hope that your Majesty will use my poor wife and bairns according to your wonted clemency. . . . As for that your Majesty would lay against me, surely I never had nor used any commission of your Majesty’s to any foreign prince in my life, neither in Flanders, Italy, nor Spain, notwithstanding all your intelligence to the contrary. . . . If my Lord Simpell pass to Spain with your Majesty's commission, his instructions being the same heads wherein I was there to have dealt, what satisfaction can my warding be to England, who insists not any way against me, finding me innocent of all such calumnies at my being in London?" . . . Seeks only to save his life, &c.

Begins abruptly, as above. Endorsed by Sawyer : A bundle of letters to King James the First.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [the AGENT IN THE NETHERLANDS].

1601[-2], Jan. 26, Court at Whitehall.—A Statute was passed in the last Parliament to reform the great abuses committed in the false making of Cloth, to the damage of traders, prescribing the length, breadth, and weight thereof. The merchants had been wont to obtain recompense upon certificates of such deceits, a method likewise practised between English merchants and the Low Countries. That "order" is now abolished, and the person addressed is to deal with the States that the Queen's subjects may not be forced to satisfy any damages upon pretence of certificates.

Copy.

SIR HENRY SAVILE to MR. WINWOOD.

1601[-2], Feb. 2, Westminster.—Sends a letter for M. Casaubon. Only one volume is proposed to be printed at Paris this year, containing the Commentaries on Genesis, the Psalms, and Esay. Institutes comparisons between copies in London and others in Paris libraries, and asks various questions about them, some to be referred to M. Casaubon and M. Pithou. Also asks for explanations concerning nine MSS. entitled Audriantes, referred to in M. Casaubon's catalogue. English copies of some have been printed by Dr. Harmar in London. Wishes for some particulars of three other volumes, called Margaritæ. Must know from the Vatican and the Library of Vienna whether there is any commentary by Chrysostom on any more Psalms than can be had here and in Paris. Names several foreigners from whom the information may be obtained. Giorgi, keeper of the library at Venice, is a great acquaintance of the writer's brother Thomas. Refers to a catalogue "of Constantinople." Sends catalogues of "our books here."

Mostly holograph.

SIR ROBERT CECIL to MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Agent with the French King.

1601[-2], Feb. 27, lodging near the Savoy.—Sir Thomas Parry is to repair thither [to Paris] very shortly, to be resident there as her Majesty's Ambassador. He is sending over the bearer, his servant, to make provision of a house and other necessaries. Procure a free passport from the King or his Council for all utensils.

SIR HENRY SAVILE to [MR. WINWOOD].

1601-2, March 7, Westminster.—Sent the letter to Giorgi, at Venice, through certain channels. Has written another letter to the same, to be sent with Mr Willowby, who must be the writer's agent for Rome also, as Bressius has returned into France. Has the catalogue of Augusta [Augsburg], and one of Constantinople. Refers to Casaubon's catalogue. Had first resolved to print his work in London, Norton having undertaken to bring some of the best [Greek] letters from Paris, but the only workman in all London for Greek, one Bellyfant, died. Refused Franckfort, which Norton then offered, their paper being ill, their correctors perchance unlearned, &c. "We" were thus driven to Paris, whither Norton will go himself, with his associates. If this first volume be unsatisfactory, we will advise anew of the next. Is beholden to President Tou and Casaubon.

Holograph.

R[ALPH] W[INWOOD] to ——— ("Sir").

[1602,] April 1, Paris.—In favour of a noble gentleman named Pietro Guicciardini, born in Florence, and subject to that Duke. He is going to England, to present his service to her Majesty, to whom he is recommended by this King, having spent much time in France.

*Copy, decayed.**

MR. SECRETARY [CECIL] to MR. GILPIN.†

1602, April 28.—"Her Majesty, considering the importance of the States' design, is contented to levy for them 3000 of her subjects, presently to be done by her own commission within England; and besides to suffer the States by their own officers to take up as many voluntaries in this kingdom as shall offer themselves freely disposed to their service." She resents the non-execution of the late accord, only one payment having yet been made; but in hope that they will add a fleet to the English fleet off the coast of Spain, she is pleased to remit 60,000*l.* sterling, being two whole yearly payments, upon these conditions.

1. The troops now to be levied shall only be employed in freeing the town of Ostend, whereby her Majesty's interest may be better served than heretofore, when the war has been made in remote places, contrary to her expectation.

2. If the States gain any place of importance, it shall be in her Majesty's election to receive the same in exchange for any of the cautionary towns which she now holds.

3. If the joint fleets on the coast of Spain light upon any prizes or booty, by sea or land, the States' share, to the sum of 30,000*l.*, shall remain in her Majesty's hands in lieu of one yearly payment of that amount, &c. The States shall, on 26 March 1603, make the fifth payment of 30,000*l.* without any delay; the total payments agreed upon being 400,000*l.*

Her Majesty finds fault with their backwardness in setting forth their ships to the southward; they are not yet all arrived at the Downs. She requires something binding upon them, in writing, as their letters contain mere generalities.

ENGLAND and FRANCE.

1602, [April?] London. —Agreement for the suspension and prorogation of the conference between the commissaries of the Queen of England and the King of France, touching the depredations committed by the subjects of those countries, freedom of navigation, &c. The commissaries, after long consultations, find it better to refer the matters in dispute to their sovereigns, for adjustment.

Copy, Latin, 3 pp.

* On the back there is a similar letter to Cecil, printed in Sawyer, I., 402.

† George Gilpin, Agent in the Netherlands. (Stowe MSS., Edmondess Papers.)

SIR ROBERT CECIL to MR. RALPH WINWOOD.

1602, May 14, Court at Greenwich.—Was sorry the bearer returned hither, expecting some service at his hands in recompense of nearly 300 crowns which he has had already, to little purpose. Considering the means he has to do service, has admitted his excuses, and will try him again in those parts where he was used before.

SIR HENRY SAVILE to MR. RALPH WINWOOD, at Paris.

1602, Aug. 1, Eaton.—As the Ambassador [to France] is in good earnest upon his journey, is anxious for some final order to be taken before Winwood's coming away in his (the writer's) bookish affairs. Refers to Messrs. Pitthou, Casaubon, Perrott, Thou, and Boisis. Transcripts are to be made of portions of certain MSS. wanting in "our books." Chrysostom's Commentaries on certain Psalms are specified. Comparison is made of the charges of Italian, French, and English copyists. John Norton will pay all. Chrysostom's Commentaries on other Psalms are to be procured through the French Ambassador at Rome, if possible. Has heard from Augsburg that Giorgi, keeper of the library at Venice, is dead. The Venetian Ambassador [in Paris] may be applied to for the titles of Chrysostom's Homilies in the Signory's libraries. Wishes Winwood to bring with him certain books. After all, the printing will be done in London.

P.S.—John Norton is not going to Paris.

Holograph. Seal.

RIC. [BISHOP OF] LONDON to MR. WINWOOD.

1602, Sept. 17, Fulham.—The bearer, Jasper Yardly, a gentleman that is desirous to see Paris, has attended upon the writer about two years. John Norton has taken course for money to be delivered to Winwood for the books. If more of them be sent, they shall be uttered at the former prices. Is informed that Parsons has set out a little treatise against Dr. Bagshaw and Mr. Benet. Prays him to send it, if possible. "It is marvelled here by such priests as have recourse unto me, that their brethren in Paris do not write oftener unto them, concerning their affairs at Rome. Many contrary rumours are here spread, all of them against the secular priests, which maketh them more desirous to hear from thence. Dr. Bagshaw promised some (sic) to procure and send over divers memorials of the contention in the Roman College since the erection of it; but they say he is dull that way. I pray you procure amongst them what you can of those affairs."

Portion of seal.

POPE CLEMENT VIII. to MASTER GEORGE BLACKWELL, Archpriest of England.

1602, [Sept. 25–] Oct. 5, Rome.—"Copy of the Bull issued in the controversy between the Jesuits and the secular priests."

Latin, 4 pp.

WILLIAM WILLARSTON to [MR. WINWOOD].

1602, Sept. 26, Rouen.—Has received his letter and the passport, but the word Diep is superfluous. Is contented to learn that her Majesty is satisfied with the course taken by "my Lord." Trusts Draper's accusation will be of small weight. Sent Richard Bogan about this matter. Refers to money demanded by the person addressed; Mr. Cecil; the young gentleman ; the man that goeth to Brussels ; letters to Antwerp to be directed to Jan de Bruynne van Aelst, and to Calais to Francis Vandertombe ; letters to Mons. Belleville ; his (the writer's) host, Robert Buquet ; Sr. David Chambrelan, of Rouen ; De la Croix, a merchant there ; Mathien d'Olmes, the principal merchant in Bayon ; our merchants at Caen, put in fear by a letter of "mart" (sic) obtained by Simon Vicent, merchant of that town ; money to be sent to the writer by Mr. Moore ; Mr. Othwel Smith, of London.

SIR HENRY SAVILE TO MR. WINWOOD.

1602. Oct. 1, Court at Otelandes.—Refers to commentaries on certain Psalms, translated into Latin by Jacobus Billius, Abbot of St. Michael in Eremo. Asks for further inquiry to be made in Paris for Chrysostom's commentary on the 118th Psalm. To the Romish commission let his commentary on the 12th Psalm be added. Refers to M. Casaubon, M. Pitou, M. Perott, M. Bossize, &c. ; and to M. de Thou's book upon the Acts. "I wish in very good earnest your return with all speed ; a fit man is sought out to be employed in the Low Countries, and yourself already here in speech for that service, which I think to be very convenient for you ; and therefore sleep not there."

Holograph. Seal.

MRS. JAEI KILLIGREW TO MR. WINWOOD.

1602, Oct. 14, Cornhill, near the Exchange.—Thanks for favours to herself and others. Has received certain moneys, and sends an acquittance to her uncle. Mentions Mons. de Neville,* her mother, and her husband.

Holograph, French. Seal.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] TO MR. WINWOOD.

[1602,] Oct. [18-]28, Turenne.—Is glad to hear of the continuation of the Queen's health, and that she is more and more bent on the increase of the true religion, especially at this time, when so many causes tend to diminish it, &c.

Holograph, French.

[THE DUKE DE BOUILLON] TO THE KING [OF FRANCE].

1602, Nov. [12-]22, Turenne.—Touching the conspiracies of the late M. de Biron, and the writer's refusal to attend the King on being summoned, &c.

Two copies (one modern), French. 3 pp. each. Endorsed by Sawyer : Printed in Mathieu's Cronologie Septenaire, 323b, 324.

[THE DUKE DE TREMOUILLE] TO THE KING [OF FRANCE].

No date.—Relative to the same matters.

Copy, French, 1 p. Endorsed : Coppie et [du ?] project envoyé pour estre escript au Roy.

SIR HENRY SAVILE TO [MR. WINWOOD].

1602, Nov. 25, London.—Refers to a commentary on the 118th Psalm, and transcripts which Winwood is to bring over. Hears nothing of Mr. Willowby, Winwood's Paduan acquaintance. Certain Psalms [commentaries] are to be transcribed at Rome.

* See p. 38 ?

Holograph.

——— to ——— (Messieurs).

1602, [Nov. 26–] Dec. 6, Castres.—The writers were much surprised at the charges made against the Duke de Bouillon, but pleased with his procedure in submitting himself to the judgment of the Chamber of "this province," as magistrates capable of judging causes touching "all those of the religion," under the Edict [of Nantes], in the terms of which they desire always to live, &c.

Copy, French, 1 p.

——— to MESSRS. DE ST. GERMAIN and DE BORDES, Deputies for the Churches of France.

1602, Dec. [5–]15.—Touching religious affairs in France, and referring to M. le Mareschal d'Ornano, M. le Mareschal de Bouillon, &c. The writers subscribe "in the name of the churches of Lower Guienne."

Copy, French, 2 pp.

The DUKE DE BOUILLON.

1602, Dec. [6–]16, Castres.—"Extraict des Registres de la Chambre de l'Edict."

This relates to proceedings touching the accusations made against Henry de la Tour, Duc de Bouillon, Vicomte de Turenne, and premier Mareschal de France. They were signed by "Charlotte de Nassau." The notarial attestation is dated at Thouars, [18–]28 Dec.

Copy, French, 3 pp.

There is also a Certificate of the same date by the Ministers and Elders of the Reformed Church of Castres.

Copy, French, 1 p.

M. CLAUDE DE LA TREMOUILLE to the DUKE DE BOUILLON.

[1602,] Dec. [9–]19, Paris.—The King has permitted the writer to send the Sieur de Bourron to him, to let him know how disagreeable his procedure was to him (the King), &c.

Copy, French, 1 p. Endorsed: Receu a Geneve.

M. DE VENTADOUR to M. LE CONNESTABLE [OF FRANCE].

[1602, Dec. 23–] 1603, Jan. 2, Pesenas.—Gives an account of the proceedings of the Duc de Bouillon.

Copy, French, 1 p.

ANNE DE LEVY to [WINWOOD].

[1602,* Dec. 23–1603,] Jan. 2, Pesenas.—Acquaints him with the "passage" of the Duke de Bouillon, &c. The Duke had informed the churches of the pretended reformed religion of his innocence, and that his desire to see them live in peace under the King's edicts had obliged him to leave the kingdom, &c.

Holograph, French, 1 p.

SAVOY and GENEVA.

[1602, Dec.]—"Summary of the proposition made by the Couut de Tournon with (sic) Secretary Carron, Ambassador of Savoy, sent hither" [to Berne?].

This relates to disputes between the Duke of Savoy and the town of Geneva, and an "enterprise" by the Duke against the town.

At the end is a copy of a letter of the Town Council of Berne, touching the arrival of de Tournon and Carron in their town, and dated 31 Dec. 1602.

French, 4 pp.

Another copy of the same. 3 pp.

Another copy (in vol. 11). 1 p.

[QUEEN ELIZABETH to RALPH WINWOOD.]

[1602, Dec.]—Instructions as to what he is to say to the King [of France] in reply to his request for [the Queen's] advice respecting the affair of the Duke de Bouillon.

Copy, French, 4 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: The same is in English, and copied.

M. DE LA FONTAINE to MR. WINWOOD, H.M. Agent in France.

[1602?].—"Ce matin j'ay esté avec sa Majesté [Queen Elizabeth], laquelle m'a representé ce quelle a entendu touchant Madame seur du Roy avec grande passion, et m'a donné charge de luy représenter en partie sur ce subject ses conceptions, en attendant aultre conseil qu'elle pourra prendre. Le temps et le subject de vos dernières lettres ne me permettent pas de veoir sinon avec doubte et crainte quel est à present l'estat de cest affaire. Et pourtant ay-je trouvé plus à propos de représenter ce qui m'a esté dict, a Mons<sup>r</sup> le Duc de Bouillon, pour le faire passer plus oultre s'il est encores temps. Et encores vous ay-je voulu envoier lesdictes lettres souz cachet volant. Si d'aventure (que Dieu ne veuille) il estoit trop tard, vous les pourrez supprimer, si bon vous semble, ou bien les fermer et les delivrer, s'il vous plaist, audict Seigneur. On attend de vous le progrès de cest affaire en bonne devotion. Sortant d'avec sa Majesté, j'ay disné avec M<sup>r</sup> Cecylle, lequel par occasion m'a monstré avoir une grande opinion et contentement de vous: ce que j'ay receu comme l'ung de vos amis."

[P.S.] "J'ay veu n'a pas long temps M. Neville,* bien de sa santé, mais attendant ce que nous ne pouvons veoir encores."

Holograph. Seal.

ENGLISH COMPANIES in the NETHERLANDS.

[1602, after.]†—"The catalogue of the English captains presently in pay; with the rates of the several entertainments appointed by the States, and the defalcations set down by Sir Fr. Vere."

The General's old Regiment—13 names.

The Regiment of Sir Horatius Vere—13 names.

Companies sent over into the States' service anno 1601—7 names.

* Qu., Sir Henry Nevill.

† In Vol. 11. This is in the same hand as the first document on p. 40.

Companies sent over for the States' service anno 1602—17 names, two being marked "dead."

The officers' entertainments appointed by the States.

3 pp.

THE KING [OF FRANCE] to the LANDGRAVE [OF HESSE].

[1603?]* Jan. [2-]12.—Touching the refusal of the Duke of Bouillon to come to the King, and his departure for Germany or the Low Countries, &c.

Extracts, French, 2 pp.

[THE DUKE DE BOUILLON to M. DE LA TREMOUILLE.]

1603, Jan. [3-]13, [Geneva].—Refers to the Sienr de Bourron, the writer's own conduct, the perils threatening this city, &c.

Copy, French, 1 p.

SIR HENRY SAVILE to MR. WINWOOD.

[1]602[-3], Feb. 2, Richmond.—"This morning Mr. Secretary told me that the Queen had resolved determinately to employ you in that service in the Low Country, willing me (which little needed) to second it with good speeches to her Majesty, if occasion were given; so that you may assure yourself, for a comfort against your return, that your service there hath been here well accepted."

Is about to send over his writer to Paris, and wishes him to be commended to Mr. Carleton. He is to receive 7*d.* a sheet for writing; "your Frenchman there having 12*d.*, and better commodity to shift than a poor stranger shall find." Prays he may have books to write out as soon as he comes, through Mons. Thuanus, or Casaubon. He is first to write out the Commentary on Esay, and to collate certain Psalms. Gives sundry references, &c. John Bill will also be there about the [Greek?] characters.

Holograph.

THE ELECTOR [PALATINE] to the KING OF FRANCE.

1603, Feb. 8, Heidelberg.—In favour of the Duke de Bouillon.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

MRS. Jael KILLIGREW to RAPHE WINWOOD, ESQ.,
H.M. Agent in France.

1602[-3], March 3, Lothbery.—Has received further moneys from Mr. Paker, and thanks Winwood for his good offices, on the part of Mr. Killigrew and herself. Her daughter Seimour was going to write to him.

French.

THE KING [OF FRANCE] to the ELECTOR [PALATINE].

1603, March [7-] 17, Metz.—Has received his letter of 8 Feb. in favour of the Duke de Bouillon, &c.

Two copies, French, each 2 pp.

SOLDIERS in the NETHERLANDS.

[c. 1603 ?].*—"Companies repertited upon Zeeland.

- "Capt. Wigmor, in garrison at Bruers-haven.
- Capt. Fr. Croftes, in garrison at Nemegen.
- Capt. William Croftes, in garrison at Breda.
- Capt. Bingham, in garrison at Bergen op Zoom.
- Capt. Proude, in garrison at Zerickzee.
- Capt. Tracy, in garrison at Tergoes.
- Capt. Rogers, in garrison at Ostend.
- Capt. W. Norton, in garrison in Ostend.
- Capt. Dale, in garrison at Terthol.

"Of these the companies following are behind-hand a whole month's pay.

- "Capt. Fr. Croftes.
- Capt. Wm. Croftes.
- Capt. Bingham.
- Capt. Rogers' company.

"These companies were repertited upon Zeeland, but paid hitherto by the generality, who having refused to continue the payment, I [the Agent ?] sued to the States General to know where henceforward they should be paid, humbly desiring to make a speedy end thereof, in regard that the companies lay in towns where there was no relief for them, so as, wanting their ordinary pay, they had no means to live."

[c. 1603 ?].*—"Mémoires." A paper relating to the frauds practised at the musters of soldiers in the Netherlands. The captains and officers are to be informed that these frauds are well known to the States General, the magistrates of towns, and others. The Briel, Delphe, Rotterdam, &c., are mentioned.

Draft, French, 2 pp.

[c. 1603 ?].*—"Les particularités pur faire le[s] monstres en telle sorte que les fraudes seront decouvertes ou obviés, au grand profit et service du pays."

Also: "Instructions pur les commissaires des mounstres pur leur direction," &c.

French, 4 pp., in the same hand as the preceding.

[c. 1603 ?].*—Estimate of the charge of 6,000 men-at-arms and 400 cuirassiers.

French, 1 p.

[c. 1603 ?].*—"List of the Captains under the command of the Heer Van Oye." 12 Dutch names.

THE NETHERLANDS.

[c. 1603 ?].*—"Memoyre exhibee par le C. Guillaume."† Begins: "Messieurs,—Le grand soing, sollicitude, et charges dont auez esté accablez durant ces guerres." The writer refers to the fact that in 1567, when the late Prince of Orange was compelled to retire to Brabant, he was received by the writer's father in his house of Dillenberg. At the end he asks for repayment of 755,000 florins.

French, 14 pp.

* In Vol. 11.

† Count William of Nassau-Dillemborg ?

FORM of OATH as COUNCILLOR OF STATE in the UNITED PROVINCES.

[1603 ?].*—“ Je jure d'estre fidele et loyal aux Estatz Generaux des Provinces Unies du Pays Bas, qui demoeureront en l'union et maintiendront la vraye religion Chrestienne. Que j'observeray et feray observer, tant que en moy sera, le traicté faicte entre la Serenissime Royne d'Angleterre et lesdicts Estatz, et me regleray, selon l'Instruction faicte ou a faire pour le Conseil d'Etat desdicts Pays, en tant quelles ne contrarient audict traicté. Je renunche a toutes particulieres correspondences, en tant qu'icelles pourroient prejudicier au bien publicq dudict Pays. Et que sans avoir esgard a personne, j'auray tant seulement devant mes jeulx l'honneur de Dieu, le bien et conservation desdicts Pays, et la cause commune. Que je ne reveleray les communications, deliberations, ou resolutions dudict Conseil, qui doivent estre secretes; que je ne seray en service de personne, ny prouffiteray ou recepuray d'iceulx aulcune pension, aultre que de sadicte Majesté, comme aussy je ne prendray aulcuns dons ou presens d'importance defenduz par le droict escript. Que aussy je n'auray part ou portion, directement ou indirectement, en aulcuns revenus ou biens de la cause commune, ou en iceulx qui seront donnez en ferme, collectez, venduz, ou achaptez au prouffit d'icelle; et que je feray et laisseray ulterieurement tout ce que un bon et leal Conseiller d'Etat des Provinces Unies doit et est tenu de faire; Reservé l'hommaige que je dois a sadicte Majesté, ma Princesse souveraine. Ainsy m'ayde Dieu tout puissant.”

Endorsed: Copie du serment du Conseillier destat pour sa Majesté d'Angleterre.†

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] to the KING [OF FRANCE].

1603, — April, Heidelberg.—Excusing his silence since his departure from France, &c.

Copy, French, 1 p. Endorsed: Présentée par les Ambassadeurs de Monsieur l'Electeur.

THE DUKE DE BOUILLON.

1603, May [2-]12, Fontainebleau.—Answer of the King [of France] to the proposition made by the Count de Solme, one of the Colonels of the Count Palatine, Prince and Elector of the Empire, and the Sieur de Plessen, his Councillor of State, sent to his Majesty by the Elector.

This relates to the charges against the Duc de Bouillon.

Copy, French, 3 pp

1603, May [4-]14, Fontainebleau.—Reply of Messrs. de Solme and de Plessen to the preceding.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

1603, May [6-]16, Fontainebleau.—Answer of the King to the preceding.

Two copies, French, 2 pp. each.

* In Vol. 11.

† This form appears to have been drawn up temp. Eliz., but was probably used on Winwood's appointment as Resident Councillor with the States in June 1603. (Thomas's Notes.)

The DUKE DE BOUILLON to the KING [OF FRANCE].

1603, June [12-] 22, Heidelberg.—Asks to be restored to the King's favour, &c.

Copy, French, 3 pp.

[KING JAMES I.] to PRINCE MAURICE.

1603, June 24, Palace of Greenwich.—“ Envoyans ce gentilhomme, le Sr. Winwood, pour tenir lieu de residence pour nous près de Messieurs les Estats, en la place du feu Sr. de Guilpin, nous ne l'avons voulu laisser partir sans l'accompagner aussy de ce mot particulier envers vous : ” &c.

Copy.

The DUKE DE BOUILLON.

1603, June 26, o.s., Monceaux.—Discourse presented to the King of France by [the ambassadors] of the Elector Palatine, in favour of the Duke de Bouillon.

French, 4 pp.

The KING [OF FRANCE] to the ELECTOR PALATINE.

1603, [June 27-] July 7, Monceaux.—Replies to the representations made in his name in favour of the Duke de Bouillon.

French, 2 pp.

The PEACE of GENEVA.

1603, July 3.—Treaty between Charles Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy, and the Lords of the town of Geneva. 23 articles.

French, 8 pp.

EXPENSES of RAPHE WINWOOD, Esq., in HOLLAND.

1603,* July 15, to 1604, 25 Sept.—For his first journey into Flanders and his residence there, 8 April to 20 May, 70*l.* For his last journey into Flanders, and his residence there and in Zealand, 26 Aug. to 16 Sept., 50*l.* Disbursed to divers persons, till 25 Sept. 1604, 120*l.* Total, 240*l.*

ENGLAND and FRANCE.

1603, July 30, Hampton Court.—Articles agreed upon with the King of England and Scotland by the Marquis de Rosny, Ambassador of the King of France.

The ancient and never interrupted alliances of France and Scotland, and those contracted between France and Queen Elizabeth, shall be maintained and confirmed by a defensive league, comprising the allies of both countries, especially the United Provinces. The two Kings will urge the King of Spain and the Archdukes of Flanders to leave those provinces in repose, &c. Provisions in case of the invasion of either England or France by Spain.

French, 4 pp., much decayed.

THOMAS BULL TO RAPHE WINWOOD.

1603, Aug. 11, London.—Received yesterday his letters of 29 July. “My servant delivered them instantly at the places appointed, only the keeper of Sir John Stanhop’s house would scarce admit my man to leave the letter, lest the same should have infected his master’s house; whereby you may understand how we seek to shun the Lord’s hand that lies heavy upon us. And this doth also cause me (for my wife’s sake) to abandon the City for a while. In the meantime, if your Worship send me any more letters, direct me to some one man nearer home to whom I may give the same, for the Court will be now altogether uncertain, his Majesty (as they say) being gone in progress. Mr. Millet’s man writes me what advice he had received from you, both concerning your money there due, and for a supply of 100*l.* more.”

Holograph. Addressed: To the right worshipful Raphe Winwood, esquire, Counsellor of estate for his Majesty in the United Provinces—in the Haeghe. Seal.

WM. MYLLETT TO RAPHE WINWOOD.

1603, Aug. 24, Mydelb[urgh].—Understands, since his return forth of England, that his servant Thomas Owen has in his absence satisfied Winwood for the 100*l.* on the bill of exchange sent by Mr. Bull before Winwood’s coming over; &c. Mr. Gylpin used to take up money of some cloth-buyers of Delf, to be repaid here.

Holograph.

A NEWSLETTER.

1603, [Aug. 25–] Sept. 4.—“Nouvelles de par les comptoirs des marchans d’Amstelredamme”; viz. from Rome, 9 Aug.; Venice, 15 Aug.; Amsterdam, 4 Sept.

“From London it is written, on the 23rd ult., that a new conspiracy against the person of his Majesty has been discovered there, and thereupon many persons have been made prisoners. That the plague was still increasing there, owing to which there is little or nothing doing at London at present.”

At the end, in the margin: V’re treshumble [et] fidel serviteur, C. Coets.

On the dorse: Pour monseigneur lambassadeur du Roy descosse, &c.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] TO WINWOOD.

[1603, Aug. 26–] Sept. 5, n.s., Heidelberg.—Was pleased to hear of his arrival in Holland, and that the King had employed him in the charge to which the late Queen had destined him. Wrote to him by Daniel, but, in case the letter did not reach him, sends a copy of it, condoling on the Queen’s death, which had prevented the acknowledgment of his many obligations. Winwood is acquainted with his persecutions since quitting Paris. Trusts his Majesty of England and his Council will retain the opinion on this subject which the late Queen had; but has been informed from the French Court that his Majesty of England had said that he (the writer) ought to give himself up to justice, &c. Desires authentic information.

Holograph, French, 3 pp. Seal.

LEVYNUS MUNCK to [WINWOOD].

1603, Oct. 4, Court at Winchester.—Has been absent from Court by reason of these wandering progresses. On his return, has put “my Lord” [Cecil] in mind of writing to [Winwood]. Sent the bill of charges to Sir Vincent Skinner, who returned it with an order, not signed by the Lord Treasurer [Dorset]. “I went to his Lordship in the country to get his hand and allowance to it; but he sent me back again with many protestations that there is no money in the Exchequer, no, not to defray the King’s household charges; that all wages, pensions, and allowances whatsoever must be at a stay for a time, till these Michaelmas rents come in. Since that time his Lordship, I mean my Lord Treasurer, hath not been at Court, because one of his servants some twenty days ago sickened in his house of the plague, which is now dispersed almost over all the south parts of England. It followeth the Court wheresoever we remove, and I am now afraid that one of my Lord’s, Cecyll’s, kitchen is infected of it, but it is not yet discovered.”

Holograph.

[SIR] THO. BODLEY to [WINWOOD].

[1603,] Nov. 4, Fulham.—Has received two letters from Winwood, with one to his (the writer’s) wife from her daughter [Winwood’s wife], which was left at Fulham, and sent on to him at Ascotte. Wrote three letters, which Winwood says he had not received. Was forced, by reason of the sickness, to address them all at random, by messengers unknown, as he could not safely go to London. His family at Ascotte is in good health.

“Our term begins at Winchester the 12th of this month, and on Tuesday after the Priests of the Tower, which were lately committed for the great conspiracy, are arraigned at Winchester; and the Thursday after George Brooke and Sir W. Raleigh; then, upon Tuesday or Thursday after that, the Lords Cobham and Grey. If you know it not already, this was the practice of the Priests. The chiefest among them devised a kind of Association, for defence (sic) of the person of the King, who was to be murdered, as they pretended they had secret intelligence from foreign countries, under colour whereof, as if they had been subjects, above others of the State, most loyally affected, they procured the subscriptions of as many as they thought would be pliable to their plot, to a certain form in writing of their association: wherein the generality went to work bonâ fide, knowing nothing of the secret, of the plotters’ wicked purpose. But some had the watch-word; and all were such as, being armed, and keeping together about the Court, within the compass of a whistle or other like signal, should have set upon the King, when either in hunting or riding otherwise abroad, they found their fittest opportunity. For albeit there were some not privy to the treason, yet it was so contrived, that little doubt was made of their following their fellows, when it had come to action.

“We have a speech given out, among Papists in special, of a match lately moved, but I know not by whom, between our Prince [Henry] and the King of Spain’s two years’ daughter; which is a motion so full of solecisms, as but to fill up my paper, for want of better matter, it should not so much as have been mentioned.

“It is written from the Court, from some in good place, that the King is like to take towards York, there to remain till the sickness be ceased, which is well begun in London, but increaseth much in country towns.

"If Cavalier Trello were as wise and discreet, as honest and kind, I would willingly hold correspondence with him; but I know him of old to be very fantastical, and I shall get little credit by dealing in his causes; for which I would entreat you, to frame some courteous excuse in my behalf, at your next meeting with him, and to let him understand, that partly in regard of the great mortality in these quarters, as also for other businesses, I am travelled far westward, from whence you are not like to hear from me in a long time, having bid adieu unto the Court, and all public employments."—Your father and friend, &c.

[P.S.]—Understands from Mr. Bull that the officers of the Exchequer are so wonderful backward in paying Winwood's salary that he is loth to deal any further. Told him that Mr. Serles is now at the Court about Winwood's business.

Holograph.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] to WINWOOD.

1603, Nov. [8-] 18, Sedan.—Fears that some of Winwood's letters have been lost, not having heard from him for so long. (This letter relates to the writer's affairs, but is so badly written as to be hardly legible.)

Holograph, French, 2 pp.

THE VENETIAN SHIP LA BALBIANA.

1603, Dec. 2, Salisbury.—Notification by Charles, Earl of Nottingham, [Lord High Admiral,] that on searching the register and archives of the Supreme Court of Admiralty of England, it is found that Giovanni (Johannes) Scaramelly, principal Secretary of the Venetian Republic, has received certain goods and moneys from the parties underwritten, in part payment of the spoil lately perpetrated, upon the high sea, by one Thomas Thompkins, captain of an English ship called the Margret and John, of the port of Southampton, and his accomplices, on a Venetian ship called la Balbiana; viz., from John Davies, merchant, owner of the English ship, for 54 [hundred?] weights of cochineal received from one Black, 50*l.* 7*s.*; from Richard Cornelis, merchant, of Southampton, for "pulvere factitio," 7*l.*; from Freeman of Southampton, in money, 13 "chekenos"; from the same Davies and Black, 10 yards of silk "argento attincti (tabin)," and 6 ells of silk, in English damask, of purple colour; from the Lord High Admiral of England, 113 yards of silk woven with gold, and 15 yards of silk woven with silver, and in Venetian silver, 2,900 pieces of four Venetian pounds (lbrā), 19 ducats, and two English half-crowns (semicoronatos); from the same, by virtue of the letters of the said Lord Ambassador [Scaramelly], in silks and moneys numbered, to about the same value; from Davies, 40*l.*; from John Chapman, of Chichester, for 3½ ells of yellow sattyn, 8 ells of pink silk, 5 ells [of] sleight Jenuatabin, and 50 ells of yellow silk, 50*l.*; and from Davies, 100 pieces of Barbary gold

Latin.

J. CASAUBON to [WINWOOD].

1603, Dec. 20, Paris.—Has received his letters full of evidences of friendship. Prays him to remain assured of his (the writer's) affection. Wrote to him in England before knowing of his departure. Mr. Gorges has been here, in returning to his own country, where the King has given him some dignity. Honours Gorges for his piety and virtue.

Was greatly rejoiced by Winwood's letters, assuring him that the King [James I.] will not abandon the protection of those countries. Prays God to bless the King with all happiness, for His glory. Winwood knows more of "our estate" [France] than the writer. It seems there will be a time [of trial] for those who seek to serve God in purity of conscience. Knows however that "our King" [of France] is averse to such counsels. Hopes the King of kings will give him grace to maintain the peace in his days.

Holograph, French.

ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, and FRANCE.

[1603.]*—A collection of the Debts due by the French King to his Majesty [James I.]; headed, "La scedule des Debtes."

Livres tournois.

1587.	For a levy in Germany, the commissaries of the French King being Messrs. de Clervaut, Guitry, and Monglas	309,375
1589.	Under the Baron Willoughby	60,000
"	For a levy under the Prince of Anhalt	100,000
"	Other levies in Germany	100,000
"	Obligation of Messrs. de Beauvoir, Gutry,† and Buzenval	227,878
1590.	Obligation of Mons. de Beauvoir	21,000
"	Obligation of Mons. de Beauvoir	100,000
1591.	Obligation of Messrs. de Beauvoir and Fresnes	165,000
"	Earl of Essex in Normandy	601,921
"	Norris in Britany	1,954,040
1592.	Obligation of Mons. de Beauvoir for ships in [the] Seine	2,980
1594.	For ships at Brest	141,730
1590.	[1596 ?] Obligation of Messrs. de Bouillon and Sancy	60,000
"	2000 soldiers sent into Picardy	202,510
"	The said 2000 continued other six months	201,000
—	The arrears of the dowry of the King's mother [Mary, Queen of Scots]	48,000
	Sum ‡	4,927,434

Whereof there has been paid :—

The obligation of Messrs. de Bouillon and Sancy of the year 1596	60,000
Also the obligation of the year 1591 of Messrs. de Beauvoir and Fresnes	150,000
Also there must be deducted for two payments made to the States by the consent of the King of Great Britain	900,000

Sum of the deductions 1,110,000

So there remains 3,817,434

Whereof there is in obligations seen by Mons. de la Bauderie, and the copies of which he has subscribed with his name 711,098

And so there remains to be cleared up (esclaircir) 3,106,336

French, 2 pp. ; endorsed in English.

* In Vol. 1.

† "Butry" in MS.

‡ The total actually amounts to 4,295,434 livres. With regard to these debts, see under 1612, Dec. 29, and 1613, July 6-16.

ENGLAND and FRANCE.

[1603.]*—Memorandum of the sums of money which the [late] Queen of England lent [to] or disbursed for the most Christian King, from 1587 to 1596.

[This statement differs from the other statement given above, but relates mostly to the same matters.]

“There remains yet unpaid, due to this King’s Majesty [James I.], 386,734*l.* 16*s.* 5½*d.*” From this there is to be deducted 50,000 crowns paid in August last to the use of her late Majesty.

French, 2 pp.

THE NETHERLANDS.

[1603.]*—Particulars of the expenses of the United Provinces in 1600, for ordinary and extraordinary charges, “payment of the yearly proportion to her late Majesty,” expenses of the camp, &c., with some later remarks.

2 pp., endorsed by Cecil.

THE DUKE DE BOUILLON.

[1603?]*—Memorandum of the credentials of M. du Faur, sent by the King of France to the town of Castres, to dissuade them from harbouring the Duke de Bouillon, who has gone thither instead of repairing to the King, according to his promise, &c.

French, p. 1.

[SIR] THO. BODLEY TO MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Councillor for his Highness in the United Provinces, at the Hague.

[1604?]* Jan. 1, Fulham.—“Sir,—I have done my very best to inquire the success of that intended innovation in the style of the party that you named; † and as far as I can learn, it is so altogether as you foresignified unto me. For before he would assume the style of Ambassador, he addressed himself to the great one, that you wot of, to the end he might know by his means and advice, how his Highness would digest it; who did him to wit, that he had been prevented by the Spanish Ambassador, which had gotten information a good while before, of the States’ resolution, and obtained by suit at the hands of the King (who it seemeth, as then, and as I believe as yet, surmiseth nothing what the States determined in it) that he should not be accepted in that kind of quality; so that now he retaineth his ancient title, without making any show that either he or the States affected any other. And indeed I do not hear but that his carriage therein hath been secret and discreet, so as neither the matter nor the mystery is known in Court to any, but where of force it must be known. Hereof hereafter you shall have more, if more may be learned.

“I have assured my wife that her daughter’s longing for her mother’s counterfeit cannot choose but prognosticate, that she will be a mother ere be long. For all kind of longing doth make to such a purpose. For which my wife will give order, that by the next trusty messenger she shall receive her longing; and you must give order, by all the means you can devise, that it may not be frustrate. And so, for want of wiser

* In Vol. 11.

† Sir Noel de Caron?

matter, I leave you both as well wished, as if you were to enjoy the best wishes bestowed this new year's day in England.

"Your father and friend in all true affection,

"THO. BODLEY."

Holograph. Two seals of arms. "Post paid to Myddelboro."

THE PRIVY COUNCIL TO LORD HENRY HOWARD, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports.

1603[-4], Jan. 29.—"Having been informed by your Lordship that the Lord William Cobham, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, finding great inconvenience that did happen in the Town of Sandwich by the tumultuous behaviour of the common sort of people that did pretend by charter to have voice in the election of Mayor and other officers as Freemen of the town, whereby great unquietness did grow, disturbance of the peace, and division among the inhabitants, we took order (and that according to the right judgment of the law) the number of the Common Council (as in all other well governed corporations is used) should be reduced to a certain number, besides the Mayor and Jurats; upon observation whereof great good and quiet did ensue unto the government of that town, until of late the last Lord Warden did dispen (we know not for what respects) with that order, and set the same at liberty for the common and meaner sort to give again their voices, the fruits of which hath lately appeared by a notable insolence and disorder by the faction of one J. V., who in tumultuous and disorderly sort went about to be elected Mayor by the inferior multitude, though he had been before, and stood then by (sic) from being Jurate for his misbehaviour; for which his lewd demeanour he was by us committed unto prison, and upon his humble submission was enlarged, though since (as we hear) he hath again forgotten his promise made for better carriage hereafter, and his conformable submission; wherein we leave him to such punishment as your Lordship shall think him worthy of. In the mean season, considering how much the establishing of the former order, which is most agreeable to the construction of the law, and to all reason and rule of government, will be for the good of that town, we pray your Lordship, under whose jurisdiction they are, to re-establish and settle the former order taken by the Lord William Cobham, by allowance and direction of this Board, and to order that the Common Council do not exceed the number of 24 persons, besides the Mayor and Jurats, and those to be of the better, graver, and more peaceable sort. The rest of the Freemen may be present at the election, for their better knowledge and experience, but to have no power to give any voice, so as they carry and demean themselves in peaceable and decent manner. And if any Mayor shall happen to decease during the time of his mayoralty, then we think meet the eldest Jurate shall take the charge and government of the town for the rest of the year, with the proportion of allowance that shall be answerable for the time he shall be in the office of Mayoralty. But in the election of the Mayor the Jurats shall succeed in that office of mayoralty by the seniority and place of eldership, as they are in order of ancienty. These orders being by your Lordship's direction established, we doubt not but the good that shall ensue by the observation thereof will make them desirous to continue the same without seeking any alteration therein hereafter."

Copy.

ROBERT BARKER(?) to WINWOOD.

1604, Jan. 31, Amsterdam.—Touching the India Company, damask, tapestry, &c. “The lord of this town” is mentioned.
Holograph (a very bad hand).

THE NETHERLANDS.

1604, Feb. [6-] 16, s.n.—“The effect of the Bishop of Ruremonde his letter . . . unto the mutineers.”

SIR R. CECIL to WINWOOD.

1604, July 9, Whitehall.—The King has appointed Sir Henry Wotton to be his Ambassador Ledger with the Duke and State of Venice. It is requisite for his Majesty’s service that his Ministers abroad should hold mutual correspondency, when necessary.

Seal.

ENGLAND and SPAIN.

1604, [Aug. 18].—“Preface to the Treaty between England and Spain.”

Latin, 4 pp.

1604, Aug. 18 o.s., 28 n.s.—Articles of Peace between James, King of England, and Philip III., King of Spain, and Albert and Isabella Clara Eugenia, Archdukes of Austria, Dukes of Burgundy, &c.

Latin, 10 pp.

“Copy of the private Article concerning the Inquisition.” (Printed by Sawyer.)

Spanish, 1 p.

“Copy of the private article for the merchandise of Germany.”

Latin, 1 p.

ENGLISH CATHOLICS.

1604,* [Sept. 28-] Oct. 8, Valladolid.—Certificate by Brother John de Valle, Prior of the Royal Benedictine monastery of Valladolid, that the bearers, Ralph Anthrobus and Richard Wolly (Vuolly), Englishmen, of the seminary of the English at Douay in Flanders, came to the said monastery, but could not be received owing to the large number of Englishmen already admitted into the Order; and that they requested this testimony of their good fame and Catholic life, in order that they may proceed to Italy, and obtain the habit of the Order.

Latin. At the end: T<sup>a</sup> Roma, 8 genaro 1605.

Endorsed: Accedite ad D. Paulum extra Urbem, et cum D. Raffaeli Anglo exponite desiderium vestrum.

JO. MORE to MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Councillor of State, &amp;c.

[1604], † Oct. 5, London.—“Yesterday morning I arrived at Gravesend, where I m[et Mons.] Caron ready to embark for Holland, to whom I deliver[ed Mons.] Barnevelt’s letter. That afternoon, finding my

* In Vol. 4.

† In Vol. 11.

Lord Cranbo[rn at] White Hall (because neither Mr. Levinus nor Mr. Ca[lvert] were present), I delivered the dispatch into his Lordship's hands. I[n the] evening I found Mr. Levinus at Cranborn House." Spoke to him about Winwood's allowances, mentioning the excessive dearness of all things, and the expenses at Sluce and Middelbourg. He took the private letter and the bill in to his Lordship, who altered the bill in his own hand, allowing 40*l.* instead of 70*l.* for the first journey, 20*l.* instead of 50*l.* for the second journey, and 100 marks instead of 120*l.* for intelligences; and making an order for the payment of 200 marks in all. Maintained that the demand was just, and asked Mr. Levinus to procure a more favourable resolution. Requested Mr. Calvert to use his friendly offices. Sir Henry Neville and Sir Thomas Bodley are both in the country. Refers to money matters in connexion with Mr. Serles, Sir Vincent Skynner, the Lord Treasurer, and Sir Thomas Bodley. "The Court remains still at Hampt[on Court] . . . farming out the customs and imposts of . . . to be let au plus offrant. Mons. Car[on] . . . from my Lord Cranborn for you and . . . Mr. Bull. Jasper is in Fran[ce]

[P.S.]—"I humbly crave to know your pleasure what to bestow on Mr. Levinus."

Holograph; partly eaten away. Seal.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to WINWOOD.

[1604,] Dec. 4, Whitehall.—A petition has been exhibited to them by William Bainton, gent., to request the States for the recovery of such goods and debts as belonged to Sir Charles Faifax, who was slain in Ostend some few days before the yielding up of the town; he being his near kinsman and executor. As Faifax lost his life in the States' service, they recommend his cause.

JO. MOORE* to WINWOOD.

[1604,] Dec. 20, London.†—Refers to bills of exchange, and to a bond by Mr. Lambert for money to be repaid 20 Dec. next, 1605; the bond to be left with Mrs. Serles. "Yesterday Sir Thomas Edmonds was formally warned to provide himself against the next term for his Flanders Ambassage. He hath been very inquisitive of me touching th' order of your house and rate of your expenses, and findeth himself much perplexed how to add one dish more to the rate of your ordinary table (as he conceiveth it by me and the report of his man Jasper) for 40*s.* the day: he wondereth that you have the patience to endure such an exile to so small purpose. Touching his particular employment, he saith he hath no further reach than depending his whole allowance to save his private means here in England. He findeth much difficulty to carry an even hand in his charge without suspicion of partiality to the States or the Archd[uke]. He purposeth to entreat your assistance for a passport from the States every quarter of the year for a ship to carry his necessary provisions. I told him that those passports were very hard to be obtained, yet that he might assure himself of your best furtherance.

"Mr. Richards hath now sent his letter, which I send herewith; it seemeth he did not then very well understand the matter, when he first promised to write you the particulars, and wished he had money to supply the party's wants. Mr. Lambert sendeth by this bearer to my Mistress a great cake and two small cheeses. My Lady Bodley sendeth a barrel of pi[p]pins, &c. Now that your business is at an end, I purpose forthwith to shorten your expenses by my retreat into the country."

* Sic. He usually signs "Jo. More."

† More generally spells London in this way. (In Vol. 11.)

Holograph. Seal: the device appears to be a combination of the letters R. WINWOOD.

R. ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY TO WINWOOD.

604[-5], Jan. 3, Lambeth.—Recommends the bearer, Mr. Hunter.

J. PACKER TO WINWOOD.

1604[-5], Jan. 31, Pillingbeare.—Will consider about taking a wife, as advised by Winwood, who seems content with his own estate. "My Lady"* has heard that Winwood has one child, if not two. Mistress Elizabeth is in speech of a rich husband; her father goes to London today, where the gentleman and his father are, and she is come to Lothbury with her aunt, who has forsaken Hanworth till time efface the memory of the lamentable accident to Sir Thomas Germaine's only daughter (a child), who was poisoned by eating a piece of bread and butter spread with rat's-bane. One of Sir Maurice Barkley's sons was also in danger from the same cause. "If you go into the field, for which you write preparation is made, I wish you may escape the cannon, though I am persuaded you cannot escape an ill journey."

Holograph.

THE STATES GENERAL OF THE UNITED PROVINCES to the STATES OF BRABANT.

1605,† Feb. [1-] 11, the Hague.—Touching a proposed general assembly of the States of the Netherlands.

Copy, Dutch, 3 pp.

DANIEL VERE TO WINWOOD.

1604[-5], Feb. 4, London.—Asks advice how to obtain his "[d]ue to the States" for his account and reckoning, that have long forborne the same.

Holograph. Seal.

H. EARL OF NORTHAMPTON TO WINWOOD.

1604[-5], Feb. 9, Whitehall.—Has moved Sir Noell Caron to be a mean to the States on behalf of his (the writer's) honourable cousin Sir Horace Vere, "that the power of his present command over the English in their service might by some special commission from them be established unto him." Asks Winwood's assistance therein, in order "that the expected division of the Regiments may not take from him that authority which with so great honour, to the general applause, both as lieutenant to his brother, and since in his own right, he hath so long exercised; nor from our nation that affection to their service which by his government hath been so well continued." If he is not to superintend all the Colonels, it would be a strange precedent.

* Probably the wife of Sir Henry Nevill.

† In Vol. 4.

ALEX. SERLE to MR. WINWOOD.

1604[-5], Feb. 20, London.—“Your charge left in my hands is, God be thanked, all in safety. . . . For mine own businesses touching my placè, my oppositors are so many . . . that I have submitted all to the Archbishop. . . . I and my wife both do most heartily commend us unto you, and also unto Mrs. Winwood. . . . Your little godson heartily thanketh you for his hat and feather, which Mr. More on your behalf bought for him; and every Sunday he and his nurse brag of it with all the babies of the Chisweeke country.”

Holograph. Seal.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] to [WINWOOD].

[1605? Feb. 25-] March 7 [n.s.], Sedan.—Thanks for letters. Is glad to hear of the King's prosperity. Wishes the King knew him as well as the late Sovereign [Elizabeth] knew him, the remembrance of whom remains graven in his soul so deeply that death alone can efface it. [Winwood] will be acquainted with the gracious reception of the Duke of Lenox, the pardon of the guilty (coupables) in France, and the marriage of Mlle. de Guise with the Prince of Conty; also the arrest of the pretended ambassador by M. de Plessin, councillor of the Elector Palatine; &c.

[P.S.] Was glad to learn that Mr. Edmonds is coming to Brussels; if he causes [anyone] to preach, how will the Jesuits endure that?

Copy, French, p. 1.

JO. MORE to MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Councillor of State in the United Provinces.

[1605,]† Feb. 26, London.—Wrote on the 20th by Standbank. Difficulty with the Lord Treasurer [Earl of Dorset] about Winwood's entertainment, in which Lord Cranborne and Sir Wm. Waade were concerned. Sir Tho. Edmonds wished to have a passport from the States for his stuff and provisions quarterly, by way of Lillo, &c. “Sir Tho. is in pain to find out a fit chaplain. Mr. Sanford is recommended by Sir Tho. Bodley, and is most likely to accept the offer, though the President and others of the College had rather retain him. My Lord Admiral [Earl of Nottingham] and Sir Charles Cornewallis are to take their journey towards Spain the 20th of the next month, and my Lord of Hartford with Sir Thomas Edmonds shall have their dispatch shortly after.” Purposes, as soon as Winwood's gown and plate are ready, to go to him.

Holograph. Seal.

[SIR] JO. POPHAM to WINWOOD.

1604 [-5], March 8, his house near Charterhouse.—Asks favour for this gentleman, Captain Francis Woodhowse. He has urgent occasion to come to England about 20 April. Prays he may be spared from his company.

[SIR] JOHN OGLE † to WINWOOD.

1605, † March [3-]13, Dordrecht, [s.]n.—“Here come flying speeches from the Haghe that there will very shortly be a disposition of the troops into Regiments.” Intends to be there soon.

Holograph. Impression of seal.

* In Vol. 11.

† He is called “Sir John Ogle” in the contemporary endorsements on his letters of 1604, 1605, 1606, &c. (State Papers, Holland.)

‡ In Vol. 4. Endorsed by Sawyer, “13 May.”

LORD CHANCELLOR ELLESMERE TO WINWOOD.

1604 [-5], March 20, York House.—Has heard of the favour he has shown to Captain Panton. Has known Panton long, and wishes him well, for his good carriage and desert.

Seal.

WILLIAM BROWNE TO WINWOOD.

[1605, April 10?]*—Has been dumb a long time. “My last from our British soil were of the 23rd of March, which signified the King’s return to Greenwich, and the hourly expectation of the Queen’s bringing to bed. On Thursday last the Lord Admiral [Charles Howard, Earl of Nottingham] took his leave of his Majesty, and his servants made a terrible great show at Court; he had forty gentlemen in livery cloaks of black velvet lined with orange tawny satin; his train will be 600 men. The Earl of Harford [Hertford] takes his leave this week, and will hasten to be with the Archduke. I am sure you have heard how Stone the fool was whipt, for speaking of news in an ordinary; and being asked what it was, he said that there were 80 fools went into Spain besides my Lord Admiral and his two sons.

“Again to the matter: there was certainly great running at tilt upon the King’s day, but at the christening † there will be greater, and it is thought there will be creations of nobility. Yesterday, being Tuesday, was appointed for the day of christening my Lord of Southampton’s son; the King and my Lord of Cranbourne were to be godfathers. This is all I can now write unto you. I willed one that brings you a letter from Sir John Davyes to come for this my letter. The fellow he comes about is put up in prison at Middleborough; he is a very proper man, and had served Sir John Davy[e]s long, and his offence is by so much the less that having a gelding at London of his master’s of some worth, he sent the gelding back again, and only pawned gold buttons, and took so much money as to furnish him over; which he saith came by this occasion, that having served him long in my Lord of Essex’ time, and being very bare, he made earnest suit to Sir John Davyes to borrow five pounds, which was denied him, though he saith he had in those times hazarded his life for him; whereupon he was driven through want and his unkindness to this extraordinary shift; he hath nothing left to satisfy; to be returned into England for so small a fact is contra jus gentium. He is commended unto me (for I have not seen him) for so proper a man as I pity his case; serviet utiliter; he is already enrolled in Capt. Bingham’s company, and if he served in Flushing in the King’s garrison it were another matter; yet I must confess, thinking the matter had been greater, and that some of the goods might have been found in esse, I sent the Marshal to cause him to be stayed.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

SIR THO. BODLEY TO MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, one of the Council of State in the United Provinces.

[1605,]* A[pril] 13, London.—“My wife and I are much to thank you for your kindness and care, in minding to mend your wife’s estate, wherein you shall be assured to find my assistance very forward. Howbeit, it will require some leisure, in regard of the sum which you propose, and for other respects. You may do well, in your next, to explain yourself further, and to signify what shires you do chiefly affect ; and whether you desire a dwelling-house upon the land, or only regard the payment of a rent, with any other circumstance of your liking the[rein. T]he hardest point, I doubt, will be to meet with such a party as will be well pleased to attend an answer from you, when the bargain shall be found, that will co[ncu]r with your sum, and our liking. At all adventures I will lay the coast in your behalf, and deal as for myself.

* In Vol. 11.

† Of Princess Mary, born 8 April 1605; died 16 Sept. 1607. (Burke.)

“Our Lord of Hartford and Sir Th. Edmundes have taken their leaves, and will away within these three days. The Lord Say, among others, will go in their company. Some say Sir Charles Percy will take up men, and serve the Archduke. But yet methinks he should have friends to dissuade him from it. We say for certain here, that Spinola is in Brussels, and hath obtained from Spain the place of Lieutenant General, and Superintendent of the Finances, without being subject to the Archduk[e’s] controlment.

“For want of other matter, I must tell you that Mr. Haidocke, of New College in Oxoñ, is said to preach in his sleep, and hath done it so often (without remembrance of anything, being awake) as many of purpose have watched in his chamber to take his sermons in writing, of which there are some five abroad in men’s hands, very orderly done [in] matter, and far above the ability that he hath [show]ed at any time, in any exercise. Sometimes he . . . . lectures in philosophy, and likewise in physic, [with much?] commendation, utterly forswea[ring in] the morning that he hath any sense or feeling of any such thing done by him, which is also so understood, [the] man being counted very honest, of not only his friends, but of others of good insight in the University. [Wh]at will become of it, you shall know very shortly, when I come from Oxoñ, where I shall be, God willing, within these . . . . days. If my daughter [will] remember me for a little firkin of pepper woort, whereof she sent me [som]e a good while since, I will eat s . . . . . t the rest, and pay whatsoever it shall cost, with many many thanks. [Wis]hing you meanwhile all happiness to you both, your true affected father,” &c.

Holograph ; decayed.

CAPTAIN JOHN COKAYNE.

1605, April 23.—Notification by William Cokayne that he has deposited 120*l.* with Sir Thomas Bodley, to free his brother Captain John Cokayne, who for 30 months has been prisoner in the town of Dunhaige (or the Haige), where the right worshipful Raphe Winwood is his Majesty’s Leger ; on certain conditions.

SAM. CALVERT to MR. RALPH WINWOOD, Councillor, &c.

1605,* April 22.—Received his letters by Mr. Longton. Refers to “a number of such fellows [as] are gone to see fashions in the two last great Ambassages from hence”; also to my Lady Bodley, Mr. Serle, Mr. Carleton, my Lord Norreis, Sir William Waad, Sir Thomas Edmonds, and Captain Doil (?).† * * * “preach in his night sleeps.† He is now at Court, and hath disputed with the King, who caused him secretly to be lodged in some part of the house,

* In Vol. 11.

† Qu. Dale.

† This refers to Richard Haidocke. See the letter of April 13, above, and his letter confessing the imposition in S.P.

where the King in his nightgown went privately to he[ar] him two several times. His first text was out of the Acts, which speaketh in one place of Alexander the Coppersmith; the last out of the Psalms, where it is said, 'Those that go down into the deep, and occupy their business in great waters, they see the wonders of the Lord,' &c.; upon both which he made learned sermons; but there happened a strange distracting jeast (?) in the latter, for Sir James Ramsey of [the King's] Chamber, being then in presence, fell asleep soundly, and abou[t] . . . of the hour talked so loud in his dream that he had almost wakened (?) the preacher, and somewhat astonished the King, who after lau[ghed] heartily (?)."

"This day is solemnised the christening, and now my Lady Derby is one of the godmothers; by which you may perceive, as all the world doth, how the King increaseth his graces and favour towards those of her side, for in everything the stream runneth still that way. In the with-drawing chamber on the Queen's side there are continual . . . , whereof any of quality may taste, and also of cakes, which are ready (?) made, and supplied every day."

Refers to his own ill health.

P.S. "Alderman Anderson, being lately hearing [a] cause (?) at my Lord Mayor's, died suddenly . . . hear of it."

Holograph; much decayed. Seal of arms.

THO. KNOLLYS TO WINWOOD.

1605, April 27, Naerden.—Has written once since being here at his garrison. Hears that the division of the Colonels is to be made. Upon a complaint of his Company, has been forced to stay here to settle things; there has been a great fault in his officers while he was absent. "Be mindful of me unto Mons. de Barnevelt and the States; . . . and if after so long patience and expectation others should be preferred and I put by, as I think the King would not take it very well, so I should for ever esteem myself a very unworthy fellow, having served them so long and so loyally, and his Majesty having written twice in my behalf so effectually."

Holograph. Seal.

LORD CRANBORNE TO WINWOOD.

1605, April 30, Cramborn (sic) House.—"This gentleman, Mr. Balfour, having obtained his Majesty's favourable letters to the States, and to Mons. de Barnevelt in particular, about the recovery of certain debts due by the States to Colonel Balfour his father, I could do no less, at his requisition, than recommend him likewise unto you."

On the face: "R[eeived] the 11th of August."

Seal. Addressed: To my very loving friend Raphe Winwood, Esquire, assisting for his Majesty in the Council of State of the United Provinces.*

H. LORD SOUTHAMPTON TO MR. WINWOOD, Agent with the States.

[c. 1605?]† May 2.—Thanks him for kindnesses shown to Capt. Dale, and asks him to excuse Dale's absence on urgent business.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

* Most other writers address Winwood as "Agent," and some few as "Ambassador."

† In Vol. 11.

[The EARL OF] DEVONSHIRE to WINWOOD.

1605, May 13, Court at Greenwich.—Recommends Sir John Roe, who purposes to follow the wars, and therein to serve the States.
Seal.

The PRIVY COUNCIL to WINWOOD.

1605, June 2, Court at Greenwich.—Are sorry to find so many petitions and complaints from divers of his Majesty's subjects, hardly intreated by the Hollanders. Have sent some of them before. Now Matthew Brownerigg, a merchant of Ipswich, having laden grain in a Hollander's ship for England, the ship was assailed at sea by a Dunkirker, and the master taken out of her and set at a ransom of 5,500 gilders; and the rest that were in the ship have carried [off] the ship and grain, with purpose that the poor merchant's goods shall serve for redemption of their master. Deal with the States for restitution.

H. [EARL OF] SOUTHAMPTON to MR. WINWOOD, Agent with the States.

[c. 1605?]* June 18, London.—Again recommends Capt. Dale for advancement, he being able to do service to the States.
Holograph. Seal of arms.

R. ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY to WINWOOD.

1605, June 28, Lambeth.—Thanks him for his kind letters.
Holograph.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

[1605?] Aug. 16, his house in Westminster.—Has received a packet of letters from the Count of East Friseland by the hands of Colonel Gunterode, a Dutch gentleman, whom the Duke of Holst, the Queen's brother, recommended to his Majesty. The Count has written at large in justification of his Chancellor, and the reports he made of the proscription of the said Count, and the attempt upon his eldest son, all which he affirms to be true, howsoever by the Town [Emden] they be denied. He also writes an answer to the last letter from the Town to his Majesty. The Town acknowledge the Count to be their lawful sovereign, but complain of his ministers. At his Majesty's instance, the Count agrees to another conference, and desires Winwood's presence. His Majesty hopes things may be drawn to an issue, and desires Winwood to concur with the States herein. As his Majesty has undertaken the mediation, he is concerned for its success. He does not wish to take the town of [Emden?] † into his protection, as proposed.
Edges decayed.

LORD LISLE to WINWOOD.

1605, Aug. 28, Flushing.—Arrived here on Friday evening, having by reason of the wind gone on land at Graveling, and so passed along the sea-coast to Bridges, where there was a purpose to stay him. His passage that way caused some dislike here. If Mons. Barnavelt and Winwood stay some days longer at the Hague, will visit them.
Holograph. Seal.

* In Vol. 11.

† Name lost.

[SIR] JOHN OGLE to WINWOOD.

1605, Aug. 29, Camp near Devente[r].—Gives account of military operations. Mr. Yates and Mr. Sterlinge "seek commission to be officers to us bon gré mal gré." Protests against this. Refers to Sir Horace Veir [Vere] and Sir Ed. Ceeceyll.

Holograph, 3 pp., decayed. Seal.

[THE DUKE DE BOUILLON] to the KING [OF FRANCE].

1605, Sept. [10–]20, Sedan.—Is aggrieved by the continued and increased anger of the King. Has sent orders by this gentleman to those who are in charge of his houses, to give them up to anyone whom his Majesty shall appoint.

[Same date.]—Order by the Duke de Bouillon for giving up his castle and town of Turenne.

Copies, French.

SIR ROBERT DRURY.

1605, Sept. 15, Brussels.—Passport by Sir Thomas Edmondcs, Ambassador of the King of Great Britain with the Archdukes of Austria, for Sir Robert Drury, gentleman of his Majesty's chamber, who has been travelling in foreign parts, and wishes to return to England.

Countersigned by Mons. J. de Beaulieu.

With this are two letters from [the King of Spain] to [Archduke Albert] and the Marquis Ambrose Spinola, in favour of Sir Robert Drury, one of the principal knights who came over with the Admiral of England [Earl of Nottingham], and desires to serve the King in the States; dated at Valladolid, 20 June 1605.

Copies, French.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] to [WINWOOD].

[1605,]* Sept. [16–]26, n. s., Sedan.—Has received his letters of 24 Aug., o. s., and thanks him for news. The new seat of war in Friesland and on the Rhine will much injure the affairs of the States. Is glad to hear of the King's good health. Refers at length to the measures taken against himself by the King of France, and his own preparations.

Copy, French, 3 pp.

SEA-FIGHT OFF DOVER.

1605, Oct. 1, 3 James I.—Notification by George Binge, Mayor of the town and port of Dover, and the Jurats of the same, that on Tuesday the 4th June last, near to the said town and port, upon the sea, a ship of Hamborough, called the Josua, being chased, "amongst others of the Spanish army," by the men-of-war of Holland and Zeland, ran aground at a place called Heycliff, and sundry Spaniards were then taken by the said men-of-war, and the ship fired, not during the fight [at sea].

THE EARL OF DEVONSHIRE TO WINWOOD.

1605, Nov. 7, Court at Whitehall.—Thanks him for his readiness to befriend Sir John Roe. Will be ever ready to serve the States, to requite any favour Roe shall receive.

Seal.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, TO WINWOOD.

1605, Nov.  $\frac{18}{8}$ , Esens.—Fears some of his letters have miscarried; they related to the proceedings of his refractory subjects of Embden. Is awaiting the King's [James I.'s] declaration.

Latin, 2 pp.

[KING JAMES I. TO THE STATES GENERAL.]

[1605.]—Sending back Mr. Winwood to resume his charge, the King is unwilling to allow him to depart without some mark of favour, and therefore gives him the sum of — pounds sterling, which the King prays them to pay him out of the moneys which will be due by them to the King in March next.

Copy, French.

THE EARL OF SUFFOLK TO WINWOOD.

[1605.]—Thanks him for favour shown to Sir Tho. Dutton, touching his company. “Deal plainly with me in a matter that I have some cause to suspect that I am infinitely wronged in. I have heard it hath been informed closely to the States that we Howards should be principal means about his Majesty to draw him from them to incline to the Spanish. I dare say much for my friends, but I leave them to answer for their own affections. For myself, I vow afore God I have no inclination to the Spaniard more than the necessity of my mast[er's] service draws me to; for, serving in the place I do, I am forced to give answers to many of their requests, which I may not rudely do, but more than for courtesy and compliments I am no way theirs. On the other side, I am not ignorant how full of necessity it is that we uphold that State you serve in, both for conscience and policy; yet I have heard it hath been my ill hap to be made much Spanish in opinion, and this is a burthen that I would fain throw off. Therefore, Mr. Wynwood, if you will taste some of the principal and worthiest of them, and, if so ill an office hath been done me, that (sic) you will avow for me that wherein I will never fail you, I protest you shall ease my heart of a load. I need not be so earnest in this, for I will never seek benefit by their good will, but merely, like a gentleman, I would put off imputation.”

Holograph. Seal. Endorsed: 1605 (?)

THO. KNOLLYS TO MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Agent in the United Provinces.

[c. 1605 ?] *—Complains of unjust treatment by the States after his long and loyal services. Wishes the King had forborne to write his two most gracious letters. Must console himself “with that poor comfortable saying of Æneas, O passi graviora, dabit Deus his quoque finem.” Will visit him at the Hague.

Holograph; decayed.

ENGLAND and the NETHERLANDS.

[1605.]—"Raisons qui ont meu les Archiducqs à ne se pouvoir re-souldre aulx deux moyens proposéz par sa Ma<sup>te</sup> pour avoir le libre Commerce avecq ce Royaulme."

To disarm the ships-of-war which they have at Dunkirk, would be to make the Dutch masters of the sea, and give the Dutch free navigation and fishery, &c.

*French, 2 pp. Endorsed: 1605.**

[SIR] JOHN OGLE to WINWOOD.

1605[-6], Jan. 12, Dordrecht.—The death of Mons. Pauli has dashed the jollity of the marriage, and consequently all the concourse of friends. It is resolved to hold no feast, so the presence of Winwood and others is not now required by the writer.

Holograph. Portion of seal.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1606 [n.s., Jan. 16, 17-] 17 and 16 kal. Febr., Julian style, Esens.—Has received few or no letters from Winwood in reply to his own. Complains of the proceedings of the citizens of Embden at great length.

P.S.—Is glad to learn that the King has been delivered from such great peril. After Winwood's departure, was compelled to send his Chancellor to England and elsewhere, by a circuitous route. Thanks him for the sword received.

Latin, 5 pp.

KING JAMES I. to "THE COUNT OF EMBDEN."

[1606?] Feb. 17.—Has heard with annoyance of the delay in the decision of his cause. Has written urgently to the Orders of the federated Provinces [the States General?], and sent a copy to the Ambassador, who is commanded to attend the negotiations at Groningen, and to bring them to a satisfactory issue.

Copy, Latin.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1605[-6], Feb. 21, London.—Details negotiations with Sir Tho. Bodley, Mr. Levinus [Munck], and Sir H. Neville. Found Mr. Levinus at Whitehall yesterday; "and he gave me this comfort, that if the King would bestow any part of these confise[ation]s amongst men of your rank, you should have your share. I did not then omit to urge some reasons that might move the King and his Lordship [Salisbury] to favour your particular, as that this was the eighth year of your foreign employment; that in France your allowance was 10s. per diem less than that of your predecessor, Sir Tho. Edmonds, who held but the same rank"; that the late Queen's death prevented a proposed augmentation, &c. Received yesterday out of the Exchequer 180*l.* for Winwood's allowance for December, January, and February, 90 days. Refers to arrangements with several persons. "Mrs. Weekes wisheth all happiness to her nephew, and hath sent him a coraill in token of her love. I send likewise by this bearer a curling iron."

Holograph. Seal.

* This date is queried by Sawyer.

MATTHEW GWINNE to MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Agent in the Low Countries.

[c. 1606?]* Feb. 23, "Londini, ex ædibus Greshamijis."—Is about to marry the daughter of Edward Duncombe, a merchant of London, to whom money is due in those parts. Asks his aid for its recovery.

Holograph, Latin. Seal (a device, with the letters E.D.)

KING JAMES I. to [THE STATES].

[1605–6, Feb.] †—Has been informed of an insolence committed by the men of the town of Embden against their Count, and their proceedings appear very strange. Has spoken to the Ambassador [of the States] on the subject. Takes much care for the Count and his affairs, and requests them to see that the dispute is arranged satisfactorily.

Copy, French.

LAURENCE DE NYELIS.

[1606, Feb.]—Petition of Laurence de Nyelis, resident at Dunkirk, to the King and the Privy Council. Had made a demand before the Judge of the Admiralty, Sir Julius Cæsar, that Abraham Varken, captain of a ship-of-war of Amsterdam, and the States of Holland's masters, should be ordered to restore his ship-of-war of Dunkirk, named Sainte Anne, of 36 tons, and of which George Mattysen was captain, with 19 sailors, taken in the harbour of Harwich, near the quay, notwithstanding the prohibition of the Mayor on the King's behalf; the ship being damaged by artillery and musketry, which kept firing for three hours before the ship could be captured. The captain and six sailors were killed and nine wounded. Besides the damage done, compensation will have to be made to the widows and children and to the wounded. The captain died at Harwich of his wounds. Ten sailors were taken to Amsterdam, and hanged by the States, notwithstanding the King's express letters sent by the Agent Caron. Witnesses of Harwich testified to the unlawfulness of the seizure, and the said Judge awarded to petitioner 1,480*l.* sterling as damages, but refused to grant letters of execution, without the King's order. Prays the King to require the States of Holland to pay him the said sum, and to send back the remaining sailors to Harwich; or, in default, to issue letters of arrest on all the ships and merchandise of their subjects.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

1605[–6], Feb. 4.—Decree of Dr. Cæsar, above referred to.

Copy, Latin, 2 pp.

KING [JAMES I.] to THE STATES.

1605[–6], March 1, Palace of Westminster.—In favour of Laurent de Nielis, merchant of Dunkirk, whose ship-of-war, Sainte Anne, was attacked in the port of Harwich by Abraham de Vargen, captain of a ship-of-war of Amsterdam named la Grue, and was, notwithstanding all that the King's officers there could do, seized and taken to Amsterdam. This is an outrage against the King's honour, and he is bound to resent it as much as if it was done to his own subjects.

Copy, French, 1 p.

* In Vol. 11.

† So endorsed by Sawyer.

THE DUKE DE BOUILLON.

[1606,* March 22-April 1.]—"Copie de la paix entre le Roy [de la France] et Monsr. de Bouillon."

French, 1 p.

Also a short letter announcing the same peace, dated at Sedan, [March 30-] April 9, 1606.

French.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD (Agent with the States General).

1606,† March 27, o.s., Esens.—His Chancellor has returned from England with letters. Desires to know whether the States' intentions correspond with the King's, and where and when the proposed conference is to be held.

Latin. Seal. Endorsed: 1616.

THO. KNOLLYS to WINWOOD.

1606, March 28, Stoad.—"After a long and tedious journey I arrived at Prag[u]e, where I was fain to stay for answer almost two months; at length the Count of Furstenburg, who was the chief of the Council, and Signor Barvitijs, who is the Principal Secretary to the Emperor, gave me this for an answer: That his Imperial Majesty thanked me greatly for the pains which I had taken, but that now he was resolved to conclude a peace not only with the Turk but with Bodskaye,‡ and that therefore at this time he hoped to have no need of any employment for soldiers; but if I would return to Bruxelles and serve the Archduke, I should not only have the Emperor's letters of recommendation unto his brother, but I should likewise receive both means and letters from the Spanish Ambassador there resident unto Spinola; and [they] assured me that I should receive such contentment as I should demand or desire.

"But as soon as I received my answer, albeit I was in some want, being fain to leave some of my things behind me, I went presently to Drasing, to the Duke of Saxon's (sic) Court, where hearing of the wars of Brunswick, I repaired presently thither. There I stayed six weeks, but after, seeing no appearance of any good wars, I came presently to Stoad, where I only look for a wind to serve me into England.

"And having spent the best part of my youth in the States' service, I desire to continue the same. I have written both unto them and Mons. Barnevelt, that it would please them to allow me a troop of horse in pay, which I would now raise with all diligence in England; and for that I have been a Colonel of ancient standing, if it will please them so much to grace me as that I may command the English and Scottish horse, I doubt not but to deserve it with my best service. I beseech you, Sir, let me find your furtherance, which I doubt not but in time to require in some measure. Thus, desiring to hear from you some answer of my letters, I commit ye to the Almighty."

Holograph. Seal (broken).

* In Vol. 2.

† Arranged with papers of 1616 in Vol. 10.

‡ "The proceedings of Boschay in Hungary" are referred to in Sawyer, II., 56.

[SIR] J. HERBERT TO WINWOOD.

1606, March 31, o.s., the Court at Whitehall.—This gentleman, the writer's cousin, Captain Vaghan, has grown too corpulent to serve by land, and desires to give over his company to a kinsman of his, one Matthew Huntley, a gentleman very honest and more fit for that service, and that it would please the States to employ him in some place at sea, where he had good experience heretofore. Thanks Winwood for great kindness to Captain Gerrerd Herbert, and for the favour he has also found with Mons. Bernevelt, whom the writer desires to be thanked in his name for kindness to many of his friends.

Addressed : Henry (sic) Winwoode, Esquire (&c.).

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1606, March 31, the Court.—“This gentleman, Mr. Burlacy, having heretofore served the States in their war with good commendation, hath now resolved again to transport himself thither, and to sacrifice his life, and the remain of his fortunes, in their service. . . . Use my name to Mons. Barnevelt in his behalf.”

Seal.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1606, April 2, the Court.—“I have been earnestly entreated by Mr. Levingston, one of his Majesty's Bedchamber, to recommend unto you a brother of his, Mr. James Levingston, who is now going over to the States' service. I pray, Sir, as you shall have opportunity, further his preferment as much as you can, for any place that shall fall void either in the English or Scottish Regiment, according as he shall be capable of.”

Seal.

SAM. CALVERT TO WINWOOD.

1606, April 5, London.—Has had some few words with . . . (torn off), touching Winwood's affairs, and thanked him for his furtherance, but he said it was needless. “From thence he fell to a word or two touching your stay there, which was resolved on for a little longer time, though limited with no certainty; and he said only the instance of your friends had induced my Lord so to procure order; yet he of himself would needs say, that your return could no way have prejudiced you. I asked him from whence it were likely to derive a convenient state, fit to maintain the charge the Council Chamber brought with it. He answered that might come, and that in the mean time 50*l.* certain should be assured unto you, with your ordinary attendance there. . . . He concluded with a question, which I soon answered, demanding of me whether, as a Councillor there, you had not the same power that Mr. Gilpin before had, to help yourself (for such were his words) by the benefit of suits at sundry times preferred to the Lords there. I told him that near three years' space, which time I had followed you, I never observed that you ever gained a farthing by any such mean, . . . which [as] he confessed Jo. More had said heretofore in effect. . . . He hath kindly promised in Easter week to procure me a dispatch to go into France, but in what proportion of allowance I know not.

“My friends would now have written, but the* one excuseth himself this week, through the multitude of Parliament businesse[s] that are cast upon him; and George Calvert saith he hath neglected his respect towards you, but will shortly repair it. God hath lately sent him a son; his Lord and my Lord of Cumberland were his godfathers, and they have named the child Cecill Calvert.

* “P.” struck out.

"I am not able to write so much news as the rest accompanying these will present you. My Lord of Devonshire is dead, and most say he is happy, for the world began to change the titles of honour into notes of infamy, for his last most dishonourable and both unlawful and ungodly match. His body is this day carried to Wantsted to be buried."

Holograph. Portion of seal.

THE EARL OF SUFFOLK TO WINWOOD.

1606, April 6, the Court at Whitehall.—"Mr. Winhood.—This gentleman, Captain Vawghan, who hath been an old follower of my Lord of Essex his house, of whose (sic) now I am tied to take some care of by reason of our near alliance," &c. (see March 31).

Holograph. Addressed: Mr. Winhood, &c.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1606, April 17 (?), the Court at Whitehall.—Recommends William Cawley's case to the States; he has letters from the King and the Council in his favour. Mons. Barnevelt to be dealt with particularly.

Seal.

G. CALVERT TO WINWOOD.

1606, April 18, Court at Whitehall.—Thanks him for his letters, and for obliging his (the writer's) kinsman, who proposes to remain some time in France. It is impossible to prefer any man here at present, unless to the place of an ordinary attendant, which is most hateful and unprofitable. His stay in France will fit him for employment.

Seal. Addressed: To the ho<sup>ble</sup> Mr. Raphe Wynwood, Assistant for his Majesty in the Council of State of the United Provinces of the Low Countries.

COUNT MAURICE(?)* TO WINWOOD.

1606, April 18, Delfet (sic).—"J'aj ecmuniqué les demandes du pilot Francis (sic) Joras à mon Conseil, lequel treuve comvenable que le dit pilot se presente à Messieurs l'Admirauté, et leur face ses complaints, et demandes; car s'n'est pas l'ordre en tels affaires que j'accorde avec le reclamant ce que mon Général doit satisfaire et reparer de dommage, comme l'ajant faicte contre [les ordres?] et commendemens que je luj avois [b]aillé et enchargé. J'enuojeraj les papiers du dit Joras aux mains du Génér[ral] ou du Fiscal, là où le pilot les trouera, y venant."

Decayed. Seal.

[SIR] F. VERE TO MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Agent in the United Provinces.

[c. 1606?]† April 28, Bryll.—Thanks for his kindness.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

* The signature looks like "J. . . Manoel." Possibly the first letter on p. 84 refers to the same matter.

† In Vol. 11.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1606, May 1, the Court at Whitehall.--Recommends Sir John Ratcliff, knight, who has contracted with Captain Arture for the leading of his company of horse in the States' service. The States will lose nothing by the exchange.

JO. MORE to MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Haghe.

[1606,]* May 6, London.—Cannot procure payment of these three months' entertainment. Has promised to furnish Sir Horace Vere with 50*l.* on his return from Royston, whither he is gone to take his leave of the King. 200*l.* is due to Mr. Lambert for resigning a bargain of land. Has visited Mr. Levinus.

"The letters to move the States to name a time and place for the Emden treaty are not yet dispatched, but shall shortly come towards you. . . . The Parliament will end this session the next week. . . . The matter now there in handling is said to be that of BB.'s [Bishops'] prerogatives, which the Lower House would have abridged, and all process in the Civil Law to be formed in the name of the King, not of th' Archbishop.

"My Lord Admiral's † commissioners are busy in pressing mariners for his Lordship's journey to meet the King of Denmark and Queen Mother, who they say are ready to hoist sail with the first good wind.

"The Marquis of St. German (it seems) had an inkling of the complaints of our Merchants, which made him limit his abode here in so short a time; yet for all his haste his Majesty was prepared to deliver him in writing the series of all our grievances, which he hath promised shall be redressed. On Wednesday he departed, and yesterday Mons. la Bauderie arrived here to St. Joneses, where he lodgeth. He hath brought his wife with him, and is followed after the French fashion with more boys than men.

"From Bruxelles here is no news, but that the Marquis Spinola is there daily expected, and that many merchants of Antwerp are of late fallen banqueroute, and more of them much suspected.

"Mr. Calley will shortly be with you with his Majesty's letters for the passing of 25,000 cloths by the way of Lillo, but he desires his suit may be kept secret until his coming.

"Garnet ‡ was executed on Saturday, on the west side of Paul's, ending his life in a reasonable constant manner, confessing his guiltiness of treason, but with many protestations endeavouring to clear the suspicion of his incontinence with Mrs. Vause, wherein it is thought he served himself with his accustomed equivocations; but for this and the rest I humbly refer you to Sam[uel Calvert?], who, having been long silent, will now I presume enlarge himself in particulars "

Refers to the claims of servants named Abraham and P. Powell to a place; to the latter's mother, Mrs. Powell; and to Winwood's love and respect for "that kindred."

Holograph. Seal.

MONS. REMY (?) DE BILDERBEK TO WINWOOD.

1606, May 16, Couloigne.—Touching affairs in Germany. It is not believed that the King of England will undertake the defence of the

* In Vol. 11.

† Charles Howard, Earl of Nottingham.

‡ Henry Garnet, Superior of the Jesuits in England.

Duke of Brunswick. The Archdukes will not send Ouwen or Stanley into England, and they think to draw enough soldiers from that kingdom and from Scotland, unless they be hindered by the Dutch ships. A good number of English are lodged at Roeroert (?), who congratulate themselves on their payment; the writer having spoken to some of them. There is some talk of a rising in Poland, &c.

Holograph. French. Endorsed by Sawyer: From Min Heer Bilderbrok.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1606, July 4, Aurick.—Is sending two ministers, one being Johan: Heinrich Stamler, “quæstor præfecturæ meæ Frideburgensis,” to treat with Winwood alone about secret affairs; the other being his (the Count’s) surgeon, a Scotchman, who will cross over to England with letters to the Kings [of England and Denmark].

Latin.

“EDZARDUS ADOLPHUS”* to WINWOOD.

1606, July 21, Aurick.—Thanks him for a British dog, and for benefits done to himself (the writer), his parents (parentes honoratissimos), and all his family.

Latin; decayed. Seal.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1606, July 21, the Court at Greenwich.—Recommends Sir Thomas Dutton, who, having lately obtained a commission from the States to levy here some 200 or 300 voluntaries, is now returning with his men to the States. He is well esteemed of by his Majesty. He desires to be put into the field, to deserve his entertainment.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1606, Aug. 13, Esens.—Agreed, to please the King and Winwood, that they [the townsmen of Emden] should be invited to the forthcoming conference between himself and the Orders of the federated Provinces, but believes their presence will be of no advantage. Understands that his envoy is returning from England with letters [from the King] urging him to go thither, and submit to the mediation of the King of Denmark, now there, in the matter known to Winwood. Refuses to do so.

Latin.

A. NEWTON (?) to WINWOOD.

1606, Aug. 15, Greenwich.—Asks favour for Captain Connok, about to serve in those parts. The Prince “hath recommended him to Sir Francis Vere first, and since to his brother, Sir Horatio.”

Holograph. Seal. Endorsed: From Mr. Ayewton.

THEODORUS CANTERUS to RALPH WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[c. 1606?]† Aug. 25. o.s., Antwerp.—Asks him to intercede with the States General for permission for him (the writer) to go to and dwell in Guelders and Friesland, in his old age. Is in fear for his life in these parts.

Holograph, Latin.

* Qu., son of Count Enno. (In a boy’s hand?)

† In Vol. 11.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1606, Aug. 29, Aurick.—Cannot meet Winwood in Emden, owing to the rebellion of his subjects, but will meet him as the King's Ambassador anywhere outside the town.

Latin.

EMDEN.

1606, Sept. 18.—Safe-conduct by the Consuls, Senate, and forty men, representing the City of Emden, in East Friesland, for all delegates and councillors of Count Enno attending the negotiations for peace and concord in the said City.

Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

Copy of same.

1606, Sept. 19, Aurick —Safe-conduct by the Count of East Friesland for the delegates of the City of Emden attending a convocation of the Orders of that province at "Grethsy lanum."

Copy, Latin, 2 pp.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1606, Oct. 1, Aurick —Is grateful for Winwood's good offices, but complains that the men of Emden are wasting time in useless disputations. His right is certain, and he cannot recede from it a nail's breadth.

Latin.

The SAME to the SAME.

1606, Oct. 3, Aurick.—Will meet and confer with Winwood at "Ripa" on Monday, being prevented from doing so before by the gravity of the matter, and the sanctity of the day set apart for divine offices. Those people have been fomenting war for a whole decade.

Latin.

The SAME to the SAME.

1606, Oct. 15, Aurick.—As the men of Emden will not come to terms, he must seek other remedies.

Latin. Decayed.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1606, Oct. 23, Whitehall.—Captain Thomas Mewtys, notwithstanding the many difficulties he met with here, having raised 200 men, besides those who ran away by his lingering too long at the seaside for contrary winds, is now going to the States. Asks certain favours for him.

Decayed. Seal.

CATHARINE, COUNTESS [DOWAGER] OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1606, Oct. 23, Berumana.—Touching her marriage settlement and rights, and the mediation of the King of Great Britain in the present conference at Emden.

Latin, 4 pp.

MICHAEL BUTTERMAN to R. WINWOOD, Ambassador in East Friesland.

1606, Oct. 28, Embden.—Touching personal matters. Requests him to intercede with the Count for remission of a sentence of exile from Aurick.

Latin, 4 pp., decayed.

EMDEN.

1606, Nov. 3, Aurick.—Decree in the Council of Enno, Count of East Friesland, touching certain requests presented by the Orders of that province.

Latin, 2 pp., decayed.

1606, Nov. 4, Aurick.—Memorial for [the Count's] councillors of 22 articles to be negotiated with the townsmen of Emden.

Latin, 4 pp.

1606, Nov. 10.—Declaration by the Ambassador of the King of Great Britain, and by the Envoys of the general Orders of the federated Belgic Provinces, touching a composition made at the Hague between the Count of East Friesland and the City of Emden.

Latin, 2 pp.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to the MAGISTRATES of VLISHING (FLUSHING).

1606, Nov. 19, Whitehall.—The King has been informed that Mr. Wm. Lovelace, Captain of a company now in garrison in Ardenboro, has caused the death of an Englishwoman, wife to an inhabitant of that cautionary town of Vlissing, casually, in the open street, by the woman's own seeking, &c. As the Captain is in danger of his life, the King desires them to stay proceedings till he has been made fully acquainted with all the particulars.

Certified copy.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1606, Dec. 9, the Court at Whitehall.—Winwood's proceedings in the treaty of Embden have been carried on with good judgment and discretion. The King is advertised that Sir . . . [Ra?]tleif is lately dead, and died in their [the States'] pay and service. There now only remains one brother out of five, who have all ended their lives in such employments; and the King commends this gentleman to them in the d . . . ling of his company of horse, for raising which he incurred great expenses.

Decayed. Seal.

THO. KNOLLYS to MR. RAPHE WINWOOD, Agent in the United Provinces.

[c. 1606?].—Has at last received the answer of the States General to the King's two letters in his behalf. It is unsatisfactory, considering the long time he has spent in their service. "Pardon me, Sir, if I have not seen you since the time that at my last being with you I received but a harsh objection from you, the which, if you be remembered, was thus: Whether I regarded my honour or my profit more—speaking of a regiment and a troop of horse. I answered little, but still have kept it in my mind, wondering much to myself that you should have so base a conceit of me to think that I both by desert and by birth should not claim as much honour unto me as any man of our nation in these countries. It may be you spoke it in love, and so I conceit it; howbeit hitherto I have found no taste thereof, but only with a few complimenting words."

[P.S.] Asks him to return the extract [of the answer] by the bearer, with his opinion.

Holograph.

THE NETHERLANDS.

[1606?]-"Remo[n]strance particuliere des refugiez du pais de Flandre se tenantz au pais de Seelande, affin qu'il plaise a Messeingneurs les Ambassadeurs des trespuissans Roys de France et de la Grande Brittainie d'interceder par leur authorité vers leurs Altes[s]es, et Messieurs les Estatz des Provinces Uniez du Pais Bas, a ceste fin que les dictz refugiez puissent obtenir la mainlevée de leurs biens, en cas que les trevez soient conclues." (13 paragraphs follow.)

French, 3 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: This memorial was presented whilst the treaty between the Archduke and the States was depending.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to KING JAMES I.

1607 [n.s.],* Jan. 6 [o.s.], Esens.—Thanks the King for his protection, which has been made patent by Winwood to the whole of Germany. Asks for its continuance. Winwood will inform the King what ought to be demanded from the King of Spain and the Archdukes in respect of neutrality, and what letters are desired from the King to the Emperor in the writer's favour.

Copy, Latin.

The SAME to THE EARL OF SALISBURY.

Sam<sup>e</sup> date.—Touching his affairs. Could not send the promised horses, as the port of his province was besieged by the ships and army of his enemies. To ask them for permission would have injured his right and dignity.

Copy, Latin; decayed.

THOMAS HANJIRST (?) to WINWOOD.

1607, Jan. 8, Aurick.—Writes in support of his Prince's [the Count of East Friesland's] letters, requesting that the King of Great Britain would write to the Emperor, interceding on the Prince's behalf, in case the cause of the townsmen of Emden should come before the Orders of the Empire, who are to meet on 13th April. The Prince, moreover, greatly desires unity of religion and ceremonies in all the churches of his province, such as is publicly exercised in England, and contained in the books published concerning the same. As he desires to proceed cautiously and prudently in the matter, he asks Winwood's advice whether the King, moved by the conferences already had between the Prince and Winwood, should in his letters praise this the Prince's pious wish, and exhort him to prevail on his subjects that the confession of the English churches and the same ecclesiastical rites may be adopted in this province.

Latin. Seal. Endorsed: From Thomas Van Hanstine (sic).

* In Vol. 5.

THE EARL OF MONTGOMERY to WINWOOD.

1606[-7], March 1, Court.—The writer's kinsman, Mr. Bosville, comes well recommended to Mons. Barneville, to seek a commission to raise a company. He deserves well of the States, in whose quarrel he has suffered much, especially at Ostend.

Seal.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1606[-7], March 13, Whitehall.—The Earl of Montgomery has undertaken to recommend Captain Herbert Thomas to the States, for the obtaining of a commission to levy a company of voluntaries here, and desires the writer to second his desire. Is nearly allied in blood to the Earl (his nephew), who is in favour with his Majesty. The Captain has long served the States in their wars, and his father long since lost his life in their service.

Impression of seal.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1607 [n.s.], * March 16, o.s., Esens.—Has received the letters sent by Winwood's man. Is grateful for the many benefits conferred by the King on him and his. Thanks Winwood for the care taken of his dignity and safety, and for good counsel.

Latin.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1607, April 26, Aurick.—Desires information about the Belgic truce. Has sent some horses (equos quadrijuges) to the Earl of Salisbury. His Emden [subjects] write that they have sent certain men of their Order to the Orders of the United Provinces, to ask for a loan, in order to pay the stipends of their garrisons. Whether they seek to renew the tumults which have been scarcely appeased, Winwood will know better than the writer.

Latin.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1607, May 16, the Court at Whitehall.—Sir John Ratcliff, being fallen into an indisposition of body, and having many occasions of law business, desires to have leave from his Excellency, or the States, to be absent from his charge there for five or six months; which is the more grantable now because of the truce the States are entered into for this summer.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1607, May 30, Aurick.—Hopes to see Winwood and his wife in this province during the spring. Recommends a young man going to Britain.

Latin.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to KING JAMES I.

1607, June 18, Aurick.—After the reconciliation effected by the King's ambassador, Mr. Ralph Winwood, between him and his subjects, he dismissed the greater part of his forces, and performed all his promises. Complains that the magistrates of Emden have refused to permit his visitors, the Duke of Holstein and his (the Duke's) wife and sister, to enter that city; and also that troops have been reintroduced into it by the confederated Orders of Belgium, with the intention of wasting the entire province and seizing the writer's fortresses. Prays the King to use his influence for the withdrawal of these forces, and to send Winwood to take cognisance of the state of affairs.

Copy, Latin.

JOHN ADOLPHUS, DUKE OF HOLSTEIN, to WINWOOD.

1607, June 20, Aurick.—Complains of being denied entrance into the city of Emden, &c.

Latin, 3 pp.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1607, June 20, Aurick.—Touching the sending of forces into his province, &c. Is sending John Henry Stampler to Winwood.

Latin, 2 pp.

[CAPTAIN] SELBY.

1607, June 21, Thursday.—Extract from the Register of the Resolutions of the States General of the United Provinces of the Low Countries.

Deliberation having been had touching the complaint of the "Ritm[aist]re" Selby to the King of Great Britain, and the remonstrance of the Lord Councillor Winwood, that the States had cashiered his company of cavalry, it is resolved to make answer to Winwood that they had many times warned Selby to remain with his company, and to maintain its number complete of good "reytres," well mounted and armed according to the order of the country, but he failed to do so.

French.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1607, cal. Juliis, Aurick.—Not knowing for what causes the confederate Orders have sent troops into his province, he is sending his councillor Wyardt to inquire, and to urge their recall.

Latin.

KING JAMES I. to the STATES GENERAL.

1607, Aug. 5, the Court at Basing.—Having always had care for the establishment of their State, and as they now have to resolve touching a vital matter, he is despatching to them his Commissaries, Sir Richard Spencer, knight, gentelman in ordinary of his privy chamber, and Sir Ralph Winwood, knight, his councillor in the Council of State of the United Provinces, who have power to confer and resolve with them and with the Commissaries of the King of France in all things concerning the public weal and the preservation of their State.

Copy, French.

KING JAMES I. to PRINCE MAURICE OF NASSAU.

Same date.—Informing him of the appointment of Commissaries, as above.

Copy, French.

KING JAMES I. to the STATES [of HOLLAND].

[1607, Aug.,] Palace of Westminster.—Is concerned about the affairs of the Count of East Friesland, whose wife is nearly related to his Queen, and whose children likewise to the King's. Protests against the insolent proceedings of the townsmen of Embden against their Prince, culminating in the attempt to seize his eldest son, and to proscribe his person, as repugnant not only to civil society but to humanity, especially when such things are done by inferiors towards those whom they are bound to. Believes the States can have no other opinion, although for other respects they have formerly shown more favour to the townsmen than to their lord. Hopes they will act in such a manner, in respect of their neighbours, that neither subjects may take a bad example herefrom, nor princes conceive disgust. Understands from the Chancellor of East Friesland, sent over by the Count, that the agreement treated between the Count and the towns (les villes) by the States' mediation, has lately been broken by the latter for very trifling causes. Having joined in the mediation, he (the King) is much displeased at this, and seriously recommends the States to find means for the resumption of the treaty, so as to settle the differences to the contentment of both parties; or at least to conduct their mediation with such equity and caution as not to cause jealousy or give offence to neighbouring States.

Copy, French.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to KING JAMES I.

1607, Aug. 26, ex arce Sticksūsana.—Thanks the King for support and protection against his rebellious subjects, and for affording him an "asylum" for the third time. Is looking forward to the day when he shall be able to prove to the King his innocence from the calumnies of the rebels, before the King's councillors deputed for this purpose.

Copy, Latin.

The SAME to WINWOOD.

Same date, Stichusa.—Asks him to fix a day for the writer's appearance before him and his colleagues.

Latin.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1607, Sept. 18, Madrid.—Ratification by Philip King of Spain of the declaration and offers made on 13 March 1607 by the Archdukes Alberto and Isabel Clara Eugenia, his brother and sister, to the States General of the United Provinces, with whom they treat as free states, over which they claim no right, for the purpose of concluding a perpetual peace, or a truce for twelve, fifteen, or twenty years, in order to deliver the inhabitants from the miseries of war. In order to give time for the negotiations, there shall be a provisional cessation of sieges, invasions, &c., for eight months.

Copy, Spanish, 7 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Translated in the Negotiations of Monsieur Jeannin, vol. 1, p. 451.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1607, [Oct. 23-] Nov. 2, the Hague.—Reply of the States General touching the ratification by the King of Spain (see Sept. 18, ante), finding fault with its form, &c.

French, 2 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed. Négociations de Mons. Jeannin, vol. 1, p. 456.

THE DELEGATES of the COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND to WINWOOD.

1607, Oct. 29, from their inn (hospitio).—Have drawn up in the form of articles the results of the negotiations which have taken place in past weeks, showing how in their opinion the matters in dispute may be settled.

Latin.

FRANCE and the UNITED PROVINCES.

1608, Jan. [13-]23, the Hague.—Treaty between the King of France and the States General.

Copy, French, 9 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed in the Negotiations of Jeannin, vol. 2, pp. 69, 70, &c.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to SIR RICHARD SPENCER and SIR RAPHE WYNWOOD, Commissioners with the States.

1607[-8], Jan. 22, the Court at Whitehall.—His Majesty has written requiring their assistance in procuring for Captain Lawrence Sinclair satisfaction of some demands from the States for moneys owing to him upon entertainments in their service and otherwise.

Seal.

KING JAMES I. to the SAME.

[1608,] Jan. 23, Palace of Westminster, under the Signet.—Captain Lawrence Sincler has asked the King to write to the States General for payment of money due to him for himself and for his brother, William Sincler, slain in their service at Ostend. He claims a month's pay for himself, and the charge of the transportation of his Company. But the King thinks it better to write to Spencer and Winwood in his favour.

Signed at the head.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to SPENCER and WINWOOD.

1608 [n.s.], 6 (?) Feb., o. s., Utrecht.—Thanks them for their efforts to settle his affairs. Desires to be comprised in the strict confederation made between the King of Great Britain and the Orders, for the advantage of himself and his subjects.

Latin.

—ENGLAND, FRANCE, and the UNITED PROVINCES.

1607[-8 ?].—Project for a defensive League between England, France, and the Netherlands, for securing the peace of the States.

French, 7 pp. Endorsed: Project de la ligue defensive faite par Mons. le Président Jannin. Also endorsed, by Sawyer: President Jannin. Vide his Mémoires.

[1608, April].—Project for a Treaty between the Kings of Great Britain and France and the States General.

French, 5 pp.

ENGLAND and the UNITED PROVINCES.

1608, April ---.—Project for a defensive League, concluded by Sir Richard Spenser and Sir Ralph Winwood, deputies of King James I., and the deputies of the States General.

French, 6 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Rymer, vol. 16, p. 667.

Same date.—Project for a particular Treaty between the same.

French, 2 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Rymer, vol. 16, p. 673.

THE MERCHANTS ADVENTURERS.

[1608, April?].—"Pointes et Articles pour d'autant mieulx reigler et maintenir la Traffique des Marchants Anglois (qui s'appellent Adventuriers) es Provinces Unies."

There are twenty paragraphs, with remarks in the margin, showing where and how they differed from former articles.

French, 3 pp.

Draft of the same (in Vol. 11).

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to SIR RICHARD SPENSER and SIR RALPH WINWOOD.

1608, April 12, Aurick.—Complaining of the hostile proceedings of his subjects of Emden, and asking that the negociations may be brought to a satisfactory termination.

Latin, 3 pp., decayed.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to SPENSER and WINWOOD, "Commissioners resident with the States of the United Provinces."

1608, May 10, Whitehall.—The bearer hereof, Sir George Hay, undertaking a voluntary journey into France, may visit those parts. He is a gentleman his Majesty conceiveth very well of, and the writer's very good friend.

Seal. Endorsed: 20 (sic) May, &c.

H. [EARL OF] SOUTHAMPTON to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Agent with the States.

[1608?]* June 2.—"I have of late understood that one Copley, who was entertained by Sir Ed. Cecyll at my recommendation, hath much calumniated Sir Th. Dale, accusing him to have defrauded him of his entertainment at such a time as he was his officer in Ireland." No man of Dale's rank lived [there] in better esteem of all sorts. It is very improbable that he wronged Copley, who is not of so patient a spirit as to have smothered an injury so long. When the writer was in Paris, he found Copley very poor, and gave Dale, who had relieved him, the means to carry him into England, so as "to put himself into the war of Ireland."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

* In Vol. 11. See S. P. Domestic, 15 July 1608.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1608, June.—Objections to the 6th, 13th, 18th and 21st articles of a proposed Treaty between the Archdukes and the States, touching the restitution of confiscated goods.

French, 2 pp.

1608; June 20, the Hague.—Commission by the States General to certain persons to treat with Spenser and Winwood, Ambassadors of the King of England, and to conclude an alliance and confederation, preparatory to and as a guarantee of the peace about to be made with the Archdukes of Austria.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

1608, June 25, the Hague.—A similar Commission, with special reference to the debts due to King James and the affairs of the English Merchants Adventurers.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to SPENSER and WINWOOD.

1608, July  $\frac{5}{15}$ , Liehrt.—Asks credence for Thomas Franzius, his Chancellor, to whom he has committed certain important matters for communication to them.

Latin.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to SPENSER and WINWOOD.

1608, July 28, Salisbury House—Recommending a gentleman, the bearer (not named).

Seal.

EMDEN.

1608,* Oct. 9, Emden.—Statement [by the Count of Emden] to the Ambassador of the King of Great Britain, touching the disputes between himself and his subjects.

Latin, 2 pp., decayed.

THE KING OF FRANCE to the STATES GENERAL.

1608, Oct. 23, Fontainebleau.—Repeats the exhortations which he had previously made to them by the Sieur Jeannin and others, to conclude a peace or long truce with the Archdukes of Austria; certain rumours having been spread that he desired the contrary.

Copy, French, 3 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed in Jannin, vol. 3, p. 61.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1608, Oct. 26, o s., ex arce mea Liehrtana.—Thanks him for information as to the negotiations for the Belgian peace, but is alarmed at Spenser's return to England, leaving his (the writer's) cause to the arbitrament of the Orders. Desires to know whether he is to hope for or despair of the King's aid.

Latin.

* This paper is bound up with others of 1610, in Vol. 6.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1608, Nov. 30, the Hague.—Instructions to Mons. de Preaux, sent to the Archdukes on the part of the deputies of the Kings of France and Great Britain, touching certain points insisted on by the States, and overtures made on the part of the Archdukes.

French, 6 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed in the Negotiations of Mons. Jeannin, tom. 1, p. 46, edit. Amsterdam.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1608, Dec. 30, Esens.—Was rejoiced to learn that Spenser was with Winwood, and would not return to England till the great affair of the Orders [the truce?] is brought to some issue. Hopes they will then attend to his (the writer's) cause, and treat with the Orders for the removal of discord.

Latin.

ESCHEATED LANDS IN IRELAND.

[1608?]*—"For obedience of your Ma[jesty's] commandments, this is my weak opinion of the Counties and territories lately found to be escheated in your Ma[jesty's] kingdom of Ireland.

"Some of them have an absolute necessity of a British plantation, as the county of Leytrim, commonly called O'Roke's [O'Rourke's] country. Others of them, as the county of Longford and O'Carrole's country, do require for conveniency some British plantation for strengthening th' English government, for reformation of Religion, increase of your Majesty's rents, and for drawing the dependency of the subject immediately upon the Crown. The rest of the territories, as the countries of Moloy, M<sup>c</sup>Geoghegans, M<sup>c</sup>Coghlane, O'Dunne, and Foxe's country, do require an alteration of their present holding, which, if it shall not be thought fit to be with addition of some British, yet it would be for good respects with some division of those countries amongst the natives thereof.

"The necessity of planting Leitrim with the greater part of British appeareth, first, by the former experiences and disposition of that country people, who have ever been the first firebrands of sedition in those parts, and who in all the former Rebellions were still the first out in action, and last in submission to the Crown. Except that now for a little while, since your Majesty's reign, their desolation and want of means had no force to work mischief, it shall not be found for these hundred years that ever they remained three years loyal together. And when at any time the Lords thereof professed their loyalties to the Crown, it was no other than a cessation of their knaveries for a time, being for the most part entertained by gifts, pensions, or promises from the Prince or State; which cessation they made as it were upon request, with an eye to a greater advantage thereafter; a thing very dishonorable, and no ways sure for the State, and the rather now to be well observed and made use of, so just an opportunity being offered to prevent the like hereafter, without either charge or fear of danger.

"Secondly: the situation of the place, being th' only passage of danger betwixt the provinces of Connaght and Ulster, which countries, either both of them, or at least one of them, it hath from time to time set a-fire; and therefore the reformation of th' Irish plantation of Connaght, and the hope of the prosperity of the late British plantation in Ulster, doth much depend upon the provident plantation of the said O'Roke's country.

* In Vol. 11. Not in S. P. Ireland or Carew MSS. The writer's name does not appear. The writing is a small round hand.

“Thirdly: the nature of the place, which being full of unpassable bogs, woods, mountains, glens, wild and unhabited wastenes[s], hath never been none other than an inaccessible den, and nursery of thieves, doth easily invite evil disposed minds to wicked designs, and doth keep them from means of civil conversation or habitation, which might make them civil and loyal; and out of this, I think, hath proceeded their small regard of Religion in all ages, insomuch as in O'Carolle's country, being but one barony, there be sixteen parish churches, and in all the country of Leytrim, consisting of five baronies, there is [are] but seventeen parish churches.

“Fourthly: the justness of your Majesty's right to plant it, both in respect of the Ward, and of th' other inhabitants. As for the Ward, if he were legitimate, he could not claim above 80 quarters of land, being less than one of the baronies, which was all was granted to his grandfather, Sir Brian O'Roke, when he was in his prime. But he is openly known to be a bastard, and it was unworthiness in your Majesty's officers to find him for a Ward (as if that had been for your Majesty's benefit), whereas they should have found him a bastard, and the country to be your Majesty's. And for th' inhabitants, they derive their estates from O'Roke, who had no reason to take letters patents for 80 quarters only, if he had had the right of the whole country.

“Fifthly: the facility of planting of the said country, in regard the country people are divided amongst themselves, and that the strongest and most of them are utterly wearied of the burthen of the O'Rokes; also in regard that the number of the O'Rokes of note doth not exceed six persons, and scarce are there twelve persons of that name to be found in the realm; so that unless your Majesty will maintain them there, the most of the country do desire that the name of O'Roke were extirped out of the country, where they are now fewest in name, strength and number.

“Further: the present wastenes[s] of that country proveth both the facility and the necessity of the plantation. For when it was given in charge, in the late Survey made by the Lord Chichester, to th' inhabitants of the said O'Roke's country, to present how many persons they could find there that were fit to be freeholders, they presented no more than 42 persons, which is much about 8 persons to inhabit every of the said baronies, when as O'Carroll's country, being but one barony, hath given up one hundred and eleven persons, and O'Moloy's country, consisting of less than 8,000 acres, gave up one hundred and twenty-one persons. And therefore, since the country people are not able to inhabit the tenth part, it were miserable to leave unto them th' other nine parts, in an age so flourishing of people and so scarce of land. And it is a cruel commiseration of their supposed right to leave them and their posterity to be a generation of savages, without God, King, or Law, in the midst of a Christian commonwealth, who now by a mixture of Religious Brittaines (sic) may be made to live well and happily, as loyal subjects, obedient to God and your Majesty's laws.

“And for the protracting of a plantation until the Ward come to years, on pretence of doing an orphan right, it is too superstitious a conscience. For in all conscience, there is no less conscience to be had of your Majesty's right, and that th' adjoining provinces suffer not wrong by pretence of preserving him a Ward, who would never be held for a Wood [Ward], but for a bastard, if his wardship were not more beneficial to some, than his right is good in itself. And since it is true that the boy is a bastard, he being already in likelihood to prove an unhappy youth, the longer that the detecting thereof be deferred, it is the longer to keep your Majesty from your right, and the country from good, and never one whit to the behoof of the boy, who receiveth not the present profit, and who after his nonage cannot claim, though he were legitimate [more than?] 80 quarters of land, which ought not now to hinder the plantation of the whole. And if your Majesty should be graciously pleased to favour the boy with some land there, twenty quarters in a civil plantation will be more beneficial unto him, than all the country in that barbarous estate as hitherto the O'Rokes have kept the same.

“And to conclude: for the plantation of that country, there is no cause of fear to be thought of, unless that either it be not planted at all, or, in case it be planted, lest it be with a number that be little better people than they that now be in it, which indeed will be both the perdition of it and the neighbour countries. And therefore that plantation would be with men honest, industrious, and of good temper, for whom men of quality and ability undertaking, neither the barbarism of th' inhabitants nor the thievishness of the country will corrupt them. For it is good people that maketh a good country, although the fertility of a country will never make wicked and barbarous people to become good and civil.

“The Conditions in this Plantation.

“That at least there be two parts of British to one of the natives.

“That good rents be raised of all, but especially of the natives, who will be at no charges in transplanting thither, nor in preparation of armour, which is not fit they be accustomed to.

“That all of them hold by knight's service, or in capite.

“That your Majesty be freed from all sort of charges, either of wards or garrisons, in that country.

“That every barony of the British be tied to have in readiness, well prepared for your Majesty's service in those parts, a certain number of foot and horse, according to the quantity and quality of the barony.

“As for the county of Longford and O'Carroll's country, which are inhabited with the O'Ferralls and O'Carrolls, men mere Irish in name, but [who] are more civil and obedient to the laws than th' other mere Irish have been, and especially the O'Ferralls, of whom sundry were never rebels; it is very fit, for the reformation of them in religion, and of some defects in their manners and course of life, that some Britains be planted amongst them, who in time will by fair means make some more room for themselves, for that the nature of th' Irish is to bargain, chop, and sell to Britains that are once brought in amongst them, but never to suffer the bringing in of any, if they can keep them out.

“And for such parts of the county of Longford and O'Carroll's country as are to be planted by the natives, as also all th' other baronies of O'Moyloy, Mc'Goghlan, O'Dunne, Mc'Geoghegan, Foxe, and O'Meolaghlan, the chief regard will be to break the dependency of the subjects from th' Irish Lords, and to bring them to hold immediately from the Crown, by giving to every of them, that be of any fitness, parcels of land within their own countries according to their qualities, with reservation of greater rents than are laid upon the British, for that they may well bear rents who get lands unlooked for, and howsoever to pay lesser to your Majesty than they should have done to their Irish Lords; and with injunctions of using civil apparel, building, and planting, which is a great means to affect them to loyalty, with tenure of knight's service, or in capite, and directions of breeding their children civilly, and the eldest sons at school, with condition of forfeiture upon any of them that shall send their children beyond seas, or put them to any other schools than such as are authorised by your Majesty's laws.”

GREAT BRITAIN and the NETHERLANDS.

[c. 1608 ?].*—Articles propounded by the deputies of the States General, in reference to the intercourse and commerce between the two countries, and the confirmation of the Treaty of 24 Feb. 1495[-6] between King Henry VII. and Philip Archduke of Austria.

Dutch, 2 pp. Endorsed by Winwood.

[THE COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND to WINWOOD.]

1609, Jan. 3.—Was rejoiced to learn from his letters of the truce being prorogued for six weeks, and of the new convention (conventu) ; and still more at the promised settlement of his own affairs.

Latin, unsigned.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to SPENSER and WINWOOD.

1609,† Feb. 3, Esens.—Congratulates them on their going to Antwerp to conclude the great negotiation on behalf of the States. Complains of two seditious persons at Emden, who had endeavoured to persuade the citizens that the city might be freed from his obedience by its being included in the articles of Truce. Desires to be personally included in the articles.

Latin.

[SIR] THOMAS LAKE to WINWOOD (Ambassador, &amp;c.).

1608[-9], Feb. 12, the Court at Whitehall.—Had recommended Captain Burrough, at the request of his father, but there has been no occasion to press Winwood in the matter, the truce having had so many delays. Reminds him of it now that “the truce is nearer than when we believed.”

Holograph. Seal.

The NETHERLANDS.

1609, Feb. 21, Antwerp.—Treaty of truce between the Archdukes Albert and Isabella and the States General of the United Provinces, as free countries.

Copy, French, 8 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed in Jeannin's Negotiations, vol. 4th.

The ENGLISH and FRENCH COMMISSIONERS to the ARCHDUKE (Monseigneur).

1608[-9?], March 11, Antwerp.—Thank him for the honour and courtesy shown to them in that town. Will do everything to bring the good work to a happy conclusion. The only remaining difficulty relates to the commerce of the Indies. His Highness's deputies declare that the King of Spain has come to an agreement thereupon, but their declaration is not clear enough to satisfy people who are in doubt as to its terms, &c.

French, 2 pp., partly decayed. Endorsed by Sawyer; V. Négociations de Jeannin, tom. 3, p. 406, imprimée[s].

* In Vol. 11.

† In Vol. 6.

T. EARL OF SUFFOLK TO SIR RAFE WINWOOD, "one of his Majesty's Commissioners in the Low Countries."

[1609?]* March 16, Whitehall.—Recommends Captain Everad (sic), who is much favoured by the writer's son, my Lord of Essex. Thanks him for kindness shown to Sir Tho. Dutton.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1609, March 22, Bergen-op-Zoom.—Commission by the States General empowering certain persons to conclude a long truce with the commissioners of the King of Spain and the Archdukes.

Copy, French, 3 pp., decayed.

[1609, March?]-A paper endorsed: "Another form, touching the point of commerce between the countries of the Archdukes and the States. This was projected by the States."

Copy, French, 3 pp.

1609, March 31, Antwerp.—Act by the Ambassadors of France and Great Britain, the deputies of the States General, and the deputies of the King of Spain and the Archdukes, touching the commerce of the Indies.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

[1609, March.]—"Discours sur la navigation de la mer en la rivière d'Anvers, lors que les ports de la costé de Flandres se pourront librement frequenter par toultes nations estrangères."

French, 3 pp.

1609, April 9, Antwerp.—Certificate by the Ambassadors of Great Britain and the deputies of the States General, that the deputies of the Archdukes have declared that the heirs (héritiers) of the late Prince d'Espinoy are comprised in a certain article of the Treaty, restoring goods which had been confiscated, &c.

Copy, French, 1 p.

[1609, April.]—Memorandum of alterations in certain articles of the Truce, especially with respect to the commerce of the Indies, the coasts of the Mediterranean and of Barbary, the Straits of Gibraltar, and the Canary Isles.

Copy, French, 1 p.

1609, April 9.—Declaration of the Ambassadors of France and Great Britain touching the limits of the said commerce.

Copy, French, 1 p.

[1609, April.]—Article for commerce between the subjects of the Archdukes and those of the States.

Copy, French, 2 pp.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1609, April 10 (?), Antwerp.—Certificate by the French Ambassadors appointed to make truce with their Highnesses [the Archdukes], that the States General have promised that no innovation in religion shall be made in the "villages qui sont du resort des villes des Provinces Unies situez en Brabant," &c.

Copy, French.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to SPENSER and WINWOOD.

1609, April 10, o.s., Liehrott (sic).—Congratulates them on the conclusion of the truce for twelve years, after an internecine war of forty years. The success of this intricate negotiation has covered them with honour and glory. Is rejoiced to learn that they are now turning their attention to the affairs of Friesland. Asks for a settlement of his cause. His deputies will soon be at the Hague.

Latin.

1609, April 12, o.s., Liehrott.—Sends to them his councillors Thomas Franzius, chancellor, and Dothias Wyardt. Wishes them to settle the affairs of himself and his province as they think most advantageous and honourable.

Latin.

KING JAMES I. to the STATES GENERAL.

1609, April 15, Palace of Westminster.—It has been represented by the Ambassador of the Archduke residing here that an English ship called the Darling, laden in Portsmouth harbour with artillery belonging to the Archduke, had been pursued and taken at a quarter of a mile from Deal Castle by Cornelius Johnson, master of a ship called le Cheval marin of Zealand, and taken to Flushing, where the artillery was sold. This is an affront to the King, committed within the limits of his realm, and is contrary to the rules established by the King touching lawful prizes. Expects restitution to be made.

French, signed by the King at foot.

Copy of the same, without date.

— VAN SANTEN (?) to WINWOOD.

1609, April 22.—Sends him certain moneys. The rest of his order shall be accomplished.

French.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1609, May 5, from Sir Fra. Goodwin's house near Westminster School.—This house is in readiness to receive Winwood and his staff as soon as he comes. Has done some repairs to the house and garden. Mr. Dean's spleen is great towards Sir Francis, but it is placable by rewards, and Winwood may get the lease at a reasonable rate. Cannot learn that any man has been nominated to succeed Winwood. Has written to Mr. Bull and Mr. Haughfen for a coach. "You will perceive by this enclosed note (which Mr. Venable did very kindly afford you for Sir Ri. Spencer's sake) that Mr. H. Ball hath acknowledged fine and recovery of his land in the west country." The Lord Treasurer has signed the order for Jan., Feb., March, and April. Will place the money carefully. Mr. E. Plumer delivered what he promised to John Jollin at Middelborg, for Winwood's use.

Holograph. Seal.

LORD FENTON* to WINWOOD.

1609, May 6, the Court, Whitehall.—Has learnt from his servant that Winwood is very careful in his (the writer's) business with the States; and that he will look up such papers and instructions as he received heretofore from the writer's noble predecessor Sir Edward Norreys. Is already bound to Winwood by what he has done on behalf of his brother. Mr. Danckard followed the account for his predecessor.

* Thomas Erskine, Viscount Fenton,

Seal. Endorsed by Sawyer: From Sir R Naunton (sic).

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1609, May 7, Whitehall.—The Lord Viscount Fenton, in right of his wife, executrix of Sir Edward Norris, demands money due from the States to Sir Edward. Sir Noël Caron has undertaken to deal with them herein, and the King desires Winwood to join him in obtaining satisfaction.

E. [LORD] ZOUCHE TO WINWOOD.

1609, May 9, "at Savoy."—The bringer hereof, having long followed the wars of the Low Countries, and borne some private place of command there, fears to be discharged of his service on the confirmation of the peace. If so, he sues for a pension. He was Zouche's household servant, and hath been maimed of an eye during his service there.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

[1609?] 1605 (sic), May 14, [Sa]lisbury House.—Has not written frequently of late, as Winwood's letters required no answer.

[The Archdukes'] Ambassador "insisted principally on these two points —for levying men for the Archdukes' service, and for to have us trade into their parts, without which they were merely frustrated of the benefit of the peace. In the first, they proposed to raise . . . men in England, 1500 in Scotland, and 500 in I[rela]nd; wherein they moved not only for an underhand permission (as before the States had done), but sought to engage us further, by drawing us to approve and publicly to countenance their levy in the manner as they proposed it, which was to have it done by striking of drums and displaying of ensigns; a matter both unusual in these parts, and little sorting with the peaceable disposition of his Majesty's subjects. . . . His Majesty had just reason to take exception to the manner and form, though in the substance he could not deny them that liberty which he had permitted to others, so as the matter were carried privately, and without drawing great troops and numbers together. And as for the General whom [th' Am]bassador had named for the English, Sir Charles Percy; his Majesty was unwilling to let him go, because he had purposed to make use of him another way, and therefore left it to th' Ambassador's choice to find out any other for that employment; whereupon th' Ambassador hath since named Sir Edward Stanley for the English, and the Earl Hume for the Scots. But whether it be that they agree not in the conditions among themselves, or [that] they misdoubt they shall not be able to raise [so] many voluntaries, or may want means safely to transport them over seas, I cannot tell, but for anything I do perceive they go but slowly forward in it.

"Concerning the other point of trade, we were fitly prepared to make them see the great care we have had in that business, by offering unto their consideration the . . . wherewith I have acquainted you, and an . . . withall, for freeing of the narrow seas of all kind of hostility betwixt them and the States; but this later (sic) was at first but little tasted by them, because they feared the States would then employ all their ships of war upon the coasts of Spain or upon the Indies; * * * * *

Mutilated. Endorsed by Sawyer: 1609.

SIR HENRY NEVILL TO SIR RAFE WINWOOD.

1609, Aug. 13, Eaton.—“Being come to Eaton upon a summons from Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer,* and finding so good an opportunity as the return of young Sir Henry Savill to London, I was willing to take it, to salute you and take my leave by letter, seeing I cannot do it in person, by reason of a commission which I am now presently to attend. . . . I am sorry you are prevented in the purchase of Arborfeld. I despair of any other near me that will be worthy of you.”

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1609, Sept. 2, Kensington.—This gentleman, Sir Robert Yaxley, is repairing into those parts for the recovery of some moneys due to him. He has done good service for his country.

Seal.

ERNEST, MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG, and WOLFGANG WILLIAM, COUNT PALATINE OF THE RHINE, to [WINWOOD], Lord Ambassador.

1609, Sept. 9, Dusseldorp.—“Post scriptum.” Report rumours of military preparations by Archduke Albert. Troops have been brought into the Duchy of Cleves and Juliers. Suspect the intentions of the Emperor and Albert.

Latin.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, TO WINWOOD.

1609, Sept. 29, Lierord.—Sends an account of the “tragedy” which has been enacted towards him, and complains of those who have endeavoured to prevent peace being established between himself and his faithful subjects. Is grateful for the powerful intervention of the King of Great Britain. Denies the accusation made by his adversaries that he intended to call the Spanish army to his aid.

Latin.

JOHN MORE TO WINWOOD.

1609, Oct. 3, London.—(This letter is printed by Sawyer, III. 80, but the date is given incorrectly as 8 Oct., and the following postscript is omitted.)

[P.S.] “As I was yesterday in the middle of removing to my house in the Old Bayley, I understood of the infection lately come to some houses there adjoining, so as I forbear to go thither, for the respect I bear to those with whom I am to negotiate your affairs, as much as for mine own safety; though being dispossessed of my former house, I know not whither to go. Your Lordship therefore may be pleased to address your letters to Mr. Alex. Serle’s house until I shall be somewhere settled.”

Holograph. Seal.

THE MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG and the COUNT PALATINE OF THE RHINE TO WINWOOD.

1609, [Oct. 4,] 4 non. Octob., Dusseldorp.—Are anxiously expecting his arrival in this town. The assembly (comitia) is shortly to be held here, to deliberate on the safety of these provinces. The ambassadors (legati) of the Empire and of the Electors also wish to communicate with him; and no doubt the ambassadors of France and Denmark will desire the same when they arrive.

* Sir Fulke Greville.

P.S.—Send writings showing that the Emperor has no cause to complain of any injury. Copies should be sent to the King.

Latin.

SIXTUS V. AMAMA, Syndic, to SIR (Domino) RALPH WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[c. 1609?] * Oct. 24, Emd[en].—Prays him to obtain from the Count a favourable answer to the petition of his (the Count's) subjects.

Holograph, Latin. Seal of arms.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1609, Oct. 25, Dusseldorp.—His coming is greatly desired, as also that of the French ambassador, especially as a pourparler has been arranged with the troops (gens) of Archduke Leopold. Refers to the Princes of the Em[pire].

Holograph, French, mutilated.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1609, Dec. 3, Whitehall.—“It is not unknown unto you what favour the States had promised to Sir Thomas Gates, upon his suit made unto them a little before his departure for Virginia, for continuing his company one whole year after, in respect of that employment; whereof to give him the better assurance, as I understand, they confirmed their promise by a solemn Act of Council. It may be there shall be no cause for his friends to challenge them of unmindfulness; nevertheless, there being now a report of a purpose the States have to make a general cast of divers English companies there, it is feared he may be included in that generality, if some course be not taken to prevent it in the mean time. . . . He is not retired from their service for any private occasions of his own, but for an enterprise of plantation in the Indies, where I am persuaded they would be glad the King of England and other Christian Princes might have a settling as well as the King of Spain.”

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1609, Dec. 8, Dusseldorp.—Has received his letter, giving no hopes of his coming. The King [of France] has promised assistance to these Princes. Hostilities have commenced. Archduke Leopold gives out that he seeks a personal conference with the Princes, by command of the Emperor, but fraud is suspected.

Holograph, French.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1609, Dec. 18, Whitehall.—Desires him to obtain six months' further leave for Capt. Blondeville, who is compelled to stay longer from his company there than he intended; the King having some interest in the cause.

Seal.

[WINWOOD TO COUNT MAURICE OF ORANGE] (Monseigneur).

[c. 1609?]*—Has been more moderate in his demand for reparation of the wrong done to the King's subjects by his Excellency's people (gens), than the atrocity of the deed required. After so many promises of satisfaction from his Excellency, his Council has referred the writer to the [Dutch] Admiralty, instead of performing the word of a prince. Notifies that he intends to take all possible measures to secure the rights of these poor people.

Draft, French, in Winwood's hand. (See p. 63?).

SIR ROBERT MANSELL.

[1609?]*—His answer to objections made to his suit by the Prince's † Commissioners.

He desires 200 marks per annum in fee-farm of the lands late the Earl of Somerset's in the county of Durham, under certain conditions, viz.—to hold of the Manor of Brauncepeeth; to except mines of coal and lead; and as to the value of the wood of Whittworth.

EMDEN AND EAST FRIESLAND. ‡

[1609?].—Statement of the reasons why [the citizens of Emden] desire [Winwood] to obtain the Count's consent to the removal of the convention to "another place."

Latin, 3 pp. Endorsed: Recensentur causæ ob quas petunt Emdani conventum, &c.

[1609?].—Paper headed, "Liquidatio debitorum quibus Emdani Suae Celsitudini obstricti sunt."

Latin, 4 pp.

[1609?].—Paper beginning, "Per novissimas nostras turbas concertatum fuit inter Principem et subditos Suae Celsitudinis."

Latin, 6 pp., decayed. Endorsed: Articuli de ærario, &c.

[1609?].—"Discours de la Seigneurie d'Ost Freeze."

French, 7 pp.

[1609?].—"Ad pacis articulos propositos finalis resolutio."

Latin, 4 pp.

[1609?].—"Articuli xviii quos Emdani cum administratoribus collectarum in Ostfrisia, pro ipsorum assecuratione, antequam ad ulteriora deveniatur, ab Ill<sup>mo</sup> Comite accipi omnino postulant."

Latin, 14 pp.

[1609?].—23 Articles proposed [by the Count] at the conference held by authority of the King of Great Britain.

Latin, 12 pp.

[1609?].—Form of a general safeconduct to be granted by the Consuls, Senate, and others of the city of Emden to all persons attending the public conference which the Count has appointed to be held there on the 18th inst. § with an attestation at the end by Ambassador Winwood and the deputies of the United Provinces.

Latin, 7 pp.

* In Vol. 11.

† Henry, Prince of Wales.

‡ These papers are arranged in Vol. 6, at the end of the year 1609, old style, probably because they were supposed to belong to that year.

§ Qu. see 21 Sept. 1610.

[1609?].—“Enumeratio Emdensium contra articulos Hagensis tractatus contraventionum quarundam.”

Latin, 20 pp.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1609[-10], Jan. 15, Whitehall.—His Majesty has been pleased to make choice of this gentleman* to succeed his brother in the government of the Brill. His Majesty purposes to signify this by his own letters to the States, but is now at Royston, and wishes it to be imparted to Mons. Barnevelt and others.

JOHN MORE TO WINWOOD.

1609[-10], Feb. 2, London.—Has paid Mr. Abel 20*l.* to Mr. Bourgesse[’s] use. Sends by the bearer, Jan Janson, a pair of stockings. Yesterday the Lord Treasurer gave order for the payment of Winwood’s entertainments, whereby his dispatch for Cleves will be accelerated. Mentions Crispe and Turner, Sir Perss. Willoughbie, Sir Thomas Bodley, Lord Spencer, Sir Wm. Killigrey, and Captain Blondel, in connexion with money matters, and loans to be made by Winwood.

Holograph. Seal.

KING JAMES I. to the STATES GENERAL.

[1610?] Feb. 18.—Has often, during the past three or four years, recommended to them the affairs of the Count of Embden, but without much advantage to him. Understands that after he has remained with them three months, he has been referred to another conference to be held at Groninghen. Has ordered the Ambassador Winwood to betakè himself thither, and assist in settling the matter to the Count’s honour. It is one in which kings and princes are interested, and the writer particularly, his children being nearly related to those of the Count.

Copy, French.

JOHN MORE TO WINWOOD.

1609[-10], Feb. 27, London.—“That point of your Lordship’s letter that showed the great reason you had to linger yet awhile in the Haghe, causeth me to hasten these few lines after my former of the 24th, to advertise, that though in that letter, upon Mr. Levinus’ speeches, I signified the expectation here of your speed to Cleves, now, upon the reasons of the unreadiness of the States’ deputies, and the continuance of the Halle assembly (without touching your particular respect to my Lady’s condition), I have drawn from him this his direct opinion, that your Lordship shall do best of all to attend where you are the answer of your last despatch, so that the States’ deputies go not to Duisseldorp before you.

“The answer of that last dispatch will be deferred for a few days, whilst the records be sought, to confer the States’ entertainment of 4,000 men with the accustomed pay of this land, as willing to follow the most thrifty precedent.

“I delivered yesterday your Lordship’s letter to Sir Thomas Edmons.”

Holograph. Seal.

---

* Probably Sir Horace Vere.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND to WINWOOD.

1610 [n.s.],* March 10, o.s., Lierort.—Complains of the destruction of houses and depredations at Aurick by his rebellious subjects, in which the troops of the States General took part. Encloses the form of an oath exacted from the citizens there.

Latin.

The Oath above referred to.

Latin and Dutch.

ERNEST, MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG, to WINWOOD.

1610 [March 11], 5 id. Mart., Dusseldorp.—Has received his letters dated at the Hague, 15 cal. Mart., whereby he announces that he has been instructed to make a journey to the writer, whose affairs urgently require it. Desires he will come at once without waiting for the company of the Ambassador of the States General.

Latin.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1609[-10], March 17, London.—“I went to Fulham with your letter, at the reading whereof my Lady Bodley showed as much joy as a good mother could do at the happiness of her beloved daughter. The next day my Lady Neville received from my hands your other letter; . . . both wishing the babe all health and happiness. . . . Sir Tho. Bodley is newly recovered of a tertian ague, whereof he had seven fits.” Refers to money matters in connexion with H. Balan, Mr. Bowdler, Mr. Bennett, Sir Calist. Brooke, Ensign G. Yorke, Mr. Ducie, Mr. Millett, Sir Rob. Terrill, Mr. Richardson, the sale of the Fleet, Mr. Garland, Mr. Harris (a merchant), Lord Mongomerie’s sureties, Sir Tho. Griffeth, —— Clare, Mr. Mandevil (Mr. Bennett’s man at Middleborg), Wm. Caldwell† (Winwood’s “stuard in the Haghe”), and Sir Tho. Edmonds.

Holograph. Seal.

[SIR RALPH WINWOOD to the EARL OF SALISBURY.]

[1609-10, March 24.—This draft letter, undated, is in a very decayed state, but is mostly printed by Sawyer, who however omits the last paragraph, which follows.]

“Th’ Ambassadors for France departed hence yesterday; they go by land through the Archd[uke]s’ country, which will prove a journey of charge to the country and of trouble to themselves. They shall be lodged at Parys in the hostel de Gundy, and, as it is reported, defrayed by that King. Those for England meet at the Briel, to embark there on Wednesday (?) next. Our merchants themselves will be their own solicitors to your Lordship, for th’ observation of the treaty will concern the trade, and namely that” * * *

Holograph, incomplete.

Fair copy of a portion of the same letter.

Endorsed by Sawyer: 24 March, 1609-10.

LORD CHANCELLOR ELLESMERE to WINWOOD.

1610, March 25, York House.—Thanks for kindness shown to Sir Tho. Panton.

* In Vol. 7.

† “Colwall,” elsewhere.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1610, March 28, London.—“ Mr. Levinus desires (for his justification) that I should ascertain you of this truth : that the clause which you shall find in my Lord Treasurer’s present dispatch to this effect (it seems you have not dealt so effectually with the States about the choice of the 4,000 men for the Cleve service as was expected you should have done upon the directions you received to that purpose) was not so set down by him in the first draft, but added since with my Lord’s own hand, as (indeed) I have seen it in the authentic minute. It seems his Lordship hath an especial regard to Sir John Ogle’s reputation, whose mother, my Lord Bourley’s natural sister, makes Sir John as near a cousin to his Lordship as is Sir Ed. Cecill. These doubts, I thought, were founded upon Colonel Ogle’s fears (neither was my word fear to be ill taken, for timor infamiae might cadere in fortem), but I nothing doubted of your strict observance of your instructions, and that you did with equal balance affect the honour of them all; yet that it was a hard matter to give them contentment in such punctilles, which had little other ground than in their several imaginations, the men of war of this age in no sort agreeing among themselves how to describe or limit this point of honour. For the companies now to be chosen, those are the fittest for thrift which lie nearest to Cleves; for the States’ Ambassador hath given the King plainly to understand that his Majesty is to pay the soldiers from their several garnisons unto the place of their service.

“ Sir Tho. Edmonds doth diligently prosecute your joint suit of naturalisation. He doth especially affect (and to that purpose hath he drawn a Bill) to get a general Act for all children that shall be born to men in the King’s service and pay; or, if that will not pass, to have a general Act for his children and yours which are already born and shall be hereafter born to either of you during any your employment in the King’s affairs; or, if that cannot be obtained, to let all alone, and stand to all adventures, wherein Sir H. Neville and he both do think there is very little or no danger. I have told him that I will be ready to furnish your part of the cost, and that I presume you will be content to run the same fortune with him. I cannot judge of my Lord’s secret purposes, but I conceive Sir Tho. Edmonds to be more inclined to the French employment than to stay at home. He now doth write only the French letters, and now and then get a letter signed, which in my poor opinion will hardly give him maintenance, much less set him out of the debt of 1,200*l.* wherein his late purchase of 5,000*l.* hath cast him.

“ Sir Thomas Bodley is now in hand to buy a lease, for which purpose he makes account to use all or the most part of the moneys I have now received for these three months’ entertainment, for a month, 2 or 3. You have a judgment for Sir Tho. Griffeth’s debt, which doth assure it, though (to avoid the clamour of hard dealing and our farther expense) we forbear the execution for a while. Mr. Richardson hath received Mr. Carpenter’s Michaelmas rent, and will clear it at his next coming to this town.

“ The people’s forerunning rumour of my Lord Compton’s madness is now become a plain truth. My Lord Chamberlain* hath the grant of that which may accrue unto the King during his lunacy, and letters of administration are jointly granted to his Lordship and the Earl of Worcester. The old Lady Spencer died yesterday morning, and the Lady Compton is almost brought into Hecuba’s predicament by the redoubling of her griefs on all hands. I now send your Lordship another pair of stockings, the very best I can get of a russet colour in this town. I likewise send to Wm. Colwall the two bills of exchange, according to the promise of my former letter."

* The Earl of Suffolk.

Holograph. Seal.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1610, April 6, the Court at Whitehall.—“Forasmuch as his Majesty hath been graciously pleased to interpose himself by his letters to the States (which herewithall you shall receive) on the behalf of the Lord of Buckclugh, desiring their good interpretation of his absence for some time from his Regiment there; the blame whereof his Majesty is contented to assume unto himself in respect of his commandment to the said Lord of Buckclugh to attend the Parliament in Scotland now at hand, where he shall have special occasion to use his service: I am commanded by his Majesty to recommend his cause to your particular care, requiring you so to assist him in the same as his Majesty’s mediation may not be fruitless, who finds no cause to doubt but that for his sake he shall be the better respected.”

KING JAMES I. TO WINWOOD.

[1610,] 8 James I., April 25, Palace of Westminster, under the Signet.—His servant Sir James Areskyne, knight, after some time spent here, is returning to that country, with letters of commendation to the States General, his absence having been the longer in regard of some service in Scotland. Desires them to use his service in any troubles among their neighbours; or, if they have no occasion to use him, to licence him to repair hither to attend the King.

Signed at the top.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, TO THE DEPUTIES OF THE STATES GENERAL [at Emden].

1610, May 14, Lihrott (sic).—Replies to articles communicated to his councillors at Emden.

Copy, Latin, 5 pp.

W. TRUMBULL TO [WINWOOD?].

[1610, May 22–] June 1, n.s., Bruxelles.—Advertised his Lordship on 13th of last month, of the Archduke Leopold’s arrival in this town. The bearer is “the Ordinary of the Hague.” Is assured of the remittal of 400,000 crowns from Spain to Antwerp. Remarks on religious and military matters, Juliers, Cleves, France, the Emperor, &c. On Friday last there was a running at tilt for his (Leopold’s) entertainment, and nothing more memorable therein than two or three falls which happened to some of the forwardest gallants of our Court.*

[P.S.]“The letter which your Lordship was pleased to write unto me by Mr. Chandler is safely come to my hands. I am silent in advertising your Lordship as well of my master† his departure from London towards France, as of the false bruits which were eurrent here the last week, of certain new murthers committed upon the persons of his

* A copy of the first portion of this letter is printed in Sawyer, III. 172, under date of 21 May 1610, from another collection.

† Sir Thomas Edmondes. See Sawyer, III. 179.

Majesty, the King of Denmark, the M[arquis] of Brandeb[urg], and C[ount] Maurice: your Lordship having the certainty of the former from England, and of your own experience knowing the latter to be feigned."

Holograph. Endorsed by Sawyer; 1610.

LORD BUCCLEUCH TO WINWOOD.

1610, June 27, Branxhelme.—Has received three letters from Winwood, two by his own servant John Clerck. Thanks him for performing what was committed to him by his Majesty, by obtaining a further leave of absence for the writer from the States. Has written to Sir Edward Cecill, and asks Winwood's favour, touching the disposal of the vacant places in the companies of the writer's regiment, which shall be under Cecill's charge in this his employment in Cleve. "There is no other thing, for the present, in this northern part of the country worthy your knowledge, save that in this late assembly of our churchmen, at Glasgow, the agreement betwixt the bishops and ministers is well advanced, for bringing the church discipline and government here, to a conformity with that of yours in England."

Signed: Bukclughe. Large seal of arms.

[LORD BUCCLEUCH] TO SIR EDWARD CECILL.

1610, June 27, Branxhelme.—"Seeing it hath been his Majesty's pleasure to make use of such number of his subjects, of your nation and ours, as his Highness has destined at the first for the secours of the Princes of Germany, of them that were in the States' service, for the time; and that it hath pleased his Majesty to make choice of yourself to command them in the foresaid expedition; as I did in person at Court, so do I now again by my letters, congratulate with you for the same, as one that loves you, and honours you; but that which now doth furnish more subject, is that seeing there is [are] so many companies taken out of the regiments of both the nations as may make up the number, and that as they are for the time to be paid by his Majesty, so they are to have both their commanders in chief and high officers, by new commissions from his Majesty; and any captains upon occasion of death, or the faults of them that are in the course of the employment, are to be made by the same authority also; and for that it may be his Majesty's pleasure, upon occasion of the continuance of that war, either to receive them still in his service or suffer them to return again to the condition of service they were in with the States, and under their own commanders (as I do think rather the last), of which number myself being one, I am to entreat you, so long as the matter shall remain in uncertainty, that you would favour me so much, upon the vacancy of any place, if they must needs be kept full, through the exigence of the service, and without the intermission of any time, as that the next officer in succession may have the place, because I know the most part of them to be well qualified. Some few exceptions there are, the which, upon occasion, if you will do me the favour, I will desire Sir Robert Henrysoun to inform you of," &c.

Refers to him the decision of the controversy between Captain Bothvell and Lieutenant Prestoun. Requests him to continue his favour to Sir Robert Henrysoun and Sir William Balfour, and to extend it to the rest of the captains and officers of "our nation," for which the writer and his "camarad" Sir William Brog will be grateful.

Copy, enclosed in preceding.

JOHN MORE to [WINWOOD].

1610, July 5, London.—His letters of 24 June by Sir Wm. Browne were delivered on the 2nd. Mentions money matters, in connexion with Lady Winwood, Middleborg, Amsterdam, Mr. Edw. Bennet, and Zelande. ‘Upon Friday last I went to see Sir Ant. Cope’s land in Surrey, lying in the Forest within seven miles of Winsor, mentioned in my last letter by Shelton. I find the way thither to be very good for a coach; the offices to the house, as barn, stables, brewhouse, bakehouse, dairyhouse, kitchen, butteries, and cellars, to be very fitting and convenient. The dwelling-house, built for the most part of brick, hath below stairs, besides the kitchen, &c., a common hall, and two parlours wainscotted; above stairs, five chambers with chimneys, and five other less chambers without chimneys, lying like lobbies unto them; and over all, a garret. There is neither orchard nor garden of any account, but convenient plots of ground, about the house, to make of (sic) both very pleasurable. The land consists of two sorts: a park, which is part corn field, and part a warren of coneyes, very barren; rented together with the house for 140*l.* the year; and some lower grass grounds, without the pale, rented for 60*l.*; in all, 200*l.* the year upon the rack. Sir Anthony hath already sold all the wood for 600*l.*; the timber is cut and carried away, and so is the most part of the rest; only there remains here and there a crooked or small oak, and a few hawthorn bushes, which must likewise be cut away, unless we buy them back. The land likewise is in lease to two tenants, that have paid no fine, for 18 years to come. The price that Sir Anthony demands is 16 years’ purchase, and under 15 I presume it will not be had. It is situate in a vast black heath, four miles from the Thames, two furlongs from those five or six country houses that are the next neighbours, and a mile from the church. The tenure is socage, and the seller a sufficient though a hard man. If the trees yet standing may be suffered to remain upon reasonable consideration, they may serve, within a few years, together with two small coppices thereunto belonging, to furnish the house in some indifferent manner. I humbly attend your Lordship’s resolution, whether you affect to buy it? Then whether you will let so long leases as 18 or 20 years? (for if you buy it, we insist that Sir Anthony shall take in the leases, and put you in possession) or otherwise, how you will be pleased to dispose of it? And, in case of leasing, whether you will reserve the house, or the better part of it, and the garden plots, and other waste ground, and the moat about the house, to fashion it according to your Lordship’s or my Lady’s fancy, for your private use, or what other conditions you will be pleased to have inserted in the leases.”

Refers to other money matters and loans in connexion with Turner, Mr. Paramor, Sir John Leigh (Sir William Killegrei’s son-in-law), Mr. Sergent, and Mr. Francklin.

“His Majesty doth resolve to send forth a fleet to take such ships of the Hanses as they can find in the narrow seas; such small proportion of their goods as remains in the Styllard (sic) and other places of this town, is seized on by the Lord Mayor; and Sir Stephen Lessieur is to be sent for that purpose) to the Emperor, from the King, but at the merchants’ charge. There is no doubt but we may right ourselves in time, yet in the meanwhile the trade is interrupted, and a great number of our merchants in much pain, through the forbearance of so great sums of money as there (in this interim) are detained.

“Within four or six days Mons. de Buvinckhusen shall have his dispatch, and thereupon shall letters be sent you from my Lord Treasurer,* advertising the effect of his late negotiation. He speaks of a gentleman of quality to be sent to his Majesty, to certify him of the place where your treaty shall be held; which is not here well tasted, because it would bring a charge, and lay us too open in the eye of the world; yet was it, on the other side, plainly disliked, when the Prince of Anhalt did balk this place, at his going into France. The Earl of Southampton hath been in speech to go extraordinary Ambassador into France, but my Lord Wotton is now designed."

* The Earl of Salisbury.

Holograph.

JOHN MORE TO WINWOOD.

1610, July 28, London.—"My last letter to your Lordship was of the 19th of this month by one Captain Endsor, who carried you the packet of Mons. Buvineckhusen's late negotiation with his Majesty. . . . Mr. Levinus tells me that you are likely to tarry from the Hague a far longer time than you project, because it is resolved that when the Princes * shall have gotten their possession, there shall forthwith another assembly be held either at Duisseldorp, or in some other place in those parts, for the further establishment of their affairs. . . . Your Lordship doth now well understand how Mons. Lessieur was dispatched long before this bearer could here arrive with your letters, and therefore I retain your last to Mr. Lev[inu]s, and bury that motion in deep silence, learning only thereby how to carry myself hereafter if the like occasion chance to happen."

Refers to money matters in connexion with Lady [Winwood], Shelton, Mr. Richardson, and Sir Tho. Bodly. Sir John Rawlins wishes to mortgage a good parcel of land near the Thames' side, in Essex.

"Mr. Carelton (sic) doth now write the particulars of the Parliament and of his embassy. Your Lordship understands from a better hand than mine how France doth still bandy in factions, the Co[unt] Soyssons having hitherto had the worst end of the staff; by being deprived of the government of Normandy, by the Parliament of Paris['] acknowledgment of the Prince of Condé to stand in his rang [rank] of chief prince of the blood, and by his late loss of a great process, the sentence whereof they say that Court hastened against him in requital of the pains he took at the King's funeral to prefer the Bishop of Paris before them in their different [difference] of precedence."

[P.S.] "Mr. G. Calvert was sworn Clerk of the Council on Sunday last; and his man Ed. Sherborn hath a share of his former business, but with the title of my Lord's Clerk of his Entries."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

FREDERICK ELECTOR PALATINE TO WINWOOD.

1610, Aug. 8, Heidelberg.—Has been requested by the King of Great Britain, by letter, to send him securely a certain person† arrested by the writer's officers of Bretta. Finding no shorter way, has ordered him to be conducted to Dusseldorff, and to be placed in Winwood's hands. Mentions his ambassador in England, the Sieur de Plessen.

French; decayed. Seal.

* The Princes of the Union, in Germany. See Sawyer, III. 163, 164, 357.

† William Baldwin, Jesuit. See S.P. Domestic.

S. S. to [WINWOOD].

1610, Aug. [9-] 19, n.s., B.—Gives details of military affairs in the Netherlands, and sends them by Mr. Albury. "I am assured by letters from Paris that our league with France is perfected, I mean that of England. My Lady Edmondes is arrived at Bullen, but not as yet come to Paris. Sir D. Carleton, as the Archduke's agent writeth hither, is more like to have the employment of Venice than Flanders." Refers to proposals touching the town of Juliers, and its siege.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY TO WINWOOD.

1610, Aug. 10, from the Court.—Recommends the bearer, once his servant, now the King's, who desires to spend some months in foreign parts. He intends to pass on to the Leagner before Juliers, and thence into Germany, returning through France. Requests Winwood to counsel him in his passage "through that unquiet corner of Christendom."

Seal.

JOHN DICKENSON TO WINWOOD.

1610, [Aug. 14] postridie idus Augusti, Haga-Comitis (the Hague).—Winwood's letters have been intercepted; this is said to have been done by "milites Anglos, ex præsidio Rhinbergensi." A rumour is spread that the Archduke is about to move, but no one believes it. Refers also to Juliers, Count Maurice, and Embden. Has had a letter from the Earl of Salisbury. Hears that "Mewtæus" has died, greatly in debt.

Holograph, Latin. Seal.

SIR GRI[FFIN] MARKHAME TO [WINWOOD].

1610, Aug. 15.—Gives an account of the siege of "this town" [Juliers] by "the Frises," the French, and the English. Henry Stratford and Lieutenant Sutton (who was slain) were remarkable for their valour. Has been daily expecting Winwood's arrival. Desires Mous. Hotman may be acquainted with this news, and that the French are near Duren (?).

Holograph. Endorsed by Sawyer: From Marsham.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

1610, Aug. 19.—"The Treaty made in London with the French Ambassador La Boderie; for mutual defence, intercourse of trade, and prevention of piracies." 37 articles.

Copy, Latin, 15 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Printed in Rymer, vol. 16th.

GERMANY.

1610, [Aug. 31-] Sept. 10, Prague.—Treaty (Abhandlung) between the Emperor Rudolph V. and King Matthias of Hungary.

Copy, German, 6 pp.

GERMANY AND FRANCE.

1610, Sept. [2-] 12, Heydleberg.—Letter from the Marquis of Brandenburg, the Duke of Wirtemberg, and the Marquis of Baden to the Queen Regent of France, referring to the death of the King of France, and to that of the Elector Palatine; and recommending certain affairs which will be proposed to her by the ambassador of the Elector of Brandenburg.

Also a similar letter to the King of France.

Copies, French.

PRINCE MAURICE OF NASSAU TO WINWOOD.

1610,* Sept. [2 ?-] 12, "de ce quartier."—Touching a disagreement which has arisen between the Sieurs de Malven (?) and de Herbert, &c. French ; decayed.

JO. DICKENSON TO WINWOOD (at Cologne).

1610, [Sept. 16-] 16 cal. Octobris, the Hague (Hagâ Comitis).—Refers to the illness of Mons. Barnevelt, the negotiations between the States General and "the Princes," the intervention of Winwood and Sir [E.] Cecil, the mission of deputies by the [people] of Emden, and the expected arrival of Count Maurice. Lady [Winwood] and the children and family are well.

Holograph, Latin. Seal.

MR. LEVIN[US MUNCK ?] to [MONS. WALMERODE].

[1610, Sept.] 17, London.—You will understand from the Lord Treasurer's letter the King's intention to proceed to the conclusion of the defensive league with your Princes, &c. It will be desirable that some one should come here on their part. Mr. Winwood will have ample power for the treaty.

Copy, French.†

JO. DICKENSON TO WINWOOD.

1610, [Sept. 19-] 13 cal. Octobris, [the Hague].—Refers to Baldwin, Borlase, Rotterdam, Brill, M. Barnevelt, D. Verius [Sir Horace Vere ?], M. de Bie, and D. Gilpina [Mrs. Gilpin ?].

Holograph, Latin ; decayed. Seal.

WINWOOD TO PRINCE [ENNO, OF EAST FRIESLAND].

[1610,]* Sept. 21, Emden (Emda vestra).—Caused the deputies of the States General to propound to the Senate of the City the "caution" prescribed by the Prince, but not one man could be found to approve it. Mentions objections to several towns proposed as the meeting-place for negotiations. No place is fitter than Emden. Promises security for all persons attending the assemblies there.

Draft, Latin, in Winwood's hand, and signed by him.

CHRISTIAN, PRINCE OF ANHALT, TO WINWOOD.

1610, Sept. 28, Hambach.—Refers to the articles of pacification. The decease of the Elector Palatine will change the face of public affairs. Is writing to the King of Great Britain, and will send the letter to the General "Cecil" [Sir Edward Cecil].

French.

[SIR] H[ORACE] VERE TO WINWOOD.

1610, Oct. 7, Hague.—"I do send your Lordship here inclosed what Sir Thomas Gates sent me of his troublesome and perilous adventures that himself, with those that were with him, hath past. . . . His

* In Vol. 11.

† This is written on the back of the copy of the Lord Treasurer's letter, of 19 Sept., printed by Sawyer, III. 220. Both these copies are in the handwriting of Mons. Walmerode, and appear to have been enclosed in his letter of 8/18 October, with a copy of the King's letter of 20 September, also printed by Sawyer.

Excellency is come to this town. The Count Harry is gone very privately into France. Mons. Barnivylt keeps his house yet. I have received no letters out of England since my return from the army." . . .

Holograph. Seal.

MONS. B. B. DE WALLMEROD* to WINWOOD.

1610, Oct. 18, Dusseldorff.—Winwood will see, by the copy sent him by the Prince of Anhalt, what the King his master wrote to the late Elector Palatine, and, by the enclosed, what his Majesty wrote to the Duke of Wirtemberg, and [what] the Grand Treasurer [Salisbury] and Levin[us Munck wrote] to Wallmerod. Doubts not but Winwood has received all the necessary commands, and that they have even been redoubled and reconfirmed since the Elector's death, as he has seen what has been written to his Majesty. Desired that the Prince of Anhalt would not depart till Winwood had received his powers, but could not prevail, as the Prince understood that Winwood would not treat with the administrator without new commands, which the Prince could not await, &c. Refers to the return of M[adam]e de Caunier (?) from England. Believes the Prince will go to Prince Maurice at the Hague, and that he will pass into England, to get himself recognised there, and to repair past faults; and perhaps to speak more particularly of our alliance and the administration of the Palatinate. Mons. Hottman will tell Winwood the writer's thoughts on his negotiation at Cologne. The King's reputation is concerned in it.

[P.S.] Has resolved to go to see Winwood.

Holograph, French; decayed.

THE PALATINATE.

1610, [Oct. 22–] Nov. 1, n.s.—Resolution taken by M. Jehan de Thumeri, Sieur de Boissise, ambassador of the King of France, Sir Ralph Winwood, ambassador of the King of Great Britain, and M. Jehan Berck, ambassador of the States General, assembled in the Chamber of the Marquis of Brandenburg, the said Prince with "Monseigneur le Palatin" being present.

Begins: "The first thing which ought to be done is to pass a compromise, and as soon as possible to send to the arbitrators praying them to accept the arbitration." 15 paragraphs.

French, 3 pp.

MONS. DE WALMERODE to WINWOOD (at the Hague).

1610, Nov. 11, Cologne.—Is writing to the Grand Treasurer [Salisbury] and other friends. Is going to Germany to learn the state of affairs. Refers to "the adversaries," the judgment of the Emperor, the Princes in possession, the Kings, the States, &c. Exhorts the Prince of Anhalt to return to Winwood as soon as he has arranged the affairs of Juliers. Wishes Prince Maurice would assign him (Anhalt) a good lieutenant in his absence. Recommends to him the affair of Montbeliard.

Holograph, French. Seal.

THE MERCHANTS ADVENTURERS.

1610, Nov. [8–]18, Prag[u]e.—"The Emperor's Resolution or Decree upon the Embassage of Sir Stephen Lesieur, sent unto him by the King's Majesty."

* i.e. Benjamin Buwneckhausen de Walmerode. (Syllabus of Rymer.)

Whereas grievous complaints have been presented to the Emperor against those English merchants who traffic in Stoad and other places of the Empire, that they traffic contrary to the mandates published in Imperial Diets, his Majesty granted a rescript dated 29 May last, commanding an arrest upon all Englishmen's merchandise, goods, and debts; against which rescript King James by letters and by special ambassador defended the said merchants, and desired that the friendly colloquy or treaty begun at Breme in the time of Queen Elizabeth may be continued. Although no small reasons are offered to induce the Emperor to call back the Indult granted to the English on 29 Sept. 1607, yet, for the increase of peace "between the Dutch nation of the Empire and those of the Crown of England," the Emperor leaves the cause in the same terms as in the Indult, and desires the said colloquy to be resumed at Franckfurt within six months, for which he will depute Commissioners, hoping that this "second day of meeting" will not again end without fruit, and that the King will depute ambassadors with more ample power to determine the complaints of the Hanse Cities and other interested States than was done in the time of the late Queen; in default whereof the Emperor will proceed to execute the mandates against the Company of Merchants Adventurers.

[Mem. at the end:] This Decree was not signed till 12 Dec., nor delivered till the 14th to Sir S. Lesieur, new style. If it had not been signed, further difficulties would have arisen, as the Hanse's agent, having received fresh instructions from his masters lately assembled at Lunemburch, had exhibited a supplication to the Emperor full of bitter complaints and grievances against the Company; and thereupon the Baron of Mynekwytz, by order of the Emperor and his Council, was sent to Lesieur, who refused to answer unless he had a copy of the supplication, which was ordered to be sent him, &c.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD (at the Hague).

1610, Nov. 12, Dusseldorp.—Has heard nothing from him since his departure hence eight days ago. The treaty of Bavaria has been signed sooner than was expected even by the Elector of Cologne, who has caused his bishopric to be comprised in it. Refers to the Protestant Union, the Catholic League, the Count Jan de Nassau, the people of Nassau and Elsass, the Germans, the Marshal de Bouillon, Heydelberg, &c. Sends the treaty of "Hall" asked for by Lord Lisle. Believes Mr. Markam went to the Hague with Winwood. Asks him to send back the P[rince] of Anhalt soon, to give order here.

Holograph, French.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

[1610,] Nov. 29, Whitehall.—His Majesty earnestly desires that Sir James Erskin may receive satisfaction in his suit to the States. "This gentleman" is "brother to a nobleman whom I affect."

Endorsed by Sawyer : 1610.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1610, Dec. 15, London.—(This letter is printed by Sawyer, III. 240, except the following postscript.)

"I have now received ten pounds for R. Way, and Mr. Ed. Love will give him 6*l.* more about Candlemas to set him out of debt, if by that time he shall find him more diligent in writing."

Holograph. Seal.

T. EARL OF SUFFOLK TO SIR RAFE WINWOOD.

[1610?]* Dec. 22, Whitehall.—Thanks for kindness shown to the young Lord of Essex while he was in the Low Countries, and also to Sir Tho. Dutton, who is afraid of either “a casting” or some alteration by reason of the disorder of some of his company.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

PETITION of LOUIS WINTER to the MAGISTRATES OF UTRECHT (Utritix).

[c. 1610?]*—Is an Englishman and a student. Left England two years ago, and went to France, and thence to Switzerland. Is on his return, but in great straits, having been some months longer on the journey than he intended. Asks for aid.

Latin. At the end (signed?): Academicus Oxoniensis, Ludovicus Winterus.

J. VALLENSIS TO SIR RALPH WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[c. 1610?]*—Sends him some pills, with directions. Will call tomorrow.

Holograph, Latin. Seal of arms.

————— to [WINWOOD?].

[1610?]*—The writer states that he formerly fled from the tyrant Alva, out of his own country, into Holland, and there adhered to Count de la Marck? (Marcanus), as a councillor, against the Spaniards. He was sent by that Count to Elizabeth, Queen of England, to ask for aid, and he remained for a year or two at London (Lugduni), where his wife in [15]74 bore him a son, who was baptised in Billingsgate by the name of William, Daniel Rogier [Rogers], the Queen's orator, being one of the sponsors. During his embassy he composed three books, two on the government of bad kings, and the third on the happy administration of the commonwealth under Elizabeth; and he would have published them if he had not been prevented by the wars; but they shall be given to the world, with others of his works. He afterwards entered the service of John, Count of East Friesland, &c. Hearing of [Winwood's?] coming hither to conclude peace, he sends his son to ask his [Winwood's] intercession with Count Enno, for payment of thirteen years' salary due from the Count's father, Count Edtzard. The writer's son is a captain in the service of the United Provinces. He gives particulars of his own services in East Friesland, &c.

Latin, 4 pp.; incomplete.

FRANCE.

1610, . . . , in Parliament.—“Arrest du Roy en Parlement sur la regence de la Royne” (his mother).

French, 14 lines, decayed.

PARIS.

1611,* Jan.—“Questi versi sono stati fatti in nome dell' Ill<sup>mo</sup> Duca Sully sopra il rendimento della Bastilla, fortezza in Parigi, dove è il Tesoro regio, et la ritirata sua della Corte et delle regali facultà, che fa nel mese di Genaro, 1611.”

24 Latin verses, beginning—

O domus, o mihi bisseis arx amplius annis Custodi regnata.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1610[–11], Jan. 17, Whitehall.—“It is not unknown unto you, to what employment this gentleman, Sir Thomas Gates, is chosen. wherein he is contented to abandon his own private, to serve the public. Now because it is conceived that the whole frame of the Plantation doth especially depend upon his personal assistance, being a man well experienced, and otherwise very capable to manage and direct such an enterprise, his Majesty, favouring the good success thereof, for Religion's sake, for his own honour, and for the benefit of his subjects, hath commanded me to signify unto you that in his name you should deal effectually with the States to grant him leave to be absent.” He desires to be absent three years, and not hazard the loss of his company, but it is doubtful whether they will yield to so long a time.

[P.S.] “The sooner you despatch him, the better it will be, because he is very shortly to set forward for Virginia.”

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1611,† Jan. 25, Lihrtort.—Has reached his province after a troublesome journey of six days from the Hague. Finds it more disturbed than ever, &c. Requests him to urge the States to empower the deputies whom they are about to send, to restore order.

Latin. Seal.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1610[–11], Feb. 15, Whitehall.—Recommends Captain Woodhouse, a gentleman capable to do that State good service.

Seal.

GEO. BLUNDELL to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[1611 ?]‡ Feb. 18, o.s., “from my lodging in the Old Bayly.”—Refers to money matters in connexion with the King, Mr. More, Sir Arthur Savage, and the writer's solicitor Gule. Desires two months' further leave. “Here is some speech amongst us of casseering the companies of the G[en]erality, which m[akes] me much troubled to think it should be still my fortune to be in danger every year of being turned out of all that I have. I beseech your Lordship to stand my friend as you have ever done, and if Holland take any companies on, if it be possible to get my company upon that repartition, my mind would be very much quieted. . . . Sir Henry Lea is dead, and hath left Sir Robert Lea's son, of the Forest, with one eye, his heir, and all his lands and goods, but 600*l.* a year to Mrs. Banaster during her life, and no further; and she must put in bands to leave the houses and goods she hath at her death as good as now they are.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

* Arranged under 1612, in Vol. 9.

† In Vol. 9.

‡ In Vol. 11.

JO. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1610[-11, Feb. 26,] 4 cal. Martii, Dusseldorp.—Touching affairs and disputes in Germany, Bohemia, and the Netherlands.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.

JO. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

[1611 ?* March 20,] 13 cal. Aprilis, Dusseldorp.—Affairs of Bohemia, Alsace, the Palatinate, Juliers, Germany, Brussels, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 2 pp., decayed. Seal (a lion rampant).

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1610[-11], March 24, London.—Received his despatch by H. Balam. Mr. Leuius charges the writer to say that the Lord Treasurer desires his stay at the Haghe till he receives the next despatch, as his Lordship conceives “that the broils of Utrecht will not be so soon appeased, that it will be long ere Mons. de Boissise come to Duisseldorp, and that it is questionable whether the Princes will hold any assembly in Cleves before they shall have negotiated some new matter with the Kings by fresh ambassages, which now they are in hand to send. . . . My Lord was somewhat troubled to think that some disgrace might light upon some one of our Colonels, if the States draw not some companies out of every Regiment to make the 4,000 men, but send two entire Regiments of our English, as by your last (it seems) they intend; for so Sir Jo. Ogle (who is not to be commanded by Sir Ed. Cecil) should receive dishonour; but his conclusion was, that sith the Lords had written unto you to prevent that inconvenient, he did presume you would take order for it.”

The Lord Treasurer has allowed Winwood’s entertainments for these three months. Has sent over 200*l.* through Mr. Ducie by Mr. Bennett’s man. Sir Henry Neville is at Pillingbear, but the lease is not yet for sale.

“The Parliament is still busy about the abrogating of the Wards, and the Pourvoyeurs, but as yet they have brought their work unto no shape. Upon Wednesday last (both the Houses being assembled in the Banqueting House at Whitehall) his Majesty made them a speech of two hours long, wherein he showed great learning, admirable memory, and exceeding piety, to the great contentment of all parties; only the most strictly religious could have wished that his Highness would have been more sparing in using the name of God, and comparing the Deity with princes’ sovereignty; yet withall the speech had this plausible conclusion, that howsoever the sovereignty of kings was absolute in general, yet in particular the Kings of England were restrained by their oath and the privileges of the people; and so his Majesty condemned Dr. Cowell’s opinion, who is like to be censured for his † position, whereof I presume your Lordship hath heretofore understood the particulars from a better hand.

“Here flies a common bruit, that Sir Jo. Spencer’s porter lies mad in Bedlam, and that my Lord Compton is distracted, but the truth is only this: The old fellow was for a while distempered by a fright taken at the sudden blaze of the seare cloth, which a wax-chandler of this parish set on fire, by the unadvised touch of a candle, as he was enwrapping the corpse, the back parts whereof by this accident was somewhat scorched; and his Lordship, through long watching, and over-much musing on his new fortunes, hath gotten an ague, the fits whereof ordinarily are accompanied with a kind of frantic humour." Protests that his accounts are correct.

* In Vol. 11.

† “His” is substituted for “that.”

Holograph. Seal.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

1611,* April 15, Court at Roiston.—"The bearer hereof, Peter Kaye, having served the Estates of that country in their war-ships, and there lost one of his hands, they gave unto him a small pension during life, which notwithstanding they have again taken from him." Winwood is to deal for him with the States.

Signed at the top.

SIR THO. SMYTHE to WINWOOD.

1611, April —, London.—"I have received your Lordship's lines, and acquainted the Lords (and the rest of the Council for Virginia) with them, (whereof you are made a member,) who all do return their kind thanks for your love and affection to this worthy Plantation, and for your ready willingness to contribute to the same, the which I have received to the sum of 75*l.*, and delivered a Bill of Adventure for the same. And we do entreat your Lordship's solicitation, and best furtherance, to stir up the rest of those worthy c[omma]nders, that as we have the hopes of good success to be raised amongst them, so we may enjoy the fruits of their [good] wishes in due time, to the upholding of this most honorable work, which now hath need of the assistance of such wor[th]y spirits, who desire the enlargement of Christian religion, to the glory of God, and renown and honour of our King and English nation."

Seal of arms.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

1611, May 31, Manor of Greenwich.—Recommends the bearer, John Young of Edinbrough, to whom certain sums of money are due by the States.

Signed at the top.

[SIR RALPH WINWOOD, SIR EDWARD CECILL, Lord General, and ——— †, Lord Governor of the Bryel,] to ——— ("Sir").

[1611? † June? the Hague.]—Give an account of their efforts to prevent a duel there with swords between Sir John Grey and Sir Henry Hastings, the latter having reported that the difference was compounded by them to the former's dishonour. Sir John was the challenger, and came over accompanied only by Mr. John Davis, a servant of the Prince of Wales, in May. Sir Henry arrived a few days after, and met by chance with Mr. Charles Noël, his neighbour and countryman, born in Leicester. Sir John alleged "many reasons of unkindness, and some hard treatment received from Sir Henry in the country where they both live, but insisted chiefly upon these two points: that at a late meeting in Leicestershire, where Sir Walter Hastings was, after some enquiry and altercation amongst them, Sir John Grey saying he was satisfied, Sir Henry Hastings replied—he took scorn to give him satisfaction; the second, that Sir Henry Hastings should do ill offices to my Lord of Hunt[ingdon], report[ing] that Sir John Grey should say that he hated the * . . . . of the Hastings than to the child which did sleep in the cradle. Some other exceptions Sir John Grey alleged, as a disrespectful letter written by Sir Henry to the Lord Grey, his father; and some words spoken by Sir Henry to the Lady Hastings to his prejudice and dishonour." Sir Henry denied using such words. * * *

* The papers of 1611 are arranged after those of 1612, which are in Vol. 8, while Vol. 9 contains 1611 and 1613.

† Sir Horace Vere?

‡ Arranged under March 1611, in Vol. 7.

Draft, in Winwood's hand, imperfect and damaged; 8 pp.

THE EARL OF BEDFORD to SIR RALPH WINWOOD, Ambassador with the States.

[c. 1611 ?] † June 12, Whighthalle.—The business projected by Mr. Lassells at his last being in the Low Countries has suffered many delays here. Fears they will prejudice the success of "these gentlemen's endeavours, who now come to perform what was formerly promised." Hopes Winwood will favour both the undertakers and the design, for the public good.

Holograph.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1611, June 16, Whitehall.—Recommends this gentleman, Captain Sentleger, who has a company in the Low Countries.

THE PRINCES OF THE UNION to WINWOOD.

1611, † Aug. 22, Rottenbourg en Franconie.—Have understood from the Prince of Anhalt that the King of Great Britain has empowered Winwood to conclude "la bonne correspondence" which was treated between his Majesty and "les Electeurs, Princes, et Estats Uniz" by the said Prince on his last voyage, and previously by the Duke of Wurtttemberg. The assembly has often been deferred, but it has at length been decided to proceed promptly to the conclusion according to the annexed copy, § and they will send their envoys to treat with Winwood at any time and place which may be found convenient. There will be no difficulty about his additions to the articles.

Signed: Jean Comte Palatine, tuteur et adm. du Palat. Elector.; Joachim Ernst, Marquis de Brandenburg; Jean Frederic, Duc de Wirtemberg; G. F. M. de (?) Baden; Christian Pr. d'Anhalt.

French. Seal.

THE EARL OF SALISBURY to WINWOOD.

1611, Sept. 30, Hampton Court.—Requests him to speak with Mons. Barnevelt in behalf of the widow and children of Sir Chalstenes (sic)

* The word "child" is struck out here, and the following word or words are torn off.

† In Vol. 11.

‡ Arranged with the papers of 1612, in Vol. 8.

§ Not found.

Brook, who was in the States' service, in regard of his nearness to the writer's son, whose mother was his cousin german, and the widow being a native of that country. Desires, if a pension cannot be granted to them, that the company may be conferred upon the deceased's brother, Sir John Brook, who will relieve his sister and her children out of the profits thereof.

Seal, as before.

THO. YORKE to [WINWOOD, Ambassador].

[1611?]* Oct. 8, Breda.—Thanks for care of some business of the writer's. The bearer is his cousin, George Yorke.

Holograph; defaced.

KING JAMES I. to the UNITED PRINCES OF THE EMPIRE.

1611, Oct. 11, Palace of Westminster.—Understood by their letters of 22 August, dated at Rottenburg, their desire to conclude a league with him and his realms, as proposed by the Duke of Wirtemberg, which would be to the glory of Christ, the amplification of his Gospel, and the establishment of their common affairs. Has therefore commanded Sir Ralph Winwood, his ambassador to the United Provinces of Belgium, to treat with their deputies according to the sense of certain articles which he the King formerly delivered to Mons. Buinckusen. With regard to their letters of 23 August, has written to the Elector of Brandenburg to abide by the convention of Gutterbach, and to the Palatines of Newburg to do nothing contrary thereto.

Copy, Latin.

JOHN MORE to [WINWOOD].

1611, Oct. 29, London.—“Since my last two letters of the 12th and 16th of this month, by the ordinary of Middelborg and Mons. Buvinchusen's man's conveyance, here hath not much occurred worthy your Lordship's knowledge. The want of quoine (coin), not only in the Exchequer but also among all sorts of private men, doth wonderfully amaze many men, especially seeing no hope of amendment. Sir Thomas Bodley, the other day, notwithstanding his many sums of money now due, was fain to borrow upon bond, and after that to pawn and sell his plate, for a few hundred pounds, to finish his last building of the Library,† which doth cost him in all 1200*l*. He sent for me the other day express[ly to] tell me something of the lease of his house, whereof he hath not as yet taken a lease himself, but is upon terms to make up his four years to come 31 years; he is willing you should have it before any other, and better cheap than another, but desired me to move you not to protract your resolutions, because this winter quarter is the only time for him to dispose thereof. I answered that when he should send you over a draft of the lease, and a reasonable price, I would motion a quick despatch; but until then I held it altogether incongruous. The draft of his new lease is now in Devonshire, neither can he with much speed make that perfect for himself.

“Being the other day with Mr. Levinus [Munck], tal[king] of divers occurrents, he fell suddenly from another matter to this speech: ‘I wonder from whence should grow so much discourse of Sir H. Nevill to be a Secretary of State, or at the least a Privy Councillor.’ I answered him (and that truly) that for my part I never heard any such discourse, neither did I see much reason to believe it; for, besides his unwieldy body and giving himself to a mere country life, he did not (like Sir Dudley Carelton) speak in Parliament for the King's demands, but ranged himself with those Patriots that were accounted of a contrary faction to the Courtiers; which I think he would not have done, if he had aspired to any Court employment. He said that, all that notwithstanding, he doth seek for some advancement, and that through [Sir] Thomas Overbury, by the means of Viscount Rochester, who of late (said he) hath brought to pass many great and strange matters, there being still (but especially were before Sir Thomas his disgrace with the Queen) more suitors following him than my Lord Treasurer. I marvelled much at Sir Thomas Overbury's greatness, and especially at his* report of Sir H. Nevill; and indeed I think it may be some speech cast out rather to his hindrance than advancement. The plot (he said) was, that Sir H. Nevill should undertake to deal with the Lower House, and then (so as my Lord Treasurer would not intermeddle) there was no doubt but that better effects would come of the next Session (which is like to be in February next) than did come of the former.

* In Vol. 11.

† The Bodleian Library.

"Jehan le Clerk hath undertaken to pay into the Exchequer, of the French debt, 10,000*l.* by the end of September, and the other 20,000*l.* by the end of October next. I have received Mr. Dickenson's entertainments some time since, and am (through my Lord Treasurer's favour) in as good forwardness for your Lordship's and his next entertainments as Sir Thomas Edmonds and the rest are for their 8 and 6 months already past. I have now given notice to Capt. Zouch and Capt. Harwood of the advice of your Lordship's last letter, accepted their bills, and promised them payment within three days," &c. Refers to Mr. Trimm, Mrs. Weekes, my Lady, and Mr. Lambert.

Holograph. Addressed: For my Lord.

DAVID PAREUS to CUNRAD VORSTIUS, D.D., of Leyden University.†

1611, Nov. 7, Heidelberg.—Reproves him for his Socinian and Arminian heresies.

[Copy,] Latin, 2 pp.

KING JAMES I. to HUGH LEE, Esquire.

[1611,] 9 James I., Nov. 8, Palace of Westminster; under the Signet.—Having been informed by his Ambassadors in the kingdom of Spain and by the general report of his subjects trafficking into those parts that it is necessary to appoint Consuls to govern and assist his subjects in some of the principal port-towns of that kingdom, the nomination of whom appertains to him jure regio and by ancient treaties; the King therefore appoints Lee to be Consul for the parts of Lisborne and the whole territories of Portugal, "extending by the sea-coast beginning at Camina and ending at Castro Marin," during pleasure, &c.; with power to choose some discreet merchants to be his assistants. Besides the ancient allowance of one ducat upon every ship, he is empowered to levy "one fourth part of one in the hundred of all the goods and merchandise" of the King's subjects brought into any ports within the said limits.

Certified by "John Digbye," 9 Nov. 1612, n.s.

Copy, prefixed to the paper dated 13 Feb. 1617, n.s., q.v.

* Munck's?

† Winwood's "Remonstrances to the States against Vorstius" are printed by Sawyer, III. 293, 295, 309.

[SIR] PEREGRINE BARTY to WINWOOD.

1611, Nov. 14, the Court at Royston.—Requests him “to make stay of the money lately agreed to be paid by the States in respect of some differences between Mr. Hall” and the writer.

Holograph.

[The COUNCIL FOR VIRGINIA] to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[1611 ?]*—“Sir,—Having lately addressed our letters to the Coronells and other chief Commanders of the English in those Netherland parts, for the advancing of the worthy enterprise of planting Colonies of our Nation in the fruitful and rich country of Virginia, and to draw them into society of the Action, and consequently to contribution towards the charge thereof: We have thought fit not only to offer ourselves to your Lordship in like sort, but, in regard of your place also, and personal worth and sufficiency, to pray your best assistance in forwarding the same among those noble and worthy gentlemen unto whom we have by our letters or otherwise recommended it. And for your better information, we have sent you herewith a true relation of that business, in a book lately printed and published by us concerning it; and farther certify you, that this Action having received heretofore many disastrous impediments by the factiousness and insufficiency of sundry the Governors and others in Virginia, is now [at] length settled in so good order and forwardness, by the industrious and prudent government of the Lord La Warre,† that we have resolved to second his Lordship with three important supplies, whereof the first we send presently under the conduct of Sir Thomas Gates, Lieutenant General, and Sir Tho. Dale, Marshal of Virginia, and the rest are to follow in the two years next ensuing. And according thereunto the Adventurers have also resolved to furnish out this charge with three yearly supplies of money, some with 12*l.* [10*s.*] a year, many other with double, and some also with [tre]ble that [sum ?]. Our desire and hope is that your Lordship will in all occasions be aiding to this worthy Action, tending so much to the honour and happiness of our Nation. And so, praying y[our] answer to be returned to Sir Thomas Smithe, our Treasurer, we rest,

“Your Lordship’s very loving friends,

H. Southampton	Theo: Howard
Montgomery	R. Lisle
Tho: Smythe	Robert Mansell
	Walter Cope
	Edwin Sandys.”

Endorsed by another hand: For my La: Winwood.

[WINWOOD to LORD ROCHESTER ?]

[1611 ?]*—Thanks him for his favour, though the writer is known to him only by report. Refers to his Lordship’s noble designs, and his affection to his King and country. “If it shall please his Majesty to call me nearer to his service, as in these foreign employments, wherein more than ten years past I have been employed without intermission, . . . the honour of his Majesty’s service and the public good of his realm have been the pole-star for direction and conduct of my travail, so, being recalled from hence to serve at home, the respectful care I shall have of your honour, which I profess, will stand deeply [enga]ged for [my] carriage and behaviour, will give me courage and constancy to continue in the course which tru[th], honour, and honesty will tread before me.”

* In Vol. 11.

† See State Papers, Domestic, 22 June 1611.

Rough draft in Winwood's hand; decayed.

[WINWOOD] to LORD ———.

[1611?]*—Came to “this town” from the army, upon the assurance of the Prince of Anhalt and Mons. de Plessen, Ambassador for the Elector Palatine, that Baldwin the Jesuit should be rendered into his hands. De Plessen came hither for this purpose, but has returned to the army without performing his promise, pretending he had no charge, &c.†

Draft, in Winwood's hand; unfinished.

LEVYNUS MUNCK to [WINWOOD].

[c. 1611?]*—His Majesty has bestowed on Winwood, in regard of his former services, the sum of 1,200*l.*, to be raised “out of the sale of certain personages [parsonages] and tithes, for which his Majesty hath contracted with divers persons, to the value of 30,000*l.*” Two bonds will be passed by the undertakers, to Winwood's use; they are, Sir Walter Cope, Sir Thomas Lake, Sir George Copin, Mr. Thomas Watson, and others. “You see, Sir, the necessity of this State, which makes them to husband these rewards, with so great advantage to his Majesty as to be themselves the distributors of it (sic), even to the last farthing.” Winwood should thank his Lordship [Salisbury] as the sole instrument of his Majesty's bounty.

Holograph.

THE SENATORS OF SWEDEN to the SENATORS OF POLAND AND LITHUANIA.

[1611?]*—Referring to the war between the two kingdoms, the death of Charles IX. of Sweden, the succession of King Gustavus Adolphus, King Sigismund of Poland, the proposed exchange of prisoners, &c.

Copy, Latin, 1 p.

[DR. CONRAD] VORSTIUS.

[1611?]*—Remarks on the treatise of Vorstius concerning the Divine nature and attributes.

Italian, 4 pp.

THO. NEWTON to SIR RAFAE WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[1611?]\*—“In my last I gave you some account why things had not so speedy a proceeding as I expected, in the matter I had formerly written to you of. Since, the renewed friendship between  $\chi\phi 73v, 3x\theta gh35$  made me jealous and diffident, so as I durst neither press your business, nor communicate so freely as I had done. But I find now that it hath proved but like other Court friendships, to serve a present turn only, and after, not much regarded on either side. The  $n8mcxg7n3q35$  hath raised many hopes and set many heads a-working.  $g33ltt\theta fl\chi gn$  desire was to make d4c7θghm3zg. ρ;θdπn lt.h;λ7g7 hath been strongly wrought to stand for 58, if 35dπ;λt7 will either have none or 57. 44 meddles not, for aught I can hear. 39xqt7rλθrd7 will make 604ghf7λ. In which conjunction πρ;8dr7 content to take some pains, otherwise not. This I commend to you as a secret not to be imparted to any. I find some want of names in the cifre. I pray you therefore add these that are hereunder set down."

* In Vol. 11.

† William Baldwin, priest, was a prisoner in the Tower, 23 Sept. 1612. (S.P. Dom.)

The Queen - - - 24	L. of Penbrooke - - 32
L. Archbishop - - - 26	Sir Henry Nevil - - 34
L. Northampton - - - 29	Lord Carew - - - 36
L. Lisle - - - 28

Holograph. Part of seal (a two-headed eagle).

RO. LORD ROCHESTER to [WINWOOD,] Lord Ambassador.

[1612, beg. ?]*—Commends to him the business of this gentleman, Captain Forbus, knowing his power with the States, and his "love extraordinary." Will requite him here. There is no reason why Henderson should [not] get the Lord of Buckcleughe's place,† and Forbus, being next officer under him, should not rise into his [Henderson's ?] place by the same right, as urged in the King's letter. Desires him to hasten the dispatch of Lieut. Lyndsay's commission.

Holograph. Seal, broken.

[SIR JOHN THROCK]MORTON to WINWOOD.

[1611–12, Jan. . . .] Vlushing.—Refers to a previous letter. "My said letter should have told you that from [a] very good part an advertisement was given me that the States of the United Provinces were in much labour to pay the King of Great Britain his money, and to redeem their towns," &c. Fears that "those of Holland" have alienated the King's affection. Hears from England that the Lord Treasurer has "taken exceeding great pains to pacify his Majesty's just[ly] conceived anger," &c. Wishes to obtain "the Lord of Boucleughe's company," but expects little from "this State," and asks Winwood to use his influence. "In these their wars I am now (of our nation) the oldest captain they have, and in their service I have received and bear the marks about me of three or four bullets into the parts of my body, besides other hard knocks."

Holograph, 3 pp., badly written, and much decayed.

JOHN, COUNT PALATINE, and JOHN FREDERICK, DUKE OF WIRTEMBERG, to WINWOOD.

1612, † Feb. 20.—As the King of Great Britain has declared his willingness to proceed to a treaty of defensive alliance, they appoint their councillors the Sieurs Mainhardt de Schönbourg and Benjamin Buwinckhausen de Walmerode to treat with Winwood accordingly.

French. Seal.

* In Vol. 11.

† Walter, Lord Scott, of Buccleuch, died 15 Dec. 1611, at Branzholm. (Cockayne's Peerage.)

‡ In Vol. 8.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD

1611[-12], March 17, London.—[This letter is printed by Sawyer, III., 349, except the last paragraph, which he has marked to be omitted, as follows:—]

“I have now in my hands stockings for your Lordship and my Lady, which I hope either to bring myself or to send them by a more certain conveyance than I hold this to be. Paul arrived here on Sunday night.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, April 13, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Gives news of Germany and the Netherlands, and refers to “our Palatine.”

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

THO. NEWTOWNE to WINWOOD.

1612, April 19.—“30 hath imparted the letter that 60 wrote unto him unto 35, but with assurance first given to 39 that it should no way prejudice 30, and thereupon again declared unto 39 his resolution and good purpose towards 60, whereof the effects will appear shortly, though 39 reserve the particulars till another time. Thus . . . *willed me to let you know, upon whom I could wish 60 would bestow a letter of thanks and good acceptance, for he can do much, and looks to be respected.”

[P.S.] “I pray you send me the additions I lately made unto the cipher, for my haste made me forget to insert them in my copy.”

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, April 27, o.s., Dusseldorp.—German and Belgic news.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

[1612?] May 10, London.—“I, having sent my last letters towards you but on Wednesday last by Cooke, Sir Francis Vere’s man, would not now again have written in this barren time of occurrences, had it not been for the conveyance of these enclosed from Mr. Chamberlain and Sir Tho. Bodley, which was delivered me together with a letter from himself to Sir Francis Vere, who shortly after his arrival (they say) shall not only be made Baron and Captain of Porchmouth, but also a Privy Councillor; the likelihood whereof those which would with reason maintain do (besides the necessity of understanding warriors in that College)† observe likewise the good correspondence he holdeth with the Earls of Northampton and Montgomerie, by the means of whom and of the rest of his friends in Court, the King hath of late taken especial notice both of him and Sir Horace.”

Gives news touching the Duke of Bouillon’s restoration to favour, Mons. de Rosny, the Archduke, Frizeland and Cleve, the Boures, the Marquis Spinola, &c. Refers to a conveyance of land to Winwood, Mr. Lambert, and Mr. Niccols or Nicchols.

* Here follow six unusual characters.

† The Privy Council?

"Sir Horace Vere having of late demanded my help for the finding out of a fit man to serve him for a Secretary, to whom he would allow 30*l.* yearly, besides his furtherances for his further profit and preferment, I have resolved to name unto him Richard Mills, whom you have known in France and Holland. Abraham I perceive will adventure of himself to go towards you, if he can get the paquet touching Emden matters now in hand. . . . Samuel [Calvert?] recommends his service, attending still for his paquet."

Holograph. Seal.

RANUC[C]IO FARNESE [DUKE OF PARMA] to the CHIEF MAGISTRATES OF PARMA.

1612, May [10-]20, Parma.—Gives orders touching the disposal of the lands and goods of certain conspirators (not named) for the public benefit.

Copy, Italian, 1 p.

ERNEST, MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG, to KING [JAMES I.]

1612, May 12, Cleves.—Deplores the general neglect of learning, except in England, which is ruled by its King and head no less in spiritual than in temporal matters. Asks the King's favour for Johannes Hymmen and Wilhelmus Balduinus, students of arts and theology, that faculty may be given them to reside to hear theological readings, both private and private, in Cambridge or Oxford University, and that one at least of them may be supported there by the King's bounty.

Copy, Latin.

CHRISTIAN IV., KING OF DENMARK, to MAURICE, PRINCE OF ORANGE.

1612, May 13, Copenhagen (Haffnia).—Touching depredations by some of the King's captains on the Prince's subjects, and the navigation to Sweden.

Copy, Latin, 2 pp.

JEAN SIGISMOND, MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG, Elector, &c., to WINWOOD.

1612, May 13, Koningberg.—Is sending three Ambassadors (named). Requests him to continue favouring his (the writer's) cause with the King.

French.

JO. MORE to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1612, May 23 (or 13?), London.—Received his letter through Sir Thomas Panton.* Sir Thomas Bodley has caused the lease of the house to be drawn, and will seal it next week. Desires to know if he likes the bargain of Sir Symeon S . . . ['s] houses. My Lord Treasurer (?) is still on the mending hand.

Holograph; decayed. Seal of arms.

* Or Peyton?

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, May 25, o.s., Dusseldorp.—German and Belgic news.
Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

THE BAILIFFS AND SHERIFFS (Schepenen) OF AERDENBORCH to the COUNCIL OF STATE OF ZEALAND, at Middleburgh.

1612 [May 29–] June 8, Aerdenborch.—Give information of an alleged conspiracy at Flushing.
Copy, Dutch, 1 p.

J. DICKENSON to the EARL OF SALISBURY.

1612, June 6, Duisseldorp.—German and Belgic news. Refers to “our Palatine’s substitute.”
Holograph, English, 3 pp. Seal.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1612, June 24, Dusseldorff.—Has nothing to add to what
Mr. Dickenson writes, except to express regret at the loss which all good men suffer by the death of the Grand Treasurer [the Earl of Salisbury], especially as he held the writer in great esteem. Rejoices at the success of M. de Plessen’s negociation. “Et quant à l’ombrage que prannent aucuns tant en Hollande quailleurs pour une Jartiere, moy qui cognois la sincerité de vostre Roy, et quil na desseing en cela que d’honorer la vertu, ay accoustumé de leur respondre ce que porte la devise de ladicte Jartiere: Honny soit qui mal y pense.” Refers to the treaty of Wesell, the Duke de Bouillon, &c.
French.

KING JAMES I. to COUNT MAURICE.

[1612, July ?]—Has performed all the good offices requested by the Elector of Brandenburg in the affair of Cleves. According to the Count’s desire, in letters of 28 May, that the King would send some one to reside in Cleves and to negotiate between the parties, the King has instructed Sir Ralph Winwood, whom he is despatching to the United Provinces,* to occupy the place of Councillor of State for the King and also as Ambassador resident, in order that he may inform the King of the proceedings of the pretenders to that succession, and even repair thither if necessary. The Elector should instruct his ministers to communicate with Winwood, and let him know what the King can do in his favour.
Copy, French, 3 pp.

GHODEFROY BOOL (?) to WINWOOD.

1612, July [2–] 12, Antwerp.—Is compelled to depart for Brabant, Hanouw, and Arthois. Will return to Winwood as soon as possible to effect a great service to the King of Great Britain in respect of L’Ille, le Havre, and other “points” already communicated to Winwood. Is annoyed that he dare not write about two matters of great weight, as he has marvellous things to tell. Desires to be sent with letters of recommendation to England for the King’s service. His wife will forward Winwood’s letters to him.
Holograph, French. Seal. Endorsed by Sawyer: Godfrey Root.

* See State Papers, Domestic, 1612, June and July, pp. 136—138. This letter is placed at the end of Vol. 8, among the papers of 1612—13.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, July 3, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Touching the affairs of “our Palatine,” &c.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

JOH. DRUSIUS to WINWOOD.

1612, July 6, Franeker.—Sends by a servant the “Apopthegmata Ebræorum ac Arabum,” and two copies for the person to whom they are dedicated, and who was formerly the writer’s pupil and firm friend.

Latin.

SIR HENRY NEVILL to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1612, July 12, Westmester.—“I sent yesternight to Sir Tho. Overbury to know what time I might come to him this morning; and he made me answer that he went out of town early, but would return about 6 of clock in the evening, and prayed me to come to him then. Hereof I thought fit to send you word, that you might not expect me according to my appointment yesternight.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

SIR HENRY NEVILL to WINWOOD.

1612, July 12 [13?].—“I feared that which happened: that Sir Tho. Overbury would not return yesterday till it was very late. Therefore I sent not to you, neither did I speak with him myself; but this afternoon, about two of clock, he will be with me, because I am not well, and cannot go to him. And he is desirous to meet you here, if you be returned from Court.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

LEVYNUS MUNCK to WINWOOD.

1612, July 20, London.—Recommends the bearer Anthony de Waele, who has lived here two years with Mr. Secretary Herbert, “where he hath spent his time in reading unto him and exercising himself in the study of the Civil Law. He is now called home by his father, who hath some employment in the Haghe.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

MONS. DE PLESSEN to WINWOOD.

1612, July 24, o.s., Heidelberg.—Has received his letter and that of the King for the Count of Hanau. Refers to the treaty of Wesel, the Elector of Brandenburg, Colonel de Schönbourg, the affairs of the Empire, Hungary, the Turk, &c. Wishes him a successful voyage to England.

Holograph, French.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1612 (?), July 25, Dusseldorf.—Mr. Dickenson, to whom he communicates everything, is writing fully. Knows of the renewal of the amity between their Majesties of France and Great Britain. Wishes him all honour and advancement with the King his master, which will never be equal to his merit. Desires Winwood to testify to the King his (the writer’s) devotion. “Si je suis une fois hors de ce service, j’emploierois volontiers ce qui me reste dannees a la version de ses tres sages, doctes, et judicieux escrits, y adjoustant ce que je viens de lire de Mr. Ca-saubon au Cardinal du Perron, ou je recognoy que sadiete Ma<sup>te</sup> a mis la main a bon escient. Si aussi vous rencontrez Mons. le Viconte de l' Isle, je luy baise tres humblement les mains."

French.

JO. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, July 31, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Touching the disputes between "our Palatine" and the Elector of Brandenburg, &c. Has written to the King.
Holograph, Latin, 1 p.

SIR HENRY SAVILE to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 2, Eton.—Requests him to borrow the manuscript of Apollonius' Conicks "of those Messieurs." Affairs here are still in uncertainty.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

MONS. JAC. VANDEN EYNDEN to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 10, Wourden.—Having been informed by the "despensier" of the Theological College at Leyden that Winwood had told him of the Queen of Great Britain's desire to have some very small greyhounds (lievrettes), the writer sends two such little dogs accordingly.

Holograph, French.

SIR THO. SMYTHE to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 10, London.—In a despatch of the 4th he certified Winwood of "the Company's desire," but it was delayed. Has since received his letters testifying his care of the East India Company's affairs since his departure. They do not know to whom to apply, his Majesty being so far off on progress, and therefore depend on Winwood's mediation, desiring to hear of "the success as it shall happen from time" [to time], and to be directed what to do.

Seal of arms.

R. [LORD] LISLE to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 13, Flushing.—Landed here yesterday, having been but one night at sea. His coming was delayed by the death of the Countess of Rutland, his niece. Did not hear of any alteration since Winwood's departure. Sir Noel Caron will inform how all things were in England when he left. Will repair into Holland, but desires to know whether Winwood and his Ex[cellency, Count Maurice,] are at the Haghe.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

JOHN DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 14, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Touching the affairs of the Palatine, Germany, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

THE COUNT OF OLDENBURG to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 17, Oldenburg.—Has instructed his agent with the United Provinces to attend Winwood, and protest against the misrepresentations of the Count of East Friesland.

Latin.

SIR RAPHE WINWOOD to his servant JOHN MOORE.

[1612,]* Aug. 22, Dusseldorp.—“I have not much to write. Yesterday I came from the army, to receive here Baldwin the Jesuit, who was taken by the officers of the Elector of the Rhine, whom now I send by Sir John Burlas and Capt. Dewhurst into England. This day the town is rendered into the hands of the Princes, who now, if they can keep it, are full possessors of all these countries. When I shall be at the Haghe I know not; in the mean time let your mistress want no money. The cloak I sent for you may send by Shelton at his return.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

JOHN DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, Aug. 29, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Touching the Palatine's affairs, &c.
Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON to [WINWOOD].

1612, Sept.  $\frac{2}{12}$ , Venice.—The Earl of Arundel came two days since to Padua, from whence the Lord Rosse went the last week towards Florence. Gives an account of the war between the Venetians and the Usocchi, and of their negociations with the Archduke Ferdinand of Gratz; also of preparations for war made by certain Italian princes against the Duke of Parma, &c. This State has dammed up one of the mouths of the Po, “whereby to turn the greater stream upon the port of Goro, in hope by such earth and rubbish as is carried down by land floods to destroy that port.” The Pope is much incensed at this.

Holograph, 4 pp.

MONS. DE PLESSEN to WINWOOD.

1612, Sept. 3, o.s.—The negociation of M. Spinola still remains a mystery. The Elector is going to Holland, and the writer is to accompany him. Refers to the affairs of Germany, Bohemia, and Spain.

Holograph, French.

SIR HENRY NEVILL to WINWOOD.

1612, Sept. 6, Windsor.—“This tumultuary and uncertain attendance upon the King's sports affords me little time to write. But shortly I must pray you to understand that I have both received your letter to myself, and seen that which you wrote to Sir Thomas Overbury; upon both which I took occasion to press him in the point of the time of your revocation. I found him a little apprehensive, as if you mistrusted some neglect in him or other of the business that concerned you. And thereupon he renewed his protestations of all sincere meaning both on his part and his friends' [or friend's?]. But for the time he prays you to have patience, and to refer it to the King's own humour, which must be followed, and against which there is no striving, without hazard of doing hurt. Yet he is in good hope of some speedy resolution, for upon the 21st of this month he [the King] hath appointed his Council to attend him, and put off their meeting till then which was purposed here as yesterday. For my part, I have had another conference with him of late, and find the matters well tasted which I proposed in the former.

Much kicking there is both against you and me severally, but more against the coupling of us together. Yet I think it is done more out of animosity than hope; for Lake, in all men's opinions, is excluded, and Wootton hath rather lost than gotten by his late employment. About a fortnight hence the King hath let me know that I shall hear from him some resolution about the matters whereof we have now twice conferred; whereupon I shall be able to make a more certain judgment of his purpose touching this whole business, and will speedily make you partaker of my conceit in it. In the mean time I do very much congratulate with you for the good amendment of my Lady, and wish you both health and happiness."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

R. LORD LISLE TO WINWOOD.

1612, Sept. 13, Flushing.—"A man of your own coming over, I assure myself that you understand (better than I can deliver) all that passeth there [in England]. It seems on the 5th of this month nothing had been done in the great offices. Great speech it seems there is still of Sir Ha. [i.e. Harry] Nevell to be Secretary, as likewise of yourself, Sir Th. Lakes (sic), and Sir Ha. Wotton. Of a Treasurer I do not hear anything by my letters, but some that come over speak much of my Lord of Northampton. But it seems that the purpose goes on of putting down all the boards (?) for one year, without giving any allowance, which will be a new manner of entertaining of a Prince that comes to woo the King's daughter. The Prince Palatine is looked for in England about the end of this month, but here we have reports that his coming from Heydelberg was put off for three weeks. I perceive there is nothing done by Mons. Barnevelt with the States General about our fortifications, since I do not receive anything from your Lordship of it. . . . I shall be ready tomorrow to take the first good passage shall be offered unto me; and if God send me into England, I will, together with my thankfulness unto you, give witness of the good service you do the King."

*Holograph. Seal of arms. Endorsed by Sawyer, 13 Feb. (sic), 1612.**

JOHN DICKENSON TO WINWOOD.

1612, Sept. 15, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Touching the affairs of the Palatine, the Empire, the Elector of Brandenburg, the Turk, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

SIR ROBERT NAUNTON TO WINWOOD.

[1612,] Sept. [15-] 25, n.s., Holeborne.—"Your letters of the 24th of August I received by Mr. Sa. Calvert about the 5th of this September. The same day, hearing that his Majesty was determined for Windesore, I went thither, and the next morning delivered your enclosed to Sir H. Nevill at Sir H. Savill's in Eaton, where I was by him resolved of a steady purpose in your honourable friends towards you and myself, but was at no hand to give suspicion of any such intention at all there, much less of any privity of his, in respect of their feeling sympathy with the Ambassador at Venice.† So I held it fitting not to trouble my Lord of [Ro]ch[este]r, lest an inexpect[ed?] visitation should seem a faint kind of importunity, but saluted Sir Thomas Overburie] en passant, which was sufficient to continue me in both their remembrance . . .

* Arranged with the papers of 1612-13.

† Sir Dudley Carleton.

volunt, valde velint.

"The day I came thither Sir H. [N]evill had speech [with his] Majesty as he hunted, for two hours, and received good approbation in the most of his advices, and by conference made good the rest, whereof his Majesty seemed to doubt at the first apprehension; but de re totâ quam tantopere avemus, verbum nullum. His directions from his friends, you know, continue the same—not to obtrude himself into any petition or pursuit, but to leave it to them wholly, to cull out a time proper for the propounding it with success. Hereupon some standers by are apt to conceive that the King mea[neth] to keep these places in suspense between himself and my Lord of Roch[este]r, as they we[re] after Sir Fr. Walsyngham's death; and that meanwhile Sir Tho. Overburie may fit himself with as good a probability to furnish the place in time, by the practice and experience he is now in, as Sir Tho. Lake and his Lady bare [bore] themselves strong upon. But we can admit no suspicion of any such underhand meaning in any of the 3, his Majesty's reservations having too many occasions in this undermining age of the world. I met with Mr. More at Windesore, who told me that in speech with my Lord of Roch[este]r he found him fixed in opinion that it would be very fit that your successor should be there en[coun]tered by you before yourself should be called home; and that he heard, that when [his] Lordship was moved for him of Venice to succeed you, his answer was, that his fashion of carriage and countenance was somewhat with the loftiest to for . . . that people.

"The morning the King left Eaton, I happened e[asually?] . . .
 . . . ed by Sir H. Savill to my Lord Hay, who presently became inquisitive aft[er] . . . pro]fessed himself desirous to know me. Sir Henry sought me out, as requesting me to show his Lordship the great work of his Chrysostome then under press, which he and (?) I had seen before, and commanded my Lord Hay to see. So I attended his Lordship, who by the way offered himself in extraordinary terms as ambitious to become p[at]ron and protector of my reputation with his Majesty, and that upon the many good words he had heard. . . . Sir F. Grevyll, and from his father-in-law the Lord Denny," &c. The writer speaks of himself as a man "who, as much drowned as he hath long been and sunk in the eye of the world, yet would not catch at every bough to clamber up by. . . ."

"At my being with Sir F. Grevyll I met a young gent', a kinsman of Sir Ed. Conwey's, newly come from your parts, who told me, as from your own mouth, that you expected either . . . within ten days, or to be sent into Denmark. I told Sir Fulke, betwixt him and . . . I doubted you would give out no such matter, whatsoever you conceived (&c.) . . . Now Mr. More told me this morning, that my Lord of Rochester, moving his Majesty for your calling home, was answered, that he determined to hold you where you are till the Palsgrave should be come thither, where you should give him assistance, directions, and honour, and happily (sic) come over with him, or very soon after him, if your businesses there should import. If some of our great lords should discover such inten[tion] of his Majesty's, they would undoubtedly spin out new occasions to detain you longer there, or divert you by some Danish employment further off usque ad Sauromatas,* to remove you out of their light here.

* "Sauromatum Arva, le Hundsruë," in Germany. (Baudrand.)

“Don Pedro de Synega, upon the return of his corriero from Spain, is now to take his leave very shortly, since he can prevail no more in hindering the alliance with the Palsgrave. I was told by Sir George Ma[n]ers that Sir Robert Drury, having cast out some derogative speech against his state, and person, whereof he had lately taken some view, was convented before the Lord . . . , and received check for his such presumption. The King removed hence to Hampton yest[erday], whither the Lords are to follow him tomorrow, and to attend him there some four or five days, within w[hich time] the world expects his Majesty will declare his resolution further touc[hing] the Secretary-[ship] . . . the Treasurership, and other offices that may receive alteration in c[onseq?]uence. Sir H. [Nevill] converseth now more professedly with my Lord of Rochester, and removed hence [with] the King, I mean simu[l] tempore. Myself hold on my old course like a poor Chancery man that dreams of nothing but law and conscience, and resort only to Sir H. Nevill when he is in town, et hoc parcius. When you write to my Lord of Rochester, or to Sir Tho. Overbury, if it please you to use me for delivery of your letter, it may happily occasion me some further overture.”

Holograph; decayed. Endorsed by Sawyer: 1610 (sic).

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1612, Sept. 17, Stickhusa.—Is sending two envoys to the King to inform the King touching his dispute with the Count of Oldenburg. Refers to the death of his eldest son.

Latin.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, Sept. 26, Dusseldorp.—Affairs of the Palatine, Germany, &c., Refers to Markham's letters.

Holograph. Latin, 2 pp. Seal.

THE COUNT OF OLDENBURG to WINWOOD.

1612, Oct. 6, Oldenburg.—Protests against the Count of East Friesland's representations to the King of Great Britain and the States General, touching the opus aggerarium which the writer is constructing; to the latter of whom he is sending two of his councillors. Asks Winwood to favour his cause.

Latin. Endorsed: From the Earl of Delmenhurst.

[Same date?]
—“Summarium rationum juris quo illustrissimus Comes Oldenburgicus in extruendo novo aggere partim in Severana, partim in Oldenburgensi regione firmissimè nititur.”

Latin, 7 pp.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY to WINWOOD.

[1612,] Oct. 9, Royston.—“My Lord [Rochester] will move for your coming over with the Count, and what answer he receives you shall presently hear. In the mean time I pray you fasten the Count upon my Lord; and if you please, you may name me to him.”

Holograph. Seal of arms, broken.

LEVYNUS MUNCK TO SIR THOMAS LAKE.

1612, Oct. 11, Royston.—“ It pleased the King yesterday to call me unto him, and to ask me whether you had not left a letter with me, for him to sign, to Sir Raphe Winwood, according to such directions as he gave you. I told his Majesty that I had understood from you, that you had order to write to Sir Raphe Winwood, and to Sir Stephen le Sieur, and that you would dispatch it from London: whereupon his Majesty gave me order to draw this letter enclosed, which he would have me to send unto you, by the copy whereof the contents shali appear unto you. I pray you therefore to take order to send it away with convenient speed, together with such things as you may have otherwise, fit for his knowledge, and to enclose within your packet this letter of mine unto him. The King's remove is yet stayed till further order come from the Palatine. My Lord Chamberlain [Suffolk] was here this day, and is gone back to Audley-In (sic): on Tuesday or Wednesday he purposeth to be at London.”

Holograph. Portion of seal of arms.

LORD CHANCELLOR ELLESMERE TO WINWOOD.

1612, Oct. 19, the Court at Westminster.—“ Justice hath no kindred nor friends, and therefore for anything that I have done in your friend's cause I deserve no thanks.” Asks favour for “ this gentleman,” Sir Thomas Dutton.

Seal—a crest.

SIR EDWARD CECYLL TO WINWOOD.

[1612?] Oct. 22, Utricke.—“ Although I have not heard it witnessed from yourself, yet the weather-cock at the Hague did give me comfort that you and my Lady and all your priteous * had a very happy passage; and I hope by this time that your business hath had as good success. It is reported from England that Lord Rochester shall be married, and that the lands of Wes[t]merland are bought, and the lands of Sir Tho. Shierley, and Sherborne Castle, some for a jointure, the rest for posterity.” Refers to Ruttage (?) Park, and to affairs at Utricke.

Holograph. Seal of arms. Endorsed by Sawyer: 1611 or 1612.

SIR HENRY NEVILL TO WINWOOD.

1612, Oct. 22, London.—Is glad to hear of my Lady's recovery. “ I thank you very much for the honour you purposed to Sir Henry Savill and me in the name of your son; it is an office I will be very ready to perform upon the next occasion, and will be bold to challenge it of you. Concerning the journey into Denmark which you stood in doubt of, I hope I may assure you that you need not fear it. I rather mistrust that there may some stay be made of your revocation by reason of the necessary use of your presence there. For I have heard that the King is of opinion that Spinola hath some plots in hand either against Cleves or somewhere else, that may once again brouiller les cartes, and therefore he is willing to see clearly into them before he call you home; acknowledging that no man can serve him so well to that purpose as you. If this suspicion be without ground, you may do well in my opinion to remove it, and thereby facilitate your own revocation. In the mean time your friends will use their best endeavours to the same purpose. For myself, all things stand as they did. I have the same friends and the same enemies still. Only I think I have this advantage that the King, now knowing me somewhat better than he did, will not be so easily carried with the reports or suggestions of my evil willers. The necessity of supplying that place* is such, and he that now hath it is so weary of it, as I verily believe many days will not pass ere it be determined: which is all I can advertise you of any certainty touching that matter. The report of all other things I leave to Mr. Moore, whom I have likewise entreated to acquaint you with a request of mine."

* Pretty ones?

Holograph. Seal of arms.

MONS. DE PLESSEN to WINWOOD.

1612, Oct. 23, o.s., London. — Congratulates him on his timely opinion and judgment sent to the King "touchant la personne de Monseigneur l'Electeur." The warm reception and honour accorded to the Elector testify to the esteem in which he is held by the King, who praises him even in private to his own confidential servants, and sometimes also in the presence of the lords and "cavaliers" of the Court.

Holograph, French.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, Oct. 24, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Affairs of Germany, the Palatine, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 2 pp. Seal.

SIR R. NAUNTON to [WINWOOD].

[1612,]† Nov. 6, Holeburne.—Discourses generally on his own affairs, mentioning Sir H. Nevill, Lord Rochester, Sir Edward Carre of Lincolnshire and his Lady, Naunton's kinswoman and ward, her father Sir Ri. Dyer, Sir Thomas Overbury, and Sir F. Gr[eville]. Speaking of Winwood and Nevill he says: "If by my freedom with your Lordship you find me apt to distrust any, it is but my direct trust in the Psalm which directs us Nolite confidere, &c., you know in whom; and so a diffidence not in either of you, but for you, and for our Church and State, which both promise themselves so much from you." Hears that "Sir Edward [Cecil?] is a professed suitor, and that Sir Jo. Radelyf labours it for him here, in hope to succeed him at the Briel."

"It would be a great intemperance and almost impudence for me here to enter into any other discourse of our present occurrences, which are so unpleasing, so full of brausle (?), and anxiety, that if I should begin them here, I might well lose myself ere I could find the way out of them."

[P.S.] "The wisest and best affected in religion that I know here are exceedingly apprehensive of some Spanish project to incite or support our Recusants. Their Ambassador hath told his Majesty that the fleet prepared there is intended to Portugal, pour nous endormir. We trust more upon the vigilance of the States you live among, than of any . . . we can discover for the public here at ha[nd]."

Holograph. Endorsed by Sawyer: 1612. Year uncertain.

* The office of Secretary of State, occupied by Sir Alexander Hay.

† With the papers of 1610, in Vol. 7.

MONS. J. LUNTIUS TO WINWOOD.

1612, [Nov. 8,] 6 id. Nov., London.—His stay in London has been prolonged by the unexpected death of the Prince of Wales, which most vehemently affects all men in this kingdom, except perhaps the Catholics (Pontificios). The States General will certainly lament it. “We had satisfactorily transacted our affairs before noon with the King’s Majesty, when in the afternoon he was informed of [the Prince’s] recovery being hopeless, and on the following day, late in the evening, he [the Prince] closed his life.” The Count of Oldenburg had written that he was coming within two months; the King replied that he would consider his “reasons,” and that in the meanwhile the Count was not to undertake anything fresh, nor to continue the work begun. [The Count] promised to do nothing prejudicial to the Count of East Friesland. Has conversed familiarly with the Archbishop [Abbot] at dinner and supper on various matters. Was greatly assisted by Mr. More.

P.S. (on a separate piece of paper). “Intelligo diem precibus publicis indictum esse ad comitia Hollandica, de quibus in literis superioribus, et generosè decernendum esse de negotiis Religionis, et rebus Indiam Orientalem spectantibus, idque agi ut justa classis eò abeat, cum sufficiente milite, qui Philippinas insulas adversus Lusitanos, cum aliis propinquis, occupet et tueatur. Tempus breve est, atque eventum videbimus, de quo singulis hebdomadib[us]. Quæso ne meæ literæ quæ hæc Hollandica continent cum iis communicentur, q[ui] ad Caronium deferant, ne in suspicionem apud eos veniam.”*

Holograph, Latin. Seal.

W. [LORD] KNOLLYS TO WINWOOD.

[1612,] Nov. 14 (?), Whitehall.—Is sorry that his brother’s deserts, and the King’s letters, besides his brother’s wife’s alliance with the best in the country [Holland?], could not procure him preferment in the States’ wars, so that he was forced to leave their service. He had great offers at the Emperor’s Court, to serve against them, but he has left the Emperor’s wars and returned home, as he found that none but Jesuits and Papists bore any sway or command. He now desires to end where he began. Has written to the States and Mons. Barneveldt in his brother’s behalf, &c.

Seal—crest (an elephant).

J. DICKENSON TO WINWOOD.

1612, Nov. 14, Dusseldorp.—German affairs. Refers to Stephen Lesieur’s mission.

Holograph, Latin, 2 pp. Seal.

PRINCESS ELIZABETH.

1612, Nov. 17, Palace at Westminster.—The Contract of Marriage between the Elector Palatine and the Lady Elizabeth. At the end is a schedule of the salaries of all the officers and servants of the Lady Elizabeth’s household.

Copy, Latin, 4 pp.

* It is not certain that this postscript belongs to the preceding letter. It appears to have been written with different pen and ink.

SIR R. NAUNTON to [WINWOOD].

[1612,]* Nov. 17, Holeburne.—Has deferred sending the letter on the other page. “Since by conference with Mr. More I find that Sir Tho. Overbury, out of an affection to introduce Sir Jo. Radcliffe into Sir E. C[ecil]’s employments there, is likely to endeavour for his cousin to become your successor; and withall that my mediation to bring Sir F. Gr[eville] and him to meet, which I intended to advantage myself with Sir Thomas, was, I know not how, turquesed (?) into a reprobate sense with Sir H. Nevill, as if I were too suspiciously inward with Sir F. Gr., who holds good quarter with my La[dy] Suff[olk], &c. Hereupon, finding Sir H. Nevill somewhat drier (as methought) the last time I was with him than in former times I had, I thought long to express myself unto him. And this very morning having received letters from Sir Ed. Carre to my Lord of Rochester in my behalf in general (who knows not of the place I affect in particular) hard before the King’s remove to Theobalds, I delivered them to his Lordship, who, reading them as he was going to the King through the Gallery and calling me to him, told me they were to the same effect he had before spoken to him, and bad me assure myself of his best endeavour upon the first occasion. I went straight to Sir H. N. to acquaint him what I had done, who told me my Lord, in his understanding, was resolved of m[e] for that place, but what Sir Tho. might write for Sir Jo. Radclyf’s sake, he co[uld] not tell, but to me he would impart what he should discover.

“Touching our Palladium which we have lost, I hold it neither (sic) fit for me to write what I conceive, and less fit to be written to your Lordship.† It is given out by some of his confidants that he had a design to have come over with the Palsgrave and drawn Count Maurice along with him, with some strengths, and done some exploit upon the place that shot the Palsgrave’s harbinger, and happily (sic) have seen the Lantsgrave’s daughter, or I know not what. That this he meant to have done, whatsoever it was, clam Patrem et Senatum suum; and hatching some such secret design, which was made subject to misconstruction, it is now become abortive, like that of Henry the 4th in France. Sir H. Nevill told me he had vowed that never Idolator should come into his bed. And I was ascertained that in his sickness he applied this chastisement for a deserved punishment upon him, for having ever opened his ears to admit treaty of a Popish match. The best news I can send you is, that by the noble and Christian intermise of Sir H. Nevill, there is a concentration made between my Lords of Penbroch and Rochester, at which Sir H. N. himself was present; which was at first put over by Sir Tho. Overbury, being (?) with an intent to make the cure the more sound. I hear the King (?) hath done the like between the Archb[ishop] and my Lord Northampton, but not from so good a party as the other. There is hope the King will now declare himself, if he have not done it already this afternoon, at his parting with the Lords. I am in some haste, for fear Mr. More should send away before this come to him, which makes me write thus rhapsodically. The Palsgrave grows in grace every day with the King, who will have him down with him to Royston for some weeks (?). It is conceived he will hold him here till St. George’s day be past, and after that investiture will consummate the marriage, and send them over together in May.”

[P.S.] Acknowledges letters from Winwood. “My misdoubt is much stronger of S. E. C. [Cecil?] than of S. D. C. [Carleton?]. . . .

* In Vol. 7.

† This refers to the death of Prince Henry.

Your letters received and delivered this day came divinitus, which commended me to his Lordship's favour for the place I was first named unto his Lordship for. . . . If Sir Tho. Lakes (sic) should prove a Secretary, whereof I hear he is not out of hope, I have a guess that in the interim, before your place fall, his Lordship will be put in mind for me, for the Latin Secretary's place." . . . .

Holograph: on the same sheet as the letter of the 6th.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1612, Nov. 25, Dusseldorff.—Has received letters from Viscount Lisle and M. de Plessen, and sends one for the latter. Is rejoiced at the King's satisfaction with the Elector, and that "the calumny" has been discovered, the authors being the bad Germans as well as the Spaniards. Mr. Lesieur has represented the King with dexterity, and has endeavoured to appease these last disagreements. German affairs.

French. Seal.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612, [Dec. 1,] calendis Dec., o.s., Dusseldorp.—German affairs. The Palatine has sent into England, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.

SIR HENRY WOTTON to MARCUS VELSERUS.

1612, [Dec. 5,] nonis Decembribus Julianis, London.—Touching a work by Gaspar Scioppius.

Copy, Latin, 3 pp. Endorsed by Saywer: This letter is printed in Sir Henry Wotton's Life.

RO. LORD ROCHESTER to WINWOOD.

[1612,] Dec. 7, Royston.—"His Majesty intends (according to your advice) for to send only a herald to convey the Garter to Grave Maurice, and by him you shall receive further instructions concerning that particular. In the mean time the King's pleasure is you let Grave Maurice know, that he would have him use his best means amongst the States, that his brother Count Henry may be sent over hither to be installed for him, whom you shall require as being of fit quality for that employment, and besides acceptable to the King himself. This his Majesty would not have you to meddle with, but leave it to Count Maurice his own working. For your own business, I do not blame you if the delay seem strange to you, for it is no less to me, and I can give no more reason for it than you can conceive there. But howsoever I do not despair, though your enemies have objected enough against you, and lastly that you are too violent, which signifies in Court language not malleable to their use. But God prosper me in this work, as I intend nothing but right in it, and they only their own ends. I hope ere long you shall hear from me."

Seal—a crest, with the motto of the Order of the Garter.

SIR THO. SMYTHE to WINWOOD.

1612, Dec. 18, London.—"I have rested long silent, supposing that my Lord of Rochester hath been pleased to procure his Majesty's letters to put your Lordship in mind of prosecuting the business depending betwixt the East India Company of London and those merchants there, from whom they expected some committees to have been long since sent over (as your Lordship's letters mentioned, and I was oftentimes informed from thence); but by their protracting of time I can expect no other but that they intend to proceed by delays, as they have been accustomed to do, and to give reasonable answers, but perform nothing in substance. I do therefore desire your Lordship's mediation to press them for some conclusion, and to direct me what course to take here to second your Lordship therein; and to be so favourable as not to let it rest until it be effected, which the Company will acknowledge with all thankfulness, and remain much bound unto you for the same; desiring to understand of the success as occasion shall be presented."

*Seal of arms. On the back:—*The post is paid to Middilbrow.

ENGLAND, FRANCE, and the NETHERLANDS.

1612, Dec. 29, Palace of Westminster.—Whereas the King of Great Britain has demanded from the King of France payment of sundry great sums of money, including 300,000*l.* sterling, which he or his predecessors had disbursed for the service of France in money, troops, ships of war, artillery, victuals, munitions, &c.; and the King of France appears to refer him to the States General of the United Provinces [for payment]: to avoid all disputes, and to gratify the said States, the King of Great Britain remits to the King of France all such sums and debts, as if the said sum had been paid to him by the States, and delivers up to them all obligations, &c. "Signé, Jacques Roy."

Copy, French.

[SIR DUDLEY CARLETON, Ambassador at VENICE, to the DOGE.]

[c. 1612?]*—Complains of the arrest of a servant of his by the ministers of the officers of the Inquisition. Sent his secretary to ask for his release in order to satisfy the majesty of the King his master [James I.], but it has not yet been granted. The man is named Jacomo Castelvetro, and is 70 years of age. Believes the arrest was brought about by evil-disposed persons in order to prevent Italians from serving in his (the writer's) house. The lords of this city are most obedient to the laws of the Republic [of Venice], which forbid all commerce with Ambassadors; and those of lower rank act in every way so as to verify the proverb to the letter—magna civitas, magna solitudo. This man is not of the religion which the English (noi altri Inglesi) profess, and when they assembled from day to day to offer their prayers, as their custom is, Castelvetro always retired; and he always ate fish on the eves of saints' days. Employs only two other Italians as boatmen (barcaroli). Castelvetro was engaged to teach Italian to the writer's servants, and as there was no room for him in the house, the writer gave him a written testimonial, so that he might enjoy the privileges of an Ambassador's servant. The arrest is an injury to the writer's reputation, and to that of the city for liberty, which has attracted a congregation made up of all nations; and the resort of English to this city and to Padua (which is the same thing) has become so great that instead of four or five, as formerly, there are now more than seventy here, some of them being young men of principal houses, who cause no scandal in matters of religion, and do not offend against the laws, as the Rectors (Rettori) can bear witness. There are not more than ten Englishmen in the rest of Italy, all the rest having come hither because one of them was seized in the city of Siena by the officers of the Inquisition; and now, hearing of the arrest of the writer's servant, many of them have come to ask him whether there is security any longer in Venice. Some of them are going to England, where the matter will be noised abroad. They will also report that the minister of another prince, an enemy of his Majesty [James I.], was present when the man was examined. His Majesty will be greatly offended, &c.

* In Vol. 11.

Copy, Italian, 3 pp.

ROBERT PARSONS.

[1612?]*—Summary of a book (libellus) written in English, under this title: "Memoriale pro reformatione Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, continens modum quendam procedendum, proponendum primo Parlamento, seu Concilio nationali, post conversionem ejusdem regni ad fidem Cath<sup>m</sup>, autore R. Parsonio, Anglo, et societatis Jesu presbitero." The work is subscribed, at the end, Robertus Parsonius.

Latin, 3 pp.

GERMANY.

[1612.]—A paper relating to the Treaty of Union among the Protestant Princes of Germany.

French, 1 p.

[c. 1612?]*—The names of the Emperor's Commissioners: The Archbishop of Mentz, the Duke of Saxony, the Archbishop of Salsburg, the Count Palatine of the Rhine, and burgomasters of Coleyne and Nurenbergh.

German, with translation.

[c. 1612?]*—Portion of a letter relating to affairs in Germany. The Ambassador of the King of Great Britain,† after having had audience of the Emperor, also visited Archduke Maximilian, who received him courteously, and showed that he did not approve of the procedure which the Imperialists had observed with him.

French, 2 pp.

[c. 1612?]*—"Copie d'un Discours" (speech) relating to German affairs.

French, in a German hand, 4 pp., decayed.

JULIERS.

[c. 1612?]*—A paper relating to Saxony and Juliers, and the intervention of the Kings of France and Great Britain.

German, 3 pp.; much faded. Endorsed: Saxe.

THO. [LORD] GREY [OF WILTON] TO SIR RALPH WINWOOD.

[1613, beg.]*—Fears lest, in times of such cavil and cunning, Winwood's love unto so unprofitable a friend might have caused him some hindrance. If return of fortune enable the writer to serve him, he will do so. Purposes to entreat Count Maurice, as the Palsgrave passes by, to give (the writer) some commendation, so that some overture may be made for him upon the marriage. Is therefore sending Ro. Briges into the Low Countries, but upon pretence of some business of his own to the Brill and his (Briges') cousin Vere.* Briges will desire to pass over with Winwood, in his ship. Asks favour for him.

* In Vol. 11.

† Sir Stephen Le Sieur?

[P.S.] "Fail not, as you love my good, to keep secret my cousin Briges his errand, for not three in England have notice thereof."

Holograph. Seal, a crest.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612 [-13, Jan. 1,] cal. Jan. o.s., Dusseldorp.—The Palatine's affairs, &c.

Holograph, Latin. Seal.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1613, Jan. 1, Dusseldorf.—Will favour Mr. Abraham's affair. Mr. Dickenson writes all the news. Affairs of Germany and the Palatine.

French, 1 p.

SIR JOHN OGLE to WINWOOD.

1612 [-13,] Jan. 26, st. Angl., Utirest [Utrecht?].—Denies reports that he has been endeavouring to succeed to Winwood's place. Has not "handled with Sir Charles Wilmett upon any particulars." Would not take the office unless he can part with his regiment upon reasonable terms.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

JOHN WHEELER to WINWOOD.

1612 [-13], Jan. 26, Middelb[roughe].—Has signified to the Governor, Sir Thomas Lowe, that "our remove" from hence would be prejudicial to the King's service, and breed a great alteration in the affairs of this State. The Company has had no answer to their letters to London about this matter, the Privy Council being occupied with the Archdukes' restraint of all English cloth, which is to be brought into Flanders "only by a monopolish passport granted to Verstegen, and that only by the river of Antwerp." Our Company languishes, "for the town of Amsterdam, in maintaining the Interloperie, sucketh the very heart-blood from us." Believes the Archdukes either would have his Majesty employ his mediation with the States for the opening of the River Scheld, or wish to banish all English manufactures. Perhaps some of their friends about his Majesty "may revive a shrewd counsel once before broached at Burburch, anno 1588, if the peace had been then concluded, namely, that our Company may settle their trade at Dunkerk, or Ostende." Trusts the King will not hearken to any such counsel, as it would estrange the United Provinces. Has spoken to Mr. Lodesteyn. "Mr. Seigar† was with me in his passing through this town, and shewed me the George and Garter for his Excellency [Maurice de Nassau, Prince of Orange], which I pray God he may wear with as much honour as ever stranger did."

"Sir Thomas Smythe hath sent me a book, and prayed me to procure some friends here to be adventurers in the new Lottery (a declaration whereof I send hereinclosed), erected for the support of the plantation in * Sir Horace Vere, Governor of Brill?

† William Segar, Garter King-at-arms, knighted 1616.

Virginia; and therefore I should esteem it a favour done unto me, if it would please your Honour, and my Lord Governor of the Briel, Sir Edward Conway, Sir John Ogle, and other honorable persons and gentlemen there to be Adventurers in my said book, and to let me know between this and Midlent what it will please you and them to adventure for the setting forward of so good an action, which I am sorry hath not a more royal way than this, to advance itself withall."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

[SIR] H. SAVILE to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] Jan. 29,* London.—“I doubt not but you will understand, before the receipt of these, of the death of our dear friend, Sir Th. Bodley, who died yesternight between 5 and 6 of the clock after noon. He hath made you and me overseers, adjoining to us in a codicil three other honorable colleagues, the Archbishop of Canterbury, my Lord Chancellor, and Lord Cooke.† ‘There is a legacy to your Lady.’”

Has sent a dryfatt containing 18 copies of Chrysostom to Mr. Slade at Amsterdam, and, by Mr. John Bell’s wish, asks Winwood to direct their distribution. Sells them at Eton, being eight volumes in Greek, for 8*l.* a copy. Will gain nothing by his wares.

Holograph. Seal (an owl?).

ASTI.

1613,‡ [Jan. 30 and Feb. 2-] Feb. 9 and 12, Turin.—A petition relating to the city and contado of Asti, with a report thereon, &c.

Italian, 4 pp.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612[-13, Jan. 31,] prid. cal. Feb., Eng. st., Dusseldorp.—Affairs of Germany, the Palatine, &c. Is sorry to read what Winwood writes about Conway (D. Conwayo).

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.

[JOHN MCRE to WINWOOD.]

[1613,§ Jan.]—Wrote last on 31 Dec. Refers to various persons by ciphers and numbers. Assured ☉ that [Winwood] had idem velle and idem nolle with him. Received [Winwood’s] letter of 29 Dec. by Abraham’s brother. “12, being here staged in the world’s eye, hath his patience daily exercised, not only with delays, but with whatsoever reproaches envy or malice can cast upon him; yet so great is his courage, and so much am I affected with his speeches, that when I go to him with never so fainting a hope, I return as strong as a giant.” Alludes to competitors for a place.

“After all our attendance, Mr. Kirkham brings me this word from my Lord Chamberlain and Mr. Chancellor,|| that you must have recourse to the King, to have reimbursement of your blacks ¶ by way of privy seal, which I hope will prove for your good. Hereupon I advised with Sir Christopher [Hatton?], whether this were not a fit time, after the * Arranged under June 1612.

† Sir Edward Coke, L.C.J. Common Pleas.

‡ Arranged under 1613-14, in Vol. 9.

§ In Vol. 11.

|| Lord Suffolk and Sir Fulke Greville.

¶ Mourning for Prince Henry.

example of Sir Tho. Edmonds, to crave withall reimbursement of a greater sum, which you had some time past bestowed in secret service, namely, touching Vorstius, which to have demanded of  $\omega$  had been worse than lost labour." Other remarks on this subject. Told Sir Christopher that [Winwood] had charged him (the writer), within these three months, no less than 300*l.* for extraordinaries. Edmonds's privy seal orders him to be paid 600*l.* over his ordinary entertainments. Has, at this new year's tide, bestowed a piece of plate on Mr. Kirkham, according to former custom; which he deserved both in his Lord's time, when he obtained 100*l.* for [Winwood's] Weselle journey, and since, 100*l.* for his return in July, though it was by water, &c.

"Sir Tho. Bodly, as he doth decrease daily in health, so doth he in miserable avarice prodigiously increase, to so great a discomfort of his servants, as makes them ready to abandon him; and to so general a distaste of his friends, as makes them mince the good opinion they have had of his virtues, and makes me doubt, he will have in his will no reasonable regard of them, whose father did provide the materials where-with his wealth and honour is erected. I do still retain the 150*l.*, and that hitherto upon fair pretext; and I think there may be means wrought, by taking possession of the house and goods, to draw the executors to yield to some part of that which in reason he should give with a fuller hand."

Has received his letter by "those of Nuburg." If they had delivered it in time, he (the writer) might, before the King's departure, have procured some advance to their affairs. Lends, at Mons. Luntius' request, a watchful eye and ear to the Count of Emden's affairs, "concerning whom neither the Count of Oldenborg nor any other hath written anything to the King since his being here. His Majesty doth now write to the Bishop of Breme, thanking him for his large offers for to draw our merchants again to Stoad, commending the diligence of one Thomson, whom the Bishop employed therein, and declaring that our merchants, upon good reasons, do excuse themselves from their remove from Hamborough." * * *

Incomplete.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1612 [-13,] Feb. 6, London.—"My last letters were sent the first day of this month by one Jennin, Sir Edward Conwai's corporal. By those letters your Lordship understands of Sir Tho. Bodlei's death, and the small regard he hath had in his testament of his wives [wife's?] friends and children. The great pains he hath taken, and the cost he hath been at, to strengthen his will with so powerful overseers, and to make so cunning executors, hath breeded jealousy in me, that his conscience was privy to some defect in the constitution of his estate; and his refusal to make you an executor when he was moved to it, gave me the better aim at the point. And indeed I am told by good counsel that you may, in my Lady's right, call Sir Thomas his executors to account of old Mr. Balle's goods, because my Lady Bodly (who had them as executrix) died without making a will. I hold, in my poor opinion, this time most unfit to stir in the matter, for the avoiding of scandal, which is apt to rise out of an affair of this nature, how honest reason soever there be for it; and I am told withall that delay of time will not prejudice your right; wherefore I keep the matter secret, even from Mr. Potman, whom I only advise to be drawn to no composition, nor grant no further release than for such legacy as he shall receive.

"Our Muscovy merchants are dealing with  $\phi$  to set them in a course to induce  $\psi$  to undertake the protection of that country, upon good conditions of dominion in case we prevail and of defraying of the charges in the mean time; and the more eager are our merchants upon this enterprise, because they are jealous the States will undertake it, who (they say) were in hand with the Pole, upon his good success there, to buy out their privileges, and so debar their trade from that country. ☉ desires you to inform him whether the merchants of the United Provinces have been so forwards with the Pole or no, and whether you think the States will undertake [their?] protection if we refuse them. 12 I no . . . . . is willing to show himself in this suit, but I fear his adversaries will take thereby great occasion of calumniating his activeness, which they will make quiet 4 reckon for a vice, now in the present constitution of this estate.

“Though we will not apprehend the King of Spain’s preparations at the Groyne to be for any of these kingdoms, yet (to abate the insolency of our Papists) there is order taken to disarm them, and a general muster is now a taking of all the able men in the land. The King is now at Winsor, where tomorrow the Count Palatine shall be installed, and for his Excellency perhaps Sir Noel Caron, because Count Henry is not come as yet. ☉ and 50 are together at Winsor, who are still confident 12. 77. 8. Since Garter’s arrival here hath been much speech of Barn<sup>vs</sup> [Barnevelt’s?] expectation, and of the sure account he and his servants make of 8.

“Of all Sir Tho. Bodlei’s servants the coachman only maketh offer of his service to your Lordship, which he doth with much affection, refusing to accept the offer of the Bishop of London and two others before he shall understand your Lordship’s answer to this. Here is one Yearldy, a servant of the late Archbishop Bancroft, whom your Lordship may remember to have been recommended to you in France, who is willing to serve your Lordship, especially in that place. He is a comely man, of civil behaviour, hath means of his own to maintain himself in fashion of a gentleman, will diligently wait at your table and elsewhere, and will expect no manner of wages nor reward, making this the only guerdon of his service, to make it a shelter against such ordinary vexations which the iniquity of these times are like to cast upon him. He is such a one as your Lordship may either hold if you find use for him, or put off easily when you please. . . .

“The marriage day holdeth on Shrove Sunday, but their departure is altered to the Thursday in Easter week, when they will pass together to Vlushing, from whence his Highness [the Elector Palatine] will post home with diligence, and her Grace [Elizabeth] in easy journeys will travel through the United Provinces. My Lord of Rochester doth defer to move the King for your blacks until their return from Winsor.”

[P.S.] “The King will dispatch the Nuburgers shortly after his return. Sir Tho. Bodlei’s funerals shall be at Merton College the 21: [or 22: ?] of March next.

“Sir Christopher is as earnest t’ understand your Lordship’s opinion touching the transporting of Sir John Ogle’s regiment to my Lord Chandos, as if it were indeed a thing feasible.”

Holograph, decayed. Seal of arms. Endorsed: Concerning the recovery of the Lady Bodley’s estate.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1612 [-13,] Feb. 8, London.—“Diston arrived here this day about noon, having left Count Henry yesterday aboard his ship before Margett. On Sunday last the Elector Palatine was installed at Winsor, and with him Count John Louis de Nassau, for Count Maurice. The King, and my Lord of Rochester returned to White Hall this afternoon about 3 of the clock, at which hour your letters were delivered. I attended at his Lordship's lodgings until this evening tide, to learn whether he had moved the King for the blacks according to promise at his Lordship's departure, but he came not in, so as I must entreat your Lordship's patience for that yet a little while longer.

"Now that I have begun a letter, I will take the boldness to fill it up, though it be with such stuff as otherwise I am not willing to insert. Mr. Hackwell, one of Sir Tho. Bodlei's executors, hath reported abroad the formal demand I made of the possession of your house, no less untruly than injuriously; and (which troubleth me most of all) Sam. Calvert, adhering to his part, hath given his tongue too much liberty in this particular, as your Lordship may conceive by this reply, which an indifferent person (at the least as great a friend of his as mine) made him to this purpose: 'Sam, me thinks you much forget yourself. I know Will. Hackwell as well as I know you or More, and believe me, both Hackwell and you will find yourselves in a wrong course.' Because I failed of finding Sir Jo. Bennet at his house, the day that I had made my demand in St. Barthelmei's, and so until that those letters were gone, I resolved to leave him unvisited until I should receive answer of those letters from your Lordship; yet being nettled with those rumours, I found him yesterday, [and] gave him an account of what passed between Mr. Hackwell and me, wherein I truly delivered as well the rough as the smooth of all my speech; wherewith he acknowledged himself satisfied, wished he had been present, so should not Mr. Hackwell have stood upon so nice terms; told me withall that he had sent your Lordship a copy of the Will, and that Mr. Hackwell had advertised him somewhat against me, and did also request your leave for the use of the house. I then repeated to Sir John that in the end of our speeches at St. Barthelmei's, Mr. Hackwell, after his braving threats to hold the house by law, said, he hoped you would not refuse him leave to hold it for a while: I then answered, your Lordship was prone enough to afford all reasonable courtesies, but for his part he needed no leave who could hold it of himself so fast by law. There was not a word that passed from me to the demand, but is held necessary by as good lawyers as he, and the truth is, that Mr. Hacket (sic) finds himself in such a brake, that if your Lordship grant him not leave, but leave it statu quo, your Lordship may have good advantage of him, at the least may draw them to pay the rent and repara[tions], which otherwise no entreaty can procure. I will not stand to make any apology for myself: I presume the indifferent standers by (to whose report I will be bold to refer your Lordship) will judge that pains needless. The questions I asked of the Will was [were] not to satisfy my own curiosity, but to inform your Lordship, which I desired rather to do openly by the Executors, than by underhand inquiry of the servants or scrivener, which (as I told them) was a real and round proceeding according to the mind of my master.

"I have delivered your Lordship's letter to Captain Bret[']s hand. The marriage day holdeth for Sunday next; the fireworks shall be on Thursday night, the sea-fight on Saturday, and the masqueradoes on Monday and Tuesday."

Holograph; decayed. Two seals of arms.

JOHN DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

[1613, Feb. 12,] pridie idus Feb., Dusseldorp.—German affairs. Refers to the Palatine, and to Markham.

Holograph, Latin, 2 pp., decayed.

VENICE GOLD.

1613,* Feb. [18-]28, Brussels.—Letters patent of the Archdukes Albert and Isabel Clara Eugenia to Jehan Andrea Turato, native of Milan, “maistre a battre et filer l’or,” who was invited by the King of England and has treated with the Count Palatine to establish the said art in their countries, but has resolved, at the instance of the Archdukes’ agent resident in the English Court, to come hither with eight persons of the said “mestier,” to his great prejudice and damage, for the purpose of working gold and silver “in the fashion of Milan,” &c.

Copy of a notarial copy, dated 6 June, 1614; French, 4 pp. Endorsed: The Archdukes’ patent to the maker of Venice gold.

W. TRUMBULL to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] Feb. 18, Brux[elles].—Sends by Mr. Arthur Aynscombe a packet out of France. Gives news from Spain and Germany. “A Dominican friar in this town hath left his cloister, and as we fear is run into Holland.”

Holograph. Three seals of arms.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] Feb. 20, English style, Dusseldorp.—Affairs of Germany and of the Palatine.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.

[SIR] JOHN HOLLES to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] Feb. 22, my house in Lincoln’s Inn graunge.—“By reason of my mourning garment I am (with the rest of my fellows) a bandito and stranger to the Court; all others, suitable to the season, clad in jollity and joy; so as I am also a stranger to the doings and desseingnments of that pla[ce, and] therefore less able to account to you thereof; and tho[ugh] more than three months be past since our great and g[lorio]us Northstar fell, yet being well acquainted with his gracious conceit of you, and your religious devotion to him, think it not strange and unseasonable that eaune [even?] with you I condole this irreparable loss, however these festivals have laid aside the memory thereof; for he will ever live in every understanding English heart, of what profession and occupation soever, military or civil, but missed and lamented most by them who, having had the happiness of his conversation best knew him; then what, and whom, you found at Richmond this last summer, you I doubt not well remember, and therefore, because he is not, hav[e n]ow a greater measure of sorrow, for he was a . . . . ton, and valued worth wheresoever he found it.”

Holograph; decayed. Seal of arms.

W. TRUMBULL to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] Feb. 26, Bruxelles.—“Colonel Schonberg hath requested me to give conveyance to a coach of his, which I send by this shipper, called Thomas Peetersonne of Schonhoven,” &c.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

* This is arranged under June 1614, in Vol. 10.

[SIR RALPH WINWOOD] to the KING.

[1613, Feb. ?]—A long letter about German affairs, beginning: "By Sir Thomas Lake's relation of mine answer to that which he wrote me by your commandment."

Draft, 2 pp., not in Winwood's hand.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] March 1 (or 2), London.—"The post Diston is now scarce passed Gravesend with the King's packet touching the States' next payment and my last letter of the 24th of February, by reason of the contrary winds that have been ever since. Potter arrived with your Lordship's last dispatch the 27th of the last. Sir Thomas Bodlei's executors were very glad of your Lordship's letter, whereupon Mr. Hackwell vouchsafed to make me offer of a reconciliation touching our different in my demanding of the possession; so as I find them both very ready to accommodate your Lordship in all your demands which shall be found reasonable by the overseers.

"The tapisserie in the great chamber is priced at 60*l.*, and the andirons there with the tongs and shovel 4*l.* 10*s.*; but what rate they will make of that (sic) and the rest unto your Lordship I cannot learn as yet. Your Lordship shall have cloth to mourn, and my Lady silk grograin, for which I have so long attended this afternoon at Sir John Bennett's house (all in vain) as I have scarce the leisure to write these few lines to your Lordship now by this bearer, Lieutenant Blondell, by whom also I intended to have sent my Lady's gown if her tailor had kept his word. I have twice this last week spoke at the Council table for your Lordship's and Mr. Dickenson's entertainments now due, but all in vain, for our necessities are monstrous. I have not time to enlarge this any further, neither indeed is the sequel so fit to be written as delivered by word of mouth."

[P.S.] "The Lords mentioned in my former letters shall be commissioners to deliver my Lady Elizabeth at Bakrag. And Mr. Levinus with Dr. Martin shall have the commission alone to take assurance of the jointure. I return herewith the Nuburg packet."

Holograph.

J. DICKENSON to [WINWOOD].

1612[-13,] March 11, Eng. st., Dusseldorp.—German affairs.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.

R. LORD ROCHESTER to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] March 12, the Court at Thetford.—Thanks for the care he has taken about Captain Forbes's business.

Seal (as before).

FREDERIC, ELECTOR PALATINE, to WINWOOD.

1613,* March 15, London.—"Monsieur,—Le Chevalier Ouselay m'ayant esté recommandé de bonne part, mais particulièrement de Madame la Princesse ma treschere espouse, pour estre favorisé en la recherche qu'il faict d'une place de Cap<sup>ne</sup> vacante par la mort du feu Cap<sup>ne</sup> Hearsay à Berghen op Soom, ou bien quelque autre capitainerie et office èz com-

* Arranged under 1613-14, in Vol. 9.

pagnies Angloises, et d'autre part eroiant ses qualitez telles qu'il y pourra vtillement seruir; Je vous prie tresaffectueusement de vouloir en telle sort prendre soing de sad[icte] recherche, que par nostre assistance et faueur il puisse estre en ce gratifié. Je vous en scauray du gré, pour m'en reuenchir en toutes occasions. Sur ce priant Dieu, Mons<sup>r</sup>, de vous auoir en sa s<sup>te</sup> garde," &c.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1612[-13,] March 24, London.—“I may not let this bearer, Captain Forbes, go empty handed, sith he is so willing to carry your Lordship's letters, though I have already sent away the letter I wrote for his conveyance, by Janson, together with the King's letter of the 21st of this month, which I myself [wo]uld have carried. That dispatch was a [dir]ect answer to your Lordship's last letter to my [Lord] of Rochester, according to the points [ther]eof, to which purpose your Lordship is authorised [to] make a proposition to the States. The . . . day of April doth still stand for the parting, and I believe, if the weather permit, it will not be for many days put off. I cannot yet see an end of my Checquer suit, yet I hope to make some end of it, and be coming to your Lordship by th' end of this week Sir H. Neville doth this night come to town. Mr. Nanton is making suit for a licence to travel for four years. θ(?) saith he hath nothing as yet to add unto his letter by this bearer; yet I hope by .12. means to bring some letter from him. Mr. Wm. Love told me the other day that his brother had no will to send Mr. Way back; whereupon I have written earnestly, that either he would hasten over to attend at the Palsgrave's passing by, or else declare his purpose to the contrary, that another might be provided for his room. The King's late dispatch to my Lord Governor of the Brill doth carry but little comfort in designing Sir Edward's [Cecil] place before it fall. It is possible that I may outstrip the bearer hereof.”

Holograph. Two seals of arms.

J. BOREEL (?) to WINWOOD.

1613, March 26, o.s., London.—Is obliged for the “lettres d'adresse” with which Winwood favoured the town of Middelburg and himself. Was kindly received on the 22nd by Viscount Rochester, who procured for him audience of his Majesty at Tibols [Theobalds] on the morrow, and the King was so gracious that he hopes “this affair” will have a good end, although the merchants think otherwise, &c.

French.

GERMANY.

[1613, March?].—Summary (sommaire) of the Union made between the Evangelical Electors, Princes, and States of the Holy Empire. 18 articles.

Copy, French, 6 pp.

JULIERS AND CLEVES.

[1613?] 1612, March 28, o.s., Wezel.—Contract of Alliance between the King [of Great Britain] and “the Electors, Princes, and States,” for the preservation of the rights of “the Princes interested in the succession of the duchies of Juliers, Cleves, Monts, and their appurtenances,” &c. Signed by Winwood, Schonbourg, Buinckhausen, and Dathenes (Pierre).

Copy, French, 5 pp.

[1613, March?].—"Articles touching Juliers."
Copy, French, 2 pp., decayed.

[1613, March?].—Seven Articles relating to the Princes of Brandenburg and Neuburg, the Emperor, the custody of the town and castle of Juliers, &c.

Latin, in Winwood's hand, and endorsed by him : Collogne.

[1613, March?].—"A memorial relating to the affair of Cleves and Juliers."

French, 2 pp.

[1613, March?].—"A note of the demands made by the Princes to the States of Juliers and Ravensperg."

English, 1 p.

[1613, March?].—"The information given by the Ambassador of Juliers." Begins: Les Ducs de Juliers et Cleves, comme Princes de l'Empire, de toute ancienneté, et sans aucune doute, ont usurpé le droit de conduire les passants par leurs terres et provinces.

French, 4 pp.

[1613, March?].—"La substance de ce qui a esté propo . . . de la part de S. A. Electeur de Brandebourg en l'Assemblée de Messrs. les Estats Generaux"—relating to the succession of Juliers, Cleves, &c., in which he is opposed by the Count Palatine.

French, 6 pp.

SIR THO. SMYTHE to WINWOOD.

1613, April 7, London.—"I have received both your Lordship's letters, the one of the 13th of March, and the other by the Commissioners themselves, of the 15th of the same; whose welcome we congratulated with all courtesy and due respect, according to your Lordship's desire. They have been since with his Majesty, and delivered their letters; who thereupon appointed certain Commissioners to meet and treat with them of those affairs, namely, Sir Daniel Dunn and Sir Christopher Parkins, knights, Masters of the Requests, myself, Wm. Bird, Dr. of the Civil Law, Clement Edmonds, esquire, one of the Clerks of the Council, Wm. Grenwell, Robert Myddelton, and Robert Bell, merchants; since when we have had only one meeting with them (by reason of this time of solemnity of Easter), but we have an intent to hasten the business with all convenient speed possible, and will endeavour to conclude in all love and neighbourly friendship."

Seal of arms.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

[1613,] 11 James I., April 17, Palace of Westminster, under the Signet.—Complains of Barnevelt's reserve and neglect in giving the King satisfaction touching the intended league between "those of that State and some of the Hanse Towns." Sent for Sir Noel Caron, and desired him to inform Barnevelt of his (the King's) displeasure. Desires Winwood to obtain a copy of what has passed from the States General, who will probably be assembled for the entertainment of the Elector Palatine.

Signature and signet. Decayed.

RICHARD WILL[O]UGHBY TO WINWOOD.

1613, April 21, Padoa.—Is glad that he remembers an old and unprofitable servant of his. Winwood thinks his ten years' employment a long while. Has been here double and almost triple that time. Offers a few "Peripatetical fantasies," suggested by "the walls of our University."

Holograph.

SIR HENRY NEVILL TO WINWOOD.

[1613, April?].—"Before I give you account of anything else, I must not forget to thank you for the kindness it pleased you to do me of late, which together with many other shall be treasured up in a grateful memory. I made Sir Tho. Overbury acquainted with that which you wrote in your last letters to me concerning Sir Thomas Lake: whose [Overbury's] answer from Roiston I send you herewith. But I have replied, that this is not enough, unless the K[ing] check him roundly and openly for it, and that my Lord [Rochester?] may signify anew his Majesty's pleasure unto his ministers abroad. For Lake's purpose is to engage the K[ing] as much as he may, and intrude himself as far as he can into the execution of the place,* that his friends may pretend that he hath the more wrong done him, if he be excluded in the end; which language they begin to hold already.

"For the point in the end of his letter concerning himself and me, this is the meaning of it. There hath been much poison cast out of late unto the K[ing] both against him and me, but more especially against him, and with more danger, because I doubt he hath given some advantage to take hold of; being, as you know, violent and open. And the tail of this storm fell a little upon my Lord himself. How it hath cleared up since the King's going to Roiston I know not otherwise than by Overburie's letters, who in this letter writes coldly as you see of you, and in a later concerning myself saith he is not in despair: which is a far different style from that he was wont to use.

"Assuredly, if I miscarry, it is for his sake, and by his unadvised courses, having not only refused to take any help in the work, under pretence of not sharing obligations, but irritated and provoked almost all men of place and power by his extreme neglect of them, and needless contestation with them, upon every occasion. Yet I have prevailed so much, as I have made a full reconciliation between my Lord and my Lord of Penbrooke: who hath showed himself a noble, wise, and worthy gentleman, not only in clearing himself from all the imputations our side had laid upon him without any just ground, but in remitting [the] injuries done him upon that false surmise, unto the public, [and] promising to join henceforth closely with my Lord in all things he shall undertake for religion and the State.

"I write you the rather of this, because I would wish you not to neglect him, out of any mistaking of his worth, but rather to bestow a letter upon him, which I will deliver with mine own hands. Within these two days both he and other of the Lords will be in town, by whom I shall

---

* One of the Secretaryships of State. Winwood and Lake became Secretaries in 1616, and were succeeded by Sir John Herbert and Sir Robert Naunton in 1618, according to Haydn's Book of Dignities; but according to the State Papers, Winwood was sworn in as Principal Secretary in March 1614, and Lake was not joined with him in the office till January 1616. Lake had formerly been Under-Secretary.

understand somewhat more, how things are like to go, and then I will write again. In the mean time, with my best wishes unto yourself and my Lady and yours, I take my leave."

[P.S.] "I send you a letter I received yesternight late from Roiston."
Holograph. Portion of a seal of arms.

RO. LORD ROCHESTER to WINWOOD.

1613, May 15, Whitehall.—"At the instance of the Lord Bucklugh, my kinsman, I have thought fit once again to recommend unto your care and furtherance the business which he hath so long pursued, and whereof your former advertisements have raised good hope of success. This now I desire of you in his behalf that you would drive it to some issue, to the end that either he may desist and quiet himself upon a resolute denial, if his hope be cut off, or receive some good satisfaction of that he desireth and hath so long prosecuted, in convenient time."

Seal (as before).

SIR THO. SMYTHE to WINWOOD.

1613, May 16, London.—"Since the writing of my last to your Lordship, we have had some meetings with the Commissioners sent from the States, and conferred both by word of mouth (but more specially by relations delivered in writing interchangeably each to other); from whom we received unexpected propositions, that when we hoped of some good accord for reconciliation of certain grievances received in those parts, we found an overture of debarring us from the main and principal places of trade in the Indies (as you may more plainly perceive by a breviate dr[awn] of our proceedings, and presented to his Majesty, a copy whereof I have herewithall sent unto your Lordship). And his Majesty, finding that their commission stretched not to authorise them to mediate those extremes, was pleased to protract no further time, but to dismiss them (they hastening a dispatch, and I, at their request to me, assisted with my best endeavours to give them content therein). So that we have treated long with no other benefit, but only, that we now know what they endeavour, to seclude us from trading in those parts, where hitherto we have had it, without fear of the Portugal, and with the good affection of the country people. Notwithstanding, we have (according to your Lordship's motion) used them courteously, and I have entertained them kindly . . . . .
. . . . .fter by his [Majes]ty's favour, and your Lordship's mediation, the States may be persu[aded] to consider of such a course of peaceable and quiet trade as may be for the better security thereof, and confirmation of our former love and friendship; otherwise, if I deceive not myself, the worst will be theirs in the end. And thus, presuming of your Lordship's good assistance as occasion shall be presented, not forgetting my most respective remembrances, and best thanks for your great care and pains afforded unto this Company,* [I] do take my leave."

[P.S.] "His Majesty hath been pleased to send a letter unto the States (which he showed unto me), the conclusion whereof was, that hereafter he intendeth to send certain Commissioners unto them, to treat further of these busines[ses]."

Endorsed: Concerning trade into the East Indies

* The East India Company.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

[1613,] 11 James I., May 31, manor of Greenwich, under the Signet.—“This gentleman, Sir Thomas Meutas, returning now to his charge, doubteth lest his long absence from it may have bred some distaste in the Prince Maurice or the States. . . . He hath had very necessary occasion of his abode here for the assistance of his sister, a widow, in some troubles of her estate.”

Signed at the top.

[SIR THOMAS LAKE] to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador with the States.

[1613,* May.]—A short letter, defaced, and mostly illegible. The writer's name and the date are taken from the endorsement. There appears to be some reference at the end to the Duke of Savoy.

THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA.

[1613?] May.—Account of the proceedings of “the Admiral” against [Turkish] galleys in the Archipelago. Some vessels captured were brought to Leghorn.

Italian, 2 pp. Endorsed by Sawyer: Savoy, 10 Feb. (sic) 1613.†

TURKEY.

1613, June 2, Constantinople.—News of Turkey, Transylvania, Hungary, the Dutch Ambassador, &c.

4 pp.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1613, June 3, Dusseldorf.—“Sans la survenue inopinée de M. le P. Maurice et de sa suite vos Mess<sup>rs</sup> eussent esté mieux accomodez icy, et y eust eu moins de desordre et de plainte. Baste quilz sont partis ce jourdhuy tous en bonne santé, et sur tous vostre belle et gentille Princesse, laquelle ma femme a eu lhonneur d'entretenir assez longtemps en bonne françois, et aucuns de nos bons et antiens amis d'Angleterre. Mons<sup>r</sup> le Viconte de l'Isle et moy auons parlé du vieux temps et du nouveau, et ma tesmoigné combien vous m'aimez. Plaise a Dieu que je me puisse rendre par mes services digne de l'amitié de vous deulx. Il ma parlé en confiance du rang que l'on veut faire tenir a madicte Dame plustost comme fille de Roy que femme d'Electeur. Je ne scay si l'on y rencontrera de la difficulté, bien que cela ne soit sans exemple, comme des deux Infantes d'Espagne marices en Sauoye et au pays bas, et de Madame la Princesse d'Orange la jeune, laquelle par brevet du feu Roy tient en nostre Court le rang de sa naissance. Car Mess<sup>rs</sup> les Allemans ont par fois, a cause de la grandeur imaginaire de leur Empire, des jactances souuent hors de saison et sans raison. Toutefois il y en a de bien sages a Heydelberg, d'ou le S<sup>r</sup> de Schonberg arriva icy en xxxij heures et partit iiij heures apres, nous aiant dict lheureuse arriuee de son M<sup>re</sup> le xxij<sup>e</sup> dernier, non encor attendu et surprenant le monde a table.

“J'enten que l'Emp<sup>r</sup> est fort jaloux de l'entremise de M<sup>r</sup> Lessieur avec quelques Princes de l'Vnion, pour mettre d'accord les deux maisons

* In Vol. 11.

† Arranged under this date in Vol. 9, 1613-14.

Electoralles, et dict voulloir par son auctorité terminer le differend de Julliers avec l'aduis des autres Electeurs et Princes de l'Empire en la prochaine Journée de Ratisbonne. Mais celuy de Brandebourg ne s'y trouuant poinct, non plus que les autres Vnis, que sen peut il esperer ? Le S<sup>r</sup> de Borch est allé a Berlin, et sera suiuy du S<sup>r</sup> Ketler, pour aller a lad<sup>e</sup> Journée comme jenten de la part de leur M<sup>re</sup>. Je remets le surplus a M<sup>r</sup> Dickenson, qui dict vous voulloir escrire de Cologne. Je vous supplie me mander en quelle qualité et avec quel appointement vient M<sup>r</sup> du Maurier, et si M<sup>r</sup> du Reffuge est parti, duquel je trouois les lettres assez judicieuses."

Seal.

SPAIN.

1613, June [10-]20, Marymonte.—Declaration by Albert, Archduke of Austria, that certain persons named are exempted for certain periods from the order made by the King of Spain at Madrid on 31 May, reforming salaries in the Court. Among the names are—el Coronel Guill<sup>mo</sup> Stanley, Don Juan y Don Bernard O'Neal, el Conde de Tyrconnel, Georgio Parsonio, Don Hugo Daniel (opposite to this is written, O'Donnell), Doña Helena Suyn, Doña Helena Carty, Doña Helena O'Driscal, Doña Helena Carty (sic), Doña Catalina Estaquin, Doña Leonara Suyne, Cataline Heulana, Doña Cecilia Macalif, Doña Rosa de Guigan, Doña Juana Estaquin, Sauina Suyne, Cecilia Kelly. These ladies, with 11 others, are described as widows.

Copy, Spanish, 4 pp.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1613, June 12, o.s., Dusseldorp.—The Palatine sends the enclosed letter [to the King, thanking him for receiving his delegates, and for admonishing the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg touching the Juliers controversy. Refers to this matter at great length. Conjectures, by letters from Heydelberg, that "our most serene Princess" arrived there on Monday, some Princes having previously assembled there with great company and pomp.

Holograph, Latin, 4 pp. Seal.

SIR HENRY SAVILE to WINWOOD.

1613, June 15, Eton.—"There was an error committed in transporting the corps[e] in that sort, if it were as you write. I am sorry for it, but now cannot amend it. I have still some petty service for you or other; now my request is that you will provide me, if it be possible within the compass of some reasonable time, 6 or 8 months, a piece of rich tapestry for the upper end of our Hall at Eaton (sic) of ten foot deep, and 32 foot in length, either in one piece or in three, if one cannot be had of that proportion. Our price for the whole is 60*l.*, which was given us by Mr. Robins, late Fellow of our house, now deceased. It will amount almost to 20*s.* a stick, if I count right; for which price I presume very fair imagery may be had, full of silk, &c. I pray you let me know as soon as may be what we shall trust to, for it is to be done and dispatched and hung up at Eton within 12 months. The money shall be paid, if you will, beforehand, where you will appoint. It were not amiss, albeit it be not so conditioned in his will, that somewhere in the middle there should be woven into it these words or the like: Ex dono Adami Robins, quondam Socij huius Collegij, in silver or golden silk."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

R. LORD LISLE to WINWOOD.

1613, June 18, Collen.—Is on his return, but purposes going to Spain. Sir George Goring goes by the Haghe, and will give a good account of all that passed at Heydelbergh at the receiving of her [Highness—Elizabeth]. "I do not find but she is hitherto very well contented, and truly not without cause, for everybody there was bent to do her all honour and service. The Marquis of Ansbach and the Duke of Wirtemberg used her and the Embas. with a great deal of respect, and so did the Administrator and the Prince of Anhalt, whose professions (notwithstanding what your Lordship did say unto me) are exceeding great unto her, and his actions hitherto accordingly. The Electrice Dowager in her professions and behaviour can do no more than already she doth, and we have received satisfaction that she will never move question of preceancy. Her Highness herself, if she go on as she hath begun, will win herself very much love and respect, for her behaviour gives every one, great and small, satisfaction.

"Shomberg showed a desire to go away, whereupon we went to the Electrice, and the Marquis of Ansbach, and the Prince of Anhalt, as likewise to the Administrator, to desire them to persuade him to continue his abode with the Elector, as a thing the King would take very well. They all agreed with us; so his stay was resolved on. But since my coming away I understood that there had passed [some] heat between the Administrator and him. For whereas the Administrator, during our abode there, had in all things given place to the Elector, he now told Shomberg he would take again the place that did belong unto him; whereupon words multiplying, Shomberg (as I heard, for this I understood upon the way) told him that if he would retire himself during his authority, he should have the allowance which is due to the Administrator, which is 20,000 gilders a year; or, if he would not go out of Heydelbergh, that he should have his side to him; for the Elector should keep house by himself. How far this went, and what will become of it, I know not."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

RO. LORD ROCHESTER to WINWOOD.

1613, June 20, Greenwich.—Has had nothing to write, but is not forgetful of him. "I have nothing to make answer to in your last letter, but that his Majesty, having already pardoned the man who was the principal offender, holdeth it unnecessary to take any further examination of the woman, especially seeing the accusations wherewith she should be charged are in the Secretary of Scotland's hands, who is now in Scotland. His Majesty's pleasure therefore is that she should be set at liberty; howsoever he taketh in good part the care which you and the other (sic) have taken of that which concerneth his affairs."

[MONS. DE] RUSSY (?) to WINWOOD.

1613, June 28, Vervieres.—Thanks for favour shown to his wife and son.

French. Seal of arms.

THE KING and DUKE OF RUSSIA to JOHN MERRICK.

[1613,]* A.M. 7121, July 2, Mosco[w].—"By the mercy of God From us the great Lord King and great Duke Michael Fedorowich, of all Russia absolute Upholder, and of many dominions Lord and Commander. To John the son of William Merrick, one of the merchants of the great Lord our dear and loving brother, James, by the same mercy and grace, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, in this present year since the creation of the world 7121, the second of July.

"We received letters from our Governor Meketa Michalowich Puskin and our Secretary Putylla Grigory, signifying unto us, from the Castle of the Archangel, of the arrival there in an English ship [of] you, John Merrick, with one other your fellow Commissioner named William, the son of William Russel, to be messengers sent from your great Sovereign Lord and Master, James, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, to the State of our land of Russia, with his princely letters and message; and that therefore you were addressed to our State for the confirmation of the league and amity that hath ever been held between your great Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty and the Lord[s] and Kings of this country, our noble predecessors, to the establishing of your trade as formerly in our dominions of Russia: having had report in England that such of his Majesty's merchants as were in our Kingdom were slain and robbed by the Polonians and Lettowers subject to the King of Poland. And further they signify unto us that it was not known unto your great Sovereign Lord and Master, the King's Majesty, at your coming out of England, of our establishment by God's great mercy over these great and famous dominions of Russia. And forasmuch as your letters were not directed unto us, Michael Fedorowich, great Lord King and great Duke of Russia, we would be pleased to give our princely order concerning you.

"Therefore we, great Lord King and great Duke of all Russia, being [such ?] by the great mercy and will of Almighty God (who be praised in the Trinity) and by the free election of all the people of what degree soever within our Empire and Dominions of Russia, do send to our most princely loving brother your great Sovereign Lord and Master, James, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, our Ambassador, to signify our establishment and election, and of other great affairs concerning us and our dominions, who is a principal gentleman and lieutenant of our country of Schadskey, by name Olexey Ewanowich Zouzin, and with him in commission Olexey Witove; and [they] are already dispatched from us, coming towards Archangel. And therefore you, John Merrick, the King's merchant, who hath (sic) known of the ancient undissembled brotherly love and entire affection and amity that hath been held between the great Lords and Kings of Russia, our predecessors, of blessed memory, the great Lord our grandfather Ewan Vassilowich, his son our uncle Pheoder Ewanowich, the great Lord and King Boris Feodorowich, [and] the great Duke Vassily Ewanowich, and that great renowned Lady of blessed memory Queen Elizabeth, and with this your great and worthy Sovereign Lord, our dear affected brother, James, the King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland; wherein we take knowledge of your faithful service done to these great Lords and Kings in anything they have commanded you, and that you have with an upright heart ever furthered their princely affairs; you are to show your service now to us in commanding a ship to be prepared and made ready for the transporting of our Ambassador into England, and him to assist and further in our princely affairs, which he shall inform you of, as much as in you lieth, wherein you shall shew unto us your service; which finding, we will, for our loving brother's sake, your great Sovereign Lord and Master (not doubting of your faithful service herein), show our princely favour to you more than formerly.

* In Vol. 11. According to the rule given in Nicolas's Chronology, p. 10, for reducing the era of Constantinople to the Christian era, the year 7121 of the former corresponds with 1 Sept. 1612—30 Aug. 1613, of the latter. A letter in the State Papers, of 1 June 1614, states that John Merrick was then going as Ambassador to Muscovy.

“And concerning those your great Sovereign's letters sent to the State of our dominions, you shall either send them up to us to the (sic) Mosco by this our express messenger, or else with your fellow Commissioner, and they shall be received with the greatest regard so worthy a prince can desire; for that we would have you to go along with our Ambassador to your great Sovereign Lord and Master, unless you have any express command from his princely Majesty that you shall present the letters yourself. In which case we may not contradict such princely order, but we would have you then to send your fellow Commissioner along with our Ambassador for the furthering our princely affairs, such as our Ambassador shall acquaint him; and withall to write your letters unto those merchants that trade into our kingdom, that they should become intercessors and humble suitors unto their great Sovereign Lord, our dear and loving brother, the King's Majesty, and to (sic) further our affairs as much as in them lieth. And having dispatched our Ambassador with your fellow Commissioner, first thoroughly instructing him, your self is to repair unto us, great Lord, at Mosco, to kiss our princely hand.

“And we, great Lord, hereafter finding the hearty love and princely affection which we so entirely desire of our most dear brother your great Sovereign Lord King James, with furtherance to assist us against our enemies and the supporters of them, will for his Majesty's sake especially (nothing doubting of your faithful service as much as in you is) hold you and your nation (so many as our dear affected brother your great Sovereign shall think fit or desire in his princely request) not as strangers but as our own native-born subjects, and the former privileges will cause to be written in our princely name; and in all our dominions of Russia you shall trade more freely than ever heretofore. And thus you are not to fail to show your endeavour and furtherance about our affairs, as God shall enable you, and of our princely favour and grace in all things you may wholly depend both at present and hereafter. Your service and endeavour herein shall not be by us forgotten.

“Sealed with the privy seal. Dated at our City of Mosco, the second of July, from the creation of the world 7121.”

[Translation.] Endorsed: From the Duke of Russia.

JOHN DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1613, July 3, o.s., Dusseldorp.—Touching the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg, the Landgrave Maurice, Juliers, the Palatine, &c. Markham stayed here a few days, but has returned to his Prince. We have heard of the horrible treason discovered in England.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.

ENGLAND, FRANCE, and the STATES GENERAL.

1613, July [6-]16, Paris.—The King of France having caused to be read the Act signed by the King of Great Britain, 29 Dec. 1612, and delivered by the States General to the Sieur de Reffuge, late French ambassador extraordinary to them, whereby it appears that the latter King has acquitted the former from all debts for moneys lent, troops, ships, &c. ;* with the advice of the Queen Regent his mother and the Council, is content to receive the said acquittance in lieu of repayment of a third part of the moneys advanced by the late King of France to the States since the treaty made with Great Britain in 1603 ; and he further releases to them the other two thirds of the said debt.

Copy, French.

R. LORD LISLE to WINWOOD.

1613, July 10, Spaw.—“I have received your two letters by Sir John Ratcliff and Mr. Tubb. . . . It is true I said unto the Princess of Orange that I would pass through Holland as I went back, but then did I little think of any subject to bring me hither. . . . I do wish that your occasions would rather have suffered you to have come hither yourself, than that you should have sent for the water to the Haghe.

“How our noble Princess will do at Heydelbergh I know not, but I do not see why but to hope very well, if things be as well handled as they are good in themselves. But she had strange servants put about her in England, which will do her a great deal of hurt, if either they be not removed, or better tempered. You saw enough of them for the time you were with us, but since the expiration of our commission, especially since our coming away, they are grown much more troublesome, inso-much as Coronel Shombergh makes their ill carriage towards him one of the causes why he desires to retire himself, and if he leave the service, her Highness will have a very great loss. For I do not see but all the rest are bent to hold the old Dutch fashions.

“I shall be glad if the Princess of Orange will take the journey you speak of to Franckfort. For I assure myself she will take Count Henry with her, and they two together will be able to settle matters very well for her Highness. I grow out of hope to have anything done this year about our fortifications. I pray you yet do your accustomed endeavours towards the States General, and you shall do the King a good service, and me a great pleasure. Out of Germany I hear confirmed (with grief) the likelihood of the war between the King of Denmark and the States. God send our Master to lose no time in using his authority with them both.

“By my letters out of England I receive great hopes of Sir Ha. Nevell, and truly it is more than time that an able man were in that place.”

Holograph.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

[1613,] 11 James I., July 18, Castle of Windsor, under the Signet.—“Being informed that upon the death of Sir Thomas Bodley your private affairs require your presence here, for which you have craved licence to be absent from your charge there for a time ; we have given you leave so to do, and have signified so much to the States General by our letters herewith sent. And for your said return these shall be your warrant.”

Signed at top. Signet.

KING JAMES I. to the STATES GENERAL.

Same date.—Informs them of the leave given to Winwood as above.

Signed : V're bien bon amy, Jaques R. Signet.

* Qu. see two entries placed at the end of 1603.

J. DICKINSON to WIRWOOD.

1613, July 15, a.s., Dusseldorp. — German affairs.
Holograph, Latin, 2 pp.

THOMAS BULL to SIR RALPH WINWOOD, Ambassador with the United Provinces (sic).

1613, July 30 — "Sir, — The important offices and favours in which pleased you to do me have not only infinitely added to that dear love and respect which I have so long borne you, but enjoin me to give you an account of my proceedings, as to a friend whose judgment and love I as much value as any one's with whom I ever had friendship. Shortly after I wrote unto you my last, the old Lieutenant [of the Tower?], finding my way fair, and my friends very faithfully labouring my success, knew not how more inevitably to hinder [it] than by improving that suspicion which he had formerly, with little success, insinuated unto the K[ing] about some small acquaintance that was grown between Mrs. Parpoint, my La[dy] Arbella's kinswoman, and me, which some speech of my La[dy] Arbella's in some of her disampers gave him fit occasion to execute, speaking somewhat of my La[dy] of Shrewsbury and me, which he knew so well to suite, and to raise so many conjectures, that forthwith my La[dy] Arbella, my Lady of Shrewsbury, and myself were committed here in Tower close prisoners, and Mrs. Parpoint to one of the clerks of the Council; and thus remained for full 12 weeks without ever stepping out of our lodgings, seeing or hearing from friend. In the end it pleased the Lords (having examined all points and parties exactly) to come hither and call us before them, where I gave them so full satisfaction that forthwith my servants were freed, and all of their Lordships so firmly bent in my favour that they promised me to move a suit that I presumed to beseech them to propound unto his Majesty, for accomplishing their High[ness]'s suit about my liberty, which so soon as ever the K[ing] returned they performed so nobly that forthwith I was restored to my full liberty in this place, and acquitted by them all of this foul suspicion and calumny that was raised against me; and the King (as one of the best of them sent me word) somewhat sweetened with compassion of my huge misery, seeing them all with one voice so to concur in my favour. But that you may better judge what matter was against me, I herewith send you a copy of my examination as near as I could remember to every point that passed.*

"Further, I perceive that it hath pleased the K[ing], at the Pulgrave's departure, to promise his High[ness] that if I cleared myself of this imputation, he would send me over unto him; wherefore I have thought good by Mr. Eliezman (my La. High gentleman usher) to acquaint them both and Monsieur Schomberg with the conclusion of the business, humble thanks for their princely favours unto me, and intreaty that it would please them afresh to solicit the suit by letters; and beseech you to deal with Prince Maurice and Count Harry to the same end, that by their letters unto the Pulgrave and my Lord of Rochester they will please to encourage the suit; if you may likewise procure some favourable letter from the States unto Monsieur Ciron, as opportunity shall serve, to strengthen us, it may advance the suit.

"Sir Tho. Otterbury is still here in prison, shut up close, and very sick. For other occasions I doubt not but your true friends may more fully advertise you; only I have good cause to imagine your friend will not be Secretary. Be reserved, therefore, in your proceedings, and attend upon such a guard as may with advantage offer however things settle, for it is thought Venus hath overthrown Mercury, and will knit the two sides in one. Farewell, my dear Sigr. Ridolfo, and believe my dearest love shall ever be with you, and return you the truest effects and services that can proceed from," &c.

* Not found.

*Holograph. Two seals (a crest—a bird standing on a hand). Endorsed by Sawyer; 20 July 1617.** Thomas Bull.

SIR R. NAUNTON to WINWOOD.

1613, July 21, Holeburne.—“I am glad we are so soon to see you here, which for many reasons I wish it may be with the soonest, that you may see with your eyes and hear with your ears the things which are to be committed to no cipher, and which cannot be kindly discerned without your own ἀντοψία. Here your Lordship will make your best judgment whether the service you are there employed in be not an entire liberty than any you can here accept of, specially for so long time as you shall find fair payment. For myself, I will never forget your honourable intention toward me; but till I see better encouragement and protection for sincere and worthy courses, non sum futurus hujus gloriolæ tam avidus, ut eam cæteris perreptam velim, qui certè avebunt magis, et rei cavebunt suæ. Our good friend H. N. [Sir Henry Nevill] is retired re infectâ, spe non abjectâ. Such are preferred to all places as they fall, that I see no cause yet why τ. λ. † may not hope fairly to enjoy his longing upon such conditions, quas norunt universi. The Archbishop [Abbot] and his brother of London [Bishop King], with their dependants, Sir John Bennet, and Dr. Edwards, Chancellor of London, declared themselves to his Majesty against the nullity in the case of my Lord of Essex and his Lady, on Monday last. But our Cambridge prelates of Ely and the Closet, and the two Chancellors of the Exchequer and Duchy, and the Dean of the Arches (as a Master of Requests) would make all null between them; so as it is supposed it will be yet deferred, though this was prefixed to be the decretory day. But of this and all other occurrences Mr. More will much better resolve your Lordship, who hath both industry and address, without imputation, to inform himself of all particularities.”

Holograph. Seal of arms.

GEORGE WILLIAM, MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG, to WINWOOD.

1613, July 23, Julian style, Wesel (Vesalia).—Referring to the mission of Joannes Luntius, agent of the Elector Palatine.

Latin.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

1613, July 25, Andover.—The bearer, Alexander Leuiston, has divers debts due to him from the States, for which he has Count Maurice's warrant, &c.

Signed at the top.

* Arranged under that date in Vol. 10. The date of the letter looks like “1611” or “1617,” but must be 1613.

† Sir Thomas Lake.

DR. [CONRAD] VORSTIUS.

1613, July 26,* Amsterdam.—Notarial attestation of an affidavit by Jacobus Donati, of the duchy of Mont in Germany, minister of the Reformed Church, that he had twice summoned Dr. Vorstius, &c.

French, 2 pp.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1613, July 29, Dusseldorff.—Hears that the King of Denmark has acquiesced in the remonstrance of the States touching the new impost on the Zondt; but some say the people of Amsterdam are not satisfied, and wish the King would moderate the old impost. To the current rumour of a new conspiracy in England it has been added that certain incendiaries (boutefeux) had been taken, who designed to set fire to Plinmouth and other places. Gives particulars as to the personages who will and who will not attend the Imperial Diet at Ratisbon; the affair of Juliers, &c. “Je vous envoie un extrait de ce qu’on m’escrit de Heydelberg touchant le despit de Madame la C[omtesse] d’Aronel; ce qu’on pounoit euter si on eust allongé la premiere table de trois doigts seulement. Vous aurez la coppie dvn pasquil satyricque contre le Duc de Savoye, si ja ne l’auez veu.” Presents his service to the Princess of Orange, at whose “passage” he and his wife are rejoiced.

French; decayed.

JOHN MORE to WINWOOD.

1613, Aug. 7, London.—“This dead vacation yields no great variety of public occurrences. . . . I have now gotten the great chamber and gallery into my hands by reasonable fair means, giving the executors [of Sir T. Bodley] a note under my hand, that upon the 20th of October next I will either pay them for the stuff, or leave it again in like propriety as now it is, in case your Lordship be not here before that day to make them some satisfaction. . . . As the great chamber furniture is very good and serviceable, so is the rest for the most part passing bad. . . .

“For the prices of gold, I find that French crown gold pure, at the rate of 22 carats, is here worth 3*l.* 6*s.* the ounce, but the goldsmith will give for it in plate but 3*l.* 5*s.*; and so for angel gold 3*l.* 10*s.*, which in the ingot is worth 3*l.* 11*s.* Our new gold, as your Lordship may remember, is here worth 22*s.*, and the old gold being weight 12*d.* the pound more; but we have of late found many of the new counterfeited, which they say are brought from that side. The exchange is near about 5 per cent. Mr. Benet may make your exchange to Mr. Millet in trust, without naming your Lordship or me, which I hold to be safe enough, and may be found the most convenient way.

“This day, pressing Mr. Chancellor† with some importunity for your entertainments, he was pleased to offer this leave; to take up moneys on this or that side of the sea, and he would see it [them] repaid within 2 or 3 months at the furthest, with all the interests. He acknowledged that (which before I knew) Sir John Digby had taken in Spain of the new Ambassador Sarmiento 1,000*l.*, which they must now with all speed repay. If your Lordship thinks it good to take any moneys there upon exchange, Mr. Bennett may take it in your name at double usance at the lea[st], and of merchant strangers. I told his Honour (up[on] occasion offered) that besides your entertainments sin[ce] Our Lady Day and the advance thereof, you were f[ur]ther to demand 600*l.*, which you should have had some months since upon the like reasons as Sir Tho. Edmonds had his; and now further 500*l.* for your extraordinary expense in attending my Lady Elizabeth, which I endeavoured to have gotten allowed now by his means, but he said it must pass his Majesty's hand by Privy [Se]al. The 12th of this month the Commissioners are to sell 1,000*l.* land of the great entail for 40,000*l.*, of which I am put in hope to receive a part about the end of this month." Refers to an offer by Mr. George Haughfen the elder; Winwood's friends in Bucks and Wall-drige, &c.

* Placed at the end of 1613, in Vol. 9.

† The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Fulke Greville.

Holograph, decayed. Seal of arms.

JOHN DICKENSON to WINWOOD.

1613, Aug. 8, o.s., Volberg, near Beinsberg.—German affairs. Sends letters for Cecil from the Palatine.

Holograph, Latin, 2 pp. Seal.

B. CARRIER (?) * to SIR THOMAS ROE, in the hall of the Prince Palatine at Heidelberg.

1613, Aug. [8-]18, n.s., Colin.—Learns from his host that Roe came to see him at Colin when he was at Bruile, whither he went purposely, as he was loth to speak with Roe, because when he was at Spa he was warned by friends to take heed of Roe, who spoke disgracefully of him for matter of religion. Hopes that Roe, with his wit and ability, will be more temperate in his censure of the Catholic religion. Has for his pains and preaching been hardly used at the Court these ten years. Understood, at his return here, that Roe was much commended for his temperate discourse with the Irishman who is governor of the Capucins at Colin. "Good Sir Thomas, go forward as far as truth and duty will lead you, and do such good offices with her Serenity [Princess Elizabeth] as the Catholics may continue that good hope of her, which they have conceived by her amiable and devout behaviour, as she came to visit their churches. . . . In the mean time I am no more reconciled to the Church of Rome, than for aught I perceive you are." Is sending his servant to England. The Capucin is a very honest man and a true hearted subject. "I have had much speech with him, to justify our church service in England, and have written not a little, both to confirm that, and to confute a treatise of R. P. [Parsons?] which he showed me, in which treatise Catholics are forbidden to come to our churches." Remarks on images and the sacrament. Desires his good word to their Serenities. Sends a letter to her Highness from Lord Lile. Wishes to be commended to Dr. Chapman and Dr. Rumphius.

Holograph. Seals. German postal directions.

H[UGO] DE GROOT to WINWOOD.

[1613,] Aug. 13.—"Je me sens fort oblige par la faueur que V. S<sup>rie</sup> me fait en m'aduertissant du voyage qu'elle est resolu de faire pour aller en Angleterre. Je ne doute nullement que cela ne reussira a uostre honneur et au bien de nostre pays. Pour moy je ne uous ueux prier autre chose, que seulement qu'il uous plaise si bien ailleurs qu'icy porter auecques uous la bonne affection que tousjours m'auetz tesmoignee. Je ne failliray pas de faire tout ce qui me sera possible pour vous venir baiser les mains auant uostre parlement. Cependant j'ay donné d'aduis a Mons<sup>r</sup> Paew de uostre ueneu a Amsterdam. De luy uous apprendrez la constitution des affaires des Indes. Selon mon aduis uous feriez fort bien de sonder en Angleterre les humeurs de noz marchands assauoir s'ils sont resolu a bon escient d'entrer auecq nous d'oresnauant en une guerre royale et ouuerte en ces quartiers la. Estant en Angleterre je n'y ay trouue personne qui se monstroit resoluue comme il falloit : mais on ne parloit que d'y aller en forme de simple trafficque, ou pour le plus de surprendre quelques nauires, sans se fortifier en terre, ou d'entreprendre la defense des Indiens. Quand ceste resolution sera prinse en Angleterre, je croy qu'on trouuera quelque honneste et equitable issue pour les fraix passez. Je croy qu'en peu de temps il y aura assemblee des dixsept qui gouvernent la Compaignie Generale. Auant qu'elle se tiene je n'en sçauerois juger solidement de ce que les nostres uoudroyent faire pour accommoder le different. J'ay esté fort marry a cause du malheur de uostre Baudius. J'espere que Dieu le soulagera et luy donnera mentem sanam in corpore sano."

* Or —Barrier? Qu. is this Dr. Carrier, the King's Chaplain? See S.P. Domestic.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

DIET OF RATISBON.

1613, Aug. 21, Augsburg.—Extract translated from a private letter giving particulars of the proceedings in the Diet at Ratisbon.

French, 5 pp., decayed.

R. LORD LISLE to WINWOOD.

[1613,] Aug. 22, . . . .—"Till I met with Mr. Trumbal at Anwarpe, I had thought you had been already in England, for such report was brought to the Spaw." Gives an account of his movements. Is going to England. "I find here so little done in our fortifications, as I see a resolution not to do anything this year." Remarks on affairs of the Low Countries. Will write to the Princess of Orange to make an apology for not coming by the Haghe.

Holograph: much decayed. Seal of arms.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1613, Aug. 24, Wesell.—Is two or three days' journey from Mr. Dickenson, owing to the plague. German affairs. Wishes to know whether Viscount Lisle is returning to England.

French, 1 p.

ENNO, COUNT OF EAST FRIESLAND, to WINWOOD.

1613, Aug. 30, Emden.—Is sorry that Winwood is returning to England, as he (the Count) will be separated from the most faithful patron and friend he ever had. Luntius will inform Winwood of the state of affairs in his province.

Latin.

THE STATES GENERAL to KING JAMES I.

1613, Aug. 30, the Hague.—Commend Winwood's conduct as Councillor and Ambassador, on his return to England. Trust in the continuance of the King's favour, and desire to do everything for the King's service

Copy, French.

SIR THOMAS LAKE to WINWOOD.

[1613, Aug. ?].—"I am commanded by his Majesty to send these letters to your Lordship, and that you should see them conveyed to Mr. William Ryder, gentleman harbinger to his Majesty, who now attendeth my Lady's grace [Princess Elizabeth], and from Heydelberg is to go into Denmark with the letter of the Queen's Majesty written before her going to the Bath. I have no other matter to trouble your Lordship with, but that all things here remain in eodem statu, and so are like for aught I can discern."

Holograph.

MONS. B. B. DE WALLMEROD to WINWOOD.

1613, Sept.  $\frac{1}{11}$ , Cassel in Hesse.—Is glad to learn that Winwood's recall by the King is for his advantage; otherwise, would be sorry to lose his wise counsel, from which so much good has resulted. Refers to the Diet of Ratisbon, &c. Is being sent to the young Duke of Brunswick, to condole with him, and to win him over to a better course than was pursued by his late father. The Elector Palatine and others are sending with the like object; but the Duke is solicited by the Imperial Court, Saxe, and others to the contrary. It is necessary that the King [James] should use his influence. The gain of this Prince will be of great importance to the common cause. The Hanse Towns "and others" may be won over at the same time.

Holograph, French; decayed. Seal.

THO. [LORD] GREY [OF WILTON] to SIR RAULF WINWOOD, Ambassador.

1613,* Sept. 7, . . . .—Touching his own affairs. Refers to Captain Brett, to "those worthy Princes that so graciously undertook for me," and to Shomberg.

Holograph: much decayed. Seal (a crest—bird and hand).

THE TURKS.

[c. 1613?* Sept. 8 and 22] Sept. 18 and Oct. 2, Vienna.—News of the proceedings of the Turks in Transylvania, &c.

German, 2 pp. Endorsed: Monseigneur A. (?) de L'Isle.

Another version of part of the same.

Dutch, 2 pp.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD.

1613, Sep. 19, Wesell.—Hopes he has safely crossed the sea with his family. Desires to be mentioned to the King, whom in the last edition of his little treatise (traicté) he has frequently and worthily praised. Besides having been known and esteemed by his Majesty for 25 years, holds correspondence with all the King's ministers out of the realm with whom he is acquainted. Desires to know Winwood's opinion touching delinquent ambassadors. Refers to the Count of Zollern's discourse touching the means of settling "this difference" by the Emperor's authority. Desires that "this young Prince" [of Brandenburg] may soon learn the King's judgment thereon. German affairs. All parties are endeavouring to induce the young Duke of Brunswick to take the side of the Union, &c. Mentions [Sir Thomas] Lake, Viscount Lisle, M. Casaubon, and M. de Plessen.

* In Vol. 11.

French.

SIR THOMAS [ROE?] to WINWOOD (My Lord Ambassador).

[1613,]* Sept 22, o.s., Hage.—Hoped to have found him here, in order to impart some particulars of Hedlebergh. Sent him her Highness's letter, written one day before the arrival of [Winwood's letter], which gave her much comfort. She wishes [Winwood?] "to procure her some relief of money from the King, for her portion is too little, and she is in debt, and forced to borrow of Shonbergh, who, though he remain English, yet he hath glorious ends in all his actions. This business Shonbergh hath offered to undertake at his coming into England, which is shortly. * * * no greater haste than your own conveniency, except you prevent Shonbergh that he may not bind her beyond her will to be tied to him, and I know he means to endear himself to the King by the same way; yet this she would not have him know, and with your Lordship it is safe. I sent your L. a jealousy I had of Doct[or] Carrew (?) by Sir Th. Rad. * * * Since he judged me so light as to persuade me to abuse her Highness, I have with all haste discovered him and his purpose to her chaplain, an honest and good man, who will attend him to her, if he presume to pursue his resolution." * * *

A postscript refers to Sir Tho. Radcliff.

Mutilated and decayed. Endorsed: From Sir Tho. [Roe?]

MONS. DE PLESSEN to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1613, Sept. 24, o.s.—Was glad to hear of his safe arrival in England. Their Highnesses are well, and employ this fine weather in the chase and in the country. The death of Baron Harington, and the quarrel between a gentleman of his and the squire (escuyer) of the Princess, has given trouble to his Highness and the Councillors, being a very troublesome matter, and pursued by the two nations with great ard[our]. It has been deemed expedient to send the proceedings to the King, and leave the decision to his Majesty. Remarks on the Diet of Ratisbon, &c.

Holograph, French. Seal of arms.

DIET OF RATISBON.

1613, Oct. 1, o.s., Heidelberg.—Extract from a newsletter relating to the Diet, and affairs in Germany, Hungary, &c.

French, 2 pp.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1613, Oct. 11, o.s., Volberg near Beinsberg.—Affairs of Germany, the Palatine, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 2 pp. Seal.

MONS. BILDERBEK to ———.

1613, Oct. 13, Coul: [Cologne].—Affairs of Germany, Italy, Spain, &c.

French, 4 pp.

* In Vol. 11.

MONS. HOTMAN to WINWOOD (Councillor and Ambassador).

1613, Oct. 18, Wesell.—German affairs. Desires him to show extracts enclosed from letters of M. de Buvineckhausen to Viscount Lisle. Has been zealous for the service of the King and England for thirty years past. The English ambassadors in France have never however succeeded in obtaining for him a debt transferred to him (à moy transportée) by the heirs of the late Earl of Leicester. Is now advised that by Winwood's favour he can place one of his sons in one of the Colleges of Oxford or Cambridge, in the same way as the late Dr. Gentilis had a place for one of his; so that he will be discharged of part of the expense of their education. Desires to know by what means he can secure this, and whether Winwood has received his "Traicté de l'Ambassadeur."

French.

MONS. J. LUNTIUS to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1613, [Oct. 19,] 14 cal. Nov., o.s., the Hague.—Is glad to learn from his letters the satisfactory state of affairs in that kingdom. Prays God to give long life to the King, for the preservation of the Church. "Your London has been more fortunate than our Holland, having received within its port four ships from East India, laden with an unusual quantity of all kinds of spices. But we have lost two out of five, one near the island of St. Helena, the other in the very port of Texel, the loss of which last is estimated at eighteen tons (tonnis) of gold, whereof they barely recovered one from the wreck, as the persons in charge (perfecti) of that business have informed me. There was in this ship a very great deal of cotton (vis byssi) brought from China, and also porcelain. They came to the Hague to complain of their immense loss, and also to demand assistance against the power of the Portuguese in East India." It was judged fitting to comply with the demand, and five ships of war have been conceded. The Orders of Holland will meet 4 Nov. Refers to a controversy between Grotius and Sibrandus; the Hanse Towns; the King of Denmark; the dispute between the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg; the Turk and Transylvania; and complaints about poisonous wines, termed mute or mortified, brought from upper Germany and France into these provinces and Great Britain. The States General have sent to the Archbishop of Treves to complain of the making of such wines. Winwood may think it worth while to induce the King to forbid the importation of these deleterious wines, which are destined to injure "men of our religion." Persons will be empowered to visit all the wine cellars in France. States five methods of distinguishing mortified wines from pure wines. Refers also to the death of the Prince of Wales last year, and to the dispute between the people of Emden and their Count.

Holograph, Latin, 4 pp. Seal of arms.

THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD to SIR RALPH WINWOOD.

1613,* Oct. 27.—Anarchia verè tunc dicitur, et confusio, cum a rebus publicis exulant viri boni, et literati; ne sit illa hodiè, in Academia nostrâ, inter viros optimos, et doctissimos, vocant te (Clarissime Domine) Scholæ publicæ, qui abesse non potes, nec debes a re publicâ. Licèt enim prædicere quis possit, et providere, ex his principijs futuras olim Scholas, Ædesque aliquandò surrecturas, infelix tamen hoc est, et incertum vaticinium, nerui si deficient, et altrices pecuniæ. Rogant itaque te, tuæ Musæ, et spes literaria, rogat ipsa Mater Academia, vt egregio huic conatui, et meliori Mineruæ, adesse, quamprimùm velis, partemque aliquam oneris minuere, quo possis famam tuam, et memoriam augere. Quamuis enim eo vsque excreuerit nomen tuum apud Ordines fœderatos, vt satis vitæ tuæ, et posteritati consuluisse videaris, tuâ tamen in Matrem pietate, et, quasi, reditu in Academiam efficere possis, vt nos etiam vigeamus, tuoque ex munere multum famæ lucrum, longumque faciamus. Nil rectius feceris, quàm si pecuniarum quicquid erit, quod irrogaueris Johanni Beneto, Equiti, in manus tradas, qui totius operis Quæsturam, non inuitus, suscepit; ille tui muneris, nos tui nominis rationem reddituri. Valeas (Ornatissime Domine), et feliciter aspire his inceptis.

* In Vol. 1.

Claritatis tuæ studiosissima
Academia Oxoniensis.

E domo nostrâ Congregationis,
Octob. 27, 1613.

Clarissimo viro Domino Rodolpho Winwood, Equiti Aurato,* et in Provincijs Germaniæ Legato Regio.

Partly decayed.

J. DICKENSON to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1613, Oct. 28, o.s., Volberg near Beinsberg.—Affairs of the Palatine, the Elector of Brandenburg, &c.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

MONS. DATHENES to WINWOOD (Councillor of State and Ambassador).

1613, Oct. 29.—Winwood will see by the letters of his Highness (S. Alte) the confidence which he (elle) has in his affection to the public weal, and his dexterity in directing affairs. We know that the King is in alliance with the States till the end of the truce, but are uncertain whether there is any private treaty for a longer term. His Highness wishes to be informed on this subject, as he is labouring to make the United Princes and many others become parties to the treaty heretofore made at the Hague, their eyes having been opened by what has passed at the Diet of Ratisbon. The Papists are trying to strengthen their league. The King's authority is great, and it is desirable that his intention shall be known, &c. Affairs of Germany, Switzerland, and Spain.

Holograph, French, 3 pp. Endorsed: From Mr. Lasore (sic).

MONS. J. LUNTIUS to [WINWOOD].

1613, [Dec. 13,] id. Decemb., Greg. st., the Hague.—Affairs of the Netherlands, Germany, the Hanse Towns, the King of Denmark, Ham-burgh, the elector of Brandenburg, Amsterdam, "fretus Magallanicus" in the southern ocean, the kingdoms of Chili and Peru, East India, Guinea, France and the Dutch, the Palatinate, East Friesland, the King of Spain and the Turks, the Emperor, Halibussa's reception at Florence, &c. Desires to be commended to the King, and salutes the Archbishop [Abbot].

Holograph, Latin, 4 pp.

* The rest is added in a different hand.

MONS. J. LUNTIUS to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

[1613,* Dec. 29,] 1614, [Jan. 8,] 6 id. Jan., n. s.—Affairs of Germany, the Turks, Transylvania, Hungary, and Bohemia. The last few days a rumour has obtained that the Spaniards in Virginia had killed all the English, and occupied it. There are also rumours that Juliers had been occupied by the Elector of Brandenburg; others, by the Duke of Newburg. Refers to that matter at length. The announcements which have been brought from England of the prohibition of the importation of undyed cloths have greatly disturbed the Orders. There were some who advocated the abolition of English cloths from these provinces. Affairs of Holland.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp.; damaged. Seal of arms.

PRINCE MAURICE OF NASSAU to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

[c. 1613 ?]†—Sends him the letter he desired for the Corporation (le magistrat) of the town of Amsterdam.

French. Signed: Vostre tres-affectionné amy a vous faire service—Maurice de Nassau.

RO. LORD ROCHESTER to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador with the States.

[1613 ?] †—“For your respect to me, I know it will beget you enemies, but against them [them ?] I promise protection to the uttermost of my power; and beside, I do not despair, according to your merit abroad, to see you settled in some good place at home; toward the effecting of which I have taken care to increase in his Majesty his good opinion of you; in whom I find so much inclination as I have no cause to be diffident of success. I pray you convey this letter, by the help of the Ambassador of Denmark, safely and speedily, for it is of importance, and let me entreat you to certify me by letter when you have sent it. Leave the care of yourself to me, then have you put yourself into the hands of your faithful friend.”

Holograph. Two seals (a crest).

[WINWOOD] to LORD [ROCHESTER ?].

[1613 ?] †—Thanks for the comfort contained in a letter. Fears his poor fortunes are in hazard to suffer shipwreck, without his Lordship's protection. Beseeches him to receive him into his “sauvegarde.” Promises faithfulness and gratitude.

Draft, in Winwood's hand.

WINWOOD to LORD [ROCHESTER ?].

[1613 ?] †—“I have been made acquainted, since your Lordship's departure from this town, with an overture propounded [by] my Lord Chamberlain [Earl of Suffolk ?] for the furnishing [of] the Secretary's place, which I do interpret to proceed from no disaffection towards [me], but from his better understanding of Sir H. N[eville's] worth and ability to do his Majesty service. * * * All the accusation(?) I presume against me is this, that I seek no man, which I do not, out of neglect, but out of due respect to you[r Lordship], whose favours have bound me to be a[ll ?] wholly and solely yours. I am not so confident of mine own worth to plead merit, but only his Majesty's grace and your Lordship's favour; which mediation if it cannot prevail, this comfort will not fail me, that ever I shall remain in your favourable protection. My Lord of Penbrooke hath [desire]d m[e] to attend your Lordship's further direction . . . . . journey to Newmarket."

* In Vol. 10.

† In Vol. 11.

Draft, holograph: decayed.

[WINWOOD] to ———

[1613 ?]*—Has received his letter of the 10th, enjoining secrecy. Has written the required letter, and sends it for approval, to be sealed with a s[c]eau volant, and delivered. Has well weighed the two doubts he raises. "A third there is, which you have not broached; that is, what are the means to defray th' expense which the place of itself necessarily doth enforce. My private means are not great, and far insufficient to support the countenance of that place, which, not maintained, will cast me into contempt, and in consequence make me unserviceable; and maintained by mine own means, though but for a year or two, my poor estate will be consumed. I hope for this, provision will be made; qui servit altari, vivat de altari. There is great reason you should again and again recommend this cause to my secrecy; for if there come forth but the least vent of it, I know actum est de me." Refers to his servant Moore. Sends a cipher.

In Winwood's hand; decayed.

SIR THOMAS LAKE TO SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[1613 ?]*—Is commanded to send a letter in the King's own hand to the Elector Palatine. * * * His Majesty has received an answer from M. Barnevelt, by letter to Sir Noel [Caron]. * * *

"Now, having done my charge, I am bold to add a word or two concerning two sons of mine, whom I sent over, being new come from school, in the troupe with the Lady Elizabeth's grace, only to see something at their first putting into the world"; &c.

Holograph; decayed, and mostly illegible. Seal of arms.

SIR ED. CECYLL TO SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador.

[c. 1613 ?]*—Has not had opportunity to write since Winwood's departure. Met his ghost, "this Grogras," who said he had left a letter for the writer at London. Count William's horse is a brown bay, &c. The picture at Dealfe is an old man with white hair drawn to the middle, &c. Recommends his own brother-in-law, gentleman of his Highness's privy chamber, whom he has also recommended to the States and his Excellency [Prince Maurice], to have Capt. Wiatt's company. Leaves all progress-news to his brother, who has been witness of a great part. "I have heard so much of my Lord Governor of Utricke's greatness, that I fear the mutinous air of Utricke doth .ork in his head; only I would be glad to hear your opinion." His wife's service to Lady Winwood.

Holograph. Seal—lion and unicorn(?).

WINWOOD'S HOUSE [at the HAGUE].

[1613?]*—"A note of what my Lord Ambassador for his Majesty of Great Britany (sic) desires to have repaired in his house."

This refers to a cellar, the little parlour, the outer parlour, the inner parlour, the buttery, a cabinet for my Lady, a wardrobe, the stable, the garden, a pump, the kitchen, the houses of office, &c.

1 p., in Wm. Colwall's hand.

WILLIAM COLWALL to WINWOOD (Ambassador, at his house in Little St. Bartholomew's, London).

1614,† Jan. 1, Haeg.—The States of Fryzland have conferred the company of the late Capt. Floyd upon his Lieutenant, without the advice of his Excellency or the Colonel, so that Sir Thomas Roe is frustrated thereof. Those two Princes, Brandenburg and Newburg, interchange occasions of discontent, &c.

Holograph. Seal.

JOHN DICKENSON to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1613[-14], Jan. 15, Eng. st., Dusseldorp.—Touching "our Palatine," the Elector of Cologne, the Prince of Brandenburg, and others.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal.

SIR JOHN OGLE to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1613[-14], Jan.  $\frac{19}{3}$ , Utrecht.—Learns that Winwood is shortly to be called to that place in England to which the world has already designed him. Offers himself as successor to Winwood here, giving up the places he holds in this service.

[P.S.] If he succeeds by Winwood's help and counsel, he will give Lady Winwood "a gratuity of 400*l*."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

JOHN DICKENSON to [WINWOOD].

1613[-14], Feb. 10, Eng. st., Dusseldorp.—Has written to the King, as by the copy below. Refers shortly to German affairs.

Holograph, Latin, 1 p.

JOHN DICKENSON to KING JAMES I.

Same date.—Affairs of Brandenburg.

Copy, English, 3 pp.

ADOLF DE MEETKERKE to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1614,† Feb. [14-]24, the Hague.—The bearer will inform him of all occurrences.

Holograph, French. Seal of arms.

THE NETHERLANDS.

1614,* [Feb. 19-] March 1, Sgravenhage.—Reply of the States General to propositions made by the Marquis of Brandenburg. Peace between Poland and Sweden is referred to.

Copy, Dutch, 5 pp.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to all LIEUTENANTS, MAYORS, SHERIFFS, &c.

1613 [-14], Feb. 21, Whitehall.—Passport for Richard Phillipp, going to France on his own affairs, with his servants, carriages, and four nags. If he be known by any other name, no notice is to be taken thereof; and all secrecy is to be used.*

6 signatures. Seal. Endorsed: Received this warrant the 11th day of August 1615.

WILLIAM COLWALL to WINWOOD (as before).

1614,† Feb. 23, Haeg.—“Yesterday arrived here, in commission from the Elector [of] Brandenburg, Mons. Kentler, Dr. Styck, and one Verbergh, whose chief business (as Mons. Artson hath assured me) tends only to this end, that these Lords will be pleased to send their ambassadors when time shall serve (namely, when the Kings of France and England shall send theirs), to assist in the treaty for a peace between the Kings of Swethen and Poland. . . .

“Also Mons. Artson told me that the prohibiting of white cloths to come into these countries (which is publicly spoken here to be ratified) is very unwelcome news, and that it would apparently draw with it a harsh consequence, which I besought him to declare, who, after a little pause, told me that peradventure these Lords would prohibit the bringing in of any cloths whatsoever into these parts out of England, or at least lay such an imposition upon them that the merchant shall have little comfort in bringing them in.

“Also, concerning the fishing upon the quarter or coast of Greenland (said he), if his Majesty had first by proclamation forbidden all others besides his own subjects to fish there, or at the least they who were then there had for a warning sent home these people with what they had taken, and so warned them not to come any more but upon their own peril, it had been well; but taking from them what they had fisht, and using them so, ’twas hard measure; and those merchants whom it concerned much importune the Lords for octroy to make a company. I then demanded whether they made not ready about ten ships, which they intend to employ there again. He answered me, that they purposed to send more than I spake of, but not as yet to grant any octroy.

“Then he demanded of me, whether our people had not taken in, an Island not far from Virginia, which he could not name. I supposing he meant the Bermoothes, he answered me ’twas that, and that the King of Spain was not well pleased therewith; unto which I replied that I doubted not but they were so well fortified there, that it would prove a difficult busines for the King of Spain to go about to remove them. . . .

“My last unto your Lordship was of the 14th ditto,‡ by the way of Zealand, with two letters which came from his Excellency, th’ one to his Majesty, th’ other to Mons. Causabona; also one from Mons. Huyghens to your Lordship. ’Tis said that Count Henry sets forward toward Heydelburgh the 6th of March (without the Princess of Orange, who excuseth herself by the coldness of the season). His baggage goes by land some certain days before him. His train is to be 80 persons, or thereabouts, amongst all which Sir Charles Morgan will be one of the bravest.”

Holograph. Seal.

* Isaac Wake, secretary to Sir Henry Nevill, was leaving London for Venice at this time. (S.P.)

† In Vol. 10.

‡ i.e., instant.

FRANCE and HOLLAND.

1614,* [Feb. 25 and March 7—] March 4 and 17.—Two letters from the King of France to the States General, with a “proposition” by M. Du Maurier, French Ambassador at the Hague.

Copies, French, 7 pp.

. . . . . † to KING JAMES I.

1613[–14], March 12, Lintz.—Gives an account of his proceedings in Germany. Has obtained audience of the Emperor and the Empress. Is to have a letter from the Emperor for the King. Is going to Heidelberg, and from thence to the Landgrave Ludwig, to whom the King has lately written. Will then hasten to his Majesty.

Signature eaten away. Seal.

MONS. J. LUNTIUS to WINWOOD.

1614,\* [March  $\frac{1}{3}$  68,] 7 cal. Ap., Greg. st.—Dutch and German affairs. League proposed by the Elector Palatine. Ships have again been despatched to search for a passage through Waigert’s Strait (fretum) into the East Indies, with the persuasion that at length they may find an outlet (exitum). God grant that the success may be happier than that of others who have heretofore attempted the journey (iter).

Holograph, Latin, 4 pp.

WILLIAM COLWALL to WINWOOD (as before).

1614,* March 17, Haeg.—Informed him in a letter of the 12th in what forwardness his house then was; it now only wants making clean; the stable is being repaired. Proceedings of the Prince of Newburgh at Mulhem. German and Dutch news.

Holograph. Seal.

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON to KING [JAMES I.].

1614, † March  $\frac{1}{2}$  68, Venice.—“On Saturday last the  $\frac{1}{2}$  of this present here came unto me an Irish gentleman § (for so his speech and appearance declared him), naming himself Robert Lombard, born at Waterford, but bred up on this side the sea. He saith he is nephew to Peter Lombard, titular Primate of Armagh, by whom and by the Cardinal Borghese (whom he depends upon) he is maintained in Rome, and lodgeth with his uncle in the same palace with the Earl of Tyrone.

“His coming unto me he pretended to be expressly to give your Majesty information of Tiron[e]’s purpose to leave Rome, and go into Flanders, from whence he suspects he doth intend to transport those Irish companies which are there in the King of Spain’s service into Ireland, and there raise rebellion.

“This (he said) he hath by secret information of Tyrone’s Lady (with whom, sub sigillo, he confessed unto me to have familiarity, which his youth, and the wantonness with which she is commonly noted, makes not improbable), and confirmed the same unto me by these further circumstances.

* In Vol. 10.

† Qu. Sir Stephen le Sieur.

‡ New style, as appears by the date of Saturday, 12 March. (In Vol. 10.)

§ The ciphered passages are indicated by italics.

“That in January last, at the Spanish Ambassador Don Fr. di Castro’s departure from Rome to Naples, the day before he set forward he sent for Tirone, with the rest of the North Irish his followers, into a vinea without the town, and showed them the King of Spain’s letters for the[ir?] transmigration to Brussels. That since his return from Naples he hath again many times conferred with Tirone touching his going, and off[ered] of himself to supply him with money for his journey in case no order came out of Spain in fit time; for which he had written. That they rested in appointment together to acquaint the Pope this present holy week with their purpose, and likewise to demand of him that he would take upon him the name of any enterprise Tirone should undertake in his country, in case he would contribute no further succours, whereof his faeneantise (sic) and avarice made them despair.

“That Tirone, whilst he is his own man, is always much reserved, pretending ever his desire of your Majesty’s grace, and by that means only to adoperate his return into his country; but when he is vino plenus et ira (as he is commonly once a night, and therein is veritas), he doth then declare his resolute purpose to die in Ireland; and both he and his company do usually in that mood dispose of governments and provinces and make new common-wealths.

“That there would be a house provided for Tirone at Brussels, where he [Lombard] thought he would make show of settling himself, and so remain for a time, whereby to attend the opportunity of transporting himself with commodity and secrecy. That f[or] the better transportation of the Irish out of Flanders, they have been long since quartered in Ostend, Neuport, and other port towns of that province, which he guessed was done thus purposely before-hand, that the drawing them into those parts, when Tirone should be there present, might not breed jealousy. That howsoever the late reformation in Flanders took place of all others, the Irish are exempted, and order given for restoring of their pensions, and receiving into pay of as many of that nation as shall present themselves. And finally that they have this common discourse amongst them, that this is a fit opportunity for their enterprise in regard of a persuasion they have of wants in England, discontentment in Scotland, and difference of religion, and, by consequence, distraction in Ireland; and Tirone’s age and weakness growing upon him doth necessitate them to defer the time no longer.

“I demanded of this party what were his inducements to make this discovery unto me, and for that purpose to undertake this journey expressly (which he performed with much expedition and no less incommodity by reason of the sharpness of the season), seeing he lives in exile as those of his nation do, professeth the same religion, and therefore may seem to run the same fortune.

“His answer was, first, a hope to obtain hereby the grace and favour of your Majesty; next his opinion that religion was the pretence of their designs, but ambition the true motive. Lastly, he framed this discourse, that in case Tirone should succeed in his enterprise, the condition of all the other provinces, to be subject to the tyranny of those Ulster Lords, would be most miserable; if he fail (whereof he made the greater likelihood), that th[en] your Majesty’s clemency (whereof they now reap the benef[it]) would be justly turned into so great displeasur[e] that they could promise themselves nothing but oppression of their persons, and utter extirpation of their religion; and that most of the other Irish which were abroad, particularly his uncle the B[ishop] of Armagh and one Wise, the Gran (sic) Prior, his kinsman, who lives upon Spanish pension and provisions at Naples, but was now at Rome, in the judgment they made of acts of hostility and rebellion, were of the same mind.

Neither of them (he said) knew of his journey to me, and that his presence of absenting himself from Rome was the following the Prior now come in devotion to Loretto, who (he said) hath long since known of Tirone's purpose to go into Flanders, but suspects no further design; and for his uncle the Bishop, he insisted so much upon his integrity and loyalty, besides his love and devotion to your Majesty's person and service, as if the effect of his coming unto me had been to negociate in his favour.

"There may be amongst these men magis et minus, but there is little trust in any of that nation of a contrary religion, especially those who have frequented Rome and Spain; and I cannot but apprehend the coming of the Prior at this present to Rome, where he hath not been many years before; and the more, in that I have another information both of his opinion and affection than this party gives me, in that he delivered in confidence about a year since to one, of whom I have the relation, that he was well assured those would have hard keeping and enjoying of Tirone's land that now possessed it, as formerly others have had with his predecessors, who were always able to patronise themselves; and in further discourse declared so much disaffection that my informer concludes him to be as great an enemy to the present government as can be of the Irish. It is likewise considerable that the companies of the Irish in the Low Countries are most of them composed of men drawn out of other provinces, though the Captains made or changed since Tirone's coming over are all of the North; and unless they were well assured of their affections, they would not presume of their persons.

"I hear there is one Meth, a merchant of Cork, in Munster, pensioner to Spain, who hath thirty crowns a month paid him in Naples; he is now coming to Rome, from thence goeth to Burdeaux, pretending (as this party saith) to be nearer his friends, whereby to hear often from them; but I have formerly understood by another hand from Naples, he gives out his business is to send wines into Ireland, for which this is not the season, and therefore it may be suspected he will be a merchant of munition; and I am entered at the present into some doubt that this party's coming to me, without any fore-knowledge of him, or he pretending anything of me, may be to breed amusement with news of a journey into Flanders, whilst, according to two former expedit[ions] made in the time of the late Queen and Gregor[y] the 13[th], the first by Stukely diverted in [into?] Portugal, the second in Desmond's wars, defeated in Ireland, both under countenance of the Pope and at charge of the Spaniard, and both sent by sea directly out of Italy towards Ireland in ships of Genoa, they may embark themselves in the Pope's dominions or some other parts of Italy, with assistance of strangers, and take the same course; the opportunity serving so aptly of these forces now on foot in Italy, and shipping already prepared against the Turk, whereof the use depends upon uncertainties; and particularly there is great quantity of arms lately transported from Milan to Genoa, which must be designed to some place where the people are unfurnished, in that all the Spanish and Italian companies now on foot in these parts are completely armed. This provision is as proper for the Greeks in Morea and Dalmatia as the Irish, but the late discovery and empalling (sic) of the B[ishop] of Antivari and cutting in pieces all his confederates shows that intelligence to be broken; and whilst the memory thereof is so fresh, it is not likely that people will run the like hazard.

"I have this further suspicion of this person that he should be purposely employed to engender an opinion of their going by land, that the less care may be taken of intercepting them by sea, in that he refused such offers as I made him for discharge of his journey; and as I have learned since his departure, he was at extraordinary expense in his inn, besides the payment of his bark to Ancona, which he hired expressly and at a high rate, which shows his expenses to proceed out of some better purse than his own; though there may be another argument made of his ingenuity in not being mercenary. It may be presumed that if Tirone ship himself in these parts, the Irish regiment in the Low Countries shall have assignation to meet him, but of this I shall be watchful; as likewise if the other information be true, and that he take his journey through any place where your Majesty hath friends, I will not fail to waylay him in that sort as is fit. I have written this week by the ordinary of Lions both to Turin and Paris concerning his remove from Rome to Brussels, that there may be the greater vigilancy in advertising your Majesty, and doing those offices in time which are fit for your service.

"This party tells me that Tirone hath been with Mons. de Breues, the French Ambassador at Rome, to demand safe conduct for himself and his wife through France; but his opinion is they will go in several companies, and set forward before the end of this next month. He hath undertaken to give me knowledge what is concluded betwixt the Spanish Ambassador and the Pope touching this business, with such other circumstances as are necessary for your Majesty's knowledge and service; for which purpose he took addresses for letters, and parted from hence on Monday last. He came from Rome the  $\frac{5}{15}$  of this present.

"He told me the chief instruments and agents in this practice were, in Rome, one Derby Cnogher, a friar of St. Francis, who doth daily and almost hourly pass betwixt Tirone and the Spanish Ambassador; in Spain, Florence Conre of Connagh, named Archbishop of Tomont, who hath lately the title given him of Archbishop of Dublin, and went about six months since out of Loua[in] into Ireland; and upon this man's prac[tice] (whom he described to be as able and active as wicked and malicious) he conceives most of this enterprise to be founded. He said further, these Irish do not desire the assistance of strangers (whom experience sheweth to be unproper for the service of that country); only they require to have writings from Rome, and dublons from Spain."

Holograph, partly in cipher, deciphered.

MONS. J. LUNTIUS to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1614,\* [March  $\frac{20}{30}$ ,] Easter, n.s., the Hague.—Affairs of Brandenburg and Newburg, the Turks, and Africa.

Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal of arms.

J. B[EAULIEU] to SIR THOMAS EDMONDES, Ambassador with the French King, now at London.

1614, [March 24—] April 3, Paris.—Affairs of France, Spain, and Italy. There is a rumour here that the King of Spain has 18 or 20 vessels and 6 or 7,000 men ready to put to sea, to go and drive the English from the islands which they have seized about (vers) the coast of Havana.

Holograph, French, 6 pp.; signature cut off. Addressed in English. Endorsed by Sawyer: John Beaulieu (&c.).

* In Vol. 10.

MONS. SCHONBERGH TO KING [JAMES I.]

1614 [n.s.], March 24 [o.s.], Heydelberg.—It is not his fault that the baptism has been hastened, as it was resolved on before his arrival. Complained that it was wrong, after remitting the date to his Majesty, to fix one without awaiting an answer, and without knowing whether the King and the States could be ready. Count Henry and the Prince of Anhalt have arrived. Did not receive the King's letter of the 14th till today. Told the Council, the day after his arrival, that the King wished the day to be the 24th or 25th April. Is glad the King approves of the order he has taken in this house. The Prince is too young to deal with the difficulties and obstacles. Madame is in good health, and content, and her people calm and peaceable. Madame does what she can to assist them in their expenses. Before the assembly of the Parliament some one will be sent as Ambassador from here.

[P.S.] Tomorrow we shall fire off the cannons and run at the ring (courir à la bague), in honour of your coronation in England.

Holograph, French.

WILLIAM COLWALL TO WINWOOD (as before).

1614, March 25, Haeg.—The enclosed is from Mr. Dickenson. Has been with Mons. Artson.

“I besought him to acquaint me with what was resolved upon in th' assembly of the towns of Holland (which brake up the 20th ditto *), concerning their intention for fishing upon Greenland, and for making of cloth: unto which he answered me, he knew not directly; only thus, that 12 ships are preparing for that business, but whether they shall go in company or in particular he knows not as yet, for (as he saith) at some time it is wholly dasht, and then again revived. But for the erecting of a drapery in several towns here, 'tis directly resolved upon (if they may not have whites out of England), and they have destined very large sums of money to that end: it seems they are well pleased that the Company do so strongly oppose the restraint thereof. He told me that touching the point of religion (which was also handled in this their assembly) the towns of Amsterdam and Enckhuysen stand out as before they have done, so that that stands as it did. Also that the christening at Heydelburgh was solemnised upon Tuesday last, and that Count Henry would be looked for here about the 10th of April. He gave me charge not to forget his service to your Lordship. As yet Mons. Vandermyle is not returned, but daily expected. General Cecill is gone with all speed towards Heydelburgh, as having advertisement of his Lady's being very sick there. I send your Lordship herewith those three pictures for my Lord of Arundel. The Commissioners for Munster are yet here. These Lords have sent back the Turk, with a large benevolence, and shipt him for Cyprus. His Excellency hath also bestowed upon him little less than 150*l*.” Will have Winwood's house ready against his coming.† Dutch news.

Holograph. Seal.

* i.e., instant.

† From this it is evident that Winwood was still expected to return to Holland, and therefore the previous letters of Colwall belong to 1613-14, not 1614-5. Possibly he uses the new style also in respect of the day of the month.

MONS. SCHONBERGH TO KING [JAMES I.]

1614, March 28, Heydelberg.—Touching the league between his Prince [the Elector Palatine], the States, and the Princes of the Union. This courier is despatched to learn when the Parliament will meet, how long it will last, when it will be most fitting to send from here, and what instructions shall be given; all being referred to the King's pleasure, and tending to assure (sic) his posterity, and the greatness and reputation of their Highnesses and their young Prince. Refers again to the baptism; also to Count Henry's embassy [to England]. Remarks on his Prince's affairs.

Holograph, French, 3 pp.

MONS. SCHONBERGH TO WINWOOD (Ambassador "in Holland").

1614,* March 29, Heydelberg.—Sends a copy of his letter to the King. The particular union proposed is necessary and of great utility. Refers to the States, the Empire, "my Prince," the Parliament, and "their Highnesses." The affairs of Juliers, Aix, and Mulheim are in a dangerous state. Wishes to know if Winwood would like some Rhine wine.

Holograph, French.

FREDERIC, ELECTOR PALATINE, TO WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1614, March 29, Heidelberg.—Has heard from Schonberg that the King intends to hold the Parliament or Estates of England in April, and has informed him of what could be usefully treated in that assembly for the right, well being, and advancement of the Princess his wife and her children. Is in doubt how to instruct some one of his servants, who is to be sent to solicit what Schonberg lately conferred with Winwood about. Desires him to ascertain the King's will, and add his own advice.

Signed: Frideric, E. P. French (in M. Dathenes' hand).

MONS. DATHENES TO WINWOOD (Ambassador).

[1]614, March 29.—His Highness is writing to ask Winwood's advice. As the matter was opened by the King, and will eventually benefit Madame, doubts not the King will bring to it his paternal affection. Refers to the affairs of France, Spain, Transylvania, the Bohemians, Austrians, Silesians, Moravians, Hungarians, Germany, and the Swiss Cantons.

Holograph, French, 3 pp. Seal of arms. Endorsed by Sawyer: From Mr. Darsones (sic).

W. TRUMBULL TO KING [JAMES I.]

1614, [March ?] May 30, o.s., Bruxelles.—Procured audience of the Archduke on Monday week last. Congratulated him on the recovery of his health, and told him that the King thought it strange he had received Dr. Bull, his Majesty's organist and sworn servant, into his Chapel, without his Majesty's permission or consent, and without speaking thereof to Trumbull; that Bull did not leave the King's service for any wrong done to him, or for matter of religion, under which feigned pretext he now sought to wrong the King's reputation for justice, but he in a dishonest manner stole out of England, through the guilt of a corrupt conscience, to eschew the punishments which he had notoriously deserved, and which were designed to have been inflicted upon him for his incontinence, fornication, adultery, and other grievous crimes.

* This is arranged with the papers of 1611, in Vol. 9.

Recommended to the Archduke the despatch of a suit concerning one Thomas Albury, a merchant of London, which has depended above eight years before his Privy Council, the King being sensible of the intolerable remissness which had ruined Albury's fortunes. Left him a memorial thereof in writing. The Archduke and his officers have since been continually employed in such devotions as are usual here in the last week of Lent and the Easter Holidays; but Trumbull will now renew his solicitations.

The Archduke had the gout in his left hand, and his legs were so weak he could not stand. On Easter Day he came down to the great Chapel to receive the communion, but grew so distempered there with the cold that he was fain to be supported by two noblemen on his return. At the end of April or beginning of May he intends to remove to Marymonte, and there to spend the summer.

Gerrard, through the power of the Jesuits, is still continued at Louvain, notwithstanding Trumbull's "pursuits" for his removal. Was told by Secretary Pratz that they had sent reasons to the King declaring Gerrard's innocency. Affairs of the Netherlands, Germany, and France. "Those of Antwerp," being desirous to renew their wonted commerce with the King's subjects, are ready to enter into a conference with them, and to give them reasonable privileges.

Holograph.

WILLIAM COLWALL to WINWOOD (as before).

1614, March 30, Haeg.—German affairs.

Holograph, 2 pp., decayed. Seal.

THE ARCHDUKES to the STATES GENERAL.

1614, April [2-] 12, Brussels.—Having been informed by the nobles and towns of Cleves that some misunderstanding has arisen between the Marquis of Brandenburg and the Count Palatine, the writers have admonished them to come to terms, and that they would oppose the first of them who should "move." Doubt not the States will perform the like offices.

Copy, French.

Same date.—Another copy.

THE PRESIDENT AND SCHOLARS OF MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD, to SIR RALPH WINWOOD.

[1614,* April 4,] pridie nonas April.—Congratulate him on his appointment by the King as Principal Secretary of State, and desire the continuance of his patronage. Thank him for the magnificent globes (spheræ) which they have lately received from him.

Latin. Seal.

MONS. J. LUNTIUS to WINWOOD (Ambassador).

1614, [April  $\frac{4}{14}$ ], prid. id. April., Greg. st., the Hague.—Affairs of Sweden, Guelders, Germany, Lubeck, Emden, the Elector Palatine, &c.
Holograph, Latin, 3 pp. Seal of arms, broken.

THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.

[1614, April? ]—"Avis pour estre considéré en l'establisement des Eglises de Jerzé, Guernezé, Serck, [et] Aurigni, parcelles de la Duché de Normandie." This relates to ecclesiastical matters and jurisdiction.
French, 2 pp. No date.

1614, April.—Another paper relating to the same matters. An ordinance by King James I., dated at Hampton Court, 8 August (?) 1603, is quoted.
French, 7 pp. Date on the dorse.

MONS. NOEL DE CARON to WINWOOD, Secretary of State.

1614, July 17, Sunday.—Suydtlambeth [South Lambeth].—Is sorry the King is departing, and that he cannot see his Majesty on account of indisposition, though he received a despatch from the States yesterday. Sends a translation of it. Mons. Barnevelt and others think "this alarm" only too well founded. The States are anxiously awaiting the King's reply. Hears that Sir [Henry] Wouton is about to be sent to them.

French. Portion of seal.

MONS. J. V. BERCHEN to WINWOOD (Secretary).

1614, July 20, Haeg.—Begins: Copy of the letter written from Duysborch, 16 July 1614. German news; Juliers.
French, 3 pp., gilt-edged. Seal of arms.

WILLIAM COLWALL to WINWOOD (Secretary).

1614, July 22, Haeg.—Affairs of Juliers, &c. Sends a letter from Mr. Dickenson. Mr. Paget and Mr. Slade commend their services to Winwood. "Sir Gryphin Marekam, upon his return from Rome, is by the Prince of Newburg made Colonel of a regiment in Duysseldorp."
Holograph. Seal.

Petition of GEORGE MARTIN, Post, to SECRETARY WINWOOD.

[1614?]*—"About eight weeks ago there were certain letters sent by your petitioner from the Spau to Brussels, by Sir Dudley Carleton, to be delivered to Mr. Trumbull, who was to convey them to the Haghe, but, not finding a convenient messenger, commanded your petitioner to carry them to the Haghe, which he did, and after two or three days' abode there, he was sent by Sir Dudley Carleton's secretary into England; which letters came to your Honour's hand." Desires some allowance.

* In Vol. 11.

EMANUEL [DUKE OF SAVOY] to KING [JAMES I.].

1615,* [Jan. 23—] Feb. 2, Thurin.—Thanks for the favour shown to him by the return of Sir Albert Morton and the “Conte de Scarnafis (?)” † Before their arrival he had signed “the treaty” on 1st October, but the Spaniards continue to make war on him. Has prayed Sir Albert to suggest certain expedients to his Majesty, and desires the King’s advice and assistance for the welfare of Italy and the writer’s States.

French, mutilated. Endorsed by Sawyer: Duke of Savoy. 2 Feb. 1611 (sic).

[SIR] GERVASE HELWYS to KING [JAMES I.].

1615, Sept. 2.—“I received a command from your Majesty by the mouth of Mr. Secretary, that I should freely set down in writing what I did know concerning the death of Sir Tho. Overbery. I humbly beseech your Majesty to believe I fear the face of no man in respect of doing what your Majesty commandeth me, but there is an honour in every poor gentleman, and in obeying your Majesty I must commit mine unto your gracious protection.

“When it pleased your Majesty to make me your own choice for this place, I found Sir Tho. Overbery a prisoner here. I put a keeper called Weston over him, preferred unto me by Sir Tho. Mounson (as he did divers others), and with request that he might be a keeper unto Over[bery]. Not many nights after I had placed him there, Weston did meet me (being ready to carry up his supper), and asked me whether he should give him that which he had or no. I presently did withdraw him, not taking any amazement nor pretending ignorance, but, until I had discovered that which I desired, did run the same course with him. When I had obtained that which I desired, I did begin to terrify him with God’s eternal judgments, and did so strike him as, with his hands holden up, he blessed the time that ever he did know me, with other words to that effect, over long to trouble your Majesty with.

“‘Why, Sir,’ (said the fellow) ‘did not you know what should be done?’ I protested my ignorance therein unto him, and would be glad to protest the like in the face of the world.

“By this means I did get the fellow assured unto me, and understood from time to time whatsoever within his knowledge could be practised against him. This thing supposed to be given, there was now no expectation but for the effect: we were forced to give account thereof: he to them who set him on work, that he had extreme castings [vomitings] and other tokens, and I laboured to intimate as much unto Sir Tho. Mounson, as marvelling at such an accident.

“The first attempt having no success, there was an advantage taken of my Lord of Soommersett’s tenderness towards Sir Tho. Over[bery], who sent him tarts and pots of jelly. These were counterfeited, and others put to be presented in their stead. But they were ever prevented: sometime making his keeper say my children had desired them, sometime I made my own cook prepare the like; and in the end, to prevent the pain of continual shifts, his keeper willed the messenger to save labour, seeing he had in the house such as pleased him well.

* This is arranged with the papers of 1611, in Vol. 9.

† “Count Scarnaffi, Ambassador of Savoy,” is mentioned in State Papers, Domestic, 20th March, 1617.

"Then begun your Majesty's progress, by which all colourable working was taken away, so as there was no advantage but upon the indisposition of Over[bery's] body. Here (as the Lord in heaven can witness) I was secure. His physician, Monsieur Mayarne (who left behind him his directions): his apothecary (at the physician's appointment), an approved honest man, as I thought and still do: but, as Weston hath since confessed unto me, here was his overthrow, and that which wrought it was (as he said) a glister. This apo[thecary] had a servant, who was corrupted: twenty pounds, Weston told me, was given. Who gave it, who corrupted the servant, or what is become of him, I can give your Majesty no intelligence. Neither can I say directly that he ever named any as a principal actor in this business, but only Mrs. Turner. If any other were consenting, they two must put the business to a point.

"The effect of that which passed between myself and Weston the 25th of July last.

"It should seem there was lately some whispering that Sir Tho. Over[bery's] death would be called in question, which came to the ears of some whose conscience might accuse them. Presently a messenger (being a man of Mrs. Turner's) was sent unto Weston with all speed to meet his Mrs. at Ware, but coming thither found her not. The next day she came so far as Hogsdon, where at an inn they met. There they agreed, that if he were examined he should truly confess who recommended him to me, because in the beginning it was otherwise agreed. Weston and his Mrs. were by appointment then to meet again at London the 24th of July, whither Mrs. Turner came from Grays.

"He said he was sent to sound me whether he could perceive that I had got any inkling of this foresaid foul act or not, and if I had, whether he could perceive any desire in me to have it reaved (sic) into or not, and what more he could discover in me, for he said they stood doubtful of me. His Mrs. stayed but until his return from me.

"I have herein obeyed your Majesty's command, setting down the truth: peradventure not the whole truth. But I have set down (as I think) whatsoever is fundamental, and will be ready faithfully to answer whatsoever shall be demanded me."

*Holograph.* Endorsed by Sawyer: Sir Gervase Elways (&c.).*

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD (Principal Secretary).

1615, Oct. 16, Royston.—"Having understood by your information that those of our Council to whom the trial of this great matter was committed, intend tomorrow to enter to the said trial, we have thought good by these presents to require you in our name to urge them with due and convenient expedition to put their said commission to execution, which we desire as well that the guilty being known, the guiltless may go free, and the arising of rumours prejudicial to the fame of the innocent may be prevented, as also for that in the mean time our most serious affairs of estate do lie at stake. And therefore you are to require such others of our Council to whom the managing of the several parcels of our said affairs is committed, to keep their ordinary hours of meeting, because we intend, God willing, now at All Hallow-tide, to take a particular accompt of all our aforesaid affairs. Ye shall likewise deal with our Chief Justice to send unto us the discourse of the murder in Lancashire, under the hands of the judges, according as he deduced it unto us."

* This letter is in the same hand as S. P. Dom. James I., Vol. 83, No. 48. There is a copy of it among the State Papers, dated Sept. 10 (Vol. 81, No. 86).

Signed at the top. Signet. On gilt-edged paper.

KING JAMES I. to the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE [COKE].

1615, [Oct. ?]—"Although since our coming from London we have heard nothing from you concerning the matter committed to your trial at our departure, yet having understood by our Secretary that Mrs. Turner, after divers examinations, hath exhibited petition desiring to be set at liberty upon bail, we have thought good to advertise you that if it be a thing accustomed by the laws of England, in matters not of treason but only of murder, to set parties at liberty upon bail after their full examination, if there be no ground of their guiltiness apparent, we would be loth to refuse unto her that which in the like cases is usually granted to others, lest we should seem by your actions to incline more to one side than another, and not keep that upright indifferency whereunto Kings and their ministers of justice are in conscience bound. But herein we remit ourself to your judgment and experience, not doubting but you will proceed as a true dispenser of our conscience and depository of that which we spake unto you at our departure, and that you will duly administer justice without passion or respect of persons, assuring you that we will require nothing to be done in all this business but according to the due course of law, and that your chief care be, as ours is, neither to incline to the right nor left hand, the trial of the verity of the fact, or falsehood of the surmise or calumny, being alike welcome to us. What your opinion is, either upon the depositions of parties examined, or any other trial, we desire to understand by your own close letter direct to ourself, which you may send by packet to our own hands, wherein we promise the like secrecy as we gave you in charge. We likewise require you to inform yourself by the judges of the circuit of Lancashire, of the circumstances of that murder, the discovery whereof was so admirable, and to advertise us particularly of the same."

Copy.

KING JAMES I. to the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, the EARL OF SUFFOLK (Treasurer), SIR RAPHE WINWOOD (Secretary), and SIR THOMAS LAKE.

1615, 13 James I., Oct. 26, Royston.—"We are given credibly to understand that Sir Robert Cotton, knight, having amassed together divers secrets of State, hath communicated them to the Spanish Ambassador, who hath caused them to be copied out, and translated into the Spanish tongue. We do authorise and require you, to whom these letters are addressed, to call before you the said Sir Robert Cotton, and if you find, by lawful and sufficient proof, the information to be truly grounded, we will and require you to seize upon all his papers and manuscripts, in our name and to our use, and to cause them to be brought into our Paper Chamber at Whitehall, there to be reserved, and digested in order, by him to whom that charge appertaineth. And further we do require you to proceed against the person of the said Sir Robert, as in your judgments and consciences you shall hold the nature of his offence justly to deserve."

Signed at the top. Two small seals of arms, with the initials "E.R." (the Queen's seal?)

SIR ROBERT COTTON'S RELATION of his CONFERENCE WITH GUN DAMAR [GONDOMAR].

[1615, Oct.]—"Gundamare.—In Jan. 1614, Don Diego de Sermiente,* the Spanish Imbassador, desired to come to Sir Ro[bert] Cotton's house, where, after four several comings he broke into [unto?] Sir R. Co. by degrees an overture of a marriage with Prince Charles to the Infanta Maria;

"Desiring Sir Ro. Cott., who then he heard had most of credit with the Earl of Somerset, to taste his affection; whom, because a Scotchman scarce would incline to the treaty in hand then with France,

"Sir R. C. answered that if he might see any ground of a real intention of the other side, and that it was not a purpose of diversion of the other, he would move my Lord.

"Hereupon the Imb[assador] produced out of his bosom an instruction and a letter, the one signed by the Spanish King, the other by the Duke of Lerma, purporting their pleasure that upon the first occasion he should move a treaty of marriage; and so they parted.

"Certain days after Sir R. C. repaired to the Imbassador's house, [and] told him he had moved my Lord of Som[erset]: he found him no way engaged but whither the affection and direction of his master should lead: he could willingly further the motion if he could believe it, and to hazard the state of grace wherein he stood with his master he thought it no wisdom, the success being dangerous, and the affection of the people being not the best of the Spaniard. But if he might be assured of the success, he would begin the overture.

"To work this certain difficulties must be first removed, which were—

"That the King of Spain † should clear under his hand—

"First, that upon the faith of a Christian he did believe that salva conscientia he might treat and conclude a marriage for his daughter, notwithstanding the difference of religion.

"Secondly, in the word of a King that he desired it before any other for the good of both crowns.

"Thirdly, that in point of religion he would no further meddle than it might stand with the liking of the King and his son, with such liberty as Imbassadors have.

"April.—This memorial, about the midst of April following, Imbassador Gundamare sent away by Beny (?) his man into Spain.

"June.—About the 22nd June after he received an answer, which was by two letters, the one from the King, the other from the Duke.

"The King's letter was, that he well liked the entrance of that overture, but could not with his greatness answer the proposition, moving only but from Count de Somerset and Cavillero Cotton; but had given order to the Duke, to whose letter he should give equal credence as to his own.

"The Duke's letter, having reference to the King's letter of trust, answered by way of postle [apostyle] the 3 proposition[s].

"To the first, that he did upon the faith of a Christian protest that he did believe salva conscientia that he might make that marriage, notwithstanding the difference of religion; that he was so advised by his divines, and the Padre Francisco, his confessor, would, if occasion served, write an Apology for it.

"To the 2[nd], that he did sincerely desire it as a good to both the kingdoms, and with no purpose to divert that with France; and therefore * Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña, Count of Gondomar.

† "Phi. 3," in the margin, in the same hand.

wished it might be treated of in England by his minister (tacitè), that it might not be notum nisi peractum, by which the King of England might see his sincerity.

“To the 3[rd], that he would not further press matters of religion than might stand with the peace of the State, so much admitted (sic) to his daughter as is to Imbassadors allowed.

“The Tuesday after, at Greenwich,* Sir Ro. Co. attended the King with these dispatches; the King then well liking of it, saying that he would not grant a commission to treat, for having a commission on foot in France, he would not play the merchant to try his best chapman: but thanked him, for now he had brought the woman to be the suitor.

“Now the King discovered himself, commanding Sir R. C. to acquaint the Imbassador with his knowledge and view of these particulars; and after this, had himself divers speeches with th’embassador.

“During this time the treaty with France broke.

“The Spa[nish] Imbassador, having seen the articles that were proposed by the Q[ueen] Mother of France, told Sir Ro. Co. that his master would increase the 8 hundred thousand crowns of France to 5 hundred thousand pound[s] sterling, beside a pension to the Prince during the King’s life, if the marriage took effect.

“And that they would not press a greater permission for use of religion than that was containe[d] in those articles;

“Viz., a private Chapel for herself and family, and two priests.

“August.—This conference continuing till August, the King commanded Sir R. Co. to draw a minute of a treaty of marriage, which accordingly he did, deducing every article out of foreign (?) treatises (sic) in like cases.

“Where in the 4[th] article, having mentioned a dispensation from the Pope, the King struck out, and said he would have nothing to do with the Pope, and carried the articles along with him in the progress.

“1614.—The progress ended, Sir Ro. Co. attended his Majesty at several times and places about this business, when shortly after the troubled (sic?) of my Lo[rd] of Somers[et’s] coming interrupted his further employment.”

Endorsed as at the head.

KING JAMES I. TO WINWOOD.

[1615,] † Nov. 12, Newmarket.—“Being informed by our servant John Halle, one of our cupbearers, of certain unreverent and undutiful speeches of us used by Sir John Leedes and his wife on Wednesday night last past at supper, one Hawlie of our privy chamber being in company, we willed the said Halle to set down the words under his hand; which he having done, and we having willed Hawlie to declare his knowledge in the matter, he would not seem to remember any such thing. We have therefore thought good to send unto you herewith the said words under Halle his hand, willing you to join unto yourself the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Pembroke, the Vicomte Fenton, and Sir Thomas Lake (or so many of them as shall be there in town, in which behalf this present shall be your sufficient commission); and calling before you all the parties aforementioned, and having taken Halle his deposition, that ye bring Hawlie to a better memory than as yet we can bring him unto. What censure ye shall think fit to lay on Sir John Leedes and his wife we leave to your own judgments, and you to God."

* “I” struck out.

† Arranged with papers of 1616.

[P.S., in the King's own hand.] "Aboue all, forgette not to make Leides tell quhiche of my bedde chamber it was that tolde him of my unweildeines."

Signed at the top. Signet. On gilt-edged paper. Endorsed: 1615.

KING JAMES I. TO WINWOOD.

1615, Nov. 13 (no place).—"We were pleased by our letter directed unto you yesterday, to require you to join unto yourself the Earl of Pembroke, the Vicomte Fenton, and Sir Thomas Lake, all which three we are informed to be on their way hither. And therefore we have now thought good to require you (if our said councillors be come away from thence before our aforesaid letter be come to your hands) that in stead of them ye take the Archbishop of Canterbury and our Chancellor with you to try this matter concerning Leedes; although we rather wish that ye might have the help of the other three, the Archbishop and our Chancellor having already as much to do in our service as conveniently they may discharge."

Signed at the top. Signet. On gilt-edged paper.

[SIR] CHARLES CORNWALEYS TO WINWOOD.

1615, Dec. 14 (no place).—"Such is the necessity of my present estate, and myself so disabled and impaired in my credit by means of so long (and to me so grievous and unfortunate) a continuing in his Majesty's displeasure, and some late reports raised of me in this city, upon my being sent for by a pursuivant in this time of detection of so heinous and horrible offences, as I protest unto your Honour, before Almighty God, I cannot in this town borrow any money, neither will my name be so much as received into any bond.

"This breeds unto me an impossibility to perform the payments I am to make of the money I am to accompt for, otherwise than by sale of lands.

"If the land itself would be accepted, so great is my desire, according to my duty, to give satisfaction to so gracious a master, as I would immediately give assurance of any that I have, and at such rate or price as should manifest my desires to accomplish the same."

Hopes the King will allow him to pay the whole debt of 2,800*l.* in three equal payments, &c.

Holograph. Seal.

MONS. BILDEBEC * to ——— 1615,† Dec. 17, Coul: [Cologne].—Has nothing to add to "the ordinary gazettes," except that these "Messieurs" of Coulogne, upon certain advices from Holland, have strengthened their guards and intend to levy some troops for their safety. The Count of Swartzenberg has commenced his suit (poursuite) by the advice of our doctors of Coulogne, &c.

Holograph, French.

* This signature differs from previous ones.

† Arranged under 1613, in Vol. 9.

THE EAST INDIA TRADE.

[1615.]*—"A Brief of the proceedings which have past betwixt his Majesty's Commissioners and those others of the States touching the Trade into the East Indies."

"It may please your Lordships,—According to your letters of the 30th of March last, we have given divers meetings to the Commissioners for the States, concerning the Trade into the Indies. And at the first meeting, being the 1st of April, they signified that although there were many just causes of exception against the carriage of our people in the East Indies, as well to the prejudice of their Trade as otherwise, yet nevertheless the Company here had taken occasion to complain to his Majesty, by petition, [of] many wrongs done unto our people by them, which coming to the knowledge of the Administrers of the Trade there, they made an answer to the said petition, and presented it to the States, who delivered it over to his Majesty's Ambassador residing there; upon which answer they do insist as being allowed and approved by the States themselves, and which is grounded upon two points:

"The one, that they had now, at their great expense and danger, established their Trade in the East Indies, by taking, surprising, and building of many Forts, where they hold their garrisons and ships, at the charge and expense of the said Company.

"Secondly, that they have contracted amity with divers Kings there, and therefore do not think it reason that any man should go about to deprive them of those benefits and advantages which they expect and look for, after much effusion of blood, great charges, travels, and perils, especially in those parts whereof they are possessed.

"We, having considered thereof, made reply to this effect: That we have a just right to a free Trade into the East Indies and every part thereof, as well by the Law of Nations, as by the admittance of the Kings and Princes there, with whom we have made Contracts and Covenants before those parts in question were ever known to the Hollanders. And therefore we saw no cause why, upon such allegations as have hitherto been produced to the contrary, his Majesty's subjects should be debarred or impeached in their course of quiet Trade, or prohibited from any place by reason of the same, especially by those of the United Provinces, with whom we have had correspondence.

"This short reply drew a large answer, declaring: That their Merchants have for these twenty years applied themselves to the Indian Trade. But the Portugals, that resolved to keep all people of what nation soever (excepting themselves) from access and commerce there, did practise both by underhand dealing and open force both to drive the Hollanders away from thence, and also to destroy such of the Indians as traded with them. For prevention whereof the States, joining divers Companies into one, did in the year 1600 send such shipping into the Indies, as might openly with a compacted power make war against the Portugals. And at their coming thither they took into their protection many Indian Kings, Princes, and People, and defended them from the violence of the Portugals. In recompence of which benefit the said Kings and People have promised to sell such Spices as their country yielded to none other than to the Hollanders. And at the request of the said Princes they took certain Forts from the Portugals, and erected others, to hinder their invasion; and have so far proceeded as they now have ten Forts in those parts, furnished with sufficient garrison[s], and 43 ships well appointed for employment in that service.

* In Vol. 11. See Colonial State Papers, East Indies, Feb. 14 and April 10, 1615.

“In consideration whereof they appeal to equity and justice, whether it be meet that his Majesty’s subjects should now come in to be partakers of the profit, that have not been partakers of those chargeable expenses; or that they should be admitted to trade thither in Spices, which is the only fruit to be expected of their great charge, and is appropriated to the Hollanders as well by right of Conque[st] as by Transaction.

“Touching the Laws of Nature and Nations, they say that as they are indefinite in themselves, so are they limited by Municipal Laws, and institutions of people and governments, whereby it is (as we see) evident in all kingdoms that it is not lawful for every man to buy every commodity of every person, in every place, and at all times. Even this alone might suffice, that it is the principal effect of natural liberty to have power of tying itself to one party, which sithence certain Indian Princes have done by promising the sale of Spices unto the Hollanders only, there is nothing more agreeable to natural equity and the Law of Nations than that those Contracts and public Covenants should be observed, &c.

“In answer whereof we on the other side have set forth at large the continual intercourse and free Commerce we have had to those parts of the East Indies now in question from the year 1579 (when Sir Francis Drake arrived at Ternata, and there contracted Amity, laded Cloves, and settled a Trade with the King of that Island) until this present time.

“That in all that time we found no impeachment from the Portugals or any other like unto that we received from the Hollanders, as well in respect of practice and indirect dealing as of open wrong, little less than hostility; and insisted upon some particulars to prove our assertion.

“All which we conceived to have sprung from the ill affection of particular persons. But the late answer from the States imported somewhat more (which we little expected), that the Hollanders do pretend a right to the sole trade of Spices in the East Indies, and where there is a right there followeth consequently a maintenance of the same.

“For the charge they have been at, we answered: That it is no secret in what terms the Hollanders stood with Spain from a long time before either we or they saw any part of the Indies; whereby it cannot be denied but the Hollanders had wars with that kingdom both at home and abroad, whilst we carried a Trade (in the parts now in question) to our satisfaction and content. Now, if the aspect between them and the Spaniard were so malignant as the Hollanders could not trade thither with profit until by great charge and labour they had weakened the Spanish force and removed their opposition, is there any reason to put it upon our score? or because the Spaniard impeached them, shall we therefore suffer, that assisted them with all offices of amity and respect, and [h]ave th[e] burth[en] of the Spaniard’s iniquities?

“Is not the reason which the Hollanders make, the same which the Spaniard useth to appropriate to himself the sole Trade of the East and West Indies—because his charge hath been so vast, and the Conquest so just and dear unto him, no other man ought to thrust his sickle into his harvest.

“And do not the Hollanders deny this argument propounded by the Spaniard, and declare themselves in the behalf of free Trade, and to all nations, with as much liberty and freedom as mare liberum?

“Touching the Covenants which they insist upon, we said, we had Contracts with those Princes before ever they heard of the Hollanders’ name, and doubt not to prove them of more validity than any made since. But admit there had never any such Transaction passed between them and us, and that these which the Hollanders have made are such as they pretend, is there reason to believe they are so vast and general, as may keep us from having Commerce with that people?

“We do not deny but that the Law of Nature and Nations, being in itself after a sort indefinite, is limited by the positive Laws of Princes in such manner as may serve for the better enlarging of the use and benefit thereof, yet the same is so to be admitted as the principals [principles] themselves are never overthrown. But that one Nation should prohibit another Nation (not subject nor giving consent thereto) from free Trade, is to overthrow Trade and Commerce, which ought ever to stand free, and will be justly claimed by the Law of Nations, whereupon we do insist.

“And therefore, praying them that at length we might fall upon some course for the composing of these differences, we propounded, as a ready means thereto, that either of us might assist each other in free Trading in those parts, and upon impeachment or interruption of any third party, to join together to maintain free Trade.

“To this the Commissioners of the States returned a second reply, taxing our answer of error, as well in matters of fact, as in point of right.

“Touching matter of fact: First, they said they did not insist upon the same reasons the Spaniard did, for the Spaniard stood upon the donation of Alexander the Sixth, and made claim to all the Isles of Affrick and Assia, from Ginea as far as there was any land Eastward; whereas the Hollanders contend but for some few places (haud invidendæ magnitudinis) and for so[me] certa[in] sorts of commodities, which they challenge not by the Pope’s gift.

“The second error in fact which they pretend to be in our answer (and that longe maximus), as they said, is where we say that his Majesty’s Subjects might have had Trade into the Indies, if the power of their [the Hollanders’] armies and navies had not made way for them.

“Concerning the error in point of Right, they say it was not well said of us to affirm that the Contracts they had made were against the Law of Nations, for that there was nothing more lawful or usual than for men to contract for the sale of their commodities, as well for the present as for the future; and he that had power to sell had power to promise, &c.

“For the offer which we made of mutual assistance of each other in the Trade, they thought it no way reasonable, unless we would bear a ratable part of their former charges.

“To all which we returned this answer. First, that the Spaniard maketh the same argument to prohibit all other nations from the Trade of the East and West Indies which is used by the Hollanders for the appropriating to themselves of the sole Trade of those places in the Indies whereof they are possessed, viz., great expense, loss of much blood, battles, navies, surprising and taking of forts, conquests, garrisons, and possession. In respect whereof, no other nation but those that have undergone this charge, may have Trade thither; and if there be a difference at all, it is this, that the Hollanders undertook these things (as they said) for the defence of the Indians, their lives and state, and the Spaniards pretend the saving of their souls.

“Neither is the force of the argument broken, in that the Spaniard interdicteth Trade to the East Indies in universal, and the Hollanders but to a part. For that part containeth several Kingdoms and Governments, to each of which the Law of Nations giveth us access, and as free liberty of Trade and Commerce as into any Kingdom of Europe.

“Nor yet is it weakened for that the Spaniard forbiddeth trading in genere and the Hollanders in specie. For those specials which they appropriate to themselves are the sole and main commodities of the Kingdoms now in question, besides which there is nothing to maintain a Trade; which we proved by appealing to themselves, whether they would esteem of Banda were it not for Nutmegs and Mace; or of Ternata, if it yielded not Cloves; and so of the rest?

“And therefore we concluded, in confirmation of our former assertion, that both the Spaniard and the Hollanders do use the same reason to keep others from Commerce in those places, which they would exempt from the Common Right and Law of Nations. And if the Hollanders had the like pretence to any place of Trade between Cape Bonæ Spei and Cathaya, we doubted not but they would make the like claim, and use that or some other argument to improve it for their own advantage.

“The second error in fact which they pretended to be in our answer, is that whereof we are most confident: That we had continued a Trade into the Indies if their navies and forces had never come into those places. And we added, our Trade had been carried in better safety, with more freedom and far greater profit, if they had never been brought thither by those of our nation that were of Sir James Lancaster his Company.

“For proof whereof we did appeal to those practices and acts of open hostility, which we pointed at in our last writing; and did forbear to insist further upon them, because they desired they might not be remembered. Nevertheless we thought fit to make the same appear unto them by testimony under oath of men of good quality, declaring such odious and grievous particulars as gave the Merchants just cause of complaint. And therefore we could not say that any of their proceedings in the Indies was for our furtherance and assistance in that Trade, or that these things tended to the maintenance thereof. But contrarywise we put them in mind of that which cannot be denied, that we had Commerce with the Spaniard when we were supplanted and put from Trade by the Hollanders. For Capt. David Middleton was laded with Cloves by the Spaniards, when the Hollanders would not suffer him to trade or abide at Tedore. And being driven to declare our opinion in that behalf, we did let them know it was far better and more equal for us, both in respect of convenient and indifferent Trade, as otherwise, when both we and they did fetch our Spices from the Portugals, than by admitting that which now they insist upon.

“Touching their exception in point of Right, being lawful (as they said) to contract for any commodity, we put the case truly as it was: That every place doth not bring forth all things needful for the use of man, but each part and kingdom of the earth hath a peculiar property to abound with this or that commodity; which was by Nature so ordained, that having use one of another, we might keep and continue intercourse and society. Now these Kingdoms and Governments in the East Indies, which the Hollanders would appropriate to themselves, do abound with divers sorts of Spices, which God hath made for the use and comfort of man's body, being nowhere else to be had in that quantity as may serve to supply other nations. And the Hollanders would engross this so rich and useful merchandise, and monopolise it from all mankind, or at least so dispose thereof, as all the world besides should be at their feeding. A contract so vast, and unjust, as nothing doth more oppugn the Law of Nature, or the freedom of human society.

“To the refusal of the offer we made for mutual assistance in that Trade, unless we would undergo the burthen of their former charges, we said: That as we desired not to look into their accounts, so we verily believed that their returns did over-balance their charge, especially considering what prizes they had taken from the Portugals to better their said returns.

“And this is the effect of that which hath passed in treaty between us. By all which it appeareth that their purpose and intent is, to exclude his Majesty’s subjects from the Trade of Spices in the East Indies, and to engross the same wholly to themselves. The consequence whereof we conceive to be of great importance to the State, as well in respect of free and open Trade and employment of Shipping and Mariners, as of the inconvenience which will fall upon us, if the Hollanders should give the law unto us, for such commodities as come from those parts, and by primitive right do belong as well to us as to them, or to any other nation of Europe. And if these reasons which they have produced in this behalf be admitted, we may expect as well the same, or the like pretences, to put us out of any other place nearer home, where they may have hope of a profitable Trade. All which we humbly leave to your Lordships’ considerations.”

Decayed.

MEMORIAL BY [KING JAMES I.]

[c. 1615?]*—“A memorial of those suits with which we are contented to reward our servants and subjects, upon particular merit, reserving things of other nature which may raise profit to be converted to our own use, and to be managed by our Privy Council and officers of revenues; which restraint is necessary for some time to be continued in regard of our great arrearage of Debts.

“First, although the revenues of the Crown of England have been supported by the lands of attainted persons and escheats, yet seeing we have many to reward, we are contented to be sued unto for the benefit of the forfeitures of persons that shall be hereafter attainted for treason, murders, felonies, counterfeiting of moneys, and such like, or for such benefit as may grow by escheats of lands and goods upon death without known heirs or such like.

“Secondly, we are pleased to bestow the benefits of concealments with these (sic). First, that they be ————† otherwise than we are contented to prosecute for ourselves. Secondly, that they be not any part of those concealments which are reserved to Tipper’s prosecution.

“Thirdly, debts before the 30th of Elizabeth, though they be never so sperable, and although in all those grants already passed there hath been care taken to reserve of some a half, of some a third and a fourth part, to our use, yet we are pleased now to bestow our own part, where we shall think men worthy of benefit.

“Fourthly, grants of recusants to be convicted by the parties.

“Fifthly, the making of denizens (?),‡ granting of pardons, charters, and such like things, subscribed and recommended by such as are wont to give certificates in such causes.

“Sixthly, all casualties arising by fall of offices, as keeping of forts, houses, chases, parks, etc., wherein we will be sparing to grant reversions (but when we see special cause), because it prejudices as [us?] hereafter to reward our servants. And further because some men of good desert and discretion may hereafter offer some suits or projects for suits, which, being particularly examined, may prove fit to be entertained both for our own profit and the benefit of the suitor, we have selected certain of our Commissioners, and directed them how to proceed with all such suits and suitors, to whom you shall send your hand, [and?] refer all such suits as we shall direct, without troubling of our § Council until you have seen their certificates, and shall receive our pleasure thereupon; which order as we are seriously resolved to hold for some convenient time, so we command you in your places to be careful to assure the same without excusing yourselves by receiving any messages to the contrary, seeing that in such a case as this you may repair to us when you are doubtful.

* In Vol. 11. † Blank. ‡ “Diverons” in MS. § “Your” in MS.

“And lastly, whereas benefits [benefices] and spiritual livings do often fall void either by lapse or by the death of the incumbent, the supplying whereof we hold it (sic) necessary, we are pleased, when any such do accure [accrue or occur?], that the presentations to them may be offered to our signature, so as they be first subscribed and recommended by the Bishop of the diocese or any other of the Bishops, and that they only extend to such livings as are presently void, and not any advowsons or reversions.

“A note of some of those things whereof we will in no sort give ear to any motion.

“No monopolies at all.

“No lease in reversion, no fee-farm nor fee simple, to the use of any private man, of any of our possessions.

“No licence for any prohibited commodities, as ordnance, leather, etc.

“No customs.

“No impositions.

“No fines in Star Chamber.

“No fines made upon leases, copyholds, [or] compositions of assarted lands.

“Nor any debts since the 30th of Elizabeth.

“Nor any of those things which are appointed to be dealt in by Commissioners, as may appear by several commissions under our Seal.”

Endorsed by Winwood: A memorial of such grants [as] his Majesty will be pleased to make.

SIR JOHN DIGBIE'S ANSWER TO THE SPANISH PROPOSITION.

[1615?]*—“Don Juan Digbi dize, que, como no tiene orden ni comission alguna de tratar el casamiento, sea de advertir, que lo que dira sobre estos apuntamientos, ni sera para aprovallos, ni recusallos, si no para calificallos, de suerte que segun su parecer sera mas probable para producir el effecto que se dessea.

“Al p[rimero] Art[iculo] r[es]p[on]de.—Supuesto que muchos Catolicos, y muy doctos, sean de parecer en este caso (donde tantos y tan apparentes bienes se han de resultar a la Religion Catt[olic]a), que el casamiento se pueda contratar licitamente, aunque el Papa no dispensase en ello; toda via su Magestad procede conforme a su prudencia y piedad, tomando en esto el medio mas seguro para su consciencia, y de mayor satisfacion para el mundo. Pero parece justo, que su Magestad Catolica procure tales prendas para la dicha dispensation, antes que se trate formalmente del casamiento, que, despues de las condiciones assentadas, el Rey de Inglaterra este cierto que no sera invalido, en caso que el Papa despues no viniessse en ello.

“Al 2º Art[iculo] r[es]p[on]de.—En materia de la Education de los hijos parecele, que, lo que se puede capitular, es, que no se han de forzar, ni compeler, a que no sean Catolicos.

“Al 3º Art[iculo] r[es]p[on]de.—Y quanto al Baptizarse a la suerte que usa la Iglesia Romana, y con ministro Catolico, parecele que segun el estado de las cosas de agora, sera bien por muchas razones que allegarse pueden, de no hauer capitulacion publica en esto, siendo ello vna solenidad publica, a la qual suele la mayor parte del Reyno acudir; fuera de lo qual la Iglesia Cattolica tiene, per valido y effectual, el Bautisino que hoy dia se vsa en Inglaterra; y assi es de opinion, que el articulo vaya desta manera: Que los hijos deste matrimonio se dexen indifferentes, para seguir la Religion que quisieren, sin ser compelidos a otra cosa.

* In Vol. 11.

“Al 4<sup>o</sup> Art[icul]o r[es]p[on]de.—En esto se ha de dar toda la siguridad possible.

“5<sup>o</sup>.—Que la S<sup>a</sup> Infanta ha de llevar su casa y familia a su election.

“6<sup>o</sup>.—Y que las amas, que dieren leche a los hijos, seran elegidas con su consentimiento, y perteneceran a su familia.

“7<sup>o</sup>.—Que el lugar, que se señalaré para el culto divino, sea decente, capaz, libre, y publico para todos los de su familia, y se administren [en] ellos sacramentos y officios segun el uso y las ceremonias de la Iglesia Romana.

“8<sup>o</sup>.—Que se señale lugar sagrado para enterrar los diffuntos de la dicha familia, y que el exercicio del culto diuino sea de empeçar desde que el S<sup>a</sup> Infanta entrará en Inglaterra.

“9<sup>o</sup>.—En esto parece que no aura dificultad de consideracion.

“10<sup>o</sup>.—Por ser esta proposition totalmente nueva, no se responde a ella. Pero parece, que las dificultades que della pueden nacer, facilmente se compondran.

“11<sup>o</sup>.—Parecele, que entre tanto se desseara de que se hagan los desposorios.

“12<sup>o</sup>.—Que entre los Ministros Catolicos aya quien tenga facultad y autoridad para el gobierno necessario de los demas, y de la dicha familia, en lo tocante a nuestra santa fee y religion.

“13<sup>o</sup>.—En esto no sabe lo que se ha ofrecido en Inglaterra. Pero le parece, que no se hable d'esto por via de capitulacion, si no que su Magestad Catolica haga con el Rey de Inglaterra los officios secretamente que pareciere a su prudencia, para que se disimule con la execucion de los leyes contra Catolicos.”

Endorsed: Sir Jo. Digby's answer to the Spanish proposition.

[SIR JOHN DIGBY] to KING [JAMES I.]

[1615?].—Gives account of the means he took to prove that one Sciopius,* who remains in this Court [of Spain], was the author of a book written under the feigned name of Holofernes. Acquainted the Duke of Lerma with the fact. Some gentlemen of [Digby's] house resolved, before their coming from Madrid, to cut off the author's nose and ears, but being forewarned, he never stirred out of his lodging unless very well accompanied. He was however met by a kinsman of [Sir John's] named George Digby, who had in his company only a young gentleman of Denmark and a couple of servants, but who endeavoured to put the intention into execution, though the street was raised upon them as heretics and Lutherans. The author was cut across the face & beaten on the head, and he has complained to the chief ministers, alleging that it was done by [Sir John's] order. Although he professes to be a councillor to the Emperor and the Archduke, and is favoured by some, he is much disliked by “this King and State,” and the President of Castile has promised to banish him. All the Ambassadors here thought the cutting off his ears less than he deserved; and the Pope's Nuncio some months past bitterly rebuked him, and now refuses him the protection of his house, although, as some gentlemen have expostulated, the Nuncio permits his house to be a sanctuary to all sorts of malefactors, which privilege the houses of ambassadors have here in Spain Incomplete.

* Gaspar Schoppius? (State Papers.)

[WINWOOD TO THE STATES GENERAL.]

[c. 1615?]*—Their Ambassador, the Sieur de Caron, has desired the King, on the part of "Messrs. d'Hollande," to excuse the payment of the 20,000*l.* due on the last day of this month, because of the arrears of the other provinces. The King feels sure they will not fail to pay, for their honour's sake. The King's needs are at present so urgent as not to admit of any delay, but rather require the payment of the 40,000*l.* due for this year all at once.

Draft, in Winwood's hand, French, 2 pp.

THE CUSTOMS.

[c. 1615?]*—Charges brought by ——— against the Farmers of the Customs: that they were originally poor men, but by deceit and fraud have become rich, to the injury both of the King and his subjects. Particulars are given. The writer recommends that they should be called in question by the King or by Parliament. He specially mentions Mr. Garraway, Mr. Alderman Joans, Mr. Salter, Mr. Alderman Hyd, Mr. Worstenholme, Mowlsworth, Sothworthe, Havers, and Sir. A. Ingram; also the Earl of Cumberiand's licence.†

3 pp. Endorsed: Against stealers of Customs.

SIR EDWARD COKE, Lord Chief Justice, to KING JAMES I.

[1616,] Feb. 22.—"If by my former letters I have not given satisfaction touching your royal power to punish murders and homicides committed by one of your Majesty's subjects upon another in a foreign kingdom, I shall be able, upon relation of the motives (which upon search I have found out) that induced the then Lord Chancellor and Judges to resolve the case for the Crown, to make the case (saving your Majesty's reformation) without all question. Which I shall the better perform (if so it may please your Majesty) if I may attend on your Majesty myself, for letters cannot reply, and without a reply, a doubt (if any shall be conceived) cannot so clearly be resolved; wherein I wholly submit myself to your Majesty's gracious pleasure and direction, and shall ever remain, to do your Majesty all the service I am able with all alacrity and readiness," &c.

Seal (crest, a bird). On gilt-edged paper.

SIR EDW. COKE TO WINWOOD.

1616, May 23.—"I shall most willingly (albeit it be the first of this kind that ever I did), for so Christian and honourable an end, join with the noble Lady and you, mine honourable friend, for the taking up of three thousand pounds, as is desired."

Seal as above.

* In Vol. 11.

† This is in Vol. 11. The grant of the customs to Francis Jones, William Garway, and Nicholas Salter, is dated 23 May 1614. They and John Wolstenholme were knighted afterwards. (State Papers.)

THE GUNPOWDER PLOT.

1616, 14 James I., July 5.—“Northumberland.—The Re-examination of Thomas Fenwicke, late of Wallington, in the said county, gent., taken before us whose names are subscribed.”

“This examine upon his oath saith, that he hath lived and remained with his father Raphe Fenwicke at Dilston near Hexham in the said county, from his this examine’s infancy, until within the space of these ten years last past or thereabouts. And he well knoweth that Mr. Roger Widdrington did dwell and continue (for the most part) in house with his father-in-law, Mr. Francis Radcliffe, at Dilston aforesaid, for divers years before the discovery of the Powder Treason; and was at the same time Bailiff and chief officer of Hexham and Hexhamshire. And he also well remembereth that Mr. Thomas Pearcie (the year before the said Treason should have been acted) did repair sometimes to Dilston aforesaid, and was very familiar with the said Mr. Radcliffe and Roger Widdrington. By means whereof (about the beginning of October next before the discovery of the said Treason) this examine’s father Raphe Fenwicke (a tenant and servant to the said Mr. Radcliffe, and thereby known to the said Pearcie) did inform this examine that the said Pearcie would entertain him into his service, and take him shortly after up with him to London. For which purpose he willed him to prepare himself to meet the said Mr. Pearcie at Hexham, upon a Friday at night (being about twenty days’ space before the said Treason was discovered), which this examine did accordingly; where Mr. Pearcie (after some conference had with him) willed him to meet him the next morning at Mr. Radcliffe’s house at Dilston, where he would receive him, and send him thence to London with his man Tailboies.

“And the next morning Mr. Pearcie came to Dilston (accompanied from Hexham with Thomas Ourd), and stayed at Mr. Radcliffe’s house some two hours and more; where the said Tailboies (Mr. Pearcie’s man) did meet the said Pearcie. From whence this examine and Tailboies (by Mr. Pearcie’s direction) did ride to Pruddey Castle, in Northumberland, leaving the said Pearcey at Corbridge, in his way to Alnewicke. And after their coming to Pruddey (staying there some two or three hours) the said Tailboies did bring forth of a chamber there a cloak-bag and a portmantua, both well furnished with money; which Tailboies laid upon two led horses, which horses this examine and Tailboies took in their hands, and presently set forward and travelled therewith, till they came to Beednell Green near London, where Tailboies left this examine with the said horses and money, at one Mr. Winter’s house there, for some four days’ space; in which time Tailboies did pass divers times betwixt London and Beednell Green. After which, John (alias Jack) Wright and Tailboies came to this examine at Beednell Green and removed the said money and horses to a town some two miles distant from Beednell Green, the name whereof he hath now forgotten; where, after this examine had stayed some two days’ space, Tailboies came and brought him thence to London, where he and Tailboies stayed but one day at a house near Temple Barr (whither the foresaid money and horses were formerly carried by Wright and Tailboies). To which house Pearcie came very early the same morning that the Treason was discovered, and bid (sic) Tailboies farewell, willing him to shift for himself, and saying that they two must never meet on earth again.

“And thereupon he and John Wright took each of them one of the foresaid horses, and did ride away, leaving the said money with the other two horses with Tailboies. Upon which, Tailboies and this examine removed presently into the fields some two miles distant thence, he there telling this examine that his master Pearcey was fallen into trouble, so as he did not know what way he and this examine should take for themselves. Whereupon they returned again to London, to hear what news there were; from whence within three hours' space they repaired to Easlington, of purpose to speak with one Marmaduke Machell, who was brother-in-law to Pearcey: which Machell and Tailboys conferring together some two hours' space, Tailboys was advertised by Machell that his master Pearcey was proclaimed traitor. And therefore he willed Tailboys to repair presently down into Yorkshire, to the said Machell's house at Cockneys near Howden, whither this examine and Tailboys took journey from Easlington the next morning. And coming to Cockneys aforesaid, Tailboys delivered the said money to Mrs. Machell, and left this examine there for the space of some twenty days. After which time Tailboys returned, and taking the money again from Mrs. Machell, he and this examine did bring it thence to Dilston, not keeping the ordinary passage and accustomed highway thither, but travelling by ways [bye-ways], and lodging at private alehouses.

"And upon their coming to Dilston in the dark of the evening upon a Monday at night, they alighted at this examine's father's house: who being then not comen home from the market at Hexham, Tailboys left this examine in the stable with the horses and money, and did presently go up to Mr. Radcliffe's house, where staying some half hour, he came back to the stable with one Francis Radcliffe, then servant to Mr. Radcliffe aforesaid. In which mean time this examine's father returned from Hexham, and they three, namely, Tailboys, Francis Radcliffe, and this examine's father, took the said money (amounting to about 500*l.*, as this examine conceived by the quantity and weight thereof), and thereupon did carry the same presently to Mr. Radcliffe's house. And the said Tailboys stayed that night at Dilston, telling this examine that he would ride early the next morning towards Topcliffe to meet Mr. Roger Widdrington, who was returning from London, and that one of Mr. Woodrington's (sic) men would go with him, whom he named George Thirlewaie, to the best of this examine's remembrance.

"And this examine being asked where Mr. Radcliffe and Roger Widdrington were all that time when this examine and Tailboys were so abroad, he answereth and saith that the said Mr. Radcliffe and Roger Widdrington, with Randall Fenwicke, as also Philip Thirlewaie, then servant to Roger Widdrington, and one Edward Tires, servant to Mr. Radcliffe, were then altogether at London, and had continued there from about the space of ten days next before the discovery of the said Powder Treason till about St. Andrew Day next after, and in their return home were taken, and carried before the Council at Yorke about that business. Whereupon Tailboys being stayed at Darneton for suspicion of that matter, this examine was sent for by the then Dean and now Bishop of Duresme. And in this examine's going thither he was earnestly pressed and persuaded by his aforesaid father, Raphe Fenwicke (who did accompany him six miles on his way), that he should keep a good tongue, and accuse no gentlemen,* for that it might do him this examine's father great harm, he holding all his living under Mr. Radcliffe.

"And this examine being asked why he did not fully confess and acknowledge the premises at the time of his former examination, as now he hath done, he saith that the only cause thereof was, in regard that his father and brother their whole livelihood and maintenance was under the said Mr. Radcliffe, and upon his father's persuasion was willing not to hurt him by his confessing the truth, which he hath now freely and uprightly done without respect of any persons.

---

* Originally "gentleman," but altered.

[Signed]

“ THOMAS FENWICKE.

Capt' coram

[Signed] Hen : Anderson
 „ John Fenwick
 „ Jo : Cradocke.” *

MONS. GILLES VANDE PUT to WINWOOD.

1616, July 25, London.—According to the order of the Grand Treasurer, directed to the Ambassador Caron, credit has been given to Winwood for 5,000*l.*, upon which “we” will pay 400*l.* to Mr. Moor. An acquittance from Winwood is required in the Exchequer, and will serve for an obligation on the part of the writer and Mons. Burlamachi for 4,600*l.*

French.

THE CLOTH TRADE.

1616, Sept. 16.—Answer of the King’s Merchants Adventurers to the questions propounded to them by the Privy Council touching the present stand in the Cloth Market.—Upon the King’s demand for their answer touching the buying up of cloth, a General Court of their Company was held on Friday last, the 13th, wherein it was resolved that although the traders are sore burdened, as stated in their late Remonstrance, and although violence will be done to trade, the cloth brought weekly to the Hall before Christmas shall be bought up from the clothiers’ hands, provided that 200 cloths may remain in Worcester Hall, 300 in Gloucester Hall, and 500 in Wiltshire Hall. Committees have been appointed to allot the cloth among the brethren. But the Merchants declare plainly to the King and Council that they cannot and dare not proceed in this forced course longer than till Christmas. By this compulsory buying of the clothier, English cloths will become dear, and give place to the Dutch in foreign markets.

[SIR] GEORGE VILLIERS to WINWOOD.

1616, Nov. 17, Newmarket.—“I understand from my Lady of Bedford that my letter will be a sufficient warrant unto you for the payment of so much money to my Lady Harrington as is due unto her. These are therefore to signify unto you that his Majesty’s pleasure is that you take speedy order for the payment of that money unto her, that there be no further stay of her journey. I have delivered the letters which at this time I received from you to his Majesty, but because he hath yet had no leisure to read them, I can give you yet no further account thereof.”

[P.S.] “If you find no other means to pay the money but by laying it down of your own, his Majesty commanded me to tell you that he will see it repaid to you as speedily as he can.”

Seal of arms.

THE EMBASSY to SPAIN.

[1616,† Nov. 21–] Dec. 1.—“Las personas que estavan junto a la persona del S<sup>or</sup> Vize Rey en [el] Palacio en primero de Diciembre que recibio el Sig<sup>r</sup> Embaxador† son los siguientes.” 14 Spanish names follow.

* Other examinations of Thomas Fenwick on 3 May and 18 Nov., 1616, are among the State Papers.

† In Vol. 11.

RO. EARL of ESSEX to WINWOOD (Principal Secretary).

[1616, Nov.]—"Honorable Sr,—I can not but take the oportunitie to express my affection vnto you, which though it doe come far short, of your honorable deserving of me, yet I besech you beleve that I will never be failing to you in my acknoegment, nor to my pouer in the perform-ance of all true respect, & honest offices. I know your noble disposition, not to make show, where you love not, and redely to geue credit where you have opinion; as I haue plentifull (sic) receaved the comfo[rt] of your honorable opinion, so will I ever study to maintaine the same, & alwise to be found "Your honors to bee commaunded,

"RO. ESSEX."

In a juvenile hand. Seal of arms. Endorsed: Novemb. 1616.

GEORGE TUCKER to WINWOOD, Chief Secretary, "in Whitehall."

1616, Dec. 1, Paris.—Professions of esteem. Sends these lines as "les premiers fleurs tirées de mon travail au langage francois."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

1616, 14 James I., Dec. 6, Newmarket, under the Signet.—Whereas the States General, according to a contract with the King, have by Ambassador Caron paid into the Exchequer 213,000*l.*, whereupon the King has surrendered the two cautionary towns of the Briell and Vlishinge; Winwood is to deliver up to Caron all their instruments and obligations.

Signed at the top. Signet torn off.

KING JAMES I. to the LORD DEPUTY of IRELAND
[SIR OLIVER ST. JOHN].

1616, Dec. 18, Westminster.—Whereas the King lately made known to him and to the Archbishop of Armagh that for the better distribution of allowances for public works and charitable uses in Ireland he was disposed to erect the office of one Almoner there, and gave them direction to consider what perquisites and profits could be annexed to the office, without diminishing the King's revenue; and they have suggested the fines of recusants and of absentees from public prayers, all deodands, goods of felons de se, and 12*d.* in the pound out of fines above 20*l.* remitted or reduced in any courts of justice, without diminishing the King's part of such fines: the King now appoints the said Archbishop to be his Almoner in that kingdom, with the perquisites and profits abovesaid, and the yearly fee of 100*l.* thereout.

Copy.

J. ALBERT, COUNT OF SOLMES, to WINWOOD.

1616, Dec. 19, Heidelberg.—Has received his letter recommending Sir Albert Morton, who arrived here on Saturday last, to serve in the charge committed to him by the King. Regards as fellow servants of their Highnesses all who serve Madame [Elizabeth]. They and the young Prince are well. His Highness labours for peace, and hopes to draw into it the Elector of Saxony. The most important question in the Empire now is the succession of a King of the Romans. News of Spain, Poland, Muscovy, Sweden, Venice, &c.

Holograph, French, 3 pp. Seal.

THE NETHERLANDS.

[1616, Dec. 30, 31-] 1617, Jan. 9, 10.—“Portée de l’Infanterie Espaignole, Italienné, Allemande, Haute et Basse Borgoignonne, Wallonne, et aultres, estant au service da sa Majesté Catholique es Païs Bas, selon la Monstre enprinse les 9<sup>me</sup> et 10<sup>me</sup> de Janvier 1617, ensemble des places ou chascun est logé.”

This gives the numbers of the troops in each town, with the names of the captains, &c.

French, 3 pp., double columns.

[LORD] RUTHIN to WINWOOD (Principal Secretary).

[c. 1616.]*—“Sir,—I will obey your summons, and before dinner wait on my Lady, and you; if you keep your promise that I shall be no way a trouble, I shall be much the more bound to you; but if I find myself, either made a trouble or a stranger, you do for ever bar

“Your unfeigned and faithful servant,

“RUTHIN.”

Holograph. Seal.

JOH. WH[ELER] to [WINWOOD].

1616,† . . . . 5, [Mi]ddelb[urgh].—Complains of being hardly dealt with by “the Company,‡ since the ordering of matters of the Cloth trade is returned unto them.” Had been 27 years in their service, but they have taken offence at him for doing what would have proved to be greatly for his Majesty’s service, and he is now set at liberty

. . . Ire pedes quocumque ferent, quocumque per undas

Eurus auferet, vel profervus Africus.

It was eight or nine months before he joined with the new Company. Beseeches [Winwood’s] protection.

“Here the trade is again at a stand for the old difference of Tare, so that it is a grief to see this often interruption, which I much doubt will, if not looked unto in time, prove a most dangerous gangrene. Our clothiers, contrary to the good laws of the land, have many years done what they listed, and their clothes have been sold hand over head, which now will not longer be endured by this people; so that in vain we . . . them of reforming of abuses; they will see it first, and [in the] mean time will have that which is sold them, saying [there is] no reason that they should pay for that they have . . . pretext they have procured authority by Placcate § to . . . they should have. I was in good hope that . . . should before this have been sent over to his Majesty about the compounding of this and other differences between us and those of these United Provinces in the matter of Trade and Commerce; but I see no man stirreth that way, but that things grow rather worse and worse every day than better, through Idiokerdie and Philautie, whereof there is none end. God amend it, and let us see where we fail, and reform it.”

Refers to “the jars here in the church matters.”

* In Vol. 11.

† In Vol. 11. Cf. letter of 26 Jan. 1612-13 for the writer’s name.

‡ Of Merchants Adventurers.

§ Plakkaat = proclamation.

"It is here said that Sir John Bennet is coming over about a matter of marriage between our Prince [Charles] and a daughter of the Lantsgrave of Hessen, which match the States labour to set forward, offering to make her dowry better than the Infanta's of Spain, as the speech goeth. If there be any such matter, I would it were my good hap (seeing I have now the leisure) that I might be employed as an instrument to further this business, and to give my poor assistance therein, by your Honour's good means, if your Honour shall so think good.

"Secretary Schotte by this time no doubt hath his dispatch; a match is soon made where both parties are willing. I have sustained much ill will for this town's sake;" &c.

Holograph; torn.

GREAT BRITAIN and THE NETHERLANDS.

[1616?]*.—Clause of a treaty (?) relating to the cautionary towns, and to the peace between the Kings of England and Spain. The King of England promises to induce the King of Spain and the Archdukes to accept terms of peace with the States General.

Latin, 1 p., partly eaten away.

OBJECTIONS to the TAWYERS' PETITION.

[1616?]*—"The Tawyers' prayer in their petition to his Majesty is for a general prohibition of all grey cony-skins and morkins till they be tawed and dressed within the realm before exportation, whereby they may be set on work, and his Majesty's Customs much advanced.

"His Majesty referred the consideration hereof unto the Lord Treasurer, Lord Knowles, and Mr. Chanceller of his Highness' Exchequer with this caution—that they should take care that this project might be no decay of customs, breach of any treaty, nor hindrance to any intercourse of traffic."

"Objections" are stated under eight heads, viz. :—Hindrance to his Majesty's customs; hindrance to the Commonwealth; hindrance to the City; hindrance to merchants; subversion of the Skinners [Company]; tawyers mocked; the quality of the patentees; the substance of the patent.

It is stated that these sorts of skins will not sell tawed beyond the seas; that the tawing of such great quantities would cause a great number of indigent people to increase about the City, who would consume 1,000 quarters of meal and 2,000 firkins of butter yearly; that there would be danger of infection by reason of the noisome stench; that "the number of grey cony-skins single are yearly about 240,000;" that the merchants who transport such skins bring back 4 or 5,000 lasts of flax and hemp, which employ many thousands of poor people; that the tawyers are but 28 persons in number, who cannot taw but a small portion of these commodities; that the patentees are only ten in number, and no merchants; that the first projectors were two Muffetts, brothers, both bankrupt merchants, by whom the Skinners' Company lost great sums of money; and that the drift of the patent [requested] is to obtain the sole transportation, which would enable the patentees to buy skins at what price they please, to the injury of the gentry, skinners, warreners, poulterers, petty-chapmen, and dealers.

* In Vol. 11.

SPAIN and SAVOY.

[1616?]*—“Orazione del Duca . . . nel Consiglio d'Espagna.”

This is a speech by a councillor addressed to the King of Spain touching the disputes between that King and the Duke of Savoy.

Italian, 8 pp.

SIR THO. SMYTHE to WINWOOD.

1616-[17], Jan. 27, Philpot Lane in London.—Sent yesterday to crave Winwood's mediation for the King's letters to Sir Thomas Roe, approving his endeavours for the good of the East India Company, and requesting him to continue the same. Asks Winwood's furtherance herein.

Seal of arms.

SPAIN.

[1617, Jan. 30,] Feb. 9.—The “proposition” made by the King of Spain to the Cortes, with the reply of the latter.

Among the measures taken by the King of Spain for the defence of his kingdoms, and for the preservation of their commerce, it is “proposed to make the Mole of Gibraltar (se trata de hazer el muelle de Gibraltar).” Besides maintaining galleys to prevent the attempts of the Turk on the coasts of Italy, his Majesty maintains other navies “to guard the fleets that have and do still come from the West Indies, and to secure them against rovers and pirates; and just now is sending to the Philippine Islands the supply it is likely you have heard is in readiness and fitted out, the consequence and expense whereof is well known.”

Spanish, with translation, 7 pp.

Another translation of the same, dated 19 Feb. 7 pp. Endorsed: Sent by Mr. Cottingham.

The CONSULATE at LISBON.

1617, † Feb. [3-]13, n.s., Lix<sup>a</sup> [Lisbon].—Appointment by Hugh Lee, Consul there, in accordance with the patent of 8 Nov. 1611, q.v., of certain merchants to be his assistants, viz.:

- Mr. Robert Howe, of London.
- Mr. Richard Wackeman, of Bristol.
- Mr. Thomas Coulston, of London.
- Mr. Richard Ferris, of Barnstable.
- Mr. John Questell, of London.
- Mr. William Downe, of London.
- Mr. Henry Erbery, of London.
- Mr. Francis Tooke, of London.

The merchants and the masters of ships having given their consents, the said assistants “shall continue for this whole year of 1617.” Then follow—

“Decrees and orders set down for better government.”

1. On the arrival of any English, Scottish, or Irish ship, the master or purser shall bring to the Consul's lodging all letters for the merchants, who will repair thither for them.

2. Every ship shall relade within a reasonable time, so that the merchants be not driven to extremities for sale of their goods; and no freight agreed upon in England shall here be altered without consent of the principals.

* In Vol. 11.

† This is among the papers of 1611, in Vol. 9.

3. All merchants and other passengers shall on their arrival and departure give towards the relief of the poor, for whom a treasurer or collector shall be appointed every three months.

4. A fit man shall be chosen to warn the merchants of the time and place of meetings, which they are bound to attend. Charges in any cause concerning the general good are to be levied.

5. The Consul exhorts them [the merchants] to brotherly love, at length. None are "to take to freight any ship to the end to lade the same privately by themselves, forbidding others to lade in the same ship either sugars, spices, or any other merchandises whatsoever"—except in respect of salt.

6. No master shall bring any passengers save merchants adventurers, without special licence from his Majesty or the Council.

7. When any distressed subjects of his Majesty, "either by shipwreck or pirates," shall come to this port, one or two of the younger merchants shall be appointed to assist them in gathering "the benevolence of the well disposed, towards their relief."

SIR EDWARD COKE'S PROPOSALS.*

1616 [-17], Feb. 10.—"First, I give my full consent for a marriage to be had between Sir John Villiers and Frances, my youngest daughter.

"Her advancements do appear under my hand.

"It is desired that Sir John Villiers' present advancement may be 2,000*l.* per annum, and in future what my Lo[rd] of B.† please to him and to the heirs males of his body.

"My daughter's jointure to be 2,000 marks after the decease of Sir John.

"And God forbid but part of the lands which his Majesty hath graciously given to the Earl, should be accepted (if so it please the Earl) for these purposes.

"If my wife (by ill advice) shall disagree, or not hold herself to her own first motion to my Lady Compton of a Baron, &c.—

"Then the Lo[rd] B. and the Lo[rd] D. to be sent for &c., by whom she is wholly directed; who I am persuaded will then further it.

"If this work no effect—

"1. I will assent to no other.

"2. I will never give any money with any other.

"3. I will assure none of the plate, household stuff, or leases mentioned in my note (which are in my power) to her.

"If none of these means shall produce the desired end, I will give Sir John Villiers ten thousand marks to obtain my restitution &c., and then I persuade myself it will the sooner proceed; and if it should not, he shall keep the money as a gratuity of my love to him for my restitution &c.

"EDW. COKE."

Holograph.

SAVOY, VENICE, and SPAIN.

1617, Feb. [15-] 25, Ast[i].—Copies of letters from the Duke of Savoy to the Senator Guillet de Montheu, and from De Montheu to [the States General], touching the Duke's war [with Spain], and propositions for peace with the Archduke made by the Venetians.

French, 5 pp. These copies are in the handwriting of Sir Dudley Carleton's clerk.

* This heading is taken from an endorsement by Sawyer.

† George Villiers, Earl of Buckingham.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1616 [-17], Feb. 16, o.s., Madrid.—Wrote on the 8th overland by an extraordinary messenger to France, [the letter being] enclosed to Mr. Questor. Since then there is news of the death of Don Sancho de Luna, governor of the castle of Milan, and the capture of the maestro de campo, in the late blow given by the Prince of Piemont, as Mr. Wake will have informed. There is no news of the arrival of the States' ships at the Straits, where the armada is waiting for them. Lord Roos, naving news that France is unquiet, and dangerous for him to pass, is resolved to embark at St. Sebastian, but owing to the contrary wind no shipping has arrived there for almost these three months. One Newland, who with his wife and family lived in Malaga, became indebted to inhabitants in 50,000 ducats for wine, fruits, sugars, &c., which he shipped and himself also; but he was taken going out of the Straits by the armada, and brought back to Malaga. The Spanish Ambassador in England is always admitted as a party in all suits concerning the King his master or his subjects, but they will not grant the like here to his Majesty's ministers; and now, in the great and tedious suit of the Sardinian business, a stop is made because the authorities would force the writer to prove that the sons of certain deceased parties are the legitimate heirs. Has in a memorial to this King desired the said privilege, as otherwise his sovereign will proceed accordingly, the favour done to the Spanish ambassador being not agreeable with the laws of England, but merely resting on his Majesty's grace. Has also drawn up heads of all the important complaints of his Majesty's subjects trading into these parts, which he will present to this King, and, if they are not to be remedied, will boldly say that the trade cannot be continued, at least to the ports of Andaluzia. 1,000 soldiers have been embarked from Barcelona for Milan.

[P.S.] "This next month will depart from Lysbona three carack[s], one galleon, three ships, and a patacho, for the East Indies."

Holograph.

HENRY PEPPER to [FRA. COTTINGTON].

1617, [Feb. 25-] March 7.—Did not receive till 4 March his letter of 21 Feb. in answer to the writer's letter to Lord Roas [Roos]. Cannot write of the service he offered to his Majesty by the ordinary, who "for a miserable six-pence will deliver any man's letter to his mortal enemy," and therefore is not to be trusted with "a secret that concern[s] the safety of his Royal person." Desires to be removed to the Court, which Cottington can procure, as the writer's adversaries have accused him of killing a man there. Since receiving Cottington's letter of 14 Feb., has written two, on 21 and 28 Feb., which do not seem to have reached him.

Holograph. Endorsed by Cottington: The first letter from Pepper.

"IL DOTTOR MARTA" to WINWOOD, Chief Secretary.

1617,* [Feb. 26-] March 8, Padua.—Wrote on Dec. 22, giving full information about the affair of the Council. Has for two years entertained "these Lords" [the Signory of Venice?] with the hope that his Majesty would have embraced this affair, both for the benefit of his realms and for the glory and emulation of other Kings. Has engaged in this matter at great peril, hoping to influence seven Italian bishops, besides Greeks, well disposed to the Protestants, and his dear friends. These Lords hope to obtain the protection of the King of Denmark, of which he has doubts, considering the terms of the peace between the religions made by the Emperor Ferdinand, and because the Papists desire to break this peace and make war in Germany against the Protestants; therefore the King of Denmark, to avoid war, will not easily be able to accept [the protection], and so they think that no place is better than London. Asks him to order the Ambassador Wottone to pay the writer his maintenance (provisione). Two years ago the Archbishop of Canterbury informed the writer that his maintenance was always sent with that of the Ambassador. Wottone denies this. Prays that he may enjoy the benefit of the King's bounty.

* In Vol. 11.

*Holograph, Italian; signed as above.* Seal.*

SIR HENRY WOTTON to WINWOOD.

1617, [Feb. 27-] March 9, style of the place, Venice.—Touching negotiations by the Spaniards with the Duke of Savoy to detach him from the Venetians. Received the King's letter about the restraint of travellers, and another for Gregorio de' Monti, with an order touching the Archbishop of Spalatro, whose furniture has been cleared from hence, and put on board a ship "of ours" in this harbour.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

THE DUKE DE NEVERS to the POPE.

1617, [Feb. 28-] March 10, Meziere.—Touching the course of events since "the treaty of peace," which prevented the threatened division between the Catholics in France concerning the authority of the Holy See.

Copy, French, 6 pp.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1616[-17], March 3, o.s., Madrid.—The armada which so long awaited the Hollanders has dispersed, perhaps being judged too weak for the encounter, as the China fleet was about to depart. One of this King's daughters, a child of some seven years, is dead. Never saw a finer child; her sickness was the taberdillo. Lord Roos is resolved to embark at St. Sebastian, but intends to stay [till?] the return of Mr. Duncombe, his secretary, to St. Sebastian. The prosperous proceeding of the Duke of Savoy is much felt here. Italian news. Digested the complaints of his Majesty's subjects trading into Andaluzia into articles, and delivered them to this King six days ago.

Holograph; much defaced.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1616 [-17], March 3, o.s., Madrid.—"Unto the letter which goeth herewith I must refer you for all ordinary passages. Touching the daughter of Spain, you may be pleased to understand that Sir J. Digby is expected in Madrid, there to declare the resolution of his Majesty in matter of religion; and much it is laboured there (sic) that he should come as ordinary, and not for a small time; by which your Honour may guess that winning of time is their chiefest aim; and the D[uke] of Lerma hath lately told me* that except the Pope shall be contented with the propositions, and give his blessing to the business, it cannot be hoped for, nor by any means effected. Upon this point much was replied (as I am told) by Mr. Cottington,* who hath I understand written all to his Majesty, and therefore in any case your Honour may not take notice of it.

* "Dr. Marta" is mentioned in the State Papers.

"I perceive that his Majesty's Agent* is still confident in his former opinion, viz., that the daughter of Spain will hardly be brought to any perfection, except his Majesty shall resolve to do that which for my part I hold impossible for him. Of what shall hereafter pass I will not fail to advertise your Honour.

"I understand from Mr. Stafford the great favour your Honour doth me. . . . It is written unto me by Mr. Secretary Lake, that so soon as his Majesty shall understand my Lord Roos is departed from this town, another Ambassador shall come from thence to treat particularly and especially the business of Savoy, but who he is he writes not. I hope I shall understand it from your Honour."

Holograph, partly in cipher, deciphered; partly defaced.

HENRY DE LA TOUR [DUKE DE BOUILLON] to SIR DUDLEY CARLETON.

1617, March [11-] 21, Sedan.—Sends the declaration which he has published within these last few days. Nothing but extreme necessity has compelled him to take to arms. Complains of the injustice done to him by the refusal of protection for his sovereignty of Sedan, under pretence of religion. Assures himself that the King, Carleton's sovereign, will not deny him succour. If any of that nation wish to come and serve him, asks Carleton to favour their passage. Mons. d'Aerssen, one of his best friends, will give information of what takes place.

Copy, French.

MONS. DE PLESSSEN to WINWOOD.

1617 [n.s.], March 13, o.s.—Wrote on the 6th. As Winwood remains in London, and is not making the journey to Scotland, sends him the reply of Elogius Nicolai upon the last conference, and upon the demands made to him. No doubt the Priors of Coloigne and Brussels have written to England, to their monks, to put them on their guard. Is waiting to learn what the Privy Council deems expedient. Proceedings of the Count de Schomberg, M. de Bouillon, &c.

Holograph, French. Seal of arms.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1617 (sic), March 14, Eng. st., Madrid.—Wrote last on the 3rd. Upon news from Holland that the soldiers so long wind-bound had put to sea, the armada was ordered to return from Cadiz to the Straits, to impede their passage. Italian affairs. "This day is here Good Friday, and such a dead vacation from all kind of business, as I can now add little to this letter." Informed this King of his Majesty's pleasure to bestow the place of consul in the island of Mayorca on Mr. John Carr, a Scotsman. The Council here requires a formal nomination from his Majesty. Mr. Levynus can furnish precedents of nominations given to the writer and to Mr. Lee, which only passed the Signet; and that will be sufficient.

Holograph. Endorsed: 1616-17.

* These are three different renderings of one and the same symbol, viz., "146."

[FRA. COTTINGTON] to [HENRY] PEPPER.

1617, March 14.—Gives him directions how to send his letters safely. If his information is what he pretends, the writer will endeavour to free him from the place he is now in, but will not attempt to remove him hither. If he will declare what he pretends to know for the good of his Majesty's service, he shall be rewarded; but if he persist in his reservedness, the writer will believe that no such matter is to be expected from him. Has seen his declaration against the King's subjects, and judges it to be very malicious. The merchants have reason to seek to prove its falsehood.

Endorsed by Cottington: Copy of my letter to Pepper, dated the 14 of March 1617.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1616[–17], March 15, Madrid.—Wrote yesterday by an extraordinary for Flanders; this is by another for France. Is<sup>o</sup> informed that this King offers all assistance to the King of France. Some of the States' ships have passed the Straits without any great impediment. Italian affairs. "A proclamation was lately made that every man should wear his hair short, on great and sharp penalties, both to the wearer and the barber; and so well it was obeyed, as within two days every man's hair was cut."

Holograph.

HENRY PEPPER to [FRANCIS COTTINGTON].

1617, March [18–]28, Carsell Riall [Carcel Real], Sevilla.—Has no confidence in him, as he suffers himself to be abused by false informations, and permits his letters to be intercepted.* Wishes to prevent the "present execution of that mischief." Mentions examples of great persons who were arrested before their treasons were made known. Does not desire reward, but only to perform the service due to his Majesty. The writer's imprisonment, "with all extremity," was caused by traitorous villains; but these "setta-mana sainta," whom they hired to murder him in the prison, have revealed who they were, and they shall be made known to the world, &c.

Holograph. Endorsed by Cottington: The second letter from Pepper.

[SIR] ALBERTUS MORTON to WINWOOD.

[1616–17,] March 19, "style of the place" [o.s.], Heidle[berg].—"My Lady Harrington's footman returned to us the 16th of the present. By him I have received one from your Honour, and another from his Majesty to the Elector, of which I can yet give no further account than of the delivery, having by her Highness's commandment deferred for three or four days to move the Prince in any business, upon divers reasons; of which the chiefest is that in the mean time the Prince of Anhalt, who is now here, and hath always professed much service to her Highness, might be prepared to favour that we have to say, he being one of the Council, and nothing done in this Court without their advice. By my next I will not fail to advertise your Honour of every particular. At the present I will only say that if it should prove a difficult matter * Note by Cottington: Never a letter of mine was intercepted.

(which truly I much doubt), I then fear the unkindness of the denial will be heavier than is now the want of what we shall demand. But there is nothing juster than the request will be, and we shall endeavour to make it as pleasing as may be in the propounding. After which your Honour shall know the event with the first conveniency.

“Mons. Brederode, Agent here for the States, a few days since desiring to speak with me, told me, as a business of great consequence, and very fit to be advertised home, that he had privately understood from the Court of Saxe of I know not what whisperings there, that his Majesty had concluded the marriage with Spain, and had promised a toleration of the Mass in England; and that how false soever the report were, yet it might breed jealousies between our Elector and other Princes of the Union, to which purpose he says these and divers other reports are now projected. Though I thought this a Panic fear of his own, yet I would not omit to set it down, having so little other matter to trouble your Honour withall. For, what levies and preparations of war are here made on every side in favour of the King of France, will be more particularly written, from those who know it better; the Princes, and particularly the Duke of Bouillon, upon whom the first storm is like to fall, being only assisted, for aught I hear, by the pity of their friends. For that which shall be resolved at the Diet which will be held at Helbron, six leagues from hence (as I have formerly written unto your Honour), may perhaps come too late to their succour, since that meeting beginneth not these many days; in which time there be doubts made here, that something will be attempted on Sedan.

The best and only news this place yields is the good estate of all their Highnesses, which God long continue unto them. Of the good and noble Lady Harrington I shall need to say nothing at the present, herself having written to your Honour, under this same date. I do much rejoice that I am strengthened not only by her wisdom in what I have to do here, but also by her authority, of which a secretary in this country hath as much need as I have of the former.”

Holograph; signed, Albertus Morton. Endorsed: 19 March 1616.

MONS. DE PLESSEN TO WINWOOD.

1617 [n.s.], March 19, [o.]s.—By his letter of the 12th (sic) inst. Winwood will have seen that the quondam monk Eligius* offered to transport himself to England; but since his Majesty does not approve of this, as appears by Winwood's of 25 Feb., it is thought most advisable and safe not to send him over. Eligius desires a letter of recommendation from his Highness to the Signory of Berne, whither he desires to retire, hoping to obtain some employment there, as he may be of service to them, being a native of Lucerne, the chief of the Papist Cantons of Switzerland. Desires to know whether he is to be detained here any longer.

Holograph, French.

MONS. BILDERBEK TO [WINWOOD].

1617, March 20, Cologne.—Affairs of Italy, Germany, France, Austria, Poland, &c.

Latin, 4 pp.

---

* “Elogius” under March 13 and 26.

CHÂTEAU PORSIEN.

1617, March [20-] 30.—Extract of a letter from the camp of Chateau Porsien, with the articles of capitulation made with the garrison there, signed by Charles Duke of Lorraine and by the Sieurs de Moulin and de Montereau.

French, 2 pp.

FRANCE AND THE NETHERLANDS.

1617, March [21-]31, the Hague.—Proposition by Mons. De la Noue, extraordinary Ambassador from France, to the States General.

Copy, French, 6 pp. Endorsed: Presented to the States the first of April 1617, st<sup>e</sup> n<sup>o</sup>.

Same date.—Proposition by Mons. Du Maurier, Ambassador in ordinary from France, to the States General.

Copy, French, 10 pp. Endorsed as above.

These two papers are in the handwriting of Sir Dudley Carleton's clerk.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1616 [-17], March 23, o.s., Madrid.—The Venetian Ambassador has power from that Commonwealth to conclude the difference between his masters and the Archduke Ferdinando, which has been referred to this King. The Duke of Savoy has also given power to the same Ambassador to compound the difference between this King and himself. This Court wishes to exclude not only his Majesty (the writer's master) from having any hand in the treaty, being unwilling that he should meddle in any matters of Italy, but the French King also, who pretends to be an arbitrator in Italy. They only await the Emperor's Ambassador before proceeding. The armada in the Straits has been re-enforced by the China fleet, which has been so long in preparing, and by the best ships of the Terra firma fleet, so much do they take to heart the going of those forces out of Holland into Italy.

Holograph.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1616 [-17], March 24, o.s., Madrid.— . . . “I am even now advertised from Malaga that the Hollanders are passed by into the Mediterranean Sea, without any kind of impediment, which for my part I do well believe; and doubtless the calling away the armada, and returning it again in that manner, was but a cleanly shift to save their reputations, when they durst not fight. Mine advertisement says that the Hollanders went by with 30 and odd sails.

“The Pope hath beatified a Jesuit, who was sometimes (sic) the Duke of Gandia, and died in the year 1580; he was the Duke of Lerma's uncle, and at his request is the beatification. The Bull of the Pope to this effect was carried this day from the Palace to the house of the Cardinal of Toledo by the Duke of Lerma, who went on horseback, accompanied with all the grandees, presidents, councillors, and cavalleros which this Court can yield; and strange triumphs and fire-works are performed for the celebration of this feast.” Adds these few lines to his other dispatch.

Holograph.

DOUAY.

1616 [-17], March.*—“Relation of H[enry] T[aylor] concerning some particulars he pretendeth to have discovered at Doway, concerning his Majesty's service.

“First, that Cor[on]a Regia is reprinted at Liege by the Eng[lish] Jesuits, which he understood from Higham the printer at St. Omer's, who was told so much by the Abbot of Arras, a great man in this State, and a munificent patron of the Society, that built them a sumptuous College in the town of Arras, and erected a fair Monastery for the English Benedictines in Doway.

“Secondly, that one John Barnes, the son of Joseph Barnes, the late printer at Oxforde, a bookseller, keeping shop over against Holborne Conduiete in London, did barter with the Eng[lish] Jesuits at Leege for a certain quantity of the said pestilent libels, of Corona Regia, and paid for them not in money, but in stockings and fustians, and carried them over the seas to London, wrapped up in rolls of tobacco. He doth not keep or vent them in his shop, but in a back warehouse; neither doth his wife or servants know where or what they are. He hath also carried out of France a certain quantity of Dr. Bishop's book of the lawfulness of murdering Princes, which is said to be a most wicked and pernicious book. One of the C. Regia's he gave to a counsellor-at-law, who serveth him in a process against Mr. John Bill, and reported that the said counsellor hath done him more pleasure and favour for it than if he had given him 20*l.* in money. The name of this counsellor may easily be learned by John Bill.

“The 3 Eng[lish] Jesuitical Novitiats, or Colleges, in these countries are separated, and made independent one of another. That of Louvayne enjoyeth its own revenues, which (by other means) I [Trumbull] have heard to be 1,500 [l.] sterling by the year. That of Leege, besides other rents of good value, hath the lands of Watten, near St. Omer's, given them by a B[ishop] of that see, which is worth 3 or 400*l.* sterling communibus annis. That of St. Omer's is in the estate I represented it in my last, and likely to be dissolved for want of means (as he saith) if the contributions, now to be raised in England, could be stopped.

“A Welshman called William Cooke, keeping an inn or victualling house in Doway, to which all the better sort of our English that travel that way do commonly resort, is now in England, to receive for the Eng[lish] Seminary there 100*l.* sterling. John Henricks knoweth the man by sight, but I cannot learn where he lodgeth in London. In his last journey thither, which was in February, he brought over for the said Seminary 250*l.* sterling, in bills of exchange.

“The Channon that withdrew the copies of C. Regia from Flavius as fast as they were printed, he avoucheth to have lately seen in Doway, and doth suppose him to reside in or about the town of Valenciennes in Haynaut. I have given him great charge to hearken after that man, and the Eng[lish] C. Regia, which he saith should have been printed before this time, had there not been such earnest pursuits made in these parts against Puteanus, for that in Latin.

“Gibbons, the Eng[lish] Jesuit at Doway, is thought to be the author of Jacobeados; he hath a chamber, and part of a warehouse, in the dwelling of one Le Roy, a printer there, together with a priest at his commandment, which is now set on work by him with great seeresy.

---

* Before the 24th. There is a Deposition relating to Douay, 5 April 1617, among the State Papers.

“At Doway there is now another book printing by the Irish of the pressures used by his Majesty’s officers in Ireland against their countrymen of the Romish religion.

“W. TRUMBULL.”

In Trumbull’s hand. Endorsed: March 1616. Henry Taylor’s Relation concerning some particulars.

MONS. DE PLESSEN to WINWOOD.

1617, March 26, o.s.—Wrote last on the 19th, n.s., and awaits an answer touching Elogius Nicolai. Their Highnesses and the young Prince are very well. His Highness is going to Heilbrun, for the assembly of the United [Princes]. The Sieur de Montou, Ambassador of the Duke of Savoy, will be there, but they cannot give the Duke such satisfaction as is desirable, especially as there is no appearance of an agreement between him and the Republic of Berne. This morning there is bad news from Switzerland, that the Grisons have concluded a perpetual and hereditary confederation with the King of Spain, as Duke of Milan, binding themselves never to enter into any treaty with Venice, &c. Informs him of this in case Sir Isaac Wacke may not have done so. Other news of Switzerland, Italy, France, Germany, and the Low Countries.

Holograph, French. Seal.

HENRY LORD COBHAM to WINWOOD.

1617, March 27, at the Tower.—Received an answer to his last letter that Winwood would acquaint the Lords with it. Desires to know the result.

[W. TRUMBULL to WINWOOD.]

1617,* March 27, Eng. st., Bruxelles.—News from France, Spain, the Low Countries, Italy, Germany, &c.

Holograph. A large portion of this letter has been eaten away.

G. EARL OF BUCKINGHAM to WINWOOD.

1617, March 28, Lincoln.—“I have acquainted his Majesty with your letter, and that which came inclosed from Sir Henry Wotton, of whose opinion his Majesty is touching the advertisement given therein, that this discovery is like to unite the Duke [of Savoy] and the Venetians nearer together, and briug on better conditions for a peace with Spain. His Majesty perceiveth, by a letter he hath received from the Spanish Ambassador, that you have not been yet with him to acquaint him with the order taken by his Majesty about Sir Walter Raleigh’s voyage, and therefore would have you go to him as soon as you can possibly to relate unto him particularly his Majesty’s care of that business, and the course he hath taken therein.”

Seal of arms.

HENRY LORD COBHAM to WINWOOD.

1617, March 29, at the Tower.—Would have intreated Winwood not to send to the Lady Kildare on his behalf, as no persuasion could prevail with her. Desires only his right, with the King's favour. The Lord Privy Seal [Earl of Worcester] dealt for him with the King, who thought his petition most reasonable. Thus the wilfulness of a woman prevents his taking the benefit of the King's permission to go to the Bath, and crosses him in all other respects.

Seal.

[SIR] OLIVER ST. JOHN, [Lord Deputy of Ireland,] to WINWOOD.

1617, March 30, Dublin.—Received his letters in favour of Harvey of Newhaven, whose ship is detained by Johnson. Has sent for Johnson, and will be careful to right the Frenchman. These men of the Admiralty here account themselves exempt from the power of this State. As long as Johnson and Loe, whose deputy he is, are employed in Mounster, complaints will not be wanting of wrongs done to strangers.

“Sir Josias Bodley is now measuring out the 16,500 acres in Wexford for the eleven undertakers; and when the Lords shall be resolved concerning th' undertakers, and his Majesty's warrant sent for disposing of the lands, I see no difficulty but that the work will soon be ended to the contentment of all parties.

“I received this last passage his Majesty's letters and instructions for levying an Aid for the late Prince Henry; as soon as the judges come from their circuits, and the counsel returned who are now dispersed, I will proceed in it.”

Holograph. Seal.

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON to [WINWOOD].

1617, March 31, o.s., Hagh.—Sends copies of the propositions made by the French Ambassadors on the  $\frac{2}{3}\frac{1}{4}$  instant. Gives an account of the debates and negociations thereon. Affairs of Germany, the Duke of Bouillon, the Duke of Savoy, Sweden, the Hanse Towns, Spain, the Straits, Algiers, and Tunis.

“I have spoken with Mons<sup>r</sup> Barnevelt at large in conformity to your Honour's letters of the 14th of this present, touching the reducing the matter of Tare to the same terms as it was at the time of the dissolution of the old Company of our Merchants; from which I find him not averse, but he desires time to acquaint this Province withall now at their next assembly, as a business which concerns their several towns, when he will make answer to your Honour's letter; and I will not fail in the mean time of my best endeavours to dispose others to that course which may give our Merchants contentment.” Is awaiting the King's pleasure touching his last of the 11th.

SIR THO. LAKE to SIR RAFFE WINWOOD, one of H. M. principal Secretaries.

[1617,* March.]—“Yesterday I did, upon letters from Mr. Calvert, acquaint his Majesty with the proceedings against the Apprentices at the late Session kept for that purpose, wherewith his Majesty is scarce satisfied, because it appeareth by the examinations, that one blew a horn to draw the company, one carried an ensign, and another struck the Sheriff with a stone; which he saith in any other country but here would have proved felony or sedition; but if the law here will afford none other, he hath no more to say.

* In Vol. 11.

“Upon this occasion his Majesty asked me what was become of a proclamation he commanded to be made for Justices and gentlemen of quality to retire into the country, and likewise Lieutenants and Deputy Lieutenants, during his Majesty’s absence. I answered I thought he should shortly hear of it from you: which though I doubt not he shall, yet I thought it not aniss to put you in mind of it. And here is no other matter fit to trouble you with, but that which ere this time I know you hear of—the creation of Sir Edward Noell to be a Baron, and that a pause is made in signing of the Viscount Brackley’s bill for his Earldom.”*

Holograph.

T. EARL OF ARUNDEL TO WINWOOD.

1617, [beg. April.] Sunday, Newarke upon Trent.—“I have received now two letters from you, for which I give you many thanks, for it is a great comfort to us (now on the banks of Trent) to hear from our friends on the banks of Thames. For that business of the Merchants, I will willingly join with my Lord Chamberlain [Pembroke] to speak to the King in it. Sir Charles Cavendish died on Friday last; how my Lady of Shrewsbury takes it I cannot yet tell, but tomorrow, as we go to Worsoppe, my Lord of Pembroke dines with her at Rufford, and then we shall hear more; but before his death, one of the Markhams told me, she kept her bed, ate little, and, he said, spake somewhat distractedly—the most that I heard was in bitter curses, wherein my sister Ruthen and her Lord had a full part, so as I think she is but as she was. My Lord of Shrewsbury gets such heart as now (they say) he sends to Sheffield for the rents. The Markhams are not in prison, as we heard, but they have been offered the Oath, and one of them took it this other day. So, with my heartiest commendations, I pray God send us a good meeting.”

Holograph. Seal.

SIR THO. LAKE TO WINWOOD.

[1617, beg. April.]—“I received yesternight your letters concerning the Proclamation, but you will find by mine written in the morning, upon some letters come from the Lord Keeper [Bacon] to my Lord of Buckingham, what new direction I had with no less person (sic) than the former. It were good my Lord Keeper did communicate with you when he dispatcheth hither about these things, to avoid errors; for I perceive his Majesty did think that my Lord Keeper’s letter was written after my first to you, and that notwithstanding my signification of his Majesty’s pleasure you thought upon the suspense of the Proclamation; but if your letters had been here first, there would have been no offence.

“My Lord Rosse is now dispatched from hence, and hath given his Majesty good account of his doings in Spain. He hath offered me a bill of his charges in going and returning.” It seems to be large.

Holograph. Seal of arms. Endorsed: 1617.

FRA. COTTINGTON TO WINWOOD.

1617, April 1, o.s., Madrid.—Wrote on 23rd March that the Hollanders were gone by Gibraltar; ere this time they are at Venice. The * Sir Edward Noel was created Baron Noel 23 March 1617; and John Egerton, Viscount Brackley, son of Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, was created Earl of Bridgewater 27 May 1617.

armada went from Cadiz, and are in the mouth of the Straits. The China fleet is still retained in the armada, as also are some of the terra firma fleet. In the Cortes the chiefest matter treated is, how to increase the sea forces of this King's dominions, and many projects have been considered of. Spanish news. The Genoese have licence to carry out of Spain every year a certain amount of money, but transport twice as much. Of this George Cotton has become a denunciador, and above a million and a half of treasure has been stayed at Barcelona. The negotiation of the Venetian Ambassador is still delayed owing to the non-arrival of the Emperor's Ambassador.

Holograph.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1617, April 1, Eng. st., Madrid.—By the practice of George Cotton the merchants his Majesty's subjects trading into Andaluzia fell into great trouble. Cotton associated in Seville with one Pepper, who termed himself a captain, but is a notable rogue, and pretending to be a Papist, lived by begging and shifting from one place to another. This Pepper became a witness for Cotton, but the merchants proved to the judges that he was a common witness, a pirate, and a drunkard, and he was apprehended for false witness, and imprisoned, and will probably be removed to the galleys, with his accomplices. He wrote to Lord Roos, pretending to be able to reveal something which nearly concerned his Majesty's person. Answered his letter, but he will not declare it unless he be removed from Seville hither. Thinks he merely desired to get out of prison.

Holograph.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1617, April 1, Madrid.—“We are now hourly expecting the coming hither of Sir John Digbie, and although from thence I hear nothing at all (of late) of it, yet the ministers here tell me that it is certain. Mine opinion of that business is still the same I have written you in former letters, and when therein I know any farther particularities, you shall certainly be advertised of it. I beseech your Honour to be a means that mine entertainment may be paid me, for the want of it doth absolutely ruin me.” . . .

Holograph.

SIEGE OF RETHEL.

1617, April [1-]11.—Extract from letters from the camp at Arson, near Rethel, referring to offers made by Mons. de Nevers to Mons. de Guise.

French, 1 p.

G. EARL OF BUCKINGHAM to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 3, Lincoln.—“His Majesty, having read your advertisements of the broils in France, said that he perceived the Mous<sup>rs</sup> continue their accustomed fiddling and giddy fashion, but said no more; and now, according to your desire, I send you back both those letters and the other from Sir Henry Wotton, which you sent me before. I have moved his Majesty touching his lodging at Greenwich, whereof his Majesty is very well pleased that the Prince make use in this time of his absence.”

THOMAS EARL OF ARUNDEL to WINWOOD.

1617, April 3, Cobham Hall.—“My Lord of Canterbury and yourself having been credibly informed that Sir Francis Englefeild had the books of the Queres or the Corona Regia, or either of them, in his keeping, the accusation being upon a point of State, and that a very odious one, you could do no less than to send for him to hear his answer. And seeing that in matters of State proofs are not ever pregnant to be produced, he cannot but take it as a great favour if he be discharged upon his own bare denial; and so, with an admonition unto him to beware of meddling in matters of like nature, you may dismiss him, until you find some more apparent proof of the accusation; which accusation you were the more apt to believe by reason of a certain general hard report of his dealing with all men with whom he hath to do; and also for that the King was much incensed against him for his crafty and unconscionable dealing in detaining the Lady St. John's portion, which he ought to have paid now three years and a half since. I could wish that your Honours* would be pleased not to dismiss him until Monday in the afternoon, by which time the Chancery will have taken order for his present payment of the 500*l.*; for the speeding whereof, as also for the quicker payment of the rest of the Lady's portion, I doubt not but your Lordships* persuasions may prevail much with him.”

Seal of arms.

[SIR] ALBERTUS MORTON to [WINWOOD].

[1617,] April 3, Heidle[berg].—Lady Harrington and himself acquainted the Prince of Anhalt, before speaking to the Elector on the subject, that her Highness [Elizabeth] was by contract allowed for her smaller expenses 1,500*l.* a year, and for her apparel what beseemed her birth and quality, and which should in equity be more; but she had hitherto received only 1,000*l.* for the latter, and from both sums were abated 250*l.*, because the Prince [Elector?] gave but the value of 18*s.* to the pound; wherefore his Majesty [James I.] had given order to move his Highness to increase the sum for apparel. The Prince of Anhalt, after clearing himself in the difference about precedency, wherein he had been taxed by Sir Thomas Edmonds, said he was willing to acquaint his Highness with this demand, and doubted not to obtain a satisfying answer. The Elector however deferred his answer till after his arrival at Heilbronn. The delay somewhat discomfited her Highness, and it was feared the denial would much afflict her. Does not expect the answer till it has been digested at Louthier by the old Electrice. Rejoices in the company and comfort of this noble and wise lady, the Lady Harrington, who is fit to manage matters of greater consequence. Affairs of Germany, France, the Netherlands, Italy, and Spain.

Holograph, 4 pp. Endorsed: 3 April 1617, from Mr. Morton.

[SIR] OL[IVER] ST. JOHN, [Lord Deputy of Ireland,] to WINWOOD.

1617,† April 4, [Dub]lyn.—“This day I am advertised [by] letters from himself and from my Lord Boyle, [that] Sir Thomas Roper hath apprehended a notable pirate, one Fleaming, of the birth of this country. He took him in th' house of one Cap[t.] Bishopp, an old pardoned pirate, that lives suspiciously near Limcon and Scull Haven, ever plotting with and relieving of pirates, [not]withstanding that I have given often . . . to the governors of these part[s] . . . an eye upon him. This Fleaming . . . harm at sea the last summer, and especially . . . murdered a Du[t]ch merchant of extraordinary note near th' haven of Yoghall, and now wa[s] lurking with Bishopp, intending to gather [a] new company, and to fit himself with [an]other ship for this summer; but Sir [Thomas] Roper, having understanding of his being [in] those parts, took him very happily himself; which I write to your Lordship to the end his [Majesty] and the Lords may take notice of the ge[n]tleman's care and industry in his Majesty's service, [so] that [he] may be encouraged to continue the li[ke] hereafter. The pirate was upon the [way] hither, till my Lord President of Moun[ster] sent for him back, to proceed against him upon a special commission his Lordship already hath of trial of pirates upon our (?) late statute." Refers to "the King's ship and pinnace that are appointed for the securing of those seas;" they should be there before the middle of June.

* These titles refer apparently to the Privy Council. The letter begins “Good Sir.”

† In Vol. 11.

"For the Wexford plantation, which is the only special land work we have in hand, it is in good forwardness. Sir Josias Bodly is measuring out the 16,500 acres, and dividing it into eleven proportions, and the country well satisfied for aught I can learn; and when his Majesty's warrant and your Lordships' resolutions shall come, that work will soon be finished."

Holograph; decayed.

W. TRUMBULL to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 4, Eng. st., Bruxelles.—Sends two letters for the King from the Prince Elector Palatine of the Rhine. The Princes are resolved to make a pilgrimage in devotion to the church of Montaign, near Siehem; so if Sir John Benett be not upon the way, he need not hasten his journey. He ought however to be here about the 16th, because the Archd[ukes] will shortly after remove to Marymonte. Account of entertainments given to the Spanish ambassador, &c.

Holograph.

[SIR] RO[GER] ASTON to WINWOOD.

1617, April 5, Greenwiche.—Went to Sir John Bennet's house to deliver her Majesty's letters, but as he was gone, she desires Winwood to convey them to him.

Holograph. Seal.

FRA. COTTINGTON to WINWOOD.

1617, April 6, o.s., Madrid.—Wrote on the 1st by way of Paris; the postmaster there does him much courtesy. Affairs of Italy, Austria, and Spain. Sends a copy of this King's proposition to the Cortes. "You will there perceive that what I formerly advertised you touching the new port by Gibraltar is true, and withall what hope here is still to reduce the Hollanders to the obedience of this Crown."

Holograph, 3 pp.

SIR JO. BENET to WINWOOD.

1617, April 7, 9 a.m., Margate.—Is ready to go abroad for Flushing, but finds himself much maimed and disheartened by the want of the Queen's letters, which he desired for his countenance. If she will be pleased to write, desires to receive them before presenting himself to the Archdukes; if not, knows "no remedy but the dry plaster of patience." Sends his service to his Grace of Canterbury and Sir Tho. Edmond. Has just received Mr. Packer's letter, containing one from the Earl of Buckingham, which signifies his Majesty's pleasure that the writer's eldest son, Sir Jo. Benet, shall be sworn of the Prince's privy chamber. As his son is here with him, retains the letter till their return. Desires that Sir Robert Carey may be informed of this; also Sir James Fullerton or Mr. Tho. Murrey. The master is hastily calling them to the ship.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

SIR THO. LAKE to WINWOOD.

1617, April 8, Worsop.—Sends the King's answer to his and my Lords' letters, with the Proclamation. His Majesty would fain have the Merchant-Adventurers' business at a good point, and seems to be much moved against them, though he does not show it. If they deal not fairly with him, they will find it [out]. He wishes Winwood to discover the persons who now hide themselves, that he may see the root of that conspiracy. Sir John Denham will give a good report of "that realm." His Majesty wishes that once a week or fortnight at furthest there may be a day for Ireland [in the Council]. He marvels he does not hear from Mr. Comptroller.* "My Lord Chamberlain had yesterday some little distemper with riding bare in a very foul day." The Lady of this house has given great entertainment to my Lords and others.

Holograph. Seal of arms.

MONS. BILDERBEK to WINWOOD.

1617, April 10, Cologne.—Affairs of Italy, France, Germany, Bohemia, Hungary, Poland, and Spain.

Latin, 3 pp. Seal of arms.

C. LORD HUNTINGDON to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Principal Secretary.

[1617,]† April 10, Dunnington.—Thanks for some favour. Cannot go to London this summer. Would be pleased to see Winwood in his journey to Edinbrowghe.

Holograph. Seal, a crest.

SIR THO. LAKE to [WINWOOD].

[1617,]‡ April 11, at midnight, York.—"I have acquainted his Majesty with both the letters of my Lords of the Council. That concerning the Borders his Majesty will hearken after when he is at Newcastle. The other from my Lord Treasurer [the Earl of Suffolk] and you, concerning the Merchants—I have written to his Lordship that his Majesty liketh well that the business do stay till his return, as you advise, which my Lord will acquaint you with. For the carriages, his Majesty read your letters, but hath not yet taken time to peruse Sir John Keys' certificate, so as I think he be satisfied. If there be any more of it, his Lordship shall hear.

* Sir Thomas Edmond. succeeded Lord Wotton in this office in Nov. 1616. (State Papers.)

† In Vol. 11. Winwood was going to Scotland in July (S.P. Dom., 10 June).

‡ In Vol 11.

“The cause of this dispatch is for the letters enclosed to my Lord Hay and Sir Tho. Edmondes upon his letters to me, his Majesty alleging that they have mistaken his directions if they have left things as Mr. Comptroller writeth. He will acquaint you with the letters, and therefore I do not here repeat it.

“There is nothing else here to write to you, but that we have foul weather, this afternoon being spent in a great snow. At noon his Majesty had very great entertainment at my Lord President's,* and tomorrow is to have at the Archbishop's. We have all, God be thanked, our health.”

Holograph.

DOCQUETS.

1617, April 11.—“A privilege of making and venting of Salt after a new way within the realms of England and Ireland, granted to John Murray, esquire, and others for 21 years, with proviso that all other former grants for making of Salt shall continue in force notwithstanding this grant. And there is reserved to his Majesty a yearly rent of 4*l*. Subscr[ibed] by Mr. Attorney General.† Procur[ed] by the Earl of Buckingham.

“A letter to the Lord Treasurer to give order to the officers of the Ports for the restraint of importation of foreign Alum, according to the tenor of his Majesty's proclamations in that behalf, for the better support of the Alum works within this realm. Procur[ed] by Mr. Secretary Lake.”

“A letter to the Lord Deputy of Ireland to accept of James Clapham a surrender of his proportion of the Newtowne in Ulster, and to make a new grant thereof (without fine) to Sir Robert Newcomen and his heirs. Procur[ed] and subscr[ibed] by Sir Humfrey May.

“Per GALL.”‡

LORD RUTHIN to SECRETARY WINWOOD, at his house in St. Bartholomew's.

[1617?]‡ April 13, Greenwich.—“If tomorrow I shall have the happiness to go to London, I will not fail (God willing) to make a visit to receive your commandments. Howsoever, I beseech you let me hear by the return of this boy how you do, with your physick. I have sent a letter to Hackny, and commanded this messenger to deliver you the answer, if he receive any, which I beseech you open. Sir Tho. Tracy seems diligent in the business, and says he will not stir from London before he have dispatched it. For this and all the good that can happen to me I must give none but you thanks.”

Holograph. Seal.

* Edmund Lord Sheffield.

† Sir Henry Yelverton.

‡ Mr. Gall is mentioned in S.P.

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 13, o.s., the Hagh.—Received his Majesty's letter to the States General touching their present controversies about religion. Gave a copy to his Excellency, who wished him to obtain audience at once, so that the fruit of his Majesty's good advice might be reaped before the adverse party were too forward in their harvest. Had audience yesterday, and added some remarks before and after reading the letter. Mons. Barneveldt replied in a few respectful words. It was resolved that no copies should be published, save one only to every province. The better party are much satisfied. Affairs of Holland and France. According to his Majesty's direction, will move the States for a strict intelligence between his Ambassador and theirs at Paris, for the peace and quiet of that kingdom.

Has spoken to his Excellency touching the order given by his Majesty to certain of the Lords to consult and determine on some course to suppress the pirates who molest the trade of the Levant. The States would willingly assist, but their merchants lately made a contract with the pirates of Algier and Tunis, who however refused to keep their promise, for fear of being suspected by the Turks for Christians. It is proposed here to block up the pirates' two principal havens by lying at anchor before them, as was done before Dunkirk in the war with Spain. As to our merchants' affairs touching tare, they are desired to depute some of their number hither. Is informed by Skelton of Rotterdam that John Marshall, an English merchant at Barwick, usually transports wool and yarn from that place. Will attend to the Council's letters in favour of Mr. Boothby, a merchant of London; and will forward the King's letter to the Duke of Brunswick. If the King's letter to the States do not find its way to the press otherwise, will take order to send Winwood some printed copies.

ISAAC WAKE to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 13<sup>3</sup>, Berne.—Describes his negociations between the Duke of Savoy and the State of Berne, for a cession of territory by the former, and a supply of troops by the latter. Sends a copy of articles proposed between the Spanish ambassador and the Grisons for a perpetual league between that State and the Duke of Milan, which would be very prejudicial to Venice and to the public liberty. Has received his letters of 11 Feb., by way of Turin. "I have likewise by letters from his Majesty understood his pleasure concerning a vigilant eye which he doth require to be had over such of our nation as come into Italy, and pass further than their licences do permit, wherein I will not fail to acquit myself with all possible diligence when it shall please God to bless me with a safe return to my ordinary residence."

Holograph, 8 pp.

[DR.] ISAAC BARGRAVE to [the EARL OF SUFFOLK].

1617, April 15, Venice.—"My right Honourable Lord,—May it please your Lordship to let the important weight of the ensuing business to excuse the presumption and other faults of this my immediate writing to your Honour. My zeal to my King and country, and particular service and devotion to your Lordship, press me to give notice, that my Lord Ambassador * hath lately received a grave, serious letter from one

---

* Sir Henry Wotton.

Stanislaus, a Polish knight, then being among the Jesuits in Milan, who in general discovers that there is now on foot a plot of imminent danger to our dear King's life, and to the ruin of our whole land; of which plot he affirmeth that some other great Princes are conscious, but reserves all particulars to his own personal narration before his Majesty, and to that purpose he desired with all possible speed to be conducted into England. Upon which my Lord Ambassador, after a just deliberation, instantly despatched away his Secretary, Mr. Richard Seymor, with another stout companion, every way furnished for his fit and safe convoy. I had not time enough to hear from Milan the success of Mr. Seymor's meeting with the party there, which would have added much to the information. Yet in the mean time my own soul urged me to write thus much to your Honour, though I know my Lord Ambassador hath address letters to the same purpose, and omitted no diligence requisite in so weighty a business, but his packets sometimes fail when private letters go through. The letter was most ponderous and urgent, and the party himself, by the help of our never failing God, is like to be with you about eight days after the arrival of this letter. I use to write other Italian occurrences to your noble son Sir Thomas Howard, but in this affair I shall not dare fail to write immediately to your Lordship any further intelligence I shall receive. Till when I humbly kiss your honourable hands, desiring pardon for these rude lines, and, if it may so please your Honour, in this business to conceal the name of him that ever prays for your happiness.

"Your poor unworthy chaplain,
"ISAAC BARGRAVE."

Holograph.

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON to [WINWOOD].

1617, April  $\frac{17}{27}$ , the Hagh.—Touching the demand made by the French King to the States General for succours. 20 French companies and 20 of this nation are to be paid by the States.

Holograph, 2 pp.

[SIR] ALBERTUS MORTON to WINWOOD (Principal Secretary, Whitehall).

1617, [April 18,] "this blessed Friday," Heidleberg.—The assembly continues at Heilbronn, from whence the Elector hath made two short visitations. The Diet will end soon after Easter. Sends a letter from her Highness [Elizabeth] to Winwood, enclosing three to his Majesty, my Lord of Canterbury, and the Countess of Arundel.

Holograph.

JOHN WOODFORD to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 19, Paris.—"By my last of the 14th* of this present (whereof I sent your Honour a duplicate by the ordinary post) I did advertise your Honour of the tragical end of the late miserable Marshal d'Ancre, whose greatness and the fortune of his house though

---

* The letter of the 14th and other letters of John Woodford are preserved among the State Papers, Foreign Series, France, which do not however contain this letter of the 19th of April. The original letters of Woodford are in the same hand as the letters of Sir Thomas Edmondson, the Ambassador in France at this date. One of the State Papers contains a slight reference to the mutilation of the Marshal's remains.

they had their period together with his life, yet his greatest ignominy did but then begin: manent ipsis sua fata sepulchris. His body having by permission been interred the same night in the church of St. Germaine de l'Auxerrois in this town, the next day certain lacquays and other base people by force opened his grave, and, taking out the naked body, dragged it to the end of the new bridge, where a gibbet having been set up some two months since (as others also were in all the most eminent places of this town, they say by his commandment for the terrifying of the people, and therefore they resemble his fate to that of Hammon), he was there hanged up by the heels, a lacquay of the Baron de Heurtuvar, who was lately beheaded in this town by the said Marshal's order, being the executioner; where he had not remained above half an hour but the people, who by occasion of this spectacle were assembled in great numbers, began to mangle the body, he thinking himself happy who could get a piece of him; the trunk which remained they continued all the whole day to drag up and down the town, burning it piecemeal before the last King's statue, before his own house, before the Louvre, before the Prince of Condé's house, and before the Bastille, which they called l'amende honorable; and last of all, towards night, consumed the rest, together with the gallows whercon he had been hanged, at the end of the new bridge.

“Jam stridunt ignes, jam follibus atque caminis
Ardet adoratum populo caput, et crepat ingens
Aneræus; deinde ex facie nostro orbe secundâ
Fiant urceoli pelves, sartago, patellæ.

“At the Council which was held presently after the Marshal d'Ancre's death, it was deliberated whether they should make his process, being dead, and advertise the governors of the provinces of that which had been done by the King's letters patents; and some of the presidents of this Parliament were sent for to deliver their advice upon those two points; who were of opinion that neither of them was fitting, for that the one could not be done without interesting (sic) the honour of some, which was not to be touched, and that his birth and quality was not so eminent as might require the other. Whereupon they have contented themselves to send the King's letters de cachet only into the provinces, whereof your Honour shall herewith receive a copy.*

“At the same Council it was also resolved that order should be sent to Mons. Schonberg to stay the entry of his foreign levies into the kingdom, and that there should be a suspension of arms as well at the siege of Soissons as in all other places. But those which have the charge of the armies which are a-foot have no commandment to licence them as yet, whereof two reasons are given—the one, to the end the affairs may first be settled, and that in the mean time money may be found for the payment of them, and so they may be dismissed, beginning with the Lieg[e]ois; the other, for that it is required that the Princes should first dismiss the troops which they have retained, both in the places they hold, exceeding the ordinary garnisons, and elsewhere; for which reason Mons. de Preaux, the councillor of State, and one other Mons. de Preaux, who was sometimes (sic) soubs-gouverneur to the King under Mons. de Souvray, have been sent to deal with them therein; and there have been already sent 10,000 crowns to Mons. de Mayenne for the payment of his companies.

“The next day after the Marshal's death, the Seals were restored with much honour to the President du Vair, who had of late retired himself to the Bernardins in this town. Yet nevertheless the old Chancellor de Sillery hath been revoked, and taketh his place in the Council; and his son, Mons. de Puisieux, is here also, with Mons. de Villeroy, to be restored to his former function of Secretary of State; but Mons. de Villeroy is to have the dispatch of the most important affairs, as heretofore. It is said that Mons. de Vitry hath been a special means to procure the rappel of the Chancellor and his son, and that he hath been induced thereunto for the gratifying of his cousin-german the Marshal de la Chastre, who married a sister of Mons. de Puisieux' wife. The Comptroller of the finances, which was Barbin's charge, is conferred upon Mons. de Maupeon.

* Not found.

"Mons. de Luines, who is now the Saint whom this Court doth chiefly adore, hath the place of first gentleman of the King's Chamber, which belonged to the Marshal d'Ancre, together with the lieutenancy of the government of Normandy, and the government of Pont de l'Arche. An exempt of the guards hath been sent to take possession of Killebœuf for the King, as also of the town and castle of Caen, whereof the government is bestowed upon the Chevalier de Vendosme, together with the abbey of Marmoutier, which belonged to the Marshal d'Ancre's brother, whose archbishopric of Tours is also given to the Count of Moret, another of the King's base brothers. Mons. de Vitry is made Marshal of France, and Mons. du Hallier is captain of the King's guard in his stead; and their brother-in-law Mons. de Persan is made captain of the Bastille.

"Mons. Mangot was kept under guard in Mons. de Vitry's chamber in the Louvre till the evening after the Marshal d'Ancre was killed, at which time he was released; and the Mar[écha]lle d'Ancre was removed out of the Queen Mother's lodgings to the same chamber in the Louvre where the Prince of Condé was detained before his removal to the Bastille, whither she hath been since also carried, but in the night, to free her from the rage of the people. Barbin is committed to the Fourlevesque, and it is expected that his process shall be shortly made, together with one Arqui, who was escuier to the Marshal d'Ancre, and was employed by him for the assassinating of Mons. de Ruberpre.

"The Queen Mother is yet kept under strait guards in her lodging in the Louvre, but it is expected that she shall be shortly sent either to the Castle of Amboise or else to Moulins, which was the residence of Louise, Queen Dowager to Henry the Third, it being now in deliberation how she shall be disposed of; in the mean time all her principal servants, saving only some few officers, Madame de Guercheville, and some women, have been dismissed. She hath again sent to the King to desire him to permit her to come and speak with him, but she hath been delayed as before. The Nuntio, the Spanish Ambassador, the Princess of Conti, the Duchess Dowager of Guise, the Jesuits, and other disciples do show for several respects to commiserate the Queen Mother's restraint, and the depression of her authority. But the joy which hath been conceived for the Marshal d'Ancre's death hath been generally exceeding great, the people having made demonstration thereof by ringing of bells and making of bone-fires throughout the whole town.

"The Ambassadors of Venice on Wednesday last had a solemn audience of the King, wherein they did congratulate with him for having taken into his own hands the managing of his affairs, without taking any further knowledge of the late accident; wherein they said that their hope was he would imitate the King his father, who was so good a friend and benefactor to their commonwealth; giving him assurance of their sincere friendship and serviceable affection in all occasions.

“The young Princess of Condé, as soon as she heard of the Marshal d’Ancre’s death, repaired hither from Vallery to be a suitor to the King for her husband’s release out of the Bastille, but she hath been required to retire herself some time to her house of Sainct-Maur. The Dukes of Mayenne and Vendosme have sent several gentlemen hither to make their submissions to the King, and to congratulate with him for his deliverance from the servitude wherein he lived under the tyranny of the Marshal d’Ancre; who have been graciously received by him. But the new old ministers do show to be willing to delay both the enlargement of the Prince of Condé (though he hath now more liberty in the prison than he had before), and the repair of the Princes (sic) to the Court, till the affairs, and particularly their own authority, shall be better settled.

“The Duke of Longueville is already come hither from Amiens, and hath been received exceeding favourably by the King. He was met near to St. Denis by the Count of Soissons, his présuntif brother-in-law, well accompanied, and at his entrance into the town was presented with a fair horse from the King for his own monture, in respect he came in post; and now it is expected that shortly his marriage with Mademoiselle de Soissons shall be consummated.

“The Marshal de Themines arrived here the same day the Marshal d’Ancre was killed, being to be employed, as I advertised your Honour by my last, into Perigort and these (sic) parts against the Duchess of Bouillon’s levies; but he hath newly received a commandment to return again to the Army, and upon his arrival there it is expected that the Duke of Guise should repair hither.”

On gilt-edged paper. Endorsed: Copy of Mr. Woodford’s letter.

T. EARL OF ARUNDEL TO WINWOOD.

1617, April, 23, Sunday, Hexam.—“I thank you for the kind offer which you made me, of the business in [Ir]eland, and have looked upon it, and doubt, seeing it concerns so many men, and many of them English and Scottish, which are poor, how it may be raised, without much clamour; and therefore I pray do me the favour to inform me what the certainty of the benefit will be, and what the way of setting it on foot, to effect which you say shall be without trouble or charge. I pray let me know whether I may ask Sir Humphrey Maye’s advice in it, being a man practice (sic) in those businesses, and means to see Ireland this summer; for without your leave I will acquaint nobody with it. I have written to my wife what I hear of her mother, which I doubt not but you have at London more fresh from thence. I pray use my Lord of Shrewsbury kindly, and let him know, that with kindness he may get most of us, and the ot[he]r way be cosened by every one he meets, and lose his ends when he hath done.”

[P.S.] “I pray let me be remembered in all kindness to your good Lady, my cousin . . . ere.”

Holograph; decayed. Seal—a crest with the motto of the Garter.

THE TOWN OF OUDEWATER.

1617, [April 23–] May 3.—The burgomasters, magistrates and common council of Oudewater, having heard the request of the commons of that town, grant and agree that John Lydius, minister, with his church-council and hearers, shall first administer the communion, and after him

Levenius de Rade, minister, with his church-council and hearers, shall do the like, and so hereafter by turns; as also christening by turns, &c. Many names at the end.

Translation, 2 pp.

[CAPTAIN] JOHN COOK to SIR DUDLEY CARLETON.

1617, [April 23–] May 3, n.s., Wednesday night, Oudwater.—Gives account of religious disturbances there. The magistrates signed the enclosed paper (see above) under compulsion, in the state-house, into the chamber of which the burghers had forced their way, “every man with his hand upon his knife in his pocket.” One of the magistrates afterwards asked the writer’s Lieutenant whether he would have let them be murdered, and was told that the Captain (the writer) had given order to the Lieutenant that he should meddle with no party without order from his Excellency.

Seal.

G. EARL OF BUCKINGHAM to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 25, the Court at Hexam.—“I now send you his Majesty’s letter written with his own hand to the French King, with a copy both for yourself and Sir Tho. Edmondes to see, whereby you will perceive that his Majesty hath been careful to contain himself in as general terms as he could until he may understand from thence more particularly the state of things, and how they are like to go; which is all I have now to write, but that his Majesty continueth in good health.”

JOHN WOODFORD to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 25, Paris.—French affairs: the departure of the Queen-Mother from the Court, the Duke of Bouillon, &c.

5 pp. Endorsed: The copy of Mr. Woodford’s letter.*

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON to [WINWOOD].

1617, April 27, o.s., [the] Hagh.—Forwards a packet from the Duke of Bouillon, containing letters to the King. Affairs of France, the Netherlands, Venice, Germany, Sweden, and Poland.

4 pp.

JA. WINTON (JAMES MONTAGU, BISHOP OF WINCHESTER) to WINWOOD.

1617, April 28, Hexam.—“I have moved his Majesty for this Deanery of Bristoue, which his Majesty I think will be pleased to bestow upon Mr. D. Chetwin when it falls; but the King asking me whether the Dean were dead, I told his Majesty I heard he was sick and like to die. The King bid (sic) me tell him of it when he was dead; and therefore, if it please you to signify when he dieth, I think there will be no doubt of the Deanery for D. Chetwin. I know the man well; he is very learned, and well worthy of the place.

“If your Honour ask what he [the King?] do and what he have been doing, I can make no other answer but that he have talked stoutly of horses and dogs, and it continueth the farther north the more cracking of those cattle. If I should certify of anything else I must invent it, for it is in truth more than I hear. This late action upon the Marquesse d'Ancre hath afforded a little other discourse, but it is nothing amongst the Northern people.

---

* The original is among the State Papers.

"The best news is, his Majesty and all his company have passed thus far with good felicity and success, and the King is exceedingly well pleased with the air of these parts, and laments his long habitation at London, which hath shortened his life, he sayeth, many years; which makes me suspect he shall have a more Royston life than ever he had."

Holograph. Seal of arms.

THOMAS ROSSITER TO SIR DUDLEY CARLETON.

1617, May 1, St. Bartholomew's.—Has received three letters from Carleton, the last enclosing letters from the Duke of Bouillon to the King, written before the execution of the Marshal d'Ancre, and asking for assistance of men and money, whereof now he has no need. Refers to the affairs of France at length. "No action hath happened amongst us which so lively hath discovered the passionate affections of our hearts; for all our parasites and pensioners of Spain have lost all patience, and, which is worse, all modesty and moderation, condemning this action as most impious and inhuman, so bloody and tyrannical. . . . But what opinion soever private particular men, who aim at nothing else but at the advancement of their own fortunes, have of this action, his Majesty is pleased to approve of it, which doth appear not only by the outward demonstration of his exceeding joy and contentment when first he received the news thereof, but also by letters which with his own hand he hath written to the French King, whereof with these you shall receive a copy. Besides Mr. Comptroller, who hath charge in all diligence to return into France, hath express order to congratulate with the Marshal de Vitry, for so now he is, that by his hands the King his master was delivered out of captivity and mis hors du page."

Cannot understand how Mons. Malré, of Zealand, has obtained, as alleged, a copy of Mr. Comptroller's instructions. If Malré be at the Hague, desires complaint may be made to him of his uncourteous treatment of Sir John Benet in his passage from Middlebrough to Antwerp, though his Majesty has often showed his affection to the province of Zealand.

"I understand that certain of Arminius' books, translated into English, are printed at Hasselt, a town, I think, not far from Utrecht. I pray you inform yourself of the truth thereof, and, if you find it true, prevent the transport of them into England."

Copy, 5 pp. The title and date are endorsed.

[LORD] JAMES HAY "TO HER HIGHNESS."

1617, May 1, London.—"May it please your Grace,—I cannot go out of this kingdom, whereunto your Highness hath so near a title, without the honour of kissing your fairest hands, and making humble offer of my service in that whither I am now taking my journey, where I should esteem it my greatest happiness to meet your commandments, and will be ever most obedient to them as "Your Highness' most devoted "and most humble servant,

"JAMES HAY."

Addressed: To her Highness. Holograph.

MONS. DESMARETZ to KING [JAMES I.]

1617, May 2, London.—“Sire, —V<sup>re</sup> Ma<sup>te</sup> me pardonnera, s’il luy plaist, si je prans la hardiesse de luy faire ce mot, qui n’est, Sire, que pour luy donner conte particulier, suyuant le commandement que j’ay receu du Roy mon maistre, de ce qui c’est (sic) passé a Paris le 24<sup>e</sup> du moys passé, sur le faict du Mar<sup>al</sup> d’Ancre; ce que j’ay estimé, Sire, ne pouvoir mieux représenter a v<sup>re</sup> Ma<sup>te</sup> qu’en luy envoyant copie de la lettre que je receus hier au soir sur ce sujet du Roy mon souuerain, dont je fais d’autant plus volontiers part a v<sup>re</sup> Ma<sup>te</sup>, que je scay, qu’afectionnant la France & la personne du Roy, comme j’ay tousiours recogneu qu’elle faict, v<sup>re</sup> Ma<sup>te</sup> n’aura poinct eu desagréable la nouvelle de l’accident suruenu aud’ Mar<sup>al</sup> d’Ancre, tant pour voir le Roy mon maistre, v<sup>re</sup> amy, ancien allié & confédéré, maintenant deliuré d’une telle & si mauuaise marchandise, afranchi d’vne si infame & insupportable seruitude, que parce qu’il a moustré en ceste action la generosité de courage du feu Roy son pere, & tesmoigné que Dieu l’a doué d’esprit & jugement, & mis du sang aux ongles, pour ne plus souffrir estre bufflé, & mené par le nez, comme ceux qui abusant de son aage & trop grande facilité auoient entrepris insolablement depuis quelques années en ça, au grand regret de tous ses bons & fidelz sugetz, peril éminent de son estat, & total aneantissement de son autorité Royale & souueraine. Mais le ver qui rongeoit insensiblement la racine de ceste belle & excellante tige de nos Lys estant escrasé, & pour vu remede tres singulier appliqué sur le mal qu’il auoit causé, faict esperer, Sire, aux bons françoys que ceste precieuse plante se rauiuera plus que jamais, & qu’elle ne laissera de produire en son tans d’aussy belles & agreables fleurs, que nous en ayons encor veu sur aucun des diademes de nos Roys. Car si autrefois, Sire, Hercules fut tant renommé pour auoir surmonté quelques monstres ores qu’il fust en force & aage parfait, & que par telz exploits il fust nombré entre les Dieux, que sera ce, Sire, de n<sup>re</sup> jeune Hercules francoys, qui en l’aage de quinze ans, par sa prudence & vertu, a surmonté les plus horribles monstres qui se rencontrerent jamais entre les hommes? ne deuous nous pas tout au moins nous promettre paix & repos durant son regne, acroissement d’heur & prospérité sous son septre, et ses amys & alliéés assistance & suport ou ilz en auront besoing; bref, de voir renaistre en France le siecle dor, & le regne de Saturne? Fasse donc le tout puissant multiplier ses jours, prosperer ses bonnes & saintes intantions, moissonner en liesse les fruitz atandus de sa victoire, & me donne le moyen, Sire, de tesmoingner a v<sup>re</sup> Ma<sup>te</sup> (qu’apres le service que je luy dois) je ne desire rien plus que de trouuer l’occasion oportune de faire cognoistre a v<sup>re</sup> Ma<sup>te</sup> que je suis, Sire,” &c.

Addressed: Au Roy. Seal of arms.

LORD RUTHIN to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Principal Secretary.

[1617?]* May 6.—“Tomorrow the Queen hath a purpose to keep her chamber, which makes me hope to get leave to come with my sister this evening to Arundell House, where we should be both infinite glad to meet you. If it please you to bring Mr. Controller [Sir Thomas Edmondès] with you, I can give him account of the service he employed me in yesternight.”

[P.S.] “My sister desires that neither of you would engage yourselves this night at supper.”

Holograph. Seal.

THOMAS WARREN, Curate of Purbright, Surrey.

1617, July 2.—An order enjoined by the Archbishop of Canterbury and others, his Majesty's Commissioners Ecclesiastical, to the said Curate.

As he stands by his own confession convicted of sundry crimes and offences, especially of neglecting to perform the orders, rites, and ceremonies of the Church of England—as in reading parcels of Scripture of his own choice, preaching erroneous doctrine, viz., that it is superstition to bow the knee at the name of Jesus, administering the communion to persons sitting, not using the cross in baptism, not wearing the surplice, not catechising the youth, leaving his church during divine service to search alehouses, refusing to bury dead corpses brought into the church, &c. ; he shall on Sunday, 24 August, pronounce these words following in the middle alley of the church before the congregation.

Then follows the form of the confession, which he had subscribed before Dr. Ridley, chancellor to the Bishop of Winchester, and in which he promises henceforth to conform to the said rites.

This confession is to be certified by the churchwardens and six others of the parish to the Commissioners at their first session in Michaelmas term at Lambeth.

3 pp. Endorsed: (1) Mr. Warren's submission to his parishioners. (2) Mr. Warren's invention (sic) for his submission to his parish.

KING JAMES I. to the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY, SIR FRANCIS BACON, Keeper of the Great Seal, SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Principal Secretary, and SIR FULK GREVILL, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

1617, July 16, palace of Fawkland, under the Signet.—“Whereas we understand that the Lady Elizabeth, wife of Sir Edward Coke, knight, the Lady Withipole, wife of Sir Edmond Withipole, knight, and other persons yet unknown, have by unlawful confederacy between themselves taken and carried away to places unknown Francis (sic), daughter of the said Sir Edward, under the age of sixteen years, without the privity or knowledge of the said Sir Edward, in great contempt of our laws in that case made and provided, to the great grief of the said Sir Edward, and to the perilous and pernicious example of others: We therefore, to meet with crimes and offences of this nature, lest by sufferance they should grow common, do require and by these presents authorise you, or any three of you, with all speed to call before you the said Lady Elizabeth and the said Lady Withipole, and such other persons as Sir Edward Coke shall name unto you, and them straightly and discreetly to examine, and by all good ways and means to find out who were of the confederacy with the said Lady Elizabeth and the Lady Withipole for the conveyance away of the said Francis, and in our name straightly to require and command the said Lady Elizabeth and Lady Withipole, and such others as you or any three of you shall think fit, to restore the said Francis to the possession and government of the said Sir Edward, as by our laws she ought (sic), upon pain to incur our indignation and the penalty of our laws; and further to command and require them and every of them in our name not to take or entice away the said Francis from the possession of the said Sir Edward, or of such as he shall appoint to have the custody of her, upon pain of incurring our indignation and high displeasure and the penalty of our laws. And further we will and require you or any three of you, that if the said Lady Elizabeth and Lady Withipole shall not deliver or cause to be delivered the said Francis to her said father according to our pleasure herein signified, that then you do commit each of them to some Alderman's or Citizen's house, there to be kept under safe custody until they shall deliver the said Francis to her father as aforesaid, and until our further pleasure be known; and further to commit all others to safe custody that upon due examination shall be found to be party privy, procuring, knowing, or consenting of or to the conveying away of the said Francis, until our further pleasure shall be known in that behalf. And lastly that you, or any three of you, do in our name charge and require the said Lady Elizabeth and Lady Withipole, and such other as you shall think fit, that they do not suffer the said Francis to be contracted to any person or persons without the assent of the said Sir Edward; authorising you, or any three of you, hereby to do all and every lawful act and acts, thing and things whatsoever which shall be necessary or requisite for the due execution of the premises according to our royal pleasure herein signified. And this shall be a sufficient warrant and discharge to you and every of you in this behalf."

Signed at the top. Signet.

KING JAMES I. to WINWOOD.

1617, July 16, palace of Fawkland, under the Signet.—“Whereas we understand that the match offered by Sir Edward Coke between Sir John Villiers and Francis (sic), daughter to the said Sir Edward Coke, is much opposed by his wife, who notwithstanding seemed formerly well affected to the same: Our pleasure is that you speak with her, and let her know how ill we take her opposition to that which we so well liked, and she herself never seemed to dislike till now that the business draweth to a conclusion; and the rather because we have heretofore given her many testimonies of our favours in matters of difference between her husband and her; and if you cannot, in treating with her, draw her to give her consent and furtherance to the match, that you let her know that from henceforth we will leave her to the course of law, and suffer her husband to take such order with his children and estate as in ordinary course of justice he may, without taking any consideration of her therein.”

Signed at the top.

[THOMAS ROSSITER]* to ——— (your Lordship).

1617, July 29, St. Bartholomew's.—Has received information from Mr. Cottington at Madrid that the Emperor's Ambassador there has proposed a marriage between the son of Ferdinando of Gratz, lately elected King of Bohemia, and the Infanta Donna Maria, daughter to the King of Spain. Offers remarks on the parties. “Ferdinando is the most violent Papist, and the greatest persecutor of our religion. That which I hold myself bound in my duty to his Majesty's service to represent unto your Lordship is this—whether it be not considerable for his Majesty's honour that this point were first cleared, whether this match [is] now treated before Sir John Digby advance farther in his journey. For what more scornful indignity can fall upon the honour of his Majesty than to send a formal and solemn ambassage, whereof the whole world doth take notice, if that daughter for whom the Ambasador is to treat otherwise is either bestowed by contract, or destined by resolution?"

* In the same hand as the first letter of 1 May 1617.

In Lorraine there is a misunderstanding between the Duke's brother Mons. de Vaudemont and the nobility of that country. The Duke moved a marriage between the Count of Boulay and Monsieur's daughter, which Monsieur rejected as a disparagement, and the Duke protested he would not bestow his daughter on Monsieur's son. Thereupon the King of Spain proposed his second son for the Duke's daughter, with the Low Countries under the Archduke; the Duke of Guise offered his son, 3 years old, and there is talk of the French King's brother. Cannot advise that his Majesty should himself offer our Prince [of Wales], but the Elector Palatine might secretly sound the Duke's disposition. The objections to this match are, that the house of Lorraine has ever made a particular dependence on the See of Rome, and that the nobility of the country do not desire to live under the government of a province (sic), and advocate the marriage with Vaudemont's son. Sends a letter from Mr. Comptroller; the books mentioned therein are pamphlets not worthy the portage.

MONS. DE PLESSEN TO WINWOOD.

1617, Sept. 28.—Recommends the bearer, named Richard Wallis, son of the minister of Dartfordt, who has served the writer  $4\frac{1}{2}$  years. Desired to place him with his Highness [the Elector Palatine], but he has resolved not to receive in future pages of more than 10 or 12 years. Wallis speaks very good German, and understands French somewhat; and for fear he should lose his mother tongue, the writer has advised him to make a voyage to England.

French. Seal.

R. LORD LISLE TO WINWOOD.

1617, Oct. 3, Barnard's Castle.—This gentleman Mr. Ant[hony] Mathew desires him to remind Winwood of a packet which the latter promised to carry (sic) into Holland.

Holograph. Portion of seal.

DOCQUETS.

1617, Oct. 6.—A warrant to the Exchequer to treat with such persons as have any lands in a new enclosed park within Pewsham Forest, and pay them for the same; and also to pay to Robert Treswell, esquire, Surveyor General on this side Trent, for impaling the park and setting up two lodges. By order from Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.

A warrant to the Exchequer to pay to Wm. Becher, esquire, his Majesty's agent with the French King, 40s. a day from Michaelmas last, allowing him three months' pay in advance; with posting charges, sending of letters, &c. By order of Mr. Secretary Winwood.

LEVYNUS MUNCK.

SIR DUDLEY CARLETON TO WINWOOD.

1617, Oct. 17, Hagh.—Recommends the bearer, Lieut. Turner, for the company vacant by the death of Sir Bernard Dewhurst, if he can obtain his Colonel's favour. Has written to Sir Edward Cecill that he can nominate no one who will be more acceptable to the States and his Excellency.

Holograph. Seal—a crest.

E. EARL OF WORCESTER to WINWOOD.

1617, Oct. 19, Worcester House.—“Whereas upon a petition exhibited to his Majesty by my Lord Arundel, there was a letter written by Sir Thomas Lake unto my Lord Keeper, for the stay of a suit depending in the Chancery between my Lord Arundel and his son; and since upon better information it hath pleased the King that the suit shall go on, and to that purpose [he] hath commanded you to signify his Majesty's pleasure unto my Lord Keeper: I pray you that you will be pleased to write a letter unto his Lordship for a fair proceeding in that cause, with all convenient expedition.”

Seal of arms.

Petition of THOMAS LEDSAM and THOMAS WILLIAMS to SECRETARY WINWOOD.

[c. 1617?]*—They are prisoners in the Marshalseys (sic) and in the Gatehouse by procurement of the patentees of gold-wire-drawing, Richard Dike and Matthias Fowle, merchants, who about five years since obtained a patent † from his Majesty for making gold and silver thread after the manner of Venice, which was, “to forge, beat, and flat with hammers, and to cut with shears, and then to spin the same upon silk,” and which they could not bring to perfection, whereupon they surrendered that patent, “and obtained a new, with an addition for the drawing of gold and silver wire, and milling of it after the manner of England and France, suggesting it to be a new [inve]ntion,” whereas it is an old trade, to which petitioners were apprenticed, having been servants to gold-wire-drawers in London. Desire to be heard before the Council Board, and in the mean time to be released on bail.

PETITION OF RICHARD SMOOTE to SECRETARY WINWOOD.

[1617.]*—“Having three causes in the Chancery near ready to be heard and determined, which concerns (sic) his whole estate and hopeful means wherewith to pay his creditors, and not being able to manage the same with good counsel, as the weightiness of his cause doth require: his humble suit is, that your Honour, out of your wonted commiseration and regard of the distressed, and specially of your poor petitioner, would be honourably pleased to acquaint the Right Honourable the Lord Keeper [Sir Francis Bacon] and Master of the Rolls [Sir Julius Cæsar] with the wrongs known by your Honour to have been done him, and of the ill conditions of Jackson, the only instrument of your poor petitioner's overthrow and undoing.”

MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS.

[Before 1617.]*—1. A few Latin verses, supposed to be “upon my Lord Salisbury.”

2. A few Latin verses on Queen Isabella de' Medici, and on the Pope, with English translations.

3. Latin verses addressed by Dominicus Baudius to Johannes Utenbogardus. 12 pp.

* In Vol. 11.

† This is referred to in the Calendar of State Papers under 27 Sept. 1604, but the correct date is 1614. The patentees also had a special licence dated 10 Jan. 1616.

4. "Princes and noblemen strangers that were subjects and had the Order of the Garter," from Ric. II. to Eliz. 10 names.

5. "De modo judicandi de ejus* scriptis." A paper so headed, dealing with points of doctrine. Latin, 3 pp.

6. Latin verses addressed to Sir Ralph Winhoode (sic) by William Sergeant. 10 lines.

7. Latin "verses concerning the King of Denmark, the States, and the Hanse Towns." 12 lines.

A LETTER ON THE SPANISH MATCH, to LORD ———.

[1622, Dec.]—"Right Honourable,—I know that opinions of the Spanish Match have been in England lately very ambiguous because of the Emp[eror's] proceeding in the Palatinate; therefore this shall serve to convince the errors of popular reports, and acquaint you with the realtie [reality] of the proceedings (sic) thereof.

"It's true that upon the taking of Hidelbergh, our Lo[rd] Embass[ador] here went to the K[ing], and spake boldly to him of the perfidious and ingrateful dealings of the Emp[eror] towards the K[ing] of England in taking his daughter's jointure contrary to promise. The K[ing] of Spain seemed to stomach and be much incensed thereat, and thereupon sent present dispatches by Mr. Gresly to the Emp[eror] to suspend his arms, and proceed no further in the conquest of the Palatinate; so that, if these dispatches had come but two days sooner, Meinlem had not been taken.

"A little after this Mr. End. Porter came hither with peremptory messa[ge] to draw an absolute answer from the K[ing] of Spain touching the Palatinate, and tell him that delays could be admitted no longer; and therefore if there were not a present surrendry made, England must take (sic) provision of arms.

"The K[ing] of Spain, with many serious protestations, replied that unless the Emp[eror] would condescend to present composition, he would not only withdraw his army from him, but profess himself his enemy [in] this quarrel; so that we here, howsoever men's belief are (sic) in England, are persuaded that the Spay[niard] deal[s] with us in integrity and uprightness, and that he will comply with all his promises bonâ fide.

"And for the Match, we hold here all things to be already consummated; capitulations on both sides ratified; the Pope's dispensation granted, for which one Mr. Gage goeth hence shortly to Rome, and passeth by the Dukes of Florence and Parma's Courts, with messages from our King; and opinions thereof are here so strong that it is in every mouth as an unquestionable truth. In my last I sent the Capitulations which were to be agreed upon touching Church matters; but for the Articles of Confederacy, and defensive and offensive leagues which shall grow of this Match, matters are so involved in clouds of secrecy, as it is fitting, that we can discern nothing. One thing I heard darkly muttered, that the King of England should keep the passage to Dunkerk free from the Hollander, that the Spaniard may convey his forces that way securely.

"To those Capitulations I sent there were annexed the Pope's replies, and the K[ing] of Spain seeks no such additions, but merely the King's own propositions. And herein the K[ing] of Spain deals nobly and fairly with the King of England; for the performance of all articles whatsoever he seeks no other caution or security than the King's sole word, and his son's; he seeks no public toleration, but a connivency; he seeks not that the children should remain under the tittle (sic) of women, but till seven years of age; he seeks not that all her [the Infanta's] servants should be necessarily Catholics, but that Protestants may be as well capable of her service as Catholics; he seeks not that her churchmen should live exempt from the temporal laws of the land in criminal matters; nor doth he press the King of England beyond the compass of his own free will.

* No name. This is next to a paper relating to Vorstius.

"He gives two millions and a half with her, the greatest dowry of money that ever was given with Princess; but I fear the moiety thereof must go to satisfy the Bavarian; so that I am persuaded, if it were generally known in Eng[land] how fairly and nobly the K[ing] of Spain proceeds in this treaty, and how reasonable he is in his demands, those who are now averse to the Spa[nish] Match would have their affections quite altered and inclined for it.

"By Michael next my Lord of Bristoll makes accompt to bring her over, and because he himself cannot go to the King's Chapel, the Co[unt] of Olivares [it] is said shall be married to her; but this report I rec[eive] upon trust. The Duke of Medina Sedonia, the richest grand (sic) of Spain, cometh shortly to Eng[land] Embass[ador] extraordinary.

"The K[ing] of Spain hath had ill success against the Holl[anders] this year by sea, for there passed three several fleets of them through the Straits' mouth, richly laden with Eastern commodities, in despite of his great armado (sic) of galleons, which were there of purpose to stop them, under the command of Don Juan Faxardo. Don Faderique de Toledo, who is gone to waft the West India fleet homeward, hath done likewise little good; and the Marquess of Sante Cruse is lately returned from the Levant with his fleet of galleys, without any performance at all.

"There is no news yet of the West India fleet. Some of the merchants' ships are come, but very ill handled; there went out 26, whereof 5 are known to have perished; [there c]ome 8 (?); the rest remain behind, but it is feared they are likewise perished. This makes many hearts to quake with a cold palsy of fear, for if this year's fleet should miscarry, it is incredible to what shifts the King of Spain should be driven to (sic), his credit, as a dark rumour runs, being already called to question in the Bank of Genoa.

"Some jealousies begin to grow 'twixt the K[ing] of Spa[in] and France about Valtoline; and they talk of a league 'twixt the French and the Venetian[s] and the ingrateful Savoyard, to chase the Spaniard out of the Va[l]toline; and that this young fiery spirit of France will aspire to be King of the Romans.

"Howsoever, I think it probable that the sudden making of peace with the Protestants portend[s] some project of his; he is already pretty well fleshed in blood, and, it seems, thirsts after more. I hear some bragadocia (sic) French gent[lemen] give it out in this Court, that had it not been for the King of Eng[land], who labours by treaty to reconcile their differences, the Palatine had been restored to his country by French arms by this time.

"A great Ambass[ador] from Pouland is expected here shortly; it is supposed he comes upon a wooing suit for the Infanta. There is not now that correspondency 'twixt my Lord of Bristoll and the Emp[eror's] Ambass[ador] extraordinary, which was very great at first. I heard my Lord say that at his being in Vienna the Emp[eror] did acknowledge that he was as deeply engaged to the King of Eng[land] as to any prince of Christendom, for being only a spectator of their (sic) wars of his son-in-law's, for if he had put himself in arms, he had not recovered his Crown of Bohemia. Hereupon my Lord, transported with passion, taxed him bitterly of ingratitude. His Embass[ador] propounded lately to the K[ing] of Spain that if matters should not fall even between him and the King of Eng[land], that his son might be preferred next. The K[ing] replied that the King of Eng[land] was too wise a prince to have reversions taken over his head; therefore desired him to cease his motion further.

"The small pox hath run through all the gent[lemen], women, and maids in my Lo[rd's] house, whereof two died. This hath made matters to lie a little at a stand, so that my Lo[rd] Ambass[ador] durst not adventure to go to have audience at Court.

Mr. Porter is to pass hence shortly with good and gladsome tidings, and this bearer is the forerunner of good news to come; so with my due observance to your Lordship, &c."

[P.S.] "This letter was to be sent by an extraordinary a sennight since, who, having rec[eived] all his dispatches, was suddenly stayed; therefore the bearer hereof is Mr. Porter himself, who parteth with certainty of those affairs, which have been so long in doubt; for the K[ing] of Spain hath endeavoured to give all possible content to the King of Eng[land] in all things. The Count de Olivers (sic) hath sent two of the best horses in the K[ing's] stable for a present to my Lo[rd] Marquess; there is advice come that th[c] . . . . pl . . . . (?) are come to the Terseras."

No signature or address.

[GEORGE ABBOT] ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY to KING [JAMES I.]*

[1623, † Aug. 8? ]—Has been long silent, but now wishes to discharge his conscience. The King has propounded a toleration of religion. Beseeches him to consider the consequences, lest he set up "that most damnable doctrine of the Church of Rome," against whose heresies he (the King) has often disputed and learnedly written. He has sent the Prince into Spain without the consent of his Council, or the approbation of the people. Believes the persons who drew the Prince into that dangerous action will not pass unpunished. The King endeavours to set up this toleration by his proclamation, but it cannot be done without a Parliament, unless the King intends to overthrow the laws of the land; &c.

No signature. Endorsed: A copy of a letter to his Majesty supposed to be from the Archbishop of Canterbury. Also endorsed by Sawyer: Printed in Arthur Wilson's Hist. of K. James.

DR. WILLIAM KINGSLEY.

1627 [-8], Jan. †—Articles objected by his Majesty's Commissioners for Causes Ecclesiastical against William Kingsley, D.D., Archdeacon of Canterbury. Whereas in Mich. term last the Bishops of London and Duresme and three other Bishops were under the Great Seal appointed Commissioners for the execution of all jurisdiction belonging to the now Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; and whereas they granted to Thomas Warren, clerk, a fiat for his institution to the Rectory of St. Peter's in Sandwich, directed to Sir Thomas Ridley, Vicar General to the Archbishop, who gave a mandate to the said Archdeacon for his induction;

* This letter was "a counterfeit." There are several other copies among the State Papers.

† In Vol. 11.

nevertheless Kingsley refuses to induct Warren, pretending that he knew of no such Commissioners, and that he had the "Duke's"* letter to stay proceedings.

HENRY WINWOOD.

1638, † Sept. — Dec. — Law proceedings at Padua touching the will of "Henrico Vim Vuod," an Englishman dwelling there, with a copy of the will. He mentions his brother Frederick Winwood, his cousin Haughfing (?), and Henry Humberston, the last of whom is to have his goods out of England, whether in Padua or in France, and to be executor. "Giorgio Reiter, bedello della nazione Inglese," is also mentioned.

Latin and Italian, in a bad hand; 10 pp. Endorsed: Mr. George Haughfen (?). Also endorsed by Sawyer: 10 Oct. 1618 (sic).

---

* Of Buckingham.

† At the end of Vol. 10.

II.—THE MONTAGU PAPERS.

---

THE general correspondence and papers of the Montagu family are comprised in nine volumes, and there are certain special collections which will be dealt with separately hereafter. These letters were arranged, interleaved, bound, and carefully annotated about the beginning of the present century, the annotations giving useful biographical particulars. In the first two volumes, entitled "Original Letters," they are mounted on large paper, having been selected from the rest because they were considered to be the most interesting, or for the sake of the autographs; and numerous engraved portraits of the writers are inserted.

Many Royal and Council letters occur in this collection, especially in the first and last volumes, in addition to those of statesmen, judges, bishops, and other famous personages of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. The back leaves of most of them have been cut off, and thus it happens that the addresses are often wanting, but in some cases these have been cut out and preserved. The nine volumes consist of—

(1.) "ORIGINAL LETTERS, Vol. I. 1483-1688." The Royal, Council, and other important letters in this volume have been extracted, and the extracts will appear at the end of this preliminary description. Besides these, there are many letters and papers in the volume which do not seem to require detailed notices; a list of them is here given.

John Brudenell to Sir Edward [Montagu], touching rates on his lands. Deen, 7 May 1598.

Thomas Tressham to Mr. Mountague, as to windfall woods belonging to offices granted to the late Chancellor [Hatton], and the rights of Sir Thomas Cecil. Newton, 6 April 1594.

[Sir] William Hatton to ———, about justices' business at Northampton. Holdenby, 29 Jan. 1595[-6].

Lewis [Lord] Mordaunt to Mr. Edward Watson. Does not intend to see Rockingham, this grass time, but will send for a buck. Turvey, 27 Aug. 1596.

Henry [Lord] Mordaunt to ———. Excuses Thomas Stanyearde from appearing at the musters before the justices of the peace at Oundle. Drayton, 1 Feb. ———.

[Sir] Edward Watson to his brother-in-law Sir Edward Mountagu, touching the Forest of Rockingham, Brigstock bailiwick, a swannymote, &c. No date.

[Sir] Edward Watson [not same as preceding] to his uncle Sir Edward Mountagu. Rockingham, 29 Aug. 1596.

The same to the same. Provision of cattle for the Navy. Collection of a subsidy and fifteenth. Rockingham, 30 Jan. 1595[-6].

The same to his cousin ———. Musters. Rockingham, 23 Oct. 1605. With a reply at foot, dated Boughton, 24 Oct. 1605.

Sir L[ewis] Watson to ———. County business, Sir William Tate, the men of Greaton, &c. Rockingham, 11 April 1613.

The same to Lord Mountagu, at Boughton, about an Order of Council. Rockingham, 14 Dec. 1625.

John Fitzwilliam to Edward [Mou]ntegue, Esq., at his house by St. Bartholomew's south gate, London. Quotes "a proverb or two. . . . As is a thorn in the hand of a drunkard, so is a parable in a fool's mouth; but the Mighty that formed all things [will] reward the fools and transgressors." More Place, 26 March 1601.

Henry Fytzwylyam to Lady Fytzwilliam, at her house in Lyttell Bretton near Aldersgate Street, London. Sends Mr. Thurlbye of Barnard's Inn for a silver cup. Glappthorne, 27 Jan. 1601[-2].

John Byron to [Sir Edward Montagu?]. Bequest by his wife's late mother, Lady Fitzwilliams. Whitefryers, 4 July 1604.

Richard Alleyne to Sir Edward Mountacute. On the marriage of Lord Willoughby [of Eresby] and Sir Edward's daughter. Hundley, 4 Sept. 1605.

T. Earl of Suffolk to Sir Edward Mountagu, Lieutenant of Rockingham Forest, and the Verderers there. Northampton House, 11 Nov. 1615.

Thomas [Bishop of] Peterborough to Sir Edward Montagu, at Boughton. Tithes of Kingsbery pastures due to him as parson of Polebrook. Peterb[orough], 21 Sept. 1610.

The same to the same. Dispute between his chaplain, Dr. William-son, and Mr. James Pickering as to land. Peterburrow, 4 Oct. 1613.

A[lice, Countess Dowager of] Derby, to Sir Edward Mountague. Owing to the death of her husband the Lord Chancellor [Ellesmere], she will require a London house. Desires a lease for life of a house of Mountague's in Little Brytayne, now occupied by Sir John Croke. York House, 20 March 1616[-17].

Draft reply to the same, on the back. Boughton, 29 March 1617.

Power by J. [Lord] Mordaunt to Mr. Farror, counsellor-at-law, to determine all differences with Lord Mountagu touching "the Wardenship," provided that the bailiwick of the Hundred of Orlingbury be reserved to his (Mordaunt's) use. [Before 1628.]

Answer of Francis Earl of Cumberland and Henry Lord Clifford, his son, to the petition of Anne Countess Dowager of Dorset, who claims "the styles, dignities, or places of Clifford, Westmerland, and Vesey." 2 pp.

Anne, Countess of Dorset, to Lord Mountague, touching the same petition. No date.

William Spencer to Lord Mountagu. No date. Seal, broken.

Sir Anthony Mildmay to [Sir E. Montagu]. Defects of arms and bands. Apthorp, 3 April 1616.

Sir F. Fane to [the same]. A dispute between Montagu and his neighbour, Dr. Williams. Apethorpe, 3 Aug. 1618. With a draft reply, dated Barnewell, 4 Aug. 1618.

The same to Mr. Palmer, about venison. Apethorpe, 5 Jan. 1613[-14].

M. Countess of Westmorland to Lord [Montagu], touching a reconciliation between the Earl and Montagu. Apthorp, 19 Jan. 1625[-6].

[Sir] Roland St. John to Lord [Montagu], about a certificate in "the corn business" to be made to the Lords [of the Council]. Woodford, 15 Dec. 1630.

[Sir] Chr. Yelverton to Lord Montagu, at Bou[gh]ton. Has been commanded up to attend the Parliament. Easton, 12 Sept. 1648.

[Sir] T. Brudenell to Lord [Montagu], touching the Manors of Oundle and Biggin, and hunting in the Forest. 31 Oct. 1648.

Thomas [Lord] Crewe to Lord [Montagu], touching property at Barnewell. London, 13 May 1651.

G[race Lady] Chaworth to her father [John, Earl of Rutland]. [c. 1670?]

The same to her uncle, Lord Mountagu.

Jop.(?) [Lady] Chaworth to her uncle, Lord Montague, at Boughton. Richmond, 1 Oct. [16]79 (?). *

[John Earl of] Exeter to Lord Mountagu. Burghley, 16 Jan. 1662[-3.]

F. [Countess of] Exeter to [the same]. Several letters. [c. 1660.] Seals.

Mountague Lane to Lord [Montagu]. Several letters dated at "Castle yard," 1663 and 1664.

Basil [Earl of] Denbigh to Lord [Montagu]. Martinthorpe Lodge, 9 Oct. 1668.

[The Hon.] Rob. Bertie to Lord Montagu, at Boughton, near Kettering. Three letters, dated at Little Queen Street, one in 1682.

[The Earl of] Denbigh to the Duke of Albemarle. 10 June 1677.

[The Earl of] Scarsdale to the same. [Before 1680.]

[Lord] Morley and Mounteagle to Lord [Montagu]. Desires him to stand his friend against his coming up to Parliament to serve the King. Hornbye Castle, 18 Aug. (No year.)

Gil. Pykering to Lord Mountagu, at Boughton. No date.

[The Earl of] Ancram to the Duke of Albemarle. In favour of Sir Roger Bradshaigh, who desires to be bow-bearer in the Forest. Whitehall, 11 April 1682.

Orlando Gee to [the Countess of] Northumberland. Settlement on the marriage of the Duchess of Somerset, and adoption of the name of Percy. London, 11 Feb. 1683-4.

Christopher Trowt to [the Duke of Albemarle]. Denying the alleged relationship of the Earl of Bath to the family of Monk. Exeter, 14 Dec. 1684.

[The Earl of] Oxford to the Earl of Montagu. Asking the loan of 100*l*. No date.

M. Castell ? (a lady) to Lord ——. No date.

[The Earl of] Devonshire to Lady Montagu. Touching the burning of the latter's house. 15 May.

E. [Duchess of] Albemarle to the Duke. Several letters, 1681[-2], and undated.

[Lady] Eli[zabeth] Pierrepont to [the Duke of] Albemarle. 29 April.

[The Earl of] Breadalbane to [the Duchess of Albemarle]. On the birth of a niece of the Duchess at Caithness. Beltop, 10 Sept. 1688.

(2.) "ORIGINAL LETTERS, Vol. II., 1681-1765." Of these the following have not been fully extracted.

[The Earl of] Thanet to [Ralph Earl of Montagu], on the latter's marriage. Hothfield, 16 Sept. [16]92.

J. Hervey to [the same]. 27 May 1700.

[The Earl of] Galway to [John Duke of Montagu]. Mr. D'Hervart desires to live in Lord Montagu's house at Southampton. Rookley, 11 April 1713. French.

The same to Ralph Duke of Montagu. Mr. De la Sabliere desires to settle himself and family, but will lose a pension of 100*l.* a year in Denmark, and desires to obtain the like in England. Camp before Alcantara, 14 April 1706, n.s.

Fra. Blundell to [the Earl of Montagu]. Dublin, 7 March 1704-5.

[The second Lord] Godolphin to [John, Duke of Montagu], 5 June 1723.

[Lady] H[enrietta] Godolphin to [the same]. London, 25 March.

[The Duke of] Bridgwater to the same. Two letters, one dated Brackley, 17 Aug. 1727.

[The second Duke of] Marlborough to the same. Two letters, one dated Althorp, 28 Oct. 1734, the other relating to "poor Mountagn," who shot himself at "the bagnio."

[Lord] Masham to [the same]. Langley, 23 July 1718.

[The Earl of] Cardigan to [the same]. Hamby, 30 Dec. 1721.

The same to [the same]. Hamby, 7 Nov. 1722.

The same to [the same]. Bath, 17 Feb. 1730[-1].

[The Dowager Lady Cardigan] to the Earl of Cardigan, at Deene, in Northamptonshire, by Rockingham bag. Several letters without year-dates.

James Brudenell<sup>2</sup> to his brother [the Earl of] Cardigan. 12 Aug. 1739.

R. Powys to [the Earl of Cardigan]. Hintlesham [Suffolk], 30 Oct. 1739.

D. W. [Dorothy Countess of Westmorland] to the same, at Deene, by Rockingham bag. Twickenham, 20 Oct. 1737.

J. B. [the Hon. James Brudenell†] to [the Earl of Cardigan]. 25 Oct. 1737.

The same to the same. About the death of Ned Brudenell at Darlington. Thursday night.

The same to the same. King's Mews, 8 Sept. 1739.

[The Earl of] Ailesbury‡ to [the Duke of Montagu]. Brussels, 12 Feb.

The Prince de Hornes to [the Dowager Lady Cardigan]. On the death of his father-in-law, the Earl of Ailesbury. Brussels, 16 Dec. 1741. French.

[The Earl of] Orkney to [the Duke of Montagu]. In favour of Mr. Winter's being "employed in the undertaking of the Islands." London, 19 Aug. 1722.

* Afterwards Earl of Cardigan; died 1811.

† Died 1745. (Not the same writer as above.)

‡ Died 1741.

R. Bishop of Bangor to [the same]. In favour of Mr. Barton, upon the approaching vacancy at St. Andrew's. Park Street, 12 Oct. 1722.

[The Duke of] Richmond to [the same]. In favour of Mr. Blomer, for the new chapel in Red Lion Street, the nomination to which belongs to the Bishop of London. Greenwich, 4 June 1723.

[The Duke of] Devonshire to [the same]. 20 Feb. 1724-5.

[The Duke of] Grafton to [the same]. Offering him a room to dress in at the Installation. Windsor, 13 June.

[The Duke of] Montagu to [the Duke of Grafton]. Protesting against a room being taken from him at Windsor. As Master of the Wardrobe he has a right to it—the same right as he has to lodgings at Whitehall and Hampton Court. 15 June. Copy (?).

[The Duke of] Beaufort to [the Duke of Montagu]. Hom, 13 Aug 1730.

[The Duke of] Berwick to [the same]. Touching a lawsuit by his nephew the Earl of Clanrickard. Paris, 10 March 1731[-2 ?].

[Lord] Tyrawly to [the same]. Somerset House, 18 Aug.

Lady E[lizabeth] Germain to the same]. 7 July 1735.

[Lord] Herbert to [the same]. [c. 1733 ?]

[Lord] Talbot [Lord Chancellor] to [the same]. Barrington, 13 Sept. 1735.

[The Earl of] Leicester to [the same]. No date. [After 1744.]

Geo. Dodington to [the same]. Eastbury, 25 June 1740.

[The Earl of] Hay to [the same]. About engineers. Edinburgh, 16 Aug. 1740.

[Viscount] Lympington to [the same]. About the corporation of Newport. Hursbourne, 27 Sept. 1740.

[Lord] Cathcart to [the same]. Five letters relating to the appointment of engineers and the supply of stores for "the expedition" [to America]. Dated at London and St. Helen's, July-Sept. 1740.

[The Earl of] Pembroke to the same. 8 Jan. 1742.

[Lord] Edgecumbe to [the same]. Against a proposed powder magazine opposite to Mount Edgecumbe House, and near Stonehouse. Grosvenor Street, 27 May 1743.

W[elbore] Ellis to [the same]. 2 July 1745.

[The Duke of] Queensberry to [the same]. In favour of James Mitchellson to be "a cadet in the train." Burlington Gardens. 26 Oct. 1745.

(3.) "LETTERS OF THE MONTAGU FAMILY. Vol. I. 1537 to 1643." This volume comprises letters and papers of Sir Edward Mountagu, serjeant-at-law and Lord Chief Justice, Lady Cicyll (Cecily) Mountagu (his wife), Roger Mountagu (his second son), Simon Mountagu (his third son), William Mountagu (his fifth son), Sir Edward Mountagu (his eldest son), Lady Elizabeth Mountagu, Sir Walter Mountagu, Grace Morgan, Lady Anna Mountagu, Sir Henry Mountagu (Latin letters), Sir Charles Mountagu, Lady Mary Mountagu (daughter of Sir William Whitmore and widow of Sir Charles Mountagu), Lady Elizabeth Hatton, James Mountagu (Dean of the Chapel Royal, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Bishop of Winchester), Sir Sydney Mountagu, Sir Edward Mountagu (afterwards Lord Mountagu), Ann Lady Mountagu (his third wife), and Robert Tanfield" (No. 195). Many of these letters have been extracted.

At the end are sundry religious papers and poems addressed by "Ann Mountagu" to her children, with some prayers; the handwriting being different from those of Lady Ann and Lady Anna, mentioned above.

(4.) "LETTERS OF THE MONTAGU FAMILY. Vol. II. 1638 to 1689." This volume comprises letters and papers of William Mountagu (second son of the first Lord Mountagu), Mary Mountagu (wife of Chief Baron Mountagu), Christopher Mountagu ("third" son of the first Lord Mountagu), Elizabeth Countess of Lindsey (daughter of the first Lord Mountagu), the second Earl of Lindsey, Frances Manners (wife of John Manners, Esquire), John Manners (afterwards Earl of Rutland), Edward second Lord Mountagu, Anne [Winwood] Lady Mountagu (his wife, one letter being addressed to her brother, Mr. Richard Winwood), Edward Mountegu (son of the second Lord), Elizabeth Mountagu (daughter of the same, and wife of Sir Daniel Harvey), Sir Daniel Harvey, Daniel Harvey (his son), and Ralph Mountague (second son of the second Lord). Many of these letters have been extracted.

(5.) "LETTERS OF THE MONTAGU FAMILY. Vol. III. 1673-1758." This volume comprises letters of Lady Elizabeth Wriothlesley, Countess Dowager of Northumberland, and Countess of Montagu (wife of the first Earl); Lady Anne Montagu, daughter of Duke Ralph, married to (1) Alexander Popham, Esquire, and (2) to Lieut.-General Harvey; John Montagu, afterwards Duke of Montagu; Lady Mary Churchill, daughter of the Duke of Marlborough, Duchess of Montagu, wife of Duke John; Lady Mary Montagu, married to George, Earl of Cardigan; and George, Earl of Cardigan, afterwards Duke of Montagu. There are numerous blank leaves at the end of this volume. Many of these letters have been extracted.

(6.) "LETTERS OF THE MONTAGU FAMILY. Vol. IV. 1594-1755. MANCHESTER, HALIFAX, AND SANDWICH FAMILIES." This volume comprises letters of Sir Henry Montagu, afterwards Viscount Mandeville and Earl of Manchester; Edward, Lord Montagu; Margaret, Countess of Manchester; E. Lord Mandeville and 2nd Earl of Manchester; Charles, 4th Earl and 1st Duke of Manchester; James Montagu, third son of the 1st Earl of Manchester; Anne, Lady Mountagu (second wife of Sir Sydney Montagu); George Mountagu (son of the 1st Earl of Manchester); Charles (Montagu) Baron and Earl of Halifax; George Montagu, Earl of Halifax; Sir James Mountagu, Lord Chief Baron; Sir Sydney Mountagu, 7th son of Sir Edward Mountagu; Edward Mountagu, 1st Earl of Sandwich; Edward (Montagu), 3rd Earl of Sandwich; Elizabeth, Countess of Sandwich, wife of the 3rd Earl; John (Montagu), 4th Earl of Sandwich; John Mountagu, Dean of Durham, son of the 1st Earl of Sandwich; Edward Mountagu (son of the Hon. Charles Montagu, son of the 1st Earl). Many of these letters have been extracted.

(7.) "LETTERS TO THE MONTAGU FAMILY. Vol. I. 1536-1747." This volume comprises letters of T. Burdon, Henry Freman, Richard Cotun, Henry Wykeley the elder, Edmund Bacon, Thomas Babyngton, Wm. Babyngton, Rob. Warden, G. Lord Hunsdon, Sir L. Watson, Anne

Tymperley, Robert Harlowe, Thomas Cotton (of Connington, Hunts), William Mulsho, Katharine Cotton, Anne Heron, Henry Cotton, [Sir] Ant. Mildmay, [Sir] A[rthur] Throkmorton, George Sondes, [Sir] Ben. Rudyerd, E. Lord Montagu, Audry Tamworth, Ch. [Lord] Cheyne (from Chelsey), Wm. Longueville, [Rev.] T. Blomer, Ralph Lane, Thomas Shadwell, R. Jones (Oundle), Thomas Strange, Mr. Dadikie(?), [Dr.] Cutts Barton, Admiral Perez, Alex. M<sup>c</sup>Beau, and [Dr.] W. Stukeley, with others which have been extracted. There are several unsigned letters. Some of the letters are of earlier date than "1536."

(8.) LETTERS TO THE MONTAGU FAMILY. Vol. II. 1678-1735." This volume comprises letters in French from Bd. Howard de Norfolk, [Mons.] De Rit (?), Ant. Pujolas (?), Baron Spanheim, P. Mirande, George Torneman, M. le Marquis de Rose, [Mons.] Harlai, M. le Duc de Sausun (?), Malarin de Richelieu (from Gand), Louis Barbar, N. de Genaudan de Ganges, [Mons.] Crequy, M. le Maréchal d'Estrées, Marie Magdalene Dupré, M. le M. de Bussy, [Mons.] Le Feure, M. Forester (a lady ?), M. le Comte de Villiers, and others, extracted. There are also many letters without signatures.

(9.) "LETTERS TO THE MONTAGU FAMILY, AUTOGRAPHS, &c. Vol. III. 1560-1746." Besides the Royal, Council, and other letters which have been extracted, there are letters of the third Marquis of Powis, J. Burchett (Secretary to the Admiralty), E[dward] Younge, Lord Cobham (1743), the third Duke of Bolton, the third Earl of Stair, [Lady] M. Barrington, Osborne Sidney Wandesford, the first Earl of Portsmouth, Sir Edward Walpole, Sir S[ydney] Medows, the thirteenth Lord Somerville, [the Hon.] B[ryan] Fairfax, the fourth Earl of Carlisle (some while he was Viscount Morpeth), the first Earl Delawarr, Viscount Lyvington, the second Earl of Albemarle, the third Earl of Cholmondeley, E. D. Hussey, Charles Churchill, D[aniel] Pulteney, Lord Augustus FitzRoy, Robert Trevor (about the manufacture of gunpowder in Holland), Lord Carteret (1727-8), M. Broughton, M. Harold, Henry Etough, Cutts Barton (on hunting in Wiltshire), and the Earl of Clarendon (1741, on his travels in Germany, Italy, &c.)

Extracts follow from the nine volumes before described. In the previous collection the holograph letters, being comparatively few in number, were so described. In the present collection the greater portion of the letters are holograph, and when this is not the case the word "signed," or the word "copy," will be found at the end of the entry.

RECEIPT BY QUEEN DOWAGER ELIZABETH.

[1483,] 1 Edw. V., April 12.—"This bill endentid, made the xij daie of Aprell, the first yere of the reigne of Kyng Edward the v<sup>te</sup>, witnessith that the Quene oure soueraine Lady hath receuyed of Richard Burton, Squier, Receyuour of her lordship of Clyf, in the shire of Northt', xxxvij li. sterlinges of his Recept due vnto her Highnes at the festes of Pasch' in the xxij yere of the reigne of Kyng Edward the fourth and Mighelmasse thanne next ensuyng. In wisse wherof aswell the quenes gode grace as Pe seid Resceyuour haue enterehaungeably signed these presentes with their handes, the day and yere aforesaid.

(Signed)

"ELYSABETH."

ROYAL LICENCE TO EDWARD MOUNTEGUE.

[1524,] 15 Hen. VIII., Feb. 7, Greenwich.

“HENRY R.

“Henry the eight, by the grace of God, King of England and of Fraunce, defensour of the faith, and Lord of Ireland, To almaner our officers, ministres, and subgiettes aswel of spirituell prehemynence and dignitie as of temporall auctoritie, these our lettres hering or seing, gretting. Forasmoch as we bee credibly infourmed that our welbiloued subgiet Edward Mountegue, lernedman, for certain diseases and infirmities which he hath in his hed, cannot conveniently without his grete daungier and ieopardie bee discovered of the same; whereupon we of our especial grace, in consideracion therof, haue by these presentes licenced hym fromhensforth to vse and were his bonet on his hed at all tymes and in all places, aswel in our presence as elleswhere, at his libertie. Wherefor we woll and commaunde you and euery of you to permitte and suffre hym so to do, without any your let, challenge, or contradiccion, as ye tender our pleas<sup>r</sup>. Yeuen vnder our Signet at our Manour of Grenewiche, the vijth day of February, the xvth yere of our Reign.”

Signed with a stamp.

JOHN JOHNSON to [MR. MOUNTAGU].

[ July 28, Calais. ]—“Upon the 24th of this month of July I delivered unto William Burdon and Anthony Pickring, either of them, the writs unto them directed, in the presence of Otwell Johnson and George Perrot, and they did receive them, demanding from whom they came, and [I] said from Master Mountagew; and Burdon and Pickring answered me in their presence that the matter which Master Mountagew sued them for was for their advantage. And so we departed, unto [until] this day, le xxvijth in July, my Lord Deputy [of Calais] sent for me, whose demand of me was, why I durst, contrary to the ordinance of the town, deliver any writ or subpœna unto any soldier in the King’s retinue here, without first to give him knowledge thereof; and that for my so doing contrary to the same ordinance I was worthy to be punished.

“I answered aye that I did not know no such ordinance of the town, wherefore I did not give his Lordship no knowledge thereof; and besides, that this matter which Burdon must appear for in England is a matter that cannot be determined by the law here, but in England, because that it concerns land in England. And my Lord said, that if he had been by at the delivery of the writs, Burdon should have received none of me, and yet I should have gone to ward. And my answer was, that I did not know that I had deserved any such punishment; and so many words more between us which were too long to write. But to conclude, as far as I perceive by my Lord, and (sic) also he said Burdon should not appear for all the delivering of the writ, but my Lord and the Council [of Calais] will write to my Lord Chancellor for him, for his answer. For my Lord saith he cannot be spared out of the town because of his office, which is, reporter of all the strangers within the town, and the hearing time draweth nigh, wherefore he may the worse be spared.*

“Your prentice,

“John Johnson.”

* There are other letters relating to the Burdons of Calais, beginning in 1503, in Vol. 7.

HENRY FREMAN to MASTER [EDW]ARD MOUNTAGU, in the Middle Temple, London.

[ ] May 5, Boughton.—“ Upon May Day possession was taken at Boughton according to your deed, afore sufficient witness[es] of Gedyngton, Warketon, Ketyryng and Wykeley. . . . I suppose Brymegeham fair on th' Ascension Day shall be best to buy beasts for you, because of the woody country. I have bought you four kye with calves at Salam fair.” . . .

WILLIAM PARR* to MASTER EDWARD MOUNTYEGUE, Serjeant-at-law.

[c. 1535,] Saturday, Brigstok.—Is informed by John Mulsho that Bull has entered Lord Awdeley's woods, and cut brakes contrary to right; and that he has also slandered one Robert Gowsye to be a notable thief. This matter touches Mountyegue also. Wishes to meet him and take order that my Lord's inheritance may not be harmed.

Signed.

JOHN [LORD] AUDELAY to [SIR EDWARD MONTAGU] the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

[c. 1540,] May 27, Ringwoode.—According to instructions from Lord Seint Jone, Lord Chamberlain to the King, the writer and his wife have spoken with the Lord Chief Baron [Richard Lyster] for the Lord Chief Justice's furtherance in that matter. Their chaplain, the bearer, will inform him of their right in respect of the wife's jointure and dower, as set forth in an office [inquisition] found upon the death of Mr. William Brokas, her late husband. Prays him to cause Walter Thomas to render his accounts, and make amends for the offence he has given them.

Signed.

KING HENRY VIII. to SIR WIL[LIAM ———].

[1542,] 33 Hen. VIII., April 20, Greenwich.

“HENRY R.

By the King.

“ Right trustie and wellbiloued, we grete you well: Leting you witt that having a speciall trust and confidence in your fidelitie, zeale, and obedience towards us, We haue appointed our right trusty & welbeloued cousin and consailour y<sup>e</sup> Lord Cheif Justice and Sir William A Parre, knight, † one oure behalf, to open and declare certeine thinges vnto you touching vs and the wealth and suertie of this our Realme; Requiring you not only to geve vnto him perfite credence as to our self, but alsoo to waye and consider the same in suche sorte as your conformitie may declare your love and obedience towards vs, and aunswere to the good opinion whiche we haue conceived of you accordnglic. Yeuen vnder our Signet at our Manour of Grenewich, the xxth daye of Aprill, the xxxiiij yere of our Reigne.”

Signed with a stamp.

Addressed: To our tr . . . . .
Sir Wil . . . . . (Cut off.)

THOMAS [LORD] WRIOTHESLEY to [SIR EDWARD MONTAGU] the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

[c. 1544,] June 21, Hampton Court.—Asks favour for Mr. Fermer in a matter in which he is concerned.

Seal of arms.

* Afterwards Lord Parr of Horton, 1543-6.

† These names are inserted by another hand in a blank space left for the purpose.

MARY [LADY] PARR [of Horton] to LORD ———.*

[c. 1550,] Nov. 8, Horton.—Anthony Wodhull, esquire, by his will gave to the writer's daughter, Anne Burneby, 50 marks, payable at the rate of 66s. 8d. yearly, and like legacies "to other his brothers and sisters." These legacies have been withholden for six or seven years by John Leveson, esquire, who has married the wife [widow] and one of the executors of the said Anthony, although he, Lewson (sic), is in wealth. The parties are determined to attempt the law. Prays his Lordship for expedition of justice.

Signed.

GEORGE [LORD] ZOUCHÉ to LORD (sic) MOUNTAGUE.

1553, May 1, Harryngworth Lodge.—Is about to prosecute his livery under the Great Seal, and till then he cannot assure his wife's jointure, &c. Has only 20 marks, but requires 20*l.*, of which he asks the loan.

Signed.

PRINCESS ELIZABETH to QUEEN MARY.

[1554, March.]—Letter protesting her innocence of any practices against the Queen, previously to her being committed to the Tower. Begins: If any ever did try this old saying, that a King's word was more than another man's oath.

Copy, made about 1800.

QUEEN MARY to ——— MONTAGUE, Esquire.

[1557,] 4 & 5 Philip and Mary, July 31, Richmond.

"MARYE THE QUENE.

By the Quene.

"Trustie and welbeloued, wee greete you well. And let you wit, that the warres being open betwixt vs and Fraunce, and the King our dearest lord and husband passed the seas in person to pursue the enemy, wee haue gyven ordre, as meete is (our honnour and suretie so requiring), to have a convenient force put in perfit readynes and preparacion to attend vppon our person, aswell for the defence and suretie therof, as to resiste such attemptes as may bee by any foreyn enemy or ootherwise made againste vs and our realme; And knowing your fidelitie and good will to serve vs, haue appoynted you to bee one amonges others that shall attend vppon vs; Therefore requiring and chardging you not onely to put your self in ordre accordingly, but also to cause your tenautes, servautes, and oothers vndre your rules and offices to bee mustred, and of your said servautes, tenautes, and oothers within your rules and offices to furnyshe your self with tenne horsemen and fiftie fotemen well appoynted; off the wich fotemen one fourth parte to bec argabusiers or archers, one oother fourth parte pikes, and the rest billes; and with the said nowmbres of men, horse, and furniture well in ordre to bee ready to attend vpon vs, orelles where by our appoyntment, vppon one dayes wariyng, at any tyme aftre the xxvth day of August† next cummyng; and in the meane tyme, vntill you shalbee so called to serve vs, remayne in full readynes and ordre to serve vndre them that haue chardge in that Countie. And hereof * Qu. Sir Edward Montagu, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, 1545-53. He had previously been L.C.J. of the King's Bench, 1539-45.

† This date is inserted in a space originally left blank.

faile ye not. Yeven vndre our Signet at our Manour of Richemonde, the laste day of July, the fourth and fyveth yeres of our raignes.

“Montague.

“Clyff.”

Addressed: To our trusty and welbeloued ——— Montague, Esquire.

Endorsed: This letter was delyuered the ixth day of August at vj of the clock at night, in the presence of Bryan Lasselles (?), esquier, and Thomas Dudley (?), gent.

The address and endorsement are pasted over.

EDWARD [LORD] HASTINGS to SIR EDWARD MOUNTEGUE, KNIGHT.

[1558,] June 30, “my house at Brakenborows.”—Touching a variance between his friend Mr. Faunte and Sir Edward in respect of a lease.

Signed. Seal, a crest, with the motto of the Garter.

WILLIAM BYNSLEY to MR. RICHARD CAVE, at Okeley.

1559, Dec. 13, Weldon.—Requests payment of tenths, &c., due from the parsonage of Okeley Parva. The money may be sent to the writer’s benefice at Barnewell.

[THE MARQUIS OF] WINCHESTER and [SIR] RY. SAKEYLE to EDWARD MOUNTAGUE, Esquire, Sheriff of co. Northampton.

1560, Oct. 12.—“Understanding the trouble that is moved amongst the Queen’s subjects for want of knowledge of the better testornes from the worse, there is appointed for help thereof certain stamps to be sent down to stamp the better with one mark and the worse with another, whereby the people shall have the better knowledge; which we trust shall be well executed. And for a further succour to the people we pray you to give knowledge to the officers of every city and market town, that if they will gather within their hundreds 4 or 500*l.* of the said base moncys, and send them unto us sorted by one or two substantial men of the Hundred, we shall cause you to have new money for them, to increase more quietness to the people, which the Queen’s pleasure is we should do. And therefore we pray you to do your part herein that the people may understand it; and we shall do our parts therein as largely as may lie in us.”

Signed.

T. EARL OF SUSSEX to SIR EDWARD MONTAGUE, Knight.

1570, April 15, the Court.—“I have received your letters by the bearer hereof, your servant, and a fat stag, for the which I most heartily thank you. And as for your fee deer in Northamptonshire, I shall take such order therein with my Lord Marquis as you shall hereafter have no cause to find any fault therewith. Your stag was as great and as fat as I have seen, and at this season as well welcome as a thing of greater value. And so, with my most hearty commendations to my good Lady your wife, I commit you both to the Almighty.”

Signed. P.S. by the Earl on the same subject.

[SIR] ROBERT LANE to SIR EDWARD MOUNTEGEW, High Sheriff of co. Northampton.*

[1571,] May 18, Horton.—“I have received your letter with a packet, which I perceive you found in your house at your coming home. The matter which they do tend (sic) indeed requireth speed; of my behalf shall want no good will to do the best I can. You know that the Hunderyth [Hundred] of Spelow and Wymersley is warned to come before me to muster at Northampton upon Monday next, but not to bring any armour with them; wherefore I cannot see but that I must make a new assummys [summons], which will ask some time; notwithstanding, I pray you go forthward in the East part as you are determined, and I will on this West side lose no opportunity. If I send you not contrary word, I will not fail to meet you at Clendon at your day appointed. I dought [doubt] it will be hard to appoint so many hakbutters as my Lord Zowch writeth of.

“I am sorry I told you so loud a lyy [lie], as to say Lyth [Leith] is won, which I perceive is clean contrary, but as I do not excuse myself for my rashness, so I do very much blame mine awter [author], which I did think to be credible.”

F. [EARL OF] BEDFORD to SIR EDWARD MOUNTEGUE.

[c. 1575,] June 6, Russell House.—Thanks for two bucks received. Sends him his deputation by his son, who will doubtless prove a wise gentleman. Prays him not to forget Lord Leycester.

Signed. Seal of arms, with the motto of the Garter.

[SIR] EDMUND BRUDENELL to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE, at Boughton.

1580, June 11, Deene.—Is sorry he was not at Deene when Mountague was last there, as he wished to confer with him and Mr. Edward Watson for the perfecting of this present service. Met Mr. Watson at the launde of Benefeeld. Will be at his brother's house at Stanererne (?) on the 15th, where they can consider the causes of the neglect. The number appointed is sufficient, but some are slack. Commendations to the Lady his wife.

[SIR] EDMUND BRUDENELL to SIR JOHN SPENCER, SIR RICHARD KNYGHTLEY, and SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE, Knights, or one of them, at Ketereynge.

1580[-1], Feb. 2, Deene.—Has been warned to have in readiness two demi-lances with three light horses, furnished with corslets and pistolets. Thinks that proportion too great, and is unable to furnish it. Sends one horse, to serve as a lance. Will bring his light geldings on Saturday, when he is to be with them “for the commission of inquiry of the death of Shelton.” His dear friend and kinsman Mr. Bryan Fitzwilliam lately took into Ireland three of his best trotting geldings, with one of his best horses.

JOHN WOOD to his cousin MR. EDWARD MOUNTAGUE, at Boughton.

1581, [Oct. 15,] idus Octobris, Cambridge.—Refers to the plague (pestis) prevalent in that town. Signed: Nepos tuus, &c.

Latin.

---

* He was Sheriff in 1570-1, and again in 1588-9.

E. ANDROWES to [the DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS OF NORTHAMPTONSHIRE ?].

1581[-2], Jan. 30, Greis Inne.—“Whereas it hath pleased you for to appoint me to have in readiness a light horse, with all such furniture as you have appointed me, my humble suit unto your Worships is, for that I am in such great suits with the Lord Crumwell for that little living which my father left me, and by reason of that suit so impoverished, and hath lost my time, and no other land I have but that which is more chargeable to me than profitable as yet, which I trust will be my excuse at this time unto your Worships for any further charging of me. My heart is as willing to do my duty to her Majesty as any other shall be, if my ability may serve.”

EDWARD MOUNTAGU to his father SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1585, May 15, Middle Temple.—“I shewed Mr. Pagit your letter, who hath set me down some order for the looking into the patents of the College mentioned in your letter, which is now united to Trini[ty] College. I talked also with my brother Walter, who hath not made it known as yet to his fellows that he understandeth of their purpose, neither doth he mean to do. Here is looking daily for Commissioners out of Holland, to yield the Low Countries into her Majesty's hands. Other news worth writing there is none.”

QUEEN ELIZABETH to ———.

1587, 29 Eliz., June 8, Manor of Greenwich, under the Signet.—“Right trusty and well beloved Councillor, we greet you well. Whereas we have appointed the number of two hundred men to be levyed within our Countie of Northampton, to be employed in our service in the Low Countries, under the conduct of such Captains as shall specially be named therevnto by our right trusty and right well beloved Cousin and Councillor the Earl of Leicester, Lieutenant General of our forces in the said Low Countries: Forasmuch as the necessity of the service requireth expedition to be used in the levying of the said number, our pleasure is that ye do assist the said Captains in the levying of their bands by impressing in our name, and by virtue of these our letters, such persons as the said Captains shall allow of, as meet and sufficient men to be employed in our said service. And for your furder proceeding herein we refer you to such direction as ye shall receive from the Lords and others of our Privy Council.”

Signed at the top.

[SIR] RI[CHARD] KNYGHTLEY to [SIR EDWARD MONTAGU ?].

[c. 1587 ?] Nov. 12, Norton.—“I have received your letters, and am sorry that you are so barren of Justices that you have not any to help you; but you must proceed in executing the same (sic), for that, as you know, great speed is required, and we will have all our men ready, if God will, by next Saturday. Mr. Sheriff [of co. Northampton] is at London, and when he comes home I know not; therefore you cannot have any help by him. Sir William Hatton and I meet on Friday at Northampton. I pray you let us have word from you what muskettes and callevers and holebertes shall be provided for this company, and we will see them made ready with all speed. You shall find in the Council's letters sent unto us before that the one half should be shott.

If you think it so now likewise fit, we will have them provided accordingly. There lacks [laek] swords and daggers, but how many I know not until I come to Northampton, where they are kept. Then you shall understand how many are there, and how many will be wanting.

“George Gifforde hath not used me well in saying there were coats at my house, for I assure you there are not any. He is not now with me, neither know I where he is, but when I meet him he shall know he hath not used me well. We will provide a leader according to your request.” . . .

Signed.

[SIR] CHR. HATTON, [LORD] CHANCELLOR, to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE.

1588, Nov. 14, London.—Her Majesty means to call him to the office of High Sheriff for the County of Northampton. Recommends Mr. Nicholas Rande to be his Under-sheriff.

Signed.

[SIR] FRA. WALSYNGHAM and [SIR] WA. MILDEMAYE to [SIR EDW. MONTAGU].

1588, Nov. 16, the Court.—Order to cause John Ekyns, of Denford, co. Northampton, to be repaid his charges for boarding William Peyton, &c.

Signed.

HENRY MIDDELMORE to SIR EDWARD MOWNTAGEWE.

1589, June 10, from the Court.—“I am bold, in the absence of my good Lord, the Lord Zowehe, to pray you to spare one Johnson, a miller, tenant at Haryngworthe to my said Lord, who, with his old and impotent father, hath the charge of my Lord’s mills there, and who, if he should be pressed to go forth as a soldier, should not only undo himself and his aged father, but also hinder greatly my Lord Zowehe in the trade of his mills. In respect whereof I heartily pray you he may be forborne and discharged.” . . .

SIR CHRISTOPHER HATTON, K.G., LORD CHANCELLOR.

[1590,] 32 Eliz., March 9.—Deed by him, as [Lord] Lieutenant in co. Northampton, (to which office he had been appointed by the Queen’s commission dated 5 Feb.,) appointing Sir Thomas Cecil, Sir Richard Knightley, Sir Edward Mountague, and Sir George Farmer, named in the said commission, to be his Deputies in the said county, and in all corporate and privileged places therein.

Parchment. Signed. Seal of arms. Endorsed: A Deputation of Lieutenancy, &c.

W. LORD BURGHLEY to ——— .

1590, Aug. 22, the Court.—“Whereas of late a commission hath been directed unto you to enquire of the goods and lands of Mr. Gilbert Hussey, of Owdell, supposing him to be a recusant, and thereby answerable according to the Statute after the rate of 20*l.* the month: forsomuch as by letters both from my Lady of Bedford, his sister, as in like sort from the B[ishop] of Peterborough and the Lord Mordant, I am informed that he doth conform himself according to her Majesty’s proceedings and goeth to church, whereby I have been abused in the information formerly given against him; These are therefore to will and require you to forbear to proceed in the execution of the said commission, or to molest him any manner of ways by virtue of the same; for which this my letter shall be your sufficient discharge in that behalf."

Signed.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU].

1592, June 11, Court at Greenwich.—“Whereas we are very credibly informed that by direction given by our very good Lord the late Chancellor of England [Hatton] to you Sir Edward Mountague as Deputy Lieutenant unto his Lordship of that county of Northampton, the gunpowder and match belonging to the East part[s] of the shire was kept with the rest of the powder and munition provided for the whole county in the town of Northampton; and that by reason of the far distance of places there will be some inconveniency in the carriage thereof from Northampton to the said East parts, upon any occasion that may be offered to use the same: We have therefore thought good to pray and require you to cause as much of the said powder and munition as doth belong to the said East parts of that county to be forthwith removed from the said town of Northampton to Fotheringhey Castle, or Colliweston, or to some other such place as to you shall seem most convenient and necessary for the furtherance of her Majesties services” (sic).

Signed: Jo: Cant., Jo: Puckering C. S., W. Burghley, C. Howard, W. Cobham, T. Buckehurst, Ro: Cecyll, J. Wolley, T. Heneage.

Jo[HN] BRUDENELL to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1592, Dec. 7, Deene.—“Whereas lately there was chosen and sent out of Glapthorne certain men into her Majesty’s service in France, whereof two are returned hurt, weak, and sickly, and not able to relieve themselves, and the said town not sufficient to succour them both, as the Council’s letters have in that case directed to be done; by reason whereof the one of them, wanting such necessary relief as his extremity requireth, hath herein desired my assistance; I thought good (considering they were chosen and sent out by your appointment, or not without your assent and knowledge) to refer the said plaintiff (the bearer hereof) and the consideration of his cause to your good discretion,” &c.

Signed.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to the SHERIFF AND JUSTICES OF THE PEACE
in co. NORTHAMPTON.

1593, July 30, Court at Otelandes.—“Whereas you had commandment from her Majesty to levy within that county a certain number of soldiers, to be furnished with coats, armour, and weapons accordingly; and afterwards by letters from us you were required to deliver the said soldiers unto the Captain that was appointed by our letters to receive them, or to his lieutenant: you shall now understand, that upon new advertisement out of France of the estate there, her Majesty hath thought it good to make stay of the said men for a season, and not to charge the country any further with them.” . . .

Copy. Six names at the foot.

[SIR] THO. CECILL to "MR. MOUNTAGUE."

1593, Aug. 23, Burghley.—"Whereas I made you my deputy lieutenant of the Forest of Rockingham, I earnestly require you to forbear the exercise of the said deputation within the office of Morehaye, where my cousin Robert Wingfeilde is keeper; for that I purpose, because he is my kinsman, to bestow the profit of that office, belonging to me, of [on] himself, and to reserve the pleasure for mine own use."

Signed.

EDWARD MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1595, March 26, Hemmington.—"I did hope that after this last service I should have been at some rest, but a messenger of the Chamber, as soon as I was lighted, saluted me with letters from the Lords of the Council, the which I have sent you, together with a printed form of a schedule for musters sent from their Lordships.

"I came over hither for some private business, the which I would willingly see despatched; and therefore, if it will please you to send Apleyard to the Commissioners of the West Division with copies of these letters, and to hold your determination to be at Barnewell on Monday, I think I may stay still. I beseech you let Presgrave make as many warrants as he can against that time for the summoning of the country, and when you come to Barnewell my man shall help him. I think that Easter holidays will be the fittest time for the first appearance, because that by that time the country will have almost done their sowing of barley."

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [the JUSTICES OF THE PEACE in
CO. NORTHAMPTON?].

1595, Dec. 16, Court at Richemonde.—Her Majesty having found it expedient to have her Navy put in readiness, and to be at the seas for certain months, has given direction that her household servants and officers, James Quarles and Marmaduke Darell, Esquires, Surveyors General for the victuals of the said Navy, shall make provision in sundry shires, the portions and kinds hereunder mentioned being allotted to co. Northampton. To prevent any part of the country from being overburdened, the addressees are to assemble in convenient places, and give direction in their several divisions that the said proportion may be delivered at places and times to be appointed by the Surveyors' deputies, at reasonable prices. As the money can hardly be sent down in time, they are to send up fit persons to receive payment.

Of wheat, 300 quarters; of malt, 300 quarters; of oxen, 60; of porks, 100; of bacon, 300 fitches.

Signed: W. Burghley, Essex, C. Howard, H. Hunsdon, T. Buckehurst, Ro: Cecyll, J. Fortescue.

[SIR] WILLIAM FITZWILLIAM to SIR EDWARD MONTAGUE.

1595[-6], Jan. 31, London.—Reports what he has done to obtain the money due for "bores and stirkes" from the East division [of Northamptonshire]. Sir John Spencer has promised to deliver what is due for the other division. Refers to Brickett's matter, the Green Cloth, the Masters of the Household, and the supply of provisions demanded from the county. Was informed at the storehouse in East Smithfield, by Mr. Quarles, that Essex, Middlesex and Surrey, by the head constables of every hundred, had made search for and furnished the provisions demanded. Saw some of them barrelled and some hops weighed. In those three counties every man's "cattle of that kind" were viewed and certified by the head constables to the justices, who took thereof for the service, &c.

Signed.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [the JUSTICES OF THE PEACE in CO. NORTHAMPTON?].

1596, Aug. 3, Court at Greenwich.—“Whereas the Queen's Majesty, upon compassion of her poor people, for the disordered and wilful increase of prices of grain, and so consequently of bread, without just cause, hath by her Proclamation given present and straight commandment to all Sheriffs and Justices of Peace to cause such Orders to be observed as were by her commandment the last year published in print for the stay of dearth of grain: her Majesty also hath commanded us to consider in what sort the said Orders have not been observed, and by what means scarcity of grain hath been brought to markets, and the same also enhanced from time to time within these two months in many places of the realm, the store being thought sufficient to furnish the market, and no cause why, in reason, that any owners of corn should increase the prices above such rates as have been [by] the said owners two or three months past uttered and sold; and that it is most evident that the engrossing of corn and forestalling of markets by covetous men in buying out of the markets at farmer's houses great quantities of corn hath been the cause of the dearth lately grown. For these and other offences manifestly committed against these said Orders, we do most earnestly require you, even for conscience sake, to have regard hereunto, and to proceed to the examination of the offences committed against the said Orders, and speedily to deal severely with all such as be owners of the corn, and have any plenty thereof, not only by assessment to compel them of (sic) upon pain of imprisonment to bring weekly to the markets next unto their dwellings some proportions of all sorts of grain convenient, but to overrule them in their prices, so as the same be not sold at any dearer rates and prices than was at the least two or three months past [charged?] by the same persons. And rather than to have her Majesty's poor loving subjects to be in this cruel sort forced to famine, you shall limit yourselves according to your near dwellings to the market towns, so as at every market some of you may be always present to assist the poorer sort with provision for their money at reasonable prices, which if the owners thereof shall not be induced by you and persuaded to assent to utter their corn at such reasonable prices as you shall by your discretion limit, you shall cause the said corn to be distributed, especially to the poorer sort. And if any shall murmur or repine at your order, you shall, as the course of the state of the realm requireth in such a time of necessity, commit them that shall refuse to perform your order to prison, if any be in the said market town, or else to the prison of the county, there to remain without any bail until they shall conform themselves to your said orders.”

Every Justice of the Peace, being a great owner of corn, is to be subject to this order; complaint having been made that such persons and their tenants have been spared.

Signed: Jo: Cant., Tho. Egerton C.S., W. Burghley, W. Cobham, T. Buckhurst, Ro: Cecyll, J. Fortescue.—W. Waad.

QUEEN ELIZABETH to ———.

[1596,] 38 Eliz., Aug. 27, Manor of Greenwich, under the Signet. —
 “Trusty and well beloved, we greet you well. Forasmuch as we have occasion to increase our forces in Ireland, not minding to charge any one country [county?] with greater numbers than is requisite, amongst other counties of our realm, we require to have only the number of one hundred able footmen within that our county of Northampton to be levied, mustered, and put in readiness with coats, armour, and weapon. And therefore we require and authorise you, by virtue hereof, to cause the said number to be presently put in readiness, and to be committed to the charge and conduct of such able person as by the letters of our Council shall be signified unto you; from whom also you shall understand how they shall be satisfied for their coats and conduct; and their transportation into Ireland.”

Signed at the top.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [the JUSTICES OF THE PEACE
 in co. NORTHAMPTON?].

1596, Sept. 10, Court at Greenwich.—It is thought necessary to send a certain number of footmen into Ireland for strengthening her Majesty's forces there. She is sending letters for levying 94 able men in co. Northampton, to be sorted with armour and weapons, and furnished with coats. Her pleasure is that special choice be made of likely men, not vagrant nor of the baser sort, who commonly run away from their captains; and let these men know her care to see them well used. Capt. Par Lane, of that country (sic), is chosen to be their Captain. 47 are to be corslets with pikes, 24 calivers, and 23 muskets. Their coats are to be of some mixed colour, well lined, for the winter. 4s. shall be allowed for each coat. The Captain shall have money to pay them after the rate of  $\frac{1}{2}d.$  the mile as far as Chester, where they will enter into their monthly wages. They are to be delivered over to the Captain or his Lieutenant by roll indented, specifying the soldiers' names, armour, and parish. They are to be at the said port by the 30th, shipping being ready to transport them. As there is usually great loss of armour, bonds to double the value thereof are to be taken from the Captain for its restitution, or for proof by witnesses how it is wasted or lost; but an attestation from a General will render proof unnecessary.

Signed: W. Burghley, Essex, W. Cobham, R. North, W. Knollys, Ro: Cecyll, J. Fortescue.

[EDWARD MOUNTAGU] to SIR RI. KNIGHTLEY, SIR WILLIAM HATTON, SIR GEORGE FARMER, and SIR JOHN SPENCE[R], Knights.

1596, Sept. 16, Boughton.—“Yesterday there was a messenger of the Chamber with me, who brought me a letter from her Majesty signed with her own hand, and another from the Lords of the Council directed to me and the rest of the Commissioners appointed for Musters for this county. I have sent you herein true copies of them, and because we may agree in a uniform order and see what will be the best course for the country and for the despatch of this service, I think it were good we had a meeting; and therefore, if it will please you to be at Northampton on Tuesday next, by 9 of the clock in the morning, I and the rest appointed for this service here will be ready to meet you there. Captain Lane came to me while I was writing this letter, who will meet us there on Tuesday, whereby we may the sooner and more easily despatch the service."

[P.S.] "Sir Thomas Cecill as I hear, will be at Holdenby on Monday at night, and I will see if I can draw him to Northampton to join with us in the service."

Draft in E. M.'s hand.

EDWARD MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1596, Nov. 8, London.—"This morning a messenger of the Chamber brought me letters from the Lords of the Council, the which I have sent you herein enclosed. I hope that you and the rest of the Commissioners, who are like to continue longer in their authority than I, will see this performed, and if you will send up the certificate before I receive my discharge, I will see it delivered; and I think it were very well that when the Commissioners meet, that they would likewise make certificate of their last service into Ireland. . . . On Friday I must needs be in the Exchequer to take my oath, which day must be precisely kept. . . . I hear that Captain Nicolls is in town. . . . My cousin Wingfield can help you to those [names of soldiers?] that Captain Browne made choice of."

Seal of arms. Received 12 Nov. -

HENRY MOUNTAGU to his brother EDWARD MOUNTAGU, Esquire.

1596, Dec. 14, Boughton.—"It was my chance as I went down to meet your man Scultrope, by whom I perceived two of his charge gave the slip; it was well for them; they might else have stretched with the rest of their companions. At the Sessions here holden at Northampton there was [were] nine gipsies and four other felons executed, and one remains judged to be pressed to death; but Sir George Farmer and I, upon examination of him afterwards, found matter in him for which we thought fit to reprieve him until we had advertised the Lord Chief Justices [Popham and Anderson] of him. You may see the letter we have written and the party's examination, which when you have read I pray seal up the letter, and close all up again sealed; and, if you have so much leisure, that you will deliver it to my Lord Anderson,* for I think my Lord Chief Justice of England [Wray] be gone down to his country; otherwise you will deliver them to him. My father and mother do wish your company here this Christmas; you shall hear by my brother Sandes [Sir Ric. Sondes] how good the way is."

On the back and on the fly-leaf of this letter are some notes in Edward Montagu's hand as follow:

NOTES taken out of William Swayles his examination, being called, Welsh, More, Herring, Covill, Wattson, and Yardely; judged to die for standing mute at the Assizes at Northampton, 7 Dec. 1596, being a notable horse-stealer and robber of the highway.

Mr.† Francis Reddish is one of his partners, and had a horse that was stolen from Mr. Sepcotts of Elton.

John Skidmore, Henry Smarte, his companions likewise.

The Red Lion in Shorditch, a naughty house.

Simon Ashley, a noted man with the Lord Chief Justice.

[Thomas Button, Francis Lidiyard, his companions, are executed.]‡

* Sir Edmund Anderson, C.J.C.P.

† Apparently so, but it may be intended for "Nota."

‡ Struck out.

Thomas Royle, an innkeeper of Bassetts Heath in Staffordshire, a receiver, and knowing the manner of this examinee's life.

John Capper, a mercer by trade, of Shrewsbury, a common receiver, and lodger of thieves.

He lay the last winter at one Widow Johnson's in Lichfield.

Robert Covill, a Suffolk or Norfolk man, his companion, who resorts commonly to the Swan in Harborough; a notable thief, but lives like a horsecessar(?).

One Miller, or Willmer, a butcher and an innkeeper, dwelling at Keggeworth in Nottinghamshire, a common receiver of thieves and knower of them.

This examinee came to Smith's of Lubbenam in Waksto(?), where Thomas Fishweek, one of his companions, doth remain; this Fishweek stole a horse from Mr. Wattson of Rutland.

Greatchead, an innkeeper in Stonistretford, a bad fellow, and a common receiver; a notable bad fellow.

Thomas Car, an innkeeper of Stonistretfor[d], another receiver, and acquainted with this examinee's lewd conditions.

Robert Tassell, Robert Jhonson, two notable thieves and cutpurses.

Thomas Murfoote, a high lawyer, a robber by the highway, a guest at Greatchead's house, and sometimes comes to the Cock in Tocester.

One Robinson, a Yorkshireman, and one Kittson, a Somersetshire man, two common horse-stealers; they do use one Beunell's house, an innkeeper in Dunstable, and sometime[s] they come to the Cock in Tocester.

Thomas Royle, before named, is now an innkeeper in Islington, and is a common receiver of thieves.

Thoman Willson, dwelling at the Crown at Stretfo[rd] upon Avon, is of like condition.

The goodman of the Bell at Nettlebed, a common receiver of thieves and horses from Covill, and an horse-stealer himself.

Nettlebed, a bad town for such matters.

One Turner, Abraham Lawes, Samuel Grimston of Derbyshire, stealers of beasts and sheep, and do use to bring cattle to one Hughes of Warwick.

Thomas Browne, a gentleman's son, about Bewdeley, now the Lord Mountjoy's man, confessed to this examinee that he was one of those that robbed Mr. Hickling; this Browne doth often resort to the Swan in Holborne.

One Evans, in Warwick gaol, knoweth all those that robbed Mr. Thomas Spencer.

Endorsed: Notes of certain bedfellows and lewd houses, taken out of Swayle's examination.

[SIR] THO. EGERTON, LORD KEEPER, to [SIR EDWARD MONTAGU ?].

1597, April 28, Charing Cross.—Sends a petition of John Frithe, of Dublin, which has been commended by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland [Archbishop Loftus], that a matter in Chancery between him and Edward Watson of Rockingham, Esq., might be referred to the person (or persons) addressed. Requests him (or them) to hear the parties, and take order therein, &c.

Signed.

THOMAS MULSHO to ——— (Right Worshipful).

1597, June 3, Northampton.—“I pray God to deliver this country and us from the Welchmen and their followers, and give our countrymen minds like men. For my life I cannot persuade them to keep their money in their purses, but they will either be hiring of men in their place or else bribing to get themselves released. I am at my wits' end, and cannot tell what to do to be rid of this service. We prest and gave six pence a-piece to four score and fourteen men at Ketteringe this day senight, and charged them upon pain of death to appear at Northampton upon Monday, at which time there appeared but three score and six men that the captain would take, and many did not appear at all, but as it seemeth are run away. Whereupon I did send my bailies to seek them up, and they have brought some of them, but yet we lack six men of our number of 75. I beseech your assistance herein, for I am so tired that I know not what further to do without your good help.

“The knights on this side have taken every one a day in the week to be at the training; this is Sir Richard Knightley's day. The captain hath trained them four days, and I have paid the soldiers after 12*d.* a day for four days. I have paid the armourers for 75 curates (sic) furnished full; and for powder and match for our side, 3*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* The captain himself is an honest man, and careful that there be no waste; but he is choleric and hot. They do demand allowance for five officers, viz., a lieutenant, the ancient, two serjeants, and a drum, but as yet I have made them none; but when Sir Richard Knightley doth come, he and I will agree of some rate for them. I doubt we shall not be rid of them this fortnight and more yet to come, for the captain told me yesternight that he thought he should not make his rendezvous till the 24th of this month. I beseech your good help and assistance herein. There was received at Ketteringe on 27th of May 17*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*, and I [omission?] at Ketteringe for prest money 47*s.* I pray you that I may know your pleasure tomorrow, for I mean to come home this night, and leave those men we have with the captain by indenture, till we may make up the rest of our number. . . . Your loving nephew,” &c.

[P. S.] “There is no match to be had to train withall unless Sir Richard Knightley can help us with his store.”

RICHARD [BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH, [SIR] ROBERT WINGFEILDE, and JAMES CLAYPOOLL to ———.

1598, May 18, Peterburroughe.—Have received a warrant for 53*l.* for one year's provision, but for 30 years have paid only 11*l.*, which is as much as the country is able to bear. “For your acquainting . . . the Lord Treasurer and the rest of her Majesty's officers of her honourable Household by petition, that our Hundred may be divided from the rest of the nine Hundreds within the East division, we hope we shall be able to make such an answer as shall befit us.” Sir William Fyttzwilliams and other gentlemen interested are at London.

Signed.

[SIR] EDWARD WATSON to EDWARD MOUNTAGU, Esquire, at Boughton.

1598[-9], March 9, Rockingham.—“Good Cousin,—I will not fail to meet you at the Laund on Tuesday by eight of the clock, or sooner, and so attend you Wedsondaie [Wednesday] and Thursday; and for that purpose I have directed a warrant to the bow-bearer to summon the keepers, regarders, four men, and reeve, with four other men of every town within the bailiwick of Rockingham, to meet you at the White Cross within the West bailiwick by seven of the clock that day, and so consequently to attend you Widsondaie (sic) and Thursday for performance of the service. My wife hopeth you will take a bed at Rockingham for that time. I do not hold it good that the regarders and the rest should meet you at the Laund, for there your own view will suffice, lest that the keeper should think the over number of people would drive the deer into the other walk."

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to his brother [EDWARD MOUNTAGU].

1599, March 30, M[iddle] Temple.—"Yesterday, being Thursday, I went to my Lord Burghlei's to Wymbleton. Being there before his Lordship was come abroad (because I would be sure of him), I walked into the orchards and gardens, whither my Lord came; and after he had perused your letter, he told me what extraordinary means the Lord Mordaunt had used for the keeping of the offices of Farminge and Geddington Woods, insomuch as he had procured many of his friends at Court to deal with him earnestly for them, yea, had procured a message to be sent him from the Queen herself to suffer my Lord Mordaunt to enjoy them; and my Lord said he marvelled the Lord Mordaunt being able to take no more pleasure in them (according as you writ) that he should so much trouble himself and his friends for them. And my Lord said the Queen was informed that the Lord Mordaunt, upon the first hearing that he should part with those offices, fell into a palsy, so as it was thought, if he did not enjoy them, it would put him in danger of his life. . . . But my Lord Burgleigh (sic) wishes you, as his Lieutenant, to view those offices of Farming and Geddington Woods, as well as the rest, though the Lord Mordaunt enjoy them. . . .

"He professes much love and friendship to my father and all his name, and desired me I would come some time over to him to take the air in his dainty fine walks there. Towards dinner time my Lord Zouch came thither; my Lord and my Lady retained me there with them at their little table, whereat but four could sit, and they pleased to use me very familiar kindly both of them. Towards 4 a clock my Lord and my Lady went to take the air in their coach as far as Putney, which being in my way I brought them thither, and then left their Honours."

[SIR] ROBERT WINGFEILDE to his cousin ——— MOUNTAGUE.

1599, July 9, Upton.—"You conceive my letters aright, and I am glad to perceive that you are pleased for Morha[y] and Weston; but yesternight late Mr. Frampton sent me word that the Queen comes not before Tuesday, being the 17th of July, so that you must countermand all again to new days, which I think, as best agreeing with my Lord's [Burghley] mind, must be, instead of Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; so that for Thursday's provision both for Morhay and Weston I will God willing take care of (sic), leaving the rest to your care, which I know will be as much as may be, and God willing my Lord shall know your readiness to do him kindness.

"I did send my men and horses abroad to so many places as I have neither horse nor man to attend me to Northampton, where I would willingly have been; for which my absence I pray you excuse me, and do our poor country this favour. We have many payments for provision and setting forth of soldiers, and the best and greatest part of our country pay willingly, and the rest refuse. Now my request is to you, that you would crave aid by way of warrant from your good father and the rest of the Commissioners for Musters, or else some direction what may be done to get the money ; for in obedience of the last service the constables laid down money, and cannot get it again, as in many other services they are persuaded to do." . . .

THOMAS LORD BURGHLEY to EDWARD MOUNTAGU, Esquire.

1599, July 13.—“I am sorry you had no word in time of her Majesty’s alteration of her day, which makes the bucks you sent, according to the first appointment, to come unseasonable for that time ; but now I thought good to give you to understand that now the day is appointed upon Saturday, the 21st of this month ; so as I pray you let your under officer signify to every officer for a brace of bucks that is under my government, so as half of them be here upon Saturday morning, the other upon Sunday morning, not to fail. I pray you give them warning to send better bucks than these were, for they were neither thorough fat nor sweetly brought, and they sent up a doe fit to be given to dogs, it was so carren (sic) lean. So, since her Majesty hath altered her day, it must cost her [a] double pair of her bucks.”

Copy, certified by Edward Mountagu, “locum tenens.”

THOMAS LORD BURGHLEY to [the JUSTICES of the PEACE in
co. NORTHAMPTON?].

1600, Dec. 4, “from my house in the Strand.”—As a new supply of soldiers is to be sent over into Ireland, and some of them are to be imprested out of co. Northampton, he requests that his servant Younge may have the conduct of them to the port of Westchester as heretofore.

Signed.

QUEEN ELIZABETH to the SHERIFF and [the] COMMISSIONERS FOR MUSTERS in co. NORTHAMPTON.

1600, 43 Eliz., Dec. 5, Palace of Westminster, under the Signet.—“Trusty and well beloved, we greet you well. Although it is well known to the world, that we have very largely expended our own treasure, and often put our loving subjects to the charges of levies, for the suppressing of the Rebellion in Ireland ; wherein for their sake we have been more troubled than for our own, having ever accounted our greatest happiness when our loving subjects are driven to fewest burdens ; yet considering now that it hath pleased God to bless us in this summer service with so good success against those unnatural Rebels, as we do now perceive that if the courses already taken shall be but for a time well followed, we shall neither be forced to trouble our people extraordinarily, nor so much spend our own treasure hereafter ; we have therefore now resolved, upon the earnest suit of our Deputy and Council in that our Kingdom of Ireland, to levy the number of one thousand men, to be sent thither ; wherein notwithstanding we have been so careful to make the burdens easy to our countries [counties?], as we have not only so proportioned the numbers, as we do now command you only to levy within our County of Northampton the number of five and twenty men, but we have also taken such order for their provision of apparel and divers kinds of arms (which ye shall further perceive by letters from our Privy Council) that the country shall even in that kind feel what extraordinary care we have taken to prevent a great part of their expense for such things. In all which considerations, we hope at this time it shall be needless to use much persuasion for the expedition of this service ; though we must earnestly command you this one thing at this time above all others, that seeing the good of so great a service dependeth upon it, ye will precisely take order that those men ye shall send be good and able men, and so conducted, as they may be received at the port where they embark in the same persons ye deliver them, for the abuse is so intolerable, in many places, of those conductors (who suffer them by corruption or negligence to run away) as not only the credit of you (whose care and industry we well accept in all our services) is called in question, but even the country in their charge and the great good of the service betrayed and overthrown. All other particulars we refer to such other letters as ye shall receive from our said Council, how they shall be furnished and ordered in every kind."

Signed at the top.

G. [LORD] HUNSDON to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE.

1602, Aug. 16, Hunsdon.—Thanks for information of the Lord Treasurer's [Lord Buckhurst] giving commission to survey Briggstock Parks, so that the writer might prevent any underhand practices to get them out of his hands. Sends a letter for Mr. Wingfelde on the subject. His wife commends herself to Sir Edward and his Lady, and thanks her for a box of sweetmeats, which she would like to learn how to make.

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to his brother EDWARD MOUNTAGU, Esquire, at Boughton.

1602, Oct. 22, M[iddle] Temple.— . . . "The Irish news is that Tyrone's wife is come in to the Lord Deputy [Mountjoy], who gives her good usage; and Tyrone himself proffers to submit himself if he may be received to mercy by her Majesty, but that point is now in demurrer. Sir Francis Vere was reported to be dead, but liveth, and, as I heard Mr. Secretary [Sir R. Cecil] should say, is as like to live as he." . . .

Seal of arms.

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to his brother EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1602[-3], March 20, M. Temple.—"The world is not mended since your going, but the provision is greater. My Lord Chief Justice [Sir Chris. Wray?] came to the Court upon Saturday night last. All the Council hold together at the Court. I hear no more of Mr. Secretary's [Sir R. Cecil] man about the tithes, but I imagine these times serve not to intend bargains, and it may be they make the greater haste with the sale of the wood to prevent me, but I do not care so I may get my own when the time serveth me. My Lord of Northumberland came to Essex House the same day we were at the wedding with 50 great horse." . . .

Seal of arms.

THOMAS LORD BURGHLEY to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU, K.B., at Boughton.

1603[-4], Jan. 25, Burghley.—Thinks the match and powder belonging to the East division of this county [Northampton] should be transferred from Fotheringhay, which house is now out of the King's possession, to his Majesty's house at Colly-Weston. Means to write to the Commissioners of Musters to certify the numbers trained, and the arms and furnitures charged on this county. "I am sorry to hear of my Lady's weakness."

[SIR] ROBERT SPENCER TO SIR EDWARD MONTAGUE.

1603[-4], Feb. 6, Althroppe.—“I do heartily thank you that you have performed all promises on your part touching our voices for the Parliament; in which also I have no way swerved from our resolutions. In that I perceive you stand upon my consent to my cousin Sir Valentine Knightlie, these shall be to assure you I have given him my absolute voices and furtherance, whom I judge very fit to assist you; yet wishing you both to be respective that (according to the late proclamation) you raise as small numbers as may be for your elections, perceiving none to oppose you.”

Signed.

JAMES MOUNTAGU [Dean of the Chapel Royal] to his brother
SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1604, Nov. 12, Court.—“The King hath given answer to your petition now at length. His Majesty hath referred it to my Lord Chancellor [Ellesmere] and my Lord Treasurer [Earl of Dorset]. I think all is one to you to have my Lord Treasurer or the Judges; but I gave the King thanks, and he told me he had done it, but he said when it was delivered him before he did not understand it; but when things are done by the ordinary officer, then he can acquaint him with the matter and he will be ready to do them. I think the Master of Requests looks for a fee—I suppose some six angels will serve his turn; and then if you please you may bestow somewhat of John Gibb.”

[DEAN] JAMES MOUNTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1605, June 2, Court.—“I see you hear of the progress into Northamptonshire. I would think it fit you made your peace before the King came there, for it will be expected you should attend his Majesty, being an officer in the Forest. If you please to come over to Court, for I think it is late to write, I will move the King, and I doubt not but you shall find him very gracious; for unless I be sure of that, you shall not come to him. I think some Tuesday were fittest, but any day else when you please I think I shall get you access to his Majesty.

“There is no news directly from Spain, but out of France the King hath heard that my Lord Admiral [Earl of Nottingham] and all his company are well in Spain; this month the King looketh for them back again. As soon as any news cometh I will send my Lady Willo’by word.”

[DEAN] JAMES MONTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1605, June 15, Court at Greenwich.—“Yesterday, at the delivery of your letter, his Majesty said nothing. At supper, as soon as he came forth, he called for me, and told me he had read the letter, and said it was ‘pretty well, pretty well,’ repeating it twice. I told him you had a great desire to give his Majesty full satisfaction. He answered it was obscure in one point, and was like an oracle, to be interpreted which way one would. I asked his Majesty what point was obscure. He named that of your opinion that you held the matters not evil in themselves but for offence, but would rely upon his resolutions. He said that [it] would have been more clear to have showed what you did hold, what you do hold, and how far you rely upon his judgment. I told his Majesty you were very loath to enter into any particulars, for you would not play the divine, but only show your own opinion without prejudice to any. He said it was well, and so went to his supper; and so I hope you will hear no more of this matter. I think you long to hear of this matter, and that maketh me send to you tonight."

Note in the margin by Sir Edward Montagu :

"On Monday, the 17th June, my brother Dean supped with me, and showed me a letter of the Earl of Salisbury to him, being [beginning ?] thus :

"Mr. Dean,—I should have some speech with you concerning your brother, whose letter his Majesty hath given to my Lords."

"All the rest of the letter was but when [or where] he should have them (?)."

[SIR] EDWARD WATSON to [SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU].

1605, Nov. 10, Rockingham.—"I have sent you herewith the certificate of the selected band for foot within the East division of the county of Northampton, subscribed by Mr. Cecill and myself; and sent the same to Sir Anthony Mildmay to do the like, but by reason of the hurt of his arm he said he was not able to subscribe it. I pray you subscribe it and acquaint Sir William Fitzwilliams and Sir Robert Wingfield therewith, and so consequently deliver it to the right honorable the Earl of Excester with speed, for he longely (sic) looketh for it, and it is more than high time he had it."

KING JAMES I. to [DR. RAWLYNS].

[1611,] 9 James I., Dec. 12, Palace of Westminster.—Writ of Privy Seal, requiring a loan of 10*l.* to be collected by Sir Thomas Lowe, Knight, and to be repaid within 18 months.

Begins : "Having observed in the precedents and custom of former times that all the Kings and Queens of this Realm, upon extraordinary occasions, have used either to resort to those Contributions which arise from the generality of Subjects, or to the private helps of some well affected in particular by way of loan; In which latter course We being at this time enforced to proceed, for supply of some portions of Treasure for divers public services, and particularly for continuing and increasing our Magazines in some large proportion, in our Realm of Ireland, in our Navy, and in our Forts: (in all which greater sums have been expended of late, both in building and repairing, and in making sundry provisions, than have been in twenty years before:)" &c.

Signed : Fra. Mylles.

This is a printed form in imitation of written characters.

Receipt at foot by Sir T. Lowe for 10*l.* from Mr. Doctor Rawlyns, dated 19 Dec.

KING JAMES I. to [SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE].

[1611,] 9 [James I.], Dec. 15, Palace of Westminster.—Privy Seal for a loan of 20*l.*, to be collected by Sir William Fitzwilliams.

Signed. Fra. Mylles.

This is a printed form.

At the foot is a receipt by Fitzwilliams for 20*l.* from Sir Edward Mountague, 7 Jan. 1611[–12].

[SIR] E[DWARD] M[OUNTAGU] to THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

1611[–12], Jan. 26, Barnwell Castle.—Touching a complaint made by him against Sir Ant[hony] Mildmay, who has withdrawn the charges made against the writer.

Autograph copy.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612, Dec. 13, Lumbert Street.—“The King went on Monday to Royston, and my brother [the Bishop of Bath] with him. . . . The great preparations in Spain are still confirmed, and much doubted he intends us no good.”

[THOMAS CECIL, EARL OF] EXETER, to [SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU].

1612[-13], Jan. 2, Exeter House in the Strand.—Has bestowed the walks of Farminge and Geddington Woods within the Forest [of Rockingham], lately in the keeping of his uncle Mr. Simon Mountagu, upon Sir Thomas Brudenell. The game was well preserved by his uncle. Asks him to meet the keepers and Brudenell to take a view of the number of deer, in schedules.

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to his brother SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Jan. 5, [Middle] Temple.—“This morning, after I had received your letter by Mr. Paine (?), and other papers you sent up to my brother Charles and me, I went to the Bishop of Bath and acquainted him with them. The best resolution we could conclude upon was to procure the King either to speak to the Earl of Exeter, or to signify to him that he did not like you should leave the keeping of those woods.”

[P.S.] “My Lord Cooke and Justice Wynche ride our circuit. The Lord Chief Justice and Doderidge, Cambridgeshire. The Lord Chief Baron and Nycholls, Devonshire. My brother [Sir Henry Mountagu] about London. Warburton and Crooke, Oxfordshire. Altham and Bromley, here” (?).*

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Jan. 20.—“I have had much talk about this Lord’s displacing you, of which he hears so much as the[y] say he is so fretted that he will not endure to have any more speech of it; yet he will not recall what he hath done. . . .

“I am glad you are so well set a-work, and assure yourself, the more effectually you follow it, the greater shall be your thanks both with the King and your country, and believe it is your own faults if you keep them not down.

“Here is not any news stirring, only much preparations at this wedding for masks, whereof there shall be three, one of eight lords and eight ladies, whereof my cousin An Dudley on[e], and two from the Inner Courts, who the[y] say will lay it on.”

Seal, a crest (an eagle’s head?).

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Jan. 27, M[iddle] Temple.—“When I came to London the news was fresh in every man’s mouth of the letters that were sent down for the disarming of the Papists, but [I?] thought they would effect little in that the Recusants had some notice of such an intention. What you have done in Northamptonshire I hear not. The same day

* These are mostly the names of Justices of the two Benches and Barons of the Exchequer. Sir Henry Mountagu was Recorder of London.

I came to town there came forth a proclamation against the wearing of short pistols. There are they say many pocket pistols of five and six inches, either made here or sent over; it should seem they are made for no good. Many devilish devices no doubt are practised, but I hope God will subvert them all.

"There is no matter of news stirring here, but great preparation for the making of fire-works and masks against the marriage. This house is rated 50s. a bencher, 30s. a barrister, and 15s. the rest, towards the Maske. The Lords have the marriage night, this house and Lyncolne's Inn Monday night, and Graye's Inn and the Inner Temple Tuesday night. Ned Palmer, our cousin, is one for our house.

[P.S.] "Justice Williams is dead."

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Jan. 27, Lumbert Street.— . . . "Here is great good guard now kept in this town; every night an alderman and every householder watch all the night in their own persons, and this last night my Lord Mayor began. Robin Dixon hath made your composition with Mr. Chambers for 8*l.*, and the charge under the seal will be some 40*s.*; which so soon as he hath gotten he will send you. Of Judge Willyams' death I think you have heard."

Seal.

[SIR] E[DWARD] M[OUNTAGU] to his brother [BISHOP JAMES MOUNTAGU].

1612[-13], Jan. 30.—"Think me not slow in answering your letter, one of the pleasingest that ever I received, to understand his Majesty's gracious good opinion of me and favour towards me. And seeing I shall have so good a back, I will not fear to stand out with my Lord of Exeter, to hold in my hands the offices till his Majesty and the world may see how unkindly he hath dealt with me. . . . To receive such an affront at his hands on whom my Lord hath bestowed them troubles me not a little. The dishonour is not small to my Lord to bestow them on such a one. Had not there come a damp by reason of the Lords' letters of disarming recusants and ill affected in religion, the jollity of that side would have grown great upon this trifle." . . .

Autograph draft.

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Jan. 30, M[iddle] Temple.—"Mr. Whitmore the elder spake with me very earnestly this week in Westminster Hall, that I would write to you to take out your grant for the three Hundreds. . . . The King is come to town this night."

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 6, Lumbert Street.— . . . "The Bishop [of Bath] thinks it best to move the King to send my Lord Hay to my Lord of Exeter, to let him know that his Majesty doth not like to have you turned out of them (sic).* . . . If my Lord of Exeter had gone with the King now to the Instalment of the Paulsgrave, there my brother the Bishop would have talked at large of it with him. I hear Sir Thomas Brudenell is very angry at you for taking away his armour, but it may be, when the letters come to confine them, as they say you will have shortly, it may be you may anger them better.

* "The offices," referred to in other letters.

"I think you have letters already for the general musters; so as you see here is preparation for wars as well as rumours, but it is thought now the war will be turned upon the old question for Cleve, which may breed good, for upon the partaking about it all the Protestant Princes of Germany are combined in league with all the rest of the Protestant Princes of Christendom, which if that come to pass, I hope we shall have less intermingling betwixt Protestants and Papists, and so sever the sheep from the goats, which God grant if it be his will.

"They say the King of Spain will come down into the Low Countries, and attempt to make his second son Emperor. A good peace the[y] say is concluded in Denmark, and yet we hear nothing of my Lord Willoughby. The Poland King is driven to most miserable distress by the Muscovite, discontenting his kingdom with the Jesuits. In France they are arming and siding, all which I hope will turn to our peace.

"Here is the greatest preparations for shows by water and land that I think hath been seen in England, against this marriage, and God blessing them they shall home about mid April. All the Judges' circuits are altered, and you shall have my Lord Cooke [Sir E. Coke]. My brother [Sir Henry] rides hereabouts."

Seal.

JAMES [MOUNTAGU, BISHOP OF] BATH AND WELLS, to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 7, Court.—"I could have wished I had received your answer and known in what state this matter had stood while the King was at Royston, for there his Majesty's mind is free, and not so oppressed with multitude of other occasion[s] but that he will find time to talk of his hunting. Here I neither have the like opportunity nor the King the like affections to these matters, but as occasion shall serve, and if need require, I think I shall obtain of the King to send a message to my Lord of Excester that he would like better to have you continue his Keeper than any other; and upon any such message from the King it may be my Lord will be better advised to let you tarry in them. If I can find opportunity I will show his Majesty one letter you sent, wherein my Lord doth in a manner promise them to you, and takes you for his officer. I hear my Lord himself doth not much joy in that he hath done, and in truth it was not well done, as I think. I shall tell him at Winsor whether (sic) I am going, and his Lordship will be there too, as I hear. I wish you had sent up no copy of my letter, for both my Lord of Excester hath it, and it may be some others that may do both you and me harm, for what the King speaks he would not hear of again. For the woods I hear nothing, neither do I think anything will be done; they are too busy about other matters. Let them seek you in it if they will, for it was their entreaty at the first, and so shall be still for me.

"Your periwike made by the water I suppose is too coarse matter for these times, where now there is nothing but bravery, and the King, having had of them already, will little care for them now."

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 9, Lumbert Street.— . . . . “Mr. Rashley asked me whether you determined still to hold them (sic), and I said I thought you would not yield them up till your year came out, at which he said he thought his Lord [the Earl of Exeter] would not stick. But now is such a busy time for public sports as no man can think of his particular; yet I am over shoes in mortar amongst bricklayers repairing my London house, against winter.”

Seal.

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 11, M[iddle] Temple.—“My brother Charles being with me this afternoon since I received your letter, I perceive you stroke [struck] upon the forbearance of the money since the first offer to you. A little bone sometimes much troubles one, which is better out than stick there still. I would not have you let it stick so; if I might advise you, occasions are bald behind. . . . For the Forest businesses I can write you little. I hear the Earl sticks close to his promise. The Bishop of Bath is not unmindful of it. What he can effect I know not; he came yesterday back with the King from Wyndsour.

“This day the Count Henrick arrived here. There are five Lords Commissioners appointed to go with the Princes Palentyne—the Duke of Lenox, the Earl of Arundell, the Viscount Lisle, the Lord Zouche, the Lord Harington; and a great army raised in the Low Countries for the conveying of the Prince to his own country upon their arrival there. Here is now all preparing for shows; tomorrow they begin; God send them well ended. I shall not forth of this town this next week.” . . .

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 11, Lumbert Street.— . . . . “My brother [the Bishop of Bath] says he told the King of it (sic) again at Windsor, and his Majesty wonders still at it; but now amid these sports there is not time to speak of it, but I will prompt him on still. Since your cousin Rashley hath done nothing, I have parted with him with fair words only, unless you be of other mind. My Lord and Lady Zouch the[y] say are set down to go with the Lady Elizabeth; he I think will be glad of it, but I believe she shall rest where she is.”

Seal.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [SIR E. MONTAGU and others?].

1612[-13], Feb. 13, Court at Whitehall.—“Whereas we understand that in the execution of the commission for the Aid to marry the Lady Elizabeth, his Majesty’s eldest daughter, you have proceeded to take the same Aid of spiritual persons within that county, in respect of their spiritual livings in the King’s Book, grounding yourselves (as it seemeth) upon an article in your instructions, wherein directions (sic) is given to levy the same upon lands of Bishops, Deans and Chapters, Colleges, and other spiritual corporations; for the clearing whereof we have thought fit to let you know that the words of that article do extend no further, nor have other meaning, than that you should compound with spiritual persons only for their temporalities, and that you cannot understand, by any due construction, that he that holdeth only a spiritual benefice is a spiritual corporation: And therefore you may repay the sunis taken of them for their spiritual livings, and forbear to compound with any other of them hereafter for the same."

Signed: G. Cant., Lenox, Notingham, T. Suffolke, W. Knollys, E. Wotton, Jul. Caesar.

SIDNEY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 13, M[iddle] Temple.—“For the business I have written to you of, I shall talk more with you of that when I see you. Upon Thursday at night, after supper, was the great fire work (sic). I hear nobody admire them, though surely they were chargeable things. This afternoon hath been the sea fight with some 15 or 16 pynesses [pinnaces] and half a score galleys, who passed up by the Court, and so to take a Turkish castle built near Lambeth, which hath been no small charge, if to no great purpose. Now the masking sports shall follow. I hoped to have heard the Bishop preach, but there is such order taken for that as I despair of it. None shall be allowed to come in but with tickets from my Lord Chamberlain [Suffolk].”

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 16, Lumbert Street.— . . . . “Of these great stirs at Court I cannot tell how to write; the[y] are so many, all which you shall have shortly in print; neither have I been a beholder of any of them, only I saw them married in the caple (sic), which was in English, and the Paulsgrave answered to all the words in the Common Prayer Book in English very distinctly. The Inner Court gentlemen have pleased the King exceedingly with their brave masks.”

Seal.

JAMES [MOUNTAGU, BISHOP OF] BATH AND WELLS, to SIR EDWARD MONTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 18, Court.—“I made no doubt to have procured his Majesty to have told my Lord of Excester [Thomas Cecil] of his dealing with you. But my brother Charles hath not only shewed my letter unto my Lord, but hath given him a copy of it, which copy my Lord hath spread to all his friends, and hath delivered a copy of it to my Lord Hay to show the King; so but that I find the King more gracious, it would have put me to a great deal of business. In the meantime it hath set the whole family upon me, but I weigh that but little. But it hath made that I cannot do you so much good as I would, and therefore you must first blame yourself; and I utterly condemn my brother Charles for a more weak part I never heard of; for this will make the King more wary what he sayeth when he shall hear of it thus again. There is no meddling in a matter when men will mar their own business.

“This marriage,<sup>2</sup> God be thanked, is well past, and I hope shall prosper for all the threats they have made against it. The young Princes do well, and are very merry upon it. Presently after Easter they shall for Germany.”

Seal of arms.

SIR HENRY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 18, Midtempel [Middle Temple].—“I am sure my brother Charles advertises you of occurrences here; his leisure and intelligences may better do it than I. My Lord of Exeter chafes; I tell them we set it as light (sic), and I tell the Bishop [of Bath], if he stir not the King in it, I will. Your proud parties that quarrelled [with] the proceedings of the Commissioners in searching them and taking their armour, will find ere long that they shall not be backed, nor those blamed that did but their duty. I have taken the occasion to have them better known to the King and the Lords than before they were; and for the indictment against the Lady Tresham, to have sent back again" (sic).

* Of Princess Elizabeth.

"Of these nuptial solemnities you shall hear enough by others.

[P.S.] "You shall have for your Judges my Lord Cooke [Sir E. Coke] and Justice Winche. I am to go here about London."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1612[-13], Feb. 24.— . . . "The King is gone to Royston, and the Bishop [of Bath] with him, but I have sent him your letter. . . . Your old acquaintance my Lord Cooke will satisfy you, I believe, better at the sises, with whom the Serjeant [Sir Henry Montagu] hath had speech. I think I shall have a full loading for Goram's cart this time, and therefore he will hardly bring your wine now. I have bought a bargain of loaf sugar at 14*d.* the 11*b.*; if you will have some you shall."

Seal.

SIR HENRY MOUNTAGU TO HIS BROTHER SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU, K.B., at Boughton.

1612[-13], Feb. 26, Ritsted (?).—"Though troubles arise by performing services for the King and your country, you know to set them light (sic). For the Baronet and his braving, I think he is become cooler than he was, for he finds not himself maintained as perhaps he hoped. But now my Lord of Exeter is his countenance, and I find it is there interpreted as if you did much for revenge of an unkindness, wherein I have told my Lord your particular, as the King's service otherwise is much wronged. The King hath given express directions that new letters be written to second the former, and that such as have wives Recusants, or of their families that repair not to church, their armour to be taken, though the m[aste]r come for fashion. The Bishop of Bath and the Earl [of] Exeter must chide when they meet, for I see he stomachs much the letter that my brother Charles showed to his man. I told him plainly brothers that love are all concerned when one is unkindly dealt with. We have ever honoured his house, but lived of ourselves, therefore free to tell you we think the Earl will needs impute a neglect in you that would not write or send to him to have the grant to yourself, neither while my uncle lived nor after he was dead.

"For Sir Thomas Brudenell's speeches, if they have been public, and particularly against yourself, I would not have them digested (sic) yet not followed by yourself, but with a seeming to neglect them as they are applied to you; but as they concern you and others for executing a service commanded, the King's interest is in that business, and it would be followed in some public course.

"My Lord Cooke I know will give a good countenance to gentlemen in those causes, and in particular I have told him of this party."

[THE EARL OF] EXETER to SIR EDWARD WATSON, SIR THOMAS TRESHAM, and the rest of the Verderers and other officers of H.M. Forest of Rockingham.

1612[-13], March 1, Exceter House in the Strand.—“Whereas (sithence the death of Mr. Simon Mountague) I have assigned the keeping of his Majesty’s Game unto Sir Thomas Brudenell, Knight Baronet, in the two walks of Farminge and Geddington Woodes within the Forest of Rockingham, whereupon it is very expedient, and so required by order of the Forest, that a view should be taken of the said Game before it be delivered over to the charge of the said Sir Thomas: I have therefore thought good (the time of the year serving very fitly for it) to require you and every of you whom it doth concern to appoint a time certain, to be made known to all the keepers in those walks, that they give their attendance and assistance for performance of th’ aforesaid service, and then and there to make true and perfect certificates (to be indented) of the number of all the said Game in general, to be distributed in the said certificates, by setting down how many of every several kinds shall be found in the said walks; th’ one of which indentures to be delivered to the said Sir Thomas Brudenell, another to be kept by yonrselves, or delivered to the steward of the Swannymont (sic) Court, and the third to be sent up to me.”

Copy (?).

SIR HENRY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

[1612-13 ?].—“I perceive by your letter the passage of things with you: it is well carried. I have acquainted some of the Lords, who are well pleased that my Lord Cooke so proceeded with Sir Thomas Brudenell. And the account of your proceedings is well accepted, but my Lord Chancellor [Ellesmere] as yet hath not been at the Board since the King came last, but I hope will be shortly; he could tell me of Mr. Sherleye’s braving of some of the Justices, and I told him of Sir Thomas Brudenell’s fashions used with you. You in particular are much beholding to my Lord, and the rest of the Justices, and so I told him you did all acknowledge his favour in so far regarding your credits as to hear your answers before any credence should be given to their complaint, and indeed that course moved from him. 1267

“For my Lord of Exeter, I think out [of] his churlish disposition he be now set against you for the Forest business, but I perceive the King doth not yet forget it, by some passages I heard of late. Waiting upon the King last night, and giving him account of some circuit proceedings, I perceive him well pleased that matters be thoroughly prosecuted against Recusants at the next term. I will break with him touching those brave gentlemen of Northamptonshire.”

SIR HENRY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

[1612-13 ?] Wednesday.—“I perceive you discontented in that some had opinion was of your long forbearance. It is true they [the Council ?] thought you too slack, and it was hardly reported of your suffering them [Recusants ?] at Pitchley; but after the blow you gave at Newton, all was well again, and I can assure you the King thinks well of your doing. I talked with him of that action not long since. Sir Anthony Mildmay had the start of you, but since there is a good construction made of your service. We dwell here in Parliament still; the 1607

Bill of Hostile Laws is not come back again from the Lords, and here rise new troubles every day by idle speeches. The Lords have refused to join in the petition touching the Spanish causes, and showed us their reasons of the inconvenience. We hope you are and will be quiet now in Northamptonshire, and then we shall see you here."

PRINCESS ELIZABETH, [Electress Palatine,] to SIR RAPHE WINWOOD, Ambassador in the Low Countries.

[1613 ?] April 18, Heidelberg.—"Good Sir Raphe Winwood,—I have sent you a letter for his Majesty, which is all at this time I have to say, only that I shall never forget how much I have ever been beholding to you; it shall ever bind me to rest

"Your affectionate friend,

"ELIZABETH."*

Two small seals, over green silk.

The SAME to the SAME.

1613, Aug. 28, Heidelberg.—"My Lord, I have found you so ready to do me any pleasure, that I have chosen you to ask your advice and counsel in a business of mine. It will be long to tell you all the reasons and subject of it, but I have fully instructed Tom Roe with [it], from whom I pray receive it to your care, and advertise me what you shall think in your judgment fit for me to do, and after I make no doubt but to have also your furtherance in effecting it. You shall ever find me grateful and ready to acknowledge the courtesy I have and shall receive from you, and so I rest

"Your friend,

"ELIZABETH."*

"Sir, I thank you for the letter I received, which hath made me the willinger to employ you."

Two small seals, one broken.

[SIR] ROBERT COTTON to his brother[-in-law] SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE.

[1614,] July 24.—. . . "Of this sudden interview of these two great Princes † I doubt not but you have heard before this letter shall come to you. Only thus much I can assure you, that his arrival was so secret that there was no knowledge of him until [he] came unto the present [or presence ?] at Somersett House. He professeth no other occasion than the affection of a brother to see his sister, neither hath as yet made any other overture. His stay he intendeth but until Friday, and it is thought the King and Queen will accompany him to the sea-side. If there be any other grounds of his coming you shall hear by the next messenger I can send by."

Portion of a seal of arms.

ROBERT HARLOWE to his cousin SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE, one of H.M. Deputy Lieutenants.

1614, Aug. 10.—"I have endeavoured to know the certainty whether Mr. Fardenando and Mr. John Cotton be dead, and I find it for a certainty that Mr. Fardenando is, but it was a question whether Mr. John went in the Clove for Japan, or whether he was left at Banton.

* The signature is written in imitation of Queen Elizabeth's.

† James I. and the King of Denmark. The latter came to England in July 1606 also.

"I have spoken with one that came home of late from thence, that doth affirm for certain, that he did see him at Banton, after that the Clove went from thence to Japan; and this man went to the Molocus (sic), and at his return to Banton again (as he saith) he did there hear that Mr. John Cotton was dead.

"The expedition that carried the Percian ambassador is come home laden with pepper, and met the Clove in the road going into Banton at her coming forth; so we look every day when we shall hear of her arrival in England, and then I shall more fully inform you of the certainty thereof."

(The rest of this letter relates to a proposed site for the almshouse for widows in the parish of Iping.)

Seal of arms.

The EARL OF EXETER to [the DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS in
CO. NORTHAMPTON?].

1615, Nov. 30, Exeter House in the Strand.—"You shall receive hereincluded a letter from my very good Lord the Lord Treasurer [Suffolk], upon complaint made unto me, for staying of such as have cunningly abused his Lordship by putting into their grants the cutting of such skantlings of trees as in time would have been the utter destruction of the Forest; which his Lordship foreseeing, hath thereupon directed his letters unto you for the staying at this time any farther proceedings therein until other order be taken by his Lordship. I pray you therefore, and every of you, according to the place you hold there under his Majesty," &c.

Signed.

SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, March 26, M[iddle] Temple.—"You hear how that God hath taken to himself my brother Walter Mountagu; * he hath broken the ice to us, and we must follow after. His Lady sent up his man Mr. Isham to the Bishop of Bath and me, who it seems he hath named his executors, together with one Mr. Jones, who married Mrs. Castle, his wife's gentlewoman.

"The same day when this news was brought, I was at the Court, being Tuesday last, the 19th of this month, and was that day presented to his Majesty, who gave me gracious usage.

[P.S.] "Last Sunday I saw my Lord Zouche at Court, and very well."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, April 25, Lumberd Street.— . . . "My Lord of Rutland and Sir George Villers are made Knights of the Garter. The arraignments are put off till a week after the term, and the writs are gone out to warn the Lords to be ready at that time, so as sure they say there will be no more delays. There is committed (and some say to the Tower) Sir Robert Car, of the Prince's Bed-chamber, and Mr. Gib, of the King's Bed-chamber, which were both the only favourites of the Earl of Somerset's."

Seal of arms.

* Sir Walter Montagu. Burke gives the date of his death as "1615."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, May 1.— . . . “The arraignments hold on the 15th of the next month, and the towns of Flushing and the Brill are to be delivered up presently. My Lord Lile hath a good composition for himself and son, who are going over. There will be no solemn riding to the Instalment of the new Knights of the Garter; the King will save them that charges (sic), and carry them thither himself as in a hunting journey.”

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, May 15.— . . . “Here is now such a hurrying to Westminster Hall to see the great lady [the Countess of Somerset] arraigned as it distracts everybody’s mind from anything else. It is thought she will make but a short day’s work of it, she hath made such a liberal confession already; but it is thought tomorrow the Earl [of Somerset] will be upon stout terms, if the presence of his great auditory put him not besides his text. But of these things you shall hear more the next week.

“I writ I think to you before of the death of the Earl of Shrousbury [Gilbert Talbot], who hath given all that ever he could from the Earl [Edward Talbot] his brother.

“The best Carr is dead already, for here is news come that Sir Edward Carr of Lincolnshire, our cousin, brake his neck with a fall of his horse.” . . .

“Sir William Slingsby yesterday married our cousin Sir Steven Borde’s daughter.”

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

[1616, May.]—“The Bishop of Bath is now at Greenwich with the King, but as soon as I can I will deliver your letter, and let him see the others also. The putting off of the arraignments spent much money and prevented most men’s expectations; but yesternight my Lord Chief Justice came by my door and told one of my next neighbours that for certain the[y] would now hold on Friday and Saturday. There was never such preparation in Westminster Hall for scaffolds as there is for this business. The news of Sir Edward Carr is false, and there was not any such matter; he is very well. I have been a day or two out of town, so as I have not heard of any other news. Mounceer (sic) Shamburgh when he is in town I hear lies near me, whom I intend to visit, if I may scape so.”

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, June 26.—“Since my last here hath happened no alteration. Yesterday the King had the matter betwixt my Lord Chancellor [Ellesmere] and my Lord Cooke in hearing for the præmunire, but what was done I have not yet heard; only I saw my Lord Cooke and his Lady come very heavily from thence. Sir Robert Rich puts hard at them for the extent of his land. For the King’s speech, you will have it shortly set forth in print by my brother Serjeant [Sir Henry Montagu] at the King’s appointment; but of all the news here you will now have them at large by my brother Sidney.” . . .

[SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU] to his brother [BISHOP JAMES MOUNTAGU?].

1616, Aug. 10, Boughton.—“Because I could not look for your presence and my Lord Zouche’s at the baptising of my boy, I thought not good to defer it so long as the 11th of August, but on St. James his day [25 July] I performed it, having for you Sir Lewis Wattson, for my Lord Zouche Sir Will. Tate, and for my mother my wife’s mother; and I chose that day rather than the Sabbath, because of the great company that came in; for I was so much beholding to all the knights, gentlemen, and other of my friends in sending and joying with me in this great blessing, that I could not but in thankfulness invite them, and I had most of their company.

“If that work had not been done, I could not so quietly have attended the King, who passed through Weekely (but came not hither) to Gedington Woods on Monday, the 29th of July, and killed there quickly a very fat buck; which, when it was dead, his Majesty called for me, and bade me send it to my mother, and tell her it was a buck of his killing and my keeping, and that would please her well.

“From thence he went to Farming Woods, where he had royal sport. When he was at Morehay, I had above half an hour’s speech with him, hand to hand, wherein he entered into discourse of my mother and all us brethren too long to write of. He lamented the loss of my brother Walter; and amongst other talk he told [me] that [he] wondered at what you had told him of my mother’s working, being stone blind. At the end of his talk, I told his Majesty I must needs tell him of one great blessing God had given me of late in sending me a son. He was glad at it, and prayed heartily for him. I told his Majesty that I had committed the bringing of him up to you, that he might be hereafter the fitter for his service; whereupon he hugged me to him and gave me two or three taps of the head, with great joeundness; and so we parted that night.

“On Saturday, when I took my leave of his Majesty, having gotten a fine handkerchief of my mother’s hemming, I told his Majesty that I had brought him the wonder to see; and he presently called for it, and showed it to all the Lords, and told them of another wonder I had told him of, that one nurse with one milk did suckle six of us. He gave me the handkerchief again. I besought his Majesty that he would keep it. He sware by God that he would, and so took it; and I took my leave of him.

“Next to the King, I applied myself to the great favourite the Master of the Horse [George Viscount Villiers], from whom I received so many favours that I bestowed a fine horse on him, which he took very kindly, and I think him very well bestowed. And thus have I troubled you with the passages here.” . . .

Autograph draft.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, Aug. 21, Lumberd Street—. . . “If I might advise you, I would wish you to sell your wool as soon as you could now it is at a good price, for here is certain word come that the Low Countries have banished all our dyed cloths, and set such a mult (sic) on the white as will mar the trade, and the Lords they say are at a pose what to do with cockin (sic). Here reigns such a cruel ague, which dispatches many quickly.”

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, Sept. 11, Lumberd Street.—“It is good hearing that your neighbours and you can be content to look friendly on one another, though I think there is neither of you will be any whit the securer; it is not unlike but your Court favours have begotten you that courtesy, from [?] old Burleigh’s direction to have a friend in Court, lest a man be like a hop without a pole.

“I hope by this my brother Serjeant and you have quieted your thoughts of each other, which I should be heartily glad of. Here is now a hot alarm again that he shall be Chief Justice. They say the King continues his displeasure to my Lord Cooke still, and that he shall certainly out. My Lord Hubbert* is now left alone in the Common Place, for the[y] say Justice [Humphrey] Winch is dead, and [Peter] Warborton is put off. My brother Sidney is here, but you know he is so reserved as none shall be of his counsel, but I hear Nanton is liker to have it than he. There is like to be much troubles (sic) in France. I have sent for your plumber, but he is at Sturbridg fair; I have left word that he must needs be with you the next week.”

SIR SYDNEY MOUNTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1616, Oct. 29, M[iddle] Temple.—“One was with me this evening who told me my nephew Wylloughbie [Montagu Bertie]† was sent for to be a Knight of the Bath. My Lord Chamberlain [Pembroke] was moved therein—made some difficulty of it; and my Lord Treasurer [Suffolk] yielded to it. My Lord Chief Justice [Coke] remains as he did—hath not yet come to Westminster; if he remove, there is now speech the Lord Chief Baron [Tanfield] shall go into the King’s Bench, and the Attorney of the Wards into the Exchequer, and Sir Wauter Franc. Moore (sic) to be Attorney of the Wards; but reports fly here as they do in the country—find no place to rest in.

“I hear of some certainty that upon Monday last there came a warrant to the Privy Seal for the Surveyorship of the Liveries to Sir Robert Nanton, but it is stayed at the Great Seal, it may be, till the King come, whom we expect here upon Thursday. The Queen came to Somerset House upon Monday.” . . .

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU TO SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

[1616?].—“For your venture in the East India Company I know not what to say. They say they have now reduced it to have the money brought in, in eight years, so as it may be your youngest daughter may live to see it come in again; but you have trusted a sure card for the doing of it, who will see all things done punctually. It’s thought the King might do well to call to all the underwriters for a supply, for those that are daily sent for to the Council table to lend are very backward. Your money upon sheep rather than in ships I think is the better adventure, for I have received lately from your wool-men 200*l.* for you, and one of them said he would have brought in 40*l.* more, but yet I hear not of him. The King holds his journey at his time; his Star Chamber speech you shall not I think see printed. My Lord

* Sir Henry Hobart, C.J. Common Pleas.

† Son of Robert Lord Willoughby of Eresby, afterwards Earl of Lindsey.

Chancellor [Viscount Brackley] is very sick they say, and would resign. Mr. Attorney [Sir F. Bacon] is deeply embarked for it, on whom the rumour now goes. Baron Altum* is dead."

[The BOARD OF GREEN CLOTH to the JUSTICES in co. NORTH-AMPTON?]

1616 [--17], Jan. 8, Whitehall.—“Whereas we were contented the last year to recall his Majesty’s Purveyor out of your county of Northampton, requiring him to forbear his further proceeding in taking of butter; which we did not out of any the suggestions and pretences in your letter sent unto us, but merely taking [in]to consideration his Majesty’s intent of coming the summer following in Progress into that county: Now, forasmuch as there is a necessity for his Majesty to be furnished with a proportion in that kind, and that his Majesty intends not coming this year into those parts, we have sent down this bearer with his Majesty’s commission for collecting of two thousand weight [20 cwt.] of butter in the said county; which proportion, being so small, we assure ourselves you will take as a favour, and yield him your best furtherance for his assistance.”

Signed: Lenox, E: Wotton, T: Edmondes, Ro: Banastre, Rich: Coxe, Jo: Leigh, Tho: Merrye (?), Henrie Bell.

SIR SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to his uncle WILLIAM MOUNTAGU, Esq., at Little Okeley.

1616[–17], March 17.—“My mother’s fits of ague had left her a little while, but this day she hath had a sore fit again, and I now more fear her than heretofore. We expect the Bishop of Winchester here upon Wednesday night, so as upon Thursday I think I shall not fail to be at home, for the King passeth not by this way till Friday. He set forth from London upon Friday last, and stayed at Thiballs till this day, and God willing will be at Apthorpe upon Friday next, and Saturday at night at Burley on the Hill.

“You hear Sir Fr. Bacon is Lord Keeper, Sir Henry Yelverton Attorney General, and Mr. Coventry, the late Recorder of London, Solicitor, and knighted. It is thought also the Lord Admiral [Earl of Nottingham] will give up his places, and my Lord of Buckingham shall be Justice in Eyre on this side Trente, as he is already of the other side Trente.”

[SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU] to his brother [BISHOP JAMES MOUNTAGU?].

1617, April 23, Boughton.—“I could not let pass this so convenient a messenger without letting you understand how it hath fared with some of your friends since you went. My brother the Judge [Sir Henry Montagu], who was generally reported to have been dead, fell into a great sickness at Exeter in his returning out of his circuit, and was much doubted for a week, but thanks be to God I hear he is well recovered again, and purposeth to be at London about the end of this week. My brother Sir Charles, who hasted unto him, and rid in two days a hundred miles, so lamed his arm, not being well before, that he was fain to go to the Bathe, from whence I had a letter from him that he had found much good, and purposeth to be in the country before the term.

---

* Sir James Altham, Baron of the Exchequer.

"Myself have had five fits of an ague, and came not abroad till Easter Day. I thank God I am of the mending hand, but yet not in statu quo prius. My mother I had well hoped had lost her ague, but I hear she has fallen into it again within these four or five days, but not into any senseless fits, as formerly, so that I hope she may wear it out. Thus you see God his gentle correction and merey towards us, which I hope we shall all make good use of; and though of his goodness he hath yet spared us, yet it hath pleased him to lay a great cross upon me, my family and tenants, in taking away from us our worthy and good minister, Mr. Stone. I pray God I may get a good one in his stead.

"All other of your friends here for aught that I know do well, and the Doctor (whom I pray you remember if any occasion fall for his preferment) can tell you how your godson thrives."

Autograph draft.

JAMES [MOUNTAGU, BISHOP OF] WINCHESTER, to [SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU].

1617[-18], Feb. 1, Court.—"My brother Sidney is now installed in his place;* much ado to get in, for there is such a striving to wait as I was driven to struggle for him. I hope he will be careful to do well in it, and then all is well. You write news, for I hear of no Barons, only a report that my Lord Chancellor [Bacon] shall have the making of one. If you have 10,000*l.* in your purse, I think, if you know not how to bestow it better, you may have a barony for it. But you speak so of another world as I think you look for no more honour in this. . . .

"We have made a new Controwler this day, Sir Henry Carey, and Mildmay master of the Jewel House. Who shall be Chancellor of the Duchy I know not; the opinion is strongest for Sir Humphrey May, if the King do not annex it to the Exchequer. Here is an Ambassador to invite the Queen and the Prince to be gossips to my Lady Elizabeth's child."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1618, May 21, Winchester House.—. . . "Yours by Paine is come to my hands, and it seems that's now [happened?] that we have had cause long to fear. My Lord Chief Justice [Sir Henry Montagu] says the King hath commanded him to attend him on Tuesday and Wednesday next, so as he cannot come, but if please God I will be at Barnewell on Tuesday night."

SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU to his brother [SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU].

1618, July 15, Northt. [Northampton].—"I have received letters from the Earl of Exeter, our Lord Lieutenant, to pay Captain Fisher, our muster-master, his pension set down for this part of the county, which comes to 25*l.*; and therefore I pray you that upon the receipt of this letter you would pay to the bearer hereof so much, taking a note of the receipt for my better discharge to the country."

Receipt at foot by Theo. (?) Rashleygh of 25*l.* from Sir Charles Mountagu.

* He was Master of Requests.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1618, July 21, Winchester House.—“This day, about 7 of the clock in the morning, God took my brother [the Bishop of Winchester] to his rest. When breath was gone, I went to look for his will, with my nephew Ray and two or three others, the copy whereof I herewith send you; and finding his Majesty to have a legacy, I went presently to my Lord of Buckingham, who carried me into the King’s bed-chamber, where his Majesty made me read part of it, which his Majesty was much moved at, [and] used me graciously, which refreshed my sorrows; and before his Majesty I gave my Lord of Buckingham his legacy.

“Now my care is how to perform the rest, which God willing I will do to the uttermost of all he left, and add of my own to it if there be cause, for no way his estate will amount to above 3,000*l.*; but my first care is to dispose of his body at Bath, as he desires. This night I have interred his bowels, which must be done of necessity, and I have determined if God please to solemnise his funerals at Bath on the 20th day of August, if you and the rest of my brothers so please. If I could show all my reasons, well it cannot be done before, nor well after, for on the 29th of August I must of necessity wait on the King at Farnham, and continue a great charge the [there?] still in building; and I know not but September and October I shall be busied in the bishopric business; so as I beseech you and my brother Sir Sidney send me your opinions and resolutions, whether you will be there, and how you approve of the time; and I beseech you bear with me in this over-load of cares, sorrows, and business if I omit what were needful more to write, for it is not the least of my woe that I want your helps and advice.

“I was by this day when his Majesty gave this bishopric [of Winchester] to the Bishop of Eley, and they say he shall be Dean of the Chapel too. At Court I heard a buzz of much news; my Lord Treasurer [Suffolk] hath left his Staff; but I pray bear with me at this time, and return me your answers as soon as you can.”

SIR SYDNEY MOUNTAGU to his uncle WILLIAM MOUNTAGU, at Little Okeley.

1618, July 23, Hemington.—“I came hither to Hemington the end of the last week. Yesterday, being Tuesday, about noon, hither came a footman of the Bishop of Winchester’s, sent by my brother Sir Charles, to acquaint my brother Sir Edward and myself of the death of the Bishop, who departed this life upon Monday last about seven a clock in the morning. He hath given away little in legacies; it seemeth he thought himself not rich. He hath made my brother Sir Charles his executor, and given him the residue of his goods unbequeathed; and hath appointed his body to be buried in the great church at Bathe (which is set down to be upon the 20th of August next), and 400*l.* allowed by him for his funeral, and 300*l.* for a monument. A gold cup of 100*l.* he hath given to the King; a ring of seventeen diamonds to the Marquis of Buckingham; to his three brothers cups of 10*l.* a-piece; and amongst four or five of his servants some seven or eight score pounds in money; the residue of his servants two years’ wages. His lands he hath settled by conveyance amongst his brothers.” . . .

SIR HENRY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1618, Aug. 6.—“I have received your letter and the note that imports the miscarriage of the new Justice of Peace. It was very insolent, if the information be true, and I would wish that by as many as can truly and fitly testify of his carriage it were made appearing under their hands. It is not the King's intention to have the liberty he allows turned into abuse; neither is such a boldness to be borne with for one Justice to expose others in such a fashion. I sent for Mr. Attorney [Yelverton] and acquainted him he[re]with. My purpose is, when I come in the country, to call Mr. Doctor [Williams?] to question for it; and if I find ground enough, at the King's returning we mean to acquaint the King with it, and have order given to Mr. Attorney to prosecute it. I purpose on Saturday to be at Kimolton; the next week I hear you purpose to come up to London; if you call [for] me there, we will come up together."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1618, Nov. 11, Winchester House.—"I have talked with my Lord Chief Justice [Sir Henry Montagu] about Doctor Williams, who says you writ to my Lord Hubbert [Sir Henry Hobart] and desired to have him deal in it, whom he finds not cold in it, but if you will have him do anything in it he will not only acquaint the King with it, but send for him to answer it here.

I am now a petitioner to the Lords, who would have me pay in all the money in my hands, and then sue to the King for what he ought [owed] my brother, but I had almost as leve lose the money as my labour.

"Here hath been some pause about choosing a new Recorder, but now Mr. Heath hath it. The King is gone out of the town."

Seal, a crest.

SIR HENRY MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1618, Dec. 18.—"I thank you for the pheasants you sent me. . . . I hear say the ministers on your side are stirring against the taxation set upon them towards the musters. I believe this comes from your neighbour of Grafton, Doctor Williams. I cannot hear that he is in London. I purpose, when I can find an opportunity, to speak with the King this Christmas about that matter, for that man's insolency must be checked some way. . . . I have sent my sister a few sugar loaves—three little ones for her three little ones, and a bigger for the kitchen."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1619, May 5.—. . . "My Lord Chief Justice purposes to make a start to Kimbolton this Whitsuntide, and will carry me with him, which I am rather willing to, to meet you there. . . . Wilyams * for his book is to be hanged, drawn, and quartered this day. My Lord of Southampton was made a Councillor the last week; others that looked for it will not get it yet. The King comes hither on Friday, and to Greenwich on Saturday, where his Majesty will abide till his progress."

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1619, May 12, Winchester House.—. . . "The King is now come to Greenwich, and hath been lately troubled with new examinations of my Lady Ross, who hath much abused his Majesty, which will fall ill with Sir Thomas and his son Arthur.* The Queen's great funeral holds tomorrow." . . . .

* "A counsellor at law;" executed for a libel on the King. (State Papers.)

Seal of arms.

FR. [LORD] VERULAM, Chancellor, to [SIR EDWARD, SIR CHARLES, and SIR SIDNEY MOUNTAGU].

1619, Dec. 31, York House.—“Whereas in the cause that is depending before me in Chancery between you, Sir Edward and Sir Charles Mountagu, complainants, against you, Sir Sidney Mountagu, defendant, I have been informed that you, Sir Sidney, have demurred to their Bill, and thereupon it was desired that the consideration thereof might be referred to some Master of the Court, which I have denied to grant, but am content to take some pains therein myself some time before the next term, and (sic—I?) would wish you by this my letter to attend me with your counsel at York House about the 19th of January next to that purpose: so I bid you farewell.”

Signed.

E. [LORD] ZOUCHÉ to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGUE, Knight.

[c. 1620?] Jan. 12.—Has received a letter from him and Sir Edmund. Marvels what they mean by saying that they have received a commission in which he (the writer) is placed a cipher. “The cause is very weighty, standing now in suspense, whether a man after a blow received should hang himself and so receive the reward of Cain, or else another man be found a manslayer,” &c.

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MONTAGU to SIR EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1620, Dec. 13, Spittle.—“To begin with the worst first, there is news come now of more certain truth than heretofore from Bohemya, which is, that the King's army hath had a great overthrow, and Prague is lost, but the King and Queen [Frederick and Elizabeth] are at a strong place called Presslaw in Seleya, and the King of Hungary and he have met, and they both intend to raise a far greater force to set on them [the Emperor and his allies] suddenly; God give them better success.

“The King's Majesty, with many protestations of his love and favour, hath returned my brother [Sir Henry Mountagu] hither with the Staff as Lord High Treasurer, and granted him to be Baron of Kimbolton and Viscount Mandevile, which name was once lord of Kimbolton, and a great noble family, now utterly extinct, whereby he might best take it to him without envy. His patents are not yet done, so as he hath none other titles yet than Lord Treasurer, but this week all will be done and he will take his oath in the Exchequer. Now he executes his old and new office in his chamber at Sargants' Inn.

“His Majesty of himself spake to my brother of you, and said he did not confer this great trust upon him only for love to himself, but of all our family, whom (sic) he thought loved him and were faithful to him, and though you smelt a little of Puritanism, yet he knew you to be honest and faithful to him; and said he heard you were a Parliament man—you must do him an arrant (sic), and he would requite you, but such a one, as I hear, as you need not be afraid of. You shall meet there it seems with many of your old acquaintance, for the countries [counties?] care not for courtiers, nor counsellors, for the[y] choose freely, and here in Middlesex they have given two privy counsellors the canvise (sic?), but I think very unwisely and not fairly carried.

---

* Sir Thomas Lake and Sir Arthur Lake.

“I think Sir Lewis [Watson] his ends at Court are as well for himself as you, but that must rest awhile, and I have a conceit it will come easilier. . . I pray bear with me, since I am so tied to attendance as I cannot stand to read what I write.”

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to EDWARD LORD MOUNTAGU.

1622, March 26, Spittle.—“As soon as I received your letter I sent your note to Mr. Hudson, and have sent to him now again about it, and it shall not want following till it be effected, but my Lord Keeper [Williams] keeps very private from all business till his sermon be past on Good Friday: . . .

“Here is little news; they say the Prince is royally received in Spain, and his followers are now gone after him; God send them all well and quickly home. They say the French King is going on with his wars against Rochell, and it is feared the town will not hold out, the King hath such a party in it. They say Count Mannsfeild is put into some distress: the Spaniard and the States are in treaty of peace for seven years.”

Seal of arms.

L. [LORD] CRANFEILDE to certain OFFICERS of H.M. WOODS.

1622, May 7, Court at Whitehall.—The King has given order to Sir Francis Fane, Lieutenant of the Forest of Rockingham, to new build and enlarge his house at Abthorpe, within the Forest, “for the more commodious entertainment of his Majesty and his company, at his repair into those parts for his princely recreation there.” By letters of privy seal of the 3rd inst., the King has allowed to him within the Forest 100 timber trees of the King’s gift, and 100 trees more by way of sale. The addressees are to mark out and deliver the trees, setting down the price of every second tree, at the best prices of the country; the money to be first paid to C. Ogle, and then into the Exchequer. They are to forbear “the fair-branched and marked trees of ornament, and use[d] for browse.”

Signed. Addressed: Robert Treswell, Esq., Surveyor General of H.M. Woods on this side Trent; Cuthbert Ogle, Esq., Lieutenant of the Forest of Whittlewood and Woodward of co. Northampton; and James Crumpe, Gent., Woodward also there.

EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU to LORD CRANFEILD, Lord High Treasurer.

1622, May 20.—“I being Lieutenant under my Lord of Exeter of the Forest of Rockingham, whereby trust is reposed in me for the custody of his Majesty’s woods and game there, and understanding that some under officers had appointed a meeting for the setting forth and selling a great number of oaks without notice given either to myself or any ancient sworn officer of the Forest, I directed my letters to know by what warrant they went about it; whereupon one of them brought me your Lordship’s letter grounded upon his Majesty’s letters of privy seal in way of gift and sale to Sir Francis Fane, for the building of his house at Apethorpe. In all grants of that nature, even for trees for his Majesty's own use, heretofore warrants have been directed to the principal and sworn officers of the Forest for the view and setting out of them; which if your Lordship had been truly informed of, I doubt not but you would have been pleased to have held the ancient order and course. And therefore, till your further pleasure known, I have directed a forbearance of the execution of your Lordship's letters, and the rather because Mr. Ogle, who is of the quorum, was not there. Your Lordship's letter is they should be taken within the Forest of Rockingham, which is of large extent. I would know your Lordship's pleasure whether they shall be taken in all places dispersedly, or else but only in those walks where Sir Francis Fane is under-keeper, because they are adjoining to his house."

Copy in a clerk's hand.

KING JAMES I. to the LORD MOUNTAGUE.

1622, Oct. 28, Court at Hinchinbrooke.—"Right trusty and well beloved, we greet you well. Having some occasion to speak with you as soon as conveniently may be, we have thought fit to signify our pleasure unto you to meet us at Royston on Saturday night next, where you shall then understand what the business is which we have to speak with you of. In the mean time we cominit you to God."

Signed at the top.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to EDWARD LORD MOUNTAGU.

1622[-3], Feb. 19, Spittle.—"On Monday I went and delivered your letter to my Lord of Exeter [William Cecil], who, after he had read it, told me that you had written unto him that you might hold the offices in the Forest under him, as you did of my Lord his father, which his Lord[ship] said you should do with all his heart, not because you had written to him about them, but because he always loved you and accounted you a worthy wise man, and that it was much against his will you had not his sister. . . .

"My Lord of Buckingham invited himself and his Lady to dinner on Sunday to my brother's in Aldersgate Street, with the other Lords his allies, who made him a great feast on such a sudden; and thither came my Lord Keeper [Williams, Bishop of Lincoln] after dinner.

"I have imparted to my brother your desires about the Forest offices; he is afraid that either he or his son should begin to sue for a thing of so little advantage, before he be seasoned with some things of profit; but this I have done—I have intreated him that the next week, when his son goes to Newmarket to the King, that he will put in a caveat to my Lord of Buckingham that if any do sue for the reversion, that he will make a stay of them, which he will do; and I tell him this, that when we see how my Lord of Exeter's patents are settled, that then if he will get you the reversion of the Wardenship for two lives, and the fostership in fee of Gedington Woods, you shall give my nephew 500*l.*; and this hath some favour and may work to purpose. I see my brother had rather you had them than he would desire them for himself, though I have made this offer without your warrant, and the places are of little or no profit, yet they will give a great command and pleasure to your house. . . .

"Mr. Tarfeeld tells me he will write so at large to you of your Star-chamber business as I shall not need to say anything, and your counsel thinks you have an advantage by Sir F. taking out a commission, and I think we have fitted him with commissioners' names. . . .

"Here is rumours (sic) that [Endymion] Porter is put from the Court, for some ill words he should give of the Queen of Bohemya in his journey into Spain; and Cottington is suddenly sent into Spain."

Seal of arms.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

1622[-3], March 12, Spittle.— "From the Prince we hear nothing yet but that the French King gave my Lord of Carlile a pass for the Prince and all his company to pass with all respects safe, so as we make account he is in Spain ere this. Many lords and gent[lemen] are preparing to go to him. Our King is at Cambridge to see a play, betwixt the Jesuit and the Puritan.

"Our cloth goes well away, but they say the King of Spain hath proclaimed that in Spain there shall be no manufactures worn but what are made there, which makes us afraid of losing trade there.

"It's true that it is rumoured that my Lord Ross is alive,* and wagers offered to be laid that he will be here before Michaelmas.

"Count Mannsfeeld's army they say is very strong, and prevail[s] much where he is. Tilley was sent against him, but they say sent for back in all haste to go for Bohemya, where Bethlem Gabor † and Jagen-dorfe are very busily stirring."

Seal of arms.

ROBERT [LORD] SPENCER TO LORD [MOUNTAGU].

1623[-4], Jan. 4, Allthrop.—"The day for the Parliament at Westminster is the 12th of February, where I hope in God we shall happily meet. I am bold to remember your Lordship of the speeches your Lordship and I had at Bougheton, when I was with you there, concerning the Knights for the Shire, if there were a Parliament, and your Lordship thought those that were last were fittest. ‡ They both are willing to do their country the best service they can, and desire your Lordship's approbation and furtherance. If your Lordship join with them they doubt no opposition, neither care for any. I think your Lordship heareth of the Earl of § Oxford's enlargement of his gracious favour he had from the King, and that he was married upon Thursday last. With my best wishes and my son's to your Lordship and your sons, and to pretty Francke, I rest," &c.

P.S. relating to Sir Francis Fanne, or Fane, and Sir Lewis Watsonn.

[EDWARD LORD MOUNTAGU] to the MAYOR, RECORDER, ALDERMEN; and BURGESSES OF NORTHAMPTON.

1623[-4], || Jan. 7, Boughton.—"Good Mr. Mayor and the rest of your brethren,—Upon notice of the Parliament some letters passing between the Lord Spencer, Sir William his son, and myself about the election for Knights of the Shire, they were well pleased to give

* In a letter of the same writer, July 1618, these words occur at the end: "My Lord Ross is dead."

† Prince of Transylvania.

‡ Sir William Spencer and Richard Knightley. They were re-elected 15 Jan. 1624, and again in April or May 1625.

§ "My Lord of," first written, and struck out.

|| There was a general election in Jan. 1624.

way that both should be chosen on this East side for the service of the country, which I held as a great nobleness and wisdom in them, to avoid future distractions which otherwise might arise; and therefore we determined of Sir Lewis Wattson and Sir John Pickering, if the country should so like. And therefore, the writs being now come down, and the election to be on Thursday, upon assurance of my Lord Spencer and his son's approbation of them, [I] have thought fit to desire your voices for them, which if I may obtain, I know it will be a means to avoid a great deal of trouble and charge which otherwise may fall, and a getting of you a number of mere friends to reduce all things to the ancient course for the good of your town; and myself will remain as true a friend to your town as any you have. And therefore I pray you let Sir Lewis Wattson and Sir John Pickering have your voices, and that I may know your minds herein."

Autograph draft.

RIC. SPENCER to LORD MONTAGU, at Boughton.

[1624,] Jan. 10, Northampton.—“Upon the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 7th of this present, my Lord [Spencer?] sent me to Northampton to Mr. Mayor and his brethren, to entreat them for their voices for Sir John Pickering and Sir Lewis Watson, and not to think of naming my brother. I found them resolved for Sir John Pickering, and purposing to name my brother for the other. I told them my brother would take it for a favour not to name him, not desiring to be of this Parliament, and hoping they would excuse him for this time, and lay the burthen upon some other.* They told me they had received a letter from your Lordship, and had sent you, they hoped, a satisfactory answer. I could not prevail so far with them as to nominate Sir Lewis Watson; what they may be brought to (if businesses be carried fair on the other side) at my brother's return from Kettering, I cannot certainly affirm. Now, my good Lord, I will be bold to deliver my mind to your Lordship plainly, as I use to do, which is, that I think there had not been the least rub in this business if there had not been canvassing for voices on the other side for Sir Lewis Watson against Sir John Pickering, and warrants sent to constables to get voices for Sir Lewis Watson and none other.”

Portion of seal.

E. [LORD] M[ONTAGU] to LORD [SPENCER?].

[1623-4, Jan.]—“I am driven into a strait for this business of the Knightship of the Shire, but I may be the shorter with you because myself and other knights hereabouts have entreated Sir John Isham to acquaint your Lordship with our desires for the ancient course observed to have a knight on each side for the better service of the country, without any opposition. And therefore I would your Lordship would be pleased well to advise of it, for avoiding many unkindnesses which may arise. There will be no opposing of your son; and I would your Lordship would be pleased to prevail so much with my cousin Knightley (whom I think very worthy of the place), that having had the honour already of it, he would now give way to Sir Lewis Wattson,† and so the * Richard Spencer, esquire, [the writer?] was one of the members elected for the town in 1620, 1624, 1625, and 1626.

† “Whom we intend to nominate for our side” (struck out).

business may be carried fairly without any offence. I hope we shall hear from your Lordship by Sir John Isham."

Autograph draft. Endorsed: The Lord Spencer's letters about the Knightship of the Shire, 1623.

SIR CHARLES MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1624, Dec. 29, Spittle.— . . . "I have not yet been so far as Poles [St. Paul's?] since Christmas to learn any news, but they say the Duke of Brunswick goes away as soon as he hath got his new year's gift, and Mannsfeeld hath much to do with his men at Dover, who they say goes not away yet these twenty days. They say there is a 1000 of the men run away already, and the rest are very unruly. It is said that after Twelfthtide the Duke [of Buckingham] will into France for the Lady, who shall be here as soon as our King will have her; and they say it is in debate whether the Parliament shall be till the Duke's return of Breda—men speak diversely. My Lord St. Jhon had the privy seal to be Earl of Glamorgan, but my Lord Chamberlain [Earl of Pembroke] hath stopped it. Your neighbour will struggle so long for place as he will be cast lagg (sic)."

Seal of arms.

KING JAMES I. to ———.

[1624?]"—"I haue sygned the fyue frenshe lettirs ye sent me, but I misse lettirs for three, the Duc of Guise, the Prince Ienuille, & the Conte de Candale; & because this dispatche is to be sent awaye with all speede, I haue for hastening it signed three blankes, quhich ye are to fill for thaim three, & so to sende awaye the paquette; faille not also to wrytte to my Ambassadoure to excuse to all these princes upon the multitude of my affaires, that I wrytte not to thaim at this tyme, with my owin hande; & so fairwell.

"JAMES R."*

H. [VISCOUNT] MANDEVILLE to his brother, LORD MOUNTAGU, at Barnwell.

[1625, June.]—"I am sorry to hear that my sister hath been so ill, and wish her well recovery. For your coming or staying, I know not well what to advise, because if it should prove a Parliament of business, you would not be spared. Therefore I shall tell you the guess I have of it, and leave it to your own resolution. The King hath already professed it is not to sit long, and if his errand were dispatched, which is for money, all other business should expect a new session, which he prefers to be as soon as they will, and then as long as the[y] will.

"The infection so spreads as we must scatter shortly; yet the King means that argument shall urge for doing something instantly, for to another place he will not now adjourn it. The business of the higher House will be nothing till something come from the lower House; and in the lower House I perceive, if the most may have their wills, there will nothing be done at this time but these two, one for God, the other for the King: they have already pressed in matter of religion to have the laws put in execution—the priests and Jesuits to be banished—and for the King, to condescend quickly to give somewhat. You will say these two will ask a long Parliament, but they are stirred already, and Charles [Montagu] I am sure writes you word what else they do.

* This letter is entirely in the King's own hand.

“Yesterday the great feast was kept, and the ratification of the marriage published. The French I think will now go hence shortly. The Queen appears to be a fine sweet creature. If I find any great occasions arising, I shall presently send you word, but as times are, I cannot be forward to persuade your coming up as yet. I have willed my Lord Willoughby to stir in time upon those things that the law have (sic) cast upon him as heir to my Lord of Oxford. What conveyances he hath made I wish him to take no notice of, but as heir at common law to make his claims, and let them show what title they can make by conveyance, for at least there will fall a third part of his laud to him.”

H. [VISCOUNT] MANDEVILLE to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1625, c. June 30? ]—“I have moved the King for your leave. He told me you were a good Parliament man, and not to be spared, but at your desire, not being well, he is content to give you leave. The lower House are not yet come at the subsidy, and in the upper House we have little to do. If occasion be, I will send to you, but the ruse of the bill of plague will start men to come up that are in the country.* The order for the Fasts do (sic) hold. So with my wife’s best love and mine” (&c.)

Seal. Note: Received 2 July 1625. Endorsed: The King’s leave for me not to come to the Parliament.

S[ARAH LADY] Z[OUCHE]† to LORD MONTIGUE, her nephew, at Boulton [Boughton].

[1625?] Aug. 25.—Wishes her Lord’s first will had stood, as it would have been better for them both. When her Lord went last to Dover, Lord M. and Mr. Funibey, the lawyer, were [made] his executors, and he gave to Lord M. Bramsell, Odime, Wintney, and Gruell, on conditions, because he had been brought up in Lord M.’s house; although he had previously erased Lord M.’s name and substituted Sir Edward Zouche. Has sent the first will to Mr. Tindley, the lawyer. Hopes he will act favourably to her as executor, and advise with Lord Mandevell. It will be well to make sure friends about the King. Has sent to the Lord Chamberlain [the Earl of Pembroke], who was hunting with the King, and promised not to fail her. The Duchess now her neighbour offered to come to her, and to write to the King. Ladies Badford and Darbey [Bedford and Derby] also wrote to her, offering their services. Does not therefore want friends in her just and honest cause.

H. [VISCOUNT] MANDEVILLE to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

1625, Nov. 18, Kimolton.—“For recreation sake I have taken a walk this frosty weather from Totridg to Kimolton. At Court I found no great business, and to Reading none goes that can be away. The last Sunday the quarrel betwixt your Deputy Lieutenants and the Lord Vaux and his brother was heard at Council table in presence of the King. The matter was much laboured for the Lord Vaux, but yet the Deputies I think * Or county.

† 2nd wife of Edward, Lord Zouche, who died 1625. (MS. note.)

were sent home with contentment, except Dick Knightley be discontent with his sheriffwick. There is a cluster of Sheriffs made by the King himself this year. The Duke [of Buckingham] is expected again shortly. You see how much I am beholding to him. It pleased him to come to Gosfeild when I was there, but I told him it was not the first time he had broken promise with me. Then also he propounded to me the matching with Warwick for my son Ed[ward], but till I was ascertained of the conditions I desired his forbearance, for my son was now to care for his fortune, his favour had gained him so little. I was very desirous to hear how your Lordship and my sister doth, else I would have concealed my being here, for the weather is not [fit] to travel, though fit to stir in. Therefore you will excuse me for not coming, and I would not that you should trouble yourself with coming hither. On Monday next I purpose to be gone back again."

Seal of arms. The following reply is on the fly-leaf.

[LORD MOUNTAGU to LORD MANDEVILLE.]

1625, Nov. 19, Boughton.—“I thank your Lordship for sending unto us. We are glad to hear of your well doing, and thanks be to God we contin[u]e. I did think the dispalcing [displacing?] or rather placing would give you discontent, because I know no place you can now expect[?]; but I doubt not you will carry it so wisely as not to lose the good opinion of the King, which if you may hold, you are well enough. I conceived(?) the Duke would see you in his passage, and I guessed at his errand; the young lady is much commended for her good nature and graces, and therefore, if the portion be eight or ten thousand pound, I know not where your son shall have a better fortune; only take heed of profuse expense, for you see what you must trust to.

“The proceeding against the Lord Vaux gives content to all the hearers of it, whatsoever it doth to the Deputy Lieutenants. I am afraid we shall have so[me] scuffling shortly amongst the Justices; the Earl of Westmerland carried such a high hand over his fellow Justices by virtue of his Cust[os] Rotulorum-ship, that it can not be borne.

“Methinks the choice of Sheriffs within mine own thoughts should bring forth a Parliament about February or March, if London send some, and then the coroner (?) to be Jay (?).

“I wish you a safe return, not to be too long absent from the King. My wife’s hearty love and mine to you and your Lady.” (&c.)

Autograph draft.

E. [LORD] M[OUNTAGU] to the EARL OF WESTMORLAND.

[c. 1625?].—Touching disputes between the East and West sides of the county [of Northampton], in respect to the election of Knights of the Shire and other matters.

Autograph draft.

[E. LORD MOUNTAGU] to his noble and worthy cousins SIR WILL. SPENCER, Knt., and RICHARD SPENCER, Esq.

1625[-6], Jan. 11, Boughton.—“I thank you for your letters, that I may see how the world is like to go, being sorry our rent country cannot be drawn up, but must be torn more [and] more. I have done my best to avoid it, and cannot do more, but leave the issue to God’s dispose (sic). I liked well that noble men dealt so plainly with me. It was far from a satisfactory letter to my (?) desire, which tended chiefly for their good, but I may soon (?) satisfy your Honours (?) from misliking or misreport. The canvas began of Sir John Pickering[']s side by some of his followers before I sent him word what your Lo. father's [Lord Spencer's] intention and mine was. I know not of any warrant sent to any constable; there was not a thought to offer Sir [John] Pickering any discourtesy; but these are not things worth talking of. The myne [main?] is the pacification of the country, which it pleaseth not God, as it seems, at this time to effect."*

Autograph draft.

[THE EARL OF] BRISTOL to LORD [MANCHESTER?].

1625[-6], March 1, Sherborne.—“I have never been able to do anything whereby I might expect favour from your Lordship, but I know, for that worthy brother's sake, my Lord of Winchester, who is with God, and indeed chiefly for your own respect to justness and equity, I may be confident of right and indifferency from you. And therefore I shall only be a suitor to your Lordship to receive information in the case betwixt Mr. Rawlegh and myself, wherein I perceive those that have hitherto followed that cause on my behalf have fallen short. I shall likewise offer it to your noble and just consideration how hard a case it is to have a nobleman's whole estate, after 24 years' service, seven ambassages, and almost ten years being a Councillor, to be questioned, and he not admitted neither to follow his own cause nor to be present at the hearing of a business that so nearly concerneth him; and no man there that truly understandeth his case by reason of the death of such as have formerly followed his business. I hope therefore that your Lordship and the rest of my Lords † will not suffer anything to pass to my prejudice, or that may open a gap to my future trouble, until I may obtain his Majesty's leave to be present at it myself; and then I shall either give your Lordships full satisfaction, or submit myself to your pleasures.”

KING CHARLES I. to THE LORD MOUNTAGUE of Boughton.

[1626,] 2 Chas. I., Aug. 31, Palace of Westminster.—Letter under the Signet, requesting a “Free-gift.” “In respect of our affairs both at home and abroad we have already (to the great exhausting of our treasure) made provisions for defence both by sea and land. . . . We intended to have addressed our letters of privy seal to you (amongst others of our nobility) for some present supply of money by way of loan; but observing that upon our letters lately directed to the Justices of peace in our several counties, their forwardness in beginning and first assessing themselves (in places where it is done) hath drawn many of our subjects to a more free and liberal contribution, we have thought fit to change the course intended by privy seals, and to propose unto you this other of Free-gift, . . . which we assure you, in the word of a King, shall be wholly employed in the common defence of the kingdom, and not to any other use whatsoever. . . . We doubt not but you will be tender of the safety of your Prince and Country, and with all willingness concur with us, who are ready to expose the best portion of our earthly fortune, for the preservation of the general.”

Signed at the top. Signet.

* Sir William Spencer and Sir John Pickering were elected Knights of the Shire, 12 Jan. 1626.

† The Privy Council? Manchester was President.

KING CHARLES I. to EDWARD LORD MOUNTAGU of Boughton.

[1626,] 2 Chas. I., Oct. 31, Palace of Westminster, under the Signet.—“Right trusty and well beloved, we greet you well. Since our former letters of the last of August, the accidents in Germany, and the intelligences we receive from divers other parts, do both warn us and press us to be provided of a larger and speedier supply than we expected, or in that way, then taken, could possibly be provided; wherefore we, with the advice of our Privy Council, caring (as befits us) to have our kingdoms defended, our allies succoured (that are so engaged for us), the party of religion supported, which are now so strongly opposed, have left no means unsought that might truly enable us to these great works, of so great charge and importance. But after long consideration, no way can be found so ready nor so equal as this: that every one, both Lords and others, who were assessed the last Subsidy, should lend unto us, for a time, that entire sum which he was assessed at; as he that was assessed at one hundred pounds, to lend us one hundred pounds, and so proportionably (more or less) as he was assessed; which course the Lords and others of our Privy Council, the Judges, Serjeants, professors of the Law, and officers in Court have already taken, and lent unto us accordingly, as also all those Commissioners and Subsidy men that are hereabouts. Now we, making no doubt but you, of our Nobility (whom we have always found readiest to provide for the public), will be forward in this, not only to do as others have done, but so to advance and expedite the business in those Counties where you are resident, as that timely we may be enabled to give succour in those cases, which, if they be not helped in time, will turn to the irreparable loss and dishonour of the State and us; wherefore we think fit to give you notice hereof, and withall to give you these our letters in full discharge of anything that we required upon our former letters of August last; heartily praying you presently to send such a sum as hereby is mentioned into our Exchequer, where we have given order, upon receipt thereof, for acquittances to be given you, which shall be your warrant for striking tallies and for repayment hereafter, without any fees or further charges.”

[P.S.] “For the more expedition, Thomas Paramoure, Esq., is appointed Collector of this Loan, who upon payment of your money into his hands at his house in Clerkenwell, near London, shall procure your Tally to be stricken in the Exchequer, and delivered to him that shall pay in your money.”

“Ex<sup>r</sup> per Gall.”

“Received 15 November.”

Signed at the top. Signet.

H. [EARL OF] MANCHESTER to his brother LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

1626, Dec. 21.—“I perceive you could have been content the one had been two: so could I, but we must be content with what the King doth. I deferred coming amongst you as long as I could, choosing rather to be one of the last than the first. Those that have been in Cambridge, Suffolk, Sussex, [and] Hampshire are returned with good successes; none of all these countries but every man writing to give. Therefore the like will be looked for in Northampton and Huntingdonshire. And the last night the King commanded my Lord Keeper [Coventry] to be prepared to go into Norfolk upon this errand soon after Christmas. The forwardness you have showed is but answerable to what the Lords here have, and many of them have sent in their money who are said to have refused. Why our country should be worse disposed now than we should have found them at first I know no cause. However, servants must do the commands of their masters. Here is no news that is good to write. God send us a good Christmas!"

Seal, a crest.

Paper by EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU.

[1626.]—"Upon this letter and causes therein alleged, I could not with an upright heart and good conscience deny this desire of the King's. For if it be the duty of one Christian brother, being able, to lend to another, being in necessity—and the command of our Saviour Christ's (against which there can be no law), so to lend as not to look for anything again—how should I answer it before His tribunal seat, if I should deny so amicable (as it may truly be termed) a desire of my sovereign lord the King?"

"What causes can be greater than the defence of the realm, the succouring of the allies of the same already engaged, and supporting the party of religion, which, all the world is witness of, is more than [ever?] strongly opposed. . . . [Scriptural references.] And therefore I hold it in these respects to stand with my duty and religion cheerfully to yield in this to the King's desire.

"And being thus persuaded for myself, and being trusted with many others in the business, I could not but show my forwardness in inciting all my neighbours and countrymen to perform the same; the causes being inserted in the Commission as in this letter, and his Majesty, to take away that scruple which was in every man's mouth, declaring, first by his Proclamation and after by his Instructions, his clear intention to be, that this course (which at this time is thus enforced by that necessity to which no ordinary course can give the law) shall not in any wise be drawn into example, nor made a precedent for future times. I taking hold of these his Majesty's promises, upon the return of the schedules, I prefixed this title:—

"A Roll or list of the names and surnames of every person promising and undertaking to lend to the King's most excellent Majesty that now is, for the necessary defence of his Majesty's honour, the true religion now professed, and the common safety of his kingdom, according to his Majesty's Commission and Instructions: To which in all loyalty and duty they have yielded unto, in assurance that this course, which at this time is thus enforced upon his Majesty by that necessity to which no ordinary course can give law, shall not in any wise be drawn into example, or made a precedent to future times, according to his Majesty's most gracious declaration, given at his Court at Whitehall, the 7th day of October in the second year of his reign.'

"This being showed to the rest of the Commissioners, and allowed of, was read publicly to the people, who seemed to be well pleased at it.

"The Israelites expostulating with Judah for bringing the King home without them, Judah answers, 'Because the King is near of kin to us; wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? Have we eaten at all of the King's cost; or hath he given us any gift?'

"I have not been led by any hy[e] respects, but what I have done hath been in discharge of my duty to God, the King, and kingdom."

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to his father, LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1627?] May 16, Temp[le].—"I kept day with the Lords about your Forest business, and have now agreed for the sum which my brother was formerly almost forced to yield to, being 500*l.*, to have all that was in the particular disafforested; only with this difference, that all the new enlarged land shall have all liberties, but that which was old must not have leave to kill the King's deer, but only to chase them out, and in all points else shall be as free as the new. Mr. Surveyor would have concealed the leave which he had to disafforest any of the old Forest, and would have deducted from 500*l.* a proportionable rate for that which was in the old Forest, [an]d would not have let us compound for it; but I made bold to tell them that except they would compound for that, I neither would nor had authority to compound for the rest. Hereupon they consulted a little, and afterwards (by him who is indeed their mouth, and that shrewd stickler, my Lord Cottington) told me they were content we should have all, but they as yet had not, nor hereafter would not, give any power to kill deer there where it was not old Forest. But that's no great matter, being we may keep them out or chase them out. They were very desirous of some part of the money presently, but I desired excuse, and replied that your Lordship would have your money ready to pay so soon as you had your patent, which now shall be speeded forthwith."

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

1627, June 4.—“You must give me leave to write when I can get leisure. I am glad to hear my sister is so well amended. Mr. Crow was with me with a salutation from his master,* who says that at his returning he will so accommodate this Forest business as to content you two Lords [Montagu and Mordaunt], but that he could not so well do by letters; and it seems my Lord Morda[u]nt went not down with him, but till he returns nothing shall be done. As yet we have not heard of him, but to Rochell he is gone.

“My son Walter [Montagu] is returned, who hath found the Princes abroad ready to assist the King's actions. The King comes hither on Monday, and sets out upon progress on Tuesday. I have entered into bargain with Sir Oliver Cromwell for Wabridge and Hinchbrook. Of the park I mean to be the King's keeper. Hinchbrook I have set over again to my brother Sydney [Montagu], because I do not lack a house. I cannot yet get leave to come into the country; I fear me it will be August before I shall, the King doth here so hold us to work.”

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MONTAGU.

1627, July 18.—“It is well you have spoken with my Lord of Exeter. I think you find him resolute for his time, and when the Duke [of Buckingham] returns, I doubt not but we shall settle it. But as yet here is no news from the Duke, nor known where he is. I received this morning letters from Plimmoth, where they have not heard of him since he passed by; nor as yet we hear nothing from my Lord of Warwick.

“I have made a purchase of both those things in Huntingdonshire, but because my brother Sydney lacks a house, and I was troubled to think what to do with the house, I have let him have that part of the purchase. I purpose, if it hold, to make a posting journey to Kimolton on Saturday next. My son Mandevill and his wife take it in their way, who are going to the Countess of Leicester, and at their return I hope to be settling at Kimolton for a while, for as yet I cannot get leave of the King to be from hence. The Queen is with you. The King is going on his progress tomorrow. News there is not any.

* The Earl of Marlborough, Lord Treasurer?

"It seems the former letters of the Lords were ill conveyed, for few took notice of them; therefore we sent new. The remains of the loans will be welcome, for all is here issued that comes. These loans have brought in 240,000*l.* at least; therefore the remain must needs be got up, which is not past 50,000*l.* For new letters touching the privy seals, it is conceived that such a way would make a double engagement of the King, and so cause it to be called for more earnestly."

Seal of arms.

E. [LORD] M[OUNTAGU] to his brother, LORD [MANCHESTER].

1627, Dec. 2, Barnwell Castl.—"After our great deliverance from the powder treason my thoughts ran upon making an Act for a perpetual thanksgiving, wherein I had your assistance. And now, upon our great loss, my thoughts run (if it be not thought on already) how we may be stirred up to a public humiliation, wherein I would to God you would be the means, or at least mention it, leaving the success to God. We saw what blessings, through the great mercies and immeasurable goodness of God, followed our late performance of that duty in the great sickness, and after for fear of famine. I doubt not of the like blessing upon our martial affairs (wherein of late we have had no good success), if the like course may be held." . . . [References to Scripture.]

Autograph draft.

H. [EARL OF] MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Barnwell Castle.

[1628,] Jan. 30.— . . . "We are now resolved upon Parliament to be the 17th March next, and some other things that must fore-run."

Seal of arms. Endorsed: 30 Jan. 1627.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Barnwell Castle.

1628, July 24.—"I am glad to hear you have so much to your contentment finished that work in so well bestowing my niece; it seems the Lady mother thinks long to see them settled at their own house; but because I would not that your journey should depend upon my coming into the country, which you know I can never purpose long beforehand, and would be very glad the sisters might meet, the certainest time I can set will be after your return out of Derbyshire, which you purpose shall be before Bartholomewtide.

"The King hath commanded my stay here for a time, so that it will be this fortnight at least before I can think of going from hence, and about that time I imagine you will be ready for your journey thither; and by that time you are returned thence we shall, God willing, be in the country, which I suppose will be about the 20th of August. Your patent for the woods is upon dispatch; the book is ready for the seals; but your wardenship when I found undischarged I would not let longer to stick; your neighbours are so full of tricks.

"I have put myself into some ease by putting off my Presidency,* nor do I repent the change, nor will I be too forward to ease others. The King went hence on Monday towards Portsmouth. The Duke [of

* He was Lord President of the Council.

Buckingham] is yet here, preparing things for the journey; God send it good speed! We have well increased the Council board, and the nobility, since you went hence; your son [Lord] Lindsey is come in for one. We think long till your subsidy moneys come in, now that your countries are eased of the soldiers. Thus, desiring to be remembered to the new married couple," (&c.)

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1628, Dec. 18(?).—"You will excuse my not writing; by Mulsho we have intelligence of one another's well being. Touching your woods, my Lord Treasurer [Marlborough] told me of an information given the King of huge loss received by these bargains, but not in your particular purchase. The doubt you make upon my Lord's letter you may well understand to go only to the trees and timber—the coppice woods are not meant to be restrained. This I know is meant, but tomorrow, when I meet with him, I shall tell him of it, and you shall understand further. Were Christmas past you would now be preparing for London. The Parliament will certainly hold at the day. The news that is Mulsho I am sure doth write you."

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

1628[-9], Jan. 2.— . . . "I cannot advise you to be suitor to be spared this Parliament, for I know the King will not do it. You will bear with my house, that cannot afford you such a lodging as you were wont to be content with; my sons, now all at home, take up the room. The Parliament holds, and Werden * tells me he hath provided you not far from the Parliament. I wish you a good journey hither, and a good new year to you and all yours."

Seal of arms.

LORD KEEPER COVENTRY to the LORD SPENCER.

1629, Sept. 2, Canbury.—"Whereas an order was made by his Majesty sitting with the Lords in Council the first year of his reign, that the Quarter Sessions after Christmas for that County of Northampton should be kept yearly at Kettering; which, being recommended to the care of the Earl of Westmerland, then Custos Rotulorum of that County, hath been duly observed ever since: I am now, by his Majesty's commandment, to signify his pleasure to your Lordship, who succeeds in that place, that your Lordship may likewise take care to see the said order performed for the time to come; and have thought fit to remember it at this time against your next Michaelmas Sessions, when the gentlemen and country are properly to take notice thereof, that they may attend the service for the following Sessions at Kettering accordingly."

Copy (?).

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1629, Oct. 1 (?).—"The last night I came from Hampton Court, where my Lord of Denbigh spake with me, and told me he was disposed to sell his lands at Barford. . . . Late news there is none. The King hath given order for the bailing of all the Parliament prisoners."

* Or Weedon?

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

1629, Nov. 12.— . . . “My Lord Linsey told me he had not leisure to come up by you, but was with you at his going. Since then I was with his Lady at Havering, and found her busy in settling her house, and very well pleased with the place, and I told her how she might use it both to profit and pleasure, and so I hear she doth. Mulsho hath such a packet of news as I need write none here. We be busy in examining your brother [Sir Robert] Cotton and some other, which I am sure makes a great noise in the country.”

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MONTAGU, at Boughton.

1629, Dec. 10.— . . . “Here is no news of the great armies in France. The Civil Wars we shall have will be all tried the next term; it is pity to trouble you with reading too many (sic).”

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

1629[-30], Jan. 4.—“The other day Mr. Tansfeld (sic), speaking with me, told me the same you writ, which North would have dissembled; but let that pass; you will find land enough for your money. It is but tales that you hear of the great French army prepared for England; they are employed another way. It is true the Cardinal of France [Richelieu] makes great preparation of shipping, professing to make his King master of the Narrow Seas if he can, which is not hard to do, except we prepare better.

“My sister Charles is very busy about a match with Sir Chr. Hatton. I bade her stand upon large demands and good assurance, for he doth not seek a wife, but his friends for him seek a good bargain where they can get it. My wife tells me that you nor my sister have not been well of late. This weather as it is extraordinary so it is feared will breed much sickness.”

Draft reply on dorse, pasted over.

The JUSTICES OF CO. NORTHAMPTON TO LORD ———.

1630, Oct. 6, in public Sessions.—“We being acquainted with your Lordship’s expectation of satisfaction from us for moneys due unto your Lordship in respect of your liberties, which have been formerly received by some of our fellow Justices, and by them disbursed in the general charge for the diet of the Justices at several Sessions long since past; . . . those gentlemen who received the same, and others for whom it was disbursed, are not here present, but we do assure your Lordship, for future times, to do our endeavours in preservation of your Lordship’s rights and profits herein.”

Signed: Rol. St. John, Jo. Hewett, Ro. Banastre, Tho. Brook (?), Jo. Da[n]vers, C. Edmonds, Ric. Cartwright, Cuthbert Ogle.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU, at Barnwell.

1630, Oct. 15, London.—“Your Northamptonshire certificate was read at the Board the last Sunday, and thought to be but a cold one. I told them the Commissioners could but return their answers; but some of their answers are such as they will be sent for. There was [were] some exceptions taken to your secretary for his style, beginning, 'After our due respects to your Lordships,' which is not a phrase to the Council board. Other counties come off freely, which makes yours appear the worse; but I see some of them are of the old strain. The articles of the peace are sent into Spain, and Sir Francis Cottington is sent for. The Low Countries have made a placard to bar our cloth, because they may not tear it in every town, as they did; whereupon our Merchant Adventurers leave that country, and keep the Staple at Empden and Hanborough. The French and the Dutch are in such a conjuncture as they care not us (sic); so we have concluded this peace without them, as they have done theirs without us. Here is little news stirring. God send that the plague increase not this winter."

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1630, Oct. 28.—"I perceive by your last letter how you of the East division have proceeded, which is better than the certificate promised. For any further directions or returns to such certificates as have been made, we have respited till our meeting here at London. The King purposes to be here at London on Saturday, where the Household settles. I think he will to Newmarket shortly, but the Queen's going I think will be changed.

"We have been in the Forest, not to get money, [though?] our charges is [are] so great, but to put it in state of a Forest, all was so out of order, but now we have settled it as the King would have it. For sale of your wools, you shall not need to fear it, for the merchants go over with a greater cloth fleet to Emden than they did to Delph. It will be happy if those orders or the Justices' cares can provide against the hardness of the time that is feared. I pray God our prayers and amendment of life may amend it.

"We have not yet heard out of France since my son Walter went. In Germany things prosper well with the King of Sweden. Here is now with the King one of the King of Denmark's sons. In Italy the wars go on. Betwixt the Low Countries and us there is not like to be that correspondence which hath been. We except [expect] Sir Francis Cottington out of Spain shortly with a conclusion of the peace."

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1630, Nov. 10.—"Sir Miles Fleetwood was with me, and told me that he acquainted my Lord of Westmorland, who gave way to him to have that done which he did. Then I went no further. You do well to prevent what may happen if you should come to need an officer[']s?] favour in that Court. I am glad to hear my sister is gaining strength. Your composition moneys will not rise to any greater sum, but it seems the east and west are still at the same distance they were. My wife is this day coming to London."

Seal.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Barnwell Castle.

1630, Nov. 24.—"It is time for Councillors to care [for] those things that concern government in these loose and dear times, lest mischief follow of it. The diligence of some Justices, and the good fruit of their pains, show that there want no laws to reform all things, but good executioners of laws. Notice must be taken of such as use diligence, and they known that are negligent; to which end we are in purpose to have a commission to send Councillors and Judges, and this way of account to be taken: the inferior ministers to account unto the Justices of the Peace; the Justices of the Peace to the Justices of Assize; and the Justices of Assize to these Commissioners; and this to be every three months, that so we may see how those laws that concern the poor, the putting out of apprentices, the punishing of rogues and idle persons, the setting to work those that are strong and able, the raising of stocks to employ men, the laws against alehouses and drunkenness, and other laws of this kind, are executed, the penalties levied and employed, and these strictly enquired of by the Justices in the course that you take every three weeks. Those particulars you informed me of I shall make good use of. This being our purpose, I pray you still contribute what you find may best conduce to this business."

Seal of arms. A draft reply is on the flyleaf; see 1630, Nov.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1630, c. Nov. 25?]"—"Finding Mulsho in writing, these things I have added, because he lacked news.

"To desire from you the copy of those articles you inquire upon at your three weeks sessions.

"To know from you what were the best way to quicken all the Justices of Peace to put in execution the laws for punishing rogues, relieving poor, suppressing of alehouses and drunkenness, putting forth apprentices, and employing men to labour, and other laws of this kind; and how it grows that these laws are not executed, nor the penalties neither raised nor employed accordingly.

"I remember, when I was Chief Justice, I advised a Commission to be granted to some Councillors and Judges, that might give rules and take account from the Justices, in all counties, what they did in execution of those kind of laws, that the diligent Justices might be countenanced, and the idle Justices be known, and removed. You will think that Councillors cannot intend the care of these things. The Commonwealth suffers so much by the general neglect of these things as it is time they be cared (sic). I pray you let me know from you your opinion and advice."

Seal, a heart; &c. Note: Received 28 Nov. (?) 1630. Draft reply on dorse, pasted over.

EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU to [the EARL OF MANCHESTER].

[1630, Nov.]—"I have now sent you an authentic copy of the articles we inquire of every three weeks, with a subscription underneath of the course we take in the execution of them, which we find works a great reformation. The hardest is alehouses, which some have well paid for; and I think it will never be amended till the alehousekeeper shall have no other ale in the house above a penny a quart, and if any be found otherwise, it may be given away to the poor. I have drawn already (?) warrants to the effect of your Lordship's letters, and mean to send them out this next week, and to settle them in some course, for my thoughts are wholly bent how to prevent the mischief that may befall in this dangerous time. But I pray you, my Lord, in the Commissions and* [of?] Inquiring that you are about, let not the not coming to Church be forgotten, for I find not that in any your notes.

“The return[s] of the Juries for corn come not in till this week, and then certificates may be sent to Mr. Sheriff to advertise your Lordships [the Council]. I have this week been plotting a project how to cast our bread upon the waters, which, if it may be effected, I think would do a great deal of good; and if I cannot bring it to pass for the whole, I will see how I can work it for Owndle side, where I no[w] live, and if I fail in that, then I will do somewhat out of mine own means. The thing that most troubles me is, how to get the corn. With conveniency your Lordship may cast your eye upon it, and [say?] how you approve of it. I do imagine by this time the clerk of the peace hath delivered your Lordship the Justices’ letter about Mr. Bande; I would willingly hear the issue of it. I pray God send a good issue to all our endeavours that tend to his glory, the good of the Church, and commonwealth.”

Autograph draft, written on the flyleaf of Lord Manchester’s letter of 24 Nov. 1630.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

1630, Dec. [1].†—I have received those articles and that you call your project for the poor. You did well to change the course of certifying to the Sessions, for that is but a compass, where the three weeks inquiry and levy upon it doth the business, and if I can I will bring it into practice thorough (sic) England. Your project I like very well for easing the poor in the price of corn. It is practised here in Hartfordshire after this manner. The farmers and corn-masters, to have the market free, agree to relieve the poor in their parishes with corn at home, at 12*d.* or 18*d.* in a strike under the market price, which is a better way than to have them come to the market and provide for them there. But I doubt me your Northamptonshire parishes would hardly do this. It is a good work if you can draw the noblemen, gentlemen, and freeholders your way; and if I could hear it take with your countrymen, it would be a good pattern for other places.

“I have sent you a copy of some things in purpose here to go with the Commission that should inquire how the laws for the poor are executed, wherein that of the absents (sic) from church is not to be omitted. If you let me know what you think fit to be added to these notes, I shall supply them. Your clerk of the peace a good while since delivered the Justices’ letter concerning Mr. Bande, who I perceive had made all the friends he could, but that served not his turn, but this way it is put into: Mr. Attorney [Heath] to take the information of the Justices, and the note Bande sent, and to send for him and examine him upon them; and then we shall proceed further with him either at the Table or in Star Chamber, as shall be thought best.

“Amongst these country works this is all the news I can send you: that a messenger with letters is come out of Spain, where our articles are accepted and the peace is concluded betwixt us and Spain, and will shortly be proclaimed. I heard from my son Walter out of France lately, where he hath done the errand he was sent upon, but I think the King will not recall him yet. I pray you let my son Edward have advices from you what he may best do for his countrymen of Huntingdoushire.”

* “Articles of,” struck out.

† Cut off, but supplied from the endorsement.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Barnwell.

1630[-1], Jan. 27.—“We are now sending out letters to the Sheriffs to publish these books amongst the Justices, to have them presently put in execution; I hope to see good fruit of them; that is the end, to quicken the Justices. You may have in practice many of them, for I took the conceit of it first from that you did. The Bishop is not actively a counsellor; Sir William Alexander is, and is Secretary of Scotland. The words you note I put in with some other general words, that your power may be executed in all those good laws. The power to make deputies is but in case where we find negligence we may authorise some to be spies upon them, to certify or quicken proceedings. Your money will no doubt be as acceptable as your corn amongst the poorer sort. I did not find your hand to the late certificates (sic) about corn businesses, but it was well done, and a better return than I expected. Here is no news.”

Seal of arms. Draft reply on dorse, pasted over.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MONTAGU, at Barnwell.

1630[-1], Feb. 3.—“If your help be in this business, as I know it shall not want, it is no matter though your hand wanted to the certificate. There is fault found that your Sheriff had not returned many of the freeholders of value. Some other Sheriffs have been fined at 200 [L.] a-piece in the Exchequer, as Sir Harry Wallopp, Mr. Elmes, and some others, for their negligence in not returning freeholders in that case.

“This term some have troubled themselves in putting in of dilatory pleas, as non-summons, and some exceptions to the writ, which are idle, there being no plea to be allowed but that they had not lands of 40*l.* value at that time. Yet it is noted that as in the King’s Bench heretofore, so now in the Exchequer, men of the same humour make much ado and long arguments, by some of the same counsel, to little purpose.

“We have resolved that new Commissions shall go forth, which must needs be for those to be called to compound that were not returned before. I think we shall not change many Commissioners that were before. The King and Queen are returned well from Newmarket.”

Draft reply on dorse, pasted over.

W. M[ULSHO]* to LORD MOUNTAGU

[1633, Aug.]—“I have remembered your love and my noble Lady’s to their Honours; they recommend them kindly to you both. All here, at Highgat and Toterige, are as you left them. I was with the Alderman today at 10; he asked heartily of the welfare of you and yours; and your little nephews present their humble duties to your Honours. Tomorrow I wait on them to school.

“On Thursday night I waited on our noble friends at Ditton, and found the Lady Winwood [and] my honoured cousins (your son and daughter) as well as can be imagined (or expected), both healthful, both cheerful, pleased, and merry with mutual interchange of endearments and embraces. Good man, he hopes to bring her down to you with a hopeful pledge (towards) of your future comfort, which God grant.

“I may thank the wet weather for the cordial of many comforts (from my cousin), for (simply) I would have gone home (wet thoroughly) at 2 on Friday, and had taken leave of my Lady Winwood and her son. The noble Mr. Mountagu * and his gentle-hearted la[dy] stayed my coming out at the gate; saith the sweet lady to her dearest, 'Can you find in your heart to let my cousin Mulsho go hence in such piteous wet weather?' He adjured my stay Friday at night also; then he and I had time to enter into the bosoms of each other, for overnight was too short.

* This is placed among the letters of William Mountagu, Vol. ii., No. 39.

"Next morning I waited on the Lord Dudley and my Lady, and Lady Hobart, who were well. By this it was dinner-time at Ditton, but, blessed be God, I came merrily away on Saturday by 7. They are here in St. Bartholomew's this Wednesday night. They propose to wait on your Honours the 22nd of this month, and set forth on Tuesday sevensnight the 20th.

"Here is no foreign news, nor domestic (good), only the Only (sic) Bishop of London [Laud] wanted Grace — in his title, and on Sunday last [4 Aug.] old George [Abbot] of Caunterbury stepped aside and lay down to sleep, and up start[ed] the Bishop of good London, and put on his clothes before we were sure he was fast asleep and key cold. I hope the propinquity to the water (at Lambeth) will cool immoderate heat." . . .

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

1634[-5], March 3.—"Knowing the man as you do, you cannot wonder that Sir John Huett will suggest anything in his Bill to save his purse. You have the more reason to press the righting yourself, since he cares not what wrong he doth. For your Answer upon oath or honour, the noblemen since the last Parliament have used to put in their answers upon honour, though their examinations are upon oath where they are witnesses. For your purveyance business, I will speak with Mr. Treasurer [Sir T. Edmondess] and Mr. Controller [Sir H. Vane], and shall get you day till the next term to give them satisfaction, but they are now with the King at Hampton Court. Lawrence Maydwell will look to your business in Chancery with the quieter mind now that the business of the Six Clerks in Star Chamber is compounded; they shall have good conditions, though the[y] pay for it. London-Derry hath almost undone London." . . .

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1635, Sept. 2.—"I believe the town of Northampton will be at some loss, that made so much provision for the meeting they expected, but it stood not well with some other occasion to have it sitten at this time. I have received your enclosed note, and shall make use of it if there be cause, but I know not why you might not make use of that you paid for as of any other your land. The King perhaps may be informed what is presented, but there needs no apology for the purchase you made. The King purposes on Saturday next to be at Windsor, but of those things we shall hear when the King comes to Hampton Court; in the mean time God send us fair weather, that we may enjoy what God has sent upon the earth. Mulsho tells me he will see you at Boughton; therefore I leave further to trouble you."

EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU to SIR LEWIS WATTSON, Bart., SIR THO. BROOKE, and SIR THO. TRESHAM.

1635, Oct. 16, Boughton.—"Though I am troubled in mine own particular for the assessment laid upon Seaton, in Rutland, for the Ship money, that parish being rated above any parish in the county, which, if it be not remedied, I have sent Mr. Sheriff word I will complain; yet I am now more troubled at the unequal carriage of our Sheriff, who having rated the county [of Northampton] and sent out warrants to the high constables of every hundred for assessing the same, I find by some notes that I have gotten that this East part of the county is laid at 435*l.* more than three thousand pound, and that the West part is laid at 435*l.* less than three thousand pound; so that upon the matter we on this side are charged with 870*l.* more than the West, which is a thing not to be suffered by us without sending to Mr. Sheriff to deal equally with each part of the shire, to bear their burthen alike; and if it will not be remedied by him, then to complain to the Lords as a thing differing both from his Majesty's pleasure and their direction." . . .

* Edward Montagu married Anne, daughter of Sir Ralph Winwood, in 1633.

Autograph draft.

FRANCIS, BISHOP of PETERBOROUGH, to LORD MONTAGUE.

1635[-6], Jan. 2, Peterborough.—Is informed by old Roger Mason that he used to bestow both summer and winter venison on Bishop Dove. Would receive the like thankfully.

"For your Kettering Lecture, . . . as I had no hand in the putting it down, so I desire to have none in the setting it up. Your Lordship is wise, and might well judge me otherwise, if I should overfancy that way. I have been long versed in preaching, now 33 years, and have sometimes read a lecture in mine own parish, and have also admitted of lecturers, and so should know what it is (sic) of this course. Where any such are in my diocese, while they deport themselves peaceably and conformably, I rest contented. And where any parson is, that taketh pains in his own place and cure, I am willing to countenance and encourage him all I can. And where I shall hear of any man remiss in his duty, I am ready to stir him up. And I retain this resolution, that no man's learning and piety shall excuse, with me, his unconformity, nor any man's conformity and learning bolster out his lewd or lazy and scandalous living."

THE PRIVY COUNCIL to [the JUSTICES of co. NORTHAMPTON].

1636, Sept. 26, the Court at Windsor.—Great inconveniences have arisen by the excessive number of maltsters, which has caused a scarcity of bread-corn; besides sundry abuses by them in buying barley on the ground, whereby the markets are forestalled, and in malting it at unseasonable times. His Majesty is resolved to lessen their number "by incorporating in every county some able and meet persons," and by suppressing the rest. The addressees are to send for all the maltsters in the hundreds of Nassabowrowe, Willibrooke, Polebrooke, Navisford, and Corby, and to certify "the names of such who are desirous to be conformable and to live under government," and who are to apply to the Council for further directions.

Copy; 11 names at the foot. "Oundle" is written in the lower margin.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1636?].—"Now the term is past, but the vacation from business is scarce come. Since I received your Forest papers I have not written to you. That of the question betwixt the Justice in Eyre and the Treasurer I have seen heretofore. They have set the courses they will hold in the Iter, and it will be best for every one to look to his own interest, and look up the exemptions they have.

“At the last Assizes I hear the Judges published the levies that must be this next year through the county for defraying the Ships to go out, and I hear it was well digested of by the country. The Fleet we have abroad command the seas, and no shoopps [ships?] appear but stoop to them. The French have their handfals at home, that they come not out to appear at sea.

“The last time I spake with my Lord of Worcester he told me he thought his son would sell Oundell. I accepted of his offer, and desired to know his resolution when he came next to town. The place is so fit for you as I imagine you will strain your purse or sell some other land to have this; if you be not so minded, let me know it. My occasions are so many as I know not whether they will give me any leave to see the country this summer.”

Seal of arms.

EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU to his son, EDWARD MOUNTAGU.

1638, Nov. 19, Boughton.—Touching the latter’s attendance on “the Lords” about compounding for rates on certain lands.

Addressed: To my son Edward Mountagu at the Lady Winwood’s house in Little St. Bartholomew’s. Seal of arms.

EDWARD MOUNTAGU to his father, LORD MOUNTAGU.

1638[–9], Feb. 9, London.—“I have despatched Foscot as soon as I had my Lord Privy Seal’s [Earl of Manchester] directions, who desired me to let you know that he could not write to you except the messenger would tarry another night. He commanded me to write you word that the King will easily excuse you[r] attendance in person, and thinketh he will accept of money as well as horses, but would have you leave it to the King’s choice. He saith you had better send his Majesty 300 pounds than provide horses. I told him that though you provided horses, yet when the business ended you would have those again, but for the money I thought you could not expect. But he said he would advise you to send 300 pound[s], and said that five would not excuse him; but I think 200 will be as well accepted as four horses, if you leave out in your letter besides those that attend you. Every one of the Judges give[s] 150, except my Lord Finch 300, and the Chief Justice 200; and the four Inns of Court give five thousand pound, and the Clergy they say will give liberally; so that the King will have no need of a Parliament. Some Lords have given in their answers: my Lord Camden hath offered to furnish the King with ten horses, and others have offered money, and some they say will refuse. My Lord Privy Seal saith you need not recite so much of the King’s letter in your answer, and hath interlined what he thought fit you should write. It is a very hard matter to provide arms for men and horses in London, they are so much employed; some send into the Low Countries.”

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1638[–9], Feb. 14, Temp[le].—“There shall be a commission sent down shortly, and then your Lordship may execute it or not at your pleasure. The Assizes follow the term; they were set to have been at Northampton, 21st of Feb., but Judge Hutton is fallen sick, so that they are put off till the 28th. Mr. Tanfeild and my cousin Palmer intend to be at them; I must needs commend to your Lordship both their readiness in your service, when either my brother or I have gone to them.

"The benevolence for Scotland stops not at the noblemen, for the judges and serjeants have given 3,000*l.*, and the four Inns of Court should give 5,000*l.*, but they will not; only the King's counsel and the officers of courts, and some few great practisers give; the six clerks, 100 marks a man; the City of London, 1,000 horse.

"I was at my sister Lynsey's when she opened your Honour's letter; she understood it seriously, but I told her I thought it was meant only merrily, for I thought you would sooner send your younger sons than go yourself. So at last she bad me write that she would meet my Lady and your Lordship at York. She desires her duty may be presented to your Honour, and her excuse this week for not writing. She saith that her Lord [Lindsey] hath neither of the places that you name in your letter, but he hath some secret employment which he will not reveal to her. You know what Audieritis bella et rumores bellorum, and Surget gens in gentem et regnum in regnum, are signs of; God fit us for the signified time.

"Amongst war, somewhat of peace. My brother Mountagu they say is in commission for the peace; Sir Christ. Yerverton gave him first joy of his office. Here hath been Bell of Hemmington with him, to desire he may continue his living, but I hope it is otherwise resolved, for as his obstinacy and refractoriness in all things to your Honour is not to be forgotten, so the preferring of a servant is somewhat to be regarded, especially of such a servant who hath served all three of us, and still doth one of us, with care, diligence, and honesty. I think my brother desires his putting out should be your Honour's act, that he may the better answer his master, my uncle, and others, who have solicited for him, though I think his own ill carriage may stop all their mouths. . . .

Seal, a crest.

EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU to SIR JOHN COOKE, Knt., one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State.

1638[-9], Feb. 18, Boughton.—"Upon Tuesday, the 5th of this month, I received a letter from the King's most excellent Majesty, requiring me to attend his Royal person and standard at his Majesty's City of Yorke, by the 1st of April next ensuing, in such equipage and with such force of horse as my birth, honour, and interest in the public safety do oblige me unto, and as his Majesty doth and hath reason to expect from me; and doth require me to certify his Majesty under my hand, within fifteen days next after the receipt of his Majesty's said letter, what assistance his Majesty shall expect from me hereiu, and to direct the same unto one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State. Now may it please the King's most excellent Majesty, for those considerations and ends in his Majesty's letter signified, I am ready to lay down my life and all that I have for the defence of them. And though I am old, 76 years, and have some great infirmities upon me, yet (God enabling me) I will rather venture my life than deny to serve his Majesty upon those occasions; and for assistance in this war, to furnish his Majesty with six* horses armed in all points, as I shall be directed in convenient time to provide them; as also with my prayers to Almighty God to direct his Majesty in all his ways, and to bless all his Majesty's godly endeavours."

Original letter in a clerk's hand, signed and addressed [qu. not sent?].

* "Six" is written over "four," partly erased. See the letter of 22 Feb.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]38[-9], Feb. 20.—“I have received your letter, and the answer you have prepared to return to Mr. Secretary; wherein I so much mislike one offer in your letter as I will not in any case have it returned. For your offer of four horse, if you will not make them six, yet it is not dishonourable. But to name 24*l.* a month for six months, if the war last so long, is so poor and mean an offer as I would not have such a tender come from you, for I know it would return you a scorn. For your personal attendance, though the letter require it, yet you may well think it is not expected. But I should have liked well, whereas in your former letter you mentioned your readiness in person, notwithstanding your many years and infirmities, besides your own equipage, to have found four horse armed for the King's service, to have turned it unto this—to have sent one of your sons with four horse armed to serve him. This might carry some show worthy a nobleman; and yet that is the least any nobleman doth tender.

“It may be this service may turn but to an assay what men will be ready to do, if occasion be to call for it. I hope this war will not be unto blood. However, if a King command it, wherever his person goes, our allegiance tries us to follow him. Things here rest as yet in state as they were, and [the] same purposes and preparations hold. My son Mandevill, with ten of the best horse I can get, shall attend upon the King. God send that all things may turn to the best. This term hath almost tired me.”

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1639], Feb. 20, Temp[le].—“As soon as I had your Honour's letter, I went with my cousin Brookes to my Lord Manchest[er], and shewed him the copy of your Lordship's letter to the Secretary, which, when he saw, he would by no means let it be delivered, both because he conceived the sum to be too little, and also because the King hath altered his mind, and doth now rather desire horses than money from the nobility. My Lord also thinks four horses will be too small a proportion for your Honour; and that if you exceed it not, your number would be the least of all. My Lord told me privately that this business would be but a show, and in that show he would have your Lordship as brave and noble as the rest of your dignity will be, and said he thought six horses would make you so. He was speaking also that he would have your Lordship make a flourish, and offer to send one of your sons along instead of yourself; but my Lady told him, she thought the charge of setting him forth, and his attendants, in regard he must represent your Honour in the journey, would be as great as the other, though not near so needful; but my Lord will express his mind in his own letter, only I thought good to let your Lordship understand what I perceived by him. His Lordship hath undertaken to excuse, to Secretary Cooke, your Honour's not sending within the time limited, and saith that is not much regarded if they observe to be ready with their horses at the day. I think it is hard to certify your Honour what Lords refuse; very few, if any; they talk my Lord Sey and my Lord Brooke, and some of that knott, will not.

“My Lord of Manchester told me himself that his son Mandevile did go; my Lady Manchester told me secretly that the King told my Lord he heard his son Mandevile would not go, and my Lord replied that then he would neither acknowledge him his son nor heir.

“My Lord Keeper [Coventry] sends 20 horse, my Lord Manch[ester] 20, besides a proportion for my Lord Mandevile, and my Lord Shandois, Lord of Holland, 50, Lord Chamb[erlain] Pemb[roke] 20, my Lord Salisbury 30, as I hear; but these are no precedents for your Lordship. To come to our country Lords, my Lord of Westmor[land] 10, Lord of Peterbur[gh] 10, and my Lord Camden 10. And my Lord Manch[ester] told me that my Lord North told him he would send 6, and he would not have him exceed your Honour, being he is the least estated lord of the kingdom.

"If your Lordship intend to provide, I believe John Sadler cannot furnish you with fashionable saddles; therefore it were best to have them from London.

"Mr. Tanfeild goeth homeward today; he will relate to your Honour how near he and Mr. Salisbury are to agree. My co[usin] Palmer comes down against the assizes. Neither of them have had any fees delivered by me from your Honour."

EDWARD MOUNTAGU to his father, LORD MOUNTAGU.

1638[-9], Feb. 20, Ditton.—"I am glad your Lordship resolveth not to send money. I understand by my brother that my Lord Privy Seal thinketh four horses too little, but if they tarry long it will be a great charge if they be all the time maintained at your charge; but I believe they will not tarry long at it. I think they will not disallow your Lordship's armour if it be anything reasonable, having so short a time that you cannot provide yourself better; and for great saddles, which I think you have not, you may soon be provided of.

"My wife hath been ill this [these] four or five days, and intendeth to tarry awhile longer with her mother [Lady Winwood], and to enter into a course of physic, bu[t] I intend to be at home the next week, except your Lordship shall think it needful for me to go to London to provide things against this journey, which will be hard to get." . . .

Seal of arms.

E. [LORD] MOUNTAGU to LORD [MANCHESTER].

1638[-9], Feb. 22, Boughton.—"I have made short work, though it may be costly, and have made "four" six,* and further I will not go. And I thought fit to send this messenger again, that I may know how it will be accepted. I will not tender any of my sons (?), neither will I ever give any money for discharge of the service, but will carry it out as well as I can.

"I am glad to hear that I do by your letter of your son Mandevill; there goeth other report, and that he with some other Lords should write to his Majesty of their refusal. The business makes a great noise, and puts upon us no small charge, whereas many think little will come of it, but the King shall see the readiness of his subjects.

[P.S.] "The King had need to give longer time than the first of April, for it will not be possible to be provided in so short a time; May day will be soon enough. If your Lordship send my Lord Mandevill and my Lord Shaudos, it were good that all our men were put into like equipage."

Autograph draft.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]38[-9], Feb. 25.—"Your letter is delivered, and your tender of six horse is accepted of. I have sent my son Mandevill into Hunting-tonshire to muster up the forces of that county, for the King hath set to be at Hinchbrook to bed the 27th of March, and so towards Yorke. The King had apprehended such a conceit of my son as it should seem you have heard of, but I have removed that, and put him into a better opinion of him, and some Lords that indeed made a kind of refusal have since tendered their service to the King.

* See the letter of 18 Feb.

“All the Peers are here very forward to attend the King, and you will shortly have a declaration of the King’s concerning this voyage. My son Mandevill being now in the country, if you send to him you may agree how yours and mine may be put into one equipage. For my Lord Chandos, I hold not fit he should send any, being as yet the King’s ward, and so his lands in the King’s hands to do him this service; but it may be he will take a journey to see the Army when they are settled.”

Seal, a crest & coronet.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1638[-9], Feb. 25, Temp[le].—“Your letter was delivered on Saturday night, and on Sunday my Lord of Manch[ester] spoke with Mr. Secretary, who saith your Lordship’s willing offer will be very well taken. I could not speak with my Lord Mandevile, for he is gone into the country to provide for the journey. I know not (by either of your Honour’s letters) whether I should provide any arms, but I will speak to Mr. Dillingham (who saith he can have both the best and cheapest, if any be to be had) to provide six complete arms for horsemen and six case of pistols, and to have them in readliness; and then, if it please your Lordship to send your pleasure next week by the carrier, we can accordingly either buy them or leave them; for there will be but short time to prepare, for Mr. Dixon told me that the 18th of the next month is the certain day. I hope your Lordship will excuse my haste, for we are now a-going to the wedding of one of my Lord Keeper’s daughters. We are much bound to my Lord and Lady, that they will be pleased to think of us for to be guests, for though I have some acquaintance with the bridegroom, yet our invitation proceeds from them.”

Seal, a crest.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1639,] Feb. 28.—“I shall begin my letter with the same wish which you were pleased to end yours with, that notwithstanding the preparations we may have peace. Since I presented my last letter, we have sought about for arms, but can get none, neither can any be made under three weeks’ time, so that unless your Honour can have them out of [the] Tower, your own must serve. Between this and the next week I will see if any be to be had there, and if your Lordship contradict not what you have written, then upon your letter I shall buy them, taking the advice of some that have skill both for their goodness and price. In the mean time I have bespoken six case of pistols with firelocks, which will be ready to send down next week.

“What your Honour’s resolution for saddles is, I know not, but they may be had at short warning. I am sorry that I cannot satisfy your Lordship in sending word how the horsemen are to be arrayed. I went this morning to wait upon my Lord Willughby [Montagu Bertie], where I should have heard enough to satisfy your Honour, if I had found him, but he was gone very early a-hunting with the King; yet this I can say, that Sir John Suelin, who is the exactest and forwardest man in this service, hath as yet given his men nothing but colours for their hats, and as I am informed will give them nothing more. The day holds certain [the] 18th for the Household, the 28th for the King. I know Judge Hutton's death is no news; the assizes have soon divulged that he was yesterday privately buried at St. Dunst[an's] without any sermon, it being his own desire to avoid a commendatory sermon, which now are so frequent."

E. [VISCOUNT] MANDEVILLE to his uncle, LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1639,] March 6, Warwick House.—“I have received your Lordship's letters. My stay was very short in your country, for my business was not great. I perceive your Lordship is troubled for your providing of arms. I shall do my best to provide six carabin arms for you. You shall not need to have curasses for livery coats; there is no need; only buff coats and scarfs and arms, for the which if I may know your mind by your next return, I shall take care to do you the best service I can.”

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]38[-9], March 7.—“The King holds his journey, and purposes to be at Hitchenbrook the 26th of March, and so post towards Yorke. The appointment that was for the trained bands to have gone at this time is now changed, and for the present a levy is to be made in the counties of press men to the number of six thousand. There are letters to go forth to the Lieutenants of shires presently to that purpose.

“The King's Declaration and Proclamation is now gone forth; I have willed Mulsho to send you one if it be not come to your hands already. The General's Commission to my Lord Marshal is now sealed. The Lieutenant General of the foot is my Lord of Essex, and my Lord Holland of the horse. The Catholics, as they will be styled, are very forward in this service, and go deep in provisions for it. The nobility and gentry have expressed great readiness also to serve and attend the King.

“My son Mandevill made no long stay in the country, but shall come down again ere long. If your son William have been with him, he will acquaint him with the provisions I make for myself and him. I will at some leisure look upon Doctor Androes his sermon you commend. God send all to succeed well.”

Seal of arms.

JOHN MANNERS to [his father-in-law] LORD MONTAIGU.

[1639,] March 8, Haddon.—“I know that unseasonable invitations deserve rather with scorn to be rejected than with good will to be accepted. I am just now returned from Beauveoir, where I first heard of your intents for Yoreke. You know best your own strength to undergo so tedious and unquiet a voyage. If you continue that design, I shall most humbly and heartily pray you to make essay of your strength hither first, and here to rest you a fourteennights, or what time you shall please more or less, and so proceed as you find yourself. If my Lady come hither with you, I will bring her word how you get thither, for (God willing), if you go, I will attend on you thither. But if all this prove false (as truly I confess I had rather wait on you at home), I shall beseech you to look on this as not written, though it comes from a hand whose whole (sic) truly honours you, and who in war as in peace will ever judge it his chief honour really to be,” &c.

[P.S.] “If you want horses, I shall humbly offer two unto your service, with arms fitted, and, if you so please, men also for riders.”

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]38[-9], M[arch] 13.—“It seems you are beforehand with us, for you have sent to be provided at York for your company when they come there. I wish he (sic) will take up room for mine also. Your son William and my son Mandavill (sic) will fit you for arms, but indeed I could wish you sent my nephew Chri[sto]pher for company, were it but for fashion, and [to] come back again.

“There is as yet but a slender preparation for an Army. God send they have man’s meat and horsemeat when they come there. The soldiers that are to go must now be press men, which will be, as I think, more trouble and more cost, for now the King must find them armour; the country find coat and conduct money. The letters are appointed, but not yet sent, to the Lieutenants of the shires. We are so unacquainted with war as things are as yet much to seek.

“You shall hear the next week when it will be best to set forward your men; mine also shall go from Kimolton. The King holds his purpose of being at Hinchbroke at the 26th day of March. Out of Scotland the news is not good, for of the King’s part many of late are joined with the Covenanters, and they prepare to fortify Leith and a great compass about that town. God send all to succeed well with us.”

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

1638[-9], March 14, Temp[le].—“It is a hard case when a necessity is accompanied with an impossibility, as when things must be had but cannot be got. The King commands armour and pistols, and sets all the armourers and pistolers a-work for himself. The six case of pistols were promised to be ready against Tuesday last, and upon Friday the King’s warrant came to prohibit them to work for any but him, so that they could not be done to send this week; next week, without fail. One case are [is] sent now, which we had much ado to get; the locks are not fire-locks, but better; for besides the impossibility to get them, they are not mendable when out of tune. My Lord Mandevile and most of the Lords have of this sort.

“Most of the things your Honour sent for this week are sent. As for arms, Newman and I have searched again, but none to be found; here and there a mismatched suit[e], but none complete. He saith he knoweth your Lordship’s own are good, and may be made reasonable fashionable. The distinction between curasses and carbine arms is this. Curasses are arms that cover from head to below the knee, with cape, collar, arms, gaunts, back and breast piece, and thigh-pieces; this is armour for a great horse, which, if to be bought, would cost 7*l*. Carbine arms consist only of a pan for the head, back and breast piece, and gaunts; this is armour for a light horse, and would cost 3*l*., and is called carbine, from a long pistol which they are to wear called a carbine. In an army the former sort are to subdue, the latter to pursue.

“My Lord Mandevile saith your Honour must have six carbine pistols besides your others, though Newman saith he that hath pistols must have no carbines. If your Lordship will have six carbine pistols, my Lord Mand[evile] saith he will procure them of my Lord of Warwicke. I was bold to ask his Lordship how his men were set forth, and he told me with carbine arms and buff coats and scarfs, and that’s all, besides pistols, carbines, and swords; he sends his armour in a wagon to York. I found his Lordship very ready to instruct me and to serve you. I think he will be the best to present your Lordship’s aged excuse to the King, and to show his Majesty how ready you are to serve him with your aid, for they say every Lord's horses shall be showed to the King at York.

"Your Honour's first resolution to put your horse to be commanded by him was very good; otherwise your men will be guideless, and not know what to do, which from him they shall always be instructed; if your Honour have not altered from that, I am sure, upon your letter to him, he will undertake it. I will enquire exactly to send your Lordship word next week if the day hold. Now it is set at my uncle Sydney's, 26th March. Mr. Dilling[ham] hath been careful to provide; he thinks it would be good your Lordship's men had red breeches to their buff coats, because otherwise, being country fellows, they will not be so neatly habited as the other Lords' men, who choose men that of themselves are well apparelled, though they give them the more pay. Six yards will make six pair of breeches, and that may be had in the country, if you please. The beditts, or grooms, are to have no arms at all, for they never appear on horseback but in the journey.

"Richard Barker hath had the money of Sir John Trever; the bills of the things he will discharge. I desire your Lordship we may have your allowance out of money that he hath of Mr. Negus. Inter arma silent leges—these disturbances distract the lawyers, yet the Readers perform their places with honour. Yesterday my cousin Wood came to see us, and by him I understand that there is a sequestration between him and Barnwell living, though ignorant of the cause; if it be that which I conjecture, I shall hereafter trust my Lord Bacon, who saith a wife is an impediment to a man's fortune. But be the cause what it will, now seeing it is so, I cannot but discharge a debt which I owe to my old schoolmaster and my first too, Mr. Hunt, as to desire his preferment to this living; and though I hold not with Alexander that men owe more to their schoolmasters than to their parents, yet certainly they owe very much, and therefore I hope your Lordship will not blame me to seek it, though I must confess it is a boldness to solicit you. I shall spare to urge, because I think he is in your Lordship's thoughts already.

Seal, a crest.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1639?] March 17.— . . . "By what I have sent you may easily collect that there is like to be flat opposition. The Declaration which I have sent is high, and that which is composing will be higher. If the King should set up his standard no man of eminency can sit neuter; therefore it concerneth all to ponder to what they will betake themselves, that no sudden motion may surprise them."

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]38[-9], March 21.—"I shall for your more satisfaction speak with the King, and have his leave for your personal stay, which you may well think is not expected, though the letter requires it. The King censures* well of your readiness, and the preparation of your men and horse. After I had prepared my men and horse for his service, the King told me he rather desired the help of my purse, and would spare the other. To please him I offered to send him five hundred pound in gold, and having provided my horse, I would also give him ten horse to his service ; which he accepted well at my hands ; and at Huntington I mean to present him with my horses (sic). So, considering my charge, I had better have given him a thousand pounds at first.

* Or construes? Cf. Vol. iv., p. 109.

“The King’s journey holds at his time appointed. We do hear that the Scots grow rather more resolute than any way relenting. God give a good issue to the business.”

Seal, a crest and coronet.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1639,] March 21, Temp[le].—“I fear now we shall have war, and now more than ever, because the King will now accept money of the Lords, and excuse many of their going personally, which had they all gone, then I know there would have been no battle, for when was it known that the nobility were ever ventured in the first battle, as now, had they gone, they must have been ; but now, seeing that they may be exempted for money, and yet the journey hold, I fear the worst. Neither should I for the compounding of some think anything, but for the generality now very many compound, and of those that were in all points ready prepared to go.

“My Lord Marquis Hamelton giveth 1000*l.* to be excused, my Lord of Kingstone as much, and divers others of that rank, as my Lady Manchester told me. My Lord Manchest[er] compounds, though he was ready prepared, and so my Lord Mandevile goeth not. My Lord Camden was completely armed, and hath compounded for 1000 marks ; my Lord Wharton for 500*l.*, my Lord Dencourt as much, and divers others which were named to me, besides many that are about compounding. Hearing this, I went on Wednesday to my Lord Manchester’s to hear what he would say concerning your Lordship, but all he demanded of me was, if your Lordship was ready, and I told him yes, and that your Honour intended to send your horse on Monday towards Yorke. He said it was well, and told me that the King went himself on the 27th March, being Wednesday, which is but a day altered from that I wrote last week. Seeing my Lord Mandevill goeth not, your Lordship may appoint Mr. Sawyer to wait on my Lord Willughby. My Lady Lindsey is gone to Havering, fearful that her Lord’s employment is desperate. For news, I write you none, but leave it to my brother.”

Seal, a crest.

E. [LORD] M[OUNTAGU] to his grandson, the LORD WILLOUGHBY.

1639, March 25, Boughton.—“I have sent six men and horses, according to his Majesty’s command, to be at Yorke the 1st of April next. I do imagine (?) that every lord will be called in particular to show how they have furnished the King for his assistance in this service.

“In respect of my age and infirmities, I know my personal attendance cannot be expected ; and therefore I desire you to do me that honour, that when my men and horse[s] shall be called, you would present them to his Majesty with my readiness to do his Majesty service, and if there be any defects in the arms, to excuse them, for truly I was in many (?) troubles to get these, and you know they were not to be come by as I would have had them.

“This young gentleman, Mr. Sawyer, being * determined to go to Yorke, was very willing to have the oversight of my men [and] horse[s] till they were presented to his Majesty ; I pray you therefore that you will do him the best grace you can. And he being desirous to have some employment, you will let him have your best further[ance], he addicting himself to be a soldier.

* “Desirous to see these,” struck out.

“I pray God give his Majesty good success in this great business.”
Autograph draft.

E. [LORD] MO[UNTAGU] to LORD [MANCHESTER].

1639, March 25, Boug[hton].—“The greatest comfort I have in your Lordship and other Lords componding is, that I hope ours, which may God (sic?), shall have the better pay, when we have present[ed] our men and horses. I have sent away this morning toward Yorke my six men and horses, with three or four bedettes, and other carriages to the number of 12. And because, as I hear, your son Mandevill goes not, I have sent to my son Willoughby to present them to his Majesty, with excuses if all be not so complete as they should be, or as I would have had them. I have had no small care and trouble to get these. You know he that girdeth on his harness must not boast himself as he that puts it off. I pray God we may have boasting at the end. Methinks we have had [1]ittle care for a blessing beforehand.* My prayers shall be for a blessing, or else we shall have a great fail.” †

Autograph draft.

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS OF] LINDSEY to her father, LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1640.]—“No place can make me now hardy, for my years and imperfections, as I have much ado to uphold a crazy body. There will be masking at Quort (Court) at Twelfth-night, but we are not for those jovial rit[e]s. Your Lordship is taking care in the country how to give bread to others; we know not where to have bread for yourselves (sic), neither in the country nor town. I stir nowhither abroad, but see my Lady of Manchester sometimes. I beseech you give her thanks for her noble respect to me.” . . .

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to his father, LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1641,] Nov. 25, Savoy.—“I most humbly thank your Lordship for your forwardness to accommodate me with a chamber, which as I shall order it will prove no more to your Honour, but the forbearance of the money; for I am in fair hopes to get an assignment. Friday is the day of Temple parliament, wherein it must be enacted. As for the falling of the price, your Lordship writes I know where it must light, and so I think I do, for I know none but your Honour that can bear it, of those that are concerned in it; for I cannot imagine that you should intend it to fall any ways upon me, since your Lordship knows that upon pure obedience to your commands, even contrary to my own inclination, I returned to the Temple. But I leave all things to your wisdom; only let me say, with all submissive respect, that this which I reckoned should have been an engagement, with those fears which you put me in, will scarce prove an encouragement. My Lord, the chamber is a single chamber, and in the garden, a little too near the water, and that is all the fault; but I had rather take it with some inconvenience than rest thus as I am, both having my books locked from me, and myself from society.

* A passage on prayers, referring to Bishop Hall, is struck out.

† There are two other letters relating to this subject (Vol. 3, p. 231). One of them states that “every two horse must have a bedott or a groom to attend them.” See p. 283.

“The Parliament have sate all this week about the Remonstrance, [so] that no other news is stirring; they sate Monday night till 2 of clock in the morning. They posted as fast to dispatch the Remonstrance as the King did to dispatch his journey; but I fear it will not please him so well as the City’s entertainment, which they say will be very magnificent; all the streets are railed for the advantage of the show. The Queen hath committed some sin of late, for Tuesday she sent to the Lords, and they to the Commons, to release Father Phillips, but it would not be. Mr. Charles Lane had a hearing on Monday in the Chancery, but was quite foiled, and scaped fair from being committed for saucy words in court.”

Seal of arms.

[WILLIAM MOUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1641, Nov. 25-27.]—“I take this occasion to send you what news there is stirring.

“Thursday [25 Nov.], the City entertained the King and Queen most magnificently. The King and Queen seemed to be much taken with it, and so they were resolved to have been, though the entertainment had been worse; and they have, they say, a policy in it to see if they can gain the City, but God forbid, for if they hold not firm we are all undone. The King knighted my Lord Mayor and Recorder in the field, and told the Aldermen that he had intended to have bestowed London Derry upon them, but as yet it is not worth their acceptance; but he will first clear it of the rebels, and then they shall have it.

“The Parliament that night they sate so late were almost equally divided about the Remonstrance, and my cousin Jeffrey Palmer and some others protested or would have protested if it might have been entered, but that was not held Parliamentary; and therefore on Thursday they committed Jeff[rey] to the Tower, where he now is. I was with him on Saturday, and I think he will be sorely punished by the multitude of visitants, otherwise I think it will not much hurt him. He is troubled lest his wife should take it to heart, but she need not, for there is nothing in it. By this act there is now an apparent faction in the House, and I fear will prove ill if it holds.

“Friday [26 Nov.], the King sent word he would come to Parliament, but did not, by reason of his hoarseness; having somewhat to say, he would stay till his voice was clear. They say, when he comes, he will come high, taking advantage of the faction of the House of Commons, and of the affection of the City, which he now builds upon; but if they work no better with him, I wish he may be deceived.

“They talk much that the King is often very private with Digby and Bristow, and that he looks but overly upon the good Lords. This ariseth because he took away my Lord Chamberlain’s [Essex] commission for General of this side Trent. But I verily believe this is a thing of course.

“This day the King went to Hampton, returns Monday; but before he went, he sent to the Houses to discharge their guard, he conceiving his person to be a sufficient safeguard to his people. The Commons went to consult. Pimm said his person at Hampton Court was like to guard them well here; other[s] said, if his Majesty could not protect the Marquis in his own bedchamber, he could scarce protect them in the Parliament chamber. You may see it vexed them, and made them almost resolve to adjourn to Gnildhall; but others, more moderate, prevailed to have two Lords sent to desire it might be continued.

“Saturday [27 Nov.], Warwicke and Bristow were sent to desire the guard might be continued, and the King returned answer that to secure their imaginary fears they should have a guard.

“The House of Commons this day drew up and voted and [a?] petition to annex to that Remonstrance which they present to the King on Tuesday.

“It goeth ill with Will Dudley; Claston is his, paying debts and portions, and that is half the worth of it. Barnwell, Turvey, and Brinton are the daughter[']s by reason of a fine levied Hilary term by Ed. Dudley and his mother, he dying before the uses were settled. Sir Christ. Hatton is putting in a petition for the wardship, they being clear wards and belonging to him according to the instructions.”

Seal of arms.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1641,] Dec. 2, Savoy.—“I see Mr. Cayworth hath anticipated my news which I sent you by John Wolaston; there is little more since that. There is (sic) such factions amongst them that of purpose they delay necessary business, merely because moved by the contrary side. I begin to be of your Lordship's mind, that we are running to ruin; there is scarce any hopes of better. Sects in the body and factions in the head are dangerous diseases, and do desperately threaten the dissolution of a well-governed estate.

“The Citizens grow very tumultuous, and flock by troops daily to the Parliament. There is scarce passage between the two Houses, the Court of Requests is so thronged with them; and there they never cease yawling and crying, ‘No Bishops! no Bishops!’ My Lord of Dorcet (since the ceaser (sic) of Essex's commission) is appointed to command the train bands to attend, but the Citizens slight muskets charged with powder. I myself saw the Guard attempt to drive the Citizens forth, but the Citizens blustered at them, and would not stir an inch. I saw and heard my Lord of Dorcet entreat them with his hat in his hand, and yet the scoundrels would not move. I think this would provoke authority to the height of rigour; but now that is condemned and trampled on.

“Wednesday [1 Dec.], the Commons sent the King the Remonstrance, and that day offered to the Lords their proofs against the Bishops. Poor Ireland is scarce thought of, only this day they read a Bill for pressing of men for that service. The Commons intended to have petitioned the King for to have made my Lord of Salisbury Lord Treasurer, but they say the King is resolved on Bristow [Earl of Bristol] or Chief Justice [Sir John] Bankes.

“I have sent your Lordship a little book called Leicester's Commonwealth, much cried up, and that caused me to read it over; many pretty things in it, but very satirical. You Lordship will find some other things enclosed, as the Note of Sheriffs, &c. . . .

“For the chamber, I have now gone through for it, and with much difficulty and the same proportion of favour obtained an assignment upon reasonable terms, so that now your Honour will not run any hazard of any considerable sum. The money I have thus taken up—120*l.* of my cousin Edward Palmer, 50*l.* of Mr. Will. Tresham, and 50*l.* I shall have of Godefrey Maydwell; in all 220*l.* The chamber and assignment, and some other necessities in the chamber not fit to be carried away, comes (sic) to very nigh 200[l.]; the odd 20*l.* I took to pleasure my cousin Palmer with the return of, as he pleased me with the hundred, and that will serve to discharge scores for your Honour's wine (which with the rest of your money will scarce set all clear). I pray, when you send them their money, be pleased to let the notes be demanded that I gave them for the receipt of it."

Seal.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1641,] Dec. 9, Savoy.— . . . "I could not send you word last week of my cousin Jeff. Palmer being out of the Tower, for he was but yesterday released, some very stiffly opposing it. Saturday the Commons sent Mr. Chillingworth (his book will make his name known) to the Tower, and then they said that for a divine and a lawyer the Tower was well replenished. I have sent two little pamphlets; the 'Diurnall Occurrences' of the last week I had thought not to have sent, because it abuseth my cousin Palmer, and falsely, for Chillingworth spoke no such words: that reaches but till Saturday, and leaves out Mr. Pimm's desperate motion, which was that the fewer part of the Lords, and the Commons' House, might go to the King for the passing those Bills which the major part of the Lords opposed. Monday [6 Dec.] they voted O'Neal's fact treason. Wednesday [8 Dec.] they voted a declaration that the Catholic Religion should not be tolerated in any of the three kingdoms; and that is the best act they have done since the Parliament began, if they prosecute it.

"Fortune's wheel turns round. Sir Henry Fane [Vane] hath lost both his places almost in a week's space; his Treasurer's staff taken from him at York, and given to my Lord Savil; his Secretary's seal taken from him on Friday, but not yet disposed of. The same day that he was put out of Secretary, my Lord of Strafford's son's patent was sealed for to make him Earl of Strafford and Baron Raby: the observation, if your Lordship considers it, is not without reason. They have a pretty story of a presage now fulfilled: this year my Lord Dunganvan, making his congee to go out of the House, broke Sir Henry Fane's staff—his Treasurer's staff—then in his hand; it's said he was then much daunted at it, and the wits strai[gh]t told him it was ominous, and so it is now proved.

"Nicklas, Clerk of the Council, is Secretary in Windebank's place, and my Lord Digby they say shall be in Fane's. Sunday the Duke of Richmond was made Steward of the King's Household, and his brother my Lord Aubigny shall be Master of the Queen's Horse. There are many other removes spoke of, and I shall write them here though I believe them not, but certainly the good party is tottering. My Lord of Holland is thought too neat to be any longer Groom of the Stool, and my Lord of Bristow (who shuns all offices of the Commonwealth, though ambitious of any about the King's person) shall have it added to his Gentlemanship of the Bedchamber. My Lord of Essex is not very well looked on; they say he shall go out of the Chamber into the field, and be General of the Irish forces. Bath it was said should be Privy Seal, but by the compliment the King gave my Lord Privy Seal [Earl of Manchester] I know he is fast riveted on that side, if the Commons give him not a jostle. The lawyers also must have their motions: Banks must be Baron and Lord Treasurer, the Attorney Chief Justice, the Solicitor Attorney, the Recorder Solicitor, and Glin Recorder, as now the vote goeth. It is like next week there may be some alterations, for now I think is the vertical point of the times.

"I hope to get down by the latter end of next week, but as yet I am something doubtful; when I come, I shall not trouble your Honour to send up any horses, for my brother will lend me one of his. I stay only to get into my new chamber, which yet I cannot do, the Attorney must remove his books so methodically.

[P.S.] "There is a Journal of this Parliament come forth from the beginning. I have not time now to send it, but if you please to have it next week, I shall send it."

Seal of arms.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1641,] Dec. 16.— . . . "I know not what this Parliament may produce; it is like to sit long, and so must needs hatch much. For the present I am sure it produceth many printed pamphlets; some I have sent your Lordship, and besides two proclamations, one of which I guess was that which caused Mr. Dillingham to give you warning; in the other proclamation I drew a scrawl through three words which were put in by my Lord Privy Seal [Manchester] when the draft was tendered the Board to be advised upon, but neither his son Mandeville, nor my Lord of Warwick, nor Sea [Say?] would subscribe it.

"Saturday, it was resolved that 10,000 Scots should go into Ireland; here are two Commissioners that said they were loath to go unless they take as many as would do the work, and if we could have any jealousy of them they would give security that, upon our command, they shall at any time return. The Londoners delivered their petition on Saturday, and were received with much respect and ceremony by the House of Commons. There were two Justices of Peace sent to the Tower for sending out warrants in obedience to writs which my Lord Keeper [Lyttleton] issued out upon the statute 2 H[en.] 5, cap. 8, for the suppressing of riots and routs.

"Monday, the prisoners at Newgate, being 21, to be hanged that day, made resistance, but were soon taken and next day hanged. There were seven priests condemned besides, and the French Ambassador sent to the King to pardon them; the King sent to the Parliament to advise him, and they had once resolved to have saved two, but now they are petitioning the King to hang them all. In the discuss[ion] about their hanging, the Bishops were called upon to go forth or withdraw; the Bishop of Linc[oln] would not; whereupon my Lord of Warwick and he had some hot words, and the Bishop saying 'Sir,' was mistaken to have said Sirra, and called to the bar, but upon his protestation that he said 'Sir,' they passed that by. It is dangerous to suppose parties in either House, but the bloods of men severall[y] affected are up, you may see by their catching.

"The Commons are giving 400,000*l.* according to the sub[sidy] in Q[ueen] Eliz[abeth's] time. Methinks they are slow in sending help to poor Ireland, the miserable complaints from whence would grieve any heart. The Temple is resolved of a Christmas, and there I dare say there is a faction, and they have chose each side officers, and I think must fight it out. Mr. Sawyer is the chief officer chosen on the one part, and it is thought his valour will carry it. I would fain have dissuaded him from standing, but now he hath appeared in it I would have him win it and wear it. My Lord of Rutland hath sold his set of six bay horses to my Lord Keeper. Yesterday I saw them, and they are a brave set."

Seal of arms.

[WILLIAM MOUNTAGE] to LORD MOUNTAGE.

[1642, Feb. 3-5.]—"Thursday [3 Feb.], both Houses sate in Committees at Marchant Taylors' Hall, and they adjourned the House, to case the City of their watching, by which they are almost harassed out. The Commons did almost perfect the Bill for 400,000*l.* to be levied by a land rate according to the subsidy in 33 of the Queen [Elizabeth]. The King promised to send the Lords and Commons answer to their petition about the Militia on Saturday.

"Friday [4 Feb.], produced very little; only my Lord of Bath and of Southampton asked leave to go into the country, and had it freely given them.

"Saturday [5 Feb.], the Commons sent up the Bill to take away the Bishops' votes in Parliament; the Lords passed it, with an addition to take locum et sedem, or rather locos et sedes, from them also; they carried it by 13 contents. The King's promised answer came not, but a message that he would very shortly send them an answer, both to that and also about the trial of the six men.

"The six men lie all in one house in the City, and have their diet given them by the City.

"It is said the King would come to town, but the Queen stayeth him. She is somewhat ill, and will go this spring to the Spaw.

"We have yet escaped the scarecrow and bugbear notes that were set up to affright us.

"It is said the Bishops shall be proceeded against by Bill, and, if attainted, Yorke, Bath and Wells, and Ely are designed for examples. The other[s] are like to receive mercy. Every Sunday morn one of them preaches in the Tower Church, but the present industry will not procure their delivery.

"I have sent some books; amongst the rest, an Act for a contribution, or a brief to go all over the kingdom to gather for Ireland. The Commons are desired none of them to give under 2*l.*; many of them give much more; and they have made an order that all of the Commons shall give in their money by Tuesday.

"When the Bill for Bishops passed, there were four in the House spoke not, but voted against it."

Seal of arms.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] Feb. 14.—"I thought not to have written, because I think my cousin Palmer will call and tell you all the news, but if he do, I beseech you thank him for his favour to me in assisting me to get a dispensation for my waiting vacations, which now the Bench have wholly remitted.

"Thursday [10th], our own country petition (which I have sent you) was delivered by Sir Rowland St. John, and the best attended by gentlemen of quality of any petition that hath been yet delivered. Friday the Queen went to Rochester, and Saturday she went to Canterbury, and so forward. Thursday and Friday, the Commons spent in naming Lieutenants; the schedule of them I have sent you.

"Saturday [12th], the King sent commission to pass the Bills of pressing soldiers and to take away the Bishops out of the House of Peers. Sir John Berone [Byron] made an humble supplication to the King, that he might leave his place, and so the King with the advice of his Parliament hath put in Sir Jo. Conyers. The Lords will pass the Bill of Pluralities, and then of course it is expected the King should.

"They say the King passeth the Bill against the Bishops so quickly, lest the Queen should be thought to be a hindrance of it; and now she is gone he is diffident of his own resolution, and fearful he should have been wrought to have broken it if now he should have given them a denial.

“Sunday was sevensnight [6th] Dr. Winniff was consecrated Bishop of Lincolne and Dr. King of Chichester. The Bishop of Ely preached yesterday in the Tower. The Commons are sending a* petition to the King to desire him to discover who advised him to accuse the six; if he be pleased to discover, it may go well with Mr. Attorney [Herbert], otherwise they will ruin him.”

Seal of arms.

[SIR] JO[HN] WRAY, [BART.,] † to LORD MOUNTAGUE, at Boughton.

[1642.] Feb. 17.—“I am glad to hear of the continuance of your health, and desire your pardon for not presenting my service sooner, having been so continually kept at work, as we have very little time for any other employment. This week hath produced so happy effects as gives us hopes of better times. Valentine Day was the welcome commission read for disvoting of Bishops, who yesterday notwithstanding was (sic) bailed by the Lords, and upon our exceptions taken remanded to prison again, and on Friday next are to be heard and tried one way or other. I suppose your Lordship hath heard of the letters of my Lord Dygby which were intercepted by way, one to the Queen, one to Sir Lewis Dyves, and one to Mr. Nicoles [Nicholas]. They were all opened by both Houses at a Committee; they declare his discontent and malice against this kingdom, holding this treacherous opinion, that he can do his Majesty no service where so many traitors bear sway, and desires the Queen to send him a cipher, that they may have the better intercourse by writing. It is thought the Queen goes not into Holland, but that the Prince of Orringe will either fetch her or send for her. Nothing more this week but propositions for adventers (sic) for Ireland, that he who ventures 200*l.* shall have a 1000 acres in Ulster, and 300 as much in Conway [Connaught], for 450 so much in Munster, and 600 so much in Leinster. Thus with my humble service and duty and my wife’s to your Lordship and your noble Lady presented, (&c.) Your Honour’s most devoted nephew and servant.”

Signed.

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS OF] LINDSEY to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642, March 16.]—“This week I doubt not but you will have the Remonstrance. The Parliament is much troubled what to do; there is another Demonstrance (sic) coming forth, to show the King and his people the necessity of what they have desired. They talk of another Oath that is a-framing, which they call the Oath of Association. I have made bold to send to your Lordship some of the storing (?) wit’s employment, which when you have read I pray commit to the fire. My brother William was with me the other day to let me know the order he had from you of your bounty to Harry [Bertie]. I would not have him have it (?) till he were going, fearing he should spend it before. The Lord of Warwick is nominated for to go to sea (?), and is like to be troublesome times.

[P. S.] “There is come in this day to the Lord’s House a letter from the King about the Iris[h] business and the Militia. For the Iris[h] business, the King is very ready to further it in what he can; for the Militia, he expresses that no ordinance of Parliament without his assent shall be of force to do anything in it. This letter is much canvassed * “Message,” struck out.

† M.P. for Lincolnshire.

in the House, supposing it comes not from the King. The Prince of Orange by report was sending to the King six hundred thousand pound to the King (sic), but the States have stayed it."

Seal of arms.

GEORGE MOUNTAGU to his uncle LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1642,] March 16, Wednesday.—“I should before this have troubled your Lordship had I not known my cousin William’s full and constant intelligence; but doubting his Majesty’s last message hath not as yet come to his hands, I cannot omit humbly to offer and present my service.

“The Houses of Parliament, having received this and many other positive and peremptory denials concerning the Militia, are notwithstanding resolved to persist in their former vote of putting the kingdom in a posture of defence by way of Ordinance, and do again intend to draw a declaration to the kingdom, to satisfy them of the legality and urgent necessity at this time; and have likewise appointed a Committee of the long robe to declare how the King ought and is obliged by the law to pass those Ordinances which they present; and likewise to consider what both Houses of Parliament may do (viz., the extent of their power) in case the King thus withdraw himself, and in what condition they be that are the advisers of this his absence from Parliament.

“These being so ordered, I shall shortly acquaint your Lordship with their votes this day, upon the receipt of the message here enclosed: That the King’s absence from Parliament is not only an obstruction, but a destruction, to the affairs of Ireland. And that when the Lords and Commons in Parliament, which is the supreme Court of Judicature in the kingdom, shall declare what the law of the land is, then to have this not only questioned, but contraverted (sic), contradicted, and commanded not to be executed, is a high breach of privilege. These are the most material things which have lately happened.”

EDWARD [LORD] MOUNTAGU to [EDWARD VISCOUNT MANDEVILLE*].

1641[-2], March 21, Boughton.—“There is a thing (I may say a sin) which much troubles my thoughts, and I know not to whom better to utter it than to yourself, whom I know to be sound in the Faith, and to have a care to keep a good conscience. It is not once nor twice but thrice an allowance of usury in the Parlia[ment] (a sin not only against the law of God, but against the law of the land), which is now made a national sin, which was never known before, and therefore the more to be feared. If one man’s sin troubled all Israel, what shall a Parliament’s sin do? And if sin be the ruin of kingdoms (which ours is very near brought unto), what can we expect but not to stand before our enemies until the cursed thing be taken away from us? Good my Lord, let this be well thought of. Why did Nehemiah rebuke the nobles and elders? Because they exacted usury. See the care the Parliament had in the 21 Ja. 17, in the latter end of it: ‘provided that no words in this law contained shall be construed or expounded to allow the practice of usury in point of religion or conscience.’ Why may not such a declaration be made to clear the land from this sin? Let what pretences soever be made, we may not do evil that good may come thereof. I marvel that the Reverend Divines pass over the reprehension of this sin, so often printed (sic), which they cannot be ignorant of. I would those that preach before the Parliament were put in mind of this.

* He succeeded his father as Earl of Manchester in 1642.

Mr. Calamy hath made an excellent sermon against sin in general, and what ill effects comes (sic) of it. Make your walls (as now you are putting the Realm into a posture) never so high and strong, sin will batter them down. My Lord, I will not enter into any further discourse. I have delivered my mind to you, and much eased my thoughts. I pray God direct your heart by his holy spirit to do what is fit herein. And so I rest

“Your very loving unele, “EDWARD MOUNTAGU.”

Copy, in a clerk's hand, appended to a letter of 26 June 1643, which see.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] March 24.—“I must beg your excuse that I write nothing in answer to what your Honour hath written, nor give you any account of the performance of any command which you may possibly have laid upon me in your letter, in regard that I have not yet received it, before I set pen to paper, by reason of a mistake in the superscription, for my sister Lindsey's letter was superscribed to me, and I believe mine to her. I sent her Ladyship hers last night, thinking my man should bring me mine, but she told him she had given it to one that should bring me it this morning, but I am writing before it cometh.

“As I sent your Lordship word last week, so it continueth this week. My cousin Ro. Lane cannot prevail with my Lord Manchester to give him any pension. My Lord saith his place [Lord Privy Seal] is high and expensive, and he gets nothing by it; indeed I think he gets less now than ever he did; yet methinks he might spare 10*l.* per annum to a distressed kinsman, but he will not. The poor gentleman made miserable complaint to him that on Friday his landlord had threatened him to turn him into the street if he did not pay his rent at the day, and that wring two pieces from him.

“I have sent your Lordship the books, among the rest the Act for adventuring for Ireland. Sure I think 500*l.* or a 1000*l.* was very well ventured there, if a man had it. I believe it is a very feasible business, if, please God, our distractions were but settled, which there is [are] better hopes of since it is discovered that the King's going to Yorke is only to keep his promise with the Queen that he will not return to the Parliament till she return to him, and not any intent to set up his standard.

“One piece of news I will insert here, because I know not whether my Lady Ann may know it, but here it is so public that I think she may. Her brother Francis* hath been in the field with Sir Henry Skipwith's son about the great widow. He came off with honour (if any can be got in such duels), and made him subscribe to a note that, when published, will proclaim Skipwith a coward; but though he conquered him, yet he is not like to conquer the widow. Yesterday, my co[usin] Francis was before the Lords for it, and for fear of another bout they have confined him to my Lord's [Lindsey] house. . . .

“I suppose you hear from Belvoire how kindly the King took my Lord of Rutland's coach, which carried him two days, and the King sent him word he was more beholding to him than to any of his Lords in that journey; but my Lord hath accepted to be the Lieutenant of Darbyshire, and that will lose his favour.

* Bertie. “Mr. Barty” in H. L. Journals, IV., 694*b*. Collins says he was the fourth son of the Earl of Lindsey, and died in the King's service in Ireland, in 1641 (sic).

[P.S.] "My cousin Henry Berty hath been here with me, and brought me my own letter, and withall tells me his commission for Ireland is to be sealed on Saturday, and he shall need his money next week." . . .

Seal of arms.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

[16]41[-2,] M[arch] 24.—"I am glad to see by a letter of yours that my son George showed me that your hand yet serves you to write, and it seems you could be contented to hear how things go here. Were Mulsho in case (sic), he could not have wanted matter for news to write you every week, nay, every day. But your sons are to blame if they do not store you with the pamphlets that tell what's done every day upon all occasions. Your age gives you privilege to sit at home, and mine, not much short of yours, takes little comfort to be busy in matters here. Not finding myself well, I have little troubled the Parliament House for some weeks past. As things are, there is more need of prayers than counsellors (sic). I commend my best love to my sister and you."

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642, March 24-31].—"Thursday [24 March], came the K[ing]'s declaration, and a message from him that he was yet unsatisfied about the aspersion in Mr. Pimm's speech. Those I have sent you by Mr. Nethercoats. The Commons had a debate whether they should answer this declaration or not. . . . Those that opposed the answering it, said, such answers and replies would be endless, and therefore would have a declaration drawn and sent to the whole kingdom, and there an end; but it is not yet resolved what shall be. In the same message the King refused to pass the Bill to quit the six, because of the preamble, which was drawn to his dishonour; but a bare Bill of pardon or acquittal he will pass. The King holds stiff for Sir Jo[hn] Penington; the Houses as stiff for Warwick."

"Friday [25 March], the House made new Lord Lieutenants in the places of those that refused, as Marquis Harford, Cumberland, Lincolne, Strange. Bedford hath Somerset,* Lord Gray Cumberland's, Say Strange's, Willug[hby] of Par[ham] Lincoln's.

"Saturday [26 March], the Commons subscribed 40,000*l.* to the venture of Ireland. This day the Commons ordered speedy Committees to proceed against the accused delinquents, as Piercy, German, Finch, Berkly, and Canturbury.† My Lord of Holland moved two days before that they might proceed against my Lord Archbishop, for it was a shame he should lie so long under an accusation. The next day my Lord Archbishop sent my Lord of Holland thanks for his motion. It is thought the King will stay at Yorke, for he hath sent for the Duke of Yorke, and some Lords that are the great officers of his Household.

Monday [28 March], it was debated by the Lords whether the former Lords, viz., Essex, Salsbury, Holland, and Savill, should go wait on the King at Yorke, and upon three hours' debate, the resolution was, they should serve the King here in Parliament, and not be admitted to go down. This day many printers were punished, and a strict order made that no pamphlets nor journals nor any Parliament proceedings should be printed but by special order of the House. You may see the fruits of this order by the paucity of books which I send, for here are all that are to be got. The House discovered a dangerous petition working in Kent by Sir Edward Deering, and found Judge Mallett, who rode that circuit, faltering upon his oath when he was examined before the Lords about it; and likewise they found my Lord of Bristow had the petition in his hand; and so they committed Bristow and Mallett to the Tower, and have sent for Sir Edward Deering and other Justices of Kent as delinquents, who, to forward the petition, went off of the Bench at the Assizes, and would be of the grand jury. There is somewhat of Somersetshire of the same nature, and a plot there. Mr. Coventry is a very active man in that, and is therefore sent for up to the House.

* The Lord Lieutenancy of Somerset had been assigned to the Marquis of Hertford.

† Henry Percy, Henry Jermyn, Lord Keeper Finch, Sir Robert Berkeley, and Archbp. Laud.

“Tuesday [29 March] the Commons took notice that four members of the House being gone down to Yorke (and Yorkshire men) without leave, [they] think there may be something there in hand against the Assizes, and therefore have sent after them to fetch them up again, they being all suspicious men—Sir Will. Savill, Sir Will. Penniman, Sir Tho. Danby, and Mr. Mallory. And they have appointed my Lord Wharton, Sir Phil[ip] Stapleton, and Mr. Fines to go down to Yorke, and to lie leiger there, to agitate between the King and Parliament. This day the Lords sent down to the Commons two papers; the one was a form of a commission for the Lord Lieutenants, the other was a form from them to their deputies; the Commons agreed to both. And that is all I can send you word concerning the Militia. This day the King sent a letter to my Lord Keeper, requiring that my Lo[rd] Lieutenant of Ireland [Earl of Leicester] should be dispatched. The Lieutenant replied he was ready so soon as he might be furnished with supplies of necessaries.

“Thursday [31 March], was ordered to settle the Common Prayer and Church Government, if it hold. The Bill for 400,000*l.* is passed by the King.”

E. LORD M[ONTAGU] to [H. EARL OF MANCHESTER].

1642, March 28, Boughton.— . . . “I was bold upon your son George his lett[er?] to remember him of Solomon’s rule, ‘Fear God; honour the King.’ That would bring all to perfection if it may be truly follow[ed], which I pray heartily for. I hear from my son Will weekly what he can gather up, and your journals tell us more than we were wont to hear. I wonder that things which were —(?) of counsel are suffered to be p[rinted?].”

Autograph rough draft, on the fly-leaf of the letter of 24 March.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642, March 31—April 6.]—“Thursday [31 March], the Commons charged Mr. Binion [George Benyon] for conspiring to overthrow the ordinance of Parliament about the Militia; also for saying that he would take order to make the Lords honest, and that they should be like lords in other countries, that is, subject to arrests. This day the King sent his answer to both Houses, which I have sent.

“Friday [1 April], the Houses voted that never any of the King’s predecessors ever sent a message so prejudicial to the Parliament. Two of the prisoners taken at Tredeagh [Drogheda] were racked, and have confessed particulars which the Houses do not yet publicly discover, and they have sent to the Lords Justices [of Ireland] to have them sent over hither.

“Saturday [2 April], letters from Sir John Hotham to desire that the Parliament would remove the Magazine of Hull to the Tower of London. The Houses have sent to the King about it, because he put the arms into Hull, by his appointment. This day came a letter to my Lord Keeper [Lyttleton] from the King, to deny that my Lord of Warwick should command the fleet. This day the Commons voted the King’s message of Thursday to be a causeless aspersion upon the Parliament.

“Monday [4 April], the Lords voted the Earl of Warw[ick] to go commander of this fleet which is going to sea, and the Lords voted also that my Lord Admiral [Northumberland], in deputing the Earl of Warwick to this command for the defence of this kingdom, and the said Earl for undertaking the said command, to have done nothing therein but according to the laws of the land, unto which they were commanded by both Houses of Parliament; who also declare that the said Lords shall have the assistance of both the Houses against any inconveniences they may incur by yielding their obedience to their commands in this necessary and important service. Upon this ground the Commons do proceed for settling the Militia, and the Lords to [do?] join with them. Sir Edward Deering came to the bar in the House of Commons, and there craved excuse for his not coming at the just day, for he was stayed by reason of his wife’s sickness; he was committed to the Serjeant’s hands.

“Tuesday [5 April], came letters from the high Sheriff of Hamp-[shire], that he had received a letter from the King, and several copies of his last message, with a command to divulge them. The Sheriff sent to the Parliament, desiring to be directed what to do. The Commons declared that the King could not speak by his private letters to command any public thing, but he must do it by his writs or by his Great Seal. Mr. Speaker [Lenthall] brought in a petition, wherein he humbly sheweth to the House the great loss he hath sustained in his estate, partly by his expense, partly by his loss of practice; he declareth besides that his estate is too small to maintain the dignity and lustre of his place, and so refers himself to their considerations. They appointed a Committee to consider of it, and the Committee think fit that he should have 6,000*l.* given him, and I believe the House will not diminish it.

“Wednesday [6 April], the Serjeant informed the House that Sir Ed. Deering had given him the slip; the Commons presently sent to my Lord Admiral to stop all the ports. He hath left a letter with a friend that he is gone to see his wife, but saith nothing of his return. The Lords sate this day till 8 at night in hearing Binion’s cause, but gave no judgment that night.”

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS OF] LINDSEY to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642, March].—“I have not leisure to write much this time to you, only this: my son [Lord] Willughby is sent by the House, and Sir Anthony [Irby],* only to present to the King another Remonstrance. What it will work in the King God knows. All desires (sic) much his return. My Lord is appointed to deliver is [in?] his patent of Lieutenantship, and so is gone down to fectet [fetcet it?], and has leave to be absent twenty days. My son Harry [Bertie] will now be going, and I have entreated my brother to give him your bounty, because he stands in need of some things to furnish himself withall before he go.”

* See H. L. Journals, 21 March, and H. C. Journals, 22 March.

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS OF] LINDSEY TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642, April 13].—"This resolution of the King's for going into Ireland troubles all the good people of the kingdom. This day it is generally voted by both Houses that they will not consent to his determinations for that journey. I pray God divert his mind from it. 'Tis not taken well that the King has put out these Lords out of their office[s], and the Lower House this day has voted that they that shall accept of their places to (sic) be most unworthy men and enemies to the State. My son Harry has received your bounty, which I humbly thank you for."

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] April 14.—"Here are very many of your Lordship's opinion, that it is the only way of speedy accommodation to have an adjournment to another place. But it is well known the Parliament will sit no farther from London than Westminster is. I have sent your Honour the King's message, which amazeth us all here, and none knoweth how to fathom the depth of it. The Parliament are very tender of him, and fearful to have their Sovereign exposed to the impartial perils of war. Others are jealous of his intentions, though his own protestations speak them to be Royal.

"The last week produced little for observation, and what is this week I shall insert here. The King's message came on Monday [11th], and that will declare itself. Tuesday there came letters to my Lords of Essex and Holland, requiring them to come down and attend at St. George's feast, or else to resign the ensigns of their places to my Lord Faulkland's hands, and so he should convey them to the King. They both obey the order of Parliament, which will not suffer them to go, and have resigned, the one his staff, the other his key. The Lords presently voted that these Lords, tarrying here according to the order of both Houses, have done nothing justly to deserve the King's displeasure. The Commons have voted that whosoever shall take any of their places till the Parliament receive satisfaction, is unworthy to bear any office in the Commonwealth. But for all that vote, I believe there are many that will take them. There is in nomination already Newcastle for Chamberlain, and Southampton for Groom of the Stool. The King's message is referred to a Committee of both Houses, to prepare an answer to it, by way of diversion.

"The House of Commons intend to petition the King that that castle at the siege of which Sir Simon Harcoote (sic) was slain, may be given to his Lady for life, and to his heirs for ever, and that will be a good encouragement to others. My cousin Henry [Burtie] hath his money, as you may see by his acquittance; he will wait upon you with thanks next week himself, as he goeth into Lincolnshire to raise his men."

GEORGE MOUNTAGU* to his uncle LORD [MOUNTAGU].

[1642,] April 14, Thursday.—"The honour you lately did me was far beyond my performance or desert; I should count myself most happy to give you notice of anything which might express my thankfulness or fulfil your desires: I shall therefore take the boldness to acquaint your Lordship with some votes which passed yesterday in our House, which perhaps are not as yet come to my cousin William's hands.

* George Mountague, Esquire, son of the Earl of Manchester, and Edward Mountague, Esquire, son of Lord Mountague, were M.P.'s for Huntingdon Borough.

“Upon the removal of the Earls of Holland and Essex, the House of Commons made this resolution: That the attendance of the Earls of Essex and Holland upon the House of Peers is no disobedience to his Majesty's commands. (And, by the way, give me leave to acquaint your Lordship how that the King's message was conditional, That unless they would wait upon his Royal person at Yorke, they must presently give up their offices; and, to leave them altogether unexcusable, [he] sent them a licence and dispensation for their absence, which, whether it be agreeable to the proceedings of Parliament, I refer to your Lordship's long experience.)

“They have also resolved upon the Question, that no member of either House of Parliament ought to absent himself from the service of that House, for any command of his Majesty's, without leave of that House first had, whereof he is a member; and that the licence and dispensation sent by his Majesty to the Earls of Holland and Essex to discharge them of their attendance, contrary to the order of that House, is a high breach of privilege.

“They have further ordered that the displacing of these Lords aforementioned at this time, and upon this occasion, is an injury to the Parliament and the whole kingdom. Agreed likewise, That what persons soever shall accept of either of these offices thus taken away, till satisfaction be given to both Houses, shall be counted to do an ignoble act, to offer an affront to Parliament, and do thereby render themselves incapable of ever bearing any place of honour or trust in this Commonwealth. Lastly, 'tis resolved, That these proceedings are the effects of evil counsels to discourage good men in their duties, and tend to increase division between the King and his people, and to disturb the peace of the kingdom.

“My Lord, these are the votes which we have agreed upon, and intend to carry up to the Lords for their concurrence, which passed shall be published in a Declaration to the kingdom.

“There hath lately been practices in Scotland to stir up that kingdom against this, but the Marquis of Argile, Lowden, &c., hath crusht them in the head, and have appointed an Assembly the 13th of this instant month, to question the Lord Morton, the propounder; for Morton uttered at the Council table, what a shame and dishonour it was to that nation to suffer their native King thus to be diminished in his just prerogative; and 'tis whispered how this was the occasion of the King's sudden journey to Yorke.

“The Lords and Commons are drawing up reasons and motives to stay his Majesty's intended voyage for Ireland; and the Attorney General [Herbert] hath drawn up and presented to the House a Bill for the Militia, specified in his Majesty's message. They talk of more changes—that the Admiral [Northumberland], Lord Keeper [Lyttleton], [and] Lieutenant of Ireland [Leicester] shall lose their places. But I must not omit to acquaint you of the gallantry and stoutness of the Lord Keeper. For the King sending the last week to him to discharge these two Lords, his answer was, That he was a sworn councillor to his Majesty and the kingdom, and that this counsel was so absolutely destructive to both that he in conscience durst not declare his Majesty's pleasure; and that if his Majesty did persist in the same, the Seal was his own, and he would lay it down at his feet, but this he would never pronounce. Whereupon the King sent his express pleasure to both these Lords, Holland and Essex, by letter, and they accordingly delivered their key and staff respectively to the Lord Falkland, his Majesty's Secretary."

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS OF] LINDSEY TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] May 3.—"I hope that my Lady Rutland[']s] want of rest is the greatest danger she is in, so as when that is settled again she will soon mend, which I pray heartily for. Here is great distractions about the King's going to Hull. I pray God appease all. The House is preparing to send again to the King something of pacification, if they can well agree of the manner of it, but they are distracted amongst themselves about it. They are going on with the Militia, to settle it. I will write you nothing concerning the rumours here of my son [Lord Willoughby] nor my Lord, because they are various. I doubt not they will be faithful to King and kingdom. I hope my son Harry [Bertie] has waited upon you, and has acknowledged your favour to him, which had it been wanting, he had lost his employment.

[P.S.] "This day my Lord is sent for up by the House, and to bring in his patent of Lieutenantship."

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]42, May 9.—"The intercourse of letters betwixt us is rare nowadays; you give the true reason—there is no safety in writing anything. You have the printed works, which tell of most that is done. Your experience and mine is to learn what is best to be done in these times. We may wish that were better which we cannot help. This day my Lord Barks and the Attorney Lane are sent for by the King to come to him to Yorke, and they are gone. I was glad to see by your last letter that your hand yet serves you so well to write. It would trouble a man's head to think what to write; therefore with my best love remembered to my sister and yourself, I rest" (&c.)

Seal, a crest.

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS OF] LINDSEY TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] May 11.—"The 10th of this month the Militia began here in London, and all the Lords and Commons of the House (sic) of Parliament was at the view of them, and now they will proceed with it in the countries (sic). How these discontents betwixt King and Parliament will be taken up is not in the power of man[']s] wisdom, but from God, who governs all things for the good of his children. We are all much comforted here of the good news of my Lady Rutland's recovery; I pray God continue her long to your comfort. . . . I have heard nothing of my Lord since he went to York; 'tis thought the King will not let him come. The House has sent for him. I wish it may be for his good."

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] May 13.—"I found things here no better than I left them, the King and the Houses as far from agreeing as from meeting. My sister Lindsey tells me she hath sent you all the books this week, and I think you hear all the other news by this time, for I met my cousin Fosbrooke at St. Alban's, who told me he would wait on you as soon as he came home. Sir John Banks, Sir Tho. Tempest, and the Prince's Attorney [Lane] are gone down to the King. Mr. Geff. Palmer had a letter to come, but durst not go, being a Parliament man.

"Tuesday [10th], the new and old militia of the City trained before the Parliament men in Finchbury fields. Wednesday, the Bill for the Council of Divines was debated, and resolved they should meet 13th of June, and sit in Hen. 7[th's] Chapel in Westminster, and that each divine should have 4s. a day to defray their charges, and the countries must bear it. It is said that the Bishop (sic) of Armagh [James Usher] and of Worcester [John Prideaux], Dr. Sanderson, and Dr. Bromrigg refuse to come because it is not a direct synod, and chosen by divines.

"The million is not much above half subscribed, and therefore the Parliament are resolved to petition the King that the residue of the two millions and half of acres, surplus of what will be shared by the subscribers, shall be employed for the benefit of the Commonwealth, and for the reward of those persons that highly deserve in the wars.

"The French Ambassador sent on Wednesday to the House to let them know that Sir Thomas Rowe hath propounded to the House of Austria that if he [the Emperor] will restore the Prince Elector to the Palatinate, the King of England will join with him in offensive and defensive wars wheresoever he shall make them; and did desire to know if those propositions proceeded by their privities.

"My Lord of Lindsey sent a servant yesterday to his Lady to let her know that he was coming, but the King sent for him back, a[nd] will not let him come.

"Thursday there was read a letter from the King, very high and majestic; he saith in it he will call the Parliament to a strict account. When my Lord Howard, Sir Phil. Stapleton, my Lord Fairfax, Sir Hugh Cholmely and Sir Henry Cholmely (the Committee that are to lie leiger there) came to Yorke, the King told them that if they came to make any party, he would clap them up; the Houses have voted those that shall offer to restrain any of them to be enemies to the State." . . .

E. LORD M[OUNTAGU] to [H. EARL OF MANCHESTER].

1642, May 16, Boughton.—"It troubles my thoughts and grieves my heart to see how things are carried which are no way warrantable, either by the law of God or law of the land. Howsoever for a while things may be carried with an over-high hand, yet we shall find there is rising up against a King but to distract (?). . . .

[P.S.] "Since the writing of this, the Houses' answer and his Majesty's reply puts me into more fever."

Autograph draft, on the fly-leaf of the letter of 9 May.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] May 19.— . . . "News is so little besides what is printed that it is not worth severing from my letter. Tuesday the King sent a proclamation to adjourn the term, [and] willed my Lord Keeper [Lyttleton] to acquaint the Judges, but to conceal it from the Parliament; but it was discovered, and the orders upon it I have sent. Wednesday my Lord of Stamford came, and letters from Sir Jo. Hotham, to inform the House that there is a malignant party in Hull which he somewhat fears, and desires the House to send a Committee, and they have accordingly ordered four to go. They also received letters from the captains of the ships, that they have shipped the Magazine of Hull, but before they got forth the King sent to them command not to carry it from thence: whereupon they desired the Houses to signify their further pleasures, and they presently made an order, and sent it away, to command them to bring it [a]way with the next fair wind, and they will secure them from all indemnities whatsoever."

[WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.]

[1642, May 22-26.]—"Monday [23 May], it was discovered, about noon, that my Lord Keeper had given them the slip, and that he was gone to York. The Lords heard not of it till a letter which he had left with one of his servants was given to my Lord of Essex. The letter was to this purpose: That the King had imposed compelling commands upon him to bring him the Seal, and upon no less injunction than his allegiance, which commands he could by no means disobey, but he would be sure to serve the Commonwealth faithfully, and to the utmost of his power, closing with some other such compliments. The Lords are fearful angry at him, and instantly despatching Mr. Jo[hn] Pickering to see if he could catch him, and to bring him back by the posse comitatus of that county wherein he overtook him. But I believe he was past reach, for he went out on Sunday morn betimes, having sent the Seal the night before by Mr. Elliott, one of the Grooms of the Bedchamber. His going, and the manner of it, is the wonder of London, and stunts us all to apprehend either what was the cause or what will be the sequel of it.

"Sunday night [22 May], all the King's horses went from the Mews towards the North.

"Monday morn [23 May], letters came to the Houses from the Committee Legier at York, signifying that the King had some regiments appeared (sic) before him on Friday, and one of them he had detained to be his guard; that they, according to their instructions, went to the Sheriff to suppress that regiment (which the King had billeted) by the power of the county. The Sheriff, whether willing or not, had a good excuse, that he had nothing to do within the city of York. The Committee went to the King to desire him to be pleased to disband them. He answered, 'No, not a man of them,' and sent to the Sheriff to command him not to hinder any others from coming to him.

"This day my Lord Admiral [Northumberland] made a motion that there might be a Committee of twelve Lords chosen to draw up articles to offer to the King, by way of accommodation; which articles they intend shall be so reasonable and necessary that if the King denied them, all the world should see where the fault lay; this was accordingly ordered. It is not yet known whether the Lords will send to the Commons to join or not with them in it.

"Tuesday [24 May], Judge Berkley came to his trial, and spoke very stoutly and pertly for himself, but very discreet and cautious. He had a good mind to have been tried at common law; did express his desire of it very cunningly and handsomely, and without ex[ce]ption. They only proceeded upon the second article, and then the day was spent; and because many of his witnesses go out of town on Thursday, the Lords have put off the further hearing of it till this day three weeks. And the Sheriff hath leave to let him go anywhere where he dare trust him, either with guard or without guard; which is taken to be a good sign for him.

"Tuesday night, about 10 o'clock, the Earl of Salisbury and Devonshire his son went from London, pretending to their Ladies that they went to Hatfeild to hunt, but are gone to Yorke. The night goers cause some suspicion, and presage no good. It is now said they went this morn.

“Wednesday [25 May], the Commons had Mr. Harris of Oxfordshire and Mr. Sedgewicke preach before them. So soon as the sermons were ended, the House sate, but did nothing but order that their preachers should have thanks, and appointed Dr. Googe and Mr. Sedgewick’s brother to preach for the next fast.

“Thursday [26 May]: they say Mr. [my] Lo[rd]s of Southampton, of Northampton, and of Dover go towards Yorke this day, but because they go in the daytime it startles not anybody.

“My Lord of Mounmoth is gone.

“The K[ing] is to come to Liucolne this Whitsuntide.

“The five members of the House of Commons have commenced their actions of 6,000*l.* damages a-piece against the King’s Attorney [Herbert] for accusing them of treason.

“This day my Lord of Holland traine[d] Middlesex in Tuttle Feilds.

“Thursday (sic) [26 May], the House had notice that my Lord Carnvan and Grandison had a design to have betrayed Hull.

“The Magazine is come as far as Yarmouth.

“My Lord Keeper [Lyttleton] in his journey, at Woburn, was stopped by a constable, who locked him into a[n] inn for three hours, and sent to a Justice of peace for a warrant to call him before him and to examine him. But some of his servants being acquainted thereabouts did get him off upon assurance he was no suspicious fellow. But for all that, I doubt him more than every (sic) I did. The Lords fly away every day; this day my Lord Mowbray, my Lord Coventry, my Lord Capell are gone. My Lord of Westmorland went before.”

[WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.]

[1642, May 29—June 1.]—“Monday [30 May], and Sunday [29th] night, the Magazine of Hull came to London. So soon as the Commons had notice of it, they voted the sailors and the mariners should have forty pounds sent them to drink. This day also there came the King’s Majesty’s proclamation against ordering the Militia by ordinance, and his message by way of answer to the three votes. What they be, let themselves speak, for I have sent them. The Commons have agreed upon another tax; I writ you by the last of 200,000*l.*, but sure this will be much more. For this is, that every man for every pound a year land, true value, shall pay six pence, which comes to 25*l.* for every 1,000*l.* per annum. In the debate of this it was much opposed, in regard it would discover men’s estates, and so consequently much prejudice them in compositions for wardships; to that it was answered that the Court of Wards must down.

“Tuesday [31 May], the Houses agreed upon some 14 or 15 votes which were framed at Christmas, when they sate in Grossers’ Hall, and have gone ever since, and do still, by the name of the diseases and remedies, because they in them set forth what is inconvenient, and what the way to remedy it. Amongst these votes it is agreed that the Parliament must for [the] future dispose of the Militia, nominate the great offices of trust in the kingdom, as Keeper, &c. (since they have been so galled by the grand apostacy of this now Lord Keeper*), and that they shall also nominate all the Privy Council, whose number is to be between 15 and 25; and many other things are comprehended in them, with a settlement of the King's revenue. The Lords sent down the names of 14 divines to be added to the Council of Divines, of which 14 Holdsworth was one; but the Commons, not liking of him in regard he had been so keen and sharp in his speech at the commencement, were divided about him; but he carried it by one voice only, there being 70 against him and 71 for him.

* Lord Lyttleton.

"Wednesday [1 June], the Houses appointed a Committee to draw up a Declaration for to show the legality of training by virtue of the ordinance of Parliament, and to secure from indemnity (sic) all that shall exercise by virtue of it; and voted that the King's proclamation was against law. I hear that the messenger that went to carry the 14 or 15 votes to the King, carried a summons to the members of both Houses to return hither by Wednesday next. The Committee from Yorke sends the Houses word that my Lord Marquis Harford doth very good offices in the North, and desires he may have a public thanks for it. The Houses had a conference this day, and agreed to send to Yorke to know the reason of the commitment of the Antient of Hull, and if it be for being in the garrison, then humbly to beseech his enlargement of the King, because he did nothing but by the command of the Houses of Parliament."

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to his father, LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1642,] June 2.—"You may well be troubled, for so are we all, to think of the dismal threatenings of an approaching division, which, if God prevent not, must needs ensue the vast distance which still continueth, and I doubt not increaseth, between the King and the Houses. Yet I wonder at the confidence which possesseth most men here, that we shall have no blows. I am almost persuaded to believe it by being amongst them, though otherwise my own conjectures would make me fear we should. My Lord Privy Seal [Manchester] is not gone any further than Harvile (sic), and his going thither makes men think his sickness is but counterfeit. The Lords that are at York are very cautious in their advice, and it so concerneth them. . . .

"I fear my Lord of Rutland may be summoned to York: if he should go, he would be more to seek what to advise than those who have been observers here of the pulse of the times. It is whispered, and I beseech you let it be no more, that there is a Covenant and an oath of association a-drawing, like those of Scotland. The Scots are very firm, and willing to make a proportionable return of thankfulness for the kindness that they have received from England."

Seal of arms.

[WILLIAM MOUNTAGU TO LORD MOUNTAGU.]

[1642, June 2-4.]—"Thursday [2 June], the Earl of Northumberland and the Earl of Pembroke showed letters under the King's own hand, commanding them to (sic) upon their allegiance to come to him at York, but the Lords will not let them go. Mr. Solicitor [Oliver St. John] also showed his letter of summons upon the same obligation, but the Commons stayed him too. There was great want of present money, especially to pay the Irish soldiers, and therefore this afternoon the Lords Northumber[land], Pembroke, Essex, Holland, and Mandevile, and Mr. Pimm and Mr. Stroud, went to the Common Council at Guild Hall, and there Northumb[erland] made a brave speech, setting forth the present necessity, and how acceptable it would be for them to supply it; and the City presently lent 100,000*l.* This night Mr. Justice Heath went down to Yorke, but his going was known.

Friday [3 June], letters came from my Lord Willughby of Parham, intimating the obedience of Lincolnshire to the Ordinance of the Militia; how that of 80 constables there failed but two of appearing, notwithstanding the King's Proclamation was posted up at the rendezvous. The House this day have lighted of 15,000*l.* of the money that the Merchants were to have returned the King for the Jewels of the Crown, and have seized it, and intend to take more, as you may see by their order. This night some of the Templers, being drinking together, fell to quarrel, and by one gentleman two were dangerously hurt, and a third, whose name was Harvy (none of our countrymen), was stabbed with a poinard, and died on the place immediately.

"Saturday [4th], there came very good news from Ireland that there was a great slaughter made of the rebels, and few of ours lost. The Million comes in not so fast as was expected, and therefore, to draw men on the faster to subscription, there is a Bill a-drawing to declare that their measure of acres shall be Irish measure, which is treble to ours. The Lords and Commons did agree upon and vote a Declaration, wherein they set forth the illegality of the King's Proclamation against the Militia. Here was very fresh report that my Lord Keeper was made Lord Chancellor, but there is a contradiction of it now. The King dares not trust that perfidious man with the Seal at nights, but every night takes it into his own bedchamber. My Lord Marquis of Harford's eldest son, by name my Lord Beamond, having been sick of a consumption, died at Chelscy. This night a great quantity of timber in Lincoln's Inn Fields, ready fitted for building, was set on fire and burnt, as it is conceived, by some gentlemen of Lincoln's Inn, who are loath to be choked up with any more buildings."

EDWARD MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1642, June 8, Chelsy.—"The proceedings of the Parliament hath [have] been very little of late, because the differences betwixt the King and them do daily increase. The King refuseth to let any of them which are with him, which are sent for as delinquent[s], come to the Parliament, but [s]aith, when they deliver Sir John Hotham to him, he will deliver them. I have not been at London this day, but I hear the Parliament intendeth to raise forces. My Lord of Lindsay and my Lord Savil are voted to be disturbers of the peace of the kingdom; it seemeth, at the meeting of the country at Yorke, they were like to have put the country into combustion. I hear my Lord of Salisbury and some other Lords that went to Yorke are returning home again."

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642,] June 9.—"Give me leave to say I jump with you in your wishes for a speedy and good accommodation, but if they stir a foot to meet I am deceived; how near they are to an accommodation you will judge when you have read what is sent you. Mr. Ladds was out in his news concerning my Lord Privy Seal, for neither he nor his seal are sent for. He is somewhat right about our country's executing the Militia, for my brother tells me that my Lord Spencer and Mr. Tate go down this week in a coach together; Mr. Crew and Sir Gilbert Pickering go also; and he fears he shall be sent down by the House, otherwise he will not stir. This he [Edward] told me on Munday. I shall tell him your Lordship's advice, and that I am sure will make him more backward. This day he hath appointed some counsel to meet to consider about your Serjeants' Inn business.

"About the term, it is variously talked here whether it holds or not; one day it is said that it shall be adjourned from the first day to the last; another day it is said it shall hold out. Here are Judges enough, for none but Heath and Foster are gone to York. But I will see it hold before I retain Mr. Solicitor [Oliver St. John], for there is no danger he will be against us, being we are for the King.

"Monday [6th], the Houses had the relation of the Yorkshire meeting, and the product of it; the printed papers relate it, and so I need not. My Lord of Lindsey and my Lord Savile for their carriage that day are voted enemies to the State and evil councillors, and they are sent for; and if denied, the Houses are resolved to fetch them by force, and are providing to raise 3000 horse. This day [Monday] Essex trained, and my Lord of Warwick came from sea to see it performed.

"Tuesday [7th], the House had a letter from my Lord Willoughby of Parham, expressing that he had a letter from the King's own hand commanding him to desist from executing the Militia, and the answer he returned to the King, which was in civil language, that he must persist.

"My Lord of Salisbury's return is daily expected, for he writes to his son Northumberland that he values his conscience above his place, and therefore will leave his place, and keep that. It is said my Lord[s] of Clare, Bath, and Dorsett are returning, the two last of which it seemeth gave the King counsel very much against his expectation, though very good for the preservation of him and the State.

"Wednesday [8th], my Lady Sydley presented her petition to the House of Commons against Mr. Griffing, one of their members, for uncivilly assaulting her. The Commons were locked in all day, and when they were let forth, their mouths were locked up by an order that none should reveal the passages of that day. But I screwed thus much out of one of them, that he thought now it would not be long ere we should have blows, for they are resolved to fetch my Lords Lin[dsey] * and Savile by force, if denied, and they had many votes about raising of horse, and how acceptable it would be if any would bring in horse or arms; and how that they now see the King intends to levy war against the Parliament, [and] they must provide to defend themselves. God bless us all."

Seal of arms.

WILLIAM MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[1642,] June 20, 12 [o'clock].— . . . "Since I wrote my last I hear for certain my Lord Salisbury slipped from Court and came to Hatfield last night. My Lord of Manchester is in town somewhat ill still; the physicians meet today about him. My Lord Lieutenant of Ireland [Earl of Leicester] sent into the Commons' House some propositions to make preparation for his journey. He demands 40*l.* per diem and 3000*l.* in hand to set himself forth like a Lieutenant. The Commons are considering of it, but think it very high."

Seal, a crest."

[WILLIAM MOUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1642, June 23-27.]—"Thursday [June 23], the Commons' House sate till 9 [o'clock] at night about considering of the King's answer to their

* The Earl of Lindsey was killed at the battle of Edge Hill, 23 Oct. 1642.

19 propositions, and they have appointed a Committee to draw up an answer to the preamble, which they conceive is very full of aspersions, and to vindicate the House from them. As for the propositions themselves, they took them into consideration, and dissolved their House into a Committee. The debate about the first proposition was very long, but in conclusion the vote of the House carried it, 'That the first proposition as it is shall not be insisted upon'; that was the very words of the vote. Mr. Pimm, Mr. Hampden, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Stroud, and most of their part opposed the vote, and would have had the proposition stood (sic).

"Friday [June 24], they sate as late as the night before about the second proposition, and that they have voted to go thus—that every act of Council that shall anyways bind shall be subscribed and attested by the hands of six of the Council at least, that so they may know who to question if the advice be malignant. We heard, as you have written, that the King hath granted a commission of array in Northamptonshire, where he hath made the Earl of Westmorland, the Earl of Peterburgh, and the Lord Mountagu of Boughton of the quorum. Sir Christ. Hatton and many others of quality are in commission. There is also a new commission of the peace for that county, wherein all the Deputy Lieutenants for the Ordinance are left out. Leicestersh[ire's] Under-Sheriff is come up. The Irish rebels are to be tried on Monday. Their trial is put off till next term.*

"Saturday [25th], news came from York, and a very high answer of the King's to the petition of the Houses concerning the receiving of the Yorkshire petition. The messenger brings word that the Lords subscribe there to the raising of 2,000 horse; Lord Keeper, 40, Lord Duke [of York], 100, Lord Devon, 100, Lord Coventry, 200, Lord Capell, 100, Lord Pagett, 30, Lord Bankes, 20. The rest I remember not. Mr. Dutton proffers to lend the King 50,000*l*. My Lord of Stamford returned, and vanquished the Arrayans—made them run for it, and took their arms away in Leicestershire. This omen speaks these commissions illegal, as well as the vote of the Houses.

"The assize for Northamptonshire is on the 13th of July. Judge Rives † rides that circuit.

"Monday [27th], there was read in the House a letter from a member of the House that is in Warwickshire, that informs them that my Lord Northampton is come to Coventry with the commission of array for that county, and hath been soliciting the mayor and townsmen of Coventry, but finds no great willingness to obey him nor that commission. My Lord Brooke went down on Saturday, and perhaps there may be another encounter.

"The Houses have appointed my Lord Wharton to be Lord Lieutenant of Buckinghamshire in Pagett's place."

Seal.

H. EARL OF MANCHESTER TO LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[16]42, June 24, London.—"Since I received your last letters I have not been so well in health as to write you answers. I have afflicted myself too much with that I cannot help. My stomach is gone, and my strength faileth me; but till I find myself [better?], I lay aside all businesses, and I hope a little time longer will either mend me or end me. Your last letter mentions a point of honour, which here is little cared [for], so the turn be served. I hear say the King takes notice of your affection and some of your expressions. I think his last answer to the propositions sent him will give great satisfaction to all the world, and I hope it will bring things into the right way of accommodation. A few days now will bring things to a better state or a worse condition. It is some pain to me to be writing, therefore I must be the shorter."

* This sentence may have been added afterwards.

† Qu. Sir Edmund Reeve, J.C.P.

Seal of arms.

KING CHARLES I. to EDWARD LORD MOUNTAGUE, of Boughton.

1642, July 9, Court at Beverley, under the Signet.—"Right trusty and well beloved, we greet you well. Having now sent into our County of Northampton our Commission of Array, and therein named you a Commissioner and of the Quorum, as a particular expression of our confidence in you, and favour to you, we have directed this letter to yourself, taking notice that so constant and faithful have your services been ever to our Crown, that as we remember that, to your comfort, so we expect in this Commission, which so much at this time concerns the peace of this kingdom, you be in your own person, as far as your health will permit, and by your power and interest, active herein. Our Proclamation and a Declaration we are now setting forth will soon satisfy your reason of the legality of our said Commission, notwithstanding the known objections made against it, and publisht, to intimidate some weak and disaffected people, by such persons who decry all things as illegal which makes against their desires or designs. And therefore we will expect from you such an observance of this our command, as may answer your usual forwardness to our services (sic), and which may give us occasion to remember it when you have occasion of our princely favour."

Signed at the top.

KING CHARLES I. to EDWARD LORD MOUNTAGU, of Boughton.

1642, Sept. 5, Court at Nottingham.—"Right trusty and right well beloved, we greet you well. We do particularly take notice of and compassionate the affront and injury offered to you for your fidelity and loyalty to us and the Established Laws. We are assured of your perseverance in a cause so apparently just, and we assure you we shall not be unmindful of your (amongst others of our good subjects') reparation and satisfaction. And so we bid you farewell."

Signed at the top.

E. [LORD] M[OUNTAGU] to the [2nd] EARL OF MANCHESTER.

1643, June 26, Savoy.—"Whereas in the Oath is declared our hearty sorrow for our own sins and the sins of this nation, which have deserved the calamities and judgments which now is (sic) upon it, and the endeavouring the amendment of our ways, it brought into my mind a letter I once writ to your Lordship, a true copy whereof I have sent you. I purpose to make this known unto divers ministers before the Fast, especially to Mr. Calamy, whose sermon stirred me up to write the same; but I thought fit first to let your Lordship know thereof.

"Your loving uncle, E. M."

Copy, in a clerk's hand, signed as above, and followed by a copy of a letter dated 21 March 1641[-2], which see.

E. EARL OF MANCHESTER to his uncle LORD MONTAGU.

[1643,] June 26.— . . . “I perceive by your letter that you intend to communicate that to some ministers which you did formerly to me, and I have spoken with some of the House of Commons about it ; but the distractions we are in have laid a necessity on them of doing that which in the opinion of some is no sin. But truly I fully approve your Lordship’s resolution of speaking with some Divines about it, and take it as a respect to me.” . . .

Seal, a crest and coronet.

RICHARD MINSHULL to EDWARD [2nd] LORD MOUNTAGU, of Boughton, at Westminster.

1645, April 23, Sidney Suss. Coll. [Cambridge].—“The College is truly sensible of its own happiness in having this relation to you ; it is the first money we have received this last half-year for our subsistence from any, and indeed it stops the mouths of the clamorous. The Committee here have called me before them, upon some complaint made to them that I refused to pay our new fellows ; but there was no such matter ; only I had not received any for the time that they could demand any, and so thought myself disobliged from payment till such time as our tenants brought it in. But my answer was not well relished, which I think was very reasonable, without fraud, and which I will justify before any that is not prepossessed with prejudice. This I thought good to make your Honour acquainted with, to see what a hard task I have to give content in these times ; but if men will not be pleased, my conscience doth comfort me, whatsoever malevolent fame may render me.”

F[RANCES] M[ONCK] to her brother GENERAL MONCK, in Scotland.

1646, Nov. 8, Potherige.—“Dear Brother,—There being a mistake in one of your leases, that it was not signed with your name, and although it may prove good enough in law, yet the tenant rests unsatisfied until your hand be to it, therefore pray hasten the lease to Dr. Clergis [Clarges] again. I received them all safe by Captain Clarke, and have received some of the money, and security for all the residue. I find by my brother Nick that he hath written to your wife to persuade you to lend him money to pay his debts, and that he might have some of me. Until of late I received little, and constant housekeeping, and the charge of husbandry in this toilsome country, makes me expend more than I desire. I will not pay him any until I know your mind, for some two year[s] since I paid him a hundred pound upon your command, and I have several ways endeavoured to assist him ; for, seriously, he is an honest man, though he want money. For the stable, I have not begun to rebuild as yet, but, God willing, I will next spring, except you countermand it. I have tilled a little in the Inner Park ; as I remember, you told me you did not affect beat [beet], and therefore I crave your approbation, whether, being the nature of the ground requires beat, whether I shall use it or no.

“These parts afford little news. The countryman cares little to hold ground. I fear I shall be enforced to keep the greatest part, if not the whole Barton, in my hand. My sister Monek lives here as a private housekeeper. The old Mr. Fortescue, of Ware, pretends hot love to her ; she is so long consulting with her friends, that I fear his affection will die away, but of my word she will not meet with the like proffer again. I will not tire you with impertinencies, but give you my hearty service, and rest, “Your obliged sister to love and serve you,

“F. M.” *

Addressed: For my ever honoured brother General Monck, in Scotland, these.

GEORGE MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boughton.

[c. 1647?] Jan. 26.—“I was in hopes to have had the honour of your Lordship’s company here before now, but I find by my cousin William little hopes of that till Easter term. At present give me leave to offer your Lordship a request in behalf of Mr. Hill, minister of Kingsthorpe, who was formerly my father’s chaplain, and [is] now accused before Major-General Botler. If your Lordship please to grant him a line to my cousin Brookes of Okeley, or to Mr. Browne of Kettering, it may much avail him. I have presumed to write to the Major-General in his behalf. What favour and respect your Lordship please[s] to vouchsafe him may possibly prevent his ruin by the prejudice he tells me is against him.”

Seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU] to his brother, LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1648,] July 12.—“The sad news of my mother’s death is to me a very great affliction, that had so great a stay by her.† I pray God the succession of his imposures upon me may make me search narrowly into myself for my offences against him. Formerly my dear mother appointed to my care the distribution of her legacies; if that care be still upon me, I have appointed a copy of that will to be sent your Lordship, that you may see the freeness of her heart to distribute somewhat to everybody. In that will, you will find a desire to have a dinner at Boughton upon the day of her funeral. I beseech I may hear from your Lordship that you will be pleased to give way to it, and for all provision, but beer, I shall take order for so soon as [I] can with convenience, and for that I beseech your own provision of beer may be increased, for so much as that day may spend, and you will much oblige me. My Lord, as death of friends contracts comforts, so it commonly more firmly unites the survivors in affection. My former sorrows have wrought so on me, and this I confess whets my prayers for your Lordship’s health and long life.”

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS DOWAGER OF] LINDSEY to [her brother]
LORD MOUNTAGU, at Boutton.

1648, Aug. 30.— . . . “The army is now master of the kingdom, for the Scots is [are] down, and Colchester taken. Now I think they have no other work to do but to take London, which I think they aim at. The treaty goes on, and the King hath sent his list whom he desires for his attendants; for that work my son [the Earl of Lindsey?] is one. I am afraid it will come to little good. The King has now the liberty of the Isle; methinks he is in the nature of a prisoner upon his parole. My son Paston is in town about a match for his son; how it will take * MS. note :—She married John Le Neve, of St. Giles’s-in-the-Fields, Esq. She died without issue.

† Annie Crouch, third wife of the first Lord, died 11 July 1648, aged 75. (Complete Peerage.)

I know not. He asks very high, and offers very fair. Sidney's mother is much troubled for the humour he is fallen into. Brother, how do I long to talk with you. I hope when the Lords are gone to the treaty you will come up."

Seal, a crest.

CHARLES I. to [THOMAS] LORD BRUDENELL.

1648, Sept. 5, Cairsbrooke.—"Brudnell—Your doing that Courtoisie for me, w<sup>ch</sup> this Noble Lady will tell you of, who will deliuer you this, I doe heereby promis you, as soone as I haue a great Seale in my owen Power, to confer upon you the Tytle & Honnor of an Earle of this Kingdome; wherfor I hope you will take & trust to this my word; presently performing that w<sup>ch</sup> I am made believe you will doe for me: So I rest

"Your most assured Frend,

"CHARLES R."

Addressed on the dorse: For the Lord Brudnell.

Entirely in the King's own hand.

WARRANT by CHARLES I. to his ATTORNEY GENERAL for the time being.

1648, Oct. 21, Court at Newport.—To prepare for his signature, in the usual form, a grant of the Earldom of Cardigan to Thomas, Lord Brudenell,* in consideration of his sufferings for the King, for life, and after him to Robert Brudenell his son and heir apparent, for life, and after him to Francis Brudenell, eldest son of the said Robert, and his heirs male, or in default to the heirs male of Robert, or in default to the heirs male of Thomas; with one free rent or creation-money of 20*l.* per annum out of the rents and profits of the county of Northampton.

Signed at the top. A modern note states that this grant did not take effect till after the Restoration. See 1660, post.

DECLARATION by WALTER MONTAGU, Esq.

[1648, Oct.]—"Walter Montagu, Esq., second son to Henry, Earl of Manchester, deceased, sends greeting. Whereas at the desire of Charles, King of England, to supply a pressing necessity which his Majesty was then in, he commanded me to use my interest with Mr. Brudnel, eldest son of the Lord Brudnel (sic), to supply him with 1000 pounds, and his Majesty writ to the Lord Brudnel that if he would do that service for him he would make him Earl of Cardigon, whereupon there was advanced 1000 po. for his Majesty his service, and accordingly paid to him by my hands; and thereupon his Majesty commanded a warrant for that purpose to be made, and signed the same warrant for creation of the same Lord Brudnel to be Earl of Cardigon, with his Majesty's own hand, the which warrant [I?] delivered to Mr. Brudnel; and because I am requested to testify the truth hereof, I conceive myself obliged to do the same, and therefore do now declare and testify the same under my hand and seal of arms.

"WA. MONTAGU." (L.S.)

"In presence of

[Signed] Arthur Crowther

Robert Anderton."

Apparently in Montagu's own hand.

* The name "Brudenell" occurs five times in this warrant, and in each place is written by a different hand from that of the text, in a blank space left for it, and probably after the warrant was issued. The words "Newport, the 21 of October, 1648," are in the same hand as the letter of 5 Sept. 1648.

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS DOWAGER OF] LINDSEY to LORD MONTAGUE.

1649, April 12.— . . . “This place [London ?] affords much variety of discords both from foreign parts and at home; the truth of either is very uncertain. I hear no more of the Lady Carlile, what shall become of her; I hope she will save her life, that she may get a husband as well, as my Lord Goring by report is to be married to my Lady Kinsmall, but I believe it not. My Lady Shandos is not rit [right?]. I want you in the evenings to lof [laugh?] at many things that I dare not here write to you of.”

Seal, a crest.

[ELIZABETH COUNTESS DOWAGER OF] LINDSEY to LORD MONTAGUE.

1650, Aug. 21.—“Though my letters came in late, and myself detained by company all the day, yet at night I would rather find out a secretary than to fail to present my service to you. I pray let me hear what course you take in your country for this levying of horse, whether it be only to show upon days appointed, or whether they be put into the hands of the commander, for here both horse and man are at the same commander’s disposing. I expect my man Hodson every day with me, but only stayed by occasion of this New Militia; and as I hear how businesses goes [go] in your country, I may the better guess how I am used in that kind.”

In a clerk’s hand; signed. Seal, a crest.

[THE EARL OF] LINDSEY to LORD MOUNTAGUE.

1652[-3], Feb. 18, Grimsthorpe.—“This bearer, Mr. Rushworth, is a person that I have received many civilities from, which I shall own to pleasure him when I may have a fit opportunity; in the mean time my request is to your Lordship to afford him your Lordship’s favour and assistance in the renewing of a lease which I perceive is in the power of your Lordship and others to grant.”

J[AMES] MOUNTAGU to his kinsman, LORD [MOUNTAGU?].

1654[-5], Jan. 10, Coven[t] Garden.—“It pleased God, a carr going over my foot so bruised it that I have been lame this fortnight. . . .

[P.S.] “The lastest (sic) news I hear out of Wiltshere is that Mr. William Eyre is chose a knight in Mr. Alexander Popham’s room, who it is said declared unto the Protector that he came to do his country service, and not his Lordship. The western men begin to show their pristine virtue, and declare their sense of their present condition. But their prayers may sooner relieve them than their endeavours for performance of former engagements.”

[JOHN EARL OF] EXETER to the LORD MOUNTAGU.

1659[-60], Jan. 2.—“This morning came a messenger to me from Sir John Norwish, with a kind of summons to invite the gentry of this country to come to Ketringe to meet them (sic), to discourse what was best to be done in this juncture of time for the good of the nation. In the list I found your Lordship and myself named. I suppose the same person that was with me may possibly have been with you; so as to the manner of the thing I shall say nothing, but my sense, being propounded to your Lordship, will go no further, I know. First, I know not upon what commission Sir John hath appeared so much (for I had not so much as a letter from him to inform me); next, I am not satisfied but those that have engaged him may without much difficulty undermine him (Colonel Hacker having been with him a great time). I am very unwilling to appear upon any public account, except first my conscience be well satisfied, for that interest, which I believe may stand with that which raised us, and the Laws of the nation, which at this time is very hard for me to be satisfied in. In a while longer our sight may reach further; at present this hath hindered me from waiting upon your Lordship, intending it tomorrow, but a further time shall perform that duty."

Seal of arms.

E. EARL OF MANCHESTER to LORD MONTAGU.

[1660,] March 6, Warwick House.—“This worthy person, Sir Henry Yelverton, hath some thoughts to stand for the service of his country as one of the knights for this next meeting, and hath desired me to request your Lordship’s furtherance in his desires.” . . .

Seal, a crest and coronet.

THE RESTORATION.

1660, May 7.—“Memorandum, the 7th day of May 1660, at a public meeting of the Commissioners for the Militia in the county of Northampton, the persons undernamed, being occasionably (sic) met as Commissioners of the Militia, did in all humility lay hold upon his Majesty’s grace and favour, and did openly declare the same and their returning to the loyalty and obedience of good subjects, as is required in his Majesty’s Declaration, dated at Breda, the  $\frac{1}{4}$  day of April 1660, and in the 12th year of his Majesty’s reign.

[Signed:] EDW. MOUNTAGU.
EDW. NICOLLS.
J. ROBINSON.
JOHN MAUNSELL.
JOHN BROWNE.
W. RAINBOROW.”

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1660,] Nov. 5.—“My wife presents her service and thanks for your larks, which are the first meat she hath eaten almost this week since she took cold at [the] Lord Mayor’s Show, which grew to an impostumation in her face, which had fain to be lanced; now I hope she mends apace.

“A horrid intention of murdering the King and divers of the nobility by the 5[th] Monarchy men is discovered, and many apprehended about it. God defend him from such blood-thirsty men.

“The Queen [Dowager, Henrietta Maria,] is now to have 40,000*l.* per annum settled, but whether out of the Customs or Exchequer in general is not yet determined. She is also settling her Council, of which your son is to be one, for whom I know to you his best plea must be pardon, which I beseech you give him, with some effects of it, when you shall think fittest; and I know your Lordship’s debts are neither so great nor so pressing as totally to hinder your allowing him somewhat conveniently; but a word is enough to a person of your wisdom and discerning, and I had not been so presumptuous to move you, but that our good friend told me [the] Lord Chancellor one day asked him seriously whether it was true that your Lordship allowed your son nothing at all. Lord Sandwich [Edward Montagu] his particular is finished, but his patent not yet passed."

"THOMAS, LORD BRUDNELL, BARON OF STONTON.*

[1660.]—"The Lord Brudenell, when his late Majesty of glorious memory was intended to go against the Scots, prepared to attend his Majesty in the said expedition, and laid out and disbursed above 1200*l.* in the buying of horse and arms. But when his said Majesty and his Council judged it unfit for Catholics to wait in person upon his said Majesty at that time, the said Lord Brudenell forbore to go and sent his said Majesty 500*l.* in moneys.

"The said Lord, upon the beginning of the war in 1642, raised a troop of horse at his own charge for his said late Majesty's service, which he put under the command of his brother, who, being taken prisoner at Burley, and brought up to London, was committed to Newgate, where he died.

"The said Lord, upon his refusal to pay assessments imposed by the then Parliament, who were engaged in war against his said late Majesty, was plundered by the said Parliament, and lost to the value of above 10,000*l.*

"The said Lord, in the times of the late wars, being taken prisoner in his late Majesty's garrison of Hereford, was detained a prisoner for two years; and afterwards, upon all occasions of suspicion, when any of the late pretended authorities became jealous of any attempts for the service of his sacred Majesty that now is, the said Lord was perpetually made a prisoner until their jealousies were over.

"The said Lord hath lost, for his loyalty to his said late Majesty and to his Majesty that now is, at several times since the beginning of the late unhappy wars, above 50,000*l.*

"Notwithstanding all the said several losses and sufferings of the said Lord, and notwithstanding that his estate was totally sequestered in the year 1648, yet his said late Majesty, being then a prisoner in Carisbrooke Castle, and having some hopes to make an escape if he could procure a supply of moneys, sent unto the said Lord, and unto Mr. Robert Brudenell, eldest son of the said Lord, to raise 1000*l.* for his Majesty's said service, and engaged to make the said Lord an Earl of this kingdom, upon condition that the said Lord and his said son, or either of them, would advance the said sum. Whereupon the said Lord and his said son did immediately raise and supply his said Majesty with the said sum (at such a time when 1000*l.* was more considerable with them than 5000*l.* is at this present). And his said Majesty, in performance of his said promise, sent in return thereof a warrant unto the said Lord for the creating of him Earl of Cardigan, and gave particular express commands unto Mr. Walter Montague (who received the said moneys for his said Majesty, and brought back the said warrant) that he should apply unto his Majesty that now is, to make good the said warrant in case his said late Majesty should die before he should be able to gain a Seal to perfect the said creation by a patent, which is now humbly begged; especially he the said Lord not being hereby to gain a place in the House of Peers (for that he hath already), and his now Majesty not conferring this honour upon the said Lord as his own act, * Stanton Wivill.

but by a seeming obligation confirming the act and thereby preserving the honour of his late father of glorious memory, and in performance of his promise.

“His Majesty that now is, having been moved in this case by his Highness the Duke of Gloucester,* was pleased to return this gracious answer, That his Majesty will perfect this creation, and make the said Lord an Earl, according to the said warrant, at the time of his Majesty’s Coronation.

“But the said Lord being now very infirm, and aged 82 years, and in danger of dying before the Coronation, it is humbly desired that he may now have a patent before his death.”†

Endorsed: The Case of ye Lord Brudenell. And in a more modern hand: Found amongst Lord Chancellor Clarendon’s Papers, now in the hands of Dr. Douglas.

R[ALPH] MOUNTAGUE to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

1661, June 21, London.— . . . “On Monday I shall go out of town for a month with the Duke and Duchess [of Albemarle?], that go to drink the waters at Tunbridge. Today the Portugal Ambassador dines publicly with the King at Whitehall, and tomorrow goes away. If I am not obliged to go the Progress, at my return from the waters I shall come and pay my duty to your Lordship in the country.” ‡

KING CHARLES II. to LORD MOUNTAGU, of Boughton.

1663, Nov. 28, Whitehall.—“What I promised your friends in seeing you righted in your rate for the Subsidies, had been made good if it could have been done, but it was past cure, without introducing a precedent that would have been of very ill consequence. In the following two Subsidies care shall be taken of you betimes. I am glad to hear my recommendation of your son to your kindness hath so good effect, for he hath asked my leave to go and see you, and to receive the fruits of it. I shall be glad to hear you have given the like encouragement to his brother, of whom I have a very good opinion, though he hath not had the like occasions of serving me so considerably: for whose sake, and for your own good affection to my service, you shall always find me ready to entertain any opportunity of doing you a good turn, or to any of your relations, as

“Your affectionate friend,
CHARLES R.”

Entirely in the King’s own hand. A small seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1664,] March 10.—“I had a letter from my Lady Rutland, concurrent with what her chaplain told you, that she proposeth to be here at the end of this month; and I hope your Lordship will not be long after from the Parliament, which now draws on apace. There is much talk as if my Lord of Bristow resolves to go travel, but I hear it not from any good hand. I mistook last time in my Lord of Essex’s assessment, for he is got to 200*l*.

* This name is written over “York,” struck out.

† The creation was made on 20 April 1661. (Patent Rolls, Catalogue.)

‡ There are several other short letters of this writer in Vol. 4.

"I doubt a divorce is not so easily obtained as Mr. Alsop thinks for, though I believe there is palpable proof of her adulterous life, and having of another son. I hear Lord Rockingham and his Lady are in town, but have not yet seen them. I suppose you will hear of Lord Chamberlain* from Kimbolton, who slipped thither last week."

Seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1664,] May 26.—"Upon my cousin Ned† his coming down to your Lordship, there was such a report in town as you write of, but upon enquiry I found no ground for it, for my Lord Cornbury and the Treasurer, Mr. Harvey, were by when he kissed both the King and Queen's hands, and no such matter at all, but a very gracious parting, as they told me; but by this he may see the malice of his enemies, and I hope will carry himself more warily.

"Since our recess one of our members, Sir Richard Onslow,‡ is dead of a gangrene, caused by the relics of an ague, which settled in his thigh. Sir Edward Hungerford's Lady is also dead. Mrs. Elmes her match with Mr. Chichly is quite off, and Sir Thomas Crew and Sir Francis Compton are now competitors for her. I perceive by Mr. Alsop that Lady Rutland § intends for Sir Edward Mosely my Lady Betty, and not Lady Dorothy.

"My tenants write me word that Mr. Barton drove their cattle to the pound, and made them pay twelve pence apiece to loose them. I do not intend to put it up (sic), lest it be alleged as evidence against them hereafter."

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1664, Sept. 29, London.—"I ask your pardon that I write by another hand, I have been so ill since Saturday of a feverish distemper, that I have not stirred out of my chamber, and it hangs upon me still, and it lies so in my head that I cannot write myself.

"I sent your Lordship's letter to my Lady of Exceter, and because I could not go with it, I desired her Ladyship that I might see her yesterday in the afternoon, and she was pleased to come accordingly. I persuaded her all I could, but find her unwilling to venture so long a journey, and after so great a weakness as she hath had. She told me she would write to your Lordship herself, and this morning sent this letter.

"The great news in town is come from Guinney: Captain Holmes hath very much beaten the Dutch there, and hath taken many of their ships and some of their forts, and this I suppose will be at large in the news-books."

Not in W. M.'s hand.

Jo[SEPH BISHOP OF] PETERBOROUGH to LORD [MONTAGU].

1667, April 8, Castor.—"I have received your Lordship's letter, and I give you many thanks for your kind present, which I know not how to deserve from your Lordship, but Dr. Aleyn is to dine with me tomorrow, * Edward Montagu, Earl of Manchester, Lord Chamberlain of the Household, 1660-1671.

† Capell? See letter of July 24th [1673?].

‡ M.P. for Guildford; died 1664.

§ Frances, daughter of the first Lord Montagu.

and we will remember the giver with the gift. I am very glad to read in your letter your pious and noble design of building of a church (especially in a time when many are pulling down religion); it will be a very acceptable work to God and an honour to your name and family, as well as an example to others of piety."

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to his brother, LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1667,] Oct. 5.—"Sir William Dudley hath been very ill this week, and sent earnestly to desire to speak with me before I went to London. I went this morning, found him somewhat better, but I doubt languishing. His business was to desire the completing of your Lordship's reconciling to him, and his desire was such that, because of shortness of time, to get Dr. Allen (sic) over, he desired to make the acknowledgment at present to Dr. Brittain and myself, and will send for Dr. Alleyn and make it again to him, which is rather more than to do it but once. So he did make the acknowledgment in the very words sent, before us two, and desires your Lordship would be pleased that when he hath done the like before Dr. Alleyn, that it may give your Lordship satisfaction, and I pray also that it may, for since his weakness and impotency hath brought me in for a witness, I shall testify it as fully as anybody. He also beseecheth your Lordship not to believe all the reports [that] have been made against him, for of some of them he is innocent; and so, he desiring so much your reconciling, I hope your Lordship in your letter will give me leave to tell him on Monday as I pass by, that doing the like to Dr. Allen (sic) as he hath to us, that you will be pleased to pass all by; some such thing I believe would quiet his mind much. We hear from London that my Lord Colerane died very suddenly on Wednesday last.*

"I find the law about uses declaring of a feme covert's land to be thus:

1. If the husband declare uses alone, it is good, if the wife express no disagreement.
2. That the wife alone, without the husband's joining, cannot declare uses of a fine levied of her own land.
3. That if no use be declared at all of a fine levied of her land, the use results to her and her heirs only.

"About a Leet's dividing I cannot yet resolve myself, though I see no reason that it should differ from a Court Baron. When I can, I shall acquaint you from London, and there perform you any other service."

Endorsed: A letter from Mr. Will[iam] Montagu (afterwards Lord Chief Baron) to the Lord Montagu.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1670?] Nov. 13.—"I suppose you mean my Lord of Exeter will give the 300*l.* annually, though you speak but of one 300*l.* For my Lady's giving security, I know not how she should, other than by engagement, but as the law is now like to be declared, there will be no need of security, for the Judges in Scott's case declare it for law, that no wife (though not suffered by her husband to live with him) can charge the husband for anything she takes up, though for very necessaries; but I would have her write she rather desires to live at home. My wife presents her thanks for the woodcocks; hath been very ill of a violent scouring and vomiting, but is now pretty well.

* Buried 19 Oct. 1667. (Complete Peerage.)

[P.S.] "Frank Duckett, wanting employment at Barnwell, desires he may be your tenant(?) to Balston's House, and what lands is left to it, which I also desire for him if you have not otherwise disposed thereof."

Seal, "E. I.," &c.

[THE DUKE OF] ALBEMARLE to LORD [MONTAGU].

1671[-2], Jan. 7, New-hall.—"Your Lordship's letter of the 6th instant came to me this evening with an accompt of my cousin Betty's intention of marriage, and her desire of five hundred pounds from me to further her preferment; but at present your Lordship knows my condition is such that I have nothing in my own power but the revenue of my estate, out of which, according to the port (sic) wherein I now live, I can spare nothing from my ordinary expenses; but something I owe her, which shall be presently paid, and when I come to age, if I see she lives discreetly and well, I will make up that sum to be 500*l.*; but as to my consent to her marriage, it's an affair too nice for me to be concerned in, and I hope her own prudence, with your Lordship's good advice, will sufficiently instruct her to govern herself in that matter. The respect I have to the memory of her father induces me to wish well to her; and though her demeanour towards me has not been obliging, I cannot resist the motives your Lordship uses in her behalf, and I wish she may deserve them."

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1672,] April 25.—"Mr. Attorney and the rest of my Lord Sandwich's counsel, conceiving it would be hardly obtained to put off the trial, and that the attempt of it, if [it] failed, would put a disparagement upon the title, have resolved not to move the putting of it off, and so it goes on and stands appointed for the 2nd of May; so wish your Lordship a good journey.

"Though it seems Mr. Henry Tresham died in town, I never heard word of his sickness or death till your Lordship's letter. You will see the new honours in the News-book, where you will find the Earl of Shaftsbury takes no Viscounty, but . . . . t would have drowned his son's title of Lord Ashley.

"Yesterday, by the post, Lord Roos writes me word that upon Saturday his sister Lady Anne went away with Sir Scroope How. Early that morn [she] walked into the Park with her maid, and at the Park gate, horses and pillions waited for her, which carried them to the top of Rowsely Barr, where Sir Scroope's coach (with his friends and servants) received her; and [he] hears they were married by the way, and on Sunday they were twice at Langor Church.

"I hope your Lordship and Lord Exeter have had good sport as well as fine weather to fish in. I am very glad Sir Thomas Proby will be here; Sir William Drake accounts himself much obliged to your Lordship for procuring it. His little son is christened William in memory of his uncle; my Lady Aubrey, represented by my wife, and cousin George and I in person, the gossips.

[P.S.] "Sir Robert Attkyns was made Sergeant yesterday, and shall be Judge today."

[THE EARL OF] BEDFORD to LORD [MONTAGU].

1672, May 22, Bedford House.—“I am very sensible of the many troubles I have given you in the cause touching the repair of Wainsford Bridge, and of your Lordship’s readiness to oblige me. I cannot think a trial at Sessions, where the Judges and jurors are parties, is so likely finally to determine the difference as a trial in another county.”

Signed.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1672,] Nov. 21.—“The great change of the sudden taking the Great Seal from Lord Keeper Brigeman, and giving it to Lord Shaftsbury with the title of Chancellor, you will find in the Gazette. Little else of news, only the Bishop of Bath and Wells and the Bishop of Chester are both dead this week.

“My Lord Keeper hath a pension of 2000*l.* per annum given him, which, if well paid, will be as much as the clear gains of his place, considering the charges that attended it. I doubt the slow means appointed for raising his daughters’ portions will undoubtedly break this match with Lord Gray, and hinder others till the moneys be raised. Sir Daniel [Harvey?] by mortgage owes a debt of 6000*l.* to Mr. Maurice and Claiton, or some of their procuring, and that is all I hear he owes.

“My Lord of Peterburgh’s and Lord of Northampton’s business was heard yesterday at the Council Table, and the result was not at present to make any alteration of the choice, but a quo warranto is ordered to be brought against the town of Northampton.”

[THE EARL OF] WESTMORLAND to LORD [MONTAGU].

1672[-3], Jan. 5, Aph[orp].—“I received your summons of meeting at Kettring on Tuesday next, which I am most ready to do if it were but to wait on your Lordship; but I must acquaint your Lordship that on Monday is a day always celebrated to mirth, being Twelfth-day, so that I know not whether the next day will be so proper to take such a journey; so have sent this messenger, that if it be not absolutely necessary for my appearance, and the same thing may be done the Wednesday following, being next day, supposing that the business of the Sessions will last longer than on two or three days, I shall not fail to wait on you, if I may receive by this bearer your commands. However, if your Lordship doth conceive my absence may be prejudicial to all our former resolves, I’ll not fail on Tuesday to wait on you.”

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

[1673,] April 3.—“I am very glad to hear your leg mends so well, and shall tell Lord Cardigan what you write of his son’s servant. Your Lordship now hath fully paid for Lady Hewyt’s water, two bottles of which I think remains (sic) here still for your order. The 40*l.* I desire may remain at Boughton, which, if you have occasion for there, you may please to make use of, for I have no present need of it.

“My cousin Bridges hath broken off the match with Sir John Bennett, though he offered so fair, which whether he could have performed I know not. Tuesday, Lord Arlington and Lord Ossery went to Windsore to install the Marquis [Earl] of Southampton Knight of the Garter, and returned the same night.

"This week Lord Brackley is married to Lord St. Johu's daughter. Saturday the Parliament adjourned till 20 October; the King passed ten public Acts, as the Gazette enumerates, of which the General Pardon is one, which Mr. Attorney [Finch] told us was larger than former pardons, by leaving out above 30 offences usual[ly] excepted, of which Forest offences are one.

"My Lord Sandwich is going again to travel, and my son speaks of going for his health, which he enjoys but ill. I see Mr. Lyon is gone; I know your Lordship will take care he have a good successor. My wife, son, and daughter present their humble service, and are all glad for your leg being so near whole." . . .

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1673,] July 5.—"For the progress of my business, I am willing to flatter myself of better hopes of this than of the other widow, and of more happiness in her, being of a very good disposition. But there are so many obstructions in regard of her little son, that I can give no guess yet what it may come to. However I speed in this, I have in the transaction of it discovered by M[ist]ress Coventry, that the desired match for Betty* will be revived, and therefore be pleased to think of no other. I shall tell you at large the grounds why I think so, when I wait of you at Boughton, which shall be (God willing) the end of the next, or the beginning of the week after.

[P.S.] "Among the books, I send you a base railing pamphlet of Prior's against yourself, which it's better to slight than take notice of."
Seal, "R. B."

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1673 ?] July 24.—"I am very glad to hear the Town talk of my nephew's hopes of success. I have been at Woodcott this three or four days, and from thence went on Tuesday with the Ladies and dined at Combe, where all are well. I perceived by my cousin Harvey the great Lady is going to Tichfeild to her sister's, and that my cousin will follow thither.

"My Lord Willughby [of Parham ?] † hath been dead a long time; however, I missed to inform you; but the gentlewoman you write of is not dead, but miscarried of two boys, and her illness upon that might cause the report. Letters from Ireland are come to some that say my cousin Ned Capell is there dead of the small pox, just when [he] was upon marriage to a great fortune of 20,000*l*.

"Our great men, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and Secretary Coventry, have been very ill, by drinking red wine at some entertainment, but are all pretty well again. I hope Lloyd will wait upon you; I have a letter from him that he hath done pretty well in my business, but refers me to his coming for a more full account; only tells Sir Charles Dymock was much my friend; and therefore pray, when your Lordship sees my Lord Rockingham, be pleased to thank his Lordship from me, for I desired he would speak or write to his brother, which by his friendship I suppose he did."

* Qu. Elizabeth Mountagu, daughter of the writer, who married (1) William Drake, (2) Samuel Trotman. (Burke.)

† One died 1673, another 1674, and two others in 1678.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1673,] Aug. 21.—“I am very glad to see my Lady Northumberland deals so nobly and affectionately with my nephew [Ralph Montagu] in the settlement of her estate. I look now suddenly to hear of their marriage, and much faicy it is this very day, which I believe you will compliment by some of your gentlemen.* . . .

“I waited on Lord Bridgewater on Tuesday dinner (sic), where meeting with the Clerk of the Hanaper, he told me there were three Creation Patents in hand, one for the Duchess of Portsmouth, preceded with a patent of indenzation; another for Lord Treasurer to be Baron Kniveton† and Viscount Latimer; the third for Sir Robert Paston to be Baron Oxnett and Viscount Yarmouth.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1673 ?] Dec. 13.—“I receive from you more thanks than any service I can do can deserve. I forgot in my last to let you know that I have not told to anybody (not so much as to my sister Rutland) of any speech I had with my Lord, but only told them I had been there, and had many civilities from them, for I would have it proceed further before there be any talk of it; and I think verily it will proceed, because of their civility to me, for since I was there, my Lord and his sons have been to see me at my chamber, but I had the misfortune to be abroad; and upon that score, ere the next return, I will wait of them again. I must beg your pardon that I wait not of you at Christmas, I am so apt to reuhmes [rheums] that I dare not stir; besides, this town is clearly the best lurking place. My service to my aunt Gooday.

[P.S.] “I am much obliged to my cousin Betty ‡ for some delicate quince marmalade of her own making, which she sent me from Ditton.”

Seal, “R. B.”

[SIR] THOMAS CLARGES to LORD [MONTAGU].

1674[-5], Feb. 16.—“Sir Thomas Stringer was yesterday with me, and by what he said to me I guess that his Grace [the Duke of Albemarle] has received many good impressions from your Lordship’s discourses with him. . . . There be two steps which become a wise man in his choice of friends: the first, to be well informed of the faith and integrity of the person he takes to him as such; and the next, never to believe (without evident demonstration) any ill of him. There was once a faith like this amongst mankind, but whether there be enough of such men to make a corporation I cannot tell. If there were, it might not be unworthy of the name of a Royal Society.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1675 ?] Feb. 29.—“I have been with the Master of the Rolls;§ and it being your Lordship’s and my cousin Harvey’s pleasure I should go so soon, I told her in what way I thought fittest to do it, which she approved of, and it was this. I told him I came not now from your Lordship with a proposition of a match, it being too early, but with your expression of a desire to bestow your grand-daughter into his family * 1671 is given as the date of this marriage in the Complete Peerage.

† Kiveton, co. York. (Nicolas, and Courthope.)

‡ Qu. Elizabeth Montagu, daughter of the second Lord, who married Sir Daniel Harvey.

§ Sir Harbottle Grimstone, M.R., 1660–85.

rather than anywhere, and that he would think of it against such a time as he judged seasonable to dispose of his son again. And by his civil reception and such expressions as was [were] decent for so early a motion, I have very good hopes he doth not at all dislike it; and more at present I could not press upon him.

"I am sorry [my] Lord of Exeter is ill again, but hope it not dangerously, since my wife had a letter from my Lady of the same date with yours, which saith nothing of it. My Lord Sandwich [Edward Montagu] hath a trial appointed in Easter term; I wish it be well looked after. Mr. Nathaniel Smith hath sealed an assignment I drew of the four acres of meadow, but beseecheth your Lordship's secrecy, and said somewhat of hay, which [he] hopes you will please to consider. I told him with assurance of your forgetting all things, and that he might safely wait upon you, but believe he will suspend that till I come. When you fish the River, pray send him some, which I invent as a seasonable expression to confirm him in believing what I said; and beseech you not to defer your own time of drawing the River upon any consideration of my son's coming, who is now hunting in Kent, and I believe will be very uncertain.

"There is one Mr. William Ellis, a kinsman of my cousin Lane's sister Foster, that desires me to write you will please pay her 18*l.* of her mother's gift, which she hath now great need of, to place out her children, and he will be bound to indemnify you. He is one of my Lord Chief Justice Hale's officers, and a sufficient security, and tells me my cousin George hath already spoke to you in it, and upon security found you inclinable to do it.

"The King, the Duke of Yorke, and many of the nobility dine today with the Reader of Lincoln's Inn; who is Sir Francis Gooderick, and one of the King's Counsel-at-law.

[P.S.] "I received the draft for cousin Lane's monument, but doubt you forget to send me where and what coats of arms."

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1675,] March 4.—"They are so bent upon haste in Lord Stamford's recovery, that I wish your Lordship would caution them to beware of doing that so suddenly that may be so much repented. My wife is now somewhat better, but ever since Friday hath been very sick with a St. Anthony's fire breaking out upon her catching cold at the Court Masque or the Lent Sermons

"There are above 3,000 Recusants already convict, and commissions going out to seize two parts of their estates. An eye is also upon other Dissenters, for Mr. Manton's congregation were all apprehended on Sunday; where was Lord Wharton, Lady Bedford, and Lady Manchester Dowager, and many others of quality, who all submitted to their own fines, and clubbed together to pay the preacher's.

"Old Lady Armine died this week, 84 years of age. Yesterday Sir William Drake's trustees executed conveyances, according to the will of old Sir William, of all their purchases, being at present about 2200*l.* per annum, and will be 2500*l.* when Malpas leases fall in, and have a surplus of near 5000*l.* still to lay out. In the settlements there is a power for Sir William and all the tenants for life, when in possession, to make jointures to their respective wives, not exceeding 600*l.* per annum. I hope Sir William will let Betty partake of that power, else he ill returns to me for all the care and pains I have taken in his business.

“Mr. Hollis,* one of the Masters of Requests, is dead, and Sir William Glascock (a Master of Chancery) succeeds; he served in Parliament for Grimsby, where my cousin Charles Bertie is like to come in. The case your Lordship sent hath so little of difficulty that I have here returned it with my opinion.”

[SIR] THOMAS CLARGES to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1675, Sept. 7.—“On Saturday morning Mr. Lymbry came to me from your Grace, to signify that your Grace desired I would write to you to Newhall, to acquaint your Grace with any affair I had to communicate to you. The business I then would have moved to your Grace was to make a visit to my Lord Lieutenant of Ireland [the Earl of Essex], to show your resentment of the kindness your Grace had received from him in compliance with several requests made to him on behalf of Captain Monek and others, and for the favour his Excellency always shewed to any of your Grace’s concerns in that kingdom. The character of his office is very great, and by shewing respect to such men your Grace does a right to yourself and an honour to the King; but as your Grace has an interest in that country, your Grace is more obliged thereunto than others. Whilst I was less a stranger to your Grace than I now am, I was as watchful of the methods of civility which were to be performed by your Grace as of your profit, for honour and estate are very insignificant without esteem and respect, and these are neither gained nor preserved but by reciprocal motives.

“I had something else to have said to your Grace concerning the present condition of your fortune, which I fear is almost irrecoverably plunged into difficulties by the unhappy purchase of Clarendon House. (Young men never see their unhappiness till they feel it.) But my letters have been of late subject to so much censure, that I shall reserve myself in those matters till your Grace shall have found by experience the difference betwixt the natural affection of an uncle, and others’ of more remote interest.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1676, Dec. 13.—“I came so late from Newgate Sessions tonight, and am to go so early tomorrow, that I am bold to write by Lloyd’s hand. I hope your Lordship’s business will be soon dispatched, for I had it by Mr. Nott that my cousin Charles told him that Lord Treasurer [Danby] had taken an opportunity with the King on Sunday night, and that it was granted, and that my cousin Charles wished him to prepare a draft for a warrant, and to bring it him as soon as he could.

“On Monday, Mr. Guy brought me Lord Campden’s patent, not above an hour before Mr. Nott brought me this news. I wish I had had the patent sooner, for it is an exact pattern for you as I could wish. I instantly sent for Mr. Johnson to consider with me for such a warrant as might satisfy Mr. Attorney [Jones] to pass such a patent as we desire, and we formed a warrant ere we parted, which was perfected and transcribed so as my cousin Bertie had it last night; the heads of it I have inserted here below. Mr. Johnson is very ready and willing to serve you in it, and will be careful both of the business and the dispatch of it; therefore pray be pleased to authorise me to appoint Mr. Nott to gratify him beyond the ordinary fees. My Lord Treasurer is very obliging to take so quick an opportunity with the King, and I discern by Mr. Nott that my Lord intends to write to you himself, and that my cousin Bertie told him he had his commands to mind him of writing, which I suppose will be to first acquaint you with what is done, and therefore think it will not be proper either for your Lordship or for me from you to make him any acknowledgments till he intimates the thing, lest it be looked at for a spur, which I assure you his Lordship needs not.

* Gervase Holles died 1675. Bertie’s return was declared void.

“My Lady Manchester Dowager died on Friday; Mr. George Clark’s only son on Saturday of the smallpox; and my aunt Mountagu yesterday of old age.”

Original, signed. Seal of arms.

“The effect of the Warrant” is given on the dorse; it relates to Geddington Woods.

[THE EARL OF] DANBY to [LORD MONTAGU].

1676, Dec. 27, London.—“Your Lordship hath been pleased to oblige me so often that I am very glad (though in a small occasion) to have had an opportunity of showing your Lordship my readiness to serve you. I am not less pleased that at the same time I am able to assure your Lordship his Majesty was not less willing to grant than I was to ask what your Lordship desired of him, and I am no less confident that he will be as willing to gratify your Lordship’s desires at any time. But that I would not be wanting to inform your Lordship of my obedience to your commands, I am under a little trouble which I know would procure your pardon: my daughter Latymer was delivered last night of a fine boy, who is since dead, and herself not out of danger, though we have very good hopes of her, and I know your Lordship will give me leave to ease myself to so good a friend as I assure myself we have of your Lordship.”

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD [MOUNTAGU].

[1676,] Dec. 28.—“Though I see by your letter you are at Brampton, yet I must send mine to Boughton, because it enclareth two that I must not venture by the post. The one is that from cousin Bertie, the other Mr. Nott brought me from Lord Treasurer yesterday, after he had delivered your Lordship’s to him. Mr. Nott, having nothing else, begs your Lordship’s pardon that he writes not this week. My Lady Latimer was yesterday brought to bed of a son, but it died in three or four hours, but was first christened Thomas. . . .

[P.S.] “My Lord Mohun it is thought will die of this hurt or the consequence of it, for [he] lieth now very weak.”*

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1677?] Jan. 11.—“Since I sent away my letter, I went to wait of your daughter Harvey, who tells me the King hath signed the Bill, and it is now at the Signet; and to incline your Lordship to come up (which she thinks will please the King much), wished me to send you word she supped with the King the other night at a Lady’s you

* He was buried 7 Oct. 1677. (Complete Peerage.)

once met at supper with him at her house, and his Majesty spoke much and very kindly of your Lords[hi]p, and of his good opinion of you, and asked when you would come to town, for he would be glad to see you, for you was as* good company, and one of the best kind of men he knew; and said, 'Come, let's drink his health,' and so did. She saith the Lady said, if you came to town, she would endeavour to have the honour of your Lordship to sup with her. I haste, that the carrier may not be gone."

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1677,] Jan. 18.—"I would fain have sent you word, this week, your patent† had been sealed, but Mr. Nott tells me he doubts not but it will be sealed today or tomorrow. I saw an occasion to spur it on, which I shall acquaint your Lordship with hereafter; but when it is sealed it will be fit it should remain here some time till it be drawn down into the Rolls among the Patent Rolls (which will scarce be this half year), lest the Bill, which hath the Recepi upon it, should be mislaid, and then it must be enrolled by the Patent itself; and therefore, if you please, when it is done, Lloyd shall write a copy to send you, that the patent may lie here awhile, so that your other patents need not stay so long but be sent sooner, since also that box they came in will not hold another.

"My Lady Danby last night honoured us with a visit, and I desired her to tell my Lord Treasurer your Lordship would send him up your proxy, which you desired he would be pleased to accept, but shall acquaint his Lordship myself with it on Saturday, before which I cannot wait of him, for Newgate Sessions. The Parliament men still moulder away; Mr. Fowell of Devonshire is certainly dead, and Sir John Fagg of Sussex reported to be so, but it's thought otherwise."
Seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1677,] Jan. 25.—"I am very glad you received my letter by the post. I have your patent just now brought me, of which next week will send a copy. This week is sent (with great care to the carrier) your other two patents in the same box they came, and in it a copy of Lord Campden's, which did you good service as to the precedent to facilitate the like, as also to the form, which was so good that no counsel need to be used, nor any was, only Sergeant Skipwith.

"Being I was to wait of the King before the term, I thought it fit to present your duty and thanks to his Majesty for his grace and favour in granting you so pleasurable an accommodation, and so near your house, which I did on Sunday morning; and dining at Lord Treasurer's, acquainted him with it, who liked of it very well, and told me he had a letter from my nephew of thanks to his Lordship, but he intended to return him; they (sic) should be to the King, who did it extreme readily.

"The reason I had to spur on was, that going the week before to wait of Lord Treasurer, I found Sir John Robinson there, who came to me, and told me my Lord had acquainted him of your grant, and could not

* Or "a."

† Relative to Geddington Woods Chase, according to another letter of Jan. 20, on which day the patent was sealed. See Patent Rolls, 28 Chas. II., Jan. 17.

hold expressing to me he hoped the King would do the like for him; and now your Lordship will think I had reason. My Lord of Lindsey presents his service, and begs a favour (I think your Lordship will not deny him) to give him that picture of his grandmother's wherein she is combing her hair, to preserve it in his family.

[P.S.] "My wife and I desire our humble services to Lord Ashley and my Lady.

"The Recorder of London, being sick and old, hath resigned, and Mr. Dalbin [Dolben], the B[isho]p of Rochester's brother, is to be Recorder."

Seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM MOUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1677,] Feb. 1.—"We heard my Lady Gray was light-headed, but I thought it had been from the sickness late upon her, but am very sorry it proves a distraction; I know it will much trouble my Lord Hatton.

"I have sent your Lordship this week a copy of your new patent, which was writ in great haste, as well as the patent, and so it is not so fair a copy as I could wish, but I examined it myself, and it is a true one, and by it you will see there are some little miswriting[s] in the patent, but none so material as to submit it to an amendment in the King's presence, which is the only way for cure of such things. I am glad to be confirmed that my Lady Northumberland is breeding. It's said, when she went to wait upon the Queen of France, never such a concourse of people was seen upon such an occasion as then [came?] to view her.

[P.S.] "Just now Mr. Longueville tells me Lady Gray is dead."

Seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD [MOUNTAGU.]

[1677,] Feb. 22.—"I will get the sight of the Privy Seal, if possible, by Mr. Nott or otherwise. I thought to have employed Mr. Guy, but for secrecy sake forbore it, and will trust nobody but myself. I have sent your Lordship the King's speech and my Lord Chancellor's. I know you have heard of the four Lords' commitment, for asserting the Parliament was dissolved. The Solicitor General [Sir Francis Winnington] was chosen on Monday for Windsor, and sat on Tuesday.

"The animosities are so great I wish there be no mischief done at the election at Stamford. I hope the King will not be so facile to grant more of the Forest. We have this week sold my cousin Lane's mortgage, so now shall pay all the remaining parts of the legacies. My daughter Mountagu miscarried this week of a boy, and my daughter Drake's daughter is ill, and so much wasted that I believe she will not live."

"My Lord Manchester is gaining an Act for the sale of St. Ive's, and what extents he hath in Holliwell and Needingworth. The House of Commons took into consideration yesterday the building more ships. My Lord Feversham was brought into the House; his patent* is for life to him, remainder to Lord Durass and the heirs males of his body; so now he and his issue male will be Barons of Throwly and Viscount Sands of Leez Court, though not like to have the lands. I hope Mr. Pickering writes your Lordship more particulars than now come to my hearing."

* Dated 8 April, 1676. (Nicolas.)

GEORGE MOUNTAGU to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

1677, April 12.—“I am heartily sorry your physic agrees no better with you; I beseech you tamper not too much, nor let blood too much this cold season. I fear the Prince of Orange and Dutch army are greatly beaten, but of this you will have better intelligence from your son than I can send you.

“We yesterday passed the Money Bill, and have sent it up to the House of Lords; with which the King was so greatly pleased as he and the Treasurer [Lord Danby] made it to be opened, and it reached from the throne to the lower end of the Lord’s House. The King parted with his own stick (which he said was a yard) and made one of the Lords measure our Bill, his Majesty taking the White Staff himself, stopping at every yard, and reckoning the number; which (sic) by reason of the multitude of Commissioners makes this Bill so extremely long. Pray God send them to take right measures of England’s interest against this powerful and overgrowing interest of France.

“I believe the Houses will rise this week, the King intending as I hear they shall adjourn themselves to some short time, and from that time to another; and when for the public safety there shall be need of their counsels and attendance, he will signify it to them by proclamation, that then there may be a full Parliament.

“I have here-enclosed sent you the Address of the House of Commons (without going to the Lords) concerning the Duke of Norfolk’s return into England; this [’tis] grounded upon the petition of Bernard Howard and the other discount[en]ted younger brothers of that family against the Lord Marshal Harry Howard. What the King will do in it is not yet answered.

“Lord Latimer is chosen at Corfe in Dorsetshire in the room of Sir Ralphe Bankes; so now my Lord Latimer, Dunblany, Cooke, and Charles Osborne, my Lord’s brother, are all members of our House. I fancy Charles Bertie or Sir John Bankes of Maidstone, Governor of the East India Company, will be chosen at Quinburrugh in the room of James Herbert.

“The Lady Compton, formerly Elmes, died this week, and that day her husband’s Bill passed for selling Hammerton, there being a mistake in the last Bill, as he could not sell by it. Lord Manchester’s Bill is also passed, who I believe will wait on you this summer at Boughton; for he speaks often to me that I must be an instrument of a right understanding between you, and mentions your Lordship with all kindness.

“My poor niece Herbert, as you will find by the Gazette, hath lost most of her fine jewels, which with suits and great contention I preserved for her, and delivered them safe after twenty years’ keeping into her own hands, and upon her marriage made conditions that she should enjoy and dispose of them as she pleased; but now they are stolen out of her closet by a servant of my Lord’s.

“My Lord Chief Baron [Wm. Montagu], I suppose, being returned, will give you an account of the proceedings of the Lords’ House, and about Mr. Howe and Lord Rutland, being by consent to be heard there, at our next meeting.

“I have kept a cheese this month packed up and directed, as you will find, to my Lord Ambassador at Paris [Ralph Montagu]. His agents in town had notice of it, but they neglect the thing, or me, and I now presume to offer it to my noblest friend, your Lordship.” . . .

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1677,] May 31.—“Since they are all so well pleased at Chepstow I hope you will not need any Act of Parliament, for I do not think the Bishop hath any intention of questioning the thing, but is willing to have the 40*l.* per annum laid nearer them by a purchase. I have not yet, but now shall make inquiry after the issue of the case I told your Lordship of.

“I forgot last week to mention that I seemed to Captain Guy and Mr. Dixon not to give any hint what your Lordship might do in the parson’s reference; but without doubt that parson that sowed his glebe and voided his living by acceptance of another, without a dispensation before severance, loseth the emblements, it being voided by his own act, though it would have been otherwise if voided by death, which is the act of God. Dr. Crawly, parson of Ammersham is dead; so a great living fell to Sir William Drake, which he hath given to one Mr. Smith, his chaplain, a very worthy person.

“The Earl of Dover is dead, and it is said his daughter, Lady Mary Henningham, will pretend to the Barony of Hunsdon, as made a fee by the call of her father by writ, but I believe the heir male will carry it. My cousin [Francis] Wingfeild hath kissed the King’s hand to be a Sergeant-at-Law and one of his Majesty’s, but I hear it will not be till Michaelmas term.

“I have sent the King’s speech on Monday at adjourning the Parliament till 16th of July. I hope your Lordship will pardon the trouble of Kitt, who hath a great desire to wait upon you and thinks hath neglected it too long.”

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1678 ?] Feb. 18.—“I shall acquaint my nephew with your pleasure, which I believe he will observe, for I heard him speak of going down ere long, but as yet Mr. Const[able] and he have not finished consultation; and Mr. Trenchard’s death hath altered the scene, we know not whether for better or worse. He died about a fortnight since, and my cousin apprehends Mr. C[onstable] must have somewhat more express to engage him than the letter was, but knows not how to do it, nor what the consequence may be, and therefore hath desired your advice. At Whitehall, they are going into mourning for Mr. Rich, who died on Tuesday night; there is a marriage soon dissolved.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1678 ?] Feb. 25.—“I have not seen your son since his last being with Mr. Const[able], but he had resolved of a very good way of expressing himself to him, and significant enough. I confess it’s a tender point, and I long to know how it was resented, and whether he met with him before he went out of town.

“The great news in town is of the King of Swed[en]’s advance into Denmarke; [he] hath conquered a great part of the country, and, as is reported, hath crowned himself King of Denmark. Some say he hath taken Elsenore. This enclosed came last night by the post, and is to tempt Mr. Estwick to Botesford living.”

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

1677-8, March 7.—“ I see by what your Lordship sends my Lord Cullen gives off. I wish his Bill may pass the House of Lords, for I find there it hath much opposition. The Earl of Pembroke's mother died a fortnight since. The Earl petitioned the Lords he might be tried by the House for the murders found against him by the Coroner's inquest; but the Lords, conceiving that to be too inferior a record to try a peer upon, have desired the King that a special commission of oyer and terminer may issue, and then to have an indictment preferred to a grand jury before those commissioners, which, if found, shall be removed into the House of Lords, and then his Lordship shall be there tried, and a High Steward will be appointed for that purpose.

“ My Lord Frescheville's cause was heard yesterday, but the Lords do not find a sufficient ground to advise his Majesty to restore him to a higher place than now he hath. My Lady Danby is in great sorrow for the death of her grandchild, my cousin Cooke's daughter, and is much afflicted that both her sons are to be engaged in this war; but till the war be some way or other declared, there will be no need of recalling your son.

“ I am sure my Lady Elizabeth Percy is not yet married, nor I think near it, to the Lord your Lordship mentioned. I spoke with Lord Rockingham yesterday in the House, but did not in the least discern by him that my Lady Feversham was ill. My Lord Great Chamberlain [Robert Lord Lindsey] and his Lady are so kind as to dine with us today, to eat your brave chine of pork. I beseech my humble service to my Lord Ross and my Lady, when they come to Boughton. I am so indisposed with an excessive cold that I hope you will pardon the thus sending you this.”

Signed, W. M. Seal of arms.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

[1678,] March 14.—“ My cousin Harvey is looked for within few days, and the Yough [yacht?] that is to bring her over. My Lady Scroope goeth in to Bourbon waters. It seems our country is very full of freeholders that the poll lasted so long. The Poll Bill passed yesterday the Lords, by which I see, as Chief Baron, I shall pay six score pounds, besides 12*l.* as a Lord's son.

“ The Duke of Monmouth returned on Saturday from landing our soldiers at Ostend. Colonel Viller's daughter, since [she?] went over with the Princess of Orange, is there married to a great fortune in Holland. Sir William Ellis and Sir Edmund Turnor, that drunk so long for Grantham burgess-ship in the life of Sir William Thorold, now upon his death have both lost it, and Sir Robert Markham is chosen. Though the French prosper in Flanders, they have been beaten in Sicily by the Spaniards. I fear we shall see very troublesome times.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

1678, Nov. 15.—“ I see what I writ about my cousin's sitting in the House is anticipated by a quick messenger, and your Lordship's favour in sending me so very fine a doe (for which I most humbly thank you) hath prevented my desire of having Gedington Woods spared. I altered my mind since I writ your letter, and have sent down some of my warrants this week, to have them come up weekly.

“ Mr. Coleman is to be tried in the King's Bench on Thursday next, and one Atkyns on Monday sennit. Nothing more, unless you have not seen the list of Sheriffs.”

[WILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

[1678,]* Nov. 22.—“I received the acquittances by Mr. Morgan, and by them I see your Lordship hath had a great trouble about them. I wish my cousin Ralph could find an opportunity to discourse the Duke of M[onmouth] about the restraints, before he goeth; I will be sure to mind him of it, and if [I] cannot prevent it, the officers must join, for it is only to hinder us of our fees and to ingross the game to the foresters themselves.

“Since the death of Mr. Ekins my cousin Lane tells me my cousin Mulso hath made him Steward of Thindon; I wish he had had Kettering also, but it seems that is gone.

“By the enclosed you will see at least a dozen Sheriffs altered, and more I believe will be changed. My Lord of Leicester is not dead half so rich nor left half so much to his sons as I writ. The Prince of Orange and his Lady went away on Monday morning. . . .

“The King hath not yet disposed of the Archbishopric of Canterbury, and is very reserved who shall be. The discourse of the removes go not so current the same way they did, so perhaps he your Lordship writes of may be, which I should be very glad of. My Lady Anne Coke is brought to bed of a son, but somewhat before her time, and a very weakly one.”

[THE DUCHESS OF] NEWCASTLE to her daughter THE DUCHESS OF ALBEMARLE, at Albemarle House in St. James's Fields, London.

1678[-9], March 22.—“My dear Betty,—. . . Your father† has had a letter of summons from the Lord Chancellor to attend the House of Lords, but he is no more able to go up now than he was before, therefore must send up servants again; and pray speak to my Lord Duke to be his friend to get him excused when he sends, and get him as many friends as he can; but I rather wish your father would only endeavour to have himself excused till he is better able to travel, and not have his servants swear at the bar of the Lords' House. I wish you could inform yourself whether that can be, without naming your father, or, if it be possible, giving any ground for any you speak to [to] think it is he you mean; for I am very tender concerning this swearing; I like it not, and yet truly for many great reasons your father cannot come to town, nor would I have him upon many accounts. Knowing us both, you may give a guess at our reasons, when you consider the times and businesses are now on foot in Parliament time; 'tis better to be from amongst them than with them. Pray answer me carefully to this, and as soon as you can, for 'tis of consequence to us, but your father does not know that I write this to you.

[P.S.] “Your father desires you to give the enclosed case of my cousin Markham of Olorton, who both him (sic) and you are well acquainted with, to my Lord Duke, and to desire him, from him and me both, that he will consider it, and do my cousin Markham, who has been so barbarously abused against all law or justice, all the good he can, for 'tis acceptable to God and man to help those in distress. The very persons that are named in this case, that is, those two, Ball and Strutt, have been very near as barbarous many times at Holbeck to my uncle and aunt, as, if they did but complain, it would appear; and Ball is no officer or has any commission of any kind from authority, but is Strutt's ban-dog, because he dares not himself appear so rude and barbarous; but often Strutt, who is a real messenger, puts his bag upon this Ball, and sends him without him. This certainly reflects much upon authority, and is such an abuse of it as deserves severe punishment, as I hope they will lay upon them.

* “1678” is written at the top in pencil.

† Henry Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle. The daughter here addressed was named Elizabeth.

"Since I lapt up my letter I writ this, and since the post came, who has brought me no letter from you. I also desire you to speak to my Lord Duke that either at Council or House of Lords he will give all the assistance he can, and engage as many as he can, to get my uncle Gervice a licence for my aunt to live in London with him in his house, with 5 at least men-servants and 4 women-servants of her religion, she having lived with him this (sic) thirty years, is his only sister, and he cannot leave, and he is so ill in health that he much needs the help of doctors there, and my aunt is not very well."*

[LORD] FINCH, C[hancellor], to LORD MOUNTAGUE,
at Boughton.

1679, April 12.—"The Trial of several Peers for their lives is coming on, and it is the duty of every Peer to attend that service, and that attendance will be required of every Peer with a more than ordinary strictness. The case being of great consequence to the public, and of very great observation, I am therefore, by command of the House of Peers, to enjoin your Lordship that, all excuses set apart, you fail not to repair to Town forthwith, and here to remain and attend that service, and the further service of the House. And I am further to let your Lordship know, that there will be such strictness used in this matter, that some few days before the Trial the House will be called over, and for such Peers as shall then be absent there will be sent a Serjeant-at-Arms to take them into custody. Of which this intimation is the best service I can do your Lordship."

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1679,] April 27.—"I received from Lady Anne Howe a letter much to the purpose of those she sent your Lordship. I writ her word our trust, if well considered, was very small, for it was only, when they had made out the will, and given security to pay the legacies, to convey to Lady Anne, which I should be ready to do. I have writ to [my] Lord of Rutland to be pleased to compose the business by making good the 10,000*l.* agreed on at Lord Shaftesbury's, with interest from that time, which I see will yet end it.

"Yesterday was my Lord Shaftesbury's trial with Lord Digby in Scandala Magnatum. I hear the words were proved by nine witnesses, so suppose the verdict will be for him, but it's thought there will be no great damages; but the verdict will not come in till the Court sit this morning, so cannot send word what they are.

"I hear not how Lord Northampton's daughter is like to be disposed, but Lord Cardigan told me Lord Shrewsbury had had a sight of her. I shall let my son know of your Lordship's favour and kindness. I think I heard him speak of going to see the Northern countries, but know not what stay he will make in Northamptonshire; what he doth your Lordship will be sure of the trouble of.

* There are other letters of this writer in 1682, 1683, 1684, and 1691.

"I am sorry you have been so ill of the colic. I am much troubled with the wind and find nothing so good for it as little sugar cakes made with spirit of mint, which if you please try, I will send some.

"Saturday, Sir John Duncombe was removed from being Chancellor of the Exchequer, but the King continues him a Privy Councillor and his pension, and Sir John Earnley is to succeed him.

[P.S.] "I hear not yet of Lifden trial, and have all the deeds; therefore suppose, for want of paym[en]t of costs, [it?] will not go on.

"L[or]d Shaftesbury has a verdict, and damages 1,000*l*."

R[ALPH] MONTAGU* to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1679, May ?] Thursday morning, London.— . . . "The Lords have passed the Bill for excluding the Popish Lords from sitting, with a proviso to except the Duke [of York]; and tomorrow it comes to our House, where I believe it will meet with some difficulty. I find many people very inquisitive why your Lordship does not come to town. I wish, if your Lordship thinks fit, you would be pleased to send your proxy to my Lord Salsburye, Bedford, or Wharton, or who[m] else you shall like best. My wife gives your Lordship her humble thanks for the swan pie."

EDW. PYCKERING to LORD [MONTAGU].

1679, July 31.—"Both your Lordship's of the 28th I received; the parchment deed I delivered to Mr. Pack, who shewed me Capt. Guy's letter, and promised your Lordship should have a copy of it sealed by my Lord Roos, as soon as he could procure it, being shortly to go to Belvoir, where his Lordship now is; for my memory's sake I have inserted it in my book of memoranda. From abroad we have it that the Dutch are much alarmed at some late proceedings of the French on their frontiers; the several factions there beginning to play over again their old pranks. A third-rate ship being to be launched, it was put off because his Majesty could not be there, being gone to Portsmouth by sea, and to be absent about eight days. The writs for Elections, being all ready, are this day to be sealed, the day of Parliament's assembling being the 17th of October. The Scottish prisoners having petitioned his Majesty for mercy, he referred it and them to D. Lotherdale [the Duke of Lauderdale], who opposes it with all his might.

"The Duchess of Cleveland is lately come over, and will shortly to Windsor, if not there already. His Majesty gave the Commissioners of the Treasury fair warning to look to themselves, for that she would have a bout with them for money, having lately lost 20,000*l*. in money and jewels in one night at play. Nell Guin's mother was found drowned in a ditch near Westminster on Tuesday night. The King's scholars of that place lately fell upon a bayly in the execution of his office, and beat him so cruelly that he presently died.

"The day after Sir Geo. Wakeman was set at liberty, he went to Windsor, and there (some say) kissed the Queen's hand. His Majesty was so offended at his going thither that he gave immediate command instantly to depart the place; he is since gone for France, as is said. His jury are so reviled by their neighbours, that some of them are leaving their habitations; some (and great ones) are said shall be speedily questioned before the Council about his acquittal.

---

* Down to 1668 he signed R. Mountague; in letters of 1673 and later, R. Montagu; but he continued to address his letters to Lord "Mountagu," merely omitting the e, which he had previously used. (In the separate collection of his letters to Lord Arlington it appears that he adopted the modern spelling, "Montagu," in or before April 1669.)

“Near St. Edm[und's] Bury in a church, Sun[day] 20th, a jackdaw lit upon the head of a priest whilst he was saying prayers, and in his claws carried away his periwig a good distance before it fell from him. I am earnestly importuned to be at Hertford Assizes, which begin Thursday next, where I have been twice before to no purpose; in the mean I shall be able to perform your Lordship's next week's commands.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to [LORD MOUNTAGU].

[1679,] Nov. 16.—“What I writ in my letter about my cousin Robert Bertie's money was at his desire; but since my letter was gone, he sends me word that he hath received a letter from your Lords[hip], and that I should forbear any writing, but it was gone before. My wife hath no fortune in her appointments to see little Mr. Winwood, for she had appointed this day with cousin Mountagu to have gone to see him, but the great rain last night, and the likelihood of a wet day, hath put them off to a fairer opportunity. Since my letter I hear Sir Robert Carr is dead, and that Sir Thomas Chichley shall be Chancellor of the Duchy.* I resolve to see if Kettering post will convey, and send this by it.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1680?] Jan. 19.—“Since my other letter, my cousin North, who is of counsel with my Lord of Oxford, came to me about the business of Scholler, and saith they are preparing a return in case a habeas corpus be moved for, but for many reasons desires the business may be taken up, and proposeth it in this way: that Scholler shall give bond of ten pound with two sureties of 5*l.* a-piece, to appear at the next Justice Seat for the Forest of Rockingham, and be discharged with all fees, such as he and I shall agree of, which he assures me shall be very moderate; and saith he apprehends a forester committed by the Justice in Eyre is not to be discharged by the King's Bench, and that the Justices in Eyre's warrants are not to be controlled by any of the officers of the Forests. He professeth to come in kindness to your Lordship as well as in service to his client, and desired me the motion might be forborne till we could have your answer, and saith he will undertake, upon any application for sparing the Walk, my Lord of Oxford will do it. I could do no less than promise him the putting off the motion till we could hear from your Lordship, and think it best to close with the proposition, the bail being so moderate a sum, and believe, upon such bail, the business will die, and very much doubt that office being in law of so great a power. You will be wcrsted in the business if it be contested.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[c. 1680?] Aug. 14.—“I hope my nephew is accomplishing his brave attempt, and possessing that most excellent lady,† which will in every way make him happy, and give your Lordship a great comfort. I met * Sir Thomas Ingram succeeded Sir Robert Carr, 14 Feb., 1680.

† If the marriage of Ralph Montagu and Lady Northumberland is referred to here, this letter belongs to the year 1673. See p. 320.

him and Mr. Guy yesterday at Ditton, where we were nobly entertained, and your Lordship wished for and remembered. I there only perused in haste the books of Mr. Raworth's drawing. . . . I am glad your Lordship is so good a lawyer, that you may, in case of this haste, correct any oversights, which, by such a transitory view I had of the drafts, may be committed.

"Mr. Winwood and Lady were mightily pleased at your kindness to my nephew, and spake how glad they should be to see you at Ditton, which is one of the most delicately altered places I have seen. I am very sorry for cousin Mulsoe's death, and that all goeth from my cousin William, as Mr. Guy tell[s?]. I much doubt whether [I?] can wait of your Lordship this summer in regard [I] must meet Sergeant Newdigate at London, 2nd September, to prepare and agree [a] fine and recovery to pass at Chester Sessions, which begins (sic) 8th Sept., in order to a purchase for Sir William Drake of Lord Bruerton, there being no other way to come by that money; so that after that time it will be too late to journey it; but [I] hope this good occasion and the Parliament will cause your Lordship's coming to winter at London. My son would break from Colen through the danger of the army, but thank God is got well to Paris, from whence he writes my Lord Castleton's son, a very fine grown gentleman, is dead of a fever." . . . .

Seal.

LORD CHANCELLOR FINCH to LORD [MONTAGU?].

1680, Nov. 16.—"The Lords Spiritual and Temporal assembled in Parliament, taking notice of your Lordship's absence from your necessary service in attendance in Parliament, without any leave from his Majesty in that behalf obtained, or any other just cause for such absence that they know of, have ordered me to signify to your Lordship the pleasure of the House of Peers, and to require your Lordship's attendance within a week* after the receipt hereof. And I am further to let your Lordship know that no excuse for your default herein shall be received, unless it be attested at the Bar of the Lord's House by two witnesses there to be sworn."

[THE DUCHESS OF] CLEVELAND to MR. FOLKS.

1681†, June 25, Paris.—"Mr. Folks,—Sr Thomas Bond is so much your frind as he hath giuen me a verry good account of your diligens in my late affairs with Mr. Duncomb, and hath preuaild with me so far to consider your trouble in that mater as to giue you the fowr yers Rent and a halfe in areare for West Lillinge, which being 10*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* a yere doth amount to 45*l.* 15*s.*, when the same may be had to your owne use. I am your frind,

CLEAUELAND."

Addressed: "For Mr. Folkes" (sic).

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1681.] Oct. 3, Aspeden.—"I thought to have gone to London this week, but Mrs. Evelyn, my son, and his wife coming hither on Saturday, I must stay with them till next week. My son in his passage waited upon my Lady Northumberland, saw her and the children very well, but did not see my cousin Ralph, who was gone into the City to see the election of my Lord Mayor, which according to course is fallen to Sir John Moore.

* "A week" is inserted in a space originally left blank.

† This date is supplied by a contemporary hand.

“It was very kindly done of Lady Northumberland to do my daughter the honour to dine there. My son tells she commends the place much, and the dinner not a little. I delivered your Lordship’s letter to my brother Freman, who begs your pardon for not writing himself, in regard he was hurried away this morning (being the carrier’s day) by my son very early to Newmarket. He presents his humble service and thanks, for that your Lordship is pleased to think of Aspeden, where he and my sister would most kindly welcome you.” . . .

Seal, a crest.

H. [DUKE OF] NEWCASTLE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]81, Oct. 8, Nottingham.—“I most humbly thank your Grace for [so] favouring me and the Northumberland gentlemen, and indeed the most of the county; as to present my cousin Widdrington with their Address to his Majesty; . . . and presume to beg of your Grace a favour for my friends in the town and county of Newcastle; . . . to present my noble good friend Sir Nathaniel Johnson with the Address of the Lieutenantcy and Militia of Newcastle. . . . I am sorry Sir Tho. Stringger has not attended your Grace since he did me the kindness to see me.” . . . * ——— to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1681, Nov. 10.—“The extraordinary news with which the Town was filled this morning, and is now become the discourse of the Coffee houses, will, I hope, plead for my pardon in giving you the trouble of these lines, which I should not have adventured upon were I not acquainted with your Grace’s goodness in forgiving where there is no fault intended, but only a desire to divert you in your retirement now in the country, and to give you the true relation of the adventure which has happened (as far as ’tis yet known), and which I have from the best and surest hands; which is, that the Lady Ogle† is gone from her grandmother from Northumberland House, without giving any account whither, and as yet not anybody can tell what is become of her. The manner was thus:

“Yesterday morning about nine a clock the Lady Ogle dressed herself to go abroad as she said to Lumbard Street, to buy some plate and other things at a goldsmith’s. She took her own coach and footmen along with her, but instead of going to Lumbard Street she went into the old Exchange, and left the coachman and footman below stairs, telling them they should not stir from thence till she sent them order; and having only her page with her, she feigned a pretence of sending him upon some errand, bidding him return to her when he had done, but when he came back he could not find his Lady. However, all the servants stayed at the Exchange till eleven a clock at night, and then thought fit to go home; which when the old Lady was informed of, and that they came without their Lady, she sent everywhere to enquire, but could hear no news of her; upon which Cap. Brett went to the King, and told him she had been married some time ago to Mr. Thyn; to which the King made no other return but this, that if she was married to him, she had been betrayed by those who pretended and ought to have been her best friends.

* This and another letter dated at Wellbeck, 14 Feb. 1681[-2], refer to the writer’s daughter, the Duchess of Albemarle.

† Daughter and heiress to Josceline, 11th Earl of Northumberland. (MS. note.)

“The old Lady Northumberland could hear no news of her till this morning, when the young Lady’s* chambermaid brought her a letter written with her own hand, which she left with her, but charged her not to deliver it till the next day, in which she did own her marriage in some measure to Mr. Thyn,† but not fully, and that now she could not endure him, and therefore could not think of living with him, and therefore was gone away, but would not let her know where nor with whom. She also sent her a ring which Mr. Thynn had presented her, to be returned to him; at which Mr. Thynn storms and rages to extravagancy in his passion, and owns his marriage, but says not that he has bedded her.

“This is the matter of fact; more is not yet known, but only ’tis said that Sir William Temple’s Lady and Mrs. Stanhop her woman were with her at the Exchange, and are gone in her company, most believe to Holland. The Lord Poorescott gave her in marriage, and his Lady and Cap. Brett and his Lady were by when ’twas done, which cannot be very lately, for the Lady Katharine Brett has been dead at least six weeks. This, Sir, is all I can write for the present of certainty; only ’twas said she was gone along with the Count Coningsmarke, but that is only a report.”

Not signed. Ends: “I am as much as any man living,” &c.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1681,]‡ Dec. 15.—“I think your Lordship hath done very nobly to abate Sir Edw. Read of the exact custom, which your acquittance cannot at all hurt your right of. Mr. Harby was with me, whom I satisfied in your title, and of the constant conformity to it but in some few instances, which have been all made to yield.

“I can write nothing to your Lordship of Lady Ogle, but that her mother writ to her, if she was married, it was best to come live with her husband. My Lady herself hath been ill this two or three days and kept her bed, but I hope it is in no way of miscarrying.

“The news-books are sent this week, but I am (by reason Tom Cooke can neither tie brawn nor raise past§) going on Monday for three weeks or a month to Woodcote, and hope in the meantime my Lady Harvey will supply your Lordship.

“I do not hear of any probability of a Parliament so soon as February. The news I find not comprehended in the books is, that my Lord Noel shall be Governor of Po[r]tsmouth, and Mr. Legg Treasurer of the Ordnance; and it is said Mr. Stroud, the Governor of Dover, is surrendering it upon terms to Captain Knatchpole. The Countess of Suffolke and her fine daughter Lady Betty Felton are both dead this week of apoplexies, and Serjeant Sympson is dead of somewhat like it.”

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to LORD MOUNTAGU.

[1682,] Feb. 9.—“I have received your Lordship’s letter and the enclosed, and after the term shall observe my cousin’s time to carry it.

* “Ladies” in MS.

† “Thynn” below; i.e. Thomas Thynne.

‡ “1681” is written at the top, in pencil.

§ Qu. paste.

The Circuits are set, and ours begins at Aylesbury on Monday, the 6th of March. We would have it later in hopes of better ways, but (sic) to accommodate Serjeant Wright, who is to go a Welsh Circuit after this is ended, and will end that but just before the next term.

“Our new neighbour in Lincoln’s Inn Fields, Sir William Ellis his Lady, daughter of Mr. Hampden, lieth there dangerously sick of the small pox, for which disease this sharp weather is very ill. Judge Raymond* is like to recover, and goeth Northampton Circuit with Baron Street.

“I thank God Mountagu Drake hath had no further symptoms of the stone, but the doctors advise he should this year go drink Tunbridge waters. My Lord Manchester and Lady are preparing for France suddenly, that air being prescribed him for the perfectest cure of his rheumatism. My wife presents her humble service, and thanks for your brawn.”

[CHARLES JOHN, C<sup>OUNT</sup>] KÖNIGSMARK, to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[1682, Feb.]—“Pardon me that the misfortune which I lay (sic) under makes me seek the protection of a man of your worth and character, desiring your Grace to be present at my infortunate trial; † which will be tomorrow morning at seven of the clock, if your affairs will permit to do that honour, that you may see justice done to a stranger that ever valued himself of being your Grace’s most humble and most obedient servant.”

Signed.

W. BENTINCK to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1682, March [3–] 13, la Haye.—“C’est avec bien de la joye que j’ay receu l’honneur de la vostre, et je n’en saurois avoir de plus sensible qu’en rencontrent les occasions de vous obeir en ce que vous m’ordonnerez. Monsieur, j’ay bien de la joye de ce que Mr. Monck aye reussi dans sa sollicitation; je vous prie de me continuer un peu de part dans vostre souvenir, puis que je vous honore et respecte.”

[SIR] THOMAS CLARGES to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1681[–2], March 11.—“When I waited on your Grace I made my acknowledgments to you for the obliging offer your Grace was pleased to make to me by my good friend the Earl of Halyfax to have any land in your Grace’s power to sell, a year’s purchase cheaper than any other.

[P.S.]—“It is said the Duke of York arrived last night at Newmarket.”

THE DUKE OF ALBEMARLE to the COUNT DE CONINGSMARKE.

1682, May 18, Albemarle House.—“I have received those thanks you are pleased to give me. I should be very glad to meet an opportunity of rendering you any service within my power which is due to your person and quality, for which I have all respect imaginable, and was very much concerned for your late misfortune, out [of] which I did rejoice at your happy deliverance.”

* Thomas Raymond, Justice K.B. 24 April 1680.

† On the charge of hiring three assassins, who shot Mr. Thomas Thynne in his coach in Pall Mall.

LORD HUNSDON to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]82, May 27.—“I have been ever since this day sinnitt at Gravesend attending their Royai Highnesses* happy arrival, which was not till last night about 12, at the Hope. This day they came to Whit Hall, thank God, both very well. Their Majesties meet (sic) them at the Earl of Arlington’s, where they dined. The King and Queen are gone to Winsor. His Royal Highness goes without the Duchess tomorrow after dinner. This I thought my duty to acquaint your Grace with, craving your Grace’s pardon, as I am Old Hunsdon, but always,” &c.

“The old Earl of Denbigh, old Ogle, with two honest Tories, kinsmen to this old Earl, by name Sir Tho. Prise and Capt. Bagot, not forgetting myself, have just now drunk your health, and are beginning it once more; so God Almighty bless you, and my good Duchess.”

SETH, BISHOP OF SALISBURY, Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE, K.G.

1682, Sept. 22.—“Having received command from his Majesty to signify to the Knights Companions of the Most Noble Order of the Garter that it is his Royal intention to hold a Chapter at Whitehall upon Sunday next, the twenty-fourth day of this instant September, at three of the clock in the afternoon, for the Election of a Knight Companion: These are therefore humbly to make known to your Grace this the Sovereign’s intention, and that your appearance in your mantle will be expected at the time and place appointed.”

Signed. The dates and times are filled in by Sir W. Dugdale.

THE SAME to the DUKE [OF ALBEMARLE, K.G.]

1682, Nov. 3, Friday morning, White Hall.—“Having received command from his Majesty to signify to the Knights Companions of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, that it is his Royal intention to hold a Chapter at White Hall upon Saturday, the fourth day of November, at three of the clock in the afternoon, for the investing of a Knight Companion: These are therefore humbly to make known to your Grace this the Sovereign’s intention, and that your appearance in your mantle is expected at the time and place appointed.”

Signed. The dates are filled in by Dugdale.†

W[ILLIAM] MOUNTAGU to [LORD MOUNTAGU.]

[16]82, Nov. 16.—“When I spoke with my cousin Mountagu, he told me he would be coming for Boughton the next week, but I believe his Chancery business with Sir Thomas Harvey, which now lies before a Master, will keep him in town [a]while after the term.

“His great room is now finished, all but some little side painting, and the scaffolds taken down, and I believe there is not such another room in England.

“My cousin Robert Bertie is very inquisitive of me whether I know of any order taken by your Lordship about his money, which I can give him no account of. Yesterday, being the Queen's birthday, was the greatest bravery at Whitehall that hath been these many years, but all bonfires are forbidden by an Order of Council, which is printed in Monday's Gazette. So with our services presented to your Lordship and Lady Northumberland I rest."

* The Duke and Duchess of York.

† The first of these Garter letters is in Vol. 1, the second in Vol. 9.

Signed.

W[ILLIAM] M[OUNTAGU] to LORD [MOUNTAGU].

[1682,] Dec. 21.—“ You cannot now be too soon in returning thanks to my Lord Treasurer [Earl of Rochester], who with so much favour and friendship sent the warrant signed on Friday. I went on Sunday to thank him, and he expressed a great deal of kindness to your Lordship and of his willingness to serve you, and told me the King did it with a great [deal] of readiness and obligingness. I gave Mr. Johnson the warrant, who I doubt cannot possibly prepare the bill to be signed on Friday, and after that day the King signs nothing till after Christmas; so that I doubt you must have patience till then, for Mr. Johnson saith it is a business of weight, and he must have great care of it, on the one side to do it well for your Lordship, and on [the] other side safe for Mr. Attorney [Sir Robert Sawyer]. I have sent you my first draught of the warrant, which is not altered in a word, only some such addition as I have put at the bottom was inserted in the reciting part. I send it down to have your Lordship consider and advise upon two things: First, whether, if you take the grant of the Walk, it may not be interpreted you hold the coppices by this latter grant, and then be doubted of for the generality of the words, and likewise be subject to what may fall upon late grants. Secondly, whether the clause of deafforesting (coming last, as it does in Lord Campden's patent) may not endanger the destroying the former clauses of the Chase. I do not much fear this latter, and spoke of it to Mr. Johnson, who thinks it no danger, but however I desired him to put a subsequent clause (after deafforesting) to license you to erect a chase, which will certainly be good in all your own ground, and I believe shall prevail for such a clause, for though not in the warrant expressly, yet is warranted by the general words, with such other clauses as may make the King's intended (sic) most beneficial. I said nothing of the first to him. This thing being thus cleverly done by Lord Treasurer, I am at a stand what to do about the Duke of M[onmouth?], my Lord not speaking of it, and I durst not ask him, not knowing how he would or might intrepert it, and whether it might not cause a stop; but being like to have time, I wished Mr. Nott to write to my nephew, and now pray your direction, that I may have no blame if it should have any ill sequel.

“ My wife presents her service and thanks for the store of Christmas provision you are pleased to send. A proclamation is expected forth today for to intimate the meeting of the Parliament. My Lady Brooke died some few days after her sister Manchester. On Friday Lady Elizabeth Cary, daughter to Lord Mounmouth,* prophesied at supper she should die that night in her sleep, and so did.

“ Lord Salisbury and my Lady were in town four or five days, and are gone again to Quicksett; they present their service. My Lord's business was about the purchasing the lordship of Bigraves, that lieth under Quicksett hill, for which he payeth 13,000*l*. Mrs. Nelly's son is made Earl of Weymouth. I was on Monday night at Aunt Mountague's.

* Henry Carey, Earl of Monmouth, ob. s. p. m. 1661.

funeral, who they say died worth 5 or 6,000*l.*, of which sum 600*l.* given to cousin Lodge and her daughter; legacies to abundance of the Mountagues; I hear but imper[fee]tly (?) what your Lordship [has?]; I hear 20*l.*; mine as much; cousin George, wife, and four of his children, 10*l.* a-piece; my cousin Burald executrix and residuary legatee."

KING CHARLES II. to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

1683, Aug. 19, the Court at Windsor.—“We have thought fit and do hereby signify unto you our will and pleasure, that you give order for the usual Officers with three score and twelve Gentlemen of each of the three Troops of our Horse Guards, together with thirty Granadeers of each of the three Troops of Granadeers, under the command of such Officers of the Granadeers as you shall appoint, to attend us in our intended Progress to Winchester, and to send parties of them to attend us in our way thither, as is usual, and at our return. And in the mean time you are to send a Quarter Master to agree for lodging and stabling with other accommodation for the said party of our Horse Guards and Granadeers with their horses (except the Officers, for whom our Harbingers are to provide lodging and stabling near our Court) in inns, taverns, victualling-houses, and ale-houses. And the Officers are to be careful that the said Gentlemen and Granadeers do satisfy for their diet and other accommodation for themselves and their horses, and behave themselves orderly.”

Signed at the top. Countersigned: L. Jenkins. Addressed on the face: To our right trusty and right entirely beloved Cousin and Councillor Christopher Duke of Albemarle, Colonel and Captain of our own Troop of our Horse Guards and Commander in chief of our Horse Guards; or to the Officer in chief of the said three Troops of Guards who shall attend us at Winchester.

Jo[HN] MOUNTAGU [Master of Trinity College, Cambridge,] to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

1683-4, Feb. 9, Trin. Coll. Camb.—“I am very much obliged to your Grace for the honour you are pleased to do me in making me acquainted with your Grace’s intentions; but I hope your Grace will be pleased to consider that our Election for Fellows has been long since past, and that now all vacancies being supplied, there is no room left for any other to succeed into. Besides that the next year, whereof are many excellent scholars, is now in very great hopes and expectations, the which if they should be defeated, it would be very hard and unjust; and yet such must their case necessarily be, if we should in the least give way to receiving any mandate. I humbly beg of your Grace, that you will not, for the sake of one single person, utterly ruin a great number of others. If once this take effect, our Society will become very useless and insignificant. I hope your Grace will pardon my freedom, it proceeding from the strict obligation I have always to stand firm and true to the interest of the College.”

Seal of arms (part).

[SIR] WILLIAM DUGDALE, Garter, to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1684, April 2, Wednesday.—“Having received command from his Majesty to signify to your Grace that you are appointed one of the Commissioners for the Installation of the Prince of Denmark, Duke of Northumberland, and Duke of Somerset into the Society of the most noble Order of the Garter, at Windsor, upon Tuesday next, being the 8th of this instant April: These are humbly to make known to your Grace, that it is expected you then and there appear in your full habit (viz. trunk-hose, surcote, mantle, cap and feather, &c.), as is required by certain special Orders heretofore made in Chapter to that purpose."

W. BENTINCK to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1684, Aug. [7-]17, Dieren.—“Je suis honteus de ne vous avoir pas remercié plustost des honestetez que vous m'avez fait, Monsieur, quant j'estois en Angleterre; ce qui en est la cause c'est, que son Altesse* d'abord apres mon retour en ce pais, ordonna a Mr. d'Anckwerkerck de vous chercher un attelage de chevaux de carosse; j'ay attendu a escrire par celui qui les emmeneroit; cela a duré un an avant qu'il en ait peu trouver qui valussent la peine destre envoyez; j'espere que ceus si le seront, et que vous les treuverez aussi bons, que son Altesse treuve le cheval que vous lui avez donné; pour moy, Monsieur, faites moy la justice de croire que pour avoir gardé longtems le silence je n'en suis pas moins reconnoissant de vos civilitez.”

S. [LORD] GODOLPHIN to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

[16]84, Aug. 22, Whitehall.—“The enclosed is the copy of a petition from some of the Inhabitants of Colchester, presented to the King last Sunday at Windsor by Sir John Shaw; there is also a copy of the directions which the King was pleased to give upon the reading of it. I send them both to your Grace by his Majesty's command.”

H. [DUKE OF] NEWCASTLE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[1684, Nov. ?].—“I received a letter this morning from my Lady Eliz. Pierrepont, wherein her Ladyship is pleased to let me know my house at Clarken-well may be useful to your Grace. . . . Your Grace's servant and my friend Mr. Brabant was with me this day; he desired me to recommend him to your Grace, and I do it as a perfectly loyal gentleman; witness the many wounds he has received in his Majesty's service.”

H. [DUKE OF] NEWCASTLE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]84, Dec. 14.—“I am perfectly of your Grace's opinion there is no place so fit and proper for my daughter in all respects as your Grace's noble house of New-Hall; it is the best house, the best seat, and the best furnished of any subject's house in the kingdom, and I esteem it more convenient for anybody that takes physic than if it was within four miles of London. I most humbly thank your Grace for honouring us by making use of my house in Clarken-well. . . .

[P.S.] “I humbly thank your Grace for your favour to Mr. Brabant.”

R[ACHEL LADY] RUSSELL† to her sister LADY MONTAGUE, in France.

[1685,] March 23.— . . . “Lady Devonshire [is] seven or eight hours from her mistress, but Lady Sunderland can now supply her place * William, Prince of Orange.

† Widow of Lord William Russell.

upon occasion, being a great admirer of her Majesty. The other Queen, or I should say, the Queen, is not at all well; some talk as if she were so weak 'tis questionable if she can endure the ceremony of the Coronation. I am told at last Mrs. Jones is married to Lord Lumley; Lord Dorset is not yet, but sups often at La. Northar (?),* so that I suppose 'tis towards; the town will not have it so, till 'tis done." (Refers to her sister Alinton.)

[SIR] GEO. JEFFREYS to RICHARD WINWOOD, Esquire.

1685, April 5.—“It was late on Saturday night when I came into these parts, and having got a great cold and swelling in my Circuit, I am forced to take physic, that prevents me from waiting upon you in person, but cannot forbear to let you understand that his Majesty will look upon it as an acceptable piece of service to him if you do employ your interest both with your friends and tenants to give their votes for my Lord Brackley and Mr. Hackett to be Knights for this County,† his Majesty having commanded me to attend in person in their favour. As I know your power is great, so I believe your zeal for his Majesty's service to be equal. Though your indisposition cannot give me the happiness of your company, yet an account of your inclination herein, and how you stand engaged, I beg by this bearer. . . .

“I and my wife desire that you and your Lady would accept our service.”

[THE EARL OF] SUNDERLAND to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

1685, April 6, Whitehall.—“I have acquainted His Majesty with your Grace's letter of the 4th of this month, relating to such alterations as you propose in the Corporation of Dartmouth; who commands me to let you know that though it be in His power to remove officers by the Charter, yet He cannot nominate new ones in their places. His Majesty also commands me to let you know that He would have you concur with your interest to the electing of Mr. Pepys to be one of the Burgesses for Harwich.”

Signed.

S[AMUEL] PEPYS to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1685, April 9, Admiralty.—“Lest my Lord of Sunderland may not (in the letter I am informed he has by his Majesty's command lately wrote unto your Grace in relation to me) have given you the ground of his Majesty's present insisting upon my being chosen still at Harwich, notwithstanding my supposed Election at Sandwich; I thought it becoming me to supply it by letting your Grace know, that although the Governor of Dover and myself were unanimously chosen there by the Mayor, Jurats, Common Council, and all that they thought fit to own as Freemen by their new Charter, the body of the old freemen (much more in number than the other) have since proceeded to a separate Election, and made their distinct Return of Mr. Thurbone and another for their Barons for that Port, declaring that they'll make the same good by virtue (some of them) of their old Freedoms, and others of their being legally made free even by this new Charter.

* Mary, daughter of James, 3rd Earl of Northampton, married Charles, Earl of Dorset (Burke).

† Lord John Brackley and Thomas Wharton were elected for co. Bucks.

“Which his Majesty being advised of, was pleased (as in a late like case of Mr. Solicitor * at Guilford) to declare his insisting so much upon my being secured for his service in Parliament, as to direct my Lord Sunderland at the Cabinet on Sunday last to signify to you his desire of your Grace’s concurrence to my being still chosen at Harwich.

“Which though it be no more than what your Grace from the beginning was pleased to undertake for both to the King and myself in case of any ill success to me at Sandwich, yet am I unwilling to make any application herein to my old friends at Harwich, without first advertising your Grace of the reason of the King’s said desires to you, and commands to myself, on this occasion.

R[ACHEL LADY] RUSSELL to her sister [LADY MONTAGU].

[16]85, May 17.— . . . “Your daughter was with me this afternoon, and tells me this morning, that is, Sunday morning (for to speak strictly this is Monday,† being past midnight), the King declared the Lords of his Bedchamber to be, the Duke of Beaufort, Lord Mulgrave, and Fethersham; I put these three first, as those were petitioners for the honour; all the rest had it freely bestowed on them, which are, the Duke of Somerset, Lord Arren of Hambleton, Lord Ossery, Lord Lichfield, Churchil, and Peterborough. ’Tis said two must be ever in waiting; the wages 600 a year. They are to receive their orders on Tuesday next; then the King comes to Whithal, and settles the family. . . . Lord Dorset’s match seems to be at a stop. . . . If you are at Paris, I believe you see Doctor Burnett; pray tell him Master and I both wish him very well.”

E. [DUCHESS OF] ALBEMARLE to [THE DUKE].

1685, Jun[e] 4 (?).—“The confusion I am in you will easily imagine by daily ill news. I have not slept all the last night. . . . When you consider the danger that is round you, you will pardon me easier for being so tender. . . . I am too ignorant to advise, and my dear has too large share of judgment in war matters to fear anything can go amiss for want of conduct.” . . .

The SAME to the SAME.

1685, Jun[e] 19.—“I am extremely troubled at the different stories I hourly hear, but that which disturbs me most [is] to find so many Roman Catholics gone to you. For God[’s] sake, find a way to have them return, for fear of losing your interest, if even spare your life (sic), for I have lived in such pain since you went that ’tis impossible for my dear master to imagine.”

The SAME to the SAME.

1685, Jun[e] 23.—“I am overjoyed to know by one that comes from you that you’re well. The assurance of your safety and health is the greatest happiness I can possess, and I hope I can bear all misfortunes with ease, so you’re out of danger. I am in some hopes I shall see my dear soon, being the King has no service for you, and his Majesty think[s] fitting to put those over you you have so long commanded, which * Heneage Finch.

† Monday was the 18th May.

is my Lords Ferfershem and Curchill, too much below you in every circumstance. As to expenses (?), dear love, save your money and lessen not your greatness, which you full[y] understand without my advice."

The SAME to the SAME.

[1685,] Jun[e] 31 (sic).—"To hear you're alive is some satisfaction, but when I consider the danger you're in, the worst friend I have will pity me. This last news which is come covers me with continual fears of foul play, which almost gives me a despair of never seeing you more."

FULKE GROSVENOR to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]85, July 5, Weston.—"On Friday was fortnight last I prayed the King's licence that I might discharge my allegiance to his Majesty and my duty to your Grace; and in order thereto the next morning I received the Lord Sunderland's pass to secure me into the West, and brought my sword in one hand and my heart in the other, with a resolution to sacrifice the latter rather than part with the former, and have been ever since that time labouring to bring myself under your Grace's command; but finding that at that time I came out, Scott (late D. of Monmouth) was marched from Lime, and that it was vain to hope that I and my servants could charge or force our way through the Enemy without better strength, I took the advantage of the Horse Guards to conduct me to your Grace, and have ever since marched with them, but with great dissatisfaction to myself that I could not be posted under your Grace; and truly nothing could have prevented my coming with Major Norcott and Mr. Strode at this time, but that we are now within three miles of the Enemy, and should I at this juncture leave the army, they would undoubtedly condemn me of cowardice, and judge that which is truly my zeal to serve your Grace, to be a bare shift or pretence to wigle (sic) myself out of danger; and I heartily pray that Perkin* may steer his course towards your Grace, that you may have the greatest share in the honour of his destruction, and that the aspiring hopes of some may be defeated, who design it undeservedly for themselves, and that my Good Star (if any danger be levelled at your Grace) may fix me as a small piece of approved armour to shield your Grace from all the designed or random shots of a Rebellious Enemy."

E. [DUCHESS OF] ALBEMARLE [to the DUKE].

1685, July 12.—"Your kind letter was very welcome to me, and Jo. Fontane came here today to tell me my dear love is well, but no certainty of being blessed with your presence."†

[LORD] DARTMOUTH to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

1685, Nov. 10, Whitehall.—"I received the honour of your Grace's letter, and acquainted his Majesty with your readiness to serve him, which he accepted with the kindest expressions imaginable, and commanded me to desire your Grace to make what convenient speed you could up. My

* The Duke of Monmouth.

† In a letter of 26 March 1686, she writes about going to "the waters" for the benefit of her health.

Lord, the House is to be called over on Monday next ; there is little done yet but returning his Majesty humble thanks for his gracious Speech and receiving my Lord Dellamore's petition, which admitted of some debate, but is adjourned to the call of the House."

R[ACHEL LADY] RUSSELL to LADY MONTAGU, at Paris.

[16]85, Dec. 24, South House.—“I have now left the country and the pensive quiet of it, under which I could willingliest have spent the poor remains of my weary days, but I have exchanged it to endure some of the noise and hurry of this City, that is, more of it than I would have come to my share, to whom all is insipid, as I am to that ; but I am to tread no more in easy paths ; I have gone the best of my way in this my pilgrimage, and must toil through the rest as I can. . . . 'Tis too late to send you word of the fourteen [who] are turned out of their places ; we did not think Mr. Darcy would have deserved such a loss on such an account. . . . Mrs. Hatton is to be married next week to the Lord Nottingham ; he settles every foot of land, and all the money he had at the time of his wife's decease, on her son ; only 1500 a year jointure there is. Lady Ante (sic) Grimstone made the match ; she is just fallen ill of the small-pox ; the Lady Townsend died of it since I came to London ; 'tis very happy Lady Somerset is past it ; she has been to see me. . . . Lord Northampton went down to visit the Lady Conaway within two days after he came to London ; so it is concluded that it is to be a match. Sir William Haywood and a daughter of his, who is great with her, has [have] made it.”

[THE EARL OF] OXFORD to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

[c. 1685 ?]—“I received the news of your not being well, my Lord, with all the trouble in the world, but Mr. Bowles assures me it is but a great cold, which yet I do not like, because it is commonly the beginner of greater ills. My Lord, in the mean time I shall obey your commands and make your excuse to the King, but hope the reason will cease soon. I shall be glad if by your Grace's favour to me and your interest in Essex all heats in this election may be quieted ; but I assure you, my Lord, those who have stirred in it contrary to what the King declared to me, have left no good impressions with him, as I have reason to believe by a word he said to me.”

[THE EARL OF] OXFORD to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[c. 1685 ?].—“I humbly beg your pardon, since this morning that I saw Mr. Bowles I find I am not currant (?) enough to come to Clathenwell (sic), and hope it will hinder no part of the business with the Colechester gentlemen, since there is nothing that your Grace shall settle with them that I shall not agree to, knowing that your Grace understands very well the King's mind and their circumstances.”

R[ACHEL LADY] RUSSELL to [LADY MONTAGU].

[1686 ?] Feb.—“This being an age of misery and misfortunes, and therefore it does not often happen one has the occasion offerd of congratulating, I will not omit taking hold of this” (the birth of a granddaughter). . . . “Lady Jane Noel may be married if her father pleases, where I hope she might be happy ; 'tis the present Lord Digby, his brother being dead; this address is made in pursuance to his advice which he gave when a-dying to his brother, that if Lady Jane would accept him, he should prefer her to all other. What the Lord Gans. [Gainsborough?] will do I know not; he is not in town, unless he came on Saturday night. The Lord Northampton's expectations to marry the Lady Coneway are at an end, in favour of the Lord Mulgrave, who is gone down; the clothes were all bought for the other. I guess you know the Duke of Grafton has in a duel killed Mr. Talbot, Lord Shrousbury's brother; and the same day Har[r]y Wharton killed an Irish officer on Moscco (sic), yet 'tis possible not." . . . (Refers to a fire at Lady Montagu's house.)

[P.S.] "At Whithal on Friday, and on Saturday at Somerset House, there was great solemnity and ceremony, a coffin being set in a room, and candles about it; on Saturday the King put off purple, and put on black and point."

[THE EARL OF] BATHE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

1685-6, March 12, Stowe.— . . . "The King's service, which hath kept me longer in the country than I thought, will now I hope dispense with my further attendance here, that I may kiss your Grace's hands at London, which I hope to do very speedily, and will be always ready to observe your commands. In the mean time I assure your Grace that your power, interest, and command in Devonshire is still as fully absolutely in yourself as formerly, and shall ever so remain whilst I am honoured with the Commission of Lieutenancy, which I shall rejoice, and be always desirous, as once before, to lay at your Grace's feet, whensoever you will be pleased with his Majesty's approbation to accept the same; and thus much, with all other due respect to your Grace, I declared to the Deputy Lieutenants at our first meeting at Exeter, and the enclosed are copies of my letter and their answer from their last meeting, which was very general and unanimous, all being present, only [except] Sir Edward Seymour and Sir William Walrond, whose age and indisposition would not permit. I have no more to trouble your Grace at present, only further to assure you that we never meet without celebrating your Grace's health with all imaginable due honour and gratitude; and I hope your Grace will not take it amiss that I have ordered our Militia, as you will see by the enclosed, to march still under the name and colours of Albemarle. My wife joins me in the presentment of our most humble services to my Lady Duchess and your Grace."

LORD HUNSDON to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]85[-6], March 19.—"My Lady Smyth petition[ed] his Majesty for the bailing her husband, but it is refused, he wanting friends to second it. Since that, his Majesty hath order[ed] him to be sent to the Island of St. Nicholas, which affords more air than the Gatehouse. Your Grace knows it is a very dismal place, there being no company in it, so that the poor Lady will have a melancholy time of it; I do really believe it will kill her; so that she desires to go to some other place where there is more company. Your Grace's appearing in her behalf to the King will do her great service, in tell[ing?] his Majesty that the late King did promise you that he would pardon him. If it does not gain that point, it will procure him a better prison. You know he surrendered himself frankly to you upon my account, so that I think we are both obliged in honour and conscience to do for him what lies in our power—your owing to his Majesty what the late King said to you about pardoning him, which your Grace did often repeat in my hearing, tell[ing] the Colonel that he should have his pardon, for that the King had promised it to you. Sir, two words out of your mouth of this to his Majesty will go a great way in procuring his liberty; it will be an act of charity to them both."

H. [DUKE OF] NEWCASTLE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]86, April 24, Nottingham Castle.—“We hear your Grace is resolved to go for Jamaica; I pray for your health and long life, and all prosperity to your Grace. I am desired by Mr. Ball, the bearer, to acquaint your Grace what I think of him. I humbly assure your Grace I think him a very honest gentleman and fit for business. If your Grace will please to continue him in that employment he has had under the Governors of Jamaica, I shall take it for a great favour. He writes to me he has been Agent to three Governors.”

H. [DUKE OF] NEWCASTLE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]86, May 12, Nottingham.—“Many desire me to present them to your Grace by letter, but I refuse many. I beg your Grace’s pardon I present the enclosed to your Grace. All I shall presume to say is, that Sir Edward Villiers has always been very ready to do me kindness, and what the employment of (sic) Captain Love was to have under Sir Philip Howard, I never heard what it was.”

H. [DUKE OF] NEWCASTLE to [the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]86, June 28, Wellbeck.—“Sir Edward Villiers was here lately, and desired me to assure your Grace he only begged the favour of your Grace Captain Love might trade in Jamaica. . . . My Lord Marquis Halifax went early this day for London upon the death of Sir William Coventry, but intends to return soon. My wife went this day to wait upon my Lady Grace Pierrepont, who is near Nottingham, but intends to return tomorrow.”

(There are other letters by the same writer in 1684, 1685, 1686, and 1690.)

J. SMITHEY (?) to MR. ANTONIE.*

1687, Oct. 21, London.—“I have yours of [the] 22d of September last from Malta, which gives me the satisfaction of hearing of my Lord’s, Lord Fanshaw’s, &c., good health. . . . I am particularly commanded by my Lord Marquis of Halifax and my Lady Marquise to present their humble services to his Lordship. I cannot without great concern tell you of the death of that worthy man Serjeant Leeke, who died the 10th instant of an apoplex[y]. . . .

“His Majesty since his return from his Progress hath removed most of the Aldermen of the City of London, and most of the Assistants and Liveries of the several Companies; most of which [= those who?]

---

* MS. note:—Mr. Mark Antonie, to whom this letter is addressed, travelled abroad with Mr. Winwood Montagu, Mr. Popham, Duke John, and other young noblemen. He was afterwards house-steward to the Dukes [of Montagu] Ralph and John. He died 1720.

are brought in their places, were formerly turned out for nonconformity. Duke Hamilton and Sir Nicholas Butler were sworn t'other day of the Privy Council. The Lord Elland, Mr. Henry Saville, and Mr. Philip Darcy are all lately dead. There is great talk of a Parliament in the spring of the year. Their Majesties are all well, and have promised to dine with my Lord Mayor in Guildhall on the Lord Mayor's day, being the 29th instant."

M. CRAIG (?) to the DUCHESS [OF ALBEMARLE].

[1688.] May 12.—"Your letter, my dearest Duchess, I received with great joy, since it brought me the good news of your health, and the Duke's. You have not an humble servant in the world truly loves and honours you more than I do; I must quarrel your letter was so short, and had no particulars in it. The Queen asked me a thousand questions of how liked (?); I was not slow in telling her Majesty your letter was filled with nothing but duty and kindness to her Majesty, which she received with great pleasure, but showed trouble you had not sent her word how the place agreed with you and the Duke. I told her Majesty you had sent her a present of jacolet, which she said she must taste for your sake; but hearing nothing of it since, I sent to Mr. Phillips (sic) to inquire after it, and to know when a ship went, that I might pay my duty to you.

"As to the jacolet, it is not to be heard of, but I would not omit the first opportunity to let you know that, blessed be God, the Queen* is much better than she hath been in her health, but so cruel as to leave this nation in July or August next. I cannot give you any particular account who goes or stays in this; only for certain my Lady Fingwell is named to go; and I believe I and my niece Waddington will go to stay with her Majesty in Portugal, for I will never quit her so long as I live, if she will accept of my service. The Queen† hath given us many frights, but, God be thanked, is very well and very big; she will lie in at Winsor.

"All your family is well. Lord Tennit [Thunet] and Lady was in town lately, and very well; you know Mr. Boyle (?) is married to Mrs. Neell; and Lord Cleford to my Lady Arrathusay Bartly; he is so fond a husband we never see him now at Court. My Lady Manchester is also married to Mr. Montague, and having so young a husband she cannot choose but look very briskly. Lord Cavendish is to marry Lord Russell's daughter, and my Lord Bedford's daughter is to marry my Lord Strafford. My Lord Salisbury is become the best husband in the world, and also a good Catholic; I wish I could hear the same good news of you and your Lord, for nobody loves you better."

[P.S.]—My Lord Morden went with four ships to seek for gold, but Narborow would not admit him; the last hath sent home five (?) thousand pound, which will not half pay his charges, but hopes to get much more. I grieve your Duke did not leave ships there when the first (sic) came away; if he had, he had got enough."

GRACE [COUNTESS OF] CLARE to [the DUCHESS OF ALBEMARLE].

1688, May 18, Russel Street.—"Dr. Barwick gave me lately an account of your Grace's having had a fever. . . . I did send a letter * Catherine, Queen Dowager.

† Mary, Queen Consort of James II.

some months since by a gentleman, one Mr. Askem (?) of Lincolshire, that was going to Jamaca; I hope it has reached you; and now this will be presented to your Grace by one Mr. Ogleby, one that was my son Pelham[']s governor, and has been a traveller in several countries, who begs your Grace's and my Lord Duke's * favourable looking upon him, intending to try his fortune in that place. The gentleman is counted an ingenious man, and a good scholar.

"I wish I had any news worth sending, but I hear none but that our two little weddings are very near—my Lord Cavendish to Mrs. Rachel Russel, and my Lady Anne Capele's to my Lord Morpeth, my Lord Carlisle's son. The wedding clothes are bought of both, and next week it's expected will finish both."

[P.S.] "I was desired to mention one Mr. Gilbert, an unconformist minister, that has been under some trouble in that country, that your Grace will speak in his behalf to my Lord Duke."

[MRS. ?] B. STRICKLAND to [the DUCHESS OF ALBEMARLE].

[16]88, May 28, White Hall.—"My dear Lady Duchess did me great justice in believing I should be much pleased to hear of your safe arrival at Jamake, which upon my word I was so much transported at as I could not sleep for joy. . . . I have been hindered from writing to your Grace sooner by misfortunes; first, my having the small pox; next, the death of one of my boys of a fever; and thirdly, the illness of him that has the honour to be your godson. . . . I made your compliment to the Queen, who was extreme glad to hear of your being so well, and ordered me to tell you so, and that she should be glad to hear from you. I also told Lady Sunderland, who I suppose has writ long since to give thanks. I also told Lady Tenet and others that you had them often in your thoughts. I found a great many was very glad to hear your Grace was got so well past that long journey.

"The Queen is now ill of a great cold, and within five weeks of her time, which makes me fear she will hardly get rid of it before then. Lady Pois is now declared governess, and Lady Strickland deputy gov[erness]. The Duchess of Monmouth last night kissed the King and Queen's hands upon her marriage to Lord Cornwellis (sic), and is very brisk. The Duchess of Porthmouth (sic) is come into England, and looks as well as ever. But the greatest piece of news of all is that [the] Queen Dowager has altered her mind, and does not now go her Lisbon voyage, which all people thinks her much in the right for."

[P.S.] "Since your Grace was so obliging as to say you sent some jacolet, I will tell you the truth, that I never had it, but I give as many thanks as if I had it. I wish I could find out by what hand it was sent, because I had told the Queen of it. I am sure, who[m]s[o]ever you trusted, he is an ill man, that has so deceived you. Mr. Strickland presents his most humble service to your Grace, and is infinitely pleased to hear you are so well."

THO. [LORD] PETRE to the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

1688, June 19 (?), Ingatzton Hall.—"I am sorry it was my misfortune not to wait on your Grace just before you left England, I being then in my journey from the Bath. I understand by Mr. Croft and *Tendring, that you have your health very well since your arrival in abroad

nobleme

and Johr

the Duke of Albemarle was appointed Governor of Jamaica in 1687.

Jamaica, for which I heartily rejoice, and hope to see you, in some few months, at New-hall. Captain Petre, Jac Petre of Fidlers his brother, who I suppose has waited on your Grace ere this, desires only your favourable countenance. . . . I do not question, but before this can come to your hands, the whole Island of Jamaica will ring with echoes of joy for the news of the birth of our young Prince."

[P. NICOLAS ?] to ———.

1689, May 3, London.— . . . "J'avois resolu de vous mander des nouvelles de ce pais-ci, mais comme c'est ce qui fait perdre les lettres, je ne vous manderay rien. Je vous diray seulement que le Roy et le Parlement sont toujours de tres bon accord, que le Parlement d'Ecosse est tres faorable, mais que l'Irlande est presque toute au dernier Roy.

"Mr. Portal vous prie de faire rendre vne lettre que vous trouerez ci-incluse; il s'en va en Flandres; la compagnie qui estoit cy-deuant au Duc de Northumberland a esté donnée au Duc d'Ormond. Mylord Monthermer* vous baise les mains. Je voudrais bien sçavoir comment Mr. Popham† prit la nouvelle du changement de qualité de sa femme."

P. NICOLAS (?) to ———.

[1689?].— . . . "Mr. Du Perron espere vne meilleure place. J'amy Sylvestre [Dr. Silvestre?] ne sçait point encore ce qu'il deuiendra. Peut-etre ira-t-il en Irlande. Mylord [Montagu] agit pour luy avec bien de l'ardeur. Vous auez sans doute deja sçeu que Mylord n'est point Secretaire d'etat; il est vray que tout Londres a crû qu'il l'etoit, et apparament il l'auroit esté si le Roy apparament par politique n'auoit trouué apropos de donner cette charge a vn homme qui auoit fait tout ce qu'il auoit peu contre sa Majesté dans le Parlement. Mylord est rentré dans sa charge, et a esté fait du Priué Conseil, mais c'est là tout. On va leuer trois regimens françois; on pretend mettre trois ou quatre capitaines et tout autant de lieutenans dans chaque compagnie."

P. N[ICOLAS ?] to ———.

[1689?].—"Nous sommes a Boughton a l'heure qu'il est, avec le mesme cortège que nous auions autrefois a Windsor. . . . Ce que je ne puis pas eviter de faire c'est de vous apprendre de la part de Mylord qu'il faut apres auoir bien veu Venize vous en retourner a Geneve,‡ afin que Mr. Popham se perfectionne a monter a cheval, a faire des armes, a parler françois, &c. Il est bien heureux a l'heure qu'il est de n'estre point en Angleterre, car comme le Roy va en Irlande, et que tous les jeunes gens de qualité en font le voyage, il ne sçauroit eviter d'y aller. Mylord croit que Mr. Popham fera bien, quand il sera a Geneve, d'acheter des chevaux de selle, plutot que d'auoir vne chaise; cela sied mieux a vn jeune homme qui n'y doit estre que peu de temps, et luy est beaucoup plus comode pour prendre l'air et apprendre a tirer a cheval. Je vous prie de donner la cy-incluse a Mr. Popham, et de * John Montagu, son of Earl Ralph, and afterwards second Duke of Montagu.

† There are several other letters relating to Mr. Popham and his wife, Lady Anne (Montagu).

‡ Note :—tant passer par Turin.

l'accompagner de mes respects. J'ay reçu quelques lettres de Londres aujourd'hui, dans lesquelles on me mande que Mr. Du Perron a épousé la Vermelou; que Madame Catillon est a Londres, et qu'elle s'y porte aussy bien qu'elle le peut faire estant loin de vous et de moy."

[ALEXANDER POPHAM* to the ELECTORS of CHIPPENHAM.]

[1691, Nov.]—"Gentlemen,—I am so much obliged to you for your kindness in choosing me to be your representative in Parliament, that I think myself engaged upon all occasions to do you what service I can; and as there is nothing concerns you so nearly as what members you send to Parliament, I do for your good and advantage recommend and propose to you Major General Talmash,† a person so well known and esteemed of by the whole nation for the share he had in taking Athlone in Ireland, in winning the battle of Aigrim, and reducing Limerick. He has always fought for the Protestant religion, and been a true and faithful servant to King William, and has already served for a Member in Parliament in your own county, for the Corporation of Malmsbury, where [he] had been chosen again had he not been in the wars abroad. He is now every day expected home. In my opinion you cannot choose a worthier person to serve; it is also the opinion of all the gentlemen of the county now in town, who do themselves decline standing, or else I should not have proposed a stranger to you. But taking for granted you will not in any manner think of Sir Basyle Fierbrasse any more, whose election was made void for bribing, and knowing what a prejudice and reflexion it would be upon the Corporation of Chipnam should you choose him again, I have presumed for your service to name this person, who is without exceptions."

Draft, in R. Earl of Montagu's hand, not signed.

[The EARL OF] BATHE to [LORD———].

[16]98, Dec. 6, past 8 at night, St. James's.—"That I might have obeyed your commands in waiting on your Lordship tomorrow, I went as soon as I had dined to the Temple, to speak with Mr. Courtney, whence I am just now returned, but found him gone to a City Feast, and would not come back till late at night." . . . ‡

[RALPH EARL OF] MONTAGU to MR. [MARK] ANTHONY, at Montagu House; London Bag.

[c. 1700,] Sept. 7, Sunday.— . . . "I would have sent me down a Dutch lanthorn of horn upon a great stick, to light before a coach when it is dark; and four other little lanthorns of horn, to go into the cellars and passages when it is windy. You will find them ready done in going to St. Giles on the right hand. For the toyles (sic), I would have them sent hither as soon as they can, either by Anthony Haines or waggons that return, which will be cheapest. Speak to Mr.

* He had been elected M.P. 25 Feb. 1690.

† "Thomas Talmash, esquire," was returned for Chippenham 14 Dec. 1691. "Colonel Thomas Talmash" had been previously returned for Malmsbury, 30 Jan. 1689.

‡ There is a long letter of the same writer dated 28 Dec. [16]98, relating to the affairs of the Monck family, and mentioning Mr. Christopher Monck and Mr. Henry Monck; with two short letters on the same subject.

Acres to send into Holland for ten thousand more plants of alders for this season. Tell George Keene I would have him go to Mr. Bland's, a bird man, on Tower Hill, to enquire what birds and monkeys he has come over of all kind[s]."

FR. B . . . BELAMOUNT [FRANCES LADY BELMONT ?] to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1700 ?] May 14, Hanover.—Touching the death of the Earl's son [Winwood Montagu], at Hanover. Speaks of the previous death of her own son. Ends: "I hope you will content yourself, for I have been fain [to do so ?] that had the greatest loss that ever woman had. The good Electrice [Sophia] has given me great comfort here for many years after all my losses."

P.S.—"I beg your pardon for so blotted a letter, for I write in great haste, just going to Berlin with the Electrice."

PAUL METHUEN to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

1701, [Feb. 26–] March 8, n.s., Lisbon—"My Lord Monthermer is arrived here in perfect health, and has done me the honour to lodge at my house. . . . At his arrival here I found him resolved to spend but little time in Portugal, and to go from hence to France through Spain, in obedience to your Lordship's commands; but I thought it was my duty to represent to his Lordship how imprudent a thing it might be for him to engage himself in Spain or France in so critical a juncture as the present one, and the dangerous consequences of it, if a war should be declared between us and France. . . . He intends to continue here till he . . . sees whether the present differences concerning the succession of the Spanish Monarchy will be amicably composed or no.

[P.S.] "I am honoured with your Lordship's of the 12th January under my Lord Manchester's cover. Your Lordship may be assured that I shall make it my business to serve my Lord Monthermer, but as for counsel or advice, it will be more fitting for me to take it from him than to give it, he being in the opinion of all men here the most accomplished man of his age that has been seen. I shall wait on him to kiss the Queen Dowager's hands tomorrow, and have delivered to Mr. Marc Anthony your Lordship's two letters. I find my Lord Monthermer had no design to come hither, and that his taking this journey was only out of complaisance to Monsieur Falaiseau, whose advice your Lordship has ordered him to follow in all things."

[THE DUKE OF] MARLBOROUGH to LADY MARY CHURCHILL.

1703, April 20.—"My dearest child I hope will see my inclinations of hearing from her by my losing no time in thanking her for that of the 8th. You will lett your Mother know that the Elector Palatin has made me a present of something like a charot, and a sett of fine horses, soe that I have now three sets; if any of them can be of vse to her at the Lodge I shall send her which she pleases, and the charot, that you two may take the aire together, for it holds but two. Let your sister Hariot know that I love her soe well that she must some time write a line or two in your letters.

"MARLBOROUGH."

[THE DUKE OF] M[ARLBOROUGH] to [LADY MARY CHURCHILL].

[c. 1703,] Friday morning.—“I shou’d haue answer’d my dear child’s letter last night, but that I was just going into bed; as soon as I come to town I shall inquier about the vacancy you mention, and if there be any, I shall do my part that it may be dispos’d off as you desire. I am with all my heart

“Yours, M.”

The SAME to [the SAME.]

[c. 1703,] Monday morning.—“Notwithstanding the hapynes I think I shall have of seeing my dear child this evening, I wou’d not but thank her for her kind letter and to assure her, that she shal find me a kind, and loving Papa.

“MARLBOROUGH.”

[LORD] GODOLPHIN to the EARL OF MONTAGU.

[c. 1703,] Wednesday, at 11.—“I can’t possibly have time to wait on your Lordship this morning at the Treasury, but if you do me the honour to dine at my house tomorrow, I hope to satisfy you that what the Queen has commanded in relation to your office* is not particular to that office, but general to all others, and seems to be very necessary to her Majesty’s service, without any prejudice to your Lordship.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[1704,] March 16, Thursday.—“Finding your Lordship so uneasy as you were t’other day at the proposal of exchanging your own life for your son’s in the Great Wardrobe, and the apprehension I had, myself, that there was a possibility (in one case) that it might happen to your prejudice, I have done all I could to procure it, as I hope you will like, the Queen having at last consented that your son shall have the reversion of the Master (sic) of the Great Wardrobe for life, with the same appointments your Lordship now has, reserving only a power to herself, in all other particulars, to appoint such regulations as she may at any time think proper and necessary for her service, in the execution of the office.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1704,] July 23, Windsor.—“So many accidents has (sic) happened to lessen the number of the Ladies of the Bedchamber that I fear I must take my turn, and can’t yet fix my time of going to Althrope, but I hope before the summer is gone to have the honour to see you in Northamptonshire.” . . .

[The DUKE OF] MARLBOROUGH to LADY MARY CHURCHILL.

1704, Aug. 3, Fridberg.—“I have received your kind letter from Althrop, and doe assure you that when ever I haue it in my power, you will be trully satisfied of my loving you dearly: Your being always

---

* He was Master of the Great Wardrobe.

with Lady Marlborough, is the occasion of my not writing, knowing very well that she wou'd give you a constant account of mee; I doe from my heart wish my self with you and L<sup>d</sup> and Lady Sunderland at Althorp, but for some time I must haue patience.

“MARLBOROUGH.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1704,] Oct. 25, Windsor Park.—“I have this day received a letter from Mr. Guydott; he tells me the 28th of November your Lordship intends to finish the settlement of Lord Monthermar's marriage, which will be so near the time of Lord Marlborough's coming, that I hope you will think it reasonable to defer it till the term after, a month or two being of no manner of consequence in such an affair.

“I must not seal this letter without thanking you for a great many favours I have received from your Lordship since I had the honour to see you, and particularly for the little cakes. I thought it a great deal of goodness that you should take notice, and remember what I liked, but I did not care to send you a letter of empty thanks, when I had nothing else to say.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[1704,] Nov. 18, Saturday, Windsor Park.—“Since your Lordship gives me this opportunity I will thank you for the favour of two letters at once. . . . You are extremely obliging to think so much of a poor country person, who is really so dull as to like this sort of life much better than anything I can propose, but I will not be so obstinate as not to come to London in a very short time. . . . I am very sorry to hear Lord Monthermont (sic) has had any accident to make him keep up, especially in his feet, which otherwise I believe he would make a good deal of use of.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1704,] Saturday morning.—“I will take the first opportunity of asking the Queen's pleasure concerning the Maundie (?); I remember last year there was some disputes, and something her Majesty did not like, but I don't know what, 'tis so long since; and as to Mr. Guydott, I am sensible he wants quickening in all business, though he is a very old, and a good friend of mine. I saw him last night, and he told me your lawyer had been with him twice. . . . If you please to order your lawyer to get the Attorney General [Sir Edward Northey] to appoint a meeting, something may be done, for I have given him in writing all the conditions of the marriage that is necessary for him to know at present.

“I hope I shall have the honour of your company at dinner before Lord Marlborough goes, but I am glad yesterday was not appointed, for he invited company that stayed from two a clock till after eight, and I believe the House of Lords are in a way of having hours very uncertain.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the EARL OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1704,] Wednesday.—“Without any manner of compliment I am always glad of the honour of a visit from your Lordship, when I am in the greatest hurry you can imagine, as I am now, and I can only say that I hope to wait upon you this summer, and my Lord Monthermer in Northamptonshire, where Lord Sunderland has made me promise to let Miss Mary go next week, and she is to stay with her sister till I come for her."

The ELECTRESS SOPHIA to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, at London.

1705, April 16, Hanover.—“My Lord,—Je suis fort reconnoissante de la part, que vous voulés bien prendre à la vive douleur que Je ressens pour la perte que J'ai fait de fen la Reine de Prusse, ma chere Fille. Vous ne sauriés en cette funeste occasion me donner des preuves plus sensibles de vôtre affection, qu'en me témoignant d'une maniere si obligeante le chagrin, que vous avés de mon malheur. Vous me ferés cependant la justice de croire, que Je me ferai toujours un veritable plaisir de vous marquer l'estime particuliere avec laquelle Je suis, My Lord, * “Vostre tres obligée a vous servir

“SOPHIE ELECTRICE.

“Je suis bien aise, my Lord, qu'an lieu que vous avez eu lieu de vous affliger avec moy ie me puis reïouir avec vous de l'aantage que la Reyne vous a fait, et du mariage de my Lord vostre fils, que ie souhaite heureux, m'interessant comë ie faits en toutce qui vous regarde.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1705,] May 21, St. Alban's.—“I am glad I did not hear of Lord Monthermer's illness till I had the satisfaction of knowing from your Grace that it is over; but I shall be in some pain till you are so good as to let me know you are well after the operation of your eye.

“For what you say of Lord Sunderland's going to the Emperor, I must give you a great many thanks for concerning yourself in it. I don't know that I can see of any use in that affair, which I believe my Lord Treasurer [Godolphin] can, and will compass, if my Lord Sunderland's friends desire it; and I believe my Lord S. will have as much deference to the opinion of his friends, as my Lord Treasurer will have to them, upon that occasion; but as insignificant as I am, I wish you would try to help me in another project. My Lord Essex being my neighbour, and having very little to do, he has done me the favour to come twice to St. Alban's; I think he has as good a heart as one can wish in any person, and I believe that helps to make his circumstances uneasy, which would be something mended by being Governor of the Tower. I should think a man that is a soldier had a better title to an employment of that nature than my Lord Abingdon, who will never make a campaign but for Jacobit[e] Elections. I have had many letters to condole upon that subject, but I have a great deal of philosophy upon such occasions, though I have been a little vexed at some things I hear has (sic) been reported of me, which I hope you don't believe, for the spirit of lying runs away with more torrys [Tories?] than ever I had the honour to know; but whatever foollys [follies?] you may think I may commit, I hope you will never doubt of my being with all the inclination and respect imaginable,” &c.

* The rest of the letter is in the Electress's own hand.

The ELECTRESS SOPHIA to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, at London.

1705, Oct. 27, Hanover.—“My Lord,—Je vous suis sensiblement obligée de la part, que vous prenez à la perte, que J'ai faite de feu-Monsieur le Duc de Zell, mon Beaufrere, que Je regrette infiniment, ayant perdu en sa personne un veritable Amy. Je ne suis pas moins reconnoissante de la joye, que vous avés du mariage du Prince Electoral, mon Petit fils, ne doutant pas que cette alliance ne soit approuvée par tous ceux, qui s'interessent à l'avancement de la Religion Protestante. Au reste, Monsieur, vous me ferés bien la justice d'être persuadé, que Je suis avec une parfaite estime, My Lord Duc, “Vostre tres affectionee a vous servir,

“SOPHIE ELECTRICE.”

The last line, before the signature, is in her own hand.

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1706?] Feb. 3.—(Second leaf of a letter?) “There is (sic) many solicitors for the Garter, some that pretend promises, and others that think they merit favour from the Queen, who I find is unwilling to disoblige a great many, as her Majesty must do, when she disposés of only one Garter; and therefore she has taken a resolution to keep this till she has more in her power. Knowing the Queen's mind upon this occasion, before I received your Grace's commands, I have not acquainted her Majesty with what you have desired, being in some doubt whether you would have me speak in a thing that seems so remote.”

[DR.] P. SILVESTRE to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, London.

1706, May  $\frac{30}{31}$ , Nimegue.—“Je me donnai l'honneur de vous écrire la semaine passée, et de vous marquer notre arrivée à Nimegue. Nous y avons attendu vainement les passeports que j'avois demandez; et je n'en suis pas surpris. Mylord Duc de Marlborough a bien eu d'autres affaires. Les nouvelles publiques vous auront informé de la glorieuse victoire qu'il a remportée. On pourra bien dire de cette Bataille\* qu'elle aura une longue queue: les françois y perdront tout le Brabant, et presque toute la Flandre. En un mot, on ne peut pas obtenir une victoire plus complete, ni dont les suites puissent être plus avantageuses. Il n'étoit pas possible au Duc de Ma[r]lborough dans la marche prompte et rapide qu'il a faite de songer à faire venir Mylord Monthermer. Cependant, comme il s'ennuye ici, nous partons pour Bergen-op-Zoom. Nous serons là plus à portée pour recevoir les ordres du Duc, et pour aller où il voudra. Mylord Monthermer lui écrit, et j'écris en meme temps à Mr. Cardonnel. Je ne manquerai pas, Mylord, de vous donner avis de la route que nous prendrons. Mylord Monthermer est en parfaite santé.”

THE ELECTRESS SOPHIA to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1706, June 26, Hanover.—“Monsieur,—L'arriuee de my Lord Halifax, dont le merite m'est connu, m'a este dautant plus agreable, qu'apres la lettre de la Reyne et les actes qu'il m'a apporte, il m'a aussi rendu vostre * Ramillies.

obligante lettre, ou l'ay veu la continuation de vostre amitie, dont vous auez desia donne des preuues, en concourant a ce qu'il a plu a sa Maieste de faire tant pour sa sùrté et celle de la nation que pour mon auantage, et sur tout celle de ma maison. Je voudrois vous en pouuoir tesmoigner ma sincere reconnaissance par des seruises, et vous faire voir qu'il n'y a personne qui face plus d'estime de vostre affection que moy, ni qui soit plus veritablement, Monsieur,

“Vostre tres affectionee a vous seruir

“SOPHIE ELECTRICE.”*

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1706,] Aug. 27, Windsor.—“I am sorry your Grace does not think my answer reasonable concerning what was desired for Lord Monthermer; and though what your Grace writes is true, that the title and office was granted upon the account of the marriage, yet the Queen must look upon it as a favour from her, and where there is so many expecting and desiring favours of that kind, her Majesty's circumstances will not allow her to give two great offices in her family to one person.

“I have received the honour of your Grace's letter by Mr. Wind, and before that, had often given the Electress and him assurances of the Queen's intentions to him when an opportunity happened; but as your Grace observes places don't fall every day, nor pensions are not granted every day, but I believe everybody, as well as my Lord Treasurer [Godolphin], are of the opinion that the Queen gives pensions enough already.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1706,] Wednesday, Windsor.—“I have received the honour of your Grace's letter by Lady Monthermer, and I think it so needless to make professions of my inclination to serve your Grace, or to assist my Lord Monthermer, in anything that is in my power, that I will not take up your time upon that subject. I will only say that there is so few employments, and so many to be gratified for the Queen's service, that I can't think of asking the Captain (sic) of the Yeomen of the Guards for my son-in-law, who has (in reversion) one of the best things the Queen has to give, and for his life.”†

[The DUKE OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1706[-7], Feb. 12.—“The Queen hauing reason to think that the Kings of Sweden and Denmark may after the Peace be desirous of hauing the Blew ribon, makes your expedient impracticable. I shall be glad of any occasion in which I may give you demonstration of my being with much truth and respect,

“My Lord,

“Your Grace's most obedient humble servant,

“MARLBOROUGH.”

* This letter is entirely in her own hand.

† A brief note, by the same writer, dated Sunday night, contains nothing important.

[REV.] JEFFREY BARTON to [LADY ANNE POPHAM?].

1706[-7], Feb. 15 and 18, Rushton.—Two long letters about the writer's efforts to withdraw Lord Sandwich from the seclusion in which he was living, "in the power of his servants."

[The DUKE OF] MARLBOROUGH to LADY MONTHERMER.

1708, July 30.—"I am oblig'd to my dear Lady Monthermer for her kind letter of the 8th, and I do with all my heart wish that the success we haue had may haue the effect you propose to your self, for I long extreemly to be at quiet with you, and that I may be no more oblig'd to leave England, for besides the love I haue for my dear children, I grow very old. My service to Lord Month., and believe me kindly

"Yours,
"MARLBOROUGH."

[The DUKE OF] MARLBOROUGH to the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU.

1709, Oct. 7.—"My want of health has hetherto hindered me from thanking you for your congratulations. As I really belieue this month will put an end to this Campagne, I haue a pleasur in thinking itt will not be long before I shall haue the pleasur of being with my dear Lady Montagu; pray lett your Lord know that I am very much his, and at the same time make my excuses for not writing. I am, with all my heart,

"Yours,
"MARLBOROUGH."

[CHARLES LORD] HALIFAX to ———.

1710, Aug. 9, Bushey Park.—"Sir,—I desire you would write to Boughton to Mons<sup>r</sup> Vandermulen to send me an exact account of the cascade, viz., how many feet the water falls, the dimensions of the steps, the breadth of each step, the distance from step to step, and, if he can, to make such a draft of the whole, by a scale, as we may follow the example as far as our ground admits of it.

[P.S.] "If Dr. Silvestre is in town, I wish he would come and see Bush[e]y."

[MISS] DELA (sic) MANLEY * to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1710,] May 29.—Asks his acceptance of a Tragedy, only just printed, though acted in the past winter. Desires pecuniary aid in her misfortunes, an "execution" having seized all her goods.

————— to [GEORGE, ELECTOR OF HANOVER].

[ . . . ] †—"Monseigneur,— . . . Vostre Altesse Electorale sçayt dèsja que le Roy de France a fait assurer la Junte par le Duc d'Harcourt, son Amb<sup>r</sup>, que tout ce qu'il avoit, d'armées de terre, de vaisseaux, de galères, et d'argent, il estoit prest de l'employer pour le service de l'Espagne: que sur la première requisition il envoyeroit d'abord tout ce qu'on luy demanderoit, et que l'Espagne pouvoit disposer du royaume de France, de ses forces et de ses finances, comme luy Roy de France en dispoit.

* MS. note:—De La Rivière Manley, daughter of Sir Roger Manley (&c.).

† 1701 or after.

“Vostre Altesse Electorale a aussi veü dans mes lettres précédentes que la Junte avoit envoyé ordre à l'Electeur de Bavière et au Prince de Vaudemont d'obeïr généralement en tout aux ordres du Roy de France pour ce qui regarde les affaires des Pais Bas Espagnols et du Milanois, comme ils obeïroient aux ordres mesmes du Roy d'Espagne. Il y a dèsja quelques semaines, Monseigneur, que cela s'est fait : voicy ce qui s'est passé depuis peu de jours. Depuis le départ du Duc d'Harcourt le Roy de France a fait offrir à la Junte une escadre de vaisseaux de guerre pour aller au devant de la Flotte d'Espagne qui doit estre presentement à Vera Cruz où à la Havana : cette flotte, à ce qu'on dit, sera tres riche et apportera la valeur de 25 à 30 millions d'écus.

“Le Roy de France a fait plus, Monseigneur. Il a fait demander à la Junte d'envoyer ordre dans tous les Ports de l'obeïssance du Roy d'Espagne aux Indes Occidentales, d'y recevoir tous les vaisseaux françois où marchands où de guerre, et mesme les escadres entières qui se presenteront pour entrer dans ces Ports ; et sur le champ la Junte a dépesché un courrier à Cadix avec ordre de faire partir incessamment deux barques d'avis pour porter dans tous les Ports qui appartiennent au Roy d'Espagne dans les Indes Occidentales l'ordre d'y recevoir les vaisseaux et les escadres de France : à quoy la Junte a ajouté une deffense sous peine de la vie d'y recevoir aucuns vaisseaux Anglois où Hollandois sous quelque prétexte que ce puisse estre, ne fust-ce mesme que pour faire aiguade.

“Mais ce n'est pas tout, Monseigneur. Le Roy de France a fait donner avis à la mesme Junte qu'il estoit bon de penser à mettre leurs places frontières, et principalement leurs ports de mer, en estat de deffense, et leur a offert des ingénieurs pour les fortifier. A peine a-t'on reçu cet avis qu'on a envoyé quelques officiers Espagnols visiter les ports d'Espagne les plus importants ; et je suis fort trompé si le principal desseïn que l'on a n'est de fortifier incessamment Cadix, le Port Mahon dans l'isle de Minorque, et le Port de Gibraltar à l'entrée du Destroit, et de les mettre en estat de recevoir et de mettre en seureté des escadres considérables de vaisseaux de guerre et de galères, et de contenir une forte garnison.

“Si les choses continüent sur ce pied là, Monseigneur, et que le Roy de France vive encore quelques années, il ne luy sera pas difficile de voir pendant sa vie les deux Monarchies réunies, et de s'en voir le Monarque universel. . . . Que deviendra la Religion Protestante ? Et que deviendra le commerce des Anglois et des Hollandois aux Indes Occidentales et au Levant, si le Roy de France a l'entrée libre de tous les Ports des Espagnols aux Indes Occidentales ; et s'il fait fortifier Gibraltar, et y tient une forte garnison avec une bonne escadre de galères et de vaisseaux de guerre ? Si une fois il est en possession de ce port, il ne sera pas difficile de s'emparer de Tanger, sur lequel il y a apparence qu'il a les yeux depuis long-temps. Alors, Monseigneur, le Destroit sera véritablement fermé, et quels efforts et quelles dépenses ne faudra-t'il pas que fassent l'Angleterre et la Hollande où pour l'ouvrir, où en convoys pour leurs vaisseaux marchands !

“Je le dis encore une fois, Monseigneur,—Pleüst à Dieu qu'il y eust en Espagne cinq ou six des Membres de la Chambre des Communes des plus sages et des plus éclairés : car je crains, comme je l'ay dèsja écrit à Vostre Altesse Electorale, les avis intéressez des Commissionaires Anglois et Hollandois en Espagne, et que l'intérest particulier et l'avarice de ces gens là, qui ne regarde que le présent, ne ruinent l'intérest public, et ne donnent de fausses veües aux marchands d'Angleterre & de Hollande.

“Si l'Angleterre et la Hollande, secondez de l'Empereur et de l'Empire, font presentement la guerre, et la font avec vigueur et de la manière qu'il la faut faite selon les conjonctions présentes, cette guerre pourra les dédommager des pertes qu'ils ont faites dans la dernière guerre, et se faire aux dépens de l'Espagne. . . .

“Voilà, Monseigneur, ce que j'ai crû de mon devoir de représenter à Votre Altesse Electorale avant mon départ d'Espagne. . . . Je ne puis pas nier à V. A. E. que je sens avec la dernière sensibilité le malheur que j'ay d'avoir esté forcé de supplier V. A. E. de m'accorder la liberté de me retirer de son service, après l'avoir servi 20 ans avec autant de passion et de fidélité que je l'ay servie.”

No signature or address.

[LIEUT.-GEN.] WM. CADOGAN to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1713, June 4, Francfort.—“I received by the last post the honour of your Grace's letter from Brussels, and am extremely glad to hear you intend coming this way in a little time. As to the reports of my being in the Emperor's service, they are without any foundation, for having quitted the Queen's in order to attend the Duke of Marlborough, the same reason hinders me from entering into another, though I must own the Emperor and the States General made me such advantageous offers as I can never hope for again. I shall write to the Hague for your Grace's tickets and obligations; the occasion of my leaving them there was its being necessary to present them to the Receiver General of the States, when the interest on them was to be received. The enclosed from my Lord Duke will acquaint your Grace that he designs going for a few days to Mondtheim. . . .

[P.S.] “I beg your Grace to assure Honeywood of my most humble services.”

[DEAN] JONATHAN SWIFT to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1713, July 31, “your style.”— . . . “I hear there is but one thousand pounds between you and Sir Cesar; for God's sake, Doctor, don't lose so fair an opportunity.

“I saw the other day Lord Hintchingbrook, who is grown a strenuous Tory, and, besides that he is sure of being chosen for the Town of Huntingdon, stands fair, as he told me, to fling out Sir Matt. Dudley; but the last I don't believe, for his father has but little interest in the county.

“What does your Doctorship think of the Address of both Houses against the Pretender? That confusion may light on all such as have any such designs is the hearty wish of, Reverend Doctor, your most obedient,” (&c.)

[DEAN] JONATHAN SWIFT to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1713,] Aug. 12, “your style.”—“I received the honour of your Grace's last letter, dated the 15th July; to the two queries you put to me I return this answer. Mr. Morgan of Kingstrove is a friend, and was, as I am informed, put out of the commission of Justice for being so. As for the other, I was at Hemmington according to your order, and found no mansion-house there, and was informed it had been pulled down about 30 years before. . . .

“I have been threatened to be called to an account because I did not keep the Thanksgiving Day for the Peace in the Church; but I don't hear any more of it.

“There is Lady St. John's at Woodford, whose family always used to have the favour of venison from your Grace. I humbly conceive it would not be amiss if your Grace gave a warrant to 'em; they are very well intentioned, and by the accession of my Lord Bullingbroke's estate have a good interest both in Northamptonshire and Bedfordshire.

“I don't know whether your Grace has any thoughts of buying Newton, but my Lord Bathurst, one of the worthy twelve Lords, is about it, and very near buying it, who, by his party, by his character, and by some words that he said when he was here, will I doubt prove a very ill neighbour.”

[DEAN] JONATHAN SWIFT to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1713, Oct. 1, “your style.”—“Reverend Doctor,— . . . The election for Huntingdonshire went as well as heart could wish. I went on purpose to appear for Sir Matthew [Dudley], only as a faggot, for I had no vote, but that he might seem a little orthodox, for he had but very few of the Clergy. It was a pretty great struggle. Even Jeff Barton, who always was so staunch before, and to whom I had told your intentions, wavered on this occasion, and made interest for my Lord Hintchinbrook, who lost it nevertheless by a great majority. It has also gone mighty well in Rutland, where two right Lords are chosen.”

[STATEMENT by the DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.]

1714, Dec. 18.—“The enclosed Bill is the only one that the Duke of Mountague ever paid to the Duchess of Marlborough, which will appear by his accounts and her acquittance for that sum. After that time the Duchess of Marlborough laid out by his Grace's directions the sum of 2297*l.* 11*s.* 0*d.*; and the money being borrowed out of the Privy Purse, at the Duchess of Marlborough's being put out of her places, her Majesty desired, upon signing her accounts, that she would give a note that if ever she received this money from the Great Wardrobe, that she would repay it to the Privy Purse. And this note being still out against the Duchess of Marlborough, my Lord Hallifax has thought fit to stop the money (which is due only to her) from the Treasury. Upon this account it is therefore necessary that his Grace the Duke of Mountague should pay this debt from the Great Wardrobe to the Duchess of Marlborough, for which he may have a particular account, and all the vouchers now in the Duchess of Marlborough's hands. But if that is not convenient, it will be the same thing to her if he signifies by any paper in the way that is proper, that in the whole time of her nine years' service she never had but this Bill of 433*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* paid from the Great Wardrobe, the 3rd of July 1703; which will make it very difficult for my Lord Hallifax to give her any further trouble upon this account; the whole sum upon that article of point and lace, and work done by the sempstress, being for the whole nine years but 2730*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.*

“This the Duchess of Marlborough ordered to be put in writing to prevent any mistake in a message, and desires that his Grace the Duke of Mountague would order what is desired some time today.”

Enclosed :

“A copy of the Bill for Lace for her Majesty, which the late Duke of Montagu desired the Duchess of Montagu to buy for him January 1703<sup>3</sup>.

	£	s.	d.
For a fine head-dress, agreed for 400 franks at 11 franks per pound, or 20s. English -	36	1	3
For another ditto, agreed for 250 franks -	22	11	9
For another ditto, agreed for 650 franks -	58	13	0
For another ditto, at 900 franks -	81	3	2
For six Dutch ells of fine Lace, at 48 franks per ell - - - - -	25	19	8
For five Dutch ells of Lace, at 33 franks per ell - - - - -	14	17	6
For ten Dutch ells and $\frac{1}{4}$ of fine Lace, at 120 franks per ell - - - - -	110	17	5
For ten Dutch ells and $\frac{1}{4}$ of fine Lace, at 90 franks per ell - - - - -	83	3	8
	<hr/>	<hr/>	<hr/>
	433	7	5

This money was returned by a bill that my Lady Duchess had from the late Duke of Montagu, July the 3rd 1703.”

[The COUNTESS OF SUNDERLAND] to her sister [the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU].

[1714].—“My dear sister M. knows by this time how miserable I am in Lord Sunderland’s having a place * that will hurt his circumstances, and give me the fatigue of being mistress of a Court when my heart is too heavy. I think myself not fit to be a spectator in one, and the most (sic) to take me from the only friend I have, your dear self. Lord Townshend being Secretary takes the man Lord Spencer used to be with at Hempstead to his office, so that I am to go into another country, and have nowhere to trust him. Forgive me troubling you with all this, but I am overcome with the spleen, and I find a little ease in complaining. I shall be in town next Saturday. I am ever yours most tenderly.

“Wednesday.—I believe God Almighty could hardly find 3 honest men to save this country, as there was in Sodom.”

[The EARL OF] SUNDERLAND to the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU.

1716, July 31, London.—“A thousand million of thanks, my dear Duchess of Montagu, for your kind letter from the Spaw, with the good news of yours (sic) and the Duke of Montagu’s being come safe thither. I can assure you it’s the only pleasure and satisfaction I have had since my misfortune. I am sorry the place is so bad and inconvenient, but I really believe the waters will do you good, and if you find benefit by them, you should continue them for a good while. I fancy those of Aix will do me good; but what will do me much more so, will be the happiness of seeing you; for there’s none now left in this world that I love so well, and wish so much prosperity to. I hear you went very quick through all the towns of Flanders, but since you like them, I think, when you come back, you should give yourself the pleasure of seeing them, for they are certainly very well worth it.

* Lord Sunderland was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1714, but did not go over.

“I hear from the Bath that Lord Marlborough mends every day, which gives me great hopes that he will be as well as ever he was. I intend the end of this week to go thither for one day, to see him, before I go over. I have been once to make my leg at your great family at Hampton Court. I thought everybody seemed to be much out of humour. Whatever inconveniences you have at Spaw, you are better there than standing and carving at a table every day, for they eat constantly in public. I shall set out from hence the 16th of August; sooner I can't, because I must expect the form of the signification of the King's pleasure, from Hanover, in relation to the Commission to execute the office during my absence. I shall think every day an age till I am gone, and till I see you.

[P.S.] “I beg my compliments to the Duke of Montagu. I don't know whether he drinks the waters, but I fancy they would [do] him good.”

PRINCESS CAROLINE [OF WALES] to the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU.

1716, Aug. 1st, Hampton Court.—“J'ay veu avec beaucoup de plaisir, ma chere Duchesse, par votre obligeante lettre, votre heureuse arivez a Spahè; j'espere que les aux vous feront du bien, et que c'este belle santé retournera ché vous; je voulderais, Madame, que vous puisée trouvez autant d'agrement ché moy, que je trouvez du plaisir a esttre avec vous. Nous soñe tres agreablement, et tranquillement icy; milyedy Godolphien a reveillè notre lestargiè par le jeu du hasard, ou j'ay gangé a mon ordinaire. Je me fladè que l'esprit de Madame votre mere reposè sur moy, et que je devinderais ausy victorieuse qu'elle seulment aufaict de jeu. Je ne vous ferais pas vne repetition d'une chose, que je me fladè que vous savéz, qui est que lon ne vous peut estimer plus que la fait “CAROLINE.

“Milord Duc, trouvez mes compliment.”

Addressed: Pour Madame la Duchesse de Montecu, à Spahe.

Holograph, in a very cursive hand.

[THE EARL OF] SUNDERLAND to the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU.

1716, Sept. [9-]19, n. s., Saturday night, 10 o'clock, Liege.—
 . . . “Let me know how long you stay at Spaa, for I will go thither from Aix as soon as possible to see you, for it's the only satisfaction I propose to myself in these parts, or anywhere else. I never was more concerned than at my being detained by business in England a week longer than I designed.” . . .

J. C. to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU]. “No. 7.”

1716, Sept. [10-]20, n.s., Sunday, Paris.— . . . “I will acquaint you moreover, in matter of politics, that you may soon expect to see a treaty between this Court, ours, and the Dutch, with a guarantee of both successions, but we shall not sign it till the Pretender is on t'other side the Alps. Sir Samuel Garth went from hence yesterday, having promised my Lord Bolinbroke by many solemn oaths that he will return next spring and wait on his Lordship to Italy. He asked me, last time I received my letters from London, 'Pray, Sir, do they say anything how my boy does?' 'Pray, Doctor, who's your boy?' 'Sir, my grandson, my daughter's son, Master Boyle (?); your letters don't mention him; before God, Sir, I am in great pain for him.'

"We have an account that Lord Wharton is returning; he has purchased a young bear, that he brings behind the coach. . . . I have seen another epistle of his which was forwarded yesterday to Lord Trevor, whom he does not know, telling his Lordship that, being married at his father's death, his father could not appoint him guardians, and that he understands that by law he may choose new ones. If he can, he names his Lordship, saying those he has cheat him because he differs with them in principle, which he hopes will not be an objection to him from his Lordship.

"My Lady Warkick [Warwick?] with her son and husband stay here but a fortnight, which makes 'em run about all day, and which has made me have a great deal of business, and prevented me from having the honour to attend but at dinner and supper. At Lords Sunderland and Cadogan's departure I understand a certain person was so frightened at what their errand might be, and at the prospect of another person's speedy return, as to be very civil to them. I suppose your Grace will have seen one if not both those peers, and then I imagine you know much more on these subjects than I can pretend to tell you; if you do, it is not fair to keep it to yourself. Pray when do you repair to Aix la Chapelle? I hear Sir David Calruple is there. . . .

"The Duke of Chartres, only son to the Regent, is taken ill of the small pox, which is very common and dangerous here, but they say he will do well; they send him no physicians, but an old Jesuit, who is used to nurse people in that distemper. One of his daughters took to a nunnery two days ago; I should as little have suspected her of that inclination as O'Hara."

[The EARL OF] SUNDERLAND to the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU.

1716, Sept. [12-] 22, n.s., Tuesday, Aix la Chapelle.— . . . "I came hither last night, and am in Dr. Oliva's house, which I have taken all to myself, and am very glad I have done so, because I don't fill half of it, so that there will be room for you and the Duke of Mountague and your people, and, by what I hear, as well if not better than in any other house of this place. I wish it were as clean as what you are used to, and should have, but since you have been at Spaa, I fear you find that can't be had in these countries." . . . *

— to —.

1716, Sept. 13.—"However this letter comes to your hands, you are not to be surprised, since it will not be sent, unless such measures are taken as may render the conveyance of it secure. A common friend of yours and mine, who arrived some time ago in this country [France], gave me hopes of seeing you here. In the first heat I flattered myself with so pleasing an expectation; but when I reflected on your past and present circumstances I began to despair, and yet, dear Willy, it would be of the utmost importance to you, to our friends, and to our country too, if I could have an hour's conversation with you, and make you feel in discourse what must be very imperfectly and very faintly represented in a letter. Depend on what I say to you, my dearest friend, nothing can be so desperate as the circumstances of affairs, nothing so miserable as the characters, nothing so weak as the measures, and whoever represents things in another light is guilty either of gross ignorance or of scandalous artifice. . . .

* There are two other undated letters from the Earl to the Duchess.

"I send you no news from these parts; public papers communicate public occurrences; I will however mention two observations, which I make, and which you will apply. The people who belong to St. Germain's and Avignon* were never more sanguine in appearance, and yet the King of Sweden is oppressed, and the Regent [Orleans] will undoubtedly throw himself à corps perdu into the King of England's interest. . . .

"Some things which I writ over, and which were by no means proper to rebound back hither, did however do so. You will easily guess this not to be very proper, perhaps not very safe for me. This letter comes to you sealed with an head, and will go under our friend Jemmy's cover."

"Copy" is written at the top.

C. [COUNTESS OF] WARWICK to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1717,] July 22, Bilson.—"I am surprised to find since I came to this place that by your Grace's steward's orders the flags, &c., have been cut on this side the river, and [he?] will go on with it, notwithstanding your Grace's own proposal that that affair should be adjusted in an amicable manner; and was in hopes it would have been long ago decided. I beg your Grace will no longer delay naming the time, for I am loath to do anything to oppose your Grace, and yet can't give up what I find has never been before disputed either with Mr. Addison † or Mr. Boughton, who[m] he bought the estate of. Capt. Addison by my orders has writ this post to Mr. Booth more fully upon this subject. I am ashamed of giving your Grace or myself so much trouble about such a trifle.

[P.S.] "I hope your Grace will do me the favour to send me an answer by the bearer."

W. DIXWELL to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1717, Aug. 26, Bo[ugh]ton.—"Hearing that my friends in London want a picture of the late Lord John Coventrey, my father had the honour to be known and obliged to his Lordship, and my Lord was pleased to give him his picture, which picture I have, and value it very much as a particular friend of my father's, yet I can't let my very good friends want anything that is in my power to serve them in. My kind neighbours had a design to break into my house and cut the picture all to pieces. I took the picture down, and kept it in my closet for some time to preserve it. I sent two servants to guard the picture last Wednesday, the 21st of this instant August, to John Osborn, a carrier that goes by near my house, for I heard twice that my kind neighbours had a design to meet one servant and bore two holes through the cases and picture; but John Osborn would not carry the picture at no terms nor price. I don't think it was his own doings, for why should a man refuse loading when that is his livelihood; he must be hired by some neighbour not to carry the picture. This can be nothing but malice and spite to my friends as well as to me, for 'tis impossible that the picture can do them any damage. I have sent this day by Tho. Peatling, Lutterworth carrier, Lord Coventrey's picture directed for your Grace, which I beg your Grace will be pleased to accept, and pardon this boldness from your Grace's dutiful humble servant.

* The Pretender was ordered by the Regent to quit Avignon, in Feb. 1717.

† Joseph Addison married the Countess in 1716.

[P.S.] "I beg my humble duty to my Lady Duchess. Boton, 26 Aug. 1717. At the Ram in Smithfield next Wednesday evening."

[Dr.] WILLIAM DERHAM to ———.

1717, Oct. 28, C.—"Honoured Sir,—I am sorry my tackle was not ready when you would have favoured me with your company: it is now ready, and shall be at yours and my Lord Duke of Montague's service whenever you please; but the misfortune is, that some of the best views are not to be had but in the morning early, viz. Jupiter and Saturn and their satellites. The Moon indeed will afford a diverting spectacle in the evening for some time; and Mars and Venus are then to be seen, but scarce worth it. So that in the evenings few of the rarer prospects are to be expected, except the Milky Way, and some nebuloe and double stars may afford a diversion: also there are spots on the Sun, which will continue for five or six days. . . .

"I forgot to tell you that I shall stay here about three quarters of an (sic) year. The spots on the Sun may be seen any part of a clear day."

MOHAMMAD BENALI ABGALI to the DUKE OF MONTAGUE.

[1717,]* "le 10 du mois sacré de Dulhaggia, l'année 1129."—Wrote to him from Gibraltar, and charged Mr. Russel to present the letter. Is still there. Mr. Russel, having failed to obtain the employment destined for him, worth 50*l.* a year, has been obliged to return to England. Asks the Duke to obtain something of equal value for him. Alhagge Abdassalam and the noble Mohammad Arrathuth have died before arriving in their country.

French.

HASH ALLEY UXAM to "the ALCAIDE," ALLY BEN ABDALLA.

[ ].— . . . "After I took the prizes I sent, viz., one Dutch and another English vessel, which I heard arrived safely, nineteen days after my leaving Tahardart, I met this ship about Faro, I being in the offing, and she in with the shore. I made towards her to see what ship she was, and found her to be a man-of-war; whereupon I made the best of my way from her, but she followed me close, and the great winds and seas did so favour her that she came near me enough, first to fire several shot into me, and soon after run aboard me, breaking my foremast and foretopmast, taking possession of my ship." Prays the Alcaide to release him, either by giving Christians for him or otherwise, he being in country of the Alcaide, whom he beseeches God to preserve in the good favour of King Muley Ismael.

"There are with me still ten slaves, who remember themselves kindly to you; one of them is an old man called Possain a Ben-Serat, who is not worth ten pieces of  $\frac{8}{s}$ ."

* Qu.; see letter of 28 May 1727.

JA[MES] CRAGGS * to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1718, July 8.—“I have this moment received the honour of your Grace’s letter, wherein you are pleased to propose that I shall have the Estate in Kent for 14,400*l.*, and the timber to be valued. I do humbly accept of your Grace’s proposal.”

“THE CAPTAIN” to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1719, Nov. 7.—“Your Grace’s recovery gives great joy in the part of the world this comes from. I think it proper to acquaint you that a parson of Northamptonshire (shrewdly suspected to be your Grace’s chaplain) is looked upon to be the purloiner of the thigh-bone of the famous skeleton. I presumed to inform you of this, that the gentleman may take the opportunity of the time limited to prevent the punishment impending, provided the bone is not returned to the proprietor; it being possible he hath not seen the Evening Post of Saturday fortnight last, or mist (?) of this day, which to be sure if come to your Grace’s hands will be transmitted to him, but if not seen by you, this will refer you to the proper papers to see it.”

[Signed:] THE CAPTAIN.

“P.S. The author of the St. James’s Evening Post refused to publish it, having lately paid a great sum for inserting something relating to a clergyman.”

[THE EARL OF] SUNDERLAND to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1719–20, Feb. 1, Monday.—“In obedience to your commands, and to Mr. O’Hara’s desire, I have spoke to the King about his being purchaser of the troop of Guards; his answer was, that he had a very good opinion of Colonel O’Hara, but that the troops of Guards must always be given to or allowed to be purchased by men of the first rank in England, or general officers of the oldest and longest service. I will only add, that I beg you to believe, and I hope Mr. O’Hara will do so too, that nobody would be gladder to serve him than I.”

S. [DUCHESS OF] MARLBOROUGH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1720, Nov. 22.—“I have been applied to from a woman in great distress to speak to your Grace. . . . Mrs. Lawson, who is gone from France to Brussels, has lost half that little she had by the paper money, and so many merchants breaking, she is apprehensive of putting what your Grace pays her into anybody’s hands till she can find one that she thinks she is safe in. . . . I am sure you will thank me for making use of another hand (my eyes being sore) to give you this account.”

Signed.

[THE DUKE OF MONTAGU] to LORD——.

[c. 1720 ?]—“I have the honour of your Lordship’s, and shall with pleasure obey your commands in doing Mr.—— what service I can, but as we have already four play-houses and two operas, which are starving each other, I can't see that his coming over, at least for this year, will answer his ends at all. The trees your Lordship sent me prove very fine ones. The Duchess of Montagu returns her compliments, and your good opinion of Lord Cardigan is a particular pleasure both to her and your Lordship's, &c."

* The Postmaster-General, father of James Craggs, one of the Secretaries of State. (MS. note.)

Copy.

MARGARETA RILEY to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1720 ?] April 18.—Excuses her failure in singing a "poor ballad strain" not adapted to her voice. "I've done myself injustice, my Lord, not knowing the mould of the undertaker, and his performers are as abject as I fear his head is wrong, which makes me now decline any longer herding amongst such a fraternity. But had I the honour of being heard by your Grace in Italian or good English music, with proper accompaniment, perhaps this plain nature (which yet only badly has appeared) might then show it has been cultivated. Johnson has treated me ill, my Lord; I never heard a sound of his trifling songs till Monday se'nnight last; he never wrote out a note of them for me, though I often asked it, not being accustomed to learn by ear; and since that, all the practice I ever had with him on my part was not altogether one hour and half, I can solemnly affirm; so that, my Lord, the emptiness of his songs, and the wildness of his management therein, will, I trust, mitigate all unkind censure from your Grace, and from the other noblemen seated in the same box."

[JOHN DUKE OF] MONTAGU to the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU.

[c. 1720 ?]—"Bijou,—Here is [are] the pictures of the women as they go dressed in this country. Now that Mother Spanhem is to be married, pray show them her, that she may have such for her wedding clothes. They wear four pinnars with great ribbons between, and eight lappets hanging down behind, and prodigious high, so that there is as far from their face to the top of their head-clothes as from their face to their feet, with their mantoes stuck out behind, as you see in the picture, which is not half so bad as the original. As for the night-clothes, you can't see a bit of their face. Show the pictures to Lady Marlborough, for I believe she will like them. . . .

[P.S.] "Tell Hopy not to forget to give Lord Villars 3 doz. of Spaw water."

Two pencil sketches are appended.

[MARY DUCHESS OF MONTAGU] to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

[c. 1720 ?] May 28, [Paris].—"I was in hopes I should have heard from you by this time; I want to know how you do; and if you have settled the family, I desire, when my money is paid, that you will let me know before you send it. I have been here but three or four days, and I begin to be tired, but I hope it will mend, for I have seen nothing yet but people that I think very disagreeable.

"The Duke of Berwick says he will carry us to see some of the fine places soon, and I wish he would begin. His Duchess looks like a very ill-humoured woman, and I think not better bred than we are in England. I made myself as French as I could the moment I came, but they wear such loads of red, and powder, that it is impossible for me to come up to that, so I believe I might as well have done nothing.

It is really true that if you would put a piece of scarlet cloth upon the whole side of your face, it would be exactly as they are. Then their hair is as short and as much curled as Cab's, powdered as white as snow, with a yellow coarse flourished gauze, ruffled round their head; and in this manner they sit and talk all at a time, of the beauty of their dress; indeed, I believe they are the most ridiculous people in the world.

"I had writ thus far just as your letter came in, which I give you a thousand thanks for, and upon my word it is the first pleasure I have had since I came here. I am sorry the inward man is so bad; I wish to God that, and the case to it, was with me, though I think I could not mend it, but the air might. There is no smoke here, which, coming from London, I thought very odd, in so great a town; but altogether, I am not much pleased.

"I want to know if the Duke of Berwick is reckoned to have a great deal of sense. I long to know how you come off with the Ministers; I can't think they will do anything if they have not before the King goes. Cab is mightily mistaken about Goldstone, for it was really impossible for him to go, but you know, when he cries, I am such a fool that I never know what I say. I hope next time I write I shall have more to tell you, and I beg I may hear from you when you can: I fancy I shall be here a fortnight still before I can have seen what I have a mind to. I am now going to bed, tired to death, only of myself, for I have done nothing to make me so; I wish you could never feel that."

[MARY DUCHESS OF MONTAGU to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.]

[c. 1720 ?] June 7, o.s., [Paris].—"I have had but one letter from you since I have been here. I hope you are well, and should be very glad to hear it. I have not been well, but they tell me it is the water here that makes everybody sick at first. I shall not drink much more of it, for I am sadly tired of this place; but everybody here tells me that we shall be killed if we go to Mompe.* this weather; so I design to go to Bloy, and thereabouts, till I may go on. I hope I may get my money which is here, soon, but if that can't be, I beg you will answer a bill I shall send you for a hundred and fifty pounds, or more if I should want it. I hope by this time you may have money of mine, or that you will soon.

"I have seen nothing yet to tell you of, for the Duke of Berwick engaged us mighty graciously at first, to go with him to see all the King's houses, and from that time to this has put us off from day to day. I saw the King two days ago, when he went to hunt; he is very handsome, but so ill bred, that it looks almost ill-natured. They would fain have had him bowed to us, and he would not, though we were quite close to him. I think I have bought the prettiest nightgown for you that is possible. I hope you will like it, but I beg I may know exactly. My Lady Waldegrave is to bring it, she says in a week."

REV. JEFFREY BARTON to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, at his house in London.

[1721,] July 8.— . . . "Mayn't we hope now to see your Grace for three or four days at Boughton, a little to refresh yourself after this long Sessions? The danger will be less in sailing upon that Canal this year, than I fear it was in dabbling in the S. Sea last year. A terrible tempest (God wot) has fallen there, and whatever becomes of the passengers or freighters, the pilots to be sure are all wrecked. I must own that I am one of those pitiful fools that are sorry for their misfortune, yet not so much for their sakes as for my country's; for if we make it practicable to take away men's fortunes without an equal hearing and a jury of their peers, good night for ever to property and liberty. We may boast what we please of privileges and securities, but tyranny is [tyran]ny, let it be practised by a single person or 600. And these poor men could not have suffered more arbitrarily from the absolute power of France and Turkey than they have from the mild and mixt Government of——" (blank).

* Montpelier? See p. 374.

A[ARON] HILL to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1721-2, Jan. 20, Westminster.—“I find myself obliged to trouble your Grace with a line or two, on occasion of the new Theatre, in the Haymarket, which Colonel Horsey and some other gentlemen, concerned with me, design to open next week, for acting English Tragedy; a company of new actors being formed, new scenes, clothes, and all proper provisions made, for that purpose.

“Before the Frenchmen came over, I made an absolute agreement with Mr. Potter for the House, and undertook to pay him 540*l.* for two seasons. And when he first talked with me of the French Actors' design to come over, I consented, on condition they should act there but ten nights, and take all those nights within the month of November. Now, they came not only much later than they agreed, but have greatly exceeded their number of nights already. And the English company being now ready for opening, I have warned them that they can have liberty to act at that House no longer than Tuesday next. But they may certainly get permission to act two or three times a week at the Opera House; and, if the rent must be greater, the House will hold more company in proportion.

“I should not have given your Grace any trouble on this subject, but that the Frenchmen take the liberty of using your name as their chief encourager and patron. I know your Grace's charity is very extensive, but you will suffer it, I am sure, to be bounded by your justice. Your Grace can only tell 'em, that the landlord had let the House to me before their arrival in England; and a word of yours to recommend 'em to the Opera House will undoubtedly procure 'em admission in a Theatre where they may be every way more advantageously posted.

“However, as my bargain with Mr. Potter freed your Grace from any danger of his claim, I will promise myself, at least, that you will wish as well to our interest as to the Frenchmen's, and do us the honour to let us rather hope for your favour than apprehend your opposition.”

A[ARON] HILL to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1721-2, Jan. 21.—“I am sorry, my Lord, to discern, by the turn of your Grace's letter, that there is some very great mistake, which, from a person of your goodnature, humanity, and love of justice, could occasion me a treatment so undeserved, I am sure, by the unusual honour and respect I have found myself inclined to bear you, above all noblemen living.

“I writ to you in mere respect, because the French used your name. I was far from even supposing it true that you knew anything of them—much less that they were your servants. And so little did I dream that the House itself was your Grace's, that in my covenant with Potter I agreed that all the rent which the French Players should pay till I was ready to open, and what he should weekly receive afterwards from me, should be, so much from week to week, in discharge of a sum which he told me you had promised to see paid, if the old French Company did not pay it. And this I did out of mere regard to your Grace's interest, on his showing me a letter which you sent him, two or three months ago, from Black-heath, in answer to some demand about that money, wherein you observe to him, that you think yourself not obliged to make payment of that deficiency which the French left till after expiration of the three years it was to have been paid in; and that in the meantime, whatever he might make by establishing some company of English Actors there, or by Balls, Concerts, or the like, ought to be off-reckoned: besides 50*l.* which you tell him he had formerly computed some old French scenes at.

"When your Grace has weighed this with your natural impartiality, I may fairly leave it to your decision whether I had not reason to suppose that such a bargain as I then made with Potter, and as I have above repeated, would be effectually doing a service to your Grace, instead of disobliging you.

"All I know of the matter is what I here set out to your Grace, and I will prove it, on an hour's warning, under Potter's hand, and by obliging him to produce that letter of your Grace's, whenever you please to require it. If there is anything in Potter's proceedings, dark or not known to me, I call on your Grace's justice to do me but common right, and distinguish between us.

"Again, therefore, I most earnestly entreat your Grace to reflect on the resolution you are taking to refuse me admission to the House, after a very great expense of money and time for making and painting entire new sets of scenes, and clothes, all which are now ready, as also in getting together an entire new company of actors, fit for Tragedy, most of whom, as well the men as the women, are persons of some character and distinction, and at least a better company than either of the old ones. We are now ready for opening, and it is a daily and intolerable loss which I am kept at, unless your Grace shall be so good as to change your resolution. For, whatever right the law may give me, I know not; but I am sure I shall never put that to the trial, if I must have your Grace for my enemy.

"I wish for no abler nor juster umpire than yourself, and offer either of these ways to your Grace's determination. Let the French Players agree for the Opera House, and if their rent is too heavy, I will pay part for them, to make it the easier. Or, rather than do anything to disoblige your Grace, since you own yourself their patron, I would content myself to play two days a week during Lent, and they the other two; and three days a week out of Lent, and they the other three; and so your Grace will be discharged so much sooner.

"I hope I have convinced your Grace that you have greatly mistaken me. I beg the honour of a line from your Grace, and that you would order whom I should meet with, to agree as above between the French and me. The impatience I am under while your Grace conceives me wrong will excuse the length of this letter."

A[ARON] HILL to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1721-2, Jan. 24.—"I have the honour of your Grace's letter, with no small amazement at the facts it informs me of. I must acknowledge that you have done nothing for support of the poor Frenchmen but what your honour and your charity obliged you to. All I could wish to have been otherwise is, that my reputation had stood so well in your Grace's opinion as to have merited this notice before you took these measures, which have made much noise in Town, and which I should then have made unnecessary.

"I need not give your Grace the trouble of any other answer to the particulars which relate to Potter than to beg that you would read his enclosed answer to a letter I sent him not ten days ago, upon a hint I had that the French Players had made an absolute agreement with him. Your Grace will please to send me back his letter when you have perused it.

"I will try, in respect to your Grace's hint, what I can do as to the Opera House for my company, though their voices will be no small sufferers by the exchange. But it will take up time, and we were ready for opening. And besides, my scenes for the first Play, being made for your Grace's House, will not fit the other; and they are all new, and very expensive, and done after a model perfectly out of the general road of scenery.

"Your Grace will be so good to think of these things, and permit at least that my company should act twice a week (during Lent and afterwards) if I fail to get permission in the other House. This can be no disadvantage to the French Players, for they cannot play on Opera nights, and those will be the only nights my company will play on. As to our not agreeing, your Grace need fear nothing of that; we shall know each other's days, and always leave the House then free, and unmixed with one another; and when your Grace shall acquaint them how Potter's double dealing has been the occasion of all this, they will no longer mistake me for an enemy. I will take particular care that they are used with all possible civility; and a hint from your Grace that they behave in like manner will prevent all occasion of uneasiness, and we shall all be well satisfied.

"I will not trouble your Grace with any more, than to desire you to weigh, with your usual justice, what a damage I must sustain if you refuse this proposal, and how impossible it is that the French Players should suffer anything by it. I will not promise myself much from the honour of your Grace's good opinion, though I shall deserve it, I hope, in time. But from your humanity, and love of reason, I cannot fear your favourable answer to this last, earnest, entreaty."

M. PROCASE (?) to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1722, May 17, Thursday.—"Votre grandeur sçait les tristes raisons qui m'empêchent d'aller vous faire ma cour; ainsi j'espere qu'elle me pardonnera la liberté que je prends de vous écrire pour vous rendre compte de ce qui sest passé entre Gillier et Potter.

"Le chat est toujours chat. Potter n'a point changé; il est à son ordinaire ce qu'on appelle a cunning rogue, et Gilher et moy meritons bien le surnom de fools: nous auons été attrapés comme deux nigauts. Uendredy dernier, selon l'auiis de notre conseiller, Gillier se preparoit à entrer dans uotre maison de Hay Market, qui se trouuoit ouuerte à cause du concert, pour mettre en execution la permission que vous luy aués donnée. Potter, qui craignoit eet accident, songea à le parer par un tour de maitre goning (sic); il envoya son garçon, qui avec un air de sincerité promit de la part de son maitre a Gillier de luy liurer le lendemain matin tous les effets de Grimberge. Gillier donna dans le panneau, et moy aussy. Les gens de bonne foy sont souuent dupes. Nous crusmes qu'il ne falloit point user de violence lorsqu'on pouuoit agir par douceur; mais quand le danger fut passé, Potter mit bas le masque. Il dit qu'il estoit prest d'accomplir sa promesse à condition que Gillier luy donneroit d'auance 42 guinées. Depuis ce temps là il a eu grand soin de tenir la porte bien fermée.

"Les gens de loy sont d'opinion que votre Grandeur enuoye à Potter ordre de uous remettre les clefs de la maison; elle vous appartient, et Pctter n'en est presentement que le geolier. Voila la grace que nous demande le pauvre Gillier; il ose l'esperer de uotre justice et de uotre charité.

"Madame la Duchesse de Shroesbury est tres mal, et je n'ay aucune esperance."

GILBERT KNOWLES to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1722, Sept. 8, York.—"Your Grace having done the Physicians the honour to be incorporated into their Society, I make bold to acquaint your Grace that a book of mine, entitled Materia Medica Botanica, is all printed off at London, excepting three sheets, upon a very superfine Royal paper, and in a most beautiful Elzevirian character. If your Grace or any of your acquaintance are inclined to subscribe, the subscription money is a guinea. The whole work consists of nigh fifty sheets of paper; 'tis in 4°, and of 8000 Latin hexameters. Your Grace may have the proposals at Mr. Valiant's in the Strand, Mr. Woodman's in Covent Garden, Mr. Daniel Brown's within Temple-bar, Mr. Innys's in Paul Church-yard, Mr. George Strahan's in Cornhill. . . .

[P.S.] "The Duchess of Ma[r]borough's great præmium has tempted me to write the Duke's epitaph; 'tis as follows.

"Hic jacet in cinerem resolutus Maximus Heros,
Orbis amor, terrorque idem. Victricia signa
Quæcunque in vacuo luserunt aere. Cæptis
Affuit adjutrix semper prudentia, præsens
Visque animi immoti, nullis terrenda procellis.
Successit bello et placidis pax aurea pennis.
Non semel accensi media inter fulgura Martis
Victorem vidit mitem generosa Garumna
Sequanaque, et Scaldis, Rhenusque bicornis, et ingens
Danubius volvens ingenti murmure fluctus.
Parte, en! meliore sui est post fata perennis.
Marmoreum hunc tumulum posuit mæstissima conjux,
Sinceri egregium monumentum, et pignus amoris.
Discite, mortales, inopum pulsare tabernæ
Ex æquo mortem, atque elata palatia regum.

"I have contracted these fifteen lines into six, thus—

"Hic jacet in cinerem resolutus maximus Heros,
Cujus in aspectu siluit perterritus orbis.
Marmoreum, &c."

[Mrs.] E. LAWSON PLUNKET to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1722, Dec. 12, Bruxelles.—"This post brings an account of a terrible Act which is brought into the Parliament against the Catholics. My annuity, my Lord, may be included in it, having registered; 'tis all in the world I have to live of, the disbursement you made me being all lost in France. Your Grace has power and interest enough to save me, by begging it: after that, my Lord, do by me as you please. I had rather be at your mercy than any other's. I am old, and not likely to live long, yet cannot help apprehending being starved to death. . . .*

[LORD] CARTERET to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1722-3, New Year day.—“I received at my coming home the honour of your Grace's letter, and yours to Lord Townshend came whilst I was there. What your Grace asks is disposed of to Lord Lincoln, who had it given to him the very night Lord Carlisle was out. Your Grace need never question my zeal to serve you, and I believe you need not doubt of some real assistance and favour from the King. I have never thought it proper to mention to His Majesty how convenient his assistance would be to you, because I thought it better to attempt getting something for you without mentioning that reason; but since you have touched upon it to Lord Townshend, who I dare say will be very ready to serve you, we will both try what we can effect for you. I am sorry that I can't wait upon you at Lord Waldegrave's as I flattered myself I should be able, but when you come to town I will receive your commands, and Lord Townshend and I will lay such part of your case, with your leave, before the King, as shall be necessary to do you service, in such way as shall be agreeable to you.”

[VISCOUNT] TOWNSHEND to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU.]

[1723,] Jan. 3, Whitehall.—“I am very sorry the government of the Tower was actually disposed of before I had the honour of your Grace's commands.† As to what your Grace is pleased to recommend to me in your second letter, you may depend upon my best services. My brother Walpole is at present in the country, and the King does seldom anything in money matters without hearing his opinion. If your Grace therefore approves of it, I will delay taking any steps in that affair till he returns. I am persuaded your Grace will find him very ready to obey and assist you in anything.”

JAM[ES] ANDERSON to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1723, June 29, Saturday.—“May it please your Grace to accept of the thanks of our Brethren [Freemasons] for your good buck and your generous payment for the ticket; but your Grace's company would have been useful, because, though with unanimity they chose the Earl of Dalkeith the Grand Master, represented by his proxy, the D[u]ke of W[harto]n endeavoured to divide us against Dr. Desaguliers (whom the Earl named for Deputy before his Lordship left London), according to a concert of the said D[u]ke and some he had persuaded that morning to join him; nor will the affair be well adjusted until the present Grand Master comes to London. The said D[u]ke has been deeply engaged all this week among the Livery-men of London in the Election of Sheriffs, * MS. note:—Mrs. Elizabeth Lawson was the friend and companion of the Hon. Mrs. Hervey, who left her an annuity of 100*l.* for her life, chargeable on some estates in Kent, left by her to Duke Ralph. Mrs. L. afterwards married a Mr. Plunket, on whose death she retired to an English convent in Paris, and died there in 1740.

† The Earl of Carlisle was dismissed from this office 28 Dec. 1722. (Report on the Carlisle MSS.)

though not entirely to his satisfaction, which I'm sorry for, but none can help it except Mr. Wallpool, who, they say, thinks it not worth while to advise him. I beg your Grace to send me the remainder of the charges in a post-letter directed for me in Swallow Street, near Pickadilly, St. James's, Westminster."

[EARL] BERKELEY [Vice-Admiral] to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1723 ?] July 17.—"I have great joy to find you so well satisfied; indeed, Lord Carteret seemed very ready to speak to the King when I saw him. I will take care and send direction for a ship, as soon as Lord Carteret's letter comes to the Board."

P. R. FREMONT to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1723[-4], Jan. 23, from the Fleet [prison].—Sends two sketches or pictures, which he intends to execute "as big as nature; one is Charity, the other Love." These have occupied him since he has been in this "fine castle," from which he hopes to be delivered with his Grace's assistance, according to a dream, described.

[MONS.] LERSON to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1724, June 30, Dublin.—Congratulates him on the Duchess's restoration to health, effected by the climate of Montpelier. France, though detestable for many reasons, has the honour of producing this result. The writer's hatred of that persecuting kingdom is sometimes appeased when he thinks of the happiness it has afforded to the Duke. Asks him to join the Duke of Grafton in obtaining a pension from the King; or to write to the new Viceroy of Ireland. Wrote to Lord Carteret on hearing of a promise made by him to one of his (the writer's) relatives in Germany.*

French.

ARTHUR COLLINS † to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1724-5, Jan. 11.—"I humbly presume to remind your Grace of letting me know when I may wait on you for the manuscript relating to your ancestors, as I would willingly draw out the account of your family before I set about any other.

"On my relating my case to your Grace, you was so generous to say, you would speak to the Duke of Newcastle in my favour; and there being a place vacant, your Grace's recommending me may incline the Duke, who has already promised me his favour, to intercede with Mr. Walpole to confer it on me."

WM. WOOD to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1724-5, Feb. 12-23, Paris.—"I arrived in this city the 9th instant, and as yet have not seen Mr. Walpole or anybody of note. I am

* There are two other letters from this writer, in one of which he says he has reason to love France, his native country.

† MS. note:—A laborious antiquary, the author of the first Peerage in 1708 (&c.).

promised my clothing either tomorrow or the day after, and then shall not fail of looking out for the gentleman who[m] your Grace has given me directions to wait upon. I wish I had any occurrences to inform you of worth your notice. The King was taken ill suddenly this week, and blooded three times in one day, but is very well again. I met Lord Falmouth a few leagues from this city in his way to England. Lord Clinton left this place yesterday, and behind him a fine lady. The Marquis of Blandford is not yet on his departure."

The writer gives his address thus:—For Mr. Wood, at Mons. Valmalete's, banquier, à Paris.

ARTHUR COLLINS to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1725, July 7, Waltham Abbey.—“I have received the papers your Grace was pleased to send me, and am drawing up the account of your family, but have been retarded by my removal to this place, which is much more convenient than the house I had in town, and more suitable to my studies. I can be in town in less than two hours, and have the conveniency of returns by the coach every day; so that I hope to make a greater despatch in the work I am engaged in than by being in town.

“Your Grace having on all occasions given the greatest testimonies of your humanity, a virtue inherent in every brave man, I humbly hope (as my case has been the most unusual that was ever known in this kingdom) you will be so good to think of me, when opportunity offers of making some provision for me.

“I can make it appear that by the loss of my place, and the expense of making my Collections, that I am a sufferer at least 5000*l.*, besides upwards of ten years' labour; and as I begun the work I am engaged in on my Lord[s] Stanhope and Sunderland's encouragement, [I] humbly hope somewhat will be thought of for me, to recompense me for my sufferings and losses.

“His Grace the Duke of Dorset, my Lord Scarborough, and several other noblemen have been so good to say they would intercede for some provision for me, and I beg your Grace to speak in my favour, which I shall be studious to deserve.”

ARTHUR COLLINS to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1725].—“In reciting the actions of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, I found so great a variety of events that the digesting them into a proper method has retarded my writing over fair the account of your Grace's family. . . . I flatter myself that your Grace will approve of what I have set forth of that great man; but I humbly beg your perusal of the enclosed sheets before I send them to the press, being diffident of their wanting some correction; and I think too little notice is taken of his Grace's last illness, and departure out of this world. I own myself wanting in my information in these particulars. . . . I am, for my greater retirement in pursuing my studies, removed to Waltham Abbey, in Essex.”

ARTHUR COLLINS to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1725-6, March 12.—“'Tis with concern that I acquaint your Grace that my necessities have taken me off this week from writing over fair the account of your family, being every day with some who promised me their favour, soliciting them to intercede with Sir Robert Walpole to make some provision for me.

“ I have wrote over a great part of the account of your family, but am unwilling to bring only part of it, without you require it. I humbly hope your Grace will have some compassion on an unhappy man, who has ruined himself and family in his endeavours to serve the public, by representing my case to Sir Robert Walpole, and interceding with him to provide for me.

[P.S.]—“ I am now going down to my family at Waltham Abbey in Essex, but shall be in town again on Wednesday morning, and will wait on you when you please to appoint by notice left for me at Mr. Gosling’s, bookseller, in Fleet-street.”

ARTHUR COLLINS to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1725-6, March 23.—“ I think it my duty to acquaint your Grace that I have made a further progress in the account of your family, but have been taken off it by my solicitations, Sir Robert Walpole having promised to make a provision for me; yet notwithstanding I have almost daily seen him, I am still kept in suspense.

“ With what heart or spirit can a man write, who, after having been cruelly used, is now so ungenerously dealt by? I think I know mankind, and few could have bore up under so great hardships and so many disappointments as I have met with. The whole Ministry have acknowledged my industry and capacity, and yet, after serving them to my utter ruin (and when my pretences to a place are so just), they suffer me to be in a starving condition, notwithstanding the representations I have made to all of them, and their promises to me.

“ I hope your Grace will forgive my setting forth my case so plainly, but I am drove to such extremities that even life is a burthen to me, and I am so much an Englishman that, when I am ill used, I can’t help complaining.” . . . *

PH. JONES, York Herald, to SIR ROBERT WALPOLE.

1726, Aug.—Submits a proposal for raising about 30,000*l.* a year by regulating the College of Arms, viz., by charging fees for registering the arms of all the nobility and gentry, and for licensing “undertakers” and “herald-painters,” and by stamp duties for entering pedigrees, copies of descents, and other instruments. Engravers of seals and plate, carvers, and stone-cutters, when employed on coats of arms, might also be subjected to licences.

Copy, signed by Jones.

—— VISCONTI to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU?].

[1727, April 26-] May 6, Tuesday.— . . . “ Je crois que de porter l’Aigle n’est pas un droit attaché à la dignité de Prince de l’Empire. Je pourrois vous citer les armes de cent Princes, que j’ay ueu, et qui ne portent point cette marque de distinction, qui est accordée dans l’Empire, et en Italie, à des gens bien dessous de cette qualité. C’est un privilege à part, et sur ce pied là, à ce que je crois, il a été accordé à Mr. le Duc de Marleborough. Pour décider apez ça, si Mad<sup>e</sup> la

* There is another short letter on this subject, dated at Waltham Abbey, 28 March 1726.

Duchesse a droit de la mettre derrière ses armes, il faudroit auoir ueu le diplome, à moins de quoy on seroit fort sujet à se tromper." . . .
(Particulars as to the Princes of the Empire, &c.)*

[MOHAMMAD BENALI ABGALI to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.]

1727, May 28, Gibraltar.—Has arrived here, but will not go over to his own country till it is more settled, it being in great confusion. Sends his service to the Lady Duchess[es] of Mountagu and Richmond, the Duke of Richmond, Mr. Folks, and all other friends. Letters to be directed to the care of Consul Russell. "We are this moment drinking King George's health, your Grace's, and all our friends'; and the garrison has fired all their guns and mortars, pointed to the enemy, and hope they'll do the desired execution."

An Arabic signature.

[LORD] TYRAWLY † to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1727?] Aug. 18, Somerset House.—"I just now received the Duke of Bridgewater's letter, which is a civil excuse from doing what I desired of him. I am nevertheless obliged to your Grace for the trouble you gave yourself about it. As the affair has happened, it has not proved any disappointment to me, for the Borough, having met with somebody that I suppose would give them a great deal more than I would, thought fit to raise their price so much upon me, that I gave over all thoughts of it."

JOHN ANSTIS, [Garter,] to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1730, Jan.,] Wednesday morning, Heralds' Office.—"I sent a letter to Dr. Thorp at Rochester under the cover, and wonder that I have not received any answer. . . . I wrote also to a friend of mine, who some time since took the degree of Doctor of Law in St. John's College in Oxford, requesting him to give me the transcript of the Statutes of the Founder in the particular I wanted, who returned me an answer that as he was never upon the foundation of that College, but only resided in it upon his own expenses, he had never seen the Statutes, though he had heard there were clauses to the purpose I mentioned. So that I shall make farther inquiry, and hope to meet with some person who hath a copy; otherwise I will endeavour by some means or other to see the original, which is lodged with the Bishop of Winchester at Chelsea, where formerly I saw [it?] in the time of Sir Jonathan Trelawny.

"If your Grace hath any commands, I shall gladly receive them from your Grace in the House of Lords this day, where I will wait for that purpose."

[DR.] JO. THORPE to JOHN ANSTIS, Esq., Garter King of Arms, at the College of Arms, near Doctors' Commons, London.

1729[–30], Feb. 6 (?), Rochester.—"Upon the receipt of your first about ten days or a fortnight ago, I immediately wrote to my friend Tho. Lambard, Esq., of Sen'oke, now eldest male descendant of Wm.

* Another letter, incomplete, in the same handwriting as this one, is dated at Brussels, 9 June 1727; in which the writer expresses his regret that he had quitted England. See also two letters placed at the end of 1717.

† James O'Hara, Lord Tyrawly and Killmaine; ob. s. p. 1773. (Note in MS.)

Lambard, founder of the Almshouse at Greenwich, and lessee of the estate belonging to the same, desiring that he would favour you with copies of the licence, endowment, statutes, &c. thereof." . . . (Extracts from Kilburne's Survey of Kent, and Philpot's Villare Cantianum.)

"Thomas Lambard, not John Lambard, as mistaken by Philpot, was grandfather to the present Tho. Lambard, Esq. . . . I have somewhere seen it observed (but by what author I do not remember) that William Lambard was the first Protestant that founded and endowed a public charity."

JOHN ANSTIS to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1730, Feb. 11,] Ash Wednesday, Mortlake.—"I enclose Dr. Thorp's letter concerning the settlement, which answers the representation, and in some short time hope to obtain the form of the conveyance. I believe there is no other instance, save in this Hospital [at Greenwich], and that of St. John's College in Oxford; wherein the difference is, that in this Hospital the last of the heirs male may convey over the lease to whom he shall please, whereas, in the case of the College, it reverts to the College after the death of the last heir male.

"If Mr. Lambard should be unwilling to give copies of the conveyances, application must be made to some of the Trustees of the Hospital; but if this appropriation should be contained in the licence obtained from the Crown for the first erection, Mr. Grymes can soon get a copy from the Chapel of the Rolls.

"I am plagued again with a great cold, which I hope the country air will remove; and I design to be in London all the next week."

[DR.] R[ICHARD] R[AWLINSON] to [JOHN ANSTIS].

1729-30, Feb. 16, London House.—"I doubt not but last week you received from me the proceedings against Anth. à Wood, which, as incorrect, I desire you to return sealed up to me. I was yesterday at Chelsea, where I saw our College Statutes, and a very long one in Latin and English concerning Fyfield, which you doubtless may have liberty to transcribe, though Archdeacon Furney tells me that this original (for such it is subscribed every page by W. Sound (?) and Sir Tho. White) is different from that at St. John[s], and therefore should be collated, no difficult matter to the most scrupulous, when they see a copy obtained. I should be glad to know whether Friday brings your attendance at Lambeth, and if my company be agreeable or convenient. I hope you won't forget Sir Andrew Fountain, Sir R. Blackmore, and Sir Edward Hannes. If our Oxford graduates at Lambeth from 1690 could be had, it would be a great favour."

JOHN ANSTIS to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

[1730, Feb.]—Gives extracts from the statutes of St. John's College, Oxford, and from a lease. "I had lately some discourse with the Head and Fellows of a College, and asked if by their statutes they could accept of any donation of this nature, which they assured me they could accept; but the statutes must be duly inspected, and counsel advised withall.

Your Grace may be certain that as (sic) I mentioned not any hint, farther than that one of my acquaintance had at present a view of that nature, and that I shall never discover any farther."*

Seal, a crest.

S. DUCHESS [DOWAGER] OF MARLBOROUGH to LADY MARY [BRUDENELL].

1730, July 14, Tunbridge Wells.—Congratulations on the latter's marriage.

[SIR] R. WALPOLE to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1730, July 29.—“The bearer, Mr. Van Huysam, is the person that is to copy the flower pieces for me which your Grace was pleased to give me the liberty to take. If you will be pleased to give the necessary orders for his doing it, you will very much oblige” (&c.).

[The EARL OF] CHESTERFIELD to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1730, Sept. [16–]26, Hague.—“An old Frenchwoman here, named Marolles, thinks that she should do your Grace great injustice if she did not send you the enclosed picture of your brother, which her husband left her; and charged me with the care of transmitting it to you. I willingly undertook the commission, since it was not her own likeness.”

J. WALLER to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1730, Sept. 22.—“I thought it my indispensable duty to acquaint your Grace, that divers persons in Yorkshire and Huntingdonshire make no difficulty to say, the late Earl of Sandwich was poisoned! I'm sure, if it could be discovered, 'twould be very pleasing in the eye of God. All as I have to offer is, that the nobleman, when living, was, according to the account of those people near Hinchbrook, in the hands of mercenary, vile creatures; and some gentleman in the country informed me that if one Du Buisson, who was confectioner about 25 years ago to the said Lord, could be found—who they informed me was a very worthy, honest gentleman—[he] could give your Grace a very authentic account of some poison that was offered to the said Lord in those days, but through the care of Du Buisson was prevented to do mischief.

“P.S. If my affairs had permitted me, I should have taken a great deal of more pains than I have in search of the said Du Buisson, who I hear is alive, and follows at this present the occupation of a dancing-master; but this is my consolation, that your Grace will please if possible to detect the villany.”

“MORIBUNDUS” to [QUEEN CAROLINE].

[c. 1730 ?]—Implores her to interpose and put an end to the barbarity shown to persons imprisoned for debt. “Know, Madam, that not the least subsistence is allowed a debtor in England, so that by the laws a creditor has the power to deliver him up a prey to hunger and vermin, by which great numbers have perished; and by the former I, who have lost very great sums by unavoidable misfortunes, am actually perishing; and this fate must necessarily attend the honestest who pays to the last, and whose probity has deprived him of subsistence in his confinement."

* There are several other letters on these subjects.

Copy,

S. DUCHESS [DOWAGER] OF MARLBOROUGH to EARL OF CARDIGAN.

1731, Oct. 17, Windsor Lodge.—"I am sure your Lordship has been lately so fully employed in a marriage that you won't wonder that the great work which I have done lately in the marriage of Di—, added to the constant fatigue of my business, has taken up all my time. . . . But I was extremely surprised and mortified when I came to one expression in your last, in which you are pleased to say, that you would be cautious of recommending any person, though you knew them ever so well, since you have had the misfortune of displeasing me by it. . . . I will stay till Lady Day, and submit to allow Mr. Lummis to deduct out of what he owes me whatever your Lordship shall think reasonable, as he has referred himself to your Lordship in his note. But if this be too much to trouble you with, I must have that of prosecuting Mr. Lummis; for though the sum is not a vast one, it is too much to throw away upon one that I don't know, and that, I believe everybody must think, has done very wrong. I hope that your Lordship has perfectly recovered your health, and that I shall sometimes have the pleasure of seeing you this winter at Marlborough House.

[P.S.] "My Lord John Russell and his Lady are gone to make their compliments at Hampton Court; otherwise I should be charged with their humble service and thanks for the honour my Lady Cardigan and you are pleased to do them."

THO. WOOLSTON to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1731, Nov. 15, King's Bench.—"You will be graciously pleased to pardon the boldness and trouble of this from a stranger, who, having conceived a great opinion of your Grace's goodness, generosity, and compassion for the distressed, humbly implores your intercession with the King for my discharge out of prison. Your Grace may be pleased to remember that for writing certain Discourses on Miracles. I was about two years since sentenced to a twelve-months' imprisonment, and fined 100*l.* to the King. The time of my imprisonment expired a year since, and I am now detained a prisoner for the 100*l.* fine, which I am so far unable to pay, that ere long I shall be reduced to great wants. I have repeatedly made my request to the Lord Chancellor and Sir Robert Walpole to do me this kind office with the King, but can hear nothing from them. Possibly they may be afraid of offending the Bishops by extending mercy towards me. However, intimation has been given me that some nobleman, who is not of the Ministry, is a proper person in this case to intercede with the King for his mercy: whereupon none sooner came into my thoughts than your Grace, because of your high birth and character; and if you'll be pleased to intercede with the King for my liberty and the remission of the fine, you'll for ever oblige to the greatest gratitude" (&c.).

In very faint ink.

DR. CECÉ (?) to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1731.]—Forwards a letter from the Curé of Beauval in Picardy, dated 22 May 1731, touching a marriage contracted there by Louis Alexandre Casenove, who is alleged to have been previously married in England, &c.

French and Latin.

[LORD TYRAWLY to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.]

[1732,] July 10, Lisbon.—“I received the honour of your Grace’s letter this morning, which was brought me by Monsieur Baptist, and a very pretty fellow he is. I don’t know but it may be worth his while to have come here, for the King of Portugal is very expensive, curious, and generous; whether it may happen to be his taste in Monsieur Baptist’s talents, as yet I don’t know.

“The Captain of one of our Paquet Boats, that I am now dispatching to England, being now in my room, I asked him about the Molettas, or bean-codd[s]. He tells me there are no boats in the world go like them, that they sail nearer the wind than any other boat, and that they come about at once, in half their length, but that nobody can work them but the Portuguese, their hand[<sup>l</sup>]ing the sails being quite different from what anybody practises but themselves; and that they steer almost altogether by their lee-board, making little or no use of the rudder. They are quite flat-bottomed, the head and stern turning up, just as a bean-codd does, seven or eight foot, before it touches the water.

“He tells me that one, though a very small one, was sent to London, and that they could make no manner of use of her. The small ones are good for nothing; it is only the large ones go so very well; and as they are near forty foot long, there is none of our Lisbon traders are (sic) large enough to hoist her in. So what my Captain, who is a very understanding fellow in these matters, says would be best, is that I should send you over a model of one of them, and they’ll build her for you in England, to the (sic) what dimensions you please; but he says that unless you have two Moletta-men from hence, he is very sure you won’t be able to make anything at all of her, with any hands you’ll get there. So according to the instructions you send me I’ll proceed.

“I pass my time stupidly enough of all conscience, for here is no sort of entertainment, either public or private; there is no Court but when one has business and desires an audience. The Portuguese are people of no society, so that what commerce one has with them is visits of compliment and ceremony; so that I live a sort of a sauntry strolling life, which upon the whole I can’t say is disagreeable. The air and climate are excellent, and the country near Lisbonne very good, very fertile, cultivated, planted; in short, campagne riante toute à fait, and laid out in vineyards and such plantations as are so different from that (sic) of our own country as makes it the more entertaining.

“The people of Lisbon and their equipages would entertain you, that are a good observer, admirably well, though there are in this town, amongst the people of quality, some of the most magnificent equipages in the world. I met the Patriarch the other day going to Court in his litter, which was crimson velvet, laid all over with gold lace, followed by his body-coach, the same of (sic) the litter; five other of his coaches followed that, each coach having six fine grey horses; he had ten led horses richly caparioned, and attended by six and thirty footmen in crimson velvet clothes finely laced with gold, every servant having a laced cravat, and ruffles, with red silk stockings, and gold clocks. Several of the Portuguese nobility are in a lower degree almost as magnificent upon days of ceremony. Moy qui vous parle never appear in the streets (except when incognito) but in my berline and six, and six footmen behind it.

“When any persons of distinction come to visit me, the porter at the gate rings a great bell, upon which all the servants repair to the foot of the great stairs, which they march up two and two before them; half-way up the stairs they are met by my master of the ceremonies, who introduces them to me. I either meet them at the stair-head, in the great hall, or some of the antechambers, according to their rank. There are then two arm-chairs set in the middle of the room, and you sit down quite close as ever you can, nose to nose, and then you make one another, for two hours together, all the most outré compliments you can think of. A visit, taking leave of you to go away, is a good half hour’s work, for at the door of every room [there are] fresh compliments, and begging you to go no farther, though they would never forgive you if you took them at their word. The women here are handsome, and I can assure you quite le Vt. (?) de Toulouse in this warm climate.”

Incomplete. In Lord Tyrawly’s hand.

[LORD] TYRAWLY to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1732, Dec. 8, Lisbon.—“Your Grace will remember that a considerable time ago, I writ to you to tell you, that if they should make any Knights of the Bath I should be glad to be one; and that I writ to you afterwards to tell you that I had dropped the thoughts of it, in favour of another thing that I was then soliciting. The other thing that I desired, which was to be removed from hence to Turin, is, as you know, disposed of, and I have no other view but staying here as long as they please to let me. And as it is good now and then to get something, though ever so great a trifle, and that [as?] those Chevalleries look well abroad, if any vacancies should happen in the Red Ribbon, I should be extremely obliged to you if you would propose me, néanmoins sans vous commettre. I find it is thought (but how well grounded I can’t say) that the malversations in the Charitable Corporation may cause some hacking of spurs in the Order. If that should happen, or any other vacancy, I confess I should be pleased to come in, and I flatter myself that your Grace would be as well pleased that it should be [I] as another. I beg your Grace would make my most respectful compliments to the Duchess of Montagu and my Lady Mary, who by the by I believe I ought to call now my Lady Cardigan, for I have heard or dreamt that my Lord Cardigan, her father-in-law, was dead.”

[LORD] TYRAWLY to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1732, Dec. 19, Lisbon.— . . . “I have in my house at Lisbon a great room, and a most noble one, that overlooks the whole town, the river and the sea à perte de vue, and all the mountains and country on the Alentejo side of the water; in short, a great prospect. This room is 46 foot long, 20 foot broad, and 15 foot high; so that the room has a wall on one side of 46 foot; on the opposite side are four very large windows; les lambris between the windows are 6 foot and a half, and from the top of the window-case to the cornice is 4 and a half; and the end walls of consequence are the breadth of the room, and a slip of 46 foot long by 4½ broad over the windows. This room few of my predecessors made use of, because it would cost a vast sum to furnish it; and, by what I can find, such of them as did furnish it, did it very scruply (sic). Hitherto I have hung it with good tapestry hangings, which by the by were not my own, but lent me by a friend here, to whom they were pawned by the Vice-Roy of Goa; he some time ago redeemed his hangings, and my room is demolished.

“Now what I mean by all these particulars is, that in case it is possible for you to help me but with any of the old trumpery of the Great Wardrobe, you will vastly oblige me. Whether what I ask of you is practicable, I really can’t say, or whether the old furniture is not the perquisite of your under-officers; or what are your methods in the office, as you may imagine, I am quite a stranger to; but upon the whole, if any such thing could be done, you would save me a great deal of money, for the house loses its whole beauty without that room.

“I have four other rooms of the same size, and the prospects as beautiful, but they are all furnished. One is my chapel, handsomely fitted up; another a library (cabinet de Monsieur, où il depeche avec ses secrétaires); the other la salle à manger, that opens to a terrace 60 foot long, that looks to the sea; and the fourth room is a billiard room. But this room, of which I have sent you the dimensions, lies so in the middle of the house, that if I shut it up, the whole house is spoiled.

“When I say my rooms are 15 foot high, I mean from the ground to the cornice; for they are vaulted rooms, and rise from the cornice several foot higher, with the vaults all painted in fresco, and very ill painted. I know I should not call them vaults, but I have forgot the other term; in short, like the great room below stairs at Ditton. This I thought necessary to explain to you, for the honour of my rooms. If your Grace can equip me, Colonel Wilton, Dela Haye Street, Westminster, upon any message from you, will take care to send me the hangings.”

[LORD] TYRAWLY to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1733, Sept. 4, Lisbon.—“They are so very negligent in the Duke of Newcastle’s office about their letters, that I am not at all surpris’d that I did not receive the first letter your Grace did me the honour to write, about the hangings and Red Ribbon. The second letter upon those subjects came to me by the last packet. I confess it would be a satisfaction to me to have the Red Ribbon, because it looks like some colour of favour, and not being quite forgot. Monsieur de Newcastle repond en Ministre when he says he wonders I don’t ask for something of profit, but his Grace knows very well to what little purpose it has been whenever I have done so, au moins par sa canal. This by the by, and between your Grace and I (sic). There is nothing that I have solicited for but an exchange from this Court to the same character in another; this has been often promised me, but as yet without fruit. En attendant, je prends icy patience.”

[SIR] JOHN CHARDIN [Bart.] to the DUKE OF MOUNTAGU.

1733[-4], Jan. 13, Kempton Park. — . . . “It was a great pleasure to hear that you was in perfect health. I have not lately enjoyed mine at all, which made me come here for the air, and on that account, spring also drawing on, believe I shall hardly go to town this winter but for a night or two when there is occasion. Next summer it will be delightful to pay my respects at Ditton, as I did the last, for that enchanted island, fortification, tents, cabins, drawbridge, ferry-boat, and ferryman is [are] never to be forgot.” . . .

[LORD] TYRAWLY to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1734[-5], Jan. 29, Lisbon.— . . . “I am infinitely obliged to your Grace for the kind part you take in my Memorial, and I hope we shall succeed. People always think their own story a good one, and I confess I think I have some pretensions to the exchange I desire, or at least as good as some that have obtained such exchanges. I have no sort of dependence sur Monsr. de Newcastle, for he is a false and poor spirited ——— fellow. I owe him no sort of obligation, but by God he owes me obligations of a very serious nature since I have been in Portugal, and if I had not screened many things here, he would long ago have heard such stories from the merchants as he would have had much to do to answer. I have done the State some service, and they know it; but no more of that. . . .

“Your Grace will have heard I suppose, of my mother being dead, by which 800*l.* a year rent-charge falls in to me; cecy rend les coudées plus franches un peu. I am sorry the Isle of Wight does not answer your expectations, because I think I remember to have heard you formerly speak of it as a thing que vous convoities. Pay icy ce pauvre Diable de Digges sur les bras, qui à ce que je crois n'a pas le sol, et ne sait où donner de la tête; il est fol à lier, et toujours yvre. My Lord Muskerry is at present in this River, who is a brute beast, and Digges and he have been drunk the 24 hours round now this week and more; I heartily wish them both at the Devil, for such roysterers, that comfort themselves at this rantipole rate, as I am a person, are abominable to me, who drink wine but seldom, and that very sparingly.

“Pray, my Lord, give me leave to make my compliments to the Duchess of Montagu and my Lady Cardigan, and tell them I desire to be employed here in their service, if there is anything they would have from hence. Our nunneries abound in perfumes of all sorts, worked purses, and des gentilless[es] of this sort. Or, if they should not like perfumes, would they have any onions or garlic, for I would fain be employed by them.”

[LORD] TYRAWLY to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1734[-5], March 3, Lisbon.—“I have the favour of your Grace's letter, with an account of what passed in the audience you had of the King in relation to my Memorial. I don't know in what words to thank you for the very kind manner in which you espoused it, and I find, if I ever reap any advantage in this solicitation, the whole thanks of it will be due to you. I write this post to Sir Robert Walpole, to thank him for his kind disposition towards me, in saying that after he has served my Lord Cadogan he would be as well pleased to serve me as anybody else. This I do, as supposing that it cannot in any wise commit your Grace with Sir Robert, that I repeat to him so much of your letter as what he said to you concerning me.

“The other part, viz., of there being some bad impressions sur mon chapitre, as you may imagine, I shall never quote you as an author for, though John Selwyn has long since told me the same thing. Whatever these bad impressions are, it would be highly necessary I should know if possible from whence they arise, for if it is from anything I have done in Portugal, I confess I cannot give the least guess at it; and therefore I say I wish I knew it, that it might be a lesson to me, not to fall into the same again.

“I have finished no one business here but what has had the King's approbation, de quoy les lettres de Monsieur le Duc de Newcastle font foy. The thing here that caused the greatest trouble was the affair of Capt. Norris's ship, of which doubtless you have heard; and if they would have been pleased to have taken my advice at home, I would have brought them out of that affair sans bruit, sans dépence, et avec honneur; but if they rather chose to come off in a poor, pitiful, shameful, and scandalous manner, it is no fault of mine.

"I am not so little acquainted with my own talents as to pretend to be a great Minister, or the immediate descendant of le Cardinal d'Ossat, or le President Jeannin; but I should have fort mauvaise grace not to be au fait des choses of this country, after being so long here; and in the abandoned state that things are left here by our Secretary of State's Office, I shall say no more than what is true when I assert that it is wholly and singly owing to my sçavoir faire, and some personal interest I have with the King of Portugal, as well as his Cardinals, Jesuits, and Ministers, that things are kept here in the tolerable condition they are. This would deserve more thanks from the Duke of Newcastle than I find he is inclined to give me; but by God, if ever la Chambre Ardente should make any enquiry after what support the Trade and the King's Minister have in Portugal, sa grandeur auroit un tanto di naso. I know that formerly the gun used to be always charged at me, but long before I left England it flashed in the pan, and the charge was drawn, without ever firing it off, and what new matter there is, faith I do not know; however, these things blow off in time, and really, whether it be foolosophy, or insensibility, they do not make much impression upon me. The King will grant me this request if he pleases; if he will not, he must e'en let it alone. One would however do what one can, and I am sure your Grace will continue your good offices to me."

JOB ST. SOLOMON* to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1735, April 5, Joar Factory.—"This comes to give my duty to your Grace, praying God to bless you for what you have done for me. All the Mussulmen here pray for you. This comes by Mr. Moore, late a factor in the Company's service, who came up hither along with me, and has taken a great deal of care of me, and used me as his brother, for which I should be glad to hear of your doing good for him. I am still in Gambia; have heard news from Bundo that my father is dead, and one of my wives married. The bearer will inform you more of my affairs than anybody else, he having been here trading for the Company these six or seven months. My duty to the King and Queen and all the Royal family.

"P.S. I hope your Grace will not forget my servant and fellow slave, who is in Maryland."

[SIR] JOHN CHARDIN [Bart.] to the DUKE [of MARLBOROUGH].

1735, May 1, Kempton Park.—"I shall be for ever grateful to my highly honoured and beloved friends Magnifico and Clarissimo the two Dukes of Richmond and Montagu for having lately at each of their houses recommended me to your acquaintance and friendship. . . . Considering often all that has happened during the two days I have seen you, our first meeting alone in the field, your running towards me, then your very genteel and amiable deportment throughout in every article of the two days' entertainment particularly directed to me, it seems as if Providence had pointed us out to one another for to be friends, which it would be senseless in me to overlook. Before I go on I must say something to explain why I sent to defer your grand and numerous meeting here last Monday to dinner. My letter to Bodens, desiring him to send to your Grace and others, pretended sickness, but hints it without naming the two persons whose behaviour yourself saw at the Opera was so publicly disturbing, and so horridly indiscreet. I could not avoid showing myself thus sensible of it, especially because, such are the men, the same very probably would have been repeated here most cruelly and unjustly, to my hurt. . . .

* Sic. A MS. note gives an account of "Job, the son of Solomon, the son of Abraham, . . . born at a town called Boonda, in the county of Galumbo, in the kingdom of Futa, in Africa." There are two Arabic letters and one Chinese (?) letter next to this one. See 26 April 1736.

"Our fortunes are truly great indeed, though differently so. To speak of yours would require a sheet of paper; my riches consist in the use I have made of time that is over; and now having thrown off the world, and become a professed philosopher—to give you a hint only—whenever you come to view my park and house, enquire into my way of life here and everywhere else; you will find my means very great, proportionable to my wants, which are very small, for I have never spent the least substance upon vice, nor committed any. My life every day from 5 a clock in the morning is one continual act of working charitable beneficence without and devotion within doors. . . .

"His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, whose favour to me is the honour, dignity, and crown of my head—I write to him but very seldom, and see him less, yet the friendship goes on increasing; ours might be so managed, except otherwise according to your pleasure; as in the Spectators, Vol. the 1st and 2nd, was the character of Encrate to King Pharamond—something like that, and no otherwise would I be to you. . . . I tremble to think how all the vitals of this most powerful Protestant nation are greatly concerned, for your good example, next to the Royal Princes', will be of the most general influence. Your grandfather the late Duke, and the present Lady Duchess Dowager, both loved and delighted in Bishop Burnet's religious conversation, as at the end of the second volume it appears in the account of his life. The present Queen has profited and far from lessened herself by a private friendship with the eminently learned and religious Dr. Clark. . . . (Refers to the good example of Queen Elizabeth, and to the bad examples described in the preface to Sir Walter Raleigh's History of the World, &c.)

"The late Duke of Wharton, though in a lesser concern, ought to be a dreadful example, for it is very well known that in him at first nothing was wanting but the fear and love of God, and yet he received the notions I now deliver to you from the same hand that I did, for the private tutor, during two years between Eton School and the University, went from me first to him and then to Lady Portland's sons. . . . The whole time you were rowing me on the water at Ditton in your uncle's gardens, these and many such like thoughts were so crowding into my head that, looking at you, I could not speak." . . . Asks him to bring Mr. Spencer or any other company.

[LORD] TYRAWLY to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1735, July 29, Lisbon.-- . . . "I find you have heard of my present favour with the King of Portugal; the truth is, that I am personally better with him than anybody ever was that I have heard of. It has cost me some study of his temper to set myself so well with him, but I have fully brought it about and I think I shall hold it.

Whether I am caressed by all sorts of people here, or no, I leave you to judge, for Monsr. Marchand taught us, that Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis. The King has extreme good sense, a great deal of wit and humour, mais un peu enfant gaté, by an unlimited arbitrary power, having had his education from churchmen, and permitting still too many about him.

“Though it is to be sure a very great agreement [agrément] to a Foreign Minister to be upon the foot with the Prince he is employed to, that [which] I am here, nevertheless I have found myself quite mistaken in the end I proposed to myself, in getting the King of Portugal’s favour. I had conceived that my being so well with him would enable me to do little services to our affairs with him, and consequently make me acceptable, and countenanced by my own Court. In my first conception I have not been mistaken, for by my own personal favour I have obtained many things here for our nation; but in the reward of them I have been quite mistaken, for even though the King of Portugal writ a very strong letter of recommendation to the King in my favour, and desiring a Regiment of Horse or Dragoons for me, it could not be obtained, though I think my wounds, and time of service, might entitle me to one, without so respectable a solicitor.

“They have now made me Plenipotentiary, which by the by I am sure they would not have done, only that I suppose Norris would not come abroad without being so, and they could not with any decency do it for him and leave me out. We are indeed joint and separate Plenipotentiaries, and I am told I shall continue so, after he goes home. A man should not brag of his own performances, but I may modestly say I have done great services to the Ministers since I have been in Portugal, and upon very little reflection upon this country, they may know it.

“I think my Plenipotentiary powers give me a claim to a State (sic), though different from that of Ambassador; if any such thing is due to me out of the Great Wardrobe, pray, my Lord, send for Colonel Wilson, and put him in the way of making a proper demand of it, for I have a noble great room, and very handsomely furnished, that only wants such an ornament to make it complete. I have also a notion the King’s picture is due to a Plenipotentiary; if so, I shall hope it comes likewise from your Office, and I should be very glad of the King’s countenance; ’twas a shrewd saying.

“I don’t know in what manner your Grace may stand with the Ministers (or rather the Minister, for I believe ’tis to little purpose to speak to any of them except Sir Robert), as to your caring to say anything to them for any of your friends, and I would be far from putting you upon any disagreeable task upon my account; but if it were quite easy to you, it could not fail of being of service to me in my solicitation for a Regiment of Horse or Dragoons, if you would mention me as one you wish well to, and also whose personal favour with the King of Portugal, though it is all exerted for their service, yet would be more quickened if it met with a more suitable return from them; for I cannot but think that after being two and twenty years a Colonel of Foot, cribles [criblé] de blessures, and have [having] served neither better[n] or worse than other people, I deserve this preferment, as well as some that have obtained it. I thank you for the sword and pistols; I have not yet received them, but as Wilson is punctual, to be sure I shall.” . . .

[LORD] TYRAWLY to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1735, Sept. 23, Lisbon.—“I have received from your Grace such a sword, and two such case (sic) of pistols, that if the Spaniards have any intelligence of, I think must sooner bring about their accommodation with the Portuguese, than Sir John Norris' and my joint negotiations. I thank you prodigiously for them. The double barrel ones are exactly of the size for my Burrell cloak, for night expeditions; that is, one of them stuck in my girdle, and the espada under the arm, and muffled in the cloak up to the eyes; for you know that I am a lover, and a fine gentleman, and an arch, comical dog as ever you knew in your life, though I grow old. I cannot choose but grow old, for she had young Robin Nightworke by old Robin Nightworke before I left the Inns of Court. However, things go pretty well while I am in this fine climate, but if ever I return to England, I foresee I shall immediately dwindle into an errant dishclout; and sincerely, if it was not for the pleasure of seeing your Grace, and a very, very, very few people more, I should not care if ever I set my foot into that noble island as long as I live." . . .

THO. SMITH to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1735[-6], Jan. 29, Scotland Yard.— . . . “On the 28th of May 1720 I employed Lazarus Symonds the broker (who is still living) to buy for me in Exchange Alley 500*l.* S. Sea Stock, for the opening of the Books, which he did do, at 530*l.* per cent., of the late Edmond Dummer, Esq., your Grace's then agent. When the time came, the said Dummer declined transferring the same, and said the Stock was not his own but your Grace's, and that your Grace had ordered him not to transfer the same, but was very angry with him for having sold the said Stock; upon which Mr. Dummer was called upon by name three times aloud at the Book D. in the S. Sea House by the said broker, to come and transfer the said Stock, as is usual in such cases, and to receive his money, which was then tendered and told out in gold and silver by my banker.

“Your Grace, upon hearing Mr. Dummer called upon in that manner, seemed to be displeased, and said to me in the hearing of the aforesaid banker and broker, as before mentioned. My answer to your Grace was, that Mr. Dummer was a very good man for the difference, which was 1,450*l.* Your Grace replied, you would protect him, let me do as I would. I then said that since your Grace took it upon yourself, I should not proceed against him; that it was now become your Grace's affair, as by the law and custom of the Alley, if a bargain is not complied with, if the broker declares his principal, his principal becomes liable.” . . .

THE DUKE OF MONTAGU and the EARL OF PEMBROKE to JOB
the son of SOLOMON, at BUNDA.

1736, April 26, London.—“We heard with satisfaction, by your letter from the Factory at Joar, that you were got into the neighbourhood of your own country, which you so much longed to see again, and that you remember with pleasure the friendship we had for you here. We often think and speak of you with esteem, and we are obliged to you and the Musulmans of your nation for the prayers you make to God for our prosperity. God Almighty is great; He is the common father of us all; we all worship Him, though in differing form, and He hears the prayers of all who with a sincere heart call upon Him, and endeavour to follow that universal law He has given to all mankind. We are sorry for the death of your father, or any other domestic misfortune; and we since hear, by another hand, you have lost, by the loss of a ship, most of the things you carried home from hence, for which we are also sincerely concerned. We heartily wish you hereafter health and better success, praying that God, when it is his will, may make you happy among your friends and relations, and give you all those blessings and comforts to which, as a good man, you are justly entitled.

“Mr. Moor[e] has obliged us by his care and regard for you during his voyage, and he is since gone to the Colony of Georgia with Mr. Oglethorp. We have given commission to your friend Mr. Blewitt, who is gone over to Maryland, to make enquiry for your servant there, and procure his liberty. We have presented your duty to their Majesties; and again wishing you long life and happiness, remain your sincere friends.

“MONTAGU.

“PEMBROKE.”

Copy.

[EARL] WALDEGRAVE to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1736, [April 29–] May 9, n.s., Paris.—“I could not light of the Duc de La Tremouille till yesterday, to have an account of M. Du Harley. He was neither maître d’hôtel to this Duke nor to the late Bishop of Metz; he was head cook to both, and M. de La Tremouille says he was the best cook in France, whenever he had a mind, mais toujours très capricieux. This answers the character you find in him. As to his honesty, the Duke looks upon him as others of his profession, which is to take as many perquisites as he can, but is no judge of what he may be when maître d’hôtel. Here having been a good cook is reckoned a very great recommendation for the other employment, that is to say, for the proper arrangements of a table. I believe he left M. de La Tremouille, for they parted fairly. This is all the account I can give you of him. The late Bishop of Metz, whom he lived with till death parted them, kept the most elegant table in France.”

[CHARLES LORD] BRUCE to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

1736, May 2, Sunday, Totenham Park [Wilts].—“I intend being at London tomorrow night (should I not hear by tonight’s post that the Parliament is prorogued) for to attend the Mortmain Bill; but as my time will be taken up in consulting with those Lords who are for a saving clause for Queen Anne’s Bounty to the poor Clergy, I put upon paper my thoughts upon that affair. Queen Anne, amongst many glorious and good actions, gave part of her revenue to increase the maintenance of the poorer Clergy, who no doubt were, and are now, very deserving; and that any that have a regard for the memory of that good Queen and for the Church of England, should be against a clause for saving this charity, seems to me very extraordinary, and I can’t but imagine that your Lordship upon further consideration will be for it. For my part, I think there has not in the many years I have sat in Parliament been depending a more material thing, and the supporting a saving clause is what, if occasion (sic), I would go a thousand miles to do.”*

* There is also a short note by this writer.

[LORD] G[EOURGE] SACKVILLE to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1738,] Aug. 6, Knowle.—“Since the Dean * wrote to you we have been at Stoneland: we are now here to receive my Lord President † (as we thought) in his way to Sussex, but he says he must carry the Duke of Dorset with him to town tomorrow morning early. By what I can find there is a Council summoned to consider of the answer that is to come from Spain, so that it will be soon known whether there will be peace or war. The Dean (as Mr. Webber expresses it) mounted the rostrum today to instruct Lord Willmington, Lord Scarborough, and several others; you may imagine how miserable he felt before, and how happy he is now, to have it over.” . . . (Illness of Lord Vere’s son.)

G. STONE [DEAN OF DERRY] to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1738,] Aug. 17.—“We have been for some time at a house of the Duke of Dorset’s in Sussex, near Tunbridge Wells, and as we have been very often there, I will tell you some of the humours of it. There is, in the first place, more company than was ever known to be there before. To begin with that part of it which to my sorrow I saw the oftenest, Felton Hervey is hardly second to Nash. He is more nauseous than ever. But there was some comfort, that he lost all his money; and he has been drawn in a fan (not unlike), with a child in his arms. He pretends to be very angry, but I suppose he is in his heart pleased to find himself so considerable.

“Among the fair sex (though I should not have put Felton among the foul) Lady Rich has the honour to be laughed at more than anybody. She had been for some time the happiest creature in the world, till unfortunately last week Lady Albemarle came down, and happened to play once at cards with her. Lady Albemarle is gone, and her Ladyship is so very miserable that she cannot support it. It put her so in mind, she says, of the sort of thing that one is in London, and for her part she would not wish to go to Heaven but for three days. . . .

“We are this moment setting out to Bourne (Lord Wilmington’s), but I hope it is not from whose Bourne no traveller returns. Lord George [Sackville] forbids me to say anything of our coming to Deene, for he must have that, he says, for his next letter.”

[LORD] GEORGE SACKVILLE to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

1738, Sept. 1, Whitehall.—“I came to town last Wednesday to have the honour of kissing the Duke’s and Princess’s hands on Thursday, which (thank God) is over. Since I wrote last week to you we have been at Lord Wilmington’s; he has a prodigious good house situated upon the Downs within half a mile of the sea; it is the place in the world Lady Cardigan would be fondest of, for it is more difficult to find a dirty spot of ground there than it is to find a dry one in Northamptonshire. We often wished that Deene could be transplanted there. The Dean [Stone] is in Surrey with some of his relations. We shall meet at Knowle the beginning of next week, from whence we are to go to Walmer Castle, near Dover. When we return from that place, we shall begin to expect the civil letter to invite us to a more agreeable one. If you will send about the 20th of this month, I will let you know when we may hope to see you.

* G. Stone, Dean of Derry.

† Of the Council; Spencer Compton, Earl of Wilmington.

"I suppose you have not yet heard (for the Articles are not made public) that peace is made with the Spaniard; Sheat (?) the merchants are to have 150 thousand pound to stop their mouths, and there is to be a convention to settle the trade for the future. The Spaniards are to pay ninety thousand, the English the rest; this is the result of some account made up between Spain and England, the particulars of which, if I should hear, I should not remember, and if I did remember, would not trouble you with them.

"Lord Pembroke and the Duke of Richmond are contending who should succeed the Master of the Rolls as Governor of the Charterhouse; they are both very earnest about it. Sir Robert Walpole says it ought to be given to him that is least mad about it. The King has been a good deal out of order with a pain in his hip; when anybody enquired after his health, Horace Walpole used to answer, 'The King is hipp'd.' Do you not think the answer is prodigious witty?"

[LORD] G. SACKVILLE to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

1738, Sept. 24, Knowle.— . . . "We have not as yet settled how we shall get down to you, but if we should have occasion for Tom Bourne's help, you must give me leave to write to you again. The Duke of Dorset had a letter today from London . . . that Lady Sophia has told Lady Albemarle in Holland that she is married to Mr. Thomas. The Dean is very impatient to take possession of his . . . * apartment."

J. B. [the HON. JAMES BRUDENELL] to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

1738, Nov. 1, Goodwood.—"As Mrs. Brudenell's return of her fever has confined me here, I can't be any longer without enquiring after my dear Lord's welfare, and all the good family, and beg to know whether you are settled yet in London. Their Graces went up to the Birthday, and are expected back here tonight, with a number of wise foxhunters, among which is Charles Fielding."

G. STONE, Dean of Derry, to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1739.] April 29, Sunday night, Knole.—"This morning I received a letter from the Bishop of Derry, to tell me that I need not be in Ireland so soon by a fortnight as the time I had proposed; so that Lord George and I shall now go together. I write now to Damer to acquaint him with this, and I think it most likely that he will stay for us. . . .

"Lord George sends his duty to you, and desires you to tell Lady Cardigan that the news of her having been at the Cock-Pitt reached Knole several hours before we did; and we found the family in great trouble about the dirty window curtains and several other absurdities which she must have discovered there. The ague is entirely gone, and his Lordship takes a gentle ride before dinner, and eats of two or three plain dishes with a very hearty appetite." . . .

G. STONE [Dean of Derry] to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1739,] June 12, Tuesday, Phœnix Park.—“I have had two fits of an ague last week, which were bad enough to hinder me from writing to you, but the infallible medicine has cured me. . . . I hope that you have received the Staffordshire knives and forks, and that you like them. The stuff for Lord Brudenell’s clothes will set out about the 17th of this month, and will be in London in a fortnight from that time. There will come with it some stuff of another sort, that is intended for your Lordship, and some for Lady Cardigan, if you happen to like them.

“The bark has cured me of an ague, but I believe that it has affected my understanding, for I am much more stupid than ever I was in my life. . . . Lady Limrick desired me to [make her compliments to Lady Cardigan, Lord Limrick wears his own hair, as white as Swinny’s, but not so long, and with more curl; I like it so well that I have some thoughts of wearing mine.”

G. S[TONE, Dean of Derry,] to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1739,] July 5, Phœnix Park.— . . . “I shall set out for Derry next Monday. There is a Bishop* dead, which puts it in the Duke of Devonshire’s power to make me Dean of Down; if that happens, my stay will be but short at Derry. I have yet heard no news from England what is likely to be done in it.

“Sir Thomas and Lady Prendergast dined with us here yesterday; the ladies here like her very well, but they wish she would not make them wait till four o’clock for dinner every day. She passes for a pretty kind of woman, but not so handsome as Lady C. Cavendish. White beauties you know are the taste of the Irish nation.

“I never think of Twit’nam without regretting every moment that we lose from it. Quid facit stultus ? is a question that is asked almost every hour in the day. Lady Cardigan is very good to have found a house for us, and I hope next summer that we shall make use of it. I hope the Black Dean continues to improve, which may make some amends if the White one should begin to fall off. But I can answer for them that they will think themselves fully rewarded if they can be so happy as to please the people whose service they are in.” . . .

[SIR] CHARLES WAGER to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1740, May 27, Admiralty Office.—“The bearer hereof, Mr. Barton, is an Alderman of Portsmouth, and has been so many years, and several times Mayor; he has been several years a Clerk in the Ordnance there. Your Grace’s favour to him, and when there is opportunity a little promotion, will very much oblige the Members for Portsmouth, Admiral [Philip] Cavendish, and [Admiral Charles] Stewart.”†

ANDREW STONE‡ to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1740, Aug. 22, Whitehall.—“I am directed by Sir Robert Walpole to desire your Grace would be pleased to meet the Lords Justices this day, at twelve a’clock at noon, at the Cockpit, upon particular business.”

* Francis Hutchinson, Bishop of Downe and Connor.

† The Duke was Master General of the Ordnance 1740–2, and again 1743–56.

‡ Brother of George Stone, Dean of Derry; private secretary to the Duke of Newcastle. (MS. note.) He was at this time Under Secretary of State. (Haydn.)

[THE DOWAGER LADY CARDIGAN to her son the EARL OF CARDIGAN.]

[c. 1740,] Oct. 18, Hammersmith.—“I beg you will be so kind to let me know if I can’t without being too particular (?) avoid taking out my silver ticket, as your sister can’t just now go (though I hope it won’t be very long before she may), and as Farenelo is gone, which I own makes a great alteration in my thoughts as to the Opera. Lord Cadogan did ask me to subscribe, and I told him I would. So pray give me your thoughts upon this affair by the very next post. I have another reason for not caring to subscribe, which I will tell you when I see you; it is in regard to the expense, which I should be glad to save, if I can do it with credit.” . . .

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1740,] Dec. 20, Barbadoes.—“It gives me great pleasure that my instructions from the Board suit so well with my inclinations, for they not only plead in my favour for the liberty I take in writing to your Grace, but even authorise me in so doing. I should have sent your Grace an account of what passed at Spithead, and in our attempts under Mr. Balchen, but Major Lewis, with whom I then was on board of one of the Ordnance ships, deprived me of that pleasure by enjoying it himself. I am now, by my Lord Cathcart’s leave, on board the Weymouth man-of-war, Capt. Knowles.

“Oct. the 26th the Fleet sailed from St. Helen’s. The 27th the Admiral made a signal for the Weymouth to chase; it proved to be a Dutch ship from Cadiz, bound to Amsterdam. The Master, being brought on board, said he left Cadiz the 6th o.s., and that there were six Spanish men-of-war of 60 and 70 guns ready for the sea, commanded by a Rear Admiral. And that during his stay there another Dutch ship came in, the Captain of which told him that he had fallen in with the Toulon Squadron off Cape St. Vincent, consisting of twelve ships, the Admiral of which detained him three days; and that he heard they were to be joined by the Brest Squadron.

“The Captain we spoke with told us that many people of fashion and rich merchants had left Cadiz, being apprehensive of a visit from the English Fleet under Sir John Norris; and that their coasts were lined with soldiers on that account. It was the current discourse that the Ferrol Squadron, being twelve ships in number (line-of-battle ships and two frigates), were sailed for the West Indies, and in conjunction with the French were to take Jamaica.

“On the 11th o.s. the said Master, being 14 Dutch miles S.W. by W. off Cape Roxant, saw thirty sail of ships in the evening standing S.S.W., the wind being a South East.

“Nov. the 1st, Lat. 47.10, the Start, from whence we took our departure, bearing N.E. by E. 103 leagues, we had a violent storm at N.W.; then shifted to N.E., which scattered us so much that but 15 sail were in sight in the evening out of 120, for we were about that number when we sailed from St. Helen’s; but many joined us the next day. The Superbe, Capt. Hervey, lost all his masts, his bowsprit only remaining. The Buckingham’s mainmast I saw carried away, for we were so near as to apprehend her running foul of us in endeavouring to get clear of her wrack; and if she had, we should both have been dashed to pieces.

“There are seven men-of-war absent, which are—the Cumberland, of 80 guns; the Buckingham and Prince of Orange, of 70 guns each; the York, Ripon, Superbe, and Montague, of 60 guns each. On board the Montague are Col[s]. Lowther and Morton; the York, Gen. Wentworth and Brigadier Wolf; the Ripon, Brigadier Guys (?) and Col. Robinson. And about 40 transports are wanting. But it was the opinion of the sea officers that they were on their way to the place of rendezvous, and that the Superbe got to Lisbon.

"Nov. the 8th, the Admiral made a signal for the Orford, Lord Augustus [Fitzroy], to chase; it proved to be a French ship from Bourdeaux, laden with provisions for Martanica. The Admiral thought fit to detain her, and she was with the Fleet when we left it, which was the 24th, for Barbadoes.

"The 25th, Lat. 20.13, 300 leagues N.E. Barbadoes, we met with two ships that lost company Nov. 1st; one had soldiers of Gen. Wentworth's Regiment on board; the other a store ship, and had met with the Transport in the morning, as we did with both in the evening. They were not a little glad when they found we were English. We directed them how to steer for the Fleet, which was not many leagues from us, and kept on our course.

"Dec. the 13th, we arrived at Barbadoes. It is said here that 21 sail of French men-of-war sailed from Martanica about five weeks since, and are gone to leeward. The number of the Spanish ships are not known; it is thought they are in great want of provisions, a stop being put to the exportation of beef from the Island. Martanica is greatly distressed also on the same account.

"They are putting this place in as good defence as it will admit of. I have been to see the condition of the forts round this part of the Island. They are in very bad order; their cannon are, most of them, eat up with rust; and in two of their forts they have had cannon without carriages. Charles Fort is in the best condition; there is [are] 35 cannon mounted, and pretty good; six of them 42-pounders, and the rest 24 and 12. In James Fort there are two pieces of brass cannon not fit for service, but if sold would help to purchase some good iron ones.

"I have sent your Grace a long account, chiefly of misfortunes, but I hope my next will be longer, and full of good news." Expresses his gratitude for the favour shown him by the Duke.

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1741,] Jan. 28, Jamaica.—"I took the liberty to write to you from Barbadoes, which I hope your Grace has received. Nothing of moment has happened since, excepting a conflict between six of our men-of-war and four French.

"Jan. the 7th, the Admiral made a signal for the Prince Frederick, Lord Auberry, the Orford, Lord Augustus Fitzroy, two 70-gun ships, the York, Capt. Cotes, the Rippon, Capt. Jolly, the Dunkirk, Capt. Cooper, and the Weymouth, Capt. Knowles, to chase; the four last ships are of 60 guns; and the French ships were two of 60 guns, and the other two of 50.

"We were about six leagues south of Hispaniola when we began to chase. About one the Weymouth fired a gun for them to bring to, but they kept on their course. About three we fired another gun for the same purpose, but they did not mind us; but seeing we were determined to speak with them, they hoisted their colours. We came up with them between ten and eleven at night.

"Lord Auberry being commanding officer, Mr. Knowles asked if his Lordship had any particular commands for him. He bid him speak with the first ship he could, and himself would speak with the headmost he told him. When we came within half pistol-shot, we hailed one of the French ships, and asked what they were; to which question they made no answer, but asked who we were. 'English men-of-war,' said our linguist (by whom Mr. Knowles and I stood on the gangway, telling him what to say—Mr. Knowles, I mean, dictating to him). 'And we are French men-of-war, and what would you have?' 'We must speak with you,' said we. They then asked if war was declared. 'No, not when we left Europe,' we told them. 'Then what would you have?' 'You know that we are at war with Spain, and [it] is our duty to know what every ship is we meet; so pray send your boat on board.' 'We have no boat,' said they. 'Then we will send ours,' which words were no sooner spoken but two shot came between our main-mast and fore-mast, from one of the French ships that Lord Auberry had come up with, as we were talking with our French ship.

"The French ship my Lord hailed would give no answer; on which my Lord ordered a shot to be fired a-head of him. That not having the effect that he designed, he fired a shot into him; and then began the battle. We all ran to our quarters, and gave three broadsides into the ship we had been talking with. They returned the compliment, and then sheered off. The Dunkirk likewise gave this same ship a broadside. They were well manned with small arms, which they handled very briskly, and if it had not been dark, I believe we should have been very much galled by them, for we were within thirty yards of each other when we began to fire.

"After an hour's engagement, or thereabout, Mr. Knowles went on board the Frederick, and advised my Lord to desist till the morning, for he said that he feared we were in a wrong cause. My Lord agreed to it; but Mr. Knowles had no sooner got aboard his own ship, and ordered her to be towed round, but my Lord was obliged to continue the fight in his own defence; and the Orford, coming up, ran between three of the French ships, which fell on him, but his Lordship [Fitzroy] cleared himself very well, and continued firing, with the Frederick, till past four in the morning. We never lifted up a port after Mr. Knowles came from Lord Auberry, but received several shot. We had two men killed, and five wounded, but not dangerous.

"In the morning we saw the French ships near a mile from us, in good order for to renew the fight, with their signal out for that purpose. The six sea Captains met on board the Frederick, and agreed to send a boat to know if they were really French or not. The boat was sent with a flag of truce, and the orders that were sent are to this purpose: That we were sorry for the mistake that happened the night before, but that they were the cause of it themselves, their behaviour being so very inconsistent with the politeness of the French nation; alluding to their not hoisting their colours when they first saw us chase, and in not laying by for us. The Lieutenant (ours) said he hoped we had not killed them many men. 'But too many,' the Commodore answered.

"The Rippon never fired a gun; the York gave two or three broadsides; and the Dunkirk gave the Orford a broadside by mistake. The six English ships had about twenty men killed, and most of them on board the Orford, whose sails are useless by the number of shot going through. About thirty men are wounded, and but few of them mortally. Mr. England, a Captain of Marines, was killed in the Frederick; no other officers hurt.

"I have, my Lord, given you as faithful an account as my memory and enquiry will admit of, for I am very well acquainted with the six Captains, who gave me an account of what had been done on board their ships ; and I was a witness of what passed on board the Weymouth.

“I shall say no more of the French than what everybody must own, which is, that they behaved with great prudence and gallantry.

“Brigadier[s] Guies and Wolf were in the engagement, but not at the council of the Captains. What is said on the affair here is, that we had done too much or too little.

“The Cumberland, Prince of Orange, Buckingham, and Superbe, I hope, are safe in England, for we have heard nothing of them since the 2nd of Nov. last. No other ships are wanting.

“Jan. the 22nd, Sir Chaloner sailed from hence with ten ships of the line.

“The 23rd, Commodore Lestock sailed with nine.

“25th, sails Mr. Vernon with eleven and the transports. The men-of-war are full of soldiers, and many sick will be left behind.

“Mr. Laye, an Engineer, is dead, and succeeded by Capt. Campbell ; and the first Carpenter is also dead.

“My Lord Cathcart’s corpse, which was designed to be carried to England, is buried here, it being too offensive on board ship.

“* Provisions are excessive dear. Ten shillings are paid for a goose, and all things in proportion.

“Jan. the 26th, Mr. Vernon sailed from hence with nine ships of the line, leaving two men-of-war to convoy the transports, which will not be able to sail till the 29th or 30th.

“The Augusta, a 60-gun ship, unfortunately ran aground going out of the harbour, and is become useless to the present affair.

“Mr. Vernon and Fleet is out of the harbour, and waiting for us ; we shall be all out by the 29th instant.

“Jan. the 26th, two prizes were brought in here ; one is a French ship laden with iron and meal for Carthagene ; the other a Spanish snow. The Squirrel, a 20-gun ship, took them. I think I have given your Grace an account of everything that is doing here.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1741,] April 2, five miles from Carthagene.—“March the 9th, the Shrewsbury, Norfolk, Russell, and Princess Amelia, 80-gun ships, attacked two forts standing on rocks, thirty feet above the water’s edge. We were masters of them that evening. St. Iago had nine cannon, and St. Philip’s four.

“March the 15th, we opened the trenches in a wood 450 yards distant from Beauca Chica,† or Fort Lewis, for it is called by both these names. The enemy were so kind as not to annoy us in our proceedings.

“March the 18th, the men-of-war’s boats, at night, with soldiers and sailors, took two fa[s]cine batteries, one of fifteen cannon, and the other of five ; but the enemy remounted three on the fifteen-gun battery, which were soon dismantled again.

“March the 21st, at night, the wood was cleared from before our battery of twenty cannon, 24-pounders, and at eight the next morning we began our fire.

“March the 22nd, Col. Duglass was killed in his tent by a cannon-ball.

“March the 23rd, Mr. Moore was killed at the 20-gun battery, and Lieut.-Col. Sandford in a tent.

* Here the following words are struck out : “The Army is very discont[ent]ed with the great deductions from their pay, and.”

† Boccachica Castle, the strongest fort in Carthagena. (Boyle’s Chronology.)

“March the 24th, Lord Auberry had both his legs shot off on board the Prince Frederick, and died in two hours after.

“March the 25th, Fort Lewis was taken by storm. The enemy abandoned it so soon as they discovered our marching towards them. In the fort were seventy cannon, two of which are brass 24-pounders, two brass eight-inch mortars, and one of iron of 13 inches, and about fifty barrels of powder.

“That same evening the enemy burnt one and sank two of their men-of-war that defended the entrance of the harbour.

“The ship Don Blass [de Liz] was on board is saved; she is called the Galicia, of 64 guns. The names of the other three are, the St. Philip’s, the Africa, and St. Carlos; the first was of 74 guns, the second of 70 guns, and the other of 64 guns. On board the Galicia were taken a captain and sixty men.

“The same evening was taken by soldiers and sailors St. Joseph, a fort of twenty cannon.

“March the 30th, Col. Watson died of a wound from a cannon-ball, which broke his thigh.

“We are proceeding so fast as the ordnance &c. will admit us towards the City.

“The number of cannon taken, and those sunk by the enemy, are near three hundred. The number of soldiers and sailors killed are said to be near two hundred, but this is not to be depended on.

“April the 1st, it is certain the enemy have abandoned Forta Granda, and have left 49 cannon in it. They have likewise sunk all their ships in the harbour, one French only remaining.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1741,] Oct. 7, Camp in Cuba.—“By the last ship that sailed I sent your Grace an account of what has happened since our leaving Jamaica to the 31st of August, from which time I shall continue my little history.

“Sept. the 8th, St. Catalina, a place I mentioned in my last as not found, though very considerable, was discovered by Capt. Burard and party, a Spanish prisoner being his guide. So soon as the enemy discovered their coming, they set fire to the house (for there was but one, and a few Negro huts) and retreated. The guide we once had from the Admiral [Vernon] said it was a place of consequence, and attempted to show us the way to it.

“Sept. the 14th, at night, we had violent rain, thunder and lightning. The river I mentioned rose twenty feet above its usual course, and the ground we were encamped on was near nineteen feet under water; but by good luck for us we removed a fortnight before this happened. Five of our advanced sentries were taken off by the flood, and a gunner. The Negroes were still remaining on our former ground, and in no small confusion. They were near a thousand, most of which ran to the woods to save themselves; others, who had ambition enough, stayed to try what they could save (or steal), and were caught, and necessitated to climb into the trees that chanced to be near them. There they were obliged to remain for six or seven hours, and in danger every minute of the rubbish and vast trees that came down sweeping them away, but there was but three or four drowned. They really made a very droll appearance, and had it not been for the danger, the scene would have been very diverting. The Admiral’s tender of seventy tons was drove twenty yards into the wood, and being so very old, it is not thought worth the labour to get her off.

“Sept. the 17th, the Admiral returned, having been within three or four leagues of St. Iago. There is no thought of our steering that way.

“Sept. the 19th, a gunner was killed coming to the camp from our ships; it was thought to be done by our own people, knowing he had some money; his watch was not taken.

“Sept. the 25th and 29th, councils of war were held, the two Admirals and our two Chiefs being the only persons present. A hundred American soldiers are to be sent to the Island of Rattan, on the Musquito shore; I hope they will behave better than they have hitherto. It is strongly reported that Don Blass is dead, and also most of the garrison at Carthagea. It is likewise affirmed that the Admiral’s ship at the Havana is blown up by lightning. We hourly expect a ship from England, but are very apprehensive of some misfortune having happened; there has been no answer returned to letters sent two or three days after the attack of Lazara, which was the 9th of April,

“Our inactive situation is very melancholy as well as useless. Our men are very sickly and die fast, more from want of necessaries than the inclemency of the climate, I fear. Some die by their own excesses in drink. Fluxes are the reigning disorders among them, but very few die of fevers. It is so cold about twenty miles farther up the country as to make a fire agreeable mornings and evenings.

“P.S. Col. Gwin is broke for cheating his men. A young gentleman of family, as I am but too well informed, is accused of very unreasonable amours; son of Lord H——ys.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1741,] Nov. 4, Camp in Cuba.—“I wrote to your Grace the 30th of Sept. past, since which time nothing of any moment has happened.

“Our present condition is very melancholy, for more than half our soldiers are down with agues and fevers, which are pretty fatal. By the last weekly return fifty-one men died, and it is feared twice the number will die this week, there being many more sick.

“These disorders are thought to proceed from the great change of heat and cold in the four and twenty hours; for these past eight days the nights I think are more cold than they are in England in October, in proportion to the heat of the days.

“The 20th of last month arrived the Bonnetta sloop with dispatches from England, and brings us an account of 5,000 troops coming over to us. I wish they may answer the intent; but the condition we are in at present, and the fate that these new comers must in all probability share, will make us but very little more able to annoy the enemy than when we set out last from Jamaica, which was the first of July last, supposing that the troops which are said to be coming should lose as many men in proportion to their numbers as we have in proportion to those that came out with Lord Cathcart. We have, my Lord, lost very near six out of seven; many companies that were seventy’s when we embarked, have not six men left in them.

“It is said we shall embark very soon, and remain in this harbour, hoping the sea air may recover our men. Short allowance and sea air is [are] but very poor comfort for sick men. The Island of Jamaica is almost devoured by us and the Navy together. When these new forces come, it is said we shall go to Jamaica, leave our sick, and try our luck once more. If the enemy have had no troops thrown into Carthagea, we may chance to give them a broad hint. The Navy cannot help us, not being able to batter the town; and for St. Iago, it is said a ship cannot venture into the harbour. So the whole business must fall on the Army.

“Col. Campbell and Col. Millidge are dead. The officers of the four youngest Regiments of Marines will set out for England very soon.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1741, Nov. 30, Port Royal.—“I wrote to your Grace the 3rd (sic) instant, and am sorry to say that what I mentioned in my last in regard to the sickly condition of our poor people has proved but too true.

“Nov. the 6th, Col. Cockran’s and Brigadier Lowther’s Regiments, who do duty together, were not able to give more than nine men for their quarter-guard.

“From the 6th to the 16th, nothing but death and sickness; and the 16th we decamped, having sent most of the sick to their ships; and when they were gone, there was [were] not more than three hundred and forty, officers included; and some of the officers were formed into two platoons. I was ill on board, so cannot affirm what I say in regard to the numbers that retreated from the Camp, but I am sure they were not four hundred.

“Oct. the 17th, nineteen hundred men were fit for service by the returns, now there are not four hundred.

“We arrived here last night. The two Admirals are going with three sixty and two seventy and a fifty-gun ship off of Hispaniola. Gen. Wentworth is come here. The variance between the two Chiefs is not less than it was four months past, which is a great misfortune, not to us only, but to the whole expedition.

“I think I have mentioned everything that may be of any consequence to be known at home; and not being over able to write, from an ague and fever (which I thank God has left me some days), I must assure your Grace,” &c.

H. WALPOLE to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1742, Aug. 8, Woolterton.—“I hope your Grace will excuse the liberty I take to send you the enclosed letter from one Dean, whom your Grace was pleased at my request to get employed in the train of artillery at Minorca. Your Grace will find that he is extremely desirous to be promoted to a higher station there, or to have some post in the train here. As his father is a very honest man at Norwych, and very serviceable in our interest, it would be a particular obligation both to Mr. Vere and myself if your Grace could serve the son.”

THE EARL OF WINCHILSEA to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1742, Sept. 14.—“As all designs for the public service are in this country generally defeated by being known long before our ships sail, and by the manner of our fitting our ships, we are now sending out two ships with an intention of doing some service, which we hope cannot be defeated but by being made public, and we must apply to the Ordnance Board for some warlike stores not usually furnished. Your Grace not being now in town, I must beg to know from your Grace who it is at your Board to whom you would direct me to apply that these things might be provided privately; and when they are to be delivered will be time enough for us to give our public desire*.”

[GEN. SIR] P[HILIP] HONYWOOD to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1742-3, Jan. 12, o.s., Ghent.—Recommends Capt. Napier to be an Engineer in “this establishment.” He was an officer at Gibraltar during the siege, and was afterwards a scholar of Mons. Thomas. He is now Lieut. Quarter-master General to “this army,” but this appointment is not equal to his deserts.

“We are a-preparing for a march into Germany, but till the day is fixed for us to begin the march I cannot think we shall, or till I see Major Gen. Elton † come from England, who I am told commands all that body of troops” [the Hanoverians?].

Partly autograph.

[GEN. SIR] P. HONYWOOD to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, n.s., Feb. 2, Ghan [Ghent].—Recommends Lieut. Flight, the eldest Lieutenant here and in England, to succeed Mr. Burgarede, deceased, as Captain Lieutenant. He had the command of the artillery when the writer was encamped on Sunney Hill.

“We are all ready for a march, and have been so so long that most of the poor officers are starving by keeping a field equipage all the winter. We are now in hopes of a courier every hour from England, that will determine whether we march or not. I own I have always been for the latter. The Hanoverians have had positive orders from Lord Stair to march, and have said they will begin on Monday next the 7th (?); but till I see Major-Gen. Ilton go through this place [I] will not believe they will stir. We have sent three Regiments of foot to Mons, and should the Army move I shall go thither with the heavy cavalry for some time, where I should be glad your Grace’s Regiment would join us.

[P.S.] “Major-Gen. Ilton is this day gone through this place, and I hear we are to begin our march this day fortnight, and that the Hessen (sic) are to go to Mons, Charlyroi, and Ath.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1743, May 7, o.s., Newit.—“I arrived last night from Hecht within a league and a half of Frankfort, having been sent to Hecht to receive Lord Staires’s commands in regard to the marching of the train, which is here. Lord Staire, who is at Hecht, has had an account of the action that happened between the Austrians and Bavarians, which is as follows:—

“The famous partisan La Croix was attacked by a much superior force, and defended himself till his party of seven hundred men were almost destroyed, himself wounded and taken prisoner. The French, under the command of Broglio, were spectators of this affair, and so far from giving him the succour which they not only perceived he wanted, but which he frequently demanded, a panic (or design, as is conjectured) seized them, and they retired to the other side of the Isser, leaving the Austrians masters of the whole country between the Jan and the Isser. The Austrians took the advantage of this retreat, and two days afterwards fell upon a body of seven thousand Bavarians, and cut them to pieces, wounded and took the Gen. Menenz prisoner, with several of their principal officers.

* “Order” struck out.

† “Ilton” in the next letter.

“The politicians of the Army imagine the French endeavour to make the Imperialists destroy each other, in order to promote some honest scheme of their own.

“Part of the foot Guards began to encamp yesterday within half a league of Hecht, and the whole Army is moving toward that place. One part of the Army will be encamped within a league of Frankfort. All the horse will be passed the Rhine in eight days; all the foot, excepting Brag’s and Howard’s, are passed. The Train march from hence tomorrow for Hecht; it is about 25 leagues from hence; and we are within five leagues of Coblins; it is eight days’ march to Hecht.”

THOMAS JONES to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, May 29, Sunday, Hoechst.—“As affairs here seem (by the strongest appearances) to be drawing to a crisis, I take the liberty to give your Grace the following account.

“A few days since all the foot, dragoons, and artillery, both English and Hanoverian, passed the Main and encamped about a mile on the other side, their right reaching to the village called Keldersbach; the several Regiments of English horse taking the ground the footguards had left, as they came up; the Austrians (in number about eight thousand) remaining still in their camp at Hoffenheim. During this time the French were said to have crossed the Rhine, and were from us.

“Late on Friday night last his Excellency Lord Stair had an express from Mayence, on which the three battalions of Guards and a brigade of foot (consisting of Gen. Howard’s, Brigadier Ponsonby’s, and Handy-side’s Regiments) were ordered to march that moment to possess themselves of an advantageous piece of ground about two mile from the camp, which has a very large wood both in front and rear of it. On Saturday morning Lieut. Pattison was detached with six pieces of cannon to join them. ’Twas now declared that the French had recrossed the Rhine and were moving towards us, and that they had already advanced their right wing to Darmstadd. This day my Lord Stair has received advice that the French have absolute orders to fight us at all events. The truth of this is confirmed by their army’s being now within seven mile of us, which is marching up in order of battle. The Austrians and our horse were immediately directed to pass the Main, and march with the whole Army and artillery to the above mentioned ground, where the line of battle is formed, and they all rest on their arms this night to expect the enemy. Some of their hussars have been already seen, and ’tis thought the Army will be engaged by break of day. What tomorrow brings forth shall very faithfully be related to your Grace. Their army is reckoned at the most but six and thirty thousand, from which a great number of deserters daily come in to us; ours, thirty-four thousand complete, full of health and spirit. The Hessians are not yet come up, but expected in a few days. ’Tis the general opinion, if they do not attack us soon, we unavoidably must them, they having stopped all forage coming up the Rhine and Main, which was our chief dependence.

Our horses are already reduced to eight pounds of hay each per day, which is half their usual allowance; and as the oats are very bad, they must soon be infallibly ruined, unless green forage can be had, of which there is no likelihood at present."

THOMAS JONES to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, [June?]* May 3, Hoechst.—“I two days since did myself the honour to acquaint your Grace with the several steps the Army had lately taken, and that they were then drawn up in order of battle on an advantageous piece of ground, expecting the French to attack them; but to the great concern and disappointment of the whole they never came, which all here think a misfortune, as our situation and the resolution that appeared in our soldiers must have given the victory to us. After 24 hours' waiting, the troops were obliged to retire, as there was no possibility to subsist them in that place. My Lord Stair gave orders that they should all recross the Main for our better security till the forces that are expected shall join us, as 'tis now said the French are almost double our numbers. Our whole army is encamped on the river's side near Hoechst, where 'tis thought we shall remain till his Majesty's [George II.] arrival, which is expected in a few days. The troops designed for his escort march tomorrow.

“Two expresses arrived here last night to Lord Stair and the Duke d'Arenberg with the news, that Prince Charles [of Lorraine] has had another battle with the French, where Marshal Broglio commanded, between the villages of Strobingen and Platling, on the banks of the Danube, wherein the French have lost upwards of three thousand men, with all their baggage, and are quite beat out of Bavaria.”

THOMAS JONES to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, June 18, Hanau.—“As 'tis said an express went yesterday for England, I make no doubt but your Grace will have heard of our battle with the French before this. I shall however give your Grace the best account of it I at present can, and with as much truth as possible.

“Your Grace I presume may have heard that our whole Army was encamped near Aschaffenburg, where there was a very important pass, which our troops had some time before secured; notwithstanding which, the French marched up and encamped opposite to us on the other side of the river. We stayed [t]here till the want of provision obliged us to move towards this place, for which orders were given on Wednesday, 15th inst., which were, that the whole Army should strike their tents that night, and lie on their arms, to have their baggage loaded, and be in a readiness to march by break of day on Thursday morning, which was begun about one a clock and continued till near seven, when the Army was drawn up in form, for the sake (as 'twas said) of encamping regularly, and I believe at this time nobody thought of fighting. About nine, a battery of four guns from the French began to play on us from the other side of the river, which did some damage to our baggage. Soon after fifteen battalions of our foot marched in great haste to face the French, who had crossed the river about a league beyond us, the rest of the Army following. They now began to attack us very warmly with a great number of cannon (some 18 pounders), which were very advantageously placed along the river's side. Several detachments of our artillery was [wero] made, which kept a continual fire on them, and amazed them much. About eleven the cannonading began between the two armies, which was excessive hot on both sides, and lasted till one, when his Majesty [George II.], after having given the necessary orders for the disposition of his troops, galloped to the head of the Army, and the battle immediately ensued. The Household troops attack[ed] with great bravery, and broke through our first line of foot, but were soon repulsed, and almost all destroyed or taken. I think I may safely say I saw at least fifty of their officers prisoners, three of them marshals de camp. The whole body of French soon afterwards gave way, and continued retreating till between 4 and 5 in the evening, when they ran and repassed their bridges in great confusion; which 'tis said broke down, and several perished in the river. Soon after their retreat, a whole battalion of French deserted to us.

* June is written over May by another hand.

“His Majesty continued the whole time in the heat of all the action, which is said to be as fierce a one as has been ever known. His Royal Highness the Duke [of Cumberland] was seen in every place animating the soldiers, but was pretty severely wounded at last in the leg, though 'tis thought he's out of danger. His horse was shot in several places. All agree in the opinion that our artillery did great service, and behaved to a man exceeding well. Several of the people were killed, but we have lost no officer; Depaw the surgeon only is missing. Our chiefest loss is General Clayton, who was shot through the body and died instantly. 'Tis conjectured that the French had an intention by their crossing the river either to attack us in our camp, or to cut off the Hessians, who were marched as far as this place to join us. The battle was fought near a village called Detingen, about midway between Hanau and Aschaffenburg. Our Army is now marching towards Frankfort, to secure provisions and forage, for the want of which we have all suffered.

“This, my Lord, is the chief of what I can at present collect, but Mr. Speed (who begs his duty to your Grace) will send a more perfect account when the returns of the Army are given in.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1743,] June 27, o. s., Camp near Hanau.—“I should not have failed writing to your Grace sooner, could I have given your Grace any particular account of our late engagement. I do not doubt but your Grace has heard various reports of the loss of the enemy, and likewise of our own. It is very difficult to come at the truth even on the spot; but I have enquired of those who were most likely to inform me, and they say that by the returns (which I could not get a sight of) from the several Regiments the Allies have lost 1,200 men and about 1,500 wounded. The French, by comparing the different informations of deserters and the best intelligence that can be got, have had 4,000 men killed and drowned in repassing the Maine, and about the same number wounded; and many of their officers are killed and wounded, and some of rank; and many sent back on their parole that were taken prisoners.

“We have taken six standards and a pair of colours. The standard belonging to the Mousquetaires noires, which was taken, was buckled to the Cornet, and he buckled to his horse; it was white, embroidered with gold and silver; in the middle was [were] nine arrows tied with a wreath, all stained with blood, and the motto, Alterius Jovis altera tela.

“The French say we treated them with great humanity, but complain of the cruelty of the Austrians and Hanoverians.

“Sixteen English officers are killed; excepting General Clayton, none above the degree of Captain; and thirty-six are wounded, most of which are likely to recover. It has been currently reported in camp, and some officers have written to England, that we had taken twenty pieces of cannon; to my knowledge there is not one taken, having examined the Austrian and Hanoverian train; but I am sorry to say we have lost one by our horses running away, and the French found it the next day; that, and a standard of Bland’s, they have to boast of.

“Col. Mordaunt, [e]querry to the King, has resigned his place by reason a Hanoverian officer, likewise [e]querry to the King as Elector, insisted on holding his stirrup, though Col. Mordaunt was in waiting, who told him that of course it was his duty; upon which the other answered, that he had his Majesty’s orders for what he did. No one as yet has asked for the place; this happened three days since. Lord Lowden and Col. Douglas of the Guards are appointed Aid-de-Champs (sic) to the King, but it is said they will get no rank by it.

“Lord Harcourt has been with the Emperor from the King with compliments, which were returned the next day, and it is affirmed the Emperor has declared himself neuter; now the discourse among the French at Frankfort is, ‘What business have we here?’ meaning themselves; they are very sick of Germany.

“The following gentlemen were to have been made Knights Bannerets, on account of our late victory:—the Duke; the Lords Stair, Dunmore, Rothes, Crawford; the Generals Honeywood, Legoniere, Cope, Hawly, Husk, Poltney, Onslow, and the Gen. Campbels (sic). But some declining the honour put a stop to the whole.

“The Duke has been very ill of his wound, but is much better at present.”

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

[1743,] July 14, o.s., Camp near Hanau.—“I writ to your Grace twelve days since, and should have sent your Grace a plan of the field of battle before now, but I cannot get a return of the situation of our troops, which Lord Dunmore has promised me so soon as they are given in. Prince Charles came here the day before yesterday, and yesterday his Highness passed along our lines with the King, and seemed much pleased with our people. He returns to his army tomorrow, which is about twenty miles beyond Hidelburgh, which place is seventy miles from Hanau.

“This day the Duke of Richmond set out for Prince Charles his army.

“The following gentlemen are declared Major-Generals: Husk, Onslow, Ponsonby, and Poltney. The Duke of Marlborough and Campbell are the only Brigadiers at present.

“I have by Lord Stairs’s advice presented a memorial to the King. His Lordship, the Duke of Marlborough, and Count de la Lippe stood by me to countenance me when I gave it; and Lord Stair spoke favourably of me to his Majesty at that time in regard to our late action. Their names, with the Duke of Richmond’s, were inserted in the memorial; to whom I referred his Majesty as to my character. He was so gracious as to read it before me. What effect it may have I cannot say, but I am in some degree already rewarded by the satisfaction I have in thinking I have done what is right. Your Grace will judge that nothing extraordinary is doing among us by my making myself the subject of so great a part of this letter. I beg my humble respects to my Lady Duchess, and I should think myself very fortunate to have it in my power to execute any commission her Grace may have in this part of the world, or in Flanders, for it is said that the Army is to repass the Rhine soon."

THOMAS JONES to [the DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH].

1743, July 16, Hanau.—"There are several plans of the battle of Dettingen drawing by our Engineers to send to your Grace, but cannot be finished till the exact disposition of our troops is known, which can only be by a report from every Regiment of their own station, as our time was too short to have any account of their order on the spot; and as (in the mean time) it may afford your Grace some pleasure to see the field only, I have taken the liberty to send the enclosed plan, which describes the ground very near just, and will serve at least to show your Grace the advantages the French had, and the very dangerous situation we were in. The Marshal de Noailles proposed to defend the morass at Dettingen with all his force, and to have 15,000 men ready to fall on our rear the moment we attacked this pass. If his design had been well executed, 'twould have gone very hard with us; but the Dukes of Grammont and D'Arcourt, eager for the combat, crossed the morass with some few battalions and squadrons on our appearance, which obliged their whole army to follow, and fortunately gave us an opportunity to beat them out of the field before the 15,000 men, who had passed the bridge at Aschaffenburg, could come up, and who returned in the greatest confusion on the news of their army being defeated.

"I likewise send your Grace a list of their killed and wounded, which they themselves confess to be a true one; but a priest, the head of the Convent of Seeligenstadt, was a few days since introduced to his Majesty, and gave his word and honour that there was [were] 4,300 of their wounded in his Convent and that village, which he had visited and counted. The general opinion here is, that they can't have lost less than 10,000 men by this battle, either killed, wounded, or deserted. Prince Charles of Lorraine with Count Ravenhuller arrived here last night, and this day dined with his Majesty.

"'Tis said magazines are raising for us at Coblentz, where 'tis thought we shall soon march to repass the Rhine."

THOMAS JONES to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, Aug. 4, n.s., Sunday, Hanau.—"I have the honour to acquaint your Grace that I have just received my last orders from Lord Stair for Ostend, to which place I am going with the utmost speed to hasten all the battering train to Bruxelles by water, and from thence I believe by land to Namur, as 'tis said the Army, which marches on Friday next, will take that route. I have letters to Count Kinigsegg at Bruxelles to have all his assistance; and as Lord Stair was pleased to point me out for this undertaking, I hope by my diligence and expedition to merit both his and your Grace's favours.

[P.S.] "Lord De la War desires his best compliments to your Grace."

SAM. SPEED to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1743, Aug. 5, Camp near Mentz.—"Nothing of moment has happened since Colonel Pattison writ to inform your Grace of the train's being ordered to Bruxells from Ostend. Yesterday the Austrians that are part of our Army passed the Rhine, and the remainder is to follow them in two or three days, according to the report in the Camp. The clothing of the Army and train joined us yesterday, escorted by the Highland Regiment, Lord Rothes his Regiment, with a battalion of St. Clare's and Howard's Regiment.

"Yesterday, the Generals Honeywood, Campbell, and Cope, and Legonier were made Knights of the Bath.

"Col. Piers died the 27th of last month. There are many competitors for General Husk's Regiment, who is to have Piers' that was.

"Captain Sumpter, died last night after seven days' sickness. Many of our people have died of the flux, and many are ill at present of the same disorder, owing to the quantity of fruit they eat.

"I mentioned in my last my design of sending your Grace a plan of the battle of Dettingen, and should not have failed to have done it before now, but I cannot get a disposition of the troops. I have enquired of the general officers, and they can give me no information; and they find, by comparing the returns of the several Regiments, they contradict each other. Not expecting to come to action when we marched from our ground is the reason things were in such a confusion.

"I hope the next news your Grace may hear from this part of the world will be that Prince Charles has passed the Rhine, and that we have beat the French out of their entrenchments."

ANDREW STONE to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, Aug. 4, Whitehall.— . . . "Yesterday and this day we had two messengers from Lord Carteret, and I have the honour to send your Grace enclosed what we have received from his Lordship, or from other hands, of the motions of the armies, which, your Grace will see, will very soon be all on the other side of the Rhine. What Mr. Trevor mentions of the passage of 8,000 Austrians on the 4th inst. is not looked upon here as quite certain, though it is strongly asserted by the messenger, who says he had his intelligence from the officer of Hussars. Nothing is as yet done with regard to the vacancy occasioned by the death of Lord Wilmington."

[The DUKE OF] RICHMOND "&c." to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU.]

1743, Aug.  $\frac{10}{21}$ , King's quarters at Riberick.—"I received your obliging letter, and accordingly told Cockayne and Newton to attend, which they did, and Cockayne has sent you a full account of the whole ceremony by this messenger. Enclosed is another plan of the battle, better than the last, but very bad still. A, as I have marked it, is where Ilton the confectioner preserved the gardes (sic). I have got a very good drawn plan of it, but the Duke [of Cumberland] has the finest of all, which is all drawn by measure, and is really not only exact, but a fine drawn thing; he intends to have [John] Pine engrave and print off a few only for him, to give away, so you may be sure of one of them.

"We are here in a very fine palace of Prince Nassaw-Ousing, who is the truest Prince Allemand you ever saw. . . . The situation here is the finest I ever saw, close upon the Rhine, which is an immense breadth, full of islands, and Mayence is the pointe de vue, about a league off. Our own bridge is just before our windows. The Austrians have already passed, and the Hanoverians are passing today, and the English and Hessians tomorrow; which goes on mighty quietly, for there is not a Frenchman within a hundred miles of us. Where we are to go the Lord knows, but I suppose Lorraine or Alsatia. Prince Charles will not pass so easily; he has now collected his whole army together between Fribourg and Brisack, and will certainly attempt, and I dare swear effect, a passage thereabouts, though to be sure with some bloody noses, for Comte de Saxe has attended him along the Rhine on the opposite side from Strasbourg.

[P.S.] "You can't imagine what a number of pretty fellows of Pandours, Croats, Warras dins, &c., I saw at Prince Charles's army. We have some very pretty ones with us here, particularly Mentzel, with his Rascians. A tailor is now at work making a Hussar's dress for [Lord] March, and a Pandour's for George.*

"'Tis the Pandour officers that have dresses of their own, but most of the men are dressed in the last habit they take, whether a French officer's, a friar's, a German Prince's nightgown, a lady's hoop petticoat, or a pett-en-l'air; but they put everything on, and the last time they plundered Prince Conti's baggage, several of them had four or five suits of French laced clothes upon them at a time, and as many hats and feathers, one above another."

THOMAS JONES to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1743, Aug. 13, Bruxelles.—"Nothing very material has happened since I last did myself the honour of writing to your Grace, but the death of poor Major Sumpter, whom all the world laments, and the Artillery will find a great loss in. About one third of the battering train arrived here two days since, where it waits till further orders, for which Count Kiningsegg sent an express last night to Lord Stair. I have taken all the proper measures for transporting it to Namur with the greatest expedition, and at a very easy rate; but there, near 4,000 horses will be required if 'tis to go on service, which I fear will not be easily had. The whole will be at this place in a few days. My Lord Stair was pleased to entrust this whole business to my care and management, in which I have been like to meet with some difficulties from certain punctilios among the officers of the Artillery, which I formerly had the honour to mention to your Grace, and which I hope time and your Grace's great goodness to me will mend."

ANDREW STONE to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1745, Aug. 23, Whitehall.—"A messenger came in late this evening, with letters from Lord Carteret, dated the  $\frac{1}{2}$ <sup>6</sup> inst., enclosing a warrant, signed by his Majesty, appointing Mr. Pelham to be First Commissioner of the Treasury. There is nothing material from the Army they are in full march towards Oppenheim."

[SAM. SPEED] to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1743, Aug. 25, o.s., Camp near Worms.—"This letter is to inform your Grace that Lord Stair resigned all his employments yesterday, to the concern of many of the English Army. His Lordship's resigning is of no loss to the service, for he has only had the character of commanding, without the power of acting, and, as I am credibly informed, when he has given any commands, they have been contradicted. His Lordship will set out for England in a very few days."

Signature torn off.

* George Henry Lennox, the writer's second son.

The DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

[1743,] Sept. 11, n.s., Worms.—“I ought to be ashamed to let the first letter I write be a petition, instead of keeping my word and sending an account of our military transactions, but they have been and still are such as I think ought not to be put in writing; so I hope you'll forgive my silence about 'em till I have the pleasure of seeing you, and allow me to recommend the bearer of this to your protection. His desire is to be employed as an Engineer, which I am told by better judges than myself he understands. He was Adjutant to Col. Jeffery's Regiment, but quitted it for a Lieu. (sic) in one of the American Regiments, that he might have the pleasure of serving in the W. Indies; but as those Regiments are broke and the officers on half pay, he is in great distress, and was in hopes of being employed in this Army, but Engineers are one of those things we have no notion of; so he is forced, after having spent what he had left, to return to England. If you have any vacancies, and he is found on examination fit for it, you will do a real act of charity in preferring him.

[P.S.] “His name is Artieres.”

GENERAL OGLETHORP to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[c. 1745? ]—“Your Grace's goodness to me would not have made me take the liberty to intrude upon you with letters had not Captain Horton told me that your Grace would be glad of hearing from this part of the world. Doubtless your Grace has before this time heard of the Spaniards having invaded this Province, and the manner in which they were drove out of it. The men-of-war acted by precedent of former times, and consequently did not come till all was over, and the Spaniards had full time to go off by sea. Advices from all sides confirm that they are preparing for a second invasion, and indeed the temptation is very great. Carolina has above 40,000 negroes, and not 4000 white men that can bear arms, and those mere mititia. If they remove us, all that country is at their pleasure; yet there is a kind of stupid security that makes them not believe they are in danger, and not thank those who would prepare against it.

“This Province has never yet had any cannon from the Ordnance. I hope your Grace will countenance the application for necessary artillery.

“Your Grace's curiosity in the affairs of America may perhaps make it agreeable to ask some questions of Capt. Dunbar, who brings this; he has been further by land than most people—was with me in the Creke Nation, several hundred miles from the sea, so that we crossed those rivers that fall into the Gulf of Mexico, and were very near the Mississippi.”

*Not signed.**

[RT. HON.] H. FOX to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1746, June 6, Conduit Street.—“I am out of order this afternoon, or would do myself the honour of waiting on your Grace with the enclosed paper, which was prepared by his Majesty's direction, with the advice of Mr. Pelham and Sir John Legonier, and with which I this day waited on his Majesty, and received his Majesty's approbation thereof, and orders agreeable thereunto. It will therefore be necessary for me to order your Grace's Regiment of Carabineers forthwith from Canterbury to Northamptonshire. I should be extremely glad, if your Grace thinks of anything that may be added to or altered in the method proposed in the enclosed paper, to be honoured with your Grace's commands upon it."

* The writer's name is given in another hand at the top of the page.

[RT. HON.] H. FOX to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1746, June 7, War Office.—“I am very sorry what was always intended, that the Regiments who are from necessity to continue some time longer than the rest, should be marched into their own counties before reduced, was not more clearly expressed. Your Grace may be assured that it will be so, and I shall have the honour of writing a letter to your Grace by his Majesty's command, in which there will be the strongest assurances of this, as well as of their being relieved in order to their being marched home and there reduced as soon as possible.

“Your Grace may observe the reason for giving no more than four, five, or six days' pay at parting is, a fear lest it might prevent their so readily enlisting in old Regiments. But as this may be easily altered when instructions shall be given to the General Officer who is to reduce them, I will endeavour to see your Grace before such instructions are sent with regard to the Regiments in these circumstances; and if your Grace thinks the above-mentioned reason not a good one, and that it may be proper to make a difference between these and the other Regiments, I will not fail to lay your Grace's opinion before those with whom I believe it will have great weight.”

[RT. HON.] H. FOX to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

[1746,] June 9, 10 o'clock, Conduit Street.—“I was from home when your Grace's letter came, and did not receive that honour till the last moment. I enclose to your Grace a copy of the letter which I intended to have the honour of writing to your Grace and the Colonels of the other three Regiments not immediately to be disbanded, tomorrow. If your Grace would have anything added that may still farther convince the men of the sincerity of H.M.'s intention to relieve them as soon as possible and then march them to their own countries, and there reduce them, I will most willingly receive your Grace's commands upon it, and for that purpose will do myself the honour to wait on your Grace, if it be convenient, at 11 tomorrow.

“I should likewise be extremely glad, for the reasons contained in your Grace's and Col. Brudenell's letters, if any determinate time could be fixed. But that must depend on the arrival of forces from the Duke [of Cumberland], of which I have no manner of knowledge. . . .

[P.S.] “I have a letter from Lt.-Col. Fleming agreeable to what Lt.-Col. Brudenell writes to your Grace.”

[RT. HON. H. FOX] to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, and others.

1746, June 10, War Office.—“H[is] M[ajesty] has thought fit to order such of the new raised Regiments who are not doing duty upon Prisoners of War and Rebel Prisoners, or can be relieved in that duty, to march into the countries they were respectively raised in, there to be disbanded. But as the Regiment under your Grace's command is now upon that duty in the Garrison of Carlisle, and cannot consistent with the service be immediately relieved, I am commanded by H[is] Majesty to assure your Grace that orders will be sent as soon as possible for the relief of your Regiment, and that their march to Northamptonshire, in order to be reduced there in like manner with the other new corps, shall immediately follow their being so relieved. Your Grace may be sure that all possible dispatch shall be used, and that H[is] Majesty is truly sensible of the hardship which this necessity of the service lays them under beyond what the other new corps are exposed to. He will relieve them from it as soon as ever the arrival of some of the Regiments now under the Duke's command in N. Britain shall make it practicable.

"This your Grace is desired to make the officers and men of your Regiment acquainted with; and H.M. makes no doubt but that the same alacrity and duty which has so manifestly appeared in their behaviour on all occasions, and in which H.M. expresses the highest satisfaction, will make them submit cheerfully to this necessity, when your Grace shall have assured them it shall be but a short delay.

"I, &c. &c."

In Fox's hand, not signed. Endorsed: Draft of a letter to be sent to the Dukes of Montagu and Bedford, the Marquis of Granby, and the Earl of Halifax, on June 10, 1746.

[RT. HON.] H. FOX to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1746, June 26, War Office.—"His Majesty has ordered Bragg's, Harrison's, and Richbel's Regiments not to disembark, but proceed immediately by sea to Newcastle, from whence one of them is to relieve your Grace's and Lord Halifax's Regiments. I am dispatching the necessary orders to St. Clair, and shall tomorrow by express let the commanding officer of your Grace's Regiment know how speedily he may expect to be relieved, which may tend much to satisfy the men. If your Grace has any commands sent here tomorrow morning, they may be forwarded by the same express, which shall likewise carry orders for the march of your Grace's Regiment into Northamptonshire as soon as relieved, in order to be there reduced."

[RT. HON.] H. FOX to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1746, Dec. 2, War Office.—"I told his Majesty what your Grace said, and concluded from thence that it might be taken for granted that your officers as well as your Grace would prefer Dragoons here to Horse in Ireland. Your Grace's Regiment of Dragoons here is to have rank according to their creation as Horse. Give me leave to put your Grace in mind to stop your contract for horse-clothing.

"H.M. has added to this saving measure the reduction of his two youngest Troops of Horse Guards. I hope the Parliament will enable H.M. to relieve the hard cases that will arise of both officers and men; and in order to make this reduction as easy to them as may be, I shall be extremely obliged to your Grace if you will give me leave to have recourse to you, for your Grace's opinion, before the manner in which it should be done shall be laid before H.M."

THE DUKE OF RICHMOND, &c., to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, Master General of the Ordnance, Whitehall.

1746, Dec. 3, Goodwood.—"The bearer is Mr. Caffyn, who I told your Grace had an invention to fire guns though they were spiked, and make them useful."

[ADMIRAL] CHARLES KNOWLES to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1747, March 29, Louisbourg. Duplicate.—“As your Grace was pleased some time ago to honour me with your approbation in the proposal I made for wresting the Island of S<sup>ta</sup> Lucy out of the hands of the French, which I was then prevented doing by being relieved in the command at the Leeward Islands by Commodore Lee; I take the liberty to acquaint your Grace of my having requested his Majesty’s leave to go to the West Indies during the winter (as I find I have not constitution to bear the severe cold of that season here), and that I have proposed to the Ministry and Admiralty my joining Commodore Legge with such ships as I shall have upon this station, and taking a thousand men out of the Garrison, and what else shall be necessary for the undertaking, and this next December to seize directly upon it, without the enemy having the least previous notice, which I am confident may be done; and I am not without hopes of subduing Grenada and St. Vincent’s at the same time. Such a stroke would effectually distress Martinique, as that Island draws the chief part of its refreshments from those others. What advantages in general; it might further be to his Majesty’s service I submit to your Grace, and shall only add that if my proposal is so fortunate to be countenanced, I shall be proud of your Grace’s commands.”

Signed.

[ADMIRAL] CHARLES KNOWLES to the DUKE [OF MONTAGU].

1747, March 29, Louisbourg. Duplicate.—“Captain Bastide, the Engineer at this place, having acquainted me he has desired leave to come home, I take the liberty to request of your Grace, that I may be appointed in his room. Brigadier Petit was formerly Engineer at Minorca, and Governor at the same time; and as your Grace did me the honour of appointing me an Engineer upon the Carthagea expedition, my having been upon your establishment already I hope will entitle me to this favour.

ANDREW STONE to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

[1747, Aug. ?], Friday morning, 11 o’clock, Newcastle House.—“I am commanded by my Lord Duke of Newcastle to send this messenger, in the utmost hurry, to beg your Grace would have the goodness, immediately upon the receipt of this note, to come directly to Kensington, where his Grace hopes to see you before he returns from thence. The occasion of giving your Grace this sudden trouble is an account just now received from Berg-op-Zoom, which continues to make a stout defence. The Governor of that place has sent to desire earnestly that some artillery men may be immediately sent thither from hence, which it is hoped your Grace may be able to supply him with. We have great hopes they will be able to hold out.”

WM. SHERBORNE to [the DUCHESS OF MONTAGU].

1747, Sept. 4.— . . . “I understand you remain still at Whitehall, and that Montague House is quite abandoned. How can your Grace dispense with his Grace’s continuing at Whitehall, when you recollect the many pleasing things [which] have befallen you there? . . .

“I did myself the honour to write to her Grace the Duchess of Beaufort—the divorced Duchess—this last post . . . ; intending for Pembridge, the place of my nativity, and proposing to wait on some of the company that the town of Hereford is pretty full of at present, occasioned by a Concert of Music that is performed here every third year. Lord Bateman left the town yesterday; Lord Carpenter and his family—Lady, son, and daughter—leave it this day, as well as Lady Coningsby and Lady Frances.*

[P.S.] “The Duke of Beaufort, I believe, intends to be canonised for a saint, though sure there are few instances of the consent of the Church on such a delinquency.”

[LORD] ARCHER to [the DUKE OF MONTAGU].

1747, Sept. 14, Umberslade.—“I should not have taken the liberty of troubling your Grace with this letter, had I not been earnestly solicited by most of the principal people of Birmingham, who some time since signed a petition to your Grace in behalf of Joseph Jefferys, who has been several years in the train of Artillery. He is the son of a very considerable timber merchant in Birmingham, that deals for very large sums; and if your Grace would be so good as to advance him a little higher than he is at present, it would be attended with good consequences, as it would very much oblige such a great number of people as signed the petition. These people showed a very proper zeal in the time of the Rebellion, and would look upon this favour as a return for the trouble and expense they were at in raising a great many men for your Grace’s and other new-raised Regiments. The young man was in the late Battle, and behaved very well, and I have taken the liberty to enclose his account of it, that your Grace may judge a little of his behaviour and understanding.”

ROBERT KEITH [of Craig] to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1747, Sept. 29-] Oct. 10, n.s., Hague.—“I have received the honour of your Lordship’s letter of the 20th of September, and very luckily it happens that one of the very best cooks in this country is now out of place; he served Baron Sporken for eight or nine years, and has since been in Count Goloskin’s service. I sent for him and asked the conditions he would go to England upon; the terms he proposed are, sixty guineas in the year, the ordinary profits of the kitchen, and wine. If your Lordship thinks them reasonable, I shall engage him directly, and send him over to England forthwith. One thing I had almost forgot, which is, that I promised the expense of his journey should be defrayed, and that his wages should begin to run from the day of his setting out from hence. If your Lordship should take him into your service, I imagine you would be pleased with him, for Lord Sandwich had the use of him from his old master Sporken upon his first going to Breda, and I never saw things better nor in better order than during that time.

“I am glad to be able to inform your Lordship that upon Saturday last the nobles proposed to the States of Holland to make the office of Stadt-holder, &c., hereditary in the Prince of Orange’s family, first to his heirs male, and in default of them to the heirs female, with a clause that if the Prince should die whilst his children are under age, the Princess his spouse should be tutress to the child (sic), with the title of Governess of the Province, &c., and a power to choose a representative to discharge the functions of the office during the nonage. This proposal was so well received in the States that people make no doubt here of its being carried through as soon as the States re-assemble, which will be some time of the next week, the Deputies being gone home to their respective towns in order to receive instructions about this important affair, which it is hoped will be productive of the best effects, with regard to the common cause.

* “Hanbury,” struck out.

"I have no other news to trouble your Lordship with, only that both the French army and ours are upon the point of entering into winter quarters, and his R. H. the Duke [of Cumberland] is expected here in ten days. The French have taken the Fort Frederick Henry by capitulation, but Lillo and another fort upon the Scheld still hold out, and it is hoped they will resist so long as to make it impossible for the enemy to attempt anything further during this campaign.

"My Lady Cardigan needs make no apology for not writing. . . . As your Lordship makes no mention of my Lady's having received the tea-kettle, I shall send over another by the first safe hand, having bespoke it some time ago upon the supposition of the other's being lost."

ROBERT KEITH to [the EARL OF CARDIGAN].

[1747,] Oct. [16-]27, Hague.—"Immediately upon receiving the honour of your Lordship's letter of the 8th, I sent for the cook, who accepted of the Duke of Montagu's offer of eighty pounds a year tout court, and will accordingly set out from hence about the beginning of November, n.s. As I have not the honour of the Duke of Montagu's correspondence, I shall take the liberty of giving him a letter for your Lordship, and I shall be very well pleased to hear that his Grace approves of him. I am ashamed to mention the tea-kettle any more, but as I did suppose that the first might be lost, I have ordered another to be made, which the cook shall bring over with him, if I do not get a safe hand to send it by sooner.

"His Royal Highness the Duke [of Cumberland] is still here, and God knows how many Princes and Generals besides. However brilliant this may render the Hague, I cannot help being heartily tired of it, and should be very glad if the Generals, in the distribution of winter quarters, would order me mine at London; but as I am afraid that will not be the case, I must content myself with thinking of my friends on your side of the water, since I cannot have the pleasure of seeing them." . . .

WILLIAM [DUKE OF CUMBERLAND] to the DUKE OF MONTAGU.

1747-8, March  $\frac{1}{3}$ , Hague.—"As the number of pontoons which the British train of artillery has at present with them in this country will in all probability not be sufficient for the ensuing campaign, I must desire you would, if possible, furnish them with a further quantity, and use your utmost endeavours that they may be embarked as soon as possible, as the season for action is approaching very fast.

"I must likewise beg of you to hasten the return of what officers belonging to the train here are still in England, as it is full time that the corps should be complete in officers. I am your affectionate friend,

"WILLIAM."

[GEORGE EARL OF CARDIGAN] to the DUKE OF MONTAGU, at Ditton Park, near Collbrook, Bucks.

[c. 1750 ?].—This is not a letter, but a paper, addressed as above, and endorsed "Ld. Card." It appears to be a quotation relating to Hunting and Fowling, which are denounced as "detestable exercises, tragical sports, and altogether inhuman." Begins: Doubtless the rural life. Ends: and the pious beast was obedient to his word.

3 pp.

[GEORGE EARL OF] C[ARDIGAN] to ———.*

[1753.] Oct. 2, Tuesday, Richmond.—"Dear Sir,—We returned hither last night from Ditton, and when I was there, I at last settled everything to my satisfaction relating to the Deputy Governor of Windsor. It has caused a great deal of trouble to your clerk; I was obliged to require his attendance at Ditton, and indeed he was of great use to us. . . .

"I suppose Mr. Key has writ you word that I have appointed Lt.-Col. Brudenell my Deputy Governor of Windsor Castle; and old Captain Budiani I have likewise appointed to act as my Deputy in Col. Brudenell's absence, who must necessarily attend the Regiment at least half the year. It gives me great pleasure that the King my good master is graciously pleased to approve of what I have done herein.

"I am afraid, as you observe, that the season of the year is too far advanced for my Lady to take the Northampton journey with me; though if your new turnpike road is made good from the great North Road to Barton Enclosures, in that case possibly she may come. . . .

"Lord Brudenell is gone into Lorraine to see the camp commanded by the Marshal Belleisle; therefore Mr. Lyte's† drafts may be expected to be larger on account of this journey. My Lord has carried several letters of recommendation with him, and we much approve of this excursion which he proposed to us. . . .

"P.S.—Captain Budiani is Captain of the Poor Knights, and always resident at Windsor. He is a very old officer, and has served with reputation."

Endorsed: Lord C., Oct. 6th 1753 [date of receipt].

[GEORGE EARL OF] C[ARDIGAN] to ———.

[1754, March 22?] Friday night.—"Dear Sir,—My Lady and I hope that you are much better. . . . Lady Dowager Falmouth is lately dead. The late Lord left her for her life the house in St. James's Park next to the Duke of Dorset's, but, as we apprehend, it is now to be sold for the benefit of her younger children. I heard some short time ago that a person was in treaty for it for 2,500*l.*, which surely it is well worth. The poor Duchess of Montagu once offered 3,000*l.* for it, for us, but some disputes arising in the Boscawen family put a stop to it. My Lady says, and very rightly, that it would be every way proper and desirable for my Lord Brudenell, even if he should have a family, and that in the mean time it might be let. . . . I am sorry to hear that poor Mr. Holyoake is dead; he took the small-pox on his journey northwards."

Endorsed: Lord C., March 22nd 1754 [date of receipt].

* One letter of this writer begins, "My dear Folkes."

† Another letter of the same writer, 5 Oct. 1758, refers to his settling an annuity of 300*l.* on Henry Lyte, Esquire.

[GEORGE EARL OF] C[ARDIGAN] to ———.

[1754, Oct. 11,] Friday, Ditton.—“Dear Sir,—I hope you are returned well to Newton. We arrived safe here on Sunday evening. We found the road to Northampton very good, but from thence to Dunchurch intolerably bad, so that we were forced to get out of the chariot several times; and as it was impossible to go fast, we were in the dark, and made our entry with three lanthorns before us, which we got at Hill Morton. We found that we should have come by Daventry, and all the latter part of the road that way would have been good; instead of which we came what is called turnpike, but where there is not any sign of its being so, except the toll-gate, where they had the impudence to make us pay to go along one of the worst roads in England, and where indeed they have not even attempted to repair it. When we arrived at Dunchurch we had not anything to complain of; the inn is a very good one, and the plantation is a very fine and a pretty thing; and we both like Mr. Sutton, who came to us in the morning.”

Endorsed: Lord C., Oct. 13th 1754 [date of receipt].

GREY COOPER [Secretary to the Treasury] to [THE HON.
CHARLES TOWNSEND?].

1765, Nov. 12, London.—“My dear Sir,—I feel a most real concern and surprise that you have given so serious an interpretation to an idle sally that ran out of my unguarded pen with the same ease and liberty that you were wont to allow me to converse with you. If it had a meaning or aim worth throwing a thought away upon, that meaning and (sic) aim was directed towards Burton Pinsent. If the word demigod, or the line that casually followed that idea, has offended you in the smallest degree, I most sincerely beg your pardon for it. Upon the honour of a man of veracity I had no such intention. Let me assure you in the same serious tone that I do not deserve your complaint of my ingratitude for your frankness, affection, and friendship to me, which I often acknowledge when you do not hear me. I meant no equivocal invitation; it was impossible I could mean any positive reproach. You will do me more justice some time or other when you know the true state of my conduct towards you in your absence.

“I cannot bear to write in this formal style to you. My heart is ever pointed towards you, though it mistakes its way of addressing you: Lord Rockingham loves you without art or design, or any equivocal ministerial purpose: and I, who love you both, have nothing which I so much desire as to see you more and more united: and I wish and hope this may be accomplished to the satisfaction of you both. I cannot presume to do more than to wish and hope, and to contribute everything within my short and feeble reach to facilitate and conciliate a measure which is of so much consequence and moment to the public. Let me intreat you, before you lay your head upon your pillow, to replace me again in your heart as a friend who would not, for the sake of any man or any set of men living, be guilty of the intention of offending Mr. Townshend, whose friendship and countenance it has ever been, and still continues to be, my desire and ambition to cultivate and to deserve.

“I saw Lord Townshend at Court on Sunday, who told me you proposed being in town on the 15th, which gave me a sincere and unfeigned pleasure; I would rather spend one easy, cheerful, lively day with you than twenty such as I have travelled through since I saw you. I saw Dingley yesterday, who could talk of nothing but the happiness of Adderbury. He goes with me to Lord Rockingham on Thursday morning. I wish his Lordship may be able to serve him in his object at the S.S.H. My poor little woman has been in the drooping mood for two or three days; she begs to present her most respectful compliments to Lady Dalkeith.* I am, my dear Sir, (not in your cold, formal way) but with all my heart, your most affectionate and faithful servant."

JOHN READE to [the HON. CHARLES TOWNSEND?].

[1774?] Oct. 4, King's College [Cambridge].—"I was charmed with my reception at Adderbury. . . . This morning saw a respectable, unshaken, uncorrupt majority marching from my chambers to King's College Chapel, in support of an honest man, and in opposition to a — (blank) Minister. Such low and scandalous arts had been practised, that I cannot help triumphing and feeling a kind of insolence upon our victory; and you must allow me in my vanity to say that we have set an example not unworthy of a more august assembly. It will not be your fault if it be not imitated. Thus ends this extraordinary contested Election."

(Refers to Lady Dalkeith's children.)

GEORGE, PRINCE OF WALES, and PRINCE FREDERICK.

1776, June 24.—[Translation of] "Justin, L. 11, C. 11," beginning: The Scythians have no boundaries to their country, &c. Signed: George P.

[Same date?].—Another version of the same. Signed (?): Frederick.

GEORGE, PRINCE OF WALES, to the DUKE [OF BUCCLEUCH].

1778, Dec. 8, Queen's House.—"I was happy to learn from Mr. Lyte that you arrived safe in Scotland, and that you found both the Duke and Duchess, as well as all their family, in good health. Your Grace I know will be sorry to hear that you have been deprived of a very great pleasure, I mean, of going to the House of Lords, and I am sure you will be more so when you hear that it sat last night till between 11 and 12 o'clock last night (sic) upon the Proclamation or rather Manifesto which the Commissioners† in North America had published, and at which the Opposition had taken offence.

"The King, though now thank God perfectly recovered, has been ill of a stoppage in his bowels, during a whole day and night, notwithstanding he took medicine three or four times during the day in order to procure a passage; but not being able to effect it, he was obliged the next morning to call in Sir Richard Jebb, who ordered his Majesty to take something which directly set him up again. I would therefore intreat your Grace, if anybody should mention at Dalkeith that it was reported the King had been ill, to say that you had heard in a letter from me, that his Majesty, though now perfectly recovered, had caught a little cold, which indeed was the origin of this trifling indisposition, but which indeed might have been followed by very bad consequences.

"Pray be so kind as to present my compliments to my little friend, and let him know that I hope this year to see him, in the place of a

* She was married to the Hon. Chas. Townshend in 1755.

† The Earl of Carlisle and others.

Light Infantry Man, become a Grenadier. Permit me now, my dear Lord Duke, to conclude with saying that it is impossible for any one to feel more ardour in their wishes that everything that may increase your prosperity and happiness may attend you through the rest of your life, than" (&c.).

P.S. "I forgot to tell your Grace that we met Lord Nugent on horseback, and that when we told him we had heard by Mr. Lyte that you had arrived safe in Scotland, he said he was glad to hear it, but hoped that it was without being robbed."

PRINCE FREDERICK [afterwards DUKE OF YORK AND ALBANY] to LORD ———.

1778, Dec. 17.—"I hope you will excuse my long silence, but you know that our time is so exactly parcelled out, that it is not always in our power to write when we should wish it. I dare say you are not at all sorry to have escaped the House of Lords, though indeed they* have escaped pretty well, on account of the Duke of Richmond's indisposition. Mr. Smelt, who supped with us last night, told us that the report which was spread in the City some days ago, that Admiral Biron had engaged Destin [d'Estaing] and had completely beat him, was much credited; and that a French gentleman, who was just come from Paris, being questioned, owned that there had been a scrambling fight between Admiral Biron and Monsieur Destin, that a French sixty-four gun ship had been run ashore and burnt, and that they were very much afraid for the rest of their squadron, as they had heard nothing of them.

"I suppose that, before this letter arrives, your Grace will have heard that Lady Carmarthen has gone off with Captain Biron of the Coldstream (sic), a son of the Admiral's. I am very much vexed for Lord and Lady Carmarthen's sake, but much more so for Lady Holderness. When Lady Carmarthen went off, she wrote a letter to Madame Cordon, in which she said that she was a ruined woman, that if she had followed her advice she should have lived happily, that she had undone herself, and that she should probably never see her again. However, though monstrous faults are to be laid to Lady Carmarthen's account, yet I must say that, from what his Majesty dropped, one should [think?] that Lord Carmarthen is not free from blame; this however I am not sure of.

"I am afraid that I shall be thought by your friends at Dalkeith to have taken up too much of your time by this long letter. I shall therefore only desire you (sic) to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleugh and Lord Dalkeith."

---

* The British Commissioners ?

III.—THE MONTAGU-ARLINGTON LETTERS.

---

These original letters, written on small quarto paper, gilt-edged, are comprised in two volumes, entitled—

“LETTERS FROM RALPH, DUKE OF MONTAGUE, TO LORD ARLINGTON.
“VOL. I. 1669-1670.”—“VOL. II. 1670-1677.”

The dates really extend from 1668 to 1678. Ralph Montagu was not a peer at that period, for he did not succeed his father as third Baron Montagu till 1683, and was not created Earl till 1689, or Duke till 1705. He was, in fact, twice British Ambassador to France within the dates mentioned, and the correspondence consists chiefly of his letters from Paris to Lord Arlington, principal Secretary of State, and afterwards Lord Chamberlain, giving details of his negociations with the Court of France. A few of his letters are addressed to King Charles II., and there is one letter to him from the King. Three letters are addressed to his sister, Lady Harvey.

Besides his own letters, which are autographs, there are several from his cousin Walter Montagu, Abbot of St. Martin's, near Pontoise, written in very quaint and obscure language, and a few from other persons, addressed to himself. Towards the end of the second volume there are two letters from Thomas Osborne, Earl of Danby, without any addresses.

In the first volume there are engraved portraits of the “Duke of Montagu” and “Bennet, Earl of Arlington”; in the second, another of “Henry Bennet, Earl and Baron of Arlington, Viscount Thetford, K.G., Lord Chamberlain of his Majesty's Household,” &c.

---

VOL. I.

KING CHARLES II. to MR. [RALPH] MONTAGU.

[ ] July 18, Whitehall.—“I haue directed my L<sup>d</sup> Tresurer * to tell you my minde in answer to your letter, and would haue you follow those directions, so as I haue nothing more to add, but to thanke you for the industry wth which you serue me in the station where you are, and to assure you that I will allwayes be your assured frind.

“CHARLES R.”

Addressed: For Mr. Montagu, my Ambassadore in France. Seal—
C.R. and Crown.

[————— to —————.]

[16]68, April 6.— . . . “My father intends next wind to set sail, and so leave me to execute his place; concerning which I have spoke

---

* George Monk, Duke of Albemarle.

to him of all the inconveniencies which some of his friends think may arise by it, but the certainty of those he will receive by doing otherwise has made him take this course.

“First, he has that opinion of my justice, that he will not willingly be answerable for the department of any other. Secondly, the prejudice is very great to his domestic affairs if he should absolutely alter the frame they are in; for if this government be out of his hands before he gets in the money due by the Act, his fortune is for ever undone; and he hopes his own innocence and the King’s goodness will keep him from this extremity. He intends not to trouble his Majesty in staving off complaints, but to be left to himself; and hopes that if he proves not guilty of those miscarriages which are laid to his charge, that the envy of those that have not acted his way, will not be sufficient to remove him from a place that was not coveted for some seven years that once he served in it. After all, if his Majesty believes his affairs may be better in other hands, I am sure you will never hear from him or me the least repining; but in order to that, the employment will be delivered with more satisfaction than ever it was received by either of us.

“If no change should happen here, my father intends to return with all speed, and does desire my going for Flanders as much almost as I do; he has promised to bestir himself in it, and in making conditions; therefore I beg your vigilance in this particular, which, whatever is ordained as to my father, is to me of the greatest consequence. I have writ to the King, Duke [of York], and Prince Rupert, and to the Ambassador; if you think fitting, I beseech you to deliver them, or else burn them. The noise of this has made very many considerable persons to offer themselves to me of each nation, and I doubt not, having permission, but that in a short time I could raise six thousand good foot, one half English and Irish, or else a third part with them of Scotch. Besides the offers made me when I was with you, the countenance of being in the Government would very much facilitate this design, and bring me thither with more advantage. I assure you I prefer the foreign employment to this, as much as my Lord of Buckingham or Lord Orrery can covet it; which is enough to tell you how acceptable your assistance in this will be to me. Betty was so sick as we did not believe she would have lived half an hour, but I thank God is now recovered. Mr. See is come to town, with whom I shall discourse about your affairs, and wherein I may be serviceable to them in whatever capacity I be. I suppose you doubt not of my being zealous and careful in them. My father commanded me to make his excuse for not answering three of your letters, which he intends by the next opportunity to do.”

Copy (?). It is not in Ralph Montagu’s hand, nor is it addressed to a Lord.

Endorsed: Montag., Apr. 6, 68.

W[ALTER] MONTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[16]68, June 20, S. Martin.—“I have now a greater suit to you than your desire was to me by this bearer, Sir John Trevers (sic), for it was much easier to observe all the compliance on my part towards him than it is for you to procure my desire from him . . . for his particular friendship. . . . He hath truly carried away with him a real approbation of his parts and his dexterous application of them to all conjunctures; and truly his temper hath not a little conduced to the consummation of his commission. . . . His acting concurrently with your opinion will produce all the happy results of this good intelligence he is disposed to solicit between the two Crowns, for the good establishment whereof my prayers are now only to act in the Church, the rest of my applications being come off from the Stage; but I shall have a title to your correspondence upon a better claim than your office of State." . . .

Endorsed : Lord Ab[bot] Montagu, by Sir John Trevor.

R. MOUNTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON, Secretary of State, at the Bathe.

1668, [July 20,] Monday noon, London.—“Since your Lordship went out of town, my Lord of Bucking[h]am spoke twice to the King about declaring me his Embassadour for France. The first time the King asked him whether he did not think I was too young; the second time he asked him what he thought of my Lord Sunderland’s going: whereupon my Lord Duke says he gave him some reasons in favour to me, which made him not insist upon my Lord Sunderland, but yet [he] did not at that time resolve anything. Now, my Lord, since the King has of himself taken away his own objection by naming a younger man than myself to the same employment he thought me too young for, I hope your Lordship will be so kind to me as in your next letter to the Treasurer to say something that may move the King to determine this in my favour.”

Endorsed : Mr. Mountague, July 20th, 68.

R. MOUNTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[1668, Oct. 10,] Saturday night, London.—“After I had waited on the Queen to Audly-end, I returned hither to attend the Commissionaires of the Treasury for the allowances your Lordship told me were settled upon Ambassadors; but Mr. Treasurer [Sir Thomas Clifford] told me, since I came to town, that it was to no purpose yet to come to them, for that some of them made a scruple as to the fifteen hundred pound for equipage, and did conceive it was only to be advanced, and afterwards to be reckoned into the ten pound a day. It is not so long since Sir William Coventry’s brother went into Holland but that if he pleased he might remember that three thousand pound for equipage was not included in the allowance of a hundred pound a week; but since he is so punctual, I desire your Lordship would clear that point by another letter to the Commissionaires, for till I have some money I cannot be in any readiness to go when the King shall call upon me. I have writ to my Lord Chamberlain [Edward Montagu, 2nd Earl of Manchester] by this bearer, who is to wait upon him wherever he is, for a warrant for a state and the ornaments for a chapel, which the King always allows, and for what plate is usually allowed out of the Jewel House. I desire your Lordship would do me the favour to write a word or two to him to signify the King’s pleasure for my making haste away, for in these occasions I think he expects notice from your Lordship before he gives out his warrants. I am in a great deal of pain to know how my horses have performed the journey, and how my Lord Crofts bears my turning horse-courser, for that intrenches more upon him than being an Ambassador.”

Endorsed by Lord A. : Octob. 11,* 68. Mr. Montegu. Answered 12.

* This must be the date of receipt, as the 11th was Sunday.

R. MOUNTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON, Principal Secretary of State.

[1668 ?]*—"This is only that this bearer, Mr. Sheaperd, may have the honour to kiss your hand, and be known to you. He is as witty and ingenious [a] man as ever I met with, and may be made very good use of. He is an excellent scholar; he left the University because he was too honest to be a divine. He is very modest, and so not likely to be troublesome to your Lordship, or at least, if I believed so, he should not be recommended by," &c.

Endorsed by Lord A.: Ld. Amb. Montegu, by Mr. Shepherd.

R. MONTAGU † to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, April 23, Paris.—"I writ a letter to your Lordship by Mr. Vaughan, which I hope you received; and presuming that this also is likely to come safe to your hands, it makes me write the freelier to your Lordship. This Court is much like ours in England, full of cabals and stories, of which I have a great many brought to me. How true they are your Lordship may best judge. The hearing of some of them has made me forbear saying much to Madame ‡ about your Lordship, for though I believe she would be very glad of having a good understanding with you, yet she acts so contrary to what should make it, that I think it would not be yet safe to put yourself at all into her hands. I heard from a very good author that she told the King of France there was no good to be expected from me, for I was sent hither to do just as you pleased and directed, which here they do not think is likely to be much to their satisfaction, but that for my Lord Buckingham she durst almost answer for; and I see plainly that they design here as they did [in] England to make you and my Lord Duke fall out, and everybody is very inquisitive of me about it; but I assure them they never will see any such thing.

"Mr. de Lyonne was today to see me. I took several occasions on purpose to speak of you, but he would never say anything. When I named Sir John Trevor, he fell into great praise of him. I told him we thought him a very able man in England, and if you had not found him so in several occasions that you had employed him in, that you never would have preferred him to so great a place. The rest of the conversation passed with great inveighing on his side against the Dutch, and wondering why we were no more desirous of being revenged for all the injuries they had done us, when we might be backed by so good friends as the French.

"My Lord St. Alban's today took his leave of the King, and there was notice taken by the Swedish Resident, who told me of it, that he had a long private conversation with the King; you will find out better than I what it was about. Afterwards he went to Mr. Colbert's, § and was as long with him. Mr. de Turenne and he and Madame and Ruvigni are in great consultations together, and couriers are some time (sic) dispatched into England, which perhaps you do not know of; but if you would give order to the post-master at Dover, you would easily find it out. I will end this as I did my last || in desiring your Lordship to burn it."

Endorsed: My Lord Ambassador Montagu.

* This is placed at the end of Vol. ii., but the signature shows that it was written before April, 1669.

† In this and the following letters he signs as above, instead of "R. Mountagu," as before.

‡ Henrietta Maria, daughter of Charles I., Duchess of Orleans.

§ Jean Batiste Colbert, minister of Louis XIV.

|| Not found.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, May 3, Paris.—“It is so hard a thing to find an opportunity of writing anything of consequence, that I let slip no occasion, especially when there is anything worth your knowledge and of concernment to your Lordship. Since my last, which I writ by Mr. Gumleton, I have watched an opportunity of speaking privately with Madame, which was not easy, she keeping her bed, and having a great deal of company always with her; but this day, Monsieur* being gone to St. Germaine’s, she appointed me between one and two o’clock. I desired, before any other discourse, to know her reason for being dissatisfied with your Lordship. She told me she had no kind of anger in the world to you, but she believed that you slighted her and her friendship, and that whenever she writ to you, you would not so much as answer her letters. I said, for that it behoved a Secretary of State to be more cautions in writing than a Princess need to be. In conclusion, I drove the discourse so far that I found she could have no other exceptions than what James Hambleton puts in her head, and for the future she will be willing to live the best that can be with you. She asked me whether I would answer for you. I told her I would. I was the willingest to put you upon good terms with her, because I find by the King’s letters—some of which she showed me, because she is proud of them, but yet in great confidence—that he writes to her of very private matters, and speaks his mind of all kind of things very freely to her. I think, my Lord, if you approve of it, it would not be amiss if your Lordship writ a civil letter to her, and sent it to me for her, wherein you may take notice how I have answered for you, and how ready you are to make it good.

“I find by her that the French Ambassador † does do you all the ill offices that can be here, and says, if it were not for you, France and England would join, but that as long as you have power there is no hopes of it; and he has put the Ministers here to try other ways. The King of France himself said that the Ambassador had had a great deal of money of him to make friends in England, and all to no purpose.

“I went to Martiall’s to look for gloves, and I saw a present which I am sure must cost a thousand pound packing up. I found since that it is for my Lady Castlemaine, which you will quickly know there. I asked him who[m] it was for, but he could not or would not tell me. I asked him who paid him; he told me, the King of France, and that he had an order from Mr. Colbert for his money, to whom he is to give the things.

“Madame did as good as own to me that she is sure that in a short time England and France will join. I am sure that she cannot know any such thing, but Sir Ellis Layton, who is employed by Ruvigny to to gain my Lord Buckingham, makes it be believed, to get a little more money; and I dare confidently say he is a spy, that tells all he does know, and a great deal that he does not know. For the Duke of Buckingham, they reckon sure of him; there is no letting the Duke of Buckingham know anything about Sir Ellis Layton, because he will never believe it.

“Now to give your Lordship a sum of all the discourse I had with Madame, who by the way is now mightily courted by the King of France for England's sake, [it] is this: that there is no kind of terms that the King may not have from the French. I am an ill judge of what is the best, but whatever is done I would have your Lordship have the doing it; and if there be anything here you would have me say at any time, it will be worth sending an express, for Mr. de Turenne and Mr. de Lionne and Madame drive on this business without Colbert's knowledge, and would fain have it out of his hands; and whenever you please you may take it out of their hands: at least it can do no hurt.

* Philippe, Duke of Orleans, second son of Louis XIII. “Le fils aîné du roi s’appelait Monseigneur ou Dauphin; le frère du roi, Monsieur; la sœur ou la belle-fille du roi, Madame; la fille de Monsieur, Mademoiselle.” Duruy, Hist. de France, II. 299.

† Charles Colber de Croissy. (37th Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records, I. 193.)

"All this stuff I have troubled you with, for you will know the better how to take your measures. I will trouble you no more about Mr. de Moulin, because I hope your Lordship will shortly see him; and pray believe nothing he says till you see Father Patricke, for I never spoke word to him but in his presence. I saw the coach I writ to your Lordship about, but it does not please me. I have bespoke one which you shall have in six weeks. It will be handsomer but dearer than in England, for everything in the world is so here."

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, May 8.—"I hope your Lordship received one of mine by Mr. Gumleton. I have had several esclaircissements with Madame about you, and I believe shortly you will be upon as good terms as you care to be. I venture to speak very freely sometimes of people in my letter to your Lordship, which perhaps the King [Charles II.] would not like if he sees my letter; therefore I have writ this enclosed fit for him to see, if you think it proper. I am very glad you are of my opinion concerning the recalling this Ambassador, and having another sent, which may be a man of quality and understanding. It will a little diminish the credit of these people here, and make the King my master, if he would agree with France, to have much better terms. I will try by Mr. de Lyonne rather than by Madame to have this Ambassador recalled, because she, I believe, would be afraid to meddle in it, till she knew the opinion of both the Kings first; but Mr. de Lyonne, I am sure, will be glad of the thing, and will do all he dares do in it.

"As for Mr. de Moulin, I assure you, my Lord, that it is as much for your sake as my own, that I would be rid of him, for he is an absolute spy of Sir John Trevor's, who I must needs advise you every day more and more to have a care of. He keeps a constant correspondency with Abbé Mountagu, I believe unknown to your Lordship, and he presently tells Mr. de Tellier all he knows. Abbé Mountagu is just in France as my Lord Chamberlain [Manchester] is in England, and extreme useless to me, for he is grown very ignorant and out of fashion.

"I will only tell you this story of Secretary Trevor, that you may look to yourself. Mr. Bridgman, my Lord Keeper's son, who has no great brains nor strong head, one night with Father Patricke and I [me] drinking a glass of wine, I put him upon talking about his father. He told us that his father wondered extremely to find Secretary Trevor so much his friend, and so little my Lord Arlington's; 'for I protest,' says he, 'I declared my opinion freely to the King that I was against his coming into the place, and would not have a hand in it.' You may judge, when my Lord Keeper would say this to his son, that he had a great deal more to say of the same subject which he did not think fit to say to him. I wish that my Lord Duke of Buckingham would not give so much credit to Sir Thomas Osborne as he does, for I am confident, by something I have heard by a brother-in-law of his that went by here, that he betrays all to my Lord Keeper, who I think is not very fit to know everything. Your Lordship shall have your coach as soon as I can get it done.

[P.S.] "I writ to your Lordship by my Lord Clermont. Pray remember the cypher your Lordship mentioned in your letter by the Duke of Richmond.

"I believe it will be no hard matter to have any Ambassador sent into England that you shall like of; therefore pray think of some."

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, May 8, Paris.—"I was extremely troubled to hear the other day, by a chaplain of Mr. de Lionne, who is his great confidant, and does most of his secret business, that the affairs in England are so much altered from what they were when I came away. I am more nearly concerned for the King my master, without being formal or politic, and afterwards for you and my Lord Duke of Buckingham, who are both my friends. Your Lordship now can best judge whether there were any grounds for what he told me, which was to this purpose—that the King had, unknown to either of you, given order for a Proclamation to be put out for the strict prosecution of the laws against all non-Conformists, and that you and the Duke of Buckingham were so discontented that it was thought you would both desire leave to retire.

"Besides, he told me, when that was done, that they had great hopes of the Parliament's meeting; it is a thing they reckon upon mightily in this country, for then, they say, they know all things will be so embroiled in England that the King will be very glad of the friendship of France. I am very ignorant of what the King my master resolves to do, but in my opinion it would be very well if there were something resolved of before the Parliament meets; for there is nothing so certain that by the influence of my Lord Clarendon, which they say now is great in this Parliament, they hope to cross things so as to drive the King to some extremity, and then, if we should agree with them, my Lord Clarendon would have the thanks and credit of it.

"In my discoursing with Mr. de Lyonne about your Lordship, I told him it was the greatest mistake in the world to think you so partially a Spaniard, for that you was nothing but what you thought in your judgment most for your master's good and honour. He answered me, 'Nobody but a Spaniard would 'a made the Triple Ligue.' I told him I thought it was rather a mark of your being a Frenchman, for that by that ligue you had put the King your master upon equal terms with the King his master, which is the only way to make a proud nation and stout people, as the English are, ever to agree with the French; and whilst we were upon unequal terms, there never could be any Alliance nor friendship thought of. After this he had not much to say against you, but rallyingly thanked me for the good news I told him.

"I find the humour of the Ministers and Court here like (sic) no foreign Ministers but such as court them and come a-begging to them, but I dare confidently say the King my master may have what he will reasonably ask from the French King; but whenever he thinks of any such thing, if the King commands me, it will be the best way to have it from the French King's own mouth, for the Ministers here make nothing of words, and the King my master will be much better able, when he knows what the French King proposes, to take his measures accordingly.

"It is hard with all these particularities to write in a fine style, and therefore I hope your Lordship will excuse my ill one. I must put your Lordship in mind to move the King to give me a thousand pound out of the Prizes, which he did almost as good as promise me; but I would not stay to press him for it, because I would make the best shift I could to show the King that what I desire is not unreasonable, for though I have it, it will be five hundred pound less than anybody else that was in this place Ambassador ever had; and yet I am sure that in equipage and living I spend more than any of my predecessors. I swear, my Lord, if I have it not, I am quite broke, which is all need be said by" (&c.)

[P.S.] "Madame is in everything extremely concerned for the King my master's interest, and with a great deal of address and discretion. I think, as long as she lives, the King would do well to save the charges of an Ambassador, and give her the money, for I am afraid Mounsieur gives her not much, but, to speak like my Lord Crofts, spends all a back way upon the Chevalier de Lauraine."

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, May 22, Paris.—"I have answered your Lordship's of May the 6th [o.s.] very formally; this is to thank your Lordship again for the favour you have done me in getting me a thousand pound from the King. I will acknowledge to my Lord Ashley how much I am obliged to him, though I know I owe that part of it to your Lordship too, as well as I do the first. Mr. de Moulin, as soon as he knows what further service your Lordship has to command him here, I believe, will return for England. Your Lordship writes to me concerning another that Mr. Williamson has also recommended to succeed Mr. de Moulin; the person is altogether unknown to me, and, as your Lordship seems to write of him, he is unknown to you every way but as he is recommended.

"I did mention to Mr. Williamson one Mr. Vernon, who was a school-fellow of mine, and, without being partial to him, as witty and modest and understanding a man as ever I knew of his breeding and education. He has been all the world over, and speaks French and Spanish and Italian better than ordinary Englishmen do. He has never been in any employment yet, because, having some fortune of his own, he would never take any till he had first fitted himself for it. I have no partiality in the world towards him; therefore pray, my Lord, if you think Mr. Williamson's man properer, send him as soon as you please; for it is equal to me, and I would be glad to have him that can serve best. Mr. Godolphin knows this Mr. Vernon that I speak to you of, and he will give you a very good character of him; yet he is a nice judge enough, so I will say no more of this matter, but expect your Lordship's commands in it.

"We are mightily rejoiced here with the news of the Queen's being with child. I hope the Queen will continue the same intentions she had once to my Lady Arlington, for though, when I spoke to her concerning your Lady's being governess to the child, she would declare nothing positive, yet I saw her inclination was to my Lady Arlington, which I hope will continue, and be as effectual as a promise; and I hope the ordinary objection which will be made of her not being an English-woman will be an advantage to her, as the not being a native is to all those that pretend to the Crown of Poland; and all the English will be better satisfied with an honour done to a stranger rather than to one of their own country. I wish I were in England, and capable to do your Lordship any service in this particular; but I hope the King's kindness to your Lordship, and the Queen's to your Lady, will be sufficient to procure anything you desire, and I hope you will never want anything from your friends but their good wishes, which you shall never fail of from," (&c.)

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, May 24, Paris.—“I have not till this time had an opportunity of answering your letter, nor the directions you gave me in that which you sent by the Duke of Richmond. I did (sic) upon discourse with Madame, which fell out luckily enough, for she was telling me how the Duke of Buckingham rallied the French Ambassador in all his letters to her; so I took up the discourse, and told her that I wondered, being that France had such a mind to gain England of their side, that they did not send a man of more address and better understanding and quality, who, by his credit and the good opinion we should have of him, might incline us to comply with what they desire. She told me that here they thought to have made us a great compliment in sending the chief Minister's brother, who would see everything performed that his brother should engage for in England. Upon conclusion, I found Madame would be very glad there could be another man sent, but that by reason of Mr. Colbert's great credit here she was not willing to meddle in the recalling him, for fear of displeasing the French King. I told her that what I said was only a fancy of my own, and that out of my good wishes to both the Crowns I was sorry to see a man employed in a business of that consequence, of whom all the Ministers that he must have to do with have so ill an opinion.

“After this, my Lord, being one day with Mr. de Lionne, without making as if it were the business I came about, I brought on this discourse, and, as if it were in confidence, I told him how Mr. Colbert behaved himself in England, and that it would be pity that his folly and conduct should spoil a business which was not altogether impossible. He shook his head, and said, ‘Il est bon homme, nostre Ambassadeur, et ne songe point à malice; il le faut corriger, mais je ne scay pas comment le changer.’ The truth is, all the other Ministers here have such a deference for Colbert that they dare hardly venture upon such a thing, that would be a disgrace to Colbert here, for he values himself the most in the world to the King his master upon his brother's negotiation, which everybody here, though they hope mightily to have (sic) of their friends, yet they hate Colbert so mightily that they rather wish the business should not succeed than by his means, because it is the thing in the world that is the surest to establish him and continue his greatness.

“Mr. de Lionne and I, after this, talked a great deal of your Lordship, and I brought him to conclude that notwithstanding they would have you such a Spaniard, that you did nothing but what he would do if he was in your place. I hope Madame is now well satisfied with your Lordship, to the great content of Mr. James Hambleton. You are the most obliged to the King that can be, for she showed me the kindest letter that could be that the King writ to her about you—too kind for her ever to be unkind to you again.

“Mr. Tellier and Mr. de Lionne, by what I can guess, are two as cunning and able men as can be; for Colbert here, by that little that I saw of him, he is very vain and very pedantical; he affects being mighty eloquent, and run[s] himself into speaking nonsense presently, which I believe you have found sometimes in his brother; but when he talks with other people he is more reserved, for every one complains he will not speak ; and what he did when I went to see him was only to show [h]is parts to me. There is great hopes of my Lord St. Albans being in England ; everybody tells me, 'Assurement le Mylord fera quelque chose.'"

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, June 8, Paris.—“I gave your Lordship an account in my last of what I had done in order to his Majesty's commands concerning his Highness Prince Rupert's business. His most Christian Majesty was very ready to do what the King my master desired of him, and had sent away a letter to his agent at the Prince Palatine's Court, as Mr. de Lionne tells me, very much in the Prince's favour, which I hope he will find the effect of.

“I wish I may be able to give as good an account of the Prince de Ligny's business, which I am commanded to solicit too, but I find the stream of this Court to run mightily against him ; the Prince d' Espinois, who has possession of his land, being by his marriage something allied to Mr. Colbert, and his wife's two sisters being the handsomest women in France, and very well looked upon by some that have great power at Court. I tell your Lordship this, to know whether you would advise me, after I have delivered the King my master's letter, to continue pressing much in his behalf.

“As for the business of Mr. Marcillye, I think this Court has reason to be extremely satisfied with the King and all his Ministers, and Mr. Ruvigny has done his Majesty and his Ministers that right as to say he did not think him trusted or employed by anybody in England ; and his justification is very good in this case, for he owns to having informed against him, but it was upon the commerce he discovered he had with the Spanish Ambassador and the Baron d' Isola.

“Since Mr. de Lovoy's return from Flanders, they seem here more satisfied with the Connestable, and speak better of him than they use[d] to do, he having complied with some things that were desired of him ; and they say he has had orders from Spain to be more complaisant than he has been hitherto ; and this Court they say in return offers the Queen Regent all the assistance and advice that can be against Don Jouan, whose power they seem here to desire should not increase.

“I was the other day to see the Camp ; I deferred going till it was quite in order ; and certainly there can be nothing in greater order nor finer, and in an hour's warning the King here is able to march with ten or eleven thousand good men, which everybody wishes were employed, for all the people of quality are weary of having nothing to do. The succours for Candia are every day embarking, but are not yet gone, and whereas it was thought they would be gone by the 15th of May, it will now be the 15th of this month at soonest.

“Your Lordship being upon the Treaty of Commerce, I will inform of one thing that perhaps is not very considerable. I sent my servant the other day to the custom-house, and there was [were] some things brought to be sent for England. Enquiring what they were, they said they were looking-glasses, the frames of brass gilt. They showed him their books, where they had entered four thousand sent for England in a year's time ; which will amount to a considerable sum of money. I have nothing more to trouble your Lordship with ; for the ordinary news, I take care to have the manuscripts sent every post to Mr. Williamson.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, June 29, Paris.—“This is to acknowledge your Lordship’s of June the 14th [o.s.] I gave your Lordship an account in my last that I was going to St. Germain’s to have an audience about the Prince of Ligny’s business, which I had on Wednesday morning last, and as ill success in it as I expected. His most Christian Majesty told me that whatever came from the King my master, being one that he esteemed and loved so much, he always received kindly, but if the letter had come from anybody else, that he would not have received it, and he had already refused a letter which the States of Holland had writ to his Majesty upon the same occasion; that there were commissioners appointed to examine those things and to decide them, and he had taken a resolution of having them determined that way. I gave his Majesty at the same time the Prince of Ligny’s case written by his own agent here, by which are made appear the reason[s] why the King my master, besides the particular esteem he has for the Prince of Ligny’s person, is obliged to mediate in the business. The next post I hope to give your Lordship an account of the business you writ to me in cipher, which I believe they are here in some manner prepared for.

“The discourses of the town are that Don Jouan and the Queen are agreed upon terms very advantageous, which your Lordship may see by the news that I have sent written more at large. The Prince of Tuscany is so far from not coming here for what Mr. Colbert did to him in England that his father has already made great excuses for him, and has commanded him to come into France, if it were for nothing else but to ask his most Christian Majesty’s pardon for having done anything that has displeased him. The expectations of the Prince of Lorraine’s election continues (sic) still very strong, though it is said the French are making one effort more with a very considerable sum of money to defer at least, if they cannot totally prevent, his being chosen King. There is a rumour as if the French forces gone to Candia had orders, in case they find the place in a very ill condition, not to debark or expose themselves to be certainly lost; and all the noise of the Ambassador’s coming from Turkey ends in a design they had of seizing upon Mr. d’Almeras and four French men-of-war; so I need [not] trouble your Lordship with any questions how to proceed with the Turkish Ambassador, which I must have, if there had come one as it was reported.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, July 3, Paris.—“Mr. de Moulin, coming fresh out of France, will give your Lordship by word of mouth a better account of everything than I can do by a letter: I will only trouble your Lordship with some few things which perhaps are not come to his knowledge. In the first place, for all the good offices that the French Ambassador has endeavoured to do you, the King of France told Madame that he was afraid Mr. Colbert would not do much good in England, for he heard that the King and everybody laugh at him.

“It is not to be imagined how the King my master’s credit increases every day here, and how well everybody speaks of him and the Government; I could tell your Lordship a great deal of yourself, but you will perhaps think it flattery, and so I will say nothing. As long as the King keeps firm to the Triple Alliance, they will not know what to do here; but the three Ministers in their heart are glad of it, for now they are as absolute together as the Cardinal [Muzarin] was single; and people may say what they will, but his father was not more governed than he is by his Ministers, and they make him keep a distance with all the world, because they are afraid others should enter with him and get a hand over him; so I suppose there is no hurt in speaking so freely as long as it is only to you."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[1669,] July 4, St. Germain's.—"I came this morning hither to see a review of all the troops that was made today in the Plaine de Conflans. As the King was riding along about three a clock he spied Mr. de Berrie, Mr. de Lionn[e]'s son, coming to him; so he rid up to meet him, seeming very impatient to hear the news he brought. After he had talked with him apart, he came up to the company, and with a great deal of trouble told us that they had chosen and crowned a King in Poland, one Michael Bisnobsky, a young man of four and twenty year old, that nobody had ever named before; and somebody naming him at the election, he was chosen without dispute. I suppose you may have heard this out of Holland already, yet Mr. de Moulin coming, I would not miss this opportunity of letting you know it.

[P.S.] "The King was chosen in Poland and crowned the same day, which was the 20th of June."

Endorsed: By Mr. du Moulin.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, July 6.—"The post from England is not yet come in, so I shall receive none from your Lordship time enough to answer this post. I gave your Lordship an account by Mr. de Moulin, who I suppose is with you before this time, of the news of Poland. Though they are dissatisfied here that they had no part in choosing a King, and that all the expense they have been at is lost, yet they are much better satisfied with this man's being chosen than if it had been the Prince of Lorraine; and by what I can guess, since the French could not have the interest to make a King in Poland, they will do all they can to gain him now he is made.

"When I was at St. German's the King made a general review of all his troops; I waited of him to see it, and there was [were] twelve thousand in the best order, both horse and foot, that it is possible to see anything. The next morning I had audience of the King, and in my master's name I made a complaint of the insolence of the French man-of-war. The King told me he had heard of the business already by Madame; that the behaviour of his man-of-war was contrary to the orders that all his ships have whenever they meet any English men-of-war; and that as soon as he knows who it was did the insolence, which he will endeavour to find out, or if [he] can learn who it was, the King my master shall have all the satisfaction that can be desired.

"I presented him the memorial according to your directions, and afterwards I went to Mr. de Lionne to desire an answer in writing, as you do use to give the French Ambassador in England. He told me the customs of countries were different, and that here they never give any answer in writing. I give your Lordship this account, to know of you what is to be done in this case. As for this business, he referred me to Mr. Colbert, who is Secretary de la marine.

"The King has put the people in prison that injured my Lord Candish and my Lord Rochester, and has expressed a great displeasure against them; and the least that will happen to them they say is losing their employments; but all their friends having spoke to me to speak for them to the King, and my Lord Candish desiring it too, I spoke to his most Christian Majesty, and entreated him to forgive them, the English having had all the satisfaction that could be desired. He returned me a great many expressions how sorry he was such a thing should happen to be done by his officers to any strangers, much more to the English and to people of that quality; so I believe after some few days they may be forgiven.

“By the discourse I had with Mr. de Lionne I see little hopes of doing any good in the Prince de Ligny’s business. I was told at St. Germaine’s, for a great secret, that there is a man of good fashion clapt up for a design of killing Mr. Colbert. You will hear, by the news I send Mr. Williamson, of the discontent in Portugal at the sending away the King, and a great deal of other news which I cannot answer to be very true, but your Lordship has it as I have it.”

: Endorsed:  $\left. \begin{array}{l} 6 \text{ July} \\ 26 \text{ June} \end{array} \right\} 69.$  R.  $\left. \begin{array}{l} 10 \text{ July} \\ 30 \text{ June.} \end{array} \right\}$  Answered 5 [o.s.], (&c.)

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, July 15, Paris.—“The reasons of my Lord Rochester’s coming into France, I suppose, are not unknown to your Lordship; upon his return into England I believe there is nothing that he is more desirous of than your Lordship’s favour and countenance; and if hereafter he continues to live as discreetly as he has done ever since he was here, he has other good qualities enough to deserve it, and to make himself acceptable wherever he comes. I have assured him that you are so just and so good natured to everybody, that it will be his own fault if he does not always find a great deal of kindness and good usage from your Lordship.”

Endorsed: Answered 16 [o.s.].

R. MONTAGU to his Sister LADY HARVYE.

[16]69, July 19, Paris.—“I received your last; next post I will send you the note of Ned’s expenses, and I will sign it. There is a business which I would have you propose to my Lord Arlington. I believe he may do it the easylest (sic) that can be, and it is a thing that may hereafter be of great consequence to him and all his friends. You may propose it to him, and afterwards he is a better judge than either you or I what is better to be done.

“You know I have writ formerly to you that if ever there could be any money spared, it were very fit for the King to make Madame a present. In the first place, the King really owes it her, and when the Parliament gave her, at her coming into England, ten thousand pound, the King desired to make use of it, and never gave her a penny of it; besides, she has really but a little money, but she is too high ever to ask the King to send her any; though I believe, if she did, he is so kind, at least it appears by what he writes to her, that I believe he would not refuse her; and the King himself would be pleased and well satisfied with those that proposed it to him, and to her it would be an eternal obligation. I know money is so scarce at this time that I would not propose it, if at the same time I did not think there was a way of getting it easily, which is this.

“They say Sir Robert Southwell has agreed in Portugall for the remainder of the Queen’s * portion, or at least some of it, which is to be paid at several payments. If it be so, it is money the King never reckoned much upon, and I believe not yet designed to any other use by the Commissioners of the Treasury. It should be, methinks, no hard matter to get the King to give Madame five thousand pound out of this money, that is, out of the first payment. If my Lord Arlington approves of it, and will undertake it, I will write a letter which he may show the King, and shall be a rise (sic) for him to ask the King to do the business. My Lord Arlington may have one scruple, which I will remove and be answerable for; perhaps he may think it will cause a clamours (sic) on the Queen Mother’s side that the King should send Madame money at a time that he stops, as she says, what is due to her. For that matter she shall never know a word of it, and they do not love one another so dearly but that this may be kept from her knowledge.

“If there be anything done in this, there is no time to be lost, but to have the King grant it before he go his journey; for if there be any such money it is likely not to be long undisposed of; besides my Lord Arlington, if the King does do it, should desire the King not to write to Madame of it, but to gratify my Lord Arlington with letting him write her word of it first, and let me have his letter to give her. Let me have an answer of this as soon as you can.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, July 26, Paris.—“I believe your Lordship will be very glad to have Father Patricke with you again, and though his expression be not very good, yet his understanding is good enough to give you a very good and true account of this country. He is come away extremely satisfied with Madame, as to his own particular, and more as to yours.

“The King himself has been so kind to you in doing you good offices to her, that I can pretend to have no other share in serving you with her than in doing you that justice which anybody that knows you so well as I is obliged to do. I have taken the liberty to tell her that hitherto her strict correspondence and intelligence has always been with those that are far from being the King her brother’s friends, who have always represented everything false[1]y to her, and endeavoured to put her upon things both contrary to his interest and inclination. I have so much respect for her and wish her so well that I have done all I can to disabuse her for her own sake as well as your Lordship’s. She is the most that can be beloved in this country by everybody but the King and her husband, and you cannot imagine how much short of what she deserves she is used by both of them. She has too great a spirit I believe ever to complain, or to let the King her brother know of it, but I tell your Lordship of it, that you may take all the occasions wherein the King can, of putting his Majesty upon supporting her, both as his sister, and as a sister that deserves it from him by her real concern in everything that relates either to his honour or interest.

“I know not how the King my master stands affected to this country, or how he may think it his interest to enter into a stricter league with them here. My business is not to be so politic as to give my opinion of what is best. I leave that to wiser and more experienced men. The part of an Ambassador is to be a spy and a tell-tale; I must, therefore, contrary to my inclination and practice, tell you all I hear and learn in this country.

---

* Catherine, Queen Consort of Charles II.

“The King here is the least beloved and esteemed by all his servants, even the nearest about him, that ever king in the world was, because of his ill-natured and proud usage of them upon all occasions. They have no way of complaining of it, as a very witty man told me the other day, but by extolling the King of England’s using of people, which they say angers and vexes the French King more than anything they can say. He is the same to the women, except to one, as he is to the men, and a little while ago some ladies were a-commending the King of England before him. He appeared a little nettled at it, and said, ‘Les dames ayment toujours les aventuriers, mais je ne me croy pas moins honeste homme pour n’avoir pas esté chassé de mon royaume.’

“I tell you these foolish stories that you may see there is at the bottom a little unkindness and emulation towards the King my master, and the Ministers here know it very well, and hold him by nothing more than gratifying him in those ill-natured humours; and however fair they may speak us, I am confident they would almost [rather] sacrifice a real advantage of their own, than agree to anything that they were convinced would be a certain advantage to the King my master. They are mightily to seek (?) now, because I think the King is served secretly and faithfully, but in my Lord Clarendon’s time there was not a word said or anything designed that he did not know, and I heard it from one who was at that time a confidant of Mademoiselle la Valier’s, but is now in great disgrace, that she has heard the King of France tell la Valier, and brag how all the counsels of England were betrayed to him, and particularly that business of Dunkerque. Pray remember to ask Father Patrique about it; I have desired him to tell you something that I would not write.

“Here is a great clamour at the Queen Mother’s about the King’s stopping her money. There is a project on foot now amongst them to get the King to pay her, which is, they say she must be forced to go into a monastery if the King does not pay her, and they think the King will be ashamed to let his mother be driven to that necessity. I told Madame what I heard; she said it was a shame that her mother could not live upon what she had, for she had more, notwithstanding all the King stopped, than she had for her family, and yet her’s was as big again; she disputed this with the Queen Mother, who, she told me, was extreme angry with her about it; therefore this is under the rose; the King may do what he pleases, but the Queen, though he does not pay her, will not suffer much.

“My Lord St. Alban’s can live by his wits and by play, and what matter is it whether Peircy Church, Mrs. Bruncard, and a great many other such creatures have their pensions paid? All the French think it ridiculous, at a time when we are thought so poor in England, to have so much money spent abroad.

“There is great expectations of the Parliament. Colbert writes word that you are a lost man whenever it meets, but if you will be for the French they offer to save you. Your Lordship sees I give you fair warning. I swear the Ministers here, with all their great abilities and understanding, know no more of England than they do of Persia; and I do not wonder at it, considering the dexterity of their Ambassador, that gives them so good intelligence; and lest you should think me like him, I will say no more.”

Endorsed: July 26, s.n., 1669 (&c.). Answered Aug. 2.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Aug. 3, Paris.—“Your Lordship’s invitation to Mr. Godolphin, and the desire you expressed to have him return time enough to go the journey with the King, has made him take post notwithstanding all that Madame and the rest of his friends could say to him. He has succeeded so well here with everybody that the longer he had stayed, it had been every day better for him, but your kindness will make amends for what he leaves here.

“I am to give your Lordship thanks for your letter by my Lord Buckhurst, and shall upon all occasions follow your directions as near as I can; for 224, I think you may reckon that as yours when you shall have occasion to make use of it. I have done all I can to destroy the credit of 151 with them; I have gone a good way in that work. Now, to preserve the kindness of 214, you must think of obliging them, and in this country and world, no way so sure as money. I will propose you a way, if you think it fit, how to get them five thousand pound easily. I am sure the King will be willing to it; and after such an obligation, though they should be base enough to be ungrateful, they could never do you hurt with the King, who would know how much you have obliged them.

“Sir Robert Southwell is now here. I find by him he has recovered the remainder of the Queen’s portion, which was a desperate debt; you know all the circumstances of it better than I. If the money be not designed for some other use, you may get the King to give it her out of that money, and though she has it not this twelvemonth, if she has but the satisfaction of knowing she shall have it, it will have the same effect upon her. I only offer this to your Lordship, because I think it may in time be of great service to you, and I hope you believe I love you so well that it is more for your sake than hers that I desire to have it done. I know those in the world that you have helped to eight thousand pound from the King, that I am afraid will not deserve so well from you.

“I have carried my Lord Buckhurst today to the King and Queen and Dauphine. All the service I can do him here he may be sure of, or anybody that comes from your Lordship, wherever I have to do. Everything is at present so quiet and dull that the greatest politician in the world could hardly find out what to say, much less I, that am a very small one. Mr. Godolphin will give you a true and good account of all affairs here. Your coach is in a boat (?), but it will not come till you are gone.”

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Aug. 7, Paris.—“I have been extremely importuned by the Resident of Florence, in the Prince of Tuscany’s name, to see him in some third place, which, according to his Majesty’s directions for what passed at the Hague with the French Ambassador, I have absolutely refused, telling the Resident that I wondered that the Prince, who had been so kindly used in England, should desire anything that might look like a diminution to the King my master, who in all things and upon all occasions expected the same respects and deferences that could be showed to his most Christian Majesty. The Resident replied that it was not a visit, but some urgent business that made him go [to] the French Ambassador, as a man would go to a lawyer, which cannot be counted a visit. I confess it appeared to me but a poor evasion, though he seconded it with a long letter, writ to him by

Mr. de Lionne, wherein he does declare that the King here doth not understand the Prince's going to Mr. Pomponne as a visit to his Ambassador, nor that wherever the Prince in his travels shall meet with any of his Ambassadors, he does not expect the Prince should visit them, but that they may meet in a third place. Mr. de Lionne[c]'s letter is no justification to me if I should commit a fault; I shall therefore observe my last instructions till I have positive order to the contrary.

"I have had a great deal of discourse with Mr. Colbert about the settling an equality of trade between the two Crowns, which he seems extremely inclined to, giving all the fair words that can be; a little time will show the reality of them. There is a great rumour here of the Suisses being dissatisfied with this Court, and as if they were very inelunable to close with the Spaniards upon an offer made of putting all the salt pits of the Franch Conté into the Suisses' hands, which yield a revenue. I can hardly believe they will be drawn from the French interest, the sweet of which they have tasted so many years.

"My Lord Buckhurst and Mr. Savell have passed all their formal visits, and as soon as they have looked about them a little I believe will return. My Lord St. Alban's will be today at Colombe. The King's journey here to Chambour is very uncertain, and, if it be at all, will not be till the middle of next month. The next week they say he is to come to the Parliament. There are several town news about Candia, but there is no courier yet come from Mr. de Beaufort."

Endorsed: Aug. 7, '69. Answered Aug. 2 [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Aug. 17, Paris.—"Sir Robert Southwell's passing this way, and having had some discourse with him about the success of his negotiation in Portugall, makes me take this opportunity of writing to your Lordship about a business which I have long had a mind to mention to you, but thought it to no purpose, because, though the King were very willing, yet he might not be very able to do it. I find by Sir Robert Southwell that the rest of the Queen's portion is like to be paid out of Portugall, and though not in ready money, yet that there is such security given that in time it must be certain. I know the King in a year, out of his generosity and good nature, gives away a great deal of money to people that he does not love so well, nor do not deserve it from him so much, as Madame, and perhaps that have not more need of it, for I think the allowance that she has from her husband, both for her privy purse and clothes, is not above three thousand pound a year, and the King here, that used every year to make her presents of twenty or thirty thousand crowns, has not given her anything this three years, as Monsieur himself told me. I know not how the King could do a handsomer thing or a kinder thing than out of this money of the Queen's, which I am sure he never hoped for nor looked for, make Madame a present of five thousand pound; not that she ever named such a thing to me in her life, but only once in discourse, talking of the Parliament's giving the King money, she told me that they once gave her ten thousand pound, but that the King made bold with it, and she never had a farthing of it. She is so far from asking any such thing of the King that she made a preamble of a thousand excuses how loath she was to put the King to any trouble or charge about a business she has commended me to recommend to you concerning Mrs. Charter, her nurse. She says she is informed that all those that have nursed the King's children have a pension of a hundred pounds a year from the King. She desires that for her sake you would procure the same for her nurse. Perhaps, if the King knew what I write to your Lordship, he might be offended with my officiousness and putting him upon a business of expense, but I could not forbear offering it to your Lordship, who is the best judge of what is fit to be done; but I think the King loves his sister so well, that he could not be offended with me for putting you in mind of doing her so considerable a service, and which perhaps he may be inclined enough to do of himself, if anybody had ever [never?] told him of it. Perhaps the King may think the Queen his mother would take it ill he should send Madame money at a time she complains that he stops hers. He may be confident Madame is too much concerned for him to speak of [any]thing that can draw any trouble or inconvenience upon him. I beg your Lordship's pardon for this trouble; I hope you will understand it as it is meant, which is leaving all to your discretion."

R. MONTAGU to his Sister LADY HARVY.

[16]69, Aug. 26.—“I gave you an account in my last letter by the post, that I had showed Madame my Lord Arlington's letter, wherein he says the King intends her a present out of the Portugall money; she was a little surprised and out of countenance at the thing, but you never saw anybody take anything so kindly as she did it, both of the King and my Lord Arlington. She is extremely afraid lest her mother or husband should know anything of it, and desires it may be the greatest secret in the world. I assured her, if she did not speak of it, nobody else would. My Lord Arlington has not yet said one word to her about it, which she wonders at. She says my Lord Arlington is such a kind of man that it is impossible not to be his friend; she has given me a thousand thanks for the true character I gave of him; I believe she will give those as little that gave her a contrary one. You never saw anybody perkt up as she is since this money, and it makes her so sure to my Lord Arlington that he had better have given it out of his own pocket than not a-got it her. Pray try with my Lord Arlington, and let him and Mr. Treasurer try to take it up if the security be good, for I find there are some certain jewels in pawn which she would fain have out against winter, before her husband knows they are there. I find by my Lord St. Alban's that he thinks my Lord Arlington's credit greater than ever. They say he uses the French Ambassador like a dog, which does him a great deal of good, and makes him more esteemed here; but they have great hopes that this Parliament will ruin him; therefore I hope he will look about him.

“I know you have a mind to be a Lady upon your own account as well as upon Sir Daniel's, and therefore I intend, after the Parliament has sat, to engage Madame to write to the King about my father's business; but first pray ask my Lord Arlington's opinion, for if he does not approve of it, there is no meddling in it, and I believe he is as willing to have it done as you or I.

“Lord Buckhurst professes to me to be most obliged to my Lord Arlington that can be, and to disapprove of my Lord Buckingham's jealousies, and being so often ready to break with my Lord Arlington. He may, if he handles my Lord Buckhurst right, make good use of him, for he has sense enough to see that it is more for his interest and my Lord Bucking[am's] to keep well than to break with him. If Mrs. Chiffings brings this herself, I suppose you will use her very kindly.”

[P.S.] “Madame has showed me two or three more letters of the King's to her concerning you. I dare tell you that he is kinder to you, and you have more credit with him than you think you have; for all he says of you is as of one that he has a good opinion of, and believes loves him better than anybody, which you know gives one more credit with anybody than any other thing in the world."

Addressed: For my Lady Harvy, at her house in Newport Street—These.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

16[69], Sept. 4, Paris.—“I send your Lordship here inclosed a letter for his Majesty about a business that Madame commanded me to write to him about, and which she desires me to tell your Lordship, that she would have you put him in mind of it. I say nothing to your Lordship of the business, because I suppose the King will tell it you.

“There are several reports in town about Candia, as if Mr. de Navailles were dead of a fever, and as if the French had made another attempt and had been beaten; but I was yesterday at St. Germain's with my Lord Buckhurst, who went to take his leave of the King, who told me himself that there was no news from Candia since the last of Mr. de Beaufort's defeat. Mr. de Bellefonds continues his intention for Candia, and thinks to be going to Toulon in three weeks. He told me he would send to the King my master, to have leave to raise two thousand Irish. I told him I did not think it very probable that the King would consent to it, when he had desired already his most Christian Majesty not to let the Scotch regiment go.

“There is some days since a gentleman come to compliment the King from the King of Poland; he is a Frenchman, and it is thought the French are like to have a good interest in that Court. There was a letter intercepted from a Hugonette (?) minister to one of his friends, where he says—J'espère que par l'ayde du Grand Seigneur Dieu establira encor l'évangile en France. The King's journey to Chambor is the 15th of this month, and will be in all but three weeks.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, Sept. 6, Paris.—“I have not had an occasion of writing to your Lordship a good while, and now that I have, I have nothing to say but what concerns your own particular, which I will give you the best account I can of. In the first place, as to Madame, I find by a great many circumstances that the King our master has a strange good opinion of her, and therefore I labour as much as I can to make her have a good opinion of you and be your friend really and truly; and I must think her the falsest creature in the world if she is not so. This money that you have got for her has confirmed her extremely. She tells me you did it so handsomely and so generously, without her ever thinking of it or desiring it, that it has obliged her ten times more than if she had been put to ask it of you. In the letter I wrote to the King the other day by Madame's order, I took notice to him how kindly Madame took the token you had told me he intended her; and I did it that the King may not think of going back, for she reckons upon the money as sure, and has desired me to do what I could to get it her quickly. She told me she had always good credit, because she was very punctual, and she had occasion to pay money that she had lost to some that go to Chambor with the King; and if I thought this would be sure money, she would borrow enough to pay what she owed before they went. I told her she might reckon upon [it] as a certain thing.

“One of her great grievances is the Chevalier de Lorraine, who has so much credit with Monsieur, that Madame has no more power in her family than you have; therefore pray, when you write to her, offer her your service, whenever she has any complaints to make to the King her brother of her ill-usage, of putting him in mind of seeing her righted. It is a thing she will take extreme kind of you; and at any time whenever you would have her write anything to the King, let me know beforehand, and I will put her upon it.

“Upon all these discourses that are of my Lord Orery’s great credit with the King, and my Lord Buckingham’s and your falling out, as soon as she is in a good condition enough to write, I will desire her to write as much as I can to your advantage.

“My Lord Buckhurst is extreme sensible of your kindness to him, and has desired me to let you know as much; he is extremely troubled at the noise of your quarrel and my Lord Buckingham[’s], and seems to blame him very much. If you are fallen out and care to be friends, your Lordship may make use of and freely trust my Lord Buckhurst, for I am confident he loves you. All the wisest people that I see here, both French and English, that speak of the falling out between you and my Lord Buckingham, seem to think you will be no loser in the business. The Duke of Richmond bids me tell you he will stand by you if his Majesty stands by his wife; that will do you no hurt. I have writ another letter which I suppose your Lordship will think properer to show the King than this.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Sept. 6, Paris.—“At the distance I am from your Lordship all stories increase, which makes me hope that all that I hear out of England have increased in their journey hither; and I have some reason to complain of your Lordship, when you know the part of an Ambassador is as well to tell news out of England as to send news into England, that you leave me in so much ignorance of all the changes that have lately happened at Court.

“The French Ambassador has written over to the King here, and I had it from the man’s own mouth the King told it to, that there was one my Lord Orery, a bel esprit, conseiller de Cromwell, grand ami du Chancelier, et créature de la Duchesse de Yorke et son parent, qui avoit plus de credit avec le Roy que tous les autres Ministres ensemble. I write in French because these are the very words. This, joined with the other assurances that the Ambassador gives them of making great disorders in the Parliament, confirm[s] them here that my Lord Clarendon has a great interest in the Parliament.

“Madame told me that you would do well to advise the King to look narrowly to the French Ambassador, for that she knows certainly he has orders to distract the Parliament, and give the King as much trouble that way as he can; and for your own particular, that your ruin is intended and aimed above all things. I have been told the same from several other people, but you may give credit to Madame’s intelligence; for some of the most understanding people of France apply themselves to Madame, having a great opinion of her discretion and judgment, and tell her all they know; and it is not without reason they have that opinion of her, for she has them both in great perfection; besides, in England you ought not to slight any advices that come from her, because she is so truly and passionately concerned for the King her brother. Your Lordship is extremely obliged to her. She told me, when she was able to write, she would write to the King to do as the King does here, that when he has an able and faithful servant, as she thinks you are to him, notwithstanding other people's malice, to encourage him and protect him. You ought to be very proud of this, for she is a very good judge of men, and she loves the King her brother too well, if she did not think it, to say it.

"There is a great noise here of the Duke of Buckingham and you being fallen out, which the French are not dissatisfied with, for you are the man they think hinders everybody from coming into their interest. My Lord St. Alban's confirms very much the report of my Lord Orery's great credit with the King, and I believe has told all the Ministers here as much. I hear Mat Ren [Wren] is to be a Privy Councillor, and when the Parliament meets you are to be impeached for the false imprisonment of Sir William Coventry and Mr. Savell. I will make an end of my letter, for so much dismal news cannot be very welcome to you."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Sept. 7, Paris.—"We have been here in great expectation of news from Candia. There is at last a courier come to the Venetian Ambassador, but what the news is, is yet kept for a great secret; only so much is confessed, that one of the best French ships called the Terese is blown (sic) by accident, which has put some disorder amongst the rest of the ships. What they have done by land is not yet known, but the town will have it as if the French had had another defeat, which is supposed to be kept secret, not to discourage others from going with the Mareschal Bellefonds, who I believe will find it difficult to raise that number of men he proposed to himself. My Lord Buckhurst is upon his way to England.

"The Dauphin is not yet recovered; they apprehend his indisposition may turn to an ague, and hold him all the winter. The Queen Mother is extreme ill, and seems to apprehend herself extremely; she talks of retiring to Challeot, to die there.

"There is a discourse as if Mr. Marsin had a considerable body of horse, and had particular orders to hinder the passage of any more boats for the French fortifications. Sir David English his business, which his Majesty recommended to the French Ambassador, if one may believe Mr. Colbert, is like to go very well, for he promises me that he shall be paid to the full value of his house."

Endorsed: Answered 8th [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to KING [CHARLES II.]

[16]69, Sept. 11, Paris.—"I suppose my Lord St. Alban's his courier has already given your Majesty notice of the Queen your mother's death. She died at Colombe at four a clock in the morning, and they sent not me word of it till noon; so I could not dispatch anybody to your Majesty as I ought to have done, and I thought it necessary to stay till I could give your Majesty some account of what became of all the Queen left behind. I went, as soon as I heard the news of her death, to St. Cloud, where I met the King, who, after having made all the compliments that are usual in those occasions, desired me to tell your Majesty that he had sent two councillors to seal up everything the Queen had in her house, that nothing might be lost or carried away till you please to direct me or somebody else to see what she has left. My Lord St. Alban's seemed mightily dissatisfied with this sealing up of the goods, as if it were an indignity for any of the King's officers to come into the Queen your mother's house, but I cannot imagine your Majesty will make the same interpretation, when their coming was out of respect to your Majesty, to hinder everybody, as is usual in those occasions, from running away with everything they can lay their hands on; so that everything there is safe till your Majesty gives order what you will have done.

"The Queen your mother is dead without a will, so that by the law of England her jointure, that was granted her for two years after her death, and everything else that she had, falls to your Majesty; but I find that Monsieur pretends to have all that she had in France, for by the rule of France what she had is equally to be divided between your Majesty, the Duke of York, and him, and he reckons her jointure for two years after her death, divided between your Majesty and the Duke, will make an equal division, he taking all she left here. I suppose your Majesty in no case is to be subject to the rule of France, but to the custom of your own kingdom, and that you will send to the King here to demand that right. You may afterwards give Monsieur, for Madame's sake, what you please; and after her debts paid, there will remain little but her two houses at Colombe, which will sell for ten or twelve thousand pistoles, and were always, if she had made a will, intended to be given Madame.

"I thought it my duty to give your Majesty this account, that your Majesty in your prudence may do what you think most fit. I shall expect your Majesty's orders, which I shall obey."

[MEMORANDUM FOR] LORD ARLINGTON.

1669, Sept.  $\frac{1}{11}$ , Paris.—"It is resolved by the King here, with the consent of Monsieur and Madame, that the Queen's body shall be buried at St. Denys, her heart at Chaleot. The ceremony of her funeral cannot be over at least these 40 days, till when her Guards, at least a sufficient number, with some of the officers, must be entertained: this is the greatest part of the cost that the King is like to be at as to her funeral. The great ceremonies of St. Dennis and Nostre Dame, his most Christian Majesty is at the charge of, as he is always for any that are of his family and are buried at St. Denis. But the King's pleasure must be known whether he will allow mourning to all the Queen his mother's domestic servants, that are with her in France. I do not see how his Majesty can avoid it; but the Queen having nothing of her own, all she has falling to the King, nobody dares undertake the giving them mourning without his consent. Madame thinks it proper that till the end of the quarter, which from her death doth not make twenty days, her family should be kept on; her Majesty's own table being put down, and an allowance in money for those that use to eat at it, at the rate that the Queen herself used to allow when she did not keep her table, with some little consideration for the Duchess of Richmond's table, that cannot amount to above forty or fifty pistoles. Be pleased as soon as you can to let me know his Majesty's pleasure upon all these particulars."

This paper is signed, R. Montagu. Addressed: For the Right Hon<sup>ble</sup> the Lord Arlington, or in his absence Mr. Secretary Trever, at Court.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

1669, Sept. 11, Paris.—"Before this can come to your hands, I suppose you will have heard the news of the Queen Mother's death; she died Tuesday morning. She went to bed pretty well, and about two a clock in the morning, as her servants went to give her something, they found her a-dying. She never spoke one word; she had made no will, so that all she has, by the law of England, falls to the King, which I suppose he will insist upon; and her jointure, that was granted for two years after her death, returns to him again as being her heir. The Queen died at two a clock in the morning. My Lord St. Alban's sent away an express to the King into England immediately, but never acquainted me with that nor her dying; but I happened by chance to know of it an hour after she was dead, and supposing my Lord St. Alban's would seize upon all she left, and that for that reason did not send me word of her death, I sent privately to St. Germain's, and got one to speak to the King, to send, as the custom is here when princes die, to seal up everything till the heirs or who they appoint are by. My Lord St. Alban's knows nothing of my doing this, but made a great complaint to me of the indignity the King had offered, to send his officers into the Queen's house, and would have incensed me at the thing. I told him the King's intentions to the King my master were so good, that I could not tell how to take it ill. I am sure without this my Lord St. Alban's would not have left a silver spoon in the house, and now all she had is safe for whoever it belongs to. I would not have any but his Majesty know I did this, because it makes one have enemies to no purpose.

"I am afraid this letter will not find you in London, and therefore I have writ more at large to his Majesty, to receive his orders in this business. I writ to your Lordship by my Lord Buckhurst, and by poor Mrs. Chiffins, who I hear is dead, but I hope my letters will come safe. I shall be at very great expense for mourning. I have all my coaches and some fifty servants and three rooms of my house to be in mourning. These casualties in all times have been extraordinaries. I must make use of my credit here, and as soon as I know what it will cost I shall desire your Lordship and Mr. Secretary Trevor to allow the bill. If the King gives me order to look into what the Queen owes and what remains, I will do the best I can to see he shall not be cheated. I have time to say no more, for fear the servant I send should come too late to go over with the packet."

[P.S.] "I find by some discourse with my Lord Duke of Richmond, that if the King sends an Ambassador into Poland, you would oblige him in getting him named to that employment. By next post I shall know what the Queen has left; till when, I suppose the King will dispose of nothing.

"Madame is in pain since Mrs. Chiffings' death whether a letter she sent you by her be not lost."

Endorsed: Answered 8. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Sept. 18, Paris.—"Your Lordship being upon a journey, as I suppose, and the Court here being so too, I suppose you will not expect great news from me. I believe this sudden news of the Queen Mother's death will have brought the King and all the Court to town, where my Lord St. Alban's will meet you. He will deliver you a letter of recommendations from Madame about his own business. I dare venture to tell your Lordship you may do in it what you please yourself, and what you think most for the King's service, and I will bear you harmless. If you do not all that she desires of you in his behalf, by that time I hear your Lordship is returned to London, I may have matter for a longer letter."

Endorsed: 1<sup>8</sup>/<sub>8</sub> Sept. '69. R. 1<sup>2</sup>/<sub>2</sub>.

THE DUKE OF RICHMOND AND LENOX TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[1669,] Sept. 25, Paris.—“I have received the favour of your Lordship’s, for which I give you many thanks, and assure you that I am extremely sensible of your kindness to me, for which, if ever it be in my power to serve you, I hope you will not question but I will then show myself to be an obliged friend.

“I hope it will not be long before I shall have the good fortune to wait on you, though I am troubled with some of my uncle’s creditors, which I hope I shall shortly overcome. In the mean time I should be very glad if you would lay any commands upon me.”

Endorsed : Sept. 25, '69.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69, Sept. 28, Paris.—“Having so good an opportunity as this of writing to you by Mr. Flamerin, who I make no doubt but will be very welcome to your Lordship, and dine with you very often, I could not well omit the condoling with you for the loss of my Lord Duke of Buckingham. I can only comfort you as the divines use to do for the loss of the good things of this world, which, whilst we did enjoy, were so uncertain, that we ought never to have set our hearts much upon them. I do not doubt but that you have done so in this occasion. The ground of your quarrel is reported here to be because you had made up with the Duke of York without his knowledge. If it be so that you have made up with him, I will only tell you something that I heard the other day in a letter of the Duke of York’s to Madame. He tells her that the King is much kinder to him than he use[d] to be, and uses him very well; that as to your particular, he is very well satisfied with you; that my Lord Buckingham makes great applications and great professions to him, but he cannot tell how to trust him till he sees his actions answer his words.

“Madame told me that you had writ to her that you would endeavour to get her the money as soon as you could, that the King has presented her with. She desired me to write to you to send it over in my name, because that way it would be privater, and when I have it she will order me who[m] to pay it to for her use. I think the best will be to send it over in two payments, for the sum will be too great for one. Your Lordship was mentioning something in a letter to me, of Alderman Backwell’s furnishing the money presently upon some advantage allowed him. Pray let me desire you that the King may be at the expense of the advance to him, and since the King has done so kind a thing as to make Madame this present, and you have had an opportunity of obliging her extremely in being so instrumental in it, let the present come to her entire without any diminution; for whatever money the King here gives, or whatever presents he makes, are paid so punctually and so to the full, that she will wonder to find such an alteration in what comes from the King her brother. This matter is not of so great consequence, but that I thought I might take the liberty to tell you my opinion.”

Endorsed : Answered with the Comm<sup>rs</sup>.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 10, Paris.—“I am desired by Mr. de Lionne to recommend this bearer, Mr. Richard, to you, to dispatch him as soon as you can, and to show him all the favour you can. I have undertaken to assure him already that he will return well satisfied, and that he will have to do with your brother Sir John Bennet, whom he will find very easy and very tractable."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 16, Paris.—"Mr. Howard is arrived here, and says that in a day or two my Lord St. Alban's will be here. I suppose by him I shall receive your Lordship's directions how his Majesty will dispose of what the Queen Mother has left behind. Monsieur is come to Paris, who is a little discontented that there has been no notice taken of him in all this matter.

"I have every day complaints made me by the Spanish Resident of the injuries and insults that are done them by the French troops in Flanders. I have advised him to address himself to his Majesty in England by some minister of their own; for all the complaints being made in general terms, I know not how to take notice of it, except he insisted upon some particular; nor then neither very well, without some fuller order to that purpose.

"Mr. de Louvoy has order to provide himself speedily for another journey into Flanders, to see that the troops upon the frontiers may always be in a readiness. The yielding up of Candia is confirmed, upon a truce they say of a hundred years, and some places in Dalmatia which the Turks quit to the Venetians. The politicians here will have it, that the Turk will presently fall upon the Emperor, who is not likely at this time to be much assisted by the French forces. The exchange of money from England to France falls so low, that [it] is visible the French have of late years got great advantages of us in trade."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 19, Paris.—"Considering how letters are opened that come by the post, I believe you will not think me very discreet in writing to you what I do; but it is a thing so public in this place, that if my letter is opened it is no more than what they know here already, and seem much to rejoice at, which is your disgrace, and the discountenance that you are fallen into with the King your master. Mr. de St. Agrian, that comes lately out of England, tells this not only to the King and Ministers here, but spoke it publicly before all the Court, and gave this instance that I am a-going to tell you.

"He said it is a custom in England that when the King is angry with anybody, that he makes them be acted, and that my Lord Buckingham and Bab May* had acted you to the King, and endeavoured to turn you en ridicule. The expression is not very civil from me to you, but in a story one must leave out nothing. When I heard this first I could hardly believe it, and to satisfy myself I askt Monsieur, who was newly come from Chambor; he told me it was very true; that he was present when Mr. de St. Agrian told this to the King; who said he had heard it at the French Ambassador's in England, from one that was present, when the King was entertained with your comedy. Whoever did it, it could not make you more ridiculous in England than the thing appears ridiculous here. Madame told me that though she was sorry for your sake, yet she was much sorrier for the King her brother's sake. She has heard more of it than she thought fit to tell me, and has writ to the King about it. Secretaries of State are otherwise used in this country, though * Baptist May, Keeper of the Privy Purse.

there be as good railleurs and mimics as in other places. Pray God in heaven keep you from the Court's falling on you in jest, and the Parliament in earnest, when the King does not take your part."

[P.S.]. "The King's favour and kindness to Madame doth both him and her great credit in this country."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 19, Paris.—"This acknowledges your Lordship's of Oct. the 4th [o.s.] The King will be at St. Germain's tomorrow, and as soon as the audience of condolence for the Queen Mother is past, I shall desire one of his Majesty, upon the three points that are recommended to the King my master by the Spanish Ministers, and give your Lordship an account of the success I have in it.

"I had an order lately sent to me by his Christian Majesty's commands, and the same is sent to all other Ambassadors, forbidding upon any occasion the sending of an express out of the kingdom without first giving notice to the Master of the Posts. I know not whether the same is observed in England; I am sure that is the least we can do.

"I have had no more complaints from the English merchants at Ronen. I suppose the restraint their goods were under is taken off, or else they would not be so silent. The French are extremely dissatisfied with the Venetians, and publish that they had not drawn away their succours, but that Mr. de Navailles discovered that they managed a treaty underhand with the Turks, all the while that they exposed the French troops, and upon their coming away had agreed to yield up the town.

"My Lord St. Alban's came hither last night. Everybody here is in great expectation of what the Parliament will do. If one may believe the French intelligence, it is not like to be so well as the King's friends and servants would wish."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 20, Paris.—"I send your Lordship here enclosed a copy of what Madame has writ to the King. You may judge partly of the King's kindness to you by the showing you Madame's letter, and if he does not, Madame desires you would not take notice that she has sent you the copy. Your Lordship has so much obliged her by all the real and effectual services that you have done her, that I am confident you may promise yourself all the return that she can ever make; and she appears to me to interest herself very cordially in everything that concerns you.

"As to de Moulin's letter, I have spoke to Mr. Puffandorfe, the Swedish Resident, who tells me that in discourse with de Moulin, he was a-telling him how much you were hated in this country, as the beginner of the Triple Alliance, and that here they looked upon you as their chief obstacle towards the separating of England from it, and therefore he imagined they would do all they could to destroy you; and amongst other things he told him how an acquaintance of his, talking with a man of quality in this Court, had heard him say that the French Ambassador has assured the King his master of having gained a great man in England; but his name was in cipher, and it might be anybody else as well as you; for the person that told it confessed he had not heard the man's name unciphered, and it was Mr. Puffandorfe himself who in jest asked if it were not my Lord Arlington. At the same time Mr. Puffandorfe told Mr. de Moulin that he believed it was all a lie, and only told to Mr. Konismar on purpose to write it into Swedland, to give a jealousy there of the English Ministers. I think to speak to Mr. de Turenne of the thing will be to no purpose, for I am confident, if he thought the owning it would do you any hurt, he would do it on purpose; so willing they would be here to have any disgrace happen to you."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 23, Paris.—“Since my Lord St. Alban’s and the rest of the Commissioners’ arrival, we have looked into the affairs of the Queen Mother’s family here, and Sir Thomas Bond has order to give you an account of it.

“I was yesterday at St. Germain’s, not in a formal audience, but only to wait of the King after his journey. I made him the compliments that his Majesty ordered me, for the care he was pleased to have of his concerns in the sealing up of the Queen Mother’s goods, and at the same time I desired him the seal might be taken off, which he told me he would give his order to Mr. de Lyonne that it might be done. Whether Monsieur will lay any claim to anything or no is yet very uncertain. Here is one from the Prince of Orange, who says that if Monsieur pretends any share in the succession, he will do the same in the Prince’s name, but else he submits all to the King of England’s pleasure; but he has given a list of the Princess Royal’s jewels, of which he produces a receipt under the Queen Mother’s hand, and those, if they are found, he desires to have.

“Yesterday Mr. Villars, that comes out of Spain, came to St. Germain’s. He says Don Jouan’s party is very weak; that Père Nisard’s interest is quite destroyed; and that the Marquis d’Ayetone is the man in most power and credit, and that he is extremely influenced and directed by the Marquis de Castell Roderigo.

“The King here is a-raising of four sea regiments of three thousand men a-piece, which are always to be kept in a readiness and exercised in the sea-ports. The King seems mightily to apply himself to the sea, and has declared publicly that he will give the command of his ships to none but people of quality. Mr. Colbert, who, since the death of Mr. de Berford, governs the sea affairs, is a great promoter of this.

“The Suisses, they say, are of new strictlier engaged, and more in the French interest than ever; and more, that his Christian Majesty has offered the Venetians to entertain in his service any of their troops that upon this peace with the Turk they shall care to dismiss.

“The King of Poland will be shortly here, and will see the King. I desire you will send me his Majesty’s directions how I am to behave myself to him.”

Endorsed: Answered 18. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 26, Paris.—“This morning the Swedish Resident was with me, and showed me a letter that he has writ to your Lordship, which will give you all manner of satisfaction as to Monsieur de Moulin’s business, and by the first safe opportunity I will send it you.

“Madame has, with much ado, hindered Monsieur from laying any claim to the goods and estate the Queen Mother has left behind; and it went so far that she was forced to speak to the King to quiet him. His pretensions, by the contract of the Queen Mother’s marriage, might have proved very troublesome, and have brought in the Duke [of York] and the Prince of Orange too, with their pretensions. The King ought to take some notice of this to Madame, whose proceedings towards him have been very generous and obliging upon this occasion."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 27, Paris.—“I cannot yet send your Lordship the answer of the mémoire that I gave the King at my last audience. He told me that Mr. de Lionne should give me my answer. I have been at St. Germain's since, but could not speak with him. He sent me word this morning that he hoped to have the answer ready for me by next post. I hope I shall not be blamed for these delays, it not being in my power to help it. We have taken off the King's seal both at Colombe and at Paris, and tomorrow we intend to inventory what is in the house at Colombe, and in a few days will send his Majesty the Queen Mother's papers over by a servant of mine.

“Mr. de Navailles has had express order from the King not to come to Court, but to retire to his own house till further order, and one Mr. L'Aysné is forbid the Court for saying that he believed Mr. de Navailles would not have come from Candia except he had had order for it. The Pope and the Venetians lay all the fault of the surrender of Candia upon the coming away of the French troops, which makes Mr. de Navailles be used with such severity. He that is called the Turkish Ambassador will be shortly here, but it is not yet known what character he will take upon him.

[P.S.] “You will receive from Doctor Jenkins a memorial that was given me by Mr. (sic), and the Doctor's answer to it.”

Endorsed: Answered 25. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 27, Paris.—“I understand by my sister* that Sir Ellis Layton has a great mind to come over into France, and she tells me that he may be made very good use of. You may be sure that I submit all those things to your Lordship's discretion. I suppose you will give him instructions what he is to do, and me what I am to do with him, and that he will come over under no character. I will write to your Lordship more at large by a servant of mine that in a few days is to bring over the Queen Mother's papers. I suppose Sir Ellis is not in such haste but that he may stay till your Lordship hears from me by him.

[P.S.] “Pray tell the King that there is a very pretty service of gilt plate at Chaleot of the Queen Mother's. It will serve his Majesty for his new lodgings, and he would do well to have it sent over for himself.”

Endorsed: Answered 25. [o.s.]

W. MONTAGU † to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Oct. 30.—“You will have an account of the proceedings of our Commission within a day or two by him who shall be dispatched with the papers of the Queen's Cabinet, which Madame, not desiring to * Lady Elizabeth Harvey.

† He generally makes a cross at the top of his letters.

peruse, they will be sent sealed up by an express to the King; and by the same safe way there will be accounted to you all you can expect from hence.

“We are so straightened here in our charities, as we can furnish as yet but two hundred pistoles towards all the Church charities and the secular reliefs, and our second fond [fund] of five thousand will be all consumed by the payment of the Christmas quarter to the house, so that I conceive the King cannot better employ the rest of the Queen’s table plate (after my Lord Ambassador is allowed a share for his present convenience), than to ordain it for the completing the other four hundred pistoles assigned in the copy of her first designed will, which for the present will answer in some degree the pressing necessities of Church succours for the Queen herself and the churchyard petitions for the poor. This, my Lord, I conceive assigned to my solicitation by my office, and I presume will invite your good offices by the disposition of your charity; wherefore I may be confident of your seconding this motion I make to the King in this enclosed.”

Endorsed: My L. Ab[bot] Montagu.

MONS. P. PUFENDORF to LORD ARLINGTON.

1669, Oct. 30, Paris.—“Ayant conneu par l’ouverture que S. Exc. Monsieur l’Ambassadeur Montagu m’a depuis peu faite, que vous desiriez de moy un éclaircissement touchant un certain discours que j’ay tenu icy au Sr. du Moulin, j’ay creu vous devoir satisfaire avec autant plus de liberté que je me puis promettre, que la sincerité de mon procedé en toute rencontre, & principalement en ce qui regarde le bien public, aura obtenu cet avantage dans votre esprit, que vous vous fieriez entierement sur la relation que je m’en vay vous en faire.

“Le dernier mois de May on avoit monstré à une certaine personne une lettre en chiffre, qu’on disoit estre escrite de Monsieur Colbert, Ambassadeur pour le Roy Tres-Chrestien en Angleterre, ou il y avoit un passage dechiffré apenprès dans les mesmes termes que vous avez appris du Sr. du Moulin. Cette personne par des raisons bien fortes trouva à propos de m’en avertir, quoy que d’abord il ne pût nommer celuy dont il s’agissoit dans ce passage, disant simplement que c’estoit un des principaux Ministres du Roy de la Grand-Bretagne, desquels comme je luy faisois le denombrement, il s’arresta tout court sur le nom de V. Exc., se persuadant que ç’avoit esté Elle, qu’on avoit voulu marquer dans cette lettre.

“Je repondis d’abord que je croyois la lettre supposée, & qu’il n’estoit rien de si facile au monde que de mettre au dessus d’un chiffre tout ce qu’on vouloit faire à croire à un autre qui n’en avoit jamais veu la clef, et qui par consequent estoit incapable de juger, si celuy que l’on disoit l’auteur de la lettre l’avoit escrit ou non; en quoy cette personne fut entierement d’accord avec moy, principalement apres que nous eumes remarqué, que la scene avoit esté trop ajustée pour n’estre pas suspecte.

“Quelque temps apres, dans une conversation particuliere avec le Sr. du Moulin, ou nous parlames de la quantité des traits dont quelques nns estoient accoustumés de se servir pour venir à leur but, je luy alleguy cet exemple là, y adjoustant, que je ne le croyois pourtant pas, et que ce m’estoit une marque infailible de fausseté qu’on l’avoit monstrée avec tant d’affectation. Mais il estoit inutile que je travaillasse à detromper le Sr. du Moulin, car il me repliqua tout incontinent, qu’il estoit impossible que V. Exc. changast jamais de sentiment, & que tout le monde estoit persuadé qu' Elle n'en pouvoit avoir que de conformes à l'interest de son Maistre & de sa Nation, & qu'on tachoit seulement de rompre par ces artifices des liens si sacrés.

“ Il me pressa pourtant de sçavoir le nom de celuy à qui l'on avoit monstré la lettre, comme aussi de le pouvoir mander à V. Exc., ce qu'il n'obtint pas de moy, ayant tiré d'abord une assurance de luy, qu'il n'en parleroit ni n'en escriroit à personne, de peur que cela ne causast des brouilleries s'il estoit divulgué mal à propos. Neantmoins il vous l'a fait sçavoir à la fin, comme il me l'a dit depuis luy mesme, & cela sur la seule assurance qu'il avoit, qu'il estoit impossible, que V. Exc. eust pû changer d'opinion dans une semblable rencontre.

“ C'a esté aussi l'unique raison pourquoy je ne fis point de difficulté de confier cette affaire là à une personne qui disoit tousjours que non seulement il devoit uniquement à V. Exc. le poste ou il se trouvoit alors, mais c'est aussi Elle seule de qui il esperoit l'establissement de sa fortune à l'advenir, comme en effet il n'est jamais sorti une parole de sa bouche, pour le moins dans les conversations que nous avons euës ensemble, qui n'ait esté pleine d'une submission entiere & d'un respect le plus profond du monde pour un Seigneur, de qui il tenoit, & de qui il esperoit tout. Tellement que j'ay esté extraordinairement surpris d'apprendre que le Sr. du Moulin vouloit à cette heure changer de batterie, & se servir de ce discours là à une fin bien contraire aux protestations cydevant faites à vostre égard, comme aussi à la verité mesme, & à l'intention de celuy qui avoit monstré la lettre.

“ Car il faut rendre à ce dernier cette justice là, qu'il ne s'est jamais parlé d'aucune corruption, comme si par ce moyen là on esperoit d'obtenir ce qu'on cherchoit; aussi auroit-il esté fort mal seant, & contre les principes d'une prudence seulement vulgaire, de vouloir donner quelque atteinte à la reputation d'un Ministre, par la cooperation & les bons offices duquel on se promettoit des progres si considerables: mais on a laissé ce passage dans son sens naturel, sans faire des commentaires là dessus; et en effet la liberalité dont la lettre parloit, s'estend aux avantages que la France cederait à l'Angleterre si elle vouloit entrer dans son interest plustost qu'au profit d'un particulier, d'autant qu'il est presque moralement impossible d'engager toute une Nation dans une affaire si delicate, et dont la seule pensée semble luy faire horreur, sans pouvoir monstrier des avantages si evidents qu'ils puissent effacer toutes les lumieres qu'on avoit euës auparavant du contraire. Et au pis aller si l'un vouloit borner cette liberalité là à la satisfaction qu'un seul Ministre en espereroit tirer, il ne s'en suivoit autre chose si non qu'on avoit respondu avec civilité aux promesses qu'un autre de son propre mouvement avoit avancées, n'ayant pas eu Ministre au monde qui eust esté obligé de rompre en visiere avec un autre & luy dire au nez qu'il s'opposeroit à ses demandes, principalement dans un pays ou les affaires se resolvent dans un College, et ou les raisons pour & contre sont bien pesées sans qu'on fasse la moindre demarche avec precipitation.

“ Pour ce qui est de moy, Monsieur, je vous puis jurer en verité, que toute cette Comedie là, bien loin de me donner quelque autre impression, ou me faire changer la maniere d'agir dont je me sers depuis que j'ay l'honneur d'estre employé par le Roy mon Maistre, qu'au contraire, elle m'a confirmé dans la verité des principes sur lesquels j'ay tousjours réglé ma conduite, qu'il falloit en tous cas que les deux Couronnes ne se separassent jamais, n'estant que tresassuré, qu'elles feroient mieux & avec plus de seureté leur parti conjointement, que séparées; outre que j'ay mis l'affaire de l'union des trois Estats au nombre de celles qu'on ne peut pas gaster mesme quand on le voudroit.” . . .

Endorsed: Monsr. Puffendorp.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 2, Paris.—“I send your Lordship here enclosed a note of some of the Queen Mother’s plate that Sir Thomas Bond, as Controller of her Majesty’s Household, pretends to. His pretensions are so reasonable that I do not doubt but your Lordship, from whom he acknowledges to have received many marks of your favour, will help him in them with the King, it being but what the King has already allowed to most of the Queen’s family, every one in their offices. The things are not so considerable to him for the value, as for a mark that it will be to him of his Majesty’s favour, and the acknowledging him and owning him as one that served his mother very well and very faithfully. All which considered, I hope your Lordship will do him all the good you shall think fit.”

Enclosure.

		Mares	on’.
“ This plate hath been gilt, but is worn almost white by reason of the long time it hath served her Majesty.	24 trencher plates, weighing - - -	47	6
	2 cadenas with 2 spoons, 2 forks, 2 knives, a toothpick-box, and a tiremoelle, altogether weighing - - -	14	2
	2 great knives and two forks, the hafts weighing - - -	—	7
	2 small trencher salts, weig[hing] - - -	1	2
	A vinegar pot, oil pot, and sugar box, weig[hing] together - - -	4	6
	4 esheys, with spoon, knife and fork in each of them - - -	—	—
	“ This is plain silver plate.	One sweetmeat pan, with a skimmer, and a spoon with a fork at the end of it, weig[hing] - - -	9
	A little pot to carry broth in, weig[hing] -	4	1
	3 round basins and 3 ewers to them, weig[hing] - - -	34	—
		116 --

“ All the abovesaid plate is not worth at the most not (sic) above 300 pounds sterling.”

This is not in R. M.’s hand. The total appears to be incorrect.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 9, Paris.—“I have taken order, my Lord, according to your directions, that his Majesty may have the gilt plate, which will be very fit for his Majesty’s use. The King will find, in the inventory that will come next post, six very fine silver sconces, two pair of silver andirons, and a silver looking-glass, which he will do well to resolve to appropriate to himself. I have been desired by some persons here to entreat you to speak to his Majesty that he would bestow them upon them, but I took the liberty to answer beforehand that I knew the King designed them for his own particular use. There is some pieces of crimson and gold brocard, a very fine stuff, and will make his Majesty a very fine bed, which I am sure he wants one. There will be enough almost, I believe, to hang the alcove of the chamber too. If the King pleases, I will have it made up for him here much handsomer and cheaper than it can be in England. There are persons that shall be nameless that will be a-begging of that too. Therefore if the King likes of what I propose, you must send an order that it may be put into my hands, and pray specify for what use, that it may not be thought I have begged it."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 9, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth two of your Lordship's, one of October the 21st, and another of the 25th [o.s.] I received them both together; the contrary winds hindered the post from coming for four days together, which made the politicians here, that refine upon everything, conclude great disorders upon the meeting of the Parliament, and that so the ports were shut. I hope the Parliament will be in so good temper as to deceive all their expectations.

"You have by this time, I am confident, received the answer of the memorials I presented about the Spanish complaints. I acquainted the Spanish Resident with what the answer was, who seemed extremely rejoiced at it, and could hardly believe it, the news was so good. The next thing he went to was to doubt whether the French would keep their word, but that time must try.

"The Turkish Resident or envoy is come within a league of Paris. He has had audience from Mr. de Lionne, who by the King's command received him with the same state that the Grand Viziere useth to receive any sent from his Christian Majesty. It is thought the King will not see him, because, by the letter to Monsieur de Lionne, he appears to be but an envoy, and the Grand Seigneur never admitting any into his presence under the degree of an Ambassador, the King here is resolved to proceed in the same manner with all that come from him. He has a letter for the King, but says he shall lose his head if he delivers it to anybody but the King himself.

"I suppose you know already of an order made by the King commanding all his subjects, wherever they are, that will return into France, to come back within six months. It is thought to be made upon an alarm of the Hugonets going to settle in England and Ireland."

The contents of this letter are endorsed, the last paragraph being epitomised thus:—The French King's calling home his subjects is supposed to be grounded on an alarm of the Huguenots going for Ireland.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 21, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of November the 4th [o.s.]. I did not write to your Lordship last post; I was not very well, and besides, I had nothing worth giving you the trouble of a letter. Since that time Monsieur de Lionne was with me by the King's order, to tell me that he was come to do the same thing which the Spaniards had lately done into England, which was to make a complaint, and it is this. The Spaniards have given order in all the ports of Spain that whatever merchandise comes from Lile or any of the other conquered towns, that the ships that bring them shall not be suffered to come in, and this under pretension that the plague is there, and they, offering to make there (sic) quarantaine, cannot be admitted upon those terms neither, though at the same time they receive all kind of goods that come from the towns in their own dominions, which are much more infected. The French look upon this as an art and malice of the Spaniard to destroy the trade of his Christian Majesty's subjects in the new conquered provinces and towns, without which they cannot subsist. But his Christian Majesty hopes that the King our master will interpose, and by his good offices prevent the inconveniences that may happen as it is supposed here by this unjust proceeding of the Spaniards, and has for that reason desired me to acquaint the King with it, which I desire your Lordship to do, and let me know what answer the King pleaseth I shall give his most Christian Majesty.

“The King of Poland is come to Paris; I know not, till I have orders out of England, how I am to do towards him.

[P.S.] “This day the Queen Mother is buried. There is news come of the Pope’s being extreme sick.”

Endorsed: Answered 15. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 21, Paris.—“As the news of my Lord Chamberlain’s [Manchester] illness has made a great many pretenders to his place in England, so it has made one in France, which is my Lord Duke of Richmond. Madame, upon the account of his Lady, who formerly served her, has writ to the King in his behalf. I[f] the King has the same consideration of past services, my Lord Duke’s pretension may succeed. I believe if he could have this place he would be willing to resign his Bedchamber place, and quit all other pretensions. I love my Lord Chamberlain so well that I hope he will recover, and put an end to everybody’s pretension. If it please God he should do otherwise, I hope in some of the vacancies the King will find a way of accommodating my Lord Sunderland. I have writ to you by the post, but this I believe will be sooner with you.”

Endorsed: Answered, 15. [o.s.]

[R. MONTAGU] to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 26, Paris.—“I writ your Lordship word in my last that I would give you an account of business happened lately between the King and Madame; and that the King our master may judge the better of the thing, I will tell you the whole story at large.

“Some time ago the Bishop of Valence, first Ausmonier (sic) to Monsieur, who is counted a man of as good parts as any in France, and looked upon by everybody as one particularly devoted to Madame’s service, was forbidden the Court, and had order to sell his place, upon some displeasure Monsieur had taken against him, the rise of which was from some advices given him not to live in so scandalous a way as he did both to God and man with the Chevalier de Lorraine. The King was easily brought to consent to his removal from Court, the said Bishop having been represented to him as a man that put his brother upon ways and counsels that he did not like. Madame was extremely mortified at the removal of this man from about Monsieur, looking upon it as an effect of the Chevalier de Lorraine’s power. At the same time that all this brouillerye was, Madame had a great confidence and trust in Madame de St. Shomoun[t], sister to the Mareschal de Gramont, and governess to her children. She is counted here as good a kind of woman as any is in France, and in my opinion a degree above what we call a discreet woman in England. This woman, it seems, the King of France never fancied, but never could have any exceptions against, but because Madame loved her and esteemed her, and she would not betray her to the King. The other day unluckily the Bishop of Valence, who was forbid the Court and confined to a certain place, had desired leave to come to an abbey that he had near Paris, which being granted, and he coming to the said abbey, he was taken very ill of the stone, and a retention of urine, and sending to his physician that used to treat him, he was by his advice drawn to Paris, which was so private that he came only with himself and his steward, and there concealed himself, minding nothing but his disease, which increased so upon him that his physician thought him in danger. The steward being frighted at this, lest his master should die concealed in his hands, came and acquainted Madame de St. Shomount with it, whom he knew to be his master's friend. She, hearing of his being at Paris, and of the danger he was in, writ him word that she was sorry that he had ventured to come to Paris, but however that if she were not sick that she would come to see him.

“This letter was, unfortunately for her, two hours after found in his pocket by the King of France his officers, who had followed Monsieur de Valence from whence he came, and knew of his being privately in Paris. They came into his lodging and found him taking a glisten; they pretended to look for a false coiner, and so searched him and took his papers, amongst which was Madame de St. Shomoun[t]'s letter, which, as soon as the King saw, he said he was glad he had found anything against her, and so sent to Monsieur, who was at Paris with Madame, to come to him, and commanded him immediately to turn Madame de St. Shomount out of her place, without saying anything to Madame, who he knew loved her so well. After he had given his orders to Monsieur, he sent Monsieur de Turenne to Madame to acquaint her with the thing, to whom Madame replied that of necessity she must obey the King's will, but that willingly she would never part with a servant she loved so well, that had given no other occasion than this.

“Upon this Madame sent for me, and commanded me to speak with the King from her, and to desire that upon her account he would pardon Madame de St. Shomoun[t], which accordingly I did, and after arguing the thing a great while, I could have no other reason for his doing the thing than that he had resolved it. All France, as well as Madame, look upon this as a very harsh thing, and the rather because that Madame de Montespaue, who hates Madame, and Madame de St. Shomoun[t] particularly, is at the bottom of the business. Now I have told the story, Madame desires that the King would take no notice of it to the French Ambassador further than thus — to tell him that he hears the King has used his sister lately very unkindly, but he says nothing to him of it because she has desired him to take no notice of it; and after that, to be a little colder and stranger to Colbert than ordinary. If the King had seen how much Madame has been troubled at this business, I am sure it would trouble him extremely, for I never saw anything in my life done so rudely and so uncivilly. The King told Monsieur, who can hold nothing, and so told it Madame again, that he believed Madame would complain to her brother, the King of England, and he perhaps would take it so ill that he would not be his friend. ‘Well,’ says he, ‘let her be whose sister she will, she shall obey me.’

“I tell you these particulars because by such circumstances you may sometimes judge of men's humours, and so take your measures for matters of greater consequences. The King's chief pleasure here is to domineer and insult over those that are in his power, and I will conclude with thanking God, both for you and myself, that we serve so good a master.”

Not signed. Endorsed : Answered 22. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Nov. 30, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of Nov. the 18th [o.s.] Since I sent your Lordship the complaint that his most Christian Majesty had made by Monsieur de Lionne of the Spaniards refusing trade with new conquered town[s] in Flanders, under the pretence of infection, I have spoken with the Spanish Resident here, who has been with the Ministers, to assure them that it was a mistake, and that after having made their quarantaine and aired their goods, the French shall have the same liberty of trade as any of his Catholic Majesty’s subjects.

“As for what your Lordship writes to me concerning Mons. Petit, if his crime were what they pretend, he were not excusable. If they had any such thing to allege against him, if they had complained to me I would not have protected him; but being he is my servant, and one that receives my wages, I cannot, as I have the honour to be the King’s Ambassador, but protect him till what they accuse him of be made out to me. Therefore pray acquaint the King with this, for if it be only suspicion, and nothing made out against him, it is very hard a poor man should be ruined. I send your Lordship the copy of two letters given me by the Spanish Resident, by which you will judge how the affairs of the posts are like to be accommodated.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Dec. 12, Paris.—“Your Lordship will find by Madame’s letter, and by what I write to the King, how matters stand with her, and how necessary it is for the King, for his own sake as well as for his sister’s, if anything is to be done, to do something or get something to be done that may make her a little more considered here. The little regard that the King and Monsieur have had to her in this business of Madame de St. Choumont, is taken notice of by everybody, for not only all the French but all the strangers here are in expectation how the King of England will resent this. The King will tell you the ways that are proposed, and he is the best judge of what he thinks fit for to do. Madame desires, whatever is done, that the King will from henceforward live more coldly and not so familiarly with the French Ambassador. He is so much your Lordship’s friend, that I do ill to put you upon doing him this ill office.

“I am not afraid that the King’s using Mr. Colbert coldly should be returned upon me, for the King here lives at so much distance and strangeness with me, that it is impossible for him to do it more upon any occasion; and if I were worthy to advise you as to your own particular, I would not give him free access at all times, for sometimes I go two days together to St. Germain’s without being able to get to speak with any of the Ministers, and all they answer at the door is, when I ask for any of them, ‘Il travaille pour le Roy.’ It is a great presumption in me to pretend to give a Secretary of State advice, but I assure [you], my Lord, they are come to that degree of pride and insolency here in all they do, that except in England you use them and hector just as they do here, they will think we are afraid of them; whereas, if we are as high and as stout as they, I am confident we shall bring them a pin lower.

“I will say nothing to you of M[onsieur]r[’s] usage of Madame, but if she had married a country gentleman in England of five thousand pound a year, she would have lived a better life than she doth here; for M[onsieur]r, though he be a very wise Princee, doth, as Sir Daniel use[d] to, take a pleasure to cross his wife in everything. Madame takes you so much for her friend that she doth not doubt of all the service you can do her ; and she is of the other side so reasonable as to expect to have nothing done but what shall stand altogether with the King her brother's convenience. Madame was in pain to have her letters to the King and you come safe, and therefore I sent one a-purpose : but I would not send my servant post, because they would have known here I had sent a courier, and might have guessed what it was about."

R. MONTAGU to [THE KING].

[16]69, Dec. 12, Paris.—“ I suppose your Majesty has, by Madame's own letter, as well by what I writ to my Lord Arlington, had an account of the disgrace of Madame de St. Chaumont, which has been done with so many unkind circumstances, and so little consideration of whose daughter and whose sister she is, that I do not see how your Majesty can avoid doing something that may show the world that you both intend to own her and right her when occasion shall serve, which will make them here for the future use her at another rate, when they see that your Majesty lays her concerns and interests to heart. By all the observation that I have made since I have been in this country, nobody can live with more discretion than Madame does, both towards the King and Monsieur, and all the rest of the world ; but she is so greatly esteemed by everybody that I look upon that as partly the occasion of her being so ill used both by the King and her husband. To remedy this, I would humbly propose to your Majesty what Madame has already discoursed to me of, which is, that your Majesty would tell the French Ambassador in England, that you know the Chevalier de Lorraine is the occasion of all the ill that your sister suffers, and that she is one that you are so tender of that you cannot think the French King your friend, whilst he suffers such a man about his brother, by whose counsels he doth every day so many things to Madame's dissatisfaction.

“ The King here is sufficiently convinced of all the impertinencies and insolencies of the Chevalier de Lorraine, and doth at this time both desire and stand in need so much of your friendship that I believe in a little time he may be brought to remove him from about Monsieur, if he sees it is a thing your Majesty really insists upon. If, Sir, you shall ever think fit to say this to the French Ambassador, at the same time a letter from you to the King here would be very necessary, with some instructions to me to speak to him in it too.

“ In case your Majesty doth not approve of this way, nothing could be more for Madame's comfort, as well as credit, than that your Majesty should desire to have her make a journey to you into England in the spring. I think there needs not many arguments to persuade your Majesty towards the seeing of one that you love so well. If you shall think this improper too, Madame would then desire that you would let fall to the French Ambassador that you are informed how unkindly she is used here, but that she has desired you to take no notice of it, but only, if you please, not live so freely, nor do the French Ambassador so much honour, as you use to do.

“ Your Majesty may perhaps think me very impertinent for writing of this, but I assure you, Sir, not only all the French, but the Dutch, the Swedish, and Spanish Ministers are in expectation of what your Majesty will do in this business, for they all know Madame is the thing in the world that is dearest to you ; and they whose interest it is to have your Majesty and the King here be upon ill terms, are very glad that he has done a thing which they think will anger you.

I believe the King is now sorry that he has done this, though he be of a humour not to own it. This is a conjuncture of that consequence for the quiet and happiness of the rest of Madame's life, that I thought I should be wanting both in the duty I owe your Majesty and the zeal I have for her service, if I did not give you the best account I could of what concerns her, which I hope you will pardon."

R. MONTAGU to his Sister [LADY HARVEY].

[16]69, Dec. 12, Paris.—“ You know I sent you word by the last post that the first opportunity I would send you word what I had been forced to do about the present that the King promised Madame, and I may thank you for it, for you had writ me word so positively that I should have a very good account of it by Robing Natt, that I made no scruple, nor indeed could I tell how to avoid helping Madame to it in the extremity that she was in. You must know there is one Abbé Clermont, a man of great quality, and one of the greatest gamesters in France. This man, about five years ago, partly won of Madamc, and partly paid to other people what she had lost, as much as made her four thousand louis d'ors in his debt. This man, about a month ago, left off his being an Abbé, and has bought a place of Gentleman of the Robes to the King, for which he is to pay fifty thousand pistoles, and when he came to pay his money he could not make up the sun unless Madame paid him what she owed him. She sent for me and told me of the business, being very unwilling Monsieur or the King should know it, and asked me when I thought she should have that money out of England. I told her, my Lord Arlington had told me, very soon. She told me the extremity she was in, and said there was a man that had already furnished her with fifteen hundred louis d'ors, and would let her have four thousand more if I would be bound. I could not tell how to refuse it; so I am engaged for five thousand five hundred louis d'ors, to be paid at the second day of February. If there is not some order taken, I shall not know what shift in the world to make; my credit will be so lost. If I get well of[f] of this, I promise you I will never meddle with such businesses again. Pray let me hear as soon as you can what is to be done, and show my Lord Arlington this letter from me.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Dec. 18, Paris.—“ This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Dec. the 3rd [o.s.] I can yet give no account of the proposal I am to make to his Christian Majesty about putting the dependencies of the conquered places to some arbitrage. The last week there was no doing anything, the business of Rome so took up everybody here, and this week the King spends at Versailles; but I have some reason to think that till Mr. de Beziere be at Madrid, who has certainly something to propose there that we do not know of, they will resolve of nothing here that relates to the affairs of Spain.

“ I have lately received a letter from the Connestable of Castile, wherein he desires me to speak to his Christian Majesty, that as the order is for the taking away the placards de résidence, so that he would give order for the restoring of all the moneys that were raised upon that account before the publishing the revocation of those same placards. I know not whether it be the King my master's intention that I should speak in this business, and I question, if I should, whether it be the intention of the French to restore anything of what they have received; so that I must expect the King's commands before I do any more in it.

"I find that the chief thing that has all this while caused all the disagreement about the limits at the conference at Lile, is that which the Spaniards call contre-prétensions, and which they say here positively they will not allow of.

"I have presented Colombe furnished and the pendants of pearl in the King's name to Madame, for which I suppose she has already returned his Majesty thanks.

"The Pope is not dead, but they say mending; however, Monsieur de Chaulnes has order to keep on his journey, except the King sends a courier to fetch him back.

"*They brag openly here that they have hindered the Spaniards from paying the money to the Swedes.** Your Lordship, though, knows how that matter stands better than I can tell you."

Endorsed: Paris,  $\frac{8}{18}$  December 69. R.  $\frac{1}{2}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Dec. 21, Paris.—"Though I have, upon your Lordship's recommendation, endeavoured to serve Dr. Jenkins as much as I could in this place, yet he is so honest and so worthy a gentleman, that upon his own account wherever he goes he cannot but find a great deal of respect from everybody. I never saw a man in my life that I liked better; he has acquitted himself of this little employment to the satisfaction of everybody, and whenever there were occasion I am confident you would see him do it in a greater.

"I can give your Lordship no new account of the state of affairs in this place, they being just as I told you in all my former letters. I find the King and Ministers extremely disposed to keep the peace, and everybody else mad for a war. I have made it my business since I have been here to inform myself what entertainment the King of France allows his troops, and I find their pay is much short of what the King our master allows his, and yet they are in much greater order than they are in England. I am confident the King might, if he would, save a fourth part of what his troops cost him, and yet have them as good men, and as many, as he has now; which is demonstrable by what is done here, where their pay is less, and yet the meat and drink, and horse-meat, and cloth and saddles, and all other furniture much dearer. I know the King does not love a man should meddle with what he has not to do with, and so I only offer this to your Lordship's consideration to represent to him what I say, as you shall think fit; but I am sure it cannot do our master any hurt, either to have more men or more money, and one of the two, with a little inspection into that expense, he may be sure of.

"They are here now mightily set upon being strong at sea, and there are several projects on foot for the well-regulating of all things belonging to the marine, which I will endeavour to learn, to be able to give you the best account I can of. Sir Thomas Bond will speak to you himself in the concern he has about the pretension to some of the Queen's plate. I cannot but do him that justice as to say he has taken

---

* In cipher, deciphered by Lord A.'s secretary.

a great deal of pains in this business of the Queen Mother's, and has saved the King both money and trouble; but I know there needs not many arguments to persuade you to do good turns when it is in your power, so I will say no more."

Endorsed: Ansd. Jan. 3rd.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Dec. 24.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Dec. the 9th [o. s.], accompanied with the recommendations of two French ministers, his Majesty's chaplains. As soon as any of their friends come to me and show me how I may help them, I will do them the best service I can. As for the Prince de Ligny, I have not been wanting in my frequent solicitations both to the King and Ministers here, nor shall not for the time to come, if there be the least appearance of doing him good. The King ought not to expose himself to another denial, but if I find the business like to do, and wants only the King's recommendation, I will give your Lordship notice, and then it may not be improper for his Majesty to write.

"What I told your Lordship of letters of reprisals against the Dutch was this. The King here has put out an order upon pain of death for all French seamen in any other Prince's service to return home. There happened at Marseilles aboard a Dutch man-of-war to be some French seamen, which they demanded from the Dutch captain, but he went away without consenting to it; upon which they seized upon all the Dutch merchantmen then in the harbour, which were not above two or three; and upon complaint made of this, as I am informed, so far from giving the Dutch satisfaction, it was intimated to them that if the Dutch did not satisfy the French upon several wrongs they pretend to have received, that letters of reprisals should be granted. I think this matter has not yet proceeded further than to a threat.

"They are as forward in raising troops here as they can be [in] Holland. There is order for raising two regiments of foot, the regiment d'Anjou and Vermandois, both of three thousand men a-piece, besides a company of a hundred chevaux légers of M[ousieu]r d'Anjou, chosen out of the best of the old horse of other regiments, and a company of three hundred men, two hundred whereof are to be gentlemen of quality and a hundred soldiers of fortune, that are to be called the Admiral's guard, which are always to be upon (sic) the Admiral and Vice-Admiral; and out of these the King intends always to choose his sea officers. Besides this, there is [are] to be three regiments of three thousand men a-piece, all seamen; two of the regiments the King will allow to serve in merchantmen, and three thousand are always to be ready at home for his own service, and they shall relieve one another; one year they serve the King, and the other they have the liberty to serve in merchantmen, but all listed as the King's soldiers.

"The Count d'Estre, that is called the Vice-Admiral du Ponant, is gone to Rochell, where there is [are] six very good ships ready. I asked him myself whither he was to go; he told me he was not to open his orders till he was at sea. I assure you, next year the Christian King will be able to put fourscore sail of good ships to sea, and some of them bigger than any the King has. I am informed that this Court now makes great applications to the Duke of Lorraine, and offer[s] to relâche a great deal of the treaty you know of, made with him, upon condition that he will enter into the French interest. Mr. de Chaulnes, I believe, will not be wanting in all the skill he has to procure them another good Pope, being encouraged, if he can succeed, with the hopes of the government of Britany, which is one of the best things the King here has to give. They have got by the end here that we have had ill success against Turkey with our fleet in the Streights, but I hope the report may prove false."

[P.S.] "The Duke de Longeville has made himself a priest, and left his estate to the Count St. Paul, his younger brother."

Endorsed : Ansd. Jan. 3.

MONS. DE LIONNE to [R. MONTAGU,] the English Ambassador.

1669, Dec. 26, Paris.—Has spoken to the King, as requested, on the subject of the "Sieur" Petit. Notwithstanding his past bad conduct, the King pardons him out of regard for the Ambassador, provided that he do not remain in Paris. The King was pleased with the Ambassador's assurance that he would not retain anyone a quarter of an hour after being informed of his Majesty's objection to such person. The French Ambassador in England has been charged to make the same offers to his British Majesty in case any member of his household should give dissatisfaction there.

French.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69, Dec. 28, Paris.—"There is nothing of public news this week, neither have I received any from your Lordship, I suppose by reason of Christmas [da]y, that stops the post. The way of writing to the Duke of Savoy, the Duke of Florence, and [the] Prince of Tuscany you shall have next post, if not this, for one [of?] M<sup>r</sup>. de Lionn[e]'s secretaries will give it me. The stuff that the King would have a bed made of is in my hands; I believe I shall make up the bed with a rich gold campane, which is in the nature of a fringe, and line it with a slight cloth of gold, and have enough to hang the King's new little Bedchamber, where he dresseth himself, pretty cheap. You shall know in a post or two what it will come [to]; in the meantime I desire you would let Mr. Chiffings take measure of the King's Bedchamber, how much will hang it, and send me over the measure. If your Lordship has anything to do for yourself here, you may command," &c.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69[-70], Jan. 4, Paris.—"I writ not to your Lordship last post, for the night before I was obliged to go to St. Germain's for an audience, where I delivered the King a memorial, the copy of which I send you, and I proposed to him at the same time the referring all the disputes of the conquered places to some arbitrage which he should most like of. The King, after I had spoke to him, read the memorial, and told me very readily that he was so confident of the King my master's friendship and kindness to him, that he would refer it all to him. I asked him whether I might write the King word so; he told me yes, and gave me the memorial I had presented back again. But before I was quite out of the Court at St. Germain's, M<sup>r</sup>. de Lionne came after me to desire me to leave him the memorial, because the King would give me an answer in writing, which accordingly I did; and today morning I received this letter from M<sup>r</sup>. de Lionne, which I send you; and when he came to me—as you see he desires me to stay for him in his letter—he told me the King had mistook what I proposed to him, and the memorial that I had given him; that as for all the disputes of the limits and conquered places, he could not leave them to any arbitrage; but that if the King my master would desire it, he said he did not positively give the King's word, but he did believe that his most Christian Majesty would give satisfaction upon those places which might give any jealousy to the other Princes of Christendom, and especially the Hollanders, of the breaking of the peace. The places he named to me were Condé, Link, and several other dependencies upon Newport. This he said was as much as he had agreed to the Pope about a year ago, when he writ the letter you know of to him. Your Lordship will see how the King approves of this, and give me King's orders accordingly to speak in it.

"Mr. de Lionne told me he was afraid the French Ambassador either had not understood you very well, or made you understand him very well, or else I should have had order only to have desired that these three places should be left to arbitrage. They give me hopes here that the project of the Treaty of Commerce shall suddenly be remitted to you, but they tell me it is so well framed to our advantage that it must be quite altered, so that I believe we are very far from agreeing in that point.

"I shall not be very hasty in pressing the restoring of what has been received by the French before the placards de résidence were taken off. The Spaniards have reason to be very well satisfied and very thankful that the King's intercession has prevailed so much, and everybody here wonders how the King here ever consented to it. It has produced one effect in Flanders, that every private man that has the least dispute with any of the French, write[s] to me as if I were obliged to be their common solicitor. I have told most of them that there being a Spanish Resident here, it is an office belongs more properly to him, and that except it is something the King my master recommends to me, as he did the Prince of Ligny's business, I desire to be excused."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 4, 69 (altered to 70), s. n. Answered 3rd. [o. s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69[-70], Jan. 11, Paris.—"I have had no letters from your Lordship these three posts. It is (sic) has been so extreme cold, and there has been so much snow that they tell us here there is no travelling for the post.

"The King has resolved here that on Easter Monday he will set forward towards Flanders, to visit all the new conquered places and fortifications. He will go first to Callice, and so to all the towns he has on the sea coasts. He intends to be two months in his journey. The Queen and all the Court go with him. I suppose the King my master will have me follow him; I desire to know, that I may prepare time enough to fit my equipage for the journey. It is made a kind of rayllerye here, the expense and fright that this journey will put the Spaniards and the Hollanders to, when they see his most Christian Majesty come so near them, with so great a train as he is like to do, for he has declared that he will take it well of all those that shall follow him, because he desires to have a full Court upon this occasion.

"There is another journey discoursed of for the autumn, the King's going to visit all the places where his ships are a-building. He has of late applied himself extremely to all things that relate to the sea, and is encouraged extremely in it by Mr. Colbert, who has the whole management of all that belongs to the sea, as Mr. Le Tellier and Louvoy have of what forces belong to the land, which has caused some jealousies and differences between the Ministers. The King has declared that from henceforward he will have, every summer, between forty and fifty ships at sea. I believe he has ships enough to do that, but I believe for some years he will hardly find seamen, especially if we and the Dutch can keep our own men at home.

“The Elector of Brandenbough[’s] agent is gone from hence extremely well satisfied with this Court, with resolutions to dispose his master to continue firm in the French interest, which he has been won to by a considerable present they gave him here in ready money, besides the ordinary presents given to envoys.

“My Lord Northumberland has been extremely ill used here by the officers of the Custom-house, about some Spanish horses and barbs that they have seized; and if they do not give him all satisfaction, I shall be obliged to make a public complaint. Mr. de Lionne has married his daughter, and the morning before the King sent him twenty thousand pistoles towards her portion; I wish your Lordship as good luck with yours.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 11, 69 (altered to 70). Answered the 10th, 69. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69[-70], Jan. 18, Paris.—“I have been several times spoke to by Sir George Hamilton to write to you concerning a pretension he has to a pension of five hundred pound a year, which the King promised and gave him upon his marriage, and which was cut off with the common calamity that attended all pensions at that time. I cannot but confess that I think he wants it extremely, and that I wish extremely that he could get it, but I am afraid the time for pensions in England at present is unseasonable, and therefore I advised him the most I could to defer his journey for some time; but he tells me his necessities are so urgent that he could not but try whether the King would do anything for him or no; so that since I could not stop him, I have endeavoured to compound the business, and have advised him to ask but for three hundred pound a year, for that five hundred is a very strong pension as things stand in our Court. The King here has some way or other heard of his pretensions, and three or four days ago sent him six hundred pistoles, and told him it was to help in his journey, and that he hoped the King of England would do his part, and that between them they might help him to subsist. I know the King our master loves Sir George Hambleton (sic) very well. The employment he has here is extreme honourable, and at long run he will make his fortune in it, but in the mean time it brings him in so little profit that, except he is helped some other way, it is impossible for him to hold out long in it. Considering your good nature, and the kindness you have for Sir George Hamilton, I need use no other arguments.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 18,  $\frac{9}{10}$ . Answered by the express.

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69[-70], Jan. 19, Paris.—“It is a hard matter, according to the various opinions of the politicians, to give you an exact account of the affairs of this Court, where the things of greatest consequence are carried so privately, and where so few have admittance into the secret. That which is most discoursed of now is the King’s journey into Flanders. He intends to have all the Court and his Guards go with him, and when he is there, he intends a general rendezvous of his whole army. I do not doubt but that this will extremely alarm his neighbours, and put the Spaniards and the Dutch to an expense, that they may be in some posture of defence in case of any sudden attempt of the French's part. This is all that I know or can guess of this business. If the King will take advice from most of his Court that are to follow him in his journey, there is no doubt but there would be a war, for they are all starving for want of one.

"Madame has discoursed with me upon her coming into England, when the King shall be at Callice. I believe the King our master will like the proposition very well, and I believe the King here will be inclinable enough to it, out of the hopes that he may have of the good offices that she may do between the two Crowns, but I believe M[onsieur] will never consent to it; he is so jealous, I mean, of her credit and her interest both in England and here, that there is nothing he would not do to diminish it in both places. She will write to the King and you at large upon this subject, so I will say no more of it.

"If the King commands me to go this journey, as I expect he will, I shall come very near Bruxells, and if there be anything there the King would have me do, or would have concerted with the Constable, if you send me his Majesty's directions, I can easily go thither for three or four days, and be able to give you some account how affairs stand in that place; but perhaps such a journey may give them some suspicions in this Court; that you will consider of beforehand.

"I have already given you an account how much the King does apply himself to the sea affairs, and how much Mr. Colbert does encourage that design in him, who has the direction of all that belongs to the sea; but there happened lately a very great dispute between him and Mr. de Louvoy, who should give out the sea commissions for the new raised regiments, and the King has decided it for Mr. de Louvoy.

"I desire your Lordship will dispatch the money of the present the King made to Madame, for my credit lies at stake for it, and your own is a little engaged in the matter. It will be very unnecessary for me to recommend Sir George Hambleton's affair to you, you loving him so well as I know you do. I could, if I had a mind to it, recommend to you Madame de Fieene and several other worthy persons, but their merit speaks for themselves, so I will trouble your Lordship no longer."

Endorsed by Lord A. : Jan. 19,  $\frac{6}{7}$ . Answered by the express.

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]69[-70], Jan. 20, Paris.—"I have just now received your Lordship's letters by my servant, and the enclosed to Madame from the King and yourself. The ill weather stopped my man two or three days longer than else he would a-been a-coming.

"Madame, I suppose, will take her measures the best she can for her coming to England in the spring; and that which she proposes to herself is, that the King should come to Dover when the King of France is at Callice, and then it is impossible for them here to refuse her the liberty of coming to see the King her brother.

"I am glad of this opportunity to clear myself of two things that the Ambassador in England accuses me of. As for the business of Mr. Petit, I send you here a letter from Mr. de Lion[ne], which I am sure was writ before the Ambassador in England could complain of me.

You will see by that they are dissatisfied* with me, and the King himself at my last audience thanked me for the civility I had shown him in Mr. Petit's business. You may by this judge how malicious the Ambassador is, and if I said a liar, I think I should do him no injury.

"As for the delivering in of my memorial about the difference of the the conquered places, the day after I had your letter I asked an audience, but Christmas being near, the King desired to be free till after the holidays, and then I gave you an account of what passed. I am obliged to your Lordship for your advertisement, and I desire you will contrive the same kindness to me when I am accused of anything, that I may either mend or justify myself. You will do me a favour if you will take notice of what I say to you [to?] the King. This is a small pattern of the French Ambassador's goodness and truth; he writes every week the silliest, foolishest stories in the world, and deserves to be banished much more than Petit.

"My Lord General [George Monk, Duke of Albemarle] being dead, your Lordship ought, as you are Secretary of State, by the King's directions, give out all the orders to the Army, as Mr. de Louvoy does here. Therefore look to it in time not to let such a thing slip; the King will be better served by it, and it will be an injury and diminution to your place to have it done by anybody else.

"I have been endeavouring to find out whether the King's journey into Flanders holds or no, and by all I see it is resolved for Easter Monday. Madame is extremely revived with the letters that came by my servant. There is nothing but the King her brother's kindness that keeps up her spirits; therefore pray mind the King, though I think he needs it not, still to continue. She is mightily delighted with the hopes of seeing him. The great deference and respect I show to her here is one of the reasons that make the Ministers so little partial to me, but as long as I can have the good fortune to please my master, I shal' comfort myself though I should be out of favour in this Court. I desire you would return my humble thanks to his Majesty for the honour of his letter. I find my father so delighted with the King, that I believe he would be glad to put himself to service too. I wish the King would make him a Lord again, as my sister desired Sir Daniel [Harvey] should be a Knight again."

Endorsed by Lord A. : Jan. 20, 69.

W[ALTER] M[ONTAGU] to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Jan. 22, Paris.—An obscurely worded letter relating to "the novitiate" into which he was about to enter; the secular habit of St. Martin; and a dispute between a lady and her husband. He refers to "late graces and benefits" received from [the King]. "If his desire be serious of having anything within my propriety, you may offer all to his choice, telling him that S. Martin's is but yet sequestered, not exposed to sale."

Endorsed by Lord A. : Jan. 22, 69. Lord Ab[bot] Montegu. Answered by the express.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69[-70], Jan. 25, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Jan. the 10th [o.s.], which I received just as this post is going away. I am newly come from St. Germain's from seeing the King, who has * Sic ; qu. satisfied.

for these four or five days been a little indisposed. I believe his indisposition may make as much noise at the Emperor's Court as the Emperor's has done here, whose illness we do not hear confirmed or contradicted otherwise than I writ to you last post; but the King's distemper is nothing but vapours of the spleen, which I send you word of so particularly, because princes are always reported to be sicker than they are.

"I shall follow your directions you send me concerning the memorial, and send you an account as soon as the King can be spoken with. I have heard from Marseilles that Sir Thomas Allen has taken two Turkish men-of-war of 18 and 16 guns a-piece, and in a short time that he is in likelihood of meeting with more of them. The King's journey into Flanders holds for certain. I cannot mention anything of my following till I know whether the King our master cares to have me go the journey or no. I have got my Lord Northumberland's horses released, with all civility on the King's part, but most of them were spoiled by the roguery of those that had detained them."

Endorsed by Lord A. : Jan. [25 ?], 69-[70].

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]69[-70], Feb. 1, Paris.—"After I had writ my letters and sent them away the last post, Mr. de Lionne sent me the answer to the memorial that I had given the King, which I caused Mr. Perwich presently to send. I do not doubt but you have received it, and I hope it is to the King's satisfaction. You will be a little surprised with a story that I shall tell you, and which I have desired Madame to write at large to the King. The Bishop of Langres, that was favourite to the last Duke of Orleans, was possessed of some four thousand pistoles a year, in two abbeys, which upon his death were in Monsieur's disposal, as being in his apennage. This Bishop fell sick about six days ago, and upon Thursday the news came to St. Germain's that he was dead. I happened to be in Madame's chamber when M[onsieu]r heard it, who, before a great deal of company, told the Chevalier de Lorraine that he would give him those two benefices, though it seems the King had already told M[onsien]r that he would never consent that the Chevalier de Lorraine should have them, not thinking him a man of a life fit for Church benefices.

"M[onsieu]r, after the declaration he had made of his intention [to?] the Chevalier, went to see the King, who was a-going to Versailles. M[onsieu]r came from the King so discontented with some discourse that passed between them, that he presently sent for his coach and declared he would leave the Court, since the King used him so; and my Lord Abbot Montagu being there, he sent for him to come to him. His business with him was to desire him to go to Mr. Le Tellier, to let him know he was resolved to leave the Court, and to desire him to give the King notice of it. Mr. Le Tellier desired to be excused, for that he never meddled in any business but what the King commanded him. The King, however, was presently informed of M[onsieu]r[s] intentions, and my Lord Abbot Montagu had so far prevailed with M[onsieu]r as, though his coach and guards were at the door, to stay till the King came back. At the King's return M[onsieu]r had another conversation with the King, in the which they were both so dissatisfied that M[onsieu]r came presently away to Paris, and the Chevalier de Lorraine was taken prisoner, and is sent to Piere Encise at Lions.

“Madame endeavoured to interpose between the King and M[onsieu]r. The King is very well satisfied with her part, and has declared that she had no hand in this matter against the Chevalier, but that he loved his brother so well that he was resolved to remove anybody that could do ill offices between them, and that should put his brother upon doing anything contrary to his duty and his interest. Monsieur, I believe, in his heart thinks this is Madame’s doing, though she has in the opinion of all the world behaved herself the best to M[onsieu]r that can be in this matter, and is gone along with him to Villecotrait, where he is gone this morning, and pretends never to come back, as he says, ‘qu’ on ne me rend le Chevalier.’ I believe the King will not send for him in haste, as he has declared. All yesterday that M[onsieu]r was at Paris, I observed that not one man but his own servants came to see him, and if he should stay here these seven years the same things (sic). Mr. de Turenne and several others of the Court that wish him well, have writ to him and dissuaded him from this journey, but nothing can prevail with him. There is a discourse as the King would send some man of quality to be constantly with him, and to give an account of his actions. Madame has desired that all letters to her may be sent constantly to me, and I will send a servant to her with them. This action of M[onsieu]r will make more noise out of France than it does here.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 1, s.n.,  $\frac{69}{70}$ .

R. MONTAGU to [the KING].

[16]69[-70], Feb. 5, Paris.—“Your Majesty had by the last post an account of M[onsieu]r and Madame’s retiring from Court, and of the Chevalier de Lorraine’s imprisonment. The effect of it cannot be good for Monsieur, he having proceeded so passionately and unreasonably as he has done in this business, which I will not trouble your Majesty with a relation of, knowing Madame will do it better and more exactly. That which I know concerns you most, Sir, is to hear what part she had in this affair, who really has behaved herself with so much discretion towards the King and decency towards Monsieur, that they are both the most satisfied in the world with her. Though the King has declared more publicly how much he thinks himself obliged to her for her behaviour; but Monsieur cannot help from suspecting that all this affair was conducted by Madame, and that the King did it to gratify your Majesty. You will judge that best yourself, Sir, by the account I will give you of some discourse I had with the King two days before in his closet.

“My Lord Arlington sent me word, by your Majesty’s order, that I was to say anything to the King that I thought might be of service or advantage to Madame; whereupon, after having concerted it with her, I asked a private audience of him, wherein I told him that I had given your Majesty an account of all the kind expressions that he had made me about Madame, when I spoke last to him for Madame St. Chaumont’s business, and that you had commanded me to let him know how much you were obliged to him for it, and that there was nothing you were so sensible of as of any kindness or unkindness done to her; and that therefore, she having lost the Queen her mother, you recommended her now to his care, as the person in the world you valued and loved the most. This took the best in the world, and I hope I have done nothing in it that your Majesty will disapprove of; my intentions I am sure were good.

“He answered me, that his inclinations were so bent to serve Madame that he should have no difficulty to do what you desired, and that the first opportunity that presented itself, she should see how much he was her friend. Whether he meant this last action or no I do not pretend, and therefore will say nothing more of it, but will take the boldness to say a word or two to you in my own concerns.

“Madame was pleased in her last letter to recommend me to your Majesty for a Commissionaire’s place in the Treasury, which I hear this post you have bestowed upon Mr. Grey. Sir William Coventry’s is yet indisposed of. If your Majesty thinks me capable or worthy of such an employment, your Majesty may bestow that upon me without any increase of expense to yourself, for five Commissionaires, which were the number at first, will cost you no more than four; and your Majesty will enable me the better to support the expense I am forced to be at here, which, by reason of the Court’s never being in a place, is treble of what any Ambassador has been at this twenty year. I humbly beg your pardon, Sir, for this presumption, but I confess it would be the greatest satisfaction in the world to me to owe my good fortune to your Majesty’s choice and favour, rather than to the importunity of any of my friends.”

Endorsed by Lord A. : Feb. 5, 1690.

R. MONTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[16]69[-70], Feb. 5, Paris.—“I writ you word in my last by the post an account of the whole business of the disgrace of the Chevalier de Lorraine, and how much Monsieur resented it. Two days before this thing happened, according to what you writ me in your last letter, I had a great deal of discourse with the King upon Madame’s subject, recommending to him the using of her kindly, as the person in the world that was the dearest to the King my master. It ended with great professions of his side, how much he would endeavour to serve her, and how much she should find him her friend upon all occasions. This thing fell out luckily to give him an opportunity of gratifying Madame, who in this retiring of Monsieur from Court has behaved herself so decently to him, both in going along with him when he offered to leave her at Court, and in mediating to the King for the Chevalier, and endeavouring to find some expedient to accommodate the matter, that it must needs be of great advantage to her for the time to come; besides, the King is the most satisfied with her that can be; so that I hope, when this storm is over, she will have a happy and quiet time of it, for the removal of this man will make all those humours in Monsieur cease, that so vexed her and disturbed her. I hope Monsieur will be weary of staying from Court. The King at present declares that it is not he that is angry with Monsieur, but M[onsieu]r with him, and that he is ready to receive him with open arms whenever he will return, but that he may stay so long that he shall lose that natural tenderness he always had for him, and that then perhaps he shall not let him come back, though he has a mind to it. There has not been one man to see M[onsieu]r since he left the Court, so that I do not see that his party is like to increase.

“Perhaps the King our master may think fit to advise M[onsieu]r a little in this matter. Madame desired me, when she went away, to say a great deal to you from her, how much she is obliged to you for all the care you have had of her concerns. She could not well tell whether she was to be glad or sorry for this matter, especially when she saw she was to go out of town, for naturally she loves the country no better than the King her brother.

“ You see by the last memorial I sent you of the referring the differences of the conquered places to the Crown of Sweden’s arbitrage, how ready they are here to comply with anything the King our master desires ; and though they cannot get the King for them, there is nothing almost our master can desire in this conjuncture they will not condescend to, not to have him against them ; but after another year that the fortifications are finished in Flanders, and that they are grown stronger at sea, they may perhaps alter their measures. Therefore I hope in the meantime we shall take good ones in England.

“ Madame did me the favour to recommend me in her last letters to the King for the Commissionaire’s place in the Treasury, void by my Lord General’s death. Sir William Coventry’s is not yet filled, though I hear Mr. Grey has the other ; so she has now recommended me to that. I do not doubt but you will stand my friend in the business. It will be very seasonable to help me in the expense I am at here, which I swear is double of what the King allows me, and it will be a good retreat for me when the King shall have no more occasion of my service here. It costs the King nothing, for I share only with the other four Commissionaires, who will do the business better in my absence than, may be, if I were upon the place. I dare say Mr. Grey nor Mr. Treasurer [Sir T. Clifford] will not think much of my sharing with them, and my Lord Ashley and Sir John Duncom need not, who have both other good places besides. This thing will be an absolute settling of my fortune, which, you know, with my brother’s* debts, my father’s liberality, and what I am forced to spend here, is in no good condition. To conclude, my Lord, I assure you, upon my word and honour, I have spent already, and I have been here but ten months, above nine thousand pistoles, not reckoning my equipage, towards which the King gave me fifteen hundred pound, and afterwards out of the Prizes a thousand, which did not near serve.

“ I am sorry to hear Mr. Treasurer continues so ill ; they say it is just as Father Patricke was. His example ought to encourage him to come into France. You believe, I am sure, that I should have a care of him.”

[P.S.] “ I had almost forgot to tell you the Dutch Resident came to me a good while before I had delivered the memorial to the King, about referring the conquered places to arbitrage, and told me Van Beunen had writ him word, he had heard by Sir William Temple that I was to deliver in such a paper ; that he desired to know when I did it, because he would deliver in one at the same time, because perhaps the King might think fit to join the States of Holland in the arbitrage with our master. I, remembering the hint you gave me that the King our master did not care to have them joined with him, told him that Sir William Temple knew, it seems, what I was to do better than I did, for that I had not yet the memorial, as I might say without telling a lie. You know I had sent it to you to have it altered, and it was not come back ; so when I received it a Saturday, I went away on Sunday morning to the King, without staying for a formal audience, and gave it him ; where he made the answer I sent you.

“ I tell you this story because I find the States extremely jealous of the King our master’s credit, to find that it grows every day. I sent to the Dutch Resident before I went, but I knew he was gone to Charenton ; so that if the States should take this ill, it is but laying the fault upon me; but I believe they will never take notice of it, though I found him extremely nettled, when he say [saw] the States left out of the Arbitrage, and said the French King did it to put an affront upon his masters. I did not write you this to do Sir William Temple any ill office for telling the thing to Van Beunen, and therefore pray take no notice of it."

* His elder brother Edward, slain in an attack upon the Dutch, Aug. 1665.

Endorsed: Feb. 5,  $\frac{6}{7}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Feb. 22, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of Jan. 31st [o.s.], with which I also received the King’s letters to his most Christian Majesty, M[onsieu]r, and Madame. Yesterday I delivered the King’s letter, which was received by the King here with all demonstration of kindness and friendship, acknowledging himself very much obliged to the King our master for interesting himself so kindly in this difference between him and his brother. He made me a whole relation of all that had passed between him and his brother since this difference, wherein he complained [of], and there did really appear, several neglects on M[onsieu]r[’s] part towards him, as going away from Court without his leave, and, since his absence, never sending once to inquire after nor make any compliment to the King, who was for several days indisposed and took physic. He concluded with telling me that if M[onsieu]r came back without capitulating or standing upon terms, that he would receive him with all the kindness and affection that one brother could have for another; for he loved him so well that he could never forget that he was his brother, and on the other side could not also forget that he was his King. By all I can judge it will be M[onsieu]r[’s] fault if he has not all manner of satisfaction in everything, except in the return of the Chevalier de Lorraine, whom I believe the King will not of a long time suffer about his brother.

“When I parted with the King he told me I was not to say anything as from him to M[onsieu]r, for it was not his part to begin first, and that what he said to me was, that I might let the King my master know in how good a disposition he was towards his brother. Tomorrow I go to Villecotrait, and today I have prevailed with a man that has credit with M[onsien]r to go and prepare him against I come, to follow the advice which the King our master has so friendlily given him, and I have great hopes that I may persuade him to come back. Therefore I keep your courier till I return, that I may give you an exacter account of all that passeth there.

“I told you in my last that Mr. de Lionne named Lisle as a proper place for the Arbitrage, which is like suddenly to be set on foot, but he did not seem to insist upon it; so that if the King thinks London properer, I am sure they will like it as well here as any other place.

“The forces commanded for Catalogne are yet stopped, they expecting to hear every day that all is quiet. The King’s journey into Flanders holds at Easter for certain. If the King will have me follow, as all the other Ambassadors here are resolved to do, let the King send me what he please; I will be accountable to you for the extraordinaries it cost[s] me, which I cannot yet compute.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 22,  $\frac{6}{7}$ . Ansd. Feb. 17th  $\frac{6}{7}$ . [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Feb. 22, Paris.—“I send you here enclosed the copy of a letter I received last night from Madame. You will see by the enclosed what the business is about. She desires you would show it the King from her, and know whether the business can be done or no. Pray, my Lord, send me the answer such as I may show her, that she may see I have not neglected her commands."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 22,  $\frac{6}{10}$ .

R. MONTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[16]70, Feb. 24, Paris.—“One part of your letter which I received by the express I would not answer in the letter which the King is to see. I should make you a great many compliments about all the kind things you say to me, but I have had so many other effects of your kindness than words, that I am out of countenance to say anything, when saying is the only return I can make. I will therefore trouble you no longer upon that subject, but desire you to believe that there is nobody more true to your interests, nor that wishes you more all sorts of happiness than myself; and there is no great likelihood that I should change, since I have always desired your kindness, more out of inclination and the esteem I have for you than out of interest. I will therefore endeavour to clear myself of a thing that troubles me very much, and which I believe did not come from your Lordship, but from the good will of the person that writ it me. I am sorry I cannot tell you his name, because he has conjured me so much to the contrary, but it is one that is extremely much your servant and my friend. He writ me a letter of advice last post, wherein amongst other advices, he advised me not to lay too much lead upon your Lordship as I had done lately in a business that I pretended to. I suppose he meant about the place of Commissionaire of the Treasury. I confess I writ to your Lordship about it, but it was with a resignation to your prudence and to the posture of your own affairs to take what part in it you pleased; and I am sure I am not so unreasonable that because I desire [a] thing which you do not think fit to be done, to believe that you are the less kind to me; and on the other side I think I should have been much more to blame if I had pretended to it with it [without?] desiring your assistance with those limitations that I proposed to your Lordship.

“Madame here is pleased to think that I have done her some service since I have been in this place, and has often pressed me to put her upon asking something of the King for me; so that you cannot blame me for taking the advantage of her recommendations and good offices, which I rely much more upon than on any merit of my own; and if she cannot succeed for me in this, I hope she may in something else that the King my master shall think me worthy or fit for. Besides, my own private affairs are in so ill a condition, that I am forced to be more industrious than naturally I would be, at least not to spend my estate before I have (sic); though at present I am much in a fairer way towards the one than the other. This is too long a letter for a Secretary of State, being all upon my own subject.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 24,  $\frac{6}{10}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Feb. 27, Paris.—“Your Lordship some time since recommended Sir Henry Jones to me, whom, for your Lordship’s sake and his own, I should be very ready to serve in anything that lay in my power, but yet no occasion has offered itself; for as for the parting with his employment, here (sic) I do not see how he can yet do it, either honourably or advantageously, but have referred [him] to your Lordship to be advised and directed by you, [to] which I perceive he is wholly inclined; and when he returns, whatever commands you will lay upon me by him shall be obeyed."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 27,  $\frac{6}{7}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 8, Paris.—“I am to acknowledge two of your Lordship’s, one of Feb. the 17th, the other of the 21st [o.s.] by my servant, who arrived this morning and brought the good news of the Parliament’s supply, which will be much for the King our master’s credit abroad, many people out of England having represented things quite contrary.

“Everything here is very quiet and calm, only the sword men are discontented to hear they are not likely to be employed for a year at least, in which opinion they are now perfectly confirmed by the late reformation amongst all the reformed officers, who were still entertained with half pay, which now is absolutely cut off, and they at liberty to go where they will, whereas before they were obliged to live in certain garrisons that were appointed to them.

“I suppose you may have the news from Spain of the French having made peace with Algiers; it is confirmed by an express come from their fleet to this Court.

“I have done all I can to serve the Prince de Ligny, knowing how much the King our master is desirous to do him a good turn, and I have already desired Madame not to ask anything of the King in favour of the Prince d’Espinois to the prejudice of the other.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: March 8,  $\frac{6}{7}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 12, Paris.—“In the last I received from your Lordship you told me that since the journey into Flanders held, that I must necessarily be of the party. I desire your Lordship would let the King know how necessary it is that I should have some money advanced. I assure you all the other foreign Ministers that are here, and that are to go, have their money already from their masters to fit themselves for their journey, and I have not yet, for my standing allowance from Michaelmas last till Christmas, anything but an order from the Commissionaires, upon which nobody yet, as my sister writes me word, will advance any money, so that I am the most inconvenienced in the world. We that are employed abroad are under your Lordship’s care; therefore pray, my Lord, speak to the Commissionaires of the Treasury to give better assignments. I am more concerned in it than ordinary, because that running in debt and not buying with ready money makes me spend a great deal more than ordinary. There is nothing goes more against my nature than to be importunate in money matters; therefore pray, my Lord, do me that good office to the King, that he may not think so; and for my justification I can make it appear that I have had less than any Ambassador that has been in France these forty years.

“My Lord Falconbridge desired me to make his excuse to you if he did not give you an exact account of all things whilst he was here at Paris, but he was so full of business that he could not. He tells me he shall stay some days at Bourbon waters, where he shall have more leisure to write to you at large. I had much ado to persuade people here that he was the King's Ambassador; they fancied him rather banished than employed."

Endorsed : March 12,  $\frac{69}{70}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 15, Paris.—“Everything here is so still and quiet that I think there is hardly news enough to fill the Gazette. That which people are most taken up with now is the fitting themselves for the journey of Flanders, which is now fixed for the 16th of April. The King will be out in all two months.

“I can yet get no positive answer of Monsieur for Madame's coming into England, though I press him every day. Pray put the King in mind, if he has not done it already, to write to him upon his return to Court.

“The King has sent into Spain for a passport, being in his progress to pass through some of the Spanish dominions. I find great oppositions every day in the Prince de Ligny's business, though there has been nothing wanting of my part to do him all the service I can. There is nothing more at present worth acquainting your Lordship with.”

Endorsed by Lord A. : March 15,  $\frac{69}{70}$ . Answered 10th. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 17, Paris.—“Your Lordship's letter to me by Sir George Hamilton, as you may imagine, was much unwelcome to me than any I yet ever received from you, seeing by that how you have misinterpreted what I writ to you in one of Feb. the 24th. I meant it much otherwise than in the sense I see you take it in, and never thought that I had reason to complain of you till now. I confess I was much more troubled at the apprehension I had that you should think I was too lavish of making use of your kindness than at the missing of what I pretended to; and such a niceness towards anybody that one thinks one's self so much obliged as I do to you, I thought, ought rather to be acceptable than offensive; and I am confident, if you have my letter still, you will find I speak very sincerely, for I am neither cunning enough to write a thing that has two meanings, nor so ill a courtier as to write anything that can have so ill a one as you have put to my letter. The person whose name you think I conceal out of friendship, I assure you, my Lord, I do it out of charity, because I think he might lose some of your kindness by a thing in which I am confident he meant well to both of us; and as to my own particular in all those little things that come in my way, you shall have reason to believe that nobody is with more truth than I am,” &c.

Endorsed by Lord A. : March 17,  $\frac{69}{70}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 22, Paris.—“I have not writ to your Lordship these two or three posts, having been almost all the while at St. Germain's attending the King and the Ministers. For the final resolution of Madame's journey into England, which by reason of M[onsieur]r[']s capriciousness and crossness to Madame has met with more opposition than I did imagine so reasonable a thing could have had, I have had several audiences with the King about it, who seems to be extreme desirous of giving the King my master the satisfaction of seeing Madame, but is willing also to take some few days more to persuade M[onsieu]r to consent to it de bonne grace. I desired to know of him what answer I should send the King; he told me that he did hope now with more reason than ever to prevail with his brother to consent, and did not doubt compassing it, though he could yet say nothing positive.

“The occasion of M[onsieu]r[’s] ill humour to Madame, who are now upon worse terms than ever, and do not speak to one another, is a politic quarrel and a querel[l]e d’Aleman that he makes, hoping by using her ill and hindering this journey, to put her upon prevailing with the King here to give the Chevalier de Lorraine the pensions to the value of the benefices that he should have had.

“I have avoided myself of late to speak to M[onsieu]r upon the journey, because I found I should not have a good answer, and therefore I would not expose myself to receive an ill one, but I have represented it here to the King as a thing that I am sure my master will take extreme ill to be refused; so that if in England the King holds the the same language to the French Ambassador, insisting still upon Madame’s coming, and taken [taking] notice that I have sent word that the King seems inclinable to it, I am confident M[onsieu]r will be worked off of his peevishness, for Mr. Colbert, who has more power with him than anybody, has undertaken him; who seems very forward to serve Madame, which the King, if he thinks fit, may take notice of to his brother. Madame herself has writ a long letter to the King of all the particulars, which she has desired him to show you, and by that your Lordship will judge best what is to be done.

“All the measures I can give you of this place is, that the King our master’s credit is as great and as high in this country as can be wished, and that I am sure they will be very tender here of disobliging him. This I can assure you of; his Majesty may make what use he please of it.

“The journey into Flanders is deferred for ten days, there being a lady to be of the party, who they say was brought to bed yesterday privately, and not therefore likely to be in a condition to go a journey. Madame commanded me to send this express, whom your Lordship will send back when you think fit. You will not judge by Mr. Vernon’s mine [mien] that he is lately come out of France, but you will find him able to give you a very good account of this country, especially of all things of trade, which he understands very well. I hope your Lordship will encourage him.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: March 22,  $\frac{9}{10}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 26, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of March the 10th [o.s.]. I do not doubt that you have by this time received mine by Mr. Vernon. The King’s journey into Flanders, as I told you, is deferred till the beginning of May, and his stay is like to be so short in every place that he resolves not to take the Ministers with him, which will make that there will be little to do for Ambassadors, only as to the expensive part, which I think will be as well let alone, for if I go along with the Court, I must go in a very great equipage, answerable to the character I have the honour to bear; everybody that is of the journey intending to appear as fine and as magnificent as they can.

“If you therefore think fit, my Lord, to propose to his Majesty whether there will be anything for his service that will require my going along with the Court; if not, his Majesty will save at least fifteen hundred pound that the journey will cost me extraordinary; and as for my own curiosity, I can very well dispense with it, intending, may be, to make a little turn privately and meet the Court at Lisle, where it will stay three days; and that I can do without any equipage or putting the King my master to any charge.

“As for my ordinary allowance, I cannot but complain to your Lordship, and think myself extreme ill used by the Commissionaires of the Treasury, for I have now six month[s] due to me, and I have assignments but for one quarter, and they so ill that nobody will lend money upon it. I am really, my Lord, put to the greatest inconveniency in the world, and the King my master’s honour suffers in it as well as mine. I am sure I have not spared all I could add of my own, nor all my credit could furnish me with, which is now at an end. I should not take the liberty of troubling your Lordship with this complaint but that I know the Commissionaires of the Treasury never mind those that are employed abroad if the Secretaries of State neglect them.

“Monsieur has not yet given his consent to Madame’s journey into England, but there is hopes of his being in better humour, the King having yesterday given him an augmentation of twenty thousand pistoles a year to his Apennage. The Chevalier de Lorraine has order to go into Italy, and Monsieur has declared that he will give him ten thousand pistoles a year, which he is a-securing to him upon the best and the surest part of his revenue.

“Your Lordship says nothing to me upon the place that is pitched upon for the deciding of the differences between the two Crowns. They press me here every day to have it begun, desiring it may be decided quickly. I have ordered the French Treaty with Algiers to be sent you.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, March 29, Paris.—“I writ you word in my last that there was great hopes of change in M[onsieu]r[’s] humour, which has happened to that degree that he is not only willing to have Madame come into England, but he is very willing to come himself. Madame has writ herself to the King the whole account how matters stand. As the King’s journey to Flanders draws nearer, I will give you notice of it, supposing the King our master, if his resolution holds of coming to Dover, will regulate his journey thither upon the King’s motion here.

“Mr. Tambonneu, that you have seen in England, went to Rome with the French Ambassador, and is returned hither post with a packet to the King. The Conclave he tells us is like to last long, for though the French have not voices enough to make a Pope, they have enough to give the exclusion to any that can be named. They are so set in this country upon maintaining their own manufactures that two days ago there was publicly burnt by the hand of the hangman a hundred thousand crowns’ worth of point de Venise Flanders lace, and other foreign commodities that are forbid.”

Endorsed: Answered the 24th [o.s.], and by Mr. Godolphin.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, April 12, Paris.—“Though Mr. Godolphin arrived here time enough to have writ to you last post, yet there was nothing to say to your Lordship but that he was come. You will find by Mr. Godolphin's letters that M[onsieu]r consents to Madame's journey into England, but no farther than Dover, and not to stay very long. By him also you will have an account when the King here begins his journey, and when Madame may be expected at Dover, who resolves to come with as slender a train as she can possible. I will refer your Lordship to Mr. Goldolphin to give you an account by word of mouth of many things that cannot be writ by the post."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, April 16, Paris.—"I was yesterday at St. Germain's, where I got a list of the King's march in his journey into Flanders, which I have ordered to be sent your Lordship. The Count de Gramont, whom the King intends to send of a compliment into England, will also bring word when Madame is like to be at the sea-side. I am afraid Dover will be an inconvenient place to receive her in, but M[onsieu]r will by no means hear of her coming to London, and by all I can guess it will be to no purpose, at least yet, for the King to desire it. Madame comes in two or three days to Paris, to prepare for the journey, and then she intends to dispatch Mr. Godolphin. I will endeavour to get the best protection I can for the English merchant you have recommended, if any such thing be usual to be granted."

Endorsed: Answered 11. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, April 26, Paris.—"I am to acknowledge two of your Lordship's, one of April the 1st, another of the 11th [o.s.], with his Majesty's enclosed, in behalf of the Prince de Ligny, which I will deliver tomorrow when I take leave of the King, who sets out on Monday for Flanders. I shall be obliged to go after the Court, and meet them at Lisle, both because Madame desires I should, as well as for some other reasons that I shall tell your Lordship by Mr. Godolphin, who will set forward on the 29th of this month. By him his Majesty will know whether they will consent here that Madame shall come to London; however, there is great hopes that they will let her stay some longer time than the three days that were first consented to. It is a great satisfaction to me to see how the success of our master's affairs at home has increased his credit abroad, but I shall be a little put to it what to say upon the subject of the letter you mention lately come from Spain till I have some farther directions from you in that matter. We here are informed that all the news of Count Serine his revolt is like to come to nothing. The business of the Conclave is not like to be decided till the arrival of the courier that goes from hence today."

Endorsed: Paris,  $\frac{26}{16}$  Apr. 1670. R.  $\frac{2}{22}$  (sic) May.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, April 29, Paris.—"Mr. Godolphin, by word of mouth, with the help of Madame's own letters, will give the King the best account that can be how Madame intends her journey into England; and in order to that, lest any difficulty should arise, she has commanded me to attend her at Lisle, the 21st of May, where I shall not fail to be, and where I desire your Lordship will send somebody express to meet me with any commands that the King my master shall have for me. About the 22nd of May Madame desires my Lord St. Alban's may be at Dunkerque with the yachts, and at the same time that there may be letters sent to me to deliver to the King and M[onsieu]r, desiring that Madame may come from thence, and by the 26th Madame hopes to be at Dover, where she desires that if the King will give himself the trouble to come, that nobody of the women should be there, to spare that trouble to the Queen and Duchess [of York], because she hopes, upon the King's letter to the King and M[onsieu]r, that they will consent she may go along with the King and Duke [of York] to London. I will refer you to Mr. Godolphin for everything else that relates to this matter.

"If Madame had not commanded me to attend her at Lisle, I had another summons that would have engaged me to the journey, which was the Spanish Resident, who came to me about ten days since, and told me that the Queen of Spain having formerly heard that I had orders from the King my master to assist in his name upon all occasions the maintaining of the peace of Aix la Chapelle, she did desire, in order to that, that I would make this journey, and if I would not venture to do it of my own head, that she would undertake to procure orders from England; but I having already received Madame's commands to follow, I undertook the journey, thinking that one could never make the Spaniards a compliment at an easier rate; so that your Lordship may value it to their Ministers in England, if you find them complaining of our want of good offices, though I think we have done them more than they are well sensible of, since they show such a mistrust of us that they will join two more in the Arbitrage with the King our master and the Crown of Swedland. Upon discourse with the Spanish Resident, he lays the whole business upon the Bishop of Thoulouze, Ambassador in Spain, and says it has been an artifice of his under hand, that has put the Queen of Spain of [on] adding two more to the Arbitrage, as a thing his Christian Majesty would be content with, and as a thing which of the other side would have the effect he desires, of making England and Swedland dissatisfied with Spain upon the account of the little trust and confidence it has in them. Mr. de Lyon yesterday talked to me so much in the same sense and at the same rate that I think it is not improbable that this might have been a ruse of the French.

"Mr. de Lionne made me another proposition, which I would not harken to, but perhaps you may hear of it from the French Ambassador, that the King our master would release his Christian Majesty of his word not to undertake anything of a year, and to give that time for the deciding of the differences now on foot, and that then they would force the Spaniards to accept of the Arbitrage, which now so disobligingly to the King of England and Swedland they refuse. You will find that we shall have every day greater applications made to us by the French. We shall do well to make use of this conjuncture and gain what points we can of them, especially something in this Treaty of Commerce now on foot.

"I am told by the Venetian Ambassador here, who thinks his Republic much concerned in the revolt of Serine, and assures me to have it from good hands, that Serine has endeavoured to make his peace with the Emperor; and among other things he pretends to excuse himself that he was drawn into this business by his wife, who he finds has received great presents from Mr. de Gremonville, the French Agent at Vienna.

"This is all of public affairs that I shall trouble your Lordship with. As to my own private ones, I desire your Lordship would move the King that I may have five hundred pound sent me towards my journey, which I am very sorry to make, and which I will do with all the good husbandry I can."

Endorsed: Ansd. Apr. 25, 70 [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, May 23, Lisle.—“I was extreme glad to meet with Father Patricke here. I hope he will be able to satisfy you as to some particulars that concern myself, which perhaps I should never have been able to have done with all the letters that I could have writ. I am not very flattering, nor changing in my nature. Your Lordship therefore may the better believe me when I assure you that you have no man living that is truer to your interests than I am, and have always been since I have been acquainted with you; and till you have more evident proofs to the contrary than any I have given yet, I beg of you not to suspect me, but to believe this bearer as to the account he will give you of me.”

Endorsed: Lisle, May  $\frac{13}{23}$ , 70.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, June 21, Paris.—“I should have acknowledged your Lordship's of June the 2nd [o.s.] sooner, but that I was gone from Paris to meet Madame on her way, who arrived at St. Germain's the 18th of this month; who is come back the most satisfied with the King's kindness, and the respects that she has received from all his servants, that can be imagined; and I find all those that were with her also extremely satisfied with the civilities and good entertainment they received in England, and particularly with the King our master's graciousness to them all. I find all the foreign Ministers here extremely alarmed at this interview of the King and Madame, and extremely impatient to know the result of the negotiation.

“Mr. de Vivone, General of the Galleys, is already gone or very near putting to sea with a considerable force, with orders to reduce all the Turkish pirates in these seas. I cannot omit telling your Lordship that all letters that come from those parts do extremely condemn the behaviour of our men-of-war. I should be very loath to do anybody an ill office by what I say, but all the discourse that is held here by some French captains lately come to Court, is very much to the disreputation of the English. You will be the best judges what reason or ground there is for any such report.”

Endorsed: Answered 17 [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, June 21, Paris.—“I flatter myself that it can be in nobody's power to indispose you so to me as that you will not believe me one of the first of all your friends and servants to rejoice at any good fortune that befalls you; especially because, ever since I had the honour to know you, I have always looked upon my own fortune in a manner linked to yours; so I look upon myself to share in any good that happens to you. I do therefore congratulate with you the honour Madame tells me the King intends you.*

* Qu., the marriage of his daughter to Henry Fitzroy, afterwards Duke of Grafton.

"She was pleased at the same time to tell me that the King was willing to make my father an Earl. It will be more acceptable to him now, I believe, than it would have been formerly, because, since his late appearing at Court, he cannot but be satisfied that it is wholly upon his own account, and out of the personal esteem and kindness the King has for him, and not at all upon my consideration. I desire your Lordship will put an end to it when you shall think fit, for I shall value any good fortune that happens to me the more when your goodwill and kindness contributes to it.

"I must also clear myself of one thing that I hear you are misinformed in concerning me, which is as if I should say I could not get leave to come into England. The honour of accompanying Madame was the thing in the world I was most ambitious of, and always reckoned upon it if she came; but when I heard my Lord St. Alban's was to have that honour, and I was only to come as a cypher, I told her that would be a greater mortification to me than not going at all; and therefore, to save my credit here, when they asked me why I went not, I said I was upon my duty here a-serving my master; that if he commanded me I should be glad to go, but it was not my business to ask leave, and thought I should not be necessary, because Madame would be able to give him a better account of everything here than I could. I give you this trouble to justify myself, for I do not use to be found in a wrong story. I confess now I would be glad to come and dance at my Lord St. Alban's his wedding; if it cannot be obtained for me, I desire you would recommend that care to my Lord Crafts [Crofts]."

R. MONTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[16]70, June 22, Paris.—"This courier overtook Madame at Bea[n]vais in her way to Paris, whither she commanded him to follow her Highness. Herself will give the best account of all things here, and of her reception, which from M[onsieur] was as cold and uncivil as can well be imagined; and [he] has already declared to some of his confidants that since the King her brother is so kind to her, that he will never live well with her till by her credit she can bring back the Chevalier de Lorraine.

"I cannot but be sorry that she has succeeded so well in my Lord Cornbury's behalf, because it makes them in this country imagine that my Lord Clarendon has yet some interest on foot, and it will be confirmed by this favour of the King to his son; for it is not long since he himself made it be proposed to the Ministers here, to have leave to come and live at Orleans, assuring them that the King his master (as he was pleased to call him) would not at all dislike it. There was a person employed under hand to me to know what I thought of it. I made answer that I thought the King my master troubled himself so little to think of him, that he might be at Orleans and he never know he was there, but I did [not?] think it would be well taken in England for his Christian Majesty to let him come so near without first giving notice of it by somebody to the King. Since that time I have heard no more of it; if there were anything, I suppose you would have heard of it by the French Ambassador.

"The King is at Versailles for a fortnight. M[onsieur] and Madame will pass that time at St. Cloud. The King of Spain is perfectly recovered, and they are as glad of it here almost as they can be in Spain, for the Ministers and men in power are so well at ease, that they apprehend all things that may any way put the affairs out of the channel they run in at present. I think I shall not conclude ill in telling you that Madame is the most satisfied in the world with you."

Endorsed: Answered 17. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, June 25, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of June the 10th [o.s.], wherein you recommend to me the business of Sir Christopher* Wray. I had already done all I could towards the breaking of the marriage, which is so foul a thing that it cannot but end to the satisfaction of all the young gentleman's friends, the laws of this country being all so positive against such kind of marriages. And for the kinsman that was the contriver of it, no doubt but the law will be very severe against him also.

"The news that we have out of the Straits is that Mr. de Vivonne is now certainly put to sea with 17 galleys, and order[ed] to join with eight men-of-war before Tunis. They say his Christian Majesty is resolved to bring that people to a more advantageous peace, or else to do them all the mischief that he can. As for our fleet in those parts, Sir Thomas Allen himself has sent letters to Mr. Wren, so I will pretend to give no account of it. The Spanish galleons are arrived at Cadiz, they say with twelve millions for the King of Spain.

"There died here some time since a G[u]ernsey merchant, who has left an estate to a considerable value in goods, which [h]is heirs claim, and I gave them all the assistance I could, the droit d'aubeine, as you will find by all our treaties, having no power upon the inhabitants of that island. Notwithstanding this, they cannot get possession, but are afraid of being condemned. I am afraid also that they may be willing enough to discourage and destroy them, because of the great trade they drive of stockings, which is contrary to the great design of the same manufacture that is set up here. I give your Lordship this account, that you may accordingly say what you think fit to the French Ambassador, I having done all I can here with Mr. de Lionne in their behalf."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, June 28, Paris.—"There is little this post worth troubling your Lordship with, except that there passed last night an express from Spain to the Constable in Flanders, with the orders for his return to Madrid. I was told at the same time that the government of the Low Countries is like to be put into the Count de Monteyrie's hands till they have made choice of some other person to succeed the Constable. I sent to the Spanish Resident to know, whether by this courier he had no news of the Queen's resolution concerning the Arbitrage. He tells me that this day sennight they expect to be able to send him her Majesty's final resolution upon that affair. The Constable passes through France incognito, without seeing the King, because the Grandees are not admitted to be covered. The King is still at Versailles, where he takes the waters for vapours that he is troubled with. They talk as if in the autumn he might go to Bourbon."

* Sic; qu. Sir Chichester.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 5, Paris.—“This is only to acquaint your Lordship that I have received a letter directed to Sir Henry Jones, which came by a courier of the French Ambassador’s. Sir Henry Jones being not yet come to Paris, I opened it, and what his Majesty commands therein shall be punctually obeyed. I am in the greatest pain in the world for the King our master, to know how he does with this great affliction,* which I am sure must be the greatest he ever had in his life.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 9, Paris.—“I writ yesterday to your Lordship by Mr. Howard, in answer to two of yours, the one by Sir Henry Jones, the other by the post. All the papers he had for Madame, he tells me, he returned by Mr. Russell, except one, which he has put into my hands, concerning Colombe. I desire to know from your Lordship what I am to do with it.

“I gave you an account last week of some rising in a part of Languedoc, called Vivares. They say it continues still, and that the rebels are got together to the number of ten thousand; that they are in great order, and observe a strict discipline, and have some reformed officers to head them. They have already killed some of the King’s Dragoons that set upon them; but the King having sent troops to reduce them, it is believed this business will end with a recruit for the galleys.

“The Constable of Castile is expected every day here incognito, on his journey to Spain. I am tomorrow to have a private audience from the King, and then I shall be able to give your Lordship an account of his Majesty’s commands in your last to me.”

Endorsed:  $\frac{9 \text{ July}}{29 \text{ June}}$ , 1670. R.  $\frac{13}{3}$  July. L. Ambr. Montegu.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 16, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of June the 31 (sic). I was yesterday at St. Germain’s, where, after an audience of ceremony upon this sad occasion, I made those other compliments to his most Christian Majesty which in the King’s name you ordered me to do, and which were received with all the satisfaction imaginable. I also delivered the mémoire concerning Mr. Westcombe’s business, which I have already several times solicited, but could never get any justice done him, the adverse party having prepossessed Mr. Colbert with the right of their cause.

“Here is likewise depending a cause of the G[u]ernsey merchants, there being a stop put upon the heirs of one of that island that died here, they pretending that whatever he has left is forfeited to the King, which is contrary to all the treaties that ever were made between the two Crowns. It concerns the trade of the whole island, and if they are cast, they will be discouraged from trading any more with this country. They desire your Lordship would speak of it to the French Ambassador.”

---

* The death of his sister, the Duchess of Orleans, who was suspected to have been poisoned.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 19, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth two of your Lordship’s of July the 4th [o.s.]. I received also one from his Majesty with his own hand. I desire your Lordship to present my humble duty to his Majesty, and to assure him that what he commands me shall be punctually obeyed; and by Sir Allen Apsley I will take the boldness to write to his Majesty and give him a further account of some things that I omitted by my Lord Alesbury. What your Lordship recommends to me concerning the Turkey Company, and the ill usage they receive in their port (sic) of letters, I will be very careful to do them all the right that can be, and to give you a speedy account of it.

“I have not yet taken any notice to your Lordship of an order I received from you in the King’s name in a letter of June the 23rd, but having been a witness myself how obliging his most Christian Majesty’s behaviour was towards the King our master, and supposing also that, upon further information, his own mind might alter as to the suspicion of poison, I did delay doing what you ordered me till the next post; which, considering the orders I received the next post, it is well I was guilty of that neglect.

“I expect every post to give an answer to the memorial concerning Mr. Westcomb’s business, the King having delivered the memorial I gave him to Mr. Colbert, with a recommendation to see all the justice done that the case required.

“I carried Mr. Hamilton yesterday to the King; he will I suppose give your Lordship an account himself how well the compliment he made in our master’s name was received.

[P.S.] “I have by my Lord Alesbury sent your Lordship a ring of Madame’s, which I took for the King.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Answered 14. [o.s.]

VOL. II.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 19, Paris.—“My servant in England writes me word that your Lordship has done me the favour to procure me a warrant for the five hundred pound you were so kind as to get me for my journey into Flanders. I have here sent a bill of it, which if your Lordship pleases to sign, it will procure me a speedier payment from the Commissionaires, or else I must have a fresh privy seal, which will be chargeable and tedious. I have included also the horses for the King of Poland; I gave him four in the King’s name; you may perhaps think them dear, but I have had the misfortune to have the disease amongst my horses, and all mine are dead, in four or five days’ time; and having, before I knew of this mischance, sent the King of Poland word of the King’s intention, I was forced to buy horses for him of a horse courser, which I assure your Lordship cost me one with another three score and ten louis d’ors.”

Endorsed: Answered 14. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 22, Paris.—“In a day or two the little Princess * will set forward for England; and Madame de Borde will take the same conveniency of coming, which Sir Allen Apsley upon your recommendation has offered her with [all] manner of civility. I have persuaded her to come without father or mother or husband, so that she will be less troublesome to those that are to have a care of [her]; she reckons, as with reason, upon your Lordship as the chief. You will be able to do it the better, because she is not the first in that place that you have had a care of. You must also think of providing her some place to lie in, for she is so much a stranger that she will not know which way to turn herself; and in case of necessity I have written to a servant of my sister’s in Newport Street, to accommodate her with everything till she can be better provided.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 23, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of July the 7th [o.s.] I cannot but still confirm to you the little hopes I have of prevailing with his most Christian Majesty to admit of the States General into the Arbitrage. Mr. de Lionne two days since in the King’s name acquainted the Spanish Resident that he would never consent that the Dutch should be admitted into the Arbitrage, they being so highly suspected to be partial against his interest; telling him at the same time that by the King’s order he had writ the same thing to the Ambassador at Madrid, to acquaint the Queen with his Majesty’s positive resolution in this affair.

“Mr. de Lionne also makes another objection to me as great as that of admitting the States General, which is, that the Queen of Spain proposes the referring all differences concerning the limits to be decided by the three Arbitres of the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle; by which general terms of ‘differences’ and ‘limits’ they suppose here the Spaniards include their contreprétensions, so much insisted upon at Lisle, and which here they will not hear of; and therefore, when his most Christian Majesty first consented to the Arbitrage of the King our master and the Crown of Swedland, it was only for the pretensions upon Condé, Linke, and the appurtenances to Newport, all which were particularly specified in the mémoire I then sent your Lordship.

“This is, in short, my Lord, the best account I can give you at present of the disposition of this Court as to this affair. For my own particular[i]ty, I have used all the arguments I can think of, and will add all those you have or you shall think fit from time to time to furnish me with, to persuade them here to consent to a fair determination of this matter.

[P.S.] “Mr. Richard sets forward for England in a day or two, and promises me to give your Lordship all manner of satisfaction in all things that relate to the post office.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 23, Paris.—“This bearer, Mr. Winter, is I suppose so well known to your Lordship, both upon his father’s account and his own, who have both been long servants of the Queen [Henrietta Maria], and suffered more than any by her death, that I am confident your Lordship, that has afforded your kindness and protection to most of her family, will be so generous as to do the same thing to him; indeed, it is a shame that a person who had the honour to serve the King's mother in so honourable an employment should not have some care taken of him; and I think he has had the misfortune to fare worse than any of the family. He will explain his business better to you himself."

* Anne, daughter of James, Duke of York. She had been under the care of “Madame.” (S.P. Dom.)

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 25, Paris.—"I have not much to trouble you with by Mr. Richard, intending to write to your Lordship more at large by Sir Allen Apsley. This is only at the desire of Mr. Richard, who desires to be recommended to your Lordship's favour, intending to submit himself wholly to you to do what you please with him."

Endorsed: My Ld. Am. Montegu, by Mons<sup>r</sup>. Richards.

[WALTER MONTAGU] to the KING.

1670, July 26, "Incurables."—"I am persuaded, Sir, nothing can afford you more comfort than the occasions of performing the purposes of your dearest sister; wherefore I conceive it a service to you the minding you of an earnest request she either had already motioned to you, or was at the time of her surprise actually intending the proposal: which was, in consideration of the esteem she had of my Lord your Ambassador here, to advance his father to the dignity of an Earldom upon the first promotion you should make in that kind.

"Wherefore, Sir, if this desire of hers was not imparted to you from herself by reason of the sad interception, you may be pleased to rest assured of this her special and earnest intention, and to make all the most advantageous returns she could to my Lord Ambassador, for whom I suppose her esteem was sufficiently expressed at her meeting with you.

"This part of testimony I am obliged to perform, and though nothing else can weigh with you joined to the consideration of your blessed sister's desire, yet, Sir, the obligation upon all our family may be exposed as a lower motive to this your grace and goodness; and truly, Sir, it will reach even unto my Incurable constitution, which shall be zealously applied to the remedy of all your infirmities with that devotion [which] is due to such an application."

In W. Montagu's hand, not signed. Addressed: For the King.
Endorsed by Lord A.: Ld. Ab. Montegu to the King.

[R. MONTAGU] to the KING.

[16]70, July 29, Paris.—"Sir, I am to return you my most humble thanks for your most gracious letter. I wish I may be able ever to serve your Majesty in anything answerable to the respect and duty I owe you. As for what you are pleased to command me in your letter, I shall obey it very faithfully. I have already acquainted your Majesty and my Lord Arlington with the principallest things that Madame was pleased to recommend to me; so I will only beg your Majesty's pardon for this boldness, and to honour me with the belief that I am in all things perfectly devoted to your service."

In R. Montagu's hand, not signed. Addressed: For the King.
Endorsed by Lord A.: My Ld. Amb. Montegu.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, July 30, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of July the 14th [o.s.]. I have already delivered a mémoire to the King about Mr. Westcomb’s business. I hope the letter to Mr. d’Alegre, which I have also received, will give it more dispatch. I shall address myself also to his most Christian [Majesty] about the edict you mention, forbidding all trade with the Leeward Islands, as also about another business of more consequence; I receiving complaints from all the English merchants how that all their seamen are forced from them in the French ports by the officers of the Admiralty. I have sent your Lordship the original letters, that you may see the business more at large.

“I gave your Lordship an account in a former letter, how that some merchants of the Island of Guernsey were hindered inheriting of one of their countrymen. The business was heard, and all that he left adjudged to be the King’s by the Droit d’Aubaine, notwithstanding all our Treaties of Commerce are to the contrary, and a particular clause for the merchants of the island[s] of Jersey and Guernsey. Besides, I have since procured an order from the King that however they are condemned by the law, that yet the goods may be restored to the poor people; but there is a clause inserted in the order which mentions that this shall be without consequence for the time to come. Therefore there must be great care taken in our new Treaty of Commerce, or else all the trade of these islands will be utterly destroyed, which is a thing they drive enough at here.

“I had yesterday a great deal of discourse with Mr. de Lionne about the admitting of the States General into the Arbitrage, as the Queen of Spain proposes it. I do not find the least inclination in the King and Ministers here to allow of it; and for his last and strongest argument, he told me that the King his master made it a point of honour, and that he had so publicly declared, that the States of Holland should never meddle in his interest; that he neither could nor would go from what he had resolved. They say the King’s troops have met with some of the Rebels in Vivares, and have killed 50 or 60 of them.

“The King here expresses great satisfaction in the King our master’s kindness to him in sending him a man of that importance and consideration as my Lord of Buckingham.

[P.S.] “The little Princess set out on Monday for England, and was presented at her coming away by the King with a present worth four thousand pistoles.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Aug. 9.—“Your Lordship’s being in the country and my being at St. Germain’s was the occasion of my not writing to you the last post. By the former I gave you an account that I was upon delivering in a mémoire about the complaint you ordered me to make about the proclamation put out by his Christian Majesty, forbidding all kind of commerce in the Leeward Islands; to which his Christian Majesty answered me that he had explained the meaning of that proclamation to the officers and governors in those parts, in favour of the King our master’s subjects, and that he had ordered his Ambassador to give the King all manner of satisfaction in that point, as well as in the other, of having our seamen either forced away or enticed whenever they come into the French ports. Mr. d’Alegre has also promised me upon the letter I gave him all the dispatch and justice that depends on him in Mr. Westcomb’s business.

“My Lord of Buckingham is not yet arrived, but I expect him every day, and shall be as serviceable to him as I can during his stay in this place.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Aug. 13, Paris.—“This may perhaps find you returned to London. My Lord Duke of Buckingham is here ever since Monday, and is just now in his taylor’s hands, fitting himself to go this night to St. Germain’s. The Conte de Gramont has been already to compliment him from the King. There is a lodging furnished for him in the King’s own house at St. Germain’s; one of the King’s coaches and eight footmen ordered always to wait on him, and a table to be kept for him whilst he is there; and there is no doubt but that all the honour that can be done to him will be done.

“I do not wait upon him to St. Germain’s, because, if I go along with him, he having no character, it would take a great deal of[f] the honour that will be done to him; and I suppose it is the King’s meaning, as well as it is my own inclination, to contribute all I can to his satisfaction and good usage whilst he stays in this Court. I received two of your Lordship’s from Euston, which I shall answer by the first safe conveniency.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Aug. 19, Paris.—“Whatever there is considerable or worth your knowing, I presume your Lordship will have it from my Lord of Buckingham, who is still at St. Germaine’s, and continues to be treated by the King with all the kindness imaginable. I have ordered a letter to be sent to Mr. Williamson, by which, if you please to call for it, you will see how ill the merchants of England are used here, and how likely they are to be discouraged from trading if there be not some speedy remedy taken for them; your Lordship will do what you think most fit in it.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Aug. 30.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of August the 15th [o.s.] The Duke of Buckingham is this day a-going to St. Germain’s to take his leave, as also to speak of businesses you recommended to him. You may by this time have had a more particular account of the business of Lorraine than I can give you, his Christian Majesty intending to dispatch a courier to the King our master, to give him an account of the whole affair. The Duke of Lorraine they say is fled with four hundred horse, there being twelve hundred sent to take him. The whole army has order to march into his country, and I believe will quarter there for some time.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 3, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of August the 18th [o.s.]. My Lord of Buckingham told me yesterday that he had already spoke to the King concerning the ill usage of our merchants in the sale of woollen cloths, and that he has hopes of having it remedied. However, I shall lose no time on my part, but I will give in a memorial to the King of their grievances, and endeavour to send your Lordship an answer of it by the next post. My Lord Duke will not be able to get away yet these five or six days, all the regales that are intended for him not being yet at an end.

"I do not doubt but that you have heard from Sir William Temple how they are alarmed in Holland at the march of the French army. The Duke of Lorraine they say is fled into the Franch Counté; he sent a letter to his sister, old Madame d'Orleans, for his Christian Majesty, which he refused to receive. This is all the account I can give you of this affair.

"Mr. d'Angeau is a-preparing to go Ambassador into Swedland. The Dutch Ambassador, who is arrived here, is preparing for his entry. The Dauphin is much mended, upon which I believe the Court will shortly remove to Chambor."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 6, Paris.—"I am this day a-going to St. Germain's to an audience upon the complaints your Lordship sent me last post of the ill-usage of the English merchants in France. My Lord of Buckingham tells me that he has already prepared the King in the matter, so that I hope I may give you by the next a good account of it. His Grace intends I believe on Tuesday or Wednesday next to set forward towards England. The French army continues still their march towards Lorraine, and tomorrow Mr. le Due leaves this place to command all the French horse in this expedition."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 6, Paris.—"The Duke of Buckingham intending in a day or two to set out for England, and there being occasion of a much greater expense than the money he brought over will furnish to, I thought myself obliged, both for the King's honour as well as his, to serve him in the helping him to what money was necessary to bring him off clear here. Sir Thomas Bond, upon my entreaty and personal security, has supplied him, upon condition that Sir Stephen Fox or Alderman Backwell accept the bills that my Lord Duke shall draw upon them. I hope you will not disapprove of this, my Lord Duke having promised that whatever the King shall think too much he will pay himself."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 15, Paris.—"I will not undertake to give your Lordship any account of my Lord Duke of Buckingham's negociation; he will do it himself by word of mouth much better. All I will say of it is this: never any man in the world was used so well as he was here, which is much to the honour of our master that sent him, and shows how desirous the King of France is of making a stricter friendship and alliance with the King; and doubtless in this conjuncture we may obtain from the French the advantageousest terms that can be for England.

"Mr. Colbert is the occasion I believe of all the ill-usage our English merchants receive in France, to weary them out of the trade, and to encourage his own manufactures. My Lord Duke has discoursed the matter here thoroughly with the King, and I think has partly convinced him how impossible it is for him to have what he desires from England till he has first satisfied the nation of his good intentions towards them, by not pressing so hard upon us in point of trade. According as the negotiation his Grace has begun shall continue, I hope your Lordship will give me that part in it as one that is in the place I am in may reasonable (sic) expect; and I persuade myself you have so good an opinion of me as to believe I may acquit myself as well of it as the French Ambassador that is in England."

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]70, Sept. 15, Paris.—“ Before I say anything of public affairs, I will trouble you with something that relates to myself, and that troubles me extremely. It was the letter your Lordship writ to my Lord Abbot Montagu concerning me, by which I see your Lordship is not yet thoroughly satisfied with me, though I hoped Father Patricke had done me that good office long before this time. As for all the obligations I have to your Lordship, I am sure I never was failing towards you in the least, either in acknowledging them publicly, or doing and contriving privately with all persons that I have ever had to do with everything that might be for your service or advantage. And as for myself, I have always flattered myself with the opinion that you were still kind to me, so much that in all my concerns I have never desired anybody's help or favour but yours, Madame only excepted; which I thought your Lordship would be glad of, and was a consideration of you that I owed you, knowing how much trouble and clamour you had already brought upon yourself for my sake, and for the endeavouring to do me good; and I presumed there could never be a better pretence or countenance for any good turn you would do me, than her interesting herself for me. This I assure you, my Lord, has always been my conduct towards your Lordship; perhaps I have had very ill offices done me towards you, but if you will give yourself the trouble of examining all my actions, you will find you have not in the world a truer servant than myself; and whenever I am so unfortunate as to lose your kindness, you shall never see me value anybody's else.

“ I cannot but know from all hands the ill offices the French Ambassador endeavours to do me. I confess he has reason to do it (sic), for at my first coming hither you know how ridiculous his behaviour, and foolish, it was towards you. I did not spare him at all, and I am sure, if his conduct had not altered, he had been recalled; for you may remember I writ you word that Mr. de Lionne told [me?] that they must first try to mend him before they changed him.

“ I desire some instructions from your Lordship what language to hold to the Dutch Ambassador in this conjuncture, lest he should be unsatisfied with me too.

“ As for my Lord of Buckingham, I have done all that man can do to send him away well satisfied with me; if I have succeeded I shall think I have done no small matter. Upon all discourses I have had with him concerning your Lordship, I find he pretends to be very fair, but I cannot but let you know that he has a great opinion of my Lord Ashley, Orery, and Sir Thomas Osburne. Your best way with him, if I may advise you, is to let him see you do not want him much; for I am confident you are much the stronger of the two, and whilst he knows that, there is no danger of him.

“ Mr. Porter, that delivers you this, will give you by word of mouth a perfect account of all he has done here, which will be very necessary for you to know as soon as you can; therefore pray give him an audience. You may believe him, for he has as great a respect for you as can be, and relies altogether upon your favour; I thought this a better way than writing a long, tedious letter, and there are many circumstances that cannot be writ.

“The poor Conte de Gramont has had a troublesome journey of it, as Mr. Porter and he himself will tell you; and I think, if I had not done him some service, he had come off very ill. I was extreme glad to do it, because I am persuaded the poor man loves you extremely. There will be no hurt in hearing all he says to you, so long as you say nothing to him again; which is a caution very impertinent in me to give so wise a man as you, but I hope you will excuse me for it, when I do it out of no other reason but the concern I have for your service, which I shall always have, with all the truth and sincerity imaginable.

[P.S.] “Pray burn this letter.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]70, Sept. 17, Paris.—“I could not give your Lordship any answer [account?] these two last posts of the answer that his Christian Majesty gave me to the complaint I made him concerning the ill usage of the King our master’s subjects in their trade of woollen manufactures with this country. I put my complaint into a memorial, the copy of which I send your Lordship. All the answer I could get from the King then, were great professions of kindness in general to the whole English nation, and he referred me to Mr. de Lionne for the rest; who confirmed again to me all that the King had said, assuring me that the King our master should soon be satisfied with the kind usage of all his subjects in France. I pressed extremely for an answer in writing, such as might be showed our merchants, or else I told him I was confident that upon promises made at large they would not be encouraged enough to continue their trade; but I never could obtain it of him.

“His Majesty must consider of some way of redressing this grievance, or else in a short time all the trade of England with these parts will certainly be destroyed. My Lord Duke of Buckingham has discoursed this affair at large both with the King and Ministers; you will before the receipt of this, I believe, have an account of it from his Grace.

“The Dauphin continues yet ill, which makes the journey to Chambour uncertain. What news there is from Lorraine I have ordered to be sent your Lordship.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 20, Paris.—“I presume by this time my Lord Duke of Buckingham is arrived, and has given you an account of all the affairs of this country. The affairs of Lorraine do not go on so easily as was at first imagined. The Mareschal de Crequi has set down before Espinall; they say that place intends to hold out as long as it can, and that the other towns are in the same resolution. The King has sent to the Prince Charles to come and take possession of that Government; upon his refusal there is a report as if it should be given to the Duke of Guise as the nearest prince of that family. If the Dauphin does not grow worse the journey to Chambour is resolved upon the 2nd of the next month.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 24, Paris.—“I have little news to write to your Lordship this post; I am just come from St. Germain’s, where the last letters from Lorraine gave an account how the Mareschal de Crequi was before Espinall, and intended to open the trenches next day. They think that there may be in all four thousand men in the town, and that they will defend themselves. The King has sent express orders that if they hold out any longer, that all in the town be made prisoners of war. There is yet no news of what Prince Charles will do. The Duke of Lorraine has sent to offer his demission of the Duchy in what form the King pleaseth.

“The Dutch Ambassador, that has been some time in town, has not yet seen the King or any of the Ministers by reason of the gout, nor will not, till after the journey of Chambor. I hear by all, that all his discourses are very submissive, and [he] gives to understand that his masters’ desires are always to keep fair with this Court. I have not seen him yet because of his indisposition.

[P.S.] “I writ some time since to Mr. Godolphin, because I would not give your Lordship the trouble, that Mademoiselle Querewalle, that is to come to be maid of honour to the Queen, is ready to come over. She only expects a yacht to meet her at Deipe, which she desires his Majesty would give order for.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Sept. 27, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of Sept. the 12th [o.s.], with an account of my Lord Duke of Buckingham’s safe arrival. As to the business of the Leeward Islands, I do not doubt but his Majesty will have full satisfaction; and perhaps the same as to the woollen manufactures, if your Lordship presseth the business home with the French Ambassador, now it is so well begun. The last news out of Lorraine, from before Espinall, is that the French had taken the lower town, and in a few days they concluded the other would yield. There was yesterday an alarm at Court of several persons of quality being killed, but since there is a courier come that says there is nobody of note so much as hurt. The Dauphin has been these four days without any fever, so that the 2nd of this [next?] month the King intends to begin his journey for Chambor, which in all will last but three weeks, during which time your Lordship must expect little news from this place. You have by this time I suppose the Conte de Molina with you, who passed through Paris and stayed but a night, and saw nobody.”

Endorsed: Answered Sept. 22, 70. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Oct. 20, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth the last I received from your Lordship by a safe hand. I will not trouble your Lordship with any compliments, but only acknowledge the obligation I have to you in being so just to me as not to let all the ill offices which I perceive people have endeavoured to do me make any impression in you to my disadvantage. A man that is absent can have no other security but the good opinion which I hope you have of me; and if you continue so kind to me as to judge of me by my behaviour towards you, and all my proceedings in everything that relates to your interest, I promise myself that you will always reckon upon me as one of the men in the world that wishes you the best, and are of the faithfullest of all your servants and acquaintances; and I am confident you cannot accuse me of having ever acted to the contrary.

“Since I left England I hear that Secretary Trevor has not been the man he ought to be towards your Lordship, considering that he owes all his fortune and preferment wholly to you. You know, my Lord, I was always so much concerned for you, that I was one of the first that gave you warning of him, and one of the first that suspected what I see since has followed; and I am sure no man spared him less than I did. Upon that occasion some time past my Lord of Buckingham and your Lordship were upon ill terms too; that perhaps might have been a conjuncture too for my enemies to do me ill offices with you; but I can safely say I never writ three letters to him since I left England, for I know him too well ever to expose myself to be obliged by him. Whilst he was here in France I endeavoured to carry myself so to him as you told me was the King’s pleasure I should do, but of the least interest or concern of my own I never opened my mouth.

“I hope Mr Porter has given you an account of many passages which are impossible to write, and which may be of use to your Lordship to know. I will, according to the liberty you give me in your last of asking you questions, ask you whether you judge of this country according to the relation the Duke of Buckingham gave you of it. If you do, you will be mistaken in many things, as they will be here by what he told them of England, for he has given the King of France the character[s] of all our Court, not as they are, but as he himself thinks of them; so that he has not done much hurt, for he has given as wrong measures here as he has given you.

“The French are already impatient that the Treaty between the two Crowns is not yet signed, and they are so fully persuaded that it will be soon done now they have got the Duke of Buckingham for it—who they think rules all—that they think it needless to gratify us with any of those things in point of trade which we seem to desire of them; and let me say what I can, they put me off to the conclusion of the great affair, as they call it. And since there is yet nothing mitigated in their rigour towards all our English manufactures, I am convinced that Mr. Colbert is not so much frightened as the Duke of Buckingham imagined he was at his great power and credit with his Christian Majesty. I am not foolish enough to advise anything; I can only tell you what I see here, that it is impossible for any prince in the world to be more esteemed and respected than the King our master is abroad, nor more apprehended than he is, by the French, and upon this foot we ought to treat with them.

“The Dutch Ambassador has been with Mr. de Lionn[e], and was so high with him that Mr. de Lionn[e] told one, from whom I had it again, that the Dutch Ambassador did not speak to him in a style af [as] if the Triple Alliance were like quickly to be broke. When I see him, I shall hold that language to him that your Lordship directs me, and desire of your Lordship from time to time, as you have an occasion, to direct me what language I had best hold here; for I think the wisest thing I can do is to say what you bid me say, and then I cannot be in the wrong. I have the cipher you mention, and shall make use of it upon occasion, without trusting any servant.”

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Dec. 10, Paris.—“You may I suppose have heard from other hands, or from the French Ambassador, of his most Christian Majesty’s intention to make a journey into Flanders on the 20th of April next. The occasion of the journey they say is to see all the fortifications in that country finished by the end of the summer; and he intends to make his own soldiers work, that they may have the advantage of gaining that money. He will have with him forty thousand foot. He goes first directly to Dunkerque, where the army is to camp for six weeks, and from thence remove to Acte for six weeks more. There will also at the same time be another camp about Sedan of ten thousand horse. I will make no politic reflections upon this, but only give you this account just as I have it."

R. MONTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[16]70, Dec. 11, Paris.—"I am so afraid of entering into the politics that I dare hardly venture to write anything to you but matter of fact. I gave your Lordship an account in my last by the post of the King's journey on the 20th of April into Flanders, which by most people here is interpreted to be made out of a design to alarm both the Spaniard and the Dutch, and to put them both to vast expenses, whereas his army costs him no more there than it would do in another place. If there be any further design in it, your Lordship knows it much better than I, and I must hope to hear of it from you, and not your Lordship from me.

"You cannot imagine how blanc this Court were at the news that came out of England of the Parliament's readiness to supply our master with what money he desired; I could hardly make them believe it. I suppose they do imagine that if the King be put into so good a condition, by the affections of his subjects at home, he will have less need, and not have so great dependencies upon his neighbours abroad; or they imagine that, being now upon equal terms with the King here, it will cost them more before they can get him of their side.

"There is nothing so certain, my Lord, that notwithstanding all the greatness and strength of France that you both know and hear talked of, it will be impossible for them to go on with any of their great designs if they cannot have the English of their side. I am sure your Lordship is wise enough, whatever part we take, to make the advantageousest terms that can be, both for the King and nation; so I will say no more to you upon this subject.

"I am informed that there has been a gentleman of the Duke of Buckingham's in Paris these two days, lately come out of England; what his business may be I know not. I only give you this notice of it; if you knew not of his coming, pray be so kind to me as not to seem to know of it from me; according as I hear more of him I will give you notice.

"As for the affairs of this Court, Madame de Montespane and her friends are in the greatest power; the government of Gueinne [Guienne] given to the Mareschal d'Albret, her great friend, and the marriage of Mr. de Nevers to her niece, have given her so much credit that the Ministers themselves make court to her.

"Everybody here, I mean people of note, talk much more favourably of your Lordship than they did at my first coming, Mr. de Turenne particularly; I think it is partly artificially to dishearten the Dutch and the Spaniards; but I always make them this answer, that I am confident you never were nor never will be either Spaniard or French, but as you see what is most your master's inclination and interest.

"I have encouraged my Lord Abbot Montagu to send the King his pictures and statues upon the terms you proposed. He desired also a note under the King's hand. I have also offered him my own security, which may be better to anybody when it is upon the King's account than if it were upon my own; so that whenever his Majesty pleaseth to send for the pictures, I am confident he may have them.

"I have sent your Lordship some gloves and essenc[es] by this bearer, which I hope you will do me the favour to accept of, they being of so small a value that you may do it without scruple. Be pleased also to believe that no man in the world wishes you more happiness."

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]70, Dec. 14, Paris.—"I presume you may by this time have received a letter that I writ your Lordship by Mr. Howard's governor, wherein I told your Lordship that there was a servant of the Duke of Buckingham's privately in Paris. Since that, I writ to your Lordship in cipher,* but I, not being very perfect in that way of writing, am afraid you may not have found the cipher right. I would not therefore neglect this opportunity of letting you know what I know—not that I wish my Lord Duke any harm, for I hope what he has done is with the King's and your Lordship's knowledge. However, I am bound before all other considerations, by the duty I owe the King my master, and my friendship and service to your Lordship, not to conceal a thing which may be of great consequence; if not, I am sure there can be no hurt in it.

"As I told your Lordship in my former, there is one Douty, a servant of his, in Paris; at his arrival here, he took a private scurvy lodging by the Rue St. Honoré. I knew of his being in town by chance, and had him watched. He went once to Mr. de Lionn[e]'s, and another time to Mr. Colbert's. After he had been here three or four days, being weary of so solitary a life as the secrecy of his business I suppose required, he sent to one Smith, a musician of the Duke's, that he left here to perfect himself. This fellow being for these two months in great distress for want of money, I bad my servants to make him eat at my house, which bred a friendship between him and Mr. Vernon, my secretary; so that he, knowing of Douty's being in town, and meeting Mr. Vernon in the street, asked him, 'Whither do you think I am a-going?' and told him he was a-going to see Douty, who was come to town, and asked him whether he would go with him. He said, with all his heart.

"When they came to Douty's lodging, and that he saw Mr. Vernon come in with Smith, he was the most out of countenance that could be, for he had, it seems, sent for Smith as his fellow servant, intending to recommend his being in town to him as a thing to be kept secret. Mr. Vernon fell into discourse with him about his coming to town, and about his business. He said that my Lord Duke knew nothing of his coming, but that he came to see a brother of his at St. Omer's; and that meeting Mr. Bond, Sir Thomas Bond's brother, at Calice, he found him so good company that he was resolved to come with him to Paris.

"After other discourse, Mr. Vernon asked him whether they should not drink a glass of wine before they parted. Douty told him he would come to see him at my house, but he did not know [how] to come, having no recommendations from the Duke to me. He answered him, he might come without seeing me. So at night he came; and drinking with my servants he had forgot that in the morning the occasion of his journey was to see his brother at St. Omer's, and the temptation of

* Not found.

Mr. Bond's good company; and the reason of his coming now was to buy clothes for my Lord Duke and my Lady Shrosbery, and that he had bills to take money to pay for them, and twenty other frivolous excuses I cannot remember.

"But the next morning he went to an English fellow's house here in Paris, who was the Duchess of Buckingham's footman, and is married, and washes linen here, for it was him that he trusted to take the lodging, and that he sent to Smith; and told him he would cut his throat for that he had betrayed him to the Ambassador's people; that they all knew of his being in town, and so was forced to go see them; and swore therefore he would be the death of him. This poor man came in a fright, and told Robing Nott, a servant of mine, of the danger he was in.

"He says he is to return in haste, so may be he may be back as soon as you receive this. I will venture to make no reflections upon the journey, but being uncertain whether it may no[t] be by the King's or your Lordship's knowledge that the Duke has sent him, I will let him carry back the answers to the letters he has brought, lest you might interpret it to my curiosity of knowing something I should not know, as much as to my diligence in the King's service.

"I was forced to trust the Conte de Gramont with his being here, for fear that his servants that come to my house and seeing him there should have told him; whereas, now that I have trusted him with it, though he is not naturally very discreet, yet I do believe he loves the King our master so well that he will speak of nothing that may be against his service. This comes by his servant, who comes about some business of his own. He tells me whatever you think fit to write shall come safe by him, and you may dispatch him when you please.

[P.S.] "I forgot to tell you that, to disguise himself, Douty, though he has a great head of hair, puts on a periwig."

On a separate slip of paper:—

"I will tell your Lordship news which you will wonder at. Mr. de Lozun, otherwise Peguillin, is to marry la Grande Mademoiselle on Sunday next. This morning Mr. de Crequi, Mr. de Montaulier, the Mareschal d'Albret, and Mr. de Gitry asked the King's consent, who has given it. He will sign the contract, and M[onsieu]r also, and all the Princes of the Blood. She gives him all her estate, in case she has no children."

[THE COUNT DE GRAMMONT] to LORD ARLINGTON.

1670, Dec. 16, Paris.—"Le Mareschal de Gramont, quy connoit bien nostre Cour, m'a dit quil ny auoit pas grande chose a faire pour les courtisans sils n'estoient recommandés par certaines puissances; et quil estoit persuadez que sy le Roy d'Angleterre vouloit parler au Roy en faueur de la Comtesse de Gramont et de moy, que nos affaires en yroit mieux. Je luy ay respondu que cestoit assuré que le Roy d'Angleterre auoit assés de bonté pour faire les choses quy pourroient seruir a me faire du bien. 'Je vous conseille,' me dit il, 'dy trauailler avec empressement, et ne laissés pas perdre cette occasion, quy me paroist fauorable.' Il fault a ce qu'on dit que le Roy parle a Mr. Colbert, Ambassadeur, afin quil escriue icy l'amitié quil a pour moy, et combien les interestz de la Comtesse luy sont cher par lhonneur qu'elle a de luy appartenir, et par les services que luy ont rendu tous ces [ses] proches, et par la tendre amitié que Madame auoit pour elle.

“ Enfin, mon cher Milor, c'est a vous a faire que la chose reussisse autement pour vostre amy. Je vous prie de dire au Roy quil est obligé a quelque chose de plus pour moy que pour les autres, puisque toute la France c'est [sait] bien que je pris autement ces [ses] interestz durant la guerre [de] Polande, et que je failly a estre chassé. Conclusion, il fault que Mr. Colbert escriue icy apres que le Roy luy aura parlé dans des termes trespessantz, et que le Roy vostre maistre enuoye vostre lettre a son Ambassadeur dans le meme sens, adressante au Roy. Il a de lesprit; il tournera cela comme il voudra. Encore vne fois, le Roy y est obligé par tous les services que je luy ay rendu.

“ Mon petit neveu Mr. de Lauzun espouze dimanche la grande Mademoiselle. Vous croirés peut estre que je suis deuenus foux de vous mander cela, mais il ny a rien de sy vray. Cela fait vn grand bruict icy. Jay dy toutes les particularités a vostre Ambassadeur, quy vous le[s] mandera. Ne dittes pas que c'est moy quy vous a mandé cette nouvelle.”

Not signed. Addressed: Pour le Milor Arlinton.

Endorsed: Count de Grammon[t].

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70, Dec. 17, Paris.—“ This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Dec, the 1st [o.s.]; I shall use all the diligence I can to give your Lordship an account of what you desire. The Dutch Ambassador here is very much unsatisfied, and desires to be gone as soon as his masters will give him leave. This Court at present is taken up wholly with the discourse of Mr. de Lauzun's marriage with Mademoiselle, which is to be concluded on Sunday. She will take the name of Madame de Montpensier, and he of Mr. de Montpensier.

“ I am sorry for the ill news your Lordship tells me of the money matters; I hope before the receipt of this times will be mended, and the Parliament will have finished the King's supply, that his Majesty's fleet may be in as good a forwardness as the King's here, for which there is no cost spared, and all other expenses suspended till that be finished.”

R. MONTAGU to [LORD ARLINGTON].

[16]70, Dec. 20.—“ In my last I gave your Lordship an account of that which was the greatest news of this place, which was Mr. de Lauzun's marriage with Mademoiselle; the breaking of it does now afford as much discourse as the other did; for on Thursday night last, after that Mademoiselle had signed the contract, and had given him the principality of Dombes and the duchy of Montpensier, the King sent for her, as she supposed, to sign the contract also. She found the King in his closet with Mr. le Prince. He told her that he had considered seriously of this matter, and saw that such a marriage was as dishonourable for him as for her in the world, especially since it was with a man that was believed his favourite; that he was therefore resolved to show everybody that he was not his favourite to that degree, and so commanded her to think no more of the marriage; that if she was so set upon marrying, he gave her leave to choose any gentleman in France, and he would give his consent, provided it were with one that the world might think he had not recommended, for he would have no hand in an

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70[-1], Jan. 3, Paris.—“I received lately by one Mr. Andrewes a letter from his Majesty, commanding me in his name to give him all the assistance I can in the solicitation of a debt he pretends due to him from his most Christian Majesty. I shall serve him all I can, but his debt is very great and very old, which will be two great obstacles in this Court.

“The Emperor’s envoyé talks of leaving this place very quickly, and I believe without much success in his negociation. The Bishop of Paris is lately dead, and many pretenders to his bishopric; his place of Chancellour of the Order the King has given to Mr. de Louvoy, which is a present worth forty thousand pistoles in gold, it having been always sold as much.”

Endorsed: Jan. 3, 70.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70[-1], Jan. 7, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship’s of Dec. the 22nd [o.s.]. I am sorry to hear that the pain in your leg has at last resolv’d itself to be the gout. The Duke of Lorraine’s ministers, which your Lordship tells me are very patient and very discreet, cannot do better than to continue in that humour, for I believe their affairs are in that posture as to make them have need of that quality above all others.

“The Emperor’s envoyé has at last declared his business to the King here—how that he came in the name of the Emperor and the Empire to desire his Majesty, upon their consideration, to restore Lorraine, it being a country that held of the Empire. The King answered him that he had so many good reasons and grounds to proceed with the Duke of Lorraine as he had done, that the world need not wonder at it. As for the restitution of Lorraine, if he would do it for anybody’s sake, he would do it for the Emperor’s; but that he was resolv’d not [to] restore it at the request of any prince or potentate of Europe; but that if any of the Princes of that House had a mind to be restored to it again, they should come and live in his Court, and by their behaviour deserve it of him. And after the King had told him this, he told him he might return to his master when he pleased, for he could give him no other answer.

“For the envoyé himself (though, may be, you may hear reports to the contrary), the King has treated him with all kindness and courtesy imaginable. He has sent an express to the Emperor to know whether he shall come back or no.”

Endorsed: Jan. 7, 70.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]70[-1], Jan. 10, Paris.—“The letters being not yet come out of England, I have none of your Lordship’s to acknowledge. Since my last I have seen the Dutch Ambassador, who tells me that he has order from his masters to desire of his Christian Majesty to give another year for the deciding of the differences that arise from the pretensions of France and Spain in Flanders, and that he only expects to hear from their Ambassador at Madrid, that the Queen does desist from the counter-pretensions, which in this Court will never be allowed of. He asked me whether I would not join with him in this demand. I told him I had no orders yet, and that I must know the King my master's pleasure before I could stir in such an affair. Your Lordship will be pleased to give me the King's orders in it.

"I am informed that the King here has already, or will in a day or two, send express orders to all his ports neither to carry or receive any merchandise out of Holland. This sudden resolution is supposed to be taken upon the great impositions lately laid upon all French commodities in Holland, as also to prevent the great benefit the Dutch make by furnishing France with fish against Lent."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 10,  $\frac{70}{71}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Jan. 17, Paris.—"I have not time to say much to your Lordship, the post being ready to go away; which I have stayed to give you an account of the audience I had this morning from the King. According to the orders I received from your Lordship in yours of Dec. the 27th [o.s.], I acquainted Mr. de Lionne with the commands I had from the King my master to desire of his most Christian Majesty a prolongation of the term formerly granted for the deciding of the differences between the two Crowns; and though it could not but be confessed that the Spaniards were to blame not to have put an end to them this last year past, yet, for the quiet of Christendom and the particular satisfaction of the King my master, I hoped the King here would consent to it; which his Majesty has done this morning, having given me his word that he will allow one whole year more for the deciding of the same differences which he referred last year to the King our master and the Crown of Swedeland. Next post I shall send you the answer in writing."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 17,  $\frac{70}{71}$  (?). Answered 16 [o.s.].

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]70[-1], Jan. 17, Paris.—"The French Ambassadrice having given me notice that there was a courier going into England, I thought I might venture to write by him, to acquaint you that I have seen the treaty lately made between England and France, and I think it the most advantageous that ever yet we made with France. By all that I can guess, the Dutch are in the greatest se[c]urity in the world, and suspect nothing less. I see the Dutch Ambassador often, and he has showed me several of his letters, and some since Mr. Van Beunen's being returned from England, and they all seem to be the most assured and satisfied of us that can be. I will always live in the same good intelligence with him, that he may have no reason to suspect anything. I can assure you, you have carried the business so well and so secretly, that there is [are] not five people here that do not believe we shall fall out with France.

"I have told Mr. de Lionne that there is nothing more likely to discover the business than the not sending over the money very privately, for there are both here and in England many people that do not wish the union between the two Kings; and if I may venture to advise, it were much safer and would be much more secret if the money that is to be paid in February were put into Spanish pistoles, which should be weight (sic), and then put into some ballot of merchandise, and conveyed from hence all the way by water into England. It may be done at the same time that the person that the King sends over to fetch my Lord Abbot Mountagu's statues and pictures, and he nor nobody living know of it. You will excuse the liberty I take to propose this, but I am sure, as Mr. de Lionne was telling me that they proposed to have it sent by bills of exchange, it will be impossible that so great a sum can be returned and the Dutch not find it out, who have spies and intelligence amongst all the banquiers of the world; and the Dutch Ambassador himself told me some days ago, which I advertised Mr. de Lionne of, that they once suspected that the French had returned great sums of money into England, but upon inquiry amongst the merchants, as they had strictly done, they were convinced there was no such thing."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 17,  $\frac{7}{7}$ .

W[ALTER] MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71,* Jan. 21, . . . —“Pray, my Lord, send hither the person you design for the safe conveyance of the commodities, since he requires but the Secretaryship, not the Treasury, for his dispatch. I cannot understand the delay. . . . My Lord Ambassador hath performed the good offices for the Count d'Albon, and received a very hopeful answer. . . .”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71,† Jan. 21, Paris.—“This is only to send your Lordship the enclosed mémoire, which I received yesterday from Mr. de Lionne. You will find by the manner that it is framed that there is an exclusion given to all other pretensions of the Spaniards of what nature soever, which I hope will make them submit to the Arbitrage in the manner that France proposes it. Since these delays have produced no better an effect, the Court this day goes to Vincennes for three days, where there will be all sorts of divertissements to entertain the Emperor's envoyé.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 21, s.n., 71.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Jan. 28, Paris.—“I received yesterday your Lordship's by the Count de Gramont's courier. I wish the King our master's good offices may take effect, for certainly no man can be worse than he is here at present. I believe I am not myself much better at the Duke of Buckingham's court; for I have been advertised from intimate friends of his how much he is privately my enemy, and the resolution he has of being as he calls it revenged of me for advertising of you concerning the courier he sent into France. I must undergo his displeasure as well as I can, but if the thing were to do again, I would do just as I did, and as I think it is my duty to do in the station I am in. When he was in France, nobody could do another more real services than I did, but courtesies are never reckoned as anything with him. In himself, I fear him very little, and with the King much less, for I know he is of so just a nature as that an ill office can do a man no hurt with him, whilst a man does his duty honestly and faithfully, which certainly I had not done, should I have concealed the Duke of Buckingham's sending a courier privately here, though perhaps there was no hurt in it, and that he did not do it without the King's and your Lordship's privity to it. Your Lordship I am confident is so kind to me as to say all that is necessary to the King in my behalf upon this affair, and so I leave it.

* Arranged with the letters of 1672. (No. 169.)

† Arranged with the letters of 1672. (No. 170.)

"I acquainted your Lordship by the French Ambassador's courier that Mr. de Lionne had showed me the Treaty. I have also spoke with the King concerning it, who is the most pleased man that ever I saw with this conjunction with England.

"Here is in this Court an agent from the Duke of Bran[d]enburgh, who says that his master is ready to enter into a strict alliance with France as soon as he shall see that the King of England will do so too. Mr. de Lionne has therefore pressed me to tell him of this Treaty, which I have hitherto delayed, expecting to hear from your Lordship; but upon the receipt of your last, I am convinced that I may safely do it. I shall be extreme glad when your Lordship sends me orders to come for England, that I may be more particularly instructed of everything. I am very u[n]willing to trouble you with any complaints, but I am in the greatest necessity and want of money that can be, having not had one penny from the King these ten months; my credit is quite at an end."

Endorsed by Lord A.'s secretary: Jan. 28, 1671.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Feb. 14, Paris.—"The post is not this week come in from England, so that I have received nothing from your Lordship. I acquainted you in my last that there was a courier arrived from the Emperor, and, as I am informed, with instructions to his envoyé here to continue his solicitations for the restoration of Lorraine; the Emperor alleging that he cannot take off his protection from a prince whose state is a fief of the Empire, which by his oath as Emperor he is obliged to, and by not doing it, he should disengage all the Princes of the Empire from assisting him in his wars against the Turk, which he is so exposed to. By what I can see, these new instances will have no better success than the former.

"The town here is filled with the discourse of the retiring of the Duchess de la Valliere, who on Ash Wednesday morning went into the monastery at Chaleot, and writ a letter to the King that she had left all her jewels and whatever she had received from him, desiring no other favour from him but the liberty of continuing there. The King sent the Mareschal de Bellefonds twice to persuade her to come back, but he could not prevail. At last he sent Mr. Colbert, who brought her that night to Versailles—whether it is to continue there nobody yet knows."

Endorsed: Feb. 14, 71.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Feb. 21, Paris.—"I had nothing last post worth acquainting you Lordship with. We are here in expectation of the answer his most Christian Majesty will give the Emperor's envoyé concerning the affairs of Lorraine, but the King has deferred the giving him audience till his return to St. Germain's, which will be on Monday. I have lately seen the Dutch Ambassador, who seemed much dissatisfied with the scruples made in England, of admitting the Emperor into the Triple Alliance; but when I showed him the copy of your Lordship's letter to the Baron d'Isola, he confessed himself that the reasons alleged therein were so good that he had nothing to reply.

"I am extremely solicited by one Mr. Andrewes, an English merchant, who has a pretension in this Court depending for a debt due to him many years past from the Crown of France. I have done him all the service I can here. Your Lordship I believe may help him better with your recommendations to the French Ambassador. My Lord Abbot Montagu and Sir Thomas Bond I think are a-packiug up the pictures to be sent to his Majesty by the first opportunity."

Endorsed: Feb. 21,  $\frac{70}{11}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Feb. 24, Paris.—"I have sent my servant into England, hoping by this time money will be a little more current than it has been all this year. Sir Thomas Bond thinks of removing himself in the spring, and protests he has furnished as far as either his stock or credit will give him leave. I would therefore be in a condition of clearing all my troublesome or clamorous debts against the journey of Flanders, that I may find no stop when your Lordship shall send to me to come into England, which I desire may be at the same time that the King here begins his journey, which will be the 20th of April, the style of this place, that so I may handsomely avoid all the expense of that journey.

"All the account that I can give you of affairs here is, that never people were so much pleased with anything as they are here with the alliance with England; I mean those who know the secret, but it is communicated to very few. Mr. de Turenne is one of those who upon all occasions owns a particular esteem for your Lordship, and makes great professions of being your servant.

"Here is a great discourse here (sic) of Mr. Colbert's returning, and one Mr. Commartin's coming into England in his place; he is a man of the robe, but in very good esteem with everybody. Mr. d'Angeau, that is named for the embassy of Swede, doth also brigue very much to come into England; but you will have more satisfaction if it prove to be the former.

"I have sent a coach with one that I have sent for the Queen, which I had here of a person of quality; it has never been much used, but the worse it is the better your Lordship may accept of it. If your Lordship likes it when you see it, it is at your service, and you will do me a great deal of honour to use it. For my own particular, I am over-stocked with coaches, and therefore I do as when a country is over-peopled, transplant; and I send it before the Act comes out, or else the custom would cost more than it is worth.

"I hope, if I come into England, your Lordship will prevail with his Majesty that I may not, for the time I stay, give much attendance at Court, but that I may have leave to spend most of my time with my father."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 24, 70.

W[ALTER] MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Feb. 28, Incura[bles, Paris].—"I presume Sir Tho. Bond hath given you an account of the pursuance of your orders in the dispatch committed to him. . . . I have received some days since a desire from my Lord Clarendon to procure him a sauvegarde for his remove to Burbon [Bourbon] this spring, being now very much oppressed by his gout. You will not wonder he should desire a declining of such surgeons as he met at Évreux, who treated him for the stone rather than the gout, against which he desireth the State's intervention, which humanity is easily granted here. I cannot apprehend that this approach of some days' journey should offend or fright our Parliament critics. As for your nature, I can answer myself upon the same motives as I may of the King's charity; so that I conceive this account to you sufficient discharge for me. We hope to hear now quickly of your settlement of your Parliament debates."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 28, 70. Ld. Ab[bot] Montegu.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, March 4, Paris.—“I acquainted your Lordship in my last that in a few days the Emperor's envoyé was to have an audience from the King according to the new instructions which he has from Vienna. He was on Saturday last at St. Germain's, where having again demanded in the name of the Emperor and the Empire the restitution of Lorraine, the answer that the King gave him was this: that as he had all the regard imaginable to the Emperor's recommendation, so he hoped the Emperor would not press him in a thing which his honour obliged him to refuse; that the Emperor himself could not more compassionate the Duke of Lorraine's condition than he did; but that the foresaid Duke had so highly offended him that he was resolved not to restore him his country at the instance of what prince soever; but that when either he or his nephew should make their submission to him, that then he would re-establish him, and let him know that it was out of consideration and friendship he had for the Emperor that he did him that grace.

“Mr. de Wendisgrafts seems very well satisfied with this answer, and has sent back a courier advising that the Duke of Lorraine should make all submissions necessary, but not to come in person, fearing, if he should, that he would spoil all. This account I had from Mr. de Wendisgrafts himself, whom I met at the Dutch Ambassador's, being desirous to give your Lordship a true account of this matter.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: March 4, 71.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, March 21, Paris.—“I have acquainted my Lord Abbot Montagu that the King is pleased not to disapprove of my Lord Clarendon's coming to Bourbon. This day Sir Thomas Bond has made an end of packing up all the pictures of St. Martin's, and they only stay for a pass, which I shall procure in a day or two.

“There is one thing yet there which I wish with all my heart the King had, which is, the orengerie; it is one of the finest in France—the biggest, and the most trees. I have been talking with Sir Thomas Bond about them, and the charge of bringing them will not be above a hundred and fifty pound, and the price not above three hundred, which is not a quarter of what they cost. Several people are about them, but I will endeavour that he may not dispose of them till I hear from you his Majesty's pleasure. He would have offered them at the same time he did the pictures, but that he cannot be persuaded that they can be safely conveyed, which I see no difficulty in.

“You have I suppose heard last post of the disgrace of Mr. de Cesar (?) for cheating the King at play. The manner of his cheating was thus.

He had corrupted the cart[e]-maker and dice-maker, who not only (sic) at the King's play, but furnished false cart[e]s and dice at all the great houses in France."

Endorsed: March 21,  $\frac{70}{71}$  (?). Answered 20th. [o.s.]

W[ALTER] MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Mar. 22, Incur[ables, Paris].—"This is only to acquaint you that Sir Tho. Bond is now at S. Martin's packing up the King's commodities, so that he hopeth to dispatch them this day or tomorrow."

P.S., referring to a proposed accommodation with S[ir] Ha. Wood.

Endorsed: Lord Ab[bot] Montague, Mar. 22,  $\frac{70}{71}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, March 24, Paris.—"I am so glad to find by your Lordship's of March the 9th [o.s.] that the King's business is in so good a way of being finished. The King's journey here is put off till the 23rd of the next month. Mr. Colbert, after the holidays, goes to Rochefort to see in what condition the fleet is. The Archbishop of Tholouze is recalled out of Spain, and the Marquis de Villar, who was formerly there, is talked of to go in his place."

Endorsed: Mar. 24, 70.

W[ALTER] MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, April 1.—"This is only a letter of advice upon the figures of exchange now on their journey." . . . .

Endorsed: Depends upon your Lordship for payment for his pictures.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, April 1, Paris.—"There is no news stirring here worth the giving your Lordship the trouble of a letter. This day Mr. Colbert has begun his journey to Rochfort, to be back time enough to accompany the King into Flanders, and in a day or two Mr. de Louvoy goes into Lorraine to conduct most of the army that is there, except the horse, to Dunkerque. The King here has ordered some new levies of men; Mr. de Magelotty is going into Italy to raise three thousand foot, and some others they say are to be raised in the Duke of Savoy's country, but nobody is yet named for that employment."

Endorsed: Answered March 30. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, April 8, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of March the 23rd [o.s.], with his Majesty's leave to return for some time into England. I propose to myself to begin my journey from hence about the 20th of this month, French style. The Court here beginning their journey the 23rd, I am willing to be before them, because of the trouble that there would be of getting horses at the same time. I hear nothing yet of my Lc[r]d of Ossery, though I expect him every day; your Lordship may be assured of all the service I can do him in this place. I am just now a-going to Versailles, to deliver his Majesty's letters to the King, for the Prince de Ligny. I have done him all the service I can, and shall renew the King my master's recommendations."

Endorsed: Answered 3rd April.

W[ALTER] MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, April 25, Incura[bles, Paris.]—"The sadness of this embassy will be well wasted before the arrival of this pesame,* wherefore I shall not need to treat of that subject; but there is one part of this commission will bring I fear some troublesome condolence, being the repeating of our dearest Madame's loss by a solicitation relating to it. . . . I am assured of your civility to the person of this bearer; . . . there comes with him a nephew of the Marquis de Fenelon, a very dear friend of mine."

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Sept. 4, Calais.—"I arrived here on Wednesday last at night, this being Saturday, having been kept from Monday by reason of the ill weather at sea from landing. The next morning after my arrival I intended to go to Dunquerque, but I heard here that Mr. d'Estrades was gone towards Ipres with a thousand horse, to secure the passage of some ammunition that was to go for Lisle, and pass over some of the Spanish dominions, which they heard the Spaniards would refuse; but whether it was that the French were too strong or no, they met no opposition in their way. Yesterday Mr. d'Estrades returned to Dunquerque, where I met him, and after having delivered him his Majesty's and your Lordship's letter, we fell into discourse together, of which I will give you the best and shortest account I can.

"He began first with great professions of his zeal and devotion to the King our master's service; and from that fell into great complaints of the ill offices the Duke of Buckingham had done him to the King here, to the utter ruin of his fortune, by assuring the King that if he had been addressed to in the business of Dunquerque, that he would have helped his Majesty to it two millions cheaper, and that certainly Mr. d'Estrades and the Chancellor had a great sum of money out of it. This he desires the King will keep secret, till there happens some favourable conjuncture wherein he may desire the King to justify him to the King his master.

"From this he fell to talk of the present alliance that is like to be between France and England, but by his discourse I perceive he knows nothing but by guess, and by some discourses held to him by the Prince of Condé, who certainly is trusted with all the secret. He desired me to advise the King, in whatever treaty he made with France, though they might pretend all their designs [to be?] against Holland, to look to have it specified in the treaty; that in case the Spaniards should be involved, as he concluded certainly they would, what share in the division he should have of Flanders, and that Ostend, Blankenberg, and Brudges would be the most advantageous for the Crown of England.

* A compliment of condolence. (Spanish.)

"I find by his discourse that it is the Prince de Condé's opinion that the Spaniards will never be kept from siding with the Hollander, and that the French themselves will not be sorry to have (sic) them, when once they are sure of the English, that they may have a good pretence to take the rest of Flanders. Therefore, my Lord, I do not think Mr. d'Estrades' advice altogether improper, for in case of accidents there will be no hurt for us to provide for ourselves.

"He intimated also another thing to me, that the King should never hearken to the parting with Tangiers, for he knew that Mr. Colbert's heart was set upon it, and that to his knowledge there was [were] those about the King of England that had engaged, when time should serve, to persuade him to part with it. But he proposeth on the other side that if ever we join with France against Spain, that we should propose the French taking Porto Longone, and putting it into our hands; which, he says, with Tangiers, will make the King master of the Mediterranean as much as he is of the Ocean.

"These are projects a great way off. Just now the news is come of Mr. de Lionn[e]'s death of a fever in twelve days. Mr. de Courtin is named in two or three letters that I have seen to succeed him in that of Secrétaire pour les affaires étranger[e]s, which they talk of dividing from that of Secretary of State, which his son hath.

"Tomorrow I set out early for Paris, and hope to be there in four days; from whence I hope to be able to give you a better account of everything."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Sept. 16, Paris.—"I would not omit this opportunity, it coming by a safe hand, to acquaint your Lordship that now is the time of proposing to the King here the remitting of our levies of four thousand men, to which the treaty binds us, and in the[ir] stead give leave to his Christian Majesty to raise ten thousand or less Englishmen at his own cost. The commissions will in a few days be given out for all the stranger troops that are to be raised; therefore this proposition must be made before they are too far engaged in those levies. I will do it so that the King our master shall not be at all suspected to have any design of breaking his word in anything of the Treaty he is engaged in. I must only desire that in case they should from hence look upon this as an officious project of mine, that his Majesty will be pleased to own it as a thing that will extremely accommodate his affairs."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Acknow[ledged] 11. [o.s.]

R. MONTAGU to [the KING].

[16]71, Sept. 23, Paris.—"In order to the commands your Majesty was pleased to give me at my coming away, I have endeavoured to the best of my skill to bring to pass the proposition I made your Majesty of getting the King here to release that Article of the Treaty which obligeth you to furnish six or at least four thousand foot at your own expenses.

"At my arrival here, I discoursed with Mr. de Turenne and some others that I knew were trusted with the secret, but they all discouraged me from making any such proposition, telling me that it would put scruples and jealousies into the King's head here, as if your Majesty were wavering in your resolutions of going on with the war, as it is agreed on by the Treaty on both parts. Mr. de Lozune, on the other side, told me that the Duke of Buckingham had engaged to bring over so good men that he thought it would be impossible to prevail with the King to release you of your engagement.

“Upon this, I thought there was no way so likely to bring this business about as to address myself to Mr. de Louvoy, and endeavoured to prepare him beforehand by some persons that have a great influence over him, and I hope it has succeeded to your Majesty’s satisfaction. Yesterday he came to me from the King, to let me know that the King his master was so willing to accommodate your Majesty in everything that he did for the first year of the war release your Majesty from your promise of sending any land forces at your own expenses; and though he engaged to do it but for one year, Mr. de Louvoy intimated to me that there was no doubt but that if your affairs required it, that you should find the same compliance for the time to come.

“At the time I proposed this I assured the King that your Majesty would permit him to make levies of English in your country, in case he desired it, though it should be to the number of ten thousand. To which Mr. de Louvoy has also now replied, that his master has such a value of the English, and thinks it may be a terror to his enemies to have English in his army, that he doth intend to raise some, but will not yet resolve of the number till he can tell upon what terms he may raise them, and upon what pay, when they are once raised, they may be kept up; and withall recommended to me to desire your Majesty, that as he is willing to spare your purse, that you will also be so kind to him as, in the raising of men, [to] order it so that he may have them upon reasonable terms; which if that can be, he believes he shall constantly entertain a body of English, which should always be ready for your service if ever you have occasion for them.

“Therefore, if I may be so bold as to advise your Majesty, you cannot do anything more advantageous to yourself than to facilitate the French King’s levies, because, if once they are on foot and upon reasonable terms, you may be confident, as long as this war lasts, of being eased of the burthen of paying any forces yourself, which will be an expense of very near four score thousand pound a year saved, and a very popular thing to your people and Parliament.

“I must give your Majesty an account of one great motive that has induced them here to release your Majesty of the expense of these land forces, and the entertaining them at their own. But I must first beg of you, Sir, not to believe that [it] is out of malice to the Duke of Buckingham, who is not my friend, for I only tell you what Mr. de Louvoy told me. He says they conceive your Majesty to be under an engagement to give him the command of those forces you were obliged to send over; and that they have conceived so ill an opinion of him, for his last behaviour towards you in the Parliament, that they do not look upon him as a man well-affected to Monarchy, and that consequently [he is?] likely to play a thousand tricks when once he had such an authority in his hands; and that they knew for certain that he and his friends desired to keep well with the Presbyterian and fanatic party, who never were well-affected to a French alliance, and could never be persuaded that they would join unanimously for the destruction of Holland, which is a Commonwealth, and such as they believe they wish in England, if they had the power to compass it.

“He told me at the same time that they were also alarmed at a news of the French Ambassador’s, of my Lord Asheley’s being to be surintendant des finances, créature de Mr. de Buckingham, because they are afraid your affairs would be in people’s hands they cannot think at bottom well-affected either to Monarchy or the great design you are now upon. He concluded by telling me—‘Monsieur, par ce que nous avons remarqué de Mr. de Boukingamm, nous le croyons un homme incompatible, et nous ne voulons point qui [L] fasse le méchant icy comme il fait en Angleterre.’

“I told [him], upon all this discourse, that I believed it was natural for your Majesty, if the Duke of Buckingham did not command the forces that were to come into France, to desire it might be the Duke of Monmouth, who would be followed by all the young nobility of England; and did therefore conceive that his Christian Majesty would do you a kindness not to engage to anybody for the command of those English he should raise till he first knew whether you cared to have it for the Duke of Monmouth; so that [it] is in your Majesty’s power to do what you please, because, till you have declared your pleasure, he will keep himself free from all engagements.

“There is one thing more that I was desired to recommend to you—that in case the French King should make any levies in England, that you would mingle amongst the new raised men some old soldiers, that they may be the sooner disciplined and in order for service.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Sept. 23, Paris.—“I have neglected writing these two or three posts because I have been at Versailles following the business I am now giving you an account of. Your Lordship may remember that I proposed to the King our master my trying here to get his Christian Majesty to release him of the engagement he lay under of furnishing six or four thousand foot at least at his own charges, and upon the relinquishing that, his Majesty would give his consent to the raising, if he required, ten thousand foot in his country.

“The proposition I made has been very well received, and yesterday Mr. de Louvoy came to me from the King to tell me that I might let my master know, that he did relinquish him of his promise of sending any land forces, but he desired it might be but for the first year. But it was accompanied with such circumstances and expressions, that I see he only has this reserve, to keep it in his power to oblige our master the next year in the same manner.

“As to the levies I offered should be permitted in England, Mr. de Louvoy tells me the King has a great mind to raise men, but that they are frightened with the excessive pay of the English, that they will give them more than any strangers have, except the Suisse; and therefore desires to learn at what rate they may have men, both as to the levy-money and the constant pay when once they are raised, which I desire your Lordship will be pleased to let me know, because the King here expects an account of it by the return of my courier.

“The French Ambassador has order also to let the King know his most Christian Majesty’s compliance in this business; as also to ask the King’s advice, how the Duke of Buckingham is to be managed in this affair, because, though it be very advantageous to our master, they think he may be discontented at it, since there will be no troops for him to command. I have writ to his Majesty at large of this matter, and presuming he will show you my letter, it will be but a repetition to enlarge more upon it. I must only give you an account how I came to succeed in this matter.

“I have had formerly a private commerce with a sister of Madame de Fresnoy. (Madame de Fresnoy is one of the handsomest women in France, wife to a commy of Mr. de Louvoy. She is his mistress, and governs him.) So I renewed my acquaintance with this sister, finding that nobody could do this business with the King but Mr. de Louvoy, nor nobody with Mr. de Louvoy but Madame de Fresnoy; and told her that I had a business with Mr. de Louvoy, which if she could prevail with her sister to dispose him to, I would make them both from my master a considerable present. She hearkened to the proposition, and told me she would speak to her sister.

“A day or two after she came to me again, and told me her sister was very willing to undertake anything she could, but that she must have some rise (sic) or some pretence to speak to Mr. de Louvoy from me; that I might now upon my arrival make her a visit, and, if I had brought any bagatelles out of England, send her some. So the next day I took a pretence to visit her upon an accident that happened as I came over into England. She was then a-going to Dunkirque, and passing by Calais, hearing there was a yacht in the port, she had a curiosity to see it; and when she was aboard, she bid the captain tell me, that if I had been there, she would have gone with me into England.

“When I was with her, I found she had a mind to give me an opportunity of speaking to her. I told her I had a business of importance with Mr. de Louvoy that concerned the King my master; that if she would dispose him to help me in it, I would acknowledge her favour in the manner as I had told her sister. She bid me next day send her anything that I had brought out of England, to give an opportunity of speaking to him of my civility to her. So accordingly I sent her some slight things to the value of ten or twelve pound.

“Two or three days after, she sent me word she had done me all kind of good offices to Mr. de Louvoy, and that he was in a disposition to do anything he could to show his respect to so great a King as the King our master. I met him afterwards at Court, and he made me the same compliments; and two or three days after, I proposed this thing to him, which has taken effect as you see, when neither Mr. de Turenne nor Mr. de Lozun durst open their mouth in it.

“This day the sister was with me, who tells me she hears Mr. de Louvoy has given me contentment in what I desired of him; and as you may imagine she desired I should make my words good, and gave me to understand that her sister was not altogether ignorant of what passed, for she said, ‘Jay ouy dire quon a espargnée près d’un million au Roy [d’] Angleterre.’ I understood her language, and found it was to increase the present. I told her, as soon as I could hear out of England, I durst be responsible to her for a jewel of two thousand crowns, and to her sister one of six thousand, or, if they would the money, to please themselves. I have not money enough to do it here, but I can borrow it if you let me know the King approves of it, and will give order to Sir Stephen Fox to accept the bills payable at two months’ sight. I hope the King will not think it money flung away, and I ventured nothing except the business were done; and without this I do not see how I could have succeeded; and this two thousand pound may save the King in the war he is engaged in above five hundred thousand; for if the King will be firm to his point and always complain of his necessities, he need never be at the expense of sending one land-man into France.

“I have also given the King here an account, why there is no Ambassador yet gone out of England into Spain. They approve of the reason, and think, though the Spaniards do see the Hollanders attacked, they are so slow a-resolving they will never take party [part in?]; the first campaign; and when the success of that is seen, it will be time enough to send an Ambassador to them.

“Mr. de Turenne has been with me about his niece, and says the King of France will dote her, if the King will consent the Duke of York should do her the honour to marry her. I said that was a proposition to be made when we knew what that portion was to be; and that the King was offered for him all the great matches in Christendom. This was all I thought fit to say without further order; but I know from other hands the King here thinks of proposing his cousin Madame de Guize.

“This letter of mine, after the King has seen it, I conjure you to burn; and if there be any need of showing at the Council of foreign affairs what I have writ, it is but having the substance transcribed as if it came in cipher, and leave out what concerns the women and the Duke of Buckingham. If Mr. Perwich stays, as I believe he will, to see his friends, pray dispatch an express to me, because the King here stops his other levies till he knows upon what terms he may raise men in England.

[P.S.] “The Conte de Seaux has been sick ever since I came; he pretends it is for love, and some of his friends have been very inquisitive how Mademoiselle de Queroalle governs herself in England. I gave them an answer that will not conduce much to the Conte’s recovery”

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Oct. 10, Paris.—“Since my last to your Lordship I received one from Mr. Perwich at Euston, and do expect with great impatience the resolution that will be taken concerning any levies that may be made in England. If you please to give me some directions in it, and leave it to me, I do not [doubt?] but to make a capitulation that shall be both for the satisfaction of the English and French; but then I must have powers sent me in such a form as your Lordship knows is requisite in those occasions.

“The marriage that you have heard so much talked on between Monsieur and the Elector Palatine’s daughter, is now concluded. She is to change her religion at Metz, where all M[onsieur]r[’s] family goes to receive her; and at Chaloon Monsieur goes and marries her. She will be here by the 16th of November.”

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Dec. 1, Paris.—“I think I may by this way venture to say what is not very fit to say by the post. I am confident you have heard already of the great differences between Mr. Colbert and Mr. de Louvoy. The occasion was this. About a month since the King command[ed] Mr. de Louvoy to make a state of the expense of the war, which (sic) the ordinary and extraordinary expense amounted to six and thirty millions. The King signed it without consulting Mr. Colbert; which dissatisfied him so much that he told the King it was impossible for him to find the money. The King bid him consider well what he said, for if he could not, he would find those that could. Mr. Colbert was absent at Paris some eight days from Court, and after having writ to the King twice or thrice, returned and said he did make no doubt but to find the money his Majesty expected.

“It is believed, if he had stayed away a little longer, that he had been quite disgraced; for Mr. de Louvoy had three or four men ready that would have undertaken constantly to have advanced the King the money necessary for the war; and the King has lately, as I know for certain from one that was present, used some expressions as if he were weary of being in the hands and power of one man, for his finances, saying, 'It is as bad as to have Mr. Frucet (?) surintendant again.' And in discourse with Mr. de Louvoy about several things, I found him extol extremely the method he hears we have in England, of having more than one person charged with that care.

"Madame de Montespan is in greater credit with the King than ever, which supports Mr. de Louvoy extremely, he being altogether in her interest; and now it is concluded that Madame de Montespan has been the ruin of Mr. de Lozune, they having a great while been ill together. But some will have it, that it is for some discontented letters of his, that were intercepted, to the Duke of Buckingham; but I look upon that as a very foolish report.

"As soon as my Lord Sunderland is dispatched from hence, I will come over, there being several things necessary for his Majesty to know, and to take his measures by, before he engages in this great affair, which I am confident will be the advantageousest that ever happened to England."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Dec. 9, Paris.—"I have just now received news of my Lord Sunderland's being near this place, and expect him today at dinner. This is therefore only to give you an account of that of which I suppose you may be as impatient of in England as they are here; and by the next there may be matter furnished for a longer letter."

THOMAS CHUDLEIGH to LORD ARLINGTON.

1671, Dec.  $\frac{12}{2}$ , Saturday, Paris.— . . . "My Lord Ambassador [Sunderland] arrived safe hither on Wednesday last, and yesterday ended all his business at the Court, at St. Germain's, and does now mind nothing more than preparations for his speedy departure, which will be on Tuesday next; and I can assure your Lordship that my Lord Ambassador is so very desirous to make all the speed possible, that he neither regards cost nor trouble; and the day's light, which confines the meanest labourer's toil and drudgery, does not limit his Excellency's travail." . . .

Endorsed by Lord A.: Mr. Chidley.

Contents docketed by his Lordship's secretary.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]71, Dec. 12, Paris.—"I received your Lordship's of Nov. the 28th [o.s.] by my Lord Sunderland, and according to his Majesty's commands have endeavoured to give him all the dispatch that can be in this Court. Yesterday I waited on him to St. Germain's. I leave it to him to give you an account of what he did there. He will be going from hence in two days at the farthest; and I have obtained an order from Mr. de Louvoy upon all the roads to furnish him with all conveniencies for his journey. I have also received the cipher, which I will endeavour to employ the next post, and give you an account of the other things you recommend to me in your letter, of which I could not yesterday discourse with either the King or the Ministers."

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Dec. [15] 16, Tuesday noon, Paris.—“ Your Lordship’s of Dec. the 1st [o.s.] came to me last night at about 11 a’clock. I have ever since been thinking and contriving which way to bring to pass what his Majesty commands me to attempt, which would be the greatest joy in the world to me, if I could succeed in it ; but I confess I see of all hands very great difficulties, and the chief is, I am afraid the King here has not so much money as the world does imagine. But since you give me leave to give my opinion in a matter of this importance, I think there can be nothing in the world so wise as not to have communicated anything of this to the French Ambassador, who most certainly for many reasons would rather hinder such a thing than promote it, and I am sure was in his heart, as his brother is here, much dissatisfied with the last point I gained, of releasing his Majesty from sending over any levies.

“ But I should, however, before the return of this courier, have attempted something in it, but that I have discovered for certain that the Duke of Buckingham, upon his great dissatisfaction of losing his command by the late release of the levies, did give notice to the King here that that condescension was very unnecessary, and a thing our master neither desired before it was granted, nor valued it since, but a mere malicious project of yours and mine, to put him out of so honourable a post as that might have proved to him.

“ This suspicion, which I tell you he has given the King of me, may perhaps, when I propose the thing to him, make the King think it is some other officious project of mine, to ingratiate myself with my master ; and therefore, to credit me more, I have taken the liberty to send you a copy of a letter which it will be necessary the King should write himself ; if there is anything in the style not after the manner that Kings write to one another, it is easily mended. But I have framed it directly to the King’s humour here, and I am confident, if there be any way of doing it, [it] must be this.

“ I will not communicate the thing here to any of the Ministers, but go directly to him with the letter ; and to speak, as one ought to do always, respectfully of Kings, he often takes a pride and vanity to do things of his own head ; and I am verily persuaded that this way it may be brought about, because I have always made it my business to insinuate to him the great confidence my master had of him, and how he desired that all things of importance might pass first between themselves, which he seemed to be much pleased withall.

“ I have therefore sent back my servant with all speed, and if you approve of what I propose, you will send me another express in all haste, before the holy days here come on, which is very soon, and an ill time for business. As soon as I hear from you again, I intend to come myself, and let you know the success I have, and several other things of consequence for his Majesty’s service.

“ As for the two things you mind me of to speak to the Ministers, in case this great point be gained, to be left out of the new treaty, that will be a new matter to gain, except we can bring them now to release the levies for all following years, and always during the war give us money instead of ships.

“ I saw a letter of Mr. de Pompone of Nov. the 21st, wherein he seems to have some more hopes of his negotiation than formerly, and upon that resolved to stay some days longer to see whether he could conclude anything.

“ Will Perwich showed me just now* a letter from Mr. Ellis, where he mentions the French Ambassador’s coming, which I should be sorry for in this conjuncture. Therefore pray, if you can, amuse him till you have sent me an answer to this letter. It is not, my Lord, that I am fond of engrossing to myself this negociation, for it is so difficult that one has not much reason to be fond of it; but I cannot help repeating to you again that this way that I propose of the King’s writing himself, is the only way to effect it; and I am sure the propounding it, or making the least overture any other way, will dissatisfy them, and make them think at least that those who propound it are not very well affected to them, nor to this alliance; whereas whatever passeth teste a teste between the two Kings will never be taken ill.

“ My Lord Sunderland is gone post this morning. It is perhaps impertinent in me to mind anyone so careful as your Lordship, but methinks it were not improper, in case we should be involved in a war with Spain, to have some treaty with France upon that, as well as we have upon that of Hollande. I expect your Lordship’s further directions, and I hope you will not disapprove of the reasons why I have deferred stirring this matter yet, since perhaps the success may make amends for the time that is lost, which need not be above eight days, since the moon shines and the couriers may ride faster.”

Endorsed by Lord Arlington: Decemb. 16, 71. My Ld. Ambassador, by Mr. Not. Answered by another express, Alexander.

[Proposed letter from CHARLES II. to LOUIS XIV.]

[1671, Dec.]—“ Par la confiance que J’ay en vostre amitié Je me crois obligé de vous communiquer l’estat de mes affaires, lesquelles presentement vous devez regarder comme les vostres, puisque je n’ay autre dessein que de les accommoder; de maniere a pouvoir mieux abaisser nos ennemis communs. L’Alliance qui est aller (?) entre nous est assurement la plus avantageuse qui de long temps ay[t] esté faite pour nostre couronne, et Je conte autant sur la bonne foy et le merite que J’ay remarqué en vostre personne que sur la puissance de vos armes; mais dans mon Royaume il y peut avoir des esprits jaloux de vostre gloire et de la meinne (sic), et qui par consequence peuvent disposer l’esprit de mes peuples a né point si bein (sic) gonster l’estroit[e] union dans laquelle ils me verront bein tost avec vous. C’est pourquoy il faut prendre toutes les precautions necessaires, pour n’estre point au commencement interrompu dans un sy grande dessein. J’apprends certainement que nos ennemis, et principalement par mer, seront bein plus fort que Je ne me l’estois imaginé, sans rein (sic) dire des espagnols, des desseins desquells nous sommes encor incertains. Il me faut absolument, pour soutenir cette guerre avec honneur et seurté, un nombre des (sic) mes propres vaisseaux toutes seules egale a celle que Je m’estois proposé conjointement avec les vostres, lesquelles, par bein des raisons, que J’ay commandé a mon Ambassadeur, en qui Je prends entier confiance, de vous expliquer, seront mieux employé pour cette année, et plus au prejudice de nos ennemis, dans la mer Mediterranée. Je ne scay sy apres toutes les grandes despences que vous aves faite, vous pourriez encor fournir quatre millions de livres que il me faut pour augmenter ma flote, de trente vaisseaux. Je ne pretends pas, comme faisoient autre fois les Rois, qui par ruses et par des traittes tiroient le plus d’avantage que ils pouvoient les uns des autres; Je vous parle de bonne foy, et Je vous propose ceey comme une chose auey necessaire pour vostre service que

* There is an asterisk here in MS.

le meinne, et comme mon bon frere Je ne doute point que vous ne fassies la dedans tout ce que vostre amitié pour moy et vostre grande capacité vous conseillera ; et apres que par la bouche de mon Ambassadeur vous aures entendu au long les raisons pressant[e]s qui mont porté a vous faire cette proposition, Je luy ay ordonné de me venir rendre conte luy mesme ; vous assureant toujours que rein ne changera les mesures que nous avons prise ensemble, ny la parole que Je vous ay donné."

In R. Montagu's hand.

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Dec. 23, Paris.—“Your Lordship's of Dec. the 8th [o.s.] came last night to my hands. I am a-going this day to St. Germain's, and will give the speediest account that can be of what his Majesty commands me in your letter, as also observe all the other directions you give me. The courier you mention that you sent to Madrid passed by here three days after he had left London. I furnished him with what money he desired, and I believe by this time he may be at his journey's end.

“The report of Mr. de Lauzun's attempting to kill himself is not true. He had an indisposition upon him at the time he was arrested, of which he was ill by the way, and that I take it to be the occasion of the report. One of his charges, as you may have heard, the government of Berry, is disposed of to the Prince de Marcillac, which is a sign he is not like soon to come into favour again.

“The 5th of the next month the King here goes into Champagne, where he will make a review of most of his army. He will be out in all some ten or twelve days. The politicians will have it to be some great design, though I am confident there is nothing in it but barely what I tell your Lordship ; yet everybody is very busy providing their equipage, as if they were to go to the war.

“This day the Dutch Ambassador has an audience, wherein he will desire his most Christian Majesty to declare his intentions, and at the same time is to present to him an envoyé from the States-General, sent on purpose to offer all satisfaction and submission that his Majesty can desire. Your Lordship is like to hear from me very soon again.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Dec. 24, Paris.—“I was this morning at St. Germain's, and delivered his Majesty's letter to the King ; and after he had read it, he told me that the King my master referred him to me, to hear the reasons that moved him to make this proposition, but that the thing that the King my master desired was so impossible for him to do, that no reasons could prevail with him to do that which was not in his power ; that all his provisions for sea were already made, his men raised and in pay, and besides all that, he had no money. He added further that he did believe that the Duke of Buckingham might satisfy the King how impossible it was for him to do this, since so long ago as Dunkerque he had given him the same reasons and the same answer, when he came to him with the same proposition.

“Notwithstanding all this, I laid open to him at large all the arguments you had furnished me with, and added one of my own ; which was, that the King my master had a great deal of reason to fear that those seamen which used formerly to be employed when he set out his whole fleet of four score ships, when they saw themselves void of employment by our making use of a much less number than formerly we were used to do, might steal away and take employment with our enemies, and that the Dutch would spare no cost to debauch them upon such an occasion ; and we hereafter, whenever there should be occasion of setting out a greater fleet, should be disappointed of those men we used to man our ships withall.

“ I trouble your Lordship with this account, that you may speak the same language to the French Ambassador, who you may be sure will not be long without being informed from hence of the proposition ; and pray in all your discourse to him persist still in the straits we are in, which I am afraid are but too true ; yet however, though not now, you may in some other time, and some other point, drive it to something, I found his Christian Majesty extremely perplexed and startled at the proposition, like as if he had some suspicion that our master might waver in his resolutions about this war, though I assured him that there was not the least of this in the case.

“ The conversation, which lasted an hour, ended with great compliments on his part to our King—how sorry he was that his affairs were not in a condition to comply with whatever he could desire of him, and assurances of his lasting friendship towards him.

“ I hope I need not trouble your Lordship to make any excuse to his Majesty for my ill success in this affair ; no man living would think himself happier than I should to succeed in anything his Majesty did me the honour to employ me in ; but for this, his Majesty may remember, when he did me the honour to speak to me of it when the French Court was at Dunkerque, I took the liberty to tell him then that I was confident he would never bring it about.

“ I have showed the Conde de Molina’s memorial to Mr. le Tellier, who in his son’s absence manages the foreign affairs. He seems to be very confident, though I see no reason why, that the Spaniards will be quiet. Mr. de Pompone is upon his way, and has gained of the Swedes, to engage to assist France in case the Emperor or any Princes of the Empire take part with Holland against them.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71, Dec. 24, Paris.—“ I am sorry my last dispatch by Robing Nott gave your Lordship that ambarras you mention, but I took it for granted that this proposition was not a thing communicated to the whole five that are of the French Treaty. I will not enlarge very much now, for I intend in three days after this courier to come myself. I had come now, but that I am willing to stay a little, and see whether upon second reflections the King will say anything to me upon my proposition.

“ As for what you desired of me concerning Mr. de Lauzun’s disgrace, I am informed from those that know something of that ménage, that Madame de Montespan, with whom he has been of late upon ill terms, had discovered that he had concerted with her husband to enleve her, and carry her out of the French dominions, and then put her into his hands ; and that this was to be done upon the first absence of the King. This is not improbable, considering the command he had in the Guards ; and besides, it is discovered that for above two months before his arrest he had given maintenance to fifty reformed officers, not telling them any design, but keeping them in hand that when the war came he would procure them some employment. This is not a thing talked of much here, and therefore pray let it not go further than to his Majesty.”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, Feb. 12, Calais.—“I arrived here last night beyond my expectation, the wind proving fair to bring me from Dover. Your Lordship may remember the Duke of Buckingham’s great discontent upon the raising of the Duke of Munmouth’s regiment. At my coming hither I discovered his French maistre d’hostel newly come from Paris, I suppose sent by him to put in effect those propositions he made to the French Ambassador. I thought it my duty to his Majesty to acquaint your Lordship with this. I hope in three days to be at Paris, from whence you shall hear further.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 12,  $\frac{7}{12}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]71[-2], Feb. 21, Paris.—“I am to make my excuses that I did not write to your Lordship last post in my own hand, but I was really so ill of a bruise in my arm that I could not do it. I was two days ago at St. Germain’s, where I had an audience of the King, who expressed to me to be extremely satisfied and obliged to the King my master for all that had passed in Mr. de Seneyley’s negotiation.

“I afterwards recommended to him the gaining of the Swedes, and showed him of how much consequence it was, both to England and France, not to lose the friendship of that Crown, and that we should certainly do it, if he would not give larger orders to his Ambassador there, and larger proffers to them; that the King my master had done his part much more liberally than in his condition could have been expected from him, in remitting and nulling a very just debt of above two hundred thousand crowns. In conclusion, my Lord, the King has assured me that if money can gain them, they shall not be lost.

“The next point I entertained him upon was the business of Commerce. I told him that he was partly engaged in his word, now that this other great Treaty is finished, to give the King and nation satisfaction in those points in which we are so essentially grieved, that all the treaties in the world without it could never last. He answered to that, that he would do beyond what could be expected from him, provided it were not in things that are so essential to his own country that he could not depart from them. I told him I had many arguments which were too long to trouble his Majesty with, which I would discourse with Mr. de Pomponne more at large, to whom he has referred me. I have all those you furnished me with put into French, and tomorrow I am to go to Mr. de Pomponne on purpose, and by the next I will give your Lordship an account of either the success or the objections to what I desire.

“The preparations here go on very vigorously both by sea and land. Yesterday the Count d’Estree was with me, mightily pleased with the honour of his employment; he goes tomorrow to Rochell, there to fit out the King’s ships with all speed. The Prince of Condé is to command the army towards Germany, his son under him, and the Mareschal de Crequy under him. Tomorrow, they say, all the other officers of all kind[s] will be declared.

“They are yet here very uncertain what Spain will do, and I can give them no account till I hear from your Lordship, because I have had no letters either from my Lord Sunderland or Sir William Godolphin, believing me, I suppose, yet in England. The Spanish Ambassador is yet in a chambre garny, and a white hat, and will not be in a black one till he hears what the Queen his mistress will do.

"They are here very impatient to have the Duke of Mounmouth's Regiment over, which I hope will not be long a-raising."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 21,  $\frac{7}{2}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]72, Feb. 25, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Feb. the 8th [o.s.]; and as for the Duke of Richemond's business, which your Lordship recommends to me, I have served him in it all I can; and this morning Mr. Tartaro was with me, and tells me it is finished to his heart's desire.

"Now pray, my Lord, give me leave to recommend to you another business which concerns me nearer. I have not these eight months past been able to get from the Lords Commissionaires of the Treasury one penny of my daily entertainment; nor, since I have been Ambassador in France, have I been able to procure any money upon the King's assignments, which were so bad that I was forced to give my own bond joined with that (sic); all which now returns upon me; so that in effect I have served abroad these three years upon my own account. I beseech you, my Lord, to represent this to his Majesty. I have ordered my servant to deliver back at the Treasury Board the last quarter's orders they gave, and pray speak to the Lords to let me have it in money, or else I shall not know what to do.

"I have kept up my credit hitherto pretty well, but upon this noise of the Banquiers in England I am torn a-pieces by all that I owe money to; and besides, Lent is a-coming on, when I must be forced to buy all with ready money, there being but two or three allowed to sell meat, which serve the Hostell Dieu, and I can have no trust. Here is besides a new expense coming upon me, which is a mourning for Madame, the King of France his daughter, which cannot live they say till night. Do not be displeased with my servant for importuning you, since I do sincerely represent to you the extremity I am in.

"I did yesterday discourse at large with Mr. Pompone all those articles we are so grieved in, in our Trade. He has promised to represent all I said to him to the King, and in a few days to give me an answer.

"I will in three or four days send an express about all things relating to the Duke of Mounmouth and his Regiment; by that I shall write at large to your Lordship."

Endorsed by Lord A.: Feb. 25,  $\frac{7}{2}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, March 2, Paris.—"I was the last post at St. Germaine's, so I did not write to your Lordship. This acknowledgeth yours of Feb. the 15th [o.s.]. Since, Mr. de Villars' courier from Madrid arrived here with the news of the Queen of Spain's resolution of keeping firm to the Treaty of the Pyrenees, which she says allows her to help her allies. There has [have] been commissions given out for the raising of ten thousand foot more, and seven thousand horse, which pleaseth the sword-men mightily, for they conclude a war with Spain, and they think they can never have war enough.

"Mr. de Pompone tells me that the paper which I delivered him in to be showed his most Christian Majesty concerning our grievances in our commerce has been examined, and that Mr. Colbert, as a thing relating to his province, has transmitted it to his brother, who is charged with giving the King my master an account of it.

“The Bishop of Thoulouze was sent for in haste from the States of Languedoc, and yesterday, at his return to Court, he was welcomed with the Cardinal’s cap, upon the nomination of Poland, which surprises everybody to see him preferred to the Bishop of Laon; the Duc d’Estrees’ brother, who is Ambassador at Rome, and he himself upon the place soliciting his own promotion. In two days your Lordship shall hear from me more at large.

[P.S.] “Madame the King’s daughter died yesterday.”

Endorsed:  $\left. \begin{array}{l} 2 \text{ Mar.} \\ 20 \text{ Feb.} \end{array} \right\} 167\frac{1}{2}, \text{ Paris. Mr. Montagu. Answered 26.}$

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]72, March 7, Paris.—“I have not had an opportunity of writing to you by a safe hand since my coming hither till now, so that I will give you the best account I can how things go here. The politicians are extremely divided, as they are in all places, whether the alliance that is made with England be an advantageous one for France; and I find some that were the most violent for it at first something cooled since the news of the Spaniards assisting the Dutch, because they find, in case they should fall upon the Spaniards, which I confess I think they have a great mind to do, that we are not yet engaged by any treaty to side with them in that quarrel. But contrary though the King our master’s inclinations were to do it, they do not see how his interest could give him leave to go along with them upon that occasion.

“Most of the great people here, and the King himself, have been discoursing with me upon this matter, I suppose to see whether they could discover whether I knew what the King my master’s inclination was, in case they should find it an easier game to fall upon Flanders than Holland; to which I have never answered other ways than that I thought my master would be sorry to see the peace of Aix la Chapell broke; and I thought it better to do so because, whatever proposition of that nature they may have to make, you will understand the advantage or disadvantage of it much better than I can, and so I shall always refer them to your Lordship, who are so near the King as to be able to make what answer he shall judge most proper.

“I found at my return here, that they had been very uneasy upon the last proposition of turning the ships into money, and many here, the wisest of them, particularly Mr. de Turenne and Mr. Colbert, looked on it as a trick of ours, to find some pretext to draw off of them by degrees, rather than a thing we could desire or hope to have granted. But I have so clearly satisfied them that there was no such intention in it, and so convinced them of the sincerity of our master’s proceedings in all this affair, that now all their doubts are over. I have not omitted to value to them the business of the Banquiers, and the putting off of the Parliament, as counsels which were taken only in order to our friendship with them; and at the same time let them know that upon a stress we did reckon that his Christian Majesty must make an effort to supply us beyond what is stipulated in the Treaty, though we would call for it but in the most pressing occasions, and when it should be as necessary for them to give it as for us to receive it.

“I find, as to the business of the troops which we are dispensed from paying this year, that the next they will endeavour to put the charge upon the King our master; for I had it from one, that the King said it to, that if he liked the Duke of Monmouth’s Regiment, that he could next year have more that should cost him nothing, which I confess alarmed me very much; upon which I took an occasion, in discourse with the King, to let him know that my master had that confidence in him and his kindness, that when the Treaty was made over anew, he had given order to have that article stand as if it were in its full force, though some of the Commissioners would have had it put out; and that my opinion being asked, I was of my master's opinion, because I had been a witness of his most Christian Majesty's good disposition to do anything that might accommodate the King's affairs, and that I durst answer it would continue so if there be again the like occasion of asking it. He replied to me in very obliging terms, so that I let that discourse fall, there being no necessity at present to do anything more in that matter. I only tell your Lordship this as a caution against any design which you know is likely that may be set a-foot to the contrary. In a few days all the officers will be named.

“At present the Prince of Condé is declared to go into Germany over the Icelle with forty thousand men, and under him the Mareschal de Bellefonds and d'Humiers are to command. The Mareschal de Crequy is to command an army of forty thousand men in Flanders, to have an eye upon the Spaniards, and to supply out of his army the other armies with fresh men, as they perish. The King himself will have an army of fifty thousand men, which Monsieur is to command, and under him Mr. de Turenne; and besides this there will be the Bishop of Calogn's and Bishop of Munster's army; and everything to supply these armies are [is] ready provided with the greatest care imaginable. There is [are] also orders sent into Catalogna to be upon their guard in case the Spaniards should attempt there, which I confess is not very likely. This is the best account I can give you of the war.

“For the Cabinet, Mr. de Pomponne is in great credit with the King and great esteem with everybody else; Mr. de Colbert much better than he was three months ago, and Madame de Montespan so well with the King, that he [she?] sends for any of the Ministers and has the letters read before her.”

Endorsed: March 7, s.n.,  $\frac{7}{7}$ .

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, March 9, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Feb. the 22nd [o.s.] by Mr. Digby, who arrived here last night. I was yesterday at Versailles to make the compliments of condolence. I am just now a-going again to prepare way for Mr. Digby, and, as his Majesty commands, will give your Lordship a speedy account. The Dutch Ambassador has his audience of congé on Monday.

[P.S.] “Mr. Digby tells me the Duke of Monmouth intends to clothe his regiment with yellow. I have sent a suit just as the King here would have them clothed; he must follow that pattern, or it will be ill taken here.”

Endorsed: March 9, s.n.,  $\frac{7}{7}$ .

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, March 11, Paris.—“This day I carried Mr. Digby to Versailles, and introduced him to the King. After he had delivered his Majesty's letter, which mentioned the expedient he was pleased to propose, the King referred us to Mr. Colbert, who he said he trusted to for the management of what related to the sea affairs, and that in the afternoon we should have a meeting with him, to give our reasons on both parts, which accordingly we have done.

“As to the expedient of the French ships taking English commissions and English colours, I find it a thing they do not at all relish; and when we alleged that an English squadron had formerly done the like under France, they replied to that, that it was a thing quite out of their memory, but however, unpracticable now, because that his Christian Majesty never could suffer his captains to take commissions but from himself, and that the English commissions were given the captains from the Admiral.

“When I saw this go down so ill, I thought the best way was to insist positively upon the words of the fifth article (jouira aussy de l'honneur du pavillon, de saluts, et de toutes les autres autorités, prérogatives, et prééminences dont les Amiraux ont coutume de jouir); to which words they give this interpretation, that they mean the honours of the Amiraux of France, which, since his R. H. [the Duke of York] takes a French commission, they look upon as the same thing; and that they never do with any of their ships salute their Admiral but with guns, and never with the flag or lowering of the topsail; to which I replied that the putting in of the word pavillon was very unnecessary, since they never made use of it, but that we put it in on purpose, because there is nor never was any other way of respecting or saluting the Admirals but by the lowering of the flag.

“I will not trouble your Lordship with all that was said, for the right is so much of our side that we could not want arguments to uphold it; but we concluded that we could upon no consideration depart from it, but [by?] the forenamed expedient. Upon which Mr. Colbert told us that there should be an article drawn up to settle this affair, which should imply that their Vice-Admiral should salute our Admiral with the flag and topsail and all other salutes, as the other Vice-Admirals of our own should do; and we engage that if ever it happens that we should send a squadron to them, that our Vice-Admiral should salute their Admiral as their own Vice-Admirals do. If the article be drawn up just as these words are, we shall either sign it, or Mr. Digby bring it for the Ambassador to sign there, for I would be very loath upon my own judgment to do anything that might not be entirely to the King my master's satisfaction.

“Now I have given your Lordship an account how this business is like to go, I will tell you my opinion from whence the dispute has risen. I am confident Mr. Colbert has flattered the King his master that he would save him the point of honour, which goeth hardly down with him, of striking sail, and that to do it by the équivoque of ‘Amiraux,’ interpreting it to France because his R. H. takes a French commission, which is the most ridiculous trick and design I ever saw, and he the most ashamed to see you will not let it pass in England. For the King of France, by what I can judge, he seems mighty desirous of avoiding all disputes with our master, and therefore puts the whole matter upon Mr. Colbert. I hope it will end well; we are appointed Sunday for the answer, and this is Friday. Mr. Godolphin will entertain your Lordship with many things better than a long letter.”

Endorsed: March 11, s.n.,  $\frac{7}{2}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

1672, March 14, Paris.—“This day Mr. Digby and I attended Mr. Colbert at Versailles, who told us that he had represented to the King his master what we had said to him at our last meeting concerning the French Vice-Admirals saluting the Admiral of England with lowering the topsail and the flag, and that the King would give order to his Admiral to salute the English Admiral in the manner the King our master desired. I asked him whether there was any article to be drawn up in writing; he said his brother should have orders to do all that was requisite with his R. H. in that matter; by which I conjectured that he had a mind that his brother, who perhaps was a little in the wrong in the first starting of this dispute, should have the merit of setting it right again, and so thought it fit to press the matter no further; because your Lordship knows that the King has recommended to me in this conjuncture to show all manner of satisfaction of Mr. Colbert's proceedings. So we parted with all the expressions of kindness and friendship from both our masters. I do not doubt but the Ambassador will give his Majesty the same account of this as I do to your Lordship."

Endorsed:  $\frac{4}{14}$  Mar. 167 $\frac{1}{2}$ . R.  $\frac{6}{16}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, March 22, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of March the 7th [o.s.]. I was just come from Versailles with Mr. Digby, who had been to take his leave. So upon the receipt of your Lordship's and the King's commands therein, I returned next morning to acquaint his most Christian Majesty with the King's desire, that Mr. Digby might have the same liberty of visiting the ports and ships as was allowed to Mr. de Segnelay in England; which he most readily consented to, and immediately ordered Mr. Colbert to give him letters of recommendations to that effect; so that this morning we expect them, and in the evening, I suppose, he may be going away.

"The great news here is from the Emperor's Court of the Grande Segnior's sending to him to have passage for his army against Poland, which they say the Emperor will refuse, and that he is raising forces to hinder the Turks' passage, which will put him out of a condition of helping the Hollanders. I hear by the Spanish Ambassador that the Empress is in danger of dying since her last lying in."

Endorsed: March 22,  $\frac{7}{12}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, March 26, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of March the 11th [o.s.]. Mr. Digby went from hence to visit the French fleet on Thursday last. The news your Lordship sends me of the taking the Dutch ships will be very welcome here, and much more than it was, I believe, to Mr. Meerman. The Dutch Ambassador has taken his leave of the King, and yesterday he was to take his leave of me with great expressions of his affections to England, and sorrow for the union we are in with France. He, having heard a report of the taking of the Dutch ships, has desired a pass of me for his goods, which I have promised to give him; and in return he has promised to send me one as soon as he is in Holland, but I hope we shall be enough master of the sea not to need it. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to think of my business in the Treasury, that I may be in a condition of moving at the same time the King doth."

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]72, March 26, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of Feb. the 26th [o.s.], and your other by Mr. Blanford. I shall be very punctual in observing what you recommend to me in both of them. I make no question but what I sent your Lordship by Mr. Digby's servant will give his Majesty full satisfaction as to the business he came about.

"The Dutch Ambassador, though I writ you word some days since* [he] was to take his leave, is not yet gone, being hindered from it by some indiposition. Notwithstanding the ill answers this Court has received from Spain to their proposition of a neutrality, the Spanish Ambassador is a-preparing to make his entry, [and] talks of sending for his wife and settling here, which makes me hope that things keep quiet between them and France.

"I took the liberty to trouble your Lordship in one of my former letters concerning an order of mine from the Treasury for my entertainment from Midsummer last to Michaelmas, which is stopped and of no effect to me, by his Majesty's late resuming all those things into his own hands. My servant, that has solicited Mr. Treasurer in it, gives me little hopes, unless your Lordship does me the favour to move the King in it. If, for example sake, he shall not think fit publicly to change the order, any other way that he will please furnish me with the like sum will be as good to me; but I can no ways in the world make shift without it. I had spent the money here long before his Majesty stopped my assignments.

"I must be taking my leave here in a month, about which time the King will be going into the field, and I shall make but an ill figure, both for my master and myself, to be left in pawn; for though I may make a shift to come away without paying all my debts here, yet there are some that will be so clamorous and dishonourable that it will be impossible for me to stir till they are satisfied. I think seeing an Ambassador's debts paid when he comes away belongs to your province, like giving him instructions when he comes out; which is the reason of my taking this liberty with your Lordship."

Endorsed: March 26,  $\frac{7}{2}$  (sic).

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

16[72], April 1, Paris.—"This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of March the 12th [o.s.] by Mr. Sidney. By him also we had here the news of Sir Robert Holmes and my Lord of Ossery's engagement with the Smyrna fleet. The King told me yesterday that he was very well contented with the mutual papers exchanged concerning the flag. What else you recommend to me in your letter I shall be careful of, only, as to Dr. Colladon's business, he has the misfortune to have Madame de Tiange, Madame de Montespan's sister, for adversary. Tomorrow Mr. de Blanqueford sets out; I shall write to you more at large by him."

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]72, April 2, Paris.—"Mr. Blanquefort will give by word of mouth an account of everything in this country, and particularly in how great credit and value the King our master is here, which you ought particularly to joy in, since your Lordship's conduct and management has had so great a share in making it so. As to myself, I hope I shall come away with so good a character from this place, that I shall not have shamed my respondent, I mean yourself; and I confess I owe my being able to do so to the punctuality with which I have observed all your directions and instructions; and to conclude, my Lord, I would willingly enterrer la synagouge (sic) avec honneur, that is, come away and satisfy all my debts here either with money, and (sic) what cannot be done that way, I would do with fair words.

* See the preceding letter, which bears the same date as this one.

“I have, since my employment here, lived at much a greater rate than formerly the English Ambassadors used to do. At my coming hither I was guided by Madame, who for the King her brother’s credit ordered me to do so, and I have been forced ever since to continue the same expense; and I flatter myself that by the access and introduction it has given me with all people here, that the King my master has been much better served by it; yet your Lordship can bear me witness that I have never troubled his Majesty for anything, nor in my three years’ time had any extraordinary paid me, only for the mourning of the Queen Mother, and something for my journey into Flanders. I know how precious a thing ready money is now in England, and therefore in this conjuncture I would be as little pressing upon his Majesty as possible can be. All I desire is that he would be pleased to order my ordinary allowance to be paid me, of which one quarter’s allowance is stopped by the last resuming of the assignments.

“The King goes from hence in the beginning of May, and it would look ill in the world for me to be long after. I will part with all my goods and find money, if you think fit, with some of my friends upon my present (sic), rather than stay in pawn here. I must put off all my family, and my allowance is to end at my coming into the King’s presence, which will be in the middle of May. I hope his Majesty will continue it till Midsummer, which is not six weeks, that my family may have that time to provide for themselves.

“I hope you will not think this unreasonable, and as soon as you please to send me his Majesty’s letter of revocation, I will take my audience de congé, and upon that your Lordship may send my Lord of Sunderland his Majesty’s orders to come hither, and I will dispose of everything to make his entrance into this Court the easiest that can be, and the most for our Master’s service. In the mean time Mr. Godolphin ought to be dispatched hither before the Court removes; and if before my coming away there be anything for your Lordship’s own particular service, pray lay your commands upon me.”

R. MONTAGU TO LORD [ARLINGTON].

[16]72, April 2, Paris.—“Your Lordship is not ignorant of all the ill offices the Duke of Buckingham has endeavoured to do me, and most particularly in things relating to my employment here of accusing me to be a Spaniard, and a man ill-affected to the union that we are at present in with France. Ever since the death of Mr. de Lionne, who was not at all my friend, I have found much more kindness, both from the King and Ministers, than I did in his lifetime, and upon all occasions have had all the expressions of his Majesty’s good will here to me, and his desire to oblige me. I thought it ill manners, in the conjuncture of affairs, and the great friendship that is now between the two Kings, wholly to refuse the French King’s kindness or good offices, and yet I thought it not a thing that an honest man or a true servant of the King my master, as I profess myself to be, and I hope he will always find me, could dispense withall; the accepting of any hidden or secret obligation which I must be ashamed to own to all the world.* I have therefore rather chose his recommendation for a thing which all the world must know of, in case the King my master thinks me worthy of it. I am not at all ashamed of my pretention, but in one point, lest you should take it ill of me to pretend to a thing which you have not, and which you deserve so much better, and can never fail of when you care to ask it of your master. You know me to be so true a servant of yours, and so steady in all your interests, that I flatter myself to believe you are so kind to me as that you will rather be glad than sorry at any advantage that happens to me, especially when it may be to put me in a condition of making some return of all the obligations I owe you; at least to help in keeping my corner against your enemies and mine. But that I may not be too tedious in my own concerns, I have desired Mr. Blanqueford, who owns most particular obligations to your Lordship, and is very much my friend, to discourse this whole matter to you; for there is no advantage in the world shall ever make me hazard your Lordship's not believing and being assured that I am, with all the truth that a man can be," (&c.)

* This sentence appears to be incomplete.

Endorsed by Lord A.: Private.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, April 9, Paris.—“I should have acknowledged two or three of your Lordship's which I received together, but I have deferred it till now, to give you an account of what you recommended me therein. Sir William Lockart had a very good reception at Court; I contributed all I could to it by my good offices for the rest of his negociation. I suppose he has given you an account himself; you will also receive this post another from Mr. Digby, and I believe he himself will not be long after it, for I expect him here every day. The war has been proclaimed here against the Dutch; I have ordered the proclamation to be sent your Lordship. I only expect my letters of revocation and exchange, to take my leave. The King will be going himself in sixteen days at the furthest. I shall write to your Lordship more at large by Mr. Sidney.”

Endorsed:  $\frac{30 \text{ Mar.}}{9 \text{ Apr.}}$  1672. R.  $\frac{5}{15}$  Apr.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, April 12, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth your Lordship's of March the 28th [o.s.]. I was prepared for your Lordship's letter by one of the King my master's, which his most Christian Majesty did me the honour to show me this morning at St. Germain's, having sent to me to come to him. I saw also the Ambassador's to Mr. de Pompone, with all the reasons why the King would not grant what he was pleased to desire in my behalf; and methoughts (sic) there was never a good [reason?] but one, which was that your Lordship had not the Garter yourself, and it was writ after a manner as if the King intended it you. You know, my Lord, I have often put you in mind of getting it, and I dare say, should be gladder you had it than you yourself; and after that, I hope you will never be against my having it. In all things that concern my person or my fortune the King has showed me so little favour or good will, and yet I know not why, for I never displeased him, that I am obliged to take hold of a favourable conjuncture, or somebody's recommendation that he considers, for upon my own account I can never expect his Majesty will think I deserve anything.

[P.S.] "My servant sends me word that Mr. Treasurer tells him there is no hopes of my having that quarter's allowance paid that was stopped; if you are not pleased to find out some way of supplying me, I cannot stir from hence."

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, April 13, Paris.—"I suppose Mr. Sidney will be with you before this time, and will have given you an account of everything here. I will bring over your plate as soon as I can bring over myself, which I am impatient enough [for], for I would fain be with your Lordship. The King goes from hence certainly tomorrow fortnight, and I would willingly not be long after.

"When I was in England, I took the liberty to desire your Lordship, that if there were Commissionaires of the Prizes that I might be [one?]; you then thought that there would be none, but the Lords of the Treasury. Since, I find, in the news-book, the Duke of Buck[ingham] and others made; I leave it to your Lordship to do what you think fit in it, and beg of you to believe that if I have any share in your favour and kindness, that it may never be employed for any of my concerns but to the greatest ease and conveniency that can be to your own. At the return from my Embassy, such a distinction would do me credit in the world; and methinks it is natural and lies fair enough that since his Majesty has done me the honour to employ me or trust me in many things relating to the war, that I should have some share in the employments it produceth; for as for my office in the Wardrobe, you know with what difficulty I purchased it, to save my credit and [at] home and abroad; and yet, as the matter is ordered, it is so far from being a credit or advantage to me, that it has prejudiced me in both. If you have any other commands for me before I come away, be pleased to let me know them."

Endorsed: 13 April. R. 7.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[1672, Oct.—,] London, Thursday night.—"The occasion of my giving your Lordship this trouble is to acquaint you that the Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Turner, is dead, so that there will be a prebendery (sic) vacant, one of the prebends (sic) being usually made Dean. If your Lordship please to remember the favour you were pleased to promise me in the behalf of Mr. Coale, my chaplain in France, you will particularly oblige me in it, and prefer a person that most of the clergy have a very good esteem of. I hope, my Lord, you will not think this an unreasonable request."

Addressed: For the Right Honourable the Earl of Arlington, principal Secretary of State to His Majesty. Euston.

Endorsed: Mr. Mountague, Oct. —, 72.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[1672, Oct. 9,] London, Wednesday night.—"You have carried so many people along with you that is impossible to send you any news from the town, and if you went to be alone, I am confident you would have been that much more at Goring House than at Euston. I wish you extreme ill weather for the credit of your seat, that the King may see how dry it is, and for the advantage of your servants to bring you back quickly, among the number of which," &c.

Addressed as before. Endorsed by Lord A.: Octob. 9, 72. Mr. Montegu. Answ. 11.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]72, Dec. 20, French style, Paris.—“As I have not had the honour to hear from your Lordship since I came from England, so I have not often troubled you with any of mine, leaving all public affairs to my Lord Ambassador.* As for my own particular, I desire you will do me the favour to present my humble duty to his Majesty, and let him know, according to the leave he was pleased to give me, I go tomorrow towards Italy, where I will ramble for two or three months. In the mean time, pray, my Lord, afford me your favour and good offices”

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[1673,] Jan. 16, French style, Marseilles.—“Anything I can write to you from these parts is of so little consequence to you that I trouble you but seldom. Yet considering how easy a thing it is to be forgot by you great men, I think it is necessary sometimes to put you in mind that one is alive. I intend, my Lord, for a little while to ramble in Italy, but I will not go to Rome, lest people should think I go about business.

“I have writ to my Lord Treasurer about my concerns in the Exchequer, for which I have as yet been as little pressing, and have had as ill luck, as anybody, though you and he both are pleased to be very kind to me. Pray, my Lord, give yourself the trouble to recommend my concerns to him with some warmth. I hope I may deserve this and all your other favours to me.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: Jan. 16,  $\frac{7}{8}$ .

R. MONTAGU to LORD [ARLINGTON].

[1673,] April 15, Paris.—“I hope it may be now a favourable conjuncture for your Lordship to finish a thing for me which you have often told me you would use your uttermost endeavours to see done. It is the making my father an Earl. You know [how] long his Majesty has promised it me, and yet since that he has done the same thing for many others, and left me out. It is was (sic) also one of the last things he promised Madame, and methinks if it were but that alone, it might prevail against all the ill offices of my enemies, and the little merit I have of my own; though no man can better be a witness for me than your Lordship, how that I have not been unlucky in serving his Majesty in things that have been very advantageous and profitable to his public affairs, and in others that have concerned very nearly the honour of his own private person; and if I have ever offended him, it was only in an ambition of having a particular mark of his favour towards me, which is a fault very pardonable in any one that serves a Prince, particularly so great a one and so good a one as our master is. All my enemies give out I am disgraced; all my friends believe it, and with some reason, when they see his Majesty is not kind enough to me to make good a promise to me, when he has done the same for others that were thought on much later. It will be the most seasonable favour in the world if you can obtain it for me now, and much more because I am absent, and will draw less inconvenience upon his Majesty from others who have any such pretensions; and it will be no discredit to your Lordship, but rather a mark to the world of the consideration his Majesty has of all your good services to him, in gratifying a person that makes profession of being," &c.

* Lord Sunderland. (State Papers, Foreign, France.)

Endorsed by Lord A.: April 15, 73.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON (Secretary).

[c. 1673 ?]*—"Just now the Sergeant-at-Arms was with me with an order to go to the Tower. I am very willing to obey the King's commands, but the words of the order are drawn up, I suppose, with an intention of further inconvenience to me, for it is expressed, 'for challenging the Duke of Buckingham in the King's presence'; which interpretation to the word[s] 'Follow me,' was made by the Duke of Buck[ingham's] friends, whereas I meant nothing but the avoiding a noise in the King's presence. Therefore I desire, if it be possible, that the King may be moved to have the order altered, for you know the Duke of Buck[ingham's] chicon (?) enough, that if it be taken for granted I challenged in the King's presence, he may pursue it farther, and I do absolutely protest against any such thing."

M. DE BONNEVILLE to LORD ARLINGTON (Secretary).

[Bef. 1673 ?].—Was glad to hear from him by the Earl of Ossery. Is always ready to do what he can for those who have Lord A.'s recommendation. Believes the Earl is satisfied with his Majesty [of France]. He will give account of the state of affairs here, of which he is well informed.

French.

R. MONTAGU to LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]75, Aug. 8, London.—"I would not have been so long without congratulating my Lord Euston's changing of his name, if I had not hoped for the honour of seeing you at Euston myself. But since I am like to be prevented of that by some little affairs I have here, I hope you will believe, without the making any compliments, that no servant you have is better pleased than I am, with any advantages that happen to you or yours.

"Notwithstanding the quarrel between my Lady Duchess of Grafton and I [me], we want you extremely at Windsor. Though Sir George Cartret and my Lady are very constant there, I have not yet had any discourse with the gentleman I intended for very good reasons, which I will tell you when we meet. In the meantime I wish you may be very weary of the country."

Addressed: For the Earl of Arlington, Lord Chamberlain of his Majesty's Household—these. Euston.

Endorsed by Lord A.: Answ[ered].

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]77, Feb. 6, Paris.—“This acknowledgeth the honour of your Lordship’s with the enclosed to Mr. de Shoubergh, which I delivered him. The Duke of Grafton does mend every day in everything as much as you can wish, and really more than you could have expected. Mr. Perwich is at a stand, though he can seldom stand, for he is most eternally drunk. Therefore pray, my Lord, tell me in your next whether you are in jest or earnest concerned for him; if in earnest, I will do him all the service I can, though he can do me none. In a few days I hope to send over the Treaty Marine signed, and by that I will write to your Lordship what I cannot do by the post.”

Endorsed: Mr. Montague, Feb. 6, 7<sup>h</sup>; in answer to one from your Lordship.

R. MONTAGU TO LORD ARLINGTON.

[16]77, March 8, Paris.—“I had the honour of your Lordship’s of March the 8th (sic), with the enclosed complaint, which I have put into a memorial and lodged with Mr. le Tellier, who assures me that the armateur shall be severely punished; but in these cases, that the armateur may have no excuse, it will be very necessary that an affidavit be sent over of what was done, or else the armateur may deny the fact, and there will be no proof against him sufficient to have him punished. I beseech your Lordship to assure his R. H. [the Duke of York] I shall be careful either in this or any other commands he shall be pleased to lay upon me.”

Endorsed by Lord A.: March 8, 77. Ld. Amb. Montegu.

LORD DANBY TO [R. MONTAGU].*

1677, Dec. 24, London.—“The French Ambassador has, by a courier which arrived here yesterday, given his Majesty an account of what the K[in]g of Fr[ance] has said to your Lordship (which I find the King expected to have received as early by an express from yourself). The principal part of it is an offer of a general suspension of arms for a year or 14 months, and about which you will receive orders how to behave yourself from the Secretaries of State.

“But the King has commanded me to let you know from him, that as to the manner of acting this business with the K[in]g of France, he would not only have you do it in the most respectful way that is possible, but to assure him that our master will take the two months’ respite of arms (while he can know the minds of the Confederates as to the general suspension) as an act of pure kindness to himself, and that he will employ that time even in his Parliament so as may put neither of them upon a necessity of a rupture, which the gaining of time can only avoid.

“For your better understanding of this, you must know that upon the Ambassador’s telling the King he had received powers as well as orders to give a general suspension, the King answered he should be glad of it, but that depended not upon him, but the Confederates, whose minds must first be known upon it; and in the mean time the K[in]g of Fr[ance] might possess himself of two or three towns more in Flanders while that was doing; so that unless he would stop his arms in all the Spanish Netherlands till the King could send to all the Confederates, this would rather be a furtherance to their destruction than their relief.

* The letter begins, “My Lord,” and ends “Your Excellency’s,” &c.

“To which the Ambassador replied, that he was ready to send his Majesty’s motion to his master, but surely there must be some inducement added to his master, or else it was but asking him to stay two months till they who are not yet in a posture of defence, might then be in a good one; so that he hoped, if the Confederates would not accept the general suspension at the end of two months, the King our master would concern himself no further for them.

“To this the King answered, he could not be tied by any means, but, as I have already writ he would take it for such a favour as should oblige him to make all the kind steps in return that could possibly consist with his safety, his principal aim being but to assure himself of that.

“Having explained the grounds upon which these orders are given, I am sure you will improve them to our master’s sense much better than I can direct.

“As I was writing this, I had the honour of yours of the  $\frac{1}{7}$ th from St. Germain’s, when you had not spoken to the King; and I had a letter from a servant of my son Dunblan’s, who was not then arrived at Paris, by which I perceive that I have already great obligations to thank you for on his part. I shall ease you of that trouble sooner than I intended, having by this post sent him orders to be at Calais the  $\frac{1}{2}$ th January, where a yacht shall be ready for him, and I do beg of you that you will help to get him out of Paris, where I am afraid he will be willing to loiter if he can. Pray by the first express let me know your thoughts fully as to our public matters, and whether you believe they will suffer it to go to a breach upon the proposals made by my Lord Feversham.

[P.S.] “I hear the deer at Abscourt are intended to be sold, and if true I desire that for the storing of Wimbleton I may have them all at the price others are to give, which will do me a great favour.

“Pray let me know whether my Lady Cleaveland comes for England, and when.”

LORD DANBY to [R. MONTAGU].*

1677–8, Feb. 11, London.—“Monsieur Ruvigny, who will give you this letter, will also acquaint you what he has leave to say from our master to his, which is, that our master will do all he can to preserve the friendship betwixt the K[ing] of France and him, and to show it (though he had reason to expect that for his sake the K[ing] of France would have consented to the propositions sent by my Lord Feversham), that he will do what he can with the Pr[ince] of Orange to get him agree that Charlemont, or some other place of like consequence, may be given to the K[ing] of France in lieu of Tournay; and that if he can get the Prince to consent, he will make the peace notwithstanding the progress made by the Parliament here towards the war.

“He has power also to tell his master that our King will suffer no declaration of war to be [made] against him until he shall have an answer from the King of France upon this matter, provided that he do not besiege any place in the mean time, because our master cannot answer whether he shall be able to resist the importunity of his Parliament, in case they should see him taking of more towns. He is also to acquaint his master that the King has already sent Mr. Godolphin to the Prince of Orange, to know his mind; and that he expects the return of Mons. Ruvigny as soon as is possible.

*. The letter begins and ends like the preceding.

"This matter is transacted with such secrecy here, that the Secretaries of State themselves know nothing of it, but believe the journey of Godolphin to be to adjust the matter of Ostend betwixt us and the Spaniard; and Mons. Ruvigny has taken leave of the King as going to his regiment, without any thoughts of returning hither; so that, although his Majesty has commanded me to charge you with strict secrecy, I know there would have been no need of that caution, from the nature of the business itself. Whether this will prove any expedient of accommodation I am not at all able to guess, neither on the part of France, nor of the Prince. In the mean time we go on with all preparations for war, and the great advances of the French army makes me fear there will not be time to get the peace, though all sides seem inclined to it."

IV.—THE HOLLES MS.

This is a small quarto volume, containing copies of commissions to members of the Holles family, and of other documents, between 1614 and 1667. Many of the earlier copies appear to be in the handwriting of Sir Gervase Holles (see p. 154a of MS.), which is also found in the Holles Collections, in the Harley MS. 207.

There is a coat of arms at the beginning, similar to that in the MS. just mentioned, with many quarterings, and with this motto: Nec pudore rubens, nec timore pallens, sic fidem teneo. On the cover are another coat of arms, with the motto of the Garter, and a crest, with coronets over both. There are many blank leaves in the volume.

COMMISSION TO SIR GEORGE HOLLES.

1614, [Aug. 29–] Sept. 8, n.s., the Leaguer, by Emmerick.—Appointment by his Excellency [the Stadtholder] of Captain Sir George Holles, as Serjeant Major of the Regiment of the Commander [Colonel] Horatio Vere.

1615, Jan. [21–]31, n.s., Gravenhage.—Confirmation of the foregoing appointment by the States General of the United Netherlands. It states that Sir Edward Vere had been promoted from “the condition of Serjeant Major” to the office of Lieutenant Colonel of the same Regiment, and the States confided “upon such his (Holles’s) dexterity and experience in the point of war;” with some instructions.

Sir George took “the oath of fidelity at hand of my Lords of the Council of State of the United Netherlands,” [24 Jan.–] 3 Feb. 1615, n.s.

“Translated out of the Netherlands speech into English by Edward Pulter, gent.”

GERVASE HOLLES, Esq., J.P.

[1641,] 16 Charles I., March 19, Westminster.—Writ of dedimus potestatem to Sir Thomas Hutchinson and Robert Sutton, Esq., to take the oath of Gervase Holles, Esq., as one of the keepers of the King’s peace in co. Nottingham, according to the Act of 1 Eliz.

He was sworn before Hutchinson.

Latin.

COMMISSION by the EARL OF LINDSEY.

1642, 18 Charles I., Aug. 13, Yorke.—“Robert, Earl of Lindsey, Lord Willughby of Willughby, Beke, and Eresby, Lord Great Chamberlain of England, Knight of the most noble Order of the Garter, one of his Majesty’s most honourable Privy Council, and Lieutenant General of all his Majesty’s forces, &c. :

“To Gervas Holles, Captain.

“By the authority and power given me from our Sovereign Lord King Charles, under the great Seal of England, as Lieutenant General of his Majesty’s forces, I do constitute and appoint you Captain of one Company of one hundred Foot under the Regiment of Sir Lewis Dives, Knight, and Colonel of one thousand Foot; which Regiment, by virtue of his Majesty's Commission, is to be imprested and retained of such as will willingly and voluntarily serve for the defence of his Majesty's Royal person, the two Houses of Parliament, the Protestant Religion, the Laws of the Land, the Liberty and Propriety [property] of the Subject, and Privileges of Parliament. These are therefore to require you with all diligence and expedition to raise, levy, and bring your said Company of one hundred foot unto the Rendezvous at Nottingham, to take them into your charge, and cause them to be duly exercised in arms; commanding all inferior Officers and Soldiers of the said Company to obey you as their Captain, according to this Commission given you. And you are likewise to obey, observe, and follow such orders and directions as you shall from time to time receive from myself and the superior Officers of the said Regiment and Army, according to the discipline of War. Given under my hand and seal."

COMMISSION by the EARL OF LINDSEY.

1642, 18 Chas. I., Sept. 16, Derby.—“Robert, Earl of Lindsey [&c., as before].

“To Gervase Holles, Serjeant Major.

“By the authority [&c., as before], I do hereby constitute and appoint you Serjeant Major of one Regiment of one thousand Foot, and Captain of one Company of one hundred and forty Foot in that Regiment whereof Sir Lewis Dive (sic), Knight, is Colonel; which Regiment [&c., as before], and to be at the Rendezvous at Shrewsbury. These are therefore to require you to take into your charge the said Regiment as Serjeant Major, and to cause the same to be duly exercised in arms; commanding as well Captains as subordinate Officers of the said Regiment to obey you as their Serjeant Major; and you likewise to levy, imprest, and raise the said Company of one hundred and forty men, and to bring them to the Rendezvous aforesaid; requiring all Officers and Soldiers of the same to obey you as their Captain, according to this Commission given you. And you are likewise [&c., as before].”

ROYAL COMMISSION TO GERVASE HOLLES, Esq.

[1642,] 18 Chas. I., Dec. 7, Oxford.—“Whereas there are now at or near our City of London great forces levying and moneys raising by way of contribution and otherwise, towards the charge of raising and maintaining an Army or forces, by order of our two Houses of Parliament, not only without our consent, but contrary to several express commands published by several proclamations, letters, and otherwise; and the same forces are actually in so much forwardness as that there are great numbers both of horse and foot raised and marched into divers parts of this our Kingdom, and a General and other principal Officers declared over the same; which Army, what effects and consequences they may produce if timely care be not had, we know not; And therefore, for the defence of our royal person, the two Houses of Parliament, the Protestant Religion, the Laws of the Land, the Liberty and Propriety of the Subject, and Privileges of Parliament, we have present occasion to have in readiness divers Foot, well armed and furnished with all things necessary for such our service, to be employed for those purposes, in such sort as we under our royal hand and seal shall direct in due form of Law.

“We, trusting to your fidelity, diligence, and dexterity in such affairs, and intending to employ you for such our service, according to such directions as we shall so give unto you, Do by these presents will and require you, and do give unto you full power and authority, for us and in our name, and for our service as aforesaid, to imprest, raise, enrol, and retain one Regiment of twelve hundred Foot, so furnished and armed as aforesaid, Officers therein comprised, wheresoever you shall be able within this our Kingdom of England or Dominion of Wales, who will willingly and voluntarily serve us as aforesaid, for such wages and entertainment by the month, week, or day, or for a longer or shorter time, as you on our behalf and they shall agree. And whatsoever you shall do herein for us and on our behalf we do promise and undertake to allow of and perform; And further do give unto you full power and authority, as Colonel, them to command, arm, discipline, train, and order in warlike manner, and with all possible expedition to conduct unto our royal Standard; Willing and commanding all Officers and Soldiers which by virtue hereof you shall retain, you to obey readily, to receive and accomplish your directions, commandments, and summons in all things hereto appertaining or necessary to be done; As also all Mayors, Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, Commissioners of Array, and all other our Officers and loving Subjects to be aiding and assisting herein both unto you and to all such Officers and other persons whom you shall appoint under your hand and seal, for the furthering and advancement of this our especial service; for which these shall be to you and to them and every of them a sufficient warrant. In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents (sic)."

"WILLYS."

Stated to have been signed by the King, and to have passed under the Great Seal.

[1642,] 18 Chas. I., COMMISSION OF ARRAY IN CO. LINCOLN.

King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., To our right trusty and well-beloved Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Lindsey, Lord Great Chamberlain of England, our trusty and well-beloved Cousin and Councillor William, Earl of Northampton, our trusty and well-beloved Cousin Henry, Lord Viscount Newcastle, to our trusty and well-beloved Francis Fane, Knight of the Bath, Peregrine, Knight, Gervase Clifton, Knight and Baronet, John Monson, Knight, Baronet, Philip Tirwhit, Thomas Dalison, Baronets, Edward Massey, Knight and Baronet, John Bolles, Baronet, William Thorold, Knight and Baronet, Robert Markham, Baronet, Walter Norton, Baronet, John Brooke, Charles Cavendish, Charles Hussey, William Pellham, Charles Bolle, Henry Radley, William Widderington, William Quadring, Gervase Neville, Gervase Scrope, Charles Dallison, Robert Tredway, William Cunney, John Burwell, Knights, Gervase Holles, Colonel John Farnery, Doctor of Law, Robert Bolles, Charles Dymock, Stephen Anderson, Christopher Berisford, Gervase Elvish, Francis Halton, Thomas Harrington, Edward Tourney, Edward Middlemore, William Booth, Arthur Readhead, Nightingale Yyme, and John Oldfield, Esquires, the Sheriff of the County of Lincoln for the time being, the Mayor of Grimsby, the Alderman of Grantham, the Warden of Louth for the time being, Richard Somerby, William Kent, and William Bishopp, Aldermen of Lincoln, greeting.

"Whereas there have been lately divers and sundry forces raised, and divers armies maintained and commanded, by our subjects of this realm, not only without our consent, but contrary to our commands expressed by several proclamations and otherwise, the fomentors of which rebellion (as it is sufficiently evident to the world) have drawn and led the same against our person, given us battle, and (so far as in them lay) endeavoured to take away our life; which said forces are still rebelliously maintained against us, and other forces continually raising, and our people constrained to contribute toward the same, whereby our good subjects are charged in their estates by unusual and unlawful taxes and impositions; and to further their wicked designs the said persons have dispersed themselves into several counties, and have stirred up and raised, and do stir up and raise, discontented and ill-affected persons to join with them in their rebellion; in so much as almost the whole kingdom is at this present in an uproar, and in great danger of utter ruin and dissolution, if God out of his mercy prevent it not:

“We, therefore, taking into our consideration the charge which God and the laws of this kingdom have entrusted us with, and being tender of the good and tranquillity of our people, by maintaining the laws of the land, the Protestant religion, property of the subject, both in their persons and estates, and privileges of Parliament, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto you, or any five of you (whereof you the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Newcastle, or Henry Viscount Newarke to be one, and, in the absence of you three, you, Sir Francis Fane, Sir Peregrine Bertie, Sir John Monson, Sir Philip Tirwhitt, Sir Edward Hussey, Sir John Bolles, Sir William Thorold, Sir Robert Markham, Sir Walter Norton, Sir Charles Hussey, Sir William Pellham, Sir Charles Bolle, Sir Charles Dallison, Charles Dymocke, or Christopher Berisford to be one), full power and authority for us and in our name, and for our service, to muster, summon, call together, and command the trained Bands of our County of Lincoln and the City of Lincoln and County of the same, and to lead and conduct them from place to place, as well within the said County of Lincoln and City of Lincoln as into any other adjacent county associating with you; and also to imprest, raise, enroll, and retain, within the places aforesaid or elsewhere within the kingdom of England, such and so many regiments, troops, and companies of horse and foot as you shall think convenient; and to nominate, place, and appoint such Colonels, officers, and commanders for the governing, leading, and commanding of them as you shall think fit and convenient; and to act and covenant with all such commanders, officers, and soldiers for their wages and entertainment by the month, week, or day, or any longer or shorter time, as you and they shall agree.

“And we further require you, and hereby give unto you, or any such five of you as aforesaid, and all those whom you shall employ herein, full power and authority to command, conduct, and lead all such forces and soldiers for the suppressing of all or any rebellions, insurrections, tumults, or assemblies which now are or hereafter shall be within the said County or City of Lincoln or places aforesaid, and to fight with, kill, slay, and destroy all such as shall make opposition herein; and also to take and seize into your hands all the Magazine of powder and shot, and all other ammunition which you shall find within the said County and City of Lincoln, and to employ the same in this our service; and also to apprehend all such person or persons now in rebellion or which shall be in rebellion against us, or have relieved, or shall by contribution of money, plate, horses, or otherwise relieve, any army or company of soldiers which have been or now be in arms, or which without our consent or authority shall be in arms, or shall contribute to the raising of any horse or foot without our command and assent, to the end they may be brought to condign punishment according to law.

“And that you may the more securely perform these our commands, we will and require all our Sheriffs of our Counties of Nottingham and Rutland, and the Town of the County (sic) of Nottingham, and all other adjacent counties, which shall associate themselves with you, and all our loving subjects within the aforesaid places, to be aiding and assisting to you herein; and also that you in like manner, as occasion shall serve, and upon request by (sic) you made to them or any of them, be aiding and assisting to the said counties and places so associating, for the suppressing of all rebellions, insurrections, and unlawful assemblies as shall be or happen in the places aforesaid or any of them. In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents."

"Sub magno Sigillo."

"WILLYS."

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY.

[1642,] 18 Chas. I., Dec. 28, Oxford.—Commission by Charles I. to Mountagu Earl of Lindsey, William Earl of Newcastle, Henry Viscount Newark, Sir Robert Heath, C.J.K.B., Sir John Bankes, C.J.C.P., Sir Edward Reve, J.C.P., the Justices of Assize, Sir Francis Fane, Sir Peregrine Bertie, and many others, including Gervase Holles, Esquire, appointing them Justices to inquire concerning treasons, misprisings of treasons, rebellions, insurrections, murders, felonies, &c. in the county of Lincoln. "Under the Great Seal."

"WILLYS."

Latin, 7 pp.

APPOINTMENT by the ROYAL COMMISSIONERS in LINCOLNSHIRE.

1642[-3], 18 Chas. I., Jan. 11.—"Whereas we have received his Majesty's Commission under the great Seal of England, dated the seven and twentieth day of December last, directed to the Right Hon<sup>ble</sup> Mountague Earl of Lindsey, Lord Great Chamberlain of England, William Earl of Newcastle, Henry Lord Viscount Newarke, Sir Francis Fane, Knight of the Bath, Sir Peregrine Berty, Knight, Sir Phillip Tyrwhit, Baronet, Sir Edward Hussey, Knight and Baronet, and to divers other Knights and Gentlemen of the County of Lincoln, thereby authorising them, or any five of them thereby limited, to raise forces for the suppression of all Rebellions, tumults, and unlawful assemblies, and for the settling the peace and quiet of the said County, preservation of the Religion established, the Laws of the Land, Propriety of the Subject, and just Privileges of Parliament; And for that purpose hath given power to them, or any five of them aforesaid, to make, nominate, and appoint Colonels, Captains, and other Officers for the raising, ordering, and conducting of such forces:

"We, therefore, whose hands and seals are hereunto put and subscribed (being Commissioners in the same Commission named, and hereunto thereby authorised), Do hereby constitute and appoint you, Gervas Holles, Esquire, Colonel of one Regiment of twelve hundred Foot; the which Regiment we do hereby, by virtue of his Majesty's said Commission, give you power forthwith to retain of such as will willingly and voluntarily serve his Majesty for his pay, and for the defence of his royal person, the preservation of the Religion established, the Laws of the Land, Proprieties (sic) of the Subject, and just Privileges of Parliament; and to cause them to be duly exercised in arms.

"And we do likewise, by the authority aforesaid, give unto you full power and authority to command, conduct, and lead all such Forces and Soldiers as you are hereby authorised to raise for the suppressing of all or any Rebellions, Insurrections, tumults, or assemblies which now are, or hereafter shall be, within the said County of Lincoln, and to fight with, kill, slay, and destroy all such as shall make opposition herein; and also to take and seize into your hands for his Majesty's use and service all such Magazines, Powder, Shot, Arms, and all other Ammunition which you shall find within the said County in the hands of any person disaffected to his Majesty.

"And further hereby we command all other inferior Officers and Soldiers of your Regiment you respectively to obey as their Colonel, and you yourself diligently to execute and observe such order[s] and directions as from time to time you shall receive from us, or other our fellow Commissioners thereto by the said Commission authorised, according to occasion and the discipline of war, and in all things to govern yourself as unto your duty and place of Colonel of one Regiment of Foot doth of right appertain and belong. Given under our hands and seals."

"It is hereby declared, that whereas the said Colonel Holles hath a Commission from his Majesty for the raising and levying Forces to be brought to his Majesty's Standard: It is the intention both of the said Colonel Holles, and of all the Commissioners by whom this present Commission is signed, That if his Majesty shall (at any time hereafter) call the said Colonel Holles out of this County, or he relinquish this employment, that all the Men, Arms, and Ammunition under the command and regiment of the said Colonel Holles be left in this County for the service of the same, to be delivered over to such other Colonel as the Commissioners shall authorise for the same.

"Signed and sealed by—

Edward Heron, Vic. [Sheriff.]
Philip Tirwhit	} Baronets.
William Thorold
Charles Dalison	} Knights.
Robert Tredwey
William Quadring
Edward Tourney	} Esquires.
Francis Halton
Thomas Harington
Edward Midlemore
Christopher Berisford

ROYAL COMMISSION TO COLONEL JERVACE HOLLIS.

[1644.] 20 Chas. I., April 6, Oxford.—"Whereas a great and rebellious Army hath been raised against us under the command of Robert Devereux, late Earl of Essex, which Army hath not only several times endeavoured to take our life from us in set Battles, but the same and other Forces, raised by divers traitorous and seditious persons under the name of King and Parliament, and cherished and maintained by the disloyal and rebellious City of London and other parts of the Kingdom, have committed all the acts of outrage, robbery, and murder upon our good Subjects throughout the Kingdom, and do still continue the same, and thereby endeavour to effect their damnable design to destroy us and our posterity, and to change the present Government both of Church and State into Anarchy, Tyranny, and Confusion:

"For prevention whereof, and for the defence of our own royal person and posterity, the true reformed Protestant Religion, and the Laws of the Land, the Liberty and Propriety of our Subjects, the just Privileges of Parliament, and the defence and security of our good Town of Lynne Regis, in our County of Norfolk, and the Country adjacent, We, being resolved to settle and appoint a Governor with such number of soldiers as may at all times be of force sufficient to defend the said Town and the Inhabitants thereof, as likewise any other of our good Subjects of that our County, against all attempts that shall or may be made against it or them by the traitorous proceedings of any now or hereafter in actual Rebellion, or bearing arms against us or without our authority, and trusting in your abilities, fidelity, and experience in military affairs, do by these presents constitute and appoint you Governor and Commander in chief of all such Forces and Regiments of our Army as either already are or hereafter shall be brought into the said Town for the defence thereof; commanding all Officers and Soldiers of the same you to obey and observe as their Governor and Commander in chief, and you to command and govern them there as you shall find best for our service and the defence and security of the said Town and Country adjacent; requiring the Mayor of the said Town, and all other Officers and Inhabitants thereof, to accept, receive, and acknowledge you as Governor; as likewise the Sheriff of our said County, our Commissioners of Array, Justices of the Peace, Mayors, Bailiffs, Constables, and all other our Ministers and loving Subjects to be helping, aiding, and assisting to you in anything that may concern our service.

“And if any attempt shall be made against the said Town or the Forces therein, we do hereby authorise you, by the best ways and means you may, and with all the force you can make, to resist and oppose such attempt, and to kill and slay all such as shall rebelliously and traitorously disturb the peace and security of that our Town and Garrison therein. And finally you are from time to time to obey such orders and directions as from time to time you shall receive from ourself, our Lieutenant General, or other your superior Officer or Officers; and to do, perform, and execute all such duties as by your place of Governor and Commander in chief you ought to do and perform. And for so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant. In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents.”

“Sub magno Sigillo.”

“WILLYS.”*

GERVASE HOLLES and VENICE.

1615.—Proposals made by Gervase Holles, English Colonel, to Signor Battista Nani, Venetian Ambassador in France, for the raising of two thousand men for the service of the Venetian Republic for four years. He will conduct the regiment to Holland before 1st April next. If the war of the Venetians with the Turks is not finished at the end of the term, the said men will continue in their service. Twenty-one “conditions” are appended.

Latin, 6 pp.

GERVASE HOLLES to SIGNOR BATTISTA NANI.

1646, March 26, London.—He and other gentlemen were anxious to serve under the standard of the Venetian Republic against the common enemy of Christians, but their efforts have been abortive. The Earl of Clare has left no stone unturned, but they could not overcome the opposition of the Turkish merchants.

Latin.

---

* Cf. Addit. Charters, 2015, which is on parchment, and may be the original, but it is not signed or sealed; the seal may, however, have been lost.

NANI TO HOLLES.

1646, April 6, Paris.—Hopes for better times, when they shall be able to give effect to their good intentions for the service of Christianity and the Republic. Is well acquainted with the obstacles, and convinced that Holles and his relatives and friends have done all in their power.

Latin.

GERVASE HOLLES and FRANCE.

1646, June 3, London.—Articles and conditions accorded by Mons. de Sabran, Resident for the most Christian King in England, with the consent of that King and his mother the Queen Regent, to Mr. Gervase Holles, Colonel, now in London, for the levy of a foot Regiment of eleven hundred men, English subjects, for their Majesties' service—not including the officers. 35s. is to be paid for every soldier brought to Calais, without any other armour than a sword; in all, 1925*l.* (sic), whereof 500*l.* is to be paid in advance, in London. They are to serve the King of France against all men, except against their own country. The amounts of the stipends of all the officers are specified. Regulations are given for the conduct of the regiment in camp and in battle. The Colonel is to execute ordinary justice, as accustomed in regiments of his own nation, and to have the appointment of officers under him.

French, 9 pp. Signed by Holles and Sabran, in the presence of Josua Mainet, notary, M. Basire, Jo. Warner.

GERVASE HOLLES and FRANCE.

1646, June 3, London.—Attestation by Melchior de Sabran, Resident for the King of France in England, that Colonel Gervase Holles has been received into the service of the King and Queen Regent of France; to the intent that he may present this document and his petition to the Parliament of England, with whose consent he made an offer to the Resident for a levy of infantry, of which he has had long experience; and that he may obtain power to make such levy, as already granted by the Parliament of Spain, and as a mark of neutrality and of good will to France, which is well disposed towards the welfare and repose of this State.

French, 2 pp.

COMMISSION by CHARLES II.

1649, 1 Chas. II., June 14, Breda.

“CHARLES R.

“Charles, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., To our trusty and wellbeloved Colonel Gervase Holles, and to all others to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Know ye that we, reposing trust and confidence in the courage, conduct, experience, and good affection of you, the said Colonel Gervase Holles, Do by these presents nominate, constitute, and appoint you to be a Colonel of a Regiment of Horse and of a Regiment of Foot, to be raised and levied for our service in the County of Lincoln; Giving you hereby power and authority to raise within the said County as great a Regiment of Horse, and as great a Regiment of Foot, as you can procure for our service; and to command and order in all things both the said Regiments, with all the officers and soldiers thereof, according to the custom of war, and as belongeth to the office and duty of a Colonel: and to nominate and appoint all Officers necessary for the conduct and command of the said Regiment under you. And we further hereby give you power and authority to seize and possess to our use, by force of arms or otherways, as you shall think fit, any fortified towns, places, forts, or castles within the said County of Lincoln, now in the possession of the Rebels, or of any having authority from them; and to keep and defend the same for our service; To which end we authorise you to hold and exercise the place of Governor of any town, castle, place, or fort that you shall seize by virtue hereof, and to put such garrisons in the same as shall be necessary for our service and for the defence thereof. Provided that you do not put this our Commission in execution until you receive particular Instructions from us, to the end that you may do it seasonably, and for the greater advantage of our service; and that you obey such orders as you shall receive from time to time from us, and from such superior Officers as we shall appoint."

"Sub privato Sigillo."

CHARLES II. to SIR EDWARD WALKER, Garter King of Arms.

1649, 1 Chas. II., Oct. 4, Castle Elizabeth, Jersey.

"By the King.

"Whereas, since the beginning of the late horrid Rebellion in our Kingdom of England, we have had ample testimony of the approved fidelity and integrity of our trusty and wellbeloved Gervase Holles of Grimsby Magna, in our County of Lincoln, Esq., and particularly that he hath with much courage and ability behaved himself in the several commands he held in the Wars in the service of our most dear and Royal father, of ever blessed memory, against the Rebels in that our Kingdom; and being willing to give him some honorary reward to testify the same to posterity: Our will and pleasure therefore is, that you forthwith prepare fit for our Royal signature a Grant expressing his Descent and Family, and the services done by him, and therein to authorise him and his descendants, by way of distinction from other[s] of his Family who bear for their Arms, Ermine two piles sable, to bear for his and their proper Arms, In a field or, two piles gules. And for your so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given at our Court in the Castle Elizabeth, in our Isle of Jersey."

CHARLES II. to SIR RICHARD LANE, Keeper of the Great Seal.

1649, 1 Chas. II., Dec. 1, Castle Elizabeth.

"By the King.

"Whereas we have (in consideration of the approved fidelity and courage of our trusty and wellbeloved Subject Gervase Holles of Grimsby Magna, in the County of Lincoln, Esq.) caused a Grant to be prepared (which we have already signed) expressing his Descent and Family, and the many great and faithful services done by him in the late Wars against the bloody Rebels of England; and for a reward and testimony thereof to posterity have authorised him to vary his Arms from the rest of his Family, being Ermine two piles sable, and to bear for the future In a field gold two piles gules: Our will and pleasure therefore is, and we do hereby will and authorise you forthwith for us to affix our Great Seal to the said Grant, as if the same had been done and passed in our presence. And for so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given at our Court, at Castle Elizabeth."

CHARLES II. and COL. GERVASE HOLLES.

1649, 1 Chas. II., Dec. 2, Castle Elizabeth, Jersey.

“CHARLES R. “Instructions for our trusty and wellbeloved Colonel Gervase Holles.*

“Whereas we have caused to be delivered to you, under our Signet and sign manual, five Commissions or Warrants for receiving of such moneys as shall by our well-affected Subjects in our Counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, and Rutland be voluntarily contributed towards our present support and assistance, as well for regaining our Crown and Kingdom of England, as for freeing our Subjects there from the present tyranny and power usurped over them by their fellow Subjects; We have thought it requisite, for your better proceedings and performance of the trust and confidence we repose in you in a business of that nature, to give you these ensuing Instructions, viz.

“That you be careful to dispose of our said Commissions or Warrants to persons of known fidelity, secrecy, and industry; and that you enjoin them in our name not to acquaint any person with the same, but only such, of whom they may have good reason to expect to receive some considerable sum for our use.

“That you require them (when they receive any money from any person) not only to give a note for the receipt of so much, but to take from the said person a subscription in a book or paper of such name as the person shall think fit to set down, and will be known by, expressing the sum he hath delivered for our service.

“That you call upon each of the said Commissioners or Receivers to send you quarterly an account of what sums they have received for us, together with a list of the names which are subscribed, that thereby we may not only have a due account what sums are received, but may likewise, by the names subscribed (though it shall not be the parties' own), be in due time truly informed of their right names, that so we may, upon any good occasion, acknowledge to them or theirs, how acceptable such their reasonable assistance is to us.

“You are to fix and settle a correspondency with the persons with whom you entrust our said Warrant[s] or Commission[s] in our said several Counties, and to desire them from time to time to send you an account of their proceedings respectively, together with advertisement of such occurrences and affairs concerning the parts where they are employed, as they shall conceive fit to be communicated by you to us; and either by letters, or by calling some one or more of them over to you, to consider and advise with them what may be the most probable expedient and means to put our well-affected Subjects in those Counties in a readiness to serve us upon any occasion.

“For the better management and expedition of this service, so much importing us, we conceive it requisite that you remain in some parts in the Low Countries, which you shall find most convenient, and that you cause such moneys as shall be contributed in England to be thither transmitted over to you by bills of exchange or otherwise; and that you likewise from time to time transmit such sums as you shall receive for our use to such person as by command from us you shall be directed.

“You are from time to time to send advertisement to Secretary Nicholas touching the progress of this our business, what sums are received upon any of our said Commissions, and what else you receive or understand from the aforesaid persons, relating to our affairs, that so we may be duly acquainted how that our service proceeds, and give such further order therein as shall be requisite. For all which this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given at our Court at Castle Elizabeth, in our Isle of Jersey, the second day of December in the first year of our Reign. 1649.

* There is a rough draft of these, with corrections and additions by Secretary Nicholas, in the Egerton MS. 2542, f. 26.

“Sub privato Sigillo.”

COMMISSION to ———.

1649, 1 Chas. II., Dec. 2, Castle Elizabeth, Jersey.

“CHARLES R.

“Charles, by the grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. Being well assured of the good affections of very many of our faithful Subjects of our County of Lincoln, to serve us in their persons, when it shall be seasonable, and in the mean time with their purses and fortunes, by supplying us with moneys for our present support and better enabling us to regain our Crown and Kingdom of England, and to free them from the tyranny wherewith they are at present oppressed by their fellow Subjects, if such a way were prescribed for the doing thereof whereby they might be assured that their supplies to us should not be discovered to the ruin of them and their families, and that such supplies shall be faithfully conveyed to our hands and employed to the uses intended without diversion; And reposing especial trust and confidence in your integrity, courage, and discretion, we have made choice of you for this our so important service, and do give you power and authority for us, and in our name, in as private a manner as you can, to acquaint all or any of our good and well-affected Subjects within the Division of Lindsey, in our said County of Lincoln, singly one by one, with our present condition, and to let them know how seasonable and acceptable such supplies will now be unto us, which they shall willingly and cheerfully afford; and to receive from them such sums of money for our use as they shall severally be contented to advance, for supply of our necessities, giving a note under your hand to each person for so much as you shall receive from them respectively, and taking from each person that shall contribute a subscription, either in his own name, or in such other name as he will be known by, what sum he doth deliver you; a transcript of which note, so subscribed, you are to send to the Gentleman who delivers this to you, and with whom you are to correspond, that the same may be transmitted to us, or to such persons as we by Instruction have or shall direct. And we authorise you in our name to assure each person that shall thus contribute for this our service, that what they shall do herein, shall be so secretly managed, as that no discovery thereof shall be made to their prejudice, and so faithfully transmitted to us, and to our use (according to such Instructions as we shall give you), that their affections to us, thus expressed, shall not fail to be particularly taken notice of and gratefully remembered by us on all occasions.

“And we do hereby charge and require you faithfully and with all privacy to perform this trust on your part, assuring you and all others whom it may concern, that no person doth at present know of this Commission given to you, but the person whose name with this you shall receive, and of whose being acquainted with this business you may according to your discretion communicate with those with whom you shall treat, and one of our Privy Council, whom he will make known to you, and for whose secrecy in it we will be responsible. And for the better transaction of this business, we advise you to fix a correspondency with the said person, through whose hands we expect from you an exact account from time to time of this business. And for what you shall do herein this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given at our Court, at Castle Elizabeth, in our Isle of Jersey, the 2nd day of December in the first year of our reign. 1649.

“Sub privato Sigillo.”

“To our trusty and wellbeloved ———.”

GRANT OF ARMS to GERVASE HOLLES.

1649, 1 Chas. II., Dec. 4, Castle Elizabeth, Jersey.

“CAROLUS R.

“Carolus, Dei gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, et Hiberniæ Rex, Fidei Defensor, &c., Omnibus ad quos præsentis literæ nostræ pervenerint, salutem. Cum ex parte dilecti et fidelis nostri Geruasij Holles de Grimsby Magna, in Comitatu Lincolnæ, Armigeri, accepimus, quod ipse Geruasius sit filius et hæres Frescheville Holles, Armigeri, et Elizabethæ vxoris ejus, filiæ et hæredis Johannis Kingston de Grimsby Magna, in Comitatu Lincolnæ, Armigeri; quiquidem Frescheville Holles fuit filius et hæres Geruasij Holles, Militis, et Franciscæ vxoris ejus, filiæ Petri Frescheville de Staely, in Comitatu Derbiæ, Armigeri; et prædictus Geruasius fuit filius natu secundus Willelmi Holles, Militis, et Annæ vxoris ejus, vnus filiarum et cohæredum Johannis Denzell de Denzell, in Comitatu Cornubiæ, Seruientis ad Legem; quiquidem Willelmus Holles per prædictam Annam habuit Denzell Holles, Armigerum, filium et hæredem suum, fratrem natu majorem prædicti Geruasij, et patrem charissimi consanguinei nostri Johannis, nuper Comititis de Clare, defuncti.

“Cumque plures ex eodem illustrissimo stemmate consanguinei per filios natu minores descendentes in Armorum suorum Scutis eadem hactenus Insignia gestauerint, vizt, in solo Scuti erminei duo pila nigra depicta (Anglicè, in a feild ermine two piles sable), atque asterisci aliaque discrimina in Scutis ea de causa vulgò apposita in sobole tam numerosa non sufficiunt, quo separales affinum et agnatorum stirpes alterutro et mutuò inter se per eadem Insignia discernantur.

“Cumque prædictus Geruasius Holles in nuper[r]imis Parlamenti comitijs nascenti imprimis seditioni fortiter et diu restiterit; et postquam bellum nefarium per Rebelles excitatum fuit, prædictus Geruasius cum copijs suis benè instructis ad beatissimum Patrem nostrum continuò se contulerit, et ut Tribunus Militum siue Colonellus in Exercitu dicti Patris nostri militauerit, et in notissimis contra Rebelles proelijs de Kenton, Banbury, Branford, Newarke, Atherton, Bradford, et Newbery strenuè et feliciter demicauerit, et Castrum de Beluoir per Rebelles possessum cum Patris nostri copijs, quibus ipse præfuit, expugnauerit. Et cum tandem summa rerum Rebelles in Anglia potirentur, ipse idem Geruasius obsidionem illam Colchestriensem virtute et fortitudine obsessorum celeberriman perpessus est, et tandem per diuersas incarcerationones, exhæreditationem, amissionem bonorum, et plurima pericula in subsidium nostrum denuò se jam contulerit.

“Sciatis igitur, quod nos, omni stirpium incertitudini in Illustribus Familijs occurrere volentes, et prædictum Geruasium Holles ea fauoris et benevolentia nostræ tessera insigniri cupientes, quâ spectata ejusdem virtus magis magisque innotescat, et posteris memoria ejus et merita celebrentur, ex plenitudine potestatis nostræ Regiæ, ac ex certa scientia et mero motu nostris, dedimus et concessimus, ac per præsentem pro nobis, hæredibus, et successoribus nostris damus et concedimus, præfato Geruasio Holles, et hæredibus suis imperpetuum, Quod ipsi et eorum descendentes imposterum gestare possint et valeant imperpetuum pro

Armīs et Insignibus Familiæ suæ, In solo Scuti aurei duo pila rubricata (Anglicè, two piles gules in a field or), prout in margine præsentium [p. 160] vivis coloribus depinguntur; sub quibusquidem Insignibus in vexillis cohortis suæ ijsdem coloribus depictis prædictus Geruasius in exercitibus præcharissimi Patris nostri tam strenuè militauerit.

“Et vltcrius dedimus et concessimus, ac per præsentēs pro nobis, hæredibus, et successoribus nostris damus et concedimus, præfato Geruasio Holles et hæredibus suis, Quod ipsi et eorum descendentes Arma et Insignia prædicta sic ut præfertur descripta, cum omnibus alijs Antecessorum suorum Insignibus quaternatim, vel aliter, insculptis, secundum leges [et] consuetudines Angliæ fæciales in ea parte vsitatas, imposterum gestare possint et valeant, absque impedimento nostri, hæredum vel successorum nostrorum, vel aliorum Officiariorum vel Ministrorum nostrorum quorumcunq̄ue.

“Mandamus etiam tenore præsentium omnibus et singulis Armorum Regibus, Heraldis, et Fæcialibus nostris quibuscunq̄ue, Quod de tempore in tempus describent et explicent, vel describi et explici faciant (Anglicè, that they blazon or cause to be blazoned), Arma siue Insignia prædicti Geruasij Holles et omnium aliorum de stirpe sua oriundorum, secundum tenorem et effectum harum nostrarum Literarum Patentium. In cuius rei testimonium has Literas nostras fieri fecimus Patentes. Teste Meipso, apud Castrum Elizabeth, in Insula nostra Jersey, quarto die mensis Decembris, anno Domini Millesimo sexcentesimo quadragésimo nono, annoque regni nostri primo.

“Per ipsum Regem, manu sua propria.

“Sub Magno Sigillo.”

SAFE-CONDUCT FOR GERVASE HOLLES.

1649, Dec. 4, Jersey.—“Carolus Secundus, Dei gratia Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ, et Hiberniæ Rex, Fidei Defensor, &c., serenissimis Imperatoribus, Regibus, Principibus; reverendissimis, eelsissimis, et illustrissimis Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Ducibus, Marchionibus, Comitibus, Ordinibus, Dynastis, Thalassiarhis, eorumque vices gerentibus; itemque Exercituum Ducibus, Strategis; regionum, vrbinum, arcium, oppidorum, portuum, nauium, viarumque gubernatoribus, et præfectis; alijsue quouis Magistratûs munere fungentibus, ad quos præsentēs nostræ salui conductûs literæ peruenient, salutem.

“Quum illustris et nobilis vir, admodum nobis dilectus, Geruasius Holles rei nostræ prômouendæ gratia in Belgiani profecturus sit, omnes et singulos quorum suprâ honoris causa mentionem fecimus amicè et obdixè rogamus, vt dicto Geruasio Holles, cum famulis reliquoque impedimento ipsius, liberam, tutam, et expeditam eundi, redeundi, morandiuè vllibi locorum protestatem et facultatem concedant; eique omni ope, opera, humanitatis, amicitia, tutelæ, et protectionis officio faueant, et (si opus sit) subueniant et auxiliarentur. Nos quidem officiorum vicissitudine, tantundem postulante nostris partibus non defuturos sub chirographo sigilloque nostris hisce literis appositis pollicemur. Datum in Insula Cæsariensi, quarto die Decembris, anno Domini 1649.

“Sub priuato Sigillo.

CAROLUS R.”

CHARLES II. to COL. GERVASE HOLLES.

1650 [-1], March 11, St. Johnston's.

CHARLES R.

“Trusty and wellbeloued, we greet you well. We have received your address by Fanshawe, and return our thanks to you and your faithful countrymen for your loyal affections, endeavours, and readiness to serve us: referring you and them touching particular directions and authorities to our Right Trusty and wellbeloved Sir Edward Nicholas, our principal Secretary of State, to be by him put into a way where to receive the same, and to such others as you shall at any time understand to be commissioned from us for those parts. And so we bid you heartily farewell. From our Court at St. Johnston's, the 11th of March 1650.

“To our trusty and wellbeloved Colonel Jervais Holles.”

COMMISSION TO COL. GERVASE HOLLES.

1658[-9], 9 Chas. II., Jan. 16, Bruges.

“CHARLES R.

“Charles, by the grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defeuder of the Faith, &c., To our trusty and wellbeloved Colonel Gervase Holles, greeting. We do by these presents constitute and appoint you to be Colonel of a Regiment of Foot; giving you power and authority to levy the full number of one thousand men, and to constitute such Officers as shall be necessary for the conduct of the said Regiment, and to command and order the same in all things for our service according to the laws and customs of war; and therewith to fight, kill, and destroy all who are in arms against us; and to seize on any fort, castle, town, or city in rebellion against us, and the same to keep and defend for us and in our name. And all Officers and Soldiers of the said Regiment are to obey you as their Colonel, as you are to obey all your superior Officers. Given at our Court at Bruges, the 16th day of January 1658, in the ninth year of our reign.

“Sub privato Sigillo.”

COMMISSION TO COL. GERVASE HOLLES.

1658[-9], 9 Chas. II., Jan. 16, Bruges.

“CHARLES R.

“Charles, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., To our trusty and wellbeloved Colonel Gervase Holles, greeting. We do by these presents constitute and appoint you to be Colonel of a Regiment of Horse; giving you hereby full power and authority to levy the full number of five hundred men, besides Officers, for the said Regiment; and to command and order the same in all things for our service according to the laws and customs of war; and to constitute and appoint all such Officers as shall be necessary for the command of the said Regiment; and with the same to fight, kill, and destroy” [&c., as above].

GERVASE HOLLES, Master of Requests.

1660, June 6.—“At the Court at Whitehall, the 6th of June 1660. Present:

Lord Great Chamberlain.	Earl of Northumberland.
Earl of Southampton.	Earl of Leicester.
Earl of Norwich.	Earl of St. Albans.
Lord Viscount Say and Seale.	Lord Wentworth.
Lord Roberts.	Lord Seamor.
Lord Culpeper.	Mr. Denzill Holles.
Mr. Secretary Nicholas.	Mr. Secretary Morris.
Mr. Arthur Annesley.	Sir Anthony Ashly Cooper.

Colonel Charles Howard.

“This day Gervase Holles, Esq., was sworn one of the Masters of Requests to his Majesty in ordinary, in the presence of their Lordships, according to his Majesty’s pleasure in that behalf, signified by Sir Edward Nicholas, Knight, his Majesty’s Principal Secretary of State.

“Examinate per G. Lane.”

This is followed by the form of “The Oath of a Master of the Requests.”

GRANT TO GERVASE HOLLES.

[1661,] 12 Chas. II., 12 Jan., Westminster.—Letters patent, granting to Gervase Holles, Esq., one of the Masters of Requests, for his faithful service in many affairs and for the exercise of the said office, an annuity of 100*l.* from Lady Day last, during his life.

Latin.

CREATION OF LORD HOLLES.

[1661,] 13 Chas. II., April 20, Palace of Westminster.—Letters patent creating Denzell Holles, Esquire, Baron Holles of Ifield in co. Sussex, in tail male. Mention is made of his father Sir John Holles, who was created by James I. Baron Houghton of Houghton, in co. Notts, and afterwards Earl of Clare; and of his grandfather Denzell Holles (son of Sir William Holles of Houghton), whose wife was Eleanor, daughter of Edmund Lord Sheffield by Anne, daughter of John de Vere, fifteenth Earl of Oxford; and to the services of the family in opposing the rebellious Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland in the reign of Elizabeth, in the household of King Charles I. while Duke of York, in the army (legione) of Henry late Earl of Oxford under Horatio Lord Vere of Tilbury, in the cause of the King’s aunt, the Queen of Bohemia, and her children, in the King’s adversity, and in his Restoration. Witnesses: James Duke of York, James Duke of Ormonde, George Duke of Albemarle, Mountague Earl of Lindsey, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, Edward Earl of Manchester, and others.

Latin, 5 pp.

COMMISSIONS by the DUKE OF ALBEMARLE.

1662[–3], 14 Chas. II., Jan. 2, the Cockpit.—Commission by George Duke of Albemarle, Captain General and Commander in chief of H.M. forces, to Fretchevill Holles, Esquire, Captain. As Lord Lieutenant of Middlesex and the Borough of Southwark, appointed by the King under the Act of Parliament for ordering the forces of the kingdom, the Duke appoints Holles “Captain of a company of foot raised or to be raised in Long-acre or thereabouts in the Regiment of Westminster and the Liberty thereof, of which Colonel William Howard is Colonel.” He is to exercise the officers and soldiers.

1664, 16 Chas. II., Oct. 7, the Cockpit.—Commission by the same to the same, to be “Major to the Right Honble. William Lord Craven his Regiment in the Militia of foot raised or to be raised within the City of Westminster and the Liberties thereof,” and Captain of a company therein.”

1667, 19 Chas. II., Sept. 23, the Cockpit.—Commission by the same as Captain General, &c., to Sir Freschevill Holles to be Captain of the company of foot late under the command of Captain Busbridge, deceased, in the Duke’s own Regiment of H.M. Foot Guards.

CERTIFICATE FOR FRESCHEVILLE HOLLES.

1664, Sept. 26.—“These are to certify that Frescheville Hollis, Esq., is sworn and admitted in the place and quality of one of the Gentlemen of his Majesty’s most honourable Privy Chamber in Extraordinary. By virtue of which place he is to enjoy all rights and privileges thereto belonging. His person is not to be arrested or detained without leave first had and obtained of me; neither is he to bear any public office whatsoever, nor to be empanelled on any Inquest or Jury, nor be warned to attend at Assizes or Sessions, whereby he may pretend excuse to neglect his Majesty’s service, but is to attend the same according to his oath and duty. And all persons are required to forbear the infringing of the freedoms and privileges of the said Frescheville Hollis, as they will answer the contrary at their perils. Given under my hand and seal, this 26th day of September 1664, in the 16th year of his Majesty’s reign.

“E. MANCHESTER.”

Sketch of seal of arms.

LETTERS OF REPRISALS.

1664[–5], o.s., 17 Chas. II., Feb. 18, High Court of Admiralty, London.—Licence by James Duke of York and Albany, Earl of Ulster, Lord High Admiral, &c., to Freschevill Holles to set forth to sea the ship called the Panther Frigate, under his own command; to set upon, take, and apprehend the ships, goods, moneys, and merchandise of the subjects of the United Provinces; to bring the same into any port of England or Ireland; and, after judgment given in the Admiralty Court, to retain the same as lawful prize, &c. Begins: “Whereas my Sovereign Lord and Brother Charles the Second, . . . having taken into his royal consideration the injuries, affronts, and spoils done by the East and West India Companies, and other the subjects of the States of the United Provinces, unto and upon the ships, goods, and persons of his subjects, extending to their grievous damages, and amounting to vast sums.”

8½ pp.

COMMISSION FOR MAJOR FRESCHEVILLE HOLLES.

1665, Oct. 2, aboard the Prince.—Commission by Edward Earl of Sandwich, Admiral of the Narrow Seas and of his Majesty’s Fleet for this present Expedition, to Major Frescheville Holles, as Captain of his Majesty’s frigate the Anthelope. To obey orders from his Royal Highness, &c.

Sketch of seal of arms.

COMMISSION FOR CAPT. FRESCHEVILLE HOLLES.

1666, June 8, on board the Royal Charles.—Commission by Prince Rupert, Count Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria and Cumberland, &c., and George Duke of Albemarle, &c., Admirals of his Majesty’s Fleet for this present Expedition, to Capt. Fre[s]cheville Hollis, as Captain (or Commander) of the ship Henrietta; granted by authority from James, Duke of York and Albany, Lord High Admiral.

Sketches of two seals of arms.

COMMISSION for SIR FRESCHEVILLE HOLLES.

1666, Sept. 20, on board the Royal Charles.—Commission by Prince Rupert, Admiral of his Majesty's Fleet for this present Expedition, to Sir Fre[s]cheville Holles, Knight, as Captain of his Majesty's ship the Cambridge; granted by authority of James Duke of York, &c.

COMMISSION for SIR FRESCHEVILLE HOLLES.

1666[-7], Jan. 4, Whitehall.—Commission by James Duke of York and Albany, Earl of Ulster, Lord High Admiral, &c., to Sir Frescheville Holles, as Captain of his Majesty's ship Cambridge, for this present Expedition.

Sketch of seal of arms.

WARRANT by JAMES DUKE OF YORK, &amp;c.

1667, June 10, St. James's.—“Whereas for the good of his Majesty's service I have ordered the Fireships named in the margent (Providence, Expedition, Woodmerchant, Goldenhand, White-fortune, De Ruyter) to be fitted in the River of Thames, of all which I have thought fit to give the command unto Sir Frescheville Holles, Knight: These are therefore to will and require the respective Commanders of the said Fireships to receive, observe, and execute such orders as they shall receive from the said Sir Frescheville Holles for his Majesty's service, whereof they are not to fail. And for so doing this shall be their warrant.”

INDEX.

A

- A., Roderigo d' ; 29.
- Abbot, Archbishop. See Canterbury.
- Abel, Mr. ; 85.
- Abingdon, [Montagu Bertie, 2nd] Earl of ; 354.
- Abraham, Mr. ; 107, 122.
— his brother ; 123.
- Abscourt ; 524.
- Abthorpe. See Apethorpe.
- Acres, Mr. ; 351.
- Acte ; 488.
- Acts, etc. of Parliament :
to take away the Bishops' votes in Parliament (1642) ; 290.
against the Catholics (1722) ; 372.
bill for the Council of Divines (1642) ; 300, 303.
of General Pardon (1673) ; 319.
bill of Hostile Laws ; 246.
for adventuring for Ireland (1642) ; 293.
for a contribution or a brief to gather for Ireland (1642) ; 290.
bill for pressing men into service for Ireland ; 287.
Militia Bill (1642) ; 298.
Money Bill (1677) ; 326.
Mortmain Bill (1736) ; 389.
bill of Pluralities (1642) ; 290.
Poll Bill (1678) ; 328.
bill to exclude Popish Lords from sitting (1679) ; 331.
of pressing soldiers (1642) ; 290.
for a perpetual thanksgiving after the powder treason ; 267.
- Adderbury ; 416.
- Addison :
Capt. ; 364.
Joseph ; 364, and note.
- Admiral, Lord High ; 31, 32.
See also Howard. Nottingham. Northumberland.
- Admiralty, the ; 190, 411.
letters dated at ; 341, 392.
Secretary to. See Burchett.
Court of ; 32, 45.
— letters of reprisal dated from ; 541.
— Judge of. See Cæsar, Sir Julius.
- Aerdemborch, letter dated at ; 108.
bailiffs and sheriffs of, letter from 108.
- Aerssens (Aercens), Monsieur de : 184.
— letter from ; 10.
- Africa ; 155.
Spanish claim to islands of ; 168.
- Aghrim (Aigrim), battle of ; 350.
- Ailesbury (Alesbury) :
[Robert Bruce, 1st] Earl of ; 478.
[Thomas Bruce, 2nd] Earl of, 216.
— letter from, 216.
- Aix la Chapelle ; 157, 361, 362, 363.
letter dated at ; 363.
peace of ; 473, 513.
— the three Arbitres of ; 479.
- Albemarle :
General George Monck, q.v., 1st Duke of, Lord General, Lord Treasurer ; 314, 418 note, 461, 465, 540.
— commissions by ; 540, 541.
— Lord Lieut. of Middlesex and the Borough of Southwark ; 540.
— his regiment of Foot Guards ; 540.
Duchess of, (1661) ; 314.
[Christopher Monck, 2nd] Duke of ; 320, 329, 330, 347, 348 and note.
— letter from ; 317, 336.
— letters to ; 215, 322, 334, 336, 337, 339, 340-346, 348.
Elizabeth, Duchess. of ; 334 note, 337, 345.
— letters from ; 215, 342, 343.
— letters to ; 215, 329, 347, 348.
[William Anne Keppel], 2nd Earl of ; 219.
Lady, (1738) ; 390, 391.
- Albon, Count d' ; 495.
- Albret, Mareschal d' ; 488, 490.
- Albury :
Mr. ; 92.
Thomas ; 158.
- Aleaide, the. See Ally Ben Abdalla.
- Alcantara, camp before ; 216.
- Alderney (Aurigni), churches of ; 159.
- Alegre, Mr. d' ; 481.
- Alehouses, laws against ; 271.
- Alentejo ; 382.
- Alexander, Sir William, Secretary of Scotland ; 273.

- Algiers; 190, 468.
 French treaty with; 471.
 pirates of; 197.
- Alhagge Abdassalam; 365.
- Allen, Sir Thomas; 462, 476.
- Alleyn (Aleyn, Allen), Dr.; 315, 316.
- Alleyne, Richard, letter from; 214.
- Ally Ben Abdalla, "the Alcaide," letter to; 365.
- Almeras, Mr. d'; 428.
- Alnwick, [co. Northumberland]; 174.
- Alps, the; 362.
- Alsace (Alsatia, Elsass); 95, 98, 407.
- Alson, Mr.; 315.
- Altham (Altum), Sir James, Baron of the Exchequer; 239, 251 and note.
- Althorp (Althroppe, Althrope), [co. Northampton]; 352, 353.
 letters dated at; 237, 258.
- Alum works, measures for the support of; 196.
- Alva, Duke of; 96.
- Amama, Sixtus v., Syndic, letter from; 83.
- Ambassador:
 the Archduke's, to England; 80, 81.
 of the Elector of Brandenburg; 92, 107. of Denmark; 83, 148.
 Dutch; 133.
 — to France; 483, 484, 486, 487, 491, 493, 495, 496, 498, 509, 514, 516, 517.
 of the Electors; 83.
 of the Emperor; 9, 83, 210.
 — to France; 492, 493, 495, 496, 498.
 — to Spain; 187, 192, 206.
 English; 151.
 — to the Archdukes of Austria.
See Edmondes, Sir Thomas.
 — to the Empire; 121.
 — to France; 30, 33, 35, 86, 91, 146, 197, 518. See also Neville, Sir Henry. Edmondes, Sir Thomas. Montagu, Ralph. Sunderland, 2nd Earl of.
 — to Poland; 440.
 — to Spain; 102, 209, 211, 504.
 — to the States General; 11, 68, 79. See also Winwood, Sir Ralph. Spencer, Sir Richard.
 — to Venice. See Wotton, Sir Henry. Carleton, Sir Dudley.
 French; 5, 83, 151, 190. See also Boissise, Sieur de.
 — to England; 289, 300, 423, 424, 426, 429, 435, 437, 442, 443, 457, 458, 460, 461, 470, 473, 475-477, 481, 484, 486, 487, 496, 497, 502, 503, 507, 508, 510, 511, 523, 524. See also Rosny, Marquis de. La Banderie, Mons. de. Sabran, Melchior de. Colbert, Charles, de Croissy.
 — at Rome; 35, 471, 513. See also Breues, Mons. de.
 — to Spain; 479, 493. See also Toulouse, Bishop of.
- Ambassador—cont.
 — to the States General; 31, 68, 79, 433. See also Reffuge. Maurier, M. du. La 3<sup>e</sup> Noue, Mons. de.
 — to Sweden; 483, 497, 511.
 the Guinny, at Paris; 492. of Hamburg; 27.
 of Juliers; 130.
 Persian; 247.
 of Poland; 210.
 of Portugal, to England; 314.
 Russian, to England. See Zouzin. Witove. of Savoy. See Carron. Montou, Sieur de.
 Spanish; 47, 61, 194, 197, 427.
 — to England; 116, 182, 189. See also Gondomar.
 — to France; 200, 511, 516, 517.
 — to Rome; 155. See also Castro, Don Fr. di. of the States General; 86. See also Berek, Jehan.
 — to England, 87.
 — to France; 197, 509.
 Turkish; 428.
 — to France; 445, 449.
 Venetian, to France; 35, 200, 438, 473. See also Nani.
 — to Spain; 187, 192.
- Amboise, castle of; 200.
- America; 217, 408.
 North, the Commissioners in; 416.
- American regiment, an; 408.
- Amersham (Ammersham), [co. Bucks], parson of. See Crawly.
- Amiens; 201.
- Amsterdam; 60, 90, 122, 123, 143, 147, 156, 393.
 letters dated at; 49, 141.
 corporation of 148.
 merchants of; 43.
 the people of; 141.
- Anckwerkereck, Mr. d'; 340.
- Ancona; 155.
- Aueram, Earl of, (1682), letter from; 215.
- Ancre, Marshal d'; 198-201, 203, 204.
 — his brother; 200.
- Andaluzia, English trading to; 182, 183, 192.
- Anderson:
 Alderman; 55.
 Sir Edmund; 231 and note.
 Henry 176.
 James, letter from; 373.
 Stephen; 528.
- Anderton, Robert; 310.
- Andover. [co. Hants], letter dated at; 140.
- Andrewes, Mr., an English merchant; 493, 497.
- Androes, Doctor 281.
- Androwes, E., letter from; 225.
- Angeau, Mr. d'; 483, 497.

- Angus, Archbald, Earl of; 22.
 Anhalt, Prince of; 15, 46, 91, 94, 95, 100, 104, 135, 156, 185, 193.
 letter from; 18.
 Christian, letter from; 93.
 Anjou, Monsieur d', chevaux légers of;
 456.
 — the regiment of; 456.
 Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I.
 71, 102, 105, 110, 144, 194, 195,
 204, 246, 250, 252, 255.
 Anne, Princess, afterwards Queen:
 as Princess; 479 and note, 481.
 as Queen; 352, 353, 355, 356.
 — bill for lace for; 361.
 — Queen Anne's Bounty. See
 Queen Anne's Bounty.
 Annesley, Arthur; 539.
 Ausbach, Marquis of; 135.
 Austis, John, Garter King-at-Arms, letters from; 377, 378.
 — letters to; 377, 378
 Anthony (Antonie), Mark; 351.
 — letters to; 346, 350.
 Anthrobus, Ralph; 49.
 Antivari, Bishop of; 154.
 Antwerp; 13, 36, 64, 78, 79, 88, 122, 143, 158, 203.
 letters dated at; 65, 78, 79, 108.
 Apethorpe (Apthorp, Abthorpe), [co.
 Nhamp.]; 214, 251, 256.
 letter dated at; 318.
 Apleyard, —; 228.
 Apsley, Sir Allen; 478-480.
 Arborfeld; 82.
 Archangel; 136.
 Castle of; 136.
 Archdukes, the. See Austria.
 Archer, [Thomas, 1st] Lord, letter from;
 412.
 Arches, Dean of the; 140.
 Archipelago, the (Grecian); 133.
 Ardenboro; 67.
 Aremberg, Duke d'; 402.
 Arembergh, Count; 7.
 Areskyne, Sir James. See Erskine.
 Argyle, Marquis of, (1642); 298.
 Arlington:
 [Henry Bennet], Baron, afterwards
 Earl of, Secretary of State, afterwards Lord Chamberlain; 318, 331
note, 337, 418, 430, 431, 435, 453, 454, 463, 480.
 — letters to; 419, 441, 445, 446,
 461, 490, 495, 497, 499, 500, 506,
 522.
 — letters to, from Ralph Montagu;
 420-523 passim.
 — said to be ridiculed at Court;
 442.
 — his daughter; 474 note.
 Lady; 425, 426.
 Armagh:
 Archbishop of; 177.
 — James Usher; 300.
 titular Primate of. See Lombard.
 Armine, Lady, (d. 1675); 321.
 Arms, the College of. See College.
 98298.
 Army, the; 280, 292, 309, 400-403, 405-408, 461. of Charles I.; 532. of the Parliament. See under Parliament.
 Arqui, —; 200.
 Arran:
 James Hamilton (Hamelton), Duke of Châtellerault, Earl of; 23.
 James Hamilton (Hammelton), young Earl of; 23.
 Lord, of Hambleton, (1685); 342.
 Arras, Abbot of; 189.
 Jesuit College in; 188.
 Aray, Commission of; 528.
 Arson, near Rethel, the camp at; 192.
 Artieres, —; 408.
 Artillery, the; 401-403, 407, 412, 413.
 Artois; 108.
 Artson, Mons.; 151, 156.
 Arture, Captain; 64.
 Arundel:
 Thomas Howard, 20th Earl of; 111,
 156, 208, 242.
 — letters from; 191, 193, 201.
 Countess of, (1613-17); 141, 198.
 Aschaffenburg; 402, 403, 405.
 Ascot (Ascotte), [co. Surrey]; 44.
 Ashley:
 [Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, q.v.,
 1st] Lord, afterwards 1st Earl of Shaftesbury, q.v.; 425, 465, 484, 502.
 Lord, (1677); 325.
 Simon; 231.
 Asia, Spanish claim to the islands of;
 168.
 Askem, Mr., of Lincolnshire; 348.
 Aspeden, [co. Herts]; 334.
 letter dated at; 333.
 Asti, letters dated at; 181.
 city and contado of; 123.
 Aston, Sir Roger, letter from; 194.
 Astronomy; 365.
 Ath; 400.
 Atherton, battle of; 537.
 Athlone, in Ireland; 350.
 Atkinsonne, Ralph; 25.
 Atkyns, —; 328.
 Attkyns, Sir Robert; 317.
 Attorney General, the; 288, 289, 317.
See also Bacon, Sir Francis. Yelverton, Sir Henry. Heath. Herbert.
 Finch. Jones. Sawyer. Northey. warrant to; 310.
 Auberry, Lord, (d. 1741); 394, 395, 397.
 Anbigney, Lord, (1641); 288.
 Audley (Audelay, Awdeley), John [Touchet, 15th] Lord; 221.
 — letter from; 221.
 Audley End (Audley-In), co. Essex;
 115, 420.
 Augsburg; 35.
 letters dated at; 22, 143.
 library; 33.
 Aurich (Aurick), in East Friesland; 67,
 86.
 letters dated at; 65-67, 69, 70, 73.

- Aurigni. See Alderney.
 Austria and the Austrians; 157, 186, 194.
 Archduke of; 50, 53, 54, 68, 92, 106, 157, 158, 172, 181, 207.
 — restraint of all English cloth by; 122.
 — Philip; 78.
 — Albert, Duke of Burgundy; 11, 16, 49, 57, 61, 71, 80–82, 134.
 — Albert and Isabella (the Archdukes); 31, 42, 59, 65, 68, 74.
 — — patent of, to the maker of Venice gold; 127.
 — — treaty between, and the States General; 74, 75, 78, 79.
 — Isabella Clara Eugenia, Duke of Burgundy; 49, 71.
 — Leopold; 83, 88.
 — Ferdinand of Gratz; 111, 187.
 — — the son of; 206.
 — Maximilian; 121.
 Archdukes of; 179, 194, 195.
 — letter from; 158.
 House of; 300.
 troops of; 400, 401, 403–406.
 Avignon; 364 and note.
 Ayetone, Marquis d'; 444.
 Aylesbury, [co. Bucks]; 336.
 Ayuscombe, Arthur; 127.
- B
- B., R.; 22.
 Babynton:
 Thomas; 218.
 William; 218.
 Backwell, Alderman; 441, 483.
 Bacon:
 Edmund; 218.
 Sir Francis, Attorney General, Lord Keeper, und Lord Chancellor, afterwards Lord Vernham, q.v.: 191, 208, 251, 252, 283.
 — letter to; 205.
 Baden:
 Marquis of; 92.
 G. F. M. de; 100.
 Bagot, Capt.; 337.
 Bagshaw, Dr.; 35.
 Bainton, William; 50.
 Bakrag; 128.
 Balam, H.; 86, 98.
 Balchen, Mr.; 393.
 Baldwin (Balduinus), William, Jesuit; 91 note, 93, 104, 107, 111.
 Balfour:
 Colonel; 55.
 Mr.; 55.
 Sir William; 89.
 Ball (Balle):
 —; 329, 330.
 H.; 80.
 Mr.; 124, 346.
 Balston's House; 317.
 Banaster:
 Mrs.; 97.
 Rich.; 251.
 Ro.; 269.
 Banbury, battle of; 537.
 Bancroft, Archbishop. See Canterbury.
 Banda, island of; 169.
 Bande, Mr.; 272.
 Baugor, R[ichard Reynolds], Bishop of, letter from; 217.
 Banks or Banks:
 Sir John, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; 287, 288, 300, 306, 530.
 Sir John, of Maidstone, Governor of East India Company; 326.
 Sir Ralph; 326.
 Banton; 247.
 Baptist, Monsieur; 381.
 Barbadoes; 394.
 letter dated from; 393.
 Barbar, Louis; 219.
 Barbary, the coasts of; 79.
 Barbin, —; 200.
 Barcelona; 182, 192.
 Barford; 268.
 Bargrave, Dr. Isaac, letter from; 197.
 Barker:
 Richard; 283.
 Robert, letter from; 49.
 Barkley, Sir Maurice. See Berkeley.
 Barks, Lord. See Berkshire.
 Barnard's Castle, letter dated at; 207.
 Barnes, John, son of Joseph; 188.
 Barneveld (Berneveld, Barneville, Barnivylt), Monsieur de; 49, 55, 56, 61–63, 69, 85, 93, 94, 100, 112, 117, 125, 130, 149, 159, 190, 197.
 — letters from; 17, 18.
 Barnwell, co. Nhamp.; 214, 215, 223, 228, 260, 269, 273, 287, 317.
 Castle; 267, 270.
 — letters dated at; 238, 267.
 Barnwell, —; 283.
 Barrington; 217.
 Barrington, Lady M.; 219.
 Bartly, Lady Arethusa (Arethusay); 347.
 Barton; 308.
 Enclosures; 414.
 Barton:
 Dr. Cutts; 219.
 Rev. Jeffrey; 360.
 — letters from; 357, 368.
 Mr.; 217, 315.
 Mr., an alderman of Portsmouth; 392.
 Barty, Sir Pegrine. See Bertie.
 Barvitius, Signor, principal secretary to the Emperor; 61.
 Barwick. See Berwick.
 Barwick, Dr.; 347.
 Bashe, Mr.; 32.
 Basing, [co. Hants], the Court at; 14.
 letter dated at; 70.
 Basire, M.; 533.
 Bassets Heath, co. Staff.; 232.

- Bastide, Captain; 411.
 Bateman, [John Bateman, 2nd] Viscount; 412.
 Bath (the Bath); 144, 190, 216, 252, 253, 343, 362, 420.
 Bath, [Henry Bouchier, 5th] Earl of; 288, 290, 305.
   [John Granville, 1st] Earl of; 215.
   — letters from; 345, 350.
 Bath, the, Knights of; 382.
 Bath and Wells, Bishop of.
   James Montagu. See Montagu.
   [William Pierce]; 290.
   [Robert Creighton]; 318.
 Bathurst, [Allen, 1st] Lord; 360.
 Baudius, Dominicus; 143, 208.
   — letters from; 19, 20.
 Bavaria; 402.
   Duke of. See Rupert, Prince.
   Elector of; 358.
   treaty of; 95.
 Bavarian, the; 210, 400, 401.
 Bayonne (Bayon); 36.
 Beale:
   Mr.; 3.
   Robert; 30.
   — letter from; 31.
 Beaumont, Lord, (d. 1642); 304.
 Beauca Chicca (Bocca Castle). See Fort Lewis.
 Beaufort:
   [Henry Somerset, 1st] Duke of; 342.
   [Henry Somerset, 3rd] Duke of, letter from; 217.
   [Frances, wife of 3rd Duke], the divorced Duchess of; 412.
   [Charles Noel Somerset, 4th] Duke of; 412.
   Mr. de; 434, 436.
 Beaulieu, John de; 57.
   — letter from; 155.
 Beauvais, in France; 475.
 Beauval, in Picardy, the Curé of; 381.
 Beauveoir. See Belvoir.
 Beauvoir, Monsieur de; 46.
 Becher, William; 207.
 Bedford:
   F[rancois Russell, 2nd] Earl of, letter from; 224.
   [Edward Russell, 3rd] Earl of, letter from; 100.
   Countess of, (1590–1625); 176, 226, 261.
   [William Russell, 5th] Earl of; 294, 331.
   — letter from; 318.
   — his daughter; 347.
   Countess of, (1675); 321.
   [John Russell, 4th] Duke of; 410.
 Bedfordshire; 360.
 Bedlam Hospital; 98.
 Belgic:
   news; 106, 108.
   Provinces, the, confederated Orders of; 70, 74, 75.
   — envoys of; 67.
   truce, the; 69, 74.
 Belgium (Belgia); 538.
- Bell: —, of Hemmington; 277.
   Henry; 251.
   John; 123.
   Robert; 130.
 Bellefonds, Maréchale de; 436, 438, 496, 514.
 Belleisle, Marshal; 414.
 Belleville, Mons.; 36.
 Bellomont, Frances, Lady, letter from; 351.
 Bellyfant, —; 34.
 Beltop; 215.
 Belvoir (Beauveoir), co. Leic.: 281, 293, 331.
   Castle; 537.
 Benefield (Benefeld), [co. Nhamp.]; 224.
 Bennell, —, an innkeeper; 232.
 Bennet or Bennett (Benet, Benett):
   Edward; 90.
   Sir John; 126, 128, 140, 147, 179, 194, 203, 318.
   — letter from; 195.
   — his eldest son, Sir John; 195.
   Sir John, (brother to Lord Arlington); 442.
   Mr.; 35, 86, 98, 141.
 Bentinck, W., letters from; 336, 340.
 Beny, —, Gondomar's man; 163.
 Benyon (Binion), George; 295, 296.
 Berchen, Mons. J. V., letter from; 159.
 Berck, Jehan; 94.
 Berford, Mr. de; 444.
 Bergen (Berg)-op-Zoom; 40, 128, 355, 411.
   letter dated at; 79.
   governor of; 411.
 Berisford, Christopher; 528, 529, 531.
 Berkeley (Barkley, Berkly):
   [James Berkeley, 3rd] Earl, Vice-Admiral, letter from; 374.
   Sir Maurice; 51.
   Sir Robert; 294, and note, 301.
 Berkshire (Berks), [Thomas Howard, 1st] Earl of; 299.
 Berlin; 134, 351.
 Bermudas (Bermoothoes), the; 151.
 Berne; 38, 197.
   letter dated at; 197.
   the Republic of; 189.
   the Signory of; 186.
   Town Council of; 38.
 Bernevelt. See Barnevelt.
 Berone. See Byron.
 Berrie, Mr. de; 429.
 Berry, government of; 509.
 Bertie (Barty):
   Lady Ann; 293.
   Charles; 322, 323, 326.
   Francis; 293.
   Henry; 291, 293, 296, 297, 299.
   Montagu, afterwards Lord Willoughby of Eresby, q.v.; 250.
   Sir Peregrine; 528–530.
   — letter from; 103.
   Robert; 332, 337.
   Hon. Rob., letter from; 215.

- Bertinaud, Goyer ; 30.
 Berumana, letter dated at ; 66.
 Berwick (Barwick) - upon - Tweed ;
 197.
 Berwick :
 [James Fitzjames], Duke of ; 367,
 368.
 — letter from ; 217.
 Duchess of ; 367.
 Beton, David, Cardinal, the murder of ;
 23.
 Beverley, [co. York], letter dated at ;
 307.
 Bewdley, [co. Worcester] ; 232.
 Beziers, Mr. de ; 454.
 Bie, M. de ; 93.
 Biggin, [co. Northampton], manor of ;
 215.
 Bigraves, lordship of ; 338.
 Bilderbek (Bildebec), Mons. Remy de,
 letters from ; 64, 145, 165, 186, 195.
 Bill, John ; 39, 188.
 Billius, Jacobus ; 36.
 Bills of Exchange ; 50.
 Bilson, letter dated at ; 364.
 Binge, George ; 57.
 Bingham, Capt. ; 40.
 — his company ; 53.
 Binion. See Benyon.
 Bird, William, D.C.L. ; 130.
 Birmingham ; 412.
 Biron :
 Admiral ; 417.
 Captain, of the Coldstreams ; 417.
 M. de ; 36,
 Bishop or Bishopp :
 Capt. ; 194.
 Dr. ; 188.
 Thomas ; 23.
 William ; 528.
 Bishops, the ; 287, 289-291, 380. prerogatives of ; 64.
 Black, — ; 45.
 Blackheath, [co. Kent] ; 370.
 Blackmore, Sir R. ; 378.
 Blackwell, George, notary, letters to ; 32, 35.
 Bland :
 —, a standard of ; 404.
 Mr. ; 351.
 Blandford, Marquis of, (1725) ; 375.
 Blankenbergh ; 500.
 Blanqueforth (Blunford), Mr. ; 516, 517,
 519.
 Blewitt, Mr. ; 389.
 Blois (Bloy) ; 6, 308.
 treaty of ; 23.
 Blomer :
 Mr. ; 217.
 Rev. T. ; 219.
 Blondel, Captain ; 85.
 Blondell, Lieutenant ; 128.
 Blondeville, Captain ; 83.
 Blundell :
 Fra., letter from ; 216.
 Geo., letter from ; 97.
 Bodens, — ; 386.
 Bodley :
 Sir Josias ; 190, 194.
 Lady, wife of Sir Thomas ; 44, 47, 51,
 53, 54, 86, 124, 125.
 Sir Thomas ; 50, 52, 54, 59, 85-87, 91,
 101, 106, 107, 123-126, 128, 138, 141.
 — letters from ; 44, 47, 53.
 — his [step-]daughter, wife of Ralph Winwood, q.v.
 Bodskaye (Boschay) ; 61.
 Bogan, Richard ; 35.
 Bohemia and the Bohemians ; 98, 111,
 148, 157, 195, 255, 258.
 the Crown of ; 210.
 King of ; 206.
 Queen of ; 258, 540.
 Boissise (Boisise, Bossize) :
 Monsieur ; 35, 36, 98.
 — letter from ; 3.
 Jehan de Thumeri, Sieur de ; 94.
 Bolingbroke (Bullingbroke), [Henry St.
 John], Viscount ; 360, 362.
 Bolle, Sir Charles ; 528, 529.
 Bolles :
 Sir John ; 528, 529.
 Robert ; 528.
 Bolton, 3rd Duke of ; 219.
 Bond :
 Mr., brother of Sir Thomas ; 489, 490.
 Sir Thomas ; 333, 444, 448, 455, 483,
 497-499.
 Bonhier, Urban ; 30.
 Bonnevil, M. de, letter from ; 522.
 Books :
Andriantes ; 33.
Apollonius' Conicks ; 110.
Apothegmata Ebræorum ac Arabum ; 109.
 of Arminius ; 203.
 Dr. Bishop's Of the lawfulness of murdering Princes ; 188.
 Chrysostom's Commentaries ; 33, 35,
 36, 123.
Corona Regia ; 188, 193.
Jacobeados ; 188.
 Kilburne's Survey of Kent ; 378.
 Knowles' (Gilbert) *Materia Medica
 Botanica* ; 372.
Leicester's Commonwealth ; 287.
Margaritæ ; 33.
 Parsons' *Memoriale pro reformatione
 Ecclesie Anglicanæ, etc.* ; 121.
 Philpot's Villare Cantianum ; 378.
Queres ; 193.
 Raleigh's (Sir Walter) History of the World ; 386.
 Wilson's (Arthur) *History of King
 James* ; 211.
 Bool (?) (Root), Ghodefroy, letter from ;
 108.
 Boonda. See Bunda.
 Booth, William ; 528.
 Bocthyby, Mr., a merchant of London ;
 197.
 Boreh, le Sr. de ; 134.
 Borde :
 Madame de ; 479.
 Sir Steven, his daughter ; 248.

- Bordeaux (Bourdeaux); 154, 394.
 Bordes, Monsieur de, letter to; 37.
 Boreel, J., letter from; 129.
 Borghese, Cardinal; 152.
 Borlase, —; 93.
 Boscawen family, the; 414.
 Bossize, M. See Boissise.
 Bosville, Mr.; 69.
 Bothvell, Captain; 89.
 Botler, Major-General; 309.
 Bottesford (Botesford), living of; 327.
 Boughton (Boton, Boutton), co. Northampton; 213-215, 221, 224, 233, 236, 244, 258, 259, 261, 264, 266, 268, 269, 274, 275, 278, 279, 281-283, 285, 287, 288, 291, 292, 299, 303, 305-307, 309, 318, 319, 323, 326, 328, 330, 337, 349, 357, 366.
 — letters dated at; 221, 230, 231, 249, 251, 258, 262, 274, 276, 277, 279, 284, 285, 292, 295, 300, 364.
 Boughton:
 Mr.; 25, 364.
 Richard; 25.
 Bouillon:
 Henry de la Tour, Count of Turenne, Duke of, Marshal; 37-39, 41, 42, 47, 61, 95, 106, 108, 184, 186, 190, 202, 203.
 — letters from; 30, 36, 39, 41-43, 45, 52, 57, 184.
 — letter to; 37.
 Duchess of; 201.
 Monsieur de; 46.
 Boulay, Count of; 207.
 Boule, Mr.; 347.
 Boulogne (Bullen); 92.
 treaty of; 30.
 Bourbon; 476, 497, 498.
 waters; 328, 469.
 Bours, the; 106.
 Bourgesse, Mr.; 85.
 Bourley, Lord, his natural sister; 87.
 Bourne; 390.
 Bourne, Tom; 391.
 Bourron, Sieur de; 37, 39.
 Bowdler, Mr.; 86.
 Bowles, Mr.; 344.
 Boyle:
 Lord, (1617); 193.
 Master; 363.
 Brabant; 40, 108, 355. states of, letter to; 51.
 villages in, no religious innovations to be made in; 79.
 Brabant, Mr.; 340.
 Brackenborough (Brakenborows), [co. Linc.], letter dated at; 223.
 Brackley, [co. Nhamp.]; 216.
 Brackley:
 Thomas Egerton, q.v., Baron Ellesmere, q.v., 1st Viscount; 251.
 John Egerton, 2nd Viscount, created Earl of Bridgwater, q.v.; 191 and note.
 Lord, (1673); 319.
 Lord John; 341.
 Bradford, battle of; 537.
 Bradshaigh, Sir Roger; 215.
 Bragg (Brag), —, his regiment of foot; 401, 410.
 Brampton; 323.
 Bramsell; 261.
 Brandenburg; 150, 155.
 Elector of; 14, 22, note, 92, 101, 108-110, 112, 130, 134, 137, 144, 146-148, 150, 151, 459.
 — letter from; 15.
 — letter to; 15.
 — John Sigismund, letter from; 107.
 Marquis of; 89, 92, 94, 158.
 — letter from; 16.
 — Ernest, letters from; 82, 86, 107.
 — Joachim Ernst; 100.
 — George William, letter from; 140.
 Duke of, an agent from; 496.
 Branford. See Brentford.
 Branxholm (Branhelme), in Scotland; 105 note.
 letters dated at; 89.
 Brauncepath, manor of, co. Durham; 84.
 Breadalbane, Earl of, (1688), letter from; 215.
 Breda; 40, 260, 412.
 letters dated at; 101, 533.
 the Declaration of; 312.
 Brederode, Mons.; 186.
 Bremen (Breme); 95.
 bishop of; 124.
 Brentford (Branford), co. Middx., battle of; 537.
 Brereton, Lord, (1670); 492.
 Breslau (Presslaw), in Silesia (Selecya); 255.
 Bressins, —; 33.
 Brest; 25, 46.
 Brett (Bret):
 Captain; 126, 144, 334, 335.
 Lady Katharine; 335.
 Bretta; 91.
 Breues, Mons. de; 155.
 Brickett, —; 228.
 Bridges. See Bruges.
 Bridges, John; 2.
 Bridgman (Brigeman), Lord Keeper; 318, 423, 424.
 — his son; 423.
 Bridgwater:
 John Egerton, Viscount Brackley, q.v., 1st Earl of; 191 note.
 [John Egerton, 2nd] Earl of; 320.
 [Scroop Egerton, 1st] Duke of; 377.
 — letters from; 216.
 Briges, Ro.; 121, 122.
 Brigstock (Brigstok), [co. Nhamp.], letter dated at; 221.
 bailiwick; 213.
 parks; 236.
 Brill (Briel, Brile, Bryel, Bryll), the; 40, 85, 86, 93, 116, 122, 248.
 letter dated at; 63.
 Lord Governor of; 123, 129.
 — letter from; 99.
 the presidial troops in; 24.
 surrender of, by James I.; 177

- Brinton, [co. Norf.]; 287.
 Brisack; 407.
 Bristol (Bristoue), deanery of; 202.
 Bristol:
   [John Digby, 1st] Earl of; 210, 286-288, 295.
   — letter from; 263.
   [George Digby, 2nd] Earl of; 314.
 Brittain, Dr.; 316.
 Brittany; 46.
   government of; 457.
 Brog, Sir William; 89.
 Broglio, Marshal; 400, 402.
 Brokas, William; 221.
 Bromley, (? Justice); 239.
 Brownrigg, Dr.; 300.
 Brooke or Brook:
   [Robert Greville, 2nd] Lord; 278, 306.
   Sir Calisthenes; 86.
   — widow and children of; 100.
   Sir John; 101, 528.
   George; 44.
   Lady, (d. 1682); 338.
   Tho.; 269.
   Sir Tho., letter to; 274.
 Brookes:
   —; 278.
   —, of Okeley; 309.
 Broughton, M.; 219.
 Broughty (Bruchtey), castle of, in Scotland; 23.
 Brown or Browne:
   Daniel; 372.
   Captain; 231.
   John; 312.
   Mr., of Kettering; 309.
   Thomas; 232.
   William, letter from; 53.
   Sir William; 90.
 Brownerigg, Matthew; 56.
 Bruce, Charles, Lord, letter from; 389.
 Brudenell:
   Sir Edmund, letters from; 224.
   Francis, eldest son of Robert; 310.
   James, (afterwards Earl of Cardigan), letter from; 216.
   Hon. James, letters from; 216, 391.
   [John, son of 4th Earl of Cardigan], Lord; 392, 414.
   John, letters from; 213, 227.
   Lt.-Col.; 409, 414.
   Lady Mary (née Montagu, q.v., afterwards Countess of Cardigan, q.v.), letter to; 379.
   Mrs.; 391.
   Ned; 216.
   Robert, son of Thomas, 1st Baron; 310, 313.
   Sir Thomas, afterwards 1st Baron Brudenell, of Stanton Wivill; 239, 241, 244, 245.
   — letter from; 215.
   — letter to; 310.
   — the case of, 313, 314.
   — Charles I.'s grant of the Earldom of Cardigan to, warrant for, 310.
 Bruershaven, in the Netherlands; 40.
- Bruerton, Lord, (1680); 333.
 Bruges (Bridges, Brudges); 56, 500.
   commissions of Charles II. dated at; 539.
 Bruile (? Brühl, near Cologne); 142.
 Bruncard, Mrs.; 432.
 Brunswick:
   Duke of:
     (Henry Julius); 65.
     (Frederic Ulric); 144, 145, 197, 260.
   wars of; 61.
 Brussels; 12, 13, 17-22, 36, 52, 54, 61, 64, 98, 153, 155, 159, 216, 359, 366, 377 note, 405, 460.
   letters dated at; 57, 88, 127, 157, 158, 189, 194, 372, 407.
   Prior of; 184.
 Bruynne van Aelst, Jan de; 36.
 Brymegeham fair; 221.
 Buccleugh (Buckelngth):
   [Sir Walter Scott, 1st] Lord Scott of; 88, 105.
   — letters from; 89.
   — his regiment; 89.
   [Walter Scott, 2nd] Lord Scott of; 132.
   [Henry Scott, 3rd] Duke of; 417.
   — letter to; 416.
   Duchess of, (wife of 3rd Duke); 417.
 Buckhurst:
   T., [Lord], afterwards 1st Earl of Dorset, q.v.; 227-229, 236.
   Lord, (1669); 433-438, 440.
 Buckingham (Buckingham):
   George Villiers, q.v., 1st Earl, afterwards 1st Duke of; 181, 195, 196, 212 note, 251, 253, 257, 260, 262, 266, 268.
   — letters from; 189, 192, 202.
   [George Villiers, 2nd] Duke of; 419-424, 426, 435, 437, 438, 441, 442, 481-490, 495, 500, 502, 503, 505-507, 509, 511, 518, 522.
   — a musician of. See Smith.
   — a servant of. See Douty.
   Duchess of, (1670), her footman; 490.
 Buckinghamshire; 142.
   knights of the shire for; 341 and note.
   Lord Lieutenant of; 306.
 Budiani, Captain, Captain of the Poor Knights; 414.
 Buison, — Du; 379.
 Bull:
   —; 221.
   Dr., organist to James I.; 157.
   Mr.; 80.
   Thomas; 43, 45, 50.
   — letters from; 43, 139.
 Bullen. See Boulogne.
 Bullingbroke. See Bolingbroke.
 Bunda (Boonda, Bundo), in Africa; 385, 388.
 Buquet, Robert; 36.
 Burald, —, cousin of William Montagu; 339.
 Burard, Capt.; 397.
 Burburch; 122.

- Burchett, J., Secretary to the Admiralty; 219.
- Burdon:
T.; 218.
William; 220.
- Burgarede, Mr.; 400.
- Burghley; 215.
letter dated at; 23.
- Burghley:
William Cecil, Lord; 227-230, 234, 250 (Old Burleigh).
— letter from; 226.
Thomas Cecil, Lord, afterwards Earl of Exeter q.v.; 234.
— letters from; 235, 236.
- Burgundy (Borgoignonne), infantry of; 178.
Duke of. See Austria, Archduke of.
- Burlacy, Mr.; 62.
- Burlamachi, Mons.; 176.
- Burlas, Sir John; 111.
- Burley; 313.
- Burley on the Hill; 251.
- Burneby, Anne; 222.
- Burnet, Bishop; 386.
- Burnett, Dr.; 342.
- Burrough, Captain; 78.
- Burton, Richard; 219.
- Burton Pinsent, [co. Somerset]; 415
- Burwell, Sir John; 528.
- Busbridge, Captain; 540.
- Bushey Park, [co. Middlesex], letter dated at; 357.
- Bussy, Mr. le M. de; 219.
- Butler, Sir Nicholas; 347.
- Butterman, Michael, letter from; 67.
- Button, Thomas; 231.
- Buwinckhausen (Buinckhausen, Buvinckhusen), Monsieur de. See Walmerode.
- Buzenval, Monsieur; 46.
- Bynsley, William, letter from; 223.
- Byron (Berone):
John, letter from; 214.
Sir John; 290.
- C
- C., J., letter from; 362.
- Cabinet, the; 342.
- Cadiz (Cadix); 184, 192, 358, 393, 476.
- Cadogan:
Lieut.-Gen. William, afterwards 1st Lord; 363.
— letter from; 359.
[Charles, 2nd] Lord; 384, 393.
- Caen; 36.
town and castle of; 200.
- Cæsar, Sir Julius; 60, 208, 243.
- Caffyn, Mr.; 410.
- Caithness, Duchess of, (1688), birth of a niece of; 215.
- Calais (Callice); 4, 36, 458, 460, 489, 492, 504, 524, 533.
letters dated at; 220, 500, 511.
council of; 220.
Lord Deputy of; 220.
- Calamy (Calamy), Mr.; 293, 307.
- Caldwell, William. See Colwall.
- Calley, Mr.; 64.
- Calogn. See Cologne.
- Calvert:
Cecil; 63.
George; 63, 91.
— letter from; 63.
Mr.; 50, 190.
— letters from; 9.
Samuel; 64, 107, 112, 126.
— letters from; 54, 62.
- Cambridge; 258.
letter dated at; 224.
- Cambridgeshire; 239, 264.
- Cambridge University; 107, 146.
Corpus Christi College, president of. See Porcy, Dr.
King's College, letter dated at; 416.
— Chapel; 416.
Sydney Sussex College, letter dated at; 308.
Trinity College, letter dated at; 339.
— Master of. See Montagu, John.
- Camina, in Portugal; 102.
- Campbell (Campbels):
Capt.; 396.
Col.; 399.
General; 404, 406.
- Campten (Camden):
[Edward Noel, 2nd] Lord; 276, 279, 284.
[Baptist Noel, 3rd] Lord; 322, 324, 338.
- Canary Isles, the; 79.
- Canbury, letter dated at; 268.
- Candale, Conte de; 260.
- Candia; 434, 436, 438, 442, 445.
French forces sent to; 427, 428.
- Candish, Lord, (1669); 429, 430.
- Canterbury; 290, 409.
Archbishop of: Commissioners for the execution of all jurisdiction of; 211.
— Jo[hn Whitgift]; 227, 229.
— Richard Bancroft; 52, 125.
— — letters from; 10, 51, 56.
— George Abbot; 105, 117, 123, 140, 147, 165, 183, 193, 195, 198, 205, 243, 274.
— — letters from; 20, 21, 211.
— — letters to; 162, 205.
— — Vicar General to. See Ridley.
— William Laud (previously Bishop of London, q.v.); 294 and note.
Archbishopric of; 329.
Archdeacon of. See Kingsley.
Dean of. See Turner.
- Canterus, Theodorus, letter from; 65.
- Capel (Capele, Capell):
Lady Anne; 348.
[Arthur Capel, 1st] Lord; 302, 306, Ned; 315 note, 319.

- Cape of Good Hope (Bonæ Spei) ; 169.
 Cape Roxant ; 393.
 Cape St. Vincent ; 393.
 Capper, John ; 232.
 Car. See Carr.
 Cardigan :
   [Robert Brudenell, 2nd] Earl of ;
     318, 330.
   [George Brudenell, 3rd] Earl of ; 367,
     382.
   — letters from ; 216.
   — letter to ; 380.
   Countess of, (wife of 3rd Earl) ;
     380.
   — letters from ; 216, 393.
   — letter to ; 216.
   George Brudenell, 4th Earl of, afterwards Duke of Montagu, q.v. ; 218.
   — letters from ; 414, 415.
   — letters to ; 216, 389-393, 412,
     413.
   Lady Mary Brudenell, q.v., Countess
     of ; 382, 384, 390-392, 413, 414.
   Earldom of. See Brudenell, Thomas,
     1st Baron.
 Cardonnell, Mr. ; 355.
 Carelton, Mr. See Carleton, Sir Dudley.
 Carew :
   Lord, (1611) ; 105.
   — ; 28.
   Sir George, letters from ; 10, 12,
     13.
 Carey or Cary (Cary) :
   Sir Edward, his eldest son ; 28.
   Lady Elizabeth ; 338.
   Sir Henry, comptroller ; 252.
   Sir Robert ; 195.
 Carrier, B., letter from ; 142.
 Carisbrooke (Cairsbrooke), letter dated at ; 310.
   Castle ; 313.
 Carleton (Carelton) :
   Sir Dudley ; 1, 91, 92, 102, 112 note,
     118, 159.
   — letters from ; 8, 9, 13, 17-22,
     111, 120, 152, 190, 197, 198, 202,
     207.
   — letters to ; 184, 202, 203.
   — his clerk ; 181, 187.
   Mr. ; 39, 54.
 Carlile, Lady, (1649) ; 311.
 Carlisle, garrison of ; 409.
 Carlisle :
   [James Hay, 1st] Earl of ; 258.
   [Charles Howard, (previously styled Viscount Morpeth, q.v.), 3rd] Earl of ; 373.
   [Henry Howard], (previously styled Viscount Morpeth, q.v.) 4th Earl
     of ; 219.
   [Frederick Howard, 5th] Earl of ;
     416 note.
 Carmarthen :
   Lord, (1778) ; 417.
   Lady, (1778) ; 417.
 Carnarvon, Lord, (1642) ; 302.
 Carolina ; 408.
 Caroline of Anspach, Queen of George II. : as Princess of Wales, letter from ;
     362.
   as Queen ; 386.
   — letter to ; 379.
 Caron, Sir Noel de (Monsieur) ; 49-51,
   60, 81, 110, 125, 130, 139, 149, 173,
   176, 177.
   — letters from ; 9, 159.
 Carpenter, Lord, (1747), his family ; 412.
   Mr. ; 87.
 Carr (Car, Carre) :
   Sir Edward, of Lincolnshire ; 116,
     118, 248.
   Lady, (wife of Sir Edward) ; 116.
   John, consul in Majorca ; 184.
   Sir Robert ; 247, 322.
   Thomas, an innkeeper ; 232.
 Carrew, Doctor ; 145.
 Carron, Secretary, Ambassador of Savoy ; 38.
 Carteret :
   [John], Lord ; 219, 374, 406, 407.
   — letter from ; 373.
   Sir George ; 522.
 Carthage ; 396, 398.
   letter dated at ; 396.
   expedition, the ; 411.
 Cartwright, Ric. ; 269.
 Carty, Helena ; 134.
 Casaubou (Causabona) :
   I[saac], letter from ; 45.
   M. ; 33-36, 39, 110, 145, 151.
 Casenove, Louis Alexandre ; 381.
 Cassel, in Hesse, letter dated at ; 144.
 Castell, M., letter from ; 215.
 Castell Roderigo, Marquis de ; 144.
 Castelvetro, Jacomo ; 120.
 Castile :
   Constable of ; 454, 476, 477.
   President of ; 172.
 Castle, Mrs. ; 247.
 Castle Elizabeth, in Jersey, commissions, etc., of Charles II., dated at ; 534-538.
 Castlemaine, [Barbara Palmer, afterwards
   Duchess of Cleveland, q.v.], Lady ;
   422.
 Castleton, Lord, (1681), his son ; 333.
 Castres ; 47.
   letters dated at ; 37.
   Reformed Church of, Ministers and Elders of ; 37.
 Castro, Don Fr. di ; 153.
 Castro Marin, in Portugal ; 102.
 Catalonia (Catalogna, Catalogne) ; 466, 514.
 Catharine of Braganza, Q. of Charles II. ;
   331, 337, 388, 347, 348, 351, 420,
   425, 426, 431 note, 433, 434, 473,
   486, 497.
 Cathaya. See China.
 Cathcart, Lord, (d. 1741) ; 393, 396, 398.
   — letter from ; 217.
 Catholic League, the ; 95.
 Catholics. See Roman Catholics.
 Catillon, Madame ; 350.
 Caunier, Madame de ; 94.

- Cave, Richard, letter to; 223.
- Cavendish:
 [William], Lord (afterwards 2nd Duke of Devonshire); 347, 348.
 Lady C.; 392.
 Sir Charles; 191, 528.
 Admiral Philip; 392.
- Cawley, William; 63.
- Cayworth, Mr.; 287.
- Cecé, Dr., letter from; 381.
- Cecil (Ceecyll, Cecill, Ceeyll):
 General Sir Edward; 57, 73, 87, 89, 93, 98, 116, 118, 129, 142, 156, 207.
 — letters from; 99, 115, 149.
 — letter to; 89.
 John; 26.
 Mr.; 35, 238.
 Sir Robert, Secretary of State. See Salisbury, Earl of.
 Sir Thomas; 213, 226, 231.
 — letter from; 228.
- Cesar, Mr. de; 498.
- Chaleot (Challeot). in France; 438, 439, 445.
 the monastery at; 496.
- Chalouo (? Chalons sur Marne); 505.
- Chamberlain, Lord; 195, 297.
 — See also St. John Lord. Suffolk, Earl of. Pembroke, Earl of. Essex, 3rd Earl of. Manchester, 2nd Earl of. Arlington, Earl of. the Lord Great. See Lindsey, Earls of.
- Chamberlaine (Chamberlain):
 Captain John, his company; 26.
 Mr.; 106.
 — letters from; 8-10, 16, 17, 19-21.
- Chambers, Mr.; 240.
- Chambery; 2, 30.
- Chambor (Chambour), in France; 434, 436, 442, 483, 485, 486.
- Chambrelau, Sr. David, of Rouen; 36.
- Champagne, in France; 509.
- Chancellor, the Lord; 123, 165, 173, 220, 313, 319, 325, 329, 380, 437.
 — See also Ellesmere. Brackley. Bacon. Clarendon.
- Chancery, Court of; 208, 274.
- Chandler, Mr.; 88.
- Chandos (Shandos):
 [George Bruges, 6th] Lord; 125, 279, 280.
 Lady, (1649); 311.
- Channel Islands, the; 159.
- Chapel Royal, the Dean of. See Montagu, James.
- Chapman:
 Dr.; 142.
 John, of Chichester; 45.
- Chardin, Sir John, Bart., letters from, 383, 385.
- Charenton, in France; 465.
- Charlemont; 524.
- Charleroi (Charlyroi); 400.
- Charles, Prince of Wales, afterwards Charles I. King:
 as Duke of York. See York.
 as Prince of Wales; 163, 164, 179, 207, 211, 256, 258.
 — the Privy Chamber of; 195.
 as Charles I.; 260, 261, 265-267, 270, 273, 274, 277, 280-306, 309, 313, 537.
 — letters from; 263, 264, 307, 310.
 — arms, etc., for the service of, 280, 282, 283.
 — his army. See under Army.
 — commissions by, (1642-1644); 527, 528, 530, 531.
 — Declaration and Proclamation of; 281.
 — entertained by the City of London; 286.
 — Lieutenant-General of his forces. See Lindsey, 1st Earl of.
 — offers to serve with horse; 277-279, 284, 285.
- Charles II., King; 312-315, 321, 323-326, 331, 334, 335, 337, 340, 342, 418-420, 423-446, 448-461, 464-475, 477, 478, 481-483, 485-491, 493-501, 504-525.
 letters from; 314, 339, 418, 480.
 proposed letter from, to Lewis XIV., 508.
 letters to; 438, 453, 463, 501.
 his aunt. See Bohemia, Queen of.
 commissions, etc., by, (1649-1659); 533-539.
 his engagement to furnish foot soldiers to Lewis XIV.; 501-503. his sister. See Orleans, Henrietta Maria, Duchess of. warrants of, for a voluntary contribution from well-affected subjects (1649); 535, 536.
- Charles, Prince of Lorraine. See Lorraine.
- Charles Fort, in Barbadoes; 394.
- Charter, Mrs, nurse to the Duchess of Orleans; 434.
- Chartres, Duke of; 363.
- Chasteau Porsien, the camp of; 187.
- Châtellerault (Chattelerault), Duke of. See Arran, Earl of.
- Chaulnes, Monsieur de; 455, 456.
- Chaworth:
 Grace, Lady, letter from; 215.
 Jop. (?), Lady, letter from, 215.
- Chelsea (Chelsey); 219, 304, 377, 378.
 letters dated at; 31, 32, 304.
- Chepstow (Cheptstow); 327.
- Chester; 230.
 Sessions; 333.
 Bishop of:
 Cuthbert Scott; 22.
 [John Wilkins]; 318.
 West, port of; 235.
- Chesterfield, [Philip Dormer Stanhope, 4th] Earl of, letter from; 379.
- Chetwin, D.; 202.
- Cheyne, Ch., Lord; 219.

- Chichester, Dr. King, Bishop of; 291.
 Chichester, Lord, (1608); 76.
 Chiehley, Sir Thomas; 332.
 Chichly, Mr.; 315.
 Chief Baron, Lord; 239.
   See also Lyster. Tanfield. Montagu, William.
 Chief Justice, Lord; 239, 248, 250, 276, 288.
   See also Montagu, Sir Edward. Wray. Popham. Coke. Montagu, Sir Henry. Heath. Hale.
 Chiffins (Chiffings):
   Mr.; 457.
   Mrs.; 435, 440.
 Chili, kingdom of; 147.
 Chillingworth, Mr.; 288.
 China (Cathaya); 169.
   cotton and porcelain from; 146.
 Chippenham, [co. Wilts], the electors of, letter to; 350.
 Chiswick (Chisweeke), [co. Midd.]; 52.
 Cholmeley:
   Sir Henry; 300.
   Sir Hugh; 300.
 Cholmoudeley, 3rd Earl of; 219.
 Chudleigh, Thomas, letter from; 506.
 Church, Peirey; 432.
 Churchill (Curchill):
   John Churchill, Lord (afterwards Duke of Marlborough, q.v.); 342, 343.
   Charles; 219.
   Lady Mary (afterwards Duchess of Montagu, q.v.); 354 (Miss Mary).
   — letters to; 351, 352.
   — her sister Harriet; 351.
 Church of England, the; 389.
   doctrine contrary to; 205.
 Cinque Ports, Lord Warden of. See Cobham. Howard.
 Ciphers; 104-106, 123-125, 129, 140, 183, 184, 433, 492.
 Claiton, Mr.; 318.
 Clanrickard, Earl of, (1732); 217.
 Clapham, James; 196.
 Clare:
   Sir John Holles, 1st Baron Houghton, afterwards 1st Earl of Clare; 537, 540.
   [John Holles, 2nd] Earl of; 305, 532.
   Grace, Countess of, letter from; 347.
   — her son Pelham; 348.
 Clare, —; 86.
 Clarendon:
   [Edward Hyde, 1st] Earl of, Lord Chancellor; 314, 424, 432, 437, 475, 497, 498.
   [Henry Hyde, 4th] Earl of; 219.
 Charges (Clergis):
   Dr.; 308.
   Sir Thomas, letters from; 320, 322, 336.
 Clark:
   Dr.; 386.
   George, his son; 323.
 Claston; 287.
 Clathenwell. See under London, Clerkewell.
 Claypooll, James, letter from; 233.
 Clayton, General; 403, 404.
 Clearke, Captain; 308.
 Cleford, Lord. See Clifford.
 Clendon; 224.
 Clerck, John; 89.
 Clergy, the; 276.
 Clermont:
   Lord, (1669); 424.
   Abbé; 454.
 Clervant, Monsieur de; 46.
 Cleveland, [Barbara Palmar], (previously Lady Castlemaine, q.v.), Duchess of; 331, 524.
   — letter from; 333.
 Cleves (Cleve); 85, 87-89, 94, 98, 106, 108, 115, 130, 241.
   letter dated at; 107.
   nobles and towns of; 158.
   service, the, men for; 87.
   Duchy of; 82, 129.
   — succession to; 14.
   Duke of; 130.
   — letter from; 8.
   Duchess of, letter from; 8.
   and Juliers, William, Duke of; 22.
 Clifford (Cleford):
   Henry [Clifford], Lord, (afterwards fifth Earl of Cumberland); 214.
   Sir Thomas, afterwards 1st Lord, Treasurer of the Household (Mr. Treasurer), afterwards Lord Treasurer; 420, 435, 465, 520.
   [Hugh Clifford, 2nd] Lord; 347.
   Sir Coniers; 28. style, dignity, or place of; 214.
 Clifton, Sir Jervase; 528.
 Clinton, Lord, (1725); 375.
 Closet, the, prelate of; 140.
 Cloth:
   answer to questions touching the present stand in the market; 176.
   statute to reform abuses in making of; 33.
   trade, the; 178.
 Clyf, lordship of, co. Nhamp.; 219.
 Clyff, —; 223.
 Cnogher, Derby, a friar of St. Francis; 155.
 Coale, Mr., chaplain to Ralph Montagu in France; 520.
 Cobham:
   W[illiam Brooke, 7th Lord]; 227, 229, 230.
   [Henry Brooke, 8th] Lord; 44.
   — letters from, 189.
   [Sir Richard Temple, 1st] Viscount; 219.
   Lord William, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports; 48.
 Cobham Hall, [co. Kent], letter dated at; 193.
 Coblentz (Coblins); 401, 405.
 Cockayne, —; 406.
 Cockneys, near Howden, co. York; 175.
 Cockran, Col., his regiment; 399.

- Coets, C. ; 43.
- Cokayne :
 Captain John ; 54.
 William ; 54.
- Coke (Cooke) :
 Lady Anne ; 329.
 Sir Edward, L.C.J. Common Pleas ;
 123 note, 162, 205, 206, 239, 241,
 244, 245, 248, 250.
 — letters from ; 173.
 — letter to ; 162.
 — his daughter Frances : 205, 206.
 — — proposals for the marriage
 of ; 181.
 Elizabeth, wife of Sir Edward : 205,
 206, 248.
See also Cooke.
- Colbert :
 Charles, de Croissy, French Ambassador to England ; 422 and
note, 426, 428, 432, 438, 446, 451-
 453, 490, 491, 497, 512, 516.
 Jean Batisse, Minister of Marine to Lewis XIV. ; 421 and note, 422,
 423, 426, 427, 429, 444, 458, 460,
 470, 477, 478, 489, 496, 499, 505,
 512-516.
 Mr. (?) ; 430, 434, 483, 487, 501.
- Colchester, [co. Essex] ; 309, 344 inhabitants of ; 340.
 siege of ; 537.
- Coleman, Mr. ; 328.
- Colerane, Lord, (d. 1667) ; 316.
- Colladon, Dr. ; 517.
- College of Arms or Heralds' Office, the ;
 376.
 letters dated at ; 377.
- Collins, Arthur, letters from ; 374-376.
- Collyweston, co. Nhampp. ; 227.
 his Majesty's house at ; 236.
- Colnbrook (Collbrook), co. Bucks ;
 414.
- Cologne (Calogn, Coleyne, Colin, Cou-loigne) ; 93, 94, 130, 134, 142, 333.
 letters dated at ; 64, 94, 135, 142,
 145, 165, 186, 195.
 Bishop of, his army ; 514.
 burgomaster ; 121.
 doctors of ; 165.
 Elector of ; 95, 150.
 Prior of ; 184.
- Colombes (Colombe), near Paris ; 434, 438,
 439, 445, 455, 477.
- Colwall (Caldwell), William ; 86, 88.
 — letters from ; 150-152, 156, 158,
 159.
- Combe, — ; 319.
- Commartin, Mr. ; 497.
- Common Pleas, Chief Justice of. See Bankes.
 Justice of. See Reve.
- Commons, House of, (the Lower House) ;
 64, 102, 260, 261, 286-291, 294-
 306, 308, 325, 326.
 letter to ; 8.
 Serjeant of ; 296.
 Speaker of. See Lenthall.
- Compton :
 [William, 2nd] Lord ; 87, 98.
 Lady ; 87, 181.
 Lady, formerly Elmes, (d. 1677) ;
 326.
 Sir Francis ; 315.
- Comptroller, Mr. ; 195.
See also Edmondess, Sir Thomas.
 Vane, Sir H.
- Condé ; 458, 479.
 Prince of ; 91, 200, 201, 500, 501,
 511, 514.
 — letter from ; 17.
 — his son ; 511.
 Princess of ; 16, 201.
- Conflans, the Plaine de ; 429.
- Coningsby, Lady, (1747) ; 412.
- Coningsmarke, Count, Königsmark.
- Connaught (Conway), in Ireland ; 291. province of ; 29, 75.
- Connok, Captain ; 65.
- Conre, Florence, of Connagh, Archbishop of Tomont ; 155.
- Constable, Mr. ; 327.
- Constantinople ; 33.
 letter dated at ; 133.
- Conti (Conty) :
 Prince of ; 52, 407.
 Princess of ; 200.
- Conway. See Connaught.
- Conway (Conaway, Coneway) :
 Sir Edward, 113, 123, 124.
 Lady, (1685-6) ; 344, 345.
- Conyers, Sir Jo. ; 290.
- Cook, Captain John, letter from ; 202.
- Cooke :
 —, son-in-law of 1st Earl of Danby ;
 326, 328.
 —, Sir Francis Vere's man ; 106.
 Sir John, Secretary of State ;
 278.
 — letter to ; 277.
 Tom ; 335.
 William ; 188.
See also Coke.
- Cooper :
 Sir Anthony Ashley, afterwards Lord
 Ashley, q.v. ; 539.
 Capt. ; 394.
 Grey, Secretary to the Treasury,
 letter from ; 415.
- Cope :
 Sir Anthony ; 90.
 General ; 404, 406.
 Sir Walter ; 103, 104.
- Copenhagen, letter dated at ; 107.
- Copin, Sir George ; 104.
- Copley, — ; 73
- Corbridge, [co. Nthld.] ; 174.
- Corby, hundred of, co. Nhampp. ; 275.
- Cordon, Madame ; 417.
- Corfe, co. Dorset ; 326.
- Corn : measures for the stay of the dearth of grain ; 229.
 method of easing the poor in the price of ; 272.
 scarcity of bread-corn ; 275.

- Cornbury, [Henry Hyde, afterwards 2nd Earl of Clarendon], Lord; 315, 475.
- Cornelis, Richard; 45.
- Cornwallis (Cornwaleys, Cornwellis):
[Charles, 3rd] Lord; 348.
Sir Charles; 1, 52.
— letter from; 165.
- Corunna (the Groyne); 125.
- Cotes, Capt.; 394.
- Cottingham:
Lord, (1627); 266.
Francis, afterwards Sir Francis; 1, 180, 184, 206, 258, 270.
— letters from; 182–185, 187, 191, 192, 194.
— letters to; 182, 185.
- Cotton (Cotun):
George; 192.
Henry; 219.
John; 246, 247.
Katharine; 219.
Richard; 218.
Sir Robert; 162, 269.
— letter from; 246.
— his relation of his conference with Gondomar; 163, 164.
Thomas, of Connington, Hunts; 219.
- Coulston, Thomas, of London; 180.
- Council, the. See Privy Council, the.
Board, the. See under Privy Council.
- Court, the; 43–45, 47, 50, 53, 62, 106, 109, 116, 127, 234, 236, 243, 247, 253, 256, 258, 261, 285, 415, 437, 440, 443, 459, 475, 487, 497.
See also Greenwich. Hampton Court. Oatlands. Richmond. Royston. Thefford. Westminster.
letters dated at; 223, 226, 237, 241, 243, 252, 305.
a masque at; 321.
- Courtin, Mr. de; 501.
- Court Leet, a; 316.
- Courtney, Mr.; 350.
- Covenanters, the; 282.
- Coventry, [co. Warw.]; 306.
- Coventry:
[Thomas Coventry, 2nd] Lord; 302, 306.
Solicitor General; 251.
Lord Keeper; 264, 278.
— letter from; 268.
Lord John, a picture of; 364, 365.
Mistress; 319.
Mr.; 295.
Secretary; 319.
Sir William; 346, 438, 464, 465.
— his brother; 420.
- Covil:
—; 231.
Robert; 232.
- Cowell, Dr.; 98.
- Coxe, Jo.; 251.
- Cradocke, Jo.; 176.
- Crag, M., letter from; 347.
— her niece Widdrington; 347.
- Craggs:
James, Postmaster General, letter from; 366.
James, Secretary of State; 366 note.
- Cranborne, Sir Robert Cecil, Viscount.
See Salisbury, Earl of.
- Cranfield, L., Lord, Lord Treasurer, letter from; 256.
— letter to; 256.
- Craven, William, 1st Viscount, Colonel of the Westminster Regiment; 540.
- Crawford, Lord, (1743); 404.
- Crawly, Dr., parson of Amersham; 327.
- Creke Nation, the, in America; 408.
- Crequy (Crequi):
Mareschal de (Mr. de); 485, 486, 490, 511, 514.
Mons.; 219.
- Crew:
Mr.; 304.
Sir Thomas; 315.
- Crewe, Thomas, Lord, (1651), letter from; 215.
- Crispe, —; 85.
- Croates; 407.
- Croft, Mr.; 348.
- Croftes:
Capt. Fr.; 40.
Capt. William; 40.
- Crofts, [William Crofts] Lord; 420, 425, 475.
- Cromwell (Crumwell):
[Henry Cromwell, 2nd], Lord; 225.
Oliver. See Protector.
Sir Oliver; 266.
- Crooke:
Sir John; 214.
(? Justice); 239.
- Crow, Mr.; 266.
- Crowther, Arthur; 310.
- Crumpe, James; 256.
- Cuba, letters dated from; 397, 398.
- Cuff, Sir H.; 28.
- Cullen:
Lord, (1678); 328.
Richard; 25.
- Culpeper, Lord, (1660); 539.
- Cumberland:
[Francis Clifford, 4th] Earl of; 63, 173, 214.
[Henry Clifford, 5th] Earl of; 294.
Rupert, Duke of. See Rupert, Prince.
William (son of George II.), Duke of; 403, 404 (the Duke), 405, 409, 413.
— letter from; 413.
- Cunney, Sir William; 528.
- Curchill. See Churchill.
- Customs, the; 179, 312.
charges against the farmers of; 178.
- Cyprus; 156.

D

- Dadikie, Mr.; 219.
- Dale:
Capt.; 40, 55, 56.
Sir Thomas; 73, 103.
- Dalkeith; 416, 417.
- Dalkeith:
Earl of, (1723); 373.
[Caroline], Lady, married to the Hon. Charles Townshend; 416 and note.
— her children; 416.
[Charles William Henry Scott] (son of 3rd Duke of Buccleugh). Earl of; 417.
- Dallison (Dalison):
Sir Charles; 528, 529, 531.
Sir Thomas; 528.
- Dalmatia; 154, 442.
- Dalrimple, Sir David; 363.
- Damer, —; 391.
- Danby:
Sir Thomas Osborne, previously Viscount Latimer, q.v., 1st Earl of, Lord Treasurer; 322, 323, 326, 418.
— letters from; 323, 523, 524.
— his daughter Latymer. See Latimer, Lady.
Lady, wife of 1st Earl of; 324, 328.
Sir Tho.; 295.
- Danckard, Mr.; 81.
- Daniel:
—; 43.
Don Hugo. See O'Donnell.
- Danube, the river; 402.
- Danvers, Jo.; 269.
- D'Arcourt, Duke. See Harcourt.
- Darcy:
Mr.; 344.
Philip; 347.
- Darell, Marmaduke; 228.
- Darlington, [co. Durham]; 216.
- Darmstadt; 401.
- Darneton; 175.
- Dartford, minister of; 207.
- Dartmouth, [co. Devon], corporation of; 341.
- Dartmouth, [George Legge, 1st] Lord, letter from; 343.
- Dathenes, Pierre; 129.
— letters from; 147, 157.
- Daventry, [co. Nhampt.]; 415.
- Davies, John; 45.
- Davis, John; 99.
- Davyes, Sir John; 53.
- Day, Doctor; 25.
- Deal Castle; 80.
- Dean:
—; 399.
Mr. (? the dean of Westminster); 80.
- Deene (? county); 390.
co. Northampton; 216.
— letters dated at; 224, 227.
- Deepe. See Dieppe.
- Deering, Sir Edward; 295, 296.
- Deincourt (Dencourt), [Sir Francis Leke], Lord; 284.
- De la Croix, —; 36.
- De la Warr, [John West, 7th] Baron, afterwards 1st Earl; 219, 405.
- Delft (Delphe); 15, 40, 43, 149, 270.
letter dated at; 63.
- Dellamore, Lord, (1685); 344.
- Delmenhurst, Earl of, (1612); 114.
- Denbigh:
[Sir William Feilding, 1st] Earl of; 268.
Basil [Feilding, 2nd] Earl of, letter from; 215.
[William Feilding, 3rd] Earl of; 337.
— letter from; 215.
- Denham, Sir John; 195.
- Denmark; 113, 115, 144, 216, 241, 327.
a young gentleman of; 172.
King of:
— Christian IV.; 64, 65, 89, 138, 141, 146, 147, 183, 209, 246 note.
— letter from; 107.
— a son of; 270.
— his queen (the Queen Mother); 64.
— (Fredrick IV.); 356.
Prince of; 339.
- Denny, [Edward], Lord; 113.
- Denzell, John, of Denzell, co. Cornw., Sergeant-at-Law, his daughter Anne, wife of Sir William Holles. See Holles.
- Depaw, —, the surgeon; 403.
- Derby, commission dated at; 527.
- Derby:
Lady, (1605); 55.
Alice, Countess Dowager of, (1617).
letter from; 214.
Lady, (1625); 261.
- Derbyshire; 267.
Lord Lieutenant of; 293.
- Derham, Dr. William, letter from; 365.
- Derry; 392.
Bishop of; 391.
Dean of. See Stone.
- Desaguliers, Dr.; 373.
- Desmaretz, Mons., letter from; 204.
- Desmond, —; 29.
- Desmond's war; 154.
- Destin, Monsieur. See Estaing.
- Dettingen, battle of; 402-406.
- Deuxpoints, Duc de; 17.
- Deventer, camp near, letter dated at; 57.
- Devon, Lord. See Devonshire.
- Devonshire; 101, 239, 345.
deputy lieutenants of; 345.
militia of; 345.
- Devonshire (Devon):
[Charles Blount], Earl of; 63.
— letters from; 56, 58.
[William Cavendish, 3rd] Earl of; 301, 306.
Lady, (1685); 340.
[William Cavendish, 2nd] Duke of, letter from; 217.
[William Cavendish, 3rd] Duke of; 392.

- Dewhurst :
 Sir Bernard ; 207.
 Captain ; 111.
- Dickenson, John ; 102, 108, 109, 122, 128, 134, 143, 156, 159.
 — letters from ; 9, 16-20, 92, 93, 98, 106, 108-112, 114, 116, 117, 119, 122, 123, 126-128, 134, 137, 139, 142, 145, 147, 150.
- Dieppe (Deepe, Diep) ; 6, 32, 35, 486.
- Dieren, letter dated at ; 340.
- Digby (Dygb) :
 Lord, (1641-2) ; 286, 288, 291.
 Lord, (1679) ; 330.
 George ; 172.
 Sir John ; 102, 141, 171, 172, 183, 192, 206.
 — letters from ; 21, 172.
 Mr. ; 514-516, 519.
 — his servant ; 517.
- Digges, — ; 384.
- Dike, Richard ; 208.
- Dillenberg ; 40.
- Dillingham, Mr. ; 280, 283, 289.
- Dilston, near Hexham ; 174, 175.
- Dingley, — ; 415.
- Dissenters ; 321.
See also Nonconformists.
- Diston, —, the poet ; 125, 128.
- Ditton ; 273, 274, 320, 333, 383, 386, 414.
 letters dated at ; 279, 415.
- Ditton Park, co. Bucks ; 414.
- Dives (Dive, Dyves), Sir Lewis ; 291.
 — his regiment ; 526, 527.
- Dixon :
 Mr. ; 280, 327.
 Robin ; 240.
- Dixwell, W., letter from ; 364.
- Doderidge, (? Justice) ; 239.
- Dodington, George, letter from ; 217.
- Doil, Captain ; 54.
- Dolben (Dalbin), Mr. ; 325.
- Dombe, principality of ; 491.
- Donati, Jacobus ; 141.
- Dordrecht (Dordreth) ; 26.
 letters dated at ; 52, 59.
- Dorset :
 [Thomas Sackville, previously Lord Buckhurst, q.v. 1st] Earl of, Lord Treasurer ; 44, 52, 237.
 Anne, Countess Dowager of : 214.
 — letter from ; 214.
 [Edward Sackville, 4th] Earl of ; 287, 305.
 Charles [Sackville, 6th] Earl of ; 341 and note, 342.
 [Lionel Cranfield Sackville, 1st] Duke of ; 375, 390, 391, 414.
- Dortmund, treaty of ; 14.
- Douay ; 188, 189.
 English seminary at ; 49, 188.
- Douglas :
 Col., of the Guards ; 404.
 Dr. ; 314.
- Douty, —, a servant of 2nd Duke of Buckingham ; 489, 490.
- Dover ; 31, 32, 260, 261, 390, 460, 471-473, 511.
 Governor of ; 341.
 — See also Stroud.
 the harbour of, 9.
 jurats of ; 57, 341.
 mayor of ; 341.
 — See also Binge, George.
 postmaster at ; 421.
 sea fight off ; 57.
- Dover :
 [Henry Carey, 1st] Earl of ; 302.
 [John Carey, 2nd] Earl of ; 327.
- Down, Dean of ; 392.
- Downe, William, of London ; 180.
- Downe and Connor, Francis Hutchinson, Bishop of ; 392 note.
- Downs, the ; 34, 390.
- Drake :
 Elizabeth (née Montagu, q.v.), her daughter ; 325.
 Sir Francis ; 167.
 Montagu ; 336.
 Sir William ; 317, 321, 327, 333.
 William ; 319 note.
- Draper, — ; 35.
- Drasing ; 61.
- Drayton ; 213.
- Drogheda (Tredaugh) ; 295.
- Drope, Thomas ; 25.
- Drury :
 Sir Robert ; 57, 114.
 Sir William ; 23.
- Drusius, Joh., letter from ; 109.
- Dublin ; 28.
 letters dated at ; 190, 193, 374.
 Phoenix Park, letters dated at ; 392.
- Dublin, Archbishop of ; 155.
- Duc, Mr. le. See Le Duc.
- Ducie, Mr. ; 86, 98.
- Duckett, Frank ; 317.
- Dudley (Dudly) :
 Lord, (1633) ; 274.
 Ann ; 239.
 Ed. ; 287.
 Sir Matthew ; 359, 360.
 Thomas ; 223.
 Will ; 287.
 Sir William ; 316.
- Duel, a ; 99.
- Dugdale, Sir William ; 337.
 — letter from ; 339.
- Duglass, Col. ; 396.
- Dunblane (Dunblan), [Peregrine Osborne, afterwards 2nd Duke of Leeds], Viscount ; 524.
- Dummer, Edmond ; 388.
- Dunbar, Capt. ; 408.
- Dunchurch, [co. Warw.] ; 415.
- Duncombe (Duncom, Duucomb) :
 Edward ; 60.
 Mr. ; 333.
 Sir John ; 331, 465.
 Mr., secretary to Lord Roos ; 183.
- Dundee ; 23.
- Dunfermline ; 32.
- Dungarvan, Lord, (1641) ; 288.
- Dunhaige. See Hague, the.

Dunington, letter dated at; 195.
 Dunkirk (Dunkerque); 59, 60, 122, 197,
 209, 432, 473, 488, 499, 500, 504,
 509, 510.
 Dunmore, Lord, (1743); 404.
 Dunn, Sir Daniel; 130.
 Dunstable, [co. Bedf.]; 232.
 Dupré, Marie Magdalene; 219.
 Duras (Durass), Lord, (1677); 325. Afterwards Earl of Feversham, q.v.
 Duren (?); 92.
 Durham, county of, fee-farm rents late the Earl of Somerset's in; 84.
 Durham (Duresme), Bishop of; 175, 211.
 Dusseldorp; 15-20, 85, 91, 98, 159.
 letters dated at; 82, 83, 86, 94, 95, 98,
 106, 108-112, 114, 116, 117, 119,
 122, 123, 126-128, 133, 134, 137,
 139, 141, 150.
 Dutch, the. See Holland.
 Dutton:
 Mr.; 306.
 Sir Thomas; 58, 65, 79, 96, 115.
 Daysborch; 159.
 Dyer, Sir R.; 116.
 Dygby. See Digby.
 Dymock (Dymocke):
 Charles; 528, 529.
 Sir Charles; 319.
 Dyves. See Dives.

E

Earnley, Sir John; 331.
 Easlington. See under London, Islington.
 Eastbury; 217.
 East Friesland; 84, 96, 147.
 Catharine, Countess Dowager of, letter from; 66.
 Count of; 56.
 — letters from and to, printed in
Sawyer's Memorials; 9-11.
 John, Count of; 96.
 Edzard, Count of; 24, 96.
 Enno, Count of, (Count of Emden);
 24, 66-68, 71, 83-85, 96, 110, 114,
 117, 124, 146.
 — letters from; 58, 59, 61, 65, 66,
 68-75, 78, 80, 82, 86, 88, 97, 114,
 143.
 — letters to; 59, 93.
 — his chancellor; 59, 61, 71. See also Franzius, Thomas.
 — the delegates of, letter from; 72.
 — his son Edzardus Adolphus,
 letter from; 65.
 — his surgeon; 65.
 deputies of, letter from; 10.
 East India Company, the; 110, 119, 132,
 166, 180, 250, 541.
 Governor of. See Bankes.

East Indies, the; 117, 132, 146, 147, 152, 182. a brief of proceedings between the Commissioners of England and the States General touching the trade into; 166-170.
 Easton; 215.
 Eaton. See Eton.
 Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the; 211, 212.
 an order of; 205.
 Edgcombe, [Richard, 1st] Lord, letter
 from; 217.
 Edge Hill, battle of; 305 note.
 Edinburch; 23, 32, 195, 217.
 Edmonds, Edmonds or Edmonds:
 C.; 269.
 Clement; 130.
 Lady; 92.
 Ro.; 251.
 Mr., afterwards Sir Thomas, successively Ambassador to France,
 Comptroller, and Treasurer; 1, 3,
 30, 31, 50, 52, 54, 57, 59, 85-88, 102, 124, 142, 193, 195, 196, 198
note, 202-204, 207, 274.
 — letters from; 8, 12, 13, 15-22, 31.
 — letter to; 155.
 Edward, Prince, (afterwards Edward VI., King); 23.
 Edwards, Dr., Chancellor of London; 140.
 Edzardus Adolphus. See under East
 Friesland.
 Egerton, Sir Thomas, Lord Keeper, (afterwards Lord Ellesmere, q.v.); 27, 229.
 — letter from; 232.
 Ekins, Mr.; 329.
 Ekyns, John, of Denford, co. Nhamp.; 226.
 Eligius, the Monk. See Nicolai.
 Elizabeth, Queen of Edward IV., receipt by; 219.
 Elizabeth, Princess, afterwards Queen:
 as Princess, letter from; 222.
 as Queen; 22-24, 27, 34, 38, 39, 41-
 43, 47, 95, 96, 136, 234, 235.
 — letters from; 24, 38, 225, 230, 235.
 — — printed in Sawyer's Memorials; 4.
 — commissioners of; 34.
 — commission of; 30.
 — commissioners of, to France; 5.
 Elizabeth, Princess, (daughter of James
 I.), Electress Palatine; 112, 117,
 125, 128, 133-135, 138, 142, 144,
 145, 149, 156 (Madame), 157, 177,
 189, 193, 198, 242, 243, 252, 255.
 letters from; 246.
 aid to marry; 242.
 her jointure taken by the Emperor; 209.
 marriage of, fireworks, etc., on the occasion of; 243.
 Elland, Lord, (1687); 347.
 Ellesmere, [Thomas Egerton, q.v., 1st]
 Lord, Lord Chancellor; 214, 237,
 245, 248. Afterwards Viscount Brackley, q.v.
 — letters from; 53, 86, 115.

- Elliott, Mr., a groom of the Bedchamber ; 301.
- Ellis :
 George, letter from ; 25.
 Lady, wife of Sir William ; 336.
 Mr. ; 508.
 Welbore, letter from ; 217.
 William ; 321.
 Sir William ; 328, 336.
- Elmes :
 —. See Compton, Lady.
 Mr. ; 273.
 Mrs. ; 315.
- Elsass. See Alsace.
- Elsinore ; 327.
- Elton (Ilton), Major-Gen. ; 400.
- Elvish, Gervase ; 528.
- Elwys (Helwys), Sir Gervase, letter from ; 160.
- Ely, Bishop of :
 [Lancelot Andrews] ; 140, 253.
 [Matthew Wren] ; 290, 291.
- Emden (Embden), in East Friesland ; 56, 58, 66, 67, 70, 74, 78, 88, 92, 93, 107, 159, 270.
 letters dated at, 67, 74, 83, 93, 143.
 citizens of ; 24, 59, 60, 65, 66, 68, 69, 71, 73, 84, 85, 146. consuls and senate of ; 66, 84.
 — letters from and memorials of, printed in Sawyer's Memorials ; 10.
 the Count of. See under East Friesland. treaty, the ; 64, 67.
- Emmerick, the Leaguer by ; 526.
- Emperor, the :
 court of ; 117, 516.
 Ferdinand I. ; 183.
 Charles V. ; 22.
 Maximilian II. ; 23.
 (Rodolph II.) ; 16, 61, 68, 82, 83, 88, 90, 94.
 — his Council ; 95.
 — decree of, concerning the Merchants Adventurers ; 94.
 — letter to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials ; 11.
 — treaty of, with Hungary ; 92.
 (Matthias) ; 117, 121, 130, 147, 152, 172.
 — Commissioners of ; 121.
 — his Empress ; 152.
 (Ferdinand II.) ; 209, 255.
 (Ferdinand III.) ; 300.
 (Leopold I.) ; 442, 462, 473, 492, 493, 496, 498, 510, 516.
 — his Empress ; 516.
 (Joseph I.) ; 354.
 (Charles VI.) ; 359.
 (Charles VII.) ; 404.
- Empire, the ; 24, 95, 109, 112, 133, 157, 359, 493, 496, 498.
 the Court of ; 144, 462.
 the Electors of ; 100, 134.
 the Orders of ; 68.
 Prince of, the dignity of a ; 376.
 Princes of ; 83, 134, 492, 496, 510.
- Empire—cont.
 Protestant (Evangelical) Princes (of the Union) of ; 17, 89, 91, 93, 121, 129, 133, 145, 147, 157, 186, 189, 241.
 — letter from ; 100.
 — letter to ; 101.
 question of succession of a King of the Romans ; 177.
- Enekhuyzen, town of ; 156.
- Endsor, Captain ; 91.
- England, Mr., a captain of marines ; 395.
- Englefield, Sir Francis ; 193.
- English, Sir David ; 438.
- English Channel (Narrow Seas), the ; 269.
- Épinal (Espinall) ; 485, 486.
- Erbery, Henry, of London ; 180.
- Eremo, St. Michael in, abbot of. See Billius, Jacobus.
- Erskine (Areskyne), Sir James ; 88, 95.
- Eses, (in East Friesland), letters dated at ; 58, 59, 61, 65, 68, 69, 75, 78.
- Espinall. See Epinal.
- Espinois (Espinoy), Prince d' ; 468.
 — the heirs of ; 79.
- Essex ; 91, 229, 344.
- Essex :
 [Robert Devereux, 2nd] Earl of ; 26–28, 31, 46, 53, 63, 228, 230.
 Robert, [Devereux, 3rd] Earl of ; 79, 96, 140, 286–288, 294, 297–299, 301, 303, 305, 531.
 — letter from ; 177.
 — Lieutenant-General of the foot ; 281.
 Countess of, (1613) ; 140.
 [Arthur Capel, 1st] Earl of, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland ; 314, 322.
 [Algernon Capel, 2nd] Earl of ; 354.
- Estaing, Monsieur d' (Destin) ; 417.
- Estaquin :
 Catalina ; 134.
 Juana ; 134.
- Estrades, Mr. d' ; 500, 501.
- Estree (Estre), Count d', Vice-Admiral du Ponant ; 456, 511.
- Estrees :
 Due d', his brother ; 513.
 M. le Maréchal d' ; 219.
- Estwick, Mr. ; 327.
- Eton (Eaton), [co. Bucks] ; 112, 113, 123.
 letters dated at ; 35, 82, 110, 134.
 College (School) ; 386.
 — tapestry for ; 134.
- Etough, Henry ; 219.
- Euston, [co. Suff.] ; 482, 505, 520, 522.
- Euston, [Charles Fitzroy, afterwards 2nd Duke of Grafton, q.v.], Lord ; 522.
- Evans, — ; 232.
- Evelyn, Mrs. ; 333.
- Evening Post, the ; 366.
- Everad, Captain ; 79.
- Every, Mr. ; 28.
- Evreux ; 498.
- Exchequer, the ; 44, 59, 101, 102, 176, 177, 207, 231, 250, 252, 255, 273, 312, 521.

Exchequer—cont.
 Chancellor of; 179, 207, 331. See also Greville, Sir Fulke. officers of; 45.
 a tally in; 264.
 Exeter; 215, 251, 345.
 Exeter:
 Thomas Cecil, Lord Burghley, q.v., afterwards 1st Earl of; 238-245, 252, 256.
 — letters from; 239, 245, 247.
 William Cecil, 2nd Earl of; 257, 266.
 John [Cecil, 4th] Earl of; 316, 317, 321.
 — letters from; 215, 311.
 F., Countess of; 315.
 — letter from; 215.
 Eyre, William; 311.

F

Fagg, Sir John, of Sussex; 324.
 Faggot voter, a; 360.
 Fairfax (Fairefax):
 Lord, (1642); 300.
 Hon. Bryan; 219.
 Sir Charles; 50.
 Falaiseau, Monsieur; 351.
 Falconbridge, Lord. See Fauconberg.
 Falkland (Faukland), Lord, (1642); 297, 299.
 Falkland Palace, letters dated at; 203,
 206.
 Falmouth:
 [Hugh Boseawen, 1st] Viscount;
 375, 414.
 Lady Dowager, (1754); 414.
 Fane:
 Sir Francis; 256-258, 528-530.
 — letters from; 214.
 Sir Henry. See Vane.
 Fanshaw, Lord, (1687); 346.
 Fanshawe, —; 538.
 Fardenando, Mr.; 246, 247.
 Farenco (?), —; 393.
 Farmer, Sir George; 226, 231.
 — letter to; 230.
 Farmery, Colonel John, Doctor of Law;
 528.
 Farming, in Rockingham Forest; 234, 239,
 245, 249.
 Farnham, [co. Surrey]; 253.
 Faro; 365.
 Farrar, John; 25.
 Farror, Mr., counsellor-at-law; 214.
 Fauconberg (Falconbridge), [Thomas
 Belasyse, 2nd] Viscount; 468.
 Faukland, Lord. See Falkland.
 Faunte, Mr.; 223.
 Faur, M. du; 47.
 Faxardo, Don Juan; 210.
 Felton, Lady Betty; 335.
Feme covert's land, law about uses declaring of a; 316.

Feuclou, Marquis de, a nephew of; 500.
 Fenton, Thomas Erskine, Viscount; 81, 164, 165.
 — letter from; 80.
 — his brother; 81.
 Fenwick (Fenwicke):
 John; 176.
 Ralph; 174, 175.
 Randall; 175.
 Thomas, late of Wallington, re-examination of; 174-176.
 Ferdinand of Gratz. See Austria, Arch-
 duke of.
 Fermer, Mr.; 221.
 Ferris, Richard, of Barnstaple; 180.
 Feversham (Ferfersham, Fethersham):
 [Lonis Duras, q.v.], Earl of; 342,
 343, 524.
 Lady, (1678); 328.
 Fiene, Madame de; 460.
 Fielding, Charles; 391.
 Fierbrasse, Sir Basyle; 350.
 Finch:
 [John], Lord Keeper; 276, 294 and
note.
 [Sir Heneage], Lord, Lord Chancellor, letters from; 330, 333.
 —, Attorney-General; 319.
 Heneage, Solicitor-General; 342 and
note.
 Fines, Mr.; 295.
 Fingaul, Lady, (1688); 347.
 Fisher, Captain; 252.
 Fishweek, Thomas; 232.
 Fitz Roy:
 Lord Augustus; 219, 394, 395.
 Henry, afterwards 1st Duke of Grafton, q.v.; 474 note.
 Fitzwilliam (Fytzwyllyam, Fyttzwilliams):
 Bryan; 224.
 Henry, letter from; 214.
 John, letter from; 214.
 Lady, (1602-4); 214.
 — letter to; 214.
 Sir William; 233, 238.
 — letter from; 228.
 Flamerin, Mr.; 441
 Flanders; 27, 32, 42, 50, 92, 122, 152-
 154, 185, 328, 349, 355, 362, 405,
 419, 427, 442, 452, 458, 459, 461,
 466, 468, 469-472, 476, 478, 488,
 493, 497, 499-501, 513, 514, 518, 524. fortifications in; 465, 488.
 point de Venise lace of; 471.
 ports of; 79.
 refugees from, in Zealand; 68.
 Flavius, —; 188.
 Fleaming, —, a notable pirate; 194.
 Fleetwood, Sir Miles; 270.
 Fleming, Lt.-Col.; 409.
 Flight, Lieut.; 400.
 Flissinge. See Flushing.
 Florence; 34, 111, 147.
 Dnke of; 457.
 — Court of; 209.
 the Resident of; 433.
 serges of; 27.

- Floyd, Captain, his company; 150.
- Flushing (Flissinge, Vlissing. Vlushing):
53, 67, 80, 108, 125, 195, 248.
letters dated at; 56, 105, 110, 112.
magistrates of, letter to; 67.
the presidary troops in; 24.
surrender of, by James I.; 177.
- Folks (Folkes), M.; 377.
— letter to; 333.
- Fontainebleau; 6.
letters dated at; 41, 74.
- Fontane, Jo.; 343.
- Forbes (Forbus), Captain; 105, 128, 129.
- Forest, the. See Rockingham Forest.
- Forester, M.; 219.
- Forta Granda, in Carthagea; 397.
- Fortescue:
J.; 228-230.
Mr., of Ware; 308.
- Fort Frederick Henry; 413.
- Fort Lewis (Beauca Chica, Bocca Castle), in Carthagea; 396, 397.
- Fosbrooke, —, cousin to William Mon-tagu; 299.
- Foscot, —; 276.
- Foster:
— See Lane.
Judge; 305.
- Fotheringhay, co. Nhamp.; 236.
Castle, co. Nhamp.; 227.
- Fountain, Sir Andrew; 378.
- Fowell, Mr., of Devonshire; 324.
- Fowle, Matthias; 208.
- Fox (Foxe):
Rt. Hon. H., letters from; 408-410.
Sir Stephen; 483, 504.
Samuel; 25.
- Foxe's country, (in Ireland); 75, 77.
- Frampton, Mr.; 234.
- France and the French; 23, 33, 34, 42,
46, 50, 52, 59, 62, 63, 73, 88, 91,
92, 94, 96, 107, 125, 127, 147, 151,
155, 157, 158, 163, 164, 182, 185,
186-189, 192, 193, 195, 197, 202-
204, 208, 210, 212, 222, 227, 237,
241, 250, 260, 270, 272, 276, 326,
328, 331, 332, 336, 340, 351, 355,
357, 363, 366, 369, 372, 374, 389,
411, 420, 422-424, 426-430, 436-
438, 442, 443, 445, 447, 449, 450,
452, 455, 456, 460, 463, 465, 468,
470, 471, 473, 476, 483, 486-488,
493-497, 500, 501, 503, 505, 508,
510, 511, 513, 516, 517, 525.
- Admiral of, his guard; 456.
- Admirals of; 515.
- army of; 23, 413, 483, 509, 514,
525.
- the Catholics in; 183.
- churches of, deputies for. See St.
Germain, Monsieur de. Bordes,
Monsieur de.
- companies of, in pay of States General; 198.
- comptroller of the finances of; 200.
- constable of; 32, 460.
- letter to; 37.
- France—cont.
court of; 1, 43, 200, 201, 418, 421,
424, 427, 434, 440, 442, 443, 445,
450, 451, 456, 458-464, 466, 468-
472, 474, 479, 482, 483, 486, 488,
490-493, 495-497, 499, 504-506,
510, 513, 517-519.
- custom-house officers in; 459.
- the Dauphin of; 433, 438, 483, 485, 486.
- differences with Spain to be referred to the arbitrage of the Crown of Sweden. See under Sweden.
- droit d'aubeine* in; 476, 481.
- English agent in. See Winwood, Ralph. Becher, William.
- English merchandise imported into;
27.
- English merchants in; 30.
- ill usage of; 482, 483, 485.
- English troops in; 227.
- four sea regiments raised; 444.
- the great armies in (for England);
269.
- the Household Troops of; 403.
- intestacy in, rule of; 439.
- the Jesuits in; 29.
- the King's Dragoons; 477.
- league with England; 92.
- Master of the Posts in; 443.
- merchandise of, exported; 28.
- ministers of; 453, 455, 456, 469, 470,
475, 481, 485, 486, 488, 506, 507,
514, 518.
- the Mousquetaires noires regiment;
403.
- Parliament of. See under Paris.
- placards de résidence*; 454, 458.
- poisonous wines from; 146.
- project for a defensive league with England and the Netherlands; 72.
- Queen Regent of. See under France,
King of.
- Regent of. See Orleans.
- regiment of English subjects for the service of; 533.
- regiments raised in; 456, 460.
- seamen of, in foreign service; 456.
- ships, etc., of. See under Ships.
- transport of soldiers into; 25.
- treaty of, with Algiers; 471.
- with England (1671-2); 494
510, 511, 513, 514, 518.
- of commerce with England; 458,
473, 481.
- Treaty, Marine, with England; 523.
- troops of, (the French); 400-406,
442, 443, 445, 455.
- Vice-Admiral of; 456.
- Vice-Admirals of, question of their saluting English Admirals; 515, 516.
- war proclaimed by, against the Dutch;
519.
- France, King of:
(Charles IX.); 22-24.
Henry III., Louise, Queen Dowager
to; 200.

France, King of—cont.

- Henry IV.; 13-15, 30-32, 37, 38, 41, 42, 46, 47, 57, 61, 83, 86, 200.
- letters from; 39, 42, 74.
- letters to; 36, 39, 41, 42, 57.
- letters from and to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials; 2, 4.
- commissaries of, to the Archdukes; 75, 78.
- commissaries of, to treat with England; 34.
- commissaries of, to the States-General; 70.
- death of; 92.
- debts due by, to James I.; 46, 47.
- funeral of; 91.
- moneys advanced by, to the States-General; 138.
- sentence of nullity of marriage with Queen Margaret of Valois; 28.
- treaty of, with the United Provinces; 72.
- his Queen, [Mary de Medicis], afterwards Queen Regent; 92, 96, 138, 164, 200, 202.
- — letter to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials; 4.
- (Lewis XIII.); 17, 19, 92, 96, 109, 121, 137, 151, 152, 185-187, 198-204, 256, 258, 269.
- his brother; 207.
- debts of, due to James I. for services in money, troops, etc.; 120.
- his Queen, [Anne of Austria], Queen Regent; 533.
- Lewis XIV.; 357, 358, 421, 422, 424, 426-430, 432-434, 436, 438-440, 442-445, 449-466, 469-473, 475-479, 481-483, 485-488, 490-494, 496, 499-520, 522-525, 533.
- cheated at play; 498, 499.
- his daughter; 512, 513.
- his guards; 459.
- his intention to raise soldiers in England; 502, 503, 505.
- journeys of, to Flanders; 458, 459, 461, 462, 466, 468-472, 488, 497, 499.
- little beloved by his servants; 432.
- order of, calling home his subjects; 449.
- proposed letter from Charles II. to; 508.
- his Queen; 325, 433, 458.
- (Lewis XV.); 368, 375.
- Franche Comté, the; 483.
- salt pits of; 434.
- Francisco, Padre, confessor to the Duke of Lerma; 163.
- Francklin, Mr.; 90.
- Franker, letter dated at; 109.
- Frankfort; 34, 95, 138, 400, 401, 403, 404.
- letter dated at; 359.
- Franzius, Thomas; 74, 80.

- Frederick Lewis, Prince of Wales; 386.
- Frederick, Prince, (second son of George III.), afterwards Duke of York and Albany; 416.
- letter from; 417.
- Free-gift, letters from Charles I., requesting a; 263, 264.
- Freeman (Freman):
- ; 334.
- , of Southampton; 45.
- Henry; 218.
- letter from; 221.
- Freemasons; 373.
- Fromont, P. R., letter from; 374.
- French Articles, the, answers to, (1599); 27.
- French debt, the; 102.
- French players in London; 369-371.
- Frescheville:
- [John], Lord; 328.
- Peter, of Staveley, co. Derby, his daughter Frances, wife of Sir Ger vase (1) Holles. See Holles.
- Fresnes, Monsieur; 46.
- Fresnoy, Madame de; 503, 504.
- a sister of; 503, 504.
- Fribourg; 407.
- Fridberg, letter dated at; 352.
- Friedeburg (Frideburgensis), in East Friesland; 65.
- Friesland (Fryzland); 57, 65, 80, 106.
- John, Count of; 24.
- the States of; 150.
- East. See East Friesland.
- Frises, the; 92.
- Frithe, John, of Dublin; 232.
- Fruet [? Foucet, i.e. Fouquet] Mr.; 506.
- Fulham, co. Middx.; 86.
- letters dated at; 35, 44, 47.
- Fullerton, Sir James; 195.
- Funibey, Mr.; 261.
- Furney, Archdeacon; 378.
- Furstenburg, Count of; 61.
- Futa, in Africa; 385 note.
- Fyfield, [co. Oxf.]; 378.
- Fytzwyllyam. See Fitzwilliam.

G

- Gabor, Bethlem, Prince of Transylvania; 258 and note.
- Gage, Mr.; 209.
- Gainsborough [Edward Noel, 1st] Earl of; 345.
- Gall:
- ; 264.
- Mr.; 196.
- Galumbo, in Africa; 385 note.
- Galway, Earl of, (1713), letter from; 216.
- Gambia; 385.
- Gand. See Ghent.
- Gandia, Duke of, a Jesuit, beatified; 187.
- Garland, Mr.; 86.

- Garnet, Henry, execution of; 64.
 Garrett, Mr.; 28.
 Garter:
 Order of the; 108, 119, 209, 340, 519.
 — a Chapter of; 337.
 — Knights of; 247, 248.
 King-at-arms. See Segar. Walker.
 Anstis.
 Garth, Sir Samuel; 362.
 Garway (Garraway), William; 173 and note.
 Gates, Sir Thomas; 12, 83, 93, 97, 103.
 Gazette, the; 326, 469.
 Geddington (Gedyngton), co. Nhamp.; 221.
 Woods, in Rockingham Forest; 234, 239, 245, 249, 257, 323, 324 note, 328.
 Gee, Orlando, letter from; 215.
 Gelybrand, Edward; 25.
 Genaudan de Ganges, N. de; 219.
 General, the Lord. See Albemarle.
 Geneva (Genefue); 37, 38, 349.
 letter dated at; 39.
 the peace of; 42.
 Genoa; 154.
 Bank of; 210.
 Genoese, the; 192.
 Gentilis:
 Albericus, letter to; 25.
 Dr.; 146.
 Georgia, Colony of; 389.
 George I., King (previously Elector of Hanover, q.v.); 362, 364, 366, 368, 373, 374, 377.
 George II., King; 380, 384, 391, 408, 409, 414. at Dettingen; 402-405.
 George III., King; 416, 417.
 George, Prince of Wales (afterwards George IV.); 416.
 letter from; 416.
 Germain, Lady Elizabeth, letter from; 217.
 German. See Jermyn.
 German Empire, the. See Empire, the.
 Germany and the Germans; 22, 39, 46, 49, 64, 68, 92, 94, 95, 98, 106, 108, 110, 111, 114, 116, 117, 119, 122, 123, 126-128, 133, 138, 139, 142, 143, 145-148, 150, 152, 157-159, 186, 189, 190, 193, 195, 202, 219, 243, 264, 270, 374, 400, 404, 511, 514.
 infantry of; 178.
 Princes of. See under Empire, the.
 Protestants in; 183.
 Upper, poisonous wines from; 146.
 Germaine, Sir Thomas; 51.
 Gerrard, —; 158.
 Ghent (Gand); 219.
 letters dated at; 400.
 Gib, Mr., of the King's Bedchamber; 247.
 Gibb, John; 237.
 Gibbons, —, a Jesuit; 188.
 Gibraltar; 194, 358, 365, 400.
 letter dated at; 377.
 the Mole of; 180.
 the Straits of; 79, 182, 184, 185, 187, 190-192, 210.
 Gifforde, George; 226.
 Gilbert, Mr.; 348.
 Gillier, —; 371, 372.
 Gilpin (Gilpina, Gylpin):
 George, agent in the Netherlands; 43, 62.
 — letter to; 34.
 Mrs. D.; 93.
 Guinea. See Guinea.
 Giorgi, —, keeper of the library at Venice; 33, 35.
 Gitry, Mr. do; 490.
 Glamorgan, Earl of, privy seal creating; 260.
 Glapthorn (Glapthorne), co. Nhamp.; 214, 227.
 Glascock, Sir William; 322.
 Glasgow, assembly of churchmen at; 89.
 Glin, —, to be Recorder; 288.
 Gloucester, [Henry, son of Charles I.], Duke of; 314.
 Gloucester Hall; 176.
 Goa, the Viceroy of; 383.
 Godolphin:
 Sidney, Lord, Lord Treasurer; 354, 356.
 — letters from; 340, 352.
 Lady, (1716); 362.
 [Francis], 2nd Lord, letter from; 216.
 Lady Henrietta, letter from; 216.
 Mr.; 425, 433, 471-473, 486, 515, 518, 525.
 Sir William; 511.
 Gold:
 prices of; 141.
 wire, drawing of; 208.
 Goldstone, —; 368.
 Goloskin, Count; 412.
 Gondomar, Don Diego Sarmiento de Aeuñas, Count of, Spanish Ambassador; 141, 162-164.
 Gooderick, Sir Francis; 321.
 Goodwin, Sir Francis; 80.
 Goodwood, [co. Sussex], letters dated at; 391, 410.
 Gorge, Dr.; 302.
 Goram's cart; 244.
 Gorges, Mr.; 45.
 Goring:
 [George, 1st] Lord; 811.
 Sir George; 135.
 Goro, port of; 111.
 Gosfield, [co. Essex]; 262.
 Gosling, Mr.; 376.
 Gowsye, Robert; 221.
 Grafton; 254.
 Grafton:
 [Henry Fitzroy, q.v., 1st] Duke of; 345, 523.
 [Lady Isabella (née Bennet)], Duchess of; 522.
 [Charles Fitzroy (previously Lord Euston, q.v.), 2nd] Duke of; 374.
 — letter from; 217.
 — letter to; 217.

- Gramont (Grammont) :
 Duke of ; 405.
 Count de ; 472, 482, 485, 490.
 — letter from ; 490.
 — his courier ; 495.
 Countess of ; 490.
 Mareschal de ; 490.
 — sister to. See St. Chaumont, Madame de.
- Granby, [John Manners, son of 3rd Duke of Rutland], Marquis of ; 410.
- Grandison, — ; 302.
- Grange, Laird of. See Kirkady, William.
- Grantham, co. Lincoln ; 328.
 aldermen of ; 528.
- Gravelines (Graveling) ; 56.
- Gravenhage ; 526.
- Gravesend ; 49, 128, 337.
- Greathead, —, an innkeeper ; 232.
- Greatton, the men of ; 213.
- Greeks, the ; 154, 183.
- Green Cloth, the Board of : 228.
 — letter from ; 251.
- Greenland, fishing on coast of ; 151, 156.
- Greenwich, [co. Kent] : 9, 164, 192, 217, 248, 254.
 letters dated at ; 24, 27, 30, 35, 42, 56, 65, 99, 133, 135, 194, 196, 220, 221, 225, 227, 229, 230, 237.
 the Almshouse at, founder of. See Lambard, William.
 the Hospital at ; 378.
- Gremontville, Mr. de, French Agent at Vienna ; 473.
- Grenada, island of ; 411.
- Grenoble ; 2, 3.
- Grenwell, William ; 130.
- Gresly, Mr. ; 209.
- Grethyslanum, (? in East Friesland) ; 66.
- Greville (Grevyll), Sir Fulke, Chancellor of the Exchequer : 82, 113, 116, 118, 123, 140, 141.
 — letter to ; 205.
- Grey or Gray :
 Lord, (1550) ; 23.
 [of Weeke] :
 [? Sir William Grey, 1st] Lord ; 294, 318.
 [of Wilton] :
 [Thomas Grey, 16th] Lord ; 28, 44.
 — letters from : 121, 144.
 Sir John ; 99, 100.
 Lady, (1677) ; 325.
 Mr. ; 464, 465.
- Griffeth, Sir Thomas ; 86, 87.
- Griffing, Mr. ; 305.
- Grigory, Putylla ; 136.
- Grimbergue, — ; 371.
- Grimsby Magna, co. Lincoln ; 322, 534, 537.
 Mayor of ; 528.
- Grimsthorpe, [co. Linc.], letter dated at ; 311.
- Grimston, Samuel, of Derbyshire ; 232.
- Grimstone :
 Lady Ante ; 344.
 Sir Harbottle, Master of the Rolls ; 320 and note.
- Grisons, the ; 189, 197.
 "Grogras" ; 149.
- Groningen ; 59, 85.
- Groot, Hugo de, letter from ; 142.
- Grosvenor, Fulke, letter from ; 343.
- Grotius, — ; 146.
- Groyne, the. See Corunna.
- Gruell ; 261.
- Grymes, Mr. ; 378.
- Gueders ; 65, 159.
- Guercheville, Madame de ; 200.
- Guernsey :
 churches of ; 159.
 merchants of ; 476, 477, 481.
- Guicciardini, Pietro ; 34.
- Guienne :
 government of ; 488.
 Lower, churches of ; 37.
- Guigan, Rosa de ; 134.
- Guildford, [co. Surrey] ; 342.
 M.P. for. See Onslow, Sir Richard.
- Guin. Nell. See Gwynne.
- Guinea (Ginea, Guinney) ; 147, 168, 315.
- Guiny Ambassador, the ; 492.
- Guize (Guize) :
 Duke of ; 201, 207, 260, 485.
 — his son ; 207.
 Duchess Dowager of ; 200.
 Madame de ; 505.
 Mlle. de ; 52.
 Mons. de ; 192.
- Guitry, Monsieur ; 46.
- Gule, —, a solicitor ; 97.
- Gumleton, Mr. ; 422, 423.
- Gunpowder Plot, the ; 174-176.
- Guns, spiked, an invention to fire ; 410.
- Gunterode :
 Colonel ; 56.
 Monsieur, letter to ; 11.
- Gutry, Monsieur ; 46.
- Gutterbach, the convention of ; 101.
- Guy :
 Captain ; 327, 331.
 Mr. ; 322, 325, 333.
- Guydott, Mr. ; 353.
- Guys (Guies), Brigadier ; 394, 396.
- Gwynne (Guin, Gwin, Gwinne) :
 Col. ; 398.
 Matthew, letter from ; 60.
 Nell, her mother ; 331.
- Gylpin. See Gilpin.

H

- H—ys, Lord, his son ; 398.
- Hacker, Colonel ; 312.
- Hackett, Mr. ; 341.
- Hackney, [co. Middx.] ; 196.
- Hackwell, Will. ; 126, 128.
- Haddon, [co. Derby], letter dated at ; 281.

- Hague (Haeghe, Haeg, Dunhaige), the ;
11, 12, 14-18, 43, 47, 52, 54, 56, 58,
64, 80, 85, 86, 91, 94, 95, 97, 98,
109-111, 115, 135, 138, 143, 146,
147, 150, 152, 159, 203, 359, 433.
letters dated at ; 51, 72, 74, 75, 92,
93, 99, 143, 145-147, 150-152, 155,
156, 158, 159, 187, 190, 197, 198,
202, 207, 336, 379, 412, 413.
"the Ordinary of" ; 88.
treaty of (Hagensis tractatus) ; 85.
- Haidooke, Richard, of New College,
Oxon ; 54.
- Haines, Anthony ; 350.
- Hale, Lord Chief Justice ; 321.
- Halibussa, — ; 147.
- Halifax (Halyfax) :
[George Saville], Earl, afterwards
Marquis of ; 336, 346.
Marchioness of ; 346.
Charles Montagu, q.v., 1st Baron and
Earl of ; 218, 355, 360.
— letter from ; 357.
George Montagu, [? 1st or 2nd] Earl
of ; 218.
[George Montagu Dunk, 2nd] Earl
of ; 410.
— his regiment ; 410.
- Hall :
Bishop ; 285 note.
Mr. ; 103.
- Halle (Hall), assembly, the ; 85.
treaty of ; 95.
- Halle, John, cupbearer to James I. ; 164.
- Hallier, Mons. du ; 200.
- Halton, Francis ; 528, 531.
- Hambach, letter dated at ; 93.
- Hambleton. See Hamilton.
- Hamburg (Hanborough) ; 27, 124, 147, 270.
- Hamby ; 216.
- Hamilton (Hambleton, Hamelton) :
Marquis, (1639) ; 284.
[William Douglas, 3rd] Duke of ; 347.
Sir George ; 459, 460, 469.
James ; 422, 426.
Mr. ; 478.
- Hammersmith, [co. Middx.], letter dated at ; 393.
- Hammerton ; 326.
- Hammon, — ; 32, 199.
- Hampden, Mr. ; 306.
— his daughter. See Ellis, Lady, wife of Sir William.
- Hampshire ; 264.
High Sheriff of ; 296.
- Hampton Court, [co. Middx.] ; 50, 114,
159, 217, 268, 274, 286, 362, 380.
letters dated at ; 42, 100, 221, 362.
the Conference at ; 8.
- Hansper, Clerk of the ; 320.
- Hanau ; 403.
letters dated at ; 402-405.
Count of ; 109.
- Hanborough. See Hamburg.
- Handyside, —, his regiment ; 401.
- Hanjirst (?), Thomas, letter from ; 68.
- Hannes, Sir Edward ; 378.
- Hanouw ; 108.
- Hanover ; 362.
letters dated at ; 351, 354, 355.
Elector George of (afterwards George I., q.v., of England),
letter to ; 357.
Electress Sophia of ; 351, 356.
— letters from ; 354, 355.
— her grandson, the Electoral Prince ; 355.
- Hanoverian troops ; 400, 401, 403, 404, 406.
- Hanse, the ; 95.
towns of ; 130, 144, 146, 147, 190.
- Hanworth, [? co. Middx.] ; 51.
- Harborough, "the Swan" in ; 232.
- Harby, Mr. ; 335.
- Harcourt (Arcourt, Harcoote) :
Duc d' ; 357, 358, 405.
[Simon, 2nd] Lord ; 404.
Sir Simon ; 297.
- Hardice, Robert ; 30.
- Harington or Harrington :
Lord, (1613) ; 145, 242.
Sir H. ; 28.
Lady, (1616-7) ; 176, 185, 186, 193.
Thomas ; 528, 531.
- Harlai, Mons. ; 219.
- Harley, M. Du ; 389.
- Harlowe, Robert ; 219.
— letter from ; 246.
- Harmar, Dr. ; 33.
- Harold, M. ; 219.
- Harrington. See Harrington.
- Harringworth (Haryngworthe), co.
Nbnamp. ; 226.
Lodge, letter dated at ; 222.
- Harris :
Mr., merchant ; 86.
Mr., of Oxfordshire ; 302.
- Harrison, —, his regiment ; 410.
- Harvey (Harvy) :
— ; 304.
—, of Newhaven ; 190.
—, cousin of William Montagu ; 319,
320, 328.
Sir Daniel ; 218, 318, 320 note, 436,
461.
Daniel, son of Sir Daniel ; 218.
Elizabeth (née Montagu, q.v.), Lady
(sister to Ralph Montagu) ; 323,
335, 418, 445 note, 468, 479.
— letters to ; 430, 435, 454.
Lieut.-General ; 218.
Mr., the treasurer ; 315.
Sir Thomas ; 337.
- Harvile ; 303.
- Harwich, [co. Essex] ; 60, 341, 342.
burgess for. See Pepys, Samuel.
- Harwood, Captain ; 102.
- Hash Alley Uxam, letter from ; 365.
- Hasselt ; 203.
- Hastein, Monsieur, letter from ; 11.
- Hastings :
Edward, Lord, (1558) ; letter from ;
223.
Sir Henry ; 99, 100.
Lady, (wife of Sir Henry) ; 100.
Sir Walter ; 100.

- Hatfield; 302, 305.
- Hatton :
- Lord, (1677); 325.
  - Sir Christopher; 269, 287, 306.
  - letter from; 226.
  - Sir Christopher, Lord Chancellor; 123-125, 213, 226, 227.
  - Lady Elizabeth; 217.
  - Mrs.; 344.
  - Sir William; 225.
  - letter from; 213.
  - letter to; 230.
- Haughfen (Haughfing) :
- ; 212.
  - George; 142, 212.
  - Mr.; 80.
- Hauthorne, Richard; 32.
- Havana; 358, 398.
- islands about the coast of; 155.
- Havering, [co. Essex]; 269, 284.
- Havers, Mr.; 173.
- Havre; 108.
- Hawlie, —, of the privy chamber; 164.
- Hawly, General; 404.
- Hay :
- Lord, (1612-1617); 113, 196, 240, 243.
  - Earl of, (1740), letter from; 217.
  - Lord James, letter from; 203.
  - Sir Alexander; 116 note.
  - Sir George; 73.
- Haywood, Sir William; 344.
- Hazart, John; 36.
- Hearsay, Captain; 128.
- Heath :
- , Attorney-General; 272.
  - Mr., Recorder of London; 254.
  - Mr. Justice; 304, 305.
  - Sir Robert, Chief Justice of the King's Bench; 530.
- See* Höchst.
- Heidelberg (Heydelberg, Hidelburgh); 95, 112, 133-135, 138, 141, 142, 144, 145, 151, 152, 156, 404.
- letters dated at; 39, 41-43, 91, 92, 102, 109, 145, 156, 157, 177, 185, 193, 198, 246.
  - the taking of; 209.
- Heilbronn (Helbron); 193.
- Diet at; 186, 189, 198.
- Helwys, Sir Gervase. See Elways.
- Hemington; 359.
- letters dated at; 228, 253.
- Hempstead; 361.
- Henderson, —; 105.
- Heneage, T.; 227.
- Henningham, Lady Mary; 327.
- Henricks, John; 188.
- Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I.; 261, 267, 270, 273, 286, 290, 291, 293, 312, 431 (Queen Mother), 432, 435, 442-445, 456, 463, 479, 480, 518.
- Controller of the Household of. See Bond, Sir Thomas.
  - death and burial of; 438-440, 450.
  - Master of the Horse to; 288.
  - her plate, 445, 446, 448, 455.
- Henry VII., King, his treaty with the Archduke Philip; 78.
- Henry VIII., King; 23, 220.
- letter from; 221.
  - his sister; 22.
- Henry Frederick, Prince of Wales (son of James I.); 44, 99, 146.
- Commissioners of; 84.
  - his death; 117, 118, 123 note.
  - an aid for the rate; 190.
- Henrysson, Sir Robert; 89.
- Heralds' Office, the. See College of Arms.
- Herbert :
- Lord, (c. 1733), letter from; 217.
  - , Attorney-General; 291, 298, 302.
  - Captain Gerard; 62.
  - Sir J., letter from; 62.
  - James; 326.
  - John; 30.
  - Sir John; 131 note.
  - Mr. Secretary; 109.
  - Sieur de; 93.
- Hereford; 412.
- Charles I.'s garrison at; 318.
- Heron :
- Anne; 219.
  - Edward, sheriff of Lincolnshire; 581.
- Herring, —; 231.
- Hertford assizes; 332.
- Hertford :
- [Edward, Seymour 1st], Earl of; 52-54.
  - letter from; 9.
  - [William Seymour, 1st] Marquis of; 294, 303.
  - his eldest son. See Beaumont, Lord.
- Hertfordshire, method of easing the poor in the price of corn in; 272.
- Hervart, Mr. D'; 216.
- Hervey :
- Capt.; 393.
  - Felton; 390.
  - J., letter from; 216.
  - Hon. Mrs.; 373 note.
- Hesse, Landgrave of, letter to; 39.
- daughter of; 179.
- Hessians (Hessen), the; 400, 401, 403, 406.
- Heulana, Cataline; 134.
- Heurtuvar, Baron de; 199.
- Hewett, Jo.; 269.
- Hewyt, Lady, (1673); 318.
- Hexham (Hexam); 174, 175.
- letters dated at; 201, 202.
  - and Hexhamshire, bailiff and chief officer of. See Widdrington, Roger.
- Heycliff; 57.
- Hickling, Mr.; 232.
- Hickman, Mr.; 139.
- Higham, —, printer; 188.
- Highgate (Highgat), co. Middx.; 273.
- Hill :
- Aaron, letters from; 369, 370.
  - Mr., minister of Kingsthorpe; 309.
  - Morton; 415.

- Hinchinbrooke (Hinchenbrooke, Hinchinbrooke), [co. Hunts.]; 266, 280-282, 379.
 letter dated at; 257.
- Hinchinbrooke (Hintchinbrook), [Edward Richard Montagu], Viscount; 359, 360.
- Hintlesham, co. Suffolk; 216.
- Hispaniola; 394, 399.
- Hobart (Hubbert):
 Sir Henry, Chief Justice; 250 and note, 254.
 Lady; 274.
- Höchst (Hoechst, Hecht); 400-402.
 letters dated at; 401, 402.
- Hodson, —; 311.
- Hoffenheim, (in Hesse-Nassau); 401.
- Hogsdon; 161.
- Holbeck; 329.
- Holdenby, [co. Nhampt.]; 213, 231.
- Holderness, Lady, (1778); 417.
- Holdsworth, —; 303.
- Holland and the Hollanders (Dutch); 1, 24, 25, 42, 48, 49, 56, 59, 96, 97, 107, 108, 110, 111, 117, 127, 138, 146-148, 152, 165-170, 183, 184, 187, 194, 197, 207, 209, 210, 270, 291, 315, 328, 331, 335, 351, 358, 359, 362, 391, 420, 421, 429, 456, 458-460, 479, 483, 488, 494, 495, 500-502, 504, 508, 510, 513, 516, 532.
 Admiralty of; 84.
 army of; 326.
 assembly of the towns of; 156.
 commissioners from, to yield the Low Countries into Queen Elizabeth's hands; 225.
 French letters of reprisal against; 456. manufacture of gunpowder in; 219.
 Messieurs of; 173.
 ministers of; 453.
 office of stadtholder of; 412.
 the Orders of; 146.
 Resident of, at Paris; 465.
 Resident, Councillor, and Ambassador in. See Winwood, Ralph.
 ships of. See under Ships.
 Stadtholder of. See Orange, Maurice of.
 the States of; 105, 412, 413, 428, 465, 466, 481.
 — letter to; 71.
 trade of, with France, reprisals in; 494.
 war proclaimed against, by France; 519.
- Holland, [Henry Rich, 1st] Earl of; 279, 288, 294, 297-299, 302, 303.
 — Lieutenant-General of the horse; 281.
- Holles (Hollis):
 Denzell (1), son of Sir William; 537, 540.
 — his wife Eleanor; 540.
 Denzell (2); 539.
 — created Baron Holles of Ifield, co. Sussex; 540.
- Holles (Hollis)—cont.
 Frescheville (1), son of Sir Gervase (1); 537.
 — his wife Elizabeth; 537.
 Frescheville (2), afterwards Sir Frescheville:
 — military and naval commissions to; 540-542.
 — admitted a Gentleman of the Privy Chamber in Extraordinary; 541.
 Captain Sir George, commission to; 526.
 Sir Gervase (1), son of Sir William; 537.
 — his wife Frances; 537.
 Gervase (2), (Jervace), J.P., Captain, afterwards Colonel and Sir Gervase; 322 and note, 526.
 — letter from; 532.
 — letters to; 533, 538.
 — commissions to; 526-528, 530, 531, 533, 539.
 — writ of ded. pot. to take his oath as a J.P.; 526.
 — regiment to be raised by; 528.
 — his appointment as Colonel by the Commissioners of Array in Lincolnshire; 530, 531.
 — proposals of, to raise men for the service of the Venetian Republic; 532.
 — articles for the levy of a foot regiment by, for the service of France; 533.
 — instructions of Charles II. for a grant of arms to be made to; 534.
 — instructions to, for the disposing of warrants for a voluntary contribution to Charles II.; 535.
 — grant of arms to; 537.
 — his descent; 537.
 — safe-conduct for; 538.
 — his regiments; 539.
 — sworn a Master of Requests; 539, 540.
 — grant of an annuity of 100*l.* to; 540.
 Sir John, letter from; 127.
 Sir John, son of Denzell (1), created Baron Houghton and Earl of Clare. See Clare, Earl of.
 Mr.; 306.
 Sir William, of Houghton; 536, 540.
 — his wife Anne; 537.
- Hollivell; 325.
- Holmes:
 Captain; 315.
 Sir Robert; 517.
- Holofernes, feigned name of; 172.
- Holst, Duke of; 56.
- Holstein:
 Duke of, letter from; 11.
 — John Adolphus; 70.
 — letter from; 70.
- Holyoake, Mr.; 414.
- Hom; 217.

- Honywood:
—; 359.
General; 404, 406.
Gen. Sir Philip, letters from: 400.
- Hornby Castle, [co. York]; 215.
- Hornes, Prince de, letter from: 216.
- Horsev. Colonel: 369.
- Horton, letters dated at; 222, 224.
- Horton, Captain; 408.
- Hotham, Sir John; 296, 300, 304.
- Hothfield, [co. Kent]; 216.
- Hotman, Monsieur; 92, 94.
— letters from; 15, 83, 95, 108, 109, 119, 122, 133, 141, 143, 144, 146.
- Houghton, Sir John Holles, 1st Baron.
See Clare, Earl of.
- Household, the Royal; 233, 231.
Lord Chamberlain of. See Manchester, Edward, 2nd Earl of.
Masters of; 228.
steward of. See Richmond, Duke of. treasurer of. See Clifford, Sir Thomas.
- How, Sir Scroope; 317.
- Howard:
Charles, Lord, of Effingham, Lord High Admiral; 26, 227, 228.
— letter to; 25.
Lord Henry, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, letter to; 48.
Lord, (1642); 300.
the Lord Marshal Harry; 326.
Col. Charles; 539.
Gen., his regiment of foot; 401, 406.
Bernard, de Norfolk; 219, 326.
Mr.; 442, 477, 489.
Sir Philip; 346.
Theo.; 103.
Sir Thomas, son of Earl of Suffolk; 198.
Colonel William, of the Westminster Regiment; 540.
- Howden, co. York; 175.
- Howe:
Lady Anne; 330.
Mr.; 326.
Robert, of London; 180.
- Hubbert, Lord. See Hobart, Sir Henry.
- Hudson, Mr.; 256.
- Huett, Sir John; 274.
- Hughes, —, of Warwick; 232.
- Huguenot (Hugonette) minister, a; 436.
- Huguenots (Hugonets), the; 449.
- Hull; 299, 300, 302.
the Antient of; 303.
the Magazine of; 296, 301, 302.
- Humberston, Henry; 212.
- Hume, Earl, (1609); 81.
- Humiers, — d'; 514.
- Humphrey, Laurence; 25.
- Hundleby, [co. Linc.]; 214.
- Hungary and the Hungarians; 109, 133, 145, 148, 157, 195.
King of; 255.
— Matthias, treaty of, with the Emperor; 92.
- Hungerford, Sir Edward, his Lady; 315.
- Hunsdon, [co. Herts], letter dated at; 236.
- Hunsdon, Barony of; 327.
- Hunsdon:
H., [Lord]; 228
G., Lord; 218.
— letter from; 236.
[Robert Carey, 6th] Lord, letters from; 337, 345.
- Hunt, Mr.; 283.
- Hunter, Mr.; 51.
- Huntingdon; 284, 359.
M.P.'s for; 297 note.
- Huntingdon:
[Henry Hastings, 5th] Earl of; 100.
C., Lord, letter from; 195.
- Huntingdonshire; 264, 266, 272, 280, 379.
the election for; 360.
- Huntley, Matthew; 62.
- Hurstbourne (Hursbourne), [co. Hants.]: 217.
- Husk, General; 404.
— his regiment; 406.
- Hussey:
Sir Charles; 528, 529.
E.D.; 219.
Sir Edward; 528–530.
Gilbert, of Oundle (Owndell); 226.
- Hutchinson, Sir Thomas; 526.
- Hutton, Judge; 276, 281.
- Huyghens, Mons.; 151.
- Hyd, Mr. Alderman; 173.
- Hymmen, Johannes; 107.

I

- Icelle, the river; 514.
- Ienuille, Prince; 260.
- Ilton:
—, the confectioner; 406.
See also Elton.
- Imperialists, the; 401.
- India Company, the; 49.
- Indies, the; 81, 83, 143. See also East Indies. commerce of; 78, 79.
- Ingatstone (Ingatzton) Hall, [co. Essex], letter dated at; 348.
- Ingram:
Sir A.; 173.
Sir Thomas; 332 note.
- Inns of Court, the; 276, 277, 388.
- Inys, Mr.; 372.
- Inquisition, the; 120, 121.
- Iping, [co. Sussex], proposed almshouse for widows in; 247.
- Ipswich, [co. Suff.]; 56.
- Irby, Sir Anthony; 296.
- Ireland and the Irish; 73, 153–155, 189, 195, 201, 224, 231, 238, 287, 289, 290, 292, 294, 297, 298, 304, 319, 349, 391, 410, 449.
“adventers” for; 291, 293.

Ireland—cont.

- allowances for public works and charitable uses in ; 177.
- almoner in ; 177.
- escheated lands in, condition of ; 75-77.
- levies for the forces in ; 230, 235.
- Lord Chancellor of. See Loftus.
- Lord Deputy (Lord Lieutenant or Viceroy) of ; 235, 361 note, 374.
- See also Essex. Leicester. Mountjoy. St. John.
- Lords Justices of ; 295.
- Privy Council of ; 235.
- proposal to raise men in, for the Archduke's service ; 81.
- the rebellion in ; 235.
- 10,000 Scots to go into ; 289.
- Tyrone's propositions for the government of ; 29.

- Irish companies in the Low Countries ; 153-155.
- in service of Spain ; 152.
- foot soldiers ; 419.
- forces, General of ; 288.
- rebels ; 306.
- soldiers ; 303, 436.

Isham :

- Sir John ; 259, 260.
- Mr. ; 247.

Isola, Baron d' ; 427, 496.

Isser, the river ; 401.

- Italy ; 32, 120, 145, 154, 155, 160, 180, 183-7, 189, 193-195, 197, 219, 270, 363, 471, 499, 521.
- infantry of ; 178.
- princes of ; 111.
- seven Bishops of ; 182.

J

Jackson, — ; 208.

Jagendorfe, — ; 258.

Jamaica ; 346, 348, 349, 393, 397, 398.

letter dated from ; 394.

Governor of. See Albemarle. 2nd Duke of.

James I., King :

as James VI. of Scotland ; 26.

— letter to ; 32.

as James I. of England : 14, 42-47, 49, 53-55, 58-60, 63-68, 70, 74, 75, 81-85, 87-91, 93-95, 97, 100, 105, 109-121, 124-127, 129, 131, 137, 139, 144, 145, 147, 151, 159, 164, 165, 172, 173, 179, 184, 185, 189-97, 202, 203, 207, 209-211, 237, 239-246 note, 248-251, 253-255, 258.

— letters from ; 42, 58-60, 70, 72, 80, 85, 88, 99, 101, 102, 108, 130, 133, 138, 140, 161, 162, 164, 165, 177, 205, 206, 238, 257, 260.

— letters to ; 68, 70, 71, 107, 128, 143, 150, 152, 156, 157, 160, 172, 173, 204, 211.

James I.—cont.

— letters from and to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials ; 7-13, 15, 18-20.

— commissioners of, to Russia ; 136, 137.

— conspiracies against ; 43, 198.

— gentleman harbinger to. See Ryder, William.

— memorial by, of such grants as the King is willing to make ; 170, 171.

— a progress of ; 251.

James II., King, (previously Duke of York, q.v.) ; 345-349.

James Fort, in Barbadoes ; 394.

Jan, the river ; 401.

Janson :

— ; 129.

Jan ; 85.

Japan ; 247.

Jaspar, — ; 50.

Jeannin (Jannin) :

Monsieur ; 71, 72, 74, 78.

President ; 385.

Jebb, Sir Richard ; 416.

Jeffery, Col., his regiment ; 408.

Jefferys, Joseph ; 412.

Jeffreys, Sir Geo., letter from ; 341.

Jenkins (Jenkins) :

Doctor ; 445, 455.

L. ; 339.

Jennin, — ; 124.

Jermyn (German), Henry ; 294 and note.

Jersey :

Castle Elizabeth in. See Castle Elizabeth.

churches of ; 159.

merchants of ; 481.

safe-conduct dated from ; 538.

Jesuits, the ; 35, 52, 117, 158, 188, 198, 200, 241, 258, 260.

Jewel House, the ; 420.

master of. See Mildmay.

Joar Factory ; 388.

letter dated at ; 385.

Johnson (Jhonson) :

— ; 190, 367.

—, a miller ; 226.

Cornelius ; 80.

John, letter from ; 220.

Mr. ; 322, 338.

Sir Nathaniel ; 334.

Otwell ; 220.

Robert ; 232.

Widow ; 232.

Jollin, John ; 80.

Jolly, Capt. ; 394.

Jones (Joans) :

—, Attorney-General ; 322.

Alderman Francis ; 173 and note.

Sir Henry ; 467, 477.

Mr. ; 247.

Mrs. ; 341.

Ph., York Herald, letter from ; 376.

R. ; 219.

Thomas, letters from ; 401, 402, 405, 407.

Joras, Francis; 63.
 Juan (Jouan), Don, [of Austria], natural son of Philip IV. of Spain; 427, 428. his party; 444.
 Juliers; 88, 94, 98, 121, 130, 134, 137, 141, 148, 157, 159.
   Anne, Princess of; 14.
   Duchy of; 82, 129.
   — succession to; 14.
   Duke of; 180. See also Cleves.
   siege of; 92.
 Junto, the, (la Junte); 357, 358.
 Justices, the Lords; 392.
 Justices of Assize; 271.
 Justices of the Peace; 271.

K

Kaye, Peter; 99.
 Keene, George; 351.
 Keeper, Lord; 280. See also Egerton.
   Bacon. Lincoln, Bishop of. Coventry. Lytton. Finch. Lane. Bridgeman.
 Keggeworth, co. Notts; 232.
 Keith, Robert, of Craig, letters from; 412, 413.
 Keldersbach; 401.
 Kelly, Cecilia; 134.
 Kempton Park, letters dated at; 383, 385.
 Kensington; 411.
   letter dated at; 82.
 Kent; 295, 321, 366, 373 note.
   Justices of; 295.
 Kent, William; 528.
 Kentler, Mons.; 151.
 Kenton, battle of; 537.
 Ketler, le Sr.; 134.
 Ketterich, Mr.; 28.
 Kettering (Keteryng, Ketereynge, Kettinge), co. Northampton; 215, 221, 224, 233, 259, 268, 311, 318, 329, 332.
   Lecture; 275.
 Key, Mr.; 414.
 Keys, Sir John; 196.
 Kildare:
   Earl of, (1599); 28.
   Lady, (1617); 189.
 Killeboeuf; 200.
 Killigrew (Killigrei, Killigrey):
   Mrs. Joel, letters from; 36, 39.
   — her daughter Seimour; 39.
   Mr.; 39.
   Sir William; 85.
   — his son-in-law. See Leigh, Sir John.

Kimbolton (Kimolton), [co. Hunts]; 254, 266, 267, 282, 315.
   letter dated at; 261.
 King, Dr. See Chichester, Bishop of.
 King's Bench, Court of; 250, 273, 328, 332.
   Chief Justice of. See Chief Justice, Lord.
 Kingsbery pastures, tithes of; 214.
 Kingsley, William, D.D., Archdeacon of Canterbury; 211, 212.
 Kingsthorpe, [co. Nhampt.], minister of. See Hill.
 Kingston, John, of Grimsby Magna, his daughter Elizabeth, wife of Frescheville Holles. See Holles.
 Kingstone, Lord, (1639); 284.
 Kingsegg (Kiningsegg), Count; 405, 407.
 Kinsmall, Lady, (1649); 311.
 Kirkady, William, Laird of Grange; 23.
 Kirkham, Mr.; 123, 124.
 Kittson, —, a Somersetshire man; 232.
 Kiveton (Kniveton), Baron. See Latimer.
 Knatchpole, Captain; 335.
 Knightley (Knightlie, Knyghtley):
   Sir Richard; 226, 233.
   — letter from; 225.
   — letters to; 224, 230.
   Richard; 258 note, 259, 262.
   Sir Valentine; 237.
 Knollys (Knowles):
   William, Lord; 179, 230, 243.
   — letter from; 117.
   Thomas, letters from; 55, 58, 61, 67.
 Knowle (Knole), [co. Kent]; 390.
   letters dated at; 390, 391.
 Knowles:
   Lord. See Knollys.
   Capt.; 393-395.
   Admiral Charles, letters from; 411.
   Gilbert, letter from; 372.
 Königsberg (Koningberg), (in Brandenburg), letter dated at; 107.
 Königsmark (Coningsmarke), Charles John, Count; 335.
   — letter from; 336.
   — letter to; 336.
 Konismar, Mr.; 444.
 Kyme, Nightingale; 528.

L

La Bauderie (La Boderie), Mons. de; 46, 64, 92.
 Lace, point de Venise, Flanders; 471.
 La Chastre, Marshal de; 200.
 La Croix, —; 400.
 Ladds, Mr.; 304.
 La Fontaine, M. de, letter from; 38.

- Lake :
 Sir Arthur, (son of Sir Thomas) ; 255.
 Lady, (wife of Sir Thomas) ; 113.
 Sir Thomas, afterwards Secretary ; 104, 112, 113, 119, 128, 131, 140 note, 145, 164, 165, 184, 196, 208, 255.
 — letters from ; 78, 133, 144, 149, 190, 191, 195.
 — letters to ; 20, 115, 162.
- La Marck, Count de ; 96.
- Lambard :
 John ; 378.
 Tho, of Sen'oke ; 377, 378.
 Thomas ; 378.
 William ; 377, 378.
- Lambert (Lambart), Mr. ; 28, 50, 51, 64, 106.
- Lambeth ; 21, 205, 243, 274, 378.
 letters dated at ; 51, 56.
 South, letter dated at ; 159.
- Lancaster, Duchy of, Chancellor of ; 140, 252, 332.
- Lancaster, Sir James, his Company ; 169.
- Lane :
 —, cousin of William Montagu ; 321, 325, 329.
 — his sister Foster ; 321.
 Charles ; 286.
 G. ; 540.
 Montagu, letter from ; 215.
 Capt. Par ; 230.
 Ralph ; 219.
 Sir Richard, the Prince's Attorney, afterwards Lord Keeper, 299, 300.
 — letter to ; 534.
 Ro. ; 293.
 Sir Robert, letter from ; 224.
- Langley ; 216.
- Langor Church ; 317.
- Langres, Bishop of ; 462.
- Languedoc, States of ; 513.
- La Noue, Mons. de ; 187.
- Laon, Bishop of ; 513.
- La Rochelle (Rochell) ; 256, 266, 456, 511.
 the judge of ; 30.
- La Sabliere, Mr. De ; 216.
- Lasore, Mr. ; 147.
- Lasselles, Bryan ; 223.
- Lassells, Mr. ; 100.
- Latimer :
 [Sir Thomas Osborne, q.v.], Baron [Osborne of] Kiveton (Kniveton), Viscount, afterwards Earl of Danby, q.v. ; 320 and note.
 Lord, son of 1st Earl of Danby ; 326.
 Lady, daughter[-in-law] of Earl of Danby ; 323.
- La Tremouille, Duc de ; 389.
- Lauderdale, [John Maitland, 2nd] Earl of ; 331.
- Lauraine, Chevalier de. See Lorraine.
- Lanzun (Lozun, Lozune), Mr. de, [Antonine, Count of], otherwise Pequillon ; 502, 504, 506, 509.
- Lanzun—cont.
 — his proposed marriage to Mademoiselle d'Orleans ; 490, 491, 492.
 — his disgrace ; 510.
- La Valier, Mademoiselle ; 432.
- La Valiere, Duchess de ; 496.
- La Warre, Lord, (1611) ; 103.
- Lawes, Abraham ; 232.
- Lawson :
 Mrs. ; 366.
 Mrs. Elizabeth. See Plunkett.
- Laye, Mr., an engineer ; 396.
- L'Aysné, Mr. ; 445.
- Layton, Sir Ellis ; 422, 445.
- Lazara ; 398.
- Lea :
 Sir Henry ; 97.
 Sir Robert ; 97.
- Le Clerk, Jehan ; 102.
- Le Court, Jehan ; 30.
- Ledingtowne, Laird of. See Metland.
- Ledsam, Thomas, petition of ; 208.
- Le Duc, Mr. ; 483.
- Lee :
 Commodore ; 411.
 Hugh, consul at Lisbon ; 184.
 — letter to ; 102.
 — appointment by, of assistants ; 180.
- Leedes :
 Sir John ; 164, 165.
 Lady, wife of Sir John ; 164, 165.
- Leeke, Serjeant ; 346.
- Leeward Islands, the ; 411, 481, 486.
- Le Feure, Mons. ; 219.
- Legg, Mr. ; 335.
- Legge, Commodore ; 411.
- Leghorn ; 133.
- Legouier (Legoniere), General Sir John ; 404, 406, 408.
- Leicester :
 [Robert Dudley], Earl of ; 224, 225.
 — heirs of ; 146.
 [Robert Sydney, 2nd] Earl of, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland ; 295, 298, 305, 539.
 Countess of, (1627) ; 266.
 [Philip Sydney, 3rd] Earl of ; 329.
 Earl of, (after 1744), letter from ; 217.
- Leicestershire ; 306.
 under-sheriff of ; 306.
- Leigh :
 Sir John ; 90.
 Tho. ; 251.
- Leinster, in Ireland ; 291.
- Leith (Lyth) ; 224, 282.
- Leitrim, county of, (O'Rourke's country) ; 75, 76.
- Le Neve, John, of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields ; 309 note.
- Lennox, George Henry ; 406 note.
- Lenox :
 Matthew, Earl of ; 23.
 E., Duke of, (1605-17) ; 52, 164, 242, 243, 251.
 Duke of. See also Richmond.
- Lenthall, Mr. Speaker ; 296.

- Lerma, Duke of; 163, 172, 183, 187.
 — his confessor. See Francisco.
 Le Roy, —, a printer; 188.
 Lerson, Mons., letter from; 374
 Lesieur (Lessieur), Sir Stephen; 90, 91,
 94, 95, 115, 117, 119, 121 note, 133,
 152 note.
 Leslie, Normand, Master of Rothes; 23.
 Lestock, Commodore; 396.
 Le Tellier, Mr.; 426, 458, 462, 510, 523.
 Lettowers, the. See Lithuanians.
 Leniston, Alexander; 140.
 Levant, the; 210, 358.
     pirates molesting the trade of; 197.
 Leveson (Lewson), John; 222.
 Levingston:
     James; 62.
     Mr.; 62.
 Levinus, Mr. See Munck.
 Levy, Anne de, letter from; 37.
 Lewis, Major; 393.
 Leyden, Theological College at; 110.
 Lichfield, [co. Staff.]; 232.
 Lichfield, Lord, (1685); 342.
 Lidiyard, Francis; 231.
 Liege; 188.
     letter dated at; 362.
     English Jesuits at; 188.
 Liegeois, the; 199.
 Liehrort (Lierord, Lihrtort), letters dated at; 74, 80, 82, 86, 88, 97.
 Lifden trial, the; 331.
 Ligny, Prince de; 427, 428, 430, 456,
     458, 468, 469, 472, 500.
 Lille (L'Ille, Lile); 108, 449.
 Lillo; 52, 64, 413.
 Limcon Haven, in Ireland; 194.
 Lime. See Lyme.
 Limerick; 350.
 Limerick:
     Lord, (1739); 392.
     Lady, (1739); 392.
 Lincoln; 302, 529.
     letters dated at; 189, 192.
     Aldermen of; 528.
     trained bands of; 529.
 Lincoln:
     [Theophilus Clinton, 4th] Earl of; 294.
     [Henry Fiennes Clinton, 7th] Earl
     of; 373.
 Lincoln, Bishop of:
     [John] Williams, Lord Keeper; 256,
     257, 289.
     [Thomas] Winniff; 291.
 Lincolnshire; 297, 304.
     Charles II.'s warrants for a voluntary contribution from well-affected subjects in, (1649); 535, 536.
     commission of array in; 528.
     commissioners of array in, appointment by; 530.
     commission of inquiry concerning treasons, etc., in; 530.
     M.P. for. See Wray, Sir John.
     regiments for the service of Charles
     II. to be raised in, (1649); 533, 534.
     sheriff of; 528. See also Heron.
     trained bands of; 529.
 Lindsey, division of, co. Linc.; 536.
 Lindsey (Lynsey):
     [Robert Bertie], previously Lord
     Willoughby of Eresby, q.v., 1st Earl of, Lord Great Chamberlain; 268, 269, 277, 293, 300, 304, 305.
     — commissions by; 526, 527.
 Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Edward,
     1st Lord Montagu, q.v., afterwards
     Countess of; 218, 269, 277, 284,
     293, 299, 300.
     — letters from; 285, 291, 296, 297,
     299, 309, 311.
     — her son Paston; 310.
 Montagu Bertie, q.v., Lord Willoughby of Eresby, q.v., 2nd Earl of,
     Lord Great Chamberlain; 218, 309, 528-530, 539, 540.
     — letter from; 311.
 [Robert Bertie, 3rd] Earl of, Lord
     Great Chamberlain; 325, 328.
 Linke (Link), in the Netherlands; 458, 479.
 Linlithgow (Lithgo); 23.
 Lintz, letter dated at; 152.
 Lionne (Lyon, Lyonne), Mons. de; 421,
     423, 424, 426, 427, 429, 430, 434,
     441, 444, 445, 449, 452, 457-459,
     462, 466, 473, 476, 479, 481, 484,
     485, 487, 489, 492, 494-496, 501,
     518.
     — letter from; 457.
     — his son. See Berrie, Mr. de.
 Lippe, Count de la; 404.
 Lisbon (Lisborne, Lyshona); 182, 348, 394.
     letters dated at; 180, 351, 381-384,
     386, 387.
     English Consul for. See Lee,
     Hugh.
     the people of; 381, 382.
     regulations for British ships and merchants at; 180, 181.
 Lisle; 466, 471-473, 479.
     letter dated at; 474.
 Lisle:
     [Robert Sydney], Lord; 95, 105,
     110, 119, 133, 142, 143, 145, 146,
     242, 248.
     — letters from; 56, 110, 112, 135,
     138, 143, 207.
     R.; 103.
 L'Isle, Monseigneur A. de; 144.
 Lithgo. See Linlithgow.
 Lithuania, the senators of, letter to;
     104.
 Lithuanians (Lettowers), the; 136.
 Liveries, the, surveyorship of; 250.
 Liz, Don Blass de; 397, 398.
 Lloyd, —; 319, 322, 324.
 Loans to Charles I.; 267.
 Lockhart (Lockart), Sir William; 519.
 Lodesteyn, Mr.; 122.
 Lodge, —, cousin of William Montagu;
     339.
 Loe, —; 190.
 Loftus, Archbishop, Lord Chancellor of Ireland; 232.

Lombard :

- Peter, titular Primate of Armagh ; 152-154.
 Robert ; 152, 153.
 London ; 3, 8-10, 12, 13, 15-21, 33, 35, 43, 44, 51, 53, 82, 88, 92, 96, 115, 122, 149, 151 note, 155, 161, 162, 174, 175, 183, 184, 188, 195, 196, 201, 203, 214-217, 225, 233, 239, 244, 262, 268, 270, 274, 276, 279, 297, 299, 301, 302, 304, 309, 311, 316, 330, 333, 340, 344-346, 349, 350, 353-355, 363, 364, 368, 372, 373, 378, 381, 389, 391, 392, 413, 440, 466, 472, 473, 482, 509, 533.
 letters dated at ; 34, 36, 43, 49-53, 56, 59, 62, 64, 82, 85-87, 90, 91, 93, 95, 98, 99, 101, 106, 107, 109, 110, 115-117, 119, 123-125, 128-130, 132, 141, 176, 203, 204, 226, 228, 269, 276, 306, 314, 315, 323, 331, 346, 349, 361, 388, 415, 420, 520, 522-524, 532, 533.
 Aldermen of ; 31, 286, 346.
 Chancellor of. See Edwards. citizens of (Londoners) ; 287, 289.
 city of (the City) ; 179, 277, 286, 290, 304, 334, 417, 531.
 — the companies of ; 346.
 — forces levying, etc., against Charles I. ; 527.
 French players in ; 369-371.
 gold-wire-drawers in ; 208.
 the livery-men of ; 373.
 Lord Mayor of ; 31, 55, 90, 240, 286, 334, 347.
 Lord Mayor's show ; 312.
 the militia (new and old) of ; 300.
 Recorder of ; 254, 286, 288, 325.
 Sheriffs, election of ; 373.
 London, places in or near :
 Albemarle House, letter dated at ; 336.
 Aldersgate Street ; 257.
 Arundel House ; 204.
 Bedford House, letter dated at ; 318.
 Bethnal (Beednell) Green ; 174.
 Billingsgate ; 96.
 Burlington Gardens ; 217.
 Charing Cross, letter dated at ; 232.
 the Charterhouse ; 52.
 — Governor of ; 391.
 Clarendon House ; 322.
 Clerkenwell (Clathenwell) ; 264, 340, 344.
 the Cockpit ; 391, 392.
 — commissions dated at ; 540.
 Conduit Street, letters dated at ; 408, 409.
 Cornhill ; 372.
 — letter dated at ; 36.
 Covent Garden ; 372.
 — letter dated at ; 311.
 Cranborn House ; 50.
 — letter dated at ; 55.
 Doctors' Commons ; 377.
 Essex House ; 236.
 the Exchange ; 334, 335.
 Exchange Alley ; 888.

London—cont.

- Exeter House in the Strand, letters dated at ; 239, 245, 247.
 Finsbury (Finchbury) Fields ; 300.
 the Fleet prison, letter dated at ; 374.
 Fleet Street ; 376.
 the Gatehouse ; 208, 345.
 Goring House ; 520.
 Grays Inn (Greis Inne) ; 240.
 — letter dated at ; 225.
 Grocers' (Grossers') Hall ; 302.
 Grosvenor Street ; 217.
 the Guildhall ; 286, 347.
 — the Common Council at ; 303.
 the Haymarket, the new theatre in ; 369, 371.
 Holborn (Holeborne), letters dated at ; 112, 116, 118, 140.
 — Conduit ; 188.
 — "The Swan" in ; 232.
 the Inner Temple ; 240.
 Islington (Easlington) ; 175, 232.
 King's Bench prison, letter dated at ; 380.
 Lincoln's Inn ; 240.
 — the Reader of ; 321.
 — Fields ; 304, 336.
 Grange, letter dated at ; 127.
 Little Britain (Lyttell Bretton), near Aldersgate Street ; 214.
 Little Queen Street ; 215.
 Little St. Bartholomew's ; 150, 276.
 Lombard (Lumbard, Lumbert) Street ; 334.
 — letters dated from ; 239, 240, 242, 243, 247, 249, 250.
 London House, letter dated at ; 378.
 Long Acre ; 540.
 Lothbury ; 51.
 — letter dated at ; 39.
 Marlborough House ; 380.
 the Marshalsea (Marshalseys) ; 208.
 Merchant Tailors' Hall ; 289.
 the Middle Temple ; 221.
 — letters dated at ; 225, 234, 236, 239, 240, 242, 243, 247, 250.
 — rating for a Maske in ; 240.
 Montague House ; 345, 350, 411.
 Mount Edgumbe House ; 217.
 Newcastle House, letter dated at ; 411.
 Newgate ; 313.
 — prison, the prisoners at ; 289.
 — Sessions ; 322, 324.
 Newport Street ; 436, 479.
 Northampton House ; 214.
 Northumberland House ; 334.
 the Old Bailey ; 82.
 — letter dated at ; 97.
 the Opera House ; 369-371.
 Park Street ; 217.
 Philpot Lane, letter dated at ; 180.
 Queen's House, letter dated at ; 416.
 Red Lion Street ; 217.
 the Rolls, chapel of ; 378.
 Royal Exchange (Ædes Greshamie), letter dated at ; 60.
 Russell House, letter dated at ; 224.
 Russell Street, letter dated at ; 347.

London—cont.

- St. Bartholomew's; 126, 196, 274.
 — letters dated at; 203, 206.
 St. Dunstan's; 281.
 St. Giles; 350.
 St. Paul's Cathedral; 64, 260.
 — Churehyard; 372.
 Salisbury House, letters dated at; 74, 81.
 the Savoy, letters dated at; 33, 31, 285, 287, 288, 307.
 Scotland Yard, letters dated at; 388.
 Serjeants' Inn; 255, 305.
 Smithfield, East; 229.
 — the "Ram" in; 365.
 Somerset House; 217, 246, 250, 345.
 — letter dated at; 377.
 Southgate; 214.
 South House, letter dated at; 344.
 the Steelyard (Styllard); 90.
 Stonehouse; 217.
 the Strand; 372.
 — letter dated from; 235.
 the Temple; 285, 289, 350.
 — letters dated at; 276, 278, 280, 282, 284.
 Temple Bar; 174, 372. the Tower; 139, 222, 247, 280, 286, 288, 289, 295, 296, 522.
 — letters dated at; 189.
 — Governor of; 354, 373.
 — Lieutenant of; 139.
 — Church; 290, 291.
 Tower Hill; 371.
 Warwick House, letters dated at; 281, 312.
 Whitefriars; 214.
 Winchester House, letters dated at; 252-254.
 Worcester House, letter dated at; 208.
 York house; 214.
 — letters dated at; 53, 86, 255.
- London, Bishop of; 217.
 Richard [Bancroft], letter from; 35.
 [John] King; 125, 140.
 [George Montaigne]; 211.
 William Laud; 274. Afterwards
 Archbishop of Canterbury, q.v.
- Londonderry; 274, 286.
 Lougeville, Duke de; 457.
 Longford, county of; 75, 77.
 Longton, Mr.; 54.
 Longueville:
 Duke of; 201.
 Mr.; 325.
 William; 219.
- Lords, House of, (the Higher or Upper House); 246, 260, 261, 286, 288-291, 293-304, 306, 313, 326, 328-331, 333, 353, 377, 416, 417.
 — trial of a peer in, for murder found by a Coroner's inquest, 328.
 — trial of peers in; 330.
- Loretto; 154.
 Lorraine (Lauraine); 207, 407, 414, 483, 485, 486, 493, 496, 498, 499.
 Duke of; 207, 456, 482, 483, 486, 492, 493, 498.

Lorraine (Lauraine)—cont.

- Charles, Duke of; 187.
 Prince of; 428, 429.
 Prince Charles of, (1670) 485, 486.
 Prince Charles of, (1743); 402, 404-407.
 — his army; 404, 407.
 Chevalier de; 425, 437, 450, 453, 462-464, 466, 470, 471, 475.
- Louain; 155.
 Louisbourg, letters dated at; 411.
 Louth, co. Linc., Warden of; 528.
 Louther; 193.
 Louvain; 158.
 letter dated at; 22.
 English Jesuitical College at; 188.
- Louvois (Louvoy, Lovoy), Mr. de; 427, 442, 458, 460, 461, 499, 502, 503-506.
- Love:
 Captain; 346.
 Ed.; 95.
 William; 129.
 — his brother; 129.
- Lovelace, William; 67.
 Lovoy, M. de. See Louvois.
- Low Countries or Netherlands, the; 24, 33, 36, 39, 49, 68, 71, 72, 74, 75, 78, 79, 92, 96, 98, 100, 106, 122, 143, 147, 150, 158, 189, 193, 202, 207, 225, 241, 242, 270, 276, 535.
 See also Netherlands. United Provinces. cautionary towns in; 27, 34, 179.
 — surrender of; 177.
 English Agent in, letter to; 33.
 — See also Gilpin.
 English companies and soldiers in; 38, 40, 62, 64, 89, 100.
 English levies for service in; 225.
 Irish companies and soldiers in; 154, 155.
 Lieutenant-General of English forces in. See Leicester, Robert Dudley, 1st Earl of.
 Government of; 476.
 prohibition of inaportation of cloths into; 148, 151, 249, 270.
 project for a defensive League between England, France, and; 72.
 troops in towns of; 178.
 wars of; 81.
- Lowden:
 Marquis of, (1642); 298.
 Lord, (1743); 404.
- Lowe, Sir Thomas; 122, 238.
- Lowther:
 Brigadier, his regiment; 399.
 Col.; 394.
- Lozun. See Lauzun.
- Lubeck; 159.
 Lucerne; 186.
 Ludwig, the Landgrave; 152.
 Luines, Mons. de; 200.
 Lumley, Lord, (1685); 341.
 Lummis, Mr.; 380.
 Luna, Don Sancho de; 182.
 Luneberg (Lunemburch); 95.

- Luntius, Jobannes ; 124, 140, 148.
 — letters from ; 117, 146-148, 152, 155, 159.
 Lutherans ; 172.
 Lutterworth carrier. See Peatling, Tho.
 Lydius, John ; 201.
 Lymbry, Mr. ; 322.
 Lyme (Lime), co. Dorset ; 343.
 Lymington, Viscount ; 219.
 — letter from ; 217.
 Lyndsay, Lieut. ; 105.
 Lynn Regis, co. Norfolk ; 531, 532.
 Lynsey, Countess of. See Lindsey.
 Lyon, Mr. ; 319.
 Lyonne, Mr. de. See Lionne.
 Lyons, 2, 3, 462.
 the ordinary of ; 155.
 thread ; 28.
 Lysbona. See Lisbon.
 Lyster, Richard, Lord Chief Baron ; 221.
 Lyte :
 Henry ; 414 note.
 Mr. ; 414, 416, 417.
 Lyttleton, Lord Keeper ; 289, 295, 296, 298, 300-302, 304, 306.

M

- Macalif, Cecilia ; 134.
 McBean, Alexander ; 219.
 McCoghlan's (McGoghlan's) country, (in Ireland) ; 75, 77.
 McGeoghegan's country, (in Ireland) ; 75, 77.
 Machell :
 Marmaduke ; 175.
 Mrs. ; 175.
 Madame. See Orleans, Duchess of.
 Mademoiselle. See Orleans.
 Madrid ; 21, 172, 206, 454, 479, 493, 509, 512.
 letters dated at ; 71, 182-185, 187, 191, 192, 194.
 Magellan, Straits of, ('fretus Magallanicus') ; 147.
 Magelott, Mr. de ; 499.
 Maine (Main), the river ; 401-403.
 Mainet, Josua, notary ; 533.
 Majorca (Mayorca), island of, consul in. See Carr, John.
 Malaga ; 182.
 Malefonti, M. de ; 31.
 Mallett, Judge ; 295.
 Mallory, Mr. ; 295.
 Malmesbury, [co. Wilts] ; 350 and note.
 Malpas ; 321.
 Malré, Mons., of Zealand ; 203.
 Malta ; 346.
 Maltsters, excessive number of ; 275.
 Malven, Sieur de ; 93.

Manchester :

- Sir Henry Montagu, q.v., 1st Viscount Mandeville, q.v., 1st Earl of, Lord President, afterwards Lord Privy Seal ; 276, 278-280, 284, 288, 293, 297 note, 303-305.
 — letters from ; 264, 266-275, 278, 279, 281-283, 289, 294, 299, 306.
 — letters to ; 263, 271, 279, 285, 295, 300.
 — his cousin Christopher ; 282.
 — his sister Charles ; 269.
 Countess of ; 278, 284, 285.
 Margaret, Countess of, (third wife of 1st Earl) ; 281, 321, 323.
 Edward Montagu, previously styled Viscount Mandeville, q.v., 2nd Earl of, Lord Chamberlain ; 218, 420, 423, 450, 540, 541.
 — letters from ; 308, 312.
 — letter to ; 307.
 — Lord Chamberlain of the Household ; 315 note.
 [Robert Montagu, 3rd] Earl of ; 325, 326, 336.
 Countess of, (1682) ; 336, 338.
 Countess of, (1688) ; 347.
 Charles Montagu, 4th Earl, afterwards 1st Duke of ; 218, 351.
 Mandevil, Mr. ; 86.
 Mandeville :
 Sir Henry Montagu, q.v., Baron Kimbolton, Viscount, Lord Treasurer, afterwards Earl of Manchester, q.v. ; 255, 261.
 — letters from ; 260, 261.
 — letter to ; 262.
 — his wife ; 261.
 Edward Montagu, q.v., styled Viscount, afterwards 2nd Earl of Manchester, q.v. ; 218, 266, 272, 278-282, 284, 285, 289, 303.
 — letter from ; 281.
 — letter to ; 292.
 — his wife ; 266.
 Maners :
 Sir George ; 114.
 Mr. ; 28.
 Mangot, Mons. ; 200.
 Manley :
 De La Rivière, letter from ; 357.
 Sir Roger ; 357 note.
 Manners :
 Lady Betty, (1664) ; 315.
 Lady Dorothy, (1664) ; 315.
 Frances, daughter of 1st Baron Montagu, wife of John, afterwards Countess of Rutland, q.v. ; 218, 281.
 John, afterwards 8th Earl of Rutland, q.v. ; 218.
 — letter from ; 281.
 Mannsfeeld, Count ; 256, 260.
 — his army ; 258.
 Mansell, Sir Robert ; 84, 103.
 Manton, Mr., his congregation ; 321.
 March, [Charles Lennox, afterwards 3rd Duke of Richmond], Earl of ; 407.
 Marchand, Mons. ; 387.

- Marcillae, Prince de; 509.
 Marcillye, Mr.; 427.
 Margate (Margett), [co. Kent]; 125.
   letter dated at; 195.
 Markam, Mr.; 95.
 Markham:
   —; 191.
   —, of Olorton; 329.
   Sir Griffin; 114, 126, 159.
   — letter from; 92.
   Sir Robert; 328, 528, 529.
 Marlborough:
   [James Ley, 1st] Earl of, Lord
   Treasurer; 266 note, 268.
   [John Churchill, q.v., 1st] Duke of;
   353, 355, 359, 362, 375, 376, 386.
   — letters from; 351, 352, 356, 357.
   — an epitaph on; 372.
   Sarah, Duchess of; 351, 353, 367, 372,
   377, 386.
   — letters from; 352-356, 366, 379,
   380.
   — statement by, as to bills for lace,
   etc., for the Queen; 360.
   [Charles Spencer, 3rd] Duke of; 404.
   — letters from; 216, 408.
   — letters to; 385, 405.
 Marmoutier, abbey of; 200.
 Marolles, —, a Frenchwoman; 379.
 Marseilles; 456, 463.
   letter dated at; 521.
 Marshal, Lord; 281.
 Marshall, John, of Berwick; 197.
 Marsin, Mr.; 438.
 Marta, Dr., letter from; 182.
 Martials, (in Paris); 422.
 Martin:
   Dr.; 128.
   George, petition of; 159.
 Martinique (Martania), island of; 394,
 411.
 Martinthorpe Lodge, [co. Rutl.]; 215.
 Mary I., Queen:
   letter from; 222.
   letter to; 222.
 Mary, Princess, daughter of James I.; 53
note.
 Mary of Modena, Queen Consort of James II., previously Duchess of York, q.v.; 347, 348.
 Maryland; 385, 389.
 Marymonte; 158, 194.
   letter dated at; 134.
 Masham, [Sir Samuel, 1st] Lord, letter
 from; 216.
 Mason, Roger; 275.
 Mathew, Anthony; 207.
 Mattysen, George; 60.
 Mannsell, John; 312.
 Maupeon, Mons. de; 200.
 Maurice:
   Prince (Count). See under Orange.
   Mr.; 318.
 Maurier, M. du; 134, 152, 187.
 May:
   Baptist (Bab), Keeper of the Privy
   Purse; 442 and note.
   Sir Humphrey; 196, 201, 252.
 Mayarne, Monsieur; 161.
 Maydwell:
   Godefrey; 287.
   Lawrence; 274.
 Mayence (Mentz); 401, 406.
   letter dated at; 405.
   Archbishop of; 121.
 Mayenne, Duke of (Mons. de); 199,
 201.
 Mazarin, Cardinal; 428.
 Medici, Queen Isabella de'; 208.
 Medina Sidonia, Duke of; 210.
 Mediterranean Sea, the; 133, 187, 501, 508.
   the coasts of; 79.
 Medows, Sir Sydney; 219.
 Meerman, Mr.; 516.
 Meetkerke, Adolf de, letter from; 150.
 Meinhem; 209.
 Melvill, —, Laird of Roth; 23.
 Menenz, Gen.; 401.
 Mentz. See Mayence.
 Mentzel, —; 407.
 Merchandise, English, imported into
 France; 27.
   French, exported; 28.
 Merchants, English; 33.
   — in France; 30.
 Merchants Adventurers, the Company
 of; 7, 27, 73, 74, 178, 195, 270.
   — answer of, to questions touching
   the cloth trade; 176.
   — decree of the Emperor concerning, (1610); 94.
 Merrick:
   John, letter to; 136.
   William; 136.
 Merrye, Tho.; 251.
 Mesnard, Baptiste; 30.
 Meth, —, a merchant of Cork; 154.
 Methuen, Paul, letter from; 351.
 Metland, William, of Ledingtowne; 23.
 Metz; 505.
   letter dated at; 39.
   Bishop of; 389.
 Meutas (Mewtys), Captain Sir Thomas
 66, 133.
 "Mewtaens," —; 92.
 Mexico, Gulf of; 408.
 Meziere, letter dated at; 183.
 Middelburg (Mydelburgh); 8, 48, 50, 53,
 80, 86, 90, 108, 120, 129, 203.
   letters dated at; 43, 122, 178.
   Governor of. See Lowe, Sir Thomas.
   the ordinary of; 101.
 Middlemore (Midlemore):
   Edward; 528, 531.
   Henry, letter from; 226.
 Middlesex; 229, 256.
   Lord Lieutenant of. See Albemarle,
   Duke of.
 Midleton, Capt. David; 169.
 Milan; 17, 127, 154, 182, 198.
   Duke of. See Spain, King of.
   Governor of Castle of. See Luna, Don Sancho de.
   serges of; 27.
 Milanese, the; 358.

- Mildmay (Mieldmay, Mildemaye) :
 —, master of the Jewel House; 252.
 Sir Anthony; 219, 238, 245.
 — letter from; 214.
 Sir Walter, letter from; 226.
 Militia, the; 291, 292, 295, 296, 298, 299,
 302, 304, 305, 311.
 Ordinance of; 304.
 petition about; 290.
 Miller (or Willmer), —; 232.
 Millet (Millett, Myllett) :
 Mr.; 86, 141.
 William; 43.
 — letter from; 43.
 Millidge, Col.; 399.
 Mills, Richard; 107.
 Minorca; 358, 399, 411.
 Minshull, Richard, letter from; 308.
 Mirande, P.; 219.
 Mississippi, the river; 408.
 Mohammad Arrathuth; 365.
 Mohammad Benali Abgali, letters from;
 365, 377.
 Mohun, [Charles, 4th] Lord; 323 and
note.
 Molina, Conte de; 486, 510.
 Moloy's country. See O'Moloy's country.
 Moluccas (Molocus), the; 247.
 Mompe; 368.
 Monarchy men, the five; 312.
 Monceaux, letters dated at; 42.
 Monck :
 Captain; 322.
 Christopher; 350 note.
 Frances; 309 note.
 — letter from; 308.
 — her brother Nick; 308.
 — her sister Monck; 308.
 General, afterwards 1st Duke of Albemarle, q.v., letter to; 308.
 Henry; 350 note.
 Mr.; 336. family of; 215.
 Mondtheim; 359.
 Monglas, Monsieur; 46.
 Monmouth (Mounmoth) :
 Henry Carey, 2nd Earl of; 302.
 — his daughter. See Cary, Lady
 Elizabeth.
 [James] Scott, Duke of; 328, 329,
 338, 343, 503.
 — his regiment; 511-514.
 Duchess of, (1688); 348.
 Mons; 400.
 Monsieur. See Orleans, Duke of.
 Monson, Sir John; 528, 529.
 Mont (Monts), Duchy of, in Germany;
 129, 141.
 Montagu (Mountacute, Mountagu, Mountague, Mountegue, Mowntagewe) :
 —, letters to; 222, 234.
 —, who shot himself at "the bagnio";
 216.
 Ann, Lady, (third wife of 1st Baron);
 218, 309 and note.
 Ann, daughter of Sir Ralph Win-wood, Lady, wife of 2nd Baron; 1,
 218, 273, 274 and note, 279.
 Montagu—cont.
 Anna, Lady, wife of Sir Henry; 217.
 Anne, Lady, 2nd wife of Sir Sydney;
 218.
 Lady Anne, daughter of 1st Duke of, (afterwards Lady Anne Popham,
q.v.); 218.
 Cecily, wife of Sir Edward (1); 217.
 Sir Charles, fifth son of Sir Edward
 (2); 217, 239, 242-244, 251, 253,
 255, 261.
 — letters from; 239, 240, 242-244,
 247-250, 252-258, 260.
 — letter to; 252.
 — his nephew Ray; 253.
 Charles, afterwards Baron and Earl of Halifax, q.v.; 218.
 Christopher, third son of 1st Baron;
 218.
 Dr., letter from; 8.
 E., Lord; 219.
 Edward, afterwards Sir Edward (1),
 Lord Chief Justice; 217.
 — letters to; 220-222 (Lord M.)
 — royal licence to, to wear his bonnet in the king's presence; 220.
 Sir Edward (2), High Sheriff of Northamptonshire; 226.
 — letters to; 213, 214, 223-228,
 231, 232, 236.
 Edward, afterwards Sir Edward (3), afterwards 1st Baron Montagu of Boughton; 214, 218, 253, 297
note, 306.
 — letters from; 225, 228, 230, 231,
 238, 240, 249, 251, 252, 256, 258,
 259, 262, 267, 271, 274, 276, 277,
 279, 284, 285, 292, 295, 300,
 307.
 — letters to; 214, 224 (?), 231, 233-
 250, 252-261, 263-276, 278-297,
 299-308.
 — his daughter. See below Elizabeth.
 — his son baptized; 249.
 — paper by, stating his reasons for not refusing to contribute to the loan to Charles I.; 265.
 Edward, afterwards 2nd Baron Mon-tagu of Boughton; 1, 218, 273, 274
and note, 297 note, 304, 312, 435, 475, 480, 497, 521.
 — letters from; 276, 279, 304.
 — letters to; 215, 276, 308, 309,
 311, 312, 314-333, 335, 337, 338.
 Edward, son of 1st Lord Mandeville, afterwards styled Viscount Mandeville, q.v., afterwards 2nd Earl of Manchester, q.v.; 262.
 Edward, eldest son of 2nd Baron;
 218, 465 and note.
 Edward, afterwards; 1st Earl of Sandwich, q.v.; 218.
 Edward, grandson by Hon. Charles
 Montagu of 1st Earl of Sandwich;
 218.
 Elizabeth, Lady, wife of Sir Edward (2); 217, 251, 252.

Montagu—cont.

- Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Edward (3), married to Lord Willoughby of Eresby; 214. See also Lindsey, Countess of.
- Elizabeth (Betty), daughter of William Montagu, afterwards Elizabeth Drake, q.v.; 313 and note, 321.
- Elizabeth, daughter of 2nd Baron, afterwards Elizabeth Harvey, q.v.; 218, 320 note.
- Lady Elizabeth (Wriothesley), Countess Dowager of Northumberland, Countess of, wife of Ralph, 1st Earl afterwards Duke of; 218, 320, 325, 352 note, 334, 335, 338, 361.
- letters to; 340, 342, 344.
- Frances, daughter of 1st Baron. See Manners.
- George, fifth son of 1st Earl of Manchester; 218, 294, 295, 321.
- letters from; 292, 297, 309, 326.
- his niece Herbert; 326.
- George Brudenell, 4th Earl of Cardigan, q.v., afterwards 1st Duke of; 218.
- Henry, afterwards Sir Henry, Serjeant-at-law, Lord Chief Justice, afterwards 1st Viscount Mandeville, q.v., and 1st Earl of Manchester, q.v.; 217, 218, 239, 241, 244, 248, 250–252, 254, 255.
- letters from; 231, 243–245, 253, 254.
- James, Dean of the Chapel Royal, successively Bishop of Bath and Wells and of Winchester; 217, 238–244, 247, 248, 251, 253, 263.
- letters from; 202, 237, 241, 243, 252.
- letters to; 240, 249, 251.
- James, third son of 1st Earl of Manchester; 218.
- letter from; 311.
- Sir James, Lord Chief Baron; 218.
- John, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, letter from; 339.
- John, Dean of Durham, son of the 1st Earl of Sandwich; 218.
- John, styled Lord Monthermer, afterwards 2nd Duke of Montagu; 1, 213, 346 note, 349 note, 351, 353–357, 360–363, 365, 385, 411, 413.
- letters from; 217, 367, 388.
- letters to; 216, 217, 357, 359, 360, 362, 364–389, 392–394, 396–414.
- Master-General of the Ordnance; 410.
- his regiment; 410, 412.
- his regiment of Carabineers; 409.
- his regiment of Dragoons; 410.
- Lady, (? date), letter to; 215.
- Mary, Lady, wife of Sir Charles; 217.
- Mary, wife of Sir James, Lord Chief Baron; 218.

Montagu—cont.

- Lady Mary (née Churchill, q.v.), wife of John, styled Lord Monthermer, afterwards 2nd Duke of; 356, 365, 367, 374, 377, 382, 384, 404, 414.
- letters from; 367, 368.
- letters to; 357, 361–363, 367, 411.
- Lady Mary (afterwards Brudenell, q.v.), daughter of 2nd Duke of, 218.
- Mr.; 347.
- letter to; 213.
- Ralph, afterwards 3rd Baron Montagu of Boughton, created (1689) 1st Earl of Montagu, and (1705) 1st Duke of Montagu, sometime English Ambassador to France; 218, 320, 326, 329, 332 note, 334, 346 note, 349, 361, 373 note, 446, 480, 495, 509.
- letters from; 314, 331, 350, 430, 435, 453, 454, 463, 480, 501.
- letters from, to Lord Arlington; 420–523 passim.
- letters to; 215, 216, 351–356, 418, 457, 523, 524.
- his chaplain in France. See Coale, Mr.
- Roger, second son of Sir Edward (1); 217.
- Simon, third son of Sir Edward (1); 217, 239, 245.
- Sydney, afterwards Sir Sydney, 7th son of Sir Edward (2); 217, 218, 248, 250, 252, 253, 266, 283.
- letters from; 234, 236, 239, 240, 242, 243, 247, 250, 251, 253.
- letter to 255.
- Walter, afterwards Sir Walter, second son of Sir Edward (2); 217, 225, 247, 249.
- his wife; 247.
- Walter, second son of 1st Earl of Manchester, abbot of St. Martin's, near Pontoise; 266, 270, 272, 313, 418, 423, 462, 484, 488, 495, 497, 498.
- letters from; 419, 445, 461, 480, 495, 497, 499, 500.
- declaration by; 310.
- William, fifth son of Sir Edward (1); 217.
- letters to; 251, 253.
- William, second son of 1st Baron, Lord Chief Baron; 218, 281, 282, 291, 292, 298, 309, 326.
- letters from; 265, 276, 278, 280, 282–290, 293–295, 297, 299–305, 309, 312, 314–325, 327–330, 332, 333, 335, 337, 338.
- his aunt Gooday; 320.
- his aunt Mountagu; 323, 338.
- his cousin Bridges; 318.
- his cousin Charles. See Bertie, Charles.
- his cousin George; 339.
- his cousin Mountagu; 332.
- his cousin William; 333.

- Montagu—cont.
 — his daughter; 334.
 — his daughter Montagu; 325.
 — his son; 333, 334.
 — his wife; 312, 316, 319, 325, 338.
 Winwood; 346 note, 351.
 family, the; 213.
 spelling of the name of; 331 note.
- Montaigne, near Sichein, the church of; 194.
- Montaulier, Mr. de; 490.
- Montbeliard, the affair of; 94.
- Montereau, Sieur de; 187.
- Montespan (Montespaine), Madame de; 451, 488, 506, 510, 514.
 — her sister. See Tiange, Madame de.
- Monteyrie, Count de; 476.
- Montgomery, [Philip Herbert, 1st] Earl of; 69, 86, 103, 106.
 — letter from; 69.
- Monthermer:
 Lord. See Montagu, John.
 Lady. See Montagu, Lady Mary, Duchess of.
- Montheu, Senator Guillet de; 181.
- Monti, Gregorio de'; 183.
- Montou, Sieur de; 189.
- Montpelier; 374.
- Montpensier, duchy of; 491.
- Moore. See More.
- Mora, Sr. Christoffe de; 29.
- Moravians, the; 157.
- Mordaunt (Mordant):
 Lewis, 3rd Lord; 226, 234.
 — letter from; 213.
 Henry, 4th Lord, letter from; 213.
 J[ohn, 5th] Lord; 214, 266.
 Col.; 404.
- Mordon, Lord, (1688); 347.
- More or Moore:
 —; 231.
 John; 52, 62, 97, 113, 116–118, 140, 149, 176.
 — letters from; 8, 12, 15, 16, 18–20, 49, 50, 52, 59, 64, 80, 82, 85–87, 90, 91, 95, 98, 101, 106, 107, 123–125, 128, 129, 141.
 — letter to; 111.
 Sir John; 334.
 Mr.; 36, 385, 389, 396.
 Sir Wauter Franc.; 250.
- Morea; 154.
- Morehay (Morhay); 234, 249.
 the office of; 228.
- More Place; 214.
- Moret, Count of; 200.
- Morgan:
 Sir Charles; 151.
 Grace; 217.
 Mr.; 329.
 Mr., of Kingstrove; 359.
 "Moribundus," letter from; 379.
- Morley, Lord, his heir (1599); 28.
- Morley and Mounteagle, Lord, letter from; 215.
- Morpeth:
 [Charles], Viscount (afterwards 3rd Earl of Carlisle, q.v.); 348.
 [Henry], Viscount (afterwards 4th Earl of Carlisle, q.v.); 219.
- Morris, Mr. Secretary; 539.
- Mortlake, letter dated at; 378.
- Morton:
 Lord, (1642); 298.
 Sir Albert; 160, 177.
 — letters from; 185, 193, 198.
 Col.; 394.
- Mortoun, Earl of, (1559); 23.
- Moscow; 137.
- Mosely, Sir Edward; 315.
- Mosquito shore, the; 398.
- Moulin:
 Mons. de (du); 423, 425, 428, 429, 443, 444, 446, 447.
 Sieur de; 187.
- Moulins, in France; 200.
- Mounson, Sir Thomas; 160.
- Mountjoy, Lord, Lord Deputy of Ireland; 232, 236.
- Mowbray, Lord, (1642); 302.
- Mowlsworth, Mr.; 173.
- Muffett, —, two brothers named; 179.
- Muley Ismael, King; 365.
- Mulgrave, Lord, (1685–6); 342, 345.
- Mulheim; 152, 157.
- Mulsho (Mulso):
 —; 268, 269, 271, 274, 281, 294.
 —, cousin of William Montagu; 329, 333.
 John; 221.
 Thomas, letter from; 233.
 W., letter from; 273.
 William; 219.
- Munck, Levinus (Mr. Levinus); 50, 59, 64, 85, 87, 91, 94, 98, 101, 128, 184, 207.
 — letters from; 9–11, 14, 16, 44, 93, 104, 109, 115.
- Munster, in Ireland; 29, 190, 291.
 Lord President of; 194.
- Munster, (in Germany), Bishop of, his army; 514.
 commissioners for; 156.
- Murfoote, Thomas; 232.
- Murray:
 Earl of, (1559); 23.
 John; 196.
- Murrey, Thomas; 195.
- Muscovite, the; 241.
- Muscovy. See Russia.
- Muskerry, Lord, (1735); 384.
- Musselburgh (Mussilbroughe), battle at; 23.
- Musters, Commissioners for; 235, 236.
 — See also under Northamptonshire.
- Myddelton, Robert; 130.
- Mylles, Fra.; 238.
- Myllett, William. See Millet.
- Mynckwytt, Baron of; 95.

N

- Naerden, letter dated at ; 55.
 Namur ; 405.
 Nani, Signor Battista, Venetian Ambassador in France ; 532.
 ——— letter from ; 533.
 ——— letter to ; 532.
 Nantes, Edict of ; 37.
 Nanton, Mr. ; 129.
 Napier, Capt. ; 400.
 Naples ; 153, 154.
 Narborow, — ; 347.
 Narrow Seas, the. See English Channel, the.
 Admiral of the. See Sandwich, 1st Earl of.
 Nash, — ; 390.
 Nassabowrowe, hundred of, co. Nhamp. ; 275.
 Nassau :
 Charlotte de ; 37.
 Count Henry (Henrick) of ; 119, 125, 133, 139, 151, 156, 157, 242.
 the Count Jau de ; 95.
 Count John Louis of ; 125.
 Count Maurice of. See under Orange.
 William of. See under Orange.
 the people of ; 95.
 Nassau-Dillemburg, Count William of ; 40 note.
 Nassaw-Ousing, Prince ; 406.
 Natt, Robing. See Nott.
 Naunton (Nanton), Sir Robert ; 81, 131 note, 250.
 ——— letters from ; 112, 116, 118, 140.
 Navailles, Mr. de ; 436, 443, 445.
 Navisford, hundred of, co. Nhamp. ; 275.
 Needingworth, [co. Hunts.] ; 325.
 Negus, Mr. ; 283.
 Nemegen. See Nimeguen.
 Nethercoats, Mr. ; 294.
 Netherlands, the. See Low Countries, the. United Provinces, the.
 the Spanish ; 358, 524.
 Nettlebed, [co. Oxf.] ; 232.
 "The Bell" at ; 232.
 Neuburg (Newburg, Nuburg) ; 124, 155.
 Count Palatine ('the Palatine,' Prince or Duke) of ; 94, 110, 114, 116, 119, 122, 123, 126, 127, 130, 134, 137, 142, 145, 147, 148, 150, 152, 159. packet, the ; 128.
 the Palatines of ; 101.
 (Nuburgers), the ; 125.
 Neuport. See Nieuport.
 Nevers :
 Duke de ; 192.
 ——— letter from ; 183.
 Mr. de ; 488.

- Neville :
 Sir Gervase ; 528.
 Grey ; 2.
 Sir Henry ; 1, 30, 50, 59, 87, 98, 101, 102, 105, 112-114, 116, 118, 129, 138, 140, 148.
 ——— letters from ; 31, 32, 82, 109, 111, 115, 131.
 ——— letters to ; 28, 31.
 ——— letters from and to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials ; 2-21 passim.
 ——— his secretary. See Wake, Isaac.
 Lady, wife of Sir Henry ; 28, 51 note, 85.
 Mons. de (? Sir Henry) ; 36, 38.
 Newark, battle of ; 537.
 Newark, Henry [Pierpoint], Viscount, (afterwards 2nd Earl of Kingston) ; 528-530.
 Newark-upon-Trent, letter dated at ; 191.
 Newbury, [co. Berks], battle of ; 537.
 Newcastle :
 William Cavendish, 1st Earl of ; 297, 528-530.
 Heury Cavendish, 2nd Duke of ; 329 and note.
 ——— letters from ; 334, 340, 346.
 Duchess of, (1679), letter from ; 329.
 ——— her uncle Gervise ; 330.
 [Thomas Pelham Holles, 1st] Duke of ; 374, 383-385, 411.
 Duke of, private secretary to. See Stone, Andrew.
 Newcastle-upon-Tyne ; 23, 195, 334, 410.
 Lieutenantancy and militia of, address of ; 334.
 Newcomen, Sir Robert ; 196.
 Newdigate, Sergeant ; 333.
 Newhall ; 322, 340, 349.
 letter dated at ; 317.
 Newit (near Frankfort), letter dated at ; 400.
 Newland, — ; 182.
 Newman, — ; 282.
 Newmarket ; 149, 257, 270, 273, 334, 336.
 letters dated at ; 164, 176, 177.
 Newport, letter dated at ; 310.
 corporation of ; 217.
 in the Netherlands. See Nieuport.
 Newsletter, a ; 43.
 Newton ; 213, 245, 360, 415.
 Newton :
 — ; 406.
 A., letter from ; 65.
 Thomas, letters from ; 104, 106.
 Newtown, in Ulster ; 196.
 Niccols (Nichols), Mr. ; 106.
 Nicholas (Nicoles, Nicklas, Nicolas) :
 —, Clerk of the Council ; 288.
 Sir Edward, Secretary of State ; 535, 539, 540.
 Mr. ; 291.
 P., letters from ; 349.
 Nicolai, Elogius (Eligius) ; 184, 186, 189.
 Nicolls :
 Captain ; 231.
 Edw. ; 312.
 Nielis, Laurence de. See Nyelis.

- Nieuport (Neuport, Newport); 153, 458, 479.
- Nimeguen (Nemegen); 40.
letter dated at; 355.
- Nisard, Père; 444.
- Nixon, Anthony; 25.
- Noailles, Marshal de; 405.
- Noel:
Sir Edward Noel, Baron; 191 and note.
Lord, (1681); 335.
Lady Jane; 344, 345.
- Noël, Charles; 99.
- Noell, Mrs.; 347.
- Nonconformists; 424.
See also Dissenters.
- Norcott, Major; 343.
- Norfolk, sheriff of; 532.
- Norfolk, [Thomas Howard, 5th] Duke of; 326.
- Normandy; 46, 91.
Lieutenancy of the government of; 200.
Duchy of; 159.
- Norris (Norreis, Norreys):
Lord (1605); 54.
—; 46.
Capt., the affair of his ship; 385.
Sir Edward; 80, 81.
General Sir John; 23.
Sir John; 387, 388, 393.
- North:
R., [Lord], (c. 1596); 230.
Lord, (1639); 279.
—; 269.
—, cousin of William Montagu; 332.
- Northampton; 213, 224–227, 230, 231, 234, 274, 318, 414, 415.
letters dated at; 233, 252, 259.
assizes at; 231, 276.
circuit; 336.
mayor of; 259.
mayor, recorder, aldermen, and burghesses of, letter to; 258.
- Northampton:
[Henry Howard], Earl of; 105, 106, 112, 118.
— letter from; 51.
[Spencer Compton, 2nd] Earl of; 302, 306.
[James Compton, 3rd] Earl of; 318.
— his daughter; 330.
— his daughter Mary; 341 note.
[George Compton, 4th] Earl of; 344, 345.
- Northamptonshire; 227, 239, 245, 246, 264, 310, 330, 352, 354, 360, 390, 409, 410. assize for; 306.
commission of array in; 306, 307.
commission of the peace for; 306.
commissioners for the militia in; 312.
commissioners for musters in; 230.
— letter to; 235.
- Custos Rotulorum of. See Westmorland.
- a deputation of lieutenancy in; 226.
- Northamptonshire—cont.
deputy lieutenants of; 261, 262.
— letters to; 225, 247.
— for the Ordinance in; 306.
- East division of; 236, 238.
— money due for “bores and stirkes” from; 228.
- East and West sides of, disputes between; 262.
a fee deer in; 223.
- High Sheriff of. See Montagu, Sir Edward (2).
- justices of the peace in, letter from; 269.
— letters to; 228–230, 235, 251, 275.
the king’s purveyor of; 251.
knights of the shire for; 258, 259, 262.
levies in, for service abroad and in Ireland; 225, 227, 230, 235.
parishes; 272.
a parson of; 366.
Quarter Sessions for; 268.
rating for shipmoney in; 275, 276.
recruiting in; 233.
royal progress into; 237.
sheriff of; 225, 273, 275.
— letter to; 235.
sheriff and justices of the peace in, letter to; 227.
under-sheriff of; 226.
woodwards of. See Ogle, Cuthbert. Crumpe, James.
- Northey, Sir Edward, Attorney-General; 353.
- North Road, the great; 414.
- Northumberland; 174.
gentlemen, the; 334.
- Northumberland:
[Thomas Percy, 7th] Earl of; 540.
[Henry Percy, 9th] Earl of; 236.
[Algernon Percy, 10th] Earl of, Lord Admiral; 296, 298, 301, 303, 305, 539, 540.
Josceline [Percy], 11th Earl of; 334 note, 459, 462.
Elizabeth, Countess of. See Montagu, Lady Elizabeth.
[George Fitzroy], Duke of; 340, 349.
Countess of, (1684), letter to; 215.
- Norton, letter dated at; 225.
- Norton:
John; 33, 34, 35.
Capt. W.; 40.
Sir Walter; 528, 529.
- Norwich; 399.
Prebendary of. See Talbot.
- Norwich, [George Goring, 1st] Earl of; 539.
- Norwich, Sir John; 311, 312.
- Nott (Natt, Not):
Mr.; 322–325, 338.
Robing; 454, 490, 508, 510.
- Nottingham; 346, 527.
letters dated at; 307, 334, 346.
Castle, letter dated at; 346.
sheriff of; 530.

- Nottingham :
 Charles Howard, Earl of, Lord High Admiral; 45, 52, 53, 57, 64, 237, 243, 251.
 [Daniel Finch, 2nd] Earl of; 344.
- Nottinghamshire:
 Charles II.'s warrants for a voluntary contribution from well-affected subjects in (1649); 535.
 J.P. for. See Holles, Gervase. sheriff of; 529.
- Nuburg. See Neuburg.
- Nugent, Lord, (1778); 417.
- Nuremberg, burgomaster of; 121.
- Nycholls, (? Justice); 239.
- Nyelis (Nielis), Laurence de; 60.

O

- Oakley (Okeley), [co. Nhamp.]; 223.
- Oakley, Little (Parva), [co. Nhamp.]; 251, 253.
 parsonage of; 223.
- Oath of Association, (1642); 291.
- Oatlands (Otelandes), co. Surrey, letters dated at; 36, 227.
- O'Carrolls, the; 77.
- O'Carroll's (O'Carolle's, O'Carrole's) country, (in Ireland); 75-77.
- Odime; 261.
- O'Donel, —; 29.
- O'Donnell (Daniel), Don Hugo; 134.
- O'Duune's country (in Ireland); 75, 77.
- O'Ferralls, the; 77.
- Ogle :
 —; 337.
 Colonel; 87.
 Cuthbert; 256, 257, 269.
 Sir John; 87, 98, 123.
 — letters from; 52, 57, 59, 122, 150.
 — his regiment; 125.
 Lady, (1681); 334, 335.
- Ogleby :
 John; 26.
 Mr.; 348.
 Pury, letter from; 32.
- Oglethorp :
 General, letter from; 408.
 Mr.; 389.
- O'Hara, Mr.; 363, 366.
- Oldenburg, letters dated at; 110, 111.
 Count of; 114, 117, 124.
 — letters from; 110, 114.
- Oldfield, John; 528.
- Oliiva, Dr.; 363.
- Olmes, Mathieu d'; 36.
- Olivares (Olivers), Count of; 210, 211.
- O'Meolaghlan, barony of, (in Ireland); 77.
- O'Moloy's (Moloy's, O'Moyloy's) country (in Ireland); 75-77.
- O'Neal (O'Neale) :
 —; 29, 288.
 Don Bernard; 134.
 Don Juan; 134.
- Onslow :
 General; 404.
 Sir Richard; 315.
- Opera, the; 385, 393.
 House, the. See under London.
- Oppenheim; 407.
- Orange :
 Prince of, proposal to make office of stadtholder hereditary in the family of; 412.
 Count William of Nassau, Prince of; 24, 40.
 Count (Grave) Maurice, of Nassau, Prince of, Stadtholder; 92-94, 110, 118, 119, 121, 122, 125, 133, 137, 139, 140, 149, 526.
 — letters from; 13, 63, 93, 148.
 — letters to; 10, 11, 42, 71, 84, 107, 108.
 [Frederick Henry], Prince of; 291, 292.
 [William Henry, afterwards William III., q. v., King of England], Prince of; 326, 329, 340 note, 444, 445, 524, 525.
 Princess of; 133, 138, 141, 143, 151.
 [Mary, daughter of James II., afterwards Mary, Queen of England], Princess of; 328, 329.
- Ordnance, the; 408.
 Board; 399.
 Master General of; 392 note.
 — See also Montagu, John, Duke of.
 Treasurer of; 335.
- Orkney, [Lord George Hamilton, 1st] Earl of, letter from; 216.
- Orleans; 6, 32, 475.
 Duke of; 462.
 Duchess of (old Madame d'); 483.
 [Anna Maria, daughter of Gaston, Duke of], "Mademoiselle," "la Grande Mademoiselle," her proposed marriage to Lauzun; 490, 491, 492.
 Philippe, Duke of ("Monsieur"); 422 and note, 425, 434, 435, 437, 439, 440, 442, 444, 450-454, 460, 462-464, 466, 469-473, 475, 490, 505, 514.
 — first aumonier to. See Valence, Bishop of.
 Henrietta Maria, daughter of Charles I., Duchess of ("Madame"); 421 and note, 422, 423, 425, 426, 428, 429-437, 439, 440-445, 450-454, 460-464, 466-469, 470-476, 477 and note, 478, 479 note, 484, 500, 518, 521.
 — her nurse. See Charter, Mrs. the Regent; 364.
- Orlingbury, [co. Nhamp.], bailiwick of the hundred of; 214.

Ormond :
 [James Butler, 1st] Duke of; 540.
 [James Butler, (previously Lord Ossory, q.v.), 2nd] Duke of; 349.

Ornano, M. le Mareschal d'; 37.

O'Roke, Sir Brian; 76.

O'Rokes, the; 76, 77.

O'Roke's (O'Rourke's) country. See Leitrim.

Orvery, [Roger Boyle, 1st] Earl of; 419, 437, 438, 484.

Osborne (Osborne) or Osborn :
 Charles (son of 1st Earl of Danby); 326.
 John; 364, 365.
 Sir Thomas (afterwards Lord Latimer, q.v., and Earl of Danby, q.v.); 423, 484.

Ossat, Cardinal d'; 385.

Ossory (Ossery) :
 [Thomas Butler, son of 1st Duke of Ormond], Earl of; 318, 499, 517, 522.
 [James Butler, afterwards 2nd Duke of Ormond, q.v.], Earl of; 342.

Ostend; 34, 40, 50, 69, 72, 122, 153, 328, 405, 500, 525.

Otelandes. See Oatlands.

Oudewater, town of; 201.
 letter dated at; 202.
 religious disturbances in; 202.

Oundle, [co. Nhampt.]; 213, 219, 272, 276. manor of; 215.

Ourd, Thomas; 174.

Ouselay, le Chevalier; 128.

Ouwen, —; 65.

Overbury, Sir Thomas; 102, 109, 111, 113, 114, 116, 118, 131, 139.
 — letter from; 114.
 — death of; 160, 161.

Owen, Thomas; 43.

Oxford; 188.
 commissions dated at; 527, 528, 530, 531.

Oxford :
 Earl of, letter from; 215.
 John de Vere, 15th Earl of, his daughter Anne, wife of Edmund, Lord Sheffield. See Sheffield.
 [Henry de Vere, 18th] Earl of; 258, 261, 540.
 [Aubrey de Vere, 20th] Earl of 332.
 — letters from; 344.

Oxfordshire; 239.

Oxford University; 54, 96, 107, 146.
 — letter from; 146.
 Magdalen College; 25.
 — letter to; 24.
 — president and scholars of, letter from; 158.
 Merton College; 125.
 St. John's College; 377, 378.

Oxnett, Baron. See Yarmouth.

P

Pack, Mr.; 331.

Packer :
 J., letters from; 4, 8, 9, 51.
 Mr.; 32, 195.

Padua; 22, 111, 120, 212.
 letters dated at; 131, 182.

Paew, Mons.; 143.

Paget (Pagett, Pagit) :
 [William Paget, 5th] Lord; 306.
 Mr.; 159, 225.

Paine :
 —; 252.
 Mr.; 239.

Paker, Mr.; 39.

Palatinate of the Rhine, the; 98, 147, 209, 210.

Palatine, the Elector; 41, 42, 92-94, 351.
 — letter from; 39.
 — letter to; 39.
 — letters from and to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials; 15, 18.
 — Agent of. See Luntius, Joannes.
 — Councillor of. See Plessin, Sieur de.
 — his Court; 427.
 — his daughter to be married to the Duke of Orleans; 505.
 Frederick (the Palsgrave); 100, 108, 109, 113-119, 121, 125, 127, 129, 130, 135, 139, 144, 149, 152, 157, 159, 177, 185, 186, 189, 193, 194, 198, 207, 241-243, 255, 300.
 — letters from; 91, 128, 157.
 — his wife. See Elizabeth, Princess.

Electress Dowager, (1613-17); 135, 193.

Count; 41, 121, 125, 127, 130, 158.
 — letter from; 15.
 — (the Palatine). See under Neuburg.

Philip Lewis, Count; 14.

Wolfgang William, Count, letters from; 82.

John, Count; 100.
 — letter from; 105.

Rupert, Count. See Rupert, Prince.

Palmer : —, cousin to William Montagu; 276, 279, 290.
 Edward; 287.
 Jeffrey; 286, 288, 300.
 Mr., letter to; 214.
 Ned; 240.

Palsgrave, the. See Palatine, the Elector, (Frederick).

Pandours; 407.

Panton :
 Captain; 53.
 Sir Thomas; 86, 107.

Papists. See Roman Catholics.

Paramor, Mr.; 90.

- Paramoure, Thomas; 264.
 Parens, David, letter from; 102.
 Paris; 2-7, 10, 13, 17-22, 31, 33-36, 39, 43,
 73, 92, 155, 194, 217, 333, 342, 344,
 375, 417, 418, 442, 445, 449-451,
 457, 462, 463, 468, 474, 475, 477,
 486, 488, 489, 492, 501, 505, 511,
 524.
 letters dated at; 28, 34, 37, 45,
 137, 155, 177, 198, 202, 362,
 367, 368, 374, 389, 421-523 passim,
 533.
 the Bastille in; 97, 199, 200, 201.
 — Captain of. See Persan, Mons. de.
 the Bernardins in; 200.
 Bishop of; 91, 493.
 the drapers of; 27.
 an English convent in; 373 note.
 the Fourlevesque in; 200.
 Henry IV.'s statue in; 199.
 the Hostell Dieu; 512.
 the Hostel de Gundy in; 86.
 "Incurables," letters dated at; 480, 497, 499, 500.
 instruction of youths in; 29.
 libraries; 33.
 the Louvre; 199, 200.
 Notre Dame; 439.
 l'arliament of; 29, 30, 91, 96, 434.
 — presidents of; 199.
 Prince of Coudé's house in; 199.
 Rue St. Honoré; 489.
 St. Germain l'Auxerrois, church of;
 199.
 Parkins, Sir Christopher; 130.
 Parliament, the; 64, 91, 98, 102, 156, 157,
 173, 211, 215, 237, 245, 258-262,
 267, 268, 276, 314, 319, 322, 325-
 327, 331, 333, 335, 338, 342, 347,
 349, 350, 389, 424, 430, 432, 434,
 435, 437, 438, 443, 449, 468, 488,
 491, 492, 498, 502, 513, 524, 525,
 527.
 House, the; 294.
 the Long Parliament; 286-293, 295-300, 304, 305, 313, 527, 533.
 — intention of, to raise forces;
 304.
 — levying of forces of; 527.
 — members of; 300.
 — order as to publication of proceedings of; 294.
 — the Remonstrance of; 286, 287,
 291, 296.
 — the six members, proceedings as to; 290, 291, 294.
 members of, (Parliament men); 324. prisoners, the; 268.
 Parma, letter dated at; 107.
 chief magistrates of, letter to; 107.
 Duke of; 111.
 — court of; 209.
 Ranuccio Farnese, Duke of, letter
 from; 107.
 Parpoint, Mrs., a kinswoman of Lady Arabella Stuart; 139.
- Parr:
 Mary, Lady, of Horton, (c. 1550),
 letter from; 222.
 — her daughter. See Burneby,
 Anne.
 William, afterwards Lord, of Horton,
 letter from; 221.
 Parre, Sir William A.; 221.
 Parry, Sir Thomas; 33.
 Parsons:
 —; 35.
 (Parsonio), George; 134.
 Robert, Jesuit; 121, 142.
 Paston:
 —. See Lindsey, Countess of.
 Sir Robert. See Yarmonth.
 Patent Rolls; 324.
 Patrick (Patricke, Patrique), Father; 423,
 431, 432, 465, 474, 484.
 Pattison:
 Colonel; 405.
 Lieut.; 401.
 Pauli, Mons.; 59.
 Peatling, Tho.; 365.
 Peers, House of. See Lords.
 Peetersonné, Thomas, of Schouhoven; 127.
 Peguillin. See Lanzun.
 Pelham:
 Mr., First Commissioner of the Treasury; 407, 408.
 Sir William; 528, 529.
 Pembroke, [co. Hereford]; 412.
 Pembroke (Penbroch):
 [William Herbert, 3rd] Earl of, Lord
 Chamberlain; 105, 118, 131, 149,
 164, 165, 191, 250, 260, 261.
 [Philip Herbert, 4th] Earl of; 279,
 303.
 [Philip Herbert, 7th] Earl of; 328.
 — his mother; 328.
 [Henry Herbert, 9th] Earl of; 391.
 — letters from; 217, 388.
 Penington, Sir John; 294.
 Penniman, Sir Will.; 295.
 Pepper, Henry; 192.
 — letters from; 182, 185.
 — letter to; 185.
 Pepys, Samuel; 341.
 — letter from; 341.
 Percy (Pearcie, Piercy):
 Sir Charles; 54, 81.
 Lady Elizabeth; 328.
 Henry; 294 and note.
 Thomas; 174, 175.
 name of; 215.
 Perez, Admiral; 219.
 Perigord; 201.
 Perott (Perrott), M.; 35, 36.
 Perron:
 Cardinal du; 110.
 Mr. Du; 349, 350.
 Perrot, George; 220.
 Persan, Mons. de, 200.
 Persia; 432.
 Persian Ambassador. See under Ambasador.
 Peru, kingdom of; 147.
 Perwich, William; 462, 505, 508, 523.

- Pesenas, letters dated at ; 37.
 Peterborough (Peterburrough); 214.
     letters dated at ; 233, 275.
 Peterborough :
     [John Mordaunt, 1st] Earl of ; 279, 306.
     [Henry Mordaunt, 2nd] Earl of ; 318, 342.
 Peterborough, Bishop of :
     Richard [Howland] ; 226.
     — letter from ; 233.
     Thomas Dove ; 275.
     — letters from ; 214.
     Francis [Dee], letter from ; 275.
     Joseph [Henshaw], letter from ; 315.
 Petit :
     Brigadier ; 411.
     Mons. (Sieur) ; 452, 457, 460, 461.
 Petre :
     Thomas [Petre, 6th] Lord, letter from ; 348.
     Captain ; 349.
     Jac. of Fidlers ; 349.
 Pewsham Forest, [co. Wilts] ; 207.
 Peyton :
     Sir Thomas ; 107 note.
     William ; 226.
 Philip, King of England. See Spain, King of, Philip II.
 Philippines, the ; 117, 180.
 Phillip, Richard, passport for ; 151.
 Phillips, Father ; 286.
 Physicians, Society of ; 372.
 Picardy ; 46.
 Pickering (Pickring, Pyckering, Pykering) :
     Anthony ; 220.
     Edward, letter from ; 331.
     Gil, letter from ; 215.
     Sir Gilbert ; 304.
     James ; 214.
     Sir John ; 259, 263.
     John ; 301.
     Mr. ; 325.
 Piedmont (Piamont), Prince of ; 182.
 Pierrepont (Pierrepont) :
     Lady Elizabeth ; 340.
     — letter from ; 215.
     Lady Grace ; 346.
 Piers, Col. ; 406.
     — his regiment ; 406.
 Pillingbeare ; 98.
     letter dated at ; 51.
 Pillips, Mr. ; 347.
 Pimm. See Pym.
 Pinc, John ; 406.
 Pirates ; 197, 474.
 Pirbright (Purbright), co. Surrey, curate of. See Warren.
 Pitchley. See Pytchley.
 Pitou (Pithou, Pitthou), M. ; 33, 35, 36.
 Plague, the ; 43.
 Platling, village of ; 402.
 Playing-cards ; 28.
 Plessen, Sieur de ; 41, 52, 91, 104, 108, 119, 145.
     — letters from ; 109, 111, 116, 145, 184, 186, 189, 207.
 Plumer, E. ; 80.
 Plunket :
     Elizabeth Lawson ; 373 note.
     — letter from ; 372.
     Mr. ; 373 note.
 Plymouth (Plimoth, Plinmouth) ; 141, 266.
 Po, the River ; 111.
 Poictiers ; 6.
 Pois. See Powis.
 Poland and the Poles (Polonians) ; 65, 125, 136, 150, 177, 186, 195, 202, 210, 429, 440, 513, 516. the Crown of ; 425.
     King of :
         — Sigismund III. ; 204, 136, 151, 241.
         — Michael Bisnokesky ; 429, 436, 444, 450, 478.
     the senators of, letter to ; 104.
     the war of ; 491.
 Polebrook, [co. Nhamp.], parson of ; 214.
     hundred of ; 275.
 Poltney (Poltny), General ; 404.
 Pompone, Mr. de ; 434, 507, 510-512, 514, 519.
 Ponant, Vice-Admiral du. See Estree.
 Ponsonby, Brigadier, his regiment ; 401.
 Pont de l'Arche, government of ; 200.
 Pontoise :
     St. Martin's Abbey near ; 461, 498, 499.
     — letter dated at ; 419.
     — Abbot of. See Montagu, Walter.
 Poorescott :
     Lord, (1681) ; 335.
     Lady, (1681) ; 335.
 Pope, the ; 208, 457, 471.
     Alexander VI ; 168.
     Gregory XIII. ; 154.
     Clement VIII. ; 30.
     — letters from ; 32, 35.
     — (Paul V.) ; 111, 153, 155, 164, 183, 187.
     — letter to ; 183.
     — (Gregory XV.) ; 209.
     — (Clement IX.) ; 445, 450, 455, 458.
 Pope's Nuncio, the ; 172, 173, 200.
 Popham :
     Alexander ; 218, 311, 346 note, 349.
     — letter from ; 350.
     Lady Anne (née Montagu, g. v.) ; 349 note.
     — letter to ; 357.
     Sir Jo., letter from ; 52.
     Lord Chief Justice ; 231.
 Portal, Mr. ; 349.
 Porter :
     End[ymion] ; 209, 211, 258.
     Mr. ; 484, 485, 487.
 Portland, Lady, her sons ; 386.
 Port Mahon, in Minorca ; 358.
 Porto Longone ; 501.
 Port Royal, in Jamaica, letter dated at ; 399.
 Portsmouth (Porchmouth) ; 106, 341.
     an alderman of. See Barton.
     Governor of ; 335.
     harbour ; 80.
     M.P.'s for ; 392.

- Portsmouth:
 [Louise de Querouaille, q.v.], Duchess of; 320, 348.
 [John Wallop], 1st Earl of; 219.
- Portugal and the Portuguese; 102, 116, 132, 146, 154, 166, 167, 169, 347, 351, 381, 384, 385, 387, 388, 430, 431, 434, 435.
 Court of; 381, 383.
 the expedition to, 25.
 King of:
 — (Alfonso VI.); 430.
 — (John V.); 381, 384–387. nobility of; 382.
- Pory, Mr., letter from; 17.
 Porye, Dr.; 22.
- Possain a Ben-Serat; 365.
- Pothridge, [co. Devon], letter dated at; 308.
- Potman, Mr.; 124.
- Potter:
 —; 128.
 Mr.; 369–372.
- Powell:
 Mrs.; 64.
 P.; 64.
- Powis (Pois):
 Lady, (1688); 348.
 [William Herbert], 3rd Marquis of; 219.
- Powys, R., letter from; 216.
- Prague, 61, 92, 255.
 letter dated at; 94.
 the diet of; 16.
- Pratz, Secretary; 158.
- Preaux, Monsieur de; 13, 75, 199.
- Prendergast:
 Lady, wife of Sir Thomas; 392.
 Sir Thomas; 392.
- Presbyterian party, the; 502.
- Presgrave, —; 228.
- President, Lord. See Sheffield.
- Presslaw. See Breslau.
- Prestoune, Lieutenant; 89.
- Pretender, the (Old); 359, 362, 364 note.
- Priests; 44.
- Prince of Wales, the. See Henry Frederick. Charles. Frederick Lewis.
- Prior, —, a pamphlet of; 319.
- Prise, Sir Tho.; 337.
- Privy Council, the, ('the Council'); 43, 60, 63, 106 note, 111, 122, 158, 161, 170, 176, 181, 184, 193 note, 195, 197, 211, 214, 225, 230, 231, 235, 236, 245, 264, 268, 272, 303, 313, 318, 330, 347, 390, 536.
 letters from; 31, 33, 48, 50, 56, 227–229, 242, 275.
 — printed in Sawyer's Memorials; 2, 7–9, 11–18, 67.
 letter to; 238.
 Clerk of; 91.
 — See also Nicholas.
 Committee of; 27.
 the Council Board; 208, 268–270, 289.
 the Council of foreign affairs; 505.
- Lord President of. See Manchester, 1st Earl of. Wilmington, Earl of.
 Presidency of; 267. warrant of; 151.
- Privy Seal, Lord; 288.
See also Worcester, Earl of. Manchester, Earl of.
- Prizes, Commissionaires of the; 520.
- Proby, Sir Thomas; 317.
- Procace, M., letter from; 371.
- Protector, Oliver Cromwell, the; 311, 437.
- Protestant Union, the; 95.
- Proude, Capt.; 40.
- Provence, oils of; 28.
- Pruddey Castle, co. Nthld.; 174.
- Prussia:
 Maria Leonora, Duchess of; 14.
 Queen of, (daughter of the Electress Sophia); 354.
- Pryce, Captain John; 25.
- Puckering, Sir John; 227.
- Puffendorp (Pufendorf, Puffandorfe), Mous. P., Swedish Resident at Paris; 443, 444.
 — letter from; 446.
- Puisieux, Mons. de; 200.
- Pnjolas, Ant.; 219.
- Pulteney, Daniel; 219.
- Pulter, Edward; 526.
- Purbright. See Pirbright.
- Puritans; 258.
- Puskin, Meketa Michalowich; 136.
- Puteanus, —; 188.
- Putney, co. Surrey; 234.
- Pyckering, Pykering. See Pickering.
- Pym (Pimm), [John]; 286, 288, 294, 303, 306.
- Pyrenees. Treaty of the; 512.
- Pytchley (Pitchley), [co. Nhamp.]; 245.

Q

- Quadring, Sir William; 528, 531.
- Quarles, James; 228, 229.
- Queen, the. See Elizabeth. Anne of Denmark. Henrietta Maria. Catharine of Braganza. Mary of Modena. Anne.
- Queen Anne's Bounty; 389.
- Queenborough (Quinborough), [co. Kent]; 326.
- Queensberry, Duke of, (1745), letter from; 217.
- Querouaille (Querewalle, Queroalle), Mademoiselle de, (afterwards Duchess of Portsmouth, q.v.); 486, 505.
- Questell, John of London; 180.
- Questor, Mr.; 182.
- Quicksett; 338.

R

- Radeliffe (Radelyf, Ratcliff, Rattleif) :
Francis ; 174, 175.
— his servant of the same name ;
175.
Sir John ; 64, 67, 69, 116, 118, 138.
Sir Thomas ; 145.
- Rade, Levenius de ; 202.
- Radley, Sir Henry ; 528.
- Raffaelli, D. ; 49.
- Rainborow, W. ; 312.
- Rainoldus, Jo., letter from ; 25.
- Raleigh, Sir Walter ; 44, 189.
- Ramekens, the presidary troops in ; 24.
- Ramsey, Sir James ; 55.
- Rande, Nicholas ; 226.
- Rascians ; 407.
- Rashley, Mr. ; 242.
- Rashleygh, Theo. ; 252.
- Ratcliff, Rattleif, Sir John. See Radcliffe.
- Ratisbon, the Imperial Diet at ; 134, 141, 143-145, 147.
- Rattan, Island of, on the Mosquito shore ; 398.
- Ravenhuller, Count ; 405.
- Ravensperg, state of ; 130.
- Rawlegh, Mr. ; 263.
- Rawlins, Sir John ; 91.
- Rawlinson, Dr. Richard, letter from ; 378.
- Rawlyns, Dr., letter to ; 238.
- Raworth, Mr. ; 333.
- Raymond, Thomas, Justice, K.B. ; 336, and note.
- Read, Sir Edw. ; 335.
- Reade, John, letter from ; 416.
- Readhead, Arthur ; 528.
- Reading, (co. Berks) ; 261.
- Rebellion, the, (of 1745) ; 412.
- Rebels, the, (of the Great Rebellion) ; 534, 537.
- Recusants ; 116, 226, 239, 240, 244, 245, 321.
- Reddish, Francis ; 231.
- Reeve (Rives), Judge (Sir Edmund) ; 306 and note.
- Reffuge, M. du ; 134, 137.
- Regiments ; 409.
Dragoons ; 387, 401.
Engineers ; 405.
English, in the Low Countries ; 98.
Foot ; 400, 401.
Foot Guards ; 401. See also Albemarle, Duke of.
the Grenadiers ; 339.
the Guards ; 366, 401.
the Highland Regiment ; 406.
Horse ; 387.
the Horse Guards ; 339, 343, 410.

Regiments—cont.

- Marines ; 399.
Scottish, in France ; 436.
— in the Low Countries ; 62. raised in Westminster. See under Westminster.
See also Bragg. Buceleugh. Cockran.
Craven. Dives. Halifax. Handyside.
Harrison. Holles. Howard.
Husk. Jeffery. Lincolnshire.
Lowther. Monmouth. Montagu,
John, Duke of. Ogle. Piers.
Ponsonby. Richbel. Rothes. St.
Clarc. Vere.
- Reiter, Giorgio ; 212.
- Remy de Bilderbek, Mons. See Bilderbek.
- Rendolf, Thomas ; 23
- Reprisals, letters of ; 541.
- Requests, Court of ; 287.
Master of ; 140, 237. See also Dunn,
Sir Daniel. Holles, Gervase (2).
Parkins, Sir Christopher.
- Rethel, siege of ; 192.
- Reve, Sir Edward, Justice of the Common Pleas ; 530.
- Reynell, — ; 28.
- Rhine, the river ; 57, 401, 405-407.
— Palatinate of. See Palatinate. wine ; 157.
- Riberick, letter dated at ; 406.
- Rich :
Lady, (1738) ; 390.
Mr. ; 327.
Sir Robert ; 248.
- Richard (Richards), Mr. ; 441, 479, 480.
See also Richards.
- Richardot, President ; 3.
— letter to ; 31.
- Richards, Mr. ; 50. See also Richard.
- Richardson, Mr. ; 86, 87, 91.
- Richbel, —, his regiment ; 410.
- Richelieu :
Cardinal ; 269.
Malarin de ; 219.
- Richmond, [? county] ; 127, 215.
co. Surrey, letters dated at ; 31, 39, 222, 228, 414.
- Richmond and Lenox (Lennox) :
[James Stuart, 1st] Duke of, made
Steward of the Household ; 288.
[Charles Stuart, 3rd] Duke of ; 424,
426, 437, 440, 450, 512.
— letter from ; 441.
Duchess of, (1669) ; 439, 450.
[Charles Lennox, 2nd] Duke of ;
377, 385, 391, 404.
— letter from ; 217, 406, 410.
[Sarah], Duchess of ; 377.
[Charles Lennox, 3rd] Duke of ;
417.
- Ridley :
Dr., chaplain to the Bishop of Winchester ; 205.
Sir Thomas, Vicar-General to the Archbishop of Canterbury ; 211.
- Ringwood, [co. Hants], letter dated at ;
221.

- Ripa, (? in East Friesland); 66.
 Rit, Mons. de; 219.
 Ritsted (?), letter dated at; 244.
 Robartes (Roberts), [John, 2nd] Lord; 539.
 Robins, Adam; 134, 135.
 Robinson:
 —, a Yorkshireman; 232.
 Col.; 394.
 J.; 312.
 Sir John; 324.
 Rochefort; 499.
 Rochell. See La Rochelle.
 Rochester, co. Kent, 32, 290, 377.
 letter dated at; 377.
 Rochester:
 Ro[bert Carr], Viscount, afterwards Earl of Somerset, q.v.; 102, 112–116, 118–120, 125, 126, 129, 131, 139.
 — letters from; 105, 119, 128, 132, 135, 148.
 — letters to; 103, 148.
 [John Wilmot, 2nd] Earl of; 429, 430.
 [Lawrence Hyde], Earl of, Lord Treasurer; 338.
 Rochester, [John Dolben], Bishop of, his brother; 325.
 Rockingham, [co. Nhampt.]; 213, 214, 216, 234.
 letter dated at; 233, 238.
 bailiwick of; 233.
 Forest (the Forest); 213, 239, 245, 247, 256, 257, 265, 266, 332.
 — Lieutenant of (Sir Edward Montagu); 214, 228.
 — See also Fane, Sir Francis
 — Swainmote (Swannymont), Court of, steward of; 245.
 — verderers and other officers of, letter to; 245.
 West bailiwick of, the White Cross within; 234.
 Rockingham:
 [Edward Watson, 2nd] Lord; 315, 319, 328.
 Lady, (1664); 315.
 [Charles Watson Wentworth, 2nd] Marquis of; 415, 416.
 Roe or Rowe:
 Sir John; 56, 58.
 Sir Thomas; 150, 180, 246 (Tom Roe).
 — letter from; 145.
 — letter to; 142.
 Roeroert; 65.
 Rogers (Rogier):
 Capt.; 40.
 Daniel; 96.
 Rohan, Duke of, letter to; 3.
 Rolls, the Master of; 391. See also Caesar, Sir Julius. Grimstone, Sir Harbottle.
 Roman Catholics (Catholics, Papists); 44, 49, 117, 125, 147, 183, 210, 239, 241, 281, 313, 342.
 Roman College, the; 35.
 Rome; 33, 35, 37, 49, 152–155, 159, 209, 454, 471, 521.
 letters dated at; 32, 35.
 the Conclave at; 471, 472.
 see of; 207.
 Rookley, [co. Hants]; 216.
 Roos (Ross, Rosse):
 [William Cecil, 22nd] Lord; 111, 176 note, 182–184, 191, 192, 258.
 — secretary to. See Duncombe.
 Lady, (1619); 255.
 [George Villiers, 25th] Lord; 317, 328, 331.
 — his sister Lady Anne; 317.
 Lady, (1678); 328.
 Root, Godfrey. See Boal.
 Roper, Sir Thomas; 193, 194.
 Rose, M. le Marquis de; 219.
 Rosny, Marquis de; 42, 106.
 Rossiter, Thomas, letters from; 203, 206.
 Roth, Laird of. See Melvill.
 Rothes, Lord, (1743); 404.
 — his regiment, 406.
 Master of. See Leslie, Normand.
 Rottenburg, in Franconia; 101.
 letter dated at; 100.
 Rotterdam; 40, 93, 197.
 Rouen; 32.
 letter dated at; 35.
 English merchants at; 443.
 Rowe. See Roe.
 Rowsely, Barr; 317.
 Royal Society, the; 320.
 Royle, Thomas; 232.
 Royston, [co. Herts]; 64, 85, 118, 131, 132, 203, 239, 241, 244, 257.
 letters dated at; 99, 103, 114, 115, 119, 161, 162.
 Ruberpre, Mons. de; 200.
 Rudyerd, Sir Ben; 219.
 Rufford, [co. Notts]; 191.
 Rumphius, Dr.; 142.
 Rupert, Prince, Count Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria and Cumberland; 419, 427.
 — commissions by; 541, 542.
 Ruremond, Bishop of; 49.
 — letter from, 9.
 Rushton, [co. Nhampt.], letter dated at; 357.
 Rushworth, Mr.; 311.
 Russell:
 Lord, (1688), his daughter Rachell; 347, 348.
 Lord John, (1731); 380.
 Consul; 377.
 Mr.; 365, 477.
 Rachel, Lady, (widow of Lord William), letters from; 340, 342, 344.
 — her sister Alinton; 341.
 William; 136.
 Russia or Muscovy; 177.
 English Commissioners to; 136, 137.
 English merchants to; 124.
 — privileges granted to; 137.
 Vassily Evanowich, grand duke of; 136.

- Russia, Czar (King) of :
 Ivan (Evan) Vassilowich ; 136.
 Feodor (Pheoder) Evanowich ; 136.
 Boris Feodorowich ; 136.
 Michael Feodorowich, letter from ;
 136.
 Russy, Mons. de, letter from ; 135.
 Ruthin, Lord, letters from ; 178, 196, 204.
 — his sister ; 204.
 Ruthven, Lord, (1559) ; 23.
 Rutland ; 360.
 Charles II.'s warrants for a voluntary contribution from well-affected subjects in, (1649) ; 535.
 Sheriff of ; 530.
 Rutland :
 Countess of, (d. 1612) ; 110.
 [Francis Manners, 6th] Earl of ;
 247.
 John Manners, q.v., 8th Earl of ; 289,
 293, 303, 326, 330.
 — letter to ; 215.
 Frances Manners, q.v., Countess of ;
 299, 314, 315, 320.
 Rutlage Park ; 115.
 Ruvigny (Ruvigni, Ruvignye), Monsieur ;
 421, 422, 427, 524, 525.
 Ryder, William ; 144.
 Ryley, Margareta, letter from ; 367.

S

- S. S., letter from ; 92.
 S . . . , Sir Simson ; 107.
 Sabran, Melchior de, Resident of France in England ; 533.
 Sackville, Lord George ; 390, 391.
 — letters from ; 390, 391.
 Sadler, John ; 279.
 Saidiller, Sir Ralph ; 23.
 St. Agrian, Mr. de ; 442.
 St. Albans ; 299.
 letter dated at ; 354.
 St. Albans, [Henry Jermyn], Earl of ; 421,
 427, 432, 434, 435, 438, 440, 442-
 444, 473, 475, 539.
 St. Andrew's ; 217.
 castle of ; 23.
 St. Catalina, in Cuba ; 397.
 St. Chaumont (St. Choumont, St. Sho-umont), Madame de ; 450-453, 463.
 St. Clair, — ; 410.
 St. Clare, —, his regiment ; 406.
 St. Cloud, near Paris ; 438, 475.
 St. Denis, near Paris ; 201, 439.
 St. Germain, Monsieur de, letter to ; 37.
 St. Germain's ; 364, 422, 428-430, 436,
 440, 443-445, 452, 457, 461, 462,
 469, 472, 474, 477, 481-483, 486,
 496, 498, 506, 509, 511, 512, 519, 524.
 letter dated at ; 429.

- St. German, Marquis of ; 64.
 St. Helena, island of ; 146.
 St. Helen's ; 217, 393.
 St. Iago Fort, in Carthagea ; 396.
 St. Iago (? Santiago de Cuba) ; 398, 399.
 St. Ives, [co. Hunts] ; 325.
 St. John (Seint Jone, St. Jhon) :
 [William Paulet], Lord, [of Basing],
 Lord Chamberlain ; 221.
 [Oliver St. John, 4th] Lord [of Blet-shoe] ; 260.
 [Oliver St. John, 5th] Lord [of Blet-shoe], his daughter ; 319.
 Lady, (1617) ; 193.
 Lady, (1713) ; 360.
 Sir Oliver, Lord Deputy of Ireland ;
 196.
 — letters from ; 190, 193.
 — letter to ; 177.
 Oliver, Solicitor General ; 303, 305.
 Sir Roland ; 269, 290.
 — letter from ; 214.
 St. Johnston's, letter dated at ; 538.
 Charles II.'s Court at ; 539.
 St. Joneses (?) ; 64.
 St. Joseph, a fort in Carthagea ; 397.
 Sta. Lucia (Lucy), island of ; 411.
 St. Martin's Abbey. See Pontoise.
 Saint Maur ; 201.
 St. Nicholas, island of ; 345.
 St. Omer ; 489.
 English Jesuitical College at ; 188.
 St. Paul, Count ; 457.
 St. Philip's fort, in Carthagea ; 396.
 St. Sebastian ; 182, 183.
 St. Shomont, Madame de. See St. Chaumont.
 St. Vincent, island of ; 411.
 Sakevyle, Sir Ry., letter from ; 223.
 Salisbury, letter dated at ; 45.
 Salisbury :
 Sir Robert Cecil, afterwards Viscount Cranborne and Earl of, Secretary of State, letters from and to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials ; 3-20 passim.
 — as Sir Robert Cecil ; 27, 32, 38, 39, 227-230, 236.
 — letters from ; 33-35, 49.
 — letter to ; 32.
 — as Lord Cecil ; 44.
 — as Viscount Cranborne ; 50, 52, 53.
 — letter from ; 55.
 — as Earl of Salisbury, Lord Treasurer ; 59, 69, 90, 93, 94, 98, 102, 104, 105, 107, 108, 208, 233.
 — letters from ; 56, 62-67, 69,
 72-74, 81-83, 85, 88, 92, 95, 97, 100.
 — letters to ; 68, 86, 108.
 [William Cecil, 2nd] Earl of ; 279,
 287, 294, 301, 304, 305.
 [James Cecil, 3rd] Earl of ; 331,
 338.
 [James Cecil, 4th] Earl of ; 347.
 Mr. ; 279.
 Salisbury, Seth [Ward], Bishop of, letters
 from ; 337.

- Salsburg, Archbishop of; 121.
 Salt, a privilege of making and venting of; 196.
 Salter, Nicholas; 173 and note.
 Saluzzo (Saluces), marquissate of; 30.
 Sancy, Monsieur; 46.
 Sanderson, Dr.; 300.
 Sandford, Lieut.-Col.; 396.
 Sands, Viscount, of Leez Court; 325.
 Sandwich; 48, 341, 342.
   Common Council of; 48.
   Jurats of; 48.
   Mayor of; 48.
   rectory of St. Peter's in; 211.
 Sandwich:
   Edward Montagu, q.v., 1st Earl of; 218, 313, 317.
   — commission by; 541.
   [Edward Montagu, 2nd] Earl of; 319, 321.
   Edward Montagu, 3rd Earl of; 218, 357, 379.
   Elizabeth, Countess of, (wife of 3rd Earl); 218.
   John Montagu, 4th Earl of; 218, 412.
 Sandys, Edwin; 103.
 Sanford, Mr.; 52.
 Sante Cruse, Marquess of; 210.
 Sardinia; 182.
 Sark (Serck), churches of; 159.
 Sarmiento, Ambassador. See Gondomar.
 Sauromatum, Arva, le Hundsruce, in Germany; 113 note.
 Sausur, M. le Duc de; 219.
 Savage, Sir Arthur; 97.
 Savile (Savell, Savill, Saville):
   [Thomas, 2nd] Lord; 288, 294, 304, 305.
   H.; 32.
   Henry; 347.
   — letters from; 28.
   Sir Henry; 82, 112, 113, 115.
   — letters from; 33, 35, 36, 39, 110, 123, 134.
   Mr.; 434, 438.
   Thomas; 33.
   Sir Will.; 295.
 Savoy and the Savoyards; 133, 184, 210.
   Charles Emmanuel I., Duke of; 30, 38, 42, 133, 141, 180, 181, 183, 187, 189, 190, 197.
   — letter from; 160.
   — letter to; 2.
   [Charles Emmanuel II.], Duke of; 457, 499.
 Sawyer (Sawer):
   Edmund, his Memorials of Affairs of State, &c., Winwood letters printed in; 1-22.
   Mr.; 284, 289.
   Sir Robert, Attorney General; 338.
 Saxony (Saxe); 121.
   Court of; 186, 407.
   Duke and Elector of:
     (Christian II.); 14, 19, 61.
     (John George I.); 121, 134, 137, 144, 146, 177.
 Say (Sea, Sey) and Sele:
   [Richard Fienes, 7th] Lord; 54.
   [William Fienes, 1st] Viscount; 278, 289, 294, 539.
 Scaramelly, Giovanni; 45.
 Scarborough, [Richard Lumley, 2nd] Lord; 375, 390.
 Scarnaffi (Scarnafis), Count; 160 note.
 Scarsdale, Earl of, (bef. 1680), letter from; 215.
 Schadskey, country of, in Russia; 136.
 Scheldt, the river; 122, 413.
 Scholler, —; 332.
 Schönbergh (Schönbourg, Schomberg, Shamburgh), Colonel (Count) Mainhardt de; 105, 109, 127, 129, 133, 135, 138, 139, 144, 145, 157, 184, 199, 248.
   — letters from; 156, 157.
   Mr. de; 523.
 Schotte, Secretary; 179.
 Scioppius, Gaspar; 119, 172.
 Scotland and the Scots; 22, 23, 42, 65, 88, 135, 153, 184, 195 note, 232, 284, 298, 303, 308, 309, 315, 416, 417.
   army of; 23.
   the benevolence for; 277.
   Borders of; 195.
   foot soldiers of; 419.
   James VI., King of. See James I. King.
   lords of; 26.
   Mary, Queen of; 23, 46.
   the Parliament in; 88, 349.
   proposal to raise men in, for the Archduke's service; 81.
   10,000 Scots to go into Ireland; 289.
   Secretary of; 135. See also Alexander, Sir William.
   the Union with; 8.
 Scott, Cuthbert. See Chester, Bishop of.
 Scottish prisoners, the; 331.
 Scott's case; 316.
 Scrope or Scroope:
   Sir Gervase; 528.
   Lady, (1678); 328.
 Scull Haven, in Ireland; 194.
 Scultrope, —; 231.
 Seamor, Lord. See Seymour.
 Seaton, co. Rutland; 274.
 Seaux, Conte de; 505.
 Secretary of State, the; 114, 148, 278, 280, 288, 442, 471, 523, 525.
   See also Salisbury, Earl of, Winwood, Ralph. Lake, Sir Thomas, Cooke, Sir John, Windebank, Vane, Sir Henry, Nicholas, Morris, Coventry, Townshend, Arlington, Trevor.
 Sedan; 186, 488.
   letters dated at; 45, 52, 57, 184.
   sovereignty of; 184.
 Sedgewicke, Mr.; 302.
 See, Mr; 419.
 Seelande. See Zealand.
 Seeligenstadt, Convent of; 405.
 Segar, William, Garter King-at-arms; 122 note, 125.
 Segnelay, Mr. de; 516.

Seine, the river; 46.
 Saint Jone, Lord. See St. John.
 Selby, Captain; 70.
 Selwyn, John; 384.
 Seneyley, Mr. de; 511.
 Sentleger, Captain; 100.
 Sepcotts, Mr., of Elton; 231.
 Sergeant-at-Arms, the; 522.
 Sergeant:
   Mr.; 90.
   William; 209.
 Serine, Count; 472, 473.
 Serle (Serles):
   Alexander; 82.
   — letter from; 52.
   Mr.; 45, 50, 54.
   Mrs.; 50.
 Seville; 192.
   Carcel Real, letter dated at; 185.
 Sey, Lord. See Say.
 Seymour (Seamor, Seymor):
   [Francis Seymour, 1st] Baron, of Trowbridge; 539.
   Sir Edward; 345.
   Richard; 198.
 Shadwell, Thomas; 219.
 Shaftesbury, [Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, previously Lord Ashley, q.v., 1st]
 Earl of; 317, 318, 330, 331.
 Shamburgh, Monsieur (Mouner). See
 Schönbergh.
 Shandos, Lord. See Chandos.
 Shaw, Sir John; 340.
 Sheffield; 191.
 Sheffield:
   Edmund, 1st Lord; 540.
   — his daughter Eleanor, wife of Denzell (1) Hollis. See Hollis.
   — his wife Anne; 540.
   Edmund, 3rd Lord, Lord President;
   197 note.
 Shelton, —; 90, 91, 111, 224.
 Shepherd (Sheaperd), Mr.; 421.
 Sherborn, Ed.; 91.
 Sherborne, letter dated at; 263.
   Castle, [co. Dors.]; 115.
 Sherborne, Wm., letter from; 411.
 Sherleye, Mr.; 245.
 Shipmoney; 274, 275.
 Ships:
   English; 180, 365.
   French; 358, 394–397, 458, 459.
   — expedient of their taking English commissions and colours (1672);
   515.
   of Holland (Hollanders, Dutch); 9,
   31, 65, 187, 191, 358, 365, 393, 516.
   Irish; 180.
   Scottish; 180.
   Spanish; 9, 31, 155, 394.
 Ships named:
   Africa; 397.
   Antelope; 541.
   Augusta; 396.
   Bonnetta, sloop; 398.
   Buckingham, man-of-war; 393, 396.
   Cambridge; 542.
   Clove; 247.

Ships named:
   Cumberland, man-of-war; 393, 396.
   Darling; 80.
   De Ruyter, fireship; 542.
   Dunkirk; 394, 395.
   Expedition, fireship; 542.
   Gallicia; 397.
   Goldenhand, fireship; 542.
   Henrietta; 541.
   Josua, of Hamborough; 57.
   La Balbiana, of Venice; 45.
   La Roziere, barque; 30.
   Le Cheval Marin, of Zealand; 80.
   Margaret and John; 45.
   Montague, man-of-war; 394.
   Norfolk; 396.
   Orford; 394, 395.
   Panther Frigate; 541.
   Prince, commission dated aboard;
   541.
   Prince Frederick; 394, 395, 397.
   Prince of Orange, man-of-war; 393, 396.
   Princess Amelia; 396.
   Providence, fireship; 542.
   Ripon, man-of-war; 394, 395.
   Royal Charles, commissions dated on board; 541, 542.
   Russell; 396.
   Sainte Anne, of Dunkirk; 60.
   St. Carlos; 397.
   Shrewsbury; 396.
   Squirrel; 396.
   Superbe, man-of-war; 393, 394, 396.
   Terese, French ship; 438.
   Weymouth, man-of-war; 393, 394,
   396.
   White Fortune, fireship; 542.
   Woodmerchant, fireship; 542.
   York, man-of-war; 394, 395.

Ships not named:
 ship-of-war of Amsterdam; 60.
 the Brest squadron; 393.
 caracks; 182.
 a Dunkirk; 56.
 Dutch, for the Greenland fishing;
 156.
 — men-of-war; 456.
 — merchantmen; 456.
 from East India; 146.
 English fleet in the Straits; 457.
 — men-of-war; 429, 474.
 — squadron, alleged to have taken
 French colours; 515.
 the Ferrol squadron; 393.
 the fleet; 34, 90, 276, 296, 393, 394,
 396, 476, 491, 499, 509, 510, 541,
 542.
 French fleet; 516.
 — galleys; 476.
 — men-of-war; 394, 395, 428, 429,
 476, 511.
 — merchantmen; 456.
 — sixty-four gun ship; 417.
 a galleon; 182.
 of Genoa; 154. of the Hansa; 90.
 a Hollander 56.

- Ships not named :
 Holland, fleets of ; 210.
 men-of-war of Holland and Zealand ; 57.
 King's ship and pinnace for securing of the seas off Ireland ; 194.
 Molettas or bean-codds (Portuguese) ; 381.
 the Navy ; 213, 223, 233, 398.
 — Surveyor-General for the vic-tuals of. See Quarles, James.
 Darell, Marmaduke.
 Ordnance ships ; 393.
 paquet boats ; 381.
 a patacho ; 182.
 the Smyrna fleet ; 517.
 Spanish fleet (Armada) ; 116, 182-184, 187, 192, 210, 358.
 — China fleet ; 183, 187, 192.
 — Terra firma fleet ; 187, 192.
 — fleet to the West Indies ; 180, 210.
 — galleons ; 476.
 — men-of-war ; 393.
 — snow, a ; 396.
 ships of war of the States General ; 81, 182, 185.
 the Toulon squadron ; 393.
 transports ; 394, 396.
 Turkish galleys ; 133.
 — men-of-war ; 462.
- Shirley (Shierley), Sir Thomas ; 115.
 Shombergh. See Schönbergh.
 Shoreditch, "the Red Lion" in ; 231.
 Shrewsbury ; 232, 527.
 Shrewsbury (Shrosbery, Shrousbury) :
 [Gilbert Talbot, 7th] Earl of ; 248.
 [Edward Talbot, 8th] Earl of ; 248.
 Countess of, (1613) ; 139.
 [George Talbot, 9th] Earl of ; 191, 201.
 Countess of, (1617) ; 191.
 [Anna-Maria], Countess of, (wife of Francis, 11th Earl) ; 490.
 [Charles Talbot, 12th] Earl of ; 331.
 — his brother. See Talbot, Mr.
 [Adelhida], Duchess of ; 372.
- Sibrandus, — ; 146.
 Sicily ; 328.
 Sidney (Sidny), Mr. ; 517, 519, 520.
 Siena ; 121.
 Silesians, the ; 157.
 Sillery, Chancellor de ; 200.
 Silver wire, drawing of ; 208.
 Silvestre, Dr. P. ; 349, 357.
 — letter from ; 355.
 Simons, — ; 32.
 Simpell, Lord, (1601) ; 33.
 Sinclair (Sincler) ;
 Captain Lawrence ; 72.
 William ; 72.
 Six Clerks, the ; 274, 277.
 Skelton, —, of Rotterdam ; 197.
 Skenks Sconce ; 9.
 Skidmore, John ; 231.
 Skinner (Skyunner), Sir Vincent ; 44, 50.
 Skinners Company, the ; 179.
- Skipwith :
 Sir Henry, his son ; 293.
 Sergeant ; 324.
 Slade, Mr. ; 123, 159.
 Slingsby, Sir William ; 243.
 Sluys (Sluce) ; 50.
 Smarte, Henry ; 231.
 Smelt, Mr. ; 417.
 Smith (Smithe, Smyth, Smythe) :
 —, a musician of 2nd Duke of Buck-ingham ; 489, 490.
 —, of Lubbenham in Waksto (?) ; 232.
 Mr., chaplain to Sir William Drake ; 327.
 Nathaniel ; 321.
 Lady, (1636) ; 345.
 Othwel, of London ; 36.
 Tho., letter from ; 388.
 Sir Thomas ; 103, 122.
 — letters from ; 99, 110, 119, 130, 132, 180.
 Smitheby, J., letter from ; 346.
 Smoot, Richard, petition of ; 208.
 Smyrna fleet, the. See under Ships.
 Soissons, siege of ; 199.
 Soissons (Soyssons) :
 Count ; 91, 201.
 Mademoiselle de ; 201.
 Solicitor General, the ; 288. See also Coventry. St. John. Winnington. Finch.
- Solmes :
 Count of ; 41.
 — J. Albert, letter from ; 177.
- Solomon, Job, the son of, letter from ; 385.
 — letter to ; 388.
- Somerby, Richard ; 528.
- Somerset (Soommersett) :
 [? Edward Seymour, 1st] Earl of, 84.
 [Robert Carr], Earl of, previously Viscount Rochester, q.r. ; 160, 163, 164, 247, 248.
 Countess of, (1616), arraignment of ; 248.
 [Charles Seymour, 6th] Duke of ; 340, 342.
 Duchess of, (1684-5) ; 215, 344.
- Somersetshire ; 295.
 Lord Lieutenant of ; 294 note.
- Somerville, 13th Lord ; 219.
- Sondes (Sandes) :
 George ; 219.
 Sir Richard ; 231.
- Sophia, the Electress. See Hanover.
- Sorbonne, School of ; 29.
 Sothworthe, Mr. ; 173.
 Sound, W. ; 378.
 Southampton ; 45, 216. ●
 Southampton :
 H[enry Wriothesley, 3rd] Earl of ; 91, 103, 254.
 — letters from ; 21, 55, 56, 73.
 — his son ; 53.
 [Thomas Wriothesley, 4th] Earl of ; 290, 297, 302, 539.
 [Charles Fitzroy], Earl of ; 318.

- South Sea, dabbling in the ; 368.
 House, the ; 388.
- Southwark, co. Surrey, Lord Lieutenant of the Borough of. See Albemarle, Duke of.
- Southwell, Sir Robert ; 431, 433, 434.
- Souvray, Mons. de ; 199.
- Spa (Spaw) in the Netherlands ; 142, 143, 159, 290, 361-363, 367.
 letter dated at ; 138.
- Spain and the Spaniards ; 27, 30, 32-34, 42, 52-54, 57, 58, 88, 96, 111, 114, 119, 127, 135, 141, 145, 147, 153-155, 157, 160, 163, 167-169, 173, 177, 181, 183, 189-195, 203, 209, 210, 237, 239, 256, 258, 270, 272, 328, 351, 357-359, 387, 390, 391, 395, 408, 427, 434, 444, 449, 450, 454, 455, 458, 460, 468, 469, 472, 473, 475-477, 479, 488, 493-495, 499-501, 504, 508, 510-514, 517, 525.
 army ; of 82.
 coasts of ; 81.
Cortes of ; 180, 192, 194.
 Council of ; 180, 184.
 Court of ; 1, 172, 182, 187.
 differences with France to be referred to the arbitrage of the Crown of Sweden. See under Sweden.
 the embassy to ; 176.
 horses and barbs of ; 459.
 the Infanta Maria of, (the daughter of Spain) ; 163, 172, 179, 183, 184, 206, 210.
 the two Infantas of ; 133.
 infantry of ; 178.
 inquisition in ; 49.
 ministers of ; 443, 453.
 Parliament of ; 533.
 ports of ; 358, 449.
 refuses trade with towns conquered by France in Flanders ; 449, 450, 452.
 the Resident of, at Paris ; 442, 449, 452, 458, 473, 476, 479.
 ships of. See under Ships treaty between England and ; 8, 12, 49.
 the war with ; 197.
- Spain, King of, (his Catholic Majesty) :
 (Philip II.) ; 26, 29, 222.
 Philip III., Duke of Milan ; 11, 27, 29, 31, 42, 49, 57, 68, 71, 72, 78, 79, 83, 125, 134, 147, 151-153, 155, 163, 171, 172, 178-180, 182, 183, 185, 187, 189, 197, 241.
 — letter to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials ; 11.
 — a daughter of ; 44.
 — death of ; 183.
 — his second son ; 207.
 — his Queen (Anne of Austria), Queen Regent ; 427, 428, 473, 476, 479, 481, 493, 511, 512.
 (Charles II.) ; 475, 476.
 (Philip V.) ; 358.
- Spalatro, archbishop of ; 183.
- Spanheim, baron ; 219.
- Spanhem, Mother ; 367.
- Spanish Match, the ; 186.
 a conference relating to ; 163, 164, 209-211.
 Sir John Digby's answer to the Spanish proposition ; 171, 172.
- Spectator, the ; 386.
- Speed, Sam. ; 403.
 — letters from ; 393, 394, 396-400, 403-405, 407.
- Spelow, hundred of ; 224.
- Spencer :
 Robert [Spencer, 1st] Lord ; 85, 258, 259, 263.
 — letter from ; 258.
 — letter to ; 259.
 [Henry Spencer, 3rd] Lord ; 304.
 Lady, (d. 1610) ; 87.
 Lord, (1714) ; 361.
 Sir Jo., his porter ; 98.
 Sir John ; 228.
 — letters to ; 224, 230.
 Mr. ; 386.
 Richard, letter from ; 259.
 — letter to ; 262.
 Sir Richard ; 11, 70, 74, 75, 80.
 — letters from ; 12-14.
 — letters to ; 12-14, 72-74, 78, 80.
 Sir Robert, letter from ; 237.
 Thomas ; 232.
 William, letter from ; 214.
 Sir William ; 258 and note.
 — letter to ; 262.
- Spencer, Mr. ; 25.
- Spinola, Marquis Ambrose ; 54, 57, 61, 64, 106, 111, 115.
- Spithead ; 393.
- Spittle, letters dated at ; 255-258, 260.
- Sporken, Baron ; 412.
- Stafford, Mr. ; 184.
 — letter from ; 20.
- Staffordshire knives and forks ; 392.
- Stair :
 [John, 2nd] Earl of ; 400-402, 404, 405, 407.
 [James], 3rd Earl of ; 219.
- Stallin, — ; 32.
- Stamford, [co. Linc.], election at ; 325.
- Stamford :
 [Henry Grey, 1st] Earl of ; 300, 306.
 [Thomas Grey, 2nd] Earl of ; 321.
- Stamler, Johan Heinrich ; 65, 70.
- Staudbank, — ; 52.
- Stanereme (?) ; 224.
- Stanhope :
 [Philip Stanhope, 2nd] Lord ; 375.
 Sir John ; 43.
 Mrs. ; 335.
- Stanislaus, —, a Polish knight ; 198.
- Stanley :
 — ; 65.
 Sir Edward ; 81.
 Col. William ; 134.
- Stanyarde, Thomas ; 213.
- Stapleton, Sir Philip ; 295, 300.

- Star Chamber, Court of; 171, 250, 257, 272, 274.
- Start, the; 393.
- States General, the. See United Provinces.
- Staveley (Staunely), co. Derby; 537.
- Sterlinge, Mr.; 57.
- Stewart, Admiral Charles; 392.
- Stickhausen (Stickhusae). letters dated at (ex arce Stickhusana); 71, 114.
- Stirling; 23.
- Stoad; 95, 124.
letter dated at; 61.
- Stole, the, Groom of; 297.
- Stone:
Andrew, letters from; 392, 406, 407, 411.
—, the fool; 53
George, Dean of Derry; 390-392 note.
— — — letters from; 390-392.
Mr.; 252.
- Stoneland; 390.
- Stony Stratford (Stomistretford), co. Bucks; 232.
- Stourbridge (Sturbridge) fair, [co. Worc.]; 250.
- Stowe, letter dated at; 345.
- Strafford:
[Thomas Wentworth, 1st] Earl of. his son's patent to be Earl of Strafford and Baron Raby; 288.
[William Wentworth, 2nd] Earl of; 347.
- Strahan, George; 372.
- Straits, the. See Gibraltar.
- Strange:
[James Stanley, 1st] Earl of; 294.
Thomas; 219.
- Strasbourg; 407.
- Stratford, Henry; 92.
- Stratford (Stretford) upon Avon, "The Crown" at; 232.
- Street, Baron; 336.
- Strickland:
Mrs. B., letter from; 348.
Lady; 348.
Mr.; 348.
- Stringer, Sir Thomas; 320, 334.
- Strobingen, village of; 402.
- Strode, Mr.; 343.
- Stroud, Mr.; 303, 306.
Mr., Governor of Dover; 335.
- Strutt, —; 329, 330.
- Stuart, Lady Arabella; 139.
- Stukeley, Dr. W.; 219.
- Stukely, —; 154.
- Styck, Dr.; 151.
- Subsidies; 264, 289, 290, 314.
- Sucelin, Sir John; 280.
- Suffolk; 264.
- Suffolk:
[Thomas Howard, 1st] Earl of, Lord Chamberlain, afterwards Lord Treasurer; 87, 115, 123 note, 148, 196, 243, 247, 250, 253.
— letters from; 10, 58, 63, 79, 96, 214.
- Suffolk—cont.
— letter to; 162, 197.
Countess of, (1612); 118.
Countess of, (1681); 335.
- Sully, Duke of; 97.
- Sumpter, Captain (or Major); 406, 407.
- Sunderland:
[Robert Spencer, 2nd] Earl of; 341-343, 420, 450, 506, 508, 511, 518, 521 note.
— letter from; 341.
Lady, (1685-8); 340, 348.
[Charles Spencer, 3rd] Earl of; 353, 354, 361, 363, 375.
— letters from; 361-363, 366.
[Anne, dau. of 1st Duke of Marlborough]. Countess of; 353.
— letter from; 361.
- Sunney Hill; 400.
- Surrey; 229, 390.
Sir Ant. Cope's land in; 90.
- Surveyor General on this side Trent. See Treswell.
- Sussex; 264, 390.
- Sussex. [Thomas Ratchiffe, 3rd] Earl of, letter from; 223.
- Sutton:
Lientenant; 92.
Mr.; 415.
Robert; 526.
- Suyn, Helena; 134.
- Suyn:
Leonara; 134.
Samina; 134.
- Swartenzberg, Count of; 165.
- Swayles (Swayne), William; 231, 232.
- Sweden (Swedland) and the Swedes; 150, 159, 177, 190, 202, 455, 473, 483, 510, 511.
Crown of, differences between Spain and France referred to the arbitration of; 465, 473, 476, 479, 481, 494, 495.
ministers of; 453.
the navigation to; 167.
Resident of, in France; 421.
— at Paris. See Puffendorf.
the Senators of, letter from; 104.
- Sweden, King of:
Charles IX.; 104.
Gustavus Adolphus; 104, 151, 270.
(Charles XI.); 327.
(Charles XII.); 356, 364.
- Swift, Dean Jonathan, letters from; 359, 360.
- Switzerland and the Swiss; 96, 147, 169, 434, 444.
Cantons of; 157.
— (Papist) of; 186.
soldiers of, in service of France; 503.
- Sydney, Lady, (1642); 305.
- Symonds, Lazarus; 388.
- Sympon, Serjeant; 335.
- Synega, Don Pedro de; 114.

T

- Fahardart ; 365.
 Tailboys (Tailboies), — ; 174, 175.
 Talbot :
   Lord, Lord Chancellor, letter from ; 217.
   Mr., brother of 12th Earl of Shrewsbury ; 345.
   Robert, Prebendary of Norwich ; 22.
 Talmash :
   Major General ; 350.
   Thomas ; 350 note.
   Colonel Thomas ; 350 note.
 Tambonnen, Mr. ; 471.
 Tamworth, Andry ; 219.
 Tanfield (Tanfeld, Tanfeld) :
   Chief Baron ; 250.
   Mr. ; 257, 269, 276, 279.
   Robert ; 218.
 Tangiers ; 358, 501.
 Tartaro, Mr. ; 512.
 Tassell, Robert ; 232.
 Tate :
   Mr. ; 304.
   Sir William ; 213, 249.
 Lawyers, the, objections to the petition of ; 179.
 Taylor, Henry ; 188, 189.
 Tedore, island of, (in the Moluccas) ; 169.
 Tellier, Mr. See Le Tellier.
 Tempest, Sir Thomas ; 300.
 Temple :
   Lady, wife of Sir William ; 335.
   Sir William ; 465, 466, 483.
 Tendring, Mr. ; 348.
 Tenet, Tennis. See Thanet.
 Tergoes ; 40.
 Ternate (Ternata), island of, (in the Moluccas) ; 167, 169.
 Terrill, Sir Rob. ; 86.
 Terseras, the ; 211.
 Terthol ; 40.
 Texel, port of ; 146.
 Thames, the river ; 90, 91, 191, 542.
 Thanet (Tenet, Tennis) :
   [Thomas Tufton, 6th] Earl of ; 347.
   [Saekville Tufton, 7th] Earl of, letter from ; 216.
   Lady, (1688) ; 347, 348.
 Themines, Marshal de ; 201.
 Theobalds (Thiballs) ; 118, 129, 251.
   the Court at ; 26.
 Thetford, [? co. Norf.], letter dated at ; 128.
 Thindon, steward of ; 329.
 Thirlewaie, Philip ; 175.
 Thomas :
   Captain Herbert ; 69.
   Mons. ; 400.
   Mr. ; 391.
   Walter ; 221.
 Thompkins, Thomas ; 45.
 Thomson, — 124.
 Thorold, Sir William ; 328, 528, 529, 531.
 Thorpe (Thorp), Dr. Jo. ; 377, 378.
   — letter from ; 377.
 Thou (Tou), President (M. de) ; 34-36.
 Thouars ; 37.
 Throckmorton (Throkmorton) :
   Sir Arthur ; 219.
   Sir John, letter from ; 105.
 Throwly, Barons of ; 325.
 Thuanus, Mons. ; 39.
 Thurbone, Mr. ; 341.
 Thurlbye, Mr., of Barnard's Inu ; 214.
 Thynne (Thyn), Thomas ; 335 and note, 336 note.
 Tiange, Madame de ; 517.
 Tilley, — ; 258.
 Tinlley, Mr. ; 261.
 Tipper's prosecution ; 170.
 Tires, Edward ; 175.
 Tirwhit, Sir Philip ; 528-531.
 Titchfield (Tichfield), [co. Hants] ; 319.
 Toledo ; 26.
   Cardinal of ; 187.
   Don Faderique de ; 210.
 Tomont, Archbishop of. See Conre, Florence.
 Tooke, Francis, of London ; 180.
 Topcliffe, [co. York] ; 175.
 Tories, the ; 354.
 Torneman, George ; 219.
 Totenham Park, co. Wilts, letter dated at ; 389.
 Totridg ; 261.
 Totteridge (Toterige), co. Herts. ; 273.
 Tou, President. See Thou.
 Toulon ; 436.
 Toulouse (Tholouze, Thoulouze) :
   Bishop of, French ambassador to Spain ; 473, 499, 513.
   le Vt. (?) de ; 382.
 Tournay ; 524.
 Tournay, Edward ; 528, 531.
 Tournon, Count de ; 38.
 Tours ; 6.
   archbishopric of ; 200.
 Towcester (Tocester), [co. Nhamp.], "the Cok" in ; 232.
 Townsend, Lady, (d. 1685) ; 344.
 Townshend :
   [Charles, 2nd] Viscount, Secretary of State ; 361, 373.
   — letter from ; 373.
   [Charles, 3rd] Viscount ; 415.
   Hon. Charles, letters to ; 415, 416.
   — his wife. See Dalkeith, Lady.
 Tracy :
   Capt. ; 40.
   Sir Thomas ; 196.
 Transylvania ; 133, 144, 146, 148, 157.
   Prince of. See Gabor.
 Treasurer :
   Mr. See under Household.
   Lord ; 50, 80, 85, 87, 112, 114, 176, 179, 196, 233, 287, 288, 319, 320, 324, 420, 521.

- Treasurer, Lord—cont.
 — See also Dorset. Salisbury.
 Suffolk. Maundeville. Cranfield.
 Marlborough. Edmondess. Vane.
 Sir Henry. Albemarle. Danby.
 Rochester. Godolphin.
- Treasury, the; 352, 516, 517.
 Board, the; 512.
 Commissioners (Commissionaires) or
 Lords of; 331, 420, 431, 464, 465,
 467, 468, 471, 478, 512, 520.
 First Commissioner of. See Pelham.
 Secretary to. See Cooper.
- Tredway, Sir Robert; 528, 531.
 Trello, Cavalier; 45.
 Tremouille:
 Duke of, letter from; 36
 — letter to; 7.
 M. de la, letter to; 39.
 M. Claude de la, letter from; 37.
- Trenchard, Mr.; 327.
 Trent, the river; 191.
 Tresham (Tressham):
 Henry; 317.
 Lady, (1613); 244.
 Thomas, letter from; 213.
 Sir Thomas, letters to; 245, 274.
 Will.; 287.
- Treswell, Robert, Surveyor-General on this side Trent; 207, 256.
 Treves, Archbishop of; 146.
 Tregor (Tregor, Trevers):
 Lord, (1716); 363.
 Sir John, Secretary of State; 283,
 419-421, 423, 439, 440, 487.
 Mr.; 406.
 Robert; 219.
- Trimin, Mr.; 102.
 Triple Alliance, the, (temp. Charles II.);
 428, 443, 487, 496.
 Trotman, Samuel; 319 note.
 Trowt, Christopher, letter from; 215.
 Troyes, treaty of; 22.
 Trumbull, William; 1, 143, 159, 188, 189.
 — letters from; 16-22, 88, 127,
 157, 189, 194.
 — letters to; 19, 20.
- Tubb, Mr.; 21, 138.
 Tucker, George, letter from; 177.
 Tunbridge, [co. Kent]; 314, 336.
 Tunbridge Wells, [co. Kent]; 390.
 letter dated at; 379.
- Tunis; 190, 476.
 pirates of; 197.
- Turato, Jehan Andrea; 127.
 Turenne; 57.
 letters dated at; 36.
- Turenne:
 Monsieur de; 421, 423, 444, 451,
 463, 488, 497, 501, 504, 505, 513,
 514.
 — his niece; 505.
 Vicomte de. See Bouillon. Duke
 of.
- Turin (Thurin); 155, 197, 349 note, 382.
 letters dated at; 123, 160.
- Turkey and the Turks (the Turk); 61,
 109, 112, 133, 144, 146-148, 154-
 156, 180, 197, 369, 428, 442-444,
 457, 496, 516, 532.
 Company, the; 478.
 Grand Seigneur of; 449, 516.
 Grand Vizier of; 449.
 Resident or envoy of, to France.
 See under Ambassador.
- Turkish merchants, the; 532.
 pirates; 474.
- Turner:
 —; 85, 90, 232.
 Dr., Dean of Canterbury; 520.
 Lieut.; 207.
 Mrs.; 161, 162.
- Turnor, Sir Edmund; 328.
 Turvey; 213, 287.
 Tuscan, Prince of; 428, 433, 434, 457.
 Tuttle Fields. See under Westminster.
 Twickenham; 216.
 Twitnam; 392
 Tymperley, Anne; 219.
- Tyrawly and Killmaine, James O'Hara,
 Lord; 217, 377 note.
 — letters from; 377, 381-384, 386,
 387.
- Tyrconnel, Earl of, (1613); 134.
 Tyrone, Earl of; 152-155, 236.
 — his Lady; 152, 236.
 — his propositions; 29.

U

- Ulster:
 Lords; 153.
 province of; 75, 76, 291.
- Umberlade, co. Warw., letter dated at; 412.
- Union, the. See Empire, the, Protestant Princes of.
- United Provinces, the; 24, 31, 42, 43, 47,
 96, 101, 108, 110, 178.
 Councillor of State in. form of oath as; 41.
 English letters of reprisals against;
 541.
 the Orders of; 69.
- States General of; 7, 9, 11-13, 19, 27,
 33, 34, 38-41, 46, 47, 50-52, 55-
 72, 74, 78-81, 83, 85, 87-89, 93, 95,
 97-100, 103, 105, 112, 114, 116,
 117, 119, 120, 122, 125, 128-130,
 133, 137-141, 146, 147, 149, 150,
 152, 156, 157, 159, 177, 179, 181,
 187, 197, 198, 207, 209, 256, 292,
 359, 479, 481, 526.
 — letters from; 51, 143.
 — letters to; 58, 60, 70, 80, 85, 138,
 158, 173.
 — Agent for, at Heidelberg. See
 Brederode, Mons.

United Provinces—cont.

- Ambassadors, &c., of and to.
See under Ambassador.
  - commissioners from, to England; 132.
  - debt of, to James I.; 173.
  - the deputies of; 27, 79, 84, 85.
  - — (at Emden); 93.
  - — — letter to; 88.
  - English Commissioners to. See Spencer, Sir Richard. Winwood, Sir Ralph.
  - proceedings of commissioners of, touching the East India trade; 166-170.
  - project for a defensive league between England, France, and; 72, 73.
  - Receiver-General of; 359.
  - treaty with the Archdukes Albert and Isabella; 74, 75, 78, 79.
  - treaty of commerce with England; 78.
  - treaty of, with France; 72.
  - the troops of; 86.
  - truce with Spain; 79.
  - Upton, [co. Nhamp.], letter dated at; 234.
  - Uscocchi, the; 111.
  - Utenbogardus, Johannes; 208.
  - Utrecht (Utricke); 203.
    - letters dated at; 72, 115, 122, 150.
    - the broils of; 98.
    - Lord Governor of; 149.
    - magistrates of, petition to; 96.
- V
- V., J.; 48.
  - Vair, President du; 199.
  - Valence, Bishop of; 450, 451.
  - Valenciennes, in Hainault; 188.
  - Valery (Vallery); 201.
  - Valiant, Mr.; 372.
  - Valier, Valliere. See La Valier. la Valiere.
  - Valladolid, letter dated at; 49.
    - Royal Benedictine monastery of, prior of. See Valle, Brother John de
  - Valle, Brother John de; 49.
  - Valleusis, J., letter from; 96.
  - Valmalete, Mons.; 375.
  - Valois, Queen Margaret of; 28.
  - Valtoline, the; 210.
  - Van Beunen, —; 465, 466.
  - Vanden Eynden, Jac., letter from; 110.
  - Vande Put, Gilles, letter from; 176.
  - Vandermulen, Mons.; 357.
  - Vandernyle, Mons.; 156.
  - Vaudertombe, Francis; 36.
  - Vane (Fane), Sir Henry, Comptroller, Lord Treasurer and Secretary; 274, 288.

- Van Huysam, Mr.; 379.
- Van Oye, Heer; 40.
- Van Santen, —, letter from; 80.
- Varken (Vargen), Abraham de; 60.
- Vatican, the; 33.
- Vaudemont:
  - Mons. de; 207.
  - his son; 207.
  - Prince de; 358.
- Vaughan (Vaghan, Vawghan):
  - Captain; 62, 63.
  - Mr.; 421.
- Vause, Mrs.; 64.
- Vaux, [Edward Vaux, 4th] Lord; 261, 262.
- Velserus, Mareus, letter to; 119.
- Venable, Mr.; 80.
- Vendosme:
  - Chevalier de; 200.
  - Duke of; 201.
- Venetians, the; 111, 181, 183, 189, 210, 442-445.
- Venice; 1, 18-22, 43, 49, 92, 113, 120, 151 note, 177, 189, 191, 197, 202, 349.
  - letters dated at; 111, 152, 183, 197.
  - the Doge of, letter to; 120.
  - gold, patent of the Archdukes to the maker of; 127.
  - gold and silver thread after the manner of; 208.
  - library at, keeper of. See Giorgi.
  - Republic of; 120, 533.
  - Col. Holles's proposals to raise men for the service of; 532.
  - principal Secretary of. See Scaramelly, Giovanni.
  - the Signory of; 182.
- Ventadour, M. de, letter from; 37.
- Vera Cruz; 358.
- Verbergh, —; 151.
- Vere:
  - Lord, (1738), his son; 390.
  - Daniel, letter from; 51.
  - Sir Edward; 526.
  - Sir Francis; 38, 65, 106, 236.
  - letters from; 10, 63.
  - Sir Horace; 51, 57, 64, 65, 85 note, 93, 106, 107, 122 note.
  - letter from; 93.
  - his regiment; 38, 526.
  - Horatio, Lord, of Tilbury; 540.
  - Mr.; 399.
- Vermadois, the regiment of; 456.
- Vermelon, la; 350.
- Vernou:
  - Admiral; 397.
  - Mr.; 28, 396, 425, 470, 489.
- Versailles; 454, 462, 475, 476, 492, 496, 500, 503, 514-516.
- Verstegen, —; 122.
- Verulam, Francis Bacon, q.v., Lord, letter from; 255.
- Verviers, letter dated at; 135.
- Vervins, treaty of; 30.
- Vesey, style, dignity, or place of; 214.
- Vicent, Simon; 36.

- Vienna ; 210, 498.
 letter dated at ; 144.
 French Agent at. See Gremonville.
 the library of ; 33.
- Villars (Villar) :
 Marquis (Mr.) de ; 444, 499.
 — his courier ; 512.
 Lord, (1720) ; 367.
- Villecotrait, in France ; 463, 466.
- Viller, Colonel, his daughter ; 323.
- Villeroy, Mons. de ; 200.
- Villiers (Villers) :
 M. le Comte de ; 219.
 Sir Edward ; 346.
 Sir George, afterwards Viscount, afterwards Earl of Buckingham,
q.v. ; 247, 249.
 — letter from ; 176.
 Sir John ; 181, 206.
- Vim Vuod. See Winwood.
- Vincennes ; 495.
- Virginia ; 83, 97, 151.
 the Council for ; 99.
 — letter from ; 103.
 lottery for the support of a plantation in ; 122, 123.
 Marshal of. See Dale, Sir Thomas.
 the Spaniards in ; 148.
- Visconti, —, letter from ; 376.
- Vitry, Marshal (Mons.) de ; 200, 203.
- Vivares, in Languedoc, a rising in ; 477, 481.
- Vivonne (Vivone), Mr. de, General of the galleys ; 474, 476.
- Vlissing, Vlushing. See Flushing.
- Volberg, near Beinsberg, letters dated at ;
 142, 145, 147.
- Vorstius, Cunrad, D.D. ; 19, 104, 124,
 141, 209 note.
 — letter to ; 102.
- W
- Waade (Waad), Sir William ; 52, 54, 229.
 — letter from ; 8.
- Wabridge ; 266.
- Wackeman, Richard, of Bristol ; 180.
- Wade, Christopher ; 25.
- Waele, Anthony de ; 109.
- Wager, Sir Charles, letter from ; 392.
- Waigert's Strait ; 152.
- Wainsford Bridge ; 318.
- Wake (Wacke), Isaac, afterwards Sir
 Isaac ; 151 note, 182, 189.
 — letter from ; 197.
- Wakeman, Sir Geo. ; 331.
- Waldegrave :
 [James, 2nd] Baron, afterwards 1st
 Earl ; 373.
 — letter from ; 389.
 Lady, (1720) ; 368.
- Waldridge (Walldrige), [co. Bucks] ; 142.
- Walker, Sir Edward, Garter King of Arms, letter to ; 534.
- Waller, J., letter from ; 379.
- Wallis, Richard ; 207.
- Walloon infantry ; 178.
- Wallopp, Sir Harry ; 273.
- Walmer Castle ; 390.
- Walmerode, Benjamin Buwinckhausen
 (Buinckhausen, Buoinckhusen) de ;
 90, 91, 101, 105, 129, 146.
 — letters from ; 94, 144.
 — letter to ; 18.
- Walpole (Wallpool) :
 Sir Edward ; 219.
 Horace ; 391.
 — letter from ; 399.
 Sir Robert ; 1, 373-376, 380, 384,
 387, 391, 392.
 — letter from ; 379.
 — letter to ; 376.
- Walrond, Sir William ; 345.
- Walsingham, Sir Francis ; 113.
 — letter from ; 226.
- Waltham Abbey, co. Essex ; 375, 376.
 letter dated at ; 375.
- Waudesford, Osborne Sydney ; 219.
- Waustead (Wantsted), [co. Essex] ; 63.
- Warburton, Peter ; 239, 250.
- Warden, Robert ; 218.
- Wardrobe, the Great ; 360, 383, 387, 520.
 Master of ; 217, 352.
- Wards, Court of ; 302.
 Attorney of ; 250.
- Ware, [co. Herts] ; 161.
- Warkton (Warketon), [co. Nhamp.] ; 221.
- Warner, Jo. ; 533.
- War Office, letters dated at ; 409, 410.
- Warrasilius ; 407.
- Warren :
 Thomas ; 211, 212.
 Thomas, curate of Pirbright, co.
 Surr. ; 205.
- Warwick ; 262.
 gaol ; 232.
- Warwick :
 [Robert Rich, 2nd] Earl of ; 266,
 282, 286, 289, 291, 294, 296, 305.
 C., Countess of, (1716-17) ; 363.
 — letter from ; 364.
- Warwickshire ; 306. commission of array for ; 306.
- Waterford, in Ireland ; 152.
- Watson (Wattson) :
 — ; 231.
 Col. ; 397.
 Sir Edward, letter from ; 213.
 Sir Edward (son of Sir Edward),
 letters from ; 213, 233, 238.
 — letter to ; 245.
- Edward, of Rockingham ; 224, 232.
 — letter to ; 213.
- Sir Lewis ; 218, 249, 256, 258, 259.
 — letter from ; 213.
 — letter to ; 274.
- Mr., of Rutland ; 232.
 Thomas ; 104.
- Watten, the lands of, near St. Omer ; 188.

- Way :
 Mr. ; 129.
 R. ; 95.
- Webber, Mr. ; 390.
- Weekes :
 John ; 24.
 Mrs. ; 59, 102.
- Weekley (Weekely), [co. Nhamp.] ; 249
- Welbeck (Wellbeck), [co. Notts.] ; 334
note.
 letter dated at ; 346.
- Welsh, — ; 231.
- Wendisgrafts, Mr. de ; 498.
- Wentworth :
 Lord, (1660) ; 539.
 Gen. ; 394, 399.
- Werden, — ; 268.
- Wesel (Weselle) ; 124.
 letters dated at, 140, 143, 144, 146.
 treaty of ; 108, 109.
- West Chester. See Chester, West.
- Westcombe (Westcomb), Mr. ; 477, 478, 481.
- West India Company, the ; 541.
- West Indies, the ; 167, 168, 180, 258, 393, 408, 411.
- West Lillinge ; 333.
- Westminster ; 18, 250, 258, 297, 308, 331.
 letters dated at ; 33, 56, 109, 115, 177, 369, 526, 540.
 regiments raised in ; 540.
 — colonels of. See Howard.
 Craven.
 Delahay Street ; 383.
 Hall ; 240, 248.
 Henry VII.'s Chapel ; 300.
 Palace ; 117.
 — letters dated at ; 60, 71, 72, 80, 88, 101, 102, 120, 130, 235, 238, 263, 264, 540.
 Pall Mall ; 336 note.
 Piccadilly, Swallow Street near ; 374.
- St. James's, letters dated at ; 350, 542.
- St. James's Park ; 414.
- School ; 80.
 — King's scholars of ; 331.
- Tothill (Tuttle) Fields ; 302.
- Whitehall ; 50, 59, 126, 177, 198, 215, 217, 265, 314, 327, 337, 338, 342, 345, 410, 411, 539.
 — letters dated at ; 31, 33, 49-51, 58, 62-64, 66, 67, 69, 72, 73, 78, 79-81, 83, 85, 88, 95, 96, 97, 100, 117, 132, 151, 242, 251, 314, 337, 340, 341, 343, 348, 373, 390, 392, 406, 407, 418, 542.
 — the Banqueting House at ; 98.
 — Montagu House ; 2.
 — Paper Chamber ; 162.
- Westmoreland ; 115.
- Westmorland :
 [Charles Nevill, 6th] Earl of ; 540.
 [Francis Fane, 1st] Earl of ; 262.
 — letter to ; 262.
- Westmorland—cont.
 M., Countess of, (1626), letter from ; 214.
 [Mildmay Fane, 2nd] Earl of, Custos Rotulorum of Northamptonshire ; 268, 270, 279, 302, 306.
 [Charles Fane, 3rd] Earl of, letter from ; 318.
 Dorothy, Countess of, (1737), letter from ; 216 style dignity, or place of ; 214.
- Weston ; 234.
 letter dated at ; 343.
- Weston, —, Sir T. Overbury's keeper ; 160, 161.
- Wexford ; 190.
 plantation, the ; 194.
- Weymouth, [Sir Thomas Thynne, 1st] Earl of ; 338.
- Wharton :
 [Philip, 4th] Lord ; 284, 295, 306, 321, 331.
 [Philip, 1st] Duke of ; 363, 373, 386.
 Harry ; 345.
 Thomas ; 341 note.
- Wheler, John, letters from ; 122, 178.
- White, Sir Tho. ; 378.
- Whitmore :
 Mr. ; 240.
 Sir William, his daughter Mary. See Montagu, Mary, Lady, wife of Sir Charles.
- Whittlewood Forest, Lientenant of. See Ogle, Cuthbert.
- Whitworth (Whitworth), the wood of, co. Durham ; 84.
- Wiatt, Captain, his company ; 149.
- Widemartre, Sieur de ; 14.
- Widderington, Sir William ; 528.
- Widdrington :
 —, cousin of the Duke of Newcastle ; 334.
 Roger ; 174, 175.
- Wight, Isle of ; 384.
- Wigmore, Capt. ; 40.
- Willarston, William, letter from ; 35.
- Willaston, Mr. ; 32.
- William III., King :
 as Prince of Orange. See under Orange.
 as King ; 349.
- Williams (Willyams) :
 Lord Keeper. See Lincoln, Bishop of.
 Dr. ; 214, 254.
 John ; 25.
 Justice ; 240.
 Thomas, petition of ; 208.
- Williamson :
 Dr. ; 214.
 Mr. ; 425, 427, 430, 482.
- Willmer, —. See Miller.
- Willoughby (Willo'by, Willoughbie, Willowby) :
 Baron, (1589) ; 46.
 Lady, (1605) ; 237.

Willoughby—cont.

- of Eresby, [Robert Bertie, 12th] Baron, afterwards 1st Earl of Lindsey, q.v.; 214, 241.
 — Montagu Bertie, q.v., Baron, afterwards 2nd Earl of Lindsey, q.v.; 280, 284, 285, 296, 299.
 — — letter to; 284.
 of Parham, [Francis Willoughby, 5th] Lord; 294, 304, 305.
 — [William Willoughby, 6th] Lord; 319.
 Mr.; 33, 37.
 Sir Perss; 85.
 Richard, letter from; 131.
 Willson, Thoman; 232.
 Willys, —; 528, 530, 532.
 Wilmett, Sir Charles; 122.
 Wilmington, Spencer Compton, Earl of, Lord President; 390 and note, 406.
 Wilson, Colonel; 387.
 Wilton, Colonel; 383.
 Wiltshire; 219, 311.
 Wiltshire Hall; 176.
 Winbledon (Wymbleton), [co. Surrey]; 234, 524.
 Winch (Wyuche), Justice Humphrey; 239, 244, 250.
 Winchester; 44, 339.
 letter dated at; 44.
 Winchester, Bishop of:
 James Montagu. See Montagu.
 — chaplain to. See Ridley.
 Sir Jonathan Trelawney; 377.
 Winchester, bishopric of; 253.
 Winchester, [William Paulet, 1st] Marquis of, letter from; 223.
 Winchilsea, [Daniel Finch, 7th] Earl of, letter from; 399.
 Wind, Mr.; 356.
 Windebank, Secretary; 288.
 Windsor; 90, 112, 113, 125, 217, 241, 242, 274, 318, 325, 331, 337, 340, 347, 349, 414, 522.
 letters dated at; 111, 138, 275, 339, 352, 356.
 Deputy-Governor of; 414.
 Lodge, letter dated at; 380.
 Park, letter dated at; 353.
 Poor Knights of, captain of. See Budiani.
 Wingfield (Wingfeild, Wingfeilde):
 —, a cousin of Edward (3) Montagu; 231.
 Francis; 327.
 Mr.; 236.
 Robert; 228.
 Sir Robert; 238.
 — letters from; 233, 234.
 Winhoode, Sir Ralph. See Winwood.
 Winnif, Dr. See Lincoln, Bishop of.
 Winnington, Sir Francis, Solicitor-General; 325.
 Winter:
 Louis, petition of; 96.
 Mr.; 174, 216, 479.
 Wintney; 261.

98298.

Winwood (Winhoode, Vim Vuod):

- Anne, daughter of Sir Ralph. See Montagu.
 Frederick; 212.
 Henry; 212.
 Mr.; 332, 333.
 Ralph, afterwards Sir Ralph, successively agent in France, Resident Councillor and Ambassador in Holland, and Secretary of State; 1, 2, 24, 25, 42, 43, 54, 58, 60, 68, 70, 74, 84, 85, 93, 94, 101, 108, 115, 129, 143, 160 (Mr. Secretary), 162, 171, 207, 209, 274 note.
 — letters from; 32, 34, 84, 86, 93, 99, 103, 104, 111, 128, 148, 149, 173.
 — letters to; 28, 30-33, 35-39, 43-45, 47, 49-71, 73-75, 78-83, 85-101, 103-112, 114-119, 121-135, 137-152, 155-159, 161, 162, 164, 165, 173, 176-178, 180, 182-187, 189-198, 201-208, 246.
 — letters from and to, printed in Sawyer's Memorials; 2-22, passim.
 — his brother; 28.
 — expenses of, in Holland; 42.
 — a grant of James I. to; 104.
 — his house at the Hague; 150.
 — licence to return to England; 138.
 — passport for; 26.
 — appointed Principal Secretary of State; 158.
 — his wife, afterwards Lady, (step-daughter of Sir Thomas Bodley); 44, 47, 52-54, 69, 90, 91, 93, 102, 106, 112, 115, 123, 128, 149, 150, 178, 201, 273, 274, 276, 279.
 Richard, son of Sir Ralph; 218.
 — letter to; 341.
 Wirtemberg, Duke of; 92, 94, 135.
 — letter to; 18.
 — John Frederick; 100, 101.
 — — letter from; 105.
 Wise, —, the Grand Prior; 153.
 Withipole, Lady, wife of Sir Edmond; 205, 206.
 Witove, Olexey; 136.
 Woburn, [co. Bedford]; 302.
 Wodhull, Anthony; 222.
 Wolaston, John; 287.
 Wolf, Brigadier; 394, 396.
 Wolley, J.; 227.
 Wolly, Richard; 49.
 Wolstenholme (Worstenholme), John; 173.
 Wood:
 An. ñ; 378.
 —; 283.
 Sir Ha.; 499.
 John, letter from; 224.
 William, letter from; 374.
 Woodcote, [? co. Hants]; 319, 335.
 Woodford; 214, 360.
 Woodford, John, letters from; 198, 202.
 Woodhouse, Captain; 97.

Q Q

Woodhowse, Captain Francis; 52.
 Woodman, Mr.; 372.
 Woollen manufactures, English; 27.
 Woolston, Tho., letter from; 380.
 Woolterton, letter dated at; 399.
 Worcester:
   E[dward Somerset, 4th] Earl of,
     Lord Privy Seal; 87, 190.
     — letter from; 208.
     [Henry Somerset, 5th] Earl of; 276.
 Worcester, John Prideaux, Bishop of;
   300.
 Worcester Hall; 176.
 Worksop (Worsoppe), co. Notts; 191.
   letter dated at; 195.
 Worms, letters dated at; 407, 408.
 Wotton (Wooton):
   [Edward Wotton, 1st] Lord; 91,
     195 note, 243.
   Sir Henry, Ambassador to Venice;
     49, 112, 159, 183, 189, 192, 197
     note, 198.
     — letters from; 8, 119, 183.
   T. (? Thomas Wotton, 2nd Lord);
     251.
 Wourden, letter dated at; 110.
 Wray:
   Sir Christopher, Lord Chief Justice;
     236.
   Sir Christopher (? Chichester); 476.
   Sir John, letter from; 291.
 Wren (Ren):
   Mat.; 438.
   Mr.; 476.
 Wright:
   John (alias Jack); 174.
   Serjeant; 336.
 Wriothsley, Thomas, Lord, letter from;
   221.
 Wyardt, Dothias, councillor of Enno,
   Count of East Friesland; 70, 80.
 Wykeley; 221.
 Wykeley, Henry, the elder; 218.
 Wymbleton. See Wimbledon.
 Wymersley, hundred of; 224.
 Wynche, Justice. See Winch.

Y

Yardly (Yardely, Yearldy):
   —; 125, 231.
   Jasper; 35.
 Yarmouth; 302.
 Yarmouth, Sir Robert Paston, Baron
   Oxnett, Viscount; 320.
 Yates, Mr.; 57.
 Yaxley, Sir Robert; 82.
 Yelverton (Yerlverton):
   Sir Christopher; 277.
   — letter from; 215.
   Sir Henry; 312.
   Sir Henry, Attorney General; 196
     note, 251, 254.

York; 44, 277, 280–285, 288, 293–295,
   298–306.
   letters dated at; 195, 372, 526.
   the Committee Legier at; 301, 303.
   the Council at; 175.
 York, Archbishop of:
   [Matthew Dutton], letter from; 8.
   [Tobias Matthew]; 196.
   [John Williams, previously Bishop of Lincoln, q.v.]; 290.
 York:
   Charles, afterwards Charles I. q.v.,
     Duke of; 540.
   James (afterwards James II., q.v.),
     Duke of; 294, 306, 321, 331, 336,
     337 note, 419, 439, 441, 445, 473,
     505, 515, 523, 540–542.
     — commissions, &c., by; 541,
       542.
   [Anne (Hyde)], Duchess of; 437,
     473.
   Mary of Modena, Duchess of, afterwards Mary, Queen Consort, q.v.;
     337 note.
   Prince Frederick, Duke of, and of Albany. See Frederick.
 Yorke:
   Ensign G.; 86.
   George; 101.
   Thomas, letter from; 101.
 Yorkshire; 175, 379. meeting, the; 305.
   petition, the; 306.
   sheriff of; 301.
 Youghal (Yoghall) Haven, in Ireland;
   194.
 Young, John, of Edinburgh; 99.
 Younge:
   —, servant to Thomas, Lord Burghley; 235.
   Edward; 219.

Z

Zealand and the Zealanders; 24, 42, 68, 90, 151, 203.
   companies repertited upon; 40.
   Council of State of, letter to; 108.
 Zell, Duke of; 355.
 Zerickzee; 40.
 Zollern, Count of; 144.
 Zondt, the, impost on, 141.
 Zouche (Zoueh):
   George, 11th Lord, letter from; 222.
   Edward, 12th Lord; 224, 226, 234,
     242, 247, 249, 261 note.
   — letters from; 81, 255.
   Captain; 102.
   Sir Edward; 261.
   Lady, (1613); 242.
   Sarah, Lady, letter from; 261.
 Zouzín, Olexey Evanovitch; 136.

CIRCULAR OF THE COMMISSION.

Public Record Office, Chancery Lane,
London, W.C.

HER MAJESTY has been pleased to appoint under Her Sign Manual certain Commissioners to ascertain what unpublished MSS. are extant in the collections of private persons and in institutions which are calculated to throw light upon subjects connected with the civil, ecclesiastical, literary, or scientific history of this country. The present Commissioners are:—

Sir Nathaniel Lindley, Master of the Rolls, the Marquess of Lothian, K.T., the Marquess of Salisbury, K.G., the Marquess of Ripon, K.G., the Earl of Crawford, the Earl of Rosebery, K.G., Viscount Esher, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, M.P., the Bishop of Oxford, Lord Acton, Sir Edward Fry, Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, M.P., Sir H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, K.C.B., and Dr. S. R. Gardiner.

The Commissioners think it probable that you may feel an interest in this object and be willing to assist in the attainment of it; and with that view they desire to lay before you an outline of the course which they usually follow.

If any nobleman or gentleman express his willingness to submit any unprinted book, or collection of documents in his possession or custody to the examination of the Commissioners, they will cause an inspection to be made by some competent person, and should the MSS. appear to come within the scope of their enquiry, a report containing copies or abstracts of them will be drawn up, printed, and submitted to the owner, with a view to obtaining his consent to the publication of the whole, or of such part of it as he may think fit, among the proceedings of the Commission, which are presented to Parliament every Session.

To avoid any possible apprehension that the examination of papers by the Commissioners may extend to title-deeds or documents of present legal value, positive instructions are given to every person who inspects MSS. on their behalf that nothing relating to the titles of existing owners is to be divulged, and that if in the course of his work any modern title-deeds or papers of a private character chance to come before him, they are to be instantly put aside, and are not to be examined or calendared under any pretence whatever.

The object of the Commission is solely the discovery of unknown historical and literary materials, and in all their proceedings the Commissioners will direct their attention to that object exclusively.

In practice it has been found more satisfactory, when the collection of manuscripts is a large one, for the inspector to make a selection therefrom at the place of deposit and to obtain the owner's consent to remove the selected papers to the Public Record Office in London, where they can be more fully dealt with, and where they are preserved with the same care as if they formed part of the muniments of the realm, during the term of their examination. Among the numerous owners of MSS. who have allowed their family papers of historical interest to be temporarily removed from their muniment rooms and lent to the Commissioners to facilitate the preparation of a report may be named: The Duke of Rutland, the Duke of Portland, the Marquess of Salisbury, the Marquess Townshend, the Marquess of Ailesbury, the Earl of Dartmouth, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Ancaster, the Earl of Lonsdale, Lord Bray, Lord Hothfield, Lord Kenyon, Mrs. Stopford Sackville, the Right Hon. F. J. Savile Foljambe, Mr. le Fleming, of Rydal, Mr. Leyborne Popham, of Littlecote, and Mr. Fortescue, of Dropmore.

The costs of inspections, reports and calendars, and the conveyance of documents, will be defrayed at the public expense, without any charge to owners.

The Commissioners will also, if so requested, give their advice as to the best means of repairing and preserving any papers or MSS. which may be in a state of decay, and are of historical or literary value.

The Commissioners will feel much obliged if you will communicate to them the names of any gentlemen who may be able and willing to assist in obtaining the objects for which this Commission has been issued.

J. J. CARTWRIGHT,
Secretary.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1870 (Re-printed 1874.)	FIRST REPORT, WITH APPENDIX - . Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cambridge Colleges; Abingdon, and other Cor- porations, &c. SCOTLAND. Advocates' Library, Glas- gow Corporation, &c. IRELAND. Dublin, Cork, and other Corporations, &c.	f'cap.	[C. 55]	s. d. 1 6
1871	SECOND REPORT, WITH APPENDIX, AND INDEX TO THE FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS - - - - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cam- bridge Colleges; Oxford Colleges; Monastery of Dominican Friars at Woodchester, Duke of Bedford, Earl Spencer, &c. SCOTLAND. Aberdeen and St. An- drew's Universities, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde; Dr. Lyons, &c.	,,	[C. 441]	3 10
1872 (Re- printed 1895.)	THIRD REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; Cam- bridge Colleges; Stonyhurst Col- lege; Bridgewater and other Cor- porations; Duke of Northumber- land, Marquis of Lansdowne, Mar- quis of Bath, &c. SCOTLAND. University of Glasgow; Duke of Montrose, &c. IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde; Black Book of Limerick, &c.	,,	[C. 678]	6 0
1873	FOURTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. - - - - - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords; West- minster Abbey; Cambridge and Oxford Colleges; Cinque Ports, Hythe, and other Corporations, Marquis of Bath, Earl of Denbigh, &c. SCOTLAND. Duke of Argyll, &c. IRELAND. Trinity College, Dublin; Marquis of Ormonde.	,,	[C. 857]	6 8
1873	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - - -	,,	[C. 857i.]	2 6

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1876	FIFTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. -            Contents :—            ENGLAND. House of Lords; Oxford and Cambridge Colleges; Dean and Chapter of Canterbury; Rye, Lydd, and other Corporations, Duke of Sutherland, Marquis of Lansdowne, Reginald Cholmondeley, Esq., &amp;c.            SCOTLAND. Earl of Aberdeen, &amp;c.	fcap.	[C.1432]	s. d. 7 0
„	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - - -	„	[C.1432 i.]	3 6
1877	SIXTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX. PART I. -            Contents :—            ENGLAND. House of Lords; Oxford and Cambridge Colleges; Lambeth Palace; Black Book of the Archdeacon of Canterbury; Bridport, Wallingford, and other Corporations; Lord Leconfield, Sir Reginald Graham, Sir Henry Ingilby, &amp;c.            SCOTLAND. Duke of Argyll, Earl of Moray, &amp;c.            IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde.	„	[C.1745]	8 6
(Re-printed 1893.)	DITTO. PART II. INDEX - - -	„	[C.2102]	1 10
1879 (Re-printed 1895.)	SEVENTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX.            PART I. - - - -            Contents :—            House of Lords; County of Somerset; Earl of Egmont, Sir Frederick Graham, Sir Harry Verney, &amp;c.	„	[C.2340]	7 6
(Re-printed 1895.)	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX -            Contents :—            Duke of Atholl, Marquis of Ormonde, S. F. Livingstone, Esq., &amp;c.	„	[C.2340 i.]	3 6
1881	EIGHTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX. PART I. - - -            Contents :—            List of collections examined, 1869-1880.            ENGLAND. House of Lords; Duke of Marlborough; Magdalen College, Oxford; Royal College of Physicians; Queen Anne's Bounty Office; Corporations of Chester, Leicester, &amp;c.            IRELAND. Marquis of Ormonde, Lord Emly, The O'Conor Don, Trinity College, Dublin, &amp;c.	„	[C.3040]	3 6
1881	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX -            Contents :—            Duke of Manchester.	„	[C.3040 i.]	1 9

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1881	EIGHTH REPORT. PART III. APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Contents :— Earl of Ashburnham.	f'cap.	[C. 3040 ii.]	s. d. 1 4
1883 (Re- printed 1895.)	NINTH REPORT, WITH APPENDIX AND INDEX. PART I. - - - - - Contents :— St. Paul's and Canterbury Cathedrals; Eton College; Carlisle, Yarmouth, Canterbury, and Barnstaple Corpora- tions, &c.	„	[C.3773]	5 2
1884 (Re- printed 1895.)	DITTO. PART II. APPENDIX AND INDEX - Contents :— ENGLAND. House of Lords, Earl of Leicester; C. Pole Gell, Alfred Mor- rison, Esqs., &c. SCOTLAND. Lord Elphinstone, H. C. Maxwell Stuart, Esq., &c. IRELAND. Duke of Leinster, Marquis of Drogheda, &c.	„	[C.3773 i.]	6 3
1884	NINTH REPORT. PART III. APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Contents :— Mrs. Stopford Sackville	„	[C.3773 ii.]	1 7
1883 (Re- printed 1895.)	CALENDAR OF THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G. (OF CECIL MSS.). PART I. - - - - -	8vo.	[C.3777]	3 5
1888	DITTO. PART II. - - - - -	„	[C.5463]	3 5
1889	DITTO. PART III. - - - - -	„	[C. 5889 v.]	2 1
1892	DITTO. PART IV. - - - - -	„	[C.6823]	2 11
1894	DITTO. PART V. - - - - -	„	[C.7574]	2 6
1895	DITTO. PART VI. - - - - -	„	[C.7884]	2 8
1899	DITTO. PART VII. - - - - -	„	[C.9246]	2 7
1885	TENTH REPORT - - - - - This is introductory to the following :—	„	[C.4548]	0 3½
1885 (Re- printed 1895.)	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Earl of Eglinton, Sir J. S. Max- well, Bart., and C. S. H. Drummond Moray, C. F. Weston Underwood, G. W. Digby, Esqs.	„	[C.4575]	3 7
1885	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - The Family of Gawdy.	„	[C. 4576 iii.]	1 4
1885	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - - - Wells Cathedral.	„	[C. 4576 ii.]	2 0

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1885	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Earl of Westmorland; Capt. Stewart; Lord Stafford; Sir N. W. Throckmorton, Sir P. T. Mainwaring, Lord Muncaster, Capt. J. F. Bagot, Earl of Kilmorey, Earl of Powis, and others, the Corporations of Kendal, Wenlock, Bridgnorth, Eye, Plymouth, and the County of Essex; and Stonyhurst College.	8vo.	[C.4576]	s. d. 3 6
1885 (Re-printed 1895.)	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Marquis of Ormonde, Earl of Fingall, Corporations of Galway, Waterford, the Sees of Dublin and Ossory, the Jesuits in Ireland.	"	[C. 4576 i.]	2 10
1887	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Marquis of Abergavenny, Lord Braye, G. F. Luttrell, P. P. Bouverie, W. Bromley Davenport, R. T. Balfour, Esquires.	"	[C.5242]	1 7
1887	ELEVENTH REPORT - - - - This is introductory to the following:—	"	[C. 5060 vi.]	0 3
1887	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - H. D. Skrine, Esq., Salvetti Correspondence.	"	[C.5060]	1 1
1887	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords. 1678-1688.	"	[C. 5060 i.]	2 0
1887	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Corporations of Southampton and Lynn.	"	[C. 5060 ii.]	1 8
1887	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Marquis Townshend.	"	[C. 5060 iii.]	2 6
1887	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Earl of Dartmouth.	"	[C. 5060 iv.]	2 8
1887	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Duke of Hamilton.	"	[C. 5060 v.]	1 6
1888	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Duke of Leeds, Marchioness of Waterford, Lord Hothfield, &c.; Bridgwater Trust Office, Reading Corporation, Inner Temple Library.	"	[C.5612]	2 0
1890	TWELFTH REPORT - - - - This is introductory to the following:—	"	[C.5889]	0 3
1888	(1.) APPENDIX - - - - Earl Cowper, K.G. (Coke MSS., at Melbourne Hall, Derby). Vol. I.	"	[C.5472]	2 7
1888	(2.) APPENDIX - - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C.5613]	2 5

Date.		Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1889	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Earl Cowper, K.G. (Coke MSS., at Melbourne Hall, Derby). Vol. III.	8vo.	[C. 5889 i.]	s. d. 1 4
1888	(4.) APPENDIX - - - The Duke of Rutland, G.C.B. Vol. I.	"	[C.5614]	3 2
1891	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C. 5889 ii.]	2 0
1889	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords, 1689-1690.	"	[C. 5889 iii.]	2 1
1890	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - S. H. le Fleming, Esq., of Rydal.	"	[C. 5889 iv.]	1 11
1891	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Athole, K.T., and the Earl of Home.	"	[C.6338]	1 0
1891	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Beaufort, K.G., the Earl of Donoughmore, J. H. Gurney, W. W. B. Hulton, R. W. Ketton, G. A. Aitken, P. V. Smith, Esqs.; Bishop of Ely; Cathedrals of Ely, Glouces- ter, Lincoln, and Peterborough; Corporations of Gloucester, Higham Ferrers, and Newark; Southwell Minster; Lincoln District Registry.	"	[C. 6338 i.]	2 6
1891	(10.) APPENDIX - - - The First Earl of Charlemont. Vol. I. 1745-1783.	"	[C. 6338 ii.]	1 11
1892	THIRTEENTH REPORT - - - This is introductory to the following:—	"	[C.6827]	0 3
1891	(1.) APPENDIX - - - The Duke of Portland. Vol. I.	"	[C.6474]	3 0
	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Ditto. Vol. II.	"	[C. 6827 i.]	2 0
1892	(3.) APPENDIX - - - J. B. Fortescue, Esq., of Dropmore. Vol. I.	"	[C.6660]	2 7
1892	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Corporations of Rye, Hastings, and Hereford. Capt. F. C. Loder- Symonds, E. R. Wodehouse, M.P., J. Dovaston, Esqs., Sir T. B. Len- nard, Bart., Rev. W. D. Macray, and Earl of Dartmouth (Supplementary Report).	"	[C.6810]	2 4
1892	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - House of Lords, 1690-1691.	"	[C.6822]	2 4
1893	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Sir W. Fitzherbert, Bart. The Delaval Family, of Seaton Delaval; The Earl of Ancaster; and General Lyttelton- Annesley.	"	[C.7166]	1 4

Date.	—	Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1893	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Earl of Lonsdale	8vo.	[C.7241]	s. d. 1 3
1893	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The First Earl of Charlemont. Vol. II. 1784-1799.	„	[C.7424]	1 11
1896	FOURTEENTH REPORT This is introductory to the following :—	„	[C.7983]	0 3
1894	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Duke of Rutland, G.C.B. Vol. III.	„	[C.7476]	1 11
1894	(2.) APPENDIX The Duke of Portland. Vol. III.	„	[C.7569]	2 8
1894	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Duke of Roxburghe; Sir H. II. Campbell, Bart.; the Earl of Strath- more; and the Countess Dowager of Seafield.	„	[C.7570]	1 2
1894	(4.) APPENDIX AND INDEX Lord Kenyon.	„	[C.7571]	2 10
1896	(5.) APPENDIX J. B. Fortescue, Esq., of Dropmore. Vol. II.	„	[C.7572]	2 8
1895	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX House of Lords, 1692-1693.	„	[C.7573]	1 11
1895	(7.) APPENDIX The Marquess of Ormonde.	„	[C.7678]	1 10
1895	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX Lincoln, Bury St. Edmunds, Hertford, and Great Grimsby Corporations; The Dean and Chapter of Wor- cester, and of Lichfield; The Bishop's Registry of Worcester.	„	[C.7881]	1 5
1895	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Earl of Buckinghamshire, the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Onslow, Lord Emly, Theodore J. Hare, Esq., and James Round, Esq., M.P.	„	[C.7882]	2 6
1895	(10.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Earl of Dartmouth. Vol. II. American Papers.	„	[C.7883]	2 9
	FIFTEENTH REPORT. This is introductory to the following :—
1896	(1.) APPENDIX AND INDEX The Earl of Dartmouth. Vol. III.	„	[C.8156]	1 5
1897	(2.) APPENDIX AND INDEX J. Eliot Hodgkin, Esq., of Richmond, Surrey.	„	[C.8327]	1 8
1897	(3.) APPENDIX AND INDEX Charles Haliday, Esq., of Dublin.	„	[C.8364]	1 4

Date.		Size.	Sessional Paper.	Price.
1897	(4.) APPENDIX - - - The Duke of Portland. Vol. IV.	8vo.	[C.8497]	s. d. 2 11
1897	(5.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Right Hon. F. J. Savile Foljambe of Osberton.	"	[C.8550]	0 10
1897	(6.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Earl of Carlisle.	"	[C.8551]	3 6
1897	(7.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Somerset, the Marquis of Ailesbury, and Sir T. G. Puleston, Bart.	"	[C.8552]	1 9
1897	(8.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - The Duke of Buccleuch and Queens- berry, K.G., K.T., at Drumlanrig.	"	[C.8553]	1 4
1897	(9.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annan- dale.	"	[C.8554]	1 0
	(10.) APPENDIX AND INDEX - - - Shrewsbury and Coventry Corpora- tions; Sir Walter Corbet, Bart, &c.	"	(In the Press.)
1898	MANUSCRIPTS IN THE WELSH LANGUAGE - Vol. 1. Lord Mostyn at Mostyn Hall, co. Flint.	"	[C.8829]	1 4
	Vol. 2. Mr. Wynne at Peniarth - -	"	(In the Press.)
1899	REPORT ON THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH, K.G., K.T., AT MONTAGU HOUSE, WHITEHALL. VOL. I.	"	[C.9244]	2 7
1899	DITTO DITTO OF THE MARQUIS OF ORMONDE. VOL. II.	"	[C.9245]	2 0
	DITTO DITTO OF THE DUKE OF PORTLAND. VOL. V.	"	(In the Press.)
	DITTO DITTO OF J. B. FORTESCUE, ESQ., OF DROPMORE. VOL. III.	"	(In the Press.)

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

---

REPORT

ON THE MANUSCRIPTS

OF

THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH & QUEENSBERRY,
K.G., K.T.,

PRESERVED AT

MONTAGU HOUSE, WHITEHALL.

---

VOL. II.

PART 1. — 2

---

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

---

LONDON :

PRINTED FOR HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE

BY MACKIE & CO. LD.

---

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, EAST HARDING STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C., AND 32, ABINGDON STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.; or
OLIVER AND BOYD, EDINBURGH; or
E. PONSONBY, 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN.

1903.

[Cd. 930.] Price 1s. 10d.

CONTENTS.

---

	PAGE.
INTRODUCTION - - - - -	v
THE SHREWSBURY PAPERS - - - - -	1
INDEX - - - - -	801

INTRODUCTION.

---

SEVERAL of the more important series of letters in this collection were edited by Archdeacon Coxe in 1821, and portions of one series, the Vernon Letters, by G. R. P. James in 1841; but the editors left entirely untouched many other interesting letters and papers, which are dealt with in the present volume.

Much has been written of the political life and character of Charles Talbot, Earl and Duke of Shrewsbury, but little seems to have been known about his early days, when he was a minor under the guardianship of the Earl of Cardigan, his grandfather, and others. Here we have a series of his letters to Sir John Talbot, his uncle, beginning in 1673, when he was thirteen years old, selections from which are given.

In 1674, with James Morgan, apparently his tutor or "governor," the young Earl embarked somewhere in the Thames, and sailed round Margate to Dieppe, whence he travelled by way of Rouen to Paris. He was sent there for the purpose of studying in "Navarre College," but as he was "not inclined to shut himself up in the walls of it," a lodging was found for him outside. While on his travels many years afterwards he met a French Bishop who had been a fellow student of his "at Navarre," but failed to recognise him. He had not been in Paris many months before he caught the smallpox, which his tutor regarded merely as "a debt most men are solvable for."

Although so young, the Earl showed great solicitude in respect of his mother, which was natural under the circumstances. In 1675 he relates with great satisfaction that she had entered the "monastery" of Maubuisson, the Abbess of which was Prince Rupert's sister (Louisa). In this connexion sundry references are made to Abbot Montagu, who has been frequently mentioned in the first volume of this Report. The Abbot did his best to second the desire of the Countess Dowager to obtain, through Lord Arlington, the honour of kissing the hands of Queen

Catherine, in order "to wash out the particular blot that lay upon her." She had her wish, and was received at Court. A year later she married Mr. George Rodney Bridges, without the knowledge of Shrewsbury, who resented being kept in the dark as to these matters. In fact, his early letters show that he was not at all likely to be influenced in later life by his mother in favour of James II., as has been suggested.

In 1676 the Earl's guardians were endeavouring to arrange a match for him with the daughter of Lord Northampton, and Sir John Talbot requested him to come over and see the young lady, which the Earl acquiesced in, after much grumbling at the trouble of the journey. Apparently no engagement took place, as he was back again in Paris in the autumn, preparing for his "exercise" at the Academy, for which it was necessary that he should have a coach bearing his arms, and a coachman in livery. The coach was obtained, but in 1678 the Earl was still in doubt as to what kind of livery he should choose. At that time he had received "commands" from James, Duke of York, to attend him in the expected war in Flanders. His grandfather obtained the Duke's consent to his returning to England, in the hope of preventing his taking part in the campaign. The Earl was however resolved to go, and made his preparations, but there is only one letter from him while he was in Flanders.

These early letters show the Earl to have been a young man of great independence of character, and quite capable of managing his own affairs, in which he resented too much interference on the part of his guardians. He had decided opinions on all subjects, from matrimony to periwigs. After 1678 we learn little more about him from these papers till the Revolution.

Nor have many fresh particulars been found as to Shrewsbury's leading part in bringing about that great event, but there are several important papers illustrating the events preceding and following it. The Earl of Clarendon, in a letter to the Princess of Orange, narrates for the Prince's information the proceedings of the Archbishop and the six Bishops in opposition to James's order for the reading in all churches of his Declaration of Indulgence.

A letter from William of Orange is dated 2nd November, 1688, but November is clearly a mistake for December, as he did not land at Torbay till 5th November. If, as is probable, it was addressed to Shrewsbury, it shows that the Earl had been negotiating with the Corporation of Bristol for a supply of money, of which the Prince stood in great need. The letter also relates to certain military arrangements. Subsequently Shrewsbury himself refers to a number of gentlemen who came to him at Exeter at this time in support of William.

James II.'s final letter of instructions to the Earl of Middleton from Rochester, just before his flight, came into this collection accidentally. Many other allusions to the late King and his partisans occur. On his arrival at Kinsale in March, 1689, Lord Tyrconnell wrote to the Duke of Hamilton and the Earl of Perth, urging them to be faithful to him. Shortly after, from Dublin Castle, James sent military commissions to the Earl of Balcarras and Viscount Dundee, the terms of which are set out. These and other commissions to persons both in England and Scotland are alluded to in Colonel Parker's subsequent "information."

The doubts respecting the birth of "the Prince of Wales" are insisted on in the Declaration "proposed" to be made by the Prince of Orange in 1688; and two papers give circumstantial particulars of statements made by a certain Lady Ivy that the supposed Prince was really the son of her daughter Lady Clarke, wife of Sir Robert Clarke, born in June, 1688. Sir Robert is said to have fled to France with King James, and to have been followed by his wife. From Shrewsbury's Journal (p. 788) it appears that the Pope prepared "fascie or clouts" for the new Prince, but they were "never sent."

During Shrewsbury's first Secretaryship he seems to have destroyed most of his correspondence; at any rate we have here little besides the letters and drafts of letters between King William and certain Scottish noblemen in 1689, and letters from one M. de Fontenay, relating to some design of a "party" in Britany and Poitou, apparently for seizing Quimperlé and Port Louis, which Shrewsbury describes as "la grande affaire."

Between 1690 and 1693 Shrewsbury preserved not a single letter. From March, 1694, when he became Secretary of State for the second time, his correspondence has been preserved perhaps entirely, down to the time when he left England in 1700.

The letters of Mrs. Villiers and Mrs. Lundee, written by King William's desire, after his own persuasions had failed, to induce Shrewsbury again to accept the office of Secretary, have been mostly printed by Coxe, but not all; the rest are now published. The ladies requested Shrewsbury to burn their letters, which he promised to do, but evidently forgot his promise.

During the first three years of his second Secretaryship the Duke, as he was now created, appears to have assiduously attended to his duties. All the letters and papers he received are endorsed with the names of the writers and the dates of their writing and reception, either, as is most usual, in his own hand, or in that of a secretary, and he kept drafts or copies of his own letters. Thus we have a large quantity of his own handwriting, much of it very hurriedly and carelessly written, and difficult to read, especially the minutes which he took as Secretary at meetings of the Council, similar to those formerly taken by Secretary Cecil in the reign of Elizabeth, now among the State Papers. The notes of the examinations of many Jacobite prisoners (p. 319) are also in his hand.

His reasons for disliking the responsibilities of office are forcibly stated in a letter of 1st August, 1695: "I never yet was a month in business without wishing thirty times to be out of it. Even when things go the best, it has its disgusts; but to be in a post where much good is expected, and see how little one is able to do, is hardly to be borne." At the same time he was afraid to retire, for fear of making "room for knavery and treachery."

In 1694 and 1695 Shrewsbury occasionally complained of lameness owing to gout, and of bad eyesight, and in October, 1696, he fell from his horse while hunting, and burst a blood vessel. After that date he was constantly lamenting his ill-health and blood-spitting, and frequently absented himself from London, the air of which he found injurious to his lungs. These absences were however ascribed by his enemies to political reasons.

The accident occurred shortly after the accusations made against him by Sir John Fenwick of having been in correspondence with Lord Middleton, who had, after remaining in England for some time after the Revolution, finally taken up his residence at the Court of St. Germain. There is a copy of Sir John's "information" in Shrewsbury's own hand, the original having been sent to him by the King, and probably returned. In a letter to the Earl of Portland he says that Fenwick's story was as wonderful to him as if he had been accused of coining, and that, if it were true, he should deserve worse than its inventor intended him.

The accusation of his having accepted the Secretaryship in 1694 by the desire of King James seems absurd in face of the manifest reluctance with which he was persuaded to resume the office. From a later paper (p. 434) it would appear that this very objection was suggested to Fenwick, when he could only say that William might have had some information of the Duke's "dealings," and was thus able to "constrain" him to re-enter his service. The story was revived by Lord Peterborough (formerly Monmouth) in August, 1699, at his long interview with Secretary Vernon.

On 6th November, 1696, Shrewsbury was completely exonerated in the House of Commons from the charges made against him, as Henry Guy relates. "It was impossible," he tells the Duke, "for any person to have had a greater vindication than was given to you, and I am sure others fared well for your sake; for I do from my heart believe that all were sensible of the villainy of the accusation, and the innocence of yourself, and do therefore hope that this whole matter will make as little impression on you as it did on them." His stepfather, Mr. Bridges, a member of the House, also wrote to him about "the right the House did him." Bridges was certainly not a Jacobite, whatever his wife, the Countess Dowager, may have been. She is referred to several times at this date, but not as taking part in politics, though Shrewsbury was cautioned that all his letters left for her at a certain house had been opened (p. 435).

The Duke's continued absence from London was however adversely commented on. Even Portland wrote to him on the subject on 18th November: "Si j'estois dans votre place, et dans votre circonstance, rien ne m'empecheroit de venir à Londres quant ma vie seroit en danger, de peur que par mon absence je ne souffrisse quelque prejudice en ce qui m'est plus cher que la vie mesme." But a fortnight later Shrewsbury still protested his inability to move from his house at Eyford, in Gloucestershire, after making several attempts.

From Marlborough, Bridges, and others he received reports of the further proceedings against Fenwick in the House of Lords, in December and January, in which the Earl of Monmouth became involved by his own folly in endeavouring to incriminate Shrewsbury. On 16th January, 1697, Godolphin and Guy announce their termination, and that Shrewsbury's "innocence is at last rescued from the malice of ill men." Wharton, Sunderland, and Rochester also congratulated him on the result, but Sunderland added, "for God's sake come to us as soon as you are able."

Shrewsbury at last came to London in March, and took up his residence at Hyde Park Lodge, but was back again at Eyford at the beginning of May, having had a relapse of his "old distemper." He came to town again in July, and remained there busily attending to the duties of his office till the middle of August, when he had another relapse, and returned to the country, being urged by the King to use "all those methods and remedies" which were most conducive to his recovery.

He was in London once more before long, and met the King at his coming home after signing the Treaty of Ryswick; but on 25th November he writes to Galway that he found himself worse, and could breathe only in the country air; "so that," he says, "I can be esteemed nothing but a corpse, half buried already, and expecting the consummation of that entire ceremony; it will not therefore become my circumstances to meddle much in politics." To this Galway replied: "Je n'ay jamais receu une lettre qui m'ait touché si vivement; il semble que ce soit un adieu."

At this time Vernon, who had been Under-Secretary to Shrewsbury, and was by a Jacobite termed his "dog" (p. 539), was appointed to succeed Trumbull as one of the two Principal Secretaries of State. Portland assured the Duke that this change need cause no disturbance in the latter's "office," seeing that Vernon would be able to continue in charge of it, as well as to attend to his own new office. The King had expressed to Portland a wish that Shrewsbury would not dream, or at least not talk, of returning the seals to him just then, at the beginning of the Session; but promised to allow him soon after to act as he should think best, and to take some other less exacting office. Shrewsbury evidently remained only on these conditions.

Comparatively few letters from Shrewsbury after this have been preserved, though many were addressed to him. In December he retired once more into the country. While still Secretary in name, he appears to have considered himself practically exempt from official duties, and was unwilling to re-enter public life; yet he was constantly receiving from "Mr. Secretary" (Vernon) "a very exact account" of what was passing. At the end of the year, on the resignation of Lord Sunderland, the office of Lord Chamberlain was offered to him by the King, but he excused himself from accepting it, and Portland sent him a long letter of remonstrance, urging him not to insist on his refusal. In another letter Portland, to save Shrewsbury trouble, agreed to write on all matters of business to Vernon only.

The Duke's retirement was now recognised as an accomplished fact. On 9-19th March, 1698, Hill writes that the envoy then on his way from Brussels to London "will be sorry not to find your Grace there, who are so much the ornament of our Court that strangers miss you mightily."

In the same month however Shrewsbury met the King at Windsor, and it was hoped he would follow his Majesty to London; but he had been fox-hunting, which had brought on a fresh attack of blood-spitting. Consequently he did not emerge from his "retreat," which is still alluded to in June and August, when he was negotiating with the Earl of Clarendon, through the latter's brother, Lord Rochester, for the purchase of Cornbury, where he proposed to reside, having found his "little house" at Eyford inconvenient.

At length in June, 1699, Shrewsbury formally resigned the Secretaryship of State, but in September the King insisted on his accepting the Lord Chamberlainship, or the White Staff, though, to remove the Duke's objections, arrangements were to be made by which he would be allowed to act by deputy, without any personal responsibility.

The duties of the office were in fact performed by Sir John Stanley, his secretary, from whom there are many letters in 1699 and 1700, giving minute details of the numerous matters which fell within the province of the Lord Chamberlain of the Household, and asking Shrewsbury's decisions as to the appointment of chaplains, musicians, surgeons, apothecaries, gardeners, and officers of the Household, and as to arrangements in the King's palaces and parks. Among other things he was called upon to decide a claim made by a pensioner on "the old Company of Players acting in Drury Lane"; and to make provision for the King's Maundy, and for the entertainment of ambassadors.

The Duke, as Chamberlain, had lodgings at Kensington, Hampton Court, and Newmarket, but apparently no fixed place for the transaction of business. Stanley therefore endeavoured to obtain rooms at Whitehall suitable for the Chamberlain's Office, but, not finding any, applied to Sir Christopher Wren, who offered to "run up a slight building for that purpose this summer (1700), of two rooms for an office, and two rooms over them for a lodging for the Secretary, for less than £200"; surely not an ambitious scheme.

In May, 1700, the office of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to which no one had been appointed for some years, was offered by the King to Shrewsbury, probably in the expectation that he would accept it on account of his health, which was still unsatisfactory; but once more he declined the King's favour. In June he obtained leave to resign the Chamberlainship, on the ground that it was absolutely necessary for him to live in a warmer climate. His friends the Lords Justices in Ireland greatly deplored his resolve, but Somers in the following year expressed his envy of the "good fortune which had given him liberty to choose to live remote from such a country as ours." This may refer to the jealousies then prevalent at Court (p. 623).

On 1st November, 1700, Shrewsbury set out on his travels, and was absent from England for more than five years. In his Journal he gives accounts of all the numerous people, Englishmen and foreigners, he met with, and of all the places he visited; with many curious anecdotes, and with observations on many diverse topics, including books, manuscripts, music, singing, architecture, sculpture, painting, medicine, politics, inventions, gardens, games of chance, witchcraft, battles, and battlefields. He spent several months in France, and "saluted" Louis XIV. at Versailles, where he met an old acquaintance, the Duke of Lauzun, who told him, he says, "how kindly King James had always taken the distinguishing civility I had showed him when I was sent on the message" (in December, 1688); and expressed a wish that Shrewsbury would see "the Prince of Wales," a fine youth, which Shrewsbury refused to do, though, he pointedly added, he would rather see him in France than in England.

From France he went to Switzerland, and thence into Italy. He arrived at Rome on 20th November, 1701, and took up his abode there for nearly three years and a half. Only two days after his arrival he was introduced to the Countess Adelaide Paleotti, who is from that date mentioned almost daily in the Journal. Affairs and events in Rome during the same period are recorded at great length. Shrewsbury alludes to a ceremony which took place in the Vatican on 24th January, 1702, in honour of King James, who had died on 6th December before; to his "affliction" on hearing of King William's death on 4th April following; and to the death of his own mother on 19th April, old style. Subsequently he says he was informed that "several by their intercession to King James had recovered health and limbs; so I perceive they intend to make him a Saint."

