Letters from N. Johnston.

1685, Nov. 21st. N. Johnston to Dr. Johnston, his son, at York.—In the House you heard, I suppose of Mr. Cookes being sent to the Tower for seconding Mr. Howard, who moved to have the King's answer to this address considered.—Upon Wednesday Lord Devonshire made a sharp speech about standing to the Test, and was seconded by Lord Anglesey, and the Bishop of London made a long speech on behalf of the clergy. It is said my Lord Devonshire was smart upon the Chancellor, telling him he had not been long in that house, and he spoke more like a pleader at the bar than either. Some say the King heard all that. Yesterday morning, &c. (he tells him the King suddenly prorogued the Parliament to the 8th Feb.)—He hears that the King takes it ill he is not trusted as to his first declaration, and that he should be denied to employ a few officers. An M.P. told me he believes, in three or four days, the Money Bill would have passed. . . . The fanatics laugh in their sleeve at any hope of division in the Church. Some think there will be a dissolution, and with the Test may meet with as good a House of Commons again.

1685, Nov. 17. Says he got safe to London on Saturday night. He finds that his book will not be finished this fortnight, because his brother committed that part of Parliament to Sir R. Lestrange to peruse, and "it being, I believe beyond his mark, he sent it to a gentleman of the Temple; and after all it was returned without the least alteration; to that almost three weeks were wholly lost."—About the Lord Delamere's proceedings on being imprisoned without cause.—It is believed that Alderman Cornish had not been found guilty by the jury, who were about an hour in the debate, and the Judge were all gone to dinner, excepting one or two; and when the jury came back Mr. Cornish desired, before they gave their verdict, Mr. Shepherd should be examined upon such questions as he should ask him; the Judges on the bench sent the sheriffs to the rest of the Judges and the King's attorney to know if they would allow it, which they did; and when Shepherd came he swore that he, having the key of the room where the Duke of Monmouth and the rest were, at Mr. Cornish's desire, carried him up stairs and let him into the room and locked the door; so the jury went back for a short time and brought him in guilty. He was much pitied by the people who will not believe him guilty. It is said he denied all to the last. Your brother was a near spectator at the execution: he spoke with so much warmth that sweat ran from his face faster than he could dry it. The King has appointed Commissioners to settle his estate among his creditors, he being a great factor in Blackwall Hall; and the King has given his estate to his wife and children. His quarters are set up.—Notes of the proceedings in the House about the Test Act.—His brother Henry preached before the King on Sunday sennight, St. Matthew, Redde Cæsari, &c. His brother says the King and Queen gave him thanks. He asked the King if he might bring his brother (N. Johnston) to see His Majesty, and the King said he might.—When the sheriff came to Mr. Cornish, he asked leave to smoke a pipe of tobacco, which he was allowed; then he seemed to be in a delirious condition.—The writer is informed that there is likely to be good harmony between the King and the Houses.—Lord Stafford was this day impeached.—Orders are sent to Cheshire to find a bill against Lord Delamere.—The Duke of Norfolk is indisposed of a hypocondriack melancholy.

Part of a treatise in defence of Queen Mary of Scotland's title to the Crown: (The first book is absent.)

Speech of Edward Cecil in the House of Commons, temp. Car. I. Begins, This honourable house is composed of men of divers professions. (3 pp.)

A small quarto (paper), 1618; Dedication and 37 leaves, intitled the Chief Justices of England. The Dedication is by Jacob Chalonier.—Arms in colour, and a short description of each coat of arms (one page is devoted to each). The author states whether or not any issue remain. Begins, with Odo Bishop of Baienx. Under Sir Thomas Bromley, Kt., made Lord Chief Justice in 1553, who married a daughter of Sir Richard Lister, Kt., late Lord Chief Justice of England, and had issue Margaret, daughter and sole heir, wife to Sir Richard Newport, Kt.—He adds, some have grossly mistaken this Sir T. Bromley, and made him and the other Sir T. Bromley, late Lord Chancellor, all one man, which is not so, for he married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Adrian Fortescue, Kt., and had issue Sir Henry Bromley, Kt., father to Sir T. Bromley.—Under the notice of Sir Robert Catelyn 1559, it is said that his daughter married Sir John Spencer, of Althorp, father of Robert Lord Spencer, of Wormleighton, now living in 1618.

A quarto volume, vellum, 15th century, Latin, of 294 leaves, and an index of 7 leaves (one leaf is partly torn). The title page is a large shield of the arms and quarterings of Reresby, and the volume contains notes by Sir John Reresby, in 1636.—Gives the names of the nobility and gentry in the three ridings, at the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign. In the West Riding were the following places, with numbers of the gentry, &c.: Strafforth-cum-Tickell fee, 38 names; Skyrack, 18; Backstone, 28; Agbridge, 23; Morlay, 12; Staintrosse-cum-Osgoodcrosse, 20; Yewcross, 21; Claro, 35; the Anystie of York, 17.—In the North Riding, Bulmershire, 13 names; Redall-cum-Pickeringlith, 25; Gillingeast, 19; Gillingwest, 18 (in this is Henry Franke); Hangeast, 11; Bangwest, 17; Langbaugh-cum-Whitbistrand, 17; Birdfurth-cum-Allertonshire, 16.—In the East Riding, Holderness, 41 names; Orwe and Dorwyn, 12; Hartill, 32; Buckross and Pickering, 21.

On the reverse of folio 4 is the following note:—"May 13, 1636. Beginning and dates of some deeds "which are at the present day at large in Thribergh "House, in the county of York." (The first is a deed of sale by Alan de Reresby and his sons Bernard and Guido, of the domain of Reresby. The second deed is a grant by Thomas, son of Alan de Thriberg to the High Altar of Leonard of Thriberg, of a place of land in the east field of Thribergh, which he had of the gift of Thomas, son of Ralph de Reresby; dated Friday next after the feast of Bartholomew the Apostle, 1049.—A note (by the hand of Sir John Reresby) says that there must be a mistake in the date or otherwise, but that he has the deed.

Folio 6-8a. Arms of Reresby (16 quarters), with the names and arms of the successors (18) and their wives down to Sir Thomas Reresby, Bart., who married Frances daughter of William Brown. He was the son of Sir John Reresby, who married Frances Yerburgh, daughter of Edmund Yerburgh, of Snaith Hall, co. York, whose arms (evidently derived from Grey of Greyсток) are given, viz., per pale argent and azure, a chevron between three rose garlands counterchanged.

Folio 8b. Arms of Reresby, a shield of 20 quarters.

Folio 10 et seqq.—Successive bearers of the following names and their respective wives; and the arms impaled of husbands and wives where the word arms occurs. The number denotes the number of the successive bearers of the name:—

Fol. 149. Catalogue of all the gentry in the county of York, together with their coat armour (blason only), 1638. There are alphabetical, and end on 1686.—Blank leaves to 182. On fol. 183-6 are coats of arms, six in a page. Folios 189, 190, names of the pedigrees in this book.

Folio, vellum, c. 1400, with fly-leaf and 119 leaves of vellum. Chaucer's poem of Troilus and Cressida, beautifully written in neat Gothic letters: there are five verses in each page. At the beginning of the first line is a well finished drawing in colours of (seemingly) the meeting of Troilus and Cressida: the margin of this page and the pages containing the beginnings of the several other books of the poem are ornamented with interlaced work in gold and colours; at the foot of p. 1 is a shield containing the arms of France and England quarterly, with a white label of three points for a difference. Whether the label was charged in any manner cannot now be ascertained. On one of the points of the label are some spots which perhaps indicate ermine, and if this were the case the volume may have been written for John of Gaunt. If the label was plain it may have been written for Henry, Prince of Wales

* Barry of 8 or and azure, on a canton argent a rose chaplet, gules. These, like Yerburgh, are evidently derived from Grey of Greyсток.

† The last two descents are by a later hand.

(afterwards Henry V.). The shield, however, has no ornament or appendage,

The text begins,

The dowle sorwe of Troylus to tellen
That was ye kyng of Priamus son of Troye.

The proeme to the second book begins,

Owt of yese blake wawes for to sayle,
O wynd, O wynd, ye weder gyneth clere.

The third book begins,

The fifth book begins,

Approchen kan the fatal destyne,

and ends,

So make us JHU for the grace digne,
For love of mayde and moder thy benigwe.

Amen.

The Latin verses which precede the last 53 verses are in red ink. The "Testament of Cresseide" and the "Complaint of Cresseide" are not there.

The verse before the last 28 verses of book 1 (beginning, And for thy look of good comfort thou be), and another verse (the reference to which I have mislaid) are absent.

In other respects the text seems to agree substantially with the printed edition of 1687.

On the back of the last leaf is the following evidence of ownership: "Iste liber constat Roberto Wood qui est servus reverendissimi in Christo patris et domini domini Thome Cardinalis et legati." And this note is repeated in a little later hand, and is again repeated in a still later hand, with the addition "et Archiepiscopi Ebor."—Below are these names, "Robert Woode filius Roberti;" "Johannes filius Roberti;" "Johannes filius Johannis;" "Robert the sone of John, 1627;" all these seem to be written by one hand; and to the latter are added by a more recent hand "since is deceased."—Lower down is the autograph "Moun- tague Wood, sone and heir of John Woode, by Katherine, dawghter to Jo. Chaworth, esq., father to George Lorde Chaworth;" followed by "Johannes Wood filius Mountague Woode." On the obverse of this leaf is the name of "Elizabeth Wood, of Lamblye." On the obverse of the fly-leaf at the beginning are the names "Richard and Edward Wood;" and on the reverse, two 16th century names have been erased; of the first "Johannes S.," is all that remains certain.

1245, last of March, Kirkeby.—Grant by Roger, son of W. de Mubray, for the souls of himself and ancestors and heirs, to God and Saint Mary and the monks of Roche, the homage of John, son of Robert of Arnethorp, and his heirs and assigns;—and all the lands, tenements, and possessions which they have of his fee in Arnethorp, and all lands, &c. which they have in Saiteby and in Tuchwrd, of the gift of William and Hugh and Matilda de Moles, in frank almoyn.—Witnesses, W. de Middleton, Thomas de Coleville, Patric de Westwyke, John de Staynton, Ralph de Normanville, Ralph de Weremoles, Knights.—Elias de Middleton, William de Plumtone, Roger de Insula, Robert de Houedon, clerks.—Alan de Aldeford, Peter de Waddeweide, Peter and Reginald his sons, William de Staynton, William de Bilham, Peter de Rosington.

Among the Secroft deeds is the following: 1249. Brother Robert de Samford of the chivalry of the Temple in England Minister humilis, with the common consent of the Chapter, at Easter, in London, grants to all men holding property in the territory of Secroft, who had given (to the Order) the right to enclose with hedge and ditch in the said territory extending, &c., and quitclaimed the commons, which they said they had in the said wood,—that they would not impound beasts straying into the wood by reason of bad fencing, &c.—Witnesses, Brother Maurice, Brother William, Henry the Chaplain, Brother Hugh de Coyners, Brother Richard Fitz-John, Brother Hugh de Stoctone, Brother Robert de Stratton, Brother Robert de Staneleghe, the Preceptor at York. THE MANUSCRIPTS OF PHILIP WYKEHAM-MARTIN, ESQ., M.P., AT LEEDS CASTLE, CO. KENT.

P. WYKE-
HAM-
MARTIN,
ESQ.

The valuable collection of letters known as "The "Fairfax Correspondence" and printed a few years ago in four volumes, was once at Leeds Castle, but was lost to the owners by the accident mentioned in the preface to the printed work. The manuscripts still remaining at Leeds Castle are few; of these a MS. by the hand of Thomas, Lord Fairfax, is of most interest although the composition has been printed. Next in interest are,—an account by Brian Fairfax of his share in an incident connected with the restoration of King Charles II.; and a letter giving an account of the last moments of the life of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, showing the falsity of Pope's celebrated description of his death. Among the letters are several by Archbishop Wake, (but they are purely official); one by Elizabeth Elstob the Anglo-Saxon scholar, and several to Dr. Wilkins (the editor of Selden's Works) on literary matters; also a letter in French by Queen Henrietta Maria to Lord Colepeper, which shows that King Charles II. when in exile did not take his mother into his confidence or allow her to meddle in state matters. As the volume in which the late Mr. Wykeham-Martin published a facsimile was not largely circulated, I have thought it right to give a translation of the Queen's letter. Short notices of all the manuscripts are given below.

A 12^o sized volume, calf-bound, 17th century.—"Short memorials of some things to be cleared during my command in the South. As also of the northern actions during the war ther from 1642 till 1644." I. Short memorials of some things, &c. Begins: Now when the Lord is visiting the nation.—Ends: to the glory and comfort of his people.

P. WYKE-
HAM,
MARTIN,
Esq.

(I think that this volume was the original work by Lord Fairfax's hand; that alterations were afterwards effected, and that the work so altered was intended to be copied into the morocco-bound volume described below; but the scribe of the latter did not always follow the alterations, and in the printed edition of 1699 several passages are omitted.)

II. A short memorial of the northern actions, &c. Begins, I did not think to have taken up my pen.—Ends, Seeing that which now is in the days to come shall be forgotten. Eccl. 2. 16.

III. Translations into verse of Psalms 18, 24, 30, and 85.

A 12^o sized volume bound in red morocco, with the crest and name of Sir Peter Thompson on the sides.

I. Short memorials of some things, &c. Begins, Now when the Lord is visiting this nation . . . clear when he judgeth (6 lines). Now therefore by his grace and assistance I shall truly set downe the grounds' my actions moved upon during that unhappy war. Ends, to his glory and the comfort of his people.

II. A short memoriall of the northern actions, &c. Begins, I did not think to have taken up my pen any more. Ends, pleased God to put an end to the determination of my servise there.

(On a fly-leaf at the beginning of the volume is a note by Sir Peter Thompson that he bought the volume at Mr. Granger's sale, 22 Jan. 1738, because Mr. Granger asserted that it was the undoubted handwriting of Sir Thomas Fairfax. And on preceding fly-leaves is Sir Peter's presentation of the volume to the Hon. Robert Fairfax, Esq. He mentions that in 1635 Father Philips prevailed on King Charles I. to send Capt. Brett as Ambassador to the then Pope.

Folio, paper, 17th century.—On the fly-leaf is written "Tho. Fairfax.—Cætera norunt Et Tagus et Ganges forsan et Antipodes."

I. Short memorials of some things to be cleared, &c. pp. 28. p. 1. By the grace and assistance of God. Ends, p. 28 through ambition and dissimulation (the following sentence, ending with "comfort of his people," having been cancelled.)

II. A short memorial of the northern actions, &c. Begins, I did not think to have writ any more. Ends seeing that which is now is in the dayes to come shall be forgotten.

The alterations in the first tract are numerous and seem to have been made with a view to printing the edition of 1699. The text is in the handwriting of Brian Fairfax.

In the volume are copies of a few letters, one being from Henry Earl of Cumberland to Sir Thomas Fairfax at Denton, telling of the deaths of William Fairfax and John Fairfax.

A quarto sized volume, paper, 17th century, written by Brian Fairfax.—On the first page are the armorial bearings of Fairfax (sketched in ink) with a crescent for difference.

Fo. 2, 1646, June 30, Bath.—Fer. Fairfax to his son Sir Thomas Fairfax (copy). The good leisure I have found in this place and ability of the workman who was servant to Sir Antony Vandike made me and some others patient under his hand some few hours. The bearer Mr. Corell (looking at you some few minutes when you were here) went home to Bristol and fancied a picture not much unlike what I intend to have if I can get no other; therefore I do hartly pray you to let him take it more exactly. I do very earnestly desire my daughters also . . .

Fo. 3-6. Out of Phillip's (or Clarges') continuation of Baker's Chronicle.

Fo. 8. In the History of General Monk, &c., mention is made of a secret messenger sent from my Lord Fairfax to Monk, which was myself, B. F.

Fo. 8b. In a letter of the Duke of Buckingham to the King (Anno 1674, expository) are these words, the copy whereof I have; "As to your Majesty's return 'into England, I may justly pretend to have some share; 'since without my Lord Fairfax his engaging in 'Yorkshire, Lambert's army had never quitted him, 'nor the Duke of Albemarle marched out of Scotland."

Dr. Jo. Troutbeck came with Major-General Morgan to wayte upon my Lord Fairfax at Nun Appleton and shewed him General Monk's Declaration against the proceedings at Wall. House, &c. His Lordship approved of it, but added withal that if General Monk had any other designe then to restore the Parliament to their ancient freedom and settle the nation upon its ancient government hee would oppose him, but otherwise he would heartily join with him. This Dr. Troutbeck acquainted Monk with in Scotland, and hath told me that it was the occasion of the General's letter to my Lord Fairfax to which I carried the answer.—B. F.

Iter Boreale.—This is a tract by Brian Fairfax (it occupies rather more than 41 pp.) Begins. In December 1659 I was at my Lord Fairfax's house at Nun Appleton nere York, when his Lordship the Duke of Buckingham and Mr. Hen. Arthington sent for mee into a private room, and coming in my Lord Fairfax said, "Here is 'my cousin Brian, I will undertake he shall do this 'business." They then told me that Generall Monk had sent a letter to my Lord Fairfax to desire his assistance against Lambert's army, and my Lord Fairfax asked mee if I would carry the answer. I told him, "with all my hart." They instructed me what I was to say to General Monk by word of mouth.—A gentleman had already been sent into Scotland on this account, but he had gone the direct way and was interrupted by Lambert's army. So Brian was to go through the desolate parts of Yorkshire, Westmoreland and Cumberland. He was to tell Monk that Fairfax had received his letter, and would assist him to oppose Lambert and his army . . . and chiefly that Monk was to be careful, in case Lambert's army or any part of the rear of it should fall back into Yorkshire, to advance to their assistance.—The next day he began his journey; went to York and talked for an hour or two with Mr. Bowles the Minister; thence to Poppleton, thence to Thornton-bridge the seat of Sir Robert Strickland. One Thomas Shepherd, (alive in 1682) a servant at Sizir [Sizergh] of Sir Thomas Strickland, was to conduct him into Scotland; from Thornton Bridge to Sizergh, thence through Kendall and Pendrith to Brampton near Naworth Castle (where his guide told some of Lambert's horse that they were going to Netherby, Lady Graham's house), thence to Newcastle; thence to Castleton and Coldstream, where he saw General Monk in a little thatched house with two or three in the same room with him, viz. Dr. Barrow the Judge Advocate, Dr. Price his chaplain, Sir Will. Clark, his Secretary, and Sir Ralph Knight, as he told me since. He had a private conversation with Monk who told him that he would watch Lambert as a cat watched a mouse, &c., but that he expected to hear from his friends at Portsmouth and should be advised by them what to do.—The writer then gives an account of his return to Lord Fairfax and of the gradual defection of Lambert's army. Ends, but it must be acknowledged that my Lord Fairfax was the first man that ever declared his mind for restoring the King: which he did first by a message to Monk by Dr. Troutbeck into Scotland, and next to Monk himself, who came to meet him at Nun Appleton. Sic vos non vobis.

The remainder of the volume is occupied by Extracts (by Brian Fairfax) from printed books on History and Divinity.

A thick duodecimo sized volume.—A Jurnell of what past while I [Alexander Smyth] was in King William's service, beginning Sept. 19 1695.—Begins, Friday 19 Sep. 1695. Being in the Rumme Tavern in Queen Street, I did there receive my warrant from Charles Hargrave then clerk to the Barber and Surgeons Hall for being surgeons mate on board H.M. Ship the Vanguard.—He went on board at Spithead on the 1st of October. They went to Cadiz. On the 25th of April 1696 they were back in the Downs. During this voyage and the remainder of the time occupied by the journal, the entries are daily, but of a very unimportant kind; viz. his duties as surgeon's mate, attendance on sick sailors; notices of the squabbles of the doctor and his wife, who were hard drinkers, &c., &c. The last entry is, Tuesday 5th [Oct. 1697]. The Albarmarle this day began to be paid this afternoon. All the men were paid in paper tickets or bills. There were no tickets above 5*l*., nor none less than 5; what odd money you had you got it paid in species of money itself, as 4*l*., 3*l*., 2*l*., or less. After I received my pay which was about 44*l*., I received all in bills except the 4*l*., which I took in specie, then I went to Mr. Pomphretes where I got up my lodging for that winter, and in the spring [of] 98, I returned to Scotland. (On a fly-leaf is the autograph signature of B. Fairfax, and outside the cover is that of his son Brian Fairfax.)

A quarto sized volume of 23 written pages, unbound, paper, end of 16th and beginning of 17th century.—On a fly leaf at the beginning is written, "A manuscript of Seldens."

P. 2. A briefe treatise of a booke called Speculum Universi or Universal Mirror. (In the margin "May 17, 1605.") The first booke. It is not possible that in existence there can be more than two distinct species, which of necessity must be diametrically opposite, that there be nothing in one that may be sensibly imagined or rationally argued to be in the other.

(It seems to discuss, under various heads, the nature of the universe, God, man, and the heavens, and vegetable and mineral objects.) Ends. After this followed but the ordinary though well digested brief discourse of the rest of these sublunary mixt bodies, &c.

LETTERS.

Facsimile of a letter (six long lines in French) by William de Wykeham to Lord Cobham, about some exchanges which Lord Cobham knew of, and about payment of money.—It is dated from Shene.

1640, Aug. 25, York. "Charles R." to Ferdinando Lord Fairfax. An order to draw together the trained band, and to prest other forces, and have them ready at the rendezvous at Ripon on the 3rd of September next, and to wait further orders (under the King's signet) against the rebels. The King intends to march to the frontiers.

1655, April 23. Paris. The Queen Henrietta Maria to Lord Culpepper. (4 pp. holograph. A fac-simile is at pp. 168 and 169 of the late Mr. Wykeham-Martin's printed account of Leeds Castle.)

(Translation.) My Lord Culpepper, I have seen by several letters which you have written to Lord Jermyn that you think it would be for the benefit of the King, my son, that there should be a better understanding than heretofore between him and me than there is. This causes me to write this letter to inform you that there is no fault on my side, but that I have been unfortunate enough that the King has not put in me the confidence which I deserved at his hands, both as his mother and as a person who has not and has never shown herself as having any other interest than his. I will tell you then that for more than two years he has not confided to me the state (fonds) of his affairs except what could not be concealed, as well those of Scotland as those of Holland and England, only knowing what is public of all that has passed in this last business. I know that the King has been persuaded that it was dangerous to the good of his service that I should meddle in his affairs, by reason that my religion was offensive to England; and on the other hand all those who came thence were instructed not to trust me. Thus, insensibly and craftily (finement), I have been estranged from the King's confidence; but to finish confirming me in this assurance, on the death of the Pope I resolved to send to Rome about my own affairs, Lord Jermyn having written to the King to know if he wished to give me any orders for his service. He did not wish that I should meddle with, at that time, any more than at other times, saying that he was engaged through other channels. I think this will sufficiently show you the extreme of mistrust, it being to be believed in that place I should be capable of being of service to him, and, I dare boast, more than any other person. If I wished to give you in detail many other particulars I should have wherewith to write a long letter; but what I have already said is strong enough without saying more, and as it is only to satisfy you and make you see that I am not at all in fault, and that I have always been on all occasions, notwithstanding his ill-treatment, ready to serve him when he desires me; and I can assure you that I retired, seeing that it is not agreeable to him, with all the tranquillity of mind and satisfaction imaginable so far as I am concerned, contenting myself with the confidence of which the late King judged me worthy, whereof you are a good witness. And I am content to remain in that state, this letter being only to let you know the truth, of which perhaps you have not been informed, and that I shall be glad that you should know, being one of my friends, so that you should not think that I should have committed such a great fault as to have through bigarrierie withdrawn from the King's affairs in the condition in which they are. I will not then say more than assure you always that I am truly

Your very good friend,

HENRIETTE MARIE, R.

1670, Aug. 6. T. Fairfax to "Madam" (Lady Clinton?). Domestic.

P. WYKEHAM-MARTIN, Esq.

1677, Aug. 9. F. Berkeley to "My dear, dear sir." It is about proceedings in Jamaica, and is possibly addressed to Sir W. Berkeley. The writer says that he sends a narrative compiled from the memoirs of Robert Holden, Langston, Gutteridge, and others. He says that as soon as the addressee's back was turned the Lieut.-Governor said he would lay 100*l.* that the addressee would not be permitted to see the King, but would be sent to the Tower. ($\frac{3}{4}$ pp.)

1680, Sept. 20. Boston in New England. Lord Colepeper to his sister.—Says that he, after Lord Carlisle and all other Governors had failed, had successfully performed all that the King commanded.

1692, July 18. Anne Clinton to the Duchess of Buckingham.—Complimentary, in answer to an invitation to Clevedon.

1708, Feb. 27th. Welburne.—J. Gibson to Brian Fairfax, Esq., at his house near the Abbey, Westminster.—As it fell to my share to know as much of the last moments of the Duke of Buckingham as any there about him, so at your instance I shall readily give answer to satisfy any that he died in the best house in Kirkeby Moorside, which neither is nor ever was an alehouse; and that when he was moved to receive the Sacrament he consented to it, and received it from the hands of the minister of the parish with great decency and seeming devotion, which we who were with him were somewhat doubtful of his swallowing the bread because of his weakness and pain. However, we have reason to conclude that he died in the communion of the Church of England, and none about him at that time ever questioned it that I heard of. Indeed my Lord of Arran, who was then there, could not be prevailed on to communicate with his Grace, and as what my lord's reasons were for that unwillingness I know not, but my Lord, now Duke, of Hamilton is a witness of the truth of his Grace's thus receiving, his Lordship being, if I am not much mistaken, in the room then. I omit at present many particulars which I could give some account of as to the making his will, his naming his heir, &c., which his Grace would not be persuaded to. If you please to command any further account of the last passages of his life, the respect and honour I had from him and for him engage me to answer you in favour of his memory. I had not the honour to converse with him any long time before his dying days, but so far as I ever had any discourse with his Grace, he was always pleased to express a love for good men and good things, how little able soever he was to live up to what he knew.

1714, May 1 (or 11). D. Martin to Mrs. Martin . . . Mr. Bourk finding there were no hopes of a reconciliation between him and Mr. Farneby, after some very hard words the other day at their office challenged him and drew upon him; but Mr. Farneby making the best of his way off and the persons that stood by stepping between took Mr. Bourk's sword from him, so prevented the danger. Mr. Farneby has since taken out my Lord Chief Justice's warrant to seize him, but the other very regardless of his threats is gone down to Wetterham with a resolution to cane him.

1716, Oct. 18. Chelsea.—Elizabeth Elstob to [Mr. Wilkins].—Is much obliged for his communicating the plan of his designed edition of the Saxon Laws. "I can not yet inform you of the resolution of my friend in the matter; but I am well assured that almost all that you propose is already collected to his hand with the addition of manuscript notes by several great men, and that there is very little wanting to make the work complete. Were I not preengaged to him, no one should be more ready to give their assistance than myself."

1724–1731. Ten letters from Wake, Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Rev. Mr. Wilkins. They are on official matters.

1726, Jan. 5. Jo. (Leng, bishop of) Norwich, to the same. Official.

1727, Nov. 28. W. Cant. (Wake, Archbishop of Canterbury) to (Wilkins?) . . . In two months more I shall be 70. I do not look so much as one year forward.

1728, March 2. Eth. Wake to —. Mr. Wake has had a dangerous illness . . . Inflammation of the lungs at one past 70 is hardly to be got through.*

1728, Feb. 10, Westminster. Robert (Clavering, bishop of) Landaff, to Archdeacon Wilkins.—Says that he has presented Wilkins' petition for Hadleigh to the House of Lords and prayed a Bill to be brought in for enclosing the two commons for the better maintenance of the poor of the parish.

* He lived nearly nine years longer.

P. WYKE-
MARTIN,
Esq.

1731, Oct. 26. E. (Chandler, Bishop of) Duresme to the Rev. Dr. Wilkins at Canterbury. Says that he has given security to the Church of Durham for the 4 MSS. which Wilkins wanted, and that he has brought them up with him. That which was in Dr. Mangey's hands he sent down a few days before.—At the foot is a receipt by Dr. Wilkins for the 4 MSS. viz., B. IV. 18, B. IV. 24, B. IV. 26, and B. IV. 41; and promising to return them.

1732, April 29. Elias (Syddall, Bishop of) Gloucester to Wilkins.—Asks his interest for Mr. Charles Ray for the vicarage of Deopham, co. Norfolk.

1740, Aug. 16. Emanuel College. W. Richardson to the Rev. Dr. Wilkins When Baker mentioned that you intended to continue Leland, I told him you should be welcome to what little assistance my papers afforded.—We have all had a loss in Mr. Baker.—His (Baker's) papers are of small use for want of Indexes;—They are miscellaneous;—Lord Oxford has 22 volumes. The first is a complete history of his own College as low as 1710 The rest of his collection is left to the University.

1743, June 4. John Berriman to Dr. Wilkins, rector of Hadleigh, co. Suffolk.—Says that Wetstein had written to him resenting Wilkins's finding fault with Berriman for his charging Wetstein with want of candour in his ill-natured suggestion of the reason of Wilkins omitting to put down in the edition of the Coptic Testament the titles and chapters of Eusebius which Wilkins found in his (Wilkins) MSS.—Says that he exhorted and admonished Wilkins at the time being at Oxford, and argues that it must be for the sinister view he mentions that Wilkins does not.

1749–1752. Eleven letters from George Horne (afterwards Bishop of Norwich) to Dr. Denny Martin. The writer dates sometimes from Magdalen and sometimes from University College, Oxford. They are amusing, but not always in a clerical strain.

1759, Dec. 29. B. Martin to the Honourable Robert Fairfax at Leeds Castle. Alludes to the success of the English in America; the taking of Quebec, and the death of General Wolfe. Will. Fairfax, an ensign in the regulars, lost his right arm in the attack and is since dead.

MISCELLANEOUS.

1591. A sheet of vellum, containing the Queen's warrant to the Treasurer and Chamberlain of the Exchequer to pay to the Goldsmiths, Sir Richard Martyn, Kt., Alderman of London, and Hugh Kayle, certain moneys, amounting to 2,213*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* The expenditure was for plate given in New years' gifts, gifts at the christening of Mr. Robert Cecil, then Sir Robert Cecil, Kt., his child, and at the christenings of the Earl of Kildare's child, and Lord Wentworth's child, and Sir Orazio Pallavicini's child, and Count Wetenbriden's child, &c., &c. The New years' gifts amounted to upwards of 541*l.*; the christening gifts and rewards to upwards of 523*l.*; the mending of plate to upwards of 123*l.*; payments to artificers and others upwards of 24*l.*

1643, Jan. 17. A roll of parchment, containing an inventory (by appraisers) of the effects of Richard Martin, of co. Sussex, clerk. The total value was 1,105*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* Five instruments of music are valued at 5*l.*

Notes out of Mr. Stretton's funeral sermon for Thomas, Lord Fairfax, at Bilbrough, Nov. 22, 1671. Mr. Stretton was domestic chaplain to his Lordship.—He says, amongst other things, that Lord Fairfax had a high esteem for King Charles I.; he told Stretton that when Joyce's conspiracy was hatching he went to the King and endeavoured to persuade him to return, and not hearken to those that sought his ruin: but the King absolutely refused, and said—"Sir, I have a greater interest in the army and more friends in it than you have." He detested the execution of the King, and endeavoured to prevent it; and he composed a pathetic elegy on it. He constantly endeavoured to restore Charles II.—The Isle of Man was assigned to Fairfax for part of his arrears; he provided for ministers in the churches there, and he returned the surplus of the profits made in the island to the Countess of Derby. He made a poetical version of the Psalms. He was a lover of Ecclesiastical History, and compiled from our Saviour's time down to this age, all fair writ with his own hand, and many other MSS. He was much pleased with Thuanus (the last book of that kind which he read before his death) for his impartiality.

Copy of an epitaph said to have been written in chalk on a tombstone in the close of Sabury (Salisbury?) when Doctor Burnett filled the see. It was reported that Dean Swift was the author, and that he had taken a long journey and uncommon pains to publish his satire and conceal the author.

Here Sarum lies, who was as wise
And learn'd as Tom Aquinas;
Lawn sleeves he wore, yet was no more
A Christian than Socinus.
Oaths pro and con he swallowed down,
Loved gold like any layman;
He preached and prayed, and yet betrayed
God's holy church and mammon.
If such a soul to heaven stole,
And passed the devil's clutches,
I do presume there may be room
For Marlbro' and his Duchess.

1744, April 20. Agreement between the Reverend David Wilkins, D.D., Archdeacon of Suffolk, of the first part, Joshua Kirby of Ipswich, of the second part, and Josias Harris, of Ipswich, of the third part, for making an altar piece for Hadleigh Church, Suffolk.—A pen and ink drawing of a five-arched altar-piece is with the agreement.

GIBRALTAR.

Disposition of the guns and mortars in the several batteries in Gibraltar, July 20 1762. (1 large sheet.)

Journal of the blockade and siege of Gibraltar from 21 June 1779 to 8 Jan. 1780. (8 pp. folio.)

Report of ammunition expended from various batteries, 13 and 14 Sept. 1782.—One and a half large folio pages. The report is in a tabular form in columns under the heads of batteries, ordnance, number of fringes, charges, shells, totals, nature of shot, objects fired at. (The only objects were the enemies battering vessels.)

Return of ordnance fired at the enemies sunk battering ships, Gibraltar, 13 Sept. 1782, under the command of Capt. Philip Martin, 2nd battalion, royal regiment of artillery; and the officers names then on duty under his command. (1 sheet.)—There were eleven batteries and bastions.

Memoranda of experiments with red hot shot. (1 page.)

Other papers relating to Gibraltar and army and militia matters.

Several papers about Lord Colepeper's claim towards the end of the 17th century to a large territory in Virginia, which had been granted by King Charles II. (anno 21) to the Earl of St. Albans, Lord Berkeley, Sir William Martin, and John Trethewy, and which they had transferred to Lord Colepeper.

Portion of a poem (1 large leaf torn at the bottom). There are three columns of verses on each page, and they are numbered 16, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. The running title to each column (except No. 9) is "On the mercy of divine judgments." No. 9 has "God's mercy in curing sinners"; the first two lines in this column are.

So long as they continued in a place

Where they did suffer from a wicked race.

The first two lines of col. 10 are

Each man is tempted when he's drawn away

Of his own lust entic'd, St. James doth say.

The writing is of the 17th century.

Several sermons, 1723, &c., preached at Stanford, &c. (by Wilkins?)

In a copy of the Bible, folio, 1549, printed by Daye and Seres, is an entry by King George III. of his and his Queen's visit to Leeds Castle on the 3rd Nov. in the 19th year of his reign.

At the beginning of the same volume are six leaves of vellum containing a pedigree of the Fairfaxs, beginning with Sir Thomas Fairfax who died in 1640; compiled by Brian Fairfax, barrister and chief attendant upon George, 2nd Duke of Buckingham.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THOMAS STAMFORD RAFFLES, Esq., 13, ABERCROMBY SQUARE, LIVERPOOL.

T. S.
RAFFLES,
Esq.

Though it has grown in his hands, and undergone certain modifications of its original arrangement, the collection of writings in the possession of Mr. Thomas Stamford Raffles, the police magistrate of the borough of Liverpool, remains in substance and design the same remarkable collection of autographs which his father,

T. S.
RAFFLES,
Esq.

the late Reverend Dr. Raffles, of Liverpool, brought together and classified in more than one hundred unbound volumes. A general notion of the magnitude and order of this equally miscellaneous and comprehensive assortment of unconnected documents may be gained from a perusal of the following catalogue of its principal divisions.

	Vols.
1. The General Collection of Autographs, folio -	40
2. Autographs of Authors of the 19th century, of all countries, folio -	30
3. Autographs of Founders and Presidents of the American Republic, containing an autograph of every signer of the Declaration of Independence, folio -	1

24. A book entitled "Sententiolæ quædam e tractatu Lud. de la Forge de Mente Humanâ collectæ," by Dr. Watts, 1691 -	1
25. A small common-place book by Bishop Heber -	1
26. A common-place Book of Divinity, by Mary Tylston -	1
	Vols. 121

To this enumeration of the principal features of the collection may be added,—1. The original MSS. (complete) of several works by recent English writers; 2. A complete copy of the Koran on circular slips of paper, contained in a gilt metal case, so made that it could be worn as an amulet: the part of the surface of each slip, covered with writing, being of the size of half-a-crown. This amulet was taken from the arm of a native prince (after he had been slain in battle) by an aide-de-camp of Sir Stamford Raffles, then governor of the island of Java. In this general survey it should also be remarked that, as each of by far the larger proportion of the notable writings is exhibited with an engraved portrait or some other pictorial illustration (often with several such illustrations) of its writer, the value of the collection depends scarcely at all more on its documents than on the artistic leaves by which they are explained or adorned.

However comprehensive and exceptionally rich in entertaining material they may be, the miscellaneous writings of a collector of autographs necessarily comprise a large proportion of papers that have no title to the consideration of patient searchers for historic facts. In this respect Mr. Raffles's collection resembles inferior collections of the same kind. Whilst some of his writings by persons of high moment are scraps of insignificant scribbling, or mere signatures, not a few of his larger examples of penmanship are absolutely devoid of historic worth. On the other hand, he is fortunate in possessing a considerable number of documents that would by themselves distinguish his orderly store of papers from such literary accumulations as are, under favourable circumstances, the ordinary result of zeal and perseverance in the industry of gatherers of autographs. The warrant for the payment of Egerton's services in the prosecution of Mary Queen of Scots, and the letters which conveyed to the Earl of Derwentwater on Tyne-side the latest news of London in the concluding days of James the Second's reign, may be noticed as examples of the treasure that displays itself now and again to the patient examiner of Mr. Raffles's multifarious papers. The letters, addressed by lords of Elizabeth's council to the mayor of Chester, at a time when the metropolis of the north-western district of the realm was alive with troops on their way for service in Ireland, constitute another group of papers that will not fail to seize the attention of every person, who examines the following inventory of the important records and memoranda to be found amongst a far larger number of domestic or altogether trivial writings.

24 Nov. 1497. Warrant under the sign manual of Henry the Seventh, to Sir Robert Litton, keeper of the Great Wardrobe, to give certain presses of clothing to John Fligh, yeoman of the robes.

10 Mar. 1506. Deed of conveyance by Hugh Marshall of Cheddulle and Alice, his wife, to Robert Dale and his heirs for ever, of a message with its appurtenances, called Marshals, in the parish of Cheddull, co. Stafford.

29 Jan. 1530. Bill, under the sign manual of Henry the Eighth, granting, in consideration of good service, to Reginald Whitakers, yeoman of the king's guard, the farm of leads in Northwich, in the king's county palatine of Chester, together with the tolls of the town there, vacant by reason of the death of Richard Sutton, late farmer of leads aforesaid, and in the king's hands by reason of the minority of Edward Stanley, son and heir of Thomas Stanley, late Earl of Derby, deceased; to hold during the nonage of the said minor.

9 Aug. 1541. Warrant by the lords of the council to the treasurer and chamberlains of the Exchequer, for the payment of money to "Lois de Nogera hysparyard," who "is apoynted to serve the kynges majestie now in "this present journey to Scotland." 26 Sept. 1769. Oliver Goldsmith's receipt for 500 guineas paid him by William Griffin for volumes of the Natural History.

27 June 1770. Letter, dated at Quebec, from Sir Guy Carleton (afterwards 1st Lord Dorchester) to Sir Wm. Johnson, Bart., Superintendent of Indian affairs in the Northern District. About a council of the Indian tribes.

8 Nov. 1776. Letter (Circular) from Lords of the Council to Richard Myddelton, Esq., the Custos Rotulorum of the county of Denbigh, for the impressment of sailors for His Majesty's service.

19 Aug. 1783. Note from George the Third to Lord North, remarking that "Lord North should write to "Brudenel for the usual fee given at christenings of "children of Dukes, and must transmit to the Lord-Lieutenant, to be distributed as in common cases." Dated from Windsor.

13 Feb. 1792. Letter from Thomas Paine to George Washington, President of the United States, announcing a present of twelve copies of the writer's not yet published work, "for you and Mr. Jefferson."

29 Dec. 1809 to 28 April 1812. Twelve letters from John Bellingham, the murderer of Mr. Spencer Percivall, to his wife.

6 May 1820. Letter addressed by Lord Byron (but never delivered) to Henry Brougham, charging the latter with telling "lies," and demanding satisfaction. The writer's indignation was chiefly occasioned by Mr. Brougham's speeches respecting the differences between Lord and Lady Byron.

May 1830. An interesting collection of papers relating to the Act of Parliament (May 1830) enabling "His Majesty to appoint, by Commission, under his sign manual, the persons therein to be named, to affix His Majesty's Royal Name to such papers and other documents as may require the same, during his Majesty's lamented indisposition." The collection contains,—

1. An example of the Sovereign's feeble signature in the year 1828; 2. Letter (dated 16 June 1828) by Sir Henry Ellis of the British Museum, giving the precedents for enabling the Sovereign of England to sign with a stamp used by Commissioners; 3. Second letter (dated 20 May 1830) from Sir Henry Ellis on the same subject; 4. Third letter (dated 21 May 1830) on the same subject, from Sir Henry Ellis; 5. Fourth letter (dated 24 May 1830) from Sir Henry Ellis on the same subject; 6. Letter (dated 20 May 1830) from the Duke of Wellington to the Lord Chancellor, respecting the Attorney-General's proposed bill; 7. Letter (dated 21 May 1830) from Sir Nicholas Tindal, making an addition to Sir Henry Ellis's antiquarian data respecting sign-manual stamps; 8. Second letter (dated 24 May, 1830) from the Duke of Wellington to the Lord Chancellor; 9. Draft in Lord Lyndhurst's handwriting of the bill above named; 10. A pardon (dated 31 May 1830) under the sign manual affixed by stamp. The date of Sir Henry Ellis's first letter shows that so early as 16 June 1828 the state of the King's health had caused ministers to consider the propriety of lightening his labours by inducing him to sign by commission with a stamp.

10 Feb. 1845. Letter from Lord Lyndhurst to the Queen, recommending Messrs. Lee, Humphrey, Wood, Butt, Hayward, and Gurney, for promotion to the rank of Q.C., and Mr. Serjeant Manning for a patent of precedence. Approved by her Majesty.

At the conclusion of a list which makes no attempt to exhibit the various attractions of the far larger and non-historic part of a singularly comprehensive and entertaining repertory of autographs, and in the last paragraph of a report which is necessarily silent of numerous matters that would be especially diverting to the mere hunter after literary curiosities, I may be permitted to thank Mr. Stamford Raffles for the assistance he afforded me in my examination of a mass of writings which would remain one of the most remarkable of existing collections of autographs, even if it were deprived of its many documents of historic interest.

THE RECORDS OF THE CORPORATION OF BRIDPORT.

The earliest MS. volume in the possession of the Corporation of Bridport is a thick small octavo, with leaves of parchment, not numbered, and still in what were probably its original boards, covered with leather, in a tattered and worm-eaten condition: from the brass pins and small plate still surviving on one of the sides, we may conclude that its title, on parchment, was once inserted there, probably under a piece of transparent horn; or possibly, the brass pins may have been intended for adjusting the leather thongs, now wanting, with which the volume was kept closed.

It contains, in part, our earliest Statutes of Parliament, and begins with an incorrect transcript of the Confirmation of the Magna Charta of the 9th Henry III. made in the 25th year of King Edward I.; written in, apparently, an almost contemporary hand, with the initial letters (as in other parts of the volume) illuminated in red and blue. The "Carta de Foresta" (A.D. 1299) follows, succeeded by "Sententia lata super "Cartas,"—Sentence of excommunication upon those breaking the said Charters.—This is followed by the "Assisa Forestæ," "Provisiones de Merton," "Statuta de Marlebergh," "Statuta Westmonasterii Primi" (sic), "Statuta Gloucestris," and "Statuta Westmonasterii Secundi." At this point the Table of Chapters at the beginning of the volume ends, though in the context the "Statuta Westmonasterii Tertii" immediately follow, written in a similar hand. The Statute "Quin Fines in Curia" follows, in a like hand; then "De Religiosis," "De Religiosis Alienigenis," "Circumspecte agatis," "De Vocatis ad Warrantiam," "Ne quis ponatur in Assisis," "De Champart," "De Mensuris et Ponderibus," "De tonsura Monetæ," "De Militibus," "De Mercatoribus," "Statuta Symonie," "Statutum Eboraci" 12 Edward II., "Statuta Exoniæ," "Statuta de Scaccario." Other Statutes, in addition, "Office of the Coroner," "View of "Frankpledge," and "Assize of Bread," with some miscellaneous matter in reference to the contentions between Edward II. and the Barons, as to the Despensers, are followed by some brief entries, in another hand, relative to laws, coin, weights and measures, trades, and punishments of fraudulent traders. These are succeeded by a "Registrum," or Manual of various common forms of official documents, occupying about 68 folios, in a hand of the early part of the 14th century. Various memoranda then follow relative to the vill of Bridport, its right to toll of "Culagium," or keelage (an exaction for vessels touching ground with the keel), in its maritime jurisdiction, or "maritana," and the right of its inhabitants to collect stones and sand there between certain "falsies," or high cliffs, apparently belonging, on one side, to the Abbots of Cerne and Simonesbergh, and on the other to the Abbots of Caen and of Bruttone. An account of the foundation of the Chapel of St. Michael, by Robert de Faryndoue, and Joan, his wife, A.D. 1324, then follows; further mention of members of which family will be found in the sequel; Rental of the Fabric and Lights of the Church of St. Mary; Rents of the Mass of St. Mary and the Holy Trinity, A.D. 1337; Rents of the Commonalty of Bridport, mostly arising from selds, or warehouses open at the sides; the Gabel (or Rental) of St. Martin's at Bridport, giving a list of most, probably, of the owners of land there, about A.D. 1330: among them is the name of John Chirchille, an ancestor, not improbably, of the Marlborough family. A deed of covenant then follows, dated A.D. 1265, and executed by Sir William de Leghe, lord of Alington, in favour of the House of Lepers of Saint Mary Magdalen, at that place; Master John de Brideport, Physician, and Robert, Rector of Brideport, being among the attesting witnesses. A list then follows of the successive Bailiffs of Brideport, beginning in the sixth year of Edward II., and ending about the 37th or 38th of Edward III., the last four or five lines being worn away, and almost illegible. Ordinarily there were two Bailiffs of the town in each year, but in the 23rd of Edward III. (A.D. 1350) four Bailiffs are named, as having held office, Edward Stone, John Grey, William Hichecoke, and Richard Laurens, in "tempore Pestilentie"—the time of the Pestilence, the great Plague, still known among us as the "Black Death." In the 27th year of that reign, Richard Coffeyn was one of the Bailiffs. In addition to the year 1350, the name of Richard Laurenz, or Laurence, occurs several other times as Bailiff; in one place his name is scribbled at the head of the page; and, from an entry (in Latin) near the beginning of the volume, signifying the birth of Laur', the second daughter of Richard Laurence and Petronilla (Parnel), on the Eve of St. Petronilla the Virgin, it being also the Eve of Pentecost, A.D. 1338, it seems not unlikely that the volume was originally his property: he practised perhaps in the law, and some parts, at least, of the volume may have been written by him, or under his direction. In 1338 William Quarel and John Snaw were Bailiffs.

The context then turns to entries of various descriptions, beginning with "Statuta Brevium," practice in "Court Baron," "Exceptiones contra Brevia," "Fet a Saver," "Summa Bastardie," "Cedit Assisa," "Modus componendi breviam," "Parvum Hengham," "Judicium Easiorum." Towards the close of the volume is an account of deeds of various descriptions—"Modus Cartarum," their forms and execution. It begins,—"Quit est carta? Scriptum sigillatum de re immobili, data cum pacifica seissina, sine aliqua conditione adjuncta (sic)." "What is a charter? A sealed writing, about a thing immovable, given with peaceful seisin, without any condition annexed." The volume near its close contains "Inventorium cujusdam magnatis," forms of Inventory for a wealthy man's manor-house, supposed to be dated in the 20th year of Edward II. The hall, it is supposed, will contain 2 moveable tables, 5 small forms, 3 pairs of coffers, one banker (or bench cloth), one "pelum sive covile" (probably, a fire-shovel), two brass washing-basins, one chess-board, with the "family" ("familia," meaning the chessmen) in ivory; "unum stannum ferreum" (an iron stand), one large candlestick, 3 small candlesticks, 4 stools, 4 chairs, and 2 andirons, or "ippogia." The contents then follow, of the Wardrobe, Pantry, Larder, Kitchen, Brewhouse, Bakehouse, Cart-house, Grange, Oxstall, Cowhouse, Sheepstall, Pigstye, and Granary; a supplement to the close of the Second Book of Mleta, it might almost be called. Forms of testaments follow; Inventory of goods in the house, on the day of death; Expenses on the day of Burial, the items being as follow (tr.):—"Bread bought 2s.; expenses of men watching by night, one bushel of maslin (flour)—ale 3s. 0^d.; meat and other necessities 18^d.; a goose 2^d.; young pigeons 2^d., 2 pounds of wax, 18^d., 3 pounds of candles 6^d., oatmeal and salt 2^d., to a woman watching the said W. nine days, in autumn, at 4^d. per day, 3s., linen cloth to sew the body in 9^d., for proving the will 8^d." There are also one or two other items, the nature of which does not clearly appear. "Expenses of the Anniversary day" then follow, ending with "Discharge of the Testament by the Executors." This is followed by the "Valuation of the manor of some great man." A multiplication table ends this part of the volume, coming down to 15 times 12, and, after that going on to 7 times 20. The last 5 pages are occupied, in part, with proceedings in the Law Court of Bridport 11th Edward III., and transcript of a royal mandate of the 9th Edward III., in reference to privileges claimed by the burgesses of Bridport. The "Tappetari," or tappers of ale on sale, it may be remarked, were directed to put their signs in the windows, as also in the street. Except where the transcripts of Statutes are given, the Latin of this book is singularly corrupt; in other respects it somewhat resembles the "Liber Horn," in the possession of the Corporation of the City of London, and, especially, in the fact that the volume consists of what were originally two, or more, distinct books, bound up together, at a remote date.

The next book, in age, is a quarto volume, containing now but 10 leaves of vellum and parchment, bound in oak boards, covered with white leather. On the outside of the cover there has formerly been inserted a plate, either of horn or of metal, the holes for the bosses by which it was fastened having apparently been made with a red-hot iron. The writing in the first 3 pages is probably of the early part of the reign of Edward III., the context being in French, and beginning—"These are the establishments from of old time used, and the ordinances newly ordained by reason of the ancient . . . and their charter thereupon granted. And as to the officers of the same vill, and that which pertains to their office." This part ends with stating, in French, that these are "The names of the officers of the vill—Bailiffs, and their under-

" bailiffs; Cofferers and Constables; Wardens of the church of Our Lady; Wardens of the church of St. Andrew; Wardens of the church of St. Mary's rents; Wardens of the Bederedhous [Bedrid-house]; Wardens of the moneys of John Mundayn for the Sepulchre; the Searchers of hemp." After this, there are entries of persons admitted to be burgesses temp. Henry VIII., and transcripts of various deeds and indentures. This volume formerly also contained within its boards the one that is next described:—

Bound in a recent paper cover, 8 leaves of vellum, formerly, no doubt, the property of one of the Fraternities, in the church of St. Mary or the chapel of St. Andrew. The context, in Latin, is written in modern Gothic, in a fine hand, and the earlier part of it is made up of extracts from the Gospels (in the order here) of St. Mark, St. Matthew, St. Luke, and St. John. These were probably the Lessons read on the Festival days of the Brotherhood. The last 6 leaves contain an illuminated Calendar, in a similar hand, and, like the previous context, of probably the close of the 14th century. Each month has its own single line, in Leonines, thus:—

" Prima dies mensis, et septima, truncat ut ensis.

Quarta subit mortem, prosternit tertia fortem.

Frimus mandantem [2 mandentem] disrumpit, quarta bibentem.

Denus et undenus est mortis vulnere plenus.

Tertia [2 Tertius] occidit, et septimus hora relidit.

Denus pallescit, quindenus fodera nescit.

Tresdecimus mactat, nilu [sic 2 nulu] denus labefaciat.

Prima necat fortem, perditque secunda cohortem.

Tertia Septembris, et denus, fert mala membris.

Tertium et denus est sicut mors alienus.

Scorpius est quintus, et tertius est nece cinctus.

Septimus exanguis, virosus denus ut anguis."

A long folio volume, of about 140 leaves of parchment, in old oaken boards, much worm-eaten, and covered with tattered dark leather. It contains entries of transactions in Court, relative to the conveyance of property; the first entry in page 1 being of the first year of King Edward III., a conveyance by Richard Laurence to Richard Saynor. Acknowledgments of married women, on the conveyance of property, are also entered; and memoranda of accounts rendered by the Bailiffs and other officials. Land cultivated with hemp and flax is mentioned in this reign, more than once. Transcripts of probate copies of wills are also given. Proceedings of the Law Courts of Brideport, and copies of deeds and wills, occupy nearly the whole of the latter half of the book. In page 282 a deed is entered as made by Robert Mertok, alias Lely, of Bristol, merchant, and Alice his wife, being a quitclaim to Robert Skarlet, of Brydeport, in the 29th year of Henry VI. First among the witnesses, William Canynges is named, the reputed founder of the church of St. Mary Redcliff, at Bristol. The entries throughout are very irregular as to date; but this last is probably the latest date in the book.

The next in date is a quarto volume of about 100 leaves of paper, in a limp leather binding, greatly damaged by book-worms; which, in former ages, have been suffered, unmolested, to regale themselves upon book and binding alike. The entries (in Latin) are irregular, those at the beginning not being the earliest in date. The first leaf has been to great extent eaten by worm. The date at the head of the second leaf is, the 2nd year of King Henry the Fifth, it being a copy of a receipt by the Churchwardens of St. Mary's. The third leaf begins with the rendering of their accounts by the Bailiffs, Edward Tyte, or Tyce, and John Syre, in the 13th year of Richard II. On the same day certain persons were made burgesses; one, his name destroyed, gave a breakfast, "because he entered by his heirship"; others paid the respective sums of 20s. and 13s. 4d. The account of the two Cofferers, or Treasurers, follows: then that of the Churchwardens, who account for so much in money, a piece of silver, value 10s., and a basin with ever, value 10d. The accounts of the Chapel of St. Andrew then follow. A shop annexed "to the Chapel" is mentioned, and "A stall on the north side of the bell-tower"; also, a payment of 2 pounds of wax, arising from the tenement late belonging to Robert of Stokelane. It may be here remarked that the Chapel of St. Andrew has long since perished, and that the present Town Hall is built on its site. In the following pages there are like entries; in p. 7 (15 Richard II.) the "Law Court of Hook (probably Hockleide)" is named; and Robert Clement delivers in full Court 25s. of money which he had, "to find wax candles before Our Lord's Sepulchre," in Easter week. In the 17th year (page 10) "Searchers of flax and hemp" are mentioned.

Claricia Forsey (p. 11) pays a fine of 33s. 4d. to have the reversion of a meadow called "Aynellesmede." In the 19th Richard II., Stakelane, and Cakelane, near it, (the latter no longer known), are named. In the 20th year (p. 16) William Huddesseld and John Damias are chosen "Searchers for dead meat, and stinking meat, and meat too old." In the same year, Roger Broun (p. 18) is admitted as a burgess, and sworn, and he is to pay "as rent" 20s. and a breakfast. In p. 19, several sets (paria) of leaden vessels are mentioned, as being let out for a yearly payment, and belonging to the church. In pp. 27-29, are entered at length lists of property belonging, in the 14th of Richard II., to the "Community of the vill of Brideporte," "Rents of the subsidy of the Mass of the Blessed Mary of Brideporte"—the Chaplain receiving 4*li.* thereof, and the monks of Abbotsbury 12*li.*—"Rents of the fabric of the church and the lights of the Blessed Mary of Brideport." Localities "within the Barres," and "without the Barres," are named. The "West mill," and the "Chapel of St. Michael" are also mentioned. Also, "Rents late of Robert Bemynstre, after the decease of Alice Bemynstre, left to the Bailiffs and the Commonalty." Ponchesford and Hokebere, (now Hogbere, near Simondsburry), are also localities mentioned. At p. 59 is an entry "De Ordinatione etc."—"Of the Ordination of a Chaplain of the Chantry of St. Katharine"—A Chantry at the altar of St. Leonard, in the church of St. Mary, at Brideport, is spoken of. The Chantry of St. Katharine, it appears, was founded by the Bailiffs and Community of Brideport, for the souls of their benefactor, Robert de Bemenstre, and Cecily, his wife, and Robert de Bemenstre and Clarice, his wife, father and mother of the said Robert. Robert (Wyllivill) Bishop of Salisbury, approves thereof, A.D. 1368. At p. 61, the original grant by Robert Bemenstre is transcribed, followed by various other documents in reference thereto. In p. 65 is the following entry, in Latin:—"These are the goods of the Chapel of Saint Katharine of Brideporte, and delivered to Walter Sherard, then Chaplain, in presence of Walter Hasard and John Palmer, Bailiff"; date about 10th Richard II.—"First, there is delivered and handed to him one great brass pot, which formerly belonged to Robert Bemynstre, one basin with ewer, one table-cloth with hand-napkin, one silver basin for washing hands at Mass, 2 silver cruets, one silver chalice, one corporas, 3 sets of vestments with the whole apparel, one new, of red colour, embroidered with gold; a second green, and old, striped (rallatum) with gold; a third white, and old. One veil, for Lent; one chest, standing in the church, for vestments and deeds; one 'stipadium' [?] in the hall, for a table; one coffer and one dresser; one piece (vessel) of silver, value 6s. 8*d.*—out of which 4 silver spoons have been made." The "goods of the Chapel of St. John at Brideport" then follow:—"One chalice, and one corporas; one set of vestments, 3 old table-cloths, one good Missal, and another, divided into 2 volumes; 2 Antiphonars, divided, for the whole year; one book, called 'Sanctorum Notatio,' for the whole year; one book for Lauds, Vespers, and other Hours, throughout the whole year, in which the Psalter is contained, and not in other form: one book of the Service of St. Mary; and 2 tin cruets; one great pot called 'Colman'; one coffer, standing in the church, and one coffer, standing in the house."

The following entry (in Latin) is added, in a hand of some 10 or 15 years later date:—"These are the goods of the Chapel of St. Andrew of Brideporte, delivered to John Yrlonde and Nicholas Barbour, Wardens of the said church, in the 2nd year of the reign of King Henry, after the Conquest the Fourth. First, one good Missal, with musical notation. Another Missal, old, with notation; two other old Missals. One Portifory, a good one, bought of Thomas Wodham. Another Portifory, fairly good, and once covered with 'hispid' skin. One Legend, a good one. One Psalter with Hymnal, daily in use. One Manual, which begins 'Exorize te,' in large letters. Another Manual, with an old Tropary and a Gradal. Three sets of vestments, with the whole apparel, fairly good. One white set of vestments, for Lent. Five table-cloths and 3 napkins, fairly good. Four veils for the head of the Blessed Mary. Two tin candlesticks, for holding tapers. Two sets of leaden vessels, one of which is in the hands of William Aremuthe, and for which to the Wardens he renders yearly 2*s.* 8*d.*, and the other set is in the keeping of the Wardens, and for a long time has returned nothing, but the set ought to be let out after this. Also, 2

"coffers, a greater and a smaller. Two cloths for Lent, "stayned." One large candlestick of iron. Two "paces (paxbreads); 3 little bells; one "canefas" (canvas), to cover the cross in Lent."

Transcripts of various deeds then follow: in p. 71 is the following inventory (tr.):—"These are the goods of the Chantry of St. Michael of Brideport, delivered by the hands of Edward Lonche, Chaplain, to Sir William Caldwelle, Warden there, in the 9th year of the reign of King Henry, after the Conquest the Fourth.—First, in the hall, 2 long tables; one small table; 2 aundrys (andirons) with one virpik [? fire-pike]; 2 great basins, with two ewers. In the buttery, 2 table-cloths, good, with one good towel; 6 silver spoons; 3 pieces of silver, one gilt, one "dresserknyf" (one pot called) "godard," and one small "maser." In the kitchen, 2 great brass pots, one "posenet" [small pot], one great leaden cauldron, new, one spit, one "bryggone" [?]. In certain . . . 3 chests, one large. In the chamber, one pair of new linen sheets."

The yearly accounts of the Bailiffs and other officials are then resumed, as before, and the entries end in the 31st year of Henry the Sixth. Under the 29th year of that reign, a description is given, in English, of the goods of the Chapel of St. Andrew:—"These bethe the goodys and passelle of the Chappelle of Seynt Andrewe, by Johan Sterre delyveryd the day above-sayde (Michaelmas Day) to Johan Harrys and Johan Barbour, that is to say,—In primis, in tapers, vii. li. et dim. In torchis, v. li. et dim. In lyde [lead] and sawdyr [solder] xxxiii. li. et dim. A lampe. A Masse boke, with ii other olde Masse boks. A boke of Sequens. ii portessys (portifories). . . . newe bownde. ii bokys of Commemoracions y notyd. A peyre vestementes of grene, with orfrey of blew, y powderyd with perl. A corporas to the same. A peyre vestementes of purpille, with a orfray of black and a [wormeaten here]. A peyre vestementes of sadde blew, with a orfray of purpille colour. A peyre vestementes of grene, with a white orfray. A case and corporas of blew, with a herte of gould. A chalyse. An awter clothe, with a frontell of . . . towel y sewyd thereto. An awter clothe, y staynyd, with a Trinite [in] the myddys, with a fruntell of blew, y powderyd with golde, and a towelle y sewed therto. A cloth y staynyde, to kever the tabyll of the awter. ii curtenys to the awter, y partyde with blew and bet (better) blew. ii towelles of cloth, y wrouzte for the awter. A longe towelle, y wrouzte to howselle pepylle, of v yerdys longe. A awter clothe of black, with a fruntelle y frengyd. A clothe to kever the hye crosse. ii candyle styckes of latyne, with iii pese of lede, lyngye upon the awter. A peyr of olde cruettes. An olde surpelyse, ii colerys, iii sacryngbelles."

There are a few entries of proceedings in the local Court of "Pespoudres" (Piepowders) at the end. In the last page is an entry (in Latin).—"Be it remembered that William Rawe and Richard Tailleur are sureties for Nicholas Choune, that he, Nicholas, will never make any disturbance in future, or damage, in the vill of Brideport, or in the houses of men, or in gardens, nor will intermeddle with wife, men, or maids, by which the peace may be disturbed, or any one in the said vill be damnified; and this, on pain of paying 100 shillings."

The next book in date, is a large folio of about 38 leaves of paper, which has been recently rebound substantially in red leather. In former times it was known as the "Red Book," and sometimes as the "Doom Book," "Dome Book," or "Domesday Book;" it is in fine condition, but, as in the preceding book, the entries are somewhat irregular, the earliest, belonging to the 30th year of Henry VI. being at page 21: the accounts of 31, 32 Henry VI. being entered on page 1; 34, 35, on page 2; 32, 33 on page 3; 33, 34 on page 4. In page 6 the context is broken with a discourse, apparently, upon puzzles and quibbles in reference to the literal acceptance of words in a sentence. Thus,—"Et etiam cautela verbales, que procedunt ex ornato modo loquendi, et ideo vocantur 'cautela verbales,' quia sunt cautela verbo tenus; quia, quod probationem verborum, apparent magistralia subtilare ipsa, quare sunt trufie. Verbi gratia,—Ego faciam te facere crucem, et non faciam tibi aliquam molestiam, et tamen non habebis potestatem exeundi domus, ante fractionem. Hoc videtur, verbo tenus, valde mirabile, et tamen trufa; nam te faciam amplecti postem in domo, faciendo crucem de manibus tuis. Tunc est tamen, non potes exire domum, nisi deleas

"manus tuas abintus, et tunc frangitur crux facta. Item, te [docebo] illud quod nescis, nec ego scio, nec aliquis mundi sciat, postquam docuero te. Sic,—accipiam unum stramen in area domus, et mensurabo quot pollices habet in longitudine, et hoc erit quod te docebo; cum autem docuero, frangam stramen. Item, pirus ferebat omnem fructum quam debet pirus gerere, et non gerebat pira; sed gerebat tantum unum pirum etc." The first of which quibbles, or catches, shortly explained, is this—"I will make you make a cross, and that done, I will not interfere with you, and yet you will not be able to leave the house, without breaking that cross. This, so far as words go, seems a very wonderful thing, and yet is only a catch; for I will make you clasp a post, fixed in the house, in your arms, and so make a cross of your [extended] hands; and then you will not be able to leave the house without taking away your hands, and so the cross is broken that you had made. And again, —I will tell you what you do not know, what I do not know, and what no one in the world may know, after I have told you. As thus,—I will take up a straw from the floor of the room, and I will measure how many inches long it is; this I will tell you, and when I have told you, I will break the straw to pieces. Again,—a pear-tree bore all the fruit that a pear-tree ought to bear, and yet it did not bear pears; for it bore one pear only." There are one or two mutilated leaves among the Corporation records, containing lessons in arithmetic, exactly similar to these leaves, and written in the same hand; hence it would seem that these leaves, already written upon, were accidentally mixed up with the blank leaves of which the Dome Book was formed. In page 8 is the following—"This ys the Statut out of Frensshe, drawe in to Englysshe, that was made at Westminster, the yere of Kyng Harry the Syxt the viii yere. "Capitulo duodecimo:" the Statute is then given, translated into English, as to weights. Page 20 contains the accounts for the 38th year of Henry VI. The contents thenceforth consist wholly of the accounts of the Bailiffs and Cofferers, and Wardens, with entries of conveyances of lands, fines, and recoveries. Between 1640 and 1657 there is an hiatus in the book, the records for the intervening time, apparently, being lost. In 1687 and 1688, the borough appears to have had but one Bailiff for each year. The latest entry in the volume is under A.D. 1817, page 72.

Commencing at the other end of this volume there are a few entries of early date: lists of "Receivers for the New Work of the harbour of the vill of "Brideport,—Collectors of alms for the same work "within the vill, Collectors without the vill, Masters "and Supervisors of the said work;" these entries beginning, apparently, in the 23rd year of Henry VI.:—this subject will again come under notice in the sequel. The above entries are followed by some deeds, and an acquisition of the middle of the 15th century, in reference to the right of the Rector of the parish church of Brideport to present a Chaplain to the perpetual Chantry of St Michael of Monden, in the parish of Brideport (founded by Robert de Farendone, already mentioned.)

The books of Records for the Courte and the Law-days holden within the borough of Brideport, made "the last day of September in the xiiiij yere of our sovereigne Ladie Elizabeth etc., and kept by Henry "Daye Recorder there;" a small folio volume, of about 400 leaves of paper, in limp parchment; about three-fourths filled, the entries of the Law Courts ending about the 26th year of that reign. Entries in reference to the elections and oaths of Bailiffs, are commenced at the other end, in 1664, preceded by a list of persons presented for election as Churchwardens, in 1638. The elections of Bailiffs and capital burgesses come down to 1694.

A paper book, quarto, in limp parchment; being a register of the Law Courts of Brideport, beginning in the 3rd and 4th of Philip and Mary, and ending in the 6th year of Elizabeth: the contents are purely formal. It is braced with a large folio leaf of a 14th century Service-book, with musical notation, and finely illuminated. The book is much mutilated at the beginning, and has some loose leaves there, forming part of a Law Court book of the 18th and 19th years of Henry VIII.

A paper book, quarto, bound in a leaf of a Service-book; being a Register of the Law Courts of Brideport, beginning in the 2nd and 3rd of Philip and Mary, and ending in the 12th year of Elizabeth. It appears to contain some duplicate copies of proceedings given in the book last mentioned.

A Law Court Book, paper, quarto, bound in limp parchment, beginning 2nd of James I., and ending in 1610.

A Court Book, quarto, paper, in limp parchment, for 1610, 11. The minutes entered are plaints in actions, as in the preceding books, as also, appointments of officers, admissions of apprentices, and acknowledgments of transfers of property.

A Court Book, quarto, paper, without cover, for the 11th to 17th of James I.: similar to the preceding.

A Court Book for the manor of Mapelton, belonging to Christopher Morgan, Esquire, from the 31st of Elizabeth to 1608; a thin paper quarto, covered with part of a parchment deed.

A small volume of six leaves of parchment, of quarto size, without cover, beginning with, in rubric, "Hæc sunt nomina etc.,"—"These are the names of the Brethren and Sisters of the Brotherhood of Saint Nicholas, in the church of the Blessed Mary of Bridport." In the next leaf, the rules and ordinances follow, in Latin; each member is to attend yearly on the Feast of the Holy Innocents, after Our Lord's Nativity, faithfully to hear the account, at some "honest place" by the Wardens ordained: absentees to pay half a pound of wax. On the day of the burial of any brother or sister, they are to come to Mass. All members are to pay a Mass-penny for every brother or sister deceased, within 3 weeks from such decease. Any member dying within 3 miles of the town, his or her body is to be carried to burial by the brethren, at the expense of the deceased, if possessed of goods; but at the expense of the brotherhood, if not. If a member be in actual want, each other member is to subscribe one penny per month in his behalf. The above writing is of a date before the second year of King Henry the Sixth. The Fraternity was known as—"The Brotherhood of the light of St. Nicholas." The rest of the volume is occupied with the elections of Wardens, and the amounts in their hands respectively, upon rendering their accounts; the latest entry being of the 16th year of Henry VI.

Another similar volume, of 10 leaves, with part of a MS. of the 13th century for its cover. It begins, in Latin,—"These are the names of the Brotherhood of the Brethren and Sisters of the light hanging before the Cross, in the church of the Blessed Mary of Bridport:" the names of members and their wives then follow. The laws and ordinances are the same as the earlier portion of those of the Fraternity of St. Nicholas. The accounts of this brotherhood were rendered on the Sunday after our Lord's Nativity; the entries as to the yearly accounts beginning about 1422. In the 37th of Henry VI., William Howse and Margaret, widow of John Atkyn, were Wardens. The last entry belongs to the first year of Edward IV. The book of which the cover formed a portion, is written in two columns, and seems to have been a manual (in Latin) for the use of the priesthood: one chapter is headed,—"The forming of processions for this Sunday and other Sundays, with the exceptions thereto;" another chapter treats of censuring the choir.

Another similar volume consists of 4 leaves of somewhat larger size; the writing in a fine bold hand, and illuminated in red and blue; in a parchment cover. It begins, in Latin,—"These are the names of the Brethren and Sisters of the Brotherhood of Saint Mary the Virgin and St. James the Apostle, in the Chapel of St. Andrew the Apostle, of Brydeport;" begun on the Feast of St. John the Baptist, A.D. 1406." The list is headed with the names of Sir John Corbyn and Sir Robert Axmothe, probably priests. It is ordained that every member shall pay one penny yearly towards the support of the lights and torches in the Chapel aforesaid. All the tapers are to be continually burning, while Mass is being sung for a member deceased. A member, in poverty, is to receive one farthing weekly from each brother and sister, until such member shall have recovered his or her position. Each brother is to pay a Mass-penny to the Wardens, to distribute among the priests, to pray for the soul of the brother or sister lately deceased. If any one shall contravene these ordinances, he shall pay to the store of the said brotherhood one pound of wax. Another ordinance is then added, that the new Wardens ought to supply the tapers, and to pay for making the same. Sunday after the Feast of St. Botolph was the day for rendering the accounts, and for the election of new Wardens; these items filling the remainder of the book. The last entry is in the 33rd year of Henry the Sixth.

"—These are the names of the Brethren and Sisters of the Brotherhood of the Torches, in the church of the Blessed Mary of Brudeport, ordained and begun among the same brethren on Palm Sunday, A.D. 1421, to maintain wax tapers, or torches, in the church before-named, to the honour of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and his most pious (piissime) mother, Mary, and all Saints." The names of Sir John Mustard, Sir Walter Bexingtone, and Sir Robert Gyls, head the list. Many names, evidently at later dates, are added to the original list. The yearly elections, on Palm Sunday, follow, and each year's statement concludes with the amount, then "in store," of wax, reckoned in scores of pounds. In the year 1455, John Croll and Isabel, his wife, are chosen jointly, as making one out of the four Wardens for the year. The latest entry is in 1458. No rules or ordinances are given; save that, at the end, it is added,—"Also, it was ordained, by common assent of all the Brethren and Sisters of the said Brotherhood, that the Wardens should pay, for a breakfast on the day of account, 3 pence in bread, and three gallons of good ale." The cover is a portion of a Service-book of the 13th century, containing part of a Psalm, with musical notation; one line being—"quia præceptum in Israel est, et iudicium Deo Jacob (Psalm lxxviii. 5);" the whole of the fragment being a fine specimen of mediæval writing.

Book of the Brotherhood of St. Katharine; an octavo book, of about 30 leaves of paper, bound in limp old black leather; only eleven leaves written upon. The first leaf is much tattered; the third is headed;—"Fraternitas Sancte Katerina;" the first name being that of, apparently, "Domina Alicia Botvyle," the last word, however, partly effaced: a great number of names then follows, mostly of men with their wives. The first account of the Wardens is rendered in the week of Our Lord's Nativity, in the 7th year of Henry VI. In the 31st year of that reign, the Wardens were charged to exact of each of the nine new brethren a pound of wax. In the 33rd year delivery is made to William Olyver of 27s., for buying "2 antiphonys, and 7 lycecheres [leiger books, or Common Service books] for the use of the church." The latest entry is in the 19th of Edward IV. At the end of the entries are the names of the Brethren and Sisters in 1466, John Spyney being Chaplain, comprising 10 married couples, and 4 widows.

A tattered paper book, small quarto size, in limp black leather, containing about 30 leaves, less than half of them filled, being the book of the "Brotherhood of the two Torches." Of the first leaf only a fragment exists; it probably contained later entries, as the second leaf begins:—"Hii sunt nomina fraternitatis de Duobus Cereis, quæ vocantur Torchys." Henry Tyte (or Tyce) and Alice, his wife, head the list, the former an important man in the town, in his day; the list of names is a long one, added to, from time to time, in different hands. The earliest entry, as to the election of Wardens, is of the 7th year of Henry V., William Heliere and Walter Percy being Wardens. In the 10th of Henry VI., three Wardens were elected, that number being continued, and new ones chosen biennially. Thomas Stockfysche, a prominent man in the town, was chosen one of the Wardens in the 28th year of Henry VI. On the last written page of the running context is an entry, in Latin,—"Be it remembered, that on Sunday after the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross, A.D. 1477, Richard Orchard and John Hulle, chosen Seneschals for the ale sold in honour of St. George the Martyr, rendered for ale so sold 19s. clear. They had also received in moneys beforehand 6s. 8d." The next entry after this, and the last, is of the 20th of Edward IV., when the Seneschals, Hugh Andrew and John Hooper, rendered for ale so sold 15s. 4d. These drinkings were probably of the nature of the earlier "Church ales," and not improbably the Fraternity gradually degenerated into a kind of club, for drinkingale. There are some regulations, written, in bad Latin, on the last leaf but one; among which it is ordained that the "Two Torches shall be lighted at the great altar of the body of Christ, at the time of raising the same, on Sundays and other Feast days. That the said torches be kept lighted while the deceased brother or sister is being buried; and the Wardens are to distribute to the priests for the soul of the deceased. "Every torch shall weigh 26 pounds."

A small parchment book, of about 40 leaves, duodecimo size, bound in, apparently, goat-leather, fastened with a strap. The first leaf contains a list of names, the date being, from the second page, about A.D. 1434. The third page begins, in fine writing, in Latin,—"These are the names of the brethren and their fellow-

"sisters (consororum) of the Brotherhood of the Light of the Holy Cross, in the church of St. Andrew of Budeport, ordained and begun among the same brethren and their fellow-sisters on Sunday after the Feast of Our Lord's Epiphany 1399, for maintaining a light in the church aforesaid; to the honour of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and of Holy Cross, and of his most Blessed Mother, Mary, and all Saints." The names then follow, headed by William Scherard, John Tanner and Joan, his wife, John Mankeville and Elena, his wife. Two wax tapers are to be kept burning at Mass, before the cross, every Sunday and on double Feasts. Those of the Fraternity who die within one mile of Budeport, or are slain or drowned at sea, are to be buried in the churchyard of St. Mary of Budeport. At the burial, all the members, at the Mass, are to offer, each, one farthing. The like sum per week is also to be contributed for poor brethren and sisters. Every brother and sister shall come (to the church) after sunset, and shall say "Paternoster" and "Ave Maria" for the member deceased; and shall there have one drink, at the cost of the deceased,—"et ibidem, sumptibus defuncti, semel potare;" and there they are to stay, until their names shall have been called. On the 7th leaf there is some little musical notation, in two parts; a fragment, in a hand, probably, of the close of the 14th century. It begins abruptly—"in sees bien de geor, verra ge joo teyne damour entire: (next line) ferrai tant cum vival, ne ja men irray arero" ("thou knowest well at heart, shalt see that I love thee with love entire: I will do so long as I live, nor ever will go back therefrom.") Below is written, "Tenor de A toute hure," "Tenor in A, always." Unfortunately the music has been written over with a list of names; though, after a prolonged examination, both words and notation might perhaps be made out. The accounts were given in, and new Wardens chosen, on Sunday after the Feast of the Epiphany, every second year, at first, but afterwards annually. There is a long hiatus in the entries of accounts given in and elections of Wardens, between the first and the 13th year of Edward IV. The latest entry is of the 2nd year of Henry VII.

A paper volume of about 60 leaves, small quarto, bound in limp parchment, being the account-book (in Latin) of St. Michael's Chantry of Munden, or Mondene, in Budeport; the only memory of which now survives in the "St. Michael's Laune," West Street, of the present day. The accounts begin in 1453, and the earliest items are the weekly payments for two years, made up every Saturday, for food consumed by the inmates of the Chantry. Oysters seem to have been a favorite dish, and oatmeal was largely consumed. The rental follows:—"Costs of the house of Thomas Chester, in the second year"; "Costs of the tenement of Henry Barber"; "Costs of the tenement of John Bridport"; "Wages of labourers"; "Purchase of fuel"; "Costs of the tenement of John Stamford"; "Gifts" to the poor, and moneys expended on wine; "Wages of Sawyers"; "Purchase of timber for repairs"; "Expenses of the Chapel"; "of the Pantry"; of the Kitchen"; Under "Necessary Expenses," is entered the purchase of half a bushel of "hempsede," 3*d.* A pot and a godard (or jug) cost 3*d.* "Paid to the Prior of Mandelyne [at Allington] for carriage of timber, for repair of divers tenements"—(no sum given). Under "Expenses of keeping the pigeons," a quarter of pease and beans is entered. "Costs of the Penfold of Waldiche" are given near the end. Under "Costs of the House" for the next year, the "Pruning of the vine" costs 2*d.*; and elsewhere under "Costs of the garden," a trellis, or paling, for the branches of the vine, is mentioned. "Rushes for the hall" are bought frequently, one halfpennyworth at a time. Another entry is, "Paid for one hook, called a 'hachehouke' (hatchhook) 3*d.* Many payments are made to the stipulator," reeder, or thatcher. Rushes were used in the Chapel. Elsewhere, the "Orchard" is named. The sum of 4*d.* is paid for "grafyng" in the garden, in another place. A "circle of brawne," is bought for 8 pence. Honey was bought by the gallon. The accounts close at the end of seven years; a Chaplain, with probably an Under-chaplain, seems to have dwelt in the Chantry-house; the site of which, it is supposed, is now occupied by a stone-mason's yard.

Some attempt has been made to describe the records of Bridport in the Journal of the British Archaeological Association for June and September 1872, pp. 29, 111, 206; in the latter page Mr. Black has made the Account-book of St. Michael's Chantry, to be identical with the book of the Brotherhood of the Torches, of which mention had been previously made by him in page 111. In the latter page also, the ancient MS. book of Statutes, the first described in the present Report, is mentioned, as a printed book, and, to all appearance, as belonging to the Corporation of Weymouth. The worm-eaten quarto volume, belonging mainly to the reign of Richard II., previously described, is also spoken of as being printed, and, together with the Dome-book, is apparently treated as belonging to Weymouth. As to the Account-book of St. Michael's Chantry, though in one place identifying it with the book of the Brotherhood of the Torches. Mr. Black, in another place, expresses himself as at a loss to know to what its accounts relate. The context appears to have been printed from a mutilated Report.

Among the records of this Corporation, a large mass of early deeds has been found, mixed indiscriminately with numerous other parchments and papers of varying character, description, and dates. These have each been inspected and sorted for the purpose of the present Report; being found to be many hundreds in number, and ranging between the reigns of Henry III. and Henry VIII. In order to obtain as much light as possible upon the remote and early history of the town, its localities, and its inhabitants, every deed that belongs to the reign of Henry III. has been subjected to a close examination, and a large portion of those belonging to the reign of Edward I. Two or three instances excepted, the deeds of the time of Henry III. bear no date, and the same may be said of those belonging to the earlier half of the reign of his successor, Edward I. There are several deeds also, without date, that belong to so late a period as the reign of the Second Edward. As will be seen, with some few exceptions, it is only the acknowledged deeds of the time of Henry III., and those that bear no date, that have been examined for the purposes of this Report; the descriptions of localities being necessarily much condensed. These deeds in general may be looked upon as of two classes: those connected with titles on conveyances to religious uses, and those which have been deposited, in remote times, with the municipal authorities, for safe keeping, and the possession of them never resumed.

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., the seal lost; its contents being as follow:—"Omnibus Christi fidelibus presens scriptum visuris vel auditoris, Mabilia, filia Edwardi Hux, salutem in Domino. Noverit universitas vestra me, in viduitate mea, dedisse et concessisse pro anima Ricardi, quondam viri mei, et animabus antecessorum et successorum meorum, unam acram terras et dimidiam, in Portmannefeld, Deo et Hospitali Sancti Johannis in Budeport, et fratribus et sororibus Deo ibidem servientibus; habendam et tenendam eisdem in puram et perpetuum elemosinam, absque ulla exactione et demanda, et aliquo servitio et redditu; salvo servitio regali, si quid ei ex eadem terra debetur. Et in hujus rei testimonium et confirmationem, presenti scripto sigillum meum apposui. Hiis testibus, Domino Osberto, Rectore ecclesie de Budeport, Rogero le Cran, Johanne Gervasi, Adam de Ramesham, Adam Prikeny, Wilhelmo de Stikelane, Petro de Wintone, Roberto Pistore, et multis aliis." Tr.—"To all the faithful of Christ who the present writing shall see or hear, Mabilia, daughter of Edward Hux, greeting in the Lord. Be it known to all of you, that I, in my widowhood, have given and granted, for the soul of Richard, my late husband, and the souls of my ancestors and successors, one acre and a half of land, in Portmannefeld, to God and the Hospital of St. John in Budeport, and to the brethren and sisters there serving God; to have and to hold to the same in pure and perpetual alms, without any exaction and demand, and any service and rent; save service to the King, if any from the same land to him is due. And in witness thereof, and confirmation, to the present writing I have set my seal. These being witnesses, Sir Osbert, Rector of the church of Budeport, Roger le Cran, John Gervase, Adam de Ramesham, Adam Prikeny, William de Stikelane, Peter de Wintone, Robert the Baker, and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., probably of earlier date than the preceding, the seal lost; whereby William Herke, with assent and consent of "Hisabella," his wife, grants to Emma de Marsh, all his land in Portmannefeld, namely, 3 acres of land which Philip de Marsh, the late husband of Emma, formerly held of Robert Herke, his father; at a yearly rent of half a pound of pepper, payable at the Feast of St. Michael; the said Emma having paid to him 20*s.*, beforehand, and to "Hisabella" half a quarter of wheat. Witnesses, Gervase de Budeport Alured Frica, Roger

Cran, Richard Lodrissa, [of Loders] and Robert and Thomas, his sons, John Killing and John Clopet, then Provosts [or Reeves], "and the whole hundred of Brideport."

A deed on parchment, in Latin, in very small characters, dated at Prestalre, on Friday the Eve of Saints Nerens and Achilles, and Pancratius, 19th Edward I.; whereby Bartholomew Kylling, son and heir of Richard Kylling, of Brideport, grants to Master John de Brideport 10s. of yearly rent from his mill, called "Kylling-ismylle;" in return for a yearly payment of one penny at our Lord's Nativity, 4 marks having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Nicholas Prikepeni, Provost [or Reeve] of the vill, Richard Ramesham, Robert the Baker, John de Grauston, William de Chylterne, "and others." The seal is lost.

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby John, son of Reginald de Nywetone, with the consent of Alice, his mother, grants to Walter Chaplain, son of Adam Smith [Faber], for his service and one mark of silver, paid beforehand, a piece of land lying at the head of the hall, late of the father of the said Walter; on the East, from the doors of such hall to the wall of the seld of the Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in Brideport; such wall standing between the seld and the little kitchen of such hall; he rendering 4 pence for such seld. Witnesses, Peter de Ramesham, Nicholas Prikepeny, then Bailiffs, Stephen Rose, Richard de Ramesham, John Talle, "and others." An oblong seal, in white wax, somewhat broken, represents a bird.

A diminutive parchment deed, in Latin; whereby Walter Chaplain, son of Adam Smith [Faber], grants, in pure and perpetual alms, for the health of his soul, to the service of St. Mary in Brideport, a piece of land lying at the head of the hall, formerly his father's; on the East, extending from the doors of that hall to the wall belonging to the seld [open warehouse] of the Chantry of St. Mary the Virgin, in Brideport; such wall standing between the seld and the little kitchen of such hall; according to the tenor of the charter which he had of John son of Reginald de Nywetone, and Alice, his mother. Witnesses, Peter de Ramesham, Nicholas Prikeny, Bailiffs of Brideport, Richard de Ramesham, Stephen Rose, John Talle, "and others." Without date, but temp. Edward I.; the seal is lost.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, of the early part of the reign of Edward I., whereby John de Waudiz, [Walditch] grants, for the health of his soul, and the souls of his ancestors and successors, 12 pence yearly from his house, between the houses of Robert Cuta and Richard Killing, towards the maintenance of one Chaplain to celebrate the Mass of the Blessed Virgin Mary for ever, in Bridport. In case of refusal on his own part, or that of his assigns, he subjects himself and them to the coercion of the Archdeacon of Dorset, with sentence of excommunication, if necessary. Witnesses Adam Prikeny and Stephen Rose, then Provosts [or Reeves] of Bridport, John Gervase, Stephen Aylmund, Richard Chinne, Adam Russel, Geoffrey Killing, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, temp. Edward I., but somewhat later probably than the preceding, with an oblong seal in green wax, bearing the faint impress of a figure, apparently holding a scourge; whereby John de Wandiz, Burgess of Brideport, grants to Roger Koc, the younger, all his cellar, and solar built above it, on the north side of his hall in the same town, near the Chapel of St. Andrew; and also, the house situate between his hall and the house which he sold to Robert de Beminstre; to have and hold to him and his assigns, whether so made in health or in sickness, by the service of one penny, payable yearly to the King at the Feast of St. Martin; 8 marks of silver having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, John Skyberd, Stephen Aylmund, Peter and Richard de Ramesham, Clement de Eysse, William Skyberd, Robert Enolf, Robert Quarrel, Robert Wyppe, Clerk, "and others." The seal, apparently, is that of Clement de Eysse.

A parchment deed, in Latin, finely written, probably of the latter part of the reign of Henry III.; whereby John Talle, son and heir of Walter Talle, of Brideport, with the consent and mere will of Joan, his wife, grants to God and the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, in Brideport, towards the maintenance of the brethren and sisters there serving God, for his soul, the soul of Joan his wife, and the souls of his ancestors and successors, the croft late of John Drake, near the lane running to the mill of Richard Kylling; also, the house, with curtilage and croft, which belonged to Osbert Baldewine, opposite to the mill late of John Gervase, and between the land of Master Hamund and that of the Lady Cristina of Stikelane. He warrants the same "against all men and women," to the said Hospital; but if he or his heirs cannot so warrant the said lands, then he binds, in lieu of such warranty, the house that he had of Master Bartholomew, his uncle, on the East side of the church of St. Andrew the Apostle. Witnesses, Sir Robert, Vicar of Bradepole, Stephen Aylmund, Henry Ganet, Stephen Rose, Richard Kylling, "and many others." The seal is lost.

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., with a fragment of a large seal, in green wax, representing a knight on horseback; whereby Helias de Maperthone grants to Adam, son of Robert Cleinche, of Bridport, for his homage and service, all the land which the same Robert formerly held of him in the manor of Waudiche, the gift of Amalric, late lord of Stertel and of Waudiche; to hold, with common of pasture in the manor of Waudich, for 60 sheep, 4 oxen, 5 cows, with their issue, 3 swine, with their issue, 2 horses, and his geese; at a yearly rent of 2 pence, or one pound of cummin, at the Feast of St. Michael. He is also to have fencing from the grantor's wood at Waudiche, for inclosing his land. For this grant, 5 marks have been paid beforehand. Witnesses, John Gervase, William de Boewde, Walter Gervase, Geoffrey de Welles, Stephen de Waudiche, Adam de Ramesham, Thomas Grane, Adam Minchun, Gilbert Wac, Robert the Baker, Paul Grek, William de Stikelane, "and many others."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, with no date named, the seal lost; whereby William Killing, son and heir of William Killing, grants to William, son of Geoffrey le Official and to Margery, his wife, a curtilage in a close on the East side of Killingslane, between the land of the said William, son of Geoffrey, and the tenement late of Alice Rose, for their joint lives and the life of the longest liver; they having already paid for 24 years, beginning at the Feast of St. Michael in the 10th year of King Edward [the Second], and at the end of that term to pay a yearly rent of 12 pence. Witnesses, Edward Renaud, John de Stikelane, then Bailiffs, William Horn, Peter Prest, Thomas Coderingh, William Chantemerle, John the Clerk, "and others."—There are two copies of this deed, both without seals.

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I., the seal lost; whereby John Talle, of Bridport, and Bartholomew, son and heir of Richard Kelling, of Bridport, grant to Master John de Bridport all their lands, tenements, and mills, formerly belonging to Richard Kelling, in Bridport, "saving however" to Bartholomew, aid, counsel, and marriage, to the "said tenement, late of his father," belonging; at a yearly rent, "to the illustrious King of England of 4^d., and to the Prior of Lodres for the milldam 4s., and to the Prior of Christchurch 10s. for all services, saits, and demands, the King's service excepted." Witnesses, Stephen Ros, John Clench, Nicholas Beneger, Nicholas Prikepeni, Richard de Ramesham, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I., the seal lost; whereby Bartholomew de Stikelane grants "to Almighty God, and to His Mother, for the health of my soul, and for the health of the souls of my father and my mother, and of all their children, and of all my benefactors, and of all faithful deceased," the land and houses in East Street, in the vill of Brideport, between the land of Alured the Baker and that of Agnes, daughter of the late Thomas Spance [indistinct], in aid of a Mass of the Blessed Mary, to be celebrated in the Chapel of St. Andrew in the same vill; "to have and to hold the same to Almighty God and His most Blessed Mother, to the use of the said Mass to be celebrated." It is his will also that no one of the rectors, fermors, or chaplains, of the church of St. Mary in the same vill, shall intermeddle therewith, but only the Wardens of the goods to the same Mass deputed. Witnesses, Nicholas Prikepeni, Richard de Ramesham, then Bailiffs, Clement de Eysse, John Talle, John Martin, Eadward de Eysse, Robert Wyp, Clerk, "and the whole of the hundred of the same vill."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Richard Hux, son of the late Ralph the Mason [Cementarii] quitclaims unto Henry Facot, of Brideport, all his right in 12 pence of rent arising from a tenement in the South Street of Brideport, payable to the Hospital of St. John the Baptist; such tenement being between the land of Agnes la Norice and that of the said Hospital. Witnesses, William de Chilterne, Edward Renaud, Walter the Baker, CORPORATION OF BRIDPORT. William de Grynestone, "and others." The seal is lost.

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I., the seal lost; whereby Robert Aynolf, "of the 'Torne of Brideport,'" releases and quitclaims "to God and the brethren and sisters of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, in Brideport, in pure and perpetual alms, for the souls of my father and mother, and of all my kinsmen and benefactors, and more, for the souls of all faithful deceased," all his right and claim in a piece of land which lies opposite to the said Hospital, on the North, in the fee of Bradepole, which his ancestors had of the gift and grant of Richard de Morville and Eudo de Morville. Witnesses, Stephen Rose, Nicholas Beneger, Hugh Rothem, Walter Corbin, Teric Maullard, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, finely written, attached by a string to the preceding one, belonging to the reign of Henry III.; whereby Eudo de Morville ratifies the gift and grant which his brother Richard made to William Lautrepayr, of a piece of land which lies at the head of the house which Gwido Clopet holds of the said Richard de Morville, and opposite to the Hospital of St. John in Brideport. Witnesses, Hugh Crubba, Roger la Grue [or Crane], William de Holewale, Peter de Wintone, John Clopet, Aynulf de Turne, Walter Bereclau, Clerk, "and many others." The seal, with a shield of arms, is still attached, but the impression is almost wholly effaced.

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edw. I., the seal lost; whereby Edith, daughter of John Clopet, late of Brideport, "in free and lawful 'widowhood and power,'" grants to Terrie Maullard, of Brideport, and Mabillia, his wife, a message in the vill of Brideport, in the East Street there, between the land of Adam Herliz and that of Robert de la Ford, of Bradepole, to hold in chief of the King; 14 marks having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, John Skyberd, Stephen Rose, Nicholas Beneger, Adam Palmer, Robert Enolf, Richard de Ramesham, William Skiberd, Eadward de Waudiz, Robert Wyp, "and others."

He also grants to the same free ingress and egress as to all his lands of Cumbe and Hembiry, for his cattle and beasts, throughout the year; 5 marks of silver having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Roger de la More, Adam his brother, Symon de Hembiry, Robert de Dulr, Roger de Normanville, Hugh de la More, Mathias Chaplain of Winterborne Maureward, "and many others." The seal is lost.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I., the seal lost; whereby Roger Minchun, of Bridport, binds himself to pay to William de Stikellane 40 shillings within the next quinzaine [or fortnight], after he shall, by his aid, have had seisin of the land which Robert Aylmund formerly held; or else to give him a moiety of the said land within such term. He is also bound to pay to the same William 40 shillings, within a fortnight after he shall have recovered seisin of the land which Paul Herke formerly held, or else half of such land within the said term. That he may not decline such payments, he submits himself to the coercion of the Sheriff of Dorset. Witnesses, Peter de Winthone, John Grane, Thomas Grane, John de Pinmore, Adam Smith [Faber], William de Bagelake, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, beautifully written, dated A.D. 1240, the seal lost; whereby Helias de Wrochesheaf, for the health of his soul, and of the souls of his ancestors and successors, grants to God and to the house of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist in Bridport, near the East Bridge, and the brethren and sisters there serving God, that they may have in his pasture of Waldiche, anywhere, (his meadows, in fence-time, excepted) 10 oxen, 4 cows with their yearly issue, one steer, 50 sheep, and one hog, free of herbage and pannage; also, sufficient fencing from his wood, for inclosing the land which they have in the vill of Waldiche. Witnesses, Sir William Fitz-Henry, Helias, Parson of Stirtelle, Walter de Hecha, Roger le Cran, Adam de Ramyesham, Adam Prikepeny, Stephen de Waudiche, Vincent, then Rector of the Schools of Bridport, "and many others."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Agnes, daughter of Gilbert Hux, of Bridport, in her free and lawful widowhood, and for the health of her soul and the souls of all her friends, gives, in pure and perpetual alms, in aid of a Mass of the Blessed Virgin Mary, yearly to be celebrated in Bridport, 2 shillings yearly, faithfully to be paid to those appointed to collect the same; arising from the half "wyrtbe" of land which Gilbert Hux, her father, had from Alfriche Frik, in Bridport. "And if it should happen, and be it not so, that the said Mass cease to be celebrated, it is my will that the said 2 shillings shall wholly revert to the hands of me or my heirs, without any gainsay-

"ing or cavilling." Witnesses, John Gervase, Adam Prikepeny, Richard Chinne, Stephen Rose, Ralph le Ferru, John Nottinge, Robert the Clerk, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Edward I., the seal lost; whereby John Skyberd, with the assent and good will of Matillidis, his wife, gives to God and the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, in Bridport, in aid of the support of the brethren and sisters there serving God, for his own soul, the soul of Matillidis, his wife, and the souls of his ancestors and successors, the 8 acres which he had of the gift of Geoffrey Grubbe, and Joan, his sister, in the manor of Schyp-tone; "on condition that the said brethren and sisters, for me and Matillidis, my wife, so long as we shall live, shall in especial pray, in their prayers; and after our death, shall especially hold in memory the souls of us and the souls of our ancestors and successors, in divine offices, fastings, and their daily prayers." Witnesses, Richard de Chapel, William de Mortesthorne, Stephen Aylmund, Drew [Drucōne] Bardolf, Robert Tonere, Guydo de Drokeneuf, Hugh Tonere, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with an oblong seal, in green wax, almost entire, a flower, surrounded by the words "SIGILL. ROYS. FIL. W. BEVY . . ." (more legible than ninety-nine seals, of this date, out of a hundred); without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Roysia, daughter of the late William Bevy, grants to Terric Maulard, of Brideport, and Mabilia, his wife, "for their service," a piece of land in Brideport, near St. Michael's Lane, near the land formerly belonging to Thomas Grane, and the land formerly of Alexander Funding; to hold to them, their heirs, and assigns, whether made in health or sickness, without diminution, in chief, of the lord the King. Witnesses, John Skyberd and Peter de Ramesham, then Provosts of the vill, Richard de Ramesham, William Skyberd, Clement de Eyse, Robert Quarel, Robert Wypp, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward II.; whereby Joan, late the wife of William le Ferour, grants to Sir Richard Castilen, Master of the House of St. John the Baptist, of Brideport, that moiety of the mill called "Killing-esmulle," which she had of the grant of the said Sir Richard Castilen; to hold the same at a yearly rent of 10 shillings of silver; with power of distress. Witnesses, Eadward Renaud, William Horn, Laurence Elyoth, William Quarel, Ralph de la Hude, Hugh Kynemere, "and others." Richard Castilen will be found frequently mentioned in the sequel.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Mabilia, late the wife of Terric Maulard, of Brideport, in free and lawful widowhood, grants, for the soul of the said Terric, for her own soul, and for the souls of all the faithful deceased, to God and the Brotherhood of the Holy Trinity, in the Chapel of St. Andrew, in Brideport, a yearly rent of 4 pence, arising from the land which they had of the gift and grant of Roysia, daughter of the late William Bevy, of Bristolver, in the vill of Brideport. Witnesses, John Skyberd, Stephen de Bonenck, Giles Pomeray, John Cleynch, Stephen Krul, Thomas de la Hude, Robert Wiot, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Thomas le Dykere, with the good will of Matillidis, his wife, grants to Reginald Pyg and Alice, his wife, a piece of land in the vill of Brideport, between the tenement late of Thomas Poleyn, and the land of the said Reginald, in Killingeslane, for the lives of them and of the longest liver of them; they having paid 8 shillings for the first five years of the term, commencing at the Feast of St. Michael, in the 14th year of King Edward II.; and, those ended, at a yearly rent of 4 shillings sterling. Witnesses, Peter Prest, Laurence Elyoth, then Bailiffs, Edward Renaud, William Binne, William Horn, John Barry, William Colt, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Thomas le Sule, of Brideport, gives to God and the Fraternity of the Holy Trinity, in the Chapel of the Blessed Mary, of Brideport, for the souls of his father and mother, and of Alice, his wife, one message, situate on the South side of the West Bridge, between his gate and the waterway, and extending to the tourel [little tower] standing near the water; at a yearly rent of one rose, to be paid on the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, in the church of St. Andrew, in the same vill. Witnesses, John Skibard, Stephen Aylmend, Stephen Rose, Henry Ganet, Richard de Axemenestre, Clement de Esse, Peter de Ramesham, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with the seal, in green wax, of Philip Dol, already mentioned, without date, but temp. Edward II.; whereby the said Philip grants to Edward Renaud and Laurence Elyotis, of Brideport, Coasters and Treasurers of the same vill, "and all their successors, by the benevolence of the same vill elected," his curtilage, which he had of the grant of Edward Clench, between the curtilage which Adam Roynne held and the one which the grantor had, with Alice, his wife, and between the land of Avice, who was wife of Roger de Mayne, and a certain ditch called "La Wydyche" [Wide ditch]; to hold the same, together with the reversion of the curtilage which Agnes, wife of Philip Burdon, holds for her life, in chief, of the lord the King; 20 shillings having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Adam de Larkestoke, William Horn, Bailiffs of Brideport, John Barry, Roger Barry, William Bune, Thomas Coderyng, William Budde, "and many others." There is a second deed to the same effect, and with the same seal, attested as above, except that Robert Corbin and John de Stikellane are substituted for William Bune and Thomas Coderyng.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby William, son and heir of the late Robert de Bemestre, burgess in Brideport, grants to John de Bridetone, burgess, and Amicia, his wife, and the heirs of their bodies, all his right in a message situate in the West Street of Brideport, between the land late of Robert Rothum and the land of Richard Tripesant; with reversion to him and his heirs, in default of such issue; one mark of silver having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, William le Ferrur, Richard de Ramesham, then Bailiffs, Peter de Ramesham, Nicholas Prikepeny, Robert the Baker, Roger de Stapelford, William Wypp, "and others."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, with part of an oblong seal, a fleur-de-lis, in white wax, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Elias de Porstoke grants to William, son of Richard Killing, of Brideport, his house and curtilage in the East Street of Brideport, between the land of the same William, which he had of the gift of Richard Kylling and that of Richard Huhe [sic]; to hold in chief of the lord the King; 26 shillings of silver having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Richard Chynne, Stephen Aylmund, Stephen Rose, Hugh Rothum, John de Waudiz, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, torn, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Roger Coc, of Brideport, grants to William de Bemestre his house, in part of the curtilage which he had by grant of John de Waudiz, for $\frac{2}{3}$ marks of silver. Witnesses, Richard de Ramesham, Robert Corbin, William le Ferrur, Peter de Ramesham, Edward Renaud, Richard de Hardene, John de Gran[stone], William Criket, John Aleyn, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, finely written, with part of an oblong seal in white wax, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby Bartholomew Killing grants to William, son of William Killing, a piece of land in Brideport, near the land of Alicia Rose; at a yearly rent of one rose, at the Feast of St. John the Baptist. Witnesses, Richard de Ramesham, William le Ferrur, Richard de Hardene, Robert Barry, Thomas Goderich, John Härke, John de Miltone, "and others."

CORPORATION OF BRIDPORT.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, without date, but temp. Edward I.; whereby John Martin, of Brideport, for the health of his soul, and of the soul of Avice, his wife, and of the souls of his father and mother, and of all his benefactors, "and of all those whose goods I have taken [suscepi], whether justly or unjustly," and of all the faithful deceased, grants, in aid of a Mass of the Blessed Mary, frequently to be celebrated in the Chapel of St. Andrew, in the same vill, 6 pence of yearly rent from a messuage in the South Street of the same vill, without the Bars, on the North side of the land which was formerly Stephen Aylmund's, near the Castle; which messuage Walter Swift held of him; the same to be paid to the Wardens of the goods of the aforesaid Mass: on the understanding that his Obitt, when it comes round yearly, shall be brought to the memory of him who celebrates the Mass. Witnesses, William le Ferr, Richard de Ramesham, then Bailiffs of the same vill, Peter de Ramesham, Nicholas Prikeny, John de Ramesham, John de Bridetone, Richard de Ramesham the younger, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, probably temp. Edward II.; whereby Richard de Ramesham and Robert Corbyn, Bailiffs of Brideport, and their other fellow-burgesses of the community of the vill of Brideport, grant to Thomas Coderig and Alice, his wife, the burghage situate in the West Street, between the tenement of Agnes, relict of Gregory de Lim, on the West, and the Tolseid of the vill of Brideport, on the East; to hold for their joint lives and the life of the longest liver of them, at a yearly rent of 10 shillings; 5 marks of silver having been paid beforehand. And if it should happen that Henry le Croke returns home, then the 5 marks, so paid to the burgesses, are to be returned. Witnesses, Nicholas de Morethorn, Stephen de Boneville, Giles Tonere, John Clenche, Stephen Crul. "And it is to be noted, that the said Thomas and Alice are to leave the said burghage in as good state as they received it in."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, finely written, with a fragment of the seal, in white wax, dated "at Brideport, on Monday after the Feast of St. Matthew the Apostle and Evangelist, in the 34th year of the reign of King Edward" (the First); whereby Joan, the daughter of Thomas de Ramesham, "in her free power and virginity," grants to Robert de Grawestone, during his life, "for his service," all the moiety of one messuage, with the curtilage, situate near the marketplace of the vill of Brideport, between the tenement of Henry Pacy, and the other moiety of the same messuage, which Philip Dol holds, with Alice, her sister; to hold in chief, of the lord the King. Witnesses, John Suggel, John de Porstoke, Bailiffs, Peter de Ramesham, Edward Renaud, Roger de Mayne, John de Grawestone, Philip Dol, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, which does not appear to have ever had a seal, dated "at Brideport, on Thursday the Feast of St. Peter's Chair, A.D. 1307;" whereby Philip Dol, with the assent and good will of Alice, his wife, grants to Philip Bordon, of Bothenhamtone, and Agnes, his wife, "for their faithful service," a piece of land in the vill of Brideport, between the land of the King and of the community of the said vill, called the "Tolhay," and his own land, and extending from the ditch called the "Wyddych;" to hold to them and the heirs of their bodies begotten; they rendering yearly one penny, of good and lawful money, at the Feast of St. John the Baptist. Witnesses, John de Porstoke, and Walter Castelleyn, then Bailiffs of Brideport, Edward Reynaud, William called "Le Feror," Richard de Hardene, William Budde, John de Stikellane, "and others." "And further, be it noted, that the said Philip Bordon and Agnes, his wife, and their heirs, lawfully begotten, shall have free ingress and egress throughout the year, through the middle of our house, which is situate between the land of Robert de Graustone and Joan, his wife, and the seld [open warehouse] of Roger de Mayne, to till and improve the said piece of land, and carry away the fruits thereof."

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated "at Brideport, on Monday before the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope, in the year of the reign of King Edward [II.], son of King Edward, the ninth;" whereby Emma, late the wife of Bartholomew Killing, of Brideport, quitclaims to William, son of Geoffrey le Officiel, of Brideport, and Margery, his wife, and William, their son, her right in a piece of land in Killingslane; between the land of William Killing the younger and that of John Barry. Witnesses, Edward Renaud and John de Stikillane, then Bailiffs, Adam de Larkestokey, Robert Corbin, Thomas Coderig, John Barry, "and others." The seal, in white wax, is almost entire; a star with a legend, S. EMME LEVRIC, probably her maiden name.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, dated on the Feast of St. Michael in the 10th year of King Edward II.; whereby Stephen Crul, of Wandich, grants to Brother Richard Casteleyn, Prior of the Hospital of St. John in Brideport, 1½ acres of arable land, lying in the fee of Wandich, one acre being at Cranville, and the other half acre lying at Cumesfote, to hold for life; he having paid 55s. beforehand for the first 20 years, beginning at the Feast of St. Michael, in the 10th year of King Edward II.; after that date, half a mark yearly is to be paid; with full power to the said Richard of giving, leasing, or assigning, the said term of 20 years. Witnesses, Robert Corbyn, Roger Barry, John Noreys, Thomas Pynel, Thomas Clenche, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, dated on the Feast of St. Michael in the 11th year of King Edward II.; whereby Nicholas Binne, [or possibly, Bume,] of Brideport, grants to Sir Richard Casteleyn, Chaplain, 3½ acres of arable in Waldich, 2 acres situate in the South field, in the culture [cultura] called Upedone, one acre in the North field, below the way, and half an acre at Cumesfote; to hold from the Feast of St. Michael in the 11th year of King Edward II. for a term of 6 years; for 20 shillings, paid beforehand. Witnesses, Stephen Crul, Robert Vine, John Noreys, Thomas de la Hude, Thomas Clenche, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with an oblong seal in white wax, a fleur-de-lis, with a legend stating that it is the seal of William Killing; dated at Brideport, on Friday after the Feast of the Apostles Tiburtius and Vallerianus, in the 13th year of King Edward II.; whereby Mabilia, daughter of the late William Killing, grants to William Quarele and Margery, his wife, her curtilage in the East Street of Brideport, on the East side of the lane, called "Kyllingeslane," between the land late of William, son of Geoffrey le Officiel, and of the said Margery, and the land then belonging to John de Chilterne; to hold the same, in chief, of the lord the King; half a mark having been given beforehand. Witnesses, Adam de Larkestokey and Roger Barry, Bailiffs, Edward Renaud, William Horn, Peter Prest, William Binne, John Barry, "and others."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, with an oblong seal, in yellow wax, with the device of a flower, and a legend stating that it is the seal of Gunild Killing, of the same date exactly as the preceding deed; whereby Gunnild, wife of the late William Killing, quitclaims her right to the property by her daughter Mabilia conveyed, as in the preceding deed stated; with the same witnesses, except that Laurence Elyoth is substituted for Peter Prest.

A large parchment deed, in Latin, dated at Brideport, on Monday before the Feast of All Saints, 45th Edward III.; whereby Nicholas Tracy grants to John Feldage and Matillidis, his wife, one rood of hemp-land lying in the "culture" called Ponchesford, in Brideport, between the land of John de Axemouthe and that late of John de Figheldene; to hold of the King in chief. Witnesses, Robert Budde, John Passager, then Bailiffs, Robert Bemynstre, John Tracy, Richard Snaward, Thomas de Asschtone, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, with a small seal in red wax, having a fanciful device of a decorated cross; whereby, on the Feast of the Apostles Philip and James in the 17th year of King Edward IV., John Bremelle and Robert Hylle, Wardens of the goods of the church of Saint Mary of Brideport, let to William Rowtres [or Rowcres] and Elena, his wife, for their joint lives, and the life of the longest liver of them, the tenement situate in the West Street, on the North side thereof, between the toft of William Stourtone, Knight, and a tenement of the Brotherhood of St. Mary there, where John Hulle dwells; with a piece of land on the West side of St. Michael's Lane, between the land of the Chantry of St. Michael, and a piece of land belonging to William Rowley; for a yearly rent of 16 shillings; with powers of distress. Witnesses, John Hylle, the other Bailiff with the aforesaid William Rowtres, his fellow, Thomas Bayly, John Crispe, Thomas Chorde, Richard Orcharde, John Duerne, "and others."

The preceding, as already stated, are but a selection from the earliest of some hundreds of manuscripts of this nature, extending from the reign of Henry III. to that of Henry VIII. The following deeds are of an ecclesiastical nature.—

vill of Brideport, and other good and lawful men thereof; that whereas the said William had given to the said Provosts and lawful men full power to administer for ever his grant of lands to 2 Chaplains, at least, the Brethren and the Lepers in the house of St. Mary Magdalene of Alington, called "The house of St. Mary Magdalene of the Lepers of Brideport," by his charter; and that thereby they were empowered to compel the said 2 Chaplains, Brethren, and Lepers, to fulfil all the articles in the charter of the said William de Legh to the said Chaplains, Brethren, and Lepers granted; it was further his desire that at Easter and the Feast of St. Michael, in each year, there should be an inquisition and scrutiny by the said Provosts and lawful men, whether the said 2 Chaplains are living at least honestly, as is befitting, and whether the Brethren and Lepers there dwelling are treated in a due and humane manner; and, more especially, whether one of such Chaplains has celebrated a Mass of the Blessed Virgin Mary, with an especial prayer for the souls of the said Walter de Leghe, Dame Nicola, his wife, Geoffrey de Auk' and Isota, his wife, and of Master John de Brideport, Physician, and for the soul of Robert, then serjeant of Alington, and for the souls of all benefactors of the house aforesaid; and whether the other Chaplain has celebrated a Mass for all the Benefactors, and for the souls of the said William, Nicola, Geoffrey, and Isota, and of Master John de Brideport, and the aforesaid Robert, the serjeant; daily, except in Feasts of Nine Lessons, without any intermission thereof; seeing that on such day, being a Feast of Nine Lessons, he is to celebrate a Mass, with a special Collect, for the souls of the persons before-named. Witnesses, Master John de Brideport, Physician, Adam Deneys of Workeshale, John Skybard, William de Punsoyt, Adam de Langebride, Sir Hosbert, Rector of Brideport, Stephen Aylmund, Richard Chynne, "and many others." The seal is lost.

A large parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, in a mutilated state, and pasted upon a parchment deed of the time of Queen Mary; it is without date, but belongs, no doubt, to the reign of Henry the Third. By it, William de Legh, son of Philip de Legh, for the health of his soul, and of the soul of Dame Nicola de Legh, his wife, grants to the House of St. Mary Magdalene of Alington, called "The Hospital of the Lepers of Mary Magdalene of Brideport" and the Chaplains there celebrating, as also, the Lepers and Brethren there, 50 acres of arable land in Alington, situate in Cesse-crofte, Berfurlange, Rifurlange, Sortelonde, Gatelinche, Riggeweye, the Linche, Wefurlange "beneath the hill 'near the said house,' the 'cultures' [or hemp-fields] of Langebrome and Morfurlang, and Stonilonde, near the bridge of Atrey, and near the well; also, pasture for one steer, six oxen, three cows and fifty sheep; a sufficiency of marl, for marling their lands, and of turf, to be taken from his moor, with a vacant place for drying such turf; also, half an acre of his risset [osier-bed], with leave to inclose it; and liberty to be "sterefy" [?] and "toltry" [toll-free] in his mill. They are also to have a sufficiency of stone from his quarry upon the hill of Alington for their necessary purposes. In return for these benefactions, there are to be two Chaplains, at least, appointed by the house, "of landable life and honest conversation," one of whom is to say a Mass of the Blessed Virgin Mary, with a special Collect for his soul, and for the souls of Dame Nicola, his wife, Geoffrey de Auk' and Isota his wife, Master John de Brideport, Physician, and Robert, the serjeant of Alington. The other chaplain, on days not Feast days, is to pray in his first prayer especially for the souls of the same. Witnesses, Master John de Brideport, Physician, Adam Deneys of [Workeshale], Sir Hosbert, Rector of Brideport, Stephen Aylmund, Richard Chynne, "and many others." Much of the latter part of the deed is torn away.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the two seals lost; setting forth that, in the year of Grace 1271, on the Feast of Our Lord's Resurrection, this covenant was made between William, son of Richard Killing, of Brideport, and Eudo the Merchant, cofferer of the Brotherhood of the Holy Trinity, in the same vill; that the said William granted a message in the vill of Brideport, which he had of the grant of Elyas de Porstoke, situate in the East Street, near the land of Richard Wynch, to the said Eudo and the said Brotherhood for a term of 8 years, for 19 shillings paid beforehand. If money is laid out by the brethren in repairs, through default of the lessor, the term is to be proportionately extended. Also, if the said William shall not pay a yearly rent to the said brethren of 4 shillings, which by a letter obligatory he has bound himself to do, then the whole of the said message adjoining, shall remain in the hands of the brethren until the yearly rent payable for the same shall have made up such deficiency. Richard Killing, the father of William, joins in the warranty. Witnesses, John Skyberd, Stephen Rose, William Skyberd, Richard de Ramesham, Walter Stocot, John Notting, Robert Hux, "and others."

A diminutive parchment deed, in Latin, with several small thongs of parchment, but the seals lost; whereby Roger de Kydeckine, Chaplain, Spiritual Warden of St. John's at Brideport, states that, through weakness of body and frequent sickness, he is unable to perform the duties of that office, and that, with leave of the community of Brideport, he has appointed Master John de Brideport to act for him, and undertake the same. To this deed he has set his seal, and because that to many is unknown, he has procured the seal of the community of Brideport to be set thereto. "Given at Axemunstre, the 4th of the Kalends of November, in the year of 'Grace 1291.' Witnesses, Richard de Ramesham and Robert, son of Robert the Baker, then Bailiffs, Nicholas Prikepeni, William de Chilterne, Richard de Wottonne, John Baldewyne, William le Ferur, "and others."

In the year 1260, Giles de Brideport, Bishop of Salisbury, established in the newly founded city of Salisbury, or New Sarum, a School, or College, for the reception of students; to which, among others, many scholars who had seceded from Oxford, on the quarrel with Otho, the Papal Legate, resorted. This foundation flourished many years, and the deed next described has an additional interest, from the fact of its being connected with it.—

A parchment indenture of covenant, in Latin, the seal lost, bearing date the Feast of St. Michael, in the year of Grace 1307; made between the Warden and Scholars of the Schools of the Valley of Sarum, and Sir Richard Chasteleyn, Prior of the House of St. John in Brudeport; whereby they let their Chapel of Wale-diche, with its appurtenances, to the said Prior and his successors, for a term of 12 years, at a yearly rent of 10 marks. For their greater security, the said Prior has given his corporal oath, and has found mainpennors, namely, William Chauntermerle, William Duke, John Schoggel, Thomas de la Hude, William de Nywebury, Thomas Pynel, William de Froggemore, and Walter Chasteleyn, who bind themselves to payment of the said yearly rent. And if any default is made, the said Prior, as also, each of the mainpennors, shall give 20s. by way of aid to the Holy Land, 20s. to the King's Exchequer, and to the judge who makes the distress, half a mark for his trouble. In case the rooms are destroyed by fire, or, through defect, fall to the ground, the said Prior is to rebuild them in as good a state as before. On holding deliberation thereon, the said Prior and his mainpennors "renounced the royal prohibition "in that behalf, and the use thereof, the privilege to "Crusaders indulged and to be indulged, and all "remedy of law, which might to the said Warden and "Scholars be of injury." Because the seals of the mainpennors were to many unknown, they had procured the seal of the Deanery of Brideport to be set thereto. This is the original executed by the Warden and Scholars; but not a fragment of the seal is left.

The following is a document, of a kindred nature, from 50 to 60 years later in date.—

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated at Brideport, on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope, in the 35th year of King Edward III.; whereby John de Stowe, Chaplain of the Scholars of the Valley of Sarum, quitclaims to John Bonne, of Brideport, all his right in a message situate in the South Street of the same vill, on the East side, between the tenements of John de Larkestoke, on either side of it. Witnesses, William Hycheok and John Tracy, then Bailiffs, Richard Beymystre the younger, Richard Laurentz, Robert Bounde, John de Axemouthe, Clerk "and others." A seal, in red wax, well preserved, bears a shield charged with three hearts, with the inscription, "S. KATHARINE DICTE PISTORIS," the seal of Katharine called "Baker."

A notice on parchment, the writing of which in some places is almost obliterated, with only a small fragment of a conventual seal in red wax; by it Brother Walter, Prior of the Fraternity of Mount Carmel, (or Carmelite Friars), at Winchester, promises to the two persons therein named, a remembrance in their Obits, the same in every way that is accorded to the brethren of the Order:—"Frater Walterus, fratum Ordinis Beate Marie, Genitricis Dei de Monte Carmeli, in Conventu Wyntonie commorantium, Prior localis et servus,

CORPORATION OF BRIDPORT.

"dilectis sibi in Christo, Henrico Benet [apparently] et Isabella, uxori suae, salutem, et per orationum suffragia regna celestia promereri. Devotionem sinceram quam ad nostram habetis Ordinem, ob Christi reverentiam, et gloriosae Virginis Mariae, Matris Ejus, cuius titulo idem Ordo noster principaliter insignitur, diligenter attendens, et in Domino commendans, quo ad ea praecipue quae salutem continent [?] contingunt animarum, quantum cum Deo possum, vobis vicem cupio refundere salutarem. Idecirco omnium Missarum, orationum, jejuniorum, vigiliarum, praedicationum, abstinendarum, laborum, ceterorumque bonorum omnium quae per fratres nostros, in dicto Conventu constitutos, misericorditer operari dignabitur clementia Salvatoris, tam in vita quam post mortem, participationem perpetuam vobis concedo per praesentes; adiciens nichilominus, et de principali gratia concedens, ut cum obituum vestrorum memoria in nostro conventuali capitulo fuerit recitata, idem pro vobis fiat, quoad universa et singula, quod pro fratribus Ordinis nostri defunctis communiter ibidem fieri consuevit. In cuius rei testimonium, sigillum Prioris officii praesentibus esse appensum. Datum in Conventu nostro Wyntoniae, in Festo Purificationis Virginis Gloriosae, anno Domini M^o cc nonagesimo septimo." Below is faintly written, "Per Chambr," and on the margin, and outside, in a contemporary hand, "Bowode juxta Merswood"; shewing that the parties addressed dwelt at Bowood, near Marshwood, a few miles from Beaminster, in Dorset. The Friars Carmelites of Winchester have only a few lines devoted to them in Dugdale's Monasticon, Ed. Ellis.

A notice, or "Letters patent" in Latin, on a small piece of parchment, the seal lost, dated "in the year of the reign of King Henry [III.] the 42nd," by Roger, Warden of the Hospital of St. Mary at Ospringe [in Kent]," stating to all who shall see or hear the same, that they had humanly placed [humaniter posuisse] their dearly beloved, Master Henry de Brideport, Clerk, N. de Turry, or Stephen Aylmund, Burgess of Brideport, to be their attorney, to answer before any bailiffs, and to receive the rents of their houses in the vill of Brideport, "which John Jobbe had of the gift of the lord the King, and gave unto us, with his body." The House of St. Mary at Ospringe, near Faversham, in Kent, was founded by King Henry III., about the year 1235.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost; wherein it is stated, that on the Feast of St. Philip and St. James, in the 20th year of the reign of King Edward [the First], a covenant was made between Bartholomew Killing, son and heir of Richard Killing, and Richard called "Castelayn;" whereby the said Bartholomew let to the said Richard 3 crofts of arable, one on the East side of the mill called "Bartholomew's," another on the South side of the garden of Matilidis, relict of Richard Killing; and the third on the South side of the curtilage of Mabilia, late the wife of Stephen Rose, near to Killingslane, to hold from the Feast of St. Michael for 20 years; 20s. having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Peter de Ramesham, Robert Corbin, then Provosts [or Reeves], William called "le Ferrur," Richard de Ramesham, John Aleyn, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, with a broken seal of white wax, a star, apparently, for device; whereby Thomas Coderig and William Tracy, Wardens of the rents and lands to the Mass of St. Mary of Brideport pertaining, with the assent and will of the whole community of the vill of Brideport aforesaid, grant to Reginald Fyg, of Lodres, and Alice Rickille, his wife, all the tenement and curtilage in the East Street of Brideport, between the land of Richard de Hachecombe, and that held by Edward Renand of Robert de Stikilane; to hold for their joint lives, and the life of the longest liver of them, at a yearly rent of 10 shillings: within 2 years they are also to build a new house upon the said curtilage. Witnesses, Edward Renaud and John de Stikilane, then Bailiffs, Robert Corbin, William Horn, Adam de Larkes-toke, "and many others." Without date, but temp, Edward II.

A large parchment deed, in Latin, dated, "at Brideport, on the Monday after the Feast of our Lord's Ascension, in the 42nd year of the reign of King Edward, after the Conquest the Third;" whereby Robert Budde and Richard Pokeswelle, Bailiffs of the vill of Brideport, state that whereas Robert de Bemynstre, by his charter, granted to William Higecoke and John Tracy, Bailiffs of the said vill, and to the community thereof, one messuage, with a curtilage adjoining, and one yearly rent of 6 marks, to be received yearly from all the lands and tenements of the said

Robert in Brydeport, Caymesworthe, Assche, Chanel, and Waldiche; as also, 16s. of rent arising from the tenement which John Passager and Joan, his wife, hold, and 2s. from the tenement which John Tannere and Joan, his wife, hold for their lives, with the reversion thereof after their death and the death of Robert Bemynstre and Alice, his wife; the royal assent having been obtained; they do, by their present deed, grant unto God and the Blessed Virgin, and the glorious Virgin St. Katharine, and to Richard Stratton, Priest, and his successors, for the souls of Robert de Bemynstre and Alice, his wife, and of Robert de Bemynstre and Clarice, his wife, father and mother of the said Robert, and for the souls of their ancestors and successors, and for the souls of all the burgesses of Brideport, in the church of St. Mary of Brideport for ever to celebrate divine service, one messuage with a curtilage adjoining, in Brideport, and a yearly rent of 6 marks, arising from all the tenements within Brideport of Robert aforesaid; as also, 16s. and 2s. respectively of rent arising as aforesaid, upon condition of celebrating divine service in manner as follows: daily to celebrate Mass in a certain chapel of St. Leonard in the said church, that is, on Monday a Mass of St. Katharine, and on other days, as, according to the use of Sarum, he is bound to do, unless infirmity or some other reasonable cause excuse him: the said priest, and those who may succeed him having to be presented by the said Bailiffs to the Bishop of Salisbury: and that if for a month they shall be negligent or remiss in presenting thereto, the Rector of Brideport shall make such presentation; and in case of his like negligence or remissness, the Bishop of Salisbury. The priest officiating in such Chantry is to hold no other office or benefice. Being a deed executed by the corporate authorities, no witnesses are mentioned.

A contemporary copy of an indenture, on a large sheet of paper, bearing date the 10th of January, in the 8th year of Henry VI., whereby it is stated that John Kyng, Clerk, Rector of Chellesfeld, [near Bromley], in the county of Kent, had, in the 6th year of the same reign, let to John Crose, of Brydeport, "Corveyer," and Alice, his wife, and Joan, their daughter, a vacant place there for life, at a certain yearly rent; he now conveys such yearly rent to his brother, John Kyng, of Brydeport, "husbandman," for the term of his life; remainder to Alice, his sister, wife of William Skyner. He also conveys to his said brother for life two crofts in Brydeport, one called "Kyddcroft" and the other called "Gotecombe," at a yearly rent of one red rose, on the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, if demanded. He also gives to the said John, and to Isabel, his wife, 2 cottages with a garden, situate together in Kyllingslane, in Brydeport, for their joint lives and the life of the longest liver of them, with remainder to Alice, his sister. Executed at Brydeport; witnesses, William Mounfort, John Crose, Walter Cowper, and others." The circumstance of the two brothers having the same Christian name, "John," deserves notice.

A parchment, written in a contemporary hand, being part only of a copy of a confirmation by Robert [Wyvill], Bishop of Salisbury [A.D. 1330-75], of the foundation by John de Mundene of the Chantry of St. Michael in Bridport; granting to Nicholas Gourtoupe and Nicholas de Portland, for that purpose, lands, and rents in money, a rent of 5 pairs of gloves, and a pound of pepper. This document is given in full in Hutchins's History of Dorset, from the Registers of the Diocese of Salisbury.

A parchment deed, in Latin, with two fragments of seals in green wax attached, dated on Saturday the 6th of October 1362, in the parish church of Bridport; whereby John Cok, Rector of the church of Brudeport, in whose parish the Chapel of St. Andrew of Brudeport, aforesaid, is situate, considering the antiquity of that Chapel, and that a daily Chantry of one Mass ought there to be celebrated, with certain Canonical Hours, at certain times of the year, and Sacraments to be administered therein, by the Rector of the church aforesaid; he therefore establishes two yearly oblations, one in the parish church of Bridport, on the Feast of the Dedication thereof, and the other in the said Chapel on the day of its dedication or consecration, by all the burgesses and their wives to be made, over and above the usual oblations there made; the same by Robert, Bishop of Salisbury, to be confirmed. Executed in presence of Master Nicholas Domerham, Official of the Archdeacon of Dorset, John de Wynterborne, Clerk, Notary Public, William Asspudelle, Henry Kilpek, John Juel, Clerks, "and many others." The seal, it is stated, of the Officialty, and the Rector's seal, are attached. The

A parchment indenture, in Latin, there being of one of the two seals a fragment left; dated on the Feast of St. Katharine the Virgin, in the 14th year of the reign of King Edward the Fourth; whereby William Olyver and Richard Orchard, Bailiffs of Bridport, deliver to Master John Edward, Chaplain of the Chantry of St. Katharine there, the following "ornaments and implements" of the Chantry aforesaid. One Missal: a chalice and paten, silver gilt, weighing 20½ ounces; a vestbread, silver gilt, weighing 6¼ ounces; a set of vestments of black "wurstede," with red swans; and the set of vestments of "grene roy tarteryn" [striped thin silk]; an old set of vestments, torn, of "sylike vendyke" and "grene growne"; 3 corporasses; 2 chasubles with 2 frontels, one of gold cloth, the other of red "wurstede," with gold stars, as also, a piece of the same cloth; 6 cloths for the altar of "worke" [? lace], with 3 hand-napkins of "worke"; a painted cloth for the altar, with a cloth of sanguine hanging before the picture of the altar, being the life of St. Katharine; a head of St. John the Baptist in alabaster; 3 images, of St. Mary, St. Margaret, and St. Mary Magdalene; 2 small painted pictures; one Processional; a quire for the Feast of Corpus Christi; 2 cruets with a pax of "peuter," a little bell, with a chest made of "spruse" [? spruce pine]. In the room of his dwelling-house are the following:—One silver cup, weighing 6½ ounces; 10 silver spoons, weighing 6½ ounces, and half a quarter; a basin, with ewer; 2 brass pots, one of 3 gallons, the other 3 pottles; two table-cloths, and one hand-napkin. Witnesses, Richard Burgh, John Hylle, Thomas Bayly, John Cripe, William Rakeryne, "and others."

A handsome deed, on parchment, finely written, with the commencing letter in blue, and the initial letters throughout in rubric, perfect, but in a soiled condition; in English, to the following effect, Sir William Ley representing the founder only, though (in virtue thereof) so styling himself:—"To alle trew Cristen peple to whom this present wyrtynge shalle cum or see, I William Ley, knyht, founder of the Hows and Hospitale of Marie Magdelene of Adlyngtone in the diocese of Sarum and in Countie of Dorset, item William Olyver and Thomas Churd, Ballyves of the towne of Byrdporte, with othre worshipfulle menne, that is to say, Thomas Bayly, Roberte Burgh, John Hylle, [J]ohn Crypce, Richard Burgh, Edward Tracy, John Sterre, John Trygylty, John Doget, William Shuter, John Burgh, Thomas Stokefyshe, with divers othre burges of the seyde towne of Bridporte, Visitors of the seyde Hows and Hospitale of Marie Magdelene, send gretyng in oure Lord. Be it known that we in the honour and reverence of Allmyhty God and of the especialle supplicacion of the pore leprus menne of the seyde hospitale, have seyne and reddie divers bulles and letters of Poppys, Cardinales[s], Archbyshoppes, and Byshoppes, which for the save garde of the seyde letters, and for sewrite of the pore hospitale abovesayde to be mentayned, beene in oure Hihalde [Gildhall] of the seyde towne, in which letters and wyrtynys divers grete indulgence and pardons to all the benefactors of the seyde hospitale by the forsayd Poppys, Cardinales, Archbishops, and Bysshoppes, beene graunt and confermed. Furthermore Pope Alexander iiiith graunted and geve powyr to all manere of Curates of mannys sowle to absolve all bretherne, systerne, and goode doers of the seyde hospitale of all manere of vowys, except the vowys to the Holy Lord, to Rome, to Seint Jamys, and the vowe of chastity, and in remission of all there synnes the seyde Pope graunt a yere and xl dayes. Item, to alle thos that geyvn broche, rynges, bokes, belle, candell, vestimente, bordclothe, towle, pygge, lambe, wolle, peny, or penyworthe, be whiche the seyde hows and hospitale is amended and mentayned, the sayd Pope graunte the remission of the viith parte of penance in junct[ed]. Summe of all indulgences graunted yerly and confermed, to alle brothers, susters, and goode doers of the seyde place and hospitale xiii yere and vi yere. And for as much that it is evidently known that the forsayde pore leprus menne be cause of theire horrible disesse and infirmite may not in their propre persons labore for to aske and gadre theire levyng and sustinaunce, wherfor we pray, thour vertue of this wyrtynge, that ye wolle receive, admitte, and accept Richard Johan veray trewe and just procuratur of the seyde hows and hospitale, for to gadre, aske, and receve, suche always as it may please Cristene peple to geve or sende to the sustinaunce of the seyde pore hows and hospitale for the love of Allmyhty God, and in way of charite. In wenesse of whiche to this presente wyrtynge the comyn seale of our towne of Brydport is put to. Date of the same in oure Hihalde of Brydporte befor sayd, the vii day of Septembere, the yere of the regne of [Kynge] Edward the iiiith the viith yere. Furthermore, vi Massys ben sayd . . . daily for alle the benefactors of the sayd pore hospitale of . . . Marie Magdelene."—"William Sager of Rumsey, under procuratur. Sum of the rente of the sayde place—" According to the sum total, the pardons must have been given, each for a thousand years, instead of a single one; a remarkable piece of carelessness in drawing up this somewhat elaborate document, the intention of which was probably that it should be carried about by the Proctor and Under-proctor of the house, when collecting. The large red seal of the town is unbroken, but, (from the fact probably of the document having been much carried about), the impression on the surface is, to a great extent, worn away. The statements in this document, as to the pardons granted by the Popes and others, gathered from records then in the Town Hall, seem of a doubtful nature; and the same may be said of the grant of St. Thomas of Canterbury.

A small strip of parchment, with the lower margin slit into four thongs, formerly with several seals, one of which only remains, a diminutive seal in white wax, mutilated, but with the impression of an animal; by it Nicholas ate Yerd, Walter de Wydecombe, Richard Michel, Bartholomew le Goldsmythe, and Nicholas de Rodestone, of the hundred of Crukerne, inform (in Latin) their most dearly beloved friends, the Bailiffs of the liberty of Bridport, that Roger le Mileward, of Minster-ton [now Mistrerton], has from infancy "stood well and trustily in the liberty of the manor of Crukerne, and has honestly borne himself, and remains there on the King's assize in the Court of Sir Hugh de Curtenay." They are therefore entreated to retain him among them in peace, without challenge, as "good and lawful," the men of Crukerne answering for his trustworthiness. Dated at Crukerne, on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Barnabas, in the 11th year of Edward II. The people of Bridport seem to have been careful in exacting testimonials of this nature, in reference to strangers coming to live among them.

A small parchment slip, of a similar nature to the preceding one, with fragments of three small seals, a fourth diminutive seal, in green wax, being pretty perfect, representing a man and an ass; in Latin,—By it, William Pacy, Adam le Tyghelere [the Tiler], William Ferur [Farrier], William Bogyhere [Bowyer], Adam Harding, and William le Hert, burgesses of Glastingbure, inform all persons, and especially the Bailiffs of Bridport, that Richard le Sleghe, the bearer thereof, has always been of honest conversation and good report, and has trustily conducted himself. They are asked therefore to receive him "in your parts, as a good and trusty man." Dated on Tuesday, in the Feast of Whitsuntide, in the 12th year of King Edward II.

A small slip of parchment, in French, without date given, but probably of the time of Edward II., and written at Shireburne. The following is a translation, the writers being evidently in ignorance that Bridport at that time had no Mayor.—"To the Mayor and Bailiffs of Brudeport, Bartholomew of Otery, John de

"Bromhulle, Gileberd Pykerst, and Renald Waterbus, greeting in God. Know ye that Henry the Brewer, bearer of these letters, is a lawful man and of good fame, for so long a time as he has been conversant and dwelling in our parts of Shireburne. Therefore we do witness unto you his good fame by the impress of our seals. Unto God, and may He keep you." The four small seals are still pendant, a star and flowers for devices.

A small slip of parchment, faintly written, in Latin, with a small fragment of a seal pendant. By it, the Bailiffs and burgesses of Dorchester, inform their "dearly beloved and especial in Christ, the Bailiffs of "Brydeport," that Roger Mory and Nicholas Makegoye, burgesses of Dorchester, had informed them that Roger de Tauntone, bell-founder [Campanarius] born in Bristol, has long owed them 10 shillings for "a certain brass pot," weighing 40½ pounds, bought of them, and is now following his trade [de opere suo proficiens] in their vill. Their "love" is therefore "earnestly supplicated," that they will "either by his implements, or by his wages, to him not yet paid, deign to distraint him, if it please you, until he shall have lawfully satisfied the said Roger and Nicholas for such money, and his unjust delay therein." In a similar case they will do the same for the Bailiffs of Bridport. "In witness whereof, to you we transmit "our letters patent." Dated at Dorchester, on Monday after the Translation of St. Giles the Abbot, in the 9th year of King Edward the First. Roger the bell-founder, the alleged defaulter, was probably then employed upon making the church bells.

A small parchment, finely written, in Latin, whereby all persons, and, especially, the Bailiffs of Brideport, are informed by Laurence le Eyr, Mayor of Warham, John le Bray, Henry Pacy, William le Hwyslere, and Richard le Chyke, burgesses of that vill, that John de Wildesire, the bearer thereof, has been of good and honest conversation, and of good fame, while in their parts; and are asked to receive him as such. Dated at Warham, on Friday the Feast of St. Matthias the Apostle, in the 11th year of King Edward the First. There are fragments of four small seals pendant.

Small parchment "Letters patent," in Latin, dated at Plympton, on Saturday after the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, in the 5th year of Edward I.; addressed to Richard de Ramesham and Nicholas Prikeny, Bailiffs of "Bridepord," by Michael de Langestone and John de Hokestone, Bailiffs of the borough of Plympton; enjoining them to admonish Robert Lantrepays to pay to John de Stodbury, their Burgess, 3s. 8d., or else the hemp and cords which he agreed to deliver to him a fortnight before Michaelmas last; also, to admonish David de Wynterburne, "who is vulgarly called "Davey," to satisfy the same John for eleven stone of hemp and cords which he covenanted to deliver at the preceding Christmas; the said David having had yarn to the value of 4s. 2d.; and he to receive the rest, when he has given satisfaction as to the said hemp and cords. Also, to admonish Robert Stok to give to the same John 12 stone of cord which he ought to have delivered at the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, he having received yarn to the amount of 5s. 6d. Also, to admonish John le Cherwode to deliver four stone of cord which ought to have been delivered at Mid Lent, he having received yarn to the value of 12 pence. They are also to know that the authorities of Plympton have attached the boat of Richard Blanchard in their franchise, and keep it until satisfaction has been made in the cases before-mentioned. The seal, if once appended, has been torn away. From this document it would appear, that in the time of Edward I. (A.D. 1277) hemp was grown at Bridport, sent to Plympton, to be converted into rope-yarn, sent back to Bridport to be made into ropes, and then returned to Plympton, no doubt, for naval use.

A Letter, on parchment, in French, addressed by the Bailiffs and community of Dorcestre to the Bailiffs and community of Bridport. They have heard from many folks that a certain devilish spirit has falsely defamed "one of our nation, and wrongly, that is to say, Pires "Cokeraul," that he had been indicted in the vill of Dorcestre for divers things. They therefore certify, in good loyalty, that he has never been indicted there, or elsewhere, to their knowledge. They further certify that he is good and lawful, and that no default has been found in him, for falsity; and at the writers' peril, they are requested to hold him as such. They are further to know, that neither John le Tayllor, of Wynterborne, nor his wife, was ever held as good or lawful in their company; nor yet Adam le Fithelere [? the Fiddler] nor his wife. "And for this we are glad at their departing "out of our franchise, and we pray that you will "hold them such in your parts, as we hold them in our "parts. Unto God. Given at Dorcestre, the day before "the Circumcision of Our Lord, under the common "seal of the King's borough of Dorcestre, in the year "of the reign of King Edward the 6th." Temp. King Edward I.: the seal, with its thong, has been removed.

A small parchment indenture, in Latin, dated on Friday before the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope, in the 5th year of King Edward III.; made between Hugh de Langeland, Sheriff of Dorset, of the one part, and Thomas Cole "Bailiff itinerant," Adam de Larkestokey, Peter Prest, Edward Robe, Adam Baker, William Quarel, and Richard Laurenz; testifying that the said Hugh had delivered to them certain quantities of wheat, beans, and barley, 4 horses, 6 cows, 4 steers, 2 tuns of wine, and 50 hogs, for 16½, with which the said Hugh has been charged in the Pipe for arrears of the vill of Brideport; which they are to keep safe till the Monday after Palm Sunday, and to be answerable for the same, each to the above amount, from their own chattels; at which time the said Hugh is to sell them, to raise the above amount. The seal of Hugh de Langland, formerly attached, is lost.

A small slip of parchment, being a Letter written by Ralph de Gorges, in French, as follows:—"To his very "dear friends, the Bailiffs and community of Brudeport, Raulf de Gorges, greeting and dear friendship. "Dear friends, I pray you, for the love of me, that you "will grant to Walter Chasteloun, my man [homager], "that he may erect one shop adjoining to the church "of St. Andrew, on the West side, to do my business; "that so my business may not be neglected. Do thus "much herein, dear friends, as to be willing to grant it "to him sooner than to any one else; that so I may be "bound to thank you. On the other part, I pray you "dearly, that you will pray the parson of Brudeport, "jointly with my prayer, that he will grant to this "same Walter, as much as unto him pertains, in right "of this shop. Unto God, and may He keep you." Without date or seal, but probably of the time of Edward I. Walter Castellain was afterwards Bailiff of Bridport, and was probably brother of Richard Castellain, the Prior of St. John the Baptist, so often elsewhere named.

A small slip of parchment, written in French, in a diminutive hand, dated at Romeseye, on Monday the Feast of the Annunciation of Our Lady, in the 18th year of King Edward II.; whereby William de Fancumberge, Reginald de Monfort, and John Syfrewast, assigned on part of the King to levy men-at-arms and archers in the counties of Somerset and Dorset, certify that they have been well and becomingly served with archers in the vill of Brideport, "in all points," so that they can find no default on part of the Bailiffs or constables. Two small fragments of a very fine seal are attached, part of a shield, the field being charged with two lions.

An acknowledgment, in Latin, on parchment, by Margaret, Queen of England, (widow of Edward the First), dated "at Westminster, on the first day "of October, in the year of the reign of the lord our "dearest son, the lord King Edward, son of King Edward, the 10th,"—temp. Edward II. She states that the men of the vill of Brideport, who hold the said vill of her in fee farm for 16 pounds yearly, payable at the Feast of St. Michael, have satisfied her thereon, by the account rendered at her Exchequer by John de Stike-lane, Bailiff, before her well-beloved clerks, Henry de Lutegarshale, and Adam de Eglesfeld, deputed to audit the account of the issues of her lands; the amount for the 3 years last past having been then paid. Of the seal, in red wax, only a diminutive fragment remains.

A small slip of parchment, in Latin, whereby Isabel, Queen of England, Lady of Ireland, and Countess of Ponthieu, certifies that the men of the vill of Brideport have paid her 16½ at her Exchequer, for the ferm which they owed her for the first year of the reign of her dearest son, King Edward [the Third]. A fine fragment of her seal, in red wax, surmounted with her head, crowned and veiled, is still attached.

Letters patent, on a small piece of parchment, in French, dated at London, the 16th of July in the 21st year of Edward III.; whereby William de Aumarle, of Henton, states that he has appointed his dear and well-beloved in God, Henry le Taillour, his attorney, to receive in his name from the burgesses and Bailiffs of the vill of Brudeport, 16½, which they are bound to pay him yearly at the Feast of St. Michael, for term of his life, by grant and assignment of the King, "as is more "fully expressed in his letter of acquittance." A fragment of a fine seal, in red wax, is attached; a helmet, and a shield with a bend, charged with three crescents, still appearing on it. The fee-farm rent of 16*½*l., belonging to the crown, was probably granted to William de Aumarle (or Albemarle) on the death of Queen Isabel, the King's mother, in 1357.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, with fragments of the episcopal seal of Salisbury, in green wax, still attached, dated the 25th of June 1368; by it, Robert [de Wyryll], Bishop of Salisbury, institutes Richard de Strattone, Priest, in a Chantry in the church of St. Mary at Brudeport, at the altar of St. Leonard, "newly" by us ordained"; to which he had been presented by Robert de Bemenstre.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, with a large fragment, in red wax, of the Suffragan's seal; whereby Nicholas, Bishop of Christopolis, Suffragan of Ralph [Ergum], Bishop of Sarum, states that, by authority committed to him, he has consecrated two altars in the parish church of St. Mary at Brydepoth, one in honour of St. Katharine, the other in honour of St. Mary, on the 18th of the Kalends of December [14th November] 1387.

Letters patent, of Richard II., on parchment, in Latin; setting forth that the Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalene and St. Antony, of Athelingtone [Allington], have no means of subsistence, except by the aid of the faithful in Christ; and that therefore they, and their attorneys and proctors, have to betake themselves to divers grants of the kingdom to collect alms for their sustenance; the King therefore takes the Master and Brethren, and their attorneys and proctors, under his especial protection; and the Bishops, Abbots, and other prelates, to whom the letters are addressed, are requested to receive them kindly in their churches, and to seek alms for them. Bailiffs and other faithful subjects are also requested to see that no molestation or grievance is inflicted upon them. The letters patent are to remain in force for one year. Dated the first day of March, but the year is effaced, the deed having evidently been much used. The seal is torn away. "Burtone" (the name of the Clerk in Chancery) appears at the end of this document; not improbably the John de Burton who became Master of the Rolls in 1386, and Lord Chancellor in 1393.

Probate copy of the testament of John Clench, made on Friday after the Feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross, A.D. 1313. His body is to be buried in the churchyard of St. Mary, at Bridport. To the fabric of the church of St. Mary at Sarum he leaves 3*½*l.; to the fabric of the church of St. Mary of Briedepoite, 6*½*l.; to the fabric of the chapel of St. Andrew of Briedepoit, 3*½*l.; to the fabric of the chapel of St. John of Briedepoit, 6*½*l.; to the fabric of the chapel of St. Mary of Waudich, 12*½*l.; to Sir Richard Chastilen, the parish priest [of Waudich] for tithes forgotten, 12*½*l.; also, to Sir Richard Chastilen, half an ox, namely "Doun"; to the chapel of St. Mary of Waudich, half an ox, namely "Doun"; [q.v. if the name of his only ox]; on the day of his burial and Obit, 20*½*l.; to Thomas, his brother, and Isolda, his sister, one acre of wheat, which lies near the Lose, in the fee of Waudich; to Hugh Kinemere, for his service, 6*½*l.; to John Stille, one quarter of wheat; to Joan, daughter of his brother Thomas, one bushel of wheat, and 2 bottles of hemp; to each of his god-children 1*½*l.; to the Rector of the church of St. Mary at Bridport 6*½*l.; to each of the sons of his son Thomas, one bottle of hemp; to Avice, daughter of Philip Dol, 2 bottles of hemp. All his other goods, not thereby left, he leaves to his executors, Christina, his wife, and Sir Richard Chastilen. A memorandum, on the back, states that the testament was proved before the Official of the Archdeacon of Dorset, at Lodres, on the 16th of the Kalends of July, 1313. A fragment of the oblong seal of the Official, in green wax, is appended, the impression, a crescent surmounting a bird with two necks; with two or three letters of the legend.

The earliest Corporation accounts of Bridport were entered on long rolls of parchment: most of them, no doubt, have perished, the oldest now surviving being five in number, belonging to the reign of Edward II. The practice of treating men in office, or possessed of political influence, to victuals and drink, so prevalent in the East of England a century later, seems to have been almost as general here also.

The first of these Accounts (written in Latin) is intitled,—"The expenses of Walter Castilen and William de Chantemerle, Bailiff[s] of Bridport, in the year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Edward, the first." The following are some extracts:—"First,

"for wine sent to Robert de Farendone, on Saturday the Feast of our Lord's Epiphany."—This personage, who resided at Bridport, was either an Under-Sheriff, or a Sheriff's Deputy, and must have been a man of great influence: (indeed it was either he or his son who founded the Chapel of Saint Michael about A.D. 1330). There are about eighteen items in this roll of presents made to him, in the shape of wine, chickens, fish, beef, and veal, in the course of the year. Other presents, extensively given, were various articles of horses' trapping, such as webs and reins: probably they were made of hemp, and were articles manufactured in the town.—"For 4 horse-nets" (cingulis, the then English name, "vebbis," webs, is placed above it) "given to John de Bromhulle and his fellow clerks, Stephen, Peter, and John of Newbury, collectors for the lord the King, 4*½*d. For wine sent to John de Sandhulle on the feast of St. Agatha the Virgin, at Dorcestre, at the County Court 4*½*d.;"—John de Sandale is meant; he was a collector of the King's tallage, and afterwards Bishop of Winchester, and Chancellor. "Expenses of a horse for Walter Castilen, going to the County Court, the same day, 4*½*d. Expenses of a servant of John de Sandhulle, when staying at the house of Walter Castilen for two days, on business of the community of the vill of Bridport 4*½*d. Expenses of John the gaoler of Dorcestre, on Friday after Ash Wednesday 6*½*d. Given to a messenger of the Sheriff of Dorset to receive bail from John Schuggel for a man of whom he bought a weathercock (ventilgium, with "vedercoe" over it) on Monday the Eve of St. Gregory the Pope 1*½*d. Expenses of carpentry for the stokes (stocks), and expenses of Gilbert the Sachiere (Sawyer) on Thursday and Friday after the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope, 26*½*d. For iron bought of Andrew the Smith, of Athelington, for the stocks, 3*½*d. For a net (rethe) and 5 horse-nets (vebbis) given to John de Sandhulle, sent through Richard, his clerk, in behalf of the community of the whole vill of Bridport, 2*½*s. For a cord given to the Sheriff of Dorset, for the Shrievalty of Dorset, by the community of the vill, 10*½*d."—The monks of Abbotsbury, some miles distant from Bridport, at this date, seem to have refused to pay passage, a duty on weighing imported wares, to the Bailiffs of Bridport, and many of the following entries bear reference to the litigation consequent thereon.—"Given to the clerk of John de Sandhulle, on the day of the Apostles Peter and Paul, upon pesage being refused to the Bailiff at Abbodesbure, one pair of horse-nets 7*½*d.; and on the same day given to the same clerk, at Abbodesbure, one rein, price 9*½*d., for the community. Expenses of the good men of Bridport, on demanding pesage at Abbodesbure, and when it was refused, on the Eve of the Apostles Peter and Paul, 21*½*d. For bread and wine given to them there, the same day and night, 2*½*d. For a breakfast on the Sunday after the said Feast, given to the said men, at Bridport, 3*½*d. For the expenses of them and their horses, going to Abbodesbure on Monday after the said Feast, to make a settlement thereof, 2*½*d. For a tree bought for the pillory of Bridport 4*½*d. For 4 bordis (boards) bought of John Barri for the pillory and for the stupe 11*½*d.;"—this "stopa," elsewhere called "stupe," was probably a post near the pillory, used for whipping offenders.—"For making the foss (explained as "putte," meaning 'pit') for the pillory 3*½*d. For a pullet and wine, sent to William, called 'Le Ferrer,' on Monday after the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, on consulting him as to the pesage of Abbodesbure 6*½*d. For the expenses of the Bailiffs and good men of Bridport, going to Abbodesbure for the pesage, on Sunday before the Feast of the Translation of St. Swithin, at breakfast, for bread and wine 5*½*d. For bread bought at Abbodesbure for the servants and horses, 10*½*d. For mutton bought there 7*½*d. For veal bought there 4*½*d. For wine, when they arrived at Bridport from Abbodesbure, 4*½*d. For a messenger, sent to Cerne for William le Ferrer, to consult him against the Abbot of Abbodesbure, as to the pesage 1*½*d. Expenses of a breakfast given to the Rector of Bridport, John de Lowintone, Edward Renaud, and Nicholas de Stikelane, on Sunday before the Feast of St. Laurence the Martyr, when they planned their suit at London for pesage refused, between the Abbot of Abbodesbure and the vill of Bridport 11*½*d. Expenses of a man working at the Tolhale (Toll Hall), and in Verne, 3*½*d. For the expenses of 12 men of Bridport, chosen to consult, behind the little Chapel of St. Andrew, as to a day to be appointed between the Abbot of Abbodesbure, on Wednesday after the

"Feast of St. Margaret the Virgin, after dinner, for their drinking, 10*d.* For their drinking, after dinner on the Thursday, 5*d.* Expenses of William de Chantemerle and Richard de Hardene, sent to Abbo-desbure, to talk with the Lord Abbot, on Sunday before the Feast of St. James the Apostle, 2*d.* For the expenses of 24 good men of the vill of Bridport at Abbo-desbure, on Monday before the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, for wine and ale, 2*s.* 3*d.*; for herbage for the horses, 2*d.* For the expenses of a man who bought the mace ('malleolum,' explained by 'mace,' and 'martel' written above it) of the lord the King, on Tuesday before that Feast, in wine given to him, 2*d.* For a boy who led the same man to Lodres on the same Tuesday, at night 1*d.* For two boards bought for the stupe ('a la stupe'; probably, as before mentioned, the whipping-post) which Adam de la Putte (of the Pit) broke 3*d.* The roll ends with the expenses of Golofre, allowed by Walter Castellen." Golofre (the modern "Gulliver") was probably the Common Clerk of Bridport. In the next roll he is mentioned as "Richard Golofre."

The roll next in date, contains the expenses of Robert Corbyn and Roger Barri, in the 7th year of Edward II. The contents are not so varied, or so interesting, as those of the preceding one: the following are a few extracts:—"On Sunday after the Feast of St. Edmund the Bishop, for 2 gallons of wine sent to Sir W. Martin, 8*d.* Expenses of a man attached in the vill of Bridport, taken to prison at Dorcestre on Sunday after the Feast of St. Nicholas the Bishop, by the Bailiff and other men 2*s.* 4*d.* For girths and horse-nets sent to John de Chidehock, and his fellows, on Thursday after the beginning of Lent, at Chidehock 9*s.* 6*d.*" John de Chidehock was the then Sheriff of the county of Dorset.—"Expenses of Robert Corbin for girths and horse-nets given by the common assent, at London, for (promoting) the common business, 2*s.* 9*d.*;"—the 8 is struck out, and, from a note, it appears to have been disallowed.—"For hire of a room to keep the tolcorn (toll corn) 2*s.*" In this account Robert de Farendone is not mentioned.

The next is a short account, that of E. Renaud and J. de Stikillane, for the 9th year of Edward II.: John de Farendone is here mentioned as receiving a present of girths, and R. de Farendone a gallon of wine, but that only.—"For 2 gallons of wine, sent to the Corouer on the day of the Holy Trinity, before the inquisition as to escape of robbers, 10*d.* Also, delivered to the same Corouer, for mitigation in the inquisition aforesaid, by common assent, 1*s.* 4*d.* For girths and horse nets sent to Sir Symon de Montacute 7*s.* 1*d.*"

The next is a long account, of Adam de Larkestoke and Roger Barry, for the 13th year of the same reign; Peter Prest and William Binne are mentioned as Bailiffs of the preceding year.—The following are a few of the items:—"Given to Sir Ralph de Gorges, on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Hillary, wine 16*d.*, bread 6*d.* Expenses of Sir John de Chydhuk and J. le Beel, in bread and wine, 6*d.* Expenses of Sir John de Chydhuk at breakfast on Tuesday before the Feast of St. Peter's Chair 9*d.* Expenses of Roger Barri, with horse and groom, at London for 13 days, before the Mayor of the Merchants (?) after the Feast of St. Hillary, in all expenses, 1*s.* 6*d.* Expenses of the Bailiffs and constable, with 12 burghesses, at Dorcestre, for 2 days and one night, before Sir John de Foxleye and his fellows, by command of the lord the King, on Monday before the Feast of St. Gregory 20*s.* 7*d.* Expenses of Philip de Chesham on the Tuesday after, in food and drink for one day, 13*d.* Expenses of Robert Fitz-Payen and the Abbot of Schireburne, on the Feast of the Apostles Philip and James, in collecting for the lord the King, in food and drink, girths and horse-nets given, 9*s.* 4*d.* Expenses of Roger Barri at Wymouth, on Thursday before the Feast of Pentecost, to buy one pipe of wine for the behoof of Sir R. de Gorges, 6*d.* Given to Sir Ralph de Gorges one pipe of wine, which cost 2*½* marks and one penny, on Friday before the feast of Pentecost. For mending the trebuchet (cucking-stool) 3*d.* For carrying the rent to the Exchequer at London 10*s.*" Gifts to Robert de Farendone occur in this roll.

The last of these rolls contains the "Expenses of Adam de Larkestoke and Roger Barri," for a year, probably of the same reign, but not named: the following are extracts:—"For bread [horse-loaves] bought for the horses of Sir John de Cydhoke on Friday after the Feast of St. Kalixtus, 2*d.* For mending the shambles on the Day of St. Lucy the

CORPORATION OF BRIDPORT.

Virgin, 6*d.* For one gallon of wine sent to Sir John de Cydhok, on Sunday before our Lord's Nativity, at the house of Peter Prestes 6*d.* For the expenses of Robert le Ryper, 'bailiff-errant,' and his clerk and groom, and 2 horses, on St. Stephen's day and the morrow, in behalf of the men indicted, for food and drink 2*s.* 5*d.*, one pair of girths 8*d.*, as a gift to the same Robert. As a gift to Sir Robert de Farindone, when they carried one tun of wine from the house of Adam Baker, one gallon of wine, price 4*d.* Expenses of the Sheriff and Undersheriff, and their clerks, for the breaking (fractione) of a ship, on Wednesday the Feast of St. Vincentius, 5*s.* 1*d.* Expenses of Roger Barry, carrying the rent of the lord the King to York, 16*s.* 2*d.* As a gift to the Sheriff on Sunday before the Feast of St. Barnabas, one gallon of wine given to him, 4*d.* Expenses of the gaoler on Friday before the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, in silver 2*s.*, one pair of girths, 6*d.*, 2 horse-nets and one halter, 2*d.*, wine at the tavern for R. Barry and Baker 5*d.*, shoeing his horse 1*d.* Expenses of R. Barri going to London for totting [totando] the tally 2*s.*, for the seal 6*d.*, for 2 pairs of horse-girths there given, 16*d.*, for the expenses of Roger 3*s.* 6*d.* For the expenses of Henry Friday and William de Stoke, food and drink, girths and horse-nets, on Wednesday before the Feast of St. James 2*s.* 3*d.* Spent upon 2 Sheriffs' clerks on Wednesday before the Assumption of St. Mary, in food and drink at breakfast 13*d.* Spent on Sir John Peverel at the tavern of R. Barry, in bread 1*d.*, in wine 2*d.* Gifts of a gallon of wine to Sir R. de Farendone occasionally occur in this roll.

A Latin roll, the writing, in parts, much faded, containing—"A view of arms of the tenants of Brudeport holden on Friday the Feast of St. Matthew, in the 13th year of the reign of Edward, son of King Edward (Edward II., A.D. 1319). The King's tenants (in other words, the burghesses) are about 180 in number, but many of the names are illegible, and a considerable number, for some reason, have the names run through with a pen. The arms mostly possessed by any one man were a stick, or staff, and a knife, or dagger: some having a "hachet," in place of a staff, some a "polax," some a "fork," and some a "spart," or "spert," probably a kind of spear. Occasionally, but rarely, a sword takes the place of a stick; the knife, or dagger, being mentioned as an arm in the possession of each individual, without exception. John Casteleyn, so often previously mentioned, possesses a fork and a dagger; Philip Dol a staff and a dagger; Adam de Larkestoke, a staff and a dagger. Against the name of Roger Barry, the taverner, possessed of a sword and dagger, a note is set, stating that he is dead: but a person of that name was living 3 years later. Not one person is mentioned as being possessed of bow or arrows.

A long parchment roll, indented on the right hand margin, and having two little shapeless seals pendant, in black wax; being, (in Latin), "A Taxation of one twelfth of all the goods of all the men of the vill of Brudeport, in the 13th ('tricesimo,' but evidently a mistake) year of King Edward, son of Edward, King of England, by Edward Renaud, William Binne (or 'Bume'), and Laurence Elyot" (A.D. 1319, 20). The whole of the persons taxed are some 67 only in number. Great poverty, (even for those wretched times), is the general characteristic of the returns, making allowance for the bed, articles of apparel, and drinking vessels, which, in such taxations, were sometimes, if not always, excepted. Robert de Bothenhamtone is the richest man in the number, and his possessions amount to but 4*½* l. 8*s.*; being, a cow 7*s.*, 2 hogs 6*s.*, 2 brass platters 5*s.*, hides 3*½* l., and "in his chamber" (meaning furniture probably) 10*s.* The other articles named as constituting property, are quarters of wheat, beds (probably a second bed), brass platters, horses, fuel, wooden vessels, leaden vessels, ewers and basins, malt, hemp, table-cloths, hand-napkins, girths and yarn, white leather, timber, hay, wool, millstones. The stock in trade, or articles on sale by persons in various lines of business, was evidently excepted: thus Henry Mustardir, (Mustard-grinder), is assessed, for a pair of millstones 40*d.*, one brass pot 2*s.*, one brass platter 16*d.*, one bed 4*s.*, wooden vessels and other utensils 16*d.* Roger Barry, evidently one of the most respectable innholders of the place, was assessed for 2 hogs value 4*s.*, 2 beds value 8*s.*, 2 table-cloths and 2 hand-napkins 4*s.*, one horse 12*s.*, one brass pot and one platter 3*s.*, malt 4*s.*, wooden vessels 2*s.* Adam Golofre had the most diversified property, and was one of the richest of them all: being assessed for 2 swine, value 6*s.*, one leaden cauldron 4*s.*, malt 12s., 2 beds 8s., 2 table-cloths and 2 napkins 4s., wooden vessels 6s., one brass pot and one platter 4s., one ewer and basin 3s., fuel 3s., and corn 10s.: not improbably, he kept a tavern, or inn. Peter Prest is elsewhere mentioned as a Taverner; he was assessed for one horse, value 10s., 3 hogs 8s., 2 beds 8s., two table-cloths and two hand-napkins 4s., malt 8s., one leaden cauldron 4s., hemp 4s., fuel 2s. John Castelen's goods are valued at 8s. only. Two women are mentioned as being assessed, and no person is named whose goods were below 10s. in value.

A similar roll, in Latin, somewhat mutilated; being "A taxation for a sixth part of the goods of the men of the vill of Brydeport, made in the 16th year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Edward, by Stephen Clouderigh and William Hourn," A.D. 1323. The population now seems to have been somewhat poorer than before; instances are given where a person's property is valued at 6s. only, from which a sixth part is deducted, to satisfy the King's demands: as no properties, however, are mentioned below that value, the smaller properties were probably exempt. Cords, yarn, shoes, and girths, probably parts of stocks in trade, are here at times included in the assessment; about 80 persons, in all, being taxed. Henry Mousterder, mentioned in the preceding roll, is now assessed to the like amount, 12s., but upon a different basis; a pair of mill-stones 3s. 6d., one bed 3s., one brass pot 2s. 6d., 5 pounds of soap 12d., mustard 2s., William Kocrydel, (a butcher, evidently), is assessed for 2 hogs 8s., vessels of brass and wood 3s., one bed 4s., flesh-meat 3s. John Cake (from whom or whose family, Cake Lane probably had its name, a locality now unknown), is assessed for one horse 5s., one leaden cauldron 3s., one hog 2s., malt 4s., fuel 12d. Hemp is repeatedly mentioned as forming part of a man's possessions, and, with it, "lucell" (meaning probably hempen wicks, for lamps or torches) are named several times. John Vyle has oatmeal, valued at 3 shillings, but some part of this entry is torn away. The more wealthy men in the town seem to have compounded on this occasion, no particulars of their goods being given (on the reverse of the roll), but only the sums paid are set against their respective names. Edward Renaud is now the most wealthy, no less a sum, for the sixth, than 26s. 8d. being set against his name; Robert Bothenhamton coming next, with 20s. against his name. Peter Prestes (or Preste) the Taverner, pays 10s., and Roger Barry 13s. 4d. Adam Larkestoke pays 6s. 8d. The assessors, Hourn and Clouderigh, pay respectively 2s. and 12 pence.

A square sheet of parchment, with a Latin heading, stating that it is a "Record of deeds of Briedport for the 11th year of the reign of King Edward, after the 'Conquest the Third': by the first named, John Baldewyne conveys to John Douk a croft in South Street, called "Loggetcroft," near the land of Adam de Larkestoke. Witnesses, William Quarel and John Snaw, then Bailiffs, William Binne, Peter Prest, Adam Gulofoe, Robert Budde, "and others." From the next deed, we learn that in the 10th year of the same reign Adam de Baker and Adam Gulofoe were Bailiffs, a tenement being conveyed, situate between those of Peter Dol and Peter Prestes. The third deed, there transcribed, bears reference to the same property.

The documents that now remain to be noticed, are mostly of paper, and belong to more recent dates.—

A square sheet of paper, which is similar in appearance and in the nature of its contents, to the several leaves of the quarto Corporation Account-book, temp. Richard II., previously mentioned. The following is a translation of its contents:—"Account of John Hayward and John Rogere, Bailiffs of Briedport, from the 'Feast of St. Michael, in the 18th year of the reign of Richard II., to the same Feast in the 19th year of the reign of the said King.—For the stalls 9½. 4s. For assize of ale 7½. For Stede Gabelle 5½. 12s. For Martins Gabelle 3½. For Croft Gabel 2s. For Lawedayes 40s. For estreats of Court 20s. For fairs 5s. 5d. For Tolcorne 8s. For forfeitures of yarn and hemp 9s. 6d. For small tolle 7s. For catelwayfe 20s. For sale of dung 6d. For hemp-seed 4½d. Total 30½. 8s. 9½d. Laid out therefrom, in the King's rent 16½. For the Bailiffs 40s. For the Clerk 13s. 4d. For divers expenses upon the town 35s. 4d. Remaining in full "10½. 1½d."

The next is a long strip of parchment, intituled (in Latin),—"The expenses of Henry Tyte and Roger Stike-lane, Cofferers of the vill of Briedport, from the Feast of St. Michael in the first year of the reign of King Henry the Fourth, to the same Feast in the year next following." The account includes expenditure solely, and the following are some extracts from the items:—

"Expended upon the twelve [Jurors] on Wednesday [the day on which the account begins] 10s. 1d. Paid for besant-selver 2s. To the Abbot of Abbotsbury for rent of the house 4s. Expended when the Twelve went round the town, by order of the Bailiffs 9d. For mattes for the Tolhalle 7d. Paid a bricklayer for unroofing the porch (proaulam) 8d. For ale for him 2d. For lime and sand 2d. For nails 1d. For making the roof of the porch, namely, wages of carpenters and masons, buying planks and nails, with hinges and spindles, and other necessities 21s. 6d. For tiles and laths, and lathnagl, with the wages of the workman and the men hired to help him, with lime and sand, and planks for making the orielle 21s. 11d.: here we have the word oriel identified with the proaula, or porch.—"Paid to Adam Bouleghe, for the work on the church, by precept of the Bailiffs 40s. For mending the shambles 6d. Expended upon the Justiciars at Briedport 6s. 2d. For two webbes, given to Faudroye 14d. For mending the pavyces (shields), when the men were mustered 10d. To John Shapwyke in zoppe (P rope) for fishing 4s. For wine, when the glass was put in 15d. For gyrres (girths) bought another time, and given 14d. To John Tracy for garlands bought, (coronis emptis) 10s. For Martin's gabelle in Stakelane 3d. For a window for the cottage in Stakelane 5d. Paid for mending the shamble of Henry Wade 4d." The next (in Latin) is a longer sheet of parchment, being the "Expenses of Simon atte Forde and John Goky, Cofferers of the vill of Briedport," 4 and 5 Henry IV. The following are some extracts:—"First, spent upon a breakfast to the 12 men, on the Wednesday, with their wives 14s. For besant-selver 2s. Rent paid to the Abbot of Abbotsbury for the house late of W. Coffyne 3s. Paid to Nicholas Tracy, at Parliament, by precept of the Bailiffs 22s. For mending a house in South Street 15½d. Paid the Chaplain of St. Katharine's, at the Feast of Our Lord's Nativity 25s. 3d. Paid divers expenses, on the arrival of our Lady the Queen, as handed to John Palmere 6½. 6s. 8d.:—the Queen here mentioned was Joan of Navarre, Duchess of Bretagne, the second wife of Henry IV.—"Straw bought for the toll-house 1d. Expended upon the Justiciars of the lord the King, on Monday before the Feast of the Annunciation of St. Mary, when they sat at Briedport 13s. 6d. For wax on the day of the Parasceve [Good Friday] before the Sepulchre of Our Lord 13½d. in all. Paid expenses upon the Lord Bishop of Salisbury about the church 2s. 1d. Divers expenses upon the Suffragan Bishop, when the church was celebrated" 37s. 6d. Expenses upon the Amerall in the month of June at Briedport 5s.; the "Admiral" was probably Thomas, the second son of Henry IV.—"Paid, by precept of the Bailiffs, for the vestments of the Under-bailiffs 5s. 6d. For the expenses of Humphrey Stafford, when he sat at Briedport, to array the men 4s. 7d. At another time, for the expenses of the archers at Weymouth 12s. For the Anniversary of Edward Coterige and Alice, his wife 15d. For 17 waggons for carrying to the causeway 11s. 1d. For men hired to carry stone and earth from the churchyard to make the causeway 2s. 2d. For one rammere (rammer) bought for laying the stones 1d. For rushes for strewing in the toll-house 2d. Paid the Lord Bishop of Salisbury for the dedication of the church 4½. 13s. 4d. In wine 3s. 3½d.:—"part of the church appears to have been then rebuilt, and to have required a fresh consecration.

A somewhat similar account, in Latin, on a sheet of discoloured paper, beginning:—"Memorandum as to divers parcels paid by the hands of John Crosche, in the 4th year of the reign of King Henry, after the 'Conquest, the Sixth.'" The following are some of the items:—"Paid the servant of Thomas Wyzman, glasiere 19s. Paid for one torche [large wax taper] 2s. 4d. Paid Sir John Stalbygge for keeping the clock (orilogij) 3s. 4d. Paid the Clerk of the Fraternity (not stated which, but probably St. John's is meant) 12d. Paid Henry . . . mely for vestments of the bedels 15s. 7d. For expenses of taking the robber to Dorchestre 21d. Paid the Chaplain of St. Katharine's 25s. 3d. Paid for a horse hired to carry the robber to Croukerne, on the way to Dorchestre 10½d. Received,—"From William Spyney, when made a Burgess 20s. and a breakfast; from Thomas Monkeswelle 40s. and a breakfast, and from Stephen Rope 40s. and a breakfast."

A paper Account, in Latin, headed "Payments by the hands of John Crosche in the 5th year of Henry

"[the Sixth]." The following are among the items:—
 "For sprayes [sticks for thatching] bought 2*d*. Paid
 "John Leche for carrying away the rubes [rubbish] at "the samles [shambles] 16*d*. Paid Walter Tappe to "serve the chief roofer (architector) at the house of "John Snelle 19*d*. Paid John Chideoke for straw
 "10*d*. Paid Hugh Goldehoppe for 2 bundles of straw
 "10*d*." "Goldehoppe" not improbably was the early form of the present surname "Gollop."— "Paid for "one bundle of sprayes 4*d*. Paid Thomas Hyder for "shirpyng 3*d*.;—probably sharpening the sprayes is meant. "For mattes for the King's hall 6*d*. For ex"penses upon the King's Justiciars 7*s*. 6*d*. For rushes
 "for the said hall 2*d*. Paid the Clerk of the Fraternity "of St. John 12*d*. Paid for wine and bread for "Hamphrey Stafford 13*d*." On the outside, in Latin,—
 "William Persone and John Leche gave surety for "Walter Dappe, that he would well conduct himself in "his office of Churchwarden; and this, under a penalty
 "of 10 marks."

The next is a sheet of paper, containing a Church-warden's account, in Latin:—"The expenses of William "Marchell, one of the Wardens of the vill of Brideport," 6 and 7 Henry VI. The following are among the items:—
 "First, for the expenses of Thomas Dare, Carpenter,
 "for mending the bells, in his craft;—for himself, his "horse, and his man 10*d*. For ale bought, upon mend"ing the bells 2*d*. For a goldsmith, hired to mend
 "the silver cross 2*s*. 8*d*. For a smith, hired to mend
 "a clipere (clapper) of the bells 3*d*. For a plumber "hired to mend the church, 5 weeks and 5 days, for his "labour 3*s*. His costs and expenses 15*s*. For 19 pounds "of wax bought for the use of the church 11*s*. 1*d*. For "one surplice bought for the clerk of the church of St.
 "Mary, cloth for it 6*s*. 8*d*. For making the same 19*d*.
 "For one baudres (baldric) bought for the bell, of John "Sadeler 10*d*. For 3 planks for making the chiste 9*d*.
 "For one carpenter making the chiste, and making "the beris (biers) 10*d*. The chiste was no doubt, the parish coffin, in which bodies were carried by the "upholders" to the grave, upon the parish bier.—
 "For one gallon and a quart of oil, bought for the lamp
 "before the altar 20*d*."

The next is a long paper Account, in Latin, in good condition, and finely written, with the following title:—
 "Implements of the Priory of St. John the Baptist,
 "delivered to Sir John Syttere by Richard Burgh and "John Cryps, Bailiffs of Brideport, received from Hugh "Prior, late Prior there, the 9th day of October in the "32nd year of the reign of King Henry VI. In the "Chapel,—One missal, the second leaf beginning '*Ad
 "le levavi*.'—Three sets of vestments, one cheseble, and "one old aube (alb). A book, called a 'Temporalle,' the "second leaf, beginning 'gere bonum.' A book called a
 "'Cantory,' with musical notation; the second leaf
 "beginning 'revocavit.' A Collectionary, the second "leaf beginning 'cognovimus.' Another, an old Por"tiffory of our Lord the King. Two other Missals, old "and torn; one quire, with the Sequences, delivered by "William Olyver. 2 brass candlesticks. 2 cruets of "peuty or tin. One paubred. One painted altar-cloth "called a 'super-altar,' and 2 auterchols lying on the "altar, one hand-napkin, given by John Burgeys.
 "Two corporals, with two capsules to put them in.
 "One chest, locked. One chalice, with a paten,
 "weighing 12½ ounces. In the Hall,—One old dorsal
 "(wall-carpet), one banker (bench-cloth), and 6 old "cossyns (cushions). One set of trestles. One large
 "table-board; another, a woldyng bord (folding-board),
 "and one table dormand (sleeping-table). One basin
 "with a ewer, without cover, and a hanging ewer,
 "made of latyne (latten). One wettyngstone, [whet"stone] hanging chained in the hall. In the Pantry,—
 "2 bordchys (board-cloths) one of werk, being 4½ yards,
 "and the other of crescloth 4 yards, and two hand-nap"kins of werk, one 4½ yards, the other 2½ yards. One "old mazer, weighing 7½ ounces. One pece of silver "plate, weighing 7 ounces. Six silver spoons, weigh"ing 4 ounces, with one capsule (for them). In the "Kitchen,—Half a dozen of dischys performyde (i.e.,
 "complete with their suite); that is, 18 pieces of peuty
 "marked with the letter P. One brass pot, containing
 "3 gallons; one posnet (pot) of half a gallon; 2 brass
 "vessels, one of 6 gallons, and the other of 3 gallons;
 "one spit; one voider [videna] broken; one tryvet;
 "one gespanne [qy. pan for boiling geese]. In the "Chamber,—one bedeste of board, one chest well locked.
 "And it is said that the six spoons weigh less than the "other six spoons that were lost, by 2 ounces. And "that for one brass pot, called 'colmanne,' the afore"said Hugh is to buy another brass pot of the same

"value by the Feast of All Hallows next after the date
 "above-mentioned."

A diminutive piece of paper, to the following effect, the upper portion of it having been cut away:—"This "beth y^e parcell of money that W. Olyvere hath re-
 "seyved of dyverse brotheredynes and others, to bye
 "2 Antyphonelles for oure Lady Church of Brydeport
 "anno xxxiii^e Regis Henrici viⁱ. First of Seynt "Katerine ys brothers 27*s*. Item, of y^e braunche 8*s*.
 "Item, of y^e Crosse ley 3th [light] at Seynt Andrywis
 "26*s*. 8*d*. Item, of Oure Lady brothers, 7 marks,
 "3*s*. 4*d*. Item, of Seynt Thomas is brothers —." It will be observed that in the preceding article, W. Oly-vere is named; as also, in the next.

Three large sheets of wire-wove paper, sewed together, the first two sheets being in a very tattered condition. The contents are in Latin, with English interspersed, with the following title (tr.):—"Muster made
 "at Brideport, on Sunday after the Feast of St. Giles,
 "in the 36th year of the reign of King Henry, after "the Conquest the Sixth, before William Olyvere and "Richard Burgh, Bailiffs of the said vill, and Robert "Scarlet and Thomas Stockfysch, Constables of the "same vill." Many of the names have the arms set against them, in which the owners appeared, or which they were to provide. Thus, Thomas Capper has a sword, "and he will get ready a bow, and half a shefe
 "of arrows." Besides the above kind of arms, which repeatedly occur, are mentioned, daggare, glefe, bylle, pollax, spere, "staff with cross," the defensive consisting of, jack, salet, bokeler, prange (?), parys, habchyne (habergeon), cales, bryngadryrs, and gawtelettes.
 William Iryng is the only inhabitant who possesses
 "one gun," in addition to a bow, 12 arrows, a sword, and a bokelare; and he is to provide 12 more arrows by next muster. Alice Hewis, whose Christian name is substituted with the pen, for her husband Matthew's, possesses a jacke and a salet. Alice Hare has 4 peyre curas (pairs of cuirasses) not complete. Richard Burgh, the Bailiff, possesses 2 jacks, 2 saletes, 3 bows and 3 shefes of arrows, 2 pollax, 2 glefis, 2 daggars. John Pryckprowte owns a jacke, sword, bokeler, bow and shefe of arrows, and dagger, and will provide a salet by next muster, under a penalty of 40 pence. John Doget possesses a jack, salet, bow, shefe of arrows, sword, bokeler, spere, and parys. Robert Byrche has "a whyte
 "harnys, with a basenet." Henry Bythymroke possesses a bow and 16 arrows, but he is to order a melle of lead and a parys. Not one family name, apparently, occurs of those given on a like occasion, as already mentioned, about 140 years before. The contrast between the arms in the possession of the inhabitants at the two periods is most striking, and it is clear that the people must have greatly advanced in opulence during the intervening period. Many of the names are torn away, and against a considerable number of them no arms are entered.

A paper without date given, but of about the same period (A.D. 1460): the following are some items:—
 "Be it hadde onne mynde that the sumner received for

"Petrys peny 3s. Also to John Bedman 12d.;" the "bedeman," or man who carried round church notices. "Y payed to John Clerk at his comyng 20d. For a man and his cost to Tawntone after the Clerk 16d. For y^e Obet of Stalbrgye 11s."

A sheet of paper doubled, and one side filled, date about A.D. 1450-60; being an account of sums received by the Brotherhood of St. Mary, under this title,—"The receytes of Brotherathe of Oure Lady." "Item," received of the bequeste of Thomas Sadellere 4s.; This is followed by ten other pecuniary bequests, among them:—"For the bequeste of Robard Bracy and his daughter 8d. The bequest of Robard Hasarde is manne 4d.;" this "manne" was a bondman probably. "For the bequeste of the wiff of John Kenyll 3s. and a ryng. Of the bequeste of the servaunt of William Kawkreyme 40d. Receyved of Richard Batyn ys fyne 8d. Of the bequeste of Raynald Tokere, a brasyne croke, of the weight of 21lb. Of the bequeste of Thomas Holard, a eu and a wether. Of the bequeste of John Symmys a eu and a lame. For the fyne of Harry Jakmanne a chilver lome,"—a ewe lamb, about a year old.—"Of the bequeste of Rogger Jolet, 2 ewene (ewes) and 2 wethers. Of the bequeste of the daughter of Goly 3 sheepe." The book of this Fraternity, or Brotherhood, has been already noticed.

A small paper, of about the same date as the preceding, containing the names of persons presented for having nuisances ou or near their premises. The localities mentioned are, Kylyngeslane, Kyngeslane, Bowleyslane, and Buttslane; but most of the nuisances are mentioned as being in South Street, and some near the church. The nuisances complained of are, dung heaps near the door, the bad state of the ditch or the gutter opposite the property, and the having stones lying in the gutter. Amota But must have been a somewhat extensive owner of property, apparently; as she is presented as offending in Kyngeslane, Bowleyslane, South Street, near the church, and Kylyngeslane.

A long slip of parchment, being the "Cofferers' Account" for some year in the latter part of the reign of Henry VI. The entries are generally in English, and some few of them deserve notice:—"Item, sol. for the Amarle ys cost, to Bele Stalbrg 8d.," meaning the cost of entertaining the Admiral, probably with wine from the house of Isabel Stalbrige. "Item, i payed to Oudeney for one borde to Seynt Andrew's cherche 3d. Symon at Vorde received for Parliament 2 marks. (This occurs twice). Paid William Thomas, Chaplain of the Chantry of St. Katharine, for Easter Term 25s. 3d. Paid William Rawe for rushes for the Tol-halle 4d. For wine given to the Clerk who was in council with the 12 men, the day on which the Justiciar sat in this vill 6d. In vino y drunk apud Monfortys, pro Comuni Sigillo 6d.;"—(wine drunk at Monfort's inn, when the Common Seal was set). "For carriage of tymber y set to the shamelles, in bred and ale 5d. Paid William Millward [one of the Bailiffs], for his costs at London 13s. 6d. For one pair of manaclys bought 3[d.]." On the reverse of the parchment there are some notes, in Latin; one to the effect that—"Roger Bymund became mainpennor (surety) for Joan, the wife of the same Roger, that from thenceforth she would not do malice to her neighbours or others, under a penalty of 20s.

A long slip of paper, neatly written in English, with the following title, in Latin, (tr.):—"Brydeport. Expensiditure of Richard Burgh and Thomas Weye, Cofferers there, in the time of Robert Burgh and Thomas Porter, Bailiffs of the vill aforesaid, from the Feast of St. Michael the Archangel in the 5th year of the reign of King Edward IV., to the same Feast in the 6th year." The following are among the items:—"En primes, payd to an heler [tiler] for 14 days labour upon James Berticon is hows 4s. For 400 of blew helyng (tiling) stone 16d. (qy. if this was slate).—"Payd to a dauber and to his manne for 3 days 12d. For wyne to the Duke of Clarence and to my Lord Stafford 6s. 8d. Paid to William Wyke for waste of his torche 31b. 15d. Paid Alexander Sadler for his labour ayenst my Lord of Clarence 4d. Paid to John Harrys for wyne to my Lord of Clarence 8d. Paid to John Doggett for wyne to my Lord of Clarence 2s.;"—these large outlays for wine, in connexion with the name of the Duke of Clarence, deserve notice.—"Paid to Robert Lang for waste of torchis of the church 17d. Payd for a plank to the fysshe shamelles 4d. Payde to the hows of Saynt Jony's of Brodemayne 12d. Payde to Perys Sexteyne for keypynge of the cloke 3s. 4d. For helynge (tiling) of the Gylde Halle, payde to an heler 2s. 13d. For making clene of the halle, and for rysshes 4d. For mendyng of the wyndow in the Tolle halle and of the fysshe shamelles 2s. 4d. For making clene of the strete at the bule (bull) ryng 4d. For naylis to the fysshe shamelles, and for a man is hyre to Abbotsbury affyr gonne powder 7d. Payde for 2 galons of wyne to the Justices of pees and to the Shireffe 16d. Payde for 2 galons and a potelle of wyne to my Lord of Sarum is Chaunceler 20d. For mendyng of the gunnys etc. 11d. For a breakfast to Thomas Potter 26s. 6d."

A long paper roll, somewhat mutilated, being the Account of the same Cofferers for the 7th year of Edward IV.: the following are some of the items:—"Payd to John Cornysch for the hous in the church-yard 2s. 6d. Payd for 7lb. wax for a torche 4s. 1d. For makyng of the same torche, and macche (wick) yerne 20d. Payd to 2 prestes (priests) 10h. 12d. For a breakfast at Hoketide 28s. 2d. For the rent of the buttes 4s. Payde for an heryng barell that stondith uppon Robert Tely, tallour, dwellett in the South Strete 4d.;" this probably means that it was placed, as a water-cask, near Robert Tely's dwelling.—"For mendyng of the shylyng-stole (probably the coking-stool) 3d. Payde to a mason for picchyng of the pavement (pavement) at the wateryng-place. For 8 hors lode of sonde to the West Brigge and to the Hors Pole 8d."

A mutilated fragment of paper, which belongs to the 5th year of Edward IV., contains some account of the assay of bakers' loaves; the half-penny loaves in general, of each baker, having "bene," meaning, full weight, against the item. The different heads, are wastell, coket, synnell, and "rangatus," evidently an inferior kind; perhaps like the "ravell," or white-brown bread of Sussex.

Two slips of paper, sewed together, one containing the account, in English, of William Tayler, one of the Cofferers, for the first year of Richard III.; the following are some items:—"For makynge of the squabbe walls (of William Wallys ys howse) above the stone warke 3s. 8d. For a pyse (piece) of yre (iron) to bogell (buckle) the cypille and the flylle togeder 5d. To the Munke (Abbot) of Abbotsbury 4s. For the keypynge of the klokke 3s. 4d. Y payed to Richard Orchard for the Kynges wyne 13s. 4d." The short account of John Atekyne, the other Cofferer, for the second year of the same reign, is on a small paper sewed to the larger one; it is merely an account for repair of one of the Corporation's houses, and ends with this item:—"For a nette to sette a pon the howse 2d."—qy. for what purpose; for "amending" a gutter, is the preceding item.

A large sheet of parchment, being a copy, in singularly minute writing, made of certain documents in or about the year 1451. The first, which is of great length, in Latin, bears date the 8th of July 1362, being executed by Robert (Wyvill) Bishop of Salisbury, and addressed to the Rector and parishioners of Brideport. He states that disputes having arisen between them as to the liability of the Rector to find a Chaplain to minister in the Chapel of St. Andrew in that parish, with certain duties there specified; on inquiry, he finds that it is the duty of the Rector to support the said Chaplain at his own expense; that it is the duty of such Chaplain, on every Saturday and Sunday, to say Vespers and Compline in the said Chapel; as also, Vespers on every day in Lent. On the Feasts of our Lord's Nativity, St. Andrew the Apostle, and the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, and on the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, before the Feast of Easter, he is solemnly to say Vespers, Matins, and the other Canonical Hours, if he has clerks and other ministers to aid him in such services. Such penitent parishioners of the church of Brideport as, for the three days before the Feast of Easter shall wish "to be disciplined" (flagellated) "he shall discipline, as the manner is, and absolve." The confessions of servants, sick persons, and the other parishioners, he shall hear, so often as they wish to confess to him. On the Feast of Easter he shall administer Sacrament and Sacramentals, in the said Chapel, to those who shall demand them. Every Sunday throughout the year, he shall bless bread and water, and minister to the parishioners there present, and distribute the same. Banns of matrimony he is to proclaim, so often as needed. Anniversaries of the dead, and mandates of ordinaries and superiors, and the due execution thereof, he shall proclaim and carry out. On the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, he shall bless the candles, in the same Chapel to be used, and shall receive them, to be offered there. For the support of such Chaplain the Rector has been wont to receive from lands and tenements given by the parishioners of Brudeport, and shall in future years so employ the same, 100 shillings sterling; as also, oblations to the same Chapel and Chaplain accruing. That further, on the 8th of June 1362, John Cock, the Rector, and Robert Budde and John Tracy, the Bailiffs, being present in the said Chapel, he, the Bishop, was begged by them and the parishioners, solemnly to dedicate the said Chapel, which till then had been but a "profane place;" and that at the same time, in relief of the said Rector, they agreed that they, the burgesses of Brudeport, over and above their usual oblations, should offer, each for himself and his wife, one penny, for the Church, on the Feast of the Dedication of the Church of Brudeport, and the like in the said Chapel, on the Feast of the Dedication thereof, if it should be dedicated; he had therefore, in consideration thereof, bestowed the gift of dedication and consecration upon the said Chapel. To those also who shall give towards the fabric of the said Chapel, or its ornaments or lights, in reverence for the Saint, he gives a remission of 40 days of the penance that may be enjoined them. The Bishop having duly set his seal thereto, the same was done by John Cock, the Rector, and by the Bailiffs and community of the vill of Brudeport.

The parchment contains, in the next place, a copy of a document, in Latin, dated at Westminster, at the Bishop's hostel there, on the 13th of March 1441 (2), and executed by William (Aiscough), Bishop of Salisbury; being a Commission to John Dovell, Canon of that church, to make inquisition, on complaint of the Bailiffs and community of Brudeport, that the Rector of the church refuses to maintain the Chaplain of St. Andrew's, and also will not allow the Chaplain, presented by the Bailiffs and community to the Chantry of St. Katharine, in the said church, according to the ancient custom, lawfully prescribed, to celebrate Mass there "before reading the Gospel of the parish Mass;" such inquisition to be made in the parish church of Brudeport, on the 5th of April then next ensuing.

The Certificate of the said Commissioner, addressed to the Bishop (in Latin), then follows.—He says that at the time and place commanded, in presence of a "copious multitude of the parishioners," he had duly made inquisition, as enjoined; that he had caused Master John Helyer, the Rector, to be publicly summoned, and that neither personally, nor by proctor, had he appeared; by reason whereof, he deemed and pronounced him contumacious, and duly proceeded in the matter. Twelve parishioners, whom he names, on the joint nomination of the Bailiffs and of "a certain friend" of the Rector's, he accepted to be witnesses in the matter; and then refers to the composition made by Robert, Bishop of Salisbury, in reference to the matter, which has been previously noticed. The said witnesses then stated the duties of the Rector, as to the Chaplain of St. Andrew's, in terms conformable with the provisions of the said composition, and that all the lands, tenements, and meadows, which the Rector has, "within the limits and boundaries" of the same parish church, "were originally given to him on the condition of supporting such Chaplain of St. Andrew's, as they believed, but for certain could not say. They further stated, that all persons living between the said Chapel and Cakeslane, on the West of it, and Kyllngeslane, and all persons dwelling in West Street and East Street, in Stakelane and Pestelslane, and everywhere within the borough of Brudeport, except those dwelling on the South side of Cakeslane and Kyllngeslane, were to have, on their death, in the said Chapel, their last farewell (ultimum vale) and the first Mass on the day of burial, and triennial Obit, and annual Obit, or Anniversary, "if it happen to be observed." They further said that the then Rector does not keep a proper Chaplain in the said Chapel of St. Andrew, but a stranger from Bretagne; who was drunk every day, not fit for divine service, and who sometimes celebrated it twice in the week, sometimes not at all. The said Rector had also withdrawn Vespers and Matins on the Eve and on the Day of Our Lord's Nativity, for fifteen years past, as well as on other Feast Days in the said ordinance of Robert, Bishop of Salisbury, specified: banns also, for the last two years, had ceased to be published there. And whereas the Bailiffs used to hear Mass of the Chaplain of St. Katharine's at their own good pleasure, but without any prejudice to the Rector, yet he maliciously, and without just cause, hindered and prevented the said Chaplain from celebrating such Mass, before the end of the Gospel of the High Mass, on Sundays and Feast Days. John Bestelawe also complained that when he married his daughter to Andrew Moryer, the banns being lawfully published, though there was no canonical impediment thereto, the said Rector refused to celebrate such marriage, until a sum of two shillings had been to him paid. Dated at Brudeport, the day above-mentioned. No further particulars of this case are given: not improbably they might be found in the Registers at Salisbury.

A large sheet of parchment, containing a formal attestation by two Notaries, John Heliar, Clerk, of the Diocese of Exeter, and Henry Hylling, Clerk, dated the 1st of December, 1447, and stating at great length, in Latin, as follows:—At that date, within the parish church of Brudeport, in presence of the said Notaries, there appeared "certain honest men," Stephen Davy and John Byddysgate, Bailiffs of the burgh, or vill, of Brudeport, and other burgesses of the said vill, and stated that by reason of its dangerous state to navigation, they had begun, at their own expense, to restore a certain harbour near the town, (the present Bridport Harbour), but from poverty were unable to complete the work, without aid from the alms of the faithful in Christ; and that thereupon they produced certain indulgences under the seals respectively of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, Primates of England, and Legates of the Apostolic See, and of other Bishops of England in reference thereto; and further, produced certain Letters Patent of Master John Helyer, Rector of the parish church of Brudeport, and of Francis Cotys, Chaplain of the Chantry of St. Katharine, William Aunger, Chaplain of the Chantry of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and John Bonamy, Chaplain of the Chantry of St. Nicholas, therein; of John Shipper, Prior of St. John's the Baptist, of William Whittock and John Trewyne, Chaplains of the Chantry called "Mundene Chantry," of John Hasard, Prior of the Chantry of St. Mary Magdalene of Brudeport, and of Robert Brode, stipendiary Chaplain there; the same being authorized by, and under the seal of, William, Bishop of Salisbury; and requested the said Notaries to make an official copy thereof, by way of public instrument, for carriage, in default of the originals, by the proctor or proctors of the said burgesses, who might be sent to divers distant parts of England; and that, in conformity therewith, they had made verbatim copies thereof, in manner following, upon the said sheet.—The Indulgences then follow, that of John (Stafford), Archbishop of Canterbury, coming first; he giving 40 days of indulgence to those who shall contribute, from their goods, to the repair of Brudeport Haven, such to remain in force for three years after the date thereof. The Indulgence of John (Kemp), Archbishop of York, then Legate and Cardinal, is for 100 days, to hold good for three years; that of Henry (Beaufort), Bishop of Winchester, and Cardinal, also for 100 days, to hold good for four years. The other Bishops, of London, Exeter, Lincoln, Rochester, Ely, St. David's, Salisbury, Bangor, Landaff, Bath and Wells, Chichester, and Norwich, by a joint instrument, grant an Indulgence, each of them, of 40 days. The Rector and Chaplains, and Priors, in their joint letter, promise to pray for the good and healthful estate of all benefactors of Brudeport Hafene, while living, and for their souls, when dead. The document has the two notarial signs or devices, with their respective attestations. Though probably carried about to various parts of England, the parchment is in good condition.

A paper, containing an abstract of the aforesaid Letters of Indulgence; in which, however, the Archbishop of Canterbury is made to say that he gives 100 days of indulgence. The Letters of the two Archbishops and of the Bishop of Winchester, are despatched, respectively, in two lines; the joint letter of the other Bishops is given at length. The following, in a fair hand, is added at the end, these papers, probably, being widely distributed by the proctors:—"And every good Cristin man and womanne, that grauntithe and yevythie any good broche or ryng, brokyn or hool, gold or sylvere, or any other good, wher throw this forseyd havene of Bridport may the rather ben makyd, for herre almese yeving they schollyn therefore ben partable of ix. And also, more overe, yevyn and grauntyd therto wreten, the Kyngges patent unto al hese lych [liege] pepyl, that is for to seyne, al ercheyschopys and byschopys, abbotys, and priours, erchdekeins, and dekeins, officials, and commesarys, personis and vecarys, and ministris of Holy Cherche, and to alle hese lych pepyl, for the almesses to the seyde haven of Bridport." At the end of the paper, a star is rudely drawn with the pen.

Another written paper, used for the same purpose as the preceding, but somewhat different in form. It begins,—“Also, more overe worshipful frendes, alle the gode almesse yevers that doth to the seyde haven werk, or be quethith eny good therto, broche or ryng, or jewel, or eny other good wher therw [wherby] that the werk of the haven may the rather be helpe and makyd therby, owre holy fader my lord the Ercheyschoop of Caunterbery y hathe yovyn and grauntyd, by his speccyal grace, xl. days of pardon:”—then follow the names of the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Winchester, with their 100 days of pardon respectively, and all the other Bishops before mentioned, with their 40 days of pardon respectively; and then it continues,—“The summe of Messys in the yer 3860. Summe of alle other good preysers no man knowyth, saf only God alone. The summe of pardon of Indulgences in remission of alle the sowlys is 680 days and odde. The summe of alle the gode preysers no manne knowyth, saf only God alone, unto the good welfare of levyng, and saffacioun of manny soule.” Then is added, at the foot, in another hand, that of John Greyre probably;—“The 3er regne of Kyng Herry the Sexte the xxvi. 3er. Johan Greve proketoer generall for Kent and Essex, for to gader the almesse to the haven makynge of Brydport town, in the schere of Dorsetshire. Servant under hymme, Johan Banbery.”

A Letter, on paper, from John Greyre, the proctor collecting for Bridport Haven, before-mentioned; giving an account of his proceedings. It is addressed,—“Thys lettir be delyveryd unto Jankyū Herryys and unto Willyeme Olyver of Brydport towne, in the schere of Dorsetir.” At the top are written these words, at equal distances along the page—“Jhesus mercy, Marie help, Amen.”—“Worschipful souerneys and frendis, I recom-mande me unto yow withal myn herte, dessyrynge to heryn of yow gode tydynges of 3owre good prosperite and welfare, and of alle the gode comalte of your towne, the wheche I besече to Al mythy God and to owre blyssyd Lady Seynt Maria to encrease and meynstayne, to hys plesouns, to savacioun to your lyvys and soulys. And moreover, yf it lyke yowe to heryne of me, that at the makynge of thys lettire I was in good helthe of body, blyssyt owre Lord God, saynge not in hert ese by myn occupacioun that I have of yowris in myn govmanas, the wheche I can not bryngynge abowte to gaderyn good for to fortheryne and helpyne to your needful werk unto your havene, makynge not by my purpos woth [worth] my labour and travale, the wheche is to me gret schame and anger, that I may not gaderyn good here, lyk as I dede this last yer and other yeris in myn other occupacioun of Marie Magdalene. In that occupacioun, I cowde gaderyne of sum men grotis and pens of to, and pens and flesis of wolles, and broke silvire and rynges, more in a day that tyne than now I can in viii dayes; and now I am fayne to gaderyn at an hows a dyschful of whete or malt or barley, or a pece bacon, onne this to fyndyne me and myne hors, and so am wery of myn offys, but it wolde amende. God graunte me grace that I may makyn a good ende therof, the wheche it may [be] pleyng to 3ow alle and fortherynge unto the werk of the havene. Ferthermore, worschipful frendis, 3e scholyne, haa understanding auon after my departyng from 3ow at Brydport, I came onto Crystcherche in Cristmesse holidays; there mette with me a man that dwellyth at Lodere beyeyde 3ow, his name is Johan Banbery, or Johan Gyst, and there he spac to me for to helpe me, and to gaderyne for the werk in myne name, and he to haa wrytynge of whete therfor, and he to ben trewe in this occupacioun, and he to bryngynge to me trewly every weke his gaderynge, or the worth, and he to haa his costys, and for his labour xd., that was, for the monthe xld., and ther for he was trewly payd he his comenant, and thus he made comenant with me as longe as me lykyd hym, to forn record of a Chanone of Cristcherche that was borne in Brydport, and he swor be the crucifix that stod before, that he wolde ben trewe, and the Chanone bad hym be war that he disseyvyd me not. And thaune at the monthi's ende,

“he and I madyn an nother comenant that he scholde bryngynge me every weke after xd. froe Estryn [Easter] forward, and beforne Estrynne but viiid. awake; and opyn [upon] this comenante he muste han a crucifix and sum of the wrytynge of owre power; and so I dede makynge hym a goodly crucifix with a ston of berel set ther inne, the wheche Robert Goldsynthe made, and he hadde of me therfore xvid., and that crucifix I deliveryd to the seyde John Banbery, sum tyme bel man of Lodere, dwelyng in the strete to Blampayn ward; and so he and I comyn togeder into Kent, and we gaderyd ther inne sertaine townis, and he browth me wel a whyle and payd me his comenant that he made with me; and the man yede eyyl strayd on his body, and so he preyed me that he mythe beyn hym lynnyn clothis, and that he mythe haa a newe chemyr of grey blac russet. And so I lent hymme al this mony ther to, summe iiiiii., and he owyth me more for vi weekys summe vs. iid. fro. xiii. days beforne Estryn to Holy Thursday beforne Pentecost. Also he hath 3our crucifix that I payde of 3our mony that I gaderyd in for pretyng [?] of 3our werk. And I do 3ow to understonde that I presentyd hym to the parysche prest of Dorteforme in Kent the Sunday beforne Seynt Georgys day, he for to gader yune that towne, whylys I hadde iii townys in the contry besyde to gader yune, and whan he hadde doon in Dorteforme, I bad hymme comyn to me into the contry ther that I was. And whanne that he hadde gaderyd the town of Dorteforme, he took his leve on Seynt Georgys Day in the morwe of his ost, and stale away, and thus he bad me far wel, and thus I sawe hymme last, and so I have redyn and gon for to seke hymme more than xl myle abowte, and I can not heryn of hymme. And opyne this falsche desseyvyng I besече 3ow, as I am this yer 3our servant, and I may don ony thing for 3ow in the reverens of God, that 3e may asspye hymme, that fals knave that is, ontrewre and forsworen falschly unto me, and to 3our gode werk, that 3if 3e may takene hymme be eny wey, takyth of hymme of mony that he owyth trewly, the summe xs. iid., and more, for costys to seke hymme and to done [cause] seke hym iis., and the crucifix of a berel stone set therinne, and the lettire with alle the prestys selys, the wheche he stole away fro me, and a brief of a copy of myn lord of Caunterbery, and another brief of alle the byschoppys, copyyt owt for to gaderyn; and that he may be set fast be the feet into the tyne he may make restyscioun for his dete and his fals ontrowhie; for 3if I hadde seyed ony eyyl or ony schrewyd woord to hymme, it wolde the lesse agreyved me, but I sufferyd hym his wyl to moche, and al was for to plesse hymme; for he can speken wel for the almesse, and I took hymme to me, for he knowyth the wel 3our havene and 3our towne, and alle the men ther inne dwellyng; and Sterre and Baly they knewe hym wel at Basyngze Stoke, whenne I met with Sterre, and ther we dronkyne togadire. And ther I askyd Sterre 3if he knewe hymme, and Sterre seyde he was a trewe manne, and therfore I trustyd hymme the more. And Johan Banbery aforesayd seyde that Sterre proferyd hymme at Basyngze Stoke 3if he wolde have Deven-schere and Cornwayle, and Summersetteschere for to gaderyn the almesse for 3our werk, he scholde havyd, 3if he wolde comyn; and therfore I wot not whether he is drawyn forth [?] for that cauce or nowth. A letter on parchment, written in a fine hand, under the King's signet, and signed H R at the top; being a letter of King Henry VI. against liveries, badges, and retainers:—“Henry by the grace of God, King of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland. The seal, on the parchment, has disappeared, but the marks left by the wax are visible, with small triangular holes pricked in the parchment, for the wax to hold by.

A small paper, in a hand of probably the time of Edward IV. with "Jhu" at the top, and ending,— "And so Jhu preserve yow Amenne. By yowrs to hes porre Robertt Robertt Follett." It is addressed, outside,— "Unto Mastere Hocharde (apparently) in Bortte portre;" but begins "Master Orcharde, y hartely recomende me unto yow and to youre goode wyffe." His neighbour Hew Stoke is being wrongfully sued by Richard Bokeille for debt; he desires Orchard's intervention, with the Bailiffs, in his behalf. The place where written is not named.

A Letter, written by a foreigner, perhaps a Dutchman, of about the time of Henry VII., to the following effect:—"Master Bayllyfes, yt ys soo that my wyffe dyde de parte owte off thys wraechyd worlde, the wyche God have mercy one hyrre soles, Amen. A proceeding, both summary and arbitrary, to all appearance.

A large sheet of paper, with the following title: "Charges laide owte for the churche of Byrtporte in anno Domini 1556, by George Hyggyns and Thomas Richardes Churchwardens for that tyme assigned, whyche they do desire to be slowyd." The following are some extracts from the items:—"Inprimis for whopyng of the holywater bokett with two newe hoopcs 8d. For mending of the spryngelle [asperge, or sprinkler] 1d. For frankonsence 1d. For skowerynge of the candellstykkes ayenst All Hallowne Daye 3d. For gresyng of the belles ayenst All Hallowne daye 1d. For makynge of a rochet for Johan Skyenner 8d. A sheet of paper, with this title, "Byrtporte, the Stewardes expenses keypynge the Kyng and Quene's [Philip and Mary] Lawe daye there, the Mundaye next after the feast of Seynt Mychaelle the Archangelel, anno Domini 1557, by the space of two nyghtes and one day, at Mr. Hyggens."—"Inprimis for bedde 4d. A sheet of paper, with singularly crabbed writing, being a bill of a dinner, (apparently a Friday's dinner), given to Lord St. John (probably Oliver, the first Lord, who died in 1532) and others:—"Byrtport. A small square manuscript book, in a parchment cover, formed of part of a deed of the time of Charles II., with "Bayliwick 1686" written outside, elsewhere being written "Thomas Brewford, 1688." It was originally used as a child's copy-book, the first five leaves being slightly stitched to the cover with black thread. The copies in general consist of either letters or words, of the date probably of the above reign; but on the fifth leaf a copy is set, and the lines below drawn with a plummet, but the task left unperformed:—"As soone as we to be begun, we did begin to be undone." The other 17 leaves contain memoranda, connected with the duties of the Bailiffs in the year 1686. The sums received by the Bailiffs, at this time, for "Butchers' Standings," (the "Shameles" of an earlier date, seem to have been very considerable. The entries of sums given to destitute wayfarers are numerous, and some of them not without interest; as, for example:—

"21 October. Given 4 Duchmen, cast away and lost their ship and goods, came this morn from Lyme, 12d. 28th. Given a poor traveller, being weak, bond for Exon with a passe under the hand of the Lord Mayor, recommended the charity of Christians in his travell 6d. December 4. Given to 4 souldiers disbanded at Limerick in Ireland, in all 40000, with certificate under the hand and seale of office; landed at Appledore, with passe from them to their home in Kent, 3d. a peece, 1s. 6d. 7th. To one Thomas White, a souldier who hath served 16 years in the brigade of Katherin Queen Dowager under Collonel Kirk, and late disbanded; to help him in his travell towards London, having and shewing certificate 6d. 27. To Elisha Ford, a poor mariner, bound from Malaga to Rotterdam. Cast away at sea, landed at Tolsam . . . and is from hence to Wymouth, to get passage home, 4d. and 2d. other. 24th January. A poor souldier, his wife and 2 children, of Prince George's regiment; with discharge of his captain, and certificate from the Mayor of Exon 12d. 25th. Given Thomas Miller, a poor mariner of Portsmouth, come from Malaga, forst ashore by a Sally [Saltee] man, to Lisbonne, from thence came via Falmouth, and bound home to Portsmouth, having bin an old souldier 12d. To Agnes Rosevall vid (widow) on her sad complaint 6d. April 19th. To a poor traveler bound homeward to Ipswidg from Jamaica, their ship fired, they preserved by another ship and landed at Falmouth, with certificate from the Mayor under his seale of office, and to Plymouth 3d. 22th. To a poor souldier of Collonel Douglas regiment, disbanded and put ashore at Foy, with certificate and pass of the Mayor of Foy, to travell for London 6d. May 30th. To 4 travelers, planters [colonists], cast away, sprunge a leak; landed at Plymouth, with certificate, and passe for Kent 13d. June 7. To a blind man without passe, from Lincoln, sent hither also by Mr. Bayley Way. Given nothing but harsh thretings, to put the Statutes in operation [still he gives] 6d. July 22th. To a souldier, his wife and child, with certificate from his colonel, to returne in 3 months, so long tyme given him to doe his busnes. Landed at Dartmouth, with certificate from the Mayor, and passe 6d. Under a "Rent account" in 1688, it is stated that the collector "began at the Lion, and collected East Street, and ended at the Bull;" the Bull Inn still exists, as a house of business, in Bridport.

It must here be added that the rolls of the law Courts of Bridport still survive, in great numbers, beginning so early as the 4th year of Edward the First and coming down to about the middle of the reign of Henry the Eighth; after which period the proceedings were no longer entered upon rolls of parchment, but in books. Most of these rolls are in fair preservation, those of the time of Edward I. and Edward II. being probably in a better condition than those fifty to a hundred years later in date.

I have here to express my thanks to — Tucker, Esq., the Worshipful the Mayor of Bridport, for so readily giving me access to the Corporation records. To F. W. Gundry, Esquire, the Town Clerk, I am greatly indebted, for kindly providing me with every possible facility for a leisurely examination of them.

THE BLACK BOOK OF THE ARCHDEACON OF CANTERBURY.

ARCHDEACON OF CANTERBURY.

By the kind favour of Dr. Parry, the Right Reverend the Bishop of Dover, I have been afforded an opportunity of examining this little volume now in his possession, as Archdeacon of Canterbury; and which has been continuously in the possession, no doubt, of the successive Archdeacons of Canterbury, since the time it was compiled.

It is a small octavo book, in black leather binding of the 17th century. According to the pagination, it contains 89 leaves of parchment, without reckoning the preliminary Calendar; some leaves at the beginning, originally left in blank, are scribbled upon, in a hand of, apparently, the 15th century. Some of the blank leaves have ruled lines, and on the last of them, preceding the Calendar, is written,—"Codex Archiepiscopalis Ecclesie Cantuariensis, et Archidiaconatus Cantuariensis." The Calendar, illuminated with blue and red, is in a hand of, probably, the middle of the 14th century, or a little later.

The first leaf after the Calendar, the numeration here commencing, begins with the First Chapter of the Gospel of St. John; then follows the First Chapter of St. Matthew; and then a portion of the 16th of St. Mark, commencing with Our Saviour's reproof of the unbelief of his disciples: the first seven pages, in fact, being filled with extracts from the Gospels.

In the middle of folio 46 commences a list (in Latin) "of the Houses of the Religious of the whole Diocese of Canterbury," Cumbwell being the first in the list. Folio 5a commences with "The Taxation of the Diocese of Canterbury," being a list of assessments of the churches in the Diocese for payments to the Apostolic See, according to the various rural Deaneries,—Westbere, Bregge, Sandwich, Dover, Elham, Lyme, Cherrington, Sutton, Sydingbourne, and Osprengge; the list occupying several folios.

At folio 14b is entered,—"De incertis proventibus Archidiaconatus Cantuariensis xxii.,"—in decima xli." then follows, "Taxatio Temporalium Archidiaconatus Cantuariensis.—Maneria Archidiaconatus Cantuariensis." being a list of the Manors of Religious Houses in the Archdeaconry, at their then valuation, that of Wingham being the greatest, at 249li. 3s. 7d.

Then follow, at folio 15b, the temporalities of the heads of the Religious Houses of the Diocese. Among others, the Abbot of Ylleden receives from the parish of Upchurch 25s. 7d., the tithe being 2s. 6½d. The Hospital of St. Catharine near the Tower of London receives in Renham and Herelope 21li. 10d., the tithe being 42s. 1d. It deserves notice that, in folio 18b, Snergate (the present Snergate, near Appledore, in Kent), is distinctly written "Snergate," as making payment to the Abbot of Robertsbriidge. If this is correct, the Saxon word "Smere," butler, might possibly, for some now forgotten reason, enter into the composition of the name. Broomhill, between Rye and Lydd, is named as "Promhelle," the early form. This seems to be a valuable list of the then Religious Houses in the Diocese.

Folio 20a, in a "Bulla de denariis Sancti Petri," Pope Gregory is set forth as stating that in the Register of the Apostolic See it is entered that there is due, for Peter pence, from the Diocese of Canterbury 7li. 18s., from that of York 16li. 10s., to which are added the amounts due from other Sees. In fol. 20b, a further statement is entered, in reference to the origin of Peter pence,—"De denariis Sancti Petri sic reperitur in Cronica scriptum." The account then given is, that Adelpus (Ethelwulf), father of King Alfred, granted "to Rome" 300 mancuses [explained as meaning, marks], 100 towards the honour of St. Peter, for the lights of his church there; 100 for the like honour of St. Paul; and 100 for the Pope Universal, "to amplify his alms." This is followed by a list of Peter pence, as collected throughout the various rural deaneries of the Diocese of Canterbury. The variation will be noticed, of this account from that which ascribes the foundation of the tribute to King Ina, or to Offa, King of Mercia.

At folio 25a the writing is continued, in a later hand, with a document issued by John, Prior of Christ Church, Canterbury, as to disputed tithes in the church of Hackinton, near Canterbury. Folio 27 contains a copy of a Bull of Pope Eugenius IV., on a petition of Thomas Chichele; it is printed in Battley's edition of Somner's "Antiquities of Canterbury," Part 2, Appendix, p. 54.

In folio 30 is entered (in Latin)—"A Composition," between the Abbot of Saint Augustine's and the "Archdeacon of Canterbury." At folio 33 the title is—"Nota a quo tempore inceptit primo Ecclesie Cantuariensis esse Archidiaconatus"; the statement being to the effect, that there was no Archdeacon of Canterbury till the time of Archbishop Lanfranc: the truth, however, of this assertion is open to question.

At folio 33b the title is, in another hand, "Pertinentia ad Archidiaconum Cantuariensem."

At folio 37a the original handwriting, apparently, is resumed, the title being,—"Feodum Archidiaconi Cantuariensis; qui intronizare debet singulos Episcopos Cantuariensis Provincia, tam Sede Cantuariensi plena, quam ipsa Sede vacante";—"Fee of the Archdeacon of Canterbury; who ought to enthronize every Bishop of the Province of Canterbury, as well when the See of Canterbury is full, as when the same See is vacant.—Then follow the duties of, and payments due to, the Archdeacon, for such service.

At folio 47b are entered, "Injunctiones faciendæ et legenda in Capitulis generalibus, bis in anno in Archidiaconatu Cantuariensi celebrandis." At folio 50 these Injunctions, or Charges, are continued, but in a more modern hand.

At folio 51b the original handwriting seems again to be resumed; the context beginning,—"Hæc Lectio, —'Adest tempus, O venerande, legenda est extra hostium Ecclesie Christi Cantuariensis, ab Archidiacono ejusdem ecclesie, capa serica induto; videlicet, feria quinta in Cena Domini, post Horam Novam, in reconciliatione penitentium.'" Folios 54, 55, and 56, are left blank.

Folio 57 contains the "Award of Archbishop Stephen, in reference to the Church of Tiltonston."

Folio 59, in a more recent hand, treats, in Latin, "As to enthroning a Bishop by the Archdeacon's proctor"; folios 60 and 61 containing another form of the same.

Folio 63b contains a memorandum, dated 1529, as to the induction of Thomas (Wolsey), Archbishop of York, and Cardinal of Saint Cecilia, as Bishop of Winchester (in commendam.)

The few remaining memoranda are of little or no interest, and of later date.

The pagination, probably, with the binding, is of the time of James the First.

REGISTERS OF THE PARISH CHURCH OF CARISBROOK IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

These were sent to London by the Rev. E. B. James, Vicar of Carisbrooke, for the inspection of the Commissioners, and at their request I examined them.

The first is a volume about 16 inches long and five inches wide. The leaves are in a very tender, and many in a dilapidated, state; some have been flattened and arranged and fastened into the covers of the volume; the remainder are loose: but I have succeeded in arranging them all with the exception of three or four leaves. A manuscript table to those leaves which have been flattened and fastened into the volume is prefixed; it notes those portions of the Registers which here missing at the time of the compilation; the leaves which I have arranged supply deficiencies and will cause the compilation of a new Table of Contents. I should remark that some of the leaves already flattened and arranged will require re-arrangement. The years in brackets are in the loose leaves.

On what seem to have been fly-leaves are some entries of collections for the poor, &c.

On a half leaf preceding the entries of marriages for the year 1581 are some notes, among which is the following:—1588. The very year that the greates and huge fleet of the Spanyard came by the Ile of Weight was at Maudlinstide, in the yeere of our Lord God 1588, the which God defended us [. . .] our Queene and realme this day and for evermore, and send us truthe and quietnes within our selves, anno 1588.

On the damaged page following the Baptisms for 1631 are the following notes:—

In the year of our Lord God . . . upon the 12th day of [November] Kinge Charles ceame to the Isle] of Wight and landed at . . . the Saturday nyght and [came] to the Castell the [Sunday].

The 29th day of December . . . in the Iland by on Captain Powley, he being taken and emprisoned at Carisbrook [Castell] and sent to Woortone and the 26th day of Janafeur hanged and cawterwed 1648.

In the year of our Lord God [1649] January the 30 day was the King] beheaded at Whitehall geat.

On the next leaf are notes of Collections for Geneva in 1604, and a statement that the whole sum gathered in the island of all the parishes for Geneva and sent to Winchester was 23*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*;—and a memorandum of apprenticeship and other memoranda. On the following leaf is a license for Eleanor Chapple to eat flesh in Lent, signed by John Baker, vicar of Carisbrooke in 1620.

On the next leaf "[King] James landed . . . and sawe a muster at homs his . . . dined at the Castle and saw in [the] afternoon most of the Iland with Prince Charles his sonne one the West Meadowe and hunted in the parke, killed a bocke and so departed againe to Bewly the 2 of August, A.D. 1609, being Wednesday, J. Baker.*

Prince Charles landed at the Cowes and came into the forest, and saw a skirmish there, and went from thence to Abbingdon down, and looked over the Iland and came to the Castle and so thence to Newport where he dined at Mr. James house, and his grace departed to the Cowes and took ship and went to Portsmouth in the year 1618 the 27 of August being Thursday, Jo. Baker."

In the Register of Burials is mentioned the death of Sir Edward Horsie, Captain of the Isle of Wight, on the 21 day of March 1583, and his mourning day the 22d day of April.

In 1634 is a memorandum that on the 20th of April the 39 Articles of the Church of England were severally distinctly read by Alexander Ross, vicar of Carisbrooke, in the parish church of Carisbrooke. This is signed by John Wiltshire, the curate, and by five other persons.

On the last leaf but two of the volume is this entry:

"In the year 1641 hapned a most cruell and bloody moulder upon the Wedowe Kitle of the Forrest having her braynes and her Cosle beatt all in peisses and robed and found dead in her house and buryed the 13th day of April."

On the following page, "The 6th day of September King Charles went from the Castell to Newport to trell (? treat) and the last day of November he went from Newport to Hurste Castle to presoun cared away by to tropes of horse."

A small volume of vellum leaves, with entries as far as p. 53. The first 4 pages are absent.

It contains entries of publications and solemnizations of marriage in the years 1652-1659, both included; of births in the years 1653-1660, both included; and of baptisms in 1661 and 1662, 1665, 1670 and 1672: these are in 10pp, but in the last 4 years there were only 6 baptisms;—entries of burials in the years 1653-1662, both included.—On p. 52 is an entry of a birth in 1682, and on p. 53 an entry of a baptism in 1669.

On Feb. 12, 1660, was born Terecia, daughter of Col. Walter Slingby, deputy-Governor of the Island at Carisbrook Castle.

* This visit is not noticed in Nicholas's Progresses of James I.; but it is there shown that the King was about this time at Bewley (Beaulieu.)

An excellent account of the numerous Charters that have been granted to this ancient borough, since the 36th of Henry III. (A.D. 1252), together with some particulars relative to the early antiquities of the place, has been recently printed, in the form of "A Paper read before the Kent Archaeological Society," by F. F. Giraud, Esq., its able and assiduous Town Clerk. In addition to what is there stated, the following particulars, in reference to other Charters, still preserved among the Corporation archives, may be added.—

A Charter to the Cinque Ports, in Latin, dated the 20th of May, 44th Henry III., relieving the Barons of the Cinque Ports from common summonses, and the jurisdiction of the Justiciars in Eyre; with the larger portion of the Great Seal attached, in green wax. This Charter is not given in Jeake's Charters of the Cinque Ports.

A Charter of Liberties to the Barons of the Cinque Ports, under the Great Seal; dated at Westminster, 17th June, 6th Edward I.

A Charter to the Barons of the Cinque Ports, releasing them from common tallages and aids, and granting them other privileges; dated at St. Alban's, 28th April, 22th Edward I.

A Confirmation, under the Great Seal, 28th Edward I., of the Magna Charta of the 9th Henry III.

An ancient and somewhat curious relic is preserved among these early records, in the form of a wrapper of a legal document, of comparatively modern times; being two leaves of an illuminated Psalter of the 13th century, in small quarto; the peculiarity of which is, that each Latin verse is followed by its translation, in French; thus, for example, "Miserere mei, Deus, aies de mei;" etc., the beginning of the 57th Psalm, is rendered in French:—"Merci aies de mei, Dies, merci aies de mei; ker en teise fie la me aneme. En lumbre de tes eles esperai desque trepast la felonie. Jo crierei al Deu altissime, Deu ki bien fait a mei."

Another like fragment, in the shape of an ancient cover, with a parchment thong still attached, exists in two leaves of a Latin Concordance of the Old and New Testaments, in writing of the earlier part of the 14th century. It has been finely illuminated, in gold and various colours, upon the initial letters of the alphabet, more especially; but the gold has been nearly worn away. In one of the letters (X) is finely drawn a head, encircled with a cap, and blowing a long trumpet with a pennon depending. The first word with which the fragment begins is "Vulgus," and it ends with "Zyph—Davit erat in deserto Ziph," followed by "Explicit Concordantie de Valle . . . tis. Amen." The margin is much scribbled over, in hands (mostly fine writing) of about the close of the 16th century, the following line being many times repeated:—"Dulcia non meruit, qui non gustavit amara." Among other lines, as finely written, are,—"Hectora quis nosset, felix si Troia fuisset?" (from Ovid); "Ardna praprecps gloria vadit iter," "Non omnia omnibus decent," "Honos alti artes," "In rebus prosperis ne efferaris," "Nemo sine crimine vivit," and "Non ut edam vivo, sed ut vivam edo." From the following words scribbled upon it,—"Liber Curiarum de Faversham," "Roberti Lambæ Majoris, anno xli et xliido E. . ." "Reginæ," it appears to have been the cover of a Court Book, belonging to the 41st and 42nd years of Queen Elizabeth.

The earliest book among the records of Faversham is a folio volume of 282 pages of paper, the first and last leaves being of parchment; bound in rough calf of the last century, and made up of various fragments. It contains Orders of Wardmote, commencing 24th Henry VI.; Chamberlains' Accounts, commencing 6th Henry VIII., and ending about 1581; lists of Corporate Officers, commencing 6th Edward IV., and ending 23rd Elizabeth; transcripts of Wills, the earliest bearing date 12th September 1494, being that of Edward Thomasson, of Faversham; lists of freemen, and of tuitioners; the latter being natives of other places, but resident in this town, without right of suffrage; records of apprenticeship and service by covenant; notices of purchase in open market; and bonds for the due payment of legacies. The latest entry is that of the will of Robert Stone 1604. In the cases of such entries, either the town was directly interested in the wills entered, or the Corporation had to act as trustees for minors left in orphanage.

Thomas Arderne was chosen Mayor of Faversham in 1549, being the King's Controller of Customs, 2nd Edward VI. He was afterwards disfranchised, in 1550, for opposing the franchises of the town; and on Sunday the 15th of February 1551, as we learn from a note in this volume, fol. 59b, he was murdered; the circumstances of which are set forth in Hollingshed's Chronicle, and in Edward Jacob's History of Faversham, 1774. The house at Faversham is still existing, in which the murder was perpetrated; and on this event was founded "Arden of Faversham his true and lamentable Tragedy," a work formerly attributed to Shakspeare. Arderne's signature occurs in this volume, fol. 49b. William Casloke, or Castlok, one of the then Jurats, was brother of John Casloke, alias Sheppey, the last Abbot of Faversham. Eneas Sprackling, mentioned herein, was a man of some eminence here, evidently; he was a Jurat, and was Mayor in the years 1600, 1613, and 1614. Adam Sprackling, Esquire, born at Canterbury, and afterwards of the Isle of Thanet and of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, who was executed in the year 1653, for the most barbarous murder of his wife, was not improbably a member of the same family.

A large folio volume, in rough calf, with clasps, containing about 400 leaves of paper, belonging to the reign of Charles I.; it contains copies of the charters, and of wills with benefactions to the town; among them is Arderne's will, he leaving his brewhouse and great garden, then in the tenure of John Casloke, at 5*li*. 6*s*. 8*d*. yearly, payable to his wife, Alice, for her life. This John Casloke, as already noticed, was the last Abbot, and the brewhouse, altered, was no doubt his dwelling-house. Alice, the wife here named, took part in the murder of Arderne by her paramour.

The earliest Wardmote Book, now surviving, begins in the 13th year of Elizabeth, and ends in the 9th Charles I.; being a folio volume, with 175 leaves of paper, bound in rough calf of the last century. The Assemblies of the Common Council are called "Wardmouthes" (Wardmotes), otherwise "Bormothes" (Burgmotes). At the other end of the volume are entered copies of administration bonds, and Inventories of goods of deceased persons, taken for the Court of Orphans of the Corporation. The inventory of goods of Nicholas Tyllman, late of Ewell, in the parish of Faversham, dated in 1577, is a document especially worthy of notice, he having been evidently an opulent man.

The next in date is a similar folio volume 1633-1740; followed by volumes for 1740-1821, 1821-1836, and 1836 to the present time.

The following is the list of Mayors, given by Jacobs in his History of Faversham, with a few additions (marked thus ) by Mr. Giraud. Thomas Everard 1292, Walter Mareschal 1293, Thomas Everard 1294, Walter Mareschal 1296, Walter le Ostreman 1297, Roger Urre 1302, Roger Urre 1305, Walter Mareschal 1306, John de Upmantone 1322*, Robert le Hert 1327, Stephen de Upmantone 1333*. Thomas Lowick 1392, William Menn 1398, William Ledes 1400, Semann atte Tonge 1401 and 1402, William Houslord 1408, John Faversham 1422, John Downe 1430, Simon Orwell 1438, John Seyncler 1443, John Soole 1444, Richard Brayton 1445, John Seyncler 1448*, Richard Brayton 1456, John Oulff 1459, William Norton 1465.

To the above list, the following few additions may be made, as occurring in the present Report:—James de Brenle (about) 1302, 3; Walter Mareschal 1303, 4; Robert le Hart 1323, 4; Henry Andren 1324, 5; Semann atte Tonge 1404.

The following is some account of the few rolls of early date that have been preserved:—

A small parchment roll, consisting of a single membrane, in good condition, with the title as below: the following are some extracts, translated from the Latin text:—

"The Court of Faversham, holden on Thursday the Eve of St. Thomas the Apostle, in the 31st year of the reign of King Edward.

"John Tapiere [? Tapiere, Carpet-maker] gives 2 bushels of barley towards 5½ bushels of barley to be levied from Agnes, the wife of Adam Vag, as to which the said Agnes has for day to the Feast of Pentecost next to come. Peter ate Forstalle makes petition against Stephen Russel, that the same Stephen withheld from him 23 shillings, as to which the same Peter proffers a tally. And the said Stephen acknowledged "the said tally in full court, and it was adjudged that the aforesaid Peter should recover the said debt, and the aforesaid Stephen be amerced; amercement, 3*l*. Gilbert le Northeren makes plaint against Geoffrey the Tanner, that whereas the same Gilbert bought 3 'hoderia' [? fother] of leather, value ; the said Geoffrey promised to warrant the same to be good, and under such warranty the said Gilbert carried them away. And when the said Gilbert came to work upon the same 'hoderia,' he found them of worse quality in working than the same Geoffrey had promised, to his damage 6*s*. etc. As to which he produced suit [his set of jurors, or compurgators]; and the aforesaid Geoffrey says that under the warranty aforesaid he did not sell him the said 'hoderia,' but says that the aforesaid Gilbert saw the said 'hoderia,' and so bought them, as on view, and under no other warranty, and as to the same he offered, etc.

"Court of Faversham, on Monday next after the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Mary, in the 31*st* year of the reign of King Edward.

"A day was given, at prayer of the parties, between Geoffrey the Tanner and Gilbert le Northeren, who now come, having agreed, and the aforesaid Gilbert is amerced; amercement 3 pence. Roger Urre, complainant, presents himself against Robert Dod, Roger Batekoc, William Parent, William Hanyan, and Walter Copen; and the said William Parent, William Hanyan, and Walter Copen, being summoned, made default; therefore it was adjudged that distraint should be made upon them. And whereas the aforesaid Roger complains that the said Robert and Roger Batekoc unjustly bought herrings and fish against the statute of the vill, therefore the aforesaid Roger Batekoc and Robert Dod have a day to prove that they bought the said herrings and fish before it came to this port, namely, the Wednesday following. Robert Doghestrete is at law [has to make his law, or prove his innocence by a jury] against the lord the King, for that he made himself to be [i.e. personated] a bailiff, etc. John Durant is amerced, for that he had her not [present] whom he mainprised, to wit Beatricia ate Boure:—afterwards she came [the word 'mia' 'amercement,' is run through with the pen]. Ralph le Beste makes plaint against William Dymbeltone, that he unjustly withhold from him 3*s*. for herrings bought and received of him, and the aforesaid William acknowledged the same debt, and therefore he is amerced; amercement 3*l*. John Yve, Peter Beanesheaf, Adam Maggesone, Richard Ridell, Eylobd Isserom [indistinct] are to be distrained to answer Ralph le Beste in a plea of debt. Emma Callestre makes plaint against Beatricia ate Boure, that she unjustly withhold from her 6 ells of linen cloth; and the said Beatricia gainsays this, and says that the said cloth in the Court of Boctone by judgment [was awarded to her]; and therefore it was told to the said Beatricia that she must bring a letter of the Bailiff of Boctone, etc. at the next Court."

On the reverse of the membrane—

"Plea holden in the Churchyard of the Church of Faversham, on the Feast of Saints Fabianus and Sebastianus, in the 31*st* year of the reign of King Edward.

"Alan Bischof, of Middeltone, is amerced, because he was as towards Simon Baldoke, in a plea of covenant as to one boat; and further, it was adjudged that the aforesaid Simon recover from him damages, one mark of silver; amercement, 3 pence. Gilbert de Dovorre was accused by Simon Baldoke, for that the same Gilbert came into a boat which the same Simon hired of Alan Bisshop, and he says that the same Gilbert took and carried off la domning [? sails], from the said boat; and the aforesaid Gilbert gainsays this verbally in Court; and he is to make his law, and has a day for making his law, the Tuesday following." A small parchment roll of the Court, in the 31*st* year of Edward I.:

"Plea holden in the house of the heirs of Simon Seman, on Tuesday the morrow of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, in the year of the reign of King Edward, the 31*st*.—"Adam Vag, for his false charge against John Francis, is amerced 2 pence. John Dreylande makes fine 12 pence, because he brewed on the Eve of the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, against the statute of the vill. Richard Poterich (?) makes plaint against Richard Lytekyn, for that he came on Monday after the feast of St. Barnabas the Apostle, and laid hands on the said Richard, and tore his tabard [fragit collobium] etc. John de Wadecourt is amerced 3 pence, because he "was convicted of trespass as against Mabilia, the wife of Stephen Glanville. Matthew the Butcher makes plaint against Gilbert le Northeren, for that whereas Matthew le Welsse, butcher, bought of the wife of Gilbert le Northeren 5 pigs for 10 shillings, the said Gilbert gainsays it, and says that they were not sold by him etc.; and because the said Gilbert would not allow such sale, he proffered to Matthew 6 pence, for settling all covenants between them. . . . And afterwards the said parties agreed, and Gilbert paid an amercement of 3 pence. John Snetedamme is amerced 3 pence, because he made himself to be a bailiff. Cristina Hakeman makes plaint against John Snetedamme, for that he maltreated Walter, her son; a day was given them to agree." At the next Court,—"Cristina Hakemannus (sic) is amerced 3 pence, because she made default in her proof against John Snetedamme. Cessilia Forbelyn makes plaint against Brun Robyn, in a plea of trespass. . . . and she says that he killed her dog in her house. The said Robyn made his law. . . . and Cessilia and her surety were amerced 2 pence, for making an unjust plaint. It was imputed to John de Mallinge, that he committed forestall, in buying cheese before sunrise, not being a freeman of the vill. He could not gainsay it, and so put himself upon the mercy of the King, and was amerced 3 pence."

"Plea holden on Sunday next after the Feast of St. Margaret.—Roger de Padelonde makes plaint against John de Meydestane for a plea of battery; and he says that the said John made assault upon him, and struck him on the head with a stick, and wounded him, and drew blood, against the peace etc." Upon admission thereof, John was amerced 3 pence.

"Plea holden on Friday after the Feast of St. James the Apostle.—Robert de Burdefelde, Chaplain, makes plaint against William of Westrete, in a plea of trespass; the said William, on being convicted, is amerced 3 pence. William Aleyn was convicted, for that he had before him in market unbefitting meat (incongruas carnes); and for this he made fine, having surety, of 40 pence."

"Be it remembered that, on Tuesday next after the Feast of St. Laurence, came Gilbert of Dovorre before the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Jurats, and said that the men of Calays took him in his ship off the coast of England, opposite Dreweille [? Deal], and took him to Calays, and there imprisoned him, and seized and carried off his chattels in several parcels, to the value of 43*l*. 10*s*. 8*d*.; and do still unjustly withhold from him those goods, to his damage in 20 marks; and this he proved upon the Holy Evangelists, with the following com-provers, Stephenson of Stephen le Taylur, Gilbert Hughelot, William de Herieye, William Hughelyn, and Simon de Tenham, who all, with the said Gilbert, made oath. John Ode makes plaint against Hugh de Harenorde and Anable, his wife; surety to prosecute, William Ode."

"Plea holden on Thursday, the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Mary.—The said John Ode comes, and opposes the said Hugh and his wife, and says that they made assault upon him, beat him, and drew blood from him, against the peace etc., to the damage etc. And the said Hugh, for himself and his wife, denied this, and waged his law thereon. Afterwards he came and made default in his law [appealed in vain to his jurors, or compurgators]. Therefore it was awarded that they should be imprisoned, and should satisfy the said John, and for the trespass they were amerced 4 pence."

Two parchment rolls, containing further pleas in the local court, in the 31*st* year of Edward I. (A.D. 1302, 3). The first and larger parchment is in a very mutilated state; the following passages have been selected:—

"Court holden on Sunday next after the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in the 31*st* year of the reign of King Edward.

"Juliana Lorekyn makes plaint against Henry de Tanet [Tanet], Clerk, in a plea of trespass and battery; pledge to prosecute, John Galeweyn. The said Juliana comes, and presents herself, and says that the said Henry came to her house at night and made assault upon her, and drew his knife and struck her, and drew blood from her, to her damage, etc. And the said Henry cannot gainsay this: therefore the said Henry (is sent) to prison, and amerced for the trespass, [in the margin] amercement 3*l*. Isabel Brun makes plaint against Elena, wife of Henry le Shottore, in a plea of trespass; pledge to prosecute, William Byl. The said Isabel came and her withdrew the charge; therefore the said Isabel and "pledge are amerced: amercement 3d. Roger Waleys was in quarrel [inquerelatus] for rescue made from a sworn serjeant; and thereupon he spontaneously put himself upon the King's favour; amercement 3d. Nicholas Iye makes plaint against Matildis Cus, in a plea of trespass; pledge to prosecute, Geoffrey Daghe [Dawe], and a day was given on Saturday . . . Hugh de Hereford, cobbler, [as being a stranger], found pledges that damage should not come to the community through him, Robert le Hert and John Marchal of Schepeye."

"Pleas holden on Saturday the Feast of St. Bartholomew, in the said year.

"Margery ate Herst makes plaint against Stephen, son of Stephen Le Taylor, in a plea of trespass; pledge to prosecute, Thomas ate Chombre. The aforesaid Margery presents herself against the said Stephen, and says that the said Stephen maltreated her, beat . . . to her damage etc. And the aforesaid Stephen denies shedding of blood, and whatever etc., and wages his law [offers to acquit himself by jurors] thereon for the Sunday following, and the same day was given to Margery aforesaid. Thomas ate Chombre makes plaint against the said Stephen, son of Stephen, in a plea of trespass; pledge to prosecute, John le Poleter. The same Thomas presents himself against the said Stephen, and says that the said Stephen, on the Friday preceding, after sunset . . . made [assault] upon his wife, and drew his knife, and would have slain her, against the peace etc., and to her damage etc. And the said Stephen . . . [was said to be in service with] the King, and a day was given him to make his law, on the Sunday above-mentioned. The same day was given to the said Thomas. It was testified by the bedel that Adam Schipman was distrained by one pipe of cider, and removed and eloigned that distress. The same Adam, being charged with that trespass, wholly denied it, and waged his law thereon, and the Sunday [aforesaid] was given him for making his law. Hamo Doghe [Dowe], a regrator [retailer], was convicted of buying chickens in market, before the fitting hour, against the ordinance of the vill, and because now for the first time he was convicted for such trespass, therefore he was amerced; pledge for the amercement, William Byl: amercement 2d. Nicholas Iye presents himself against Matildis Cus, and the said Matildis supplicates leave to agree, and afterwards they come, having agreed, and the said Matildis is put off to the Court on Sunday after the Feast of St. Bartholomew; her amercement 2d. John de Brenle makes plaint against Robert de Menhamme in a plea of debt; pledge to prosecute, his own freehold. Adam Shipman was in doubt how to make the law which he had waged [to form the jury to swear to his innocence that he had engaged to form], therefore he put himself upon the King's favour: amercement 6d.

"Pleas holden on Thursday, the Feast of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, in the 31st year of the reign of King Edward.

"John ate Shoppe and Avicia, his wife, make plaint against Julyana Wades; pledge to prosecute, Roger Urre. And the said Julyana was attacked by Stephen Glanvil etc., to answer them in the plea of trespass. The aforesaid John and Avicia present themselves against the said Julyana in the plea aforesaid, and make plaint therein, that on a certain day when Avicia, the wife of the said John, was in the house of Lecia Goldston, the said Julyana entered that house, and attacked her, Avicia, with vile words, and then made assault on her face with her hands, and then the shedding of blood by tearing it, unjustly and against the peace, to her damage etc.; and thereon he produced his suit [set of jurors]. And the aforesaid Julyana denied force, injury, and if at any time etc.; and acknowledged that she came to the said house, as was quite lawful for her, and said that she did not attack her with vile words, but when she entered the said house, the aforesaid Avicia made assault on her, whereupon she repelled her from herself, justly, as was quite lawful for her, and in no other manner; [this] she is prepared by whatsoever etc. And because in the charge of them, John and Avicia, there is contained the shedding of blood, which is against the peace: therefore it was adjudged that the said Juliana shall be at law with the third hand etc. [produce two jurors, to swear to her innocence, besides herself], on the Tuesday following, with consent etc.

"Pleas holden on Tuesday next after the Feast of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, in the 31st year of King Edward.

"Brother Walter de Eastcherche, complainant, presents himself against Thomas Daghe [Dawe] in a plea of debt: the said Thomas, being called, does not come, and the bedel says that the said Thomas was distrained by one green surety; and therefore it was adjudged that it should be held, and he be better distrained upon etc.; and the aforesaid brother Walter made his attorney to prosecute in the said plea, Thomas son of Walter Preet; and a day was assigned him, the Thursday following; and the same day was assigned to the said Thomas."

"Pleas holden on Friday before the Feast of the Nativity of St. Mary, in the 31st year of the reign of King Edward.

"John ate Lanende makes plaint against Peter de Truleghe, for that the said Peter came on Saturday after the Feast of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, to the mill of Westwood, and there beat John, his son, in despite of the aforesaid John, and to his grievous damage, and thereon he produced his suit etc.; and the said Peter could not gainsay this, and therefore it was adjudged that the said John should recover his damages, and the said Peter be amerced for the trespass etc.; amercement 2d. Peter de Truleghe makes plaint against John ate Lanende, for that the aforesaid John came on Thursday before the Feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Mary to the window of Richard the Baker, in Prestonestrete, and there insulted him with bad words, and laid hands on him; and the aforesaid John gainsays this, and denies force and injury, and he waged his law, and immediately made it; and therefore it was adjudged that the said John shall go quit thereon, and the said Peter be amerced for a false charge; amercement 2d. Roger Urre and Simon Baldok make plaint against Richard Agote, and bind their freeholds to prosecute etc., and a day was assigned him, the Monday following."

On a small parchment slip, tacked with thread to the roll.—

"Pleas holden on Friday after the Feast of St. Denis, in the 31st year of the reign of King Edward.—

"Geoffrey the Tanner, because he was convicted in a plea of trespass against Ydonea de Brenle, is amerced 2d. Ydonea de Brenle, because she was convicted, as against Geoffrey the Tanner, in a plea of covenant, is amerced 2d. Thomas atte Forstalle, complainant, because he withdrew himself as against John de Okenefaude in a plea of debt, is amerced 2d."

On the reverse of the roll, the context here being much mutilated.—

"Tuesday after the Feast of St. Martin, in the 31st year of the reign of King Edward.

"[de Exetre] comes and presents himself against the said John [de Wrotham], and says that the same John unjustly took of him one bed, value 5s., one tunic . . . chest, value 8s. 6d., six tallies containing 29s., and still detains them from him, to the grievous damage etc. And the aforesaid John comes, and denies force and injury etc.; and he says that he was, and is, bailiff of the lady of Walbeford, and as bailiff distrained the said Richard by the aforesaid . . . [at the suit] of Simon le Taverner, of Sithingburne, for a debt of 5s. He says also that the aforesaid Richard delivered to the aforesaid lady the said chest, [to hold] at will for the rent which he collected from the tenants of the said lady; and that he took them in no other way he is prepared to acquit himself; and as to the said tunic and tallies, he says that he is ready to prove that they never came to his hands, and is ready to acquit himself etc." With more to like purpose, the dispute ending in Richard being amerced in the sum of 4 pence, for making a false charge.

"Pleas holden on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Martin, in the year above-mentioned.— John Saucer [probably meaning, preparer of Sauces], was convicted as against Cristine Hakeman in a plea of trespass; therefore he is amerced 2 pence. Koc Pellipator [the Pelliper, or Skinner], was convicted as against John de Chalkio in a plea of trespass; therefore he is amerced, by pledge, Nicholas Pelliper; amercement 2d.

"Pleas holden on Friday next after the Feast of the Blessed Katherine the Virgin, in the 32nd year of the reign of King Edward. Richard Hockele contemned and cursed John Payfrier in full Court; therefore it was ordered that he should make satisfaction to the said John, and be amerced for the trespass; amerce-

"ment 2^d. John Brown, Curer [maker of cures or tubs] was convicted as against Isabel Wroughe in a plea of trespass; and therefore he is amerced. Richard Hockole is convicted as against John Payfyr, of the detention of one corslet [corsetti] value 10*l*.; and therefore he is amerced. The said Richard is convicted, as against the same John, of the detention of one fermail [or buckle] value 2*s*. 6*d*.; and therefore it was adjudged that the said John should recover the said 2*s*. 6*d*.; and the said Richard be amerced for the detention."

"Pleas holden on Wednesday next after the Feast of St. Katharine, in the 32nd year of the reign of King Edward.—

"John Longhespe [Longsword], because he made default in waging his law against the King, was amerced 3 pence. Richard Stekeber makes plaint against Robert Brown, Smith, for detention of one lock, and he acknowledged it. It was therefore adjudged, that he should satisfy the said Richard, and be amerced for the detention; amercement 3*d*."

"Pleas holden on Wednesday before the Feast of St. Andrew the Apostle, in the 32nd year of the reign of King Edward.—

"Warin ate Stroude, of Sesaltre, makes plaint against John, son of Peter Gravene, Adam Page, Stephen Bretoun of Scapeye [Sheppey]. John Fitz-Isabel, William, brother of Gilbert of Dovorre, William Willey, and William de Grean, in a plea of trespass, and found pledge to prosecute, Robert Dod; and thereupon the aforesaid [parties] summoned come, and the said Warin presents himself against them, and says that the said [parties] came to his fish-well [piscinarium] and carried off his fish, to his grievous damage. And all the aforesaid, John and the others, acknowledge that they were there, but carried away nothing of his, and did not break into his fish-well; and as to the fish that they took away, they say that they bought it faithfully of John Dod and Peter Koc; and they were told to bring the said John Dod and Peter Koc on the Wednesday following."

"Pleas holden on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Andrew the Apostle, in the 32nd year of the reign of King Edward.—

On further hearing of the plaint last-mentioned, all the parties accused are amerced in the sum of 10 pence, in all, for not producing Peter Koc; and the said Warin is amerced in the sum of 4 pence for falsely charging them with breaking open his fish-well; but he is to receive from them 12 pence for his fish, and 6 pence for damages.

"Stephen Bretoun, because he is not of the community, finds pledges that the community shall not incur damage for him. Robert Dod and William Chullie; so that if he offends, they are to bring him; William ate Welle, complainant, presents himself against Richard Rocket in a plea of trespass; and the said William and Richard ask for a day of love to agree; and the Thursday next after the Feast of St. Nicholas was assigned for them to come, if agreed; and if not so, they are to be in their former state."

"Pleas holden on Thursday next after the Feast of St. Nicholas, in the 32nd year of the reign of King Edward.—

"John Petyt, and Godelena, his wife, make plaint against Thomas le Tegulere [the Tiler] of Prestone-strete, in a plea of debt; pledges to prosecute, Stephen Russel and Roger Godyn. And the said Thomas when summoned, being called, did not appear, and therefore it was adjudged, that he be distrained, and the said Godelena puts in her place to prosecute, John, her son, and the day aforesaid was assigned them. Salamon the Cordewaner, complainant, presents himself against Margery Aleyn, defendant. And the said Salamon says that Alan, the late husband of the said Margery, was bound to the said Salamon in 15 pence for leather bought and received of him; and the said Margery answers and says that she knows [sit] nothing thereof. And thereupon, the parties aforesaid ask for a day of love; and therefore the day aforesaid was appointed them; and they are to come without any essoin [excuse for non-appearance]."

A roll of one membrane of parchment, of a similar nature to the preceding one, for various days, and commencing (in Latin) as follows:—"Pleas holden on Wednesday next before the Feast of Saint Gregory, in the 32nd year of the reign of King Edward (A.D. 1304)." The following are some extracts:—

In a plea of debt,—"Copyn le Bere, defendant, opposes John de Grean and Geoffrey Makyn of La Newehethe (New Hythe), complainants; and the said John and Geoffrey, being called, do not come. Therefore it is awarded that the said Copyn shall depart sine die, and the said John and Geoffrey and their sureties are amerced 12 pence for their false claim. Giles Damesenk, of Flanders, makes plaint against Clays of Flanders, for that the same Clays had imputed to him that he, the said Giles, had carried off his two nephews (nepotes) from Flanders; by reason whereof, they suffered death from him (unde sub ipso inierunt mortem); and the said Clays denies this, and puts himself upon the record of the bailiff, and the bailiff records thereon. Therefore it was awarded that the said Clays should satisfy the aforesaid Giles, and further, be amerced 3 pence."

"Pleas holden on Monday after the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope," 32 Edward I. "Thomas Knist, complainant, opposes John ate Hole, defendant, in a plea of trespass. The said John is distrained by one pair of boots; on being called, he does not come. Therefore it was awarded that he should be still better distrained to answer, and the Friday next was awarded to the said Thomas." On that day the said John was convicted, and amerced 3 pence. On the same day,—"Isabel Poleters makes plaint against William Blakeman, and says that when she, the same Isabel (idem Isabella), was in good peace, in the house of Stephen Pin, there came the said William, and struck the aforesaid Isabel, and badly beat her, to her grievous damage etc. William denied all this, and proffered his law, and a day was assigned him to make his law the Saturday following, and the same day was assigned to Isabel." On the Saturday "William Blakeman presents himself, to make his law against Isabel Poleters, as was assigned to him; yet he challenged the time (so given) because of Our Lord's Passion; and the day for making his law was adjourned to Thursday in Easter week, and the same day was assigned to the said Isabel." He objected, in fact, to the Saturday, because it was Easter Eve.

"Pleas holden on Saturday, the Feast of St. Ambrose, in the 32nd year of King Edward the First.—"Tristram Goldsmith makes plaint against John ate Gate, that he came, on Wednesday before the Feast of St. Ambrose, this year, into the house of the said Tristram, with force and arms, and there took one cup of mazer, one mark in value, and carried it off, to the grievous damage of the same Tristram, namely, 20*s*. etc. And the said John acknowledged that he came into his house, with Brother Robert de Langele, but not with malice, and no otherwise than to take a distress, and so took the said cup; and the Monday following was assigned to him, to make his law." On Friday after the Feast of St. Leo the Pope, in the same year, concord was made between Isabel Poleters and William Blakeman, on terms that he pay her half a mark of silver, John son of Walter de Upmantone being his surety, voluntarily, that he should not again offend against the said Isabel; the said William being amerced by the Court in 3 pence.

"Pleas holden on Saturday before the Feast of St. Elphege, in the 32nd year" of King Edward I.—

"Geoffrey Skot was attached with swine's flesh [cum caro porcina] that was leprous, by William Ostreman, serjeant of the vill; and by other keepers of the market, because he sold in the market in no certain place assigned, against the statute of the vill; and this he now acknowledged before the Mayor, Bailiff, and Jurats. And because this was now the first time, it was adjudged that he be amerced in 12 pence."

"Pleas holden on Wednesday next after the Feast of St. Elphege, in the 32nd year" of King Edward I.—

"John Wiltyn, complainant, offers himself against Deonica, the relict of Thomas Elys, and Joan, her daughter, and comes and says that whereas he was in good peace in manner appointed by the lord the King, on Wednesday after the close of Easter in this year, there came the said Deonica and Joan, and made assault on him, and laid hands on him and beat him, and broke his clothes, to the grievous damage of him, John, in three shillings. And the said Deonica and Joan say that they are free women, and are not bound now to answer, but only from three weeks to three weeks. Afterwards they agreed to satisfy the said John, for his clothes that were broken; and further, they were to be amerced."

The next in date is a roll, in duplicate, with one or two trifling variations in each copy, consisting of two membranes, with the following title, in Latin:—

"Account of Roger Orre, Mayor of Faversham, from the Feast of St. Andrew the Apostle [30 November], in the 33rd year of the reign of King Edward (A.D.

CORPORATION OF

"1304), to St. Peter's Chains [1 August] next ensuing [A.D. 1305]."

The following are some extracts from "Expenses," coming after the particulars of Receipts, amounting to 77*li*. 9*s*. 5*d*., partly moneys received from Walter Marischal, his predecessor, as Mayor, partly from moneys collected as tallage.—

"For one horse hired for the use of Roger Orre, going to Canterbury, on the Feast of the Apostles Simon and Jude, to confer with Robert de Stureye 4*d*.
"For one horse hired for the use of the same Roger, going to Canterbury on the Day of St. Katharine to confer with the Constable, together with the bailiff, 4 pence. Expenses of the same Roger there 2*d*. Expenses upon making the record between Adam Shipman and Roger ate Doune, in parchment, wine, and other things, 4*d*. To William Bil, for his expenses in going to Canterbury, to make a present to the Sheriff of Kent 4*d*. For 4,000 herrings sent to the Sheriff 20*s*. For 1,000 herrings sent to Elyas the Clerk 5*s*. For a cart hired to take the herrings to Canterbury 12*d*. Then given to Walter de Horsele, 40*d*. Expenses of the Mayor, Bailiff, Robert de Stureye, Stephen ate Melle, Thomas Dod, Tristram le Goldsmith, Adam Shipman, and Hamon Daghe, going to the Shipweye, and returning, staying 2 nights at Canterbury; and expenses of the Mayor, Bailiff, and Stephen ate Melle at Canterbury, on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Thomas, to confer with the Sheriff of Kent, 12*s*. 10*d*." Paid 12 pence each for the horses of Hamon Daghe, of Tristram, of Stephen ate Melle, and of the Mayor, hired to go to the Shipweye. "For one pocket (or bag, poketto?) bought for putting in the moneys of the community 4*d*. For 8 bushels of oats sent to Sir Robert de Burghesse, at the hall, on the Day of St. Hillary, 2*s*. 3*d*. Allowed John de Upmantone for his expenses about one tun of wine, at London 21*d*. Allowed Robert Dod for Hugh ate Shoppe half a mark. Paid the said Robert for a bell [nolla], 5*s*. 6*d*. Expenses of the Constable of Dovorre Castle, at the Hall, on Monday before the Feast of St. Vincent the Martyr, 6*s*. Paid the expenses of the Bailiff, Mayor, and Robert de Stureye, going to London, to take thither the moneys of the Lord the King and the Lady the Queen, and for expediting other business there, going, remaining, and returning, from Thursday next before the Feast of St. Vincent the Martyr, 9 days following, 26*s*. 8*d*. For a present sent to Sir Philip de Wyleby, in bread, 2*s*. 6*d*., wine and two carcases of swine, 13*s*. 10*d*. For carrying that present to Boclande 6*d*. For 10 quarters of oats, sent to the lord the Prince [Edward, Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward II.] on Sunday before the Feast of the Purification of St. Mary, at Osprenge, 20*s*. For 2,000 herrings sent to the Constable of Dovorre at Hakintone 10*s*. For 6000 herrings 23*s*., and for carriage of them 14*d*. Of which, 3000 were sent to London in the vessel of John Note, 1000 were given to W. Bernefeld, and 1000 to William de Hokniere. Paid for a purse [loculo] to put in the moneys of the community 4*d*. Delivered to Walter Bealde for his expenses on Sunday the Feast of St. Valentine, going to the Brodhelle 4*s*. Allowed to Gilbert le Northeren in his tallage, by assent of the 12 Jurats, 12*d*. For wine given to the clerk of the Sheriff of Kent, and his fellows 3*d*. Given to Walter de Horsele, clerk of the Sheriff of Kent, 40*d*. For a present sent to the Abbot of St. Augustine's on Thursday after the Feast of St. Matthias the Apostle, in bread and wine 2*s*. 6*d*. Expenses of the Mayor going to London, returning, and staying there, beginning the Sunday after the Feast of St. Gregory, for 16 days following 18*s*. Boat-hire for the Constable and others many times 9*d*. Given to Elyas the Clerk, for copying 3 writs, to keep 6*d*. Expenses of the clerk of Master John de Cham 54*d*., and given to him 12*d*. For parchment bought for several processes, to be written for the use of the community 6*d*. Paid John de Tiltone, serjeant, for his wages, one mark. Given to the groom of Sir Robert de Wardleby 3*d*. Expenses of the Mayor and Walter Bealde, going to Romenal [Old Romney] and returning, for 3 days and 2 nights, namely, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, after the Feast of St. Elphege 8*s*. Paid Sir Robert de Burghesse on Thursday before the Feast of the Apostles Philip and James 10*li*. For a present sent to him the same day, in bread, wine, and oats 4*s*. 3*d*. For presents sent to Sirs Roger le Brabason and Gilbert de Robery [Judges] 28*s*. 44*d*. Paid Sir Robert de Wardleby, for Easter Term, 20*s*. Paid the serjeants of the Court, and for gifts to the clerks there 71*s*. 8*d*.

"Paid for one pair of shoes for the use of the son of Roger Pelliper [Skinner], when he was going to London 3*d*. For wine for Robert le Cryour [the Cryer] on Monday before the Feast of the Nativity of Saint John the Baptist 24*d*. Expenses of Walter Maerschal and Walter Bealde on the morrow of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, going to Silham and Bobbinge, to confer with Sir Robert Sanvage and Roger de Toketone, their horse-hire and other expenses 164*d*. For one quarter of melwell [green codfish] sent to the Sheriff of Kent on Wednesday after the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr 11*s*. Allowed to the heirs of Simon Seman, for a house hired, for the terms of the Annunciation and John the Baptist 40*d*. Given to the archers [archeris] of the lord the King, on the Feast of St. Margaret 12*d*. Wine for them 14*d*. For a breakfast to the macebearers of the lord the King, on the Day of St. Mary Magdalen 12*d*. Expenses the same day at Osprenge, in wine and other things 84*d*. For wine sent the same day to Sir Robert de Burghesse, at the hall 20*d*. Allowed to Henry Hereword for one sac . . . detained by the servants of the lord the Prince at Osprenge, 6*d*. To Stephen le Mellere [the Miller] for the same, 6*d*. Wages of the Mayor for the year 40*s*." This part of the Account thus ends, (tr.):—"Be it remembered, that this account was rendered in the house of Robert Dod, on Monday next before the Feast of St. Valentine in the year of the reign of King Edward the 35th, before John Everard, then Bailiff, Robert Dod, Walter Maerschal, James de Brenle, Nicholas Yve, Wolmer Bealde, Simon Baldok, Tristram le Goldsmith, James le Chapman, Andrew Mercer, William Fynghe, Laurence le Hare, Henry le Blobber, Richard le Foghelere [Fowler], John Dreyland, Robert Dyer, and John Goldwyne, Clerk." Goldwyne was the Common Clerk, and at the head of the second membrane, tied with parchment to the preceding one, it is stated (in Latin) that he owes to the Mayor 11 pence, and to W. Bil 2 pence.

The title of the second membrane is, (tr.):—"Expenditure of the tallage made on the morrow of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist in the 33rd year of the reign of King Edward, by the hand of [Roger] Orre, Mayor." The following are some extracts.—
"Paid to the Marshal of the Meters of the Lord the King 40*s*., for fine made in the 30th year of the reign of King Edward 30*s*. For 200 melwells bought of Nicholas Yve 4*li*. 16*s*., of which there were sent to the Warden of the Cinque Ports 3 quarters [84 lbs.], and to Sir John de Northwood, then Sheriff of Kent, 3 quarters. For landing the said melwells 1*d*. For God's penny [hansel-money] on buying the said melwells 1*d*. For one quarter of melwells sent to Walter de Horsele and William de Okyniere 7*s*. 7*d*. For landing and portage thereof 1*d*. For salt for the same 6*d*. For carriage of the melwells to Dovor and Hortone [near Hythe] 2*s*. Given to Adam de Rodewelle, Clerk of Sir William de Bereford 40*d*. To William de Wytefeld, Esquire of the same Sir William 40*d*. Paid for a certain amercement at Boclande, for the Mayor, because he was engaged with the common business, and could not come before the Escheator of the lord the King, as he was summoned 6*d*. Delivered to Stephen Glanvyle for his expenses, going to Brodhelle for wines promised to the lord the Prince." The Brodhelle here named may possibly have been the place, also known as "Bronhill", near Dymchurch, between New Romney and Hythe. Certain matters are here mentioned also, as happening, while James de Brenle was Mayor.—"Allowed Alice Seman for the hire of her house, for the Terms of Saint Michael and of Our Lord's Nativity 40*d*. Expenses of the Mayor, going to Wyjon the Feast of St. Gregory, to confer with the Lord Constable 74*d*., with horse-hire. Expenses of the Bailiff and Mayor going to Hethe, to hear the mandate of the lord the King, and to do other business with the Lord Constable, on Tuesday and Wednesday after the Feast of St. Gregory 2*s*. 11*d*., and for their horse-hire 164*d*." Various expenses of the Bailiff, Mayor, and several Jurats, in going to London, Canterbury, Hythe, and other places, occupy the greater part of this membrane.

The next roll is a single membrane, with the following title in Latin (tr.):—"Account of John Goldwyne of the tallage made for the service of the lord the King, on the Monday next after the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Edward, the 16th, in the time of Robert le Hart, then Mayor." Among the Receipts:—"Received half a mark from the Master

"of God's House [at Osprengel], on the tallage aforesaid." Among the expenses are the following items:—"Delivered to John le Barbour the younger, for his expenses in going to Sandwich, to know how the men of the same vill were disposed [se habebant] for doing the service of the lord the King 2s. Paid Thomas Celroure for one mast and one yard for the boat 7s. 6d., by order of the Mayor. For one oar for the boat 6d. Paid Walter Copyn for putting the ropes on the ship 12d. Paid Thomas Daghe on Sunday after the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr 4li. 5s. 6d., by view of the Mayor, towards the expenses of the sailors. Paid Robert Dod for cider for the sailors going to Scotland, by view of the Mayor 37s. For a present sent to Sir Nicholas de Cryel, the Constable, at the Abbey, on Friday before the Feast of St. Margaret, in bread 18d.; in wine 2s. 3d. Given to a certain carter, bringing victuals to the shore 3d. Given to 2 messengers of our lord the King, on Thursday before St. Peter's Chains 6d. from the purse of Robert de Silgrave. Sent to William le Lon, by Little John 20s. Given to the same John, for carrying the said money to Doverre 4d. Given to a messenger of the lord the King, who brought a writ as to Ingrossers, 6d. For a breakfast to him, at the tavern 24d., by the Mayor's order. Given to Walter Marshal and Stephen ate Melle, for their expenses before the Archbishop, at Canterbury 2s. Presents of bread and wine to Sir Nicholas de Crielle, the Constable, again occur, more than once.—"Expenses of William le Barber, going to Sandwich, to know how the sailors were disposed [se habebant] towards the fleet, 20d. For taking our ship, the 'barge,' out of the marsh to the wharf, 4d. Given to William le Barber, the serjeant, towards one gown [tunicam], 5s., by order of the Mayor. Given to a messenger of Doverre, bringing a copy of the King's writ that the passage (across) be better guarded, on Monday before the Feast of St. Peter's Chair, 6d. For wax, bought to seal a letter to the King, about Peter Hanyng and others 1d. Given to John Wade, for his expenses to Sandwich, to know the day when the men of Sandwich were to set out for our lord the King at York, 4d. Delivered to Henry Andreu and Adam Shipman [burgesses in Parliament] for their expenses in going to our Lord the King, at York, on Friday before Palm Sunday, 60s. For the wages of John Goodwyne (Common Clerk) from the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist to the same Feast, for one year, 26s. 8d."—"Be it remembered that this account was rendered before Henry Andreu, Mayor, Robert le Hert, Robert de Silgrave, Richard Gravene, John de Wyngham, Robert de Cressebrok, Richard le Tylour, Thomas Batekoc, Richard Dreyland, Philip Note, and others, on Friday before the Feast of St. Gregory, in the year of the King aforesaid the 18th."

The following is probably the only roll of the sort now in existence: it is contained in a large sheet of parchment, in good condition, with the following title, in Latin:—"Tallage made towards the fine to the Lord Abbot for the Feasts of Easter and St. Michael, in the first year of the reign of King Edward, after the Conquest the Third, on Friday after the said Feast of St. Michael: and for other business of the vill of Faversham, in the time of Robert le Hert, Mayor of the said vill; the taxors of this tallage being Thomas Daghe, Andrew Chapman, Laurence Blobberre, John de Makynhaenede, Adam de Langydone, and William Byeasthelde." The Bakers come first, being 10 in number, the highest sum paid being 3 shillings, and the lowest 6 pence. The "Brasiatrics," or Alewives, come next; about 84 in all, and among them we find the wife of John Goldwyne, the Common Clerk; and the maid-servant (ancilla) of Alice Beaufour, who pays the comparatively large sum of 2s. Under this head 4s. is the largest sum paid, 6d. the smallest. Some are widows, but most of them are wives of men then living, and it seems not unlikely that under this head of "Brasiatrics" were included persons who only brewed for private consumption. With the Butchers, 27 in number, 3s. is the highest payment, and 4 pence the lowest. The Fishermen are 15 in number, Robert Pyn heading the list, 3s. being the largest sum paid, and 4d. the smallest. Under the head of "Squalestryvet," "Fenestrage," there are 35 names: the first word or words seem to defy interpretation; "fenestrage" meant a duty on articles exposed in the window on Saturdays. Thirteen of those paying under this head are women; 4 pence is the smallest sum paid, 18 pence the largest.

Eight Tanners follow, their payments varying from 2 shillings to 6 pence. There are but two Taverners, one paying 4 shillings, and the other 12 pence. Robert le Hert (the Mayor) and Thomas Everard, pay 2s. each, for a moiety of Kyngismelle; Adam de Childemelle [Child Mill] paying 2s. for a moiety of (the mill at) Colemannishole. Some 59 persons are entered under the head of "Portatrices," a term accounted for from the fact of the first two mentioned being women, there being also four other females in the list. "Carriers," or "Carters," was probably the meaning of the word. William Oleyfer, Petyt Johan (paying 6 pence) and Lytel Johan (paying 4 pence) are in the number; also Henry Andreu, lately Mayor, and whom we have seen sent to York as a Burgess in Parliament four years before, paying 12 pence: the sums paid under this head vary from 4 pence to 18 pence, this largest sum being paid by Henry de Ewelle. Goude Botereestre and Elbod le Noreis (Norwegian) were probably foreigners, paying 4 pence each. The total of persons liable to payment to the tallage, it is stated in pencil-writing upon the parchment, of last century, is 252.

A small piece of parchment, containing a letter of attorney, in French, dated at Faversham, the morrow of the Trinity, 34th Edward I.; whereby Gilbert de Doverre, Baron of Faversham, appoints John le Packere, Baron of Sandwich, his proctor, more especially to demand, recover, and receive, his goods and chattels, which have been stolen and taken from him by sea and land, since the truce and peace made between the Kings of England and France. If this is the original, it has lost both the seal of Gilbert and that of the vill of Faversham, originally set thereto.

A letter, in French, on a small strip of parchment, from Stephen de Penecestre, Warden of the Cinque Ports, temp. Edward I., as follows:—"Estevene de Penecestre a la Cumune de Faveresham, saluz e tutes amiestez. Jeo ai fet une priere au Maire de vostre vile avant-dite, e a vous, come a mes chiers a niz, par le avandit Maire. De quey jeo ws pri, e requer kanneke jeo puis, sur tutes amiestez, e sicome ws amez mon honur, e a usicism ws volez ke jeo face pur vos e pur les voz, tutes les fois qe ws me priez, chose ke ws please, e ke bone vous seit; qe ws crere (?) le avant dit Maire, e facez ceo ke il ws dira de buche de par meye. Eeste bosoigne, e ma priere, ea nule manere ne voillez lesser, sicome jeo me porai fier de ws. Saluz a Deu, ki ws gard lutz jurs." Addressed, "A la Cumune de Faveresham."

Tr.—"Stephen de Penecestre to the Community of Faveresham, greeting and all friendship. I have made a prayer unto the Mayor of your vill aforesaid, and to you, and to you, as to my dear friends, by the aforesaid Mayor. As to which I pray you, and require as much as I may, upon all friendship, and as you do love my honour, and as you would that I should do for you and for yours, at all times that you shall pray me, the thing that may please you, and that for you may be good; that you will credit the aforesaid Mayor, and do that which he shall tell you by word of mouth on my behalf. And this business, and my prayer, in no manner do you wish to omit, so that I may be able to trust in you. Greeting in God, and may He keep you always." The nature of the request does not appear.

A small slip of parchment, in Latin, indorsed "Per Custodem Sigilli." "By Keeper of the Seal;" being a precept, addressed by Edward I. at Eltham, 28th June, 1275, to the Coroner and Bailiffs of the vill of Faversham, to return to the King the indictments as to the death of Ralph Note, William le Barber, Roger de Selegrove, Robert Pyn, and Osbert Seman, slain within the liberty of the said vill.

A small slip of parchment, of the time probably of Edward the First, containing, a list of 21 distresses made, probably for the Kings tallage, upon various inhabitants (of Faversham, though not so stated). The article seized is, in every instance, a table (tabella), as being, no doubt, the most available article of furniture, the values of which in some instances are not stated, and in others are set at prices varying from 3 pence to a shilling; sums, to form an approximate appreciation of the value of which, must be multiplied by 20. The furniture of the great bulk of the population in those days would consist solely of a table, a stool or bench, some bedding, or straw for its substitute, and a few vessels of pewter or brass. Some of the names are now illegible:—"Matildis Heres, one table 6d. Adam Sipman, one table 6d. Adam ate Merse, one table 4d. Thomas de Haekenese, one table 4d. Salamon le Corduaner, one table 6d. Adam the merchant, one table 12d. Walter Bialde, one table.—John de Levenhelde, one

On the other side of the parchment is a copy of a precept, in Latin; for the most part illegible; and below, this return, in Latin, some parts nearly illegible.—"Thomas de Basinge and T' de Everingge are not of my bailiwick, nor have they moveables in the same, by which they may be distrained; therefore etc. Roger Urre, Henry Blobbere, Wolmer Bealde, S. Baldok, G. Daghe, and J de Sellenge, are abiding [manentes] in the vill of Faversham, which is of the Liberty of the Cinque Ports. But they have lands in my bailiwick, upon which no after receipt of this mandate."

Three slips of parchment, containing (in Latin) Arrears of Tallage, temp. Edward II. The first contains.—"Arrears of tallage made on Monday the Feast of St. Edmund the Confessor, in the 15th year of the reign of Edward, son of King Edward, and of other preceding tallages." Among the more remarkable names are "Thomas Mayde 6s. Robert Pin.—The relict of Henry Blobbere 18d. The Vicar of Faversham 40d. Robert le Hert 50s. Thomas the Cobbler 3d. Reginald the Cobbler 8d. Juliana Gravene 2s. 8d. Adam Forbissour [Furbisher, or repairer of arms] 4d. Chichei Politt 11d. Alicia Bateke 3s. 6d. The relict of Chubbs 2s. William de Badesemere 12d. William Damage 4d. Broun Robyn 8d. James de Brenle 16s. 4d. Stachius the Miller [or Grinder, Triturator] 15d." In Osprenge, the Master of God's House owes 3s. 5d., and there are eight other debtors; among them, "Robert de Popindane 3d., Hamo Asketyn 12d., the brother of Robert Lulle 8d."

The next parchment contains,— "Arrears of tallage, made on Monday after the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the 16th year of the reign of Edward, son of King Edward." The ink has faded, and it is not so legible as the preceding. The Vicar of Faversham now owes only 12 pence: others are,— "William the Painter, 3d. Richard Digon [or Box] 4d. Jaket de Makenhaude 6d. Eylobd Noreys [the Norwegian] 3d. Cecilia Blobestre, and her partners, 6d. Agnes, dwelling near the house of Robert Dod 2d. Hugh Skot 4½d. Emma ate Frye 4d."

On the reverse are,— "Arrears of the fine made before the Marshal of the Lord the King, on Saturday after the Feast of St. Ambrose, in the 16th year of the reign of Edward, son of King Edward." The amounts, in each case, are but small, and there are 24 names only. The arrears of Richard de Gravene, for tallage in the 15th and 16th years, are stated, at the close, to be 10*li*. 7*s*. 4*d*., a large sum: he was Mayor of Faversham shortly after this.

The third parchment is headed (in Latin):—"Arrears of the tallage, made on Monday after the Feast of St. Bartholomew, in the 18th year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Edward, in the time of the then Mayor, Richard de Gravene, by Sir Robert de Kendale, Knight, and Constable of the castle of Dovorre, and chosen Warden of the Cinque Ports, and before him to our Lord the King sworn: Thomas Daghe being chosen by the said Mayor and community to collect and receive the said tallage, and render account of the same." Here the Abbot of Faversham and the Almoner of Faversham owe jointly 13*s*. 6*d*.— "The heirs of Roger Urre 4*s*. 9½*d*." Below the first column is written (in Latin):—"Promised before the Mayor and Vicar of Faversham, and other trustworthy persons,—Amount 4*li*. 7*s*. 3½*d*." In the second column (among others) occur the names of "John le Wronge 2*s*. 2*d*. Robert Lulle 12½*d*. Thomas la Tegheleze [Tiler] 6*d*. Celestria Blobbere [not Blobestre, this time] and her partners 6*d*. Edmund de Horapoldre 2*d*. John de Moleshe, Chaplain 6*d*. Stace the Miller [Triturator] 3*d*. In Osprenge the Master of God's House owes 6*s*. 9*d*., and there are 17 other debtors as well."

A small slip of parchment, the date (probably in 1282) faded away, in Latin, as follows (tr.):—"Edward by the grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitaine, to his well-beloved and trusty, the Barons and Bailiffs of his port of Faversham, greeting. Because we are about to set out with our army upon our expedition into Wales, against Llewelyn, Son of Griffin, and his accomplices, our rebels, we do command you, upon the fealty, homage, and love, in which unto us you are bound, strictly enjoining you, that the half of your service which unto "us you owe, you will pay unto us in every way at Chester, on the Feast of St. Peter's Chains next ensuing; so that you then be with us in the Cullet (Colecta) of water in the aforesaid vill of Chester, well protected, and ready and prepared to go forth with us and our trusty (subjects) to repress the rebellion and assaults of the said Llewelyn and his accomplices aforesaid; and unto our well-beloved and trusty Stephen de Penecestre, Constable of Dovorre, whom therefor unto you we do send, do you give full faith in the premises. And those things which unto you he shall say hereon on our behalf, in all manners do you [fulfil], and this do in no manner omit. In witness whereof, these two letters patent we have had made. Witness myself, at Westminster, on the . . . day"

A small parchment writ, in Latin, indorsed "To the Mayor and Barons of Faversham. By the King." In it Stephen de Penecestre, Keeper of Dovorre Castle, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, recites a mandate to him from King Edward [the First], setting forth the complaint of his merchants, Orlandini de Pay and his fellows, merchants of the Society of the Ricardi (P) of Luca, that a ship of William de Schil, of Witsand [near Boulogne], laden with their merchandize, had left Flanders, and was passing up the Thames towards London, when Robert de Brede, and John, his brother, of Winchelsea, and certain other misdoers and disturbers of the peace, being in a ship called "La Grayere," made assault by force of arms on the ship of Witsand, and took and carried off all the goods and wares found therein. He is therefore enjoined to command all his sub-wardens, in the ports and along the coast, to seize the ship called "La Crayere" (sic), if within their jurisdiction, and attach the bodies of the sailors thereof; and duly to inform him thereon. The King's mandate is dated at Westminster, on the 7th of May, and the Constable's letter at Penecestre, on the 11th of the same month: the year (perhaps 1282) is not given.

Copy of a writ of the Privy Seal, on parchment, in French, dated the 6th of June, 15th Edward II. (A.D. 1322) to Robert Bataille, "our Amiral, and our good people of the fleet of our navy of the Cinque Ports." Having sent loving (aimables) letters to the Count of Flanders for intercommunication between their people respectively, he has received from the Count letters, "very strange (mult estranges); from which we do well perceive, that he and his are of a mind to agrieve us and ours to the best of their power. Wherefore we do pray you, as those in whom we trust, and do charge you on the fealty which unto us you owe, that, between you and our good people of Gernemuth (Yarmouth), unto whom we write, you will have good look-out and good espial upon the sea, and in unison and with one accord will go forth to sea, in as great strength and as good array as ever you may; and will use such counsel that the sea shall be our own, and open and sure; and that merchants, as well strangers as denizens, bringing victuals for our war in Scotland, and all others coming towards our realm, and passing therefrom, may safely go and come, and that our realm, and our people on the coasts thereof, may thereby be assured and kept in quiet from damages and from evil attempts on part of our ill-wishers. And if you see that between you and our said people of Gernemwe (Yarmouth) you may thereto suffice, we should desire much that the navy of the coast towards the West should go speedily towards the parts of Ireland and the Isles, as was fully provided in our Parliament. And if it happen that any ship of our opponents be taken upon the sea, let it be brought safe and sound, with the men, to land, to know fully their condition; as was before ordained, and commanded heretofore." Dated, at Rothwell, in Scotland, as above.

A letter of attorney, on a small slip of parchment, in Latin, the seal lost, (tr.):—"Be it known to all by these presents, that we, the Prior and Convent of Faversham, do give full and free power by these presents to the venerable father [Gregory], by the grace of God, our Abbot, to swear upon our souls, that we will hold as ratified and assured the ordinance which the lord Abbot of St. Augustine's at Canterbury, Brother Henry de Cokeringe, monk of the same place, Master Anselm de Estry, Sir Robert de Kemesinge, and William Derby, or the major part of them [shall make], as between their said Abbot and themselves, on the one side, and the Alderman and community of the vill of Faversham, on the other, according to the form of submission by us thereupon acceded to, and that we will inviolably observe the same. In "witness whereof, with leave of our Abbot aforesaid, our common seal to these presents is appended. Done at Faversham, on Monday next after the Feast of St. Gregory, in the 21st year of the reign of King Edward."—Edward the First.

A power of attorney, of the same date as the preceding, given by the Twelve Jurats of Faversham (the Mayor, probably, reckoned as one), John le Dache, Thomas Golston, John de Gravenne, Walter de Hupmantone, Walter le Marescal, Gilbert de Chapel, Henry de Gravenne, Walter Balde, Robert Dod, Nicholas de Brenle, and William Hurrer, to Thomas Everard, Mayor, to swear on their souls that they will abide by the award to be given by the Abbot of St. Augustine's and the others above mentioned. The seals have been appended on seven slips of parchment annexed: fragments of five of them, in green wax, still remain, the devices of three being, a stag's head, palm branches, and a star. The dispute is here stated to be, not with the "Alderman" and community," as in the preceding document, but with the "Mayor and community," of the vill of Faversham. In Southampton, at about this date, the Mayor was frequently spoken of as the "Alderman."

An indenture, in Latin, on parchment, dated at Faversham, on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Peter's Chains, 29th Edward I., a portion of the small seal, in green wax, still appended; tr. :—"Be it known to all, by these presents, that the Mayor and Barons of Faversham are bound and obliged to their well-beloved in Christ, Edmund de Passeleghe, for the counsel, aid, and service, to them, the Mayor and Barons, by him in future to be paid, everywhere, against all their adversaries, the [superior] lords howsoever of the same Edmund excepted, in 40 shillings, by him yearly to be received in the vill of Faversham from all the tenements of the said Mayor and Barons therein, for term of his life, 20 shillings at the Feast of St. Michael, and 20 shillings at the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist etc." This Edmund afterwards became a Baron of the Exchequer, and a notice will be found of him in Fors's Judges of England, Vol. III. p. 286. There is a receipt of him, on parchment, the seal lost, of the above sum, in July 34th Edward I.

A writ, or transcript of a writ, in French, on parchment, without a seal, and in some parts almost illegible; stating that R. de Burghesshe, Constable of Dover, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, at the plaint of the Abbot of St. Augustine's, at Canterbury, had ordered to be attached and brought before the Mayor and Baron of Faversham, Roger Batecock, and eight others named, to answer to Dan Hughe de Berkynge and Dan Thomas de Tanet, Monks of the Abbot of St. Augustine's, for great trespass and assaults upon them committed in the said vill: which had been neglected to be done. The persons above-named are therefore to be brought before him, on a certain day, to make answer to the said monks. Dated the 11th of April 29th Edward I.

A large sheet of parchment, filled with legal proceedings, in French; of the opening part of which the following is a translation:—"Sabat de Santz, merchant of Bayonne, complainant, opposes himself to Gilo Damesone, master of a certain ship of Bereffet [? Barfleu] and his companions, and seeks of them divers goods, of which upon the sea he had been robbed by them. And he puts in his place, to gain or to lose, Bernard Maylokin and Reymund Monas; who demand of the said Gilo and his companions 60 tuns of white wine, one tun of olive oil, and 40 couples [copulas] of figs and raisins, 25 bales of liquorice, and 12 quarters of wheat, of which he had been robbed upon the sea, from a certain ship called 'Le halop Seynt Nicholas,' of Bayonne, to his damage in 200 li. Which ship of Saint Nicholas was to have been discharged at Eastcluse [Sluys]; seeing that the said merchants have this Charter of the community of Bruges, freely to come to the ports of Flanders, and there to stay." The Charter to the merchants of Bayonne, to that effect, from the burgesses and Master Eschevins, and Councils, of the city of Bruges, is then recited, dated at Bruges, on Wednesday after the Exaltation of the Holy Cross 1302. The said Bernard and Reymund also acknowledge that they have received from Gilo and his companions 23 tuns of wine, 21 bales of liquorice, 12 couples of figs and raisins, 3 quarters of wheat, and three fourths of one tun of olive oil, and they demand that the remainder may be restored. Gilo, on the other hand, pleads a licence from the burgesses and Eschevins of the community and Council of Bruges, by a certain Charter (in French), which he and his companions produce, as follows:—"We, the Eschevins, Burgomasters, and the Councils, of the community, of the vill of Bruges, do make known to all those who these presents shall see or hear, that we have given leave to our dear and trusty friends, Henry Winderoot and Thomas de la Chambre, and all their company, we as well as our subjects, by our Councils of the city, to aggrrieve our enemies in body and in goods, especially those of the realm of France, and its allies, and our friends to comfort and aid, that is to say, all merchants of all lands save the realm of France, and its allies aforesaid. Wherefore we do pray and require all princes of lands, and all earthly lords, and all their subjects, that they will aid and comfort our good people aforesaid, and theirs; and will so far do the same, that we may be bound to do the same for them in the same city and in our country, and in our jurisdiction, in the like case, or in a greater. Given in the year of Grace 1302, on the Saturday next after the Decollation of St. John."

The pleadings are then continued, but in Latin now. Gilo says that he had only 25 tuns of the said wine; and that Michel Yanes, of Lessebone (Lisbon), merchant of Portingale, delivered the same to him gratuitously as a present, at sea; and he produces a letter of the said Michel, testifying that the said present was made on the Day of St. Thomas the Martyr; John Hupmantone and Adam Shypman, of Faversham, having set their seals thereto. Of the olive oil and the bales of liquorice Gilo says that he had none; but of the wheat he acknowledges having had 7 quarters, and part of the figs and raisins, which were consumed in the ship by his crew. The complainants say that this answer ought not to be admitted, because the said wines and other goods were in reality bought, in the port of Sandwich, of Michel Yanes, a merchant of Portingale, on the Sunday before Our Lord's Nativity 1302, as attested by the charter-party made between them (in French), which is then quoted: "Know all those who this charter-party shall see and hear, that is concluded between Michael Yanes, merchant of Lissebone, of the one part, and Bernard Maylokin and Gilleam Ernaud, of Portan, merchants of Saint Johan de Scorde, of the other part, that is to say; that the said Michael has sold to the aforesaid Bernard and Gilleam Ernaud [sic] 60 tuns of white wine of Portegau, the which are loaded on the halop St. Nicholas of Bayone, of which Piers d'Eske is master, for 12 pounds Tournois each tun of wine; payment in Flanders within 21 work-days [jour overable] after God shall have conducted the said ship to Sluys; (whereon) the aforesaid Michel is bound to be paid all the money [pekunie] to which the said wines amount, without more delay; as also, the expenses of the first sale of the said wines, and the tenths of Sandwiz (on freight) to Sluys in Flanders, all hazard by sea, and all other hazards, and to make payment for freight (to Sandwich) thereof; and all other things shall fall upon the aforesaid Bernard and Gilleame Ernaud, save that the said Michel shall carry [? doubtful] every such tun to Sluys. The which money aforesaid loyally to pay, the aforesaid Bernard and Gilleam Ernaud have set and delivered at Sandwyz, to the said Michel, as pledge, 4 bales of cloth, on such terms; that if he be not paid the aforesaid money, as is above stated, the said 4 bales of cloth, in which there are 35 pieces of cloth, and one robe and two cushions [cosouns] and bolsters [traveysins], and two furs of squirrels, and a blanket [chalun], that cost 304 pounds Parisian, shall belong to the said Michel for ever, without any gansaying; and that the said Michel shall not be answerable for the said Bernard, or to any of his, for the freight due to him by the said ship, until the said Michel shall be paid all the money to which the said wines amount. And in witness to the truth hereof, of these charter-parties the parties above said have interchangeably set their seals. Written at Sandwiz, on the day of St. Martin, in the year of Grace, 1302. Witnesses are, Piers de Deske, Piers de Momas, Stephen Martin, Symon Holewey, of Sandwyz, and others."

Also, for further evidence of the said purchase, they produced al eter, signed with the seals of William Charles, Mayor of Sandwich, and others; and said that what was done at sea was null, because what the said Michel did was done to save his life, he not otherwise being able to escape. And Gilo said for himself and his companions, that he put himself at the will of the lord the King, as to whether he had taken the said goods in any other way than he ought. It was thereupon awarded that the said Bernard and Reymund should recover their said goods and damages, to the amount of 200 pounds: and the said Gilo and his companions were to be at the King's will, as to their bodies and their goods.

Afterwards the said Gilo and his companions came, and asked for assessment of the said damages; whereon the Mayor and Jurats of the vill of Faversham were charged by the Warden to tax the damages; which were accordingly taxed at 100 marks.

A small parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, whereby the Mayor and Barons of Faversham, for his counsel and assistance against their adversaries, bind themselves to pay to Sir Robert de Wardelby 40s. yearly. Dated on Saturday after the Feast of St. Barnabas, 31st Edward I. It is in exactly the same terms as the grant to Edmud de Passeleghe, previously mentioned. There is a receipt for this pension by Thomas Dod, on behalf of Sir Robert de Wardelby, dated in the 5th year of Edward II., A.D. 1312.

A small parchment, in Latin, being a copy of a discharge, from John de Drogenesford (afterwards Bishop of Bath and Wells) Keeper of the King's Wardrobe, of 100 marks, in part payment of 500 marks, due from the Barons of the vill of Faversham for a certain fine made by them before Sir Walter de Langton], Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, for having their liberties, and remission of many trespasses and amercements. Dated at Radinge, 26th November 31st Edward I.

A parchment, containing two copies of the King's writ, in Latin, dated at Strivelin (Stirling) 10th June, 32nd Edward I., to the Mayor and Bailiffs of Faversham, reciting, at length, certain complaints of the Abbot of Faversham. On the reverse of the parchment is an indorsement, in Latin, which shews the nature of the Abbot's complaint. It states that the Mayor and Bailiffs of Faversham do not hinder the Abbot from holding his Courts of his own tenants, and collecting from them rents and amercements, by his bailiffs and servants. But they themselves have all the royal liberty, and the same Charter which the other Barons of the Cinque Ports have; and nothing else do they claim, except that which the King granted to the men of Faversham by the said charter, and of which right the king was seised at the time of making such charter; their service being, one King for the King's use yearly. To no else than the King can they, or will they, attorn.

Contemporary copy, on parchment, of a royal writ, in Latin, to the Warden of the Cinque Ports, for the arrest of Stephen ate Melle, of Faversham, for trespass, at suit of the Abbot of Faversham; dated 28th May 33rd Edward I. The return to the writ is given at the foot, but is rendered, to a great extent, illegible by damp.

Copy, on parchment, of a writ of Privies, to the Sheriff of Kent, commanding him not to remit, "by reason" of the liberty of the Archbishop of Canterbury, "to distrain Nicholas de Brenle, T. Everard, R. Dod, Walter de Upmantone, and Henry Andren, by their lands and chattels in his bailiwick, and to take bodily Thomas Oysterman, Walter Bealde, Nicholas Iye, Thomas and John sons of Walter de Upmantone, Stephen Glonville, Adam Shipman, William Blakeman, Hamon Daghe, Geoffrey Daghe, Wolmer Bealde, Simon Baldok, Walter le Maeschal, Stephen ate Melle, John Homan, and John de Wengheham, and keep them in safe custody; so that all of them may answer the complaint of Philip de Inteberghe, in a plea of trespass. Witness, [Roger] le Brabazon, at Westminster, 22nd July, 33 Edward I.

Copy of a writ to the Sheriff of Kent, on parchment, ordering the arrest and putting on pledge of Thomas de Basinge, Thomas de Everinge, Roger Orre, Henry Blobbere, Wolmer Bealde, Geoffrey Daghe, John de Sellinge, Stephen de Molesse, and Simon Baldok, who had seized and carried off distresses taken by the Abbot of Faversham from various persons, his tenants. Dated at St. Albans, 16th June, 34 Edward I.

A copy, on parchment, imperfect at the beginning, of a release by the King to the Barons of the Cinque Ports for various sums of money due from them. Among other sums is mentioned "500*li*. in which we were bound to Germerius Alard, the Admiral, William Pate, Justin Alard, William Charles, of Sandwich, and John de Hall, of Doverre, Captains of the fleet of the Cinque Ports aforesaid, in the parts of Scotland, in the 28th year of our reign . . . Also, 1297*li*. 19*s*. 2*d*. in which we were bound to Reginald de Peyn and divers others, of the ports of Wynchelse, Sandwich, and la Rye." Dated 6th of June, 34 Edward I.

A large indenture, in Latin, on parchment, with a small fragment of the Abbey seal, in pink-coloured wax, appendant by a silk cord; made between Clement, Abbot of Faversham, and the Convent, lords of the manor of Faversham, of the one part, and all the men of the community of the vill of Faversham, of the other; as to "gavelkesetre," explained as a payment of *1*d. for each brewing exposed to sale; "fenestrage," a custom of one farthing received from every dealer in the vill exposing wares for sale in his window on Saturday; and toll from such dealers in the town as are not tenants in chief of the Abbot and Convent; the same being released for a yearly rent of 10 pounds to the said Abbot and Convent in pure and perpetual alms, until 10 pounds' worth of land in Kent shall have been provided for them, in place thereof. Dated at Faversham, on Monday the Feast of St. Lucy the Virgin, 13th December 1310.

A receipt, on parchment, in Latin, by John le Blund, Sheriff of Kent, for 10 marks of silver, from Nicholas de Brenle, in part payment of 500 marks due from the Barons of Faversham, for a fine, for having again their liberties. Dated at Canterbury, on Saturday after the feast of the Nativity of St. Mary, 10th Edward II. The small round seal, in dark brown wax, is almost perfect, a shield charged with three lions passant, and having for legend, "S. Johannis fil. Edwardi Blunt."

A letter, in Latin, on a small slip of parchment, to the Mayor, Barons, and good men, of the vill of Faversham, from the Mayor, Bailiffs, and community, of the vill of Newcastle-on-Tyne. They have learned from their well-beloved fellow-burgess and neighbour, Gilbert Haukyn, that as his ship, called "the Godyer," laden with goods and merchandize, was on its way towards this town from parts beyond sea, a certain ship of the town of Faversham, called the "Skeynkryn," of which Gilbert de Dovorre was master, coming from the parts of Scotland, where it had been on the King's service, met the Godyer off the coast, near Oreforde [in Suffolk], on which Gilbert de Dovorre, Peter Hanyng, and other men-at-arms on board, of the town of Faversham, made an attack upon her, and chased her till she went ashore; by reason of which, in the hold (fundo) she was split from one end to the other; whereon Gilbert de Dovorre and the others boarded her, and carried off goods to the value of 20 pounds, to the damage of Gilbert Haukyn of 40 pounds. They therefore ask that, for friendship's sake, they will make the said Gilbert de Dovorre, Peter Hanyng, and the others, give satisfaction for the losses inflicted. Dated at Newcastle-on-Tyne, under the Common Seal, the 26th day of July, 14 Edward II. If this is the original communication, which seems not unlikely, the seal has been torn away.

A letter on parchment, in French, from the Mayor and Barons of Doverre to the Mayor and Barons of Faversham, inclosing a copy of a royal mandate, in French, to the Mayor and Barons of Doverre, dated at York the . . . of May 15th Edward II., under the Privy Seal; stating that the sovereign has heard that many misdoers have put to sea, with a great fleet, to molest him and them, and all his realm, and to injure merchants coming with victuals to them; that it is therefore his wish that all the Cinque Ports, and the towns with havens, shall make ready their ships with double equipments; and that he begs them, and charges them, "on" the faith and allegiance which unto us you owe, and "upon as much as unto us you may forfeit, life and limb, wife, children, lands and tenements, goods and chattels," forthwith to get ready all their ships, and to await commands from Robert Bataille, his Admiral. He further wishes that if any ship be taken at sea, it shall be brought to land, safe and sound, with the people, and they be safely kept, until it be known what and whose they are. When this matter shall have been disposed of, they are to withdraw, under advice of the said Admiral, to the parts of Scotland, to damage the enemy there in all ways that they know of and may. The Mayor and Barons of Faversham (as being a member of the port of Doverre) are therefore to have four ships fitted out forthwith.—"Unto God, and may He keep" you. By the bearer hereof, you will wholly certify "us, without delay." The usual complement of the Barons of Faversham, for the King's fleet, was one ship only.

Record, in Latin, on parchment, of an Inquisition, taken on Thursday after the Feast of St. Augustine, 1st Edward III., before Robert le Hert, Mayor, and Coroner of the vill and liberty of Faversham, and John Fleming, deputy of Stephen ate Dane, seneschal of the lord Abbot of Faversham, as to the death of Ralph Note. The jurors, whose names are given, find that he was feloniously slain by Robert de Kersebroke, Robert Pyn, and Thomas Bealde; and that Thomas Badekoc, Roger ate Hole, Richard Bealde, Richard Taylur, Richard Droylonde, Husburt Scheman, and William Haukenesshe, were assenting to such felony. Of the Jurors' 12 small seals, ten in brown wax, more or less broken, are still appended.

A small parchment, with writing in French, with a fragment of a seal, in green wax, on a thong of parchment inserted, at the end of which is written "Au Maire et Barons de Faversham par le Maire et Barons de Dovorre." The authorities of Dovorre hear that Robert de Kersbroke and others are in the prison of Faversham for the murder of Ralph Note, the said Robert being indicted and appealed thereon by the wife of the said Ralph; that mainprise for him has been tendered, and is still ready to be tendered, but the Bailiff has refused to take it, by their (the authorities of Faversham) procurement, and that of their allies, "to the great blemishment of our estate, and against the award of all the Cinque Ports, in which award, in case of the death of a man, every one is replevisable, if the perpetrator is not found with a bloodstained weapon in his hand over the dead corpse." They therefore fear that the Constable will make entry upon the franchise for such a default, which would be very prejudicial to them both.—"Wherefore we do advise you, and do send you word that, having no regard to any persons by reason of affinity or any other thing, but only to your and our usages, you do confirm the same, and fully allow the bailiff to take the mainprise of the said Robert in the form aforesaid. Unto God, and may He have you in his keeping."

A small slip of parchment, in Latin, containing the finding of an inquisition taken on the death of Robert Pyn, of Faversham, before Robert le Hert, Coroner, on Monday after the Feast of St. Agatha the Virgin, 2nd Edward III. The Jurors find "that the said Robert Pyn, indicted for the death of Ralph Note, of Faversham, who was killed within the liberty of the vill of Faversham, and imprisoned for the said felony, died of a disease with which God for a long time past hath visited him, Robert Pyn, and not by the impress of any other grievance inflicted on him." The Jurors' seals, if ever they were appended thereto, have disappeared.

A small parchment, in Latin, containing the finding of an inquisition, taken on Wednesday the Feast of St. Thomas the Martyr, 7 Edward III., before Stephen de Upmantone, then Mayor, and Coroner of the vill of Faversham, as to the death of Stephen atte Melle. The Jurors, whose names are given, say that William le Valons, of Faversham, on Sunday the Feast of St. Stephen, met the said Stephen, at night, on the king's highway, near Snorhelle, assaulted and beat him, and stabbed him with a knife, valued at one halfpenny; of which wounds on the following Wednesday he died. The seals of the Jurors, originally set thereto, are lost.

A small parchment indenture, in Latin, stating that on the 20th of June, 11 Edward III., a covenant was made between William atte Forstalle, Peter Shipman, John his son, Peter Lucas of Hamme, and John de Wy, of the one part, and the Mayor and community of Faversham, of the other part; that they should let to the said Mayor and community a certain ship called "Le Katherine," with all her rigging and gear, for the King's service, wherever the King might please; and after such service, on the said ship coming safe to Faversham, "the said Mayor and community shall pay as large a sum for the hire of such ship, as any of the Cinque Ports, for the hire of any ship, and of such tonnage, let to them, shall see fit to be paid, upon faithful inquisition made." The seals, originally set thereto, are lost.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, of the same date as the preceding, whereby the parties there named, William atte Forstalle and others, agree that, though the Mayor and community of Faversham are bound to them in 100 marks sterling for a certain ship called "Le Katherine," if the said ship, after going on the King's service, shall return safe to the port of Faversham, then the said writing obligatory shall be held as null. But if, in going or returning, it perish by peril of the sea, then the said writing is to hold good. Of the five small seals, in green wax, three are perfect; one has a shield charged with three birds, and two have fanciful devices; the legends would be very hard to decipher.

An indenture in Latin, mutilated, with a small seal in red wax, broken, dated 1st September 26 Edward III., whereby the Mayor and community of Faversham release William de Makenheuede from payment of the tallages and contributions, for 3s. 4d. of silver by him yearly, in name of tallage, when it falls due, to be paid.

An indenture in English, neatly written, a fragment of the seal, in red wax, left; of which the following is a transcript:—"This endenture, made betwene Johane Hille of Londone, widewe, one that one part, and Johan Wotton, Johan Syngler, Johan Ulffe, William Wellis, and Johan Poland, parissheas of the parisshe church of our Lady in Feversham in the counte of Kent, witnesseth that whereas the said Johane late solde unto the seide parissheas v newe belles of accorde, whereof the most weythe xxxiii c (cwt.) 1 quarter xxiii lb, the seconde xxxiii c di (and a half) and xliii lb, the thirde xviii c di (and a half) and xvi lb, the fourthe xliii c xii lb, and the fifthe xc, xlii lb; accomplishing every c (cwt.) after 100, pris the c 27s.; which v new belles the seide Johane her executors or her assigns shall warrant hoole, well sownyng (soundyng), and of good accorde, from the day of the making of this endenture unto the ende of an hool yere and a daye thanne next folowing. A parchment deed of pardon, in Latin, under the Great Seal of England, still appended, in white wax, though much mutilated; dated at Westminster 7th July 28 Henry VI. For numerous reasons there set forth, and "persuaded and moved by these and many other pious considerations, and among other things, by the most humble and most instant supplications, prayers, and requests, of our most serene and most beloved bedfellow and consort, the Queen; to which, so far as with God we may, it befits and becomes us to incline our mind, we do remit and withdraw our commotion of mind, indignation, and anger, from John Sencler of Faversham, Esquire. William Barbour of Faversham, the elder, Gentilman, Simon Orewell of the same, bruer, John Ulfe of the same, fishmonger, Richard Braytone of the same, bruer, Richard Croft of the same, Gentilman, Robert Wastell of the same, bocher, John Orewell of the same, bruer, John Londone of the same, yoman, John Poland of the same, glover, William Welles of the same, bocher, Stephen White of the same, tanner, and Thomas Stede of the same, yoman, and all and singular other the men within the vill of Faversham, and liberty thereof, dwelling," for having taken part with John Mortymer, in his rebellion. In history, Mortimer is more generally known as "Jack Cade"; but, during his lifetime, he was styled John Mortymer, even in the royal pardon that was granted to him personally, before his final outbreak. He was slain on or about the 11th of July, some four days after the date of the present pardon; upon the grant of which to various groups of them, his followers almost universally fell away from him. In the Illustrations of Jack Cade's Rebellion, published in 1869 by the late Mr. B. B. Orridge, page 63, Richard Brayton, above-mentioned, is called "Drayton," but in error.

A parchment indenture, in English, the seal lost, dated the 12th of December, 38 Henry VI., between "Johane Sturdy, of Londone, Widewe," and John Oulf, Mayor of Faversham, William Thornbury "Vicary of the parisshe churche of Feversham aforesaid," William Nortone, Esquyer, Johan Londone, and Thomas Calf, "Churchwardens of the parisshe churche aforesaid," she having sold them a new tenor bell, weighing 35 cwt. 4 lb., at 120*lb.* to the cwt., price 26s. the cwt., and warranting it "hool, sufficient, well sownyng, and of good accorde unto an olde meen belle longyng unto the said parisshe churche, fro the day of the date of this indenture unto the ende of a hool yere and a daye then next folowing," in case of default of workmanship within that time, she is to supply another and perfect bell in its place, at her own cost; the purchasers however paying the expenses of carriage, recarriage, taking doune, hanging up, and "alle other costes about the same," she paying, however, 10 shillings sterling towards such carriage. reverse of the indenture is the following additional entry:—"Forthermore, thys indenture wynessyth that the olde tenor bell of Faversham weyde xxxiii cut. dim. Qy. if Johane Sturdy was the same person as Johane Hille, before mentioned?

An indenture, on parchment, in Latin, with a small red seal dated 20th September 15 Richard II. Whereas William Godinogh has by deed indented granted to Thomas Chicche, of Balverle, a yearly rent of 20 shillings from a messuage in the Wolmarkette, in Faversham, the said Thomas Chicche now grants the same rent for life to William de Makenade. The deed is gashed through and through with a knife, implying probably that it had been annulled, or the term had been satisfied.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, with the two seals, in red wax, of William Godenough and Elena, appended, one representing a star, the other, apparently, two, initial letters. By it John Dreylond the elder and 13 others named (in what right or capacity is not stated) demise to William Godenough of Faversham, and Elena, his wife, two messuages situate together in the Wollemarkete of Faversham, for the whole term of their lives. Dated the 4th of April 22nd Richard II.: Witness, William Mennu, Mayor, Semann atte Tongge, Peter Reve, John Gate, John Fowlkisswode, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a seal in red wax, the impression indistinct, dated on Monday before the Feast of St. Matthias 5th Henry IV.; reciting the preceding deed, and stating that as Elena, surviving her husband, William Godenough, is entitled to the said two messuages for her life, she surrenders her right therein to John Dreylond, and 13 others named. Witnesses, Semann atte Tonge, William Menen, John son of John Dreylond, Robert Henxselle, Peter Reve, William Wade, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a red seal, originally perhaps a fine impression of a shield, with three animals rampant, dated on Wednesday before the Feast of St. Matthias the Apostle, 5th Henry IV. By it, Thomas Chicche, of Godnestone, near Faversham, releases to John Dreylond the elder and 13 others his right to a yearly rent of 20 shillings issuing from the two tenements before mentioned, in the Wollemarket. Witnesses, Semanne de Tongge, Mayor, William Menen, William Ledes, Laurence Lonceford, Robert Henxhille, Peter Reve, John Reve, William Wade, Robert Tounbrige, "and many others."

On parchment, in Latin, record of a fine made in the Halimote holden at Faversham on Wednesday after the Feast of St. Thomas the Martyr, 9th Henry IV., before William Houslond Mayor, John Haukyng Deputy Seneschal, Semann de Tonge, Richard de Tonge, William Menew, Laurence Lonesford, Walter Not, John Paytefyne, Jurats of the vill aforesaid, between John Faversham and Agnes, his wife, complainants, and Thomas Denys, "Scryvener," and Cecily, his wife, defendants, as to a messuage in Faversham.

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a seal in red wax, a crown and capital letter for device; whereby John Bernes, of Ikelysham, near Winchelsea, grants to Henry Fynche, William Bakere, and Robert Alard, a messuage, and an acre of land in Ikelysham, situate near the land of John Ichyngtone, called "Potynaacre," near the lane called "Brokestrete," to the South, the land called "Strodmannefeld" to the West, and the land called "Kynseswyshe" to the North; also, half an acre of land, called "Nepacre," near land formerly of John Tonstall, to the South, land called "Forecroft" to the West, and a small water-course called "Fore-strem," to the North. Witnesses, John Fynche, Esquire, Thomas Ichyngtone, Henry Hancock, Richard Shepherd, Stephen de Ichyngtone, "and others." Dated at Ikelysham, 10th June 31st Henry VI.

A small deed, in Latin, on parchment, with a fragment of a red seal, and tied to the preceding one, with a rush, dated the 4th of July, 1st Edward IV.; whereby the same John a Bernes grants to the three persons before named, all his goods and chattels, moveable and immovable, living and dead, which he has within [the realm] of the King of England. Witnesses, John Fynche, Esquire, Robert Alard the younger, Henry Hancock, "and others." Both these conveyances, not improbably, were, secretly, to religious uses.

A Latin deed, on parchment, in a sort of running hand, with a fragment of a red seal left, of which the following is a translation:—"Know all by these presents that I, William Thornbury, Clerk, have made attorney "in my place William Smythe, to enter in my name "into all my lands and tenements within the vill of "Faversham, and to deliver full and peaceful possession "and seisin thereof, in my name, to Richard Thornbury, "John Mersfelde, Clerk, William Watsons, Clerk, "William Chubb, Clerk, Philip Austyne, Clerk, John "Pympe, Reginald Pympe, Robert Billesdone, and "Simon Orewelle, the younger, son of John Orewelle; "to have to them and their heirs for ever, to fulfil my "last will therewith; holding as ratified and established "whatever my said attorney in my name shall have "done in livery of seisin aforesaid. In witness whereof, "to these presents I have set my seal, the 3rd day of "August, in the year of the reign of King Edward the "Fourth the 14th."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with fragments of two seals, in red wax, left; whereby Richard Gyldford, Esquire, and Thomas Pette, release and quitclaim to John Fyneux and John Nethirsle, all their right to lands in the parishes of Osprenge and Stone, in the places called "Syndone" and "Asshele," lately belonging to John Thornbere. Dated the 19th of July, 16th Edward IV.

A parchment deed, in Latin, with one of the two seals left, in red wax, with a worn impression; whereby John Orewell and Richard Woode let to William Thornton, Richard Bedlye, Thomas Vynour, and William Colte, their tenements or messuages, with the gardens, within the vill and liberty of Faversham, in Prestonstrete, near the Cross there, called "Hogges Crosse;" which they had, with Richard Martyne and John Londone, now deceased, by livery of William Helman, of Ospringe. Dated 20th June, 21st Edward IV. "Witnesses, Edward Thomassone, then Mayor of Faversham,"—no more are named.

An indenture, in Latin, on parchment, dated 2nd of January, 4th Henry VII.; whereby Robert Billesdone, Richard Bedlye, Thomas Childewelle, and Robert Benyngham, Churchwardens of the parish church of St. Mary, in Faversham, let to John Hood, of Faversham, carver, two tenements, situated together, in the Middulrowe, formerly belonging to William Thornbury, Vicar of Faversham, for a term of 20 years, at a yearly rent of 12 shillings; he in the meanwhile to keep the said tenements "wyndetight and watertight." A seal in red wax is appended, the impression effaced. On the outside is written, in an almost contemporary hand,—"This "wrytteynge ys of the church howsse in the Mydelle "Roye, next to Robarde Smythes howsse."

A large indenture, in English, bearing date the last day of June, 19th Henry VII., with a small red seal, the impression worn away, between Reynold Lewkmour and Jane, his wife, of the one part, and Sir William Scott, Knight, of the other. By fine levied by the said Reynold and Jane, in the Court of King's Bench, a messuage and 40 acres of land, 30 acres of meadow, 83 acres of pasture, 3 acres of wood, 140 acres of fresh marsh, and 20 acres of salt marsh, in the parishes of Ikelsam, Gestlyng, Westfeld, Odymer, and Brede, in the county of Sussex, were acknowledged to be the right of the said William Scott; by this indenture it is witnessed that the said William Scott shall, at the request of the said Reynold, make such estate therein, and to such person or persons, as the said Reynold shall desire. The rest of the indenture is occupied with the various names of the pieces of land above-mentioned, to distinguish them from other lands in the same parishes, still belonging to the said Reynold and Jane.

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a diminutive seal in red wax; dated the 12th of April 4th Henry VIII.; whereby Reginald Lewkenore, Esquire, of Smethe, in the county of Kent, grants to Edward Scotte, son of William Scotte, Knight, Robert Sawnder Esquire, William Brent, Roger Twyssyndene, Gentleman, George Bachelor, and William Herte, a messuage called "Broke," and the lands in Sussex mentioned in the preceding indenture; upon certain trusts, no doubt, not here specified.

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated the 11th of March 23rd Henry VIII., whereby Richard Dryland the elder, Roger Twyssydene, Robert Maycote, Gentleman, and Thomas Wydresse, set forth that, at the request of Reginald Lewkenore, of Faversham, they have released and quitclaimed to William Hart all their right and title in a tenement called "Wykham," and in the Fresh marsh and Salt marsh, formerly belonging to John Leveth, of Grove, late of the parish of St. Leonard's, near Hastings, lying between the Newgate of Wynchelse and the Newalle, near the Goote, and extending from Clyveaxe to Dynesdale; they, with two others now deceased, having had the same to the use of the said Reginald Lewkenore. The four seals, in red wax, are still appended: Roger Twyssynden (an ancestor probably of Roger Twysden, the antiquarian of the 17th century), has signed his name also, the device on his seal being a lamb. Two of the others also sign; but Wydresse is a marksman, with a rude triangle for his mark, the device on the seal being two flails crossed.

A parchment deed, in Latin, of the same date as the preceding, one of the two seals, in red wax, that of Roger Twyssynden, still appended; by it Edward Scotte, Esquire, son of William Scotte, Knight, deceased, and Roger Twyssynden, "Gentylman," at the request of Reginald Lewkenore, Esquire, of Faversham, release and quitclaim to William Herte, their right in the messuage and estate, called "Brooke," in Sussex, previously mentioned: the other trustees being now deceased. Both Edward and Roger have signed their names; the latter as "Twyssden."

Commission under the Great Seal, in Latin, dated the 5th of March, 5th Edward VI., a portion only of the seal left; to Thomas Cheney, Knight of the Garter, Warden of the Cinque Ports, the Mayor of Faversham, Thomas Moyle, Knight, Reginald Scott, Knight, John Norton, Knight, Antony Sandes, Christopher Roper, and Robert Rudstone, Esquires, to try treasons, misprisions, insurrections, rebellions, unlawful assemblies, murders, felonies, etc. committed in Faversham.

The other documents of any antiquity that seem to deserve notice, are the two following.—A deed with two seals in black wax, the devices on which are almost wholly effaced, belonging to the 17th year of Richard the Second, and bearing reference to property at Ipswich, in Suffolk. How it and the following deed reached its present locality, can only be surmised; not improbably they were put in the hands of some former Common Clerk of Faversham for safe custody. Translated from the Latin, the deed is as follows:—

"Know present and to come, that we William Redberd, of Ipswich, and Joan, my wife, have granted, given, and by this our present charter confirmed, to Isabel Frost, of the same, her heirs and assigns, one place of vacant land, with its appurtenances, in the suburb of Ipswich, and lying in the parish of St. Clement; namely, between the common way going from Caldevallestrete to Clementistrete, on the east side, and the King's highway called Clementistrete, on the west side; one head of which abuts upon the common soil of the vill of Ipswich, and a certain common well there towards the south, and the other head abuts upon the tenement of the same Isabel, to the north; which place of land, with its appurtenances, we lately had, among other lands and tenements, of the gift and feoffment of Walter Parsey; to have and to hold the aforesaid place of land, with its appurtenances, to the before-named Isabel, her heirs and assigns, of the chief lords of that fee, by the services due and of right accustomed for the same, for ever. And we, the aforesaid William and Joan, and our heirs, will warrant the aforesaid place of land, with its appurtenances, to the said Isabel, her heirs and assigns, against all persons for ever. In witness whereof, to this present charter, we have set our seals; these being witnesses, Gilbert de Boulge and William dil Fen, bailiffs of the vill of Ipswich, William Mayster, Amisius Baldry, William Wade, John Bere, John Kene, and others. Given at Ipswich, on Sunday the Feast of St. Thomas the Apostle, in the year of the reign of King Richard, the Second after the Conquest, the 17th." On the back is the following contemporary indorsement, in Latin:—"At a Court of Small Pleas of the vill of Ipswich, holden there on Thursday after the Feast of our Lord's Epiphany, in the 17th year of the reign of King Richard the Second, before Gilbert de Boulge and William dil Fen, bailiffs of the vill of Ipswich, John Arnald and John Plombe, coroners of the same vill, in the presence of Henry Walle, Robert Lucas, John Avelyne, William Russel, Richard Clerk, and other reputable burgesses, then in the same Court

"being, recognizance was made of the freehold in this charter contained, as is more fully set forth in the roll of recognizances in this same year made."

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a small red seal, the device faint, and almost obliterated; whereby Margaret Lathecold, in her pure widowhood, grants to Walter Arnold, Chaplain, John Stirwhit, of Ipswich, and Robert Brid, of Resshemere, son of Thomas Brid, of Ipswich, the tenement in the parish of St. Clement, Ipswich, between the tenement of John Gerard, on the South, and that late of Thomas Trevel, on the North; which she and her late husband, John, had of the gift of the said Thomas Brid. Witnesses, William Debenham, and Hugh Hoo, then Bailiffs of the vill of Ipswich, John Lucas, William Chambre, then Coroner of the same vill, John Gerard, Thomas Grubbe, Thomas Goodloke, "and many others." Dated at Ipswich, 27th of April, 3rd Henry V.

I have the pleasure of here acknowledging how much I am indebted to F. F. Giraud, Esq., the Town Clerk of Faversham, for his courtesy in affording me every facility for making this Report, and in giving me much useful and interesting information in reference to the past history of his native place; a subject which he has made so peculiarly his own.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

RECORDS OF THE HOSPITAL OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW, AT HYTHE, KENT.

HOSPITAL
OF ST.
BARTHOLO-MEW.

At the request of H. B. Mackeson, Esquire, the present Mayor of Hythe, one of the Governors of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, in that town, I have examined, and here report upon, the earlier of the existing records of that institution.

As already stated, in the Fourth Report of the preceding Commission, with the exception of the earliest Charters of Hythe, and a few ancient deeds still surviving among its records, we have no information whatever as to its inhabitants, buildings, or localities, prior to the latter part of the reign of Edward the Third. To some extent, the earlier deeds of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew will be found to supply the information that might have been gained from many of the town documents which, no doubt, have perished; while, at the same time, they throw light upon some points which are otherwise involved in obscurity.

According to Fuller, the ecclesiastical Historian, the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, for poor men and women, was founded by a native of the place, the Confessor of King Edward the Second, Hamo, or Haymo, de Hythe, who was Bishop of Rochester, from A.D. 1315 to 1352; but, on the authority of the earlier of the documents here for the first time brought to notice, we find that the Hospital was in existence in the time of Edward the First; the community, or "Convent," being known as "The Brethren and Sisters of the Chapter of St. Bartholomew" at so early a date as A.D. 1276, the fourth year of that reign; a fact which sufficiently negatives the assertion of the authorities upon which Fuller, no doubt, relied, as Haymo survived until May 1352 (or, according to Fuller, but erroneously, so late as 1355). As again suggested in the sequel, it seems not unlikely that the Bishop's father may have been the founder.

Among these records will be found a series of deeds, dated at various times in the year 1334, in reference to the endowment of "The poor men of the House of St. Andrew of Hethe," a once existing foundation, of which no other trace or memorial now seems to be left. From the words of a deed which will be found under the 11th year of the same reign (A.D. 1337) the House of St. Andrew was still existing, as a Hospital, in that year; soon after which, as no further mention is made of it, we may reasonably conjecture that its deeds and property were transferred to, and itself absorbed in, the prior and larger foundation of St. Bartholomew's. Of Bishop Haymo himself, except in a single deed, no mention is made, as benefactor or otherwise. On Thursday the Feast of St. Nicholas (6 December) in the 26th year of Edward the Third (A.D. 1352), on the 4th of May in which year Bishop Haymo had died, we find Thomas de Hethe, (probably a kinsman of his), the then Rector of Retherfeld (in Sussex), granting and confirming to the poor Brethren of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, all the lands, tenements, rents, farms, and possessions, which he had acquired of certain persons (named), "in the name of my lord, Sir Hamo, by the grace of God, Bishop of Rochester," then lately deceased; seeming to imply thereby, though perhaps in somewhat doubtful language, that Bishop Haymo was a benefactor to the Hospital to that extent. Under all the circumstances, it seems not unlikely that Bishop Haymo was founder of the Hospital of St. Andrew, and that this fact, in addition to that of his having been a benefactor, at his death, to the foundation of St. Bartholomew's, gained for him eventually the reputation of having founded the latter. Be this as it may, the foundation deed or deeds of St. Bartholomew's are not in the possession of the Governors of the Hospital, and the name of its founder must, for the present, remain unknown.

The following is a condensed account, in chronological order, of these documents, illustrative of the remote history of the place; under the numbers which have been attached to them for the purposes of reference, but irrespective of date.

In early times, it will be seen, the Hospital was governed by a "Master;" but at a later date a "Prior" took his place, and in the 17th century, as mentioned in the sequel, the chief official of the house was still so named.

74. A parchment deed, in Latin, finely written and in good preservation, but the seal lost; dated "on Tuesday in Easter week, A.D. 1276, and the 4th year of the reign of King Edward [the First]:" by it Alan de Ash or Atte Nash [de Fraxino] grants to the Brethren and Sisters of the Chapter of St. Bartholomew, near Hethe, in pure and perpetual alms, a piece of land in the parish of Saltwode, which he purchased of William de Brochelle, adjoining land of William le Pyk and of Philip de Herringe, and adjoining the way which leads from the said Hospital to Saltwode. Warranty is given against all men and women, Christians and Jews. "And for this gift, grant, confirmation, warranty, and the impress of my seal, the said Brethren and Sisters, with their good and spontaneous will, have received Simon, son of Thomas Sharlat, into their house, to have dwelling in the same, and befitting charity of the house, while he lives. Witnesses, Sir Stephen de Forde, Rector of the church of Saltwode, William de Brochelle, William, his son, William le Pendere, William Clerk, Hamo Tanner, Andrew de Pedlinge, Stephen de la Dune, Ralph de la Lekede, William le Pyk, John Becke, John, his brother, John de Haekeshelle, Alan the Clerk, and many others."

42. A parchment indenture, in Latin, 30 Edward I., very faintly written, with a small seal, in green wax, apparently representing a dog, couchant; whereby Gilbert de Sende demises to the poor Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, near Hethe, a piece of land which he had of the gift of John de Lekede, in the parish of Saltwode, and near the land of Thomas de Brokshell, Knight, and of Richard Skrivain; for a term of 60 years, at a yearly rent of 10 pence. Dated at Saltwode, on Sunday after the Feast of St. Michael. Witnesses, Sir Thomas de Brokshell, Knight, John . . . , William de Yoclete, John ate Doune, Thomas ate Doune, Stephen ate Doune, William Treddere, "and others."

75. A parchment deed, in Latin, much mutilated, the seal lost, belonging to the second year of King Edward [probably, the Second]; whereby Thomas, "called 'Scot,'" grants and quitclaims to the Master, Brethren, and Sisters, of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew of Hethe, his right in a certain field called "Scottesteghe," in the parish of Saltwode, between the street called "Holestrete" and the land of John ate Lekede, on the west; and between land of Margaret de Brokshell and John de Oreford, on the north, and land of John le Hupe, on the south. He also quitclaims to them his right in one penny of yearly rent, which they were wont to pay him. Witnesses, Thomas de Brokshell, John de Lekede, William de Pedlinge, Richard de Brokshell, Thomas de Yoclete, John . . . , Roger . . . , "and others."

67. A parchment deed, in Latin, 3 Edward II., decayed and tattered, the seal lost; whereby Thomas Crul, of Hethe, grants to God and to St. Bartholomew, and to the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, his piece of land in the parish of Saltwode, with its hedges and ditches, near the land of the Archbishop, and of the "tenure" [manor] of the Castle. Witnesses, Master William Archer, then Rector of Saltwode, and Master of the said Hospital, William son of William de Brochelle, Knight, Thomas his son, William de Hethe, son of Hamo, William de Pedlinge, Thomas de Yoclete, William Lad, Alan de Estwelle, John ate Stone, John Haekeshelle, John Tanner, Alan Kenteys, William de Fifhyde, Clerk, and many others."

The above mention of "William de Hethe, son of 'Hamo,'" deserves notice. It is this Hamo, not improbably, who founded the Hospital of St. Bartholomew; and if he was also the father of Bishop Haymo, we can readily account for tradition ascribing the foundation to that prelate, in place of his less distinguished father.

55. A parchment deed, without date, but probably 3 Edward II., the seal lost; whereby Richard, son of Thomas Crul, of Hethe, to ratify the act of his father, grants and quitclaims to God and to St. Bartholomew, and to the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, near Hethe, all his right in a piece of land which his father had granted to the same, in pure and perpetual alms. "For which my confirmation, quitclaim, and warranty, as aforesaid, made, and to be made, the same Brethren and Sisters have admitted" and received the said Thomas, my father, into their "confraternity, honourably and as is becoming, for all his future among them to remain." Witnesses, Master William Archer, Rector of Saltwode, Master of the same house, William son of William de Brochelle, Knight, Thomas his son, William de Hethe, son of Hamo, William de Pedlinge, Alan Kenteys, William Lad, Thomas de Yoclete, John de la Stone, Alan de la Doune, John Haekeshelle, Alan de Estwelle, John Tanner, William the Clerk, "and many others."

89. A parchment deed, in Latin, 1 Edward III., with a seal in white wax, a lily, apparently, for device; whereby John, son and heir of Thomas le Pin, of Stoutinge, grants to Henry Hikeman, of Hethe, a message and 3 acres of land, in Stoutinge, which came to him after the death of his said father; 10 marks sterling having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Nicholas de Inkepette, John de Inkepette, Robert his son, William de Inkepette, John Toulemounde, Henry de Inkepette, John de Cumbe, Henry Mellere, John atte Sole [at the Pond], Alan his brother, John son of Simon de Stoutinge, Walter de Inkepette, "and others."

35. A parchment deed, in Latin, 1 Edward III., the seal lost; whereby Henry Hikeman, of Hethe, grants to John, son of Thomas le Pyn, and Agnes, his wife, a message and 3 acres of land, which he previously purchased of the said John, in the parish of Stoutinge; for 10 marks paid beforehand. Witnesses, John Morgon, John [sic], his brother, William Grym, Stephen le Cosh, William Yol, John Coloppe of Hethe, Sir Peter, Rector of Stoutinge, John de Cumbe, Nicholas de Inkepette, Henry atte Sole, John atte Sole, Alan atte Sole, "and many others." The parish of Stouting is situate about 8 miles from Ashford, in Kent.

96. A parchment deed, in Latin, 6 Edward III., with a seal in brown wax, a flower for device; whereby Simon de Wald grants to the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew all his right in 10 pence of yearly rent which the said Brethren and Sisters were wont to render him for a piece of land in the parish of Saltwode, near the milldam of Simon Payne, and the land of the heirs of John Botsweyn, which is called "Lymyne." Witnesses, John le Hupe, then "Serjeant" of Hethe, Robert Brounyng, John Hamptone, Robert Boles, John Edwy, Simon Payn, "and many others."

61. A parchment deed, in Latin, 6 Edward III., the seal, in brown wax, broken, a star for device; whereby Simon de Wald grants to the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew part of a message, with buildings thereon, in the parish of St. Nicholas, between the tenement of John Fincelot and the other part of the said message which Richard, called "Shepherd," holds: also, 13 pence of yearly rent and one hen, which the said Richard Shepherd was wont to pay him; also, 2s. 6d. of yearly rent which Geoffrey Pennok was wont to pay him. Witnesses, John le Hupe, "Serjeant" of Hethe, Robert Brounyng, John Hamptone, John Edwy, William his brother, Robert Boles, John Beneyt, William Coting, Ralph Fincelot, Robert Payn, John ate Mershe, Roger May, "and many others."

59. A parchment deed, in Latin, 6 Edward III., with a small round seal, in red wax, a bird and a star for device; whereby John, son of Gilbert Bate, grants to God and to the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, and the Brethren thereof, one bushel of barley yearly from the land called "Northwelle," in the parish of Nyewentone, which the heirs of William Edwi, of Hethe, were wont to pay him. Witnesses, John Hope, Bailiff, Robert Boles, William Rok, John de Hamptone, Robert Brounyng, John Hikessone, "and others."

81. A parchment deed, in Latin, dated A.D. 1334, the seal lost; whereby John, called "Le Bor," grants to the Poor men of the House of St. Andrew, of Hethe, in pure and perpetual alms, and for the health of his soul, and of the souls of his ancestors, 5 pence of yearly rent, arising from a piece of land which Thomas de Brokhelle gave to the said poor by deed, in the vill of Hethe; also, 3 pence of yearly rent from a messuage formerly of Henry de Lustintone. Witnesses, John le Hupe, Bailiff, Robert Brounyng, John Hogelyn, Ralph Vincelot, Gilbert de Sende, Henry ate Stone, Robert Boles, Robert Payn, Simon his son, John ate Mershe, William Roke the younger, William Grym, "and many others."

15. A parchment deed, in Latin, dated A.D. 1334, with a round seal in brown wax, the impression doubtful; whereby Susanna, daughter of William Scarlet, of Hethe, grants and quitclaims to the Poor men of the House of St. Andrew, of Hethe, her right in yearly rents of 8 pence which John le Bor gave by deed to the same poor. Witnesses, John le Hupe, Bailiff, Thomas, son of Thomas de Sende, Robert Boles, Robert Brounyng, John Hogelyn, Henry ate Stone, Ralph Vincelot, John de Welhope, John de Rumfelde, Robert Payn, John Botesweyn, Gilbert de Sende, "and many others."

54. This is simply a bond executed by James Arter, to the Prior, Brethren, and Sisters, of the Hospital, in the year 1651.

Among the localities of Hythe and the neighbourhood found mentioned in the preceding documents are the following; some, perhaps now the greater part of them, wholly forgotten:—the Lekede, Scottesteghe, Lymvyne, the Down, Hevywater, Jombelleye, the Salt Hee, Schepladetone; the Comune Delf, Hog lane, Lampelonde, Bettispette, Rendebrok, Rokke, Damyet, Woderovelane, the Queen's rivulet, Rugghele; the Teghe, or Teze, and Teghelydemelle, in St. Nicholas, Northwell in Newyntone, and Oterpoule in West Hethe; of roads known as the "Homestrete," "Home-lane," or "Homewey," there were probably more than one.

Following the preceding deeds, there are various documents bearing date from the fifth year of Henry the Eighth to the reign of Charles the Second, the earliest deed in English belonging to the first date above-mentioned. Though the foundation was entirely divested of its religious character, no doubt, at the time of the Reformation, its Superior was still known as the "Prior," so recently as the time of Charles II., if not at a later date. From the later deeds above noticed, we ascertain that Edmund Copyn was Prior in the year 1514, William Olyfant in 1555, Richard Brachey in 1575, John Miller in 1583, Paul Brett in 1616, John Adams in 1646, and John Hoday in 1671 and 1674.

The following is a condensed account of a small number of early deeds, ranging between the reigns of Edward the Second and Henry the Seventh, which have been saved from the destruction that has overtaken nearly all the early archives of the town; and which have been placed in my hands by his Worship the Mayor, for notice in the present Report. They were probably, most of them, connected with conveyances to religious uses, and came into the possession of the Corporation, probably, in consequence of the patronage of the Churches of St. Leonard and St. Nicholas, then Chapels of the parish of Saltwod, being in its hands,—

A parchment deed, in Latin, the two seals lost, 7 Edward II.; whereby John le Tannere and Margery, his wife, daughter of John ate Stone, of Marsh, grant to John Storm, of Hethe, a piece of land, with the house thereon, in the parish of St. Leonard, near the land of Isabel Bordon; he to do the services due to the King for the same; 4ss. 4d. having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, William le Rok, Underbailiff of Hethe, William Edwy, Peter Brounyng, Thomas Brounyng, John Boles, John Comyne, John le Hope, Robert de Formadoue, Robert Pykot, John ate Stone, Henry ate Stone, Roger Mey, "and many others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, dated on Sunday after the Feast of St. Mark the Evangelist, 8 Edward II.; whereby John Storm grants to Reginald Miller and Alice, his wife, a piece of land, and house thereon, in the vill of Hethe, adjoining land of Isabel Bourdon, to hold to them "as the liberty of the port of "Hethe shall best require," at a yearly rent of 26 pence. Witnesses, William Edwy, John de Hamptone, John Dalmetone, John Wygeyn, Hamo the Tailor, John Oraford the elder, John son of Alan of Eastwelle, Robert Coupere, Henry Petman, John Wode-rove, Simon Mayhowe, Henry Merseye, John the Clerk, "and many others."

A letter of attorney, on parchment, in Latin, whereby John de Ryngwod, Rector of the church of Saltwod, appoints, as his attorney, his dearly beloved in Christ John Hickessone, to deliver seisin to Robert de Cotes of a message bought of him in the vill of Hethe. The oval seal, in red wax, represents a face, and has a filagree margin, and a legend at the edge, now almost wholly illegible. Dated in the 15th year of Edward III.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, faintly written, dated on Trinity Sunday, 20th Edward III., with two seals in red wax, one broken, representing a deer, the other in better condition, with the inscription I. H. S. apparently, and a fanciful device over it. By it Stephen Drake the younger, and Agnes, his wife, grant to John, son of John Botweyn, all the lands and tenements which came to them after the death of Agnes Potekokkes, "our mother," in the parish of St. Nicholas at Hethe, Witnesses John Mor, Thomas . . . Peter, . . . Thomas Canterberi, John ate Verne, Peter Tukker, Richard Batsweyn, "and many others." To this is attached a parchment indenture in Latin, with a small red seal, with shield, the impression indistinct, dated at Hethe, on Sunday after the Feast of Corpus Christi, 20th Edward III.; whereby the said John conveys to the said Stephen for life, with remainder to the Wardens of the church of St. Nicholas, at Hethe, for ever, the lands and tenements aforesaid. Witnesses, Geoffrey Pennok, Geoffrey Tailor, Stephen Atebrigge, John Mor, John son of John ate Berne, Robert Fyncloth, John Fyncloth, John Taverner, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, 27th Edward III., with a fragment of a seal in green wax; whereby John, son of John Batswein, of Hethe, grants to Gilbert de Sende,

Richard Batswein, Richard Scriveyn, Henry Wace, Peter Espeloun, and Gilbert de Coumbe, 2s. 2d. of yearly rent in Hethe, which he purchased of Martin le Frenche, arising from a tenement near the lands of Reginald Miller and of Isabel Bordoun. Witnesses, William Hamptone, Bailiff, John Hiwesone, John Braburne, John Stodene, John Pikot, Robert de Legbe Robert Fincelot, William Hughelot, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, 37 Edward III., the seal lost; whereby William, son of Walter Godde, of Hethe, quitclaims to John Stace and Gilbert de Coumbe, his right in a messuage, with edifices built thereon, in the vill and liberty of the port of Hethe, near the land of Peter de Sende, and that "of the Lord Archbishop of Christ's (Church) at Canterbury." Witnesses, William Hamptone, John Hughelyn, Peter de Sende, Simon Tannere, Thomas Smith, Henry Skrivayn, John Brabourne, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated at Hethe, on Sunday after the Feast of St. Luke the Evangelist, 4 Richard II., with fragments only of the four seals, in green wax, left; whereby William atte Broke, of Berham, Roger Langacre, Gilbert Payn, and Philip Kyngesforde, of Sellynge, release to John Munde, Butcher, and Robert Yonghe, Wardens of the church of St. Leonard at Hethe, towards the maintenance of the works of the said church, their right in a yearly rent of 12 pence and one hen; which they had of the gift of Richard Botsweyn, and arising from the tenement of John Colyn, mariner, in Hethe, in the West Ward thereof, and near the tenements of Thomas Canterbury and John Lukke. Witnesses, Thomas Casbourne, John atte Berne, William Hamptone, Henry Brownynge, then Bailiff, John Colyn, Mariner, "and many others."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, 16 Richard II., with two small seals, in brown wax, one with initials, the other, apparently, with a flower for device; whereby John Munde and Thomas Smythe, Wardens of the goods of the Chapel of St. Leonard, with consent of the parishioners, grant to John Newman, a piece of land at Rowshele, within the liberty of the port of Hethe, and abutting on lands of John Edyngham and of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew "near Hethe," to hold of the chief lord of the fee, by the services due for the same. Witnesses, William Sonyngelegh, Bailiff, Henry Brownynge, John Brodstrete, John Edyngham, Thomas Herbard, "and many others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, 4 Henry IV., with two small seals in red wax, one with the initial I, and the other a star formed of intersecting triangles, inclosing a smaller star in the centre; whereby Robert Rykedoune and John Cheseaman the elder, Wardens of the goods of the church of Hethe, grant and to ferm let to John Smythe and Joan, his wife, a tenement of the church, formerly belonging to Adam Wagepolf, near a tenement belonging to Thomas Martyn, "Smyth," at a yearly rent of 6 pence to the said Wardens. Witnesses, Roger Honyngtone, Bailiff, John Edyngham, John Colyn the elder, John Colyn the younger, John Sandre, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, 10 Henry IV., a portion of the round seal, in red wax, left, representing the Virgin, apparently, with a lily in her right hand; whereby Emota, relict of William Drake, of Hethe, grants to John Cheseaman the elder, and John Honeywode, "Bocher," of the same, Wardens of the goods of the Chapel of St. Leonard of Hethe, 13 pence of yearly rent arising from the barn of William Smythe, situate in the West Ward, near the land of John Martyn. Witnesses, John Suttone, Bailiff, John Dyn, Henry Philippot, John Martyn, Thomas Hendik, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, 12 Henry IV., having a small seal, in red wax, with indistinct impression; between John Cheseaman the elder, and John Colyn, Wardens of the church of St. Leonard of Hethe, and Roger Clerk and Alice, his wife. Whereas John Mayster and Christina, his wife, had granted to the said Roger and Alice a tenement in the Market Ward of Hethe, near the land late of John ate Stone, Barbour, and of Henry Brownynge and Walter Danyel, at a yearly rent of 2s. 10d. to the said Henry Brownynge, and of 2 shillings to the said Wardens; they, the Wardens, considering the ruinous state thereof, reduce the said rent to a yearly payment of 12 pence only. Witnesses, John Suttone, Bailiff, Thomas Casebourne, Thomas Bromleghe, John Edyngham, Walter Danyel, "and many others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, dated at Newyntone, on Tuesday after the Epiphany, 13 Henry IV. : the seal, of greu wax, in very fine preservation, having for impression I. H. S. surmounted by a crown. By it, John Hurty, of Hethe, grants to Simon Lokke, of the same, one acre of land in the parish of Newyntone, near lands of the Abbot and Convent of Saint Radegund and of William Canone, and lately bought of Walter Fyschere, of Hethe: he rendering to John Colyne and William Palmere, Wardens of the church of St. Leonard at Hethe, 14 pence yearly, at the Feast of All Hallows, Witnesses, Thomas Cheseaman, John Chiltone, John Kentone, John Stace, John atte Bergh, "and others."

A notice, on parchment, in Latin, dated the 13th of February, 2 Henry V., with a seal of brown wax, the impression and legend nearly effaced; whereby Thomas, Earl of Arundel and Surrey, Constable of Doverre Castle, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, notifies to the Jurats of Hethe, and the whole community thereof, that Henry [Chicheley], Archbishop of Canterbury, has appointed John Suttone Bailiff thereof.

A parchment deed, in Latin, 5 Henry V., with a small round seal, in brown wax, with a faint impression, representing, apparently, the Virgin and Child; whereby John Shepeye the elder, of Hethe, grants to Peter Happe and Margaret, his wife, a parcel of land in the West Ward of Hethe, near the land of the heirs of William Leghe, and the tenement of Richard Bate. Witnesses, John Suttone, Bailiff, John Leghe, Stephen Rye, William atte Meede, Nicholas Martyn, "and many others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, 8 Henry V., with a fragment of a seal in green wax; whereby John Coke, Robert Mongeham, and Thomas Sandy, "Brethren of the light of St. Katharine of Hethe," grant to Michael Wynde, of the same, "Portour," a vacant piece of land in the East Ward, near the messuage of the heirs of Nicholas Marshal; at a yearly rent of 4 pence, payable on the Feast of All Hallows. Witnesses, John Sundry, Bailiff, Alexander Appulford, John Skynner, Richard Rikedone, John at Ravene, Nicholas Martyn, "and others."

A parchment indenture, the counterpart of the preceding, with the same witnesses, with two out of the three seals, in green wax, one with an initial R, surmounted by a coronet, the other with the figure of a lamb. The letters cut through in the corresponding indentations of the indenture are, A. O. B. C. D. E. F. G. H. I.

A bond, on parchment, in Latin, 1st Henry VI., the seals torn away; whereby William Peeching, Thomas Goldfinche, and William Waryne, bind themselves in a sum of 10 pounds to keep the King's peace to all his lieges, and especially to John Baldwyne the younger.

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated 20th January 2nd Henry VI., with a red seal, with the initial W; whereby Thomas Casebourne grants to William Palmere and John atte Vyne, the tenement (in the next deed more fully described) which he had of the gift of Alexander Appulforde and Margery, his wife, and of John atte Wode, "Spisour," and Alice, his wife; to hold by the services due to the chief lords, and to the King, "according to the usage and custom of the said port." Witnesses as in the next, John atte Vyne and Honywode excepted. There is a third deed, with a fragment of a seal, dated the 15th of February, relative to the same property, being a grant thereof to Joan, relict of William Yoclete, at a rent of 4 shillings yearly.

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated 3rd February 2nd Henry VI., one of its seals left, in red wax, with the initial W; whereby William Palmere and John atte Vyne, of Hethe, grant to Alexander Appulforde and Thomas Casebourne, a tenement in the Market Ward of Hethe, near the Market-place, and between the tenements of the Archbishop of Canterbury and of Joan Yoclete, eastward, and of Henry Brownynge and Thomas Barbour, westward. Witnesses, William atte Meede, Bailiff, John Skynner, Richard Rykedone, Thomas Rollynge, Richard Veyrone, Jurats, John atte Vyne, Robert Honywode, Thomas Snelle, Bartholomew atte Wode, Commoners, "and many others." The witness, John atte Vyne, must have been another person than the grantor, so named.

A parchment deed, in Latin, 4 Henry VI., with a round seal in red wax, charged with a chevron, and, apparently, three mullets; whereby John Purle, Clerk, grants to Thomas Rollyng and John Holbein, Wardens of the goods of the church of St. Leonard, a parcel of land in the Market Ward, and near land of John Baldewyne. Witnesses, William atte Meede, Bailiff, John Colyn, Richard Rye, Robert Honywode, John Payfre, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, 5 Henry VI., with a fragment of a seal in red wax; whereby John Curlyng, of

A parchment indenture, in Latin, 4 Edward IV., with a seal of red wax, bearing an initial H; whereby William Waryne and Geoffrey Nowelle, "Guardians and "Wardens" of the church, or chapel, of St. Leonard at Hethe, with the consent of all the parishioners, grant to Agnes, daughter of Robert Cowper, a garden of the said church, in the West Ward of Hethe, at a yearly rent of 12 pence. Witnesses, Thomas Honeywode, Bailiff, John Honeywode, Thomas Ryggedone, John Lake, William Stace, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, 14 Edward IV., with a small seal, of red wax, representing a crescent, with the letter I above it, and a small coronet; whereby Richard Smalwode, William Luns, Robert Cristiane, Roger Saunder, Thomas Catelyne, and John Horne, "Wardens or Guardians of the Fraternity of St. Katharine of Hethe," with the consent of all the brethren thereof, grant and to ferm let to Thomas Malyne a parcel of land, with stone walls, in Market Ward, near land of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and near the prison and the messuage of the said Thomas Malyne, late of Henry Tamworthe, at a yearly rent of 16 pence, at the Feast of St. Katharine; with powers of distress and re-entry. Witnesses, John Sende, Bailiff, Thomas R[ig]done, Thomas Lighe, Walter Cowle, John Mershe, Jurats, "and many others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, dated at Newynton, 4th May, 22 Edward IV., with a seal of red wax, with the initial W; whereby Roger Saunder and Henry Hermone, "Wardens and Guardians of the goods and "chattels of the Chapel of St. Leonard at Hethe," grant and to ferm let to Thomas Cheseman, of the parish of Newynton, near Hethe, one acre of land in Newynton, near Stonestrete, and near to the lands of John Newhis, of the Abbot and Convent of St. Radegund (at Dover), and of John Sende, for 16 years, at a yearly rent of 16 pence. There are no witnesses to this deed.

Other deeds, of later date, do not seem to be equally deserving of notice.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

LAMBETH PALACE.

At Lambeth Palace are about 50 bags containing ancient documents; and the nature of the contents of these bags not being known, I was requested to examine them.

They contain nothing but several hundred parchment and paper rolls, ranging from the time of King Edward I. to the time of King Charles I., both included: but those of the times of King James and King Charles I. are very few. There are Court Rolls of various manors, the property of the See of Canterbury; ministers' accounts (computi) of their receipts from and expenditure on various possessions of the See; rentals of various manors; and some large rolls containing summaries of accounts of all the ministers, &c.

All these rolls have at some time within the last hundred years been examined; and a slip of parchment has been sewed to each document, except those in the two bags particularly mentioned below, stating, in two or three cases not correctly, the year of y^e king's or queen's reign to which it belongs; and a number is added, being the particular number of the document in the bag in question.

This shews that at the time of that examination a catalogue of the documents was made, and possibly that catalogue contained a description of each document. The catalogue has not yet been found.

Most of the rolls are in good preservation, but some few are rat-eaten; and some few (more particularly paper rolls) are in part much decayed. All are of value, as evidences of the extent and the ancient condition and values of the properties belonging to the See of Canterbury. The customs of manors, peculiarities of tenure, and modes of cultivation, and the distribution of population, are much illustrated by Court Rolls and Rentals; and computi very often give curious and interesting items in domestic economy. For local history all these documents will be found serviceable; and for the history of the county of Kent a large number of these rolls will be not only serviceable but essential.

All the rolls should be flattened; and the rolls relating to each separate manor should be arranged chronologically and be bound, or at least fastened, together. A catalogue should be made shewing the date and nature of each roll.

Two of the bags are labelled as containing Miscellaneous Rolls of uncertain date. A few of these deserve particular notice.

Temp. Edw. III. A roll of parchment about five feet long and five inches in width, imperfect at the head. One side contains Latin entries; commencing with a note of some event in the time of King Stephen; and a note that on the . . . of April, the feast of St. Vitalis, was founded [some religious house] A.D. 1220. These are followed by the dates of various early statutes, beginning with Magna Charta: Notes in French on law proceedings; and Memoranda of the ancestors of Asshe since the conquest, viz. From Hugo de Esse issued Richard de Esse, called Richard son of Hugo, which Richard married Agnes, daughter of Hugh de Wyndleshores with all her land in Henneley which Earl Baldwin de Redvers gave her by the service of a 4th part of one knight's fee: from Richard and Agnes issued William de Esse: William married Hawise, and they had issue a son William: this William married Joan, and they had issue a son Roger de Esse: Roger married Alice, and they had issue a son John de Esse: John married Margery, and they had issue a son John de Esse; this John married Ellen, and they had issue a daughter Margaret de Esse: Margaret de Esse married John son of Henry Knyghton, who had issue a daughter Eleanor (now alive), who married Robert Traluyrd.

A short pedigree of Knyghton follows: John de Knyghton married Denise, and they had two sons, Henry and Nicholas: Henry married Augusta, and they had issue a son John (who married Margaret de Esse).

Nicholas de Knyghton married Alice, who had issue Edith, now alive.

John de Knyghton and Denise his wife were seised of lands in Asshe Bozon, Jwerne Lazarton, and Jwerne Stapleton; and after their deaths Henry de Knyghton entered on the said lands as first son and heir, and while Henry was seised, Nicholas his brother released to him in fee all his claim of writing at Jwerne, 6 June 15 Edw. II.

John de Stapleton lord of Stapleton released to Henry de Knyghton a certain suit. 19 Edw. III.

In the 38 Hen. III. Nicholas de Knyghton and John Wyke, and one John Huppe, broke open a coffer in the manor of Asshe and took certain writings.

Henry de Knyghton gave to Nicholas certain lands in Ashe Bozon in 15 Ed. II.

The other side of this roll is entirely occupied with 42 stanzas of French verse, written corruptly as prose, in sentences of 53 lines each, which the Archbishop of Canterbury allowed me to copy. The first poem is a complaint by a lover of the obduracy of his mistress. The beginning is imperfect, the roll being torn. The 7th line of the roll seems to begin a new stanza.

... deuzie dame esgeirer reson de moi greuer car servi et proie vos al lonc tens en bone entencion nonques nul jor ne me feistes lie, malement al mon seruisse emploie se par servir ne vieng a guerredon.
He: fine amor troz mavez traueille ne mi lessiez morir desconseillie

* This seems to be a jeu parti by Jehan Brectol, a poet of the 13th century. Claude Fauchet, in his Recueil de l'origine de la langue et poësie Françoise, 4to, Paris, 1581, gives a notice of him, and short accounts of 37 of his compositions, none of which agree with this.

He was ap- pointed by the Prior and Convent of Canterbury, the See being vacant; but in 1351 the Archbishop removed him.—A roll of four membranes written on both sides. 14th century. A long roll of the household expenses of the Bishop, imperfect at the top and bottom. The first perfect entry is of "Wednesday, 5 November, at Euerichre [co. Somerset], and the last entry is at the same place on Friday, Dec. 5. On Monday, the 10th of November, he was at Cheddre, and there are payments for the Justices of the Forest. On Wednesday, Nov. 19th, he was at Wells, and there are payments for the horses of Lords T. and M. Berkeley, W. Rodeneye, T. Gurneye, G. Marlebarewe, E. Clyvedone, D. Bristolle, and R. Mudelneye, P. Willeseye, R. Somertone, and others. 33 Hen. VI. Account of Simon Thornham, clerk, collector of arrears of First Fruits of the Venerable Walter bishop of Norwich, from March 33, H. VI., to March 34, H. VI. A long roll; the entries are in several columns headed—Deanery, Names of Churches, Names of Par- sons, Money due, Money received, Excuses, and another heading rubbed and illegible. The total due seems to be 1,393l. 7s. 6d. 11 Edw. IV. Roll of accounts of a Collector of First Fruits of the Archdeanery of (town). It begins im- perfectly with a collection in the time of John Lapham: the next is of 38 Hen. VI. It is in sections, on one skin. The headings are of Places, Churches, Names, Amounts, &c. The jurisdictions were Suffolk and Sudbury. A parchment roll containing an inventory in English of the goods of Martin Walter Estone, late Canon of Chichester, appraised partly at Chichester and partly at London, by W. Barew of London, stationer.—Under the head of Jewels there is nothing but some silver plate.—In the chapel was 1 Missal not of Sarum use , valued at 20s. 3d.; and an old Portiforium: Liber De- cretalium , valued at 10s.; a part of John Andree's Com- mentary on the Decretals , value 8s.; a great Portiforium , called a LYGGER , value 6d. (13th century). A broad parchment roll: rental, &c. of Westgate.—In this it is stated to be the custom that when any stranger is taken for a crime or felony, the heirs of certain persons in respect of certain tenements were to keep the prisoner by night, and the miller of Westgate mill was to keep him by day; so that eight persons were to answer for the prisoner by day and the other by night. And the Lord was to furnish irons and fetters or cords (ferra et ligamina, &c.).

1500. Computus of Simon Rise and William Saunders, executors of Lady Katherine Haddon, widow. (A long roll.) There were many legacies to charities and churches, and much alms moneys.—The total allowed was 1135l. 11s. 11½d. The executors remained liable for 575l. 4s. 8d.

1513. July 1. Letter by John Incent LL.B. (official of the Archdeacon of Winton, and collector in the archdeaconry of Winton of a subsidy granted in a Convocation begun 7 Feb. 1511 and continued to 17 December) to William, archbishop of Canterbury.—Says he has received the letter of Richard bishop of Winton; he gives the names of all who are liable and all who are excusable. This letter is tied to a roll 5 feet long, filled with writing on one side, and on two-thirds of the other side; headed (in Latin) "Names of all priests within the Archdeaconry of Winton bound to the payment of the subsidy granted in the last Convocation, and of those excused and excepted from the like subsidy."

1517. View of the account of Edward Myrfyne and Andrew Judde, executors of the testament of Thomas Myrfyn, citizen and alderman of London, and one of the executors of the testament of Roger Hall, late citizen and grocer of London.

1517. Account of John Champneys in the name of Margaret, his late wife, relict of Roger Halle and executrix of Roger Halle's will.

A parchment roll containing very brief notes in Latin of the Archbishops of Canterbury, beginning with John Peckham and ending with Abbot. The name of each, with the time of his accession and the time of his continuance, are given. The top part of the roll is rubbed.

In a roll of accounts, temp. Edw. III., are notices of Poltingsilver at St. Andrews feast; Pesepans at Palm Sunday; Thechyngspan at St. Michael; Wodelode at St. Michael.

1510. Chapter House of Burton St. Lazarus.—Hogg Norton, Kt., Master of Burton St. Lazarus of Jerusalem in England, admits [] to the benefits of the fraternity. (No seal.)

In one of the bags containing rolls, temp. H. VI., is a roll on paper of the rental of manors and other possessions of St. Augustine's Monastery, 14 H. VIII., to 15 H. VIII. Total 1931 marks and 5s. 3d. The expenses in perpetual pensions, rents resolute, and pensions in each year amounted to 231 marks 11s. 8d.

In one of the bags of miscellaneous documents are—A very wide early roll of expenses at various manors, Northflete, Bynde, Lamtree, Herces, Wynheldane, Croynedene, Bradisten. And.

A Bede Roll, of two membranes, for John Kempe late Bishop Cardinal of St. Rufinus in the Roman Church, Archbishop of Canterbury. (He died in 1454).—It begins with "Titulus Monasterii S. Trinitatis Ebor:—Anima reverendissimi, &c., et anime omnium fidelium defunctorum per misericordiam dei requiescant in pace. Vestris nostra damus, pro nostris vestra rogamus.

There are 81 entries in this form, made at the various religious houses and churches to which the roll was carried for the purpose of getting their prayers for the repose of Kempe. The varieties of writings are interesting.—And.

A roll about six feet long and eight inches wide, A.D. 1499. Names of those cited to appear at Malmesbury on Thursday 7th of November, when Roger Church, Commissary, visited the Clergy and people.

On the dorse are the names of those cited to appear at Cricklade on Friday the 8th of November. From the various places both clergy and laity are cited. And.

Taxation Roll (c. temp. Ric. II., about 5 feet long and 7 inches wide) of the Temporalities of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and all the religious in the City and Diocese of Canterbury.

Sum of the taxation of all the Temporalities was 4,103l. 12s. 6½d.; and the tithe thereof was 410l. 17s. 3d.

Temporals in the jurisdiction of the Archbishop immediately subject:—total 961l. 17s. 10½d., and the tithe thereof was 96l. 3s. 10½d.

The total of both, 5,070l. 10s. 4½d.

At the commencement of a computus of the time of Hen. VII. (in one of the bags for that king's reign) is a well-drawn (pen and ink) shield of the armorial bearings of the then archbishop; and the initial letter C contains a pen and ink drawing—a female holding a cannette, shewing the female costume of the period.

The short notice and few extracts above given but (of course) a slight idea of the contents of the rolls; but the nature of the majority is shewn by my remarks at the beginning of this paper: and now that the public are, under certain restrictions, permitted to have access to the Archbishopial Collection of Printed Books and MSS., it seems desirable that these rolls should be so cared for and catalogued that their contents may be utilised.

OF LAUNCESTON.
TOWN.

THE CORPORATION OF LAUNCESTON, CORNWALL.

The following is some account of the now surviving records of the borough of Launceston, shown to me on the occasion of my visit, by Richard Peter, Esq., the Town Clerk.

A parchment deed, in good condition, temp. Henry III., with a fine seal appended, in green wax, being a grant (in Latin) of a Hospital and Chapel to the Leprous of Gillelmartin [now St. Leonards] by the Prior and Convent of Launceston [Lanceueton]. It is attested by Richard Earl of Cornwall, son of King John; Sir Richard, then Bishop of Exeter [Richard Blondy, Bishop 1245-57], Sir John, the then Archdeacon of Cornwall, Sir John de Lamford, the then Seneschal of Cornwall, Sir Reginald de Botreaux, Sir Gervase de Horniote, Sir Roger de Treloose, Sir William Wise, Hamon Miles, then Mayor of the borough of Dunhefd [or Dunhead, the former name of Launceston], Oliver Core, John the Dyer, the then Reeves, ["Prepositi"] aldermen, magistrates, or prefects], Henry of Trevelle, and many others. This grant is printed at length in Dr. Oliver's Monasticon.

Letters Patent, dated the first of May, 6th Richard II., (1383), as to the liberties of the Prior of Launceston [Lanceueton] and Borough of Dunheved, confirmatory of a certificate of the finding upon a Quo Warranto before the Justiciars Itinerant in the 30th of King Edward I. [A.D. 1302]. With the Knights summoned upon the Inquisition, the Jurors of "Estwyveshire" are named: no such locality is now known, but Launceston itself is in the "Hundred of East;" an abbreviation, perhaps, of its former name.

2nd May, 6 Richard II., (1383), Inspecimus, under the Great Seal, of the Charter of Richard Earl of Poitou and Cornwall, confirming and extending the Liberties granted by the Earl. Witnesses, Sir Andrew de Cardian, Sir Reginald de Vallitorta, Sir William de Bottellis, Henry Theutoneus, Andrew de Cancellis, Guido de Saint Amand, John Britask, Robert the Son of William, Henry de Bodrigan, Walter the Son of William, Roger de Treloosk, Nicholas, the King's Chancery Clerk, and many others.

Letters Patent, of 18th Sept. 1st Henry IV. (1399); being an Inspecimus and confirmation of the said Letters Patent of 2 May, 6 Richard II. Both the deed and the seal are in fine preservation.

A Charter of Pardon of the 25th January, 2nd Henry V., (1415), to the Mayor, Provosts, [Prepositi], and Commonalty of the Borough of Dunheved, or vill of Launceston.

12 May, 2 Henry V. (1414). Letters Patent reciting inspections of several previous Charters to the vill of Launceston, the most recent being one in Norman French from Edward, then lately Prince of Wales. In this Charter Henry V. recognizes that Assizes had been held at Launceston from a time beyond the memory of man.

Letters Patent, of Inspecimus, of 10th February 2nd Henry VII. (1487), confirming those previously granted. The seal is in fragments. A small deed is attached to the Letters Patent, granting that eight County Courts should be held in the burgh [Dunhevet] yearly; dated, apparently, in the 19th year of the same reign.

A Charter of Pardon to the Borough of Dunheved (Dunhevedburgh), 29th June in the first year of King Henry the Eighth (1509).

Charter of Inspecimus dated 16th of March, 6th Henry VIII (1515), in confirmation of preceding charters.

Charter, dated 15th of November, 34th Henry VIII. (1543).

Charter, dated 21st October, 1st. Edward VI., (1546). Inspecimus Charter of 14th February, 2 and 3 Philip and Mary (1555), illuminated with full-length portraits of the Sovereigns.

Certificate, 24th of July, 15th Elizabeth (1573), of Robert Cooke, Clarencieux Roy D'Armes, that the ancient arms of the Borough of Dunheved, alias Launceston, were gules, a keep or castle, gold, on a bordure azure, semey turrets of the second. And the right to use these arms is granted to the then Mayor and 8 Aldermen (who were respectively named) and their Successors. The arms are depicted on the Certificate, and are surmounted by a crest, a lion's head, gules between 2 plumes, springing from a Crown, or, and resting on a gorget.

Charter, dated the 3rd of March in the 1st of James II. (1685). The former Charters of Inspecimus are not herein recognized, and the Charter itself was probably among those of this reign which, after the Revolution, were declared to be illegal, and null and void.

30th of September, 22nd Charles II., (1670); grant of a standard bushel measure to the borough of Launceston.

Charter of 22nd July, the 34th of Charles II. (1682).

The oldest book, probably, now in the possession of the Corporation is a Court-book, a paper folio, somewhat decayed, with pleas in Latin, beginning A.D. 1566: in reference to actions of debt, trespass, detainer, and the like. One of the earliest pleas is (tr.):—"William Kendall makes plaint against John Austyne "in a plea of detainer of three dishes of silver." On the other hand, "John Austyne makes plaint against "William Kendall in a plea of debt.

The "Rent Roll of the Burghes of Dunheved, alias "Launceston," containing a schedule of tenements "holden of the same Burghes freely by custome, life, "years, and otherwise," which was collated in the 20th and 23rd years of the reign of Queen Elizabeth (1578-81). This Rent-Roll occupies the first 17 pages of a folio volume in old calf, its clasps lost. The residue of the volume, written chiefly in Latin, on above 600 pages, is "The Book of all Surrenders of Messuages," &c. within the Borough. The first surrender entered therein is dated 26th May, 20 Elizabeth (1578). The Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses of Launceston are Lords of the Borough a considerable portion of the land in the Borough is held of them by Copy of Court Roll, according to custom.

An unbound book, entirely in Latin, contains a "Session "of all lands, tenements, rents, services, and other "hereditaments belonging and accruing to the Mayor "and Commonalty of the Borough," taken at the Guildhall, 4 May, 32 Elizabeth (1590), "being 12 years from "the then last Session of Land" for the Borough aforesaid.

The form of Oath administered, 41 Elizabeth, to the Servientes ad Clavam (Sergeants at Mace) is written in one of the Court-books. These officers seem to have had large powers for preserving the peace and executing civil and criminal process within the Borough. The Jurors and the Sergeants occasionally make peculiar presentments to the Courts, e. g., 8 Elizabeth, "Ser- "vien ad Clava pnt Thoma Wadge [and 3 others], "for that they sell vitailles without aprons and use "theire fyngers & knyves fylthyllye." The Jurors at a "Session of the Peace and Law Court" held 31st March, 12th Elizabeth, present, "Suche as do not come to "Churche to serve God not in long tyme. There "excuse is that they be yn dept; So that by that "meanes they displede God more wayes than ij or iij. "We praye you, Mr. Mayor, to see an order for it, or "els to rede the Towne of such psons."

Under date 28 Nov., 24 Elizabeth (1582), is a list of 42 persons, apparently authorized to keep Inns [p Taŋna tenend] within the Borough. Over the name of each tavern keeper is written "C," and over the names of his presumed Sureties "I." These persons were probably bound in 5*l.* and 2*l.* 10*s.* respectively, to keep good rule in the house.

In 1587 the names of free tenants [Libor tenentim] of the Borough are alphabetically recorded. They are 78 in number. The same as to "Burgesses" [Burgeh], of whom there were 101, and of "Residents" [Noia Residen], 76. In 1599 the free tenants were 72, the Burgesses 115, and the Residents 71.

In the same year 1599 (30th April) twelve jurors presented "Mr. William Grilles and his man or his servant "Thomas Kenver for extorcon to be vied and taken of "th' Inhabitantes of this Towne and Country near "here aboutes in weighing their Woll and Yarne."

Item, Penitant, Mr. Mayor now of this Towne for suffering of such extorcon to be vied and taken, and for suffering of smale weightes and measures within this Towne without reformacon.

CORPORATION
TOWN.

There is in the possession of N. H. P. Lawrence, Esq., of Launceston, a Rental book of the Priory of Launceston, dated 1474. Having been kindly favoured by him with an opportunity of examining it, the following are a few particulars in reference to it. It is a small folio volume containing about 56 leaves of paper, now inclosed in a handsome modern binding: the site of the Priory of Saint Stephen, to which its contents bear reference, is still known, but no vestige of it is left, with the exception of a Norman doorway, now removed to the White Hart Hotel. The first entry in the book is, in a clear bold hand,—"Launceston londe. Rentale ibidem "renovatum tempore Roberti Waryne, Prior [sic] "Prioratus Sancti Stephani, Launceston; anno Domini "millesimo quadragesimo septagesimo quarto; et "anno regni Regis Edwardi Quarti quarte decimo."—The names of the properties and tenants of the Priory then follow; and on the 8th leaf are the names of the burgesses of Newport 14 Edward IV.—formerly a separate borough, but adjoining to Launceston, and now absorbed in it. Further on, the volume contains (tr.):—"Names of the tenants of the manor of Launceston "londe, in the 14th year of the reign of King Edward "the Fourth." Copies of deeds and leases, and numerous abstracts of leases, are interspersed in its pages; for example,—"John Syssely has a lease, for "10 years, of Canonhale." Some of the tenants, as, for instance, Ralph Carkye, who holds Carsbroke, are bound to carry salt and lime for the Convent, when forewarned, on penalty of 12 pence for failure as to each cart. The tenants at Carnedon Prior seem, in almost every instance, to pay an addition of 4 pence to their fixed rent, for hens (gallinis); such tenants going under the name of "conventionarii" (covenanters), as distinguished apparently from the freeholders. The names also are given of certain "freeholders of Launceston- "londe, who ought to plough and reap there."

The following are a few ancient deeds, bearing reference to Launceston, or the vicinity, which have come into the hands of Mr. Northmore Lawrence, with properties now, or formerly, in his possession. For the transcripts which, by permission of Mr. Laurence, I had the opportunity of making, translations are substituted. The first belongs to the reign of Henry III., or the early part of that of Edward I.—"Know present and "to come that I, William Wysa, have given, granted, and by this my present deed have confirmed, to "Stephen Constable, for his homage and service, a moiety of the whole of the land which lies between "the way marked [quod ostendit] on the land which "belonged to Cau, and the water of Fawe, and the ditch "behind my mill, which shews itself running from the "mill-dam to the said water; to hold to him and his "heirs of me and my heirs or assigns, freely and quietly, peacefully and wholly, rightfully and hereditarily, for ever; rendering yearly for the same to me and my heirs or assigns 12 pence at 2 terms of the year; to wit, at Easter 6 pence, and at the Feast of St. Michael 6 pence, for all service, plaint, and demand, save foreign service; also, saving to me a certain piece of land to put my marl upon; and saving a certain way, 20 feet in width, running from "the said piece of land to the highway. And if any plea arise, which pertains to me or to my heirs, it shall be pleaded within the land of Polscote, and not beyond. And if the aforesaid Stephen, or his heirs, shall fall under amercement, they shall, by payment of 3 pence, be quit as to the plea of one day; and when relief falls due, they shall be quit for 12 pence. And I and my heirs are bound to warrant the said land, with all its appurtenances, to the said Stephen and his heirs, or assigns, against all men and women for ever. And that the same may be ratified and unshaken, to the present charter I have set my seal. These being witnesses, Mark Cok, Andrew Bonifaz, Randulf Coynte, Walter de Tregennon, Philip de Wyche, and others." The "water of Fawe," above-named, is the river Fowey.

A deed, of much about the same date as the preceding; the seal perfect, with the impression of a coronet and the letter B (tr.):—"Know present and to come, that "I, Sir William Wysa, of Greyston, have granted, remitted, and quitclaimed, for me and my heirs or assigns, to William de Landu, and his heirs or assigns, for ever, all my right that I had, or could have, to one pair of white gloves, with homage and service, "which Thomas son of Richard de Landu, and his heirs or assigns, were wont to pay and to do yearly, unto me and my heirs or assigns, at the Feast of St. Michael; for that half acre of land which William Fridey "formerly held in the vill of Landu: with all the "appurtenances to the said pair of white gloves per- "taining, without any withholding of me and my heirs and assigns. So that neither I, the said Sir William, nor my heirs, nor my assigns, nor any other person for me, or on my behalf, in the name of rent or lordship, can in future exact, demand, or reclaim, any right or claim to the said [pair] of white gloves, with the appurtenances aforesaid. And that this my gift, grant, remission, and quitclaim, may remain ratified and unshaken for ever, I have corroborated this present writing with the impression of my seal. These being witnesses, John de Trekarl, Richard le Luggar, Robert de Meschen, Robert de Hurdin, Roger de Lansant, and others."

The vill of Landu, here mentioned, was situate in the parish of Lausant, now Lezant, about 5 miles from Launceston. Trekarl, or Trecarrell, gave name to an ancient family; Sir Henry, of which name, founded the body of Launceston church, in the earlier part of the 16th century. William de Landu and Walter de Landu were burgesses of Launceston, in the reign of Edward II.

A parchment indenture, with a fine seal attached, but in a mutilated condition (tr.):—"Be it known to all by these presents, that I, Henry, son of Robert Page, of "Launcetone, have given, granted, and released, to Roger de Lansant [and] the heirs of his body lawfully issuing all my right and claim of right, which I have, had, or in future may have, to the whole of the hall and kitchen in the vill of Landu, with the whole "third part of the land of the same vill to me belonging; to have the whole of the aforesaid hall and kitchen, with the whole third part of the land aforesaid, to the said Roger and the heir of his body lawfully issuing for ever. And if the same Roger shall die without heir of his body lawfully issuing, the whole hall aforesaid, with the kitchen, and with the whole third part of the land aforesaid, shall revert to me, the said Henry, and my heirs. In witness whereof, to these present letters indented we, the aforesaid Henry and Roger, have interchangeably set our seals. These being witnesses, Serlo Wysa, Henry de Trecarl, John Langedone, John Page, Henry Fox, and others. Given at the borough of Dounheved, on "Wednesday next after the Feast of the Translation of Saint Thomas the Martyr, in the eighth year of the reign of King Richard, after the Conquest the "Second."

A parchment indenture, with a seal in red wax, bearing the impression of two letters, but indistinct (tr.):—"To all the faithful of Christ to whom the present "writing indented shall come, Margery Hoigge, greeting in the Lord. Whereas of late, by my writing indented, I gave and granted to Philip Hoigge, my son and heir, all my messuages, lands, and tenements, with their appurtenances, in Dounhedeburgh, to have and to hold to the same Philip for the term of my life, for a certain rent in the same charter contained; know ye that I, the aforesaid Margery, the estate, title, and possession, of him, Philip, of and in all the messuages, lands, and tenements aforesaid, with the appurtenances, have approved, ratified, and confirmed to the same Philip by these presents: to have and to hold to the before named Philip, his heirs and assigns for ever,—a yearly rent of 24 shillings being reserved, with a power of distress.—"These being witnesses, William Cresse, then Mayor, and William Tharappe and William Drowe, then Provosts [or Reeves] of the vill aforesaid; John Scott, John Panstone, Henry Calve, and others. Given at Dounhedeburgh, the 5th day of the month of February, in the 8th year of the reign of King Henry, after the "Conquest the Sixth." The peculiarity in this deed is, that the then name of the place, "Dounheued," has the word "burgh" (borough) attached to it.

The following are translations of three ancient deeds, the property of Mr. Peter, the Town Clerk of Launceston, which he very obligingly gave me an opportunity of transcribing, at the time of my visit: they bear reference to the county of Dorset, in each instance.—The first belongs to the reign of Henry the Third [1216 to 1272]:—

"This is a final covenant made between Nicholas de "Wirleghe, and Margery, his wife, and Henry, his son and heir, of the one part, and William de Bengerville, and his wife and their heirs, of the other part; to wit, that the said Nicholas has granted to the said Henry his son, to take Sabina, daughter of the said William, to wife, under such form, that is to say; that the said William has given to the said Henry, in free marriage with his daughter, all the land

" which Roger de Bruera held in Thorenhill and in the plain of Kyngestone, on the day that he was living and dead, except the villenage, and except that land which he gave to Christ's Church, with all suits and liberties to the aforesaid land pertaining. The said William has also given to the said Henry ten oxen and four cows, twelve swine, and a befitting palfrey, with suitable trappings, and his daughter well and honourably arrayed. And if the said William shall depart this life, the said Henry shall receive a reasonable part of the whole land of the said William, with the said Sabina, his wife, as being the firstborn daughter and chief heir of the said William. But if the said Sabina shall depart this life without issue, the said Henry shall have the said land, so long as he shall choose to be without a wife. And if, after her, he shall marry another wife, the land shall return to the said William and to his heirs. On the other part, the said Nicholas has given to the said Henry, his son, and to the said Sabina, his wife, one hide of land in Uppwinborne, with all the appurtenances, which he held of the Countess of Winchester who was wife of Saericus de Quinci, and half a mark of rent which he had from Chautone, of the fee of Godfrey Frilond, which rent Serlo de Chautone was wont to render :—To have and to hold all their lives, to them and their heirs. And if the before-named Nicholas shall depart this life, the before-named Henry shall receive all the land of the said Nicholas, his father, as being his lawful heir. But if the said Sabina shall survive the said Henry without an heir, the same Sabina shall hold the aforesaid hide of land, with the rent of Chautone, in dower all her life; and from the whole of the land which the said Henry shall recover from the inheritance from his father, she shall receive her dower. And be it known that the aforesaid Nicholas, or Margery, his wife, may not, without the will and counsel of the said Henry and Sabina, diminish, sell, or alienate, his land. In like manner, neither may the aforesaid William sell, or diminish, or alienate, his land, without the consent and will of the said Henry and Sabina, unless it be to make provision for his daughters. And be it known, that in the first year of the marriage of the said Henry and Sabina, the said William shall support the said Henry and Sabina, and find them necessities: and in the second year, the aforesaid Henry ought to do the same. Also, the aforesaid lands, and the chattels aforesaid, given to the said Henry and Sabina, on either side, shall be delivered, by counsel of the said Nicholas and William, to some prudent man, to be invested and multiplied for a term of two years; and after those two years the said Henry and Sabina shall receive the said lands and the said chattels invested and multiplied. And this covenant strictly and trustily to observe the said Nicholas, and William, and Margery, have made oath. The said Margery has also made oath, at the hand of Henry, the Chaplain of Winborne, that as to the before-named hide of land, and as to the half mark from Chautone, she will exact no dower. And for greater security, the said Nicholas and the said William to this writing, interchangeably divided, have set their seals. These being witnesses, Henry Warine, Philip, Canon of Winborne, Richard, Franciscan, Robert and Henry the Chaplains, Giles de Craneborne, Nicholas Orfeure, Richard de la Dene, Richard Kaynel, William Bonelquier, Reginald Heudebant, William de Ston, Hamon de Hacheche, Peter, son of Richard de Hacheche, Peter the Clerk, who made this writing, and many others." By "Christ's Church," the Priory of Christchurch, in Hampshire, no doubt, is meant. Thorenhill is, probably, Thornhill, near Stalbridge, in the north of Dorset, and Kyngestone may possibly be Kingston Russell, eight miles from Dorchester.

The next deed, of the reign of Edward the First, bears reference to Leigh, in the parish of Wimborne, in Dorset, (tr.) :—

" Know present and to come, that I, Walter de Karenthom, have given, granted, and by this my present charter have confirmed, to Sir Walter de Wymborne, clerk of the Lord the King, one message, and all my land, with the meadow, heath, and all manner its appurtenances, which I had in the vill of Leghe in the parish of Wymborne Minstre, together with Gilbert le Buck and all his following [family, or isane]: to have and to hold all the aforesaid, with all their appurtenances, in all things and places, of me and my heirs, to the said Walter, his heirs or assigns whomsoever, freely, quietly, wholly, by hereditary

" right, and for ever: rendering yearly for the same to me and my heirs one rose, at Leghe, on the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist; and to the chief lord half a pound of cummin at Easter, for all secular services, exactions, and demands. And I, the said Walter, and my heirs, will warrant, acquit, and by the aforesaid service of one rose and half a pound of cummin, for ever defend all the aforesaid, with all manner their appurtenances, as is before stated, to the aforesaid Walter and his heirs, or assigns, against all men and women for ever. And that this my gift, grant, and confirmation, may remain ratified and established for ever, to the present writing I have set my seal. These being witnesses, Richard de Bekegate, Roger de Hyneton, Roger de la Hyde, Roger de la Dene, Walter de Winterborne, Peter de la More, Peter de Walteford, John le Faukener, and others. Given at Schirborne, on Wednesday in the week of Pentecost, in the seventh year of the reign of King Edward [1279]."

" Know present and to come, that I, John Normayle, of Almere, have given, granted, and by this my present charter have confirmed, for me and my heirs, unto Henry de Thornulle, cook, all mycroft, and all my inclosure [hayam], which lie near the garden of Sir Ralph de Gorges, the then lord of Almere, in length and breadth, as far as the wall of my hall, with free ingress and egress with wains and carts, and all other his cattle, at the west head of my house. To have and to hold the aforesaidcroft and inclosure, with free ingress and egress, to the aforesaid Henry, his heirs or assigns, of me, my heirs and assigns, freely, quietly, peacefully, and wholly, by hereditary right for ever. He, the said Henry, and his heirs or assigns, rendering yearly for the same to me, my heirs or assigns, one halfpenny of silver, at the Feast of Saint Michael, for all secular service, exaction, and demands. And I, the said John Normayle, and my heirs or assigns, are bound to warrant, acquit, and defend, the aforesaidcroft and inclosure, with free ingress and egress with wains and carts, and all other their cattle, as is before stated, to the aforesaid Henry and his heirs or assigns, against all mortals for ever. For the aforesaid gift, grant, and confirmation, and warranty of my present charter, the said Henry gives to me twenty shillings sterling in hand. And that this my gift, grant, and confirmation, and warranty of my present charter, may obtain corroboration as to stability and trustiness for ever, I have established the present charter with the impression of my seal. These being witnesses, Sir Ralph de Gorges, Knight, William de Kaleshale, Ivone Marcel, Andrew de Columbers, Gilbert Shortfrend, John de Dulre, William Bryan, and many others. Given at Almere, the 6th of the Ides of February, in the sixteenth year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Henry [1288]. Almer is situate about 5 miles from Blandford Forum. The Sir Ralph de Gorges here mentioned, was summoned to Parliament from the second to the 16th year of Edward the Second; but seems to have been the only member of this illustrious family upon whom that distinction was conferred.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

THE CORPORATION OF MORPETH.

There are in the possession of the Corporation of Morpeth, a considerable number of ancient deeds, of various descriptions, (many of them avowedly, and others probably secretly, to religious uses); which are not only of interest in themselves, but are of considerable value also, as embodying in them nearly everything that is now known of the remote inhabitants and early history of this place. With the sanction of the Mayor and Corporation of the town, and seconded by the kind assistance of Francis Brumell, Esq., the Town Clerk, I have had an opportunity of subjecting the earlier portion of these documents, from the reign of Henry III. to that of Henry VI., with the exception of a few belonging to the reigns of Edward III. and Henry VI. — to a close examination, for the purposes of the present Report. They have been noticed, at more or less length, by the Rev. John Hodgson, in his History of Morpeth (1832), forming part of his larger compilation, The History of Northumberland, an expensive work, in but few hands, and, as I am informed, now but rarely to be met with. Some matters that have escaped the Historian's notice in those pages, will be found set forth in the present Report.

Reckoning from the days probably of the Conquest, the lordship of Morpeth has been successively in the hands of the four families of De Merlay, Graystoke, Dacre, and Howard. The two earliest documents described in this Report belong, it will be seen, to the time of Roger de Merlay, the third of that name (who died in 1266); but in Hodgson's History mention is made, under the years 1188 and 1239, of two still earlier Charters, one a grant to the town of "liberties and free customs" by Roger de Merlay the Second, and the other a confirmation of that grant by Roger de Merlay the Third; as then existing in the Town hutch, the chest in which the Corporation documents are kept. These two earlier Charters, I learn from Mr. Brumell, have never been in the possession of the Corporation during the time that he has held office as Town Clerk.

From the appellations of the attesting witnesses to the earlier deeds, (other than the names of nobles and knights residing in the vicinity), there seems fair reason to conclude that the people residing in, or attached to the service of, the Castle (then belonging to the family of Graystoke) were hardly fewer in number than the town's-people, and this at so late a date as the time of Edward I.; the documents being, to a great extent, attested by persons then holding office in the Castle, under the various appellations of seneschal (or steward), serjeant, "de chambre"—chamber-servant—groom, panteler, or keeper of the pantry (shortened into "Pantel"), forester, fisherman, and smith. Previously to that reign, the vill probably had almost entirely consisted of a few straggling houses, more or less protected by the Castle from the inroads of the Scots. At a later date, one or two notices are here to be found in reference to the almost chronic state of warfare which no doubt then existed between the burgesses of Morpeth and their neighbours beyond the Border.

The following is an account of the earlier documents in the hands of the Corporation, as much information as possible being compressed into the shortest space:—

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, by Roger de Merlay "the Third" not later than A.D. 1266; whereby he grants to his free burgesses of Morpeth, the whole cultivated part of his land [totam culturam terræ meæ] on the north side of the vill of Morpeth, by these boundaries; from the great river of Wanspie, on the west side of the vill, to the toft of Henry Doghet; from thence by the rivulet of Cotingbourne to the spring [or well—"fontem"] of St. Thomas; from thence northward to Spen, by a boundary which he had made, and from thence beyond Cotingbourne, as far as the foss of the Monks of Newminster, towards the west, and so by that foss to the great river of Wanspie; and within [infra] that "cultura" 43 tofts and half a rood, in free burgage; with all liberties and easements to the said vill pertaining, as freely as the charter already granted by him purports: at a yearly rent for every full toft of 16 pence, and of 2 pence for the half rood; at the feast of St. Cuthbert in Lent, and the feast of St. Outhbert in September, to be paid: with warranty for the same. Witnesses, Sir William de Merlay, Sir John de Plessiz, then Seneschal (or Steward) of Morpeth, Sir Adam Bareth, Sir William de Coyners, Ranulph de Merlay, William Fitz-Ralph, Richard de Saltwic, "and many others." The Charter herein referred to is probably the one that next follows, relative to Berhaluh [? Barley-haght] and other "cultures," or the original of it, supposing the document now existing to be an imitation. The "tofts" here mentioned were probably sites for dwelling-houses, marked out in the "cultura" or land brought into cultivation.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; of a date not later than 1266, executed by Roger de Merlay "the Third," who died in that year. He thereby grants to his free burgesses of Morpeth, in free burgage, 46 tofts "of his demesne" in Morpeth; to wit, in the "cultura" called "Berhaluh," at the east end of the vill, 16 tofts; and in the culture called "Stanilath" [still known as "Stoneyflats"], between Cotingbourne and the Monk's Way, on the east side, 16 tofts; and between Cotingbourne and the same way, on the west side, 14 tofts: to hold as freely and quietly as in a previous Charter is more fully purported; at a yearly rent of 16 pence for every full toft, at the two feasts of St. Cuthbert to be paid. Witnesses, Sir [or "Dan," Dompno], Adam, Abbot of Newminster, Roger Bertram of Bothal, John Fitz-Symon, Henry Gateg' [? Gategang], John de Plessset, Adam Barat, Thomas

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a small oblong seal, in green wax, whereby Robert Fitz-Roger grants to Richard Graffard one acre of land, in the field [campo] of Morpeth; namely, at the Ruthdyc, 3 roods, between the land of Thorald and that of Richard le Lange; and one rood extending towards Fisserway [now Fisherway or Back way], between Adam Bonde's and the land late of Roger Crampe, at a yearly rent of 2 pence. Witnesses, Richard de la More, Master Richard, Alan Clerk, William le Sergaunt, Adam Pantel, Roger Fisher, Ranulph le Forester, Alured, Robert Aldrich, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1283. Alan was probably the then Common Clerk of the borough.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby William de Morpeth, called "Sergeant," grants to Richard de Morpeth, Clerk, 3 acres of land in the field of Morpeth, to wit, in the Florys; one acre being called the "Shorteakere," between the land of Nicholas de Park, on the east, and that of Robert atte Church, on the west; and 5 roods containing 6 ridges [seliones] abutting on the land late of Roger Crampe; and one rood between the lands of the said Nicholas and Robert, near the Standastone; and another rood, extending unto the Kyrkeburne, between the lands of the said Nicholas and Robert; and one rood, extending towards the Halleslathe, near the land of William, son of the said William; for a certain sum of money, beforehand paid to him by the said Richard, "in his necessity;" he rendering yearly one penny to the lord of Morpeth, at Pentecost, for Shorteakere, and to the grantor, at Our Lord's Nativity, one halfpenny. Witnesses, Sir Robert de Saham, Rector of Morpeth, Richard de la More, Seneschal of Morpeth, Alan Clerk, Adam Pantel, Peter Tempelman, of Morpeth. Placed by Hodgson under the year 1283.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby William de Chyvingtone grants to Walter de Herle and Juliana, his wife, the land and buildings in the vill of Morpeth, which he bought of Richard Graffard, he doing the services due to the lord and to the vill of Morpeth for the same. Witnesses, Richard de la More, Alan Clerk, William le Sergaunt, Adam Pantel, Alured, Robert Fitz-Aldrich, Roger Fisher, Thomas de Abbey [Abbatia? Newminster], William Palmer, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1283.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Juliana Grome, relict of Thomas de Garden, in her pure widowhood, and of her lawful will, grants to Master Richard de Morpeth, Clerk, 8 acres and 3 roods of arable land "in the territory of Morpeth"; namely, 2 acres and one rood on the east side of the king's highway; one acre beyond the king's highway; one rood on the east side of the Stanbrige [Stone bridge]; seven roods below Grendone, extending towards the way from Trennewelle; one rood and a half on the north side of the Hospital of Chacheburne; 2½ roods on the south side of Kirkeburne, within "the Flores," near the land of Nicholas de Park; one acre near the boundary of the Hospital, extending towards Trennewelle; 1½ roods within "the Helde," near Sturdyde; and half a rood within "the Holme"; he rendering yearly to her one rose at the feast of St. Mary Magdalen, and to the chief lords of the fee 2 pence on Easter Day, for the . . . which belonged to Robert, son of Walter de Nedritone; and one penny halfpenny on the day of Pentecost for the land which belonged to Robert Brown. Witnesses, Richard de la More, Seneschal of Morpeth, William de Rukeby, Alan Clerk, Ralph de Seld, Richard Smith, Ranulph Forester, Adam Forester, Roger Fisher, John Pantil, Richard Graffard, John Forester, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1283.

A parchment deed of grant by the Burgesses and Community of Morpeth to Patrick the Butcher [Carnifici] of a rood of land, formerly of Robert de Horseley, near the house of William Fuller; at a yearly rent to the Bridge and Chapel of Morpeth of 4s., and, after the decease of Juliana, wife of Michael Coc, of 6s. yearly, he doing the services to the lord and to the vill due for the same. Witness "the whole community" of Morpeth. On parchment, in Latin, slightly worn, with the Corporation seal, in green wax, perhaps the oldest impression of the seal now known: without date, but early in the reign of Edward I. This property afterwards reverted to the Corporation, and with it probably this deed of grant. Patrick was perhaps the person mentioned elsewhere as "del Bothe, or "del Seld," his shop probably being open at the sides. Hodgson in his History, calls this Patrick the "Hangman" of Morpath; but in mediæval documents "Carnpex" has the meaning of "Butcher."

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby John de Craystok grants to Adam de Berier, his Forester of Morpath, a house between the house late of Ralph Tindler and the land late of William Spurnelle, at the yearly rent of 12 pence of silver at the two feasts of St. Cuthbert, the grantee doing the services due to the vill of Morpath for the same. Witnesses, Ralph del Bothe, John Forester, John Pantel, Ralph Culling, Roger Fisher, Adam Forester, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1294.

A parchment deed, in Latin, in a mutilated state, and almost illegible, the seal lost; whereby John de Graystok, Knight, lord of Morpath, grants to John Marshal, of Morpath, 10 acres of moor in the marsh lying between the road to Neubigging, on the north, and the foss of Schaldefen [now Shadfen], for one penny yearly at our Lord's Nativity to be paid; and the said grantee is to grind his corn growing on that ground at the lord's mill, at the rate of every 20th vessel for multure; and is to have liberty to marl the said ground from the lord's marlpit of Morpath. Witnesses, Robert de Somerville, Ralph de Essynden, Knights, Richard Coyners, John de Dodden, William de Saltwyck, William de Rokeyby, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; by which John, called "Marshal," of Morpath, grants all that land which he had of his lord, Sir John de Graystok, for his services in the war of the lord the King in Scotland; namely, 10 acres of moor and waste, lying between the street leading to Neubigging and the foss of Schaldefen; to Master Richard de Morpath, Clerk, at a rent of one penny yearly: he to be at liberty to marl the 10 acres from the grantor's marlpit in Morpath. Witnesses, Sir John de . . . John de Oggille, John de Essel . . . Richard de Coyners, John de Duddon, William de Rokeyby, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, somewhat worn and effaced, the seal lost; whereby John de Graystok, Knight, lord of Morpath, grants to Master Richard de Morpath, Clerk, all the pasture and herbage of his waste, between the foss of the late Park of Morpath and his demesne lands, in breadth, and from the gate of the said late park to the old foss of Schaldefen, in length, with free ingress and egress; to hold by the accustomed services due for the same. Witnesses, Sir Robert de Somerville, John de Kyrkeby, Hugh Gobyon, Ralph de Essynden, John de Oggile, Knights, Richard Coyners, John de Dodden, William de Saltwycke, Roger Gobyon, Roger de Cresswell, Adam de Baryntone, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby John de Graystoke, lord of Morpath, gives leave to his beloved Clerk, Master Richard de Morpath, to "elee-
"moynate" (or hold in frank almoigne) 8 messuages and 4 vacant pieces of land [placeas] of burgages in the vill of Morpath, and 24 acres of land "in the territory" thereof, which he before held of his said lord in fee and heriship by certain services due and accustomed for the same. The grantee is to celebrate divine service for the health of his own soul, the souls of his father and mother, and of all his benefactors, and of those of the grantor and his, in the Chapel built in the honour of All Saints, near the Bridge of Morpath; the rights of all persons being saved. Witnesses, Guichard de Charune, Hugh Gobion, John de Oggell, Knights, Sir Roger de Thornton, Rector of the church of Polketone, Master Adam de Morpath, Clerks, John de Dudden, Richard de Coyners, William de Saltwik, and William de Rokeyby, laymen, "and many others." Placed by Hodgson under 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, mutilated, and the seal lost; whereby William, son of William Dunning, grants to Robert de Bedelington, Chaplain, his land in the vill of Morpath, between the land of Thomas de Garden and that of Alice Kywald, he doing the services due for the same to the lord of the fee and to the vill of Morpath. Witnesses, John de Duddon, Ralph de Seld, William de Rukeyby, John Forester, Richard Graffard, . . . Adam Forester, Patrick de Seld, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby William, son and heir of William Dunning, grants to Robert son of William Acum, a rood of land lying near the house of Alice Kywald in the vill of Morpath; by the services to the lord of Morpath, due for the same. A house on the south side of the said vill, near the house of Richard Graffard, is to be held as warranty for enjoyment of the said land. Witnesses, Alan Clerk, William le Sergaunt, Adam Pantil, Ralph le Mercer, Peter Pantel, Thomas de Abbey, Richard le Gaunter [Glover], Adam Forester, John Forester, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby William, son of William Dunning, of Morpath, grants to Robert, son of William Acum, and Juliana, his wife, a house, with land, formerly the property of William Acum, his father; and they rendering yearly the services due to the lord and to the vill. Witnesses, Alan Clerk, Ralph del Bothe, John Pantel, Richard Gaunter, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment indenture, faintly written, the seal lost; whereby William, son of Ralph Bateman, of "Morphet," confirms to his sister, Isabel Bateman, one burgage in the said vill, lying between the land of Henry de Bakehouse, and that of Cristiana de la Boyte; with "les boytes" adjoining; to hold of the chief lord, she rendering yearly 6 shillings at the feasts of St. Cuthbert in March and September, and doing the services due to the lord and to the vill for the same. He warrants to the said Isabel the said burgage, together with "les boytes" — [? the shrubberies]. Witnesses, John de Duddene, then Seneschal of Morphet, Ralph de la Boyt, John Pantil, Roger Fisher, Peter del Ewe [de Aqua], John Forester, Adam Forester, Alan Grome, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Richard Colleylle, of Morpath, grants to Master Richard de Morpath, Clerk, all the land in the vill of Morpath, lying between the land of Richard Smith and that of Alice de Heppescote; he rendering yearly to the lord of Morpath 16 pence at the two feasts of St. Cuthbert. Witnesses, John de Duddene, Seneschal of Morpath, Master Adam, Ralph del Bothe, Roger Fisher, John Pantyl, John Forester, Alan Grome, Richard Smith [Fabro], "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal in dark brown wax, nearly perfect; device, a star, with legend . . . "Alicie G . . . rd"; whereby Alice, daughter of Simon Graffard, confirms and quitclaims to Master Richard de Morpath, Clerk, 2 roods of land in the vill of Morpath, between the land late of Robert de Acumb and that of Patrick del Bothe, which two roods Adam called "Trovan," formerly held; to hold by the services due to the chief lord of the fee. Witnesses, John de Dodden, then Seneschal of Morpath, William de Rokeyby, Master Adam de Morpath, Clerk, Ralph de la Bothe, John Forester, John Pantyl, William Pantyl, Ralph Cullynge, Patrick de la Bothe, William Palmer, Robert Stute, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Robert atte Church, of Morpath, grants to William de Rokeyby, proctor (or procurator) of the said church, 1½ acres of arable land in the fields of Morpath, thus bounded; half an acre at the Rutdike, on the north side of the lord's land, abutting on the Wencher Way; half an acre on Wyenside, between land late of William Dunning and that of Reginald Forester; and half an acre abutting on the foss of the East Park, crossing the way from Morpath to Hepeschotes; at a yearly rent of 3 silver halfpennies, payable at the feast of St. Martin in Winter. Witnesses, Robert de Coyners, Richard de Duddene, Master Richard de Morpath, Alan Clerk of the same, Nicholas de Park, of the same, Adam son of Walter de Hepeschotes, William Froman of the same, Robert Mason of the same, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1296.

A parchment deed, in Latin, placed by Hodgson under the year 1310, the seal lost; whereby Joan Cryne, of Morpath, in her pure virginitie, grants to Master Richard de Morpath her land in the said vill, lying between the land which Robert the Fuller bought of William, son of William le Sergaunt, and the land the inheritance of Alice, late the wife of William del Bothe; extending from the chief front on the High Street, to the tonelle [turriolum] of Robert Fitz-Peter; for a certain sum of money, in her necessity paid to her by him beforehand. Witnesses, John Forester and Peter de L'Ewe, then Bailiffs of Morpath, John Pantil, William de Neuburn, Adam de Melfelle, Adam de Carlton, William Dyer, Alan Grome, burgesses of the said vill, "and others." Peter de L'Ewe, the Bailiff, afterwards forfeited his land in Morpath, for taking part with Gilbert de Middelstone, and his Savaldores, in 1317, in their rebellion against the King.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Juliana, daughter of John de Burton, of Morpeth, deceased, grants to Adam de Carlone, of Morpeth, one rood of land there, 28 feet on the east side thereof excepted, (of which she had lately disfeoffed William Culing by deed), situate in Hellegate, between the land of the said William Culing on the east and the Lords land formerly Henry Carpenter's on the west; by the services to the chief lord due and accustomed. Witnesses, Ralph del Bothe, John Pantyll, Peter del Ewe, William de Neuburn, William Lister, Adam Melfeld, Alan Grome, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1310.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal, in white wax, with a fanciful device, almost perfect; whereby John Forester, of "Morpah", grants to Sir William de Bedlington, Chaplain, a message in the said vill, situate between the message which belonged to Master Richard de Morpeth and that which belonged to Adam de Berier; at a yearly rent to the chief lord of 8 pence, payable at the two feasts of St. Cuthbert. Witnesses, Bartholomew Benet, then Seneschal of Morpeth, Ralph del Both, John Pantill, Peter del Ewe, William Dyer, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under that year 1312.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Henry, son and heir of Robert de Horseley, late burgess of Morpeth, grants to Ralph del Bothe, burgess, one burgrave in the same vill, situate between the land of Hugh Chab and that late of Augustin Forester, on the north side of the Market-place, in free exchange for one burgrave therein, on the same side of the said Market-place, between the land late of William Lychur and that of Ralph Bateman; to hold of the lord by the accustomed services to him and the vill. Witnesses, Master Walter, and Adam de Malfell, then "Chief Bailiffs" of Morpeth, Master Adam Fitz-Alan, John Forester, John Pantill, Richard Arreusmyth, William de Neuburn, Robert Fitz-Peter, Richard Graffard, Adam del Bothe, Clerk, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1312.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Sir Adam Rose, Chaplain, Warden of the Bridge and Chapel of Morpeth, and all other the burgesses of the same vill, grant to Mariota Spicer, a certain piece of ground on the south of the bridge, between the house of Richard Smith and the land of Alice, late the daughter of Guanora; she rendering 6 pence yearly to the Wardens of the said Bridge and Chapel. Witnesses, Adam de Karlfon, William de Neuburn, John Pantill, Peter del Lewe, Walter Dyer, Adam de Melfell, "and others." Placed by Hodgson under the year 1312.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby William, son of William, son and heir of Peter de Morpeth, grants to Master Adam de Morpeth, Clerk, one message in the vill of Morpeth, situate between the Bakehouse of the lord and the message of Ralph del Bothe, and holden of the vill of Morpeth; he rendering to the Chapel and Bridge of the vill, or to the Wardens thereof, 3 marks yearly; the said grantee to find in the said message room for the stocks [ceptris] of the vill, and for the prisoners thereof, to be there incarcerated and received, as the deed granted to his grandfather Peter Marishal, by the said community more fully purports, in lieu of all service and demand. Witnesses, Ralph del Bothe, Peter de L'Ewe, William de Neuburn, William Dyer, John Forester, Adam de Carlone, Alan Grome, "and others." The peculiar point of this deed, as to the stocks and the prisoners, is not noticed in Hodgson's History of Morpeth, where it is placed under the year 1312.

The preceding deeds are without date; but the dates at which they were executed can in many instances, be fairly surmised, from comparison with the earlier of those bearing dates; which are as follow:—

A parchment indenture, in Latin, with two seals in green wax, one a fragment only, the other, that of the wife, a female figure supporting a shield, standing upright, nearly perfect; whereby William, son of Thomas de Craystok, and Mary, his wife, let to fee firm to their free burgesses of Morpeth all their arable land [terram] and meadow, without any drawback, on the north side of Morpeth: beginning at Holeburn towards the west, as the footpath ["urliura", probably for "allura"] of Cottingwode extends towards Cottingburne, and so descending near the "burgages" to the New Mill, and from thence to the east, towards Holeburn, by the river Wanspyke; to inclose and foss the same; rendering to the grantor, to wit, for 60 acres, a yearly rent of 2s. 6d. per acre; the first payment to be at the feast of St.

Martin in 1281. They also grant leave to carry marl from Fulbekside, on the said land, if found there; and the said burgesses are to grind at their mill, at malture on every 20th vessel, the corn growing on the land so granted. Saving to the grantors a sufficient way with oxen and cattle to the pasture of Cottingwode, by Whetley Way; but their said oxen and cattle are not to have common in that land. Witnesses, Sir Robert Bertram, Sir Hugh Gubayne, John de Widingrington, Roger his brother, Roger Manduit, Ralph de Essyngham [now Ashington], Simon de Plessiz, Walter de Camhoun, John de Oggel, John de Herwaytune, "and others." This "New Mill" probably occupied the site of the old Town mill, removed within the last 25 years.

Dated at Morpath, the 20th of January, 34th Henry VI.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, one seal lost, indistinct, and very minutely written; whereby John Eynwode grants to John Barkare a tenement lying in Newegate in Morpath, between the land of the Abbot of Newminster and that of John . . . and extending from the King's highway to Cottingburn; at a yearly rent of 2 shillings. Witnesses, William Hardyng, Seneschal, John Warmothe, Richard Marschalle, Thomas Reede, "and others." Dated the 10th of November, 36th Henry VI.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, with a fine impression of the Corporation seal, in red wax; whereby John Lyntone and William Knight, Bailiffs of the vill of Morpath, and all the burgesses thereof, in accordance with the award of the Lord de Graystok and of Weme, release and quitclaim to John, Abbot of the Monastery of the Blessed Mary of Newminster, and to the Convent thereof, the whole right and claim, and all manner of commons of pasture, which they then held, had held, or could hold, of and in one close of the said Abbot and Convent called "Mardenflat," otherwise "Barcarfeld," in Morpath aforesaid. Dated the 7th of March, in the 49th year from the beginning of the reign of Henry VI., and in the first year of his recovery of the throne.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the Abbey seal, in red wax, much mutilated, but with a good impression of the Virgin and Child, seated beneath a canopy; whereby John, Abbot of the Monastery of the Blessed Mary of Newminster, and the Convent thereof, in consideration of the release and quitclaim set forth in the preceding deed, grant and confirm to the Bailiffs and burgesses of Morpath, that they will yearly celebrate divine services for them for ever, in manner following, namely, for the Convent of the said monastery for the time being, on every Monday before the feast of St. Peter's Chair, [18th January], after noon on that day, "Placebo" and "Derige," with the obsequies thereto pertaining, with musical notation, in the church of the same monastery, and on the morrow Mass, with notation [nota] at the high altar there, with bells solemnly ringing, as well at "Placebo" and "Derige," as at Mass; and then to pray for the souls of all the bailiffs and burgesses of the said vill then departed, and for the good estate of the bailiffs and burgesses, their heirs and successors, then living [in plena vita existentium]; at which Mass one burgess of the vill aforesaid, in sign that the said services were celebrated in form aforesaid, should offer one penny as oblation, if he think fit. In case of omission on any day of such celebration, it should be lawful for the bailiffs and burgesses to enter upon their manor of Hyghlawe, in Northumberland, and distrain therein for a rent of 6s. 8d., so often as the same should happen. Dated the 8th of March, in the 49th year from the beginning of the reign of King Henry the Sixth and the first of the recovery of his kingdom. The award of "Ranf, Lord of Graystok and of Weme," made on this occasion, at great length, and in English, still exists, in the possession of the Corporation; dated the 6th of March, A.D. 1470[1]; the seal, in red wax, containing his shield of arms, is in fine condition.

Belonging to the reign of Edward the Fourth, there are 25 deeds and instruments of various kinds, most of them executed by George Buk Master of the Chantry of All Saints in the Chapel of Morpeth. Among them is also a bond of Robert Usshere, Gentilhomme, to Henry Bewyk, dated 11th of December 12th Edward IV.

An indenture also occurs among them, as between the same parties; it is the earliest document of the sort in English, and runs as follows:—"This endenture witnesses Roger Ussher hath graunted and lettene to ferme to Henry Bewyk alle his landes, tenementes, rentes and possessions, with þe appurtenances þat he hath in þe toun and felde of Morpeth, for to have and to hold unto þe same Henry and his assigneys fro þe day of þe making herof unto þe ende of þe terms of xxi. yeres þan next folowyng fully to be fulfilled, yeldyng þerof verly to þe said Roger, his heires and excecutores vi marcs at þe festes of Whissonday and Seynt Martin in wyntre by evene porcions duryng þe saide terme. There are but two documents of the reign of Richard III.; belonging to that of Henry VII., there are ten, and in two of them the town is styled no longer "Morphath," but "Morpeth," that form probably then beginning to be habitually used. There are 31 deeds and documents under seal belonging to the reign of Henry VIII.; the majority of them are written in English, and in sixteen of them the town is designated as no longer "Morphath," but "Morpeth." There is but one deed, as between individuals, belonging to the reign of Edward VI.: the town is there styled "Morpeth," but in the grant of Arms to the town by William Hervy, Norroy King of Arms, in the year 1552, it is still styled "Morphath." Of the time of Philip and Mary, there are two deeds, in both of which the town is called "Morpeth."

Belonging to the reign of Elizabeth there are about 30 documents in all, in but two of which the ancient form of "Morphath" is preserved; "Morpeth" or "Morpeth," being now the usual form. Two paper documents, one dated the 13th of June, in 1580, the other in 1589, purport to bear the signature of Lord William Howard, better remembered in history as "Belted Will; one however seems to be but a copy, as at the foot of it is written, in another hand, "Concordat cum originali."

There is a letter, dated at Doncaster the 22nd of October 1602, addressed "To the worshipfull and my very good frendes the Bayliffs, and Aldermen (and) the rest of the Burgomasters of Morpeth; to all and every of them;" wherein George Savile thanks them "for their great good wills," in choosing him to be one of the "Burgesses" for the town.

Under the reign of James the First there are two documents also, bearing the signature of Lord William Howard.

On some sheets of foolscap paper, making a thin book, of the time of Henry VIII., which bears the following title, "This booke made at Morpeth, the yere of our Lord God one thousand five hundredth—the xiiiith day of Dessember in the X yere of the raigne of Kinge Henry VIII., by Thomas Lord Dacre, with the hoole consent and assent as well of all the burgesses with all the hoole comonality of the said town, and all articles and clawes in the said booke conteyned, to be as principall orders, rules, and customes, thought and devised, by Thomas Dacre, burgesses, and comonallitie aforesaid, expedient and holsum, and necessary to the comonwelthes perfect regement, of the same towne, etc."—is to be found, on the fourth page, the following entry:—"An order concerninge for the makinge of a chist for there comon huch,—Item, it is ordered and concluded by the said Thomas Lo: Dacre, burgesses, and comonalties aforesaid, that they shall have a chist, for there comon wealth with seven kees, and locks, and the said chist to stand in the iner chamber of the toole-bouth [tollboth], and the aldermen of the vii crafts to have the keepinge of vii kees of the said lockes, that is to say every of the aldermen one key; provided alwayes that the Bayliffes of the said towne for tyme being shall have one key of the said chamber door; to the intent that the said aldermen with others, may resort to the said chist as oft as they shall have need there; so that always the said chamber by the said bayliffes [be] kept honestly dight and arrayed." This hutch, no doubt, is the one still in existence, and used as the repository of the town documents, as it agrees in every way with the above description.

In page 5 of the same book, occurs an order "Concerning playinge at the cards or other unlawfull games: Item, it is ordered that noe man shall play at dice or at cards, but onlye betwene the Feast of Saint Thomas the Apostle before Cristinmasse and the day of the Purification; but all such as suffer dice, cards, or other unlawfull games prohibited by the statut, shall for every such offence suffer within their house forfite ii shillings, the one halfe to my lord, the other to the comon huch, toties quoties."

Of ancient books in the hands of the Corporation, with the exception of the one just mentioned, no vestige remains. The books of the seven Companies, or Crafts, among which the trade of the town was formerly divided, if still in existence, are now in private hands.

CORPORATION OF MORPETH.

I have much pleasure in expressing my obligations to Francis Brumell, Esq., the Town Clerk, for the kind attention with which he provided me with every facility for preparing the present Report.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

F. BRUMELL, ESQ.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF F. BRUMELL, ESQ^{re}, OF MORPETH.

There is in the possession of Francis Brumell, Esq., Solicitor, and Town Clerk of the borough of Morpeth, a small collection of ancient deeds and other documents, some of them bearing reference to various localities situate in Newcastle and the counties of York, Northumberland, and Essex; with his kind permission I have availed myself of the opportunity of making some extracts, at greater or less length, from the twelve among them of earliest date, for insertion in the present Report. The deeds bearing reference to Newcastle, Dilston, and Barking, more especially seem to deserve notice.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, finely written, with a fragment of the seal, in green wax; whereby B. the Prior, and the Convent, of Haugustalde [now Hexham], grant to Roger de Merlay the Third, half a carucate of land in Clifitone, which they had of the gift of Gilbert de Coyners, with a toft and a croft, and common of pasture to the same land belonging. Also, 20 acres of land, with the appurtenances, in Caldewelle, which they had of the gift of the said Gilbert de Coyners, with common of pasture, and all the liberties and easements thereto belonging. Also, 10 acres of land and a toft, with the appurtenances, in Clifitone, which they had of the gift of William de Coyners, of good memory, father of the said Gilbert; to hold for his support for ever of a single [simplicius] Chaplain, to celebrate for the faithful at the altar of the Blessed Mary in the church of Stanington; the said Chaplain to pay to them yearly, at the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, 18 pence, and to do the foreign service pertaining to the half carucate in the vill of Clifitone, for all services, customs, and demands; saving to the lord of the fee suit at his mill for the said land. To this grant the seal of their Chapter they have placed. Witnesses, Hugh de Bolebec, John Fitz-Symon, Adam Bareth, John de Plessetz, William de Horseley, Richard de Wydeslade, Geoffrey de Wydeslade, Richard de Saltwic, William Fitz-Ralph, Adam de Plesseitz, Walter son of Walter de Wittone, Nicholas de Berkinge, Clerk, "and others." This deed must have been executed in or prior to A.D. 1266, as in that year the grantee died. Stanington, Clifton, and Caldwell are localities in the south of Northumberland, situate between Morpeth and Newcastle-on-Tyne.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, finely written; whereby it is stated that William, son of Ranulph, son of Adam de Kyllingworth, on Friday after the feast of St. Michael, A.D. 1268, releases and quitclaims to Roger Baret, of Burud[un], his right and claim in the land which formerly belonged to Ascelina, daughter of Geliana, his grandmother, in Burudun; to hold the same of the grantor in homages and reliefs, rents, escheats, and other things thereto pertaining; for which "release" and quitclaim the said Roger gave me a certain sum "of money in my great necessity." Witnesses, Adam Baret, John de Bikere, John of Little Bentone, Hugh of Little Bentone, Geoffrey de Wydeslade, William of the same vill, Richard of St. Peter of Kyllingworthe, Adam de Hauerdene, "and many others." The seal has been encased in a small linen bag, but is now reduced to powder. The locality is the place now known as Buradon, near Newcastle-on-Tyne.

A parchment deed, in Latin, of about the same date as the preceding; whereby Henry, son of Ranulph de Kyllingwrthe, in his "sanity and lawful power," grants to Roger Baret, of Burwedun, 30 acres of land, with a toft and a croft in the vill of Burwedune, with all easements within the same vill and without; also, all his right and claim which he ever had in the same vill, with escheats and all other commodities; also, all the services, due and accustomed, which Henry Hyrnyng and his ancestors had been wont to do to him and his heirs; to hold in fee and heirship of the chief lord of Burwedune; he doing to the chief lord of the fee the services due and accustomed for the same. Witnesses, Sir John de Wydrigton [sic.], Sir Adam Barat, John de Bentone, William de Wydeslad, Richard de Kyllingwrthe, Clerk, William of Little Benton, Hugh de Bacwrthe, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, bearing reference to the place now known as "Brakenholme," in the south part of the East Riding of Yorkshire, near the town of Howden: it is written in a small and somewhat peculiar hand, of about A.D. 1270 to 80. By it Hugh de Collum grants to Robert, son of John Carpenter, of Brakenholme, one toft, with its buildings, and two crofts, in the vill of Brakenholme, lying between the toft and croft of John Houstybi and the toft of John Yole, and extending from the King's highway to Banklandes; also, 11 ridges [selliones] of land in the territory of Brakenholme, of which one ridge called "Bankland," abuts on Derwent; one ridge called "Bankland," lies near Westmere; one ridge called "Langeland," lies in the west field; one ridge called "Morland," lies near Morebrygge; one ridge called "Wragelond," lies near Staynesbydyke; one ridge called "Westpeselond," and one ridge called "Oustpeselonde," both near the land of John Houstybi; one ridge called "Holmyatland," in the field called "Staynesby;" one ridge called "Rysbutland," abutting on the lane; one ridge called "Lydroth," in the field called "Staynesby," between the land of John Houstybi and that of John Yole; one ridge called "North Roth," near the foss of Stayneyh on the north side; all the meadow which Nicholas Colyrl formerly held in the meadows of Brakenholm; to hold the same for a sum of money paid beforehand, and at a yearly rent of 6 shillings. Witnesses, Robert Hake-thorpe, Richard de Herlethorpe [now Harlthorpe], Robert de Osgoteby [now Osgodby], Walter Page, Thomas Labias, "and many others."

The following deed, one of considerable interest, bears reference to Newcastle-on-Tyne, about A.D. 1274; the family name of "Pampedene" gave its name to the locality now known as "Pandon Dean:"—

A parchment deed, in Latin, with an oblong seal attached, in green wax, with an anchor for one of its devices; whereby William, son of Thomas de Merchingleye, grants to Alan Wodeman the land, with its buildings, near to Lorte-borne in Newcastle; namely, that lying between the land of Martin Haras, on the one side, and that late of John Orfeure ["Aurifabri"] on the other, and extending from the King's highway to the Castle Moat; for a certain sum of money which the said Alan faithfully paid him [fideli ter pacavit.]; he rendering yearly to the Lord the King 15 pence at the terms appointed, and to Christiana and Isabel, sisters of Milo de Pampedene, their heirs or assigns, 10 shillings of silver, namely, to each 30 pence at the feast of Our Lord's Nativity, and 30 pence at the feast of St. John the Baptist; and to the Convent of Heselham [Hexham], one stone of wax, at the appointed times; to the Wardens of the Castle one pound of pepper; and to the said William, his heirs or assigns, one pound of cummin, at the feast of Our Lord's Nativity, for all custom, matter, and demand, with a clause of warranty. Witnesses, Thomas de Karl[ile], Mayor, John le Flamang, Adam de Blakedene, Richard de le Haye, John Sautemarays [now Saltmarsh,], Bailiffs, Nicholas Scot, Henry Scot, John Fitz-Roger, Thomas Thorand, Henry de Bometone, Thomas Fitz-Mayor, John Godrik, "and others." This deed is in good condition, and finely written.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Robert, son and heir of Thomas Hering, grants to Robert de Vaus, and Joan, his wife, all the land, meadow, and wood of Aldeschele, belonging to him, in right of Thomas, his father; to hold of the chief lord of the fee, "with all liberties and easements, in ways, paths, "moors, marshes, marlpits, stonepits [petacius], plains, "and waters, and all other things, within the vill and "without." Witnesses, Sir Roger de Folpetone, then Bailiff of Hextildesham [Hexham], Sir John de Vaus, Knight, Matthew de Catledene, Robert de Eryntone, Robert de Bungefeld, Antony de Eryntone, John de Falufeld, Richard Wacy, "and many others." Bearing reference to a locality in the vicinity of Hexham, in Northumberland, and belonging to, probably, the latter part of the reign of Edward I.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby John de Tossan, son and heir of Robert de Tossan, of Routhebury [now Rothbury, in Northumberland], grants to Alan called "Maire," of Snytters, in Routhebury, a messuage called the "Greneyerde," and 18 acres of land in the plain called "Dyvelestone," namely, 7 acres on the west side of the bridge of Corbrige, near the way leading from Corbrige to Hextildesham; 2 acres abutting upon the Crippe, which falls into the Tyne; 4 acres on the west side of the Shawe, which lies near the same road; 3 acres below Dalepeth; and one acre which Agnes del Cozevelle formerly held; which messuage and 18 acres, by the death of Robert, his father, and of Emma, daughter of Hugh Butcher, of Corbrige, his mother, came to him, in the vill and territory of Dyvelestone; to hold the same of the chief lords of the fee, by the services due for the same. Witnesses, Sir William de Tyndale, Robert del Hyle, Alan de Felstone, William de Ayryge, Robert de Hodespethie, Thomas Forster of Corbrige, "and others." Dated at Dyvelestone, on the feast of St. James the Apostle, A.D. 1354. This deed bears reference to Dilston, near Hexham, afterwards the seat of the Earls of Derwentwater. It had its name from the "Devil" water "a rivulet (perhaps the Crippe, here mentioned,) which falls into the Tyne.

A deed of considerable length, relating to Barking, in Essex, temp., Edward III., of which the following is a transcript:—

In cujus rei testimonium, huic presentii cartæ sigilla nostra apposuimus. Hiis testibus, Domino Johanne de Poulteney, tunc Majore Londoniarum, Domino Roberto de Haugham milite, Roberto le Bret, aurifabro Londoniarum, Johanne de Goldingham, Johanne de Dagenhame, Alexandro de Bettoigne, Johanne le Portire, Johanne Samekyn, Ricardo Malemeys, Thoma le Brewere, et aliis.

The preceding deed is in several ways remarkable: Sir John de Poulteney was Mayor of London in the years 1330, 1331, 1333, and 1336, but beyond the mention of its being executed during his mayoralty, it has no date. The name "Poulteney," too, has been at first omitted, with a vacant space, and then filled in by another hand. The following is a translation of the deed, the exact object of which, it seems difficult to surmise:—

"Know present and to come, that we, Simon de Leyththone, Vicar of Westhamme, and John Duk, Vicar of Great Bursted, with unanimous assent and will, have given, granted, and by this our present charter confirmed, to our most excellent lord, Sir Edward, by the grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitaine, one messuage, with gardens and dovecoats, 42 acres of arable land, 7 acres of meadow, 12 acres of pasture, and 13s. 6d. of yearly rent, with the appurtenances, in the vill of Berkyng, in the hamlet of Illeforde, which tenement is called 'The Rehous;' and 18 acres of land; with the appurtenances, in the same vill, which are called 'Hureslonde'; the which we had of the grant of Sir Thomas de Westone, Knight; and 5 acres of arable land, and 1½ acres of grove, with the appurtenances, in the parish of Little Illeforde, which we had of the gift and grant of him, Sir Thomas de Westone. We have given also, and granted, to the same our lord the King, 2 messuages and 4 shops, with the gardens and curtillages adjoining, and 19 acres of arable land, and half an acre of pasture, and 33s. 1½d. of yearly rent, with the appurtenances, in Berkyngge, which we had of the gift and feoffment of the aforesaid Sir Thomas de Westone; of which one acre lies in Mobdesmersche, near the land of John Chaumpain, and one acre of land lies in Openeye, opposite the tenement of John le Messager, and 1½ acres of land lie there below the tenement of John Kelemous, and 2 acres of land lie there near the land of the aforesaid John Chaumpain, and 2 acres of land lie in Longelonde near Illeforde, and 4 acres of land lie at Illeforde, near the tenement late of Walter de Tewyngge, and 1½ acres lie there near the tenement of Thomas Persoun, and 6 acres of land lie in Baronesredene, near the land of Thomas Chaunterel, and half an acre of pasture lies between the field called 'Edemede,' and the Flete, near Manebrigge. We have further given and granted to our aforesaid lord the King the reversion of 2 granges, 35½ acres of arable land, and 2 acres of meadow, with the appurtenances, in Barking, of which John Andrewe of Berkyngge holds 4 acres in the field called 'Puppenefeld,' for the term of his life. And John le Freynshe and Lucy, his wife, and John, their son, hold 4 acres

"of arable land in the east marsh of Berkynge, for term of their lives, and render 6 shillings yearly for the same. And Milo Stephne holds $\frac{4}{5}$ acres in the West marsh of Berkinge, in the field called 'Elm-felde,' for term of his life, and renders 9 shillings yearly for the same. And Henry Shonke holds, for term of his life, one grange in Hiethestrade, and one acre of arable land at Hammehrede in the West marsh of Berkinge, and renders 5 shillings yearly for the same. And John Fernyn and Joan, his wife, hold for term of their lives 3 acres of land in the same marsh, which are called 'Snoonispihtel,' and render 4s. 2d. yearly for the same. And Thomas Love and Rosia, his wife, hold, for term of their lives, $\frac{7}{8}$ acres of marsh land, lying in the fields called 'Edemade' and 'Manelonde,' and render 14 shillings yearly for the same. And John Welman holds, for term of his life, 4 acres of land in West marsh, near Smalemerkys, and renders 7 shillings yearly for the same. And Richard Dash holds, for term of his life, 5 acres of land in the same marsh, which are called 'Wych felde,' and renders 9s. 10d. yearly for the same. And Henry le Drapire holds, for term of his life, $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land, called 'Eloms-pihtel,' near the land of Henry de Wydefelde, and renders yearly 3 shillings for the same. And William Mew and Idoynia, his wife, hold, for term of their lives, 2 acres of land at the Mouthe, and render 4 shillings yearly for the same. And Nicholas le Forester holds one grange, with a way belonging thereto, in Bakeristrade, and 2 acres of meadow at Flodgates, for term of his life, and renders 10 shillings yearly for the same.—To have and to hold all the aforesaid lands and tenements, as in messuages, dovecotes, gardens, curtilages, arable lands, meadows, grazing lands, pastures, woods, groves, inclosures, ways, paths, vivaries, piscaries, ponds, hedges, ditches, rents, services, heriots, wards, marriages, homages, fealties, reliefs, escheats, walls, [probably, river-walls], hopes [p-valleys], and all other their appurtenances, together with the reversion of the said two granges, $35\frac{1}{2}$ acres of arable land, and 2 acres of meadow, with the appurtenances, when they shall fall in after the death of the persons above-named, to our aforesaid lord the King and his heirs, freely, quietly, wholly, and in peace, for ever. And we, the aforesaid Simon de Leyththone, Vicar of Westhamme, and John Duke, Vicar of Great Bursted, and our heirs, will warrant all the aforesaid lands and tenements, as in messuages, dovecotes, gardens, curtilages, arable lands, meadows, grazing lands, pastures, woods, groves, inclosures, ways, paths, vivaries, piscaries, ponds, hedges, ditches, rents, services, heriots, wards, marriages, homages, fealties, reliefs, escheats, walls, hopes, and all other their appurtenances, together with the reversion of the said two granges, $35\frac{1}{2}$ acres of arable land, and 2 acres of meadow, with the appurtenances, when they shall fall in after the death of the persons above-named, unto our aforesaid lord the King and his heirs, against all persons for ever. In witness whereof, to this present deed we have set our seals. These being witnesses, Sir John de Poulteney, then Mayor of London, Sir Robert de Naughtam, Knight, Robert le Bret, goldsmith of London, John de Goldingham, Thomas de Dagenhame, Alexander de Betteigne, John le Portire, John Samekyn, Richard Malemeyns, Thomas le Brewere, and others."

The seals of the grantors are no longer attached to the deed, which was probably delivered to the grantees on a new grant being made by the Crown.

A deed on vellum, in Latin, with a round seal in red wax, the impression effaced; whereby Ralph Swan, son and heir of William Swan, Gentleman, ratifies and confirms to William Stokton and Edward Watson, Chaplains, three tenements in the vill and territory of Little Ryel, with other lands and tenements in the same Little Ryel, Grenlighton, Rotherby, and Framlington, in the county of Northumberland, and certain lands and tenements in the vill of Newcastle-on-Tyne, which had been given and conveyed to them by William Swan, his father, jointly with Thomas Blaklaw, Clerk. Witnesses, Robert Lyel, Gylbert Arthur, James Lee, "and others." Dated this 27th of December, 39th of Henry the Sixth.

A parchment deed, in Latin, with a fragment of a seal in red wax; whereby Sir Robert Ogle, lord of Ogle and Bottell [now Bothal], releases and quitclaims to William Ogle, of Cockill Park, in the county of Northumberland, Knight, his right and interest in all those lands and tenements, rents and services, lying and being in the manor and park of Cawsey Park, with the in-clousures called the "Southfelde" and "Barronsfeld," in the said county. Dated the 10th of May 18th Henry VIII. In addition to the seal, it is signed, in autograph, "R. Ogle."

A parchment indenture, in English, the seal lost, "mayde the xxiith daye of June, the xxiith yere of the reigne of oure soverayne lord Kinge Henry the viiith, betwixt Syr Robert Ogle Knight, lord of Ogle and Bottelle, of the oon party, and Syr Wylliam Ogle, Knight, of the other party;" whereby the said Robert, "Lorde Ogle," conveys to the said Sir William one messuage and 30 acres of land and meadow in the town and fields of Horsley, in the county of Northumberland, and also his pasture and common of pasture within the fields and forest of Horsley. A covenant entered into to levy a fine, follows at considerable length; the consideration being four pounds then paid, and a further sum of 52 shillings, to be paid before the feast of St. Andrew, then next coming. In addition to its seal, (now lost) the deed, which is written in a fine hand, and is of considerable length, is signed by Sir R. Ogle.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, written in a fine hand; whereby Robert Ogle, Knight, lord of Ogle and Bothell, in the county of Northumberland, grants to William Ogle, Knight, of Cokylparke, in the same county, his uncle, common of pasture with 30 stints of animals and sheep, namely, horses, mares, oxen, cows, steers, heifers, sheep, lambs, goats, and kids, that is, for every stint five sheep; of, in, and throughout, the whole common and forest of the demesne of Eresdoun; and also, common of pasture with 80 stints of animals and sheep, of, in and throughout the whole common and moors of Trytlington, Eresdone, and Fenrother, in the same county, yearly and daily, from the second hour before midday to the tenth hour after midday, each day, with free entry and egress with the same stints of animals from the manor of Cawseyparke within the county aforesaid, throughout the whole of the aforesaid commons, forest, and moors, to the outer parts of the same commons, forest, and moors; to hold the same for a yearly rent of one pound of pepper, once in the year, if it be demanded, to be paid, that is, at the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, for ever; with power of distress in case such rent of one pound of pepper be at any time forty days in arrear. Dated the 2nd of December, 28th Henry VIII.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

COURT BOOKS OF THE CORPORATION OF NEW ROMNEY.

CORPORATION OF
NEW ROMNEY.

The two old books, belonging to the Corporation of New Romney, here described, have been carefully examined throughout, partly, with the object of gathering from them such scattered details as may be found bearing reference to the people, localities, and usages of the time; but more especially, with the view of collecting such particulars as might possibly be met with in reference to Thomas Caxton, who for some time was resident in the close vicinity of Romney, and who not improbably, as already surmised in the preceding Report, was nearly related to William Caxton, our earliest printer. As will be seen in the sequel, these researches, more especially in reference to Thomas Caxton, have proved not entirely destitute of result.

The first of these books, is a folio volume, or rather, fragment of a volume, without cover, which once formed part of a Court-Book of New Romney; consisting of about 140 leaves of paper, many of them partly eaten away, and all much mutilated, by the joint agencies of damp and mice. So far as it has been preserved, the plaints, in Latin, and preferred in the "Common House," mostly in reference to actions of debt, unjust detainer, or trespass, begin in the 7th year of King Henry the Sixth (A.D. 1429) and end in the 24th year of that reign. Even where the paper has not crumbled or been eaten away, a large proportion of the entries upon it have been thoroughly washed out by wet. There is no foliation to the pages at the beginning of the volume.

On Monday after the Feast of St. Matthew, 8 Henry VI., plaint is made against William Mershe, horsleek (or horse-doctor) in an action of debt; an early instance of a word still familiar to us, though only in another sense. "At a Court holden at Romene on Monday before the Feast of Our Lord's Epiphany, in the 8th year of King [Henry the Sixth], William Wermystone brought a certain pledge, to wit, one set of prayer-heads, with silver gaudeys [the larger beads

"in the rosary, so called from 'Gaudete,' 'Rejoice,' in allusion to Luke i. 14) and two silvered girdles, appraised by William Love and . . . Wyse at 9 shillings." In fol. 47b in an inventory (11 Henry VI.) of articles deposited as security, mention is made of "one saddle called prykyn saddle." In fols. 52b, 53, are given the findings of juries, almost effaced by damp, on the Eve of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, 12 Henry VI., to the effect that Petronilla [or Parnel] Capnyne had burnt down two houses in the vill of Romene, and that she was a common incendiary: what was the nature of her punishment does not appear. In fol. 55 "John Bomyssone Van Spruse" appoints Thomas Inglood his general attorney, to receive for him all goods marked with a certain mark there given. "Van Spruse" here means "of Prussia;" "Spruse" being the name in England given to that country in the middle ages. Fol. 57b, "Laurence Gry, of Bristowe [Bristol], makes plaint against Thomas Hog and John . . . Memory," in a plea of trespass." Fol. 58, "on Tuesday the 16th of August, in the 13th year of Henry the Sixth, a Jury (the names given) finds that Matthew Randolph, clerk of the church of St. Laurence, at Romene, by reason of drunkenness and of bad government of himself, came by his death," a remarkable verdict in those times, as drunkenness is but rarely mentioned or alluded to. "On Monday after the Feast of the Nativity of St. Mary, in the 14th year of the reign of King Henry the Sixth, William Martyn makes plaint against Thomas Seefowle [Sea fowl], of the parish of Brokland, in the county of Kent, sawyer, in a plea of debt. . . . The party defendant was distrained by one saw, appraised at 20s. by John Gardener and John Uterdele." Fol. 61, in the 14th year of Henry the Sixth (A.D. 1436), the earliest mention occurs of Robert Stuppeny, a member of a family of importance, and long resident in the town. He was the father probably of Robert Stuppeny, born at Ivychurch, who was admitted to the freedom of the town of Romene in 1470, as noticed in the preceding Report, and grandfather of Richard Stuppeny, whose tomb is still to be seen in the church at New Romney. Fol. 71b, 15th Henry VI., "Simon Nopsone, Ducheman, makes plaint against John Pole, in a plea of trespass." The name of more than one "Ducheman" figures in these pages.

In fol. 74b the earlier part of the context belongs to New Romney, in the 15th year of King Henry the Sixth; but very singularly, towards the foot of the page, the context bears reference to nearly a quarter of a century later, and the scene is momentarily shifted to Tenterden, in the Weald of Kent. The entry begins with the scribbling of some capitals, then the sentence,—"Judica me, Deus, et discerne causam meam," (Psalms xliii. 1), and then, in Latin,—"A Court holden at Tenterden, on Monday before the Feast of St. Scolastica, in the 39th year of the reign of King Henry the Sixth.—William Mayster, freeman, makes plaint against Richard Forde, foreigner, as to a plea of trespass." There are a few lines of a like nature on the next page, and the context then reverts to Romney, at the prior date of a quarter of a century before.

In fol. 88 (16 Henry VI.) is the following entry, containing the earliest notice of Thomas Caxton, probably, to be found in connexion with Romney, and about 18 years before we find him (in the records of Rye) in practice as an attorney at Tenterden; if indeed this is the person there mentioned, as to which probably there can be little doubt:—"Thomas Caxtone makes plaint against William atte Mylle, in a plea of debt; pledges to prosecute, Stephen Bukhurst and John Maltone. The party defendant was attached by one pack [pak-kam] valued . . . a few words illegible, Caxton failed to prosecute, apparently, for the words "in mia,"—in amercement—are written over his name. Though probably not resident here at the time (as, for some years after, his name nowhere else appears), he may have been suing for law business done for William, who lived "at the Mill."

In the 23rd year of Henry VI.,—"On Monday after the Feast of St. Crispin and Crispinian, there came James Aelwyne before the Bailiff and Jurats, and brought one cup, called 'masere,' gilt and bound with silver, and one girdle, which were appraised by William Pyke and John Brokland at 49 shillings." On Monday after the Feast of St. Edward, in the same year,—"John de Ponte, master and merchant of a certain ship called the Trinity, of Luscombeborne [Lisbon] in Portyngale, made plaint against Peter Yamis in a plea of trespass and contempt, upon the Statute of false muniments or letters; the party defendant was "arrested." Four-fifths of this book are either illegible or have perished from decay; the callings mentioned in it are but few in number,—fletcher, spysour, furbour, myllere, balere, pakkeare, pyper, and bocher. Among the peculiar surnames may be mentioned those of Goldhord, Stomblyle, Curle, Fyg, and Breketappe; "Master John Tankard" is also mentioned, and "John Foxhunt" [meaning Foxhunter] appears several times: Walcote, Stotard, Clyderowe, and Cawse, are family names also found here. William Holynbroke was apparently in a large way of business, if we may judge from his frequent appearance as a suitor in actions of debt; he was descended, no doubt, from the William Holynbroke who was member of Parliament for Romene temp. Edward III., and whose brass still remains in the church. Stephen Bukherst, in the latter part of the book, is named as being the "general attorney" of the Court.

The next, and last of the New Romney volumes to be noticed in this Report, is a folio consisting of 260 leaves of stout paper, much mutilated by damp towards the beginning, but still inclosed by the original binding, in limp brown leather. There is a fly-leaf of parchment at the beginning, with nothing but the single word "Romeney" twice written upon the obverse, and "Romene villa" on the reverse. The entries (many of them bearing reference to fines levied) begin in the 32nd year of Henry the Sixth (A.D. 1454, and end in the 22nd of Edward the Fourth (A.D. 1483): though occasionally entered more at length, they are in general of a similar nature to the contents of the Court-Book previously described.

One of the earliest plaints (fol. 2) is that of William Russelle, Clerk, against Thomas Holyfont, Chaplain. Richard Barkare, "Vicar of Romene," also makes plaint against him, but in neither case is the ground stated: Barkare was ultimately amerced for not succeeding in his plaint. In fol. 2b., on plaint made by Thomas Crouchman against Sampson Ducheman, "not a free-man," in a plea of debt, the following list, in English and Latin mixed, is given of the articles distrained, belonging to the latter, to compel his appearance:—"3 patellars enea [brass platters.] 2 pelves [2 basins] 1 braspos, 3 candelabra [candlesticks.] a frying pan, a rostyng panne, a gredryone, an endryene [andiron.] 13 peces de peutre, 1 spete [spit.] a quartre pott, a pynt pott, appraised 16s.; 6 flychis [fitches] a bacone, pretii 6s. 8d."

Fol. 6, at a Court holden on Monday the Octave of Easter 32 Henry VI., Thomas Knytt was admitted Bailiff of Romene by grant of the Duke of Bukynggham, John Kempe, Archbishop of Canterbury (to whom the appointment properly belonged) being then dead, and his successor not appointed. The same Thomas Knytt had previously held the same office, by appointment by Archbishop Henry Chicheley in 1441; a copy of which is given at full length in fol. 9b. Fol. 23b., on Monday after the Feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross, 34 Henry VI., "John Craye and Thomas a Nasse, Wardens of the Play of the Restreccion, made plaint against John Lylve, in a plea of account. It was awarded that the complainants should recover of the defendant 4s., and for costs 6d., and damages 2d." Fol. 24b.—"John Buxherst makes plaint against William Sumpter of Kyngisdowne, in a plea of fabrication of false muniments." Fol. 25.—"William Herneys makes plaint against Sir Davyd Walshe, Chaplain of the parish of St. Martyn at Romene, in a plea of trespass: sureties to prosecute.—For making what was probably an unjust plaint, he was amerced. Fol. 25b.—"35 Henry VI.—At this Court came Henry Pakkere, of Romene, and offered to acquit himself of a certain debt of 16 shillings, by letters of process against him by William Feldeswelle sued. And because that the said W. Feldeswelle is away fishing in the northern parts, and has not any one in his behalf to be instructed, therefore, upon requisition of the Jurats, and to discharge the conscience of the parties aforesaid, the said Henry submitted to abide by the award and arbitration of Richard Forde and Henry Skynnare, of Hethe, as to the said demands."

Fol. 26, 35 Henry VI.—"William Bachelore makes plaint against Laurence Last, in a plea of trespass, with sureties to prosecute: the party defendant was arrested. Whereon he says that the said defendant, on the Day of St. Leonard in the year aforesaid, at Romene, made assault upon the same complainant, against the peace of the Lord the King, and with a certain staff did beat and maltreat him; by reason of which his life was despaired of, and by which he says that he is damnyed and has damage to the amount of 100 shill"ings; and as to which he produces suit." The defendant was thereupon told that he must establish his denial by two jurors ("tertia manu," on the oath of himself and two others); this he failed to do, and, after several ineffectual attempts to make a full Court, with consequent adjournments, he was condemned to pay 12 pence damages, and 8 pence for costs.

Fol. 27, 35 Henry VI.—"Richard Colyn, of Hastynges, puts John Forde as attorney in his place, [and] makes plaint against Antony Dias of Lussbone [Lisbon; in Portugale, late master of a certain ship, called the 'Seynt Peter' of Lussbone, in a plea of breach of contract; sureties to prosecute, William Copeland and Richard Forde. The party defendant was attached by two anchors, two ropis called 'tighis', two gunnys, '2 chombris [chambers, or small cannon] [and] such partydefendant made default.' In the same folio,—Margaret Perot makes plaint against Robert Gygge, in a plea of trespass, that he entered her house "and then and there took away 2 yards of cloth of grey colour, called musterdefelers [or mustard villors, a coarse shaggy grey cloth] value 6s. 6d., and to the damage of the complainant 20s." for failing in her suit she was amerced." Fol. 27b, 35 Henry VI.—"John West makes plaint against Thomas Gyls in a plea of trespass; sureties to prosecute given. Whereon he says, that the said defendant came, at Romene, on the last day of November, and entered the house of him the complainant, against the peace of the Lord the King, and there took and carried off 20 bushels of barley malt, value 10s. one temse [a large sieve] value 6d., one cyve [sieve] value 4d. one ase, one cowlstaff [cowstaff], '2 slunges [probably for carrying barrels] value 12d., and other utensils value 10s., and also carried off the wife of the said John, against the peace of the Lord the King; by which he says he was damaged and dammed to the value of 100s." The parties agreed to abide "by the award and arbitration of William a Towne and Geoffrey Sharpe, judgment to be given before "Monday after the Feast of Epiphany." Below it is stated, that Thomas Gyls also made his complaint; to the effect that, on Friday before the Feast of St. Thomas the Apostle, the said John West came to Romene and made assault upon his wife, by reason whereof her life was despaired of, and he was dammed to the amount of 100 shillings. Each party was amerced, for some reason not stated.

Fol. 30, 35 Henry VI.—"Richard Fayreware makes plaint against Cornelius Ducheman in a plea of trespass. The party defendant was attached by one cart and 3 horses, and two ades of heryng: appraised at '26s. 8d.'" The sureties to prosecute were John Brokland and William atte Towne, but the plaintiff was amerced. Fol. 32b, 35 Henry VI.—John Gregory is stated to have made plaint against Robert Boleyn, alias "Cristemasse," in a plea of debt; but the complainant died before prosecution. In the same page William Martyne proceeds against Robert Hurt, harpouir, in a plea of deceit. Fol. 33b, 36 Henry VI.—William Fullere, Chaplain, makes plaint against Gyles the Chaplain, in a plea of trespass; Andrew Aylewyne, Clerk, is his surety to prosecute, but he is amerced. Fol. 36, 36 Henry VI.—John Page recovers of Richard Davy 14 pence, for one "kneddrow" [kneading-trough] bought of him: Davy was also amerced. Fol. 41, 36 Henry VI.—"Thomas Johnson makes plaint against Hugh Corveser [Shoemaker], in a plea of debt . . . and because the defendant ran away, he was attached by divers goods, appraised by John Craye, John Trewe, and William Rigone, namely, 12 shoes, price 3s. 4d. [shoes were sometimes sold singly in those days]; 12 pairs of shoes, price 2s. 6d.; 2 pairs of overlethers, price 5d.; one platter, one ketyl, a lytlyl stole, panne, and a . . . 10d.; 3 candlesticks, 12d.; one coverlet, one pair of linen sheets, 2 pelevies [pillows], and one old undyng cloth, price 12d.; one trewet, price 3d."

Fol. 41b. On Monday the Feast of St. Edmund the King, 37 Henry VI., by virtue of a Commission of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Peter Cambregge was admitted to the office of Bailiff, appointing Thomas Holde his Under-bailiff. Fol. 42. On Monday after the Feast of St. Andrew, "John Palmere brought into Court one "salette [plain helmet] with visiere," pledged to him for 3s. 4d.; and which in Court were appraised at 2s. 6d. "On the same day Andrew Aylewyne, Clerk, brought "into Court, for appraisal, 3 yards of woollen cloth, of "grey colour, pledged to him by Sir John Hulle, "Chaplain, for the sum of 10s.:" the day for payment had passed, and the cloth was appraised at only 5s., and handed over to him by the Court. Fol. 44, 19th February, 37 Henry VI.—"Stephen Ivo, of the parish of "Hope, makes plaint against John Hykke, in a plea of "trespass; the complainant found sureties, John "Chenew and John Porter, and the defendant was arrested, and found sureties, Thomas Howlot and "Thomas Couper. On Monday after the Feast of St. "Valentine, that is, on the 19th day of February, there "was brought a certain mandate of Corpus cum causa, to "remove the body of John Hykke to the church of St. "James at Dovorre, on the 24th day of February, before the Lieutenant of Dovorre; and so the hand of "the present Court is closed." Fol. 45, 37 Henry VI. "Clement Fyppes makes plaint against John Lane, in "a plea of detainer. Peter Fermour makes plaint "against John Hunte, laborere, in a plea of detainer "The Under-bailiff returned that the party defendant had been arrested, whereon he drew his dagger "pugnionem suam], and made rescue by force of arms, "and fled." Fol. 47b, a part of Romene, called "the "East End" [Le Estende], is mentioned, in the parish of St. Nicholas. Fol. 48b, 38 Henry VI.—"Thomas "Kynge, of Rye in the county of Kent [?] makes plaint "against Thomas Spede, of London [elsewhere, citizen "and fishmonger, of London], in a plea of debt . . . "The party defendant was attached, by (seizing) three "horses, which were appraised at 40s.; his sureties "being John Hannes and Richard Halsnoth"; the latter person, who no doubt took his name from place called "Halsnoth," formerly "Hammersnoth," seems to have been an attorney practising in the Court. Fol. 52.—"A Hundred Court was holden for William "Kemppe, indicted for felony, by causing the death of "John Kemppe, father of the said William, on the "morrow of the Ascension:" nothing more seems to be said in reference to this case, beyond (fol. 53) an adjournment of the Court. Fol. 56, the "demesne of "Crawthorne Weste," in the town of Romene, is mentioned.

Fol. 57b. On Monday before the Feast of St. Edward, the King and Martyr, "in the first year of the reign of King "Edward, son of Sir Richard, the late Duke of York," possession was given by the Court to Roger Newman, of "one gown of green woollen cloth," which had been pledged to him by Florence Johnson for 6 pence; it being appraised in Court at that value. Fol. 58b,—1 Edward IV., William Chalers is admitted Bailiff, by Commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury. Fol. 62b, 1 Edward IV., in a plaint of debt by John Wardayne against John Mome, the latter was distrained by 7 herring-nets, 2 sport nets, one shrympe net, and 2 kedelle nettes. Fol. 73b, 1 Edward IV., Robert Stuppeny, of Ivcherch, is mentioned as plaintiff in actions of debt and account; the son, probably, of the person of the same name, mentioned previously under the 14th year of Henry VI., and father, probably, of Richard Stuppeny there named. Fol. 86, 2 Edward IV.—"A tenement in New Romney is mentioned, known as "Knevetys-corner." Fol. 89, 2 Edward IV.—"John Bachelor, "Clerk, puts in his place John Porter, as his general "attorney." Fol. 92, 3 Edward IV.—"At a Court on "Monday, the Day of St. Cuthbert, John Porter, the "attorney of John Greneforde, produced in Court one "silvered girdle, of sanguine [bloddy] colour, one napkin of tweyl [towel], one jake, and one green gown "doubled, with a blankete;" the same having been lent as security for 12s., at which sum they were also appraised, and delivered to the said John Greneforde accordingly. Fol. 93b, 3 Edward IV., a payment is agreed to be made at the Hamme [apud le Hamme]; the present Ham Street is probably meant. Fol. 94b, 3 Edward IV., Clement Covent produces in Court one pair of bryngadynesse, [armour of iron plates, upon quilted linen or leather], pledged to him by Henry Gregori, of Haryattesham for 4s. 10d.; they were appraised by four jurors at 5s. 6d.

Fol. 106b, 3 Edward IV.—"John Graftone, "Chaplain, "Vicar of Romene," makes plaint against Walter Foster, Chaplain, in a plea of deceit; the latter, making default, is amerced. In fol. 107b, a plaint is made against the same party, for breach of covenant, and with a like result. Fol. 111b, 3 Edward IV., John Wilyamson, plomere [plumber], is accused of stealing 2 horses, of bay colour, value 26s. 8d., belonging to William Bredham, of Sellinge. The complainant, however, voluntarily renounced his accusation, on its being found that the defendant was "vexed with fury and the greatest madness; and for no other reason."—"And with the "Bailiff for his release the complainant made fine; "whereon the Bailiff wholly discharged the said William "and his sureties." Fol. 118b, 4 Edward IV., in a plea of breach of covenant, at the suit of Clement Forde, Copin Wolfe is attached by "one sakke of hoppis," to remain in the custody of the Bailiff: this is an early mention of hops; they were then grown near to the town, but as Copin appears, by his name, to have been a foreigner, these may have been imported from abroad. Fol. 120, "John Bachelor, Rector of Midle," appears here as a surety, and in various other places as a party to suits. Fol. 127, 4 Edward IV.,—Richard Randleslowe makes plaint against Margaret, relict of John Rolffe, alias Saundres, in a plea of debt: whereon, "she was attached by 3 kettles [cacobos], one posnet [a cup or small basin], and one quernestone [stone for a corn hand-mill];" all appraised at 6 pence; the complainant was amerced for making a false plaint. "On the same day, Richard Glover came into Court, and demanded one Portifory [portable Service-book] pledged to him for 3s. 6d. by Sir John Talbot [Chaplain];" the said John was thereupon summoned to account. Fol. 127b, Richard Glover makes plaint against John Talbot, Clerk, in a plea of deceit, and in the same Court the Portifory is appraised at 12 pence only, and, "according to custom," delivered into the Bailiff's hands. Fol. 129b,—"On Monday after the [Feast of St. Martin, John Porter, attorney of Richard Sexby, produced in Court one tablecloth and 2 hand-napkins, pledged to the said Richard by William Helman for 8s. 5d.; which cloth and napkins were appraised by Henry Norkyn and Henry Smyth at 20 pence, and were delivered to the Bailiff, according to the custom, etc." Fol. 131, at a Court holden on Monday after the Feast of St. Nicholas, and so from day to day, 4 Edward IV., William Chalers, Esquire, by Commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury, was appointed Bailiff. Fol. 131b,—"At a Court holden on Monday after the Epiphany, 4 Edward IV., William Wodere came into Court, and demanded 3 yards of blankete and half a yard of medley russete, pledged to him by Thomas Squiere;" the blanket was appraised at 4 shillings, the russet at 7 pence, and they were delivered to the Bailiff, according to the usage. Fol. 134, John Palmare demanded one jak, that had been pledged to him for 17 pence by John Anwerp [of Antwerp]; it was appraised at 12 pence, and delivered to the Bailiff. Fol. 139,—"At a Hundred Court holden on Monday after the Feast of St. Dunstan, namely, the 20th day of March, in the 5th year of the reign of King Edward the Fourth, one John Roger, cousin of Alice Peynde, made outcry [exclamavit] upon Thomas Peynde, for slaying one Alice Peynde, wife of the said Thomas, "she being feloniously by the said Thomas slain;" nothing more is mentioned of this. Fol. 142b, 5 Edward IV., John Browne, of Southwark, demanded of William Yonge, a horse, saddle, and bridle, value 5 marks 2 shillings; a sword, value 6s. 8s.; and a gown of sanguine colour [bloddy coloris] value 20s.: the defendant was condemned to pay, in all, the large sum of 13 marks, 2s. 13d., and to remain in the Bailiff's custody. Fol. 145b, 5 Edward IV., on plaint made by William Peret against Richard Carby, in a plea of deceit, Thomas Galyone and T. Usbarne "undertook for the said defendant that he should abide by the judgment of the masters of ships and boats of the villis of Hasting, Wynchelse, Sandrych, and Dovorre, in a certain matter between the said complainant and defendant pending, touching the Law of Oleron, that is, the law maritime, under a penalty of 40s."

Fol. 155b, at a Court holden on Monday after the Feast of St. Gregory the Pope, John Tuder, Gentleman, was admitted to the office of Bailiff, by Commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury. About this date, Thomas Caxton, as stated in a previous Report, upon the records of the town of Lydd, had ceased to hold the office of Common Clerk there, and was free, no doubt, to act as an attorney elsewhere, a practice from which he was precluded, probably, while holding the office of Common Clerk: be this, however, as it may, it is at this point that we reach that part of the volume for the sake of which it has been mainly subjected to examination; the portion of it, namely, that contains some few incidental notices of Thomas Caxton.

Fol. 153, 7 Edward IV., on a charge of trespass made by John Bradwey, staynere, against Thomas Bate "canovics" [? meaning hemp-grower], on Monday before our Lord's Ascension, and more than once adjourned, the parties finally agree to abide by the award of John Cheyne and William Legge, on the one side, and Thomas Caxtone and Robert Lucas, on the other: Lucas had just succeeded Caxton as Common Clerk of Lydd; "indifferently chosen to arbitrate upon all manner of actions between them in any manner had or arisen, from the beginning of the world to the day of the making of these presents." The name of Lucas appears not unfrequently before this date, as acting as an attorney in the Court. Fol. 159.—At a Court holden on Monday before the feast of St. Barnabas the Apostle, 7 Edward IV.,—"William Bukherst demanded one gown of sanguine colour, pledged to him for 3s. 9d. by Robert Newhouse, to be appraised at the next Court; on which order was given by the Bailiff to summon him at the next Court; on which day the complainant adjourned it to the next, in hope that the pledge would be discharged. Which day being come, the complainant produced the said gown in Court, and asked for it to be appraised; on which, the Court charged Thomas Bursile, John Hosiare, and William Swanne, who appraised it at 3s. 8d.; upon which, it was delivered to the Bailiff, according to the custom." A few lines above, Bukherst appears in Court, as having had a blanket [diplois] pledged to him for 3s. 1d. Fol. 167b, 7 Edward IV.,—"John Cheyne new demands a certain pledge, pledged to him by John Hosiare, namely, one saddle, one pan of brass [pannam de bras], and 3 pieces of leder [leather], for rent of his house in the Market [le Market], in amount 12s. 6d." In this same page John Cheyne demands a piece of ground to be restored to him, in the parish of St. Laurence, upon the Crockhelle, no rent having been received for two years. Fol. 170, 8 Edward IV., a horse is demanded by Geoffrey Sharp to be appraised as a pledge, "called a gewydnye" [gelding]. Fol. 171b, 8 Edward IV., Geoffrey Sharp demands possession of 3 "mansura" [elsewhere called "regges," ridges] of flewys [flewets] and 2 "mansura" of shonettes [shotnets], pledged to him by Alice Mellere.

Fol. 177,—At a Court holden on Monday before the Feast of St. Dunstan, 9 Edward IV., Thomas Knight appeared in Court, with a "Letter of attendance" from Dovorre, and a letter from the Earl of Warwick, the then Warden of the Cinque Ports, directing that John Tuder should be prohibited from any longer holding the office of Bailiff, and that the said Thomas should himself be admitted thereto. It was shortly after this that Richard, Earl of Warwick, the "King-maker," rose in rebellion against Edward IV., and for a time deprived him of his throne. John Tuder, if we may judge from his name, may have been connected with the Lancastrian party; and hence, not improbably, his removal; which, however, was but momentary, for on the next page we are told that on the 13th of August following he presented fresh Letters, of attendance, from Dovorre Castle, and, in conformity therewith, was again admitted to the office of Bailiff; the letter is professed to be entered, "as follows"; but a blank only appears in its place. Fol. 184b,—On Monday after the Feast of St. Barnabas the Apostle, 10 Edward IV.,—"Sir Robert Carpenter, Prior of Bylsington, puts in his place Thomas Hold, as his general attorney, in all causes and matters, moved and to be moved, as well to prosecute as to defend." In fol. 186b, is entered the first Court holden in the brief second reign of Henry VI., on his temporary recovery of the crown:—"A Court holden on Monday next before the feast of the Apostles Simon and Jude, in the year from the beginning of the reign of King Henry the Sixth the 49th, and in the first year of his recovery of the royal power." In fol. 189, the reign of Edward IV. (in his 11th year) is resumed. In fol. 197b, (12 Edward IV.) a long award is entered, in English, between Robert Kempe and Andrew Kempe, as to a disputed account between them. Among other things enjoined, Robert is to pay Andrew 18s., "for keepyn of X pollis of rede bestes in the gret wynter last past . . . also, for harmes that his cattell dede in the saide Robert's whete, 2s." Fol. 199b, 13 Edw. IV.—At suit of Thomas Howlt, in a plea of debt, John Wordham is "attached by a waggon and 2 oxen, one geldyn, and one horse." Ultimately, the complainant is amerced. In a plea of covenant broken (fol. 203), 13th December, 13 Edward IV., between Thomas Faunt and John Sharpe, Thomas Caxstone and John Pultone are chosen arbitrators.

In fol. 204b, the context in the middle of the page begins to be entered in a different writing from that which precedes it; the vigorous and legible hand of Thomas Caxton, no doubt: he had lately ended his term of duty as Bailiff of Lyde [Lydd], and was now temporarily employed at Romene as Common Clerk;—see the previous Report upon the records of New Romney, p. 545.

Fol. 205, Edward Alewey appoints Nicholas Morlay and Thomas Caxtone, jointly and severally, his general attorneys. As is the usage with Caxton in the Lydd Court-Book, JHU [Jesu] is written by his hand at the head of nearly every page of his entries. Fol. 206b., 14 Edward IV.,—the following is entered in Caxton's handwriting, in Latin, (tr.)—"On the same day [6 June] "Johanna Scras presented in Court a certain distress "taken from William Harneis, for rent of the tenement "which the same William has at ferm from the same "Johanna, and asked for it to be appraised, to wit"—then in English,— "two ketelles, two pannys, two "basyns, 2 platers, 2 candlestykes, one quart, one "pynt, and a pottelle potte of pewtere." The articles were appraised at 5s. 6d., and the said William was allowed 15 days for redeeming them. At fol. 207b the entries in Caxton's hand are discontinued.

Fol. 208, at a Court holden on the 3rd of October, 14 Edward IV.,—"Thomas Caxton appoints Nicholas "Morley his general attorney, in all causes and matters "moved and to be moved": probably to act for him in his absence, as he was then residing at Lydd. Fol. 209b, mention is made of "a part of the King's highway, "called 'Bocherestrete,' [elsewhere Bochery Lane] "in the parish of St. Laurence, at Romene, and a "certain foss there, called the Market dyke." In the same page, on the 28th of November, 14 Edward IV., William Coupar appoints Nicholas Moreley and Thomas Caxtone his general attorneys; lower down in the same page, Caxtone is named as being appointed an arbitrator, jointly with John Cheynew. Fol. 211,—At a Court holden on the 25th of September, 15 Edward IV., a fine was levied by William Melhale and John Melhale to John Cheynew of a certain tenement, "called Jerusalem." Fol. 212, mention is made of "the street of St. John "the Baptist," in the parish of St. Laurence, at Romene. Fol. 216b, Roger Harlakendene appoints Thomas Caxtone, William Dobelle, and John Castlake, his attorneys, 30th December, 15 Edward IV. Fol. 217b.—On the 29th January, 15 Edward IV.,—"Richard Smythe "was arraigned on felony for the death of Joan, late "his wife: he has a day given to him by the Bailiff "and Jurats in full Hundred present, to bring 36 men "[jurors] for his delivery, by the 8th day of March "in the year next to come [anno proximo futuro]." Fol. 218,—15th February, 15 Edward IV., Gregory Hoorne appoints Thomas Caxtone and John Fermour to act for him, as his general attorneys.

Entries in Caxton's hand recommence at fol. 220b, 1st July, 16 Edward IV., and continue for three pages, with the word "JHU" [Jesu] at the head of each. In the preceding Report upon the records of New Romney, extracts have been given of the various payments made to Caxton for holding these Courts: it was in this year (1476) that he left Lydd, to take office, at Sandwich, as Common Clerk. Fol. 220b, Thomas Cowper makes plaint against "Sir [Dominus] John Prest, otherwise "called 'Sir John, Parishprest of Demecherche, in a "plea of trespass." Finally, the complainant did not appear, and was amerced. "At this Court came Hamo "Lambard, our Combaron of Olderomene, in the name "of the said parish of Olderomene, and asked that a "Hundred-Court, might be held for the King upon Sir "Robert—Clerk, and Margaret Chapmanne, arrested "on suspicion of felony, and in the custody of John "Tudare, Bailiff of this town." Fol. 221b, "At a "Hundred-Court, holden on Monday the 5th of August, "16 Edward IV.—Robert Ropykne, Clerk, late Chaplain "of the church of Old Romene, arraigned on felony, "as set forth in a certain indictment, says that he is "not guilty of felony, and puts himself on the con- "sideration of the Court, to be acquitted thereon. And "thereupon, according to the custom of the Cinque "Ports, for his acquittance, it is assigned that he shall "have 36 good and lawful men, to be here at a "Hundred Court, to be holden on Monday the 16th "day of the month of September, next to come, at his "peril." In the same page, it is stated that on the day named, he was "delivered to the Ordinary of "the Lord Cardinal, Archbishop of Canterbury, by "virtue of a Commission, unto us deputed,"—that is, as having Benefit of Clergy. The Commission, issued by John Parmenter, Licentiate in Laws, as Commissary General of the Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Vicar of Romene, in behalf of all clerks and literates accused of felony before a secular Court, is given in fol. 222, but not in Caxton's writing; a hand is drawn in the margin, calling attention to it. Fol. 228, 4th August, 17 Edward IV.,—"On the same day, certain goods of Andrew "Ganter, namely, one red girdle harnessed with silver, "and another girdle, green on one side and black on "the other; two sets of prayer-beads, one of which is "of jet, with gawdes [larger beads] of silver, and the "other set of white amber, and 2 gold rings, were "appraised by William Melhale and John Melhale at "the value of 40s."

Fol. 229, 17 Edward IV., William Correy, Clerk, makes plaint against Sir John Cargyle, Parish Priest of Seyntmarecherche, in a plea of deceit. Fol. 230b, 24 November, 17 Edward IV.,—"Nicholas Morley, and "John Templer appraised certain goods of Nicholas "Holle; namely, one long gown of murrey, value 12s.; "two silvered girdles, one of sanguine colour, and the "other of colour of cremeseye [crimson], the said girdle "being without a pendent, and 6 silver spoons, value 8s.; "and another sanguine girdle, value 3s. 4d." Fol. 234, 18 Edward IV., a "Thomas Otway," of Romene, is named. Fol. 235b, 18 Edward IV., "The highway "leading from the High Cross towards the Butchers' "Market," is mentioned. Fol. 236, 18 Edward IV.,—"There was seized by the Under-bailiff one hood of "violet, for a woman, bound with red silk, and one "silver ring. These were seized on the Day of St. "John the Baptist; and the aforesaid woman [not "named] had a day given her by the Under-bailiff, for "the month next following, to prove that the same were "her own, according to the custom of the town: which "month, or yet any day within the month, the said woman "did not keep." Fol. 238, 18 Edward IV., Thomas Ubarne makes plaint against Richard Bekirstaffe in a plea of trespass and deceit. Fol. 240, 9th November, 18 Edward IV., Thomas Caxton (who is now residing at Sandwich) appoints Nicholas Morlay and John Castlake to act as his attorneys. Fol. 241b, 18 Edward IV., 3 chargers and 3 dishes "de electro" [of brass], are valued at 11 shillings. Fol. 244,— "At a Court of Piepowder, "holden on the 26th day of March, in the 18th year of "the reign of King Edward the Fourth, William Balle, "for the priest of the parish church of St. Laurence, in "the town of Romene, makes plaint against Thomas "Sawer, of London, in a plea of deceit: the defendant "was arrested, and in the hands of the Under-bailiff." Fol. 246b, 19 Edward IV., "John Boye, Warden of the "goods of the parish church of Hope All Saints, "makes plaint against Thomas Wilson in a plea of tres- "pass." Fol. 248, 19 Edward IV., a place is mentioned as "Hongmanesolle" [? Hangman's Pond], in the parish of St. Laurence, at Romene. Fol. 253, 20 Edward IV., Thomas "Otway" is impleaded by Stephen Baker, in an action for detainer of chattels. Fol. 257b, 21 Edward IV., a place in the parish of St. Nicholas is mentioned as "Kedelmaneshope," as also, "the Old Havene," of Romene. Fol. 258b, 21 Edward IV., in the particulars of a fine levied, a public road is mentioned as (apparently) to the south of the church of St. Laurence, and leading from the church of St. Nicholas to "Holy- "paine." Fol. 260b, 22 Edward IV., "Richard "Godwote" is mentioned as a plaintiff, it being the last page. A leaf or leaves have probably been lost at the end.

As to the nature and extent of the Court's jurisdiction, persons from the following places, adopting the ancient nomenclature, appear, as complainants or defendants, in the Court:—Kingsdown, Ivycherche, Bilsyngtone, Wilesbergh, Rokyn, Demecherch, Hope All Saints, New cherche, Haldene, Okerst, Apuldre, Wereborne, Pittysmelle, Wyre, Wodecherche, Winchelsea, Blakmerstone, Rye, Harrietsham, Canterbury, Elmystede, Preston (in Sussex), Shoreham, Chichester, Southampton, and London.

Comparatively few trades, or callings, are mentioned in this book; these few being, with perhaps one or two more, wefure (weaver), shipman, rypier, kedtman (a fisherman with kiddle-nets, or kettle-nets), chapmanne, staynere, tynkere, shomaker, tanner, plumber, hosier, and "lutor," whether meaning bleacher of linen, or tawyer of leather, it seems difficult to say.

Among the surnames of persons, occurring once or more, are the following:—Kempe, the name that most frequently occurs, Gye, Jurdan, Galyon, Scras, Pendar, Aylwyn, Knytbregge, Basse, Tolkyne, Sedle, Tailboys, Rust, Bayle, Rolfe, Howlot, Cortothe, Bacheler, Gily, Harneys, Maltby, Pilchar, Abraham, Bukher, Whatman, Rymer, Lambard, Bickerstaffe, and Otway. The few surnames deserving remark for their singularity are,—Fright, afterwards appearing as "Afright," Fayrewayre, Lyttlbrother, and Stifast. The present surname "Whitaker" appears as "Whetacre," which not improbably was in many instances its original form, being adapted from the locality—the wheat-land, near to which the owner's house, or cottage, was situate. The Saxon "Whitgar" not improbably, may be fairly claimed as the original form by some who own the name.

To the preceding remarks the following remains to be added. In the latter of the Court-books here described, the contents ranging from A.D. 1454 to 1482, the leather binding, at the back, is braced throughout with long strips of parchment, portions, formerly, of a more ancient volume. On examination, the book thus wantonly destroyed in the fifteenth century, proves to have been a small folio Account-book of the preceding century; in which may be traced fragments (never more than two or three words consecutively) of entries, in Latin throughout, mostly in the handwriting of Daniel Rowe, who was Common Clerk of New Romney nearly a century before. Of Daniel Rowe, or Rough, whose Register of the Corporation affairs of New Romney, from A.D. 1353 to 1380, is still preserved at St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, some account has been given in the Fourth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, pp. 424-8; as also, in the Fifth Report, p. 533. He was living in Sharle Ward at New Romene, from 1381 to 1384, and probably died in the year 1385. His wife, whose name, as we learn elsewhere, was "Elicia," probably died before him, as she is not named with him in the Register for Poll Tax (still preserved at Romney) for 1381.

If we may judge from these fragments, we have fair right to conclude that the learned Common Clerk (like his predecessor, Andrew Horne, Chamberlain of London) was in a large way of business as a Fishmonger as well. The entries,—in Latin—and but few fishmongers of the time could have kept their accounts in Latin,—shew that he sent fish to, or dealt at, the following places, London and Hertford, more particularly: Dovorre, Bury, St. Alban's, Cambridge, Newmarket, Walsingham, Wallingford, Kirkeby (?), and Woxbridge, or Uxbridge. His "Jornale," or Day-book, is repeatedly referred to—"ut per Jornale,"—and the travelling expenses of his men may be traced in part, with his outlay for oats, hay, litter, horse shoeing, reins, and collars (for sumpter-horses, apparently). The names of some of the fish either sent by him to these towns, or sold at Romene, are given in English. In some instances, they consist of the following items: oysters, crabbes, trought, sprottes (or sprats), porpoise (porcus piscis), salmon, haddock lampreys, mackerel, collinge, conger, shrympes, herrings, red herrings, merling (whiting), pikerelle, stokfische, gurnards, wel (probably whelks), tench, and stikes of pimpernelle, probably meaning sticks, on which were eels, thus named, were strung. The stike of eels consisted of twenty-five: soles do not appear among the fish here mentioned. Rowe seems to have dealt in other articles of food, as well; for we find him, in one fragment, buying a boar at Hertford, and, at places not named, calves, porkers (porcelli), and a gammon of bacon. In one instance—Rowe, probably a kinsman, is mentioned as receiving (blank, being cut away) for his wages,— "Rowe pro vad' suis." One of his purchases, the nature of which does not appear, is made from a Countess, her name being cut away. From the vast number of items on these few fragments (no two of which coincide), we may conclude that the business done by the owner of the Account-book was very extensive. Would that it, or the often-mentioned Jornale, had fallen into the hands of those better able to appreciate its future value in the eyes of an inquiring posterity!

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

MERTON COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The early archives of this ancient College, in the form of books, do not seem to be numerous. Among the earliest, may be mentioned two thin small quarto parchment volumes, containing, each of them, the Statutes of Walter de Merton, the Founder of the College: the text begins with large illuminated capitals, and they were written, probably, at different periods in the 14th century.

The only other book, apparently, of any great age, is a thin small folio parchment volume, recently rebound in stiff parchment, but which, from its original binding, no doubt, is still known as the "Liber Ruber," or Red Book. It contains a list, with abstracts, of all the deeds and documents that were in the possession of the College at some period in the reign of Edward III., the time of its compilation, under the various heads of "Surreie," "Kanc," and at fol. 12 is an account of the foundation deeds of the College, with descriptions of the seals, in their then condition: the other Counties follow, in which the property then held by the College was situate. The initial letters in the volume are illuminated in red and blue, and it bears marks of having been preserved with care: there are, I believe, one or more modern copies of it; and additions have been made here and there in the volume itself, in later hands. The following is a transcript of the commencing portion of fol. 12 of this volume; which, at the time when written, was in all probability intended to be the commencing leaf of the book.—

"Prima, Carta ordinationis, et est signata sigillis Domini Henrici Regis Angliæ, et Domini J. Wyn-toniæ Episcopi, et Capituli, et Domini W. de Mertone; et est duplex, set sunt alie meliores." (The meaning of this last passage is not very evident.)

"Vetus fundatio, in qua continetur Maudon', Farley', Leddrid, Gameleg', Cant', Grauntesethe, Cestre-ton', Ybeston', Cokexham [Cuxham], Chetyndone, Kybwrth, Bark[by] Stilligtone, Seytone, una cum ecclesiis nostris, et est signata sigillis Domini Henrici Regis Angliæ, et W. de Mertone; et est duplex.

"Nova fundatio, in qua continetur regula domus Scolarium de Merton', et est duplex; sed una signata sigillis Domini Edwardi, Regis Angliæ, et Domini W. de Mertone, et altera cum sigillo Domini Edwardi Regis.

"Littera confirmationis et ratificationis fundacionis et institutionis domus Scolarium de Merton, eidem domui facta per Fratrem Robertum, Cantuariæ Archiepiscopum, totius Angliæ primate; et est duplex.

This Papal Bull is given at length, and ends fol. 12b—"Datum Romæ, apud Sanctum Petrum, ii. Idus Aprilis, Pontificatus nostri anno tertio.—Et est duplex."

In the early part of last century, Francis Astrey, a Fellow of Merton College, made a compilation, containing an account, so far as he could obtain it, from three sources then existing, (an Old Catalogue, in the Library, a Catalogue made by Sir Henry Saville, formerly Warden, and a then "New" Catalogue), of the preceding Wardens and Fellows of his College, the College never having possessed an Admission Book. Joseph Kilner, who became a Fellow of the College in the year 1741, re-wrote the text of Astrey's book, with a very large number of additions on the opposite pages, borrowed principally from a catalogue compiled by Antony Wood, and his collections after mentioned. In the whole of Kilner's compilation, which contains much interesting matter, the following is perhaps the most curious passage, fol. 111.—"Gulielmus Grysaunte, M.D. peritissimus. Idem, mathematicis studiis deditus, tales exercuit praxes, ut se magicis artibus suspectum fecerit; matura ætate Galliam petiit, et rei medicæ incubuit, primum in Montepessulano, deinde apud Massiliam, pedem fixit. Filium habuit Gulielmum [aut Grimoaldum], qui primo Massiliæ Abbas, dein Pontifex Romanus, creatus est, nomine Urbani V. Senex claruit hic noster anno 1350. Ejus nomen non occurrit in veteri Catalogo. Sed hunc locum occupat in Saviliano." William Grysaunte's name may possibly be found among the College Computi, at present unexamined. He studied as a physician at

MERTON
OXFORD.

Montpellier, and afterwards lived at Marseilles. In right of his wife he became lord of Grissac in Gevandani; and his eldest son by her, who was born at Marseilles, was abbot of St. Victor there, and afterwards Pope, as Urban the Fifth, in 1362. The father of Pope Urban is mentioned as being an Englishman by Walsingham in his English History.

Antony Wood, who was a member of this College, as a "Portionista," or Postmaster, made considerable collections for a history of it, but was prevented by death from publishing them, or indeed, in all probability, bringing them to a conclusion. They are kept in a small wooden box in the Muniment-room, and seem to be in a good state of preservation. The College Comptui have been largely borrowed from for his Catalogue, which is in the Bodleian Library.

The Charters and early deeds in the possession of the College are very numerous, and some of them, with their seals, are in a fine state of preservation: among the earliest is a grant by King Edward I. to the College of a Jew's house, in Oxford, at the intercession of Queen Eleanor; she died in 1291, and the grant must have followed close upon the expulsion of the Jews and seizure of their possessions.

The "Comptui," or ancient Account-rolls, of the College are very numerous. They are of two classes; those bearing reference to the management of the manors and lands belonging to the society; and those of the Sub-wardens, Chaplains, Bursars, and Procurators, containing statements of its internal expenditure, or what may be called its "domestic accounts." These Comptui have been extensively consulted by Professor J. E. T. Rogers, for materials for his valuable work upon Prices.

Many of the Account rolls have, no doubt, perished, and several of those that have survived are almost illegible from decay. The following is a list (assorted by reigns) of such of the College Rolls as came under my supervision; but since my examination of them, a number of other rolls have been found, the dates of which are, of necessity, here omitted:—

Warden's Roll 33 Edward I.; Bursar's Roll, 18, 31, 32, 32, 33, 33, 35, 15, 26, 27, 18, of the same reign.

Subwarden's Roll, 4 Edward II.; Procurator's Roll, 7; Bursar's Roll, 4, 6, 19, 13, 11, 12, 8, 19, 9, 18, 15, 6, 3, 17, 6, 16, 7, 12, 17, 6, 2, 14, 3, 16, 10, 14, of the same reign. In some instances, it will be observed, there are two, or more, Bursar's Accounts, for the same year.

Chaplain's Account, 5, 8, 1, 4, 6, Edward III.; Subwarden's Roll, 2, 41, 27, 39, 41, 42, 44, 19; Bursar's Roll, 27, 16, 1, 19, 14, 2, 7, 2, 4, 25, 11, 19, 9, 3, 19, 4, 22, 20, 41, 40, 29, 42, 18, 30, 33, 38, 47, 36, 40, 24, 34, 16, 25, 34, 50, 35, 36, 45, 48, 32, 39, 21, 26, 20, 18, 48, 50, 4; Procurator's Roll, 11, 20, 37, 34, 28, 23, 16, 26; Bailiff's Account, 39, of the same reign. The First, Second, and Third, Bursars, occasionally have, each, his account for the same year.

Bursar's Roll, Richard II., 1, 8, 14, 5, 19, 2, 15, 22, 14, 23, 10, 11, 6, 7, 22, 13, 11, 12, 3; Procurator's Roll, 7; Bailiff's Account, 8, of the same reign.

Subwarden's Roll, 9 Henry IV.; Bursar's Roll, 1, 2, 11, 13, 6, 12, 7, 2, 6, 1, 2; Procurator's Roll, 10, of the same reign.

Bursar's Roll, 2 Henry V.

In addition to these, there are a large number of Rolls unnoticed by me, coming down to the reign of Henry VIII.; at which date, probably, they were superseded by books being kept for the College accounts. Others of the earlier Rolls may possibly be still in existence, as already suggested, in addition to those already mentioned.

The Procurator's, or Proctor's, Roll of the 34th of Edward III. (A.D. 1360), is of very great length, covering several membranes, and in fine preservation: a large portion of it is devoted to the expenses of pulling down St. Stephen's Hall.

The Procurator's Accounts, at least in some instances, seem to have been of a peculiar character; and the following Roll, which has been fully transcribed, appears, though it is not so stated, to have been one of them. It is an account of moneys expended, (mostly for feasting,) during certain days devoted by the Warden to the auditing of the Bursar's Accounts. The word "Item," which constantly recurs, is here omitted.

The following translation of the preceding passage will convey a fair idea of College diet among the Fellows, upon what was, perhaps, a more than ordinary festive occasion, in A.D. 1346.

"Expenses made upon taking the Account, by Master Robert de Midlond, in the 20th year of the reign of King Edward, after the Conquest the Third.

From an old worm-eaten roll, mutilated at the beginning, and the date gone, but evidently belonging to the time of Edward II., it appears that the boys of the Founder's kin lived in the "Aula Monialium," or Nun Hall, as it is called in some of the Computi. The account begins with the expenses for making and mending their shoes; grease for greasing their shoes; mending their clothes; obles of candles "for the Artists and the Grammaticists" xid. at one time, and xiiid. another. Coats (tunicas) and surcoats (supertunicas) are bought. Wheat for obles, or oblates (ad oblata)—sweet wafer cakes made with honey—is entered at 7½d. Wine is served by the gallon on, apparently, each Saint's Day; oil by the gallon, or half gallon, on Sundays and Saints' Days. The following entries are then made, under the head of "Minute Expense"—Small Expenses.—

OXFORD.

In primis, pro uno panno facto de scuis, empto ad altare Virginis Mariæ xvid. Item, pro alio consimili panno ad altare Sanctæ Katerine xiiid. Pro pinguedine ad campanas ob. Ad festum Crucifixionis Domini, pro reparatione vestimentorum iid. Pro uno pixide empto [sic] ad ecclesiam ob. Ad festum Sancti Mathie Apostoli, pro uno Psalterio empto ad ecclesiam xviid. Ad festum Annunciationis Mariæ, pro uno manutergio iiid. qu. Pro mundatione ecclesie post Pascham iid. Pro emendatione furrarum amniciorum vd. Eodem tempore, sutrici pro reparatione vestimentorum id. Ad Pentecosten, pro reparatione vestimentorum id. Post Pascha, pro ligatura unius Psalterii iiid. Statim post, pro ligatura alterius Psalterii iiid. ob. Pro una tabula et emendatione, et duobus botis [?] Legendæ Sanctorum iiid. Pro tabula ad Album Gradale id. Pro novis tabulis et ligatura libri qui dicitur 'Placebo' iiid. Item, ad festum Omnium Sanctorum, pro mattis emptis ad ecclesiam xiiid. Contra Pascha, pro cirpis ad ecclesiam iiid. ob. qu. Pro cirpis, alia vice, contra Pascha vd." followed by charges for rushes on the 4th Sunday after Easter, the Eve of our Lord's Ascension, the Eve of Pentecost, and the Eve of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist.

The following is a translation of the preceding passage:—"Delivered for one key for the door of the pulpit 1½d. First, for a cloth made with shields thereon, for the altar of the Virgin Mary 16d. For another like cloth for the altar of St. Katharine 14d. For grease for the bells 3d. At the feast of our Lord's Crucifixion, for repair of vestments 2d. For one pyx bought for the church 3d. At the feast of St. Matthias the Apostle, for one Psalter for the church 18d. At the feast of the Annunciation of Mary, for one hand towel 4½d. For cleaning the church after Easter 2d. For mending the furs of the amices 5d. At the same time, to a sempstress, for repair of the vestments 1d. At Pentecost, for repair of the vestments 1d. After Easter, for binding one Psalter 3d. Immediately after, for binding another Psalter 4½d. For a board and the mending and the two bosses [?] of the Legendæ Sanctorum 4d. For a board for the White Gradal 1d. For new boards and binding of the book called 'Placebo' 4d. At the feast of All Hallows, for mats for the church 14d. Against Easter, rushes for the church 4½d. Rushes, at another time, for Easter 5d."

Among the items which then follow, there is a charge for mats of Ottemore.—"At the feast of St. Katharine, for coals for making the obles 6d. At the Purification, for coals.—For coals for the oblates, at Easter 4d." On the reverse of the Roll are entered "Expenses of making the candles for the church"; and then, though now very indistinct, expenses of writing a Legend and other books for the church, and of illuminating a Missal. The Roll is formed of three membranes sewed together; and, if we may judge from the writing, it is doubtful whether the account of the boys of the Founder's kin is not of earlier date than the items relating to payments for the church, the writing being altogether different: the earlier may belong to the first ten years of the 14th century, the latter is apparently some 60 years later in date.

The most remarkable, however, among these Computi, most of which are replete with matter of interest, is that of Richard Billingham, Third Bursar, for the 30th year of Edward III. (A.D. 1356). John Wyclif, it has been alleged, and, not improbably, with truth, was, for a time, a Fellow of this College; and in the following portion of the Roll mention is made of the name, as that of the Seneschal, Steward, or provider of commons, for his week:—"Liberata pro communis.—Inprimis, liberata pro communis Sociorum et famulorum, per talliam:—Bukyngham xxixs. Tomeworth xxixs. iiid. Wranham xxxis. iiid. ob. Billingham xxxiis. viiud. ob. Etecron, iiii li. ixss. viiud. in septimana Paschatis.

"Cotesford xxxiis. iiid. ob. Sutton xxvix. 10d. ob. qu. Berton xxviis. xd. ob. Bengire xxviii. vid. ob. Wyclif iiii li. vis. vd. ob. pro festo facto in Die Ascensionis, pro xviii. extraneis [Wyclif 4l. 7s. 5½d., for a feast made on Ascension Day, for 18 strangers]. Rok xxxis. 10d. ob. Redyng lvis. vid. ob. Westebrook, in festo Trinitatis et Nativitatis Sancti Johannis iiii li. xis. iid. Reynham xlis. 1s. Farmlaw xxxixs. iiid. qu. Reed xxxs. vid. ob. qu. R. Lamborn xxxiis. viiud. qu. Buryng xxvix. iid. qu. Simoni Lamborn xvix. iiid. ob. qu." It deserves notice that 12 of the 18 Fellows named in the roll preceding this (for 29th Edward III.) have disappeared in this; but that 13 other Fellows, Wyclif in the number, appear in their place. The Rolls for most of the immediately succeeding years are lost; but in those for 1360 and 1361, most of the former Fellows reappear, while the names of Wyclif and of five of the others named with him in 1356 have disappeared. The Account of John Josekyn, Bursar, for the next year (31 Edward III.) is almost wholly illegible from damp, and part of it is torn away. A payment of 3s. 1d. is made to Wik', in this Account, who possibly may have been Wyclif, but, much more probably, one "Wyke," a Fellow of the College, whose name occurs several times in the succeeding Accounts. The confluence of strangers, 18 in number, at the feast given in Wyclif's week, deserves notice, as no such entry, in reference to any other member of the College, has been found elsewhere: and the departure of Swyneshead (afterwards a monk in the Cistercian Abbey of Swineshead, who is mentioned by Kilner as a Fellow of the College strongly antagonistic to Wyclif,) from the College at this exact date, is probably of some significance. Billingham, not improbably, made this entry, as to the entertainment of 18 strangers, in a sarcastic spirit against Wyclif, as being the leader of a set of partisans. It perhaps deserves remark also, that the town of Oxford was at this very moment under Ecclesiastical Interdict. Were any of the banned townsmen of the place among the marked "strangers," who are here put down as the guests of Wyclif? Kilner says, in his history of the Fellows of the College, that Wyclif did not agree with the other people in the College, and shewed himself of a turbulent disposition. Hence, possibly, his speedy departure: he, not improbably, finding a more congenial society in Baliol College, where Wyclif, as we know, was Procurator, and Master in 1360, if not before. Bengire, who appears at Merton the same year with Wyclif, was afterwards a Fellow under Wyclif, when head of Canterbury College, in Oxford, and, with him according to Kilner, was ultimately driven away from that College. Beyond this Computus for 1356, there is probably no instance of Wyclif's name appearing upon the records of the College.

In the Chaplain's Roll for 1331, being the Computus of Richard "the Chaplain, of Oswoldestre," a long and very interesting account is given of the building of the bell-tower of the church (of St. John the Baptist) belonging to Merton College. The stone was brought from Teynton (now Taynton, near Witney, in Oxfordshire) to Eynsham, in carts, and from thence to Oxford, by water. The Teynton freestone, as Mr. Edwardes in forms me, may still be distinguished in the bell-tower from that quarried in the more immediate vicinity of Oxford, and is still used in the College restorations and repairs at the present day.

In a mutilated Computus, being that of Walter de Codintone, 22, 23, Edward I. is an account of the building of a portion of the church of St. John the Baptist at that date. This part of the Account comes under the head of—"Custus lathomorum et cementariorum," and the expenses of each week are given separately. The men work "ad tasciam," by the "task," job, or piece; and the carving of the windows especially (sculp') is mentioned as being so done, by the foot or feet. Wax and pitch are bought for the use of the masons; this part of the Account, however, is much mutilated. Another portion of the Roll, complete, with the exception of two or three words, speaks of the purchase of stone "of Watele," and of sums paid for the dinners of Thomas Prat, who appears to have been the seller of it;—"Emp- tio lapidis de Watele, et prandium Thomæ Prat." Some of the stone is described as "talstone." Every time a payment is made to Prat, he has a dinner, the first time costing 3 pence, and each time after that 1½d. In the latter part of the Account, he has dinner on every Saturday and many Saints' Days, without any payment being entered as made. Much of the stone is described as "schunchium"; and "moyuels," "vousurs," and "ogeyus" are mentioned. The account ends with the purchase of "muncelli" of stone, of "Iftelee," stone probably from Iffley, near Oxford, to the amount of 29s. 4*d.*, the stone of Watele costing 3*li.* 18s. 6*d.* The roll ends with a long account of the purchase of lime—"Emptio calcis."

A very small Computus, dated the 3rd year of Edward III., professes to be that of W. de Wylyngtone, "Claviger."—"Computus W. de Wylyngtone, Clavigeri, de anno tertio regni Regis Edwardi, Tertii a Conquestu. A Roll, much mutilated at the head, the date being torn away, but about 4 Edward III.; being a Chaplain's Account of moneys expended by him, as received from the Bursar. Repair of St. Stephen's Hall is mentioned; payment for a scaffold to the bell-tower; repair of chambers in the hall of Bulhalle; making a new gate in the garden; repair of the brewhouse; making a speld with two bars for the window "attebulhalle" [at the Bull Hall]; perforating 4 thousand of tile for roofing; "eleven thousand of slate pinnis bought at different "times 22s.", the slates being used for the brewhouse, the brewhouse chamber, the great kitchen, and the latrine in the garden; mending of the lower upon the great hall, and upon the chamber of the Chaplains; the guest-chamber repaired; the boys' cellar and hall plastered; the walls of the garden of St. Stephen's Hall repaired; a hooper hired to mend the barrels, and tymes, and coves, about the Feasts of St. Laurence and St. Michael, for six days, 2s. 1*½d.*, at 4*d.* per day; a boket for the well in the great kitchen 6*½d.*; hoops bought for the tancards, large vessels, in the great cellar; a cliket [latch] for Adam de Twisilstone's chamber; a bolt mended upon "the dressour in the great hall," a cliket put upon the door of the Warden's kitchen; 13 clikets bought for the Bachelors xiid.; new keys for the chambers of John de Peccam, John Reynam, Walter Luceby, Walter de Evesham, Robert Filmer, Hugh de Staunton, and John Domiltone; a cliket, with a ring, for the new gate in the garden; a key for the chamber of Simon Yftele; a cliket for the door of the common stable; grease and oil for greasing the feet of the horses: two cords for the well in the garden; one chest for burying a boy, "in una chesta pro puero sepeliendo, "12*d.*;" parchment bought for the Warden, on the day of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross; "8 men hired to "make the hay in the outer garden, about the feasts "of the Exaltation and of St. Lambert, and to make "the haystacks [tassas]; men's drink, working at the quarry, 2*d.*; expenses of Walter de Meltone [?] staying a night at the quarry 4*d.*; dishes and doubblers [dublaris] bought by Robert Spenser, at the Fair of Frideswide the Virgin 3s. 4*d.*; dishes bought "for the boys 7*d.*; coats bought for the boys, by "order of the Warden 5s.; for a vessel to put beneath "the casks in the cellar of the boys 3*½d.*; for oil, ointment, and pamper [a mixture for anointing the "pammy" hocks of horses] for the feet of the "horses, when the Warden came from the north 6*d.*; a wheelbarrow [seuera rotall] bought by Thomas Odiam 7*d.*; rushes bought for the Warden's hall; "for a trestle made for St. Stephen's Hall, by William de Rouncevalhalle 1*d.*; given as livery to the clerks, esquires, and servants, of Master Richard de Byry [Richard de Bury, afterwards Bishop of Durham] 3*li.* 12s.; for sharpening the barber's scissors and "razors 3*d.*" Some items are also given for the carriage of stone from Teyntone to Eynsam.—Some small expenses are added on the outside, as incurred by Thomas de Odiam; they are rather indistinct, but one item is—For a man who took letters of the "Earl "of Lancaster to Cantebregge 8*d.*—"Master Walter de Segrave is named, apparently, as a Fellow, but he does not appear in Kilner's list. A long account for oats follows.

A roll, much mutilated, of the 22nd year of Edward III., contains an account of the moneys expended by Thomas de Herlyngdone on the "boys that were of "the founder's kin." The youths named are, John Boure, Walter Boure, Nicholas Walkeleyn, Richard Walk', John Beal, William Wallyford, John Capeleyn, John Caustone, William Douche, Peter Wourtyng, John Lytteltone, Thomas Washuse, Nicholas Huse, and Thomas Herlyngdone, who keeps the account. For about half the Roll, the account is wholly made up, in each case, of the purchase of "sotulares," shoes, the mending of them, and the occasional mending of garments. Herlyngdone charges also for "a broom bought "for the study 2*d.*;" and the Account ends with—"Expense communes," common expenses:—"Item, computat in candelis emptis per vices, tam pro Artistis quam Grammaticis iiis. viii. d. ob. qu. Item, in "membranis emptis per vices, pro Artistis et Gram-

A small paper Inventory, written in Latin, states that on the 22nd of March in the 13th year of Henry VI.
(A.D. 1435) William Ireland, the Second Bursar, had in his charge 12 silver goblets of "ly Cardinall Hatte (probably the device engraved on them); 12 spoons, the gift of Master Lee; 7 gilt spoons with "ly
"knappis," knops; 8 spoons, the gift of Bloxham;
5 spoons, with acorns;—as also, one great ladder with 23 steps; another, with 13 steps; another, in the stable, with—steps; a new iron rake; one new cantery; iron wedges; mattocks; 2 carts with wheels; and one old cloth for the threshing-floor.

I avail myself of this opportunity of expressing my obligations to the Warden and Fellows of Merton College for their courtesy in so readily giving me permission to inspect their records: to the Rev. S.
Edwardes, Sub-Warden and Bursar, I also feel much indebted for the kindness with which he afforded me every opportunity in his power for facilitating my task.
I have only to add that, had it not been for the necessity of removing each of these documents to a considerable distance from the Muniment-room of the College, I should, in all probability, have been able to give a more detailed account of them.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The muniments preserved in the Muniment-room of this College are but few in number; the documents belonging to Broadgates Hall, its predecessor (to the time of James the First) having long since disappeared.

The earliest Bursar's Book, probably, now existing, is a long folio volume, with entries beginning in 1650, and coming down to the last half of last century. The earliest Admission Book that now exists belongs also to the last century, and it being kept in the Master's Lodge, and he being absent, I had not an opportunity of seeing it. There is also another Bursar's Book, a small thick quarto volume, of apparently a different description from the one previously mentioned, the entries in which commence in 1671. One of the entries is to the following effect:—"July 11, [16]72. Received then of Mr. Framp"ton eleven shillings and ten pence for the maintenance "of the workmen, and the marshal of the beggars. I "say, received by me 60l. 11s. 6d.," the beggars named in this apparently incomprehensible passage being no other than the almsmen and almswomen of Cardinal Wolsey's Almshouses, adjoining this College. The latest entries in this book seem to be in the year 1703.

In the Muniment-room there is a little 12mo paper volume, bound in old calf, and containing about 100

leaves; on a fly-leaf of which is written:—"The present
"of Sir Hugh Falliser, to Pembroke College, Oxford.

"W. Sergrove, D.D., Master, 1795," the words Sur Œcœ (With God) being written, in an old hand, at the top of the page. The second leaf has the following passage:—

"We whose names here follow in this book, in our love
"to learning, the University, and particularly to Broad-"gates Hall in Oxford, which needeth enlargement of "the hall, for meeting at commons, disputations, &c.
"as also some lodgings for students, do contribute
"as followeth,—July 15, 1620. Thomas Clayton, Pri-"cipall, xx.li to be paid presently towards the providing "of materials.—Who promiseth his best care for the "disposing of all to the best use of the house and ac"count to the contributors for the employment of all "the money which shall come by their love and bounty
"—Thos. Clayton, Principall." The names of Benefactors, with the sums given and their signatures, then follow. Lucy Doncaster, (wife probably of James Hay, Lord Doncaster, and afterwards Earl of Carlisle), gives
"5 peices, or 5l. 10s. William Spencer, Knight of the "Bath, to Prince Charles, sonne and heire of the Right
"Honourable Lord Spencer" gives 44s. Lady Penelope
Spencer, 44s.; Lady Mary Anderson, 22s.; Sir Thomas
Wrothe, "Sometimes Scholler to the Principall, 40s.;"
Sir Richard Anderson of Pendley, in the county of Herts, 44s.; Mr. Thomas Nedham, of Shavington, Salope, 22s.; Mrs. Margaret Washington, 11s.; "Mr. John Bow-yer, of New Braynford, Esq., 20s." "Aprilis 27^o 1623^o.
"Johannes Pym, Armiger, de Brimore in Comitatu
"Somerset, quondam Aulæ Lateopertensis commensalis
"(formerly commoner of Broadgates Hall) donavit 44s."
This was John Pym, the Parliamentarian, and the accuser of Strafford; he had previously left the College, without taking a degree. Richard Astley, the Warden of All Souls, gives 33s.; his name being followed by those of 37 other benefactors, the signatures of most of them being entered as well. There are also some few other entries in the book, of a miscellaneous nature, and of a much later date. The subscriptions above mentioned were probably absorbed in the transformation of Broadgates Hall into Pembroke College in 1624; mostly at the costs of Thomas Tesdale, Esq., and Richard Wightwick, D.D.
It took its name from William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, Chancellor of the University, when it was founded.

In the Library of the College is preserved a Letter, finely written, with the sign manual of Charles the First, dated the 6th of January 1642, requesting the College to send to him "all such plate of what kind soever
"which belongs to the College," with a promise "to "see the same justly repayed . . . after the rate of "5s. the ounce for white and 5s. 6d. for guilt plate,"
" . . . "as soon as God shall enable us." Addressed,— "To our trusty and well-beloved the Principall and "Fellows of Pembroke College in our University of
"Oxford."

There are also preserved in the Library two Latin themnes, written by Samuel Johnson, when he was a Commoner of this College, with the signature "John"son;" one of them has for its subject,

"Mea nec Falernæ
Temperant vites, neque Formiani Pocula colles."

the other—"Adjecere bonæ paulo plus artis Athenæ."

There are also preserved here various prayers written by Dr. Johnson, receipts, and letters, from his father, Michael Johnson, and his mother. The Buttery-books of the time when Johnson was in residence are still in existence, his name appearing therein weekly during residence.

In the College Library are also preserved various literary remains of the poet Shenstone, and of Sir William Blackstone, both of whom were members of this College.

There is also preserved in the Library, what is certainly not remarkable for any great antiquity, and indeed we should hardly expect to find it there: the Logbook of Lord Nelson's ship, the Victory, in the years 1804, 5, a small 12mo volume, half bound in paper. On the first leaf is written—"Tho' Atkinson, Master of "H.M. Ship the Victory" 1804 and 5. At the end is a note written.—"This book was one in a lot of books I bought "in London a few years back. 1815. G. W. H." It ends the 30th June 1805, and before the Battle of Trafalgar, which took place on the 21st of October in that year.

In the Library of this College there are a number of medieval Manuscripts, which have not, I believe, been noticed in the Rev. H. O. Coxe's valuable Catalogue of MSS. in the College Libraries at Oxford: the remaining portion of this Report will be devoted to a brief account of what may be considered the principal among them.—

A fine folio copy of the Breviary of St. Bartholomew's (in London), with the following title:—"Incipit liber, qui intitulatur Breviarium Bartholomaei: compositus per venerabilem virum Johannem Mirfeld, commorantem in Monasterio Sancti Bartholomaei Londoniis, a quo liber iste denominatur." Mirfeld is mentioned by Leland and Bale as a most eminent physician of London; and there is another, but much inferior, copy of his work in the Harleian Collection (No. 3). The MS. is on parchment, in a hand of the latter half, probably, of the 14th century, and is finely illuminated. The writer says, at the end, that it is a compilation from all the other medical treatises then known, for the benefit of those who could not afford to buy the works from which it is derived; but he also adds, elsewhere, that he has been indebted for much of his matter to communications made to him, supported by the experience of other persons. On examination, it appears to be full of information in reference to the every day life of the 14th century, as regards the manners, habits, and usages of the age, in combination with the then prevailing notions upon physic and surgery. Towards the end of the volume, beginning with the words,—"Incipiunt Sinonimia Bartholomaei," is added a dictionary of terms, or set of Synonyms (which appears to be wanting in the Harleian copy), the meaning being mostly given in Latin, but in English here and there. Among entries of this latter description are the following:—"Abrotanum, southernwode. Absinthium, wermode. Agnus castus, bishopeswort. Ahobo, lac acetosum, de quo extractum est butirum. Aloen, wermode. Allium agreste, crawegarelek. Altea, holi-hocke. Amarusca et Ameroke, idem, maythe. Ambrosia, wilde sauge. Andra, bishopeswort. Anabulla, spurge. Apium levisticum, loveache. Rostrum porci, sowthistel. Trifolium, clavergesse. Vescos, feces, vel mouspese. Virga pastoris, wilde rasel. Viticella, an sivernepe? Umbilicus Veneris, cimbalaria, idem penigresse. Ungula caballina campestris, idem, clothe. Unctio, selfhele. Wimane, holi-hocke. Wodemerche, idem, sancile. Wodebroun, bugle. Zizania, lollium, cokel. Zodoarium, cetewale."

At the end of this list of "Synonyms," of which the above is only an extract, comes a list, under the title of—"Quid pro quo," of ingredients used in medicine, which will allow of being substituted for one another. After that, in a later hand, is a list of weights and measures, and finally, about half a page, in Latin, on the virtues of Rosemary. At fol. 353 is a table of contents, with this title:—"Incipit Tabula Libri Johannis Mirfeld, quam ipse composuit, et Breviarium Bartholomaei nominavit, eo quod ipsum complavit in Monasterio Sancti Bartholomaei, Londoniis; eundemque divisit in partes quindecim." This splendid volume (the earliest, probably, that ever issued from St. Bartholomew's on Medicine) contains 359 leaves in all, and has what are probably its original oaken boards, in old leather, with bosses of brass, and leathern thongs. On a fly-leaf are written, in old writing, the names of "Johes Baticumbe," "Richard Bartlet, in Medicinis Doctor," "Richardus Lofthons," in all probability, successive owners of the book. Mirfeld, near Dewsbury, in Yorkshire, was probably the place of the writer's birth. In the Harleian Catalogue, the copy preserved in that Collection is altogether misdescribed.

A small folio manuscript, on vellum, imperfect, containing a portion (about two-thirds) of Bede's Ecclesiastical History. It commences with the words "... evangelizante conversam," at the beginning of the 17th Chapter of the Second Book. It is most beautifully written, in a hand of, probably, the close of the 12th century.

A small folio volume of manuscript on parchment, without a cover, which, from two inscriptions in it, formerly belonged to "Wm. Gardiner, M.A., Vicar of 'Lynton, 1582.'" It contains a series of discourses, in Latin, on 305 subjects, moral or religious, neatly written in various hands, of the close, probably, of the 14th century. It is imperfect at the end, one of the discourses at the close being on the subject,—"Qualiter quidam ambulat in via, quidam extra, quidam per semitam."

A large folio manuscript volume of parchment, bound in its ancient boards and leather, the writing in double columns, in a hand of probably about 1420. Its contents are commentaries, or discourses, in Latin, upon the books of Exodus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, and down to the end of Isaiah, accompanied with tables of subjects. At the end is another volume, in old German text writing, in two columns, of about the year 1300, with illuminations, bound up with it; being Latin explanations of Hebrew words, under the title of "Interpretationes Hebraicorum nominum, secundum Remigium Jordanum de Rota." It ends with these lines:—"Hic liber, istud opus, Jordano cedit honori; Pro mercede quies sit succedente labori."

There seem to be copies of this book also in the libraries of All Souls and Trinity Colleges, in Oxford.

A folio volume, with writing in double columns, on parchment, in a hand of the early part of the 14th century; being Four Books of Sententiae, or Sentences. It begins,—"Cupientes aliquid de penuria ac tenuitate nostra cum pauperula in gazophilacium" (Mark xii. 42). It seems doubtful, however, (in default of a close examination having been made), whether these are the Sententiae of Peter Lombard: there were Four Books of "Sententiae" also, attributed to Petrus Longus. At the end of the volume now under notice there are Four Books of Sententiae in Latin Leonine verses.

A small 12mo manuscript volume, containing several medical works, bound up together, of the Middle Ages. The first is a book of Constantinus Africanus (a monk of Monte Casino, in the 11th century), "De Stomacho," beautifully written in small characters. (This Constantinus would seem to have been at once a very matter-of-fact sort of writer, and yet a fanciful one, withal. In one of his treatises, "On Affections of the Head," his list begins with "Love," and ends with "Lice" and he ventures on the assertion that the human hair is composed of smoke.) Next to this is "J. de Sancto Paulo de Simplicibus Medicinis," with the Colophon;—"Explicit Liber de Simplicibus Medicinis, editus a Magistro Johanne de Sancto Paulo. Deo gratias. Amen." Belonging to the 14th century; there is a copy also of it in the library of Balliol College. The next is a treatise on Medicine "per Ricardum Anglicum," by Richard English (a writer of the 13th century), containing his work known as "Urinarium." The next work is,—"Summa de felicitate conservanda, a Magistro Johanne de Coletto." Next, another work by Richard English,—"Signa prognostica, per Ricardum Anglicum." Then, "Trotula Senior de Mulierum morbis," a writer of Salerno. There is a copy of this work in the library at New College. The next again, is a medical work—"Dosis Medicinarum, per Magistrum Walterum." There is a copy of this also in the library of Merton College. The next commences,—"Incipit Ars Medici-narum Laxativarum," a treatise on Cathartics. All the preceding are on vellum, and in hands of the 14th century. The next treatise in the volume, is written on paper, in a hand also of the 14th century, being a copy of the Lapidarium, or Treatise on Precious Stones, by Marbodius, Bishop of Rennes; followed by a number of Recipes in Latin.

A small quarto volume, of parchment, with writing of the 14th century, containing several treatises. The first, finely written in double columns, is devoted to names of plants and other substances used in medicine. This is followed by a medical work in a like hand, with the title,—“Liber Magistri Rogerini,” not improbably meaning, Rogerus, or Rogerinus, of Salerno, a physician. The first Chapter is,—“De Dolore Capitis,” then “De Frenesi,” the last Chapters of his work being,—“De Opiatis,” and “De modo dandi.” The next work is a copy of the treatise, “De virtute Simplicis Medicinæ,” by John de St. Paul, already mentioned: followed by a work,—“De Signis, Causis, et Cura, Morborum,” towards the close of which is this charm,—no doubt of great efficacy, in its day,—

+ aria + farla + tarla +
+ arlaus + farlaus + tarlaus +
+ on + on + on + Johns
Lucas, Marchus, Matheus.

The last treatise in the volume begins,—“Hic incipit parvus Micrologus de causis, signis, et curis earundem, de quibus agitur, passionum.”

A small quarto manuscript on parchment, and bound in parchment, containing several treatises; the first of which is an anonymous work in Latin, on Medicine, followed by a copy, apparently, of the treatise above mentioned, written by Rogerus, or Rogerinus, beginning, “De Dolore Capitis,” but here he is called “Rogerus de Baconia,” the writing being, however, very indistinct. The other two treatises contained in the volume, are intitled — “Diætæ particulares,” and “Diætæ universales,” both being written in a beautiful and delicate hand, probably Italian.

A small quarto manuscript on parchment, and bound in parchment, containing several treatises. The first is a translation, by Gerard of Cremona, in Latin, from the Antidotarium of Rhazes: of which there is also a copy in the library at Balliol College. This is followed by a Latin poem, with glosses, the subject being “De Urinis.” The next is a work called “Messehallah on Eclipse of the Moon,” and the last in the volume is an anonymous work, apparently on the subject of Simples.

I have here to express my obligations to H. W. Chandler, Esq., Fellow and Bursar of Pembroke College, and Waynflete Professor of Moral and Metaphysical Philosophy, for his courtesy in giving me ready access to these documents, and providing me with such facilities for the inspection of them as lay in his power; as also, for the pains he afterwards took in collating with the original a portion of these notes. My best thanks are also due to J. L. G. Mowat, Esq., Fellow and Bursar of the College, for much useful aid which he kindly afforded me during my inspection, both in the Muniment-room and the Library, of the papers and volumes above described.

Third Report.—God's House, at Southampton, temp.
Edward I.—Edward III.

THE Hospital of God's House, at Southampton, was founded, as stated in the Fourth Report of the preceding Commission (App. p. 455) in the reign of Richard the First; and not, as Dugdale says in his Monasticon, in the time of Henry the Third. According to the latter authority also, its founders were two merchants of Southampton (then called “Hantone,” or “Hamtone”), Gervasius and Protasius by name; a singular mistake, as these are the names of two Saints, twin-brothers, who are said to have suffered martyrdom at Milan and Ravenna, respectively, in the persecution of Nero, A.D. 62; their Festival day being the 19th of June. The founder of this house was one Gervaise, or Gervasius, surnamed “Le Riche,” from his wealth, no doubt; who, as may be seen from page 452 of the Appendix to the above-named Report, had advanced moneys to King John, when Earl, or Count, of Mortaine.

This House, or Hospital, in broad terms, was originally founded for the poor; but beyond that fact, and the few deeds and documents relative to it, given by Dugdale, in his Monasticon, every circumstance connected with its early history,—intimately woven with that of the town of Southampton—has until now been forgotten. From such of the early rolls of the House as have been preserved in the Muniment-room at Queen's College, Oxford, and which have been recently subjected to a thorough examination, we find that in the time of Edward the First, and his successor, its members generally consisted of a Custos, or Warden, two Priests, two, or three, Brothers, Sisters, from about three to nine in number, three or more “Poor” men, and women, or “Paupers,” sometimes a Clerk, and various indoor servants and outdoor labourers, such as cook, laundress, dairymaid, brewer, carters, ploughmen, cowherd, shepherd, and swineherd: together with, at some dates, a retained advocate, or pleader, to support the interests of the house in the various cases of litigation in which it was engaged: at a later date, a Chaplain seems to have been added.

The building, or Curia, probably a quadrangle, contained two halls, one perhaps for the use of the male members of the community, the other for the females. One or more rooms were devoted to the Warden's use, with a cellar beneath, let to a tenant, apparently for the storage of wines, at times. There was also the “Priests' Chamber,” and the Brothers had their room, or rooms, when in residence. The Sisters had their house also: but whether the Paupers lived in or out of the Hospital does not appear; probably in.

Of the Priests, the duty of one, (at least for a considerable time, in the case of Robert de Hanyndone) was, to act as chief Steward, or Serjeant (Serviens) of the House, and, as receiver of the rents, to account yearly for the receipt and expenditure thereof. The second, or younger, Priest, who received a smaller yearly stipend than his fellow, probably had to act as Chaplain to the House; though, at a later date, the end of the reign of Edward II., or early part of the succeeding reign, a regular Chaplain, so styled, was appointed. On other authority, we are informed that the Chapel of the Hospital was dedicated to St. Julian; and hence its occasional appellation “The Hospital of St. Julian,” though, in the early rolls, it is never even alluded to by that name.

The Brothers of the House—some of whom, at least, we find paying handsomely with a large flock of sheep, or in money, for their admission,—seem to have been generally distributed upon its manors, to act as bailiffs, or under-stewards, there, respectively. One of them superintended the farming of the manors of Werrore and Cosseham, near Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, or “the Island,” as in these rolls it is invariably styled. Another of the Brothers took charge of the farm at the manor of Hecke, or Heckley, about five miles from Southampton; while a third, residing no doubt in the Hospital, attended to the farm of Padewelle at Southampton, attached to, and adjoining, the House. At Gersich in Dorset, (now Gussage, the property of Queen's College), a valuable estate given by Gervaise to his new foundation, a Præpositus, Provost, or Reeve, was generally established: to act probably under the superintendence of the Warden, when residing at the mansion there, built for his occupation. The Brothers residing at Southampton and at Hecke, occasionally took part in the labours of the field, such as reaping and making hay. In winnowing, the Sisters, at times, or some of them, were employed: but reaping, so far as the females were concerned, was more especially the dairymaid's duty, whose status was that of a bondswoman, no doubt. The Sisters had their meals probably in their own hall, and received, each of them, in lieu of clothing, the sum of one farthing per day. The Paupers, male and female, probably received their food from the House, and had a monetary allowance of one farthing for every two days: when working in the fields, they received additional remuneration, mostly in the form of shoes. No money payment to the Brothers of the House is ever mentioned; but they lived, no doubt, on the produce of the manors respectively assigned to them for their superintendence: from time to time also, they are mentioned as receiving a comparatively liberal allowance of materials for shirts and outer clothing, leggings, (or, perhaps, hose), and shoes: Reginald de Cotesdon, one of the brothers, evidently a clever and useful servant, succeeded Robert de Hanyndone, the Priest, as general manager, or “Serjeant,” and held the office for some years.

The Wardens of the House, whose names are mostly given in the deeds and muniments of the House hereafter to be noticed, those only of Henry de Bluntesdone and Gilbert de Wygetone having survived in these rolls, are spoken of under the title of “Dominus,” throughout; which has been rendered "Master" (rather than "Lord") in the following translations. So far as duties at Southampton were concerned, the Warden was mostly an absentee, and his office little, if anything, else than a sinecure; sometimes held, probably, in conjunction with some other valuable office, which required his residence elsewhere: how the Wardens were chosen there seems no possibility of precisely saying, but most probably the election was in the Sovereign's hands. There was a mansion for their residence at Gersich; and there, in some instances, the Warden, for much of his time, resided. From one of the rolls, it would appear that Henry de Bluntesdone bought a residence at Bluntesdone, (near Highworth) in Wilt., probably his birthplace; his mansion there was fitted up, at least in part, and largely stocked with wines and stores, at the expense of the Hospital. He even had his Chapel there, the tapers consumed in which were made from wax produced at the manor of Hecke, or in the Isle of Wight. A later Warden again had his private mansion at Finchamstade (near Wokingham) in Berkshire: while there are indications that the Warden at other times was residing at Salisbury, Winchester, or Odiham, in Hampshire. The Brothers and servants of the Hospital we find much and most laboriously occupied, from time to time, in carrying wine, cider, ale, stores, and provisions, to the various localities in which the Wardens were then residing, or making a stay. In some instances, also, we find mention of "nepotes" (nephews) and other kinsfolk of the Wardens, as being pensioned upon the House; and receiving from it, as such kinsfolk, money, clothing, board, and education.

It was the fact, probably, that this office of Warden had become nothing more than a valuable sinecure, that drew attention to it in the reign of Edward the Third. Viewed in this light, the emoluments of the Wardenship, subject to the life interest of the then Warden, were obtained by Robert de Eglesfield, in the year 1344, in behalf of the College which he had recently founded at Oxford. By the terms of the grant (given in Dugdale's Monasticon) the payments to the Brothers and Sisters were to be continued, while what we may call the "lion's share," the portion hitherto allotted for the maintenance of the Warden, was transferred to the College; whose Scholars, when sick, were to be at liberty to resort to the Hospital, with a view to their recovery.

In addition to the property before-mentioned, some small possessions were held by the house at Eukesbure (now Exbury) in Hants, at Portsmouth, and (apparently in a disputed shape) at Selsey, in Sussex. That at Exbury was still held by this College in the time of Edward the Sixth, if not later: of the property at Selsey and Portsmouth nothing is now known.

To the Wardenship was attached the tenure of the whole of the property of the House, and with it all the ancient deeds and rolls of the Hospital were transferred to the College. Of the earliest deeds some transcripts have been given in the Appendix to the Fourth Report of the preceding Commission; of the rolls, or Computi, of the House, some, no doubt, have perished in the lapse of time, but many, generally in good condition, are still preserved among the archives of the College.

The earliest Computi, and rolls of rentals, bearing reference to God's House, that are noticed in the present Report, belong to the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II.: upon a close examination made by my friend, the Rev. A. H. Sayce, of all the now remaining rolls, they are the only surviving ones belonging to those reigns, and there are none of earlier date.

These early rolls are of two descriptions; rolls connected with the then rentals of the House, and Computi, or rolls of expenses of the House, and of its yearly receipts of sums total from all sources, and of produce from its respective estates and manors. The former, rolls of rentals, and arrears of rents, are five in number, two belonging to the reign of Edward I., one to that of Edward II., and two to that of Edward III. They are mainly of value, as being, in various ways, descriptive of some of the then existing localities of Southampton, and of the status of its inhabitants in those times. For want of such authorities as these hitherto unnoticed records, it was surmised by Leland, the antiquary, and, more recently, by a very inferior authority, Grose, that the Southampton of the 13th and earlier part of the 14th centuries, was situated at St. Mary's, somewhat to the east or north-east of the present town; and that the town was removed to its present site after the place had been sacked and partly burnt by the combined French, Spanish, and Genoese fleet, in 1337. These documents have their use as negating any such assumption: the various tenements therein described as belonging to the Hospital, in the several parishes, and as being rebuilt, some years after the town had so suffered from the ravages of the enemy, are exactly the same in respect of their sites that are described at dates more than 60 years previous to that event: the Hantane, in fact, in which were situate the various houses given by Gervaise to his newly founded Hospital, in the reign of Richard the First, was the Southampton of the reigns of Edward II. and III., and formed the core, so to say, of the Southampton of the present day.

The property belonging to the Hospital, in the town, during the 13th century, consisted of houses of various kinds, mostly, no doubt, on a very humble scale; cellars and vaults,—for the stowage probably of wines and other merchandize; shops, and selds, or warehouses for the stowage of goods, open at the sides in the upper part, and in which not unfrequently people (of the poorest class probably) were in the habit of dwelling; "stagie," stages, or shops, built, probably, with storeys above them, and vacant "places," or pieces of ground, with fields in the outskirts. The streets mentioned in the earlier of these rolls, are but few in number: in the earliest of them the division of the town into its several Parishes of Holy Rood, or St. Cross, St. Laurence, All Saints, St. John (now united to St. Laurence), St. Mary, and St. Michael, may be traced.

The three earliest rolls, now surviving, give an account, at certain specified dates, of the arrears of rent then due upon each item of rented property belonging to the Hospital, together with the amount of rent to be exacted of the tenant in the ensuing year. In the absence of the name of the street in which the property is situate, it is usually described by the name not only of the present tenant, but of the previous tenant who had held it. Most of them evidently were in a state of the utmost poverty, and occasionally they are forgiven, as being too poor to be able to pay. In other instances again, we find them, as set forth in the right hand margin of the roll, paying off the long-standing arrears, as well as the whole or part of the rent of the ensuing year, in various and many sums of one penny, 2 pence, 3 pence, or more. As might be expected in a maritime place, their surnames shew many to have been of foreign origin, settlers from the northern parts of France perhaps more particularly.

All of these rolls, it may be observed, are written in Latin, and generally consist of three or four broad strips of parchment, tacked together lengthwise. They are mostly in a state of excellent preservation, one or two only being somewhat torn. The title of the earliest roll (translated) is as follows:—

"Of the arrears of rent at Suthamtone, together with the rent for the year that is beginning, in the first year of the reign of King Edward,"—Edward the First (A.D. 1273).

The following are some names of tenants, and of various localities mentioned.—The relict of Nicholas de Lyons owes arrears of rent "for a vault, near the house of John de London, and for another vault in the corner." Luke de Barbefut (Barbeuf) owes 12s. 9d. Walter Opryt (elsewhere, Upryght), for the tenement of John le Graunt, owes 2s. 4d. arrears, and one pound of cummin.—This rental of cummin may be traced all through these accounts.—Joan Neel owes 9s. "for the house near the Church of Holy Rood." John le Mounedelard pays "for the tenement near the Gate 10s.; and for a house near St. John's Chmreh, 9s. 4d." John de Schirle (of Shirley) owes "for the Westhalle" (which will be more fully noticed in the sequel) "26s. 8d." John Beverege owes 12d. Leodegar de Burgoyne (of Burgundy) pays 2s. 6d. yearly rent. John de Wrth owes arrears for the "Bolehouse" and another house 5s. 6d.; and the Rector of St. Michael's owes "arrears for the Rectory house 7s. 11½d." Roger Halfknyt owes 61s. arrears, his yearly rental being 4s.: no payments are set against his name, as being afterwards made. William Basingrom the younger owes 15d. arrears of rent "for one half of the vault near the church of St. Michael." Richard de Barbefut (Barbeuf) owes 6d. out of a yearly rent of 12d., for a vacant "place near the sea." Henry de Lym pays 13s. 4d. yearly rent for "Gympe House." The relict of Hugh Sampson, owes arrears "for the house near the Castle" 23s. 5d., on a yearly rent of 5s. Robert le Vox owes 6s. 0½d. arrears. The "Warden of Magdalen" len "4 pence, his yearly rent being of that amount. Robert Chopyn pays a yearly rent of 7s. 6d. for 1½ acres of land in the (Le) Garston. William le Cornwaleys owes 16d., on a yearly rent of 6d. Adam le Horder pays 3s. yearly for 3 acres "in Leyham." The relicts of John and William Lobery are mentioned, as paying each one penny yearly: this family gave its name to "Loberystrete."

On the reverse of the roll, a number of tenants are mentioned as paying yearly a rent partly in money, together with a hen, or, in some instances, a cock and a hen. John le Mundelard pays 3*d.* yearly for one perch of land in Loberystret. The Precentor of St. Mary's owes 9*s.* 6*d.* out of a yearly rent of 13*s.* 4*d.*, for the Welcrot, and the house opposite the gate of the churchyard. Hugh Mustarder owes 5*s.*, arrears of rent for a seld in French Street; William Motte owes "arrears" for the house near the gaol, in Fry[?]stret, 30*s.* 2*d.* Thomas Godeshous owes 9*s.* arrears, out of a yearly rent of 18*s.*; he must have had his name from the locality near to which he lived. Of two tenants at Winchester, one, the Warden of Saint Cross, owes 2*s.* 1*d.*, equal to the whole of his yearly rent. Of two at Portesmuthe, Adam of the Dene owes 25*s.*, on a yearly rent of 10*s.*; and Richard Crede, the only tenant at Eukesbury (now Exbury) owes 2*s.* 3*d.*, his yearly rent being 6*s.* 8*d.*

The following are the only surnames found in this roll, indicative of the trades then carried on at Southampton: Saleman (? sailmaker); Pelycer (pelterer, or skinner); Horder (perhaps, hurdle, or fence, maker); Dykeman (ditch maker); Taillur; Gardynere; Coupere; Drapere; Mercator (merchant); Mercer; Taverner; Dubber (repairer of clothes); Rydere; Scherer (probably, shearmen of cloth); Canevaer; Urnere (qnt. for Hornere); Chopyn (? maker of chopyns, or pint pots); Heyman (? hedgemaker); Bakere; Syngere; Lokyer (locksmith); Faketer (factor, or agent); Mustarder (seller of mustard and groceries); Carpenter; Helyer (or tiler); and Barbur. The names of Burgoyne, Fleming, Denmars, and Lombard, are indicative of foreign extraction. At this date, nearly all the tenants seem, from the margin,—though with difficulty—to have paid off their arrears, or a very large part thereof.

The next is a similar roll, for the 6th year of the same reign, ending at Michaelmas (A.D. 1278); slightly torn at the beginning, but otherwise in good condition.

Extracts.—The house, "late of Ralph le Bule," is mentioned; from one of this family, the "Bulehuse" (which, as we learn from an early deed, had a figure of a bull upon it), probably took its name. The Rector of St. Michael's is set down as owing 12*s.*, his yearly rent being 11*s.* 10*d.*; against which is set in the margin that Roger de Tours paid 6*s.* 2*d.* out of that sum, in instalments of one penny to 4 pence each; Aviced Depedene also paying 4*s.* 6*d.*, in instalments from one penny to 3 pence. The relict of Richard le Graunt owes 4*s.* 11*d.* for the house in which she dwells, with garden, and pigeon-house; the yearly rent being 10*s.* Against the house of Edward Cole, is inserted, in a somewhat later hand, "Extra barras";—Without the Bars; the "relict" of John atte Barre is mentioned immediately after. The Warden of the (La) Mandeleyne (a hospital for leprous females) owes 14*s.* arrears, his rent being but 4*s.* yearly. William le Hordir owes 6*d.* for the spot "where the windmill is built, in Fulford," 6*d.* being the yearly rent. William Burle owes 3*s.*, arrear of a rent of 12*d.* Imber (or Imbert) Strangman pays for rent 3*s.* 4*d.* Simenelestret is mentioned this year.

The following are names here of trades and callings, implied in surnames, not in the preceding roll:—Miller; Coteler; Bolter (? sister of meal); Smith (as "Faber"); Porcher, or Swineherd; Schynner (? skinner); Cordwainer; Webbe (weaver).

The next of the Rentals now surviving is of a date about 47 years later; belonging to the 19th year of the reign of Edward II., Michaelmas (A.D. 1325). With the exception that one of the four membranes of which it consists, has a part torn away, it is in good condition, and legible throughout: the several parishes, where the respective tenements are situate, together with the district "Without the Bars," are all distinctly named. Many of the tenements are here still inhabited by the same families that dwelt in them from fifty to sixty years before: persons named from their trades, or callings, are not so frequently mentioned. The following are some extracts:—

Lucy de Barbesluit, besides the current year's rent, owes 21*s.* 8*d.* of arrears; payments by instalments are entered in the margin, of 12*d.* in money, and 27 gallons of ale, value 2*s.* 1*d.*; her calling, probably, was that of an alewife. "Henry Cole pays for the house, formerly "of Walter Halle, which he bought of Matillidis Doggette, 8*s.* yearly." In the margin it is entered that he has paid this rent, as follows:—"He has paid 13*s.*, "one jar (jarda) of oil, value 10 pence, 2*s.*, (and) by his "wife 2*s.*, 2*s.*" John Gabriel, for the house late of "Adam le Hordir, owes 35*s.* arrears; 8*s.* 8*d.* being his "yearly rent." Against this is set in the margin (tr.):—"He paid, on the first Friday in Lent, in presence of "W. Pope, Brother Robert, W. de Horsbam, J. the Miller . . . 22*s.* 1*d.*; and he makes oath that he paid "Brother Reginald, in the past year, 6*s.* 5*d.*, as to "which nothing is found in the rolls. And the Master "forgives the said John 20*s.* 2*d.*" Brother Reginald (de Cotesdone) here named, had been the Steward, or Serjeant, of the House, and had died probably during the preceding year. Items are not unfrequent, signifying remission of rents. The surname "Le Vox," occurring in the previous rolls, here appears as "Le "Vanz." Richard Bagge and Thomas de Nusseling owe jointly for the smaller part of a tenement 22*s.* 9*d.*, the yearly rent being 5*s.* 9*d.*; Richard Bagge pays the debt, in part, in forage, value 15*s.* The relict of John Stacy owes, for her tenement, near St. John's Church, 14*s.* 8*d.* arrears, her year's rent being 5*s.* 4*d.* She pays "by the hands of John Nil, Priest, 20*s.*;" but it is added that "she still owes, for the time of John le "Mondelard (the prior tenant) 8 pence." John le Vanz owes for a house near the "Brodelane," 12*s.* 6*d.* arrears, John Bevereche owes 21*d.* arrears; towards which he pays 13*s.* "in shoes to Brother Rach," leaving 7*s.* unpaid. Luke Stoute owes 9*s.* arrears for a house in "Bulestrete," which Geoffrey Joppe formerly held. "Felicia of Schirle pays 3*s.* rent for 3 shops, near the "vacant place where the Abbot of Quarre claims rent;"—the Abbey of Quarre was situate near Ryde, in the Isle of Wight.—The Rector of St. Michael's Church owing 7*s.* 1*d.* arrears for the rectory house, 11*s.* 10*d.* being also the rent for the current year, the following, from the margin, was his mode of paying:—"Paid by the "hands of J. Fleming, parmenter (clothier) 2*s.*; by the "hands of W. le Couke 10*d.* and 12*d.*; also, by the hands "of the said John le Fleming 12*d.*, 12*d.*; and by the "hands of William le Couke 12*d.* Also, by the same, "after the Feast of Our Lord's Nativity, in the said year, in ginger, galentine (perhaps the same herb as "galingale," sweet cyperus), and mustard, bought for "our Master at the feast of St. Mary Magdalen, in the said year 2*s.* 6*d.* Also, for service done when the "Canons of Christ Church ate with the Master, and "other burgesses of the town, 4*d.* Also, 3*s.* 6*d.*"

From the comparative magnitude of the rents which they paid, the family of Balveyr must have been of some importance. The following entry, in reference to them, is curious in its details:—"The relict of John "Balveyr owes for the tenement formerly of Roger "Balveyr, 7*li.* 5*s.* 6*d.* arrears, and rent for this year "26*s.*" Against this, the following entry is made in the margin:—"Paid by the hands of Parnel Selkwyman 18*li.*, 4*s.*, 2*d.* By the hands of William "de Leycestre, that is, by his wife 6*d.*, 6*d.*, 6*d.*, "8*d.* By the hands of Andrew Balvair the younger "12*d.* By the hands of the said Parnel, 12*d.* and 12*d.* "By the hands of the parson of Dupedene (Deepdene), "in 2 quarters of small oats, received in the year afore- "said in the time [as Steward] of Richard de la More, "4*s.*, at 3*d.* per bushel. By the hands of William de "Leycestre 6*d.*, and of R. Balvayr, Rector of Depedene "13*s.* 4*d.*; by the hands of Parnel Selkwyman 2*s.*, 2*s.* "By the hands of the Parson of Depedene, 2 quarters "6 bushels of pease, received of him this year, at "4*s.* 10*d.* per quarter, 13*s.* 4*d.* Also, 4 bushels of fine "salt, which she had bought of him 8*d.*" Despite her struggles to get out of debt, about 43 shillings was all she paid. Andrew Balveyr is also in debt 45*s.* 3*d.*, his rent being 12*s.*; in 19 instalments he pays 9*s.* 6*d.*, by the hands of his wife and daughter; sending, on one occasion, 4 pence "by Cristina, a Sister of the House." From the margin we learn that "Gympe House" was so called from "John Gympe," who once held it. The relict of William Bassingrom the younger, owes arrears for the house "formerly of Bernard le Moigne, which "Sir Henry Tyas afterwards held," the large sum of 10*li.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; the yearly rent being 23*s.* Against this it is entered that "John Jurdan paid, in one pipe of "wine, 25*s.*" Henry Forst (elsewhere, Frost) owes 18*s.* 1*d.* for a "tenement near the Lane, which the relict "of Bernard le Moigne gave to her daughter and a "certain Lombard," the yearly rent being 10 shillings. John Wrongy owes 4*li.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, arrears on "the house "formerly of Richard de Bedeford," the yearly rent being 2*s.*, a ground rent, probably, or quitrent, accruing under many tenants: no entry as to payment is made. Simon Boutevyleyn deserves notice for his surname; corresponding probably to the "Butsecarle" (boatman, or mariner) of Saxon times.

Married women seem to have been admitted independently as tenants: Alice Pollard owes 5s. 3d. arrears; which she pays off in sums of from 3d. to 9d., some of them paid "per virum" by "her husband." William Higecock (Hedgecock, the present Hitchcock), owes one penny, his current rent being 8s. 6d.: the latter is paid, in two sums, by his wife; the little debt is left alone. John Wodthorn owes 3s. 3d. arrears for the house where Richard Halfmyght dwelt. Woodhorn, in Northumberland, may possibly have given him his name. The following person, John le Barbur, is named elsewhere, as being a "Counour," or Advocate.—"John le Barbur, Clerk, owes for the house which belonged to Stephen Disert, for the solar and cellar late of William Galopyn, and for a seld, formerly of Robert le Barbur, as arrears, 44s. 1d. and for the year 12s." against which is entered,—"He is pardoned by the Master, by letters pacific made to the said John, at Easter this year 50s. 1d., the whole debt and half a year's rent. Robert atte Barre" pays for the kitchen which John atte Barre formerly gave to Margery, his daughter, "2s. yearly; the same Margery owing arrears 20s. 9d."

Isabel, the relict of John le Bolt[er], for her arrears of 4s., and her year's rent of 3s., pays sums of 8d., 12½d., 2 bushels of beans, value 16d., and, "by the hands of" Robert Selde, 3s. 2d." The Abbot of Beaulieu pays 3s. yearly for the house called "Chesseelde" (Cheese Seld); and the Prior of St. Denis 6s. for the house late of John Horn. The relict of Geoffrey Ace owes 39s. 4d. arrears for the house which belonged to him, the rent being 8s.: "she paid by the hands of Hoppe Robin 3d., 3d., 6d., 3d.; also, by a female tenant, 15d." John Brecheryng owes 4s. 10d. arrears for half of a tenement, the rent being 2s. 6d.: he pays "by his wife, 2d., 4d., 3d., 3d., 3d." William Wytegod owes arrears for the house which was inhabited by Richard le Canevacir 7s. 0½d.; the rent being 3s. 6d.: "he paid 9s. 8d. in one cartbente (cartbend, part of a cart) with hooks, "or fasteners (gropis), and he is quit to the feast of the Nativity of John the Baptist in the year afore-said." The Chaplains of the church of St. Mary, for the house which Ralph Pynproud held, owe 9d. arrears, the rent being 9d.: "by the hands of Geoffrey the Priest, they pay 18d." Henry le Muleward (the Millward) owes 6d. arrears for a house in Fulfod; rent 2s., which latter is paid; for another tenement in Fulfod he owes 11s. 0½d. arrears, and 2s. 2d. rent: of neither of which any payment is made. The Warden of "the (La) Maudeleyn" owes, for 2 perches of land that had "been given [to the Maudeleyn], with 2 leprons "sisters," 20d. arrears, and a rent of 4d.

Andrew Harnest, for 1½ acres of land, formerly in the occupation of Walter Lubery and William Undirdone, and 2 other acres, owes 11s. 2½d. arrears, and 4s. 5½d. yearly rent; "he paid 6s. 6d. in 5½ yards of woollen cloth, bought of him." John, son of Hugh Pule, and his sister, for 2 houses, 2 roods and one perch of land, owe 2s. 3½d. and 10 hens, arrears; the yearly rent being 13d., and 2 hens: "the same John pays, as his portion, "13d., and in lieu of 4 hens, 7d." Isabel Mundelard, for a messuage and land described, owes 22 cocks and 22 hens; the yearly rent being 2s., 2 cocks and 2 hens; 4s. 1d. is the payment entered as made by her. Joan le Graunt, for a pigeon-house and garden, "on "the Strand," pays a rent of 2s., which, "by a certain covenant, is forgiven her for this year." William le Syngere (the Singer) for a certain place near the bridge leading towards St. Mary's church, owes 8d. arrears, the yearly rent being 2s. 6d.; he pays the latter sum, but not the arrears.

The following entries bear reference to "Houses in the "Master's hands,"—the rents of which were probably received by him for his own private use.—John le Smythe owes 4s. 6d. arrears; he has "one pot (ollam) in "pledge, and therefore is quit." Tredegold owes 7s. 7d. for part of a tenement, as arrears, and John Brun 5s. 3d. for another part: against their names is entered, "Died in poverty, and so, nothing." William le Clerk owes, for the fourth part of a tenement, 7s. 3d. arrears, the rent being 2s.: he paid by his wife 8d.; also, in 6 chickens 6d.; also, 5d., and 7d." Richard le Werkman owes for a tenement which he held of the Master, 7s. 6d. arrears, "and he pays no yearly rent, because he is "totally prostrated;" in the margin is entered, "Died "in poverty, and so, nothing." Walter de Langele, called "Minstarder," for a new seld in French Street, owes 16s. 11d., at 10s. yearly rent; "and it now stands "empty, for want of letting;" against which is entered, "—Laurence de Meyns paid one Picard, who hired the "seld, 2s. 6d." Isabel Goudriche, for another seld there, owes 23s. 10d. arrears; "Henry Lokeforth and "Master Simon (paid) 18l., 12d." The following entry is suggestive:—"Ema Drage owes for the said seld, in "which she made a stay [traxit moram] from the feast "of St. Michael in the 19th year to the Lord's Nativity "next following, 10s. yearly rent." Eight several sums of 3 pence are entered as having been paid by her, ending with,—"after that, she ran away from the town, "in poverty." She did not dwell in this open shed, it should be observed; she only "made a stay" there. William Self owes arrears for part of a seld, 7s. 7d.: "there is a pledge of a brass pot for it, value 3s.; "Thomas Cane owes arrears on the same seld, 4s.; he "has run away (fugiti)." William Russell owes arrears upon a fourth seld there, 5s.; "he paid 3s., in the value "of wooden vessels; and afterwards ran away, and so, "nothing." Magota Coyfistere owes, for the same seld, an amount not stated. She is entered, in the margin, as paying 8s., 6d., and 10 sums of 8d. each, "and afterwards she departed secretly." The wife of William Spelt, for a fifth seld there, owes 9s. arrears; she has "a carpet in pledge." Alice Clarice owes, for a seld opposite the church of All Saints, 7s. 4½d. arrears, and a rent of 5s.; "she paid, in the way of preparing "the intestines (tripe) of 5 beasts and 16 pigs, 14d." She also paid sums 28 in number, varying from 2s. 6d. down to 3 pence. Sir John Pipercricche, Chaplain, owes arrears "for the corner house which Henry "Fleming now holds 4s. 2d.;" he has "two carpets in "pledge for it." William de Asche owes arrears for the same 11s. 4½d.: "a poor man, has run away."

"The Warden of the church of St. Cross at Winchester owes for one house near the Gate of St. Cross, "as arrears, 10s. 7½d.; his yearly rent being 2s. 1½d. "John de Fermesham owes 12s. 4d. arrears for one "house in Sparkeforde, at a yearly rent of 2s. 1½d.;" there are no entries of payments against their names.

In "Porthesmuthe," the son of John atte Berne owes 100 shillings as arrears, and a yearly rent of 10s.: "now "Thomas Pese holds these houses." Robert le Goldsmythe owes, for the tenement formerly of Richard Rumyn 4½s. 8s. 6d., the rent being 10s.; "he paid "40s., and in the value of 36 quarters of salt, 48s.; "also, in expenses incurred there by the Warden, 5s." Eleanor Rumyn, the alewife, 200 years later, was immortalized by Skelton, the poet.

The roll ends with "Names of those who hold shops "in the new rents in French Street."—These shops were all taken at the Feast of St. John the Baptist in that year (19 Edward II.), each at the yearly rent of 2s. 6d.; the tenants being, John le Graunt, John Brende, John le Charpenter, Master Symon Brakele, and "a "certain Picard," who, "by the hand of Laurence Meis, "paid his rent of 2s. 6d."

The surnames, indicative of trades or callings, of the various tenants, are less numerous in this roll than the preceding: the following, it is believed, have not occurred before:—Couke; Selkewymman (silk woman); Glover; Muleward; Shepherd; Cobler (sutor); Baxtere (? baxter, or baker); Hakeneur (or Hackneyman); Coyfistere (maker of coifs); Goldsmyth; and Parmenter.

The poverty in which the place was then steeped is evident—much more so indeed than appears from these comparatively few extracts;—and the scenes of want and distress must have been appalling.

In 1837, or, according to some accounts, '38, the town of Southampton was sacked, and burnt, by a combined fleet of French, Spaniards, and Genoese. The Rental, now about to be described, alludes to the misfortune, but as the one that succeeds it throws much more light upon the nature and extent of the calamity, further mention of it is deferred until the last-named Rental comes under notice.

The Rental for the year ending at Michaelmas in the 14th year of Edward III. (A.D. 1340) is the next in chronological order that has survived. It is no longer in the form of a roll, but in book shape, consisting of 8 parchment leaves of small quarto form, two at least having been lost. As before, the facts noted are, the tenement, described under its parish, the yearly rental, the name of the present, and, in general, the late, tenant, the arrears owing at the date above mentioned, and then, in the margin, the extent to which those arrears and rents have been paid; in many instances, in small sums at different times. The names of many tenants—or families—mentioned in the preceding rolls are here repeated; and there are comparatively few facts worthy of remark, except that the arrears due are about four times as large as the yearly rents; shewing that the rents had fallen almost wholly in arrear since the date of the conflagration; though, as will be noticed in the sequel, it was only a comparatively small portion of the property belonging to God's House that was destroyed.

Hugh le Barbere and John le Coupere are living in nothing better than open "selds," 2*sd*. being the rent paid by the two. The rent of a tenement held by Thomas le Taverner is one pound of cummin yearly, but there are 5 pounds of it owing. John atte Burches pays 8*s*. yearly rent for the house "where Richard de Kyngestone, rector of Holy Rood (Saint Cross) dwells": in the margin he is mentioned as paying it off in laths and nails partly, and partly in money. John Gabriel owes arrears 2*ss*. 1*d*., rent 8*s*. 8*d*. for his house "upon the sea quay." Part of a tenement near the sea, is let by John, son of John le Vaus, to the Society of the Bardi, —an important community of Florence: the same Society, holding another tenement against the same John by a Statute Merchant.—Several instances are mentioned of what once were large tenements, being now divided into three smaller ones. A tenement is described as being situate "near to the Fludigate." Thomas atte Marche holds two thirds and Walter de Brackele one third, of the Westhale:—"When whole, this belonged to Gervaise the Rich (le Ryche), of "Suthampton;" meaning, no doubt, Gervaise the merchant, who founded the Hospital. The year's rent of Robert de Stayndrope, Clerk, for his tenement, 18*l*. in amount, is paid in parchment. Dyonisia, the widow of Thomas Sampson, owes arrears 16*s*. 11*d*., her rent being 8*s*.: she pays a portion of it in several instalments, in fish and herrings, and one goose. Reginald Martin pays the comparatively large rent of 6*s*. for "the vault near the church of St. Michael; and there he dwells," his arrears being 14*s*.

"Peter de Pakenham owes for the tenement which "Gilbert de Wygeton, Warden of God's House, recovered "by process (stacheas) of Henry de Lym 10*l*. 16*s*. 6*d*. "arrears, and yearly rent 24*s*." This Gilbert is one of the few Wardens whose name has come down to us in these rolls; he will be found mentioned in the extracts from the Computi, in connexion with his kinsman William de Wygeton," under the 14th year of Edward II. Process "per stacheas" was probably a process under local jurisdiction, stakes being driven into the land, with notice of ejectment fastened thereto. John le Spicer and Katharine, his wife, owe 9*l*. 8*s*. arrears, their yearly rent being 20*s*.: the only payment entered as made is, "2 cartloads of hay, value "10*s*., by the hands of Robert Strathfeld" (taking his name probably from the present Stratfieldsaye). "Thomas atte Marche owes for a certain house "at Westhute (West Hythe), towards the Castle, which "formerly belonged to Hugh Sampson, and is situate "between the Jews' House and the house of John "Twyg, 12*s*. 6*d*.; his yearly rent being 6*s*." Nicholas de Barluf pays 3*s*. arrears, and 32*s*. rent, mostly in fish, herrings at 8*d*. to 10*d*. the hundred, "macrel" 18*d*. the hundred, and 6 codfish at 9*d*. the whole. William Ace, "called Higecoke," or "Hichecoke," is often mentioned; and there are other similar instances, shewing that in those days, persons were much known by the name by which others chose to call them, and were not wholly at liberty to dictate their surnames for themselves. For the house called "Chesefeld" (i.e. Cheese warehouse), the Abbot of Beaulieu owes arrears 15*s*. at a yearly rent of 3*s*.. In respect of a house in the parish of St. Laurence, which the Prior and Convent of St. Denis had bought of Sir John Pudel, Chaplain, and on which a yearly rent of 4*s*. was due to the Hospital; on the last half year's rent being paid, all previous arrears were forgiven, to aid them in rebuilding the house, which had been burnt. In respect of another tenement in the same parish, upon which 70*s*. arrears under former tenants were due, a marginal note says that all those arrears had been forgiven, by reason of the tenement being burnt; but that, under the present tenant, Gilbert de Wygeton, Clerk, (no doubt the Warden of God's House, of that name), who had bought the interest of Thomas de Langley and William Swithon, cobbler, and Joan, his wife, the former tenants, the place was still lying waste. John le Bakare, of Bysshoppesoke, is entered as owing 16*s*. 7*d*., arrears, his rent being 3*s*. 4*d*.: in the margin it is stated that he paid the Warden 3*s*. 4*d*., half a mark, and 6 pence: "and all the arrears "are forgiven him, in aid of the new building that was "burnt by hostile men (per inimicos viros), and he is "quit until Easter." In the parish of All Saints without the Bar, "the windmill, formerly of John le "Fleming," is mentioned: his name will be found frequently occurring in the sequel. Another instance also, of a man having two surnames, Walter Cole, "called Page."

Names implying trades or callings, found in this rental, and not before noticed, are as follow:—Spicer, Wariner (Warrenner), Plummer, Notyare (Notary), Roper, Whitowware (White-tawyer, or Tawner with alum), what the calling of Gerard le Spelsir is, it seems difficult to surmise; he may have been a grinder, or grower, of spelt, a grain used for malt.

The next, and last, of these early Rentals, belongs to the 16th year of Edward III., being brought down to Michaelmas in that year (A.D. 1342). Such was the extent of poverty now prevailing in the town, that the rental remaining exactly the same, the arrears due to the Hospital in the five parishes of Holy Rood, St. John's, St. Michael, St. Laurence, and All Saints within the Bar, were 155*l*. against 127*l*. two years before: All Saints without the Bar not being included in this enumeration, as part of the rental of that district is wanting in the account (previously noticed) for 1340.

Thomas Walsingham, of St. Alban's, in his English History, says that, in the descent made upon it by the enemy in 1337, the town of Southampton was nearly all burnt,—"fere totaliter combusta"; but in his Ypodigma Neustria, a later work, he asserts, without qualification, that the town was all burnt, "totaliter combusta"; and at least one modern authority (Lewis, Topogr. Dict.) has adopted this statement, in the assertion that the town was "completely destroyed by the French and "their allies" on this occasion. The document now under notice will enable us to test the truth of this assertion: in every instance, (with perhaps one or two exceptions), in which a house had been burnt, wherein the Hospital had an interest, the fact is so stated in the margin, mostly by the word "Combur" or "Combust," that being the abbreviated form. Excluding from the list of its tenements, mere cellars, vaults, vacant "places" of land, gardens, and fields or cultivated land, the Hospital then owned 108 tenements, and of these only 29 had been burnt. Of 17 tenements in Holy Rood Parish, one was destroyed; of 18 in St. John's 4 were burnt; of 37 in St. Michael's, 17; of 6 in St. Laurence, 4; of 9 in All Saints within the Bar, 3; of 16 in All Saints without the Bar, none; and of 5 in the Parish of St. Mary's, none.

The following are a few other items of interest, in reference to the then history of the town, selected from this Rental.—Henry Knoel owes arrears 2*ss*., at a rent of 4*s*.: living in Holy Rood parish, he had probably escaped the calamity of fire. He was a clothier, apparently, for cloth, to the value of 9*d*., was seized by Julian de Bytern for his rent; and two other seizures of cloth were also made, of the value of 9*d*. and 4*d*. respectively. Thomas le Taverner, holding a tenement at a yearly rent of one pound of cummin, now owes 7 pounds: it being a rent, claimed, probably, which he refused to pay. Nicholas Hayne, in the same parish, Holy Rood, had 9 shillings of arrears, and the year's rent, remitted to him, because his house had been burnt. Richard Snowe and Joan, his wife, late the wife of John Stacy, living near St. John's church, owe 11*s*. 9*d*. arrears, their current rent being 5*s*. 4*d*. Such was their poverty, as we learn from the margin, that they paid a part of it in two sums of one halfpenny, one of a penny, three of 2 pence, six of 3 pence, four of 4 pence, two of 6 pence, and one of 10 pence, 5*s*. 4*d*. in all. A shop is mentioned in St. Michael's Parish, as "formerly belonging to John Twyse," and situate near the "little lane called Rochel- "lane" in French Street; so called, perhaps, from a family of De Rochelle, which formerly lived in the town. Hugh the Barber and Agnes, his wife, pay one shilling for yearly rent of one fourth part of a tenement: this is deducted from Hugh's "stipend;" no doubt, as barber to the House. Of Reginald Martin, "dwelling in the vault near St. Michael's church," the arrears and rent, 6*s*. respectively, are entered as duly paid. Thomas atte March, of West Hythe, in St. Michael's Parish, formerly mentioned, is forgiven 14*s*. 6*d*. arrears and rent, "for great reasons"—Ex magnis de causis—rather, redundant language.—Matildis, late the wife of Adam Bernewelle, owes arrears 7*l*. 18*s*.; including four years' rent, "since the burning," at 12*s*. 9*d*. yearly. "Burnt" is entered in the margin: no allowance is made to her, but in the other margin it is stated that she paid 5*s*., and a piece of silver plate, "value 7*s*." The sum of 4*l*. 3*s*., for arrears and half a year's rent, is forgiven to Reginald Martyn, by reason of his house, in Symenelstret, (in St. Michael's parish), having been burnt. Of the house in that street where John le Rydare lived, according to the margin, "John "Gaye, of Mousehole, is now tenant: "the place so called was a house, or locality, in the town. From this marginal notes, "Combus." Symenelstret seems to have suffered greatly from the ravages of the French. "English Street" is mentioned in the little parish of St. Laurence, which would seem, for its size, to have suffered severely from the enemy. Gilbert de Wygeton, Clerk, named in the previous Rental, pays a yearly rent of 20s. for his tenement in the parish of St. Laurence, which had probably now been rebuilt. John le Man is named as having held a tenement in English Street, in the parish of All Saints within the Bar, which had been burnt: 10s., arrears due thereon, are forgiven to Hugh Totrich, his successor. Lubrystrete and Estgarston (East Garston) are mentioned as being in the parish of All Saints without the Bar. It is to this part of the town, that the payment of part of the rent in the form of poultry was limited. In this locality "Acadesbruge (Acad's Bridge)" on the Stronde," is mentioned, a garden and pigeon-house near there being held by Nicholas de Mountdenard. He held also 5 other properties in the same locality, on all of which the rent was owing: it is therefore noted in the margin that he is to be distrained. Eststret (East Street) and the "Bradewey" (Broadway) are mentioned as being in the parish of St. Mary's. The surnames of John le Wayare and Richard le Whelere imply their trades. Alice the Suware probably was a needle woman.

In reference to the before-named localities in Southampton,—it may be not inopportune to remark, that Lobristrete, Fish Street, Rochelle Lane, Full Flood, and Flogdate, are no longer known: Padewell, East Garston, Deepdene, Leyham, and Newington, seem also to be equally unknown. The names, on the other hand, of Simmel Street, East Street, and Broad Lane, still survive; English Street is the present High Street, and Bull Street survives in the "Bugle Street" of the present day.

We now pass on to another class of records:—

The first in date of the now existing Computi, or rolls of receipts and expenditure, is (fr. from the Latin):—

"The Account of John de Wrth [Worth] Warden of "God's House at Suthampton . . . from the Feast of "St. Michael in the 24th year of the reign of King "Edward [the First] to the same Feast in the 25th "year (A.D. 1297)":—

Rents from Hamptone [Southampton], Portesmuith, Winton [Winchester], Ekesbury [Exbury], and "Increased rents from stores sold," are first accounted for; larger extracts, under this head, will be given from the succeeding rolls.—Among "Stores Sold" are 10 goslings, sold for 2s. 1d., and 6 capons for 15d.

Among "Expenses of houses" are the following items.—"For one roofer covering and pointing [punctante] divers rooms in the court-yard, with the "covering of the cart-house and stable, for 42 days, "at the Master's board 3s. 6d. For one mason replacing and renewing 2 doors in the hospital, one day 2d. "For the same, repairing the wall of the chamber near the bridge, at the east end, with the putting of a new door in the same, by the piece 6s. 6d. For two and a half thousand of laths, for the new cart-house and other rooms of the courtyard 5s. 1d., at 2s. the thousand. For 5 beams bought for walrefnes and grundsulles, for the cart-house 16d. For long spikinges, bought for strengthening the beams and props [stodis] of the wall thereof 18d. For one man plastering the wall thereof, by the piece 3s. 2d. For mending a glass window in the hall of the Brethren 2d. For twistes and hokis, made of our own iron, for the new door of the cellar near the bridge 2d. "For one man making a new hurdle [as a flooring] upon which to found the cellar [or sun-parlour] upon the tourelle [or small tower, torale], the same being bought for the purpose 22d. For one bar for the great gate 6d. For 2 bushels of beans, to be planted in the garden, and one quarter of beans to be planted at Boclond 16d. For dung bought 5s. 9d. For boat-hire of John the Priest, going by water for the rent of Ekesbury, going and returning 2½d. For one "bil" (and) one "sharp," made of our own iron and steel, bought for making them 2d. For one earthen wall, 3 feet wide and 10 piches long, made between the courtyard and Nywntone, in gross, made by the piece 6s. 10d. For one man digging in the garden, to plant beans and sow hemp 6d. For the same cutting down the brambles [dumos] at Padewelle, upon the embankment between the Master's land and the land of the Prior of St. Denis, for 6 days 6d. For the fee of the Clerk of the Court at Hamptone, for enrolling as to 3 stakes set up at the doors of empty houses in the borough 3d.":—

these were notices to the tenants to pay the rent, on pain of the houses being taken possession of by the owners.—"For making a new earthen wall on the east "side of the bridge in Nywntone, near the street, by "the piece 3s. 6d. For "heth" bought for the said wall "2s."—the heath was mixed with the clay, to bind it. "For purchase of a small furnace for the brewhouse, "and replacing it anew 13d. For one woman spinning "the wool sent from Gissich, and fleecing [vellerante] "the same, for 9 days, at the Master's board 9d. For "a new bucket for drawing water, and for hooping the "same with our own iron 5d. For one mill-stone "bought for grinding apples [for cider] 7s. 4d."

From "Expenses within the house":—"The pittance "of Sister Joan, who does not eat flesh throughout the "year, 7s. 7½d., to wit, a farthing per day. The pittance "of Sister Elena, from the feast of St. Oswald to the "18th of the Kalends of May, and so for 44 days, 16d., "to wit, one farthing per day, because she ate nothing "throughout that time that had suffered death." Under.—"Small things bought,"—"For one brass "pot, containing 2 gallons, bought for the kitchen, "2s. 2d. For mending a brass pot that was broken in "the kitchen, with our own brass bought for the same "6d. For a knife for the kitchen, and a knife for the "pantry 4d. For making 28 pounds of Paris candles "with tallow and "coton," bought for it 2s. 2d. For "2 iron candlesticks ¾d. For rushes bought, for "making cyrges [tapers] 1½d. For 4 tankards [small "pails] of wood bought 3½d. For one costrel [costrato] "bought 1½d. For 12 gallons of bad beer bought, for "sousing the remains of the larder 5½d.:—"In xi. "lagenis de vili cervisia emptis, pro reliquiis lardarii "souciandis 5d. ob.) For the digging of 29 thousand of turf, by the piece, 2s. 5d., at one penny the "thousand. For turning over, binding [?], and stacking "the said turfs in the fields 8d. For cutting 10 "acres one rood of heth [heath] 6s. 10d. For binding "up the said heth, over and above the help of the "servants 2½d."

Under "For the Chapel,"—"For mending the iron "bar in the glass window in the Chapel 4d. For wicks "for the tapers and candles 2½d. For 2 lamps bought "1d. For frankincense 2d. For a thurible 18d. "For the wages of the landress, washing the linen "cloths of the house and the chapel for a year 8d." Under, "For shoes for the brethren,"—"For 3 pairs of "shoes for the use of Geoffrey the Clerk, with mending "23½d. For one pair of shoes bought for the use of "Theobald the Cook 6d. For mending them 1d. "For one pair of linen cloths [? drawers] bought for "the use of Geoffrey the Clerk 9½d."

Under the head of, "Foreign Expenses,"—"For "writings of quitclaim made as to the lands and "tenements of Roger de Chut at Werore in the Island "[of Wight] 4d. For 13 hakes and 4 congers, bought "and sent to the mother of the Master [Henry de "Bluntesdone] at the Feast of St. Scolastica the Virgin "2s. 5d. For boat-hire of Theobald the Cook 3 times "to the Island, for grinding the corn 3d. For one "fresh salmon, bought and sent to the Master at "Clarindone, in the first week of March 7s. 6d. For "shoeing the horses of Master John de Grundewelle, "on his coming 3½d. For shoeing one palfrey and one "sumpter-horse of the Master, on the stay of John "Brun 7d. For 4 quarters and 2 bushels of bran, "bought for them by order of the Master 5s. 8d. For "one man carrying a letter of Master John de Grunde- "welle to Portesmuith, for signing the writings of "covenant as to the prebend of Seleseye, going and "returning 4d."

On the reverse of the roll (of 2 skins) are entered, as usual in these times, the "Issues of the Granges,"—all the items of produce of the respective farms then belonging to the Hospital. Of the wool, 4 pounds were "sent into the Island, to make cloth for the Brethren." Woolfels were also sent into the Isle [of Wight], to be worked up into web [telum]. Of cheeses made on the farms, there were 88, two weys in weight, sent "with "the Master" into Flanders: he was probably in attendance upon King Edward, at this time in Flanders. Of geese, six were "sent to the Master, at Portesmuith; "and six capons were sent thither also."

The next of the now existing Computi, belongs to the 27th year of Edward I. (A.D. 1299), with the following title:—

"The account of John de Wrth [Worth], Priest, "Warden [Custodia] of God's House at Suthampton, "from the Feast of St. Michael in the year of the reign "of King Edward the 26th, to the Feast of the Inven-

"tion of the Holy Cross (3rd May) next ensuing, in the 27th year of the reign of King Edward"—

The following are the various heads of the Account, both receipts and expenditure (similar heads being mostly adopted in the succeeding rolls). Receipts.—Arrears (in hand); Rents, at Suthampton, Winchester, Eokesbury (now Exbury) and Portesmue, (or Portsmouth): the manors in the Isle of Wight, and at Hecke and Gessich, being farmed by the House itself; Lease of rooms, such being, one cellar within the Gate, and one cellar, under the Warden's chamber; receipt of 11*d.*, for 11 sacks "landed upon the quay;" Issues of manors,—confined to sales of hides in the present instance; Sales from the stores; Foreign receipts,—under which comes 9*li.* 13*s.* received from Brother Reginald for sales in the Isle of Wight; with Receipts also from the manor of Hecke.

The heads of Expenditure are as follow:—Rents paid, and defaults,—being quirents, tithes, and moneys, lost through houses not being tenanted; Costs of carts, and Costs of ploughs,—here very brief, but in some of the rolls of great length, and very minute in detail; Purchases of corn,—pease and barley coming under this head: Costs of the houses (in the Hospital),—under which head are mentioned, the hall, the Master's chamber, the grange, and the cellar near the sea; Expenses of houses in the borough;—among which a house in Nywntone is mentioned: Petty (Minute) Expenses,—among them the following:—"Boat-hire for 11 quarters of oats from the Island to Suthampton 10*d.*; to a cooper, hooping the cures, tines, and barrels, with hoops bought for it 9*d.*; to a roofer (tectori) covering the earth wall near the bridge of Newyntone, 2½ days, 6*d.*; to a handmaid who helped him 2½*d.*; for digging 10 perches of ditch near the croft called 'Leyam,' by the piece, 10*d.*; 30 perches of ditch made round Langeld 3*s.* 1½*d.*; 49 perches of ditch in Goresmor 8*s.* 3*d.*; mending the saddle of a sumpter-horse with burle (flocks) 3*d.*; mending the water conduit, between the spring and the brewhouse, with 4 pounds of tin 7½*d.*; costs of the swineherd, and a man driving the swine to the wood in acorn-time, 2*d.*; paid the same for fetching them back into the forest 3½*d.*; for 6 quarters of draff, bought to fatten them for the larder 3*s.* 4½*d.*; for 3 bushels of beans for planting 6*d.." Costs of the sheep fold and dairy; of the mill, for grinding and winnowing; Wages; House expenses; among them,—"Pittances of 4 sisters, Joan, Dyonia, Juliana, and Elena, for 214 days, 17*s.* 10*d.*, at one farthing each per day; paid 4 Paupers in the Hospital for the same time, namely, Adam, Nicholas, Roger Sored, and Alice Bothild, 8*s.* 11*d.*, at one farthing for every 2 days. Paid Walter the Clerk 17½*d.*, at 1½*d.* per fortnight;" Purchase of wine,—*"One tun of white wine, with carriage 13*s.* 9*d.*;" Necessary expenses,—among them, "wages of one man making 32 pounds of Parys candles 8*d.,"—these Paris candles were of tallow, probably coloured; For the Chapel,—"One gallon of oil for lamps in the Chapel and the Hospital 8*d.*; rushes for the same 3*d.*; Wages, John the Priest, for half a year, 16*s.* 8*d.*;" W. the Priest, the same time, 10*s.; For the Brothers —"For 13 rolls of russet for making 3 garments for the Brothers William, Roger, and Reginald 17*s.* 4½*d.*; for making the 3 garments 6*d.*; 3 pairs of shoes for Brothers William and Roger, with the mending 20*d.*; one pair of leggings for Brother William 10½*d.*; one pair of shoes for Theobald the Cook 5½*d.*; 2 pairs of shoes for G. the Clerk, with mending 16*d.*; one pair of shoes for Walter Clerk, Smith 6*d.;" Foreign expenses; among them,—"Expenses of Walter Smyth, to Cycestre (Chichester), to seek money for rent at Celeseye (Selsey), going and returning 4*d.;" Foreign deliveries; among them,—"Delivered to John de Londone, for making a new pigeon-house 4½*d.*;"***

This part of the Account ends with "Defaults of rents" with a long list of the tenants then in default. Among them Master John le Fleming, a man of some importance, who afterwards seems to have acted as Attorney to the Hospital, owes the large sum of 8*li.* 5*s.*; Hugh le Grant owes 17½*d.* and 2 pounds of cummin. John Mondelard is entered as owing "11*s.* 6*d.* for a certain tenement near the sea, which he denies holding of the Master. Also, the same for a house near St. John's church 16*d.*." The Rector of St. Michael's owes 9*s.* Bette, the Roman, owes 27*s.* 6*d.* Christina Strumplet (Meretrix) owes 3*d.* "Two sisters of Wynton," owe 9*d.* John Beverege owes 4*d.* "Four fields near the garden" are mentioned as being untenanted; "Arrears of rents," as we have seen, at other times, were entered in a roll wholly by themselves.

The reverse of this roll (as also, of all the others) contains an account of the "Issues of the Granges" for the same term, giving a statement, under the following heads; of how much has been received therefrom respectively, and how much has been disposed of, and how, and, consequently, of how much is remaining in store. —Wheat,—among the items, used for malt 4½ quarters, "distributed among the poor, by the Master throughout Advent, 3 bushels; given to John de London, by the Master, one quarter; given by him to John the Miller, one quarter"; Rye,—this is used by the servants of the house, and for fattening swine "for the larder;" Bere,—a peculiar kind of barley, 2 quarters only are mentioned; Barley,—of this, 2 quarters and one bushel are used to mix with oats, for making "draget," a mixture used in brewing; Beans,—of this produce there are 3 bushels distributed among the poor, a similar item, in reference both to beans and pease, occurring in each account; Pease; Vetches; Oats,—3 quarters 2 bushels used, as above, for making draget. The following are some items, shewing how the oats were consumed:—"For provender of 5 plough horses this year 11 quarters 3 bushels; provender of the horses of Master P. de Gorsvyle, for one night in Lent, 2½ bushels; provender of the horses of Master John and of W. Bryon, coming in Lent from London, by order of the Master, and returning to London, at the Annunciation of St. Mary, one quarter and half a bushel; Capital malt; Coarse malt; Horses; Cattle; Plough beasts; Oxen; Bulls; Cows; Steers (Boviculi); One year olds; Calves; Carcasses; Swine; Suckling-pigs; Bacon-hogs; Muttons—(other sheep than wethers must be included under this name, as cheeses are mentioned elsewhere as their produce)—Ewes; Hogsters; Lambs; Woolfels; Lambskins; Cheeses,—"45 received from the Island, weighing 3 stone;" Hens,—among them 62, received from John, the Reeve of Gessich; 4 received for Chereschoat, a kind of rent, perhaps meaning Church-scut; Hives of bees 15, four lost by 'murrain,' in the winter; Wax, mostly used in the Chapel; Honey; Wine; Oatmeal; Salt; Hides.

The office of "Custos," or Warden, of the house, would seem at this date to have been identical with that afterwards known as that of Serjeant, or Steward, and the Dominus, or head, must then have had some other title.

The next Account, that for the 27th of Edward I. (Invention of the Holy Cross, May 3rd, to Michaelmas), is that of "Robert de Hanyndone, Priest, Warden of God's House, at Suthampton," for that year. The heads of account are similar to those in the preceding Computus; the following are some extracts:—

"Received 5*s.* for the little cellar near the sea; 13*s.* for one wey of cheese; 2*s.* 6*d.* for 2 stone of butter. 52*s.* received from Brother Reginald in the Island (of Wight) by the hand of Brother Roger; also, 3½ quarters of pease; and 6*li.* upon making up his account; also, received 7*li.* from Sir John de Wrth, "about the Invention of the Holy Cross;" this latter had been "Custos" just before, and at this time was probably the Steward for the house at the Manor of Hecke.

Among the payments are the following:—"For one pound of cummin bought and paid at the Court of Depedene [near Southampton] for the Were, for this year." The account under the head of "Carts" is lengthy and minute: the seven "capistra" (? halters) for the horses, were made from hemp grown by the House; two swyveles for tying the horses at pasture cost one penny; the carriage of 9 ash trees from Ychene (Itchin) to the Hospital, "as timber for carts and wag-gons," cost 21 pence. The shoeing of 3 horses and 2 oxen, throughout the year, cost 4*s.* 6½*d.* 3000 scallates (slates) for the Hospital, cost 6 shillings. "Paid 2 men making a wall in the Hospital, between the house of the Sisters and the way leading to the common latrine, for 3 days, their food at the expense of the Master, 9*d.*" Charges are then entered for a carpenter (12 days) and a roofer (8 days) building a house "beyond the oven." For a house in the town one new lover (lover) is bought, costing 4½*d.*: a wooden construction in the roof, for the smoke to escape by. This is an item of frequent occurrence. A scallater covers the same house by the piece (ad tasciam) for 2 shillings. Among "Petty expenses" are the following:—"For the healing of 6 young sows 2*d.*; for healing 5 steers and 7 calves 4*d.*; for a pair of gloves, for making hedges 2*d.*; for mending the lock of the Master's coffer 2*d.*" The House appears to have possessed both watermill and horsemill: saving wood into boards for mending the mill-slucio towards the Were cost 16*d.* Hay is mentioned as being made in the meadows of Bocland and Padewell: none was made in the meadow of Gorsmor, as it was depastured by the Master's calves. Under "House Expenses," are payments to 3 Sisters, Joan, Juliana, and Elena, for their pittance; at a farthing a day each, for 150 days, 9s. 4½d. Dionysia was paid for only 98 days, at the end of which she either departed or died (decessit). Seven Paupers in the Hospital were paid at the rate of one farthing every two days, for 150 days; their names being Adam, Nicholas, Roger Strod, Alice Bothild, Galun, Lucy, and Stulle. One buttel (boulting-sieve) cost 4d.; 3 quarters, 6 bushels, of coal (charcoal) 22½d.; paid for cutting 6 acres of heath and furze 4s. 4d. The stipend of R[obert] the Priest, for half a year, was 16s. 8d., and of W. the Priest 10 shillings; of a cook and brewer for that time 4s.; of the groom (garcionis) of R. the Priest 3s.; and of a laundress, "washing the clothes of the House for that time, 4 pence." 9 ells of linen cloth were bought for Brothers William and Roger, to make 2 pairs of sheets; a pair of shoes for Brother William cost 8 pence.

Under Outdoor, or Foreign, Expenses, occur the following (selected):—Expenses of Walter Smith carrying "a writ of the Lord the King to the Sheriff of Wiltshire, to attach his debtors 3d. Boathire of the same "Walter to Beaulieu with a letter of Master John, going and returning 2d. Boathire of Robert the Priest going to the Island (of Wight), to view the state of the manor, at the Gule (beginning) of August 5d. Expenses of Walter Smith going to London, when his Master sent for him, about the Feast of St. Michael 6d. Expenses of R. the Priest, going there about the same time, the Master having sent for him 8d. His expenses when he sought the Abbot of Beaulieu at Cokeswell, after that time, by order of the Master, going and coming 12d. Paid to John de London, for making a pigeon-house and an oven 40s. Paid to John de Aune, a Friar Minor, by order of the Master, 13s. 4d.

At the foot is tacked on, a small parchment, containing the account of John de London, for building the oven (or bakehouse) and pigeon-house above-mentioned. For making lime he used 6 boatloads of chalk, price 19s. 4d.; 4 boatloads of oyster shells 4s.; 2 cartloads of firewood 17d.; 19½ quarters of coal (charcoal) 22s. 9d. The wage of one mason who made the pigeon-house and bakehouse, in gross, by the piece, was 106s. 8d. An account of the outlay of R. the Priest, for additional materials for these erections, is then added.

On the reverse of the roll, the "Issues of the Granges," contain similar heads to those in the preceding. The masons who made the pigeon-house receive one quarter of wheat, one bacon-hog being also given them, by covenant. 5 bushels of chete are mentioned as being received from the Island (of Wight), a kind of wheat, probably, producing a darker flour. During 125 days, one cheese was produced daily, from 13 cows having calves; the weight of the cheese is not given. 4 tuns and one pipe of cider are made from the issues, or fruits. No deaths of stock "from murrain," appear in this roll, and the small amount of poultry comes only from Heckeles. Among the tenants in default at the end, are—the Precentor of St. Mary's 13s. 10d.; William la Syngar (the Singer) 7½d.; and "the Warden of Magdalene 3d."

The next roll, in date, is the Computus of the same "Robert de Hanyndone, Priest," from Michaelmas in the 28th year of Edward I. to the same Feast in the following year (A.D. 1291).

Extracts.—The sum of 2s. is received for rent of the fishery in the Were; 13d. for the middle chamber (probably, a cellar) under the Master's chamber; and 15s. for the great solar (sun-parlour) near the sea, let for 15 weeks; for the cellar, "in the corner, near the larder," also let for 15 weeks, 2s. 6d. was received. 10s. was received for a pipe of cider sold; and 16s. 6d. for 6 pigs sold by John the Reeve, at Gissich.

As to expenditure, the items, as is mostly the case, are numerous in reference to carts and harness: 3 stone of burle (hocks), at 8d., is bought for the latter; and 8 pounds of grease at 8½d., for greasing the carts, "together with our own hogs' lard." The shoeing of one ox "sent into the Island (Wight) about Hokeday," cost 10 pence. A carpenter, making a new door for the new Chapel, towards the west, for 2 days, received 4 pence, with victuals at the Master's cost. 5d. is the charge for repairing the great bell. A slater was employed for 3 weeks in covering various houses in the courtyard, at 6d. per week, with his victuals. For covering one house in Niuthone, towards the sea, he received 5d. "For a man covering the cowhouse at

"Padewelle, for 2 days, by the piece, 4d. For a man assisting him 2d. 2 women pulling out the straw for "44 days 9d." For 2 bushels of oatmeal 18½d. "For making a new pikoyse (pickaxe) of our own iron 2d. "For binding 2 spades with our own iron 3½d.;" the iron edges were fitted on to bodies of wood. "For cleansing and repairing the ditches between Niuthone and Walditch, by the piece, 16½d. For carrying off the sand thrown up by the sea on the land at Niuthone, near the sea, 2s. 6d. For making a new earth wall between the curtilage of the Master and the tenement of the Friars Minors (with other work), by the piece 7s. 6d. Expenses of R. the Priest, at Portesmuth, twice, to demand the rents of the House 10½d. 18 boatloads of stone bought for making the new quay opposite the Chapel, near the sea 28s. 6d. To a man cleansing the foundation of the quay, 3 days 6d. For building the quay, by the piece 10s. For 7 boatloads of stone, to make a quay towards the Master's close in Nywyntone 12s. 4d. Expended upon the Master, on his coming and stay, 6½. 16s. 10½d. Paid "3 Sisters, Joan, Matildis, and Juliana, their pittances" for the year 23s. [22s.] 9½d. Paid Elena de Sandhulle her pittance for 295 days 6s. 1½d. The Paupers who receive their pittance, of a farthing for every two days, are Walter Clerk (before named as Walter the Smith), Galun, Bothild, Adam, and Nicholas. Parchment "for the rolls of the house and neighbouring manors," cost 9d. "For 2 pounds of wax bought for the Chapel for Christmas, 12d., because they did not dare to broach the wax in store before the coming of Master John;"—perhaps John de Worth, already named, who may have had especial charge of it.—"Frankincense for the same 1d. In payment to one woman, preparing the entrails of 4 oxen and 18 pigs, for the larder, 12d. For a hair-cloth (alcio) for the bed 3s. 6d. For cutting the stubble in Sywardescroft, for fuel for the brewery, 3s. 6d. For 2,000 turfs 12d. Fee of John de Kirkeby, for defending the interests of the house, for one year 13s. 4d.,—not the John de Kirkeby, who was the Remembrancer of the Exchequer in 1305, and who died in the first year of Edward II., as this person, so-named, was "standing counsel" to the House for several years after that date.

16 ells of russet for the vestments of Brothers Robert and Reginald cost 21s. 4d.; and the making of 4 garments therefrom, and 2 pairs of leggings, 8½d. One ell of russet was bought for 8½d., to make new sleeves for the tunics of the said brothers. 2 pairs of leggings for the same brothers cost 2s., and 7 pairs of shoes 4s. Galun, the Pauper, who made himself useful in various ways, had 3 pairs of shoes, which, with the mending, cost 18d. In this year there were brought from the Isle of Wight to Suthampton, one horse, 10 oxen, 7 calves, 40 quarters and 5 bushels of different kinds of corn, with other "small stores"; the carriage of which, with the boathire of Robert the Priest and Brother Reginald, at various times, looking after the state of the manors, cost 4s. 7d. "A gift from the Master to the 3 Bailiffs of the borough of Suthampton 3s." A list is added, not of tenants in default, but only of the amounts of arrears of rents forgiven by the Master.

The reverse of the roll, which is of great length, contains, as usual, "Issues of the granges," or an account of stores and stock. 10 quarters of beans were received from the Isle of Wight, and 9 quarters 2 bushels from other sources; part of which was distributed among the poor, part planted at Walditch, part used for fattening swine for the larder, and part for fattening 2 boars and nine pigs against the Master's coming. Part of the year's growth of draget (oats and barley grown together) was ground up with this year's oats, "because of their weakness"; 10 quarters were used for malt, and 4 bushels "in bread and paste, for fattening 2 oxen against the Master's coming." Of the year's oats, there were made into meal 2 quarters. Made into malt 18 quarters. Provender of the horses of Master John "[? de Wrth] and others of the household of the Master (Domini), with provender of the horses of the Master's guests during his stay, 5½ quarters. Provender of the horses of Master Richard de Abendone, on 2 visits for making agreement with the merchants "as to pollards (clipped coin) 6 quarters."—Richard de Abendone was at this time one of the Barons of the Exchequer.—In this, as in other years, large quantities of rye, barley, and vetches, are delivered to various labourers on the estates; 2 carters, one man who tended the plough from Michaelmas to the Feast of St. Alphege (19 April), one driver, one man who kept the cows and couchant (otiosa) beasts at Heckeles in winter, and the couchant beasts there in summer and autumn; and one man who kept the cows separately in the Marsh, from St. Alphege to Michaelmas. Of 32 sucking-pigs, 6 were sent to the Master, who seems to have been then living at Salisbury. Half of a bacon-hog was delivered at Bremelschawe, for autumn consumption, for Master John [? de Writh]. Of 194 cheeses, 10 had been delivered at Salisbury, for the Master's use, and 3 for a feast there: 66 had been sold for 8 shillings, weighing one wey. Geese were principally reared at Heckeles, and capons at Heckeles and Gissich. 8 hens were received in the form of rent, and 300 eggs were received from the Isle of Wight. 38 chickens were sent from the Isle of Wight, and 128 from Heckeles; 27 being consumed in the House, and 139 by the Master: 5 tuns of cider were made from the produce of the garden. One pound of cummin was paid by Richard le Graunt, as his rent for the Were. 21 hides of horses, cows, and oxen, were tanned, or tawed, for white leather; in one case, of 2 cows slaughtered for the Master's feast at Salisbury. The leather was mostly used for harness; in one instance, that of a calf's skin for covering a book. 30 gallons of methe, or mead, were received from Heckeles.

With the intermission of one year, the next roll is the Account of Robert de Hanyngdon, Priest, from Michaelmas 30th Edward I. to Michaelmas in the following year. (A.D. 1303.)

Extracts.—16 pence is the increase of rents on a house held by the relict of Le Faketour (the Factor): 13^{sd}.d. received on sale of a horse, only "half alive (semivivo)"; 7s. received as arrears of rent of the garden and pigeon-house near the Stronde. Under "Carts" is the item, "For beef fat, bought to mix with our own hogs' lard," for the carts 11^{sd}.d. Under "Costs of the House," 7d. is the charge for a louver placed in the chamber at "the west end of the hall, for getting out by, to clean the gutter between the halls." The pigstye, we learn, was covered with twigs and wattle, costing 4 pence; and 8 pence was given to the man covering it. "In the Chapel," 13s. 1^{sd}.d. was paid "to a certain painter painting the cross, in full, his victuals at cost of the Master. For one man daubing (whitewashing) the wall thereof, at the same time 2d." To a scallottore for pointing (punctante) the selds near the house of Pilling, and divers other houses in the borough, for 3 weeks, by the piece 4s. 6d. For one trulle (trowel) of iron, bought for smoothing the wall 3d. For 18 ells of coarse flax cloth, bought for making two winnowing-cloths 6s. 4d. For catching 3 moles in the garden, 1d. For making 118 perches of ditch at Padewell, near the King's highway, with a quickset hedge (viva haya) placed between, 17s. 3^{sd}.d. For one "dreyning cloth (for the dairy) 1^{sd}.d." A new mailehop (mill-hopper), and a new bynne (bin) for the mill, cost 3s. 6d. One quarter of spylkyns (spike nails) for mending the floodhatch, cost 4 pence. "For hoeing all the corn this year, with mowing the green corn, because it was too superabundant, 2s. 10^{sd}.d." The wages of 2 carters, for the year, are 10s. 2d.: of one ploughman, for the winter, 2s.; of one driver, for the year, 4s. 7d., one shepherd, for the year, 5s., one cowherd, for the year, 3s., one swineherd, for the year, 12d.; "wages to Galun, who took the place of a reaper in spring and autumn."—Payment of a farthing each, per day, is made to 6 Sisters, Joan, Joan, Matillidis, Matillidis, Juliana, and Elena. The three Paupers, who receive half a farthing per day, are Galun, Adam, and Alice Bothild. 39 cartloads of heath and furze are cut, costing 3s. 3d. "For 2 plates of silver, to be put in a cup of mazer 4d. To a man, pruning and propping the vines for 2 days 4d. To 42 women, cutting the stubble for one day 3s. 6d. 26 lbs. of tallow for making Parys candles, 2s. 9d. 3 quarters [sic] of cotton for the same 9d. For ornyement 1^{sd}.d. Linen thread for the wicks 1d. A gallon of oil for the lamp in the chancel 8d. For Masses and the burial of two Paupers in the Hospital, 4d. Stipend of Robert the Priest, for the year, 33s. 4d. That of William the Priest 20s. 20 ells of russet for the gowns and surcoats of Brothers Roger and Reginald, and for a coat of Brother Roger in the Isle (of Wight) 20s. 9d. For a pair of trowsers (tibialium) bought for Brother Reginald 20d." 2 new garments of russet are also bought by the Master for Walter Clerk and Galun, at 5s. 1d.; and 3 ells of russet are given by him to Isabel Hrythen, costing 3s. 6d. "Paid for the passage of Andrew from Fyrytone to the Island, and returning, 3d. For 2 salmon bought and sent to the Master at Odyham, in a baked crust, against the Nativity 13s. 6d. Powdered galengale (sweet cyprus) for baking them 10d. Expenses of a man taking them to the Master on two occasions 4d. Expenses of Brother Reginald, 2 carters, and 5 horses,

"taking to the Master, at Odyham, 30 lounes, 60 gallons of ale, 12 capons, 2 cheeses, and 3 quarters of oats, besides 4 pennyworth of bread, bought and sent there "15d. Expenses of Robert the Priest, going to Celeseye (Selsey), about the corn that was sequestrated there, staying there one day, and returning by way of Portesmue, about the Feast of St. Leonard, 2s. 4^{sd}.d. "Paid for a lock for the door of the grange at Celeseye 1^{sd}.d. Paid a man who carried a message to John de Kyrkeby at Winchester, about the inquisition on Odo Ace, to be taken at Malmesbure, and waited there one day for an answer 2d. Expenses of Robert the Priest, Odo Ace, and his wife, and Bartholomew Ace, going to Malmesbure, for inquisition to be held as to the lands of Bluntesdon [near Highworth, in Wilts] and returning 6s. 4d. For a pair of trowsers (tibialium) for the said Odo, 18d. Expenses of Brother Reginald, 2 carters, and 5 horses, taking one pipe of wine to Marleberge (Marlborough) on the way to Malmesbure, and then to Chusingebure [probably the present Chisenbury, in Wilts, perhaps the then residence of the Master] 17d. Expenses of Robert the Priest, Odo Ace, and his wife, going to Salisbury, and returning, before Easter, to sign the deed as to the land at Bluntesdone, and to make peace with Master John Ace 13^{sd}.d. Expenses of Robert the Priest, going to Celeseye, to sell the corn there, and find a farmer, after Easter, he returning by Portesmue, to get the rent there 14^{sd}.d. For a carpet bought for Henry, the Master's nephew, 18d. For a linen sheet for him 12d. Shoes for him twice 6d. 2 shirts (camisiis) for him 10d. A hood of blue (blue cloth) for him 3^{sd}.d. Paid his masters their stipend, and for the leader (duc) of St. Nicholas 6d.; a gift probably on that Saints day, as St. Nicholas was the patron Saint of young scholars: the "boy Bishop" perhaps may be meant.

As to "Issues of the Granges," on the reverse of the roll, besides the customary distributions thereof to the poor, 2 bushels of beans and 2 of pease were given "for making the ditch at Padewelle, on covenant;" 2 bushels of pease were also used in the House, for potage. Of vetches there were none, as they were consumed in the blade (in herba) by the horses. 6^{sd}. bushels of "draget" were mixed with the oats, for horse provender, because of their [the oats] weakness. Of superior and second quality malt, none was made from the wheat, barley, or oats, produced in the year, "because it was testified by the Brethren of the House that it would be more to the hurt of the House, than to its advantage." Of 48 capons reared in the year, 12 were delivered to the Master, at Odyham, at Christmas, and 4 at Winchester, at the Assizes. Of wax, there was expended at Malmesbury, for taking inquisition as to the land at Bluntesdon, one pound. "Consumed in the house, when Roger de Suthcote, the Justiciar, came, half a pound"—he is not named in Foss's Judges of England, and not improbably was a Justice of Assize.

The next roll is the Computus of the same Robert de Hanyngdone, Priest, for the year ending at Michaelmas 32 Edward I. (A.D. 1304.)

Extracts.—4s. is the sum received as rent for the fishery in the Were, and 20d. as Quayage; six cellars are also named, as paying rent. 3 bushels of "white pease" are bought for potage. Nine thousand slates are bought, for roofing the halls, chambers of the Hospital, and other houses in the courtyard, at 1s. 6d. the thousand. 2 new locks, for the great gate and the folding-door (valvum) of the courtyard, cost 1s. 3d., and repairing one for the inner door of the Chapel 3d. "For one boatload of stone of Ceam (P Caen) for repairing the ovens in the bakehouse, and mending the opening of the oven 3s. 6d. 200 tiles bought for the small oven 9d. For a man mending and plastering the wall of the tourelle (little tower) 1d. To a carpenter, making a new pentys over the door of the house late of Peter de Ruwes 6d. For 3 earthen pots and 3 platters 3^{sd}.d. For 2 milk-pails 6d. Paid Galun [the Pauper] for watching the fields in place of the reapers, in summer and autumn 12d." The "House expenses" this year, were 6^{li}. 19s. 7^{sd}.d., 18 days excepted, "during the stay of the Master," the expenses of which were 4^{li}. 2s. 10^{sd}.d. The details of these "House expenses" are never given, but were entered on a separate roll, referred to; of which class, as will appear in the sequel, hardly any seem to have survived. The six 'Sisters' named in the last roll appear here also. Joan le Fleming has a pittance of one farthing daily for 323 days; and Sister Emma for only 52 days. 50 dishes, 50 platters, and 50 sausers, or sauce-plates (salsariis) cost 20d.; 12 cups 6^{sd}.d. A woman was paid 6d. for making candles and wax tapers for the Chapel. For the sepulture of one poor man, or Pauper, (not named) in the Hospital, 2½d. was the cost. "For painting the tablet [? picture] and stannum [? support] before the "Cross of our Lord 5s." John de Kyrkeby has his retaining fee, as advocate, of 13s. 4d. 26½ ells of russet for Robert, and leggings for 3 Brothers, cost 35s. 7d. 15 ells of sarge (serge) made 2 summer coats for 2 Brothers 3s. 5d. Joan le Fleming, when she came, had a pair of shoes given to her, which cost 4½d. "Expenses of Robert the Priest, returning from Cumbe, near London, to see the Master, after Easter 13½d. His expenses in going were nothing, because he was with Master John [? Worth]. Expenses of Brother Reginald, with 4 men and 9 horses, carrying him and a pipe of wine to Gissich, against Advent 10½d. Boat-hire of the same, going to the Abbot of Beaulieu, and returning, to ask him for cart to carry wine to Bluntlesdon 1d. His expenses, with 6 carters and 13 horses, carrying 3 tuns of wine to Bluntlesdon, against Whitsuntide, going and returning 5s. 7d. Expenses of the same, following 3 carts, carrying 3 tuns of wine to Salisbury, against Our Lord's Ascension 2d. Expenses of 2 carts carrying 40 geese, against Advent there 4d. For 3 mullets, sent to the Master, at Brem', after autumn 11d. Half a conger 6d. 30 mulewelle [melwells, or green cod] sent to the Master at Bluntlesdon, at Whitsuntide 6s. 4d. For mullets and bare [bass] sent there in crust 6s. 7½d. For a fresh conger sent there 2s. 6d. 2 panniers for the said fish 2½d. For carrying the fish 8d. For 2 ells of russet bought for a surcote and hood for the use of Henry, the Master's kinsman, 2s. 8d. For 3 pairs of shoes for him 10½d. For wages of his teacher (doctoris) for a year 12d. A new sheep-stall at Werore, in the Isle of Wight, with "other expenses," costs 33s. 4d.

As to the "Issues of the Granges," on the reverse of this roll,—no vetches were gathered this year at Southampton, as they were all consumed, as in the preceding year, while green, by the horses. 2 quarters and 1 bushel of oats were consumed, as provender, by the horses of Roger de Suhtcote, "justiciar assigned, who stayed 3 nights, about the Octaves of St. Michael." The provender of the horses of the Steward and other of the household of the Master, and of his guests, amounted to 6 quarters 7 bushels of oats. "Given to John le Flemming, who aided the Master in Court, 1 quarter." "Given to a woman who helped the Sister to milk the cows, in summer and autumn, 2 bushels,"—of rye, barley, and vetches, mixed.—"Received, one boar, sent to the Master by the Abbot of Lett." [Lettele, now Netley]. "Given to John de London, at the marriage of his daughter, by order of the Master, one boar. Sent to the Master, at Bluntlesdon, at Whitsuntide, one collar of brawn." 15 pounds of wax were delivered at Bluntlesdon, at Whitsuntide, on the arrival of the Master there."

The next roll is the Computus of the same Robert de Hanyndone for the year ending at Michaelmas, 53 Edward I. (A.D. 1305.)

Extracts.—An increase of rent is mentioned, of 6d. for a place in Foulfod, at Southampton, on which Adam le Horder had raised a windmill in that year. No rent is paid for the great cellar near the larder, "because it is occupied by John de London, with the wines of the Master." 20s. is the sum received for 2 tuns of cider. The items for repairs of carts are very numerous this year. The shoeing of the horse of Robert the Priest costs 2s. for the year; its doctoring (marescaucia) 6d. A mason mends the gutters of the "two halls," with 2 pounds of tin (solder), costing in all 10d. "Paid a carpenter who helped to cut down 4 logs of timber in the wood of Rowenham, the gift of Brother Thomas de Badesle, and one log in the wood of the Prior of St. Denis, and cutting the same into boards to make an inclosure between the Wodevne [? vineyard] and the courtyard, 10 days, by the piece 2s. 8d. For one hinge for the door of the said palisade 1d. For hooping and repairing 6 tuns and 3 pipes for cider, with 60 wooden hoops bought for it 3s. 8d. For 2 tuns of cider bought of the relict of Richard le Graunt 15s. For a piece of meadow, bought of Walter Carter at Smere—broke 6s. 8d." No fewer than 9 Sisters in the House were paid their farthing per day this year—namely, Joan of the Island (Wight), Joan of Portesmuth, Matilidis de la Barre, Matilidis de Opaveal, Elena de Hecke, Juliana of the Island, Joan le Fleming, Emma de Stoure, and Isabel Hwytthen: 3 Paupers, Galun, Adam, and Alice Bothild, had half a farthing per day. 2 table-cloths cost 2s. 2d. "For mending the clapper of the great bell 1d. For 2 carpets, bought of William Recheles 3s. 3d. Wages

"of John de Kyrkeby, for defending the interests of the house, for one year 13s. 4d. Wages of John le Fleming, for giving his patronage to the same, for one year, 6s. 8d. For 2 pairs of shoes given to Galun, who took the place of a reaper this year 10d." The usual items occur, of breeches for the Brothers, leggings, and shoes. Then,— "For 10 ells of russet bought for Sister Emma (de Stoure) a kinswoman of the Master, 13s. 2d. A hood bought for her 12d. A veil 5d. 2 pairs of shoes 11½d. For making her robe and mantle 6½d. For 2 ells of russet, bought for a surcote, made for Henry, the Master's kinsman 3s. 1½d. For 4 ells of bluet, bought for a new robe for him, against his departure 6s. For cutting out the same 4d. For 2 new shirts for him 11½d. For the expenses of a man and a horse taking him to Merlawe (Marlow) 18d. To a messenger, seeking Master J. de Grundewelle in Dorset, as to the Archbishop's Visitation 1d. To him, for carrying a letter of the said Master J. to the Master at Lync[ohn] at Christmas, to tell him of that Visitation 2s. Expenses of Robert the Priest going to London about the Feast of St. Martin, to get robes there for the Master's household, and to tell the Master that 3 talents were demanded of him by the Nuncios of the Court of Rome, together with the expenses of Walter Clerk, who returned with him, 4s. 10½d. Expenses of the same at Winchester, for recovering the cattle of the house, taken by the Sheriff for aid in the tallage of the town 9½d. His expenses there in recovering a haystack, at Tounhulle, that had been taken for the use of the Justiciars of our Lord the King 6½d. To a messenger, carrying a letter of the said Robert to the Master, in Kent, telling him of the distresses made upon the house for aid in the tallage for the subsidy 20d. Expenses of the said Robert at London, for 8 days, at the Exchequer, to gain relief from the tallage on the vill, with his costs, going and returning 5s. 5d. To a messenger carrying a letter of Master John (P de Worth) to the Master at Osprege 18d. Expenses of the carter of the Abbot of Lettelle, taking one tun of wine to Gissich 8d. Expenses of one man, 2 carts, and 4 horses, of the Abbot of King's Beaulieu, taking one tun of wine to Bluntlesdon, going and returning 3s. 7d."

Under "Issues of the Granges."—Of the draget grown this year, 7 quarters 1 bushel were mixed with inferior oats, as provender, to rectify their weakness. In the previous year no cider was made; this year 6 tuns are made from "the produce of the garden." For some years about this time, sheep appear not to have been kept on the farms belonging to the House.

The next roll is the account of the said Robert de Hanyndone, Priest, for the year ending at Michaelmas, 54 Edward I. (A.D. 1306).

Extracts.—No rent is received for the cellar below the Master's chamber, this year, "because the Master forbids it." For the great cellar near the larder, John de London pays the (comparatively) large rent of 10 shillings; using it probably, as before, for the storage of wines. The sum of 33s. 4d. is received from Brother Robert de Gissich, "upon his entrance;" an admission fee paid by a new Brother. "20s. received from the executors of Master John de Grundewell, which he left to the Brothers and Sisters of the House; and 13s. 4d. which he left to the Poor of the House."

"For shoeing 2 oxen at Hecke, helping to carry furze and turf for fuel 12½d. 2 axles and 2 hinges bought for the window of the Chapel in the Hospital 3d. To a carpenter, making a new house at Fadelwelle for the winchard and shepherd, by the piece, 5s. 8d. One piece of timber bought for it 4d. 6 boards for 2 doors in it 10d. Axles and hinges for the same 4d. Making an earthen wall round the house, by the piece 3s. 8d. Watling the house, and covering it, by the piece, 3s. 6d. Stable for covering the house 4s. 8d.—Sum total 20s. For one new vys (vice) in the cheese-press, made by the piece 12½d. To one man, repairing the quay outside the courtyard, and the mill-quay, for 13 days, 4s. 4d. For cleansing and repairing the old ditch between the mule were [mill wear] and the pasture of Saltemershe, and stopping a breach therein 15s. For making and covering a new earthen wall between the garden gate and the tenement of John le Fleming 5s. For making a hedge at Sywardeslond, near the land of the Prior of St. Denis, 9d. For copperas [coppers] and turre for the sheep 4d. For washing and shearing 92 sheep 6d. For shoeing the mill-horse, by covenant, for the year 20d. For reaping the " whole of the corn in autumn 29s. Given to three " of the servants, towards their gloves in autumn 3d., " and to Brother Reginald 2d." Nine Sisters receive their farthing each per day this year, three of them new names, Elena Doude, Emma de Magestone, (perhaps the Emma named in the preceding roll) and Matilidis de Lotegarschal. Another Sister, Alice Belamy, received her "pittance" for but 131 days.—"Expended upon the Master when he came at Lent, and stayed over Ash Wednesday 25s., under his seal."—"Wages of a boy (garcio) who took the place of cook and of servant to Robert the Priest, for the year 2s. Wages of a Clerk, serving the Chapel this year 5s." Shoes and clothes are rather largely bought for Brother Reginald. Brother Roger, whose post was at the manor of Werror, in the Isle of Wight, has 2 pairs of leggings and 2 pairs of shoes. Robert de Gissich, the newly admitted brother, has a new pair of shoes; and 2 pairs, costing 10 pence, are bought for Emma, kinswoman of the Master. 38 ells of russet were bought for the Brothers and Sisters, at 42s. 2d.; and Galun, one of the three Paupers, had 2 pairs of shoes at 12d., for taking the place of gatekeeper throughout the year, and of reaper in autumn. Turfs are bought at 9d. the thousand. "For putting in order the kitchen-garden (herbarium) in the court-yard 3d." Expenses of 3 men cutting down 6 logs of timber in the park of Boseham, the gift of the Earl Marshal, and stripping them for splitting, 3 weeks, with their expenses, going and returning 15s. 6d. Given to the Wodewarde, for the 'crops' of the said trees, which belonged to him, as his fee 2s. Taking the said trees to the water 3s. Hiring of 5 boats to carry the said timber to Hamptone 26s. The park of Boseham was about 4 miles from Chichester.—"Expenses of Brother Reginald, with 2 carters and 4 horses, carrying a tun of wine to Salisbury, about the Feast of St. Nicholas, against Advent, 2s. 6d. Cartage of 3 tuns of wine, taken to Gissich, at the same time 12d." Expenses of Brother Reginald, in following the carts taking the said wine there 5d. Expenses of the carts of the Abbot of King's Beaulieu, taking 2 tuns of wine to Bluntesdon, in Whitsun Week, going and returning, with the expenses of one man following the said carts, 3s. 10½d. Boat-hire of Brother Reginald, going to Beaulieu, to get the said carts, 6d. Expenses of Brother Reginald, seeking Master John [de Kyrkeby] in Dorset, at Abbodesbure, (Abbotsbury) as to the Archbishop's Visitation 12d. For shoeing the horses of Richard de la Chambre, serjeant of our Lord the King, who came before Christmas with a protection from the King, as to the Archbishop's Visitation, 4d. Expenses of Brother Reginald, with 2 carts, fetching 2 tuns of cider from Gissich 8d. For mutton and veal, bought and sent to the Master, on Monday before Lent 9½d. For wolkes (whelks) sent to the Master at Winchester, for the Feast of St. Gregory 1½d. For 4 mullets baked in paste and sent to him there, for the Feast of St. Mark, 2s. 4d. For 12 mullets sent to Bluntesdon, for Brother William Fraunceys, who was over the workmen in the chamber there 6s. 5½d. For 3 mullets sent to Heckeles for the Master, when dining there on the morrow of Hokeday 3s. For one quarter of bran for the palfrey of Sir Bay [sic], when staying here, 20d. Expenses of Brother Reginald and 2 men fetching 100 sheep, given to the House by Brother Robert de Gissich, on his entry; going to Gissich and returning 4½d. One and a half quarters of beans, and 29 quarters of pease, were distributed to the poor this year. 2 bushels of pease were mixed with barley, to make bread for the Master's palfrey; 2 bushels of barley also were given to the palfrey of "Sir Bay," during his stay, the palfrey's shoeing costing 12 pence. The same palfrey had also 3½ quarters of oats, "Sir Bay staying in the House, while the King was at Winchester;" the King's (Edward I.) stay there was from the early part of March to about the 8th of May 1306.—"Delivered to Gilbert, the Master's Seneschal, 8 quarters of oats by tally, for provender of his horses at Winchester," 12 quarters of inferior (cursale) malt, made from barley and dragnet, and 18 quarters of oat malt, were used this year; "and less than usual, because there was more of the best (capitale) malt used, and there was such great plenty of cider."—"41 mutons were received from Brother Robert de Gessich, before shearing; 40 ewes, after lambing, and before shearing; and 19 hogsters, before shearing, all at his entrance." 6 tuns of cider remained of the old stock; 2 tuns were received from John, the Reeve at Gissich; 3 tuns of cider and 7 quarters of apples were received from Heckeles; and 9 bushels of apples from the Island (of Wight).

40 gallons of meed were received from Brother Robert at Heckeles, who also sent 27 pounds of wax.

The next Roll is the Account of the same Robert de Hanyudone, Priest, for the year ending at Michaelmas in the first year of the reign of Edward II. (A.D. 1307.)

Extracts.—For the cellar near the gate of Nywyntone, this year, nothing was received, "because the oxen, at times, and the ewes, inhabited it during the winter." A sum of 42s. 6d. was received for 42½ "balangers," of hemp. Also,—Received 15d. for one surcote that belonged to Juliana of the Island, deceased, and which was sold. Also 13d. received for 2 hoods that belonged to her." The death of this Sister will be found again alluded to.

Under the head of Carts, 3d. is paid for 3 stone of burle (hocks, or thrums) bought for filling the saddles and collars. For the collars, also, 6 yards of "cloth of Ireland" (perhaps druggert, from Drogheda) were bought, for 19 pence. An ox, at Heckeles, that helped to carry turf, was shod, at a charge of 3 pence. A lock, for the middle door of the outer hall, cost 3 pence. The lock of the "inner door" of the bakehouse cost, for mending, 1 penny; and a "pendule lock," hanging lock (or padlock) for it, in addition, cost 1½d. The room, in the courtyard, "near the gaol,"—the town gaol, probably,—was repaired, "by the piece," at a cost of 8s. 1½d. "For one man, hired to make cord out of our own hemp 8d. For one ell of canvas, bought to make sacks thereof, for carrying spices (groceries) to Salisbury 3½d. For one tun cask, bought for making a gate from it at the Waldych 7d. For binding the mustard-mill with one hoop 1d."—the items here for binding casks, barrels, and cures, or tubs, are almost numberless.—"For sharpening the cook's knife 1d. For a new hedge round the garden, and for turfing the kitchen-garden (herbario turbando) 2s. 6d. For hooping a small new costrelle (a wooden bucket, probably) 3d. For mustard-seed 3d. For boatage of 4 quarters of oats at Ychene (Itchen) 1d. For 2 cart-loads of hay, bought at Manesbrigge 5s. For washing and shearing 83 sheep this year, 5d., and no more, because 8 were shorn at Heckeles. For one bukette bought, for milking the sheep 2½d. For washing and shearing 138 lambs, 8d. For hoeing all the corn this year 4s. 8d., for the multitude of thistles and bad weeds growing. For mowing the meadows of Padevelle, Boelond, and Gorsmor, 4s. 9d. Tossing, gathering, and stacking, the hay, besides the work of the servants 5d. For mowing the meadow of Tounhulle 9d.; for tossing the hay, nothing, as it was done by the servants at Heckeles. Paid 8 Sisters their pittance, dwelling in the Hospital throughout the year, namely, Joan of the Island, Joan of Portesmuth, Matilidis de la Barre, Elena Doude, Joan Fleming, Emma de Magestone, Isabel Whythen, and Alice Belamy, 60s. 10d., at one farthing each per day. Paid Juliana of the Island for 19 days, and then she died. Paid 2 Paupers in the Hospital, Galun and Alice, 7s. 7½d., at one farthing for every 2 days. Paid Adam Dodyng for 44 days, 5½d., and then he died. Wages of a barber, shaving all the household, for one year 8d. Clothes and shoes are bought largely for Brother Reginald,—the busiest man of the House; and some articles for Brother Robert at Heckeles, and Brother Roger in the Island. Emma, the Master's kinswoman, has 3 pairs of shoes, at 16d. Then follow,—"Expenses of the obsequies of Juliana of the Island;—for one pound of candles of cotton, 2d.; for oblations 1d.; for making the grave (or pit, 'putei') 1d.; for a chest (wooden chest, or coffin) bought, 10d.; for 4 bearers (or upholders) carrying the body to the church, 2d.; to the bedemanne 3d." For the burial of Adam Dodyng, a Pauper, the expenses were similar, save that no chest for the body was bought, and the services of the Bedeman (whose office it was to bid the prayers of the living for the deceased) were dispensed with.

We next have a full bill of particulars for building a house of some substantiality, in the town; the items are as follow, the language being abbreviated as much as possible.—"Wages of one carpenter, doing the carpentry in the house which was built anew on the tenement where Joan Fleming formerly dwelt 63s. 4d. For covering the said house, in gross, by the piece, 19s. 8d. For 15,000 sclettes, for covering the house 23s. 7d. For 2,600 sclettes 3s. 5½d. For 17 quarters 6 bushels of lime bought for the house, and for other necessary things in the courtyard, and for stone 8s. 4½d. For 2,400 laths 9s., 1d. For 16,000 of lathnagyl (lathnails) 11s. 4d. For 500 of lathnagyl 5d. For setting 3 wooden gutters, bought, upon the "house 5s., with pitch for the gutters 1½d. For 10 tun casks, bought for making the front of the house, and for boarding the said gutters, and for making evesbord 5s. 10d. For 2 more tun casks 16d. For 14 axles and hinges, with bolts, for the same, 4s. 3d. For 1,300 settygnayl and fornayl (floor-nails) 3s. 6d. For 400 settygnayl and as many fornayl 2s. 6d. (more still of each kind were bought).—For sawing the boards 11s. 1d. For twigs for the plaster wall of the house 18d. Wages of a man, plastering the house, by the piece 6s. 10d. Wages of a man, cleansing the spot and the foundation of the house 8d. To a man, for helping to lift the timber 2 days, 4d. For one man daubing (or white-washing) the walls 8d. For 5 locks and keys 18d. For a louver, made in the roof 8d. For the wages of a carpenter doing the carpentry for the wardrobe (latrine) 4s. 6d. For making the pit for the same 10d. To a roofer, roofing the same, by the piece 18d. For 44 crests [for the coping or ridges of the roof] and 2 crests with crosses 3s. For twigs for the plaster wall of the wardrobe 2d. For carrying away the gravel from the pit, and for plastering the wall 16d. For one board for the window in front of the house, towards the street 5d. For 3 boards for the door 7d. For 2 axles and 2 hinges for the door of the partition within the house 8½d. For 4 axles and 2 hinges made of our own iron, for the doors of the kitchen and the wardrobe 4d. For 250 small nails for the lattice 3½d. For 2 axles and 2 hinges for hanging a hatch in the passage between the hall and the kitchen.—The word "lahic," above, is rendered "lattice;" but if such is the meaning, it must have been wholly of wooden trellis; as neither glass nor metal for the purpose is mentioned.

Expenses of Brother Reginald, carrying one tun of wine to Bluntesdon, with a cart from Beaulieu 2s.; boat-hire of William de Grundewell, going to Beaulieu 3d.; boat-hire of Brother Reginald to Beaulieu 1d.; expenses of Robert the Priest seeking the rent at Portesmouth, with boat-hire at Hamel and Goseport 6½d.; boat-hire of Robert the Priest and John Flemyng to the Island, to hold a Court, and back again 6d.; expenses of 2 men with 5 horses, fetching a tun of cider from Gussych, together with other horses hired by the way, for the heaviness (of the road) 18d. For cheminage (toll) beyond the New Forest 4d. Expenses of Brother Reginald and 5 other men, with 2 carts, going to Gussych, for one tun of cider and 4 quarters of pease 19d. For cheminage of 2 carts, fetching timber at Porteswod, and furze and heath from Heckeles to Hamptone 2s. Paid at the Court of Sir Hugh de Chikenhulle, as an amercement upon 6 steers 2s. Expenses of Brother Reginald and Brother Robert, going to Schefone (Shaftesbury) to buy lambs 12d. Paid for hair-cutting (tonsura) of the household, for the 3 last years, not before allowed, 5s. 4d. Expenses of a boy (garconis) of Richard de Actone going to Carlisle to the Master, at the Gule (beginning) of August, for divers matters touching him, because his master was detained by ill health 2s. 8d. Paid the Precentor of St. Mary's for the board of the Master's nephew for one year and 3 quarters, 46s. 8d. For repair of houses at Eukesbure, the rents of which the Master receives 10s. 2½d. Expenses of Robert the Priest and William the Clerk going to Seleseye after Christmas, to sell the corn, with the expenses of the said William going to Battle, and returning, to pay the tithe and get an acquittance 10s.

This side of the Roll (which is of great length) ends with the following, in Latin:—"Be it remembered that the aforesaid Robert made oath, before the auditor of his account, upon the Holy Gospels of God, to stand to the common law, according to Statute, on his account, and to the ordinance of his Master and his counsel, in all things touching the state of his account, and the debt which he is found owing to the Master upon the said account, whosoever by the Master or his counsel he shall be admonished or required thereto."—No such cutry as this has before occurred.

On the reverse of the Roll are the "Issues of the Granges." One quarter of wheat is given to Oliver the Carpenter, "by covenant;" and 2 bushels to the Bailiffs of the vill. Under "Barley" mention is made of 3 bushels of "brotoirne." Beans were planted at Boclande, and one acre at Estrete. Of vetches, 2 bushels were used as provender for 4 horses of Beauliw (Abbey of Beaulieu), carrying one tun of wine from Hamptone to Bluntesdone; and one bushel was the provender for the horse of Brother Reginald, who followed the cart.

One quarter 3 bushels of barley and double the quantity of oats were mixed, to make "draget," partly used as seed, and partly as malt. Allusion is made to "the murrain, and the weakness of the oxen this year." 22 quarters of barley were dealt out to the various servants, and a woman who "milked the ewes, and helped to make the cheese," for 14 weeks, had 7 bushels. The muttons, hogsters, ewes, and lambs, are very numerous; but of Brother Robert of Gissich, who had so recently given them to the House, no mention seems to be made. 2 muttons, 2 ewes, and 2 lambs, are mentioned as having been left by one Theobald, after his decease. As to the cheeses, "5 were given by Sir Robert," the Priest, to the Mayor and Bailiffs of the vill; and one to the dairy-maid, because it was gnawed by the cats (per catos). 30 cheeses in store weighed half a wey. Of cider the consumption was very great:—2 tuns remained in store; 2 tuns received from John the Reeve of Gyssych; 7½ from the produce of the garden, with 2 quarters 3 bushels of apples from Heckeles, and 2 quarters 7 bushels from the Island; also, 2½ tuns of cider, the produce of a garden taken on lease; one tun bought. Consumed in the house 8 tuns; sold 2 tuns; 6 tuns remaining. 40 gallons of meed, also, were received from Heckeles. 50 pounds of wax were sent by Brother Robert from Heckeles, and 9 pounds by Brother Roger from the Island; 3 pounds were sent "for the Master's Chapel at Bluntesdon." 42 "balangers" of hemp were the produce of the "curtilage," probably adjoining the Hospital.

The next in date belongs to the third year of the reign of Edward II. The title of it, translated from the Latin, is as follows:—

Account of God's House at Suthampton, from the Feast of St. Michael in the 2nd year of King Edward [A.D. 1309] to the Feast of St. Michael in the third year of King Edward then next ensuing.

Extracts.—The "Great Cellar" without the Gate is rented for 13s. 4d.; and the "Little Cellar without the Gate" for 5s. 12 pence was the payment for the hire of the "Little Cellar within the Gate," for 3 weeks. Three pence was also received for 3 sacks of wool "standing in the church"—stant' in ecclia.

The shoeing of "the horse assigned for Robert the Priest and Brother Reginald" from the Feast of St. Michael to the Nativity, cost 88 pence. Under the head of "Costs of the houses" is the following:—"For one roofer covering and pointing [pingante] the Hospital and the other houses [or rooms, domos] of the courtyard that were uncovered by the wind, he being 10 weeks at the Master's board 5s." Under "Small expenses" a sieve "bought for cleansing the pease in the bakchouse, given as alms" costs 3 farthings. A man who pulled up thorns at Padewelle, for closing the hedges therewith, received 14 pence "by the piece." For purchase of one garden in Nywentone, that was "bought of the relict of Richard le Grant 8s. Under "Necessary expenses,"—"For making niue spoons, of our own silver, 13½d."; this, however, is run through with the pen. Many charges are made for boat-hire [batillagium] between Hamptone and the Isle of Wight; among them, the passage of Robert the Priest and John de Kirkeby the younger, but the item is run through with the pen and reintroduced elsewhere. Under "Costs of sheep and dairy," ruddle [rodel] "for marking the sheep," costs 3 pence. Heath bought for strengthening [or, as it is called in Somersetshire, "backing"] the earth, towards the water, costs 2 pence. The shoeing of the mill-horse costs 2s. for the year. "All kinds of corn," required hoeing this year, at a cost of 8s. 5½d., "by reason of the multitude of thistles growing there." The mowing of the meadows of Boklonde, Padewelle, and Gosemor, cost 11d., 32d., and 3d. respectively.

Among the items under the head of "Foreign Expenses" are the following:—"For one messenger carrying a letter of the Lord Bishop of Chichester [John Langton] to William Nicholas of Celsie, to exact a debt due to the Master from him 6d." The Bishop was also Lord Chancellor.—"For shoeing the horse of the Master, when he came from London with William de Grundwelle, carrying vestments and other things 4½d. For carriage of one tun of wine to Gissyeh, with two new barres [or for steadying the cask] bought and put in their places 2d. For carriage of 2 tuns of wine, sent to Sarum 6d. For cartage of one tun of wine, sent to Bluntesdone, with two new bars bought and put in their places 2s. 4d. For carriage of one tun of wine, sent to Gillygham [near Shaftesbury in Dorset], with putting the bars, and the cartage 12d. For cartage of one pipe of wine sent to Chausyngbure

"[now Cheshenbury, near Ludgershall in Wilts] 2*d*.
"For one messenger carrying a letter of the Dean and "Chapter of Cycestre to Gissich 2*d*. For one messenger "carrying the said letter to the Master at Combe 12*d*.
"For one messenger carrying a letter of the Dean of "Cycestre to Blontesdone, as to the tithe of the
"prebend of Celsye 4*d*."

On the reverse of the roll are entered, as usual, the "Issues of the Granges." Under "Oats" the following items deserve notice:—"For provender of the horses
"of the Lady Margaret, daughter of the lord the King,
"going towards the Island, for one night, 6½ bushels."
This was Margaret, daughter of the late King, Edward I.
She was born in 1271, and married, in 1290, to John II., Duke of Brabant, who died in 1312. Among the "Liveries," 4 bushels of barley are entered as being "delivered to a woman who went to the fold in the "summer." Of their muttons, ewes, hogsters, and lambs, a large proportion had been carried off by murrain. Ten geese, also, died "suddenly" of murrain.
Of mear 30 gallons were sent by Brother Roger from Hekele, who also sent 36 pounds of wax, part of which was consumed in the Chapel.

The next roll that now exists, belongs to Michaelmas 6 Edward II. (A.D. 1312). Robert de Hanyngdone, the Priest, is no longer the Steward, or manager, of the household, and, as he is not even mentioned, he had probably died before this date.

The accounts are not kept with the same minuteness now as before, the names of the Sisters and Paupers, with the allowances, no longer appearing. The Account is jointly that of John de Halkelston, Priest, and Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, "Serjeants of the House," the latter evidently being now promoted to a higher office.

Extracts.—Eightpence is the sum received for one road of land in Lobristrete, in Suthampton; and 10*s*.
"for the fishery in the Were, in the sea near Dupedene.
"20 pence received for 21 gallons of ale sold at the "entrance of Brother John de Kerchil. Also, 12*s*. 6*d*.
"received for bark of trees cut down at Hekele, for "building a new house, by the house of Cokepol in "Hamptone." Brother John de Kerchil also pays 8 pence, part of 12*l*., "the rest of which sum he paid to "the house in sheep, as seen on the other side of the "roll."

A carpenter receives 4*s*. 8*d*. and a bushel of wheat, for lengthening the cowhouse at Padewell, for keeping calves there. "For oblations for the 7 servants on the "days of Our Lord's Nativity, and of Easter 7*d*. To a "man making the quay facing the sea, which had "fallen through tempest in the winter, 2 days, with "victuals from the Master 3*d*. For a chain bought for "tying a dog to the kitchen door, to drive away thieves
"1*d*. Plaster of Paris bought for the house of Cokepol
"12*s*. 6½*d*. For covering a haystack, at Padewelle, "2½*d*., with victuals from the Master. For one ell of "linen cloth, bought for wrapping the cheeses in 3½*d*.
"For earthen pots and platters 1½*d*. To 2 men sawing "boards for the wheel of the water-mill, a day and a "half, with victuals from the Master 1½*d*. For hoeing
"all the corn this year with hands and hoes, by reason "of the multitude of the bad weed called "mathege"
"7*s*. 9*d*. Gloves bought for 2 carters and one plough"man, stacking 3*d*. For white-tawing the skin of a "dog, to make 2 pairs of gloves for Brother Reginald "and Brother John, in autumn 2*d*." The swineherd had nothing for wages this year, because he offended (deliquit). Matillidis of the Island, the dairy-maid, was sent for to Hekele; so another woman had to take her place in the dairy and at reaping, in autumn, receiving 2*s*.—

"Expenses of William de Grundewelle, Robert de "Wamberge, Brother Reginald, William Powel, the
"Baillif of Suthampton, and others, for 2 days at "Winchester, on a plea of Novel Disseisin, which
"Henry de Lym moved against the Master, as to a rent
"of 6 shillings which he sold, from the tenement for"merly of Peter de Ruwes 8*s*. 8½*d*. Given to Robert "de Thorncumbe, Countor (or Pleader,—Narratori) as "a courtesy, for his aid in Court at Hamptone, on "divers matters of the Master, by view of Laurence de "Lechelade 2*s*. Given to the Common Clerk of the "vill, in the same manner 12*d*. For 4 lampreys sent to "the Master at Gissiche 10*s*. 4*d*. For 3 mullets sent to "him at Gissiche 10½*d*. For the hooping and carriage of "one tun of wine, sent to Gissiche before the feast of "All Hallows 4*d*. Expenses of the carter of the Abbot
"of Netley and the carter of the House, following the "cart, taking the said wine 14*d*. For the carriage and "hooping of one tun of wine, sent afterwards to Gil"lingham 4*d*."—Gillingham is about 4 miles distant from Shaftesbury.—"Expenses of Brother Reginald,

"returning by road from Gissich, with the expenses of
"2 men and 2 horses of the Master, who came to "Suthampton to look for fish 1½*d*. For 2 panniers "for taking the said fish to Gissich 2½*d*. Expenses of "Brother Reginald, going to Salisbury and returning,
"for the Master's cloth that was bought at the Fair at "Winchester, and taken there 4*d*. Expenses of Brother
"Reginald going to Salisbury and returning, for a "feather-bed for the Master's use, that had been taken
"there 2*d*."

The "Issues of the Granges," as before, are on the obverse of the roll. Nigel atte Wylderne, receives 2 bushels of wheat, "for the help he gave in Court, at "Hampton." "Brother Robert," in place of Brother Roger, is now the manager of the Manor of Werrore, in the Isle of Wight, and Roger has taken his place at Hekele. Of pease, there were consumed 7 bushels for seed at Padewelle; 9 quarters 7 bushels were distributed in common to the poor; one bushel was used in the House, for potage; "and there is none remaining in the "granary; but in one stack in the bartone there are,
"by estimate, 12 quarters of pease." 122 muttons are entered, as having been received on the entry of Brother John de Gissich, before shearing; of these and 82 others
8 died of murrain, before shearing, and 7 after shearing.
60 ewes were received at the entry of Brother John de Kerchil, "before lambing and shearing"; "of these and 88 others, 12 died of murrain; of hogsters, or 2 year old sheep, 24 were received on the entry of John de Kerchil; 63 remained "of the lambs of last year," and 5 died of murrain. A fold is formed, this year, for the first time, at Hekele. The garden this year produces no cider.
2 quarters of salt are used for salting down, "for the larder," 2 oxen, 3 cows, 26 muttons, 7 ewes, and 18 pigs.

The next roll that has survived, is the Account of Sir William Pope (Priest) and Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, Serjeants of the House, for Michaelmas, 9 Edward II. (A.D. 1315).

Extracts.—Large quantities of wool are mentioned as having been sold; coarse wool, black, lambs', and broken. Brother Robert in the Isle of Wight sends from it 2*s*. 8*d*., for "divers small things sold, to wit, potherbs,
"leeks, and other things from the garden."

An ox for the plough costs 13*s*. 6½*d*. one mutton and one ewe 2*s*. 2*d*. A chamber is built in the courtyard of the Hospital for William de Layntone, 2 boards of poplar at 4*d*. being used for making the door. A lock and key, at 6*d*., are bought "for the door of the Priest's chamber, within (infra) the "hall." "Allowed for the oblation of
"6 servants and 2 millers at our Lord's Nativity and "Easter 8*d*. Land at Rokkesdone and at Langelond is mentioned, as also, land in the Garstone, taken on lease.
"For one pair of shoes bought for the dairy-maid this "year 6*d*., because she had no wages." But a woman brought to help her in the dairy and in milking the ewes, during summer and autumn, was paid by the piece (ad tasciam) 2*s*. Winnowing the wheat, barley, dragnet, and oats, cost nothing this year, "because it "was done by the Sisters of the House." "Expenses "of John the Clerk of the House, going to London and "returning, for the trial between the Master and the "Abbot of Quarner", with his expenses in going "to Wells, in Somerset, at the same time, to have a "conversation with William de Grundewelle, on the "said plea 20*d*. Expenses of Brother Reginald, going "to Gissich at our Lord's Nativity, to take a boar
"thither 2*d*. For 4 gallons of new wine (musty) bought "and sent to the Master in Dorset 19*d*. For half a "hundred white herrings, and half a hundred red,
"sent there to the Master 18*d*. Contribution made to "the making of a new bridge beyond the street on the "east side of the courtyard of God's House, towards "Nywyntone 6*s*. 8*d*." Divers persons owing rents are pardoned, "because they are poor, and are beggars." Three of these, mentioned by name, were tenants of "selds" or warehouses open at the sides; one of them situate in French Street.

On the reverse are the "Issues of the Granges."—
"Given to the blacksmith for repairing the ploughs "through the year, as a courtesy, one bushel of wheat
"Delivered to John Flemyng, as a gift of the Steward,
"for attending to the affairs of the House, half a "quarter of wheat. Given to William Powel, Town
"Clerk of Suthampton, for his assistance in divers
"business of the House, one bushel of wheat.
"Given to the smith, for grinding and sharpening
"the bills for the year, one bushel of barley." As to the cheeses (of cow-milk and ewe-milk) produced in the dairy,—"Consumed in the House
"this year, from the multitude of workmen receiving
"victuals from the Master, while engaged upon the re-

" building and repair of houses in the town, 43. Given to " John de London, for divers courtesies shown to the " House, 2 cheeses. Given to the 2 Bailiffs of the vill of " Suthampton, for divers aids given us in Court this " year, 2 cheeses." Of the bacon hogs, 19½ were " consumed in the House, from the number of workmen." Of the year's wax, 14 pounds were consumed in the Chapel, and 17 pounds were sent to the Master, at Gissich.

The next Roll that has survived, is the Computus of Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, acting alone, as " Serjeant," or " servant," for God's House, for Michaelmas, 12 Edward II. (A.D. 1318).

Extracts.—There is a Brother John, probably John de Gissiche, acting for the House at Hekkele this year, and Brother Robert is still the Reeve in the Island (of Wight). Some notices occur of a great feast given by the Master, (Gilbert de Wygetone, on his installation) this year, but they mostly refer, to other " parcels," or particulars, which have not survived: thus, under " Issues of the Manors," occurs the item—" Received " 2s. 11d. for 5 salt fish and 100 herrings sold for the " Master's banquet this year." The year's account, with minute particulars, of carts and harness, is of unusual length. Under " Costs of the House," or Hospital buildings, mention is made of " 2 keys for the locks of " the doers of the Master's chamber and the Priests' " chamber, 2½d. 2 new locks, with keys, for the " postern gates of the two gardens. A lock and key " for the door of the inner chamber at Padewell 3d. " Cords for the louver of the Master's new chamber, " 2d. To one carpenter, making a new door to the " greater larder, and a new door between the ale-cellar " and the larder, for the Master's feast, and doing other " necessary things for the feast, for 4 days, with victuals " from the Master 4d. For hay bought for store in the " winter, because the greater part of the hay was consumed at the Master's feast this year 10s. 9½d. For one " boatload of stone, for repairing the quoy without the " gate 2s. 6d. For winnowing all the corn this year, " nothing; because it was done by the labour of the " handmaid (or bondwoman, ancille) of the house. For " a coffer bought for the Master, with lock and key, " 10s." All the following items are referred to a " Roll " of Expenses," which has not survived; though a similar one, of the next reign, will be noticed in the sequel:—" Expenses of the House in money for the pittances of " the Sisters and the Paupers; necessary expenses for " guests, purchase of spices, cost of the Chapel, purchase of fuel, wages of the Priests and servants of the " house, clothing, shoes for the Brethren, as set forth in the Roll of Expenses thereof, 16li. 5s. 7½d." The " Foreign Expenses " are numerous; among them,— " as a courtesy given to John de Kyrkeby, of Winchester, Countor (or Pleader), coming from Winchester, " on a message from Brother Reginald, to expedite divers " business, touching the House and the Master, in the " Court of Tounhulle, while John le Fleming was in " Dorset 40d. Boat-hire for one cart going over the " water to Huthe (now Hythe) and returning, to carry " timber to Huthe, given to the Master in Gatewode " 8d."

The next passage has a pen run through it:—" Given to the Coroner of Suthampton, to get mitigation as " to the death by misadventure of a certain stranger " who was killed upon the Master's fee at Hekkele " 6s. 8d., by view of John le Fleming; to the clerk of " the Coroner 2s.; to his groom, (garcioni) 2d. Paid " to John le Fleming for his expenses and those of Sir " John de Grenham, Chaplain, going to Dyvyses, and " from thence to Marleberge, to hold conference with " the Master, immediately after the Feast of St. " Michael, with their expenses in returning, and those " of 2 grooms, driving 8 oxen, sent from Marleberge by " the Master, 3s. 1½d. Paid the same John le Fleming " for doing execution in the County of Suthampton " in a certain plea moved against the Master by Robert " de Hebon and William Wodeloke, as set forth in the " parcels written by the hand of the said John 42s. ¾d. " To a messenger seeking the Master for the said trial " twice, namely, once at London, Maydenhute, Eading, " and Berkhamstede, and again at London and elsewhere, the second time 4s. 6d. To a messenger " carrying a letter from the Master to John de Houdene, at Gissich 1d. For divers necessities bought " for William, the Master's kinsman, after his arrival " this year, as set forth in the particulars, 8s. 7½d. " Delivered for buying and providing divers things, for " the Master's feast this year 21li." This last item has a pen run through it, and above is written—" Nondum " allocatur,"—not yet allowed.

On the reverse of the Roll are the " Issues of the " Granges," as before. Barley is sown at Layham, Wadich, Boklonde, and the (Le) Garstone. As much as 13 quarters of beans is distributed to the poor this year; and beans are used for maintaining the ailing swine in the winter; pease are also given to the swine and sucking-pigs in the winter. 6 quarters 7 bushels of oats were consumed at, and by reason of, the Master's feast. Of tallow there is expended " for making candles, and " for greasing the carts, this year, by reason of the great " driness in summer and autumn, 40 pounds." 19 ewes out of 127, were lost by murrain. Of hogs' lard, 16 pounds were made into " white lard," for the use of the House, 12 pounds were used for greasing the shoes of the Brothers and Sisters, and 9 for ointment for the scab in sheep. Of 17 hives of bees, 7 were lost by murrain in winter, 3 by murrain in summer.

As already mentioned, in this year Gilbert de Wygeton was appointed Warden.

The next Account is the Computus of the same Reginald de Cotesdone, Serjeant, or servant, of God's House, for the year ending at Michaelmas, 13 Edward II. (A.D. 1319). It has been preserved in duplicate, save that one copy has not all the items quite complete.

Extracts.—This year, rent is in default for 2 selds, newly built, in French Street, not yet let; and for a cellar and vacant piece of ground recovered of the Abbot of Quarre [Quorre]. " For the doctoring " (marshalsia) of a sick horse, in the feet, by a certain " tincture, divers things being bought for it, 20d. For " doctoring a sick horse by a drench (infundationem) " 2s. 2d. To a man hired to doctor the animals with " vinegar, and other things bought for the purpose 12d. " Paid for the pannage of 24 swine this year in the " park of Melchette 4s. Expenses of 2 lads watching " them there 3 weeks this year, besides the livery [in " food] to one of them who was the swineherd 15d. " For one strainer (culigno) for making the cheese 3d. " For winnowing all the corn this year, nothing; " because it was done by the Sisters in the winter, and " by one dairymaid in the summer. Paid divers men " and women to help in clearing the hay this year, " because the season was rainy 13d. Paid a man for " cutting the halmesbrave for store, by reason of the " poorness of the hay this year, 12 days, by the piece, " 4s. For 2 pairs of gloves for Brothers Reginald and " Roger [for cutting the corn] 4d. To 4 servants, for " their gloves in autumn, 5d. Given as wages this " year to one swineherd, because he followed the cart " all summer, seeking brushwood and heath for fuel, " and worked in the autumn, the same as another " servant 2s. 6d. Wages of a boy, fed upon the alms of " the house, keeping the pigs while the swineherd did " the works aforesaid 8d. Wages of a boy, keeping the " sheep in summer and autumn, while the shepherd " was doing other summer and autumn work 12d. " Wages of one dairymaid, who received her board in " the winter, and had her livery [of food] in summer " and autumn 3s. On the passage of Philip de Chesham " and John le Fleming, going to Deaulieu 4d. For " shoeing the horse of the same Philip 4d. For mending his saddle 5d. For fish bought for the same Philip " and John, going to Gissich, on Friday after Our " Lord's Ascension, to hold a Court there 16d. For 2 " gallons of wine, given to Master Richard de Clare, on " view of John le Fleming 12d. Expenses of Sir William Pope and one groom, with one horse, going to " Winchester, to have a conference with the Sheriff of " Suthampthonschire, on respiting the exaction of " 4li. 23½d., exacted on a certain tallage in the time of " Sir John Morice, and 60s. the taxation of one twelfth; " with shoeing of the horse, 13d. Delivered to Isabel " de Bassyngrom, by precept of the Master 25s., by " tally. Paid John le Fleming for his fur ("forura," " for his attorney's gown) this year 2s. 6d. Paid William de Lavynstone for his yearly corrody, formerly " granted him by Sir Henry de Bluntesdone, the Prior " and Warden, by assent of the Brethren and Sisters " of the house, for release of his title, for term of his " life 73s. 4d. Expenses of Philip de Chesham, coming " from London to Suthampton, to arrange the business of the House there, and returning to London, on " the trial between the Warden of the House and William Wodeloke, in Easter Term 6s. 8d." Balance in " the hands of Brother Reginald, at the close of the account 28li. 17s. 4½d.; " of which there is allowed " him 20li. 5s. 1½d., which he expended by order of the " Warden, in the month of January in the 11th year, at " Suthampton, as the same Warden acknowledges " upon the account." This entry bears reference to the great feast given in that year, the expenses of which, though mentioned in the last account, remained unsettled. We have here the first mention, in these rolls, of the name of a "Warden and Prior" of the House, in the person of Henry de Bluntesdone. The purchase, in a preceding year, of a house at Bluntesdon, in Wilts, to which a Chapel was attached, has previously come under notice.

On the reverse of the Roll are the "Issues of the Granges," as before. Oats are entered as being given as "provender for the horses of the Sheriff of Suthampton at divers times this year; for the horses of the Constable of the Island (of Wight) at divers times; and for the horses of guests, $3\frac{1}{2}$ quarters; provender for the horses of Master Richard de Clare, Escheator on this side Trent, who came and stayed 2 nights, one quarter, by precept of John le Fleming." The dairy-maid received, as her livery, for the 22 weeks she was not boarded at the table of the house, one bushel every fortnight of a mixture of 3 fourths barley and one fourth pease. Hogs' lard, 10 pounds in weight, was used for greasing the shoes of the Priests, Brothers, and Sisters, this year. One hive of bees perished from murrain in winter; seven hives were "killed," in summer. Of the wax, one pound was expended "at the obsequies of two Sisters;" half a gallon was the amount of honey secured.

The next Account, is the Computus of the same Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, for the year ending at Michaelmas, 14 Edward II. (A.D. 1320). The account is in duplicate, but in one of the rolls the sums total are omitted.

Extracts.—One bacon hog is sold this year for 4 shillings; and 50 gallons of ale, for 4s. 2d., by estimate, those sums being charged to the Warden. 18 ducks are bought "for store," at 2s. 5d., the first mention made of that bird. A carpenter is hired, for 5 weeks and 2 days; receiving, with his victuals, 3s. 6d., to "make a new house for feeding the boar in, mending the angles on the Hospital, and shaping the timber for the mill."—"Paid for the pannage of 25 pigs in the Bokholte this year 4s. 2d. Expenses of Brother Reginald and Thomas the Clerk going to Gissiche, and returning, to view the land which Roger Elys inclosed from the common at Manytone 6d. For 6 empty hives, bought for bees, 11d. For 2 wheels bought for a wheelbarrow 4d. Paid divers men and women for tossing, collecting, and lifting, the hay of the meadows this year, by reason of the very great rain in the autumn, 2s. 9d. Wages of one who was swineherd in the winter, and driver afterwards, nothing, because he offended (deliquit). For making a fishpond at Padevely, by order of the Master, and scowering 3 ditches round the courtyard 36s. 2d. Delivered to John, the miller of the house, by view of Philip de Chesham, for a certain courtesy before promised him by the Master, for divers aids and good offices done by him to the Master, and to the House 6s. Expenses of a groom going to Henry de Welles, Seneschal of Sir Ingram Beneger, at Tonehulle, as to the beasts of the Master that had been distrained, for his not doing fealty to the said Sir Ingram at Welles, Lyngemtone, and Badeslee 3d. Expenses of Brother Reginald, going to Winchester and returning, to get the Sheriff's precept to the Bailiff of the Hundred of Manesbrigg, to deliver the said distress 6d. For divers necessities bought for William de Wygetone, a kinsman of the Master, and payment made for him this year, as set forth in the particulars 18s. 4d."

On the reverse of the roll are, as usual, the "Issues of the Granges.—Given to a workman, who made the Master's fishery at Padevelle, by covenant, 3 bushels of wheat. Given to a mason, who made the stone foundation of the old grange at Padevelle, by covenant, one bushel of wheat. Given as a refreshment to the boatman from Xchene to Hekelee, a gift of the Master, one bushel of rye. Given to 25 pigs in fattening them after pannage, to make their flesh substantial (carnibus spissandis) $\frac{1}{2}$ quarters of beans. For fattening one boar, 4 bushels of pease. Sent to Sir Henry Beaufice, Seneschal of our Lady the Queen, by precept of John le Fleming, 1 quarter of oats. To Master Richard de Clare, by order of the same, 1 quarter. For provender of the horses of Rande le Charer, who came with the King, with provender of the horses of Scolai the Lumbarde, who came with him, and stayed 3 days, with 6 horses, 2 quarters 1 bushel of oats. Provender of the horses of the said Scolai the Lumbarde and William Peverel, returning from the King to seek Robert le Ewer, and who stayed 3 nights 5s."—It is possible that the King may have been staying at Odiham, in Hants, at the time here alluded to; but no visit of his in Hampshire, during the time included in this Account, seems to be recorded. William de Wygetone, was probably a nephew of Gilbert de Wygetone, the new Warden.

Entered under the head of "Foreign receipts" there is—"42s. received from Brother Robert of the Island (of Wight) issues of the manors of Werrore and Cosseham; and 22s. 6d. received from Brother John de Kerchil, issues of the manor of Hekelee;"—this item is wanting in one of the rolls.

The next Account is the Computus of the same Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, "Serjeant of God's House," for the year ending at Michaelmas, 15 Edward II. (A.D. 1321). There are two copies of this roll.

Extracts.—"Of rent for the wear in the sea near Dupe-dene, there is nothing this year; for it was broken and destroyed by tempest in the winter. Received 18d. for one gammon of bacon, sold to the Master. For 5 salt fish, sold to the same 20d. For $2\frac{1}{2}$ stock fish sold to the same 5d. For 217 red herrings sold to the same 20d. For 12 pounds of candles of coburn, sold to the same 2s."—"The above were sales of stores to the Master, for his own use, the same being appraised at the prices for such commodities that were then current."—"For the doctoring of 4 cart horses, sick of a certain disease called the 'fursine,' in the summer of this year, with all the aromatics bought for the same 2s. 6d. For doctoring a horse that was infirm in the foot, by reason of a certain nail being in the foot, with aromatics that were bought, 7d. For a cart-horse, bought at Salisbury, at Saint Mary's Fair, in Lent 19s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. For another horse, bought there for the same purpose, 35s. 1d. Expenses of Brother Reginald and 2 grooms, for 2 days there, buying the said horses 2s. 4d. For repairing a stone wall on the side of the shepherd's house, near the Hospital, that had fallen down 12d. For 3 hinges bought for a window in the chamber between the hall and the sea, and for a window in the study, near the Master's chamber 3d. For 2 pairs of hinges and axles, for hanging a door with 2 leaves in the cellar beneath the Master's chamber 8d. To a man, for taking 85 moles in the arable land, meadows, and outlages, for 3 weeks, with victuals from the Master, 13d. For a small saw for divers necessary purposes 4d. For a hook for cutting down weeds and nettles in the garden, and other necessary purposes 7d. Paid 2 boys for driving one boar and two swine from Gissich to Suthampton 2d. Expenses of the Master, on his coming here this year at Christmas, and staying for 10 days, in the whole; that is, in money and in stores, appraised as stated above in the Receipts 109s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Also, for 3 iron shoes for the Master's palfrey, not entered in that account 3d. Paid John Halteclo, the Master's valet, for his expenses from Suthampton to London, and coming from Gissich, at the Feast of the Nativity of St. John, this year 2s. Expenses of Brother Reginald at Winchester, and then at Ticheburne, to have a conference with Sir John de Ticheburne, Sheriff of Suthamptonshire, by reason of a certain distress taken by the bailiff of Manesbrigg, to exact 4li. 23 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. demanded in the time of Sir John Morvey 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Given to the Clerk of the Escheator, when he came through Hekelee, that we might have some mitigation of the purpresture there 2s. To his groom 4d. Expenses of an Esquire of the King's Chamber to seek, Scolay the Lumbarde, coming to seek Robert Ewir, and staying for a week, 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Paid the Sheriff of Suthamptonshire for a certain amercement in which the Master was amerced in the same county, because he was not present to appear against the bailiff of Sir Yngelram Berengir in a plea of detainer of goods 12d. For divers necessities bought for William de Wygetone [the Master's kinsman] this year 4s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. For one pair of shoes for Thomas de Wygetone, staying at Suthampton, after the Master's departure."

On the reverse of the roll are the "Issues of the Granges," as before: the following are some extracts:—"Given to John le Barbur, Town Clerk of Suthampton, for divers good offices to the house in divers matters, by advice of John le Fleming, half a quarter of wheat." The crop of pease was "less than usual," because they were destroyed by the great inundation of water in the rainy weather of autumn, this year: "vetches there were none," for the above reason."—"For the provender of 4 horses of Master William de Maldone, who came before the Feast of St. Michael, and remained 2 nights, $2\frac{1}{2}$ bushels of oats." The livery of grain "to the keeper of the cows this year was nothing, because he was on the alms of the House,"— one of the Panpers, in fact. "Candles made for livery 12 pounds;"—to be delivered to the servants of the house; they seem to have been different from the candles of cotun, also mentioned." For the consumption of the "House on the day of our Lord's Nativity, one pig killed; for the consumption of the House on Easter Day, one pig. Killed, also, at the cost of the Master, when he came here at Christmas, one boar; the whole of which, at the Master's cost, was delivered at London, to the Master."—Of the geese there died in winter, of murrain, one maricola, a term that often occurs, but is nowhere explained; not improbably, a female gosling, corresponding in age to a pullet, is meant. The 18 ducks had been increased by a brood of 16, but 3 "died of murrain in the winter," or "were killed by foxes." Of 18 hives of bees, 6 were killed (for the honey), and 7 died of "murrain," in summer. 2 gallons of honey were produced, and half a gallon was used "for support of the bees in the winter." 3 tuns and one pipe of cider were made from the produce of the garden. Horses' hides (4 in number) were used for "making harness, clouting the "Brothers' shoes, and making gloves and muffs (muffs) "for closing the hedges."

The next roll is a Computus of the same Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, for the year ending at Michaelmas, 16 Edward II. (A.D. 1322).

Extracts.—Among the "Issues of the Manors," there were sold 12 gallons of mead, at 2½d. per gallon. Under "Costs of the House," occurs almost the earliest mention that is made of glass windows in these rolls.—"For wages of one glazier repairing (reficientis) one great glass window at the entrance of the Hospital (ingressum Hospitale), for a fortnight, receiving victuals at the Master's table, with the glass bought for the same, 3s." The "Old Grange" at Padewelle, and the "New Grange" there, are mentioned under this year.—"To one mason, removing one door of freestone (unum hostium de liberis petris) from the vestry of the Chapel, and replacing the same in the chamber of the Brothers in the Hospital, by the piece, 2s. For a key, bought for the door of the Priests' chamber, between the hall and the chamber 2d. For a key for the door of the cellar, in which the cider is kept 1d. For 2 axes with hinges, bought to hang the door towards the kitchen garden 4d. For mending a louver in the house of Cokopol, with a cord of hemp for it, 1d.;—an entry which shews that the louvers were made to open and close, probably for letting out the smoke.—"Paid for a new wheel-barrow 8d. For the hire of one man, in repairing the new cartilages this year, because they were laid waste through the construction of a new foss through the middle of them by the County of Suthampton, and for hedging the inclosures in the gardens, for 11½ weeks, he receiving victuals from the Master, 4s. 7d. For plants of leeks bought for restocking the cartilages, for the reason aforesaid, 7½d. For hire of a woman, to assist in putting in the leeks, for one day 1d. For doctoring the mill-horse for a certain distemper, called the 'farsine.' For hoeing all the wheat, of every kind, this year, with the hands, by reason of the multitude of thistles, 4s. 3d. For gloves bought for one reaper and 2 carters 3d. For gloves for two Brothers 4d. For the expenses of Brother Reginald and John the Miller, going to Christ Church [in Hants], to confer with the Master there, with their boat-hire, going and returning 13½d. Expenses of John the Miller, going to Marleberge, and returning, to carry the money lent for the use of the Master by Dame Joan de London, to the Master, when there 18d. Expenses of Brother Reginald going to London, while there, and returning, 5 days, about the Feast of St. Martin, to confer with the Master as to the foss newly raised by the County of Suthampton through the middle of the cartilages of the House this year 5s. 9d. To a man who took with the Master one scute (scutum) of braven at London 2d. For an iron chain, to tie up two young harriers belonging to the Master 5d. Paid for the expenses of 2 carts and 5 horses of William de Rameshulle, coming here and bringing the two sons of Geoffrey de Westone, and fetching one tun of wine at Suthampton, by order of John le Fleming 15d. To a messenger, carrying a letter of John le Fleming to the Master at London in haste, with one horse, to warn the Master of the death of Master Richard de Abyndone, in reference to the prebend of Wyerne, with the expenses of a groom who followed him in the night, as far as Farnham 3s. Expenses of John le Fleming, Brother Reginald, Thomas the Clerk, and others, at Salisbury, on the day of the Annunciation, to hear and inquire as to the divers rumours about the said prebend, 3s. 5½d. Expenses of John le Fleming from Suthampton to Salisbury, to seek Master Thomas de Astele, Advocate of the Arches in London, and then from Salisbury to Downton and Wyerne, to hold a conference with Sir Thomas de Cherletone, as to the said prebend, by order of the Master, 3s. Paid the same John for the fur of his robe, given by the Master this year 2s. 6d. For a horse hired for the same John from Guldeford to London, and then returning to Suthampton, because the horse that was first hired for him died at Guldeford, on the way to London 4s. 8d. For divers necessities bought for William de Wygetone, the Master's kinsman, this year, as set forth in the particulars 15s. 2d."

Issues of the Granges," are entered on the reverse of the roll.—"There died of murrain suddenly this year, about the Gule (beginning) of August, one horse; and one of murrain, the same way, before the Feast of St. Michael." Of oxen, one was killed, for the larder, and it is added,—"another was killed for consumption in the House, after the Feast of St. Michael, because it was nearly dead." Out of 17 lambs this year, 16 died of murrain. Only 10 pounds of lard were produced this year, "and so small a quantity, because the pigs were not fat." Of the 36 ducks and ducklings at the farms, 6 had been "killed by the foxes (per vulpes), in Lent.—"As to the issue of the 2 pigeon-houses, he does not charge himself, because the whole produce, which was without number, was consumed in the House." Out of 12 hives of bees, 7 perished, from murrain, in the summer: the produce of honey was nothing, and a gallon of that in store was used for feeding the bees in winter and in summer.

The next roll is the Computus of the same Brother Reginald de Cotesdone, for the year ending at Michaelmas, 18 Edward II. (A.D. 1324).

Extracts.—This year, for the first time, is mentioned a receipt "of 14 pence, from oblations coming to the Chapel on Easter Day." 12 benches (arculi) of elm, for the ploughs, are bought at so distant a place as Abyndone, at a price of 12 pence. "Paid for sawing (sarrantis) the teeth of one horse 3d. Paid for 7 bushels of beans bought of the Rector of Depedene 4s. 8d. One quarter of pense, bought of the Rector of Depedene 4s. For 35 new couples of oaken rafters, for making afresh the roof of the chamber near the sea 105s., at 3s. per framed couple. To a plumber, for melting the sheets of lead of the old gutter, and making new sheets for a new gutter, for one week, with victuals from the Master 18d. For 24,000 lath-nails for the roof 16s. 3½d. Expenses of Brother Reginald, a groom, and 2 horses, going to Salisbury, and returning, to buy the said nails 16d. To 2 roofers, covering in the roof of the stairs next the sea, and of the old hall, after covering in the chamber, for one week, with victuals from the Master 20d. To a roofer covering in the new house without the Bar, that was uncovered by the wind, one day, by the piece 3d. To 2 men making a piece of earthen wall, at the east garden 21½d. For making a piece of wall near the new wall of the town 4s. To 3 women gathering straw for the said wall, 3 days, by the piece, 7½d. For one navegar (auger) bought for divers purposes 2d. For hay bought at Swathelyng, as store for the next year 4s. 8d. For rudel (ruddle) and black (atramento) bought for marking the sheep 2d. For the wages of one man, a reaper, watching the fields in autumn, 4s." This latter probably was one of the Paupers of the house, whose duty was that of ear-watcher in the cornfields.—"Delivered to the sergeants of the vill of Suthampton, as a gift of the Master, at Easter 2s. Given to a certain poor man, as compensation for a wound accidentally received from a boar belonging to the House 18d."

On the reverse, as usual, are the "Issues of the Granges."—"Delivered to John le Fleming for bread had of him at Easter, by order of the Master, 4 bushels of wheat. Delivered to Oliver the Carpenter, for making the new roof of the house near the sea, by covenant, 1 quarter 2 bushels of wheat." He also has one bacon-hog given to him.—"As livery to one hur-deke (some description of farm servant, perhaps a hurdle-maker) for 6 weeks, in lambing season, 2 bushels of barley." Under the head of Muttons,—"2 huartards bought after shearing," is an entry illustrated on the other side of the roll.—"Bought at High-worth, 2 huartards, after shearing 12s.;" the ordinary price for "muttons" at this time was 21 pence; we may therefore conclude that these huartards had some peculiar value of their own. Out of 39 geese at the granges this year, 2 are distinguished from the others as being "marion," as before noticed. Of the 10 hives of bees, 2 perished from murrain in winter, and 3 were killed (for the honey); one gallon of honey was the produce of the year, and 3 quarts were devoted to the sustenance of the bees in the winter.

The last of the rolls belonging to this reign is the Computus of Brother Robert de Gysich, Serjeant, or servant, of God's House, for the year ending at Michaelmas, 20 Edward II. (A.D. 1326): Brother Reginald is probably now dead, and Brother Robert de Gysiche, who has superintended the manors in the Isle of Wight, occupies his place:—probably the same Brother that was admitted in 1306.

Extracts.—2 shillings (and no more) are received for 2 bacon-hogs, sold to the purveyor of the King's household. 18d. received for old poplar trees at Padewelle. Also, 12 pence for pigeons, sold to the King's poulterers this year. 4d. received by favour of Roger de Bramwiche, who entered upon the garb (habitus) of the House, at the Feast of St. Clement, A.D. 1326. Received 10d. for one horse hired to grind the apples (for cider). 11d. received from Sister Cecily this year. Default of rent of 4 selds, for want of tenants, is recorded this year.

"For making an earthen wall 3½ perches long, between the pigeon-house and the wall of the Friars Minors, by the piece 2s. 9d. For covering the same and another wall on the other side of the pigeon-house, with straw, by the piece 18d. For covering 2 walls, within and without the new wall of the town, with straw, and plastering them, by the piece 12d. For making an earthen wall 12 perches long, at the east garden, against the street (vicum) of Newton, by the piece, in full, 8s. 8d. For digging 200 turfs, for covering the said wall, 7d. For covering the said wall with plaster and the turfs, by the piece 16d. To one man, claying (terrestrate) the floor of the Chaplain's chamber, for one day, by the piece 3d. To him, helping to clay the floor of the Master's chamber, for 2½ days, with victuals from the Master, 2½d. For a quarter of a hundred split boards, bought of Luke Stout, in lieu of rent 6s. To a roofer covering the hall and chamber at Padewelle, for the greater part, for 6 days, by the piece, 12d. For his servant nothing, because there was the handmaid there. To one carpenter, rough-hewing timber of poplar for the new bedsteads made in the Hospital, 3 days, by the piece, 13d. For sawing boards from the said timber for the bedsteads, and to keep in store, 12 days, 5s. 10d. Wages of Master John the Carpenter, doing divers work of the House for 23 weeks, with board from the Master, on covenant made by him 11s. 6d. For 4 roofers covering the house late of Nicholas le Cordewaner in Symenelstrete, for one week, with board from the Master 26s. 6d. For 2 roofers covering the same house for 3 days in another week, with board, 7½d. For ale bought in the town, for their drinking, after dinner, during such time 8½d. Paid for tallow to mix with pitch, for the gutters 2d. For oblation made by the Brothers, Sisters, and Servants, of the House, at Easter, 15d. For 3 bushels of fine salt, bought of the Parson of Depedene, in lieu of rent 8d. For sharpening 3 navegares (augers) 3d. For scowering the foss of the Waldiche from the bakehouse to the shepherd's house, and cleansing the wardrobe (lathrine), by the piece, 3s. 9d. For drawing the sewage thereof from the foss into the courtyard, to carry the same into the fields, with the carts of the House, together with cleansing all the Hospital, and carrying away the old hay that was put in the Hospital 14d. For one acre of hay bought at Aldyngtone, for store next year 10s. For reaping it, by the piece, 9d. For assistance, in carrying it, with help of the servants, 3d. Paid for hay bought of a certain man of Porteswode 14d. For the reaping of 2 acres of weak draget in Swardeslond, for forage 8d. For pasture bought of William atte More, for supporting the Master's sheep in winter 6s. 2d.

From the following entries we conclude that the name of the Steward for the preceding year was, Sir Richard de la More. The Warden's residence was now at the present Finchampstead, (near Wokingham, in Berkshire.)

"For one pipe of wine, bought, and sent to Fynchhamstede, for the use of the Master there, at Christmas, 30s. For 3 malarides bought and sent at the same time 6d. For 3 wigones (widgones) bought and sent there 5d. For 52 larks sent there 7½d. Paid the carters and others taking the said things to Fynchhamstede 6d., and 4 bushels of oats. Paid Sir William Pope for the moneys borrowed of him to give to the kinsman of Sir William de Ros 4s. Given to Thomas, the Master's Chamberlain, for his expenses from Suthampton to London, at the Nativity, by order of the Master 6d. Paid the Master's household for their oblations on Easter Day, by his order 10d. For one pair of shoes bought for the Master, on the day of the Holy Trinity 6d. For the shoeing of a horse of the Master's stable, sent to Fynchhamstede before the Nativity 3d. Expenses of John the Miller, going to and returning from Winchester, for 3 days, to get delivery of the distress made of four oxen, that were taken by the bailiff of Mannesbrigg, he being in Winchester Castle for 2 days and 2 nights, to obtain possession of them 3s. 4d.; to wit, for their feeding 6d., for the porter's fee 15d., and for the expenses of the said John 21d. Expenses of a boy going twice to Winchester to feed the said distress 5d. Paid the same John for money due to him in the time of Brother Reginald 2s. 8d. Delivered to 4 serjeants of the vill of Suthampton for their oblations, by order of the Master, and as his gift 2s. Also, to the bailiff of the Hundred of Mannesbrigg, as his oblations, at the Nativity and Easter, the Master's gift 2s. For one cart hired to carry one tun of wine to Aschlee, for the use of the Earl of Winchester [Hugh le Despenser], at the request of his steward 2s. For the cutting out of one robe for John, the son of Laurence de Ulvetone, the gift of the Master 10d. For 2½ ells of linen cloth, bought for him, with the cutting out thereof 10d. For 5 pairs of shoes bought for him 18d. For leather bought to clout his shoes 1½d. For mending his woollen and linen clothes 2d. Paid for his school, 3 terms this year 15d. For a cock bought for him at the beginning of Lent, 1½d. For cockfighting, on Shrove Tuesday.—Paid for the school of one boy, Hanteworth, a scholar, by order of the Master 4d. Paid Robert the butcher, called "Le Schaghier," for meat bought of him for Sir Richard de la More, in the past year 2s. 7d. Also, to Sille de Buteshasse, for fish bought of her for the said Sir Richard 7½d. To Isabel de Brayesfeld, for ale bought of her, for the said Sir Richard 5d. For fish bought by the said Sir Richard in the past year 4s. 9d. Paid Andrew Calays, for the time of the said Sir Richard 3d. Paid the wages of a certain keeper of the hogastres in the time of the said Sir Richard 6d. Delivered to the said Sir Richard, for his expenses to Fynchhamstede, on his departure 2s. Paid Henry Clerk, Pelliper, for a fur bought of him for the use of the said Sir Richard 2s. 6d. Paid him for money borrowed of him by the said Sir Richard 12d."

"Mitigation made by the Warden and Brothers to John Gabriel, for his arrears of rent to the House for the tenement in Hamptone 20s. Rent pardoned to John le Barbur, Countor (Narrator) in Suthampton 50s. 1d."

The rents of many persons are struck out this year, as they had either died or left the place, without means, —either "pauperes" or "inopes."

"Issues of the Granges" are entered on the reverse of the roll. The following are some extracts:—"Delivered to the Friars Minors of Suthampton, by precept of the Warden, one quarter of wheat. Given to a myfrare who made wafres (gaufres, or thin cakes) in presence of the Master, his gift, 2 bushels of wheat. To Joan le Flemeng, called "Gaunt," his gift, 2 bushels of wheat. To the Town Clerk of Suthampton, the gift of the Master, 4 bushels of wheat. Delivered to Sir Richard de la More, when serving in the year last past, for livery to the servants, in acquittance, 4 quarters and 2 bushels of rye, as set forth by his account. Consumed in the kitchen this year by the household, 1½ quarters of pease, for want of potherbs, by reason of the drough in winter and summer. Consumed in the House, one bushel of vetches, as set forth by the Journal; 7 bushels of barley mixed with 2 quarters 6 bushels of oats, to make seed for draget. Delivered, as to the expenses of last year, one quarter of malt, which was borrowed from Joan de London." 26 sheep and 14 lambs are entered as dying of murrain this year; but it deserves remark that in every case, in these accounts, of an animal dying, not slaughtered "for the larder," it is entered as dying "in morina." Of chickens, 6 had been devoured by foxes and stotes. Out of the store of wax, one pound had been consumed in the obsequies of Matildis atte Barre, one of the Sisters of the House.

COLLEGE,

The last roll, or Computus, that has been examined for this Report, belongs to the 14 and 15th years of the following reign, that of Edward III. (A.D. 1341, 2). In several of those from which extracts have been given, reference is made to the roll containing particulars of the household expenses, and which is called the "Jornale," or Journal, in some of the later Computi; none of these rolls, belonging to the reigns of Edward I. and II., seem to have been preserved; from the one, however, that follows, an inference may be formed as to the general nature of their contents.

The contents of this "Jornale," or Journal of every day expenses, comprise many items of interest, more especially as to the mode of living at that day; each week coming under notice as to the various heads of Pantry, Buttery, Kitchen, and Stable; the movements of the Warden throughout the year, in reference to his presence or absence, being set forth; Gilbert de Wyggetone is still in office, but his name is not mentioned. The following is its title, translated:—"Roll of expenses of God's House, at Suthampton, by Sir Geoffrey de Wynhale, Chaplain, from the Feast of St. Michael, in the 14th year of the reign of King Edward, after the Conquest the Third, to the same Feast of St. Michael next ensuing in the following year; to wit, for one whole year." The following are the entries for the first four weeks (translated): from them a general idea of the mode of keeping the account throughout the year may be formed.—

"First Sunday in October. Pantry and Buttery,—taken from the store of the preceding year. Kitchen,—taken from the store of the preceding year. Also, one goose, taken from the store of our manor. Monday.—100 white herrings bought, 9d. Tuesday.—The Warden came from Wales, with 7 horses. Pantry and ale—taken from the store of the preceding year. Wine bought, 2d. Kitchen,—one bacon-hog, bought of the Reeve of Gessiche 20d. Oysters, fresh fish, and eggs, bought, 3d. Wednesday.—Wine bought 2d. Oysters, merlyng [whiting], flounders, and shrympes 6½d. Mustard ½d. For cles 1d. Thursday.—Three gallons of ale bought 3½d. 1½ gallons of wine bought 6d. Fresh meat bought 2½d. Friday. Pantry,—baked 1 quarter and 1 bushel of wheat, and 2 bushels of barley. Buttery,—brewed 2 quarters of barley malt. Kitchen,—fresh fish bought 2½d. Saturday. Fresh fish 3½d. Stores that were consumed the same time, to wit, one flyche and a half of pork, one fliche of bacon, 2 geese, 4 pigeons, 4 cheeses. Stable, 9½ bushels of oats for provender for the horses of the Master and visitors. Sum total 5s. 2d." The wheat, barley, and malt, were taken from the stores in the house, already provided.

"Second Sunday in October. Pantry and ale,—from the former store. Kitchen,—pork 4d. Monday, wine 3d., milk and mustard ½d. Tuesday, fresh fish 2d. Wednesday, oysters ½d., ryghe [probably, a fish] 1½d., merlyng 2d., eels 1d., flounders and soles 3d. Thursday, red and white wine 1½d., mutton and pork 6d., 2 tele 2½d., eggs 1d., milk ½d., hastels [elsewhere gastels, probably a kind of cake] 2d., chickens 3d. 2 pounds of candles 3d. On Friday, the Warden departed from Suthampton for London, with 4 horses. Expenses of the Pantry: there is baked a quarter and half a bushel of wheat, and a bushel and a half of barley. Buttery,—brewed 2 quarters of barley malt. Kitchen,—fresh fish 1½d., 2 pounds of candles 3d. Saturday,—all that is expended is taken from the store. The stores consumed in the same time [the week]:—one quarter of beef, one pig, one fliche of bacon, 3 geese, 2 capons, 12 pigeons, 3 cheeses. Stables,—7½ bushels of oats for the Warden's horses. Sum [spent] 4s. 2½d.

"Third Sunday in October;—all consumed taken from the store. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, all consumed taken from the store. Friday and Saturday, spent for fish, fresh and salt 3½d. Stores consumed this week, one quarter of salt beef, one fliche of pork, half a flyche of bacon, 12 pigeons, 2 cheeses. Sum [spent] 3½d.

"Fourth Sunday in October;—all consumed taken from the store. Monday, Tuesday, all consumed taken from the store. Wednesday, expenses of the Pantry,—baked one quarter of wheat, and 2 bushels of barley. In the Buttery, brewed one quarter 6 bushels of barley malt, and half a quarter of oat malt. In the Kitchen, 100 white herrings bought for store 9d. Thursday, all taken from the store. Friday and Saturday, for oysters ½d. Stores consumed during the same time, one quarter of salt beef, one fliche of pork, 6 pigeons, 4 cheeses. Sum [spent] 9½d.

"The fifth Sunday in October;—all consumed from the store. Monday and Tuesday,—all consumed from the store. Stores consumed during the same time [for three days];—half a fliche of pork, one quarter of salt beef, one goose, 4 pigeons, 2 cheeses." Sum [spent] "nothing."

"In the month of October: amounts consumed, during that time [in money] 10s. 5½d. Wheat malt, none. Barley malt, 5 quarters 6 bushels. Oat malt, half a quarter. Wheat [baked] 3 quarters 1½ bushels. Barley ½ bushels. Amount of stores consumed, one carcass of beef, 3 pigs, one bacon-hog, 6 geese, 2 capons, 34 pigeons, 16 cheeses, and 100 eggs. In the stable, 2 quarters and 2 bushels of oats, provender for the horses of the Warden and of visitors."

The other months in the year are treated in a similar manner; but from this point some extracts only can be given. On Monday in the first week of November, the Provost returns "to Suthampton" with 4 horses. On Tuesday, fresh fish and oysters are bought "for the Master," price 2½d. The charges for Friday are,—Wine 1½d.; one salt fish 4½d., other fish 1d.; one quarter of almonds bought by the Master, for store 4s., one pound of sugar [zucere] 16d., half a pound of pepper 8d., one quarter (½ of a pound) of saffron 15d.; one box of ginger 20d." In the same month is an item,—"Expenses of Robert the Clerk and John de Wygan on business of the Master, dining at Winchester 7d." Among the fish consumed in this month are plays [plaice], eels, flounders, welkes, and sprot [sprats]. One perdriz [partridge] costs 2½d., and two wokocs [woodcocks] 1½d. In the last week of November a cade of 600 herrings is opened, and 40 are consumed.

At the beginning of December, four "cades" of red herrings are bought, "for keeping in store;" each cade containing 600, and costing 3s. 7½d. 300 welkes cost 2½d., and the sprot for one meal 1½d.; 14 pounds of candles for store cost 2½d., while they cost 1½d. if bought by the pound. In the first week of this month a horse of John de Stratton has provender in the stable. In a supplementary entry for October "gross flesh and brown" are entered at 6 pence. On Tuesday in the third week, one wodecoke and "small birds" cost 2d. On Wednesday, a pound of cummin 4d.; a pound of greyn [? grains of paradise] 4d.; half a pound of coarse ginger, and half a pound of powdered ginger 16d. On Thursday, one woodcock, 2 partridges, and 8 throskis cost 6d.; 2 resenes [? of onions] 6d.; and 3 resenes of garlic 7d. Oysters, welks, flounders, lampreys, and plaice, are eaten on Friday and Saturday. On Monday in the fourth week, "being the Feast of our Lord's Nativity," or Christmas Day, the entries are—"For wine 8d. Expenses in the kitchen—novmels [the intestines of deer] 2d.; 4 wodekocs 6d.; larkes, throshe, and small birds, 7½d.; 4 rabbits 8d.; 120 eggs 12d.; 14 pounds of Paris candles, 2½d." On the day after, from a note in the margin, the Warden took his departure. Among the articles taken from the store this week, one madelord [mallard] is mentioned. In the following week one frael of figs is bought of John Wygge, "for store," costing 6s. 6d.; and one meise of red herrings, bought by E. Langrygge, costs 5s. 5d.

On Monday in the second week in January, the Warden returns from Gessich, in Dorset, (where he had been staying), "to supper, one penny being expended on wine." On Tuesday, salmon and *troghe*s [? trout] cost 6 pence; welkes 3d.; oysters 1½d.; and mustard ½d. On Sunday in the third week, the Warden departs for Brokenhurst [now Brokenhurst, near Lymington], returning on Thursday. Among the fish consumed on Saturday, "flounders and grundwalle" [?] are mentioned, as costing 9 pence. In the next week 2 plovers cost 2½d. In this month 60 herrings and one salt fish are entered as being "sent to Gessiche, at the expense of the Master."

On Sunday in the first week of February, one penny is entered "for bread [horse-loaf] for the horse of Thomas Arnold, Clerk." On Tuesday in the second week, as we learn from a note in the margin, the burgesses of Suthampton dined with the Warden.—"His steterunt burgesses Suthi in mensa cum Domino." The articles bought for the occasion were as follow:—"For pain demesne [lords' bread, of finest flour] 4d.; 3 gallons of wine 16d.; beef and veal 14d.; for one tiche (P) 8d.; 6 capons 18d.; 12 hens 2s.; 240 eggs 12d.; milk 2d.; wild-fowl 6d.; expenses of a boy seeking wild-fowl in the Island of Wight 4d." On Thursday—"Expenses of John de Wygan on business of the Master at Gessiche, going, returning, and remaining there 2 days 6d." On Friday pain demesne costs ½d. In the next week, one gastelle [cake] costs ½d.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE,
OXFORD.

In this week—the third in February—the Warden leaves for London; returning on Thursday, in the first week in April.

On Monday in the second week in April—"Boat-hire" of the Master at [St.] John's " (a parish bordering on the sea-shore) is entered at 2 pence, and on Wednesday he leaves for Gessiche; the next week, he returns, and in the fourth week leaves for London.

The entries commencing in the first week in May, down to the end of the year, are written on the reverse of the roll. On the second Sunday in June, a tun of cider is broached, and on the following Wednesday the Warden arrives, in time for supper. On Thursday the following payments are made:—"For wine 3*d.*; beef, pork, mutton, and veal 6*d.*; 4 chickens 2*d.*; 2*d.*; shrympes and mulet 1*d.*; brass pots for wine and ale 2*d.*; rose-water for the Master 2*d.*" On the following Sunday, H. Derneford pays a visit [supervenit] "with 3 horses." "Unctum album," or white lead, is used in the kitchen. In the fourth week in June "anys" (anise) is entered, at one penny; and wine, "presented to John the Cook," costs 6 pence.

On Sunday in the first week in July, "J. Wygan" departed for Holmcultrum, "a place in the extreme north of Cumberland; possibly in reference to business of the Warden, who may have been a native of Wigton in that county. On Wednesday in the second week the Warden departs for Llandaff; and at the end of the week there is a memorandum to the effect that "Here all the red herrings are exhausted." In the following week four cheeses and butter, then consumed, are entered as coming from Padewell.

On Tuesday in the third week in September, the Warden comes back from Wales, in time for supper, leaving for London on Wednesday in the week following. The "Journal" contains no further items of interest, and ends with a long list of articles consumed throughout the year "from the store." With the exception of onions, garlic, anise, and cummin, it will be observed, no vegetable, as an article of diet, is mentioned. "White pease" are mentioned elsewhere as being used in the House for pottage. Ale, it may be remarked, is spoken of as being made from malt, with no infusion of any other kind.

The remaining rolls of God's House, and the earlier documents in reference to Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, and Southampton, which are preserved among the muniments of Queen's College, will come under notice in the succeeding Report.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

THE CORPORATION OF TENTERDEN.

The town of Tenterden, as connected with the Cinque Ports, is a member of the Port of Rye, with which it was united,—not improbably, much against the will of its inhabitants,—in the 27th year of Henry the Sixth (A.D. 1449). In 1661, a fire breaking out in the Court-hall, the Corporation chest, and, with it, probably many of the charters and early records, was burnt. Of the oldest of the Record Books, now in the possession of the Corporation, some account has been given in the Report of the Commission on the Public Records 1837, pp. 499-501: from an opportunity afforded me of recently inspecting it, for which I am indebted to the courtesy of Matthew Rogers, Esq., the Mayor, and W. G. Mace, Esq., the Town Clerk, I am enabled to add a few items to the statements there made by Mr. W. Waterman, the then Town Clerk.

The book, paginated to only folio 102, but containing probably about 150 leaves, is in a mutilated leather binding, originally fastened with strings, and belonging probably to the reign of Philip and Mary, or of Elizabeth. The earliest entries in the book are finely written, and exquisitely adorned with flourishes and sketches, drawn with the pen, by a masterly hand: the volume itself, however, of paper throughout, has been much maltreated and torn, and is in a tattered and mutilated condition. Its earliest entries belong to the reign of Philip and Mary, though the roses of York and Lancaster—coloured in one instance—figure largely among the items of its ornamentation. As stated in the Report above-mentioned, it begins with a fragment of an Index, of which the first one or two leaves are torn out: what remains of the index bearing reference to folios 43-57, the latter part of the index also being torn away.

On a fly-leaf, which had been pasted down in the cover, but has now become loose, is written in German text, "Liber Stephani Cowper, Scriptoris Waltero, Vaughan

"Teste." S. Cowper was Bailiff in the 5th and 6th years of Philip and Mary.

The first nine folios are occupied with the copy of a Charter granted to the Cinque Ports in the first year of King Edward the Fourth. This is followed by the First Charter granted to the town of Tenterden, on the first of August, in the 27th year of King Henry the Sixth, folios 13-16, folios 10 to 12 having been torn out. Folios 17-22a contain the composition made between the towns of Tenterden and Rye, dated the 21st day of September, in the eighth year of King Henry the Seventh. The Liberties, Franchises, and Bye-laws of the town then follow: at fol. 25a, under the "Othe of the Bayley," Stephen Cowper is named as "Bayley," and as he was Bailiff in the last two years of Philip and Mary, this seems to imply that the earlier part of the book was written at that date; his name, as the then Bailiff, appearing again at fol. 49. At folio 57 begin "The Decrees," a set of Bye-Laws, founded upon "the Custimall" of the town, and enacted on the 4th of May, in the 6th year of King Edward the Sixth. The entries of Bye-Laws after folio 59 are of later date; after folio 67, seven folios have been torn out, six after folio 82, and after folio 90, five. Entries then follow, of the time of Elizabeth and James the First, succeeded by "The names of the Mayor, Jurattes, and Commons, of the towne and Hundred of Tenterden, August 29th 1655;" on the next page to which follow, in an earlier hand, "The names of the Fremen of Tenterden," beginning in the 20th year of Henry VIII., A.D. 1529. This list ends in 1558, in which year Stephen Cowper was Bailiff, and with the words,—"Qui ante non canit, post dolebit etc. Per me Richardum Homan," probably the then Common Clerk.

More Ordinances, of the time of James the First, then follow; and then, a list of the Bailiffs, and, after them, Mayors, from the 27th year of Henry the Sixth, continued, in various hands, down to 1701; after which one or more leaves are torn out. After this, two leaves follow, in the same hand, apparently, as the earliest part of the volume, the first being headed,—"The names of the Bayles of the Towne and Hundred of Tenterden, from the beginninge of the libertie, begone in the twentie and seaventhe yeres of the reigne of Kinge Henry the Sixte." In this list events are inserted, in chronological order, from time to time; they are given, but with several errors and omissions, in Mr. Waterman's Letter, printed in the Report before-mentioned: the following is a corrected copy of them:

"37 Henry VI. (A.D. 1458, 9) John Davye. This yere "Sharley More brake out. 21 Edward IV. (A.D. 1481, 2) Thomas Strekenbolde. This yere Isak Cade did ryse [qy. the meaning of this]. 1 Henry VII. (A.D. 1485, 6) Thomas Strekenbolde. This yere the Frenchemen came to Sanwicche, and there laye one night and a daye. 1 Henry VIII. (A.D. 1509, 1510) John Gage Esquire. Sharley More made. 6 Henry VIII. (A.D. 1514, 5) Barthelmew Fowle. The which yere Smalthe [Small Hythe] was burnt on the last day of Julye. 29 Henry VIII. (A.D. 1437, 8) John Austen thelder. This yere the 28 of Auguste King Henry VIII. came to Tenterden. 35 Henry VIII. (A.D. 1543, 4) Richard Alcock. Bolen [Boulogne] won. 1 Mary (A.D. 1553, 4) Peter Shorte. Hoc anno surrexit Wyat (in a somewhat earlier hand). 4 Mary (A.D. 1556, 7) Thomas Aus[ten]. Quintain [wa's] won. 5 Mary (A.D. 1557, 8) Stephen Cowper. Callis was lost."

The following are later entries, in continuation:—

"14 Elizabeth (A.D. 1571, 2). Edward Hales. This yere, aboute Barthilmewe tide, the Quenes Majestie was at Rye, Hemsted, and Sussynghurst. 19 Elizabeth (A.D. 1576, 7) Robert Ashenden. Was a blasing star in November in the evening, toward the West. 21 Elizabeth (A.D. 1578, 9). George Castlen. This yere was a gret earthquake, the vith day of Aprell, about v or vi a klok at afternone. 29 Elizabeth (A.D. 1586, 7) [1588]. Edward Gervis. This yere the Spanish fleet came for England, about Saint James tide. 41 Elizabeth (1598, 9). John Hales, Esquire, Baliffe and first Maior by our new Charter. 16 James (A.D. 1618, 9). John Witherden. This year in November and December was seen a blasegne star, riseinge towards the East in the mornnyng, streminge forward."

There are some later entries, but of no interest, except the following,—"1660, March 19. Our Court-hall was burnt downe." "1672, December 29. Benenden steeple and church and 5 houses burnt, set first on fire by lightninge. February 17 (1673). A greate and fierce wind, when Staplehurst spire was blowne downe, and many barnes about the country."

The leather sides of this volume have been originally padded, or strengthened, with leaves of a book, by way of pasteboard. The paste between the leaves having lost its hold, from age, these leaves, about 30 in number, have become detached and separated, and appear to have formed part of the account-book of a Tailor and Draper at Tenterden, from the 27th to the 32nd year of Henry VIII.; with a continuation thereof to a somewhat later date. The writing in some parts is so bad as to be almost wholly illegible; while in other places the entries are in a firm and tolerably legible hand. Several pages also of the account-book have been utilized, when almost new, for the purposes of a child's copy-book; and among the leaves are inserted, to strengthen the sides, two leaves of a handsomely illuminated Service-Book, of the 14th century, containing one or more Psalms. The account-book has been commenced, for business purposes, at each end, each page consequently being upside-down, as compared with the opposite one; and the action of the paste, with the ravages of book-worm, has rendered much of its contents illegible. "My gossop Shyperd," a customer, also mentioned as "Jhon Sheperd," is named in one page, with little more that can be deciphered. "White carsy" is charged for; "slopes (probably, boots) of your man," is charged to; "Wylkynson of Pet," near Winchelsea, and "2 yardes of whyt coten for your dobyet." Another customer is "The good man Havery of Lydton Helle," "rosset coten" being one of the articles supplied. Myell (Michael) Broke is mentioned as a brother of the person keeping the account, and Robert Broke is another of his customers. "Robert Felyp, of Bred" (Brede, near Winchelsea) is another customer; Denysa Myleys, another; Robert Wyhtintone also,—he is charged for 1½ yardes of "Denschere (Devonshire) kerse," and for a yard and half a quarter of "naro blankyt,"—narrow blanket, for making "hose," or hose. Robert Hale, a customer, is charged 5s. 4d. "for a yard of brodered clothe, and for makynge of the 'pette cote.'" The "pettecot," as it is elsewhere written, is an habilliment of frequent occurrence. "My gossop Sheperd," is again charged, in the 31st year of Henry VIII., with "paer slopes for your lad 11d.; 3 yardes of frys for your sylf 5d.; and for yerd and half of whyt coten for your wyt 12d." A customer, named "Petter," is charged 6 pence, "for makynge of 'lade hose'" lady's hose; and 2½d. "for stoking of hys 'lades hose.'" To his account is appended, "Item, I lentt out of my poris 3s. 4d.; Item, lentt out of my porus 4s.," followed by fresh items for tailoring, "Wulkyngson of Pyt,"—Pett,—is again charged "for 7 yardes of Kendaylle (Kendal green) for your man 7s.; and for 7 yardes of whyt carse for youre woman 6s. 3d.; for payer slopes for youre man 12d.; and for yerd and half of whyt cersy for Jhon your son 3s. 4d." In the 28th year of Henry VIII., William Lonsford (of Rye) is charged—"For paer of hos for your man Tomas 3s. 4d.; for makeng of wast cot for your child 6d.; for paer of slopes and paer of short hos 2s.; for makeng of petykote for your mayd 3d."

In one page there are entered copies of some dunning letters, for money due, addressed respectively to Richard Manynton, Asten Ambrust, and Sampson Adam. "The Goodman Wydres" is another customer, "John Holman of Geslyng" (near Hastings); "the Goodman Sely; Denys a Milles; Gorge Caslyn; Rychard Crottoill," who is charged 10 pence "for makynge of a chykrkn [jerkin], and 12 pence "for makynge a doblett and for parchamett hat,"—"parchamett" being probably a stout cloth. "The good man Kele, of Geslyng," is another customer mentioned. "Thomas Coper, of Lygrene," is charged 3s. 4d. "for 3 yarde and a quarter of cendoll (Kendal); for makynge of the same chylde cote 5d.; for makynge of a payr of chamletts [carnet] sleeves 3d." Thomas Weldyshe is charged 12 pence, "For a payer of clothe hoosse for hys 'wyffe.'" William Perys pays 16 pence for "stoking of a payre of hose, and for clothe." Petter Hayman is charged 6 pence "for makynge of a froke for Elysbeth." To Robert Hartt is charged,— "For makynge of the yongest dotter a pette cote 6d.; and Robert Pope "for a yerd and a half of frysadoue 6d." It is a "Master Johnson," apparently, who, among other things, is charged "for makynge an uper body of a 'cyrtel (kirtle) 2d." to whom the following letter was addressed by our draper:—"Master Johnson. I commend me unto you, trusting unto God that you be in good helth; the cause of my wrytyng unto you at this tym, I pray you send unto me by the brynger of my byl the money that you do owe unto me, for I have gret ned of yt." Olevier Gyles, in the next leaf, is thus addressed,— "I commend me unto you, trustyng unto God that you be in good helth; the causes of my wrytyng unto you at this tym, I pray you send unto me the money that you do owe unto me, for I have gret need of yt, for I have a gret payment to pay at this tym." Other customers are "John Fyllyp of Smalyd," [Small Hythe] and "Raynoll of Stone;" Stene (Stephen) Bucher of Rouddene (Rollevden); Richard Downe of Roudenede, Jarvys Pacheyng, and Thomas Holmes of Roudenede.

At one page a copy is set, in a fine hand:—

At my beginnyng God be my speade
In grace and vertue to procede, with a copy therefrom, in the hand of a young person, throughout the page. In the latter part of the account, blanket, for making petticoats, or for making "the upper body," is largely entered, the latter being also a portion of the "petticoate;" "slops," hose, jerkins, coats, doublets, petticoats, and kirtles, being, in fact, the articles of dress most commonly in use: "russet" kersey is the kersey most frequently mentioned, and russet cotton is also named as an article of clothing. Thomas Brykendene is mentioned, as a customer, towards the close of the account, a member of a family which supplied many Bailiffs and Mayors to the town.

In the same page is the following draught of a letter,—"Sampson A Dame (p Adam), I commend me unto you, trustyng unto All mightie God that you be in good healtie. The cause of my wrytyng to you, I pray you send unto me by Symond x l.".

Upon one of the leaves of the draper's account-book there are some scraps of poetry written, partly mutilated and illegible; the following (in a contemporary hand with the rest of the account book) admits of being deciphered:

"Be a wildernes as I did passe

The sweet floores for to smell

I sawe a goodly lady morned right pituisly

Seyng A dew and Farewelle.

Banessed am I, and no cause why,

Thorow thoughtfe for (P) and disdayne

And tho that I therefore shoud dye,

Yet cannot I refrayne.

Alas! that same sweet fase whome dethe cevelle (P)

Hathe stryken with his mase, and takyne awaye fro me."

The account is written in two hands; the earlier part perhaps, by a person of the name of Broke; the latter, and much the more legible portion, by a writer who twice gives his name as Marten "Dever," or Dewar, who, in the book next mentioned, is stated to have been one of the Taxors of the scot laid upon the town in 1539. The business in question was no doubt carried on at Tenterden; and, for that date seems to have been an extensive one.

A Record-book, in good condition, with quarto leaves of paper, in limp parchment; the contents of which extend from the 30th of Henry VIII. (A.D. 1538) to the 34th year of the same reign (A.D. 1543). It gives the name of the Bailiff elected each year, on the day of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist (29th August), of the six Jurats nominated by him, and the six Jurats nominated by the Commons; the names also of the Common Clerk and Common Mace-bearer, as annually elected, and the names of the Taxors of the Scot, yearly levied for the use of the town. Its contents, otherwise, are almost wholly records of common recoveries of property situate in or near the town, with recitals of the tedious formalities connected therewith. The sole interest attending it is centered in some few of the names mentioned as parties to the recoveries respectively entered. In one case, John Deryng, Gentleman, is deforciant; described as son and heir of Nicholas Deryng and Alice, his wife, daughter and co-heir of William Betnam, deceased; the property conveyed being situate in the "denne" of Lytlyll Harnden, in the parish, vill, and hundred, of Tenterden. In February 1539, Thomas Crumwell, Knight, Lord Crumwell, is complainant, and John Dudley, Knight, and Joan his wife, daughter and heir of Edward Guldeford, Knight, and John Guldeford, Esquire, son and heir of George Guldeford, Esquire, and Barbara, his wife, deforciant; Thomas Lord Cromwell, and John Dudley, afterwards Duke of Northumberland, two of the parties, ended their lives on the block. The property conveyed is the manor of Howseney, Kentysghild, and Feltesden, with rents, among other things, of 6 cocks and 100 hens, in Tenterden, Ebbeneay, and other places named. This property is immediately afterwards conveyed by Lord Cromwell to Richard Williams, "otherwise called Richard Cromwell," Esquire, and others. Thomas Culpeper the elder, Esquire, is complainant in another recovery. The book is in excellent condition, and is finely written throughout.

In the Letter written by Mr. Waterman, the Town Clerk, to the Commissioners, in 1833, it is mentioned that "There are some ancient deeds in the Corporation chest, one of which is dated 22 Edward III.; the "others are apparently of an earlier date." On inquiry being made for these ancient documents, they have been found, being 14 in number; several of them prior in date to the reign of Edward III., but some later. They, none of them, however bear reference to Tenterden, and how they reached their present locality, can be but a matter of surmise only; seven of them relate to Iver, in Buckinghamshire, and give some information as to localities on the banks of the river Coln from five to six hundred years ago; five bear reference to Barking, in Essex; and two only, the latest, to localities in Kent. The following is a description of them:—

A small deed poll, on parchment, in Latin, exquisitely written, and in good condition, but the seal lost. By it, William Reiner, of Ewere (now Iver), grants to William Beleverge, for his service and for 17s. of silver, paid beforehand, half an acre of land in the parish of Ewere in Alberwerke, and three halfpennies of yearly rent in the same vill; to wit, 3 farthings which John Wuleward was wont to pay him, and 3 farthings which Gilbert Edred was wont to pay, for their tenements held of him in the same vill. And the said half acre lies near the land of the said William Beleverge, which he holds of John de la Forde, his brother, and extends from the "Rading" of Peter Fitz-Geoffrey to the land which William Witing formerly held of the demesne of the lord of the same vill, and John Clerk, after him; with power to sell, alienate, or assign, the same to all persons, men of religion [religious orders] and Jews, only excepted; for a yearly rent of one penny, namely, one halfpenny at the Feast of Saint Michael, and one halfpenny at the Feast of the Blessed Mary in March; he, the grantor, warranting the same against all men and women whomsoever. Witnesses, Richard de la Vache, Ralph Guin, John de la Forde, John son of William Fitz-Stephen, William le Moigne, Richard Fitz-Hugh, John de Suthle, William son of Richard Clerk, William Marcheg, William Underwood, (Sub bosco), William Fitz-Laurence, William Daniel, William de Engleby, Clerk, "and others." No date given, but about A.D. 1280.

A small deed poll, in Latin, on parchment, in good condition, the seal lost; whereby William, son of Reiner la Faukner, grants to William Beleverge, for his service, and for 12 shillings of silver "in gersumam," one acre of meadow in the vill of Ewere, with the appurtenances, lying between the meadow of William Andreu, and that of Robert atte Senglet, and extending from the meadow of the chief lord of the vill to Medinlake; with power to give, sell, or assign, the same to all persons, men of religion and Jews excepted; at a yearly rent of one penny, payable at Easter; he, the grantor, warranting the same against all persons, except men of religion and Jews. Witnesses, Ralph Guin, Richard de la Vache, John de Suthle, Gilbert de la Wyke, John de la Forde, Richard Fitz-Hugh, William le Moigne, John Fitz-Stephen, William Lorenz, and others. Date about A.D. 1280.

A small deed poll, on parchment, in Latin, beautifully written, the seal lost; whereby William Reyner, of Eure, grants to William Belverge, for his service, a piece of land in the parish of Ewere, which lies in Alberwurthe, between the land of John Wuleward, and that of Gilbert Fitz-Gilbert, and extends above La Puelle (? the Pool) and above his own land; with power to give, sell, or assign, the same to whomsoever he may please; at a yearly rent of one penny, to be paid at the Feast of Saint Michael; he warranting the same against all men and women whomsoever. Witnesses, Ralph Guin, Richard de la Vache, John de la Forde, Gilbert de Wik, John de Suthlee, Richard Fitz-Hugh, John Fitz-William, Robert the Clerk, "and others." Date, probably, about A.D. 1280.

A deed poll, on parchment, in Latin, finely written, and in good condition, the seal lost; whereby William de Moigne (Monachus) grants to Hugh de Esse, of Bedefunte, for his homage and service, and for 6 marks of silver, paid beforehand, all that croft called "Dikedede," in the vill of Enre, lying between the land of Stephen Meyferlyn and his own land, called "Tyrallesmed," and along the king's highway leading from Eure towards Colebrock; which croft Hugh Le Moigne, his father, formerly held of Richard Daniel; with power to give, sell, pledge, or assign, the same, to all persons whatsoever, houses of religion and Jews excepted; at a yearly rent of 20 pence, 10 pence being payable at the feast of the Purification, and 10 pence at the Assumption, of the Blessed Mary; saving only the service due to the King; he warranting the same against all persons, as well Jews as Christians. Witnesses, Nicholas Cley, Ralph de Draytone, John de la Forde, Hugh Fitz-Richard, William Fitz-Laurence, John Fitz-William, Roger the Clerk, "and others." Dated about A.D. 1290.

A small deed poll, on parchment, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Fina, the relict of John Reyner of Uvere (written Ynere), quitclaims to William Beleverge, of Uvere, as to 9½d., of yearly rent, which the same William had of the gift and grant of her said husband, in Uvere, all right that she might have therein, by reason of dower Witnesses, John de la Forde, William Lorens, William Bithewode, William Merchegrei, William Clerk, John de Suthlye, Edmund de Burnham, Clerk, "and many others." Date about A.D. 1300.

A parchment deed poll, in Latin, the seal lost, dated at Eure (Iver) the 10th of March in the 5th year of Edward III. (A.D. 1331); whereby Robert le Fischere, of Eure, grants to John Edred, of the same, and Grace, his wife, and Robert, their son, all his fishery in the water-course which runs between Longhett and Heweneyt in the Estmor of Eure; that is, from the north corner of Longhett, near Smethette, to the foss of the lord of Eure, called "Hobyessed," with the dams, "hyltres," and all other profits and easements; saving to him and his people the right of passing on foot below the dams at Hobiesmed, Witnesses, Gilbert Edred, Ralph de Estende, John Waleys, John Fitz-Richard, Henry Crisp, William Meferlyn, William Daniel, Stephen Fulke, "and others." Except the right of passage reserved, no consideration is mentioned.

A parchment deed poll, in Latin, the seal lost, dated at Eure, on Tuesday the morrow of St. John the Baptist, in the 5th year of Edward III. (A.D. 1331); whereby Robert le Fischere, of Eure, grants to John Edred, of the same, his fishery in the river, which runs between Longhett and Heweneyt in the Estmor of Eure; that is, from the north corner of Longhee to the foss of Hobyessed; and ratifies his former deed. No witnesses are named. It is indorsed, in French, in a contemporary hand, "Un escript par quel Robert le Fischere est tenu daquiter John Edred e ses heirs de la pescherie del Estmor;"—a writing whereby Robert the Fisher is bound to acquit John Edred and his heirs as to the fishery of the Estmor,—Eastmore.

A parchment deed poll, in Latin, the seal lost, whereby Andrew Qwyke, called "Smith" (Faber), of Chaldewelle, in the parish of Berkyngge, grants to John Godebold, of Great Ilford, and Beatrix, his wife, 2 acres of land, with their appurtenances, in the parish of Berkyngge, in the field (campo) called "Lotecote," between the land late of Richard Redelane, on the east, and the land of John le Soutere, on the west, and extending from the land of Ralph le Saltere, on the north, to the King's highway from London to Chelmsford, on the south; to hold the same of the chief lords of the fee, by the services due and of right accustomed for the same. Witnesses, John de Ratliden, then Seneschal of Berkyngge, Alexander de Betoyn, John Sampkyn, John de Bledelawe, Elias de Banstede, Roger de Lannycngton, Milo le Saltere, Robert Laueder, "and others." Dated at Berkyngge, on Sunday after the Conversion of St. Paul, at the beginning of the 22nd year of Edward III. (A.D. 1345).

Another deed poll, on parchment, in Latin, the seal lost, of similar purport; whereby the said Andrew Qwyke quitclaims to John Godebold all his right and claim in the said land called "Lotecote." Witnesses, John de Ratidene (sic), then Seneschal of Berkyngge, Alexander de Betoyn, John Sampkyn, John Bedelowe (sic), Elyas de Banstede, Roger de Lancelstone (sic), Henry Hardegray, John Scot, "and others." Dated at Berkyngge, on Tuesday the Feast of the Apostles Philip and James, in the 22nd year of Edward III. (A.D. 1345).

A parchment deed poll, in Latin, the seal lost, almost illegible, from the paleness of the ink, whereby John Soutere, of the "North Parish of Berkyng," grants to Juliana, daughter of Ralph Albard, of the same vill, 3 rods of land in the parish of North Berkyng, in the field called "Northfelde," between the land called "Leunesou" on the east, and the land late of Herolfe on the west; to hold the same of the chief lords of the fee. Witnesses, John de Wamptone, then Seneschal of Berkyng, Thomas Sampkyn, Nicholas Clerk, Walter DEN.

Skyham, John Kent, William Laurence, John Terry, and others. Dated at Berkynge, on Saturday the Eve of the Holy Trinity, in the 35th year of Edward III. (A.D. 1364).

A deed poll, in Latin, on parchment, the seal lost; whereby William Welles, of the city of London, quitclaims to William Schonke, of Berkynge, all his right in two acres of arable land, lying in a certain "culture" called "Estlund," in the parish of Berkynge, at the Lee, near Great Illeford, between the land of the same William Schonke, on the east, and the land of the Convent of Berkynge, on the west; and abutting on the land called "Pymbelland" on the north, and on the land of the said William Schonke, on the south. Witnesses, Ralph Chamberlayn, Seneschal of Berkynge, John Ewre, John Chauce, John Stutfold, Thomas Crawdone, "and others." Dated at Berkynge, on the 13th of June, 5th Henry V. (A.D. 1417).

A large parchment deed poll, in Latin, the seal lost; whereby Nicholas Prestone, Esquire, and Roger Wathe, Chaplain, grant to William Warfelde, otherwise called "William Buttelere," of Berkynge, and Margaret, his wife, 3 acres of land, situate in the field called "Twenty" acres," towards Illeforde, in the parish of Berkynge, lying lengthwise between the land of the Lady Abbess and Convent of Berkynge, on the east, and the land late of William Mershe, on the west; and extending from the lane called "Somerlane" to the north, and the land of the said Lady Abbess, called "Loxfordelde," to the south; which 3 acres they lately had jointly of the grant and feoffment of the said William Warfelde, or Buttelere, and Margaret, his wife. Also, they grant to the said William and Margaret a messuage situate in the said vill of Berkynge, in a street called "Shoprove," between the tenement of John Chauce, on the north, and a tenement of the said Convent of Berkynge, on the south; which same they had jointly of the feoffment of the said William Warfelde, otherwise Buttelere; to hold to the said William and Margaret, for their lives, and the life of the longest liver; remainder, after the decease of such longest liver, to Geoffrey Warde, of Berkynge aforesaid, and Joan, daughter of the said William and Margaret, and the heirs of their bodies lawfully begotten; but if they should die without issue, the said property is to be sold by the executors of the testament of the said William Warfelde, and, for the souls of the same William and Margaret, and their parents, friends, and benefactors, to be distributed by the said executors, according to the last will of the said William Warfelde, or Buttelere. Witnesses, Thomas Tyrelle, Knight, John Rande, William Chertseye, Esquires, Thomas Congreve the elder, William Harlestone, Thomas Frost, John Yonge, "and many others." Dated at Berkynge, on the 5th of February, in the 29th year of Henry VI. (A.D. 1451).

A parchment deed poll, in Latin, a portion of its one small seal, in red wax, remaining; whereby Joan Tepynden, widow of Robert Tepynden, releases and quitclaims to John Pett, "Gentylmanne," Alexander Leykenor, "Gentylmanne," Edward Scotte, Richard Roger, and Nicholas Scotte, in possession being, all her right, title, property, claim, or demand, in the lands and tenements in the parishes of Shaleworthe and Molasse, formerly belonging to John Scotte, and which they the said John, Alexander, Edward, and Richard, lately had jointly of the gift and feoffment of the said John Scotte. Dated at Halden [in Kent], the 26th of August, in the 18th year of Henry VII. (A.D. 1502).

A deed poll, in Latin, on parchment, with its seven small seals, in red wax, still appendant, and, with one exception, perfect: crosses, or flowers, for devices. By it, Richard Wodeward, Vincent Engeham, John Engeham the younger, John Lucas, Stephen Scott, Henry Scott, and Nicholas Scott, testify that they have granted to Joan Millis, widow, a yearly rent of 10 pounds, issuing from lands and tenements in Halden or elsewhere in the County of Kent, and the city of Canterbury; which they themselves had jointly of the gift and feoffment of the said Nicholas Scott; such lands and tenements being all that the said Nicholas then had in the said county and city: the same to be held by the said Joan for the whole term of her life, to be paid to her half-yearly, with power of distress, in case of non-payment. Dated the 26th of September, in the 7th year of Henry VIII. (A.D. 1515).

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

THE CORPORATION OF WALLINGFORD.

WALLINGFORD.

There are probably but few Corporations in England possessed of archives of greater antiquity than the once almost regal borough of Wallingford. Its earliest Burghmote Rolls, still existing, go so far back as the year A.D. 1232, several others belonging to different periods some years prior even to that date; though still, so few in number in all, as strongly to indicate that large quantities of them, in the lapse of time, must have either perished, or have been withdrawn from the custody in which they were originally placed.

From the early rolls and ancient deeds described in the present Report, we regain a knowledge of many of the early Mayors and Bailiffs of the place; the latter officers being also known as "Præpositi," Reeves, or Provosts, at an early date. Alexander Dublet, a wealthy burgess evidently, and probably a man of high worth and eminence in his day, was Mayor for several years in the time of Henry the Third; Peter Pecock, Clement the Clerk, and Master Peter de Benham (who was also, for some time, Warden of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, in Wallingford), being also Mayors in the same reign, and, not improbably, like William Fitz-Simon, his predecessors in that office. Thomas Hyton, Clerk, of Chausey (now Cholsey) was Mayor, for at least seven years, in the reign of Edward the First, and John Maryot for seven years, or more, in the reigns of Edward the First and his successor. The Guildhall of the burgh, with selds (warehouses open at the sides) beneath it, let to traders, is mentioned as existing in the time of Edward the Second, and at an earlier date the town had its Fishmarket and Cornmarket, with a Linenmarket as well. Weavers are mentioned early as in the number of the burgesses, and it is not improbable that flax may have been grown in the vicinity. Comparatively few streets or lanes are mentioned so early as the time of Henry the Third, and houses and lands were mostly described here, as in other places, at that date, by their position relatively to the messuages or tenements of other neighbours.

It is remarkable, in reference to the names of persons, to what an extent in this place, within two centuries after the Norman Conquest, the former Saxon nomenclature had disappeared. Among its burgesses,—the people who then constituted the middle class—it also deserves notice how many noble, or at least distinguished, names, from about A.D. 1250 to 1320, are here to be met with. The English Court was at times, as will be seen in the sequel, attracted thither by the Earl of Cornwall, the occupant of the Castle; and, in some instances, at least, it seems not improbable that these individuals may have been the descendants, through younger branches, of families of rank. Among such names may be reckoned De Ros, Glanville, Marmyon, Beaumont, Mandeville, Rokeby, and De Montfort; the latter name—which, at least in some instances, lies concealed under the form of "Mumford" at the present day,—being borne by a man who was a weaver by trade. Four surnames also occur, more or less frequently, among the burgesses, which were borne by English Bishops, either before or in after-times,—Folliot, Nonant, Harewell, and Heyworth.

Among the curious surnames of persons occurring in these records, (and shewing that some surnames at least must have been forced upon people, whether they liked them or not), may be mentioned, "Time of day," "Threehalfpence," "Tarpeni," "Scaldwater," "Main," "wrench," "Langheregawd" (? Proud of long hair), "Ironfoot," "Brokenfoot," "Time of daye," "He" "rodes," and "Gunwaker,"—the latter perhaps derived from an occupation, as tender, or watcher, of some kind of "gun," or engine. Other hardly less singular names are Swanesoft, Peekepeni, Hurlibat, Petipas, Waps (for Wasp), Pesewips, Brusebaston (Breakstick) Putti, White-neck, (given as "cum Albo Collo"), Peleok, Moppe, Tredewater, Sangraine, Goldeye, Skylli, Cak, Kykaw, Hontekake, Skikerwit, Wholeheart, and Wrawe.

The churches existing in Wallingford, in the fourteenth century, according to Leland, were fourteen in number. In the names of the still existing churches of St. Mary the More, St. Peter's, and St. Leonard's, three of them may still be found; the eleven following being no longer in existence.—St. Michael's, All Hallows, Holy Trinity, St. Peter's in the West, St. Lucian's, St. Mary the Less (or de Stalles), St. Martin's, St. John's upon the Water, St. Ruald (or Rumbald), the Chapel of St. Nicholas in the Castle, and the Chapel of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist. Most, if not all, of these churches will be found mentioned in the following extracts.

The most ancient records now belonging to the borough are, as already remarked, (with the exceptions hereafter noticed) its Burghmote Roll, for the 16th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1232) followed by six other similar parchment rolls belonging to that reign, and four like Burghmote Rolls of the reigns of Edward I. and his successor: these being all perhaps that have been saved in the wreck of time.

At the Burghmote (or "Portmote," as it was sometimes called), the chief officers of the town—both the Mayor and the Provosts, or Bailiffs, probably presided; and in these rolls are to be found registered such cases as came under the cognizance of the Court, actions, namely, of debt, detainer, trespass, and assault. The rolls of Henry the Third's time, in Latin, are written in minute and neat hands, much abbreviated, and at times somewhat difficult to decipher: the following are a few extracts, to the amount, perhaps, of one tenth part, throwing some light upon life and manners in the place at that remote date;—the Latin of the rolls being mostly very corrupt throughout.—

Burghmote Roll for the 16th Henry III. (A.D. 1232) in various places somewhat mutilated and worn:—

"Robert de Ros makes plaint against Alexander de Stalles, that the same Alexander cursed [maledixit] him, and unjustly treated [tuligge] him, in the burgh, the loss or disgrace of which he would not have had for 2 shillings; and as to the same he brings, etc. The same Alexander comes, and says that he ought not to answer, because he [Robert] did not name his compurgators."

"Alexander de Stalles makes plaint against Robert de Ros and his servant [manupastum]; that he (probably the servant) . . . him, and cursed him, and called him a thief, and maltreated him; the disgrace or loss of which he would not have had for 2 shillings; and he brings, etc. The same Robert says that he ought not to answer without his wife. Forasmuch as the dispute touches upon his wife, judgment is put in respite until—"

This may possibly have been a dispute in the market, as the family of "de Stalles," members of which appear in these records for about a century, probably took their names from the Market Stalls in the parish of St. Mary the Less. This Alexander de Stalles, or his son of that name, was afterwards Mayor of the town.

In this Roll it is stated that, at the Burghmote holden on Thursday after the Nativity of St. Mary,—“William Fitz-Simon surrendered the bailiwick of his Mayoralty before the Burghmote, in the year of the reign of King Henry the 16th.” The assize of ale, and of bread and corn, was set at the same Burghmote.

"William Yris [Irish] makes plaint against Bona, that the same Bona came, in the peace of the lord and of the bailiffs, and struck him with a stone on the back, and maltreated him; by which he was injured to the value of 4 shillings; and he brings, etc. The same Bona defends herself sufficiently, word for word, against him, and against his suit . . ." This William Irish appears as a complainant several times, in the roll.

"Robert le Franceis makes plaint against William de Radelee, that he came before his land, and made a certain ditch there, and cursed him, the loss by which he would not have had for 12*s.*, or the shame for 2*s.*, and he now brings, etc. The matter is put in respite until this day fortnight."

"John de Stanford makes plaint against Peter de Wike, that he broke into the park of the lord the King, and carried off his born bondman, without bail, the disgrace of which he would not have had for 12 pence. The same Peter denies it sufficiently for judgment, by waging his law . . ."

At the Burghmote holden on Thursday before the feast of St. Barnabas the Apostle, "a day of love [for reconciliation] was named as between Robert de Ros and Alexander de Stalles."

Burghmote Roll for 17th Henry III. (A.D. 1233) — extracts.—

"The Prior of Wallingford offered himself [as prosecutor] against Walter Knigat [Walterum Militem]. The same Walter did not appear. To judgment, by waging his law, and by sureties." The Priors of Wallingford (which Priory depended upon St. Alban's) frequently appear, as prosecutors, in actions of debt especially, in these rolls.

"William Rusel makes plaint against Walter son of Emma, that he came into the market, and called him a thief, and said that he stole cloth; the loss or disgrace of which he would not have had for one besant [a gold coin of Byzantium], as to which he "produces, etc. At judgment, he is to make his law [or find his compurgators], Robert Gunwaker being surety for his making his law . . ." This Robert Gunwaker will be noticed hereafter.

"Alice, sister of Ralph the Cook, makes plaint against Walter, son of Emma, and says that he called her a harlot, and said that she took thofbote (money for screening a thief) to give warranty as to the said cloth; the damage or disgrace of which she would not have had for 2 shillings, as to which she produces etc. The said Walter denies it sufficiently; at judgment, he is to make his law . . ."

"Richard Culebule makes plaint against Nicholas Threahalfpence [Nichol. iii. ob.] that the same Nicholas came to his house, and took away his horse from his house, and laid hands on his wife, and carried off his blanket [chalouem]; the damage of which, as to his wife, he would not have had for 2*s.*, and the damage as to his horse for half a mark; and as to which he brings etc. The same Nicholas defends himself sufficiently against him and his suit; he is to make his law, his surety being Clement the Clerk."

"John de Sotewelle makes plaint against Richard Pain, that the same Richard came, in the place of the lord (the King) and of the bailiffs, to the quarry of Craumerse [Crowmarsh], and caused his cart and horse to be seized, and carried off an iron of his cart, and detained it, against pledge and surety; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 5 shillings or more; and he brought his suit sufficiently thereon. The same Richard defends himself sufficiently, word for word, against him and his suit. At judgment he is to make his law: sureties for his so making his law, Alexander Dublet and William del Port."

In an action of debt, apparently, "Deaie (or Diay), the Jew, makes plaint against Geoffrey Wheeler; surety to prosecute, Walter de Willoge; surety of the said Geoffrey, William Wheeler."

"These persons are amerced for ale"—breaking the assize as to selling ale.—"The wife of John Boltere,

"Martin Smith, the wife of Swanesot, the wife of William Smith, the wife of Robert de Gose, Alice de Stamford."

"Adam Bulge makes plaint against Henry, the man (or homager) of Edmund, that as they were together at Baldoc, they bought a thousand of salt herrings; and he delivered them to the same Henry to sell; as to which, the same Henry denies as far as 22 pence; whereby the same Adam is damnnified to the amount of 2 shillings; and brings etc. The same Henry denies it sufficiently; at judgment, he is to make his law, his sureties being Geoffrey de Halle, and Nicholas Threahalfpence."

"Simon Fisher makes plaint against Richard de Bensintone, that he broke down his hedge, and cursed his wife, and took away his servant; whereby he is damnnified to the value of 5 shillings, and now he brings etc. The same Richard denies it sufficiently, word for word. At judgment he is to make his law."

"Richard Morilun essoins himself—(i.e. makes lawful plea for delay) against Alan de Winterbroke and John Peeckepen." Unlike the preceding one, this roll is in excellent preservation.

Burghmote Roll for the 22nd Henry III. (A.D. 1238); extracts:—

"Hugh Witer makes plaint against William Scat of Chalgrave, that he came into the market and cursed him, and called him "irichun" (?) before trustworthy men; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 2 shillings or more; and he brings etc. . . ."

"Stephen de Stalles makes plaint against Hugh de la Sakerstare (? of the Sacristy) that he came upon his tenement, and wished . . . (altered and indistinct), and afterwards came into the street, and laid hands upon him, and beat him, and tore his surcote, and ill-treated him; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 5*s.* or more; and now he brings etc. He defends himself sufficiently; at judgment, he is to make his law . . ."

"Walter Hurur (maker of 'hures,' or hairy caps) complains of Ysabel of Hundestrute, for that she cursed him because he asked for one match [i lincellum]; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 6 pence, or more, and now he brings etc. She defends herself sufficiently. At judgment she is to make her law. Surety for her making her law, Gilbert de Hundestrute."

"John Painter makes plaint against Gunnild Eldret, that she came and cursed his wife, and called her 'lankegeye,' and ill-treated her, and called him a thief; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 2 besants or more; and he brings etc. She defends herself sufficiently; at judgment, she is to make her law. . . ."

"Robert de Rom makes plaint against Eustace, that he came and brought a hatchet into the house; and because his wife challenged him with it, he cursed her, and called him an excommunicated man; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 12 pence or more, and he brings etc. The same defends himself sufficiently; at judgment he is to make his law."

"Ralph Molat makes plaint against John Hurlebat, that he cursed him and called him a thief, and tore his clothes, and drew blood of him; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 12 pence or more, and he brings etc. He defends himself sufficiently; at judgment he is to make his law."

"Names of those who were chosen to view Aldita, the relic of Walter Smith; Simon Gurmund, Clement Clerk, Hugh Bulge, Simon Raven."

"Cecily de Chausey makes plaint against Alice Petipas, that she came calling her 'barquene,' (a doubtful word) and threw a cup of ale at her, and took a stick and beat and ill-treated her; the damage or disgrace of which she would not have had for 2 shillings, or for more, and she brings etc. She defends herself sufficiently; at judgment she is to make her law."

"This is a covenant made between Diaye the Jew and Walter le Avenor, namely; that the same Walter is bound to render to the same Jew 2 marks at Easter; and to the same Jew he pledges 3 shillings-worth of rent for the same. This covenant was made before the Burghmote."

"Thomas Lingedrauer [Linedrauer] and his wife make plaint against Robert de Rom, that he called her a harlot, and 'mauquene' (or 'miaquene') in the market; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for 2 shillings, nor yet his wife for 2 shillings, or for more, and they bring etc. And he defends himself sufficiently; at judgment he is to make his law; surety for making his law, Stephen de Stalles."

Roll of about the same date as the preceding:—

"Bartholomew the Mercer makes plaint against Adam de Langeville, his pledge to prosecute being 'Nicholas Threhalfpence'."

"Edanie, the relic of Scaldewater, makes plaint against John le Mustarder; surety to prosecute, Simon de Rokebi; surety of the said John that he will stand his trial, William Wholeheart (Totum Cor). The wife of William Wholeheart and the wife of Robert Heldret make plaint against Aliza de Chausey: sureties to prosecute, William Wholeheart and Robert Heldret; surety for the woman standing her trial, Stephen de Mungewelle."

"Bartholomew the Mercer makes plaint against Hugh son of Amori, that, in the peace of the lord and of the bailiffs, as he went to the fair (feram), he trod upon his boy, and drew blood by his hand from his nose (indistinct here in orig.); the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for half a mark, or more. He defends himself sufficiently against him and his suit. At judgment he is to make his law."

"Pani (or Pavi) la Prestes, also called 'Pani Sacerdotis,' is three times named as being essoined for the offence imputed to her by Aliza, daughter of the Alderman. She probably was the Priest's servant, or housekeeper."

"Aliza, the servant of Nicholas de Stalles, makes plaint against Agnes Pani, that, in the peace of the lord and of the bailiffs, she came into the house of Horied, and beat and ill-treated her, so that she lay in bed 'contra lectum,' apparently 15 days. Also, on the first day when she arose, and went for ale for the use of her master, the said Agnes came in a hostile manner, and took her by the breast, and would have snatched away her fermal [clasp], and tore her chemise [camisiam]; the damage or disgrace of which she would not have had for 5 shillings, or more; at last she had a sufficient suit [set of witnesses]. The said Agnes defends herself sufficiently. She is to make her law; surety for her law being Simon Fisher." At the next Burghmote, these women, Pani la Prestes and Agnes Pani, are 'summoned to come to the borough, to hear the precept of the lord the King.' Agnes Pani, however, gets herself essoined against Aliza, by Hugh Fitz Humphrey.

"A day of love is given to Andrew Basse and Geoffrey de Halle 8 days hence; and unless they agree, the pleas are to be in the same state as on the first day, under a penalty . . ."

Burghmote Roll for the 29th of Henry III. (A.D. 1245), somewhat mutilated and indistinct.—

"Jordan Orfeure makes plaint against Robert Smith, that he called him thief, 'loutere' (indistinct), and 'gang-stake, and ill-treated him; by which he was damned to the value of 12 pence, and he brings etc. The other defends himself sufficiently; at judgment he is to make his law."

"Stephen de Stalles makes plaint against Matillidis, the wife of Hugh, that she came into the house of Gilbert the Cooper, and said that the same Stephen had made her lose 6 pence, and she cursed him, and evilly treated him; by which he was damned to the amount of 12 pence, and he brings etc. She defends herself sufficiently; at judgment, she is to make her law; sureties for her making her law, Simon Raven, Hubert de Hetfeld."

In one case where Hugh Bulge had before accused Augustine Bulge of coming to his seld, and carrying off a chest of clothes, value 2s., at this Burghmote a 'day of love' is given to the said Hugh, on the one side, and Adam and Augustine Bulge, on the other, the Sunday, namely, after the said Court.

"Ralph Perderel makes plaint against William le Poter, that he entered the house of Alice Gartus by breaking the door, and struck him on the head, and broke his head with a stone, and drew blood, and maltreated him, and damned him to the amount of 12 pence, and he brings etc. He defends himself sufficiently; at judgment he is to make his law."

"Henry de Wodecote makes plaint against Henry Duoesden, that he came in the street, and took him by the clothes, and tore them, and broke his head with a stone, and drew blood, and maltreated him; and held him while Robert de Chausey also broke his head; the damage or disgrace of which he would not have had for a mark, or more; and he brings etc. The same defends himself sufficiently. At judgment he is to make his law; sureties for making his law, Adam le Cordwainer, Edmund son of the Goldsmith." It is elsewhere stated that the wound of this Henry was found to be four inches long and (somewhat indistinct) inflicted by two blows, and one inch wide.

Further, in reference to the same man,—"Henry de Wodecote makes plaint against Simon Holle, that he came to his window, and took away one cheese from the window; whereon, the same Henry was beaten on the day of All Hallows, because he asked for the said cheese; the damage of which he would not have had for 2 shillings, or the disgrace for 12 pence, or more; and he brings etc. The same defends himself sufficiently; at judgment he is to make his law." Roll of Pleas, and Burghmote Roll, 50th Henry III. (A.D. 1266).—

"A day of love, by consent of the parties, was given as between Nicholas Orfeure and Brother Walter de Hakeburne, to be reconciled and essoined, so that they come to the next Court; and they found sureties by attorney (attornatum pleg'). Sureties of Nicholas, Robert de Luches, Nicholas de Stalles; sureties of Brother Walter, William Blawe and Richard de Wike: the said plain then to be in the state in which it now remains."

"Because Brother Richard, the Abbot of Radinge, has not come to the chief (capitale) Burghmote, either by way of essoin or by attorney, it was adjudged that the Lord Abbot be distrained to cure his default."

"John le Suoler makes plaint of William Clerk, of Mortimer, as to great violence and injury which he inflicted on him, in the peace of God and the Lord the King, the Aldermen and Bailiffs etc, to wit, on Friday next before the feast of our Lord's Nativity, in the 50th year of the reign of King [Henry] son of King John: whereas the said John sent his boy, Robin Prounce, for ale, to the house of the said William, at the hour of curfew (pirtegiu), he found there certain strangers whom he did not know, either by nation or by name; at length, he standing by, after they had spoken some words among themselves (eo stante quod quod verba locuti fuerant) the said strangers arose, and took the said Robin by his hair and clothes, and despoiled him of one habepiche (P); and if the said Robin had not raised the cry, he would have been still worse despoiled (decalcatus) . . . to his damage and disgrace, 2s."

"William denies violence and injury, damage and disgrace, word for word, and is put to his law."

"Walter the Sacrist (or Sexton) appoints Nicholas de Stalles as his attorney to seek the rent from the Rector of the church of St. Leonard, which he forcibly withholds from him." Elsewhere, he is called "Sacrist of the Priory."

In addition to the preceding, there is a small fragment of a Burghmote Roll, belonging probably to somewhere about the 20th year of Henry III. In it, mention is made that "Alixa cum capillis"—Long-haired Alixa (? Alice)—has herself essoined—excused attendance—on plaint brought against her by Juliana Oriold, by William son of Robert Orfeure being her surety. This Alixa will again come under notice elsewhere. There seems to have been a cross action, for in the same fragment Juliana Oriold has herself essoined against Alixa, first by John Liliot and afterwards by Nicholas de Cukesham; and at the foot of the page we learn the nature of Juliana's case, the entry being, however, in a somewhat fragmentary condition:—

"Juliana Oriold complains of Alixa Longhair, that the same Alixa made excessive distress (namiavit) upon her, and that she took one fermail (or clasp) and one coffer; the loss or disgrace of which she would not have had for 3 shillings or more, and she brought etc. The same Alixa defends herself sufficiently; at judgment, she is to make her law; her surety, Henry del Port."

In one place Isabel de Ros is mentioned as being put on wager of law and surety, "being simply summoned" by Richard Lormerus—probably, the officer of the court. Afterwards, the same Isabel has herself essoined as against John le Ferun (Ironmonger) by one essoin, John Peg. This perhaps was an action of debt, and Isabel was, not improbably, the wife of Robert de Ros, previously mentioned.

Next in date is a long Burghmote Roll, consisting originally no doubt of more, but now, of six membranes, two of them in an extremely tattered and imperfect condition; the date of the earliest Burghmote in which is St. Luke's Day (18th October) in the 2nd year of Edward the First (A.D. 1274). The fragment of the first membrane now remaining is in shreds, and the next one, bearing the date above-mentioned, is greatly mutilated. The following are some extracts:—At the Burghmote holden on the morrow of the feast of Saint Fridiswitha, precept was given to Thomas Saloman, to render one pound of pepper, arrears of a rent of assize, to Sir Hugh de Hoyville, before the next Court, for the place called "Coppescroft," or else to surrender the place by next Court. William Schilli was amerced, for being convicted of making a false loaf, deficient 3 shillings in weight (one ounce and four fifths). The place which Nicholas Oxford held, and afterwards Walter de Esthale, in the parish of St. Michael, was surrendered to the Prioress of Garinge [Goring] for rent withheld, through lapse of time; and the place was so adjudged to the Prioress by the Court. Coppescroft, before mentioned, was finally surrendered also.

Burghmote holden on Thursday after the Feast of St. Katharine, in the 3rd year of King Edward the First. Thomas Lindone was amerced on being convicted of beating his maid-servant, Chayche being his surety. Benedict Arbalester was amerced for committing a trespass upon William le Gayte (Wait, or Watchman), Chayche being his surety.—"Peter de la Wyke makes complaint against Peter Ywon of trespass and disgrace inflicted on him, and that his wife inflicted on him; by imputing to him the crime and scandal, that he sold his wife a sucking-pig (porchet) that was not wholesome, as she said; the loss or disgrace of which he would not have submitted to, for 2 shillings of silver. Peter Ywon denies it against him, brings his suit, [his set of witnesses] and does not make default. Therefore Peter [de la Wyke] is amerced."

Burghmote holden on the day of St. Lucy the Virgin.—"Scuter the Fisherman, and his partner, were amerced, on being convicted of selling fish and buying it, at the water-side, against the prohibition: sureties, Malle and Cache."

Burghmote holden on Thursday after the day of St. Hillary, 3rd Edward. I.—"Be it remembered, that Thomas de Hall found sureties that he would keep good peace and tranquillity against all people, in future, day and night, on pain of paying 20 shillings to the Bailiffs of the borough of Wallingford: and while he has chattels of his own, his sureties shall give him no help in payment of part thereof or of the whole, against their will, and forced thereto. His sureties, Roger de la Garderobe, Nicholas Retaylur, William the Miller, Robert the Taylor, William de Wyke, William le Grederer."—"Peter Wike offered himself against Osbert the Miller, who defended himself. For inquiry by the visnet, whether the same Osbert or his wife sold to the said Peter a sick [infirum] pig or not; a day was given, namely, the Thursday after." Adam Heyprost was amerced, because he broke the pitcher of Matildis Tulle, full of ale; Richard Mariot, his surety. Thomas de Halle (above-mentioned) was amerced on being convicted of behaving himself badly at night-time, fighting in breach of the peace.

Burghmote holden on Thursday after the Feast of St. Vincent, in the same year.—"Inquisition taken between Osbert the Miller and Peter de Wike.—The jurors say that Osbert the Miller and his wife sold to the said Peter a sick pig, and they say that the wife of the said Osbert promised the aforesaid Peter to make him amends, so that she might sell the said pig without any noise (sine tumultu). Wherefore the said Osbert stood amerced." This finding of the jury was afterwards set aside, the jury not having been assented to [ratificata] by the said Osbert. The roll is mutilated at the sixth membrane, and ends with a plaint made by John le Franceys against Osbert the Miller, to the effect that he sold to the said Osbert one acre and a half of land for 40 shillings sterling, and that . . .

The only other Burghmote Rolls, apparently, now surviving, are three out of the original five or more belonging to the 14th year of Edward the Second, some 50 years later in date than the one last-mentioned. The Prior of Wallingford not unfrequently appears here, as plaintiff in actions of debt. Gilbert Orfeure, or Goldsmith, for example, is summoned by the Prior in a plea of detainer of chattels. On non-appearance, he is distrained "by two hammers," and still not appearing, he is ordered to be distrained "from day to day." One of the entries is (in Latin):—"Court of Piepowder, holden on Friday the feast of Saint Richard, in the 14th year of the reign of King Edward." The sole subject discussed before the Court is the alleged detainer of one horse; the case, being adjourned till the next day, is then settled by agreement.

At the next Burghmote, Gilbert the Goldsmith, at suit of the Prior, is distrained by an anvil, value 2 shillings.

"Thomas de Schiptone makes plaint, by his attorney, against John Waps, of Chebseye, that on Thursday before the feast of the Apostles Simon and Jude, in the 14th year of the present reign, the said Thomas made a covenant with the said John that he should make two fish-weels ("nassas," explained by "kydeles" written above it, value 10d.; so as to have them on Saturday in the week of our Lord's Nativity, then next ensuing; on which day the said Thomas came to him, and asked for them, and could not have them, because he withheld them, and still withholds them, to his damage 3s.; and thereon he produces his suit. The said John, being present, admits the said covenant, which he did not keep. It was therefore adjudged, that the said Thomas should recover the damages aforesaid, and for the unjust detainer the said John puts himself at the mercy.

"Osbert le Feror (the Farrier) puts himself at the mercy, because he made himself out to be a Bailiff, and detained a certain tunic belonging to Margaret de Culnham, his maid-servant." Minutes of another Court of Piepowder follow at the foot of this membrane, but a great part is torn away.

At a Burghmote, holden on Thursday after the Feast of St. Dunstan, "Margaret de 3olk" abjured the town for one shirt (camisia) stolen "at the house of Benedict de Glanvyle, and for chattels of John de Louches."

"Precept was given to distrain Richard Elene to answer John de Purytone in a plea of trespass; which Richard is now distrained by one basin, one chest, and one blanket."

"Roger de Saucer, by his attorney, offered himself against William le Thecchere, on plea of debt; who was now so distrained by 3 wimbles, one hatchet, and persour (? piercer): and he does not justify himself, therefore more is to be taken etc."

"Because Peter de Dodecote (now Didcot) was convicted by the whole community of having cursed Nicholas de la Barre, the Mayor, and slandered him, with good and grave people, calling him false, a detractor, and a thief; in despite of the whole community; the same Peter came to this Court and gave pledge to the said Mayor in 100 shillings. And it was further adjudged, that if any one of the community

"be thrice convicted, or if the said Peter be in future twice convicted, of the like offence, against the said Mayor, or any Mayor in future; he shall be deprived of his freedom by sound of bell of the Guildhall."

A recognizance is mentioned as being made "in the Hall of Pleas," probably within the Guildhall.

John Dakyn, who had made plaint against John Wyll, of Redyng, not being present, to support his complaint, he and his sureties are to be amerced, and the horse of Wyll is to be restored to him. John Dakyn, or Dakin, is named more than once.

"Thomas Hermat, by his attorney, offers himself against Robert de la Glache, in a plea of debt: the said Robert is now distrained by one goose and one gauder (ganat), and he does not justify himself; therefore more is to be taken."

Benedict de Glaunville, who is proceeded against in an action of trespass by William, Prior of Wallingford, is first distrained by one brass pot, next by 2 bushels of wheat, and then by one platter; for failing to appear to justify himself.

At the Great Court, holden on Thursday (the Burghmote Day) after the feast of St. Michael, 14 Edward II., many suitors are entered as making default. Among them, John de Miltone is mentioned, the Abbes of Goringe, and the Abbot of Dorkecestre (Dorchester).

The last membrane ends with a statement that the Prior of Wallingford and Benedict de Glaunville, at last, have leave to agree, the latter to be amerced; which amercement however appears to have been remitted. The old form, of assessing the pecuniary mulct by so much "of damage (damnum) and disgrace (pudor)," is no longer observed in the rolls just noticed.

Attached by a parchment thong to this bundle of parchments, some originally belonging to which, for the 14th year of Edward II., are now wanting, is a tally, of white hard wood, with seven notches cut on it. Upon it is written, very distinctly,—"Contra Robertum le Tailleur et Johannam, uxorem ejus, de denariis debitis Ricardo de Langele, mercatori Domini Edwardi, Comitiss Cestrie, istud debitum recuperatur in Curia." Against Robert the Tailor and Joan, his wife, as to moneys due to Richard de Langele, purveyor of Sir Edward, Earl of Chester. This debt is recovered in "Court." The transaction to which the tally refers was probably entered on one of the membranes now lost. The Earl of Chester alluded to, then a child nine years of age, was afterwards King Edward III.

Equal in antiquity with the earliest of the Burghmote Rolls, is a small mutilated leaf of parchment in Latin, having for title—"Rotulus [de] captione terrarum in Wallingford, anno xvi^o regni Regis Henrici filii J. Regis."—"Roll as to the acquisition of lands in Wallingford, in the 16th year of the reign of King Henry, son of King John." It is the only one now existing, of this description; but it may be reasonably surmised that a similar list, or register, was made out for every year.

The first entry is a purchase by John de Stanford of a yearly rent of 5s. 2d. from Christian Lorimer, of Oxford, rendering yearly to him and his heirs one penny, and to the lords of the fee 18d.; the said John first paying to Christian one mark, and to his wife one gold ring.

"Cristina Gery delivered to Clement the Clerk one sold in the churchyard of St. Mary de Stalles, until the next Burghmote after Hockday." The church of St. Mary the Less probably had its name of "St. Mary de Stalles," from selds, or large stalls, being built in the churchyard.

Robert Pekoc takes of Peter le Parmenter one messuage in the parish of Holy Trinity, at a yearly rent to Peter of one pair of white gloves; 18s. having been paid beforehand.

"William Wholeheart took and bought in fee and heirship one perch of land of John Smith, to hold of the said John and his heirs for ever; rendering yearly to Alexander Dubelet, lord of the fee, 7 pence. For the said taking and buying, the said William gave to the said John 6 pence, and to Alexander Dubelet 6 pence beforehand, the Burghmote being witness."

Another document, of a somewhat similar character, is a roll, in fine condition, consisting of 4 long sheets of parchment, sewed together, with the title, in Latin,—

"Roll of amercement and of receipts, in the time of Richard Blacoe and Alexander Dubelet, Reeves, in the 13th year"—of Henry III. (A.D. 1229). The following are some extracts from the entries, some hundreds in number.—

"For assize of ale broken, from the wife of Robert Gunwaker, an amercement 24d. From Thomas Ace, by permission, for one pig 2d. [the pig, probably, like the pigs of St. Antholin's, in London, was to be allowed to roam about the streets]. Mabelia Wueliwi [? Wool-wife] amerced 2d. Of Roger Orpedeman, because he did not bring his yarn [flum] to the borough, amerced 1d. [He allowed forestalling, probably]. For assize of ale broken—of the wife of Walter Pine, amerced 3d. From John de Mungewelle, for getting in his debt from the Lady de Stokes 7d. From Geoffrey de Halle, because he did not bring the man from Bridewelle to the borough—[blank]. Of Walter Knight for getting his debt from Walter Orpedeman 53d. From John Wheeler, because he unjustly distrained a certain man 2d. From Geoffrey, son of the Goldsmith, for the plea between him and Robert Gunwaker 4d. From Thomas Ace, for obtaining a debt from the Archdeacon of Richemund 6d. From William Wholeheart, on pledge of Gilbert 2d. For assize of bread broken, of Cecily Pinpin, amerced 1d. From Richard Wraw, for getting in a debt 2d. From a Jew, for Richard le Lokier 6d. From Isaac the Jew, for Evelota 2d. Acquisition from [adquisitionem super] a man, because he was with Aliz Long-hair [Cum Capillis] 37d."—"She probably had a mark against her, as a bad character."—"From Geoffrey, because he broke the head of Ralph Grim; Hugh Serich [and] Gilbert without the Gate, his sureties, 6d. From the wife of Robert de Ros 1d. From a certain Jew of Oxford, for seisin of the house of Robert de Walton, Isaac being his surety 12d. From Robert Fitz-Reginald, for raising the hue (hue and cry)."

A number of Rolls now follow, one or more of them of greater antiquity than any of those previously mentioned. The earliest is written on two skins of parchment, in good condition, and the handwriting is thoroughly legible: it belongs to the year 1227, and contains a list, under Trades, or rather, Companies representing Trades, of all the inhabitants of Wallingford who in that year were assessed for a certain payment, apparently a tax on income. In a different hand, against each name are entered the various instalments in which the sum so assessed was paid; some few failing to pay altogether. The title of this first roll is,—"Rotulus pactionarium in Walengford, anno regni Regis Henrici, filii Regis Johannis, ximo, Andrea filio Godwini et Waltero Ma Prepositis." "The Roll of payers in Wallingford in the 11th year of the reign of King Henry, son of King John, Andrew Fitz-Godwin, and Walter Ma Provosts." The assessments vary from 4 shillings down to 2 pence. The first 29 names have no trade set against them as a class, but their profits not improbably arose from the sale of corn; the list beginning with Howell, who pays 28 pence in two payments; others being Matthew the Traventer (Letter of carriages), Richard Chesmagere (Cheese-monger), John le Mustardier. The "Sutores," or Shoemakers, follow, 34 in number; Robert de Ros is among them, and pays the highest sum, 3s. 6d. The "Wan-tiers," or Glovers, follow, 17 in number, some persons who were evidently tailors and clothiers belonging to the Company. The "Mercenarii," or Mercers, follow, 44 in number, William Yris (Irish) paying the large sum of 42 pence; among them are, Radulf the Painter, Richard Lokiere (Locksmith), Alexander le Savonier (? the Soper); Godfrey the "Tynekere" of Dorkestre (Dorchester), Richard the "Tynekere"; Hugh the Mercer paying 4 shillings, the largest sum paid. Then follow the "Ferrones," or Ironmongers, 7 in number; the Fabri, or Smiths, 12 in number, Thomas le Linge-drapier (Linen-drapier), being one of them, and paying 32 pence, probably a man of some opulence; then the Carpenters, their number being 10, and including Wheelers and Coopers; 4 Weavers; 5 Fullers; and Bakers, 17 in number. At this point the Roll stops short, the latter half of the membrane, containing Fishermen and others, as in the next, having been cut away. On the reverse of the Roll are the payments exacted from the Forenuses, or Market-men, many, from their names, being inhabitants of the adjoining villages, Ewelme, Bensinton, Preste Craumerse, Wittenham, Newnham, Pangburne, Dorchester, Moleford, Ward-berge (Warborough), and Chalfgrave. Among them, a man with the name of "John Pesewips," pays 6 pence. The largest sum paid in this class, is 25d. by Gilbert Justise. Many of them were so poor evidently, that they were forced to find town's people as their surety, (a thing that became the rule, apparently, afterwards in all cases); Robekin, for example, with Mabel Tynebi as his surety, was assessed at 2 pence, of which no payment is entered. One man, Richard Brusebastun (Breakstick) by name, has John Scaldewater (a butcher in the town) as his pledge for payment of 3 pence, which he also seems not to have paid. John the Physician, of Niwebire (Newbury), is assessed at 18 pence, Ralph the Clerk being his surety; no payment is entered. For Henry de Scillingford (Shillingford) who pays 8 pence, Richard Wrawe is surety. This roll ends with 12 "Market-women," mostly with sureties, Scolastica of Pangeburne having Greta as her surety for 6 pence. Three have the Christian name of "Aliz," also at times written as "Alixa," the modern Alice.

The next in order that has survived is a like Roll for A.D. 1230—"the 14th year of the reign of King Henry," son of King John, in the time of Hugh Serich and "Stephen Provost." As before, the opening list of names has no trade set against it. The form "Ead-mund" occasionally appears both here and elsewhere. In this list Robert le Pig is assessed at 3d., of which he is "quit;" Richard Babel being assessed at 6d., which he seems not to have paid, and Richard Wraw, already mentioned, paying the large sum of 40 pence. The "Carnifices," or Butchers, appear here as a Company, 12 in number; in the preceding roll most of the same names appear grouped together, but no title of a trade is set against them. Nicholas Putti and John Kikebotte are in the number. Among the Shoemakers, Robert de Ros this year pays the large sum of 4 shillings: Thomas Taie and Thomas Swanesot are other names in the list. "Bolteres" (perhaps meaning "Millers"), five in number, also appear in the list. Thomas the Linendrapier, who was in the list of Blacksmiths in the preceding roll, is, more appropriately, among the "Mercers" in this. The "Piscatores," or Fishermen, whose names were cut off from the preceding roll, are here 14 in number. The obverse of the roll ends with a list of Women, assessed as residing in the town, and (probably) as earning incomes of their own, on which the assessment is made. Among them are "Pania Sacerdotis," the Priest's servant Pania, elsewhere "Pavi," or "Pau;" Havis, amica Roberti.—Havis, mistress of Robert; "Aliz la Rumble;" "Bona," paying the comparatively large sum of 16 pence, and "Yngeleis" of 20 pence; from 2d. to 8d. being the sums usually paid by the women. "Edonia Scaldewater" pays 8 pence, and "Aliz cum Capillis"—Long-haired Alice—already mentioned, 2 pence; Aliz la Lavendere (Laundress) pays 2 pence, and Cecily Pippin, elsewhere "Pipin," is assessed at 6 pence. "Matidis la Wexmangere" or "Wexmangerestre," (the Waxmonger), pays 4 pence.

On the reverse of the roll, after the "Forenses," or "Market-men," a list is given of the inhabitants of Craumerse (now Crowmarsh) paying contributions; on a smaller scale, apparently, than persons from a greater distance. The last person in this list is "Ricardus cum albo colle," Richard Whiteneck, of Basteleford, assessed at 2 pence. Among the Market-women, "Oreng de Craumerse" is named, but without any assessment. "John Peckepain," or Peckepani, is assessed at 2 pence, and "William the Henmonger" is named, but without an assessment.

The next roll, of a similar description, is for the 16th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1232,) in the time of Simon Gurmund. . . . Provosts, being somewhat mutilated at the beginning. In the opening list, without any Company mentioned, is "Radulf de la Secrestainerie," Radulf of the Sacristy, assessed at 8 pence. Robert de Ros is still foremost among the Shoemakers, paying 40 pence. Among the women assessed, "Havis, the mistress of Robert," still pays 4 pence; "Albreta Rustic" pays 12 pence; "Agnes la Curtaise" is named, but not assessed. "Matilda la Leche," probably the "sage femme" of the place, pays 20 pence, and "Sueta relict of Alan," 2 shillings; "Julia Busse" pays 3d., and Long-haired Alice, 4 pence. Alexia, described as "Amica Roberti de Eppolford,"—Mistress of Robert de Eppolford, pays 2 pence. The "Feminas forenses," or Market-women, are but 14 in number; among them "Williamus Pede ferro," William Ironfoot, pays 6 pence; Richard de Witteham, vinckare, 4 pence. At the close of this roll there are eight lines in Latin, of which the following is a translation:—"Delivered by Simon Gurmund, of the rent of Wallingford, at the first visit of the Lord the King, on the day of St. Denis, to the 'Serjeants of the Market, in hay and oats 11d. At the second visit of the Lord the King, for the feast of St. Edmund, to the Serjeants of the market, in hay and oats, 11d.; parchment 1d. To Henry the Clerk, for his service, at Christmas Term, 15d. To the Prebendary ("prebennario") 7s. 8½d. At the visit of the Lord the King before Our Lord's Ascension, to the Serjeant of the market, in hay and oats 10½. To Henry, Clerk of St. Mary's 15d. To Alexander Dublet, for his journey to London 18d. At the last visit of the Lord the King, before the feast of St. Michael, to the serjeants of the market 6d. To the Prebendary, for the Term of St. Michael 7s. 8½d. For the expenses of the . . . of the prebendary, Ralph Culebule 4d. To William Pret, for his horse for London 8d."

At this time, King Henry was staying, at times probably, at Windsor and Woodstock; and his visits to his youthful brother, Richard, Earl of Cornwall, at the Castle at Wallingford, would be not unfrequent.

The next roll is for the 18th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1234), Richard Blawe and Robert de Ros being Provosts: it is in good preservation, and beautifully written. In the opening list of payments, without Trade or Company mentioned, William "Pede fracto," Brokenfoot, is assessed at 10 pence. Robert de Ros, being Provost, does not here appear among the Shoemakers; the Provosts evidently being exempt. Thomas the Linendrapier, the rich Mercer, here disappears. Among the Women, Parnelle is assessed at 4 pence, John Three-halfpence being her surety. "Alicia cum Capillis," Long-haired Alice, pays but 2 pence, and in after lists her name also appears, but ultimately with no sum against it. Among "Market-men" this year, William Pelekoo is assessed at 6 pence. At the close of the roll, among other matters of no interest, there is an entry as to the King's visit in Lent.

The next roll, much mutilated at the commencement, is for the 19th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1235), Hugh Serich and John Hentelue being Provosts. Robert de Ros no longer appears. The "Forenses," or Market-men, are very numerous; among them is named—"De quodam homine de Craumerse, cum caudelis"—A certain man of Craumerse (Crowmarsh) with caudels; assessed at 4 pence, H. Brid being his surety. At the end of the roll there are a few lines in Latin, to the following effect:—"Delivered by Hugh Serich, at the first visit of the Lord the King, to the serjeants of the market, 15s.; at the second visit of the Lord the King 7d. At the third visit, to the serjeants of the market, 10d. To the prebendary, for Easter Term, 7s. 7½d. Also, to the Prebendary, 7s. 7½d."

The next roll, somewhat mutilated at the beginning, is for the 20th year of King Henry III. (A.D. 1236), Alexander [Dublet and John Hentelue being Provosts.] There is nothing in it that deserves notice, save that a woman, under the name of "Pimma," (P Pinpin) is assessed at 2 pence. There is a Latin entry at the end, of a portion of which the following is a translation.—"Livery by John Hentelue of the rent.—At the first visit of the Lord the King, to the serjeants of the market, 13½d. At the second visit, the Feast of All Hallows, for bread and ale to the said serjeants, 4d. To Henry the Clerk, for his service in St. Thomas's Term, 2s. 6d. To the Prebendary, for Easter Term, 7s. 7½d. Be it remembered that William Pret received of the payers 4s. 5d., and the said William lent Nicholas de Stalles, 3d., and Clement the Clerk, 3s. Journey from Burchamsted, on paying the rent, 17½d. For repairing the trebuchet (cucking-stool), 7½d."

There is a gap now of six years; and the next roll is that for the 26th year of the same reign (A.D. 1242), Simon Raven and John le Ro being Provosts. Though but little of it is lost, the roll is in a very mutilated condition. The assessments are now less than formerly, though, under Shoemakers, William Wisdom pays the comparatively large sum of 34 pence; and John the Bolter pays 3 shillings. John Turnepine, as a Mercer, is assessed at 8 pence, and William Gudlak (now Godlake) at 2 shillings. Among the Women, the person styled only "Pimma" before, is probably the one here assessed at 8 pence, as "Pimma Tinebi." An assessment that was entered of 8 pence, is struck out against the name of Alice La Dumble; Cecily Spinnewelle (a name probably indicating her vocation) is assessed at 4 pence. At the end of the Roll is a short entry in Latin, as follows:—"Delivered to Simon Raven, the Mayor, when he went to London, about the tallage, 18d. At the coming of the Justiciars Itinerant, for wine, 5d. For a dinner (dinner) to Richard le Crior and his fellows, 12d. For litter, 2½d. To Henry the Clerk, for 2 terms, 40d."

Before proceeding to notice the few rolls of this description bearing date later than A.D. 1250, it may be remarked that there are several fragments of, or rather imperfect, rolls, the dates of which have been torn away, but which, from internal evidence, belong to various periods between the years 1228 and 1250. Of one, the date probably 1231 or 1233, the commencing membrane is wanting: it begins with the Companies of the Carpenters, Weavers, Fullers, and Bakers. The names of 45 women then appear, among them Edania Scalde-water, and others already noticed. Among the assessments of the people of Craumerse (now Urowmarsh), Osbert de Niweham (now Newnham) pays 4 pence. At the close of the roll is an entry in Latin, from which the following are extracts:—"Liverty by John Le Stur; to one man, who took a writ to the Seneschal, for the Bishop of Winchester, 5*d*. To Alexander Dublet, when he went to Radinge, for the 40th, 7*3d*. To Henry the Clerk, for the Term of St. Thomas 15*d*. For parchment 2*d*. To Rowland Trembe[le], at the visit of the Lord the King, 5*d*. To the carpenter who made the stocks, 1*d*. On the King's visit, at the Feast of St. Laurence, to Richard Trembele, 6*d*." Henry, Clerk of St. Mary's, or "the Clerk," so often mentioned, was probably the Common Clerk of Wallingford; he was succeeded by Hugh.

Six other rolls, each consisting of several membranes, follow this, the commencing part, with the date, in each case, being torn away. The first of them belongs probably to the year 1231 or 1233, as Thomas the Linendrapier is here named, among the Mercers, who has disappeared in the roll for 1234. Among the "Market Women" Orengede de Craumerse is assessed at 4*d*., and Justine of Wantinge (Wantage) at 2*d*., R. Culebule being her surety. Andrew "Stigant," is mentioned as a "Market-man" in these rolls, more than once.

The date of the next roll, imperfect at the beginning is about 1237. Among the female residents, Pancia Sprot is assessed at 10 pence, Elena Kotlif, elsewhere Kotlif, at 3*d*., "Greta, daughter of Crips" at 4 pence, Lucy Koc at 7*d*., and, next to her, Claria Bolle at 10*d*. On the reverse the following is faintly written, in Latin,—"Delivered to William the Clerk, on the visit of the Lord the King, after the Purification of St. [Mary], in corn, oats, and ale, 15*d*. To the Prebendary, for Easter Term, 7*s*. . . . To Henry the Clerk, for two terms 40*d*. To the Castle, for two terms, 10*d*." For the Term of St. Michael to the same 9*d*. For cups sent to the Countess, 2*s*."—This last item bears reference to the Countess of Cornwall, Isabel, daughter of William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, wife of Richard, Earl of Cornwall; she died in 1240.

The next deed, mutilated at the beginning, belongs probably to the year 1238, or 39. Among the Company of Bakers, "Osbert the Baker" is assessed at the large sum of 32 pence; and "John Gentilman," belonging to the same Company, at 8 pence. Among the Women, "Juliana Cook" appears more than once; this year she is assessed at 16 pence. At the end of this roll, there is a long note in Latin, to the following effect:—"Delivered by Simon Roven, at the visit of the Lord the King, before Our Lord's Nativity, to the sergeants of the market, in hay 10*4d*., oats 18*d*., litter 2*4d*.; to their grooms (garconibus) 10*d*. for ale for them 3*d*. To the Prebendary 7*s*. 6*d*. To Henry the Clerk, for his services 2*s*. 6*d*. For parchment 3*d*. At the visit of the Lord the King, after the feast of St. John the Baptist, to the sergeants of the Market 19*d*. At the visit of the Lord the King, before the feast of St. Mary Magdalen. To the sergeants of the Market, for bread 7*d*. To Henry the Clerk, for his services in St. John's Term 15*d*. At the visit of the Lord the King, before the feast of the Assumption of St. Mary. To the sergeants of the Market 3*d*. To Henry the Clerk, for his service in the Term of St. Michael 6*d*. For wine sent to the Earl 2*s*. For the pitchers 5*4d*. For a present sent to the Countess 12*d*."

The next roll, imperfect at the beginning, belongs probably to the year 1239 or 40. "Yngulfus de Winterburne," a Mercer, is assessed at 8*d*.; John the Butler and Osbert the Baker, at 3*s*. respectively, the largest sums; John le Cnave, a carpenter, at 15*d*. A woman with the sole name of "Gunnelina," is assessed at 12*d*.

The next roll, imperfect at the beginning, belongs probably to the year 1244 or 45. "Walter Gutlac" appears among the Mercers, assessed at the comparatively large sum of 20 pence.

The next roll, imperfect at the beginning, belongs probably to about the year 1250: the list of Bakers and of the Women who paid the tax, being the only portion left. Among the latter, "Cristina Moppe" is assessed at 2 pence, and Cinclothe Bedewind at 3 pence. Among the Market-women, Ybbe of Watlinton 5*d*., and "Cristina, daughter of the Dean (Decani) of Craumerse

"4*d*": the latter entry suggests the query whether "Dean" here was merely a surname.

There is also a small fragment of a roll, similar to the preceding ones; containing about twenty names, and nothing more.

The next roll is imperfect at the beginning, but its date probably is about 1265. This was a time of civil war, and the assessments are so low as to be indicative of great poverty. In so much of the roll as is left, more than one half probably, only three persons are assessed at so high a sum as 2 shillings. The lowest assessment is that of Editha le Tynekere, at 2 pence.

The next roll, consisting of 3 membranes, with the exception of only a small fragment, is perfect; being the Account for the 51st year of Henry III. (A.D. 1267), William de Wyke and Walter Skympayn being Provosts. Among those belonging to no Company, or Trade, William Yris (Irish) is assessed at 4*s*., Robert the Preacher at 12*d*., and William de Mortimer, Clerk, at 12*d*. A new set of Traders appears, under the name of "Arconarii"; they appear to take the place of the preceding "Bolteres," but, in increased numbers. Among the Glovers is "Johannes cum una manu,"—John One-hand, assessed at 4 pence. Among the "Market-folks," "Magota, daughter of the Clerk of "Sotewelle," is assessed at 4 pence, and "William Tredewater, of Witthurche," at 11 pence; "William Bugge" at 6 pence; and "Editha de la Streme, of "Prestecrawmerse," 3 pence, having the wife of Geoffrey Wheeler for her surety.

A roll, of 2 membranes, belonging, probably, to the earlier half of the reign of Edward I., the commencing part of it being now lost: the writing is very indistinct throughout. Like the preceding ones, it contains a list of assessments, with the payments, frequently by instalments, set against them. The callings of the persons entered at the beginning of the list, as before, are not mentioned. The Butchers then follow, headed by Alan Pulegenet, elsewhere written Plukenet: an Alan Plukenet is mentioned by Trivet the Chronicler, p. 365 (Ed. Hog) as being named one of the Council of Prince Edward in 1297, and in p. 71 of the Liber Custumary of the City of London (printed ed.), by the title of Sir Alan Plokenet, as attending in the Guildhall at London, with the other members of the royal Council, in the 25th of Edward I., to announce the abolishment of the custom of taking prisage on flesh-meat, bread, ale, and other victuals, in the King's name; a tyrannical usage which, by royal order, was thereupon given up.—The Plukenes, it may be remarked, were an ancient family, settled at Lamborne, near Hungerford, in Berkshire.—Another butcher on the list has simply the name of "Tymeoff-day"; his assessment, 3 shillings, is the largest in the list. The Corvisarii, or Shoemakers, follow, 29 in number. The "Tixtores," or Weavers, are six in number. Henry Munfort, or Montfort, whose name appears more than once elsewhere, is one of them. The "Arconarii" before mentioned, then follow, succeeded by the Citrohecuri, or Glovers, and the Carpenters; Hugh Mustard, who was probably what we should call a "Grocer" by trade, being one of the latter by Company; indeed, it seems clear from the lists, that then, as now, persons styled as of such and such a trade, did not of necessity exercise that vocation. About 50 women, dealers in the town, close the list; among them, Dionisia Yris (Irish), Tomason Haurd, Emma Fabian, Matilde la Hupholdestre, Mukept, and Alice Plotere de Helle,—a name which, to say the least of it, is a very singular combination. On the reverse of the roll is a list, first of assessments of persons in some localities in the near vicinity. The names then follow of persons in the following localities:—Nuchnam, Crawmerse, Garing, Wodecote, Ippesden, Bensintone, Prestecromers, Ewelme, Berewyk, Mungewelle, Ocle; of the 36 names of persons given, about half are illegible.

The next, probably, in date, is a roll on one long skin of parchment, somewhat mutilated at the beginning, and headed as follows:—"Rotulus pactionum Burgi Walingforde, anno regni Regis Edwardi X^o nono, tempore Willelmi Mod . . . et Henrici de Basinges."—"Roll of payments of the Burgh of Walingforde, in the 19th year of the reign of King Edward, in the time of William Mod . . . and Henry de Basinges." It belongs, no doubt, to the reign of Edward I. The assessments are set against most of the names, and most persons, in this instance, on payment of one half, are "quit." It begins with 12 names of persons who pay upon their profits from corn and fish; and this, though not so expressed, may have been the case with all the opening lists of names in the preceding rolls. Curteys pays 9 pence, the largest sum, with one exception, named. As before, Alan Plukenet heads the list of Butchers, charged at 4 pence. William de Maundevele, a butcher, also pays 4 pence. Among the Corversers, or Shoemakers, John le Dinur pays 3 pence. Four Weavers follow, among them, Henry le Hattere (the Hatter), paying 3 pence. Five "Feronies," or Ironmongers, come next; then Bakers, Robert Doget paying as much as 9 pence. Glovers follow; among them Richard le Notare (the Notary), with no sum against his name; then Carpenters. No "Arconarii" appear here, and no list of "Fœminæ." Women, is given; but a list of "Anxionar" appears, including the names of 15 women, (one or more of whom appear by name in the preceding roll,) and 5 men. These, not improbably, were Poulterers by trade, the word seemingly having its origin in "auca," mediæval Latin for a goose. Among the men, the name of "Radulphus Scriptor" (Ralph the Writer) appears. At the end of these, in a smaller hand, is added—"De Waltero Felawe, pro tolmeto veterum pannorum 14d."—"From Walter Felawe, for toll on old clothes 14 pence." Then follows a list of "Conventuarii Forincci"—Foreign Covenanters,—of Mortone, Estone, Blebire, Optone, Hakeburne, Chauseye, Sotwellle, and Britte-welle. Among them is Roger de Wycumbe, for whom W. de Maundevele is surety, and who pays 2 pence, and is quit. Richard Sanguine has P. le Carters for his surety, and pays 4 pence. "Matildia Herodes" has no sum against her name. On the reverse of the Roll is a list of "Foreign Covenanters" of Nywenham, Stokes, Garing Wodecote, Ypsedene, Ewelme, Okle, and Craumerse. William le Vacher (the Cowherd) has J. Tymoudays for his surety, and is quit on paying 3 pence. Richard le Rammere (2 breeder of rams) pays the comparatively large sum of 12 pence. The "Foreign Covenanters" for Schylingford and Dorkecestre then follow, Thomas and Stephen de Warburwe (now Warbrough) appearing in the list. The Roll closes with about 40 additional names, entered in another hand; among them are the somewhat singular names of "Robert Lang-heregawd" and "Roger Mainwrenche." In this roll the names of persons residing within the town are much fewer than in the preceding one, the date of which is, no doubt, prior to it.

The next roll consists of two long membranes, the stitch-marks at its head shewing that the commencing one is lost. In its character it is like the roll mentioned before the preceding one, giving a much more lengthy list of names, and beginning in the middle of the list of Shoemakers. Among the "Arconarii," before taken to mean Bolters, William Goldeye and Hugh Godaventure are named. Among the Glovers, John Ybraame is mentioned. Among the Weavers, persons who derived their origin from Witney, Northampton, and Trumington, are mentioned. The Women here, again, form a class by themselves, Asselina Caseatrix (the Cheese-wife), and Alice la Gredestre being of the number. The Roll ends with a miscellaneous, but short, list of names, of men and women, but no "Foreign Covenanters" as such, are mentioned.

The next Roll of this description, a long sheet of parchment, in good condition, belongs to the year 22, 23 of Edward the First (A.D. 1295), Richard de Cyppeham and Thomas Gratarde being Reeves. Among the Covenanters for payments on profits from corn and fish, Robert le Cornnongere is charged the largest sum, 2 shillings; Walter Smith is charged 18d., and Richard le Curteys 12d. Jordan Skylli is named among the Bakers, but not assessed. No women are mentioned, under that title, but under the head of "Anxionar" several are included. Among the "Foreign Covenanters," Roger le Garlikmongere pays 6 pence, the Wife of Richard Sebrt (Sebright) 4d., William le Doo, 12d., John le Belsire 18d., Juliana the Dairywoman (Daye) of Preste Crowmershe 6d. Alice la Plottere (nothing added to the name, which has been already noticed), appears among the "Anxionar," paying 6 pence. Among the Glovers are named Richard Kykaw and William Maggementel. A locality called the "Vorteye" is twice mentioned.

Some Exitus Curie, Issues of Court, or Fines exacted, are added at the end; among them, 4 pence from the servant (manupasto) of John Young, for raising the hue and cry. Walter de Dodecote (now Didcot) the porter, is fined 6d. for trespass. There are two copies of this roll, but one of them is without the "Exitus Curie."

A mutilated roll follows this, much of the commencing portion being torn away, but enough remaining to shew that it belongs to the twenty—year of Edward the First.—"Robert Hentekake" is assessed, as a Carpenter, at 8 pence. "Mary, the wife of Cytunden," is mentioned among the "Anxionar" the only instance in which that Christian name has been met with. Alan Plukenet heads the list of Butchers, being assessed at 6 pence, and William de Maundevele at the like sum.

Some rolls, of almost equal date with the earliest, but of another description, now follow; containing an account of fee-farm rents, due, apparently, from all persons holding houses or land in Wallingford, the Earl of Cornwall, probably, the recipient thereof. Many of the humbler persons named in the preceding deeds, are not mentioned here, probably as being lodgers, or undertenants, only. The earliest in date (A.D. 1229) has its title in Latin, thus translated:—"Roll of the rents of Wallingford, in the 13th year of the reign of King Henry, son of King John, in the time of Alexander Dubelet and Richard Blawe, Provosts." Many persons also appear here, who, as being in no way connected with trade, never appear in the other rolls. Alexander Dubelet is, to all appearance, the greatest landowner, as he is entered in this, the earliest roll, as paying the various sums of 6d., 16d., 8d., 3½d., 17s., 9d., and of 10d. "for the sold." One halfpenny, by "Thomas Kake," is the smallest sum paid. Henry de Appelford pays 4s. 4d., Hugh Vinter, 7s. 4½d., the Prior of the Holy Trinity, 6s. 11½d., the Brethren of St. John's 14d., Richard Leawte (Loyalty) 12d., Robert de Ros, whom we have met with in the Company of Shoemakers, 43d., "the heirs of Roger Seikwite," 12d., "Hosbert the Baker," 4s., "Geoffrey Cheken," 6d. "Carnifices," the Butchers, are a class by themselves, generally with higher rents; being probably paid for shambles in addition to houses. "Flowento" is named among them, as paying a rent of 2 shillings. "Robert Pekoc" is entered for 4s. rent as a butcher, Peter Pekoc, 2s., and Walter Knight for two rents, of 4s. and 2s. respectively. The list ends with nine "Tenements which belonged to Master Christian," the rents varying from one shilling up to one mark, paid by Ralph the Clerk and Nicholas Threepence respectively. John and William Threepence also occur. The entries in this roll, which is finely written, are from 160 to 170 in number.

The next roll is for the 15th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1231), Clement and Robert le Franceis being Provosts, or Reeves. In its details it of course greatly resembles the preceding roll, of two years before. William Cotlif is named as paying a rent of 4 pence, apparently for a small butcher's place, while Simon de Rokebi, who immediately precedes him, pays as much as 6s. 2d. for his house and stall. The tenement, at a rent of one mark, before held by Nicholas Threepence, is now held by William Wholeheart (Totum Cor). On the reverse of this roll is an entry, in Latin, somewhat mutilated, of which the following is a part.—"Delivered by Robert le Franceis. For parchment, 2d. To Henry the Clerk, for his service, 5s. At the visit of the lord the King, on the day of Epiphany—to the sergeants of the Market, 4d. For hens for a present which was made to the Earl and the Bishop of Cardoil [Walter Maucclerk, Bishop of Carlisle] . . . 4d. For repairing the pillory and trebuchet (cucking-stool), 16½d. To the prebend of the Lord the King, 7s. 8½d. [For repairing] the wall before the door of James the Chaplain, 1d. At the coming of the lord the King to Wallingford . . . for hay and oats, 8d. At the first coming of the Countess, [Isabel, who had been married the year before] providing in her behalf, from John . . . To the Mayor, when he went to London, on the matter of Craumerse; . . . For the first journey, when Robert le Franceis went to Burchamstede [for one horse hired] 6d., to the carrier [indistinct] 2d., for expenses 8½d. For the second journey, for one horse hired 6d., for the carrier . . . When Alexander Dublet went with him, 21½d. For putting an edging on the robe of . . . For a present sent to the Lord Bishop of Cardoil [Carlisle] at Huntercumb 5s. 1d. To the clerk . . ." The Bishop of Carlisle was at this time Lord Treasurer; but soon afterwards he lost the office.

The next roll is for the 19th year of Henry III. [A.D. 1235], Hugh Sericht and John Hentelune being Provosts. Alms derived from the rents this year are, to Garinge [Goring], 12s., Dorkecestre [Dorchester] 2s. The grant was, no doubt, to the small Nunnery at Goring, and the Priory of Black Canons at Dorchester. There are a few entries, in Latin, on the reverse of this roll, which is in fine condition; among them,—"For a present sent to the Countess, 12s. For Alexander

"Dubelet, when he went to Radinge, before the Justiciars Itinerant, 33d."

The earlier part of the next roll is in tatters; it is for the 20th year of the same reign [A.D. 1236], Alexander de Stalles and William Pret being Provosts. Similar allowances of alms for Garinge and Dorkecestre are made at the end, as in the preceding year. On the reverse there is the following entry, in Latin:—Delivery of Alexander de Stalles to the Prebendary for Easter Term 7s. 7½d. To a messenger of Sir Robert de Lexington 6d. To a messenger to the Prior of Winton 8d. For repairing the trebuchet 18d. For parchment 2d. Be it remembered that Alexander de Stalles paid to John de Mungewelle for one mutton, 22d. To William the Carpenter, for repairing a seat in the barn [ore] of Peter the Vintner, against the coming of Sir Robert de Lexington 2½d. For a present sent to the Seneschal 6½d. For a journey to Burchamsted, to pay the ferm [rent] 17½d. For a groom [garçion] who went to Burchamsted 2d. To the Prebendary, for Michaelmas Term 15s. 2½d. To Henry the Clerk 5s. At the second visit of the lord the King, to the Sergeants of the Market 4d. To John Hentelune, going to Burchamsted to pay the ferm 2s. To Henry the Clerk [?] for his service [de servisia sua] 12d. . . . for a present sent to the Lord the Earl, 2s. Jo John Hentelune 5s. To the same John, from the King's rents . . . 3s. 1½d. To Walter Knight, for one mutton, 22d."

Robert de Lexington, named above, was probably at this time Senior Justiciar; on having to sit here, on some judicial business, no place more convenient for his sitting could probably be found than the barn of Peter the Vintner; if such is the meaning of "orea;" possibly "area," a threshing-floor, may be meant.

The next roll is for the 28th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1244), William Clerk and Geoffrey de Wike being Provosts; it is mutilated at the end, and part of it is lost. Alexander Dubelet is still living, or, possibly, his son, of the same name. There is the following entry, in Latin, on the reverse:—"Delivery of Geoffrey de Wike.—At the visit of the Lord the King, at our Lord's Nativity, for bread and wine 15d. For parchment 4d. For repairing the tumbrel 6d. To Henry the Clerk, for his service two terms 40d. To the prebendary, for Easter Term 7s. 6d. To the prebendary, for Michaelmas Term 15s. 2½d. For cups sent to the Countess 4s. Payment made in the Castle "20h." This Countess was Earl Richard's second wife, Sauchia of Provence, married 23rd November, 1243.

The next roll, much mutilated, is for the 36th year of Henry III. (A.D. 1252), Simon Raven and Alan Clerk being Provosts. The rents now paid, individually, are not so large as they were. A William Wholeheart occupies the tenement held by a person of that name, at the same yearly rent of one mark, more than twenty years before. Here however, his name is given, not in Latin, but under a French form, "William Tut Quer." There is the following entry, in Latin, on the reverse:—"Delivery of A [lan] Clerk.—For parchment 2d. To Hugh the Clerk, for his service half a year 8s. For the Term of Hokeday and the Term of St. John, delivered to P. de Esrugge [Ashridge] 10h. Delivered for the Term of St. Michael 10h. 5s. For the expenses of Alan Clerk, N[icholas] de Stalles, Clement Clerk, and Stephen de Stalles, going to Radinge, to demand the liberty of the vill before William de Haxemue, Justiciar of the Lord the King, for the coinage, 14½d. At the visit of the Lord the King, to the Sergeants of the Market 4d. Expenses of A[lan] Clerk at London, to demand a court 28d. Delivered at the coming of E[gidius] de Erdinton 2s." Giles de Erdentone was one of the Justiciars. The entry then goes on, after a vacant space left, in reference not to Alan Clerk, the Provost, but another person called "A. Medicus," A. the Physician.—"Be it remembered that A. the Physician here answers to the vill for 3h. 8s. 8½d., from Saturday the Eve of St. Matthew, when he accounted in the 37th year. Of which A. the Physician will render to Simon Raven 12s. And so he owes 56s. 8½d."

The lower portion of a Roll, mutilated at the beginning, belongs probably to the year 1232, or 33, from the resemblance of its contents to those in the latter part of the roll for 1231. It has only one line (in Latin) on the reverse.—"Delivery of John Robert [Fitz Robert].—to Henry the Clerk for 2 terms 2s. 6d. For parchment 2s. At the visit of the Lord the King, 6d."

There is another mutilated roll, of probably two or three years' later date: it is written in a larger hand, on four pieces of parchment. The beginning has been torn away, and at the end the person before named as "William Tut Quer," (or Wholeheart) is here styled "Tuquer." There is no entry on the reverse, save that it is stated, in Latin, that "On the Day of St. Denis arrears of rent are accounted for, 7h. 14s. 3½d."

It deserves notice what a singular variety of female names is to be found in these rolls, more especially so as compared with those found in the records of the City of London, a century to a century and a half later, where almost every second female was called either "Joan" or "Cristina," names which are here of great rarity.—Omitting the more ordinary names, such, for example, as Susanna, Matildis, Margery, Editha, Felicia, and the like, the following variety is here to be met with.—Estrilda, Scolastica, Elewiz, Aliz or Alixa, (for Alice), Claria, Asselina, Claricia, Hawis, Bona, Yngeleis, Justine, Gunnild, Dionisia, Edania (7 for Idonea), Sabelina, Alota, Edelota, Evelota, Orenge, Roysa or Rois, Albreta or Albrecta, Sueta, Basille, Limota, Elmata, Agasa, Aldita, Joweta, Pimma, Ydelota, Greta (7 or Greca), Deonira, Wymarca, Plancia, Ysoda, Helietta, Adula, Marcilia, Gunelina, Cinelote, Magota, Tomason, Ybbe. The English Court, so often held there, and the frequent visits of the nobility with their retainers, had no doubt been the means of introducing many of these names.

A number of miscellaneous documents now follow, that do not admit of being classified, but are here noticed, more or less at length, in chronological sequence.

A small parchment deed, of which there are two copies, one with the episcopal seal appended, in fair condition, in green and red wax; in the other it is now lost; date 1287.—

"Universis sancte Matris Ecclesie filiis, ad quorum notitiam pervenerit hæc scriptura, Ricardus, miseratione divina, Episcopus Herefordensis, salutem in Domino sempiternam. Cupientes per allectiva indulgentiarum munera mentes et animos devotorum ad pietatis opera propensius excitare, de Omnipotentis Dei misericordia, gloriosæ Virginis Mariæ Genitricis Ipsius, Beati Eichelberti, Regis ac Martyris, omniumque Sanctorum, meritis confidentes, omnibus parochianis nostris, et aliis quorum diocesani hanc nostram indulgentiam ratam habuerint, vere de peccatis suis contritis, penitentibus, ac confessis, qui de bonis a Deo sibi collatis ad sustentationem Hospitalis Beati Johannis de Walyngeford, Sarebriensis diocesis, et fratrum infirmorum ac pauperum existentium in eodem, aliqua contulerint sen legaverint subsidia caritatis, triginta dies indulgentie, auctore Domino, concedimus per præsentem. In cuius rei testimonium, sigillum nostrum præsentibus duximus apponendum. Datum apud Arleye, vi. Kalendas Januarii, anno Gratie MCC octogesimo septimo. An indulgence of 30 days, granted to those bestowing alms upon the Hospital of St. John at Walyngeford, and the sick brethren and poor therein, by Richard Swinefeld, Bishop of Hereford, A.D. 1287.

A slip of parchment, the small seal of which it apparently once bore, now lost; being a monition, in Latin, by the Official of the Archdeacon of Berkshire, dated at Walyngeford on Wednesday the 10th of the Kalenda of June 1296; commanding, under pain of the Greater Excommunication, that all debtors to William de Estone, of Walyngeford, recently deceased, shall, within a fortnight therefrom, make a full discovery of their debts.

A slip of parchment, being a mandate, in Latin, by Thomas Daumers, Sheriff of Berkshire, setting forth a royal precept, tested by W. de Bereford, [Justiciar], at Westminster, on the 15th of June, in the 5th year of Edward II., commanding the Bailiffs of the burgh of Walyngeforde to distrain Nicholas le Porter, of that place, a tenant for life, by all his lands and chattels in their bailiwick, that he may not commit waste upon the lands, houses, woods, or gardens, which Thomas Pani, father of Eustace, the complainant, left him only for life. The following are indorsed on the back, as being the names of his manucaptors, or mainpennors (sureties).—Henry de Mountfort, Alexander le Vacher (Cowherd), John le Porter, Nicholas le Colich.—"Exitus ejusdem xd."—Issues of the same, xd.

A summons by R. de Wyndesore, Sheriff of Berkshire, on a precept tested at Langeleye, the 13th of January, 8th Edward II., commanding Robert de Madbrook and Alice, his wife, to restore to Isabel, the widow of Martin le Clerk, the moiety of a messuage in Walyngeford, which she claims to have been given to her and her husband by William le Graunger, and into which the said Robert and Alice have obtained ingress only through Constance, the widow of Ralph le Graunger, to whom the said Martin, husband of Isabel, had let the same.

A small mutilated parchment writing, in Latin, dated on Sunday, the feast of St. Martin the Bishop, in the 11th year of Edward II., whereby Richard le Barbor, son and heir of Robert le Barbor, binds himself in a penalty of 40 shillings, to leave Thomas Lymor and Emma, his wife, in quiet possession of one half of a messuage in Walingeford. Witnesses . . . Mariot Mayor, Osbert de Notele, Swayn de Morteale, William Sound . . . Badocke, Alexander le Vacher, Robert Boniface, "and others."

A small parchment slip, in Latin, the seal lost, of which the following is a translation:—"Be it known to all by these presents that I, Milo, Chaplain, or Warden, of the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalene, at Crowmersch, have received of Walter de Wimberville all arrears of wheat in which he was indebted to me until the feast of All Saints last past, of which arrears unto the said Walter I quit claim. In witness whereof, to these presents the common seal of our House is appended. Given at Ovyng, on the day of St. Andrew the Apostle, in the 11th year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Edward."—Edward II.

A small parchment writing, in Latin, bearing date the 12th of Edward II., thus indorsed,—"Transcriptum Littere missæ Tessorario et Baronibus de Scaccario, pro stapulo lane et ordinatione monetæ, per Nicholaum de la Barre, tunc Majorem." Copy of a letter sent to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer, for the staple of wool and ordinance on money, by Nicholas de la Barre, then Mayor. In obedience to the royal mandate they will send to Westminster, on Tuesday the Eve of St. Mark the Evangelist, John de Horspath, one of the Bailiffs, and Thomas Tylot, John de Dene, Henry de Mulebourne, and Nicholas de Thomestone, four burgesses.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the two seals, of William and Roger, lost, of which the following is a translation:—"To all the faithful of Christ, who this writing shall see or hear, Nicholas de la Barre, Mayor of Walingford, Simon de Heyworth, Walter atte Dene, and Thomas Hervy, Aldermen, and the whole community thereof, greeting in the Lord. Whereas William Badocke and Roger Badocke, our fellow-burgesses, of their own free will, in our urgent business, have delivered unto us 3*l*. 11*d*. as a loan; we do will and do grant to the same William and Roger for that courtesy, that in future they shall be quit and absolved of all tallage and collection among us to be made; and that neither of them shall be bailiff, or shall hold any bailiwick among us, or be put in any office, until for the said 3*l*. 11*d*. by us or our successors to them full satisfaction shall have been made. In witness whereof, to these writings indented, our common seal and the seals of the aforesaid William and Roger have interchangeably been appended. Given at Walingford, on the Wednesday after the feast of St. Martin, in the year of the reign of King Edward, son of King Edward, the 14th." From this document, it is clear at how low an ebb the finances of the Corporation must have been in A.D. 1321.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal or seals lost, dated at Walingeford, on Thursday before the feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, 20th Edward II.; whereby Richard le Teynturer (Dyer), of Walingeford, notifies that he has attorned and assigned Richard le Tannere of Walingeford, Elena, widow of William le Feron, Thomas le Rammere, of Craumerssh, and Agnes Granger, his tenants of the 6 acres which be belonged to Walter Asthale, together with all other his rfee tenants, to do and render to Simon de Heyworth, and his heirs, all the rent and service which they were wont to do to him, for the lands and tenements then held by him in the vill of Walingeford, in Newenham, and Craumerssh Gyffard.

A royal precept to the Bailiffs of Walyngford, in Latin, with a fragment of the Great Seal appended, dated at Westminster the 29th of July 37th Edward III.; ordering them, without delay, to do right to Nicholas Tannere as to 2 shillingsworth of rent in Walyngforde, which he claims to hold of the King by the free service of one penny yearly; Nicholas Fairford and Alice, his wife, being deforciant.

A similar precept, in Latin, dated the 6th of June 38th Edward III. enjoining that right be done to John James, of Walyngford, as to two messuages there, which he claims to hold of the King by the free service of one penny yearly; Thomas Swaye and Agnes, his wife, being deforciant as to one messuage, and Peter de Odyham and Joan, his wife, as to the other.

A sheet of parchment, the entries in Latin, being the minutes of two Views of Frankpledge held at Walyngford; the second, on Wednesday the Feast of the Decollation of St. John, in the 43rd year of Edward the Third, before John James, Mayor, William de Harewell, Nicholas Tannere, and Henry de Redyng, Aldermen. The following are some extracts.—

Richard atte Feld heads the list of Jurors, and among them Roger Milebourne and Alexander Louches are the only names, apparently, representing the then old families of this place. They present certain men for selling ale by false measures, and refusing to sell in any other way. They present that Master Raynald puts timber in the King's highway, and he is "therefore amerced," but the amount is not stated. Also, that Simon Theechere (Thatcher), John Tyler, and Bartholomew Tyler, with two others, work by journey-work (laborant per dietas), and charge in excess, against the Statute (of Labourers). These persons, being present, are spoken to thereon, and submit to amercement, their fines being 12*d*., 20*d*., and, in the cases of the three labourers above-named 3 pence respectively. William Clobho is presented for placing dung in the King's highway, called "Castelstrete," and fined 18 pence. The Jurors present that the watercourse at Payables Goter, which runs towards Englishich, is obstructed by default of Isabel Payable and three others; therefore they are amerced. They present that the King's highway at Maseneslane is obstructed by things put there by Henry Deme and John Broun; therefore they are amerced. Many persons are also presented for putting dung in the highway, and amerced; among them, William Harewell (probably the Alderman so named), who is fined 3 pence. Others are amerced for throwing the stinking entrails of animals there. The Master of St. John's is presented for making a purpresture by ploughing in the King's highway, and amerced in the sum of 2 shillings.

The View of Frankpledge mentioned on the obverse of the leaf, and prior in date, is dated on Tuesday after the Feast of St. Andrew the Apostle, in the 42nd year of King Edward the Third, before the Mayor and Aldermen previously mentioned. Adam Masun is presented for residing against the assize (residet contra assizam) and fined 3 pence. The watercourse in Courteyslane is stopped up, and overflows into the highway, through default of Walter atte Hegge, who is amerced in 6 pence. Macheneslane is stopped up, through default of John Pans (apparently); who is amerced in 6 pence. Several persons are amerced for placing dung in the King's highway, called "Wodestrete." The highway towards the Thames has been stopped up by a hedge; it is therefore ordered to be rooted up. William Arnyat is fined 6 pence, for selling unsound meat. Roger Arnyat, baker of horsebread, is fined 6 pence, for breaking the assize. Twenty persons or more are presented for selling ale by false assize, and refusing to sell it out of their houses (et renunt vendere extra domum), and are therefore amerced; two of them being Aldermen, namely, William de Harewell, who is fined 3 pence, and Henry Redyng, over whose name no fines are entered. The Ale-tasters have not done their duty in a proper manner; therefore they are amerced. John Tyler has raised the hue upon Alice Glasiere, unjustly; therefore he is fined 3 pence. Sarra, the servant of John Batard, has raised the hue upon the said John justly, therefore John is amerced in 6 pence. Katharine, the servant of Roger Cole, has raised the hue against Matilda Dere justly, therefore Matilda is fined 3 pence. John Muleward and Thomas Muleward have taken toll unjustly; they are therefore fined, respectively, 7 pence. Two women are fined 6 pence each for forestalling. The Jurors say that the common pound (parcus) ought to be within the close of the Hospital of St. John, but that the Master of the house forbids it; precept was therefore given to restrain him.

A sheet of parchment, containing two Views of Frank-pledge, in the 7th and 8th years of Richard II. The date of the first is Monday the Feast of St. Peter's Chair (18 January) in the 7th year of that reign, before John Motte, Mayor. The following are some extracts.—
Some twenty to thirty persons are fined various sums for brewing contrary to the assize, and selling ale by the cup. Elias Prestone is found to have raised the hue upon John Frogge, justly, therefore John Frogge is fined 4 pence. Joan Pipere has raised the hue upon Denisia atte Halle justly, therefore Denisia is fined 4 pence. T.
Lokyntone made himself to be a Bailiff at the house of T. Smyth, upon which the latter raised the hue justly, and the former is fined 4 pence. For committing upon the same Smyth the offence of homsoke, (invasion of the sanctity of his house), unjustly, the same Lokyntone is amerced in the sum of 6 pence. For making affray at night, he is fined 6 pence, for making assault upon J.
Wareboys 2 pence, and for making assault on one of the Bailiffs 6 pence. John the Baker, of Crammerssh, is fined 18 pence, for breaking the assize of bread. One of the offences of Helias Prestone, a brewer, is, that he refuses to put up a sign without his house ; also, he refuses to sell ale out of his house. Several butchers are fined 12 pence each, for selling meat excessively dear. Several fishmongers, one William Kyckere in the number, are fined like sums, for selling fish too dear, some paying 6 pence only. Several persons, Thomas Swayn in the number, are fined 2 pence each for laying dung in Courteslane. Henry Dene is fined 2 pence for putting dung in the King's highway, near the pillory. Several persons are fined from 2d. to 4d.
each, for laying dung in Westrestrate. John Stone is fined 3 pence for making purpresture (encroachment) in Canecroffte. The jurors say that Alene Bowwere is of light character (mobilis), and a receiver of thieves.
Joan Roundel, Agnes Sawyere, Alice Moryn, and Anna
Revenynge, are presented as common scandal-mongers (garlatrices) day and night. Robert Deshounte is presented as a breaker of the peace, day and night ; and is accused of having unjustly taken 3 pairs of shoes from
T. Peuterere, of Crammerssh, value 12 pence.

The view of Frankpledge mentioned on the reverse of the sheet, bears date the Eve of the Nativity of St. Mary, in the 8th year of King Richard II., before John Motte, Mayor.

Walter Herry is fined 6 pence, for selling mangled (laceratas) meat, and meat " not fit." Walter Herry also, with others, is fined 3 pence for selling fish excessively dear, and 2 pence for having a gutter a nuisance.
Robert Oxenford, William atte Dene, and 3 others, are presented and amerced in various sums from 2d. to 4d.

for selling shoes dear in excess. The jury present also, that all the artificers (artifices), "namely, taylours and
" others," take in excess ; therefore they are amerced
Thomas Messenger is presented for selling eels corrupt (incorruptas) and dead, and is amerced. The jurors find that Thomas Lokintone entered the garden of William Wodeward unjustly, and there made assault, against the peace, therefore he is fined 3 pence. Sir Hugh, the Rector of St. Peter's, is found to have drawn blood from Joan Roundel unjustly, and is fined 12 pence ; for committing homsoke, he is also fined 4 pence. John Santerer is amerced 6 pence, for drawing blood unjustly.
The jurors present that Juliana, the maid-servant of Lutel Watte, is a common pilferer of petty things, and that the said Watte is her receiver. That Aloissa Bowwere is a like pilferer of petty things. That Margery, the wife of John Charman, has found chattels to the value of 20 shillings, and has not delivered them to the Bailiffs.
William Taylour, Simon Taylour, David Taylour, and
Thomas Taylour, are presented as being tailors, and fined 2 pence each for taking in excess. Two skinner also are fined 2 pence each, for taking in excess. Two tilers are fined 3 pence each, for the like offence of charging for their labour too dearly. Joan, the wife of William Roundel, and Amya, the wife of John Ravenyng, are presented as common scolders. Roger Armyzac and another are fined 12 pence each for selling oats too dear.
A number of other persons are presented, Joan of the Wardrobe in the number, and amerced, for offences the nature of which is not named.

The following is a paper writing, in a neat and legible hand, signed "Edward Chamberleyn," and with a piece of red wax stuck in the lowermost corner, to the following effect:—

"Thys bylle made the iii^{de} day of October, the xxith
" yere of the reigne of Kyng Henry the viiith, wit-
" nessyth that for asmoche as the Mayor, Aldermeyne, " Burges, and commonaltey of the borough of Walyng-

The few remaining documents (other than ancient deeds) to be noticed, bear reference to Coroner's Inquests or criminal charges, in the town of Walyngforde, in the reigns of Edward I. and his successor. Some passages gathered from them will be of interest, as throwing light upon the every-day life of the place from five to six centuries ago.—

The earliest documents of this description, are 15 small written parchments, sewed together with thread, and belonging, all of them, to the reign of Edward I.—

The first in date belongs to the 19th year of that reign, the writing in French ; and there are two copies in the bundle, to the following effect, (in an abbreviated shape):—That Richard de la Tre accuses William, son of Richard de la Wyke, of Walyngford, of having feloniously, at midnight of the night next after the Translation of St. Thomas, come to the house of William de la Wyke, at Walyngford, and in his solar, nearest to his hall on the west side, taken Agnes, his wife, and his goods to the value of 19 marks and 40 pence ; namely, 9 marks and 40 pence in silver, and 10 marks in gold ; to wit, 10 fermalls (or buckles), each worth half a mark ; 60 rings, each worth 2 shillings, and one ring, worth 8 pence. These goods and his said wife he carried off feloniously, by night, and at her will. "And this the " aforesaid Richard de la Tre is ready to prove by his " body, or by whatever the King's Court may award
" that ought to be done ; and that he feloniously com" mitted this robbery, and together therewith took away
" one gown of blue black (pers blew), in which his wife
" was attired ; value one mark. Pledges to presentee
" Robert Boyllon, Robert le Sawcer, Robert de Honger-
" ford, and Richard Hykebid." One of the parchments seems to be a somewhat later copy of the other, and the forms of many French words are much changed in it.
The reckoning as to the value of the goods, in marks, appears to be faulty in some way or other.

after the Feast of St. Giles, in the 22nd year of Edward I., before William le Lorimer and Ralph de Boueye, Coroners of the burgh of Walyngford, an inquest was held as to the escape of Geoffrey de Ryseberge from the custody of William le Botlyer, under-bailiff. The 21 jurors named, say that on the Wednesday after the feast of St. Giles the Abbot, in the same year, the said William le Botlyer came to his house, where the said Geoffrey was imprisoned, shut the door of the chief room (domus principalis), and entered the dungeon, and shut the door after him; and whether the said Geoffrey was taken away by William, or was killed by him, or whether he made his escape through the said William, is not known; but before day the said William le Botlyer had absented himself, and has not returned. Richard de Blebure, Nicholas de la Barre, and Henry de Duoledene, were at a tavern, in company with the said William; therefore, upon precept of the Coroner, they were attached on suspicion. "And whether or not he "escaped by counsel of the said Richard, Nicholas, "and Henry, is unknown, except only by the words of "Robert, son of Alexander le Couperre, which he uttered "before the Coroners in secret."

A small slip of parchment, with the following memoranda in Latin:—"John de Canomesbrugge and "Elena de la Newelonde fled to the church of St. "Ruad, in the 23rd year of King Edward [the First]. "Acknowledging themselves to be thieves and robbers, "they abjured the kingdom, according to the custom "of the realm; and they had no goods."—"Nicholas le "Thechere fled to the church of St. Peter, at Walyngford, on Sunday before the Nativity of St. Mary, in "the 23rd year. Acknowledging himself to be a robber, "the same day he abjured, etc. He had no goods, "except a surcote, which is sold for 3 pence, and "handed over."—"Hugh, the miller, of Mungewelle, "was accused by Henry de Bakewelle, an approver, "and taken by such approver, and brought to the gaol "of the Castle of Walyngford, and afterwards hanged. "He had chattels to the value elsewhere of 28s. 5d., "which remain in the custody of William de Cippenham."

A parchment, stating, in Latin, the finding of a Jury upon Inquisition further made as to the escape of Geoffrey de Ryseberge, before mentioned.—On Inquisition, taken on Sunday the Feast of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist, in the 22nd year of the reign of Edward the First; the jurors (15 in number) find that on Wednesday before the said feast, at the hour of third cockcrow (tertiū gallicantus) the said Geoffrey, through the bad keeping of William le Botlyer, the under-bailiff, escaped, and through his foolishness only.

"And the same Geoffrey had a grey horse, with harness, "value 10s., in the keeping of Henry de Basynges. "In the keeping also of the same Henry, one small "girdle of silk, and one small knife, value 12d.; "also, a girdle of leather, with a purse, and 2 keys " ("cleellis," apparently) value 2s. And afterwards, "the same Geoffrey, in escaping, took away the said "horse from the northern pound (parco)."

A small slip of parchment, in Latin, whereby, on Inquisition taken on Tuesday after the feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the 25th year of King Edward I., the jurors, 12 in number, say that the merchandize which belonged to Stephen de Pangeburne, whom Henry de Dene slew, and the merchandize of the same Henry, found in the house of Agnes de Makeneye, in Walyngford, were appraised at the value of 10 pounds. That one half thereof belonged to the said Henry de Dene, a felon; and that all the goods were seized by Master Henry de Tylesale, Official of Berkshire, and John Fisher, Dean (Decanus) thereof, into the hands of the Archdeacon of Berkshire; who carried them off in defiance of the prohibition of Ralph de Boueye, and William le Lorimer, Coroners of the lord the King. Henry de Basinges has still in his hands 18 pence, of the chattels of the said Henry de Dene.

A slip of parchment, in Latin, giving the finding of a jury, upon Inquisition, on the body of Henry le Mercer, of Oxford, who was found dead in the Thames, near Walyngford, on Friday the Eve of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, in the 29th year of King Edward I. They find that, in bathing, he got out of his depth, and was drowned. The name of the finder was Everard the Butcher (Carnifex). His sureties, John Robekyn and Nicholas de la Barre. The chattels of the deceased were appraised at 3 pence, and delivered to Gilbert de Maundevely and Henry de Horspath, Bailiffs.

A very small slip of parchment, in Latin, commemorates the death, by lawlessness, of Thomas le Ferar (Farrier). The jury find that as he was riding, on Thursday before the feast of St. Hillary in the 29th year of King Edward I., in Millesshade, towards Walyngforde, some robbers came upon him, and struck him with an arrow in the head; on the fourth day after which, he died at Walyngforde. "The aforesaid robbers stealthily escaped towards the wood of Swyne-cumbe."

A small parchment, setting forth, in Latin, that Sybil le Clerekes fled to the church of St. Michael, in Walyngford, on Tuesday before the feast of St. Margaret the Virgin, in the 30th year of Edward I., and acknowledged before Ralph de Boueye, the Coroner, that she had stolen, at Abyndone, a hood furred with menyver, value 2s. 6d., the property of Matilda le Barber, of that place, and to other small robberies. On Wednesday, the day after, before the same Coroner, she abjured the realm of England, and had Bristol for her port (to sail from). She had no goods; for the produce of her thefts had been sold before she fled to the church.

Record of an inquest taken on Thursday after the Feast of St. Michael, in the 30th year of Edward I., on the death of Reginald de Stable, (de Stabul'). The jurors, 13 in number, find that he was leading a cart, not iron-bound, with 2 steers, in the plain of Clopote, on the highway, on Thursday after the Feast of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist; the cart and steers belonging to Alice de Burnham. From thirst, the steers drew the cart out of the highway to a certain water, to drink: whereupon, one wheel became raised on an embankment, the other going into a ditch; whereby the cart fell upon Reginald, and broke his foot; from which he died, he having attempted to stop the cart; John de Dorkecestre, the carter, having stayed behind in the field for a quarter of an hour, for a necessary purpose. For deadland, the cart and steers were appraised at half a mark.

A slip of parchment, giving an account of an inquisition, made before Ralph de Boueye and Robert Boyloun, the Coroners, in the parish of St. Peter, Walyngford, on Tuesday before the feast of St. Gregory the Pope, 31 Edward I., as to the death of Peter le Boltere. The jurors, 12 in number, "of the 4 Wards or "the burgh aforesaid," find that Peter, being a labourer, was working alone upon the tenement, formerly of Andrew le Waleys, in the parish of St. Peter, Walyngford; and that while taking down a mud wall, the wall fell upon him, and crushed him to death. Another inquest being held "for the King," as to the same death, the jurors (another set) find to the same effect.

A writing, in Latin, on parchment, very faint; to the effect that a jury, on Friday the morrow of Our Lord's Ascension, 31 Edward I., before Ralph de Boueye, the Coroner, finds that a horse of Alan Russel struck Ralph of Exeter on the groin and the navel, and so caused his death, in the house of Henry Basing, at Walyngford. The horse was appraised (for the deadland) at 40 pence.

A parchment writing, in Latin, stating that, at Walyngford, on Monday after the feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the 32nd year of Edward I., on inquisition made before Ralph de Boueye, Coroner, as to the death of Thomas de Lidesleghe, the jurors, 12 in number (among them persons named Robert le Moul, Robert Skylli, and Henry le Bacheler), find that, on the same day, after sunset, the said Thomas came to the house of Roger de Blebyre, in the said town, and while he was buying one farthing's worth of lard, there came one William de Dunrugge, mercer, and assaulted him, and struck him in the kidneys with a knife, the wound being 8 inches long, and 12 inches (sic) in depth; from which wound he languished till the Sunday following, and then died. The said William thereon fled, and stealthily escaped, and the person wounded did not raise the hue.

A parchment writing, in Latin, stating that, on inquisition made before Ralph, the Coroner of Walyngford, on Saturday after the Feast of St. Dunstan, in the 33rd of Edward I., the jurors find that William le Reve, of Coulehe, brought a steer into Walyngforde, the day before, and tied it to a cart-wheel opposite the tenement, of Thomas de Berewyk, in the Greater parish of St. Mary; and that a certain child, named "Godefray," son of Stephen le Callere, crawled up to the steer, no one seeing it, and touched the animal, whereon it kicked the child on the back, and so killed it. The steer (for the deadland) was valued at 12 pence.

The following records, bearing reference to similar subjects, are of somewhat later date.—

Record, on parchment, in Latin, of an inquest held on Monday before the Feast of St. Valentine, 1 Edward II., before Robert Boylon, Coroner, on the body of Thomas de Holderness, groom of . . . of Sutton, found dead by John le Lepere. The jurors find that he was struck on the breast, near the heart, by a horse, which is valued (for the deadand) at 100s., and delivered to John le Gredere, a Bailiff. Mainpernors (sureties) for the finder of the body, Nicholas de la Barre and John de Wodestoke.

A mutilated piece of parchment, with some fragments of the small seals of the jurors originally appended, giving an account of an inquisition, held on Sunday before the Feast of All Hallows, 2 Edward II., before [Nicholas de la] Barre, Keeper of the peace of the lord the King in the burgh of Walingford. The jurors find, upon oath, that John Maryot, the Mayor, Swayn de [Morteleye] . . . and Alexander le Vacher, under-bailiff, came to the house of John de Horspath, and there seized as a distress 4 pairs of shoes, for 2s. 6d. [for payment of a tallage] made by the community : and that Matilda, wife of the said John, raised the hue upon the Mayor and the others named, unjustly. That the same Mayor and two others came to the house of Henry de Horspath, to distraint for 12d. payment on the same tallage; whereon the said Henry made rescue of the distress, and drew a certain arm called "schuppyngease," whereupon the said Swayn raised the hue justly. That Osbert de Notele, a keeper of the King's peace, in Walingford, on the cry being raised, came up, and attached Swayn, and would have attached the said Henry also, but he would not allow the same, and laid hands on the said Osbert, and tore his surcote: whereupon Osbert raised the hue against Henry justly; and the said Henry raised the hue against the said Mayor and two others unjustly. In witness whereof, the jurors thereto set their seals.

A parchment writing, the seals and thongs once attached to which are lost, stating, in Latin, that Henry de Horspath was taken by Nicholas de la Barre and Osbert de Notele, keepers of the peace, on Thursday after the Feast of St. Luke, in the 4th year of King Edward II., and delivered into the custody of Gilbert de Maundeville, upon inquisition held by 15 jurors named; who found that, on the Tuesday before, Hugh de Latheyre, Clerk of the Earl at the Castle of Walyngford, was passing on the highway opposite the seld of the said Henry, and John, his son, when John Sperlyng, a servant of John, came up to him as he was carrying a log of wood, and so moved it that it fell upon the head of Hugh, and caused blood to flow; whereon he fell into a ditch. John Mariot, Mayor of the vill, thereon came up, and would have done his duty, for due punishment; upon which the said Henry, John, and Matilda the wife of the latter [attacked] the said Mayor violently, maliciously cursed him, and maligned him, saying, that he had been forgotten to be hanged at Traylbaston [a judicial commission for speedy judgment on perpetrators of deeds of violence], because he had broken into houses and carried off goods to the value of ten marks. They also say that the said Henry, John, and Matilda, are in the habit of cursing and diffaming many persons, both known and unknown. It was therefore determined by the said keepers of the peace, that they should be attached bodily. In witness whereof, they set their seals thereto.

In the document now to be noticed we have a striking memorial of the year 1316, a year, as we learn from our annalists, afflicted with sore visitations of pestilence and famine. It begins, in Latin, as follows:—

"Be it remembered, that Thomas de Monketone died "in the gaol of the Castle of Walingford, on Monday "after the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist (24 June), in the 9th year of the reign of King "Edward; and was viewed, by Robert Boylon, Coroner "of the lord the King, at Walingford." Abbreviating the language, the succeeding entries are as follow:—On the same day died, in the same gaol, William Nyweldon, of Kaveresham, and Gilbert Motun, of Hydesdone. On Tuesday, the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul (29 June) died Gunnilda Flot and William Burdon, of Clayore. On the Friday after, died John le Webbe, of Chaknydene; on the Sunday, John de Mortone, on Monday John ate Brugge, and on Friday John Whittinge, of Chalgrove, John le Coliere, of Ippesdene, and John Selverlok, of Ardintone. On Tuesday after the feast of St. Mary Magdalen (22 July) died Robert de Wodeford (it being now the 10th year of Edward II.); on Thursday after, Robert de Brittwelle and William le Fawellere, of Islep; and on the Sunday after, John Gul, and Peter le White, of Craumershe. On Tuesday after the Feast of St. Bartholomew (24 August) Avicia de Gulforde died; on Thursday after the Feast of the Decollation of St. John (29 August), Thomas Short, called "le "Webbe" (the Weaver) and William Derelove, of Crundewelle, and on Friday, the day after, four persons, namely, Robert de Clopham, John de Baldindone, with Eva, his wife, and Matilda Adam, of Chinmore. On Saturday, the day after, died John Adam, and John le Saucer, of Chalgrove. On Saturday after the Assumption of St. Mary (reverting apparently to that date, the 15th of August), died Thomas le Muleward, of Mapelderham, on the Monday after, John le Faryindone; and on the Friday after that, Richard Not, of Islamstede: 28 deaths in all, in a little over two months. In every instance an inquest was held.

The next is a shorter parchment of memoranda, in Latin, on the like subject:—"Be it remembered, that "John Thredric, of Flecham, died in the gaol of the "Castle of Walingford on Sunday before the Feast of St. "Peter's Chains, in the 11th year of King Edward " (A.D. 1318); and because he was an approver for the "Lord the King, there came Robert Boilon, Coroner "for the Lord the King, and took inquisition by oath "of 12 free jurors, as to the death aforesaid. They say "upon their oath, that the said Robert, the approver, "died a natural death, and not by duress of the keeper "of the gaol, nor yet for default of food and drink, "or in any other way. Given at Walingford, on the "Monday following, in the year above-mentioned, "etc. John le Cartere, of Eysntone, died in the "same gaol, on Thursday after the Feast of the "Apostles Peter and Paul (29 June), in the year above-mentioned (11 Edward II., A.D. 1318); and he took "inquisition as to the death aforesaid. The jurors "say that he died a natural death, and in no other "manner. William Godlond, of Estbrithewelle, an "approver of the Lord the King, died in the gaol of the "Castle of Walingford, on Monday before the feast of "the Nativity of St. John the Baptist (24 June), in the "10th year of the reign of King Edward (A.D. 1317). "And Robert Boilon, Coroner of the Lord the King, "came, and took inquisition as to the death aforesaid, "by oath of 12 jurors, who say that the aforesaid "William, the approver, died a natural death, and in no "other way."

A small slip of parchment, in Latin, the seals torn away, of which the following is a translation:—"To all "the faithful of Christ, who this writing shall see "or hear, Gilbert de Mandeville, John le Viler, Stephen de Grove, William le Mareschal, John Marmyon, of "Walyngford, and Nicholas Fitz-William, greeting in "the Lord everlasting. Know ye that we have main- "prised, body for body, the body of Alice Freman, "attached, to have, body for body, the body of the "aforesaid Alice at the next gaol delivery for the vill "of Walingford, if she be called for. In witness "whereof, the aforesaid mainpernors to this mainprise "have set their seals. Given at Walingford, on "Friday, the Eve of the Translation of St. Thomas the "Apostle, in the year of the reign of King Edward, "son of King Edward, the twelfth." Mainpernors, it must be borne in mind, gave their own bodies, and risked their own liberty, as bail, or surety, and not the mere forfeiture of a sum of money.

A small slip of parchment, in Latin, with a fragment only of one of the seals of the jurors left; whereby, upon inquisition taken before Nicholas atte Barre, "Constable of the Peace" of the burgh of Walingford, John Mariot, the Mayor, and the Bailiffs, of the said vill, the jurors find that Richard de Farham and Cristina de Farham stole 10 shillings of silver, at Walingford, from the chest of Mary, "who was the wife of "Robert Doget," his widow, presumably. Dated on Thursday before the Feast of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, 13 Edward II.

A slip of parchment, with entries thereon, in Latin, badly written; without date, but temp. Edward II., thus translated:—"John le Kou appeals (accuses) "Gilbert le Taylor, of Dacham, and Matilda, his wife, "of being with him at the robbery committed at "Burcholdebury. William Ruddoc, approver of the "lord the King, appeals William de Harewille of the "robbery committed at Midsomer Nortune, he having "4 pence as his share."

It deserves remark that, among these early documents, Sundi, Jeoffry (Thursday), and Friday, occur as surnames, in addition to those of a peculiar, or curious, nature, already noticed.

Deeds executed by the inhabitants of the town or its vicinity, in the middle ages, were probably deposited with the Common Clerks of Walingford in great numbers, and that for safe custody, no doubt; a practice which appears to have prevailed elsewhere also, as at Bridport in Dorsetshire, Axbridge in Somerset, and Rye in Sussex. Many of them, not improbably, in the lapse of ages, have perished; but be this as it may, there is a considerable number still existing, and mostly too in good condition, in the Corporation chest. From them a selection has been made, for the purposes of the present Report, of the earliest; such, in fact, as belong to the reigns of Henry the Third and his two immediate successors; and they will be found, it is believed, to throw much light upon the inhabitants, topography, and tenures, of the place at a date which might otherwise be called "time out of mind," namely, from five to six hundred years ago. The seals on these deeds are in many instances lost, and where preserved they are mostly in a mutilated or imperfect state.—

A very diminutive parchment deed, in Latin, finely written, belonging to the early part of the reign of Henry III., of which the following is a translation.— "Know present and to come, that I, Isabel de Bolebec, Countess of Oxford, out of piety to God, have given and granted, and by this my present charter have confirmed, in pure and perpetual alms, to God and the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen of Croumers [now Crowmarsh] pasture for one horse in my pasture-land of Sudmede in Croumers, freely and quietly, for ever. And that this my donation may abide stable and firm, this present charter I have strengthened with the protection of my seal. These being witnesses, Sir Reinald, of White Minster, Peter de Mara, parson of Witcherche, Walter de Cornur, Adam de Heriz, Gilbert the Clerk, and others." The seal, of green wax, in its original linen bag, has crumbled to dust. This Isabel was daughter of Walter de Bolebec, who died before A.D. 1186. Her husband was Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, one of the Barons who extorted Magna Charta from King John. He died A.D. 1221, and this deed was probably executed in her widowhood.

A small parchment deed, in Latin, finely written, without date, but temp. Henry III., the seal, in dark green wax, a kind of floriated cross, with this legend, "[S.] Wilelmi Radele," nearly perfect: whereby William de Radeleye grants to Alan Tannore, of Walingforde, a part of his message in the parish of St. Lucian, that part namely which extends towards the milldam of the Lord Earl (of Cornwall), at a yearly rent of one halfpenny, he having received one mark beforehand. Witnesses, Clement the Clerk, Mayor, Nicholas de Stalles, Alexander Dublet, Alexander de Stalles, John Robechild, Ralph the Chaplain, Master Peter, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, beautifully written, without date, but temp. Henry III., the seal, in green wax, perfect, representing a lily, with legend, "S. Rog. de Grene La;" whereby Roger de la Grene Lane, of Henley, with the assent of Alice, his wife, "and for their common business," grants to John Hentelune, of Walingford, the message which Godwin Lungawin sometime held in the parish of St. Leonard; and one acre in Chalfmore, between the land of William Fitz-Simon and that which belonged to Cristina Dudge; he rendering the yearly service due to the lords of the fees, and to him, Roger, one pair of white gloves, value one half-penny, at Easter; he having received 40 shillings sterling beforehand. Witnesses, Peter Pekoc, Mayor, William Fitz-Simon, Nicholas de Stalles, Clement the Clerk, Richard Blawe, Simon Gurmund, Alexander Dublet, Alexander de Stalles, Hugh Serich, Peter Vinter, John Robechilde, Simon Raven, Robert de Francis, Henry the Clerk, "and the whole Burgmote."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., consequent upon the one last mentioned; the large seal, in white wax, almost perfect, with the device of a palm-branch, floriated. It ratifies the preceding deed of Roger de la Grene Lane, on part of Geoffrey Fitz-Geoffrey, of Walingford. It is witnessed by the Mayor, and six of the witnesses there named, "and many others, with the whole Burgmote of Walingford."

Without date, but temp. Henry III., the seal lost. A small parchment deed, finely written, whereby Godfrey, son of Nicholas Mercer, of Winterbroc, grants to Ralph de Winterbroc, Chaplain, for his service, one acre of cultivated land in Winterbroc, between the land of Adam de Winterbroc and that of Anketil Palmer, and extending to Winterdich, for a yearly rent of 4 silver pennies; he having received one mark beforehand. Witnesses, Richard Fitz-Peter, Alan and Richard Mills, Nicholas the Clerk, Clement the Clerk, John Hentelune, Walter Watmood, William Jurdan, Richard Bissoph, Andrew de Winterbroc, John the Clerk, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., a fragment of the seal, in green wax, remaining, with part of the linen bag in which it was inclosed; whereby Stephen, son of Robert de Stalles, of Walingford, grants to Herebert le Fossur his message at the South Gate there, near that formerly of Osbert the Baker, and extending to the land of Simon Gurmund; at a yearly rent of 5 shillings, he having received 10s. beforehand. Witnesses, Alexander Dublet, Mayor, William Fitz-Simon, Nicholas de Stalles, Clement the Clerk, Alexander de Stalles, John Robechild, Richard Blawe, Alan the Clerk, Robert Picok, John Hentelune, Hugh Serich, Symon Raven, "and many others, as well as the Burgmote."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., and probably before 1257, when Richard, Earl of Cornwall, was elected King of the Romans; of which there are duplicate copies, each with an impression of the same seal of John Hentelune, in green wax, representing apparently a lamb and flag, with the legend,—"Sigill. Johis Hentelue." By it John Hentelue, of Walingford, grants to Matildis, his daughter, a message in the Parish of St. Leonard and an acre in Chalfmore (elsewhere described); she rendering yearly to the lord of Bastildene 24d. rent, and to Sir Richard, Earl of Cornwall, one penny, and to the grantor one penny. But in case the said Matildis shall die without lawfully assigning the same, or without heir of her body, then the said property is to go to the next younger child, of whichever sex, begotten of him, the grantor, and Joan his wife. Witnesses, Alexander Dublet, Mayor, Nicholas de Stalles, Clement the Clerk, Alexander de Stalles, Robert Luches, Alan the Physician (Medico), John Robechild, Alan le Tannur, Thomas the Linen-draper, John de London, William the Clerk, "and many others, with the whole Burgmote."

Without date, but temp. Henry III., the seal lost. A parchment deed, whereby William, son of Symon de Walingford, grants and confirms to the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of Saint John the Baptist, without the South Gate of Walingforde, two messages opposite the church of St. John at Walingforde, which Ralph Alleprelle held of him in fee, and left to the same brethren; they paying to him a yearly rent of 2 shillings of silver, where the said Ralph used to pay him 3 shillings; they also having paid him 2 marks beforehand. Witnesses, Alexander Dublet, Mayor, Nicholas de Stalles, Clement the Clerk, Alexander de Stalles, Richard Blawe, John Robechild, Peter Vinter, William Blawe, John Hentelune, Symon Raven, Hugh Serich, Alan le Tannur, John the Clerk, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., the seal lost; whereby Henry Mancel grants to Hugh, son of Anketil Palmere, a croft at Chalfmore, lying between the land of Alexander Dublet and the land which Alexander de Furne formerly held of Alexander Dublet, and extending to the land of Hugh Serich; he rendering yearly to the lord Earl [? of Cornwall] 16 pence, and to the grantor one halfpenny, at the feast of St. Michael; 2s. having been paid beforehand. Witnesses, Alexander Dublet, Mayor, Nicholas de Stalles, Clement the Clerk, Simon Gurmund, Richard Blawe, Stephen de Stalles, Alexander de Stalles, Simon Raven, John Hentelune, Alan le Tannur, John Hine, "and many others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but about 42 Henry III., the seal lost; whereby Richard the Cook, son of Andrew the Cook, of Walingforde, grants to the Alderman and Gildans of the Gild of the same vill 28 pence of yearly rent, from the message where Jordan Ofreure (or Goldsmith) sometime dwelt, in the parish of St. Mary the Less in Walingford; it being situate between the message formerly of Robert Trey-mailles, and that formerly of Nicholas Fitz-Hervi; for 25 shillings prepaid. Witnesses, the Lord Prior of Walingford, Robert de Luches, John de Wardberge, Clerk, Nicholas de Mungewelle, John, Bailiff of Chauseye, "and many others."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, without date, but temp. Henry III., a fragment of the seal, in green wax, left; whereby William, son of Richard Blawe, of Walingford, grants to Peter de Benham two-thirds of the tenement next to the tenement which sometime belonged to Sir Symon, Rector of the church of St. Leonard, in the said parish, and extending towards the Thames; as also, all his right and claim in the remaining third part thereof; at a yearly rent of one clove at Michaelmas; he having received 10 shillings of silver beforehand. Witnesses, Alexander Dublet, Mayor of Walingford, Nicholas and Alexander de Stalles, John Robechild,

There are also two other deeds, executed by the same John, to the like effect, and the same John Roulond, on Sunday after the Feast of St. Valentine, in the first year of Edward III. Each has a small red seal, in dark wax, appended.

In the deeds, an account of which now follows, the dates are given; though ancient, they are of a somewhat later date than the earlier of those which have been mentioned in the preceding columns. The first of them is:—

A parchment indenture, in Latin, finely written, the seal lost; whereby Alexander Dublet, Mayor of Walingford, and the Gildans of the said vill, lend to Nicholas de Stalles 60 shillings sterling, to be paid on the Octave of St. Faith the Virgin, or before, in the 42nd year of the reign of King Henry III.; he giving in pledge for the same one sold, situate between the sold of Alexander de Stalles and that of John Robechild, with six pence of yearly rent which he was wont to receive from the said sold of John Robechild, in the High Street, with all the right that he holds in, or can exact from, the house of Simon Rokeye; and with 18 pence rent of assize, which Eustace Fitz-Clement was wont to render to the said Nicholas for the house which belonged to Richard de Coleceestre, and for the house which belonged to Richard Fitz-Henry; and in case of non-payment by the said day, the said sold is to remain to the said Mayor and Gildans for ever, they rendering to the said Nicholas and his heirs one penny, at Easter, for all secular service; saving, however, the service to the lord of Sotewelle, to wit, 13½d. at the feast of St. Michael. But in case of full payment by such day, the aforesaid sold and rents, with the deed of feoffment, which is in the custody of the said Alexander, the Mayor, shall be restored to the said Nicholas, or his heirs. And if the said Nicholas or his heirs shall be obliged to sell the said sold, with the rents, within the said term, the Mayor and Gildans aforesaid "shall be the nearest, as "well in market as on sale" (erunt propinquiores tam in foro quam in venditione). To this indenture the said Mayor and the said Nicholas have interchangeably set their seals. Witnesses, Sir Geoffrey, Prior of Walingford, John de Wauberg, Clerk, Robert de Luches, Symon Raven, "and the whole Portmote."

A small parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, dated the morrow of All Hallows, in the 50th year of Henry III.; setting forth a covenant between John, son and heir of Alexander Dublet, and Matildis, relict of the said Alexander; whereby he grants to her, for her free bench, the messuage in which the said Alexander used to dwell, in the Parish of St. Peter at Walingford, situate between the messuage of Nicholas Orfeure and that late of Joseph the Merchant; also, 4 acres in Portmannefeld, and a fifth acre in Chalfmore; also, the third part of the issues of the mill, both for barley and all other grain, with the third part of the piscary, meadow, and pasture, thereto pertaining; the said Matildis granting to him the whole open space running from the king's highway to the Thames, and agreeing to pay him yearly 3 shillings for her share in the mill, and 20 pence for her dower within the borough, in Porthmannefeld and in Chalfmore. Witnesses, Master Peter de Benham, Mayor, Richard Bristewalton, Nicholas and Alexander de Stalles, William Blawe, Eustace Clement, Nicholas Orfeure, John Hyne, William de la Wike, Peter the Clerk, "and the whole Portmote."

A large parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, bearing date the morrow of the Purification of Saint Mary, in the 56th year of Henry III., between William Alane, of Walingford, and Richard de Benetely and Alice, his wife; whereby the said William delivers and demises to the said Richard and Alice the corner messuage which he had of the gift of Sir Ralph the Chaplain, Master of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, and the Brethren and Sisters of the said Hospital, and where the said William used to dwell, in the parish of St. Lucian in Walingford, opposite the Corn-market; to hold the same from the day of St. Mary in March of the said year, for a term of nine years, with all the appurtenances, except the solar and cellar, and outdoor [orniseca] chamber; which shall remain to Richard de Halthtone from the said day of St. Mary to the feast of St. Michael next ensuing, the said Richard having ingress and egress through the door of the said cellar into the street; and after the said term at Michaelmas expired, the said solar, cellar and chamber, shall remain to the said Richard and Alice, until the said term of nine years is completed. And the said William and his heirs shall find for the said Richard and Alice a furnace and flue [? turallum], a great vat, and a tub, for brewing; and in the first year of the said term he shall make a stable for 4 horses, and an out-door chamber, and shall have the rooms maintained, and covered, when necessary; the said Richard and Alice paying yearly 15 shillings of silver, and having power to make doors and windows in any part of the tenement, either for their tenants or for carrying on trade. But if during the said term the said William shall wish to give his daughter in marriage, and to give to her the said messuage, then the said Richard and Alice shall remove; and for no other reason, "unless, and may it not be so, they unjustly withhold the rent." Witnesses, Nicholas Orfeure, Mayor, Richard de Brithwale, Alexander de Stalles, William Blawe, Eustace Fitz-Clement, John Hyne, Peter Hutel, Randolph Orfeure, Ralph the Clerk, and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, mutilated, and the seal lost, dated in the 9th Edward I.; whereby the Master and the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist give to Eustace . . . all that tenement . . . he rendering yearly to the church of the Holy Trinity of Walingford, for support of the light before the parish altar of St. Cross, 4 pennies of silver; he also giving in exchange to the said hospital as much in quantity of the tenement, late belonging to Hugh Hertin, in Canecroft, on the south side, and near the tenement of Alexander de Stalles, in the same parish of Holy Trinity, they rendering yearly to the fee farm of the borough of Walingford 2 pennies of silver. They also remit to the said Eustace 6 pence of yearly rent from the tenement without the West Gate, where is now the fish-pond of the said Eustace, in the said parish of Holy Trinity. Witnesses, Nicholas Orfeure, Mayor, John de Luches, Peter le Palefreyur, John Hyne, Peter Henteloue . . .

A small parchment indenture, in Latin, minutely written, the seal lost, bearing date the Feast of St. George the Martyr, 10 Edward I.; whereby Isabel, daughter of Thomas Weaver (Tixtor), of Walingford, grants to Thomas, her brother, for 20s. paid, a messuage in the parish of the Holy Trinity, in Walingford, between the tenements which belonged to Eustace Clement and Gilbert the Shepherd (Berkari); such messuage having been given to Dionisia, her mother, in free marriage, at the church door. After the death of the said Thomas, even if he have lawful heirs of his body, the said tenement is to revert to the said Isabel; he paying 2 pence yearly rent for the same during his life, and the service due to the lords of the fee. Witnesses, Nicholas Orfeure, Mayor, Master Peter de Benham, William de Wyke, John de Luchis, Peter le Palefreyur, Nicholas le Taylur, Ralph Boueue, Henry de Appelford, then Bailiffs, "and others."

A parchment deed of covenant, in Latin, dated in the 10th of Edward I., one of its two seals, that of Walter Lucas, oblong, in white wax, still remaining; setting forth that, on Monday, the feast of St. Aldhelm the Bishop, it was agreed between Master Peter de Benham, Warden of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, and Walter Lucas and Dyonisia, his wife, that the said Master Peter, and the Brethren and Sisters of the said Hospital, granted to the said Walter and Dyonisia their corner messuage, with the curtilage, on the north side of the lane leading to the church of St. Michael, in that parish, at a yearly rent of 12 pence. The said Walter and Dyonisia also granted to the said hospital, their messuage and curtilage on the south side of the burial-ground of the said hospital, in the parish of St. Ruald. And if the said Walter and Dyonisia shall wish to sell the messuage so conveyed to them in exchange, the said brethren and sisters "shall be nearest "in the market and sale" (erunt propinquoires in foro et venditione). Witnesses, Nicholas Orfeure, Mayor, Eustace Clement, William de Wyke, Bartholomew de Scireburne, Ralph de Boueue, Henry de Appelford, Geoffrey the Clerk, "and the whole Portmote."

A parchment deed, in Latin, dated in the 13th of Edward I., the oblong seal, in green wax, unbroken, but the device indistinct; whereby Laurence, son of Peter the Vintner, of Walingford, ratifies all gifts of rents and tenements in the burgh of Walingford, and of lands, with meadows and pastures, in Portmannefeld and in Chalfmore, made to the Brethren and Sisters of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist in Walingford, by the said Peter, his father, or by William Fitz-Simon, Alexander Dublet, John Dublet, son and heir of the said Alexander, Christina Goremund, or Eustace Clement; he having received from Master Peter de Benham, the Master, and the Brethren and Sisters of the said Hospital, 40s. beforehand. Witnesses, John de Luches, Mayor, William de Wike, Henry de Appelford, Peter le Palefreyur, Ralph de Boueue, John Hyne, Bartholomew de Scireburne, Peter Henteloue, Roger Malle, Gilbert de Maundevile, "and others, with the whole Portmote, holden on Thursday after the Feast "of St. Faith the Virgin," in the year above mentioned.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, dated in the 7th of Edward II., with two small seals, out of three, still appended, one faintly representing, apparently, the Virgin and Child, and the other a man riding on some kind of animal; whereby John de Persore, Warden of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, in Walyngforde, grants to Richard Az and Cessilia, his wife, and Agnes, their daughter, for their lives, a tenement situate in the Greater Parish of the Church of St. Mary, extending eastward between the seld which belonged to Henry Beamound and the tenement late of Robert le Heryng, for a yearly rent of 5 shillings; after the death of the survivor, the said tenement to revert to the said hospital. Witnesses, John Maryot, Mayor, Richard de Louches, Robert de Myleburne, Swayn de Morteale, Thomas Gratarad, Gilbert de Maundevyle and John Horspath, then Bailiffs, "and others."

Tied with thread to the preceding deed,—a parchment deed, in Latin, of the same date, with a small round seal, in green wax, with a flower for device; whereby Richard Az (or As) grants to John de Persore, Warden of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, for a certain sum of money paid, all his right and claim in a seld situate between the seld of John Maryot and the tenement which belonged to John Nonsant, in the parish of the Greater Church of St. Mary. Witnesses, as above, save that William de Myleburne, Walter de Dene, and John de Crowham, are substituted for the last three witnesses there named.

A parchment indenture of covenant, in Latin, dated in the 8th of Edward II., with the oblong seal of John Roulond in green wax, a fanciful flower for device, the legend undecipherable; whereby John Roulond, Warden of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, and the Brethren and Sisters thereof, grant to Henry de Wyncestre and Alota, his wife, and Alice, their daughter, for the term of their lives, a tenement in the parish of St. Mary the More, between the tenement late of John de Myleburne and that of Thomas le Carpynter, at a yearly rent of 7 shillings of silver. Witnesses, Nicholas de la Barre, Mayor, William de Myleburne, Thomas Gratarad, Matthew le Mercer, Thomas de Berewyk, Walter atte . . . and Gilbert Orfeure, then Reeves. The seal of Henry de Wyncestre, a double lily, is broken; that of Alota, oblong, in green wax, is perfect, representing a flower, with the legend, "Alot. uxor Henr. d. Winc."

A small parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, dated in the 9th of Edward II.; whereby Thomas, called "Le Noble," of Walyngford, states that whereas William, son of Reginald de Elmyntone, of Walyngford, has a seld in the Linen-market, in the parish of St. Mary the More, near the seld of William de Meleburne, of his gift by deed; it is his will that, if the said William shall be impeached as to the same, or in any way lose it, through default of warranty; from his own tenement, in the same parish, between the tenement of Matthew le Mercer and that which belonged to Peter le Carpenter, and from his own goods, the said William shall receive 40 shillings and his expenses incurred in pleading, on view of good and lawful men. No witnesses are named.

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, dated in the 9th Edward II.; whereby Henry de Chautone, called "de Winchestre," of Walyngford, grants to Swayn de Morteale, Mayor of Walyngford, Richard de Louches, Simon de Heyworth, and Osbert de Notele, Aldermen, and the community of the said vill, 6 pence of yearly rent from his tenement situate in the parish of St. Mary the More; for the term of his life, and the life of Alota, his wife. Witnesses, Ralph Restwald, Robert de Sottewelle, Robert de Croft, Robert de Makkeneye, John Stoyl, "and others."

A parchment deed, in Latin, the seal lost, bearing date in the 10th Edward II., whereby John Mariot, of Walyngforde, grants to Richard de Louches and Alice, his wife, the message which belonged to Walter le Colche, in Canecrofte, between the tenement formerly of Thomas the Weaver and that of Nicholas le Brethie, and which he had of the gift of the said Nicholas. Witnesses, Swayn de Morteale, Thomas de Berewyke, Richard Badecocke, John Oseburn, Nicholas de Tornestone, John de Louches, Robert Boneface, "and others."

A large parchment deed, in Latin, dated in the 12th of Edward II., with two seals in white wax, one oblong and broken, the other round, the device of the latter, apparently, a rabbit; whereby Osbert, son and heir of Osbert le Ferour (Farrier), of Walyngford, and Roysa, his wife, grant to Thomas Severe, dyer, and Claricia, his wife, the cottage and curtilage situate in the parish of Holy Trinity, between the cottage where Robert Madbrok dwells, and the cottage of the said Thomas, and extending to the curtilage held by Robert Wheler, and Alice, his wife; the said Thomas and Claricia having given in exchange one half acre of land in Clopote, in Batayleforlong, and 8 shillings of silver. Witnesses, Swayn de Morteale, Richard de Louchis, Osbert de Notele, Simon de Heyworth, John de Berewyke, John de Louchis, Thomas Hervy and John de Horspath, Bailiffs, Robert Boneface, Clerk, "and others."

A parchment indenture, in Latin, the seal lost, dated in the 14th of Edward II.; whereby Nicholas de la Barre, Mayor, Simon de Heyworth, Walter atte Dene, and Thomas de Berewyk, Aldermen, and the whole community of the burgh of Walyngford, grant to Thomas Herynat one stall, situate between the stall of Thomas Hervy and the stall of the Dean and Chapel of St. Nicholas, in the Castle of Walyngford, in the parish of St. Mary the Less, for a yearly rent of 4 shillings of silver; the said Thomas and his heirs to maintain the stall in all things necessary thereto. No witnesses are mentioned.

A parchment indenture, in Latin, slightly mutilated, with the Abbey seal, in red wax, somewhat broken, appended, representing the Virgin and Child, dated at Messenden, on Thursday, the feast of St. Gregory, 14th Edward II.; whereby the Abbot and Convent of Messenden [now Great Missenden, in Bucks], for a term, let to Robert de la Marche certain parcels of land, namely, 9 selions in the east field near the Long Cross; 5 selions upon Morteuhulle; one foreland [fore-ram] called "Langehauedland"; 13 selions near the Old Cross, extending into Langemere, at the south head; two acres upon Michelemedhulle, one acre being near the land of Stephen de Midlinton, and half an acre near the land of John le Hare (and the other half near) the land of John Bemyn; one acre above Littlemedhulle, near the land of Robert de la Mersche the Elder . . . one foreland which lies, being one rood, at Apsley-medesburne; half an acre which extends . . . the land of John Thomas; one acre in Langemere, near the land of William ate Grene; and half an acre . . . land of Margaret Hemmyng; 2 roods near the land of William le Longe; half an acre in Crouchforlonge, near the land of Robert atte Mersche; one acre in Langeforlonge, near the land of Juliana Kime; the said parcels lying in Great Kynbelle (now Kimble, in Bucks); such term being 60 years. I have here to express my obligations to Charles Hedges, Esq., the Town Clerk of Walingford, for the many marks of attention which I have received from him, and for the kindness with which he has provided me with every facility for a full and leisurely examination of these ancient and curious records. To John Kirby Hedges, Esq., of the Castle, I wish also to acknowledge my obligations, for the interest he has manifested in my researches, and for much information that, as the result of his local and antiquarian inquiries, he has given me in reference to the past history of his native town.

HENRY THOMAS RILEY.

THE CORPORATION OF WINCHESTER.

In compliance with a wish expressed to the Commission, through Mr. W. Bailey, the Town Clerk, by the Corporation of Winchester, I have made an inspection of the more ancient records; of that city; of necessity a somewhat cursory one, but from it, I think I may venture to say that the records of any great antiquity—of the 13th or 14th centuries, for example,—are not so numerous as might have been anticipated, nor indeed of any very marked importance. That such documents have once existed, there can hardly be a doubt: but the probability is, that in the lapse of time, by far the larger part of them have perished. The most ancient among them that are now known to be in existence, (some in a very decayed condition,) have been placed in my hands by Mr. Bailey, for the purpose of the present Report; and the following description is the result of a careful examination of their contents.—

A sheet of parchment, much mutilated in the upper part, in Latin, being a roll of a Court held at Winchester at the close of the reign of King Henry the Third. It is headed, "Curia die Mercurii post festum Sancti Edwardi, Regis et Martyris"—Court holden on Wednesday after the feast of Saint Edward, King and Martyr. Pleas of debt, and grants of essoins (excuses for delay) are mostly its contents: The following are some extracts, the 54th and 55th years of Henry the Third being mentioned in various places:—

At a Court holden on the feast of St. Benedict the Abbot (March 21st 1270) "Roger Walerun essoins himself against Robert de Mortimer, appearing by Nicholas Tasverner, in a plea of debt." At a Court holden on Monday, the Eve of the Annunciation:—"Walter de Bordes opposes Richard de Postern and Robert le Dubur, and demands 20*li*. 4*s*. by a certain tally [dicam]. They, being present, acknowledged that the said tally was once true and good; but that they had satisfied (the same) in great part; and they ask for a day to account, and they have the next day but one [tertium diem]." A Court holden on Thursday after the Annunciation:—"William Welde opposes John de Northampton, who appears; and makes plaint that on Sunday before the Annunciation, after dinner, at the head of the Jews' street [now Jewry Street], opposite the cellar of John Daleram, to the north thereof, he suddenly assaulted him, and struck him with a certain anelace [a short sword] through the middle of his left arm etc., to his damage in 100 shillings. The other, being present, denied it sufficiently, and said that it was in repelling force by force, and submitted himself to inquisition." A Court holden on Friday after etc.:—"Robert de Mortimer essoins himself against Roger Walerun by Clement the Lame [Clandum] in a plea of debt, and has a day etc." Laurence de Frinolk opposes Richard Wyssset and Cecily, his wife; and makes plaint that the said Cecily on Saturday before the feast of St. Gregory in this year enormously, or evilly, treated him and his wife, and beat Geoffrey, his son, on the head, with a stick of hazel etc. The same Richard, being present, denies it sufficiently for himself and his wife; pledge for making his law, Adam Cooper." Tuesday after the close of Easter:—"Matthias the Painter, and Matthias, his son, oppose Gilbert le Verer [the Glazier] and John Bird, in a plea of trespass. Surety to appear, and for the peace of our Lord the King, William de Gatesdene."

A parchment roll, in Latin, belonging to the 25th year of Edward the First (A.D. 1297), headed "Rotulus 'Stach' Wynton"—"Stake Roll of Winchester." It seems to have been the usage, at Winchester, as at Southampton and other places in the South and West of England, in actions of debt for rent unpaid, for the Court to order a stake to be driven into the ground, or exposed upon the premises, for which the rent was due; and then, after it had remained there a certain time, to order payment to be made, or, on non-compliance with such order, possession to be given up, to the owner. Hence the title of the present roll. The following extracts give some notices of Winchester localities in the 13th century.—

"The Warden of the Hospital of St. John sued for one stake upon the tenement of Richard de Merewelle in the Portman of the Great Street in Winchester, contiguous to the tenement late of Matilidis de Aldyn, at the entrance of Parcheminestrete, for arrears of 3*s*. 9*d*. in 2½ years past, at [a rent of] 2*s*. 6*d*. each year. And because it is testified by the Alderman and neighbours that nothing is found to distrain, the stake is put there; and it was put on Monday before the Feast of St. Ambrose, in the 25th year of the reign of King Edward, and if then etc." . . . "The same Warden sued for one stake on the tenement of Richard le Canevaser, in the High Street of Winchester, for 20*s*. in arrear to him for one year and more, at 20*s*. yearly; and because it is testified by the Alderman and neighbours that nothing is found to distrain, the stake is put there; and it was put on Monday before the feast of St. Ambrose, in the 25th year, etc." In a different hand:—"And the aforesaid Warden came on Monday after the feast of the Apostles Philip and James, in the 26th year of the reign of King Edward, and asked for judgment on the stake aforesaid; and because no one came to acquit the tenement aforesaid of the said arrears, it was awarded that the said Warden, for himself and his successors, should recover the tenement aforesaid." Another tenement, the rent of which is sued for by the Warden, is described as "in Portman Magai Vici Wyntonim prope Neubrughe"—in the Portman of the Great Street of Winton, near Neubrughe; his demand is 3*s*., the Abbess of St. Mary's also demanding 4 shillings from the same. And the said Warden puts in his place John de Aune to sue for the stakes aforesaid, in all things, according to what pertains to be done by custom of the Court of Winton."

The next application made is by Simon [de Kaninge, or Canning], Abbot of Hyde, near Winchester, for a stake to be put on the tenement of Alice de Gloucestre, in Schortenestrete, in Winton, extending "from the School of the Jews to the corner tenement of the said Alice." Adam de Northampton sues for "a place without the West Gate of Winton, which Hugh le Gosmangere [the Goosemonger] holds." Abbot Simon makes other claims also; in one instance, for rent from the tenement of Geoffrey le Fuller "in the Tannery of Winton;" the Abbess of the Nuns of St. Mary's making claim also of a rent from the same. The Abbot further claims rent from the tenement of Emma the Alewife [Brasiatrici] in La Hydestrete (Hyde Street). The Warden of St. Mary Magdalen, near Winton, sues for rent from the tenement of Walter the Dyer, in the parish of St. John de Edera [? Ivychurch]; the Prior of the Fraternity of St. Peter in Winton claiming rent from the same. "Also, John, Bishop of Winton, by Henry la Wayte, his bailiff, puts in his claim for 22 pence, yearly rent." . . . "Be it remembered, that Henry de Presland came into full Court, and acknowledged that he had given and granted to the Prior of the Fraternity of the Brotherhood [Fraternitatis Fratrie] of Winton all his tenement in Munstretre, with the appurtenances, between the tenement of Walter le Plumere [the Plumber] and the tenement of Badeock the Cobler; to have and to hold to the Prior and brethren for ever, they rendering to the said Henry for all his life 6*s*., and doing the divers services due and accustomed for the same." . . .

John de Welewe and Juliana, his wife, sued for one stake upon the tenement of the Gild of Palmers without the West Gate of Winton, for arrears of 18*d*." Judgment was afterwards given that they should recover the said tenement "for ever, in demesne." The Abbot of Netelye [now Netley] sues also for rent from a tenement in Schortenestrete, "which was in arrear to him for a year and a day and more; which tenement was that of Isaac de Neubure and Cristina, his wife, for the term of their life; and because after a year and a day expired no one came to satisfy the said Abbot for the rent or arrears, as is set forth upon the stake. . . . it was awarded on the Wednesday next after the feast of the Apostles Simon and Jude, in the 25th year of the reign of King Edward, by the whole Court, that the said Abbot should recover the said tenement in his demesne for himself, and his church, and his successors, from the holders of the said tenement, and theirs, for ever. Also, that the said Abbot should satisfy the Warden of the Hospital of St. John, in Winton, for a yearly rent of 3 shillings for ever; and for 15*s*. arrears of rent for past years." The same Warden of St. John's also sues for a stake to be put upon the place of Walter Feste, in Flesmongerestrete, in Winton, for arrears of 7*s*. 6*d*. in a year and a half. Simon, Abbot of Hyde, claims a tenement for 4 shillings of rent due, in Athelinge-strete.

This roll has writing on either side; that at the foot of the reverse, is almost wholly effaced.

A parchment roll, in Latin, of acknowledgments in Court of conveyances of property situate in Winchester. No date appears in it, but as Walter (Fyfhide, or de Fifeid) is mentioned, who became Abbot of Hyde in the year 1319, it probably belongs to the reign of Edward the Third. The entries seem mostly to be abstracts of conveyances, but a large portion of the writing is almost illegible. Localities named are "La Wolleselde"—the wool-shed, and (apparently) "Jweryestrete"—Jewry Street. A gift is enrolled also, as being made by John de Wodeford of all his interest in a tenement, to the Rectors, Masters, and Scholars, of Stapulton Hall, but much is effaced, at the foot of the roll. Stapledon Hall, in Oxford, now Exeter College, no doubt, is meant.

Rent-roll, in Latin, of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, in Winchester, for A.D. 1294, on five skins of parchment; well written, and in fine condition. It begins—"Hic est Rotulus etc."—"This is the Roll of the rents and tenements pertaining to the House of the Hospital of [Saint] John in the City of Winton, done on Monday next after the Feast of St. Peter called 'Ad Vincula' (St. Peter's Chains), A.D. 1294." Houses in the "Great (Magno) Street of Winton," come first; among them, rents are due from several which John de Kyrkyby owned: from other sources we know that he was a lawyer, and for many years legal adviser to God's House at Southampton; one rent of 6s. 2d. having been given to the hospital by Andrew de Gondeville; the house of "Panyvader," in this street, is mentioned. The Burial-ground of the Friars Preachers; the road to Coytesbury; Colbrokestrete; the Mill of Nywbrygge; the seld of Long John (Johannis Longi), the Cobler; rent from the tenement of Stephen Hotekeke, the gift of Ralph Smith, opposite Le Pylory; the church of St. Maurice; the Dubbary (P Old Clothes Mart); rent from a tenement, the gift of Andrew de Wollop; rent from a seld, the gift of Gregory de Wollop, Chaplain; rent from the tenement of Richard le Cloutare, in Alwarestrete; the tenement of William the Apothecary, at the head of Munkestrete; the entry of Calpestrete; St. Nicholas Lane; the seld of Adam de Norhamptone, in the Parmentry; rent from the tenement of Roger de Inkepenne, which belonged to William Dogherl, at the entrance of Goldstrete; rent from the tenement which the relict of Matthew Brun holds, "upon Gondeby-hute;" rent from the tenement in La Puletrye (the Poultry) which William the Mustardyr holds; the seld of Thomas le Paumere, adjoining the church of St. Peter White Bread (Sancti Petri de Albo Pane); Garstrete; and Bridenestrete;—all these are mentioned in the roll.

Rents follow from houses in Buckestrete, but only to a small amount: then in Tannarestrete. Thomas Palmer, a tenant here, has his surname Latinized as "Palmiger," and Geoffrey Barber as "Barbator." Rents in "Wngharestrete" follow, Sewald le Tapenyr (P Tapestrer) paying one; then in Schuldworstrete, John the Leche (Medicus) being one tenant, and John White-tawyer (Alutarius) another: for a "meadow" in this street, belonging to Simon Dalrun, a rent is paid, of 20 pence. Flesmongarestrete, Parchemynestrete, and Alwarestrete, follow; in the latter is mentioned "the tenement of the Brethren of Godeseld." In Schortenestrete is mentioned "the tenement of Isaac de Nywbury, which belonged to Henry Juwet." Brudenestrete and Goldstrete follow; a tenement in the latter, formerly belonging to Alan Godyno, Matildis le Wodestre (P Woodseller) now holds. One rent only occurs in Calpestrete. In Colbrokestrete, is mentioned the tenement of Adam Torchmaker (Operari cereorum); also, the tenement of Hugh le Dubbar, which belonged to Henry Ferebrache. The garden of Amicia Petyt, near the wall of Wolvesey, is also mentioned.

Rents without Durugate then follow, one being from the tenement of Hugh le Cobelare. Tenements of Nicholas and Stephen de la Stayre are named, as also of Joan "ad Pontem." Among localities in Beggarestrete, a tenement "in the north corner of the Wayhur" is named; and the tenement of Nicholas Cute, on the west side of the Tolselde, "on St. Giles's Hill." In St. John Street, the church of St. John, and the tenement which belonged to William Strut, are named. The "Street leading to (versus) Chushulle" follows; and under it is named the tenement of William de Waltham "upon Segrymeswelle." Kynghatestrete succeeding it.

Then follow rents without Suthgate; the tenement being named, "of Peter Schort, Clerk, which John Jon "held"; the head of Moselane; the lane of Senetwythene [P St. Swithun]; and the tenement of Anulf the Fisherman, on the north of that lane. Then "Rents without West Gate, and in Wodestrete;" certain land here called "the Gore, which belonged to Walter le "Val; which Hugh le Gosmongere holds, and Master "Valentine bought of Gregory, nephew of the said "Walter;" a certain area behind the church of St. Martin; the tenement of Felix son of Paulina Scrivayne, (Scriptor). Rents in Athelnyngestrete follow; "a place" is named, "which Adam Doget holds, opposite the "church of Saint Leonard;" the tenement of Gilbert le Solaytare (the Slater); and that of John Davy, at Fulfode. The list of "Rents of Assize" concludes with Hydestrete, and St. Giles's Hill.

This is followed by a list of "Tenementa propria,"—Tenements that are our own. It begins with High Street, the first being,— "One tenement, with all the "shops, in the Goldsmithery and the Tavern (Auri-fabrica et Taberna) in the entry of Calpestrete," of which the first shop, "on the east side, is let at a yearly "rent of 10s., and the other five shops at 10s. each, the "tavern at 28s.; and one sollar at 8s. One shop opposite to the tenement of the Godebyhute 8s. Half a "shop, of which Alice de Gloucestre holds a moiety, "which is near the entry leading towards the church of "St. Peter White Bread." Houses in Schortenestrete and Bukkestrete follow, and "Without the West Gate," One tenement near the West Gate, containing 4 rooms, worth yearly, if they are let, 20s. Three tenements in Wodestrete, opposite the tenement of Roger de Inkepenne. One croft, which belonged to Viuin Stapeto, at Hurbury. "Without the East Gate," the only tenement is, one croft at Segrymeswelle. Then follow, "Tenements and shops upon St. Giles's Hill. Two "cellars thereon which are called 'Vaults,' worth, with "the sollar, 2 marks yearly, if let." Two shops in the Goldsmithery; one great shop near the Mercy, opposite the shop belonging to the Subprior; one shop in the Peltery (Peletria, Skinnerry); one shop where garlic is sold; another shop where wool is sold; another, a corner shop, where ale is sold; another shop in the street where hemp is sold; another shop where old clothes are sold, and which belonged to William the Leech (La Leche); another shop in the Saddlery, where saddles are sold; a shop in the Cutlery; a moiety of all the shops where the dealers of Douay (mercatores de Duaco) stand; a moiety of all the shops [of the dealers] of Ypore (Ypres); three shops where fish is sold; a certain piece of land, where old clothes are sold, near the shop which belonged to William the Leech.

Among Quitrents, they pay, for the house which belonged to William the Leech, to the Rector of the church of St. Ruald (Rumbold) 3s. 8d.; to the Brethren of Kaln [P Calne Hospital, in Wilts] 2s. 4d., and to the Hospital of Godesfeld one penny. In Schortenestrete, they pay yearly to the King, for the tenement of John Gys, one penny, "for terrage." Without the East Gate—"For quitrent of one croft, which belonged to Michael "le Parmentry, near Segrym's Well, as towards the "Cellarer of St. Swithun's 3s.; the Kitchener of St. "Swithun's 6d.; and the Bishop, or fermor from Segrym "5d. yearly. And as towards the collectors of the "Rome penny 1d. Quit-rent for the same croft for "William Drynkewater, who holds it for life, to Walter "Russel 18d." Upon the shops before mentioned, on St. Giles's Hill, in the Wolwre, the Kanewacery, the shops of Douay, the shops of Ypres, and others, quitrents of various amounts are set down as having been paid to the Bishop of Winchester.

A roll, on five skins of parchment sewed together, perfect and in fine condition, in Latin, with the following title:—"Account of the House of the Hospital of "St. John, in Wynton, from the feast of St. Michael in "the eighth year of the reign of King Edward [the "Second], until the feast of St. Michael next ensuing, "in the 9th year of the reign of King Edward, in the "time of Sir J. de Froille, Warden, in his 20th year." The following are some extracts:—

First, are entered "Rents of assize.—The parcels "of which are in the rent-roll." 3s. 6d. increase of rent for the croft, late of Richard de Stocbrigg, at the Vale [La Vale]. 12d. from the house over against the lane which leads to the Castle, without West Gate. 20s. for the whole tenement of William de Wandlesworth, in the Drapery. 3s. for rent obtained from the tenement of John de Chiltcombe in Munstrestret, in which he dwelt. For "Defaults of rent," reference is made to the reverse of the roll. "Lettings in the vill,

"and upon the Hills" then follow, reference being made to the particulars on the reverse, of the letting of houses in the city and suburbs. 22*l*. 19*s*. 8*d*. is the sum received "for letting the selds upon the hills of "St. Giles, as set forth on the reverse of the roll." "Issues of the House" then follow; among them, 68*s*. for madder sold; moneys for hides and skins of animals slain for the larder, and their tallow; 16*s*. profits on the swine in the piggery, and on buying them. 12*s*. oblations received from the parish church. 13*s*. 4*d*. for a tun of cider sold. 46*s*. 8*d*. from Sir Richard the Chaplain, being at the Master's table throughout the year.

The Account then goes on to "Surplus expenses on "the account of last year"; and then the expenditure in each week of the year is accounted for, in flesh-meat and in fish, throughout four terms, each term closing with 56*s*. 9*d*. spent for bread and ale therein. In Lent, of course, fish only is bought. "The purchase of spices" then follows; for spices and seasonings (saporibus) for the year 10*s*. 1*d*.; for divers sauces (salseis) for the year 2*s*. The only "Wages" paid, are to Adam atte Cornyre, 15*s*. 2*d*. for the year, at one halfpenny per day. Then follow "Expenses of the sick"; bread for them "for the year 56*s*. 6*d*.; ale for the year 30*s*. 8*d*.; flesh-meat 45*s*. 6*d*.; fish for half a year 16*s*. 6*d*.;" the fish for the remaining half year being included in the preceding "Expenses of the Chamber." One "quartern" of hemp, bought for the use of the sick 7*s*. 6*d*.; 9 gallons of oil, bought to burn in the Hospital, 7*s*. 10*d*. "Purchases of corn and stores" then follow. Of wheat they bought so much, and of barley so much, "and no more, because they had from the collection in the "Cemetery 8 quarters." Oats for meal, then follow; 6 bushels of pease for pottage; apples for 6 tuns of cider 32*s*.; and 7 pigs for store 13*s*. "Expenses of the "Larder and Kitchen"; 5 oxen, one cow, and 46 muttons and ewes being bought: probably in addition to the "flesh-meat" before reckoned. 4000 of red herring are bought, price 31*s*.; payment of a man for making the larder 22*d*.; one gridiron 4*d*. In expenses of "the Pantry and Brewery"; for baking bread for the year 4*s*. 7*d*.; for moving [motura] the corn 2*s*. 4*d*. For hooping cures (tubs), times (pails), and barrels, 2*s*. 4*d*.; for candles "of cotton" 19*d*. "The shop for hemp " (canabium) is the next entry.—For a shop upon the hills, bought of John de Farham, to repair, 30*s*. For timber 19*s*. For one carpenter and two men hired, to make a shop thereof, where pieces of hemp (canavia) are sold, for 5 weeks, the table found them 15*s*. For sawing timber for the same 7*s*. 10*d*. After other items, this article ends with—4 coverers, for 5 weeks, covering the said shop 15*s*.; the table found them. Expenses for repairing, or rebuilding, the "shops of Ippe (Ypres)" then follow. Stone of Seleborne costs 3*s*. 8*d*.; ten thousand of sclettes (slates) 20*s*.; white sand, and red, for the wall and for the covering 7*s*. 1*d*. "Mending of "rooms, with the chamber in Gole Strete," is the next head. Stone of Seleborne here costs 7*s*. 9*d*. Lead for melting, to make the gutter 13*s*. 3*d*. Pitch for the eaves-gutters 17*d*. For covering the stable to the house of W. Petyt 2*s*. For timber bought for a press (presorium) 3*s*. 2*d*. For carpentry of the same 5*s*. 6*d*.

This is followed by "Minute Expenses."—For digging, planting, and cleansing, madder 16*s*. 4*d*. Dung bought for the same 3*s*. 8*d*. Draff bought for feeding the swine 6*s*. 1*d*. Oblations of the Brethren and Sisters for the Nativity and Easter 3*s*. Oblations of the Bailiffs of the town 12*d*. Brooms bought 5*d*. Cords for the louver, and for other necessary purposes 13*d*. Brushwood 26*s*. Eight quarters of coal (charcoal) 4*s*. 5*d*. For one saw 8*d*. A gift to the clerk of the Coroner, when he made view of a child drowned in Bulkestreet 4*d*. For a frog (P lock; "ranulla") to the cloister 8*d*. For a chest bought, for putting in the body of Sir William de Wyrcestre 8*d*. For the burial of Sir John de Wyltone, Chaplain 19*d*. For pots for the dairy 7*d*. Cloth bought for making sacks 22*d*. For 3 wheelbarrows (cyveris) 3*d*. For one stake that was placed above the house late of Adam Poveray, without the East Gate, with suit for it 6*d*. For one frontal for the altar in the Chapel 3*s*. "Marescalcia," or Farriery, is the next head: hay bought for 6 horses and the sheep, from Wordy and Mucheldevere 52*s*. White leather for harness 4*s*. 4*d*. Hurtours [iron rings for axles] bought 3*d*.—There are many other items, connected with this subject.

"Gifts" is the next head. For a gift to Robert de Thorncombe, for having his counsel and advice 4*s*. A gift to William Sayr, for the like 4*s*. A gift to the 12 jurors at the pavilion [ad papilionem] 12*d*. A gift to one of the household of our Lady the Queen, that he would not take forage at Laynestone 6*d*. A present made to divers merchants, when they hired our selds upon the hills, in bread and wine 6*s*. "Rents returned" then follow: among them,—Rent paid to the lord the King for terrage of one seld in the Drapery 10*s*. 5*d*. Rent to the Prior of St. Swithun for thecroft of Segrin 3*s*. 5*d*. For St. Peter's penny 1*d*. To the brethren of the fraternity for a place near the cellar in Calpestreet 12*d*. To the Bishop, for the seld in Canevacerewe 16*d*. To the same for one seld in Ippe [quarter of the merchants of Ypres] 13*s*. 4*d*. To the Abbot of Hyde for the land of Candovere 2*s*. 6*d*. "Stipends," or yearly payments, then follow. The payment of the Warden for a year 40*s*. Of Sir Bartholomew the Chaplain 20*s*. Of Sir Robert Coleman 18*s*. Clothing of Joan de Wordy, a sister 5*s*. Clothing of John de Suttone 3*s*. Clothing of Agnes de Avyntone 3*s*. Clothing and shoes of John Nicole 4*s*. 6*d*. Payment of the collector of corn in the market 2*s*. Wages of the cook of the house 9*s*. Wages of John de Lisle 9*s*. Wages of J. de Botteli Juhyne 7*s*. Clothing of Sir John de Laynestone 6*s*. 8*d*. "Also, paid to him so long as the house should receive "the fruits of the church of Laynestone 33*s*. 4*d*. Wages of Sibilla the servant 20*d*. Wages of J. Daye [Dairywoman] 4*s*. 6*d*. Leather bought for the shoes of John Nicole, John the Tanner, John de Suttone, Sibilla, and Agnes, for the year 3*s*. 10*d*.

Next follow the Receipts from each of the three estates of the house, respectively, and the manner in which the articles so received have been disposed of. The account of the estate at Wordy comes first; under the several heads of wheat, barley, maslin, oats, and vetches; then ewes, hogsters, lambs, coarse wool, lambs' wool, wolfels, lambs' wolfels. Then we have the "Necessary expenses" of this estate; among them,—Paid the lord the King the twentieth granted to him 2*s*. 2*d*. A gift to the taxors of the same twentieth 2*s*. Paid Walter Paucefort for scutage of the lord the King 10*d*. For 6 acres of land hired of Dame Mary de Mortimer, for one sowing 18*d*. For 2 acres hired of Robert the Frankleyn, for three sowings 20*d*. For herbs bought in the garden of John atte Felde 20*d*. For one pound of pepper for rent to W. Paucefort. Wages of one shepherd 4*s*. Wages of a carter 8*d*. Wages of one keeping the lambs and hogsters for 35 weeks 2*s*.

The accounts of the estate at Mucheldevere come next. In addition to the grain before mentioned is "Bere," as also "Siligo," or Winter wheat. Under "Necessary expenses," the same sum of 2*s*. 2*d*. is paid to the King for the twentieth, and the like sum of 2*s*.; a gift (or rather, bribe) to the taxors. For compost bought, to compost the earth 12*s*. 7*d*.

In the accounts of Laynestone, evidently a small estate, pease appear among the grain and pulse grown and sold. Among the expenses is,—Wine bought on Easter Day 1*d*. Also, a gift to those collecting the tithe wool 12*d*. A gift to the shearers of the wool 10*d*. Wages of 2 "pedones" [P foot-soldiers] in autumn 3*s*.

On the obverse of the roll, somewhat effaced by time, are the particulars of moneys received from "Lettings "upon the Hills"—St. Giles's Hill; "Lettings in the "vill," and "Defaults in the rents."

A similar roll to the preceding one, for the succeeding year, the 9th of Edward II., in the 21st year of the Wardenship of John de Froylle. These were years of pestilence and famine throughout the greater part of England; though here no effects of their ravages seem to be alluded to. The items generally closely resemble those in the preceding roll; only those, which present any striking variations are here noticed.—Bought 200 stocktz (stockfish) for 26*s*. 17 thousand of slates are bought for 36*s*.; and 2000 of shingles for 5*s*. 6*d*. Mud (or perhaps, clay) is used for mending the house walls. 150 crests (for the roofs) cost 2*s*. 7*d*. "Small stones," bought for making a wall, cost 2*s*. 1*d*. One lead vessel, with a deep cavity, [plumbum cum oreo profundo], bought to put in the furnace, in the house late of William Petyt, costs 32*s*.; stone of Seleborne, for repairing the furnace, costing 15*d*. "Great stones bought "to put beneath the house late of Petyt, to wit, the "kitchen there 8*s*. 4*d*." One bushel of hempsed, bought for sowing, costs 20*d*.; and 2 ladders 16*d*.; small stones, to heighten the King's highway 16*d*. One pair of wheels for a plough costs 5*d*. As in the preceding year, the merchants hiring the selds "upon the "Hills," have a present of bread and wine, costing 6*s*. 6*d*.

Under the accounts of Wordy, a payment of 2*s*. is made to the King for his twentieth, and a present is made to the taxors to a like amount. Towards the expenses of the knights going twice to the Parliament at Lincoln 4d. "For pasture bought of the lady of Wordy, in Kyngestoneweie and elsewhere 6s. For "one acre of land hired of Geoffrey Bontrich, for three "sowings 4s., because it was composted."

Under Mucheldevere:—"For composting 15 acres of "land that was bought 49s." For one house bought of John atte Felde 30s. For taking down that house, and carrying it from Wordy to Mucheldevere, 4s. 6d.; where it was made into a grange, the particulars of the building of which are given; stones for "subsolas," to support it, cost 14d., the laying of them by the masons costing 5s. Covering the grange with straw cost 8s. 6d. Under the head of Laynestone, two "pedones" are hired, as in the year before, at a cost of 3s. 6d.

Ten rolls of parchment, fastened together at the head, much damaged by damp and exposure, and partly illegible, containing enrolments in Court in the city of Winton from the 7th to the 12th of Edward III., of testaments, deeds, conveyances, and applications for "stakes," in cases of non-payment of rent. The entries are in Latin.—

The first entry is illegible; the second is to the effect that Henry, brother of John de Spersholt, and William, rector of the church of St. Saviour, executors of the testament of John de Spersholt, proved the said testament according to the custom of the said city, as to a lay fee therein, left by the testator to Henry Noble and Alianor, his wife. Richard Horsemayn grants to John de Twyford, called "Smyth," and Agnes, his wife. John son of Joan la Blakiestre, and Adam Godoyer, executors of the testament of Joan Blakiestre, proved the said testament as to a lay fee in Shuldwrite-stret, which she leaves to her son John; he to pay yearly 10 pence to the church of St. Rumwald, for a lamp to burn on Sundays and Feast days at parish Mass, for the health of her soul, and of the soul of her late husband, Richard; as also, a yearly rent of 22 pence to the Brotherhood of the Kalenders of Winton.—the Kalenders were a society, who, it is supposed, devoted themselves to religion and the duties of education. There was a Brotherhood of Kalenders, also attached to the church of Holy Rood at Bristol.—Margaret, widow of Robert de Thorncumbe, and Thomas, his son, executors of the will of the said Robert, with William de Overtone, coadjutor therein, prove the testament of the said Robert, leaving to the said Margaret, for life, the tenement which the parson of the church in Parchemynerstret and John le Nappere hold in that street, and the two tenements near "his "postern," in Shullewrightstret, with remainder to the said Thomas, in tail, remainder to his daughters, Agnes and Margaret. Other property, in the city and upon St. Giles's Hill, he leaves to his sons, Thomas and Nicholas. The executors of William de Marleburgh, citizen of Winton, prove his testament,—whereby he leaves to Sir John Fraunceys and Sir John Gordone, Chaplains, celebrating divine service in the church of St. Peter, at Hyde, at the altar of St. Andrew, as is contained in a certain indenture, in prayers for the estate of King Edward, and for the souls of his progenitors, and for the soul of the testator, and the soul of Margaret, his late wife, and for the souls of their fathers and mothers, a tenement in the suburb of Winton, in Hydestret, to hold to them jointly for their lives, their rendering yearly to the Mayor of Winton 4 gallons of wine at the feast of our Lord's Nativity. He also leaves money for distribution, on his Anniversary days, and those of Agnes, his late wife, in bread and shoes, to the poor.

On Monday before the feast of the Assumption of St. Mary, in the 7th Edward III., John de Sandhurst, of the county of Kent, by deed quitted to Robert Dolsaly, his right in a tenement which Sir Robert de Maydestan acquired of the executors of John de Chiltecombe, in the city of Winton, in Menstrestret there. At a Court on Wednesday, the morrow of St. Thomas the Apostle, Luke Stout, burgess of the vill of Suthampton, and Joan, his wife, acknowledged their grant by deed to Henry Milis, of Farnham, of a tenement in High Street, at the entrance to Shortenestret, now called "Cyweryestret," [Jewry Street], in which Alice de Gloucestre formerly dwelt, for 40*li*. sterling paid. On the Eve of our Lord's Nativity, in the same year, John, son of Luke Stout before-named, William As, and Alice, his wife, daughter of the said Luke, quitted their right in the said tenement, in Cyweryestret. On Monday after the feast of the Epiphany, Robert de Arundel, of Wynton, and Margery, his wife, acknowledge in Court their con-vveyance to Philip le Chamdele, citizen, of the tene-ments which the said Margery had, the legacy of Philip de Candevere, her late husband, situate in the parishes of St. Mary de la Wod and of St. George. William Purchas, and Lucy, his wife, convey to Robert, son of the late Roger de Iugepene, their tenement in Parchemynerestret. The same William also conveys to Alice, his sister, four rooms under one roof—if indeed that is the meaning of "quatuor domunculos "sub uno cumulo." In a conveyance by John de Tytynge and Margery, his wife, to John Palmere and Thomas, his son, mention is made of a tenement near Shuldwyghtstret, and the curtilage of Thomas de Shoteshullynge. Robert, son of Robert de Colyngburne, grants to Joan, his mother, his tenement "in the "Constabulary" of Wynton.

A roll "of stakes, deeds, testaments, and claims, of "the city of Wynton," next follows, for the 8th year of Edward III., Ralph de Mallyng, Mayor; notice will only be taken here of persons or localities that seem more especially to deserve notice.—

At the first Court named in the roll, conveyance is made of 3 houses situate in Goldstret. Tenements in Winchester are mentioned, of the Prior of Haylynge and the Prior of Mottesfont. Robert Dolsaly appears to have been a large purchaser of property in Winchester, at this date (A.D. 1334-5): not improbably, he was father of Simon Dolsaly, grocer of London, Sheriff there in 1343, and Mayor in 1359, and who held property at New Romney, in Kent; Laurence de Lenne, burgess of the vill of New Sarum, and Julia his wife, late the wife of Thomas de Anne, citizen of the city of Winton, convey to Robert Dolsaly a tenement with two shops adjoining, in Calpstret, on the west side of Menstrestret. The "Hall of the "chief tenement" in High Street, of Roger atte Chirche, is mentioned. At a Court holden on Wednesday after the feast of St. Mark the Evangelist, Henry Milis, of Farnham, acknowledges his conveyance to Stephen le Fox, citizen of Winton, and Beatrix his wife, of a piece of land in High Street, at the entry of Shortenestret. The question suggests itself whether this may not have been an ancestor of the, since ennobled, family of Fox.—On proof of the testament of William de Cranburne, "A lane as you go from "Bredenestret to Shortenestret" is mentioned; also, "the lane of the church of St. Peter Whitebread." A tenement of the Abbot of Hyde, in "Flesmongare-stret," is noticed. A house is mentioned of the late William Gyfford, Clerk, in High Street, situate opposite to Merewenhayse. A tenement is mentioned as in a lane leading from Goldstret to Gars . . . opposite to Robert Dymaunde, baker, and near the church of St. Clement.

In a succeeding Court Roll, still for the 8th Edward III., John Gabriel is named as Mayor. John Iwon, rector of the church of St. George in Wynton, as one of the executors, proves the testament of Parnel Purbright, whereby she leaves to John Boterel, her husband, her tenement in Tannerestret, for his life; the same afterwards to be sold, and the proceeds to go for Masses in the church of St. George, for her soul, the soul of her said husband, Robert Costard, her father, and Peter Purbright, her late husband. John atte Welle, of Totonero, and Parnel, his wife, grant to John Jacob, of Huth, [? Hythe, near Southampton] their tenement in Calpstret. Henry le Canevaucer, and Agnes, his wife, convey to Nicholas de Northlech, Chaplain, their message in the city of Wynton, late the gift of John le Venable, of Basyngestok, and Anne, his wife, near the tenement late of Roger de Iugepene, in Parchemynerestret, and the garden of Master William de Monemuth. A tenement is mentioned of Walter Hogheles, in the lane called "Hogheleslane."—Here a considerable part of the fourth sheet, or "roll," in the bundle, is destroyed by damp.

Among the entries on the reverse, in Latin, the date now being the 9th year of Edward III., occurs the following:—"On Monday next after the feast of "the Conversion of St. Paul, in the above year, a certain Brother William, Subprior of the Conventual "order of Friars Preachers [Black Friars, or Dominicans] of Wynton (came) and brought into the Court "of the city of Wynton, the King's letters patent, "under his Great Seal, in these words:—Edward, by the grace of God, King of England etc., to the "Sheriffs and all other his bailiffs to whom the present "letters shall come, greeting. Whereas we have "understood for certain that some persons, rejecting "the habit of their religion, and despising their pro-fession, leaving the order of Friars Preachers, are

"wandering through many counties of our realm, to the loss of their own souls, and the no small scandal of the said Order; desiring to repress their insolence, and to give aid in especial to the brethren of the said Order, the more especially as, by Letters Apostolic indulgence has been given to take such apostates, wherever they may happen to be found, bind them, imprison, or otherwise subject them to rigorous discipline; we do strictly command you that such vagabonds in your bailiwicks you will without delay cause to be arrested, as the Provincial Prior, or any Conventual Prior, of the said Order, may have intimated unto you, and cause them to such Priors to be delivered; shewing such diligence herein, as we ought deservedly to commend, and that so, through your default, no complaint thereon may reach us. In witness whereof, these our letters patent we have caused to be made, to last so long as we may see fit. Witness, myself, at Waltham, the 3rd day of October, in the 7th year of our reign."

In the same year, a conveyance is made by Claricia, daughter and heir of Robert Adryan, to Godfrey atte Wynyer and Juliana, his wife, of her tenement on the north side of High Street, opposite the piece of ground [placia] called "Helle," and near the tenement formerly of John de Kyrkeby. Roger Tottemond, of Tychebourne, and Thomas, his brother, sons and heirs of Richard, deceased, William atte Mulle and Isabel his wife, and Agnes Tottemond, coheirs of the said Roger and Thomas, grant to Roger de Bulstede, Priest, the tenement which came to them on the decease of the said Richard, situate in Colbrokestret, one head thereof extending towards the city wall. Editha, relict of the said Richard, and now wife of Robert Boldynge, of Alresforde, quitclaims all right of dower therein. Joan Hogheles leaves 10 shillings of rent, on condition that for years after her death Masses are celebrated for her soul and the soul of Walter Hogheles, and all faithful deceased; also, to her son Thomas, if he returns, within four years after her decease, from the parts beyond sea, her shop, next to that late of John Moraunt, in High Street. To her executors one croft, and all the madder thereon, without the Westgate, to be sold, and the produce thereof to be expended in Masses, as above. Thomas de Goldhord, and Beatricia, his wife, in Court surrendered into the hands of the Abbot of Hyde, a deed as to a tenement in Goldstret, between the church of St. Clement and the tenement some time of William Doggechurl, which William, the former Abbot, and the Convent, had granted to Philip de Walton, baker, grandfather of the said Beatricia. A mutilated entry, of which a fragment is left, speaks of John Abraham and Robert Abraham, and of a tenement in Winton of Robert de Lynacre.

The next roll begins in the 9th year of the same reign, Robert de Farnfolde being Mayor.—The Prior of Seleburne, by John Otewy and Nicholas de Roystone, his attorneys, sues for a stake to be placed on the tenement of John de Tytyng, taverner, in Shuldwyrgtystret, near the tenement of John le Blakere, for 105 shillings, rent in arrear for 13 years. Judgment is ultimately given, that the said Prior shall recover the tenement, to hold in demesne.

The next roll begins in the 10th year of the same reign. Katharine, wife of John de Kyrkeby the younger, is mentioned: the elder John has been already noticed. A tenement in Tannerestret, of William atte Horeappoldore, is mentioned. Richard, parson of the church of St. Peter Shambles, and Andrew de Anesty, are mentioned as executors of the testament of Joan de Hogheles, deceased. Matildis, daughter of William Scathebold, and John Chark, are named as executors of the testament of the same William; he leaves to her his part of the mill called "Kynesgumle," if his son John does not come home; but if he does come, he is to have and enjoy it. Thomas de Hoyvile, son, and one of the heirs, of the late Sir Philip de Hoyvile, Knight, in Court, acknowledges that he has granted to Philip le Farnfold, called "Le Ismgongere" [Ironmonger] and Agnes, his wife, a shop in the High Street of Wynton, in the Drapery, with a place behind, extending to the churchyard of St. Swithun, being near the shop of the Warden of the Holy Trinity, in the churchyard of the Nuns of St. Mary of Winton. Also, a tenement in the Constabulary of the Castle of Winton, between the church of St. Laurence and the tenement of Isabel Sturmy. Also, a tenement near the house called "Le Couhous," near the churchyard of St. Swithun.—The rest of the roll, at the lower part, is torn away. In the same year, Walter de Sparkeforde and Juliana, his wife, convey to Sir (Domino) Walter, Abbot of Hyde, messuages in High Stret and Wodestret, the latter having been had of the feoffment of Nicholas le Coliere, butcher, and Matildis, his wife. The Mayor and Bailiffs deliver to Walter de Helle a piece of vacant land, in Munrestret, to add to his house, he paying yearly 3 pence towards the ferm due to the King. Thomas de Tame, "pellipier" (skinner) and Joan, his wife, grant to Richard de Wykham and Rosya, his wife, a piece of land in Athelynggestret, without the West Gate, and near to the land of Geoffrey de Extone, and to the Hanekeheye. William atte Hore Appeldore is again named, with Albreda, his wife; they receive a conveyance from John Chark and Amicia, his wife, of 2 vacant pieces of land in the Aldermanry of Tannerestret. A tenement in High Street is mentioned, near Thomasesgate. Claricia, daughter of Robert Adrian, and Orongia, his wife, grants to William le Ismgongere her right in a cartilage on the west side of Kyng Yate (Gate), near the wall of Wynton. John le Markere acknowledges that, with the leave of King Edward the Third, he has granted to the Prior and Convent of the Cathedral church of St. Swithun all his tenement in the Constabulary of the Castle of Wynton. John Ace, rector of the church of Broune Candevere, grants to Thomas de Medmenham and Cristina, his wife, a tenement in Brudenestret, near Sutythelynggestret. The roll is torn in half, and imperfect, in a presentment made, apparently, against a lane near Colebrokstret, where thieves and misdoers committed their offences.

Roll for the 11th year of Edward III., Ralph de Mallyng, Mayor.—The parish and church of St. Michael of Gywerstret [Jewry Street] are mentioned. A tenement is named, of William atte White Hores, baker. The church of St. Mary "in Atrio Sancti Swithuni," is mentioned; also, a house, late of Thomas atte Goldhord, goldsmith, and Beatricia, his wife, at the entrance of Oldstret. A grant by John Saunterre to Philip Marmyon of 40s. yearly quitrent from a tenement in Jwerstret. John le Spicer, son and one of the heirs of William de Reygate, Spicer, of Wynton, conveys to Andrew Payn, of Kyngessombourne, and Henry le Hayward, of Coumbe, his share of a tenement belonging to his late father, in High Street, namely, the hall and entrance, the great kitchen of the said hall, and other rooms in a ruinous state: only part of this entry is left. Matildis, daughter of John de Kyrkeby, proves in Court, by witnesses, that she has reached full age.

The next roll is for the 11th and 12th years of Edward III., John Gabriel being again Mayor; the ink has run on the parchment, in addition to which, it is so effaced, being the outer leaf, as to be almost wholly illegible. A conveyance of a vacant place in Parchemynerestret is made by Henry de Asshe and John de Sennebury, Priors of the Congregations of the Fraternity and the Kalenders, to Robert de Inkepenne, citizen and merchant.

The last Courts, entered on the last page, are for the 12th year of Edward III., but the context is almost wholly illegible: a few names, here and there, are all that can be made out.

Among the early documents belonging to the Corporation which have been placed in my hands by the Town Clerk, there are ten membranes of parchment, generally in good preservation, with entries, in Latin, of the accounts of the Fraternity, or Brotherhood, of St. John the Baptist, in Winton, temp. Richard II., Henry IV., and Henry V. The Brotherhood was attached to, and probably had its meetings at, the Hospital of St. John the Baptist; its Brethren, and Sisters being united, to some extent, for charitable objects in life, but more especially for prayers and Masses for the souls of the members after their decease: at what time the Fraternity was established, does not appear, but it was, no doubt, at a later period than the reign of Edward the Second. The following is a translation of the title at the head of one of these rolls:—

"The Account of John Enford, tailleur, and John Barbour, Wardens of the Fraternity of Saint John, in the Hospital there by providence of the Tailors of Winton first ordained and provided, from the Sunday next after the feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in the 13th year of the reign of King Richard the Second, to the Sunday next after the feast of the aforesaid Purification of the Blessed Mary, in the 14th year of the said lord the King, for one whole year." The receipts are 107 shillings, from 107 men,—Sisters at this date are not mentioned. Under "Foreign receipts and sales of wax," 46s. 8d. are received from 14 men, "on their entry, as by a certain schedule": also, 17s. 7½d. received from the sale of old wax. Arrears are also received that were due to John Dollyng and Walter atte Stone, Wardens in the preceding year. 15 of the brethren, among them, one of the name of Geoffrey Percy, make default. Under "Necessary Expenses," 54 lbs. of wax "of Polane (Poland)" cost 27s.; the making of 4 torches 3s. 4d.; of 13 square tapers and one round taper, and "painting flowers of wax thereon" 2s. Victuals bought for the Wardens and the torchbearers on the day of the feast of Corpus Christi, together with gifts to the 4 torchbearers 4s.: victuals bought for the said Wardens, and the brethren and minstrels at the house of St. John, on the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist 9s.: given to 5 minstrels on that day 6s. 8d. The next head of expenditure is "Trentals;" 2s. 6d. each being paid for Trentals for the souls of seven brethren named, Geoffrey Percy among them. Also, a payment of 12 pence to a painter for painting 16 stands for the torches. Paid Ralph Smythe for one bar of iron, for supporting the light 5s. 6d. Paid a peliper [skinner] for purfyles [borders] for 16 penecels [paper streamers] bought of him 8d. Under "Wages," are payments, to Peter the Chaplain, serving the said Brotherhood for the present year; to John atte Welle, clerk of the Chaplain 6d.; for one set of vestments bought for celebration 18s. 4d., beyond 31s. 8d. received as gifts from divers friends, to buy the same: "parchment for [this] the common roll 2d."

On the reverse of the roll are entered some supplementary accounts for the 14th year: 4 round tapers in the Chapel (of the Hospital) and candles for celebration of the Mass, during the year, took 8 lbs. of wax, and 13 square tapers 15s.: one round taper, made and placed in the church of the Kalenders, took 3 pounds; and the flowers and roses put on the square tapers took 3 pounds also. A gilt chalice was in the possession of the brotherhood, weighing 46s. (or 27 oz. 12 dwt.); also, of "cane-vas," 14 ells. The church of the Kalenders—St. Mary Kalenders, no longer exists, and the parish is now united to that of St. Maurice. The society of devotees, so styled, used it as their chapel.

The next roll is the Account of John Denyton and Thomas Deserose, for the 15th–16th year of Richard II. It is shorter than the preceding one, and the writing in places is all but illegible. Payments, of one shilling each, are made by 106 men and women, members, and 7 new members; among them, Robert Barbour, of Romsey, pays 23s.: 3s. 3d. is a legacy left by Richard Frye. 13 square torches and one round torch are made for the church of the Kalenders, the making costing 2s.; the making of one torch burning at Mass, weighing 8 pounds, cost 9 pence. Among the 5 Trentals at 2s. 6d. each, are two for the souls of two sisters, Alice wife of Andrew Helyar, and Alice wife of Philip Couk.

The next roll is the Account of Henry Cully and Thomas Niweman, barber, Wardens. Only 100 men and women here pay, as existing members: five pay on admission. The Trentals mentioned are few, and the items but meagre, and of no fresh interest.

The next is the Account of Henry Barstaple and John Stoke, Wardens for the 17th–18th of Richard II. Payments of one shilling each are made by 112 existing members. No less than 14 new members pay 3s. 4d. each; among them, Sir John Croser, Chaplain, Thomas Rone, and Roger Ashwell, tailours, Richard Brasyare of Wykham, and Richard Dunsterre of Suthampton, bakere. Philip Denemede pays 6s. 8d. on his entry, and John Thornare 2s. only. Under "Necessary expenses," 5 pence is paid "for red and green wax, bought to make "flowers for adorning the wax candles called 'torches,'" at the Feast of Corpus Christi. For making, out of the wax in store, 4 torches, 13 square and 4 round tapers, for the Church of the Kalenders, the charge is 3s. 5d.—"Four torches of wood with castles to them . . . bought for store 13s. 8d. Expenses of the Wardens and 3 minstrels on the feast of Corpus Christi and the Nativity of St. John the Baptist 6s. Expenses of one "of the Wardens, riding to Romsey, to seek the minstrels 6d. Colours bought to paint the torches green." Among the names of the brethren and sisters for whom Trentals are celebrated, is that of John Rudbourne, Prior of Winton. The pay of Sir John Croser, Chaplain, this year, is 4*li*. 13s. 6d. Among the stores in hand, are 17 dishes of tin [de stagno] for the tapers, 16 long rods to put the torches on, and 18 penecels (streamers) for the torches, tapers, and minstrels. Maurice Johan compounds in making a payment for life, namely 20s. in a chalice, and 12 pence in ready money, "that there may be prayed for, his good estate, and the souls of his "parents, friends, benefactors, and all others for whom "he is bound to pray."

The Account of John Steer and Henry Wederyng, for 18–19 Richard II. The number of existing members is 110, only six new ones being admitted, among them "John

"Kythulle, of Seynt Croys,"—of Saint Cross. Among the items under "Necessary expenses" are: for verdegreece, for making the torches green 8*sd*. For 3 Judases bought for the same torches 9d.—wax images of Judas, to hang therefrom;—13 square tapers, one round torch, and one round taper, made, and flowers to them 4s. Expenses of 4 men carrying torches on the day of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, with the expenses of another man, carrying a taper 6d. For 16 penecels (streamers) of paper, bought for the said torches 6d. Expenses of the said Wardens and of 2 minstrels on the feasts of Corpus Christi and St. John the Baptist 3s. 6*sd*. Given to the said minstrels for their trouble 3s. 6d. Cloth for 2 hoods for the said minstrels 3s. For a gift to Maurice Cantelow, by covenant of the auditors and brethren of the fraternity, for the gift of one chalice, which he gave to the brotherhood 6s. 8d. For hanging one bell, the gift of the same Maurice 20d. For 3 pounds of wax, bought for candles consumed at the celebration of Masses of the brotherhood in the year 15*sd*. The Trentals, the payment for each of which is 2s. 6d., are 10 in number: among those whose souls are prayed for, are, Isabel wife of Nicholas Port, Joan wife of Robert Nightyngale, and Alice wife of Roger Snel. The payment of the clerk to the Chaplain is still only 6 pence yearly. From the reverse of the roll we find that the chalice given by Maurice Cantelow weighed 26s. 8d., or 16 ounces.

The next membrane is the Account of Thomas Rone and John atte Rooke, for the year 21–22 of Richard the Second. Only 91 shillings are paid by existing members, and 13s. for arrears. Eleven new brethren pay on admission; among them, Robert Popham, John Cook, of Romsey, and William Couper, of Southampton. Walter Cook, Ralph Smyth, and Joan Pulter (Poulter) leave legacies. In this year, nearly all the torches are burnt in the Chapel of the Hospital of St. John, and one round torch only in the Church of the Kalenders. The making of the torches and tapers, with flowers, white, red, and green, costs 5*li*. 10*sd*. Gifts to the minstrels on the feasts of Corpus Christi and the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, with cloth for their hoods, cost 4*li*. 4*sd*. One table for the altar costs 2*li*. 1*sd*. Wax candles for the priest (presbytero) celebrating in the chapel of the Hospital cost 5*sd*.; and one clerk ministering to the Chaplain in the chapel for the year 11*sd*. The Trentals celebrated this year are but five in number.

There is now an hiatus of several years, the intervening rolls probably being lost. The title says nothing now about the Tailors of Winchester, and the Account is that of Edward Dannere and Thomas Suttone, 3, 4 Henry IV. The members, paying one shilling each, are more numerous than ever, the men and women being 134 in number: reference is made to a schedule (now probably lost) in which their names are set forth. Bread and ale consumed cost 12*sd*.; wine, on taking the last account, 8*sd*. Paid for his stipend to John Suttone, Chaplain, in the tavern of Mark le Fyere 40*li*. Afterwards, paid to the said John Suttone for his stipend 70*li*.; and on the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, in the 4th year of King Henry the Fourth, for his stipend 26*li*. 8*sd*.

Account of John Esburi, Saddelere, and John Stoke, "Wardens of the light of the Brotherhood of St. John "Wynton," 4, 5 Henry IV. 126 persons of the brotherhood pay, towards the salary of the Chaplain, 6*li*. 6*sd*. Fifteen persons, entering the Brotherhood, pay 50 shillings; and on the day of the feast 20*li*. are received from members of the brotherhood. Nine banners with silver fittings and purfyles (edges) in freng of silk, and 15 penecels, cost in all 8*li*. 8*sd*. For making 14 tapers, and flournyng, 2*li*. 4*sd*. For the salary of 6 minstrels on the day of St. John the Baptist 3*li*. 4*sd*. Paid the Chaplain 60*li*. Paid the cook for his labour 12*sd*. Four Trentals only are paid for this year. "Paid for the whole of "the banquet, as set forth by particulars 35*li*. 2*sd*."—These "parcella," or particulars, probably appeared on another roll, now lost.

There is now again a void of several years, the next roll being the Account of John Gylot, tailleur, and John Parmenter, Wardens of the Fraternity, 12, 13 Henry IV. There is "remaining in the box," since the last account, 6*li*. The Fraternity subscribes, each, one shilling, towards the Chaplain's salary, making 8*li*. 10*li*. 170 persons contributing. On the day of the banquet, they subscribe also 18*li*. 10*sd*. Twelve persons, on entering, pay in all 40*li*. The Chaplain is paid 7 marks, and his clerk, 12*sd*. There are 5 Trentals, at 2*li*. 6*sd*. each, one being for Emmotta Godeles. Bread, ale, and cheese, consumed at the feast of Corpus Christi, cost 20 pence, and bread and wine given to the auditors of last account 13

penne. Verdegrys and rosyne, for the torches and tapers for the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, with the making thereof, cost 16*d.*, and the flouryng of the torches 12*d.* The following is the first list given of items of the cost of the Feast.—“Paid for the whole “feast of the brothers and sisters of the fraternity aforesaid, on the feast of St. John above-mentioned, “as set forth in the particulars below, to wit;—6 “bushels of wheat, at 6*d.* the bushel; for gryndynge the same 3*d.*; for bakynge it 6*d.*; for bread bought “12*d.*; for ale 7*s.* 1*d.*; for salt fish bought of Walter “Okefold, 6*s.* 8*d.*; for milet (mullet), bas, ray, and fresh “counger, of the same Walter 6*s.* 8*d.*; for fresh salmon, “bought, of him 8*s.*; eels 10*d.*; fresh fish bought of “Adam Frost 9*s.*; fresh fish bought of John Whelere, “fish[re] 2*s.*; fresh fish bought of a stranger 2*s.* 8*d.*; “beans 9*d.*; piscondis [peasecods] 4*d.*; divers spices “bought, to wit, saffron, ginger, and sauunders 12*d.*; “salt 2*d.*; sauces 2*d.*; vinegar 1*d.*; onions 2*d.*; fuel “18*d.*; coals 3*d.*; paid Philip the cooke for his labour “2*s.*; and to John Brounsham 6*d.*; to 3 labourers 2*s.*; “to 3 minstrels 3*s.* 4*d.*; rushes for the hall 8*d.*; for 3 “gallons of wine and one pinte, bought the same day “for the dance [tripidatione] 19*d.*; for cheese 8*d.* “Total 3*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*.” There is entered also a payment “of 13*s.* 4*d.* to Thomas Deverose, tailleur, for alms, and to William Asshewell, for alms, 10 shillings. The preceding dinner, no doubt, was given on a fish, or fasting, day.

The last of these rolls is the Account of William Devenyshe and Richard Wyghtryng, “Wardens of the “light of the Brotherhood of St. John the Baptist of “Wynton,” 2, 3 Henry V. Towards the Chaplain’s salary, 14*s.* 5*d.* members pay one shilling each: and they subscribe 17*s.* 7*d.* on the day of the feast. Six persons entering the Fraternity pay 20*s.*, but they are not named. The Chaplain, as in the year last given, receives 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and his clerk 12 pence. Philip the Cook prepares the feast, but his is one of the eight whose Trentals are celebrated, Agnes Serle and Cecily Dobbes being two others. The carriage of 4 torches and of 14 square tapyrs, at the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, cost 15*d.*; and the painting of 13 Judases 3*s.* 4*d.*. The particulars of the “feast,” then follow: not a “fish-dinner” this year.—“Paid for “bread 4*s.* 1*d.*; for ale 7*s.* 2*d.*; for wine 7*s.*; beef, “pork, mutton, and veal 2*s.*; 3½ lambs 4*s.* 6*d.*; geese “7*s.* 7*d.*; 8 sucking-pigs 4*s.*; fowls 4*s.* 10*d.*; venison “bought 5*s.*; milk and floure, and eggs, 20*d.*; onions, “garlic, and vinegar, 6*d.*; coals and fewelle 16*d.*; salt “2*d.*; spices and honey 4*s.* 1*d.*; rushes for the hall “12*d.*; players at the same feast 12*d.*; the pipers “[flistillatoribus] the same day 3*s.* 4*d.*; to Philip Cook “3*s.* 4*d.*; to Richard Style 22*d.*; to Thomas Baker “16*d.*; for carrying the new banner 4*d.*; for others “serving 2*s.* 4*d.*; for washing the linen cloths 8*d.* “Total 3*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.*.” As before, Thomas Deverose, tailleur, has 13*s.* 4*d.* for alms; and 2 shillings is the payment “to our Clerk this year,” for ink and parchment. The names of the ten Auditors are given on the reverse; of them seven have the Christian name of “John.” Thomas Dunster and Thomas Gernesey are mentioned as the “New Wardens” elected.

12 slips of parchment, generally in fair condition, containing the names of the City officers for the following years of the reign of Richard II., 4, 6, 11, 13 (apparently), 14, 15, 20, and 4th Henry V.; four others belonging to uncertain dates, at the beginning of the 15th century. The officials named, besides the Mayor, are, the two Coroners, two Constables, the Alderman and Bedel of High Street, Four Auditors of the Twenty-four, Four Common Auditors, Two Weighers, Two King’s Chamberlains, the Clerk, Four Sergeants, the Aldermen and Bedel of Jeweryestret, the Alderman and Bedel of Goldstret, the Alderman and Bedel of Colbronestret, the Alderman and Bedel of Tannere-stret, the Alderman and Bedel of Northgatestret, Two “Cadaveratores” (? Inquest officers), Testers of Woad, Warden of the Corn and Poultry, Wardens of Tanned Leather, the last four kinds of officials varying a little from time to time. On the back of the first of these rolls are entered the names of the four assessors and collectors of the first tax, 100*s.*, “for the Parliament “at Northampton”; and below there is an entry, in Latin:—“Be it remembered, that there was granted at “an Assembly, holden on Wednesday after the Feast “of St. Gregory the Pope, in the 4th year, for the “bridge at Northgate, and for murage of the city, “from the feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed “Mary, to the feast of St. Michael next to come 13*s.* 4*d.* “per week.” On the reverse of the second roll are the two “Assessors and Collectors of the first taxation “for the Parliament at Westminster”; and below, the four “Assessors and Collectors of one tenth, granted to “the lord the King.” On the reverse of the third slip, are entered the two “Assessors and Collectors of the “first tax for the Parliament at Westminster, to wit, “16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*.” Below, are the four “Assessors and “Collectors of a moiety of a tenth,” and then, the two “Assessors and Collectors of the second taxation for “the Parliament at Cantebrygge, to wit, ten marks.” In the roll for the 4th year of Henry V., the Clerk is John Bye, but in a roll of later date, but with no year named, he is styled “Recorder.” From the 4th to the 11th of Richard the Second, the Clerk is John Craan, from the 13th (?) to the 20th, William Wythurst: during the reign of Henry IV. apparently, John Sandres, and in the reign of Henry V., John Bye, already mentioned. A small slip of parchment, apparently belonging to the reign of Henry IV., contains the Panel of Jurors “to choose officers for our Lord the King.”

A Murage roll, formed of narrow slips of parchment, sewed together, eight feet in length, filled with entries on the one side, with some few added on the other. Its title, at the head, except the words “Regula Muragii,” is almost wholly effaced, but, from the internal evidence afforded by names, it belongs to the reign of Richard the Second. The following are a few extracts as to names of persons, trades, and localities.—“From a “cottage in La Hey Stret (the High Street) 4*d.* From “the High School 13*d.* From Richard at the Baile 4*s.* “John Popyll, Barbour 12*s.* John Bradsbury, Webbe, “(Weaver) 23*d.* Amissa at Horne 2*d.*.” To all appearance, for the context is much effaced, the first 50 named, mostly in High Street, Calpe Street, and Gold Street, were tenants of the Abbot and Convent of Hyde. “From the house near Whytbrede (? St. Mary’s White “Bread) 3*d.* John Patryk, Vyschere (fisher) for 2 “cottages in Smal Lane 5*d.* Thomas Smale, for the “garden of Saint Mary’s, in Vleschmonger Stret 8*d.* “Edward Twalyvaly 3*d.* Matilda Crawle 1*d.* John “Cowherde 2*d.* Sir Robert, Warden of the Holy “Trinity 20*s.* The Abbess of St. Mary Wynton 8*s.* Twelve entries follow, of “Tenants of St. Mary Mag-dalen:” several persons are named as being “Voller” (? fuller) by trade. “Tenants of Robert Barbour, of “Romsy,” then follow; “Tenants of John Stormy, of “Bolydone,” “Tenants of Stormy, of Owlstone,” there being, in fact, but one, “Thomas Frayne, Groser, 2*d.*” Tenants of the following persons are then given: John Bethewyde of Redyng, Richard Tystede, John Blakemor, Philip Sauterne, Robert Smyth of Alfordre,—his only tenant being “Richard Clemenam, Webbe, in Col-broksstret 3*d.*,”—John Potynge, John Bonezat, Thomas Lanyton—among whose tenants are—“John “Boher and Raymond Clylve 12*d.*,” and “John Lok, “deyer (dyer) 8*d.*,”—Robert Mayle, skynnyere, and “John Mawndevyle.” Tenants of the Abbess of Wherwelle, (near Andover) are “Robert Smyth, of North-gate 5*d.*, and Edytha Quarel, in Calpestret 3*d.*” Other landlords here named are, Richard Knottre, of Wal-tham, and Ingram Platot: among tenants without a landlord named are “Henry Skarlet 7*d.*,” and “Cottage “of the Mill at the Posterne 3*d.*” Then follow the “Tenants of Jasper Woodlok,” and then “Sir Peter, “Warden of St. John’s Winton 7*s.* 6*d.*” Tenants of Edward Botlyer and of William Fawkenere, follow; among the latter, “Robert Tournour, Clerk 3*d.*;” Srygge “Burlyster” (? Srygge the Hucker) 23*d.*” Two tenants are named of the Prior of Motfont—now Motisfont, near Romsy: and one, “William Harpstone 7*d.*,” of the Abbot of Tychevelde (Tichfield). Tenants are then named, of the Abbots of Dereford, of Myssydene (? Missenden in Bucks), and of Wynteneye, and “Rents “of Sir Waller Tygale, in Golstret.” “Alissa at the “Tabarde” pays 4 pence. Tenants under Margaret Halow, and John ate Rygge, of Alysforde, follow, 6 pence being charged upon three cottages of the latter in Botelaris Lane, which they fail to pay. Tenants of “Notebem of Hamton, and of John Chamdloer, follow; among the latter, “Ostelare de Chekyr” (? keeper of the Checkers) pays 5*s.* “John Boner 6*d.*,” and “Conyng “Lymnere (? Cuning Painter) 6*d.*” Holders of tene-ments of Sir Hugh Basyng follow, “three cottages in “Fleschmongerstret” paying 4 pence. Then follow “Rents of Richard Awmely, Agatha Cartere, and “Peter Rottone, of Wyltone. A tenement under the Prior of Sowthwyk is held by John Smyth, Card-makere, (maker of cards, for carding cloth), he paying 4 pence. Many other small tenements then follow; among them that, paying 4*d.*, of “John Chawndere “(? Cauldron maker) at Est Gate.”

The names on the reverse of the roll are somewhat effaced: there are mentioned "The brethren of the Fraternity of the Kalendary," but no sum against them: "the parsonage of the church of St. Clement 3 pence: the Master of the High School, and Sir John in the same place 6d.; Thomas Hattere, in Colbroksret 4d.; Sir Peter, Warden of St. John's, for one tenement near the Gate 2d.; Jayney Pyper, near Nicholas Tannere 4d.; the tenement of Henry Cully, near Stodmerbygge 1d.; Thomas Wolvels at Swane 2d.; John Sadelere, under the Pentice 5d."

A large sheet of parchment, containing a letter of attorney in Latin, of Joan of Navarre, Duchess of Bretagne, the second wife of King Henry the Fourth. Whereas the said King by deed, dated the 26th of June, in the 4th year of his reign, confirmed afterwards by King Henry (the Fifth), "father of the present King," made her extensive grants, as therein enumerated, for her dower, she thereby appoints Thomas Hereford, John Bye, and William Byngham, her attorneys to sue for and recover, and receive for her, all moneys accruing by the said right within the city and liberty of Winton. "In witness whereof, these letters patent we have had made. Given at Westminster, the 6th day of November in the first year of the reign of our most dread lord, and most dear cousin, Henry, King of England and France, since the Conquest, the Sixth." The "most dread King" was the youthful grandchild of her second husband, Henry the Fourth, to whom she was married, in the Cathedral Church of St. Swithun, at Winchester, on the 7th of February 1403. She died at Havering atte Bower, in Essex, July 10th 1437, and was buried in the Cathedral at Canterbury. This deed is neatly written, and in good preservation.

A roll, consisting of two membranes, sewed together, in good condition, with the following title, in Latin.—"Wynton. The Account of John Veel and Thomas Dunsterre, Chamberlains of the City there, in the time of William Ros . . . Mayor of the same city, from the feast of St. Michael, in the ninth year of the reign of King Henry the Fifth, to the same feast next ensuing, in the first year of the reign of King Henry the Sixth." It begins with "Arrears" paid: then receipts of 48s. 2d. and 50s. 2d. from four men who have "Baghm," put against their names. Receipts from the six Aldermen follow; then Poundage; Fees for entrance into the Merchants' Guild; Rents for tenements held of the Corporation ending the list of receipts.

The following are selections from the numerous items of expenditure:—"Expended by the Mayor on the Auditors, dinner two days 7s. 6d.; bread and wine given to William Chayny and John Martyn, Justiciars of the Assizes holden at Wynton on the 2nd of March this year 4s. A gift to the orier [criary] of the said Justiciars 20d.; sweet wine given to Henry Somer 9d.; a breakfast made for Richard Walpohe, Richard Holte, and others 4s. 3½d.; expenses incurred by the Mayor at Suthampton, Richard Turnaunt, Richard Belt, and 12 others of the best men, in a matter there against John Herforde, "nuncium," before the Chancellor of England, to wit, dinner for men and horses 9s.; for a reward against John Herforde, 6s. 8d.; for a horse hired for a messenger of the lord the King 12d.; for 3 potels of wine given by the Mayor to Thomas Mydeltone and others 12d.; 3 potels of wine consumed by the Mayor, John Veel, John Bye, John Colyn, William Leche, John Frenshe, and many others, on viewing the rivulets and waters of our city at the feast of Pentecost 12d.; expenses incurred at Allesforde upon the men of our city, while the Frenchmen were being escorted to London by the Sheriff, for divers victuals there 4s.; and 8d. for one gallon of wine, given to a gentleman of the Duke of Berford (Bedford); for labourers hired in cleansing the fosses of the city 5s. 2d.; 20s. paid to Richard Wollop for his fee; 46s. paid to the Clerk of the Market of our Lord the King; 40d. paid to his Clerk, and 2s. to his cryer; 9s. 6½d. expenses of the said Clerk at La Sterre [the Star]; 5s. 6½d. for his breakfast in the Mayor's house; 6s. 8d. paid to the Justiciar of the Marchesye [Marshalsea], because the Bailiffs ought to hold the City Court; 40d. paid to John Person, for his labour, and for a horse hired to Chechestre, to ask leave of the Justiciar of the Marchesye, to hold a Court of the city of Wynton; 40s. paid to John Veel for his labour in going to London, to receive his oath for Mayor; 40d. given to 2 minstrels of the Lord Bishop of Wynton; 40d. paid to four minstrels of the Duke of Gloucestre, to wit, Robert Battere, John Stremer, and others; 20d. given to 2 minstrels of the Duke of Excestre, to wit, John

"Kent and John Elmeswelle; 24s. paid to John Frenshe, for waiting 24 days in Parliament; 24s. paid to Thomas Coteler, for 24 days in the same Parliament this year; 4s. paid to Sir Peter Beser, Warden of the Hospital of St. John, for the mill at Coytebere; 12d. paid for the cost of the horse of John Herford in the house of La Chekere [the Chequers]; 6s. 8d. given to Thomas Clerke, John Farfelde, minstrels of the Duke of Bedford; 2s. paid for 3 "ornices" [P quails] given to the wife of the Sheriff; 10d. paid for one gallon of wine of 'Rayne' (P Rhine) given to John Arnolde, bailiff of the Soke of Winton; 4s. 6d. expended upon the waits, and those who walked with the Mayor on the Eve of St. Peter, in bread, wine, and ale; 12d. paid for the writing of divers things on the Black Paper and elsewhere; also 7½ 14s. paid to John Wade, mason, in full payment of all expenses in building La Sterre [the Star]; 5s. 8d. costs of a certain writ of trespass, sued by John Golofre against Thomas Hebbe, because he took a distress in the house of John Tannere, for money delivered by the said John Tannere; 26s. paid to Walter Hore and William Leche, late Bailiffs of the city, for the Weavers; 26s. 8d. paid to Richard Colvyll for a horse which John Herford, messenger of the Lord the King, went away with; 2s. paid to James Cuteler, citizen, at Parliament this year, to excuse every citizen of the city aforesaid from being collector of the King's money within the County of Suthampton; 12d. for divers expenses incurred by the Mayor on St. John's night this year."

A narrow parchment roll, 6½ feet in length, containing, in English, the Usages of the City of Winchester, written in a hand of probably, the early part of the reign of Henry the Sixth. In the first one or two articles the context is slightly effaced, but in other respects the roll is in good condition throughout. The only writing on the reverse is the following, in a similar hand to the rest of the context:—"These beþ þe usages of þe cyty of Wynchael þ' hautyþ ben vsyd by oure eldrene þe tyme of oure eldrene birth and shully y be to þe fraunchyse saue and susteyne."—These be the usages of the City of Wynchester, that have been used by our elders the time of our elders' birth, and shall be, to the franchise save and sustain.—This is repeated as the first article of the Usages, except that, for "vsyd" by our eldrene þe" is substituted "usyd yn þe."

The following are a few extracts from this lengthy document:—"The Second article is as to the Mayor, who is to be "chose by the comunis gaderynge, and gaderynge and grauntyng of the foure and twenty "I swore also of the comynes the pryncypale; the weche Mayre shal be out put for 3ere to 3ere; the weche Maire ne schal underfonge [undertake] no pleynte ne no ple meinteigne ne susteyne of þynges that toucheth the roule of the town." The Third article treats of the election of the Four and Twenty. The Fourth, of the two Bailiffs. The Fifth, of the four Serjeants—"Also ther shullyth be four seriauntes "yn the town y swore, 3erdes [swords] berynge, for to do the hestes of the Maire and of the baylives a boue y seyd." The Sixth, as to qualifications of the Four and Twenty. The Seventh, there to be "twai "Corners"—two Coroners, to do duty as well in the Sook (Soke) as in the City. The Eighth, as to the Bailiffs' rolls of pleas. Ninth,—"also, non of cite ne "schal don wurchs no quile ne chalons, with owte the wallas of the cite, upon peyne to lese that good or that worly [work]. And understondith, that everi grete hous wher that me [P one] worcyth the quilts schulle to [shall pay to] the fyrm of the town 5s. by 3ere pey, etc. 10. And understondith that tho that wercheth the burellis schulleth take for Alle Halowentyd yn to the Annunciation of oure [Sady] for here work of the clothe bat xviii. and so fro the Annunciation yn to Alle Halwentyd a reward is." 11. No man to make burels [coarse red cloth] unless of the franchise: but every fuller may make one in the year, and every other maker shall give one [cloth] to the King's ferm, in each year. 12. Every "chaloun" to be 4½ ells long, and 4½ ells "yn the work before the chaloun maker;" i.e. in width; etc. 13. It is pretty clear that this article has been so badly transcribed as to be almost unintelligible:—"And that the chalounis that eldernelich had y set so olde here assise and 3it other chalounis buy, y funde that hy ne habbet thelke assise in whos bonde kybuth funde, 3yf hyt so ne be that it ne be nat to sale. 14. No woolumonger, or other man, to have a stool in the High Street "but 3yf he do wherefore"—? without he do (pay) therefor. 15. No man shall buy green leather, or "sain green"

[? sengreen], in the town, unless he be of the franchise, etc. 16. No fisher or poulterer shall buy his wares to sell again before "undren" [the bell at eleven o'clock] be rung. 17. Victuals once brought into the town and set for sale, not to be taken away again unsold, without leave of the bailiffs; on pain of forfeiture. 18. No regrator to go out of town "to engrose the chaffare" [wares] cominge to towne," on pain of being 40 days in the King's prison. 19. As to the custom of fishers,—each man having a board that the fish lye upon, is to (pay) a farthing a day to the King's ferm. 20. A cart coming to the town with fish (that belongs to the franchise) shall pay to the King, each time, one halfpenny. 21. A cart coming with fish, that does not belong to the franchise, shall pay to the King 2 pence; and a "horseburdene of fresche (? fish)," not of the franchise, that comes into the town, shall pay 3 halfpence, but if it be salt fish, one halfpenny. 22. Every cart coming into the town with "sawmon" (salmon) shall pay 3 pence to the King, though it bring but one salmon; a horse-burden 2 pence, though there be but one salmon: "up on a mann's ryge"—on a man's back, a penny. 23. Every hundred of lamprens coming to the town "schal fyne laumprouns to the Bayleves of "the town" to hure owne byoofte"—to their own use,—and no other custom. 24. Every seller of red herrings, in Lent, shall pay 5 pence to the King, and to the Bailiffs "a pecher wyn,"—a pitcher of wine,—of whatsoever franchise they be. 25. No fisher shall wet salt fish with water, without leave of the Bailiffs. 26. Every fishmonger out of the franchise, that holds a stall, shall pay to the King, of custom, 15d. yearly. 27. One out of the franchise that holds or buys "get"—goat—sheep, or swyne, and then sells "un shlawe"—[ay, this],—shall pay to the King 5 pence yearly "of the custom of swyn," and to the clerk of the town one penny, "for to entry here names, thei hii ne bygge but "o sely beste,"—though they buy but one simple beast. And all merchants of goats, sheep, or swine, that are out of the franchise and haunt the town, though they come but once in the year, shall pay the same custom. 28. Every baker of the town that makes bread for sale, shall pay to the King 2 shillings yearly, for custom, and one penny to the Clerk of the town: they shall make "whitbrede," and well baked, upon the sale of corn and the assize of the "Marshalsie," so that if the farthing loaf is in default over 12 pence [pennyweight], the baker is "in the mercy." If the farthing loaf is in default over 3 shillings [one ounce, 16 dwts.], the baker "shal here the juywey [judicial "punishment] of the town." 29. Every breadseller in the High Street, who is not in the franchise, shall pay to the King, by custom, 2s. yearly, and to the Clerk one penny, "that ys to wete for ale stakes;" but less, if for less than a year. 30. In all the other streets, 12d. or 6d. if less than a year. Every baker is to have his seal, and know it upon his loaf; "that he ne "muwe wyth segge, yif he is take otherwyse than wel," which may possibly mean that he must not bake otherwise than with sedge, but the transcript is probably corrupt. 31. Every "brewstare of myyth" (? is to make good ale, upon the sale of corn, and upon the assize seen: otherwise they are to be in the King's mercy, under surveillance of the bailiffs. 32. No brewer out of the franchise shall brew "wythinne the "power of the cite to sale." 33. No man out of the franchise, of what craft soever, shall either buy or sell "wythinne the power of the town, wyth gre ydo the "bayleves of the toum:"—there is a "quere" written, in a hand of the 16th century,—and with good reason—against this. 34. Every cart sold in the town to men not of the franchise shall pay to the King, for custom, one halfpenny. 35. Regulates the customs due to the King on stones of wool, brought out of the franchise into the town. 36. As to "boter, grece, and smare" (or "smere")—butter, grease, and lard (smere is generally identified with butter), the regulation is the same as of wool. 37 seems to treat of the fees and duties of the King's weigher, but the context is evidently corrupt. 38. As to the made of collecting tallage in the town, either "for the Kynges heste, or for comuue nedes," 39. Regulations as to collections made from chapmen by common assent:—"Whenever "one purveyth eny Gylde chaffare." 40 Custom taken at the Gates of the town, from those out of the franchise, for a cart bringing corn one halfpenny, and for a horse one farthing. 41. A cart bringing iron or steel, 2 pence, a horse one penny. 42. A cart that brings new saddles, to carry by street or by lane, "corden, other "trays"—(? cords or traces), shall pay 2 pence custom, a horse-load one penny. 43. Every cart bringing mill-stones, impanes, (? tin, or lead, 4 pence; a horse-load 2 pence. 44. Tuns and barrels in a cart, for sale, custom one penny; on a horse, one halfpenny. 45. A cart with tanned leather to sell, 2 pence custom; a horse-load one penny. 46. A cart with "wodaskyn" (? skins dyed with woad) on sale, 4 pence; a horse-load, one penny. 47. "Everich souterre (shoemaker) that woneth in the "cite, that hadeth shoppe opene," shall pay to the King 6 pence yearly for custom, and to the clerk a penny, to enrol his name, though he came but once a year. 48. "Usages of the maister dyeres [dyers] of teyntours in "the cite;" two good men, and true, are to be chosen by common assent, and sworn to assay the wares of strange chapmen, that come into the town to sell. 49. Every tanner that holdeth a board in the High Street shall pay "for the stret that be for nemyth 2s. by the "zere;" and to the clerk a penny, in name of "taglaye." 50. "Everich sellstere of grece, of emere, and of talwe, "shal at the feste of Estren to the Kyng a peny, "yn the name of "Smeregaleve." 51. Every souter (shoemaker) that makes "shone" (shoes) of new . . . luther (leather), shall at Easter pay 2 pence in the name of "Shon gable," (Shoe-gable); as to persons out of the franchise as well as others. 52. There is in the city a common and authentic seal, with which charters of feoffment in the town are sealed, such charters belonging to the Ward the Alderman of which had the making of seisin, "of a year and a day, without challenging of "any man; on which sealing shall the banns be let "cried through the town the court-days before the "sealing." 53. The charters thus presented by the Alderman, without challenge, "shal be kept and sayyd "by that seal for ever mo." 54. Six pence shall be paid for so sealing every such charter, for wax and for all. 55. The said seal shall be kept under three hands, those of 2 good men of the four and twenty, and one good man of the "comine" (common); the coffer in which it is placed, to be put in a larger coffer, with two locks; one of the four and twenty to keep the one key, and one of the commonality the other. 56. Every man of the franchise impleaded is to have three reasonable summonses before his appearance. 57. As to the nature of such reasonable summonses. 58. As to essoin after summons, and summons when a man is out of town. 59. A man out of the franchise to have but one summons, if found within the town; but if impleaded by writ of plea of land, he is to be treated as if he were of the franchise. 60. A man who is of the franchise, and appears at the first or second summons, is bound to answer at the third. 61. After appearing, if he is out of town, he is to have "daye of toum," that is, 8 days. 62. As to right of "day of foun," if a foreigner impleads a denizen, he has right only to one essoin. 63. Usage where a person "of the toum" impleads a foreigner. 64. Usage as to inquests in pleas of law. 65. Practice in the case of certain writs:—this and the preceding article are evidently most carelessly transcribed. 66. Writs of Novel Disseisin pleaded in the city before Justices and before the Bailiffs. 67. Usage in plea of debt. 68. Inquisition to be made by the Bailiffs as to the next heir to land. 69. Forms on which the heir is put into possession. 70, 71, 72. Particulars as to the usage, in the city of Winchester, of "year and day."

From the occasional usage in the context of the words "me" and "my," it would seem that this roll was written by the then "Common Clerk" of the city. Whoever may have been the writer, he has added, at the end (in German text), after the concluding "Explicit," the following rhyming hexameter, indicative of his extreme weariness of his task:—

"Explicit hic totum, pro Christo da mihi potum."—"Here ends the whole, for Christ's sake give me "drink."

A parchment indenture, in English, a portion of the Episcopal seal, in red wax, still attached, upon a parchment thong, executed by Bishop William Waynflete, and thus dated—"Yeovene atte Wynchestre, the thridde "day of Juyll, the year of grace m^ccoccli., and of the "reigne of King Harry the vith after the Conqueste "xxix." Briefly, it states that "debate" has been between the Bishop of Wynchestre and the Maire and the Commune of the city of Wynchestre, upon the franchises and customs of the Fair of "Saint Gile," whether the said Bishop ought to have the keeping of the city during the 16 days of the said Fair, with the Trone, and all the profits and customs as taking amends of bread and ale, that is to say, to take bushels and gallons, and other weights and measures, and to bear them to the Pavilion, and there to make assay; and that the people of the city should come to the Pavilion, to present cry raised and blood shed, and other things touching the peace of our Lord the King from "the Vigile of Saint Gille by xvi. dayes to endure;" the Mayor and the Commune aforesaid, "in partie," having disturbed the said Bishop "at his Faire of Saint Gile laste passed" in his said franchises and custumes." The said Mayor and Commune now acknowledge such disturbance, and covenant that the Bishop and his successors shall not in future be so disturbed from having the keeping of the city and the custums aforesaid; the Bishop remitting and pardoning the said offence to the Mayor and Commune "afore rehearsed."

A small roll of parchment, with a heading in Latin, stating that it is the Account of Richard Frankeleyne, "Bagman" of the city of Winchester, from Michaelmas in the 27th Henry VIII. for one year, in the time of Thomas Vincent, Mayor; the account being rendered before John Hall, Mayor. From 18 persons he receives 6 pence each, from seven 12 pence, and from five others 3s. 4d. each, the first entry of the five being, in Latin: "From William Brokere, of the House of St. Swithun," for the third year's entry in the Book of Bagman." The three following are, "for the like," and the last "for the second year." On the reverse, he accounts to the Chamberlain of the city, and asks to be allowed 10s., for his own fee, and for the Clerk of the city 6d. "for the composition of this book;" the mode or purpose of the collection is not stated, but it was probably in reference to the Brotherhood of St. John, next mentioned.

A roll of parchment, with a heading in Latin, stating that it is the account of Thomas Lorkyn, Steward of the Fraternity of St. John the Baptist, from Michaelmas 28th Henry VIII. for one year, that of John Halle, Mayor; the account being rendered before William Faryngdone, Mayor. From 50 persons named he collects 12 pence each; among them, William Brokere, of the house of St. Swithun, and William Lawrans hereafter mentioned. "From the Mayor's Chaplain 8 pence; from Master Hokere 8 pence; from the Abbess of St. Mary Winton—," nothing. He asks to be allowed the expenses of supper on the feast of St. John; namely, "3 dozens of loaves, 3s.; one barrel of ale 20d.; one wirkyne of 1½d. here 8d.; one staf of good ale 16d.; for muttone to rost 7s.; for muttone (sic) to boyle 4s. 8d.; for venegare and vergis (verjuice) 2½d.; for salte and barme (yeast) 3½d.; for butter 7d.; for wood and . . . 12d.; to Budalle, for his trouble 12d.; for washing the dishes 4d.; for the tornebroche [turnspit] 4d.; paid a minstrel 12d.; the cook 12d.; wine at taverns 3s. 4d.; paid the Mayor's Chaplain, part of his fee this year 20s.; paid the Clerk of the city for his labour upon this book 18d."

A roll of parchment, in good preservation, written in Latin throughout, with the following title (tr.):—"City of Winton. The Account of Henry Gest and William Bager, collectors of the new rents and profits of the lands and tenements to Monasteries and other religious places, disseised, belonging and pertaining, and to the Mayor, Bailiffs, and community, of the city of Winton, and their successors for ever, by our Lord the King and our Lady the Queen by their Charter granted; from the feast of St. Michael the Archangel in the first year of our said Lady the Queen to the same feast of St. Michael the Archangel, then next ensuing, in the time of William Laurence (?) Mayor, made before the same Mayor, Robert Hodson, Richard Bethell, Herman Bileky, and Giles White, Auditors of the Four and Twenty, William Lane, Thomas Bath, Stephen Knight, and William Goodwin, Auditors of the Commons" [A.D. 1553, 4]. The first item is "Rents of Assize of the Abbey of St. Mary Winton": under this head, moneys are received from Henry Seymour, Knight, for the site of the Chapel called "Charnell Chapel," and a tenement called "The Charnell Howse." Tenements in Wongarstret, Colbrokestret, High Street, Buckstret; lands called "Currantes," otherwise "Senates," without Westgate; a tenement on the north side of the bridge without the East Gate; and a corner cottage, called "Copidhall," near St. Giles's Hill.

"Rents of assize belonging to the Priory of Suthwick":—issuing from the hostel of le Sterr (the Star); which hostel itself belonged to the city.

"Rents in Colbrokestrete, late belonging to the Abbey of St. Mary": among them, from the Porter's Lodge at the East Gate; and 7 shillings rent "from a garden within the walls of the Abbey of St. Mary."

"Cemetery of St. Mary within the city": Tenements and gardens there, are mentioned, and "The Hospital of Poor Sisters," paying nothing.

"Rents in the Parish of St. Maurice": among other things "a cottage at the end of Le Caucey" (the Causeway) is mentioned, a corner tenement upon the Newe Bridge, "and a tenement in the High Street."

Single rents then follow, "in Shullworthstrete," in "the parish of St. Peter in the Shambles," and "in the parish of St. Clement."

"In the Soke": a tenement on the East Bridge; tenements in the parish of Cheshull; a cottage near "the Sellar Howse"; a tenement near Hubb's Cross; a tenement near Dornegate.

"Rents late belonging to the Priory of Suthwicke": from tenements in Colbrokestrete, Tannerstrete, and Wongarstret.

"Rents of lands and tenements late belonging to the College of St. Mary Kalenders, within the city": Colbrokestret and the Wassingher Place are mentioned; and the "Fyssheshambles" in High Street. Robert Myfflyn pays 4 shillings yearly for a cottage in the parish St. Maurice, on the Calseye (? Causeway); stables also are mentioned as "in the parish of St. Laurence, opposite the Market Place."

Among rents "Without West Gate," are mentioned "lands near the Chapel late of St. Leonard;" and among rents "in Kingisgate Strete," a little garden without Suthgate.

"Rents of lands and tenements, late of the Abbey of Wherwell," a tenement near the Church of Kalenders; a vacant place near the Guildhall of the City; a tenement and garden in Juristrete, near the Northgate there; and a tenement, late the mill without the Westgate.

An Inventory in English, on four leaves of paper, foolscap size, in good condition; of which the following is the title:—"A view of able men, armour, and weapon, within the cite of Winchester, takyn the xxvith daye September, in the first yere of the rayne of our Sovereigne Ladye Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of Englund, France, and Ireland, Defender of the faith etc. 1559."

First come the names of men entered as "Archars," and then "Billmen"; then a list is given of all the arms in the town, with their respective owners. At the conclusion is a list of "able men"—Archers 18, Billmen 45, Gunners 2; and then of "Armour and weapons."—Alman rivettes 42; jacks 2; sculles 25; splintes 35; sallettes 37; bowes 30; sheffes of arrowes 29; swords 45; daggers 43; billes 54; polaxes and gloves 3. Against several of the names is entered "A blacke byll," according to the Statute; and others possess a "byll" only; only one person (Richard Bethell) is mentioned as possessing a fire-arm. The owners of these arms are 72 in number. Richard Bethell seems also to have possessed the fullest equipment:—"A corslet, one pyke, one harquebut, one sallett (head-piece), one longe bowe, one sheff of arrowes, and one scull, according to the Statute." Wylliam Laurens (the late Mayor) possessed "one Alman (German) ryvette and one harquebut"; and he and Richard Bethell were probably the two "Gunners" alluded to; a Robert Bethell is also mentioned.

A somewhat similar Account to the preceding, entered on two skins of parchment, in good condition, with the following heading:—"Civitas Winton". A Certificat of "the armour of the inhabitantes of the Cytie of Winchester, made by William Laurens Gent, William Bethell Gent, Johan Skynner, William Lane, William Badger, and Richarde Byrde, the xxvth day of May in the eleventh yere of the raigne of our Sovereigne Lady Elizabeth, by the grace of God, of Englonde, France, and Irelande, Queene, Defender of the Feith etc." It is, to all appearance, unfinished; and merely gives a list of 58 inhabitants of the city, with the arms possessed by them, set against their names respectively, and a valuation of their property (probably yearly) whether in goods or lands. The following are the highest valuations; William Hall, in goods, 20*l.*: he has "one corselatt, one pyke, one morryan, and one gonne." Richard Burton, in goods 28*l.*: he has "one corslet, one pyke, one payre of Almayn revettes, one harquebut, one morryan, one long bowe, one sheff of arrowes, one scull." Thomas Colley, in goods, 20*l.*: he has "2 payre of Almayn revettes, 2 longe bowes, 2 sheff of arrowes, one harquebut, one morryan." Richard Bethell, gen. in landes 20*l.*: "one corslet, one pike, one harquebut, one morryan, one long bow, one sheff of arrowes, one scull." William Bethell, who holds but 5*l.* in lands, possesses "one corslet, one pyke, one harquebut, one morryan." William Laurans, valued in lands at 10*l.*, possesses "one corslet, one pyke, one gonne, and one sallett." In addition to the above, no less than 7 guns and "harquebuts" are entered.

Among the documents that have been put in my hands by Mr. Bailey, the Town Clerk, for examination, there are a few letters addressed to the Mayor and Corporation, of the time of Elizabeth and James the First.

The first to be noticed is addressed,—“To right worshipful Mr. Colle [P], Mayor of [the] Citie of Winchester. This be yewe with sped. Se it done.” It bears date the 17th of September in some year of Elizabeth's reign, not given; and is signed “William Bennet, M^r Backer [Master Baker] to the Quines Majesties Navie.” The writing in various places is very cramped and indistinct, and the letter is of great length; it begins,—“Worshipfull M^r Maiore, I commend me unto yow. Whereas I, M^r of the Quines Majestie Backe howse for the navie, did send my sarvant with the Quines Majesties comicion to the citie of Winchester, beinge the 10 days of September, for to presse sertain backers [bakers] owt of this, and to have yowr ayde and assistance, beinge the Quines Majesties Lifenent her in this place;—” he hears however of the Mayor's slack diligence, with the reste of your officers,” but, as the Mayor knows “the great haste in the spedye expedition of backing,” he has no doubt that he and the rest will be as willing to “ensuer” the same. He complains, however, that after Mr. Lawrance's man had taken his “preste” money, the Mayor would not command him to go, but sought the means to release him. “And whereas afore yow said yow had bowt one backer [baker] in the holle citie, but it is a great deale the more shame for your having so many women backers in that citie, that after a while we shalle be faine to have them serve the Quine, for we shall have no men from yow.” . . . “But I do thincke myselfe not well handled in this affair” . . . with much more, in the way of expostulation and complaint, to a like purpose.

A letter, addressed “To the worshipful my loving frendes the Mayor and his brethren of the Cytie of Winchester,” by “your verie loving frend Rob. Winton,”—Robert Horne, Bishop of Winchester,—“From my howse in Southwerk the ixth of April, 1572.” They are aware of the coming Parliament, and of the order for choosing burgesses thereto; he desires their [good] “willes so farreforthe” unto him, as to nominate and appoint “for your citie and incorporacion” his friend, John Caplin, of Southampton, “yowr owne contreyman, and well knowne to the more parte of yow, who can, I am assured, doe that cytie and contreye suche service in that calling as is required to be done, and also will ease yow of suche trouble and chardge as usuallie yow have bene at in that behalfe; so that therin yow shall further your selves, and also pleasure me; which your doinge, to reaquite yow shall finde me both mindeful and ready, as knowethe the Almightie, unto whose protection I do commendde yow, and so do bid you fare well.”

A letter dated 20th of June 1595, signed “Wynchester,” and addressed by William Paulet, Marquess of Winchester, as Deputy-Lieutenant of the County of Southampton. The Queen has required “the provision” and furnishings of three horsemen to be ympressed out “of this county for Her Highnes service in Ireland,” at the common charges, for the more part, of the Justices of peace of the said county, and of others of good ability. The sums there given below (65s. in all) are to be forthwith collected in Winchester, and to be paid, on the last day of the then current month, to Sir Walter Sandys, Knight, and Benjamin Tichborne, Esquire. The names, apparently, of the six Aldermen of the city, are given below, marked 10s. each; and the Soke 5s.

A letter, dated 24th of June 1595, and addressed—“To the right Worshipfull our verie loving frende Sir Walter Sandes, Knight, at Mottesfont, yeave these.” It is signed by “Wyllim Hechin (apparently) Mayor,” and six others, three of them, Aldermen or Justices of the peace, named in the preceding letter: William Lane and Charles Newboul, whatever their station, are “marksmen” only. They have had from him a letter, containing, at the foot of it, a copy of a letter from the Marquess, stating—(as given in the preceding). They claim exemption of the city from charges of the county in all manner of like taxations and payments. They desire to know if the said impositions and names are set down in the Marquess's letter; so that, knowing the certainty thereof, they may “avoid the prejudice of the liberty of the city.” The letter has been sent back by Sir Walter Sandes, and on the margin he has written:—“You are sett downe by my Lord's letter, as “I wyl shewe you, but I wyl use meanes that you shall not paye. This in haste, with my hartey commendacions to you and all your companye. Your assurydd frinde Wa. Sandys.”

What is stated on the outside to be “The copy of the Letter of the depute Lieutenant for the muster the xth of June 1601.” The date of the letter is the 12th of May 1601, and the original had the signatures of Thomas West and Hampden Powlete, Deputy Lieutenants of the County of Southampton. The letter is of great length, but, briefly, it contains an order of the Privy Council for mustering, at the accustomed place within the liberty of Winchester, on the 10th of June, “every muskateere to brynge with him one pownde and an halfe of powder, and every calliver one pownde of powder, with a reasonable proportion of match for that service.” They are to bring also “perfect bookes of your furnished companye.”

A Letter, addressed,—“To our verie loving freindes the Commissioners for the subsidie in the Citie of Winchester.”—It is signed R[obert] Salisbury, H[enry] Northampton, E[dward] Worcester, [Charles] Nottingham, T[homas] Suffolk, W. Knollys, E. Wotton, J. Herbert, Jul. Cesar, John Corbett. It assures the Commissioners, “that his Majestie would be as loath to draw that from his loving subjectes, which the law doth give him in the rates of subsidy, as they would be to yield it.” The main object of the letter is to counsel due diligence and impartiality in collecting, “least his Majestie should have just cause to conceive that lack of care, or too much partiality in you, hath been the cause of that great losse which his Majesty receaveth in his publick grantees, whereof his Majesty must needes be more sensible as well in point of honor as of profit, because it is the first triall of all your good will in this kinde, and hath ben so used, as his Majesty hath, and shall have, but two subsidies in value, when three are given him in name. Herein we have omitted to send you the certificates, either in the time of Q. Mary, or King Henry 8, because they doe exceed this rate in a great proportion, but His Majesties mind affecteth all things with reasonable moderation. And so we bid you hartely farewell. From the Court at Whitehall, the ixth of February 1608. Your Loving Freindes.”

A Letter, addressed, “To the ryght Wurshipfull his very loving frind Mr. Husey, Maior of Winchester, Yeave these.” Signed “William Sandys,” and dated “At Clerkenwell this 30th March 1619.” He has received the Mayor's Letter, and intended to have been at Winchester, but now cannot (come), being commanded to attend the King. He has appointed his “furniture” to be at Winchester; and doubts some of it may be amiss, but it shall be presently amended. “So commending my love unto you and the rest of the good company, I rest your very loving frende.”

Among the papers so handed to me, there is a Letter of the comparatively recent date of Nov. 5th 1726, to the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Winchester, signed “Jas. Sheppard,” asking leave to turn the city rivulet and watercourse into his meadows near Worthy, “until such time as a late controversy now subsisting is determined and compromised. And I do hereby promise that the same shall, at one hours notice, be turned to such convenience as you shall think meet, and do likewise farther promise that the same shall be no way prejudicial to the inhabitants of the City of Winchester.” There are some words indorsed on the letter, but they seem to have been purposely erased.

I have much pleasure in here acknowledging my obligations to Walter Bailey, Esq., the Town Clerk of Winchester, for the kind attention with which he has provided me with every possible facility for making the present Report; and I may also take the opportunity of mentioning that the later records of the city of Winchester have received a very abundant notice in the work entitled “Archives of Winchester,” published by his father, Charles Bailey, Esq., the late Town Clerk, in the year 1856.

INTRODUCTION.

My First Report on the Argyll Manuscripts is dated 7th April 1873, and is printed in the Fourth Report of the Commissioners, pp. 470-492. It described the ancient charters of the Argyll family from the time of King Robert the Bruce, and grants of offices from the time of King Robert the Second, and also commissions to execute many important offices and expeditions, chiefly connected with the Highlands and Islands of Scotland.

The present Report has reference chiefly to the correspondence of the Argyll family, which is of considerable historical interest. I have arranged the letters in two principal divisions, the one including letters from successive sovereigns of Scotland from the time of Queen Mary, and also a few letters from Queen Elizabeth of England; the other division includes the general correspondence alphabetically arranged.

In the year 1840, the late Duke of Argyll printed, in a quarto volume, the letters from the sovereigns, and presented it as a contribution to the members of the Maitland Club. A number of the letters were also lithographed as illustrations of the volume. The letters being thus known I do not think it necessary to describe each of them; although, as the impression of the club book was limited, and many of the letters are very interesting, I have particularly noted a few of the more important of the letters of Queen Mary and others, as well as the letters of Queen Elizabeth, which are not included in the collection printed for the Maitland Club.

It may be necessary to explain an expression in the letter of presentation, dated 20th January 1840, by the late Duke of Argyll to the members of the Maitland Club. His Grace says that the letters have never been printed, and were collected "from the repositories of the Register office." Previous to the date of that letter the royal letters were bound in one large folio volume. The volume was lent by a former Duke of Argyll to the then Lord Clerk Register or his deputy. Although the letters were all addressed to successive Earls of Argyll, it was supposed by some officers in the register house that they had become part of the national records. But on a representation by the present Duke of Argyll to the Lord Clerk Register, the volume of letters was delivered to his Grace, and is now at Inverary.

The letters from Queen Mary to Archibald, fifth Earl of Argyll, were chiefly written during her residence in England. On the morning of the fatal day of Langside, the Queen granted a Commission to the Earl, as Lieutenant-General of Scotland. He continued faithful to her cause for many years after she left Scotland, and she corresponded with him as one of her most trusted adherents. Her letters to him are inspired with the hope of a restoration to the throne of her ancestors, a hope which was never realized. Queen Mary had great confidence in the fifth Earl of Argyll. While still on the throne she visited him at Inverary in July 1563. Her letters to him from England testify to her continued confidence and great reliance upon the Earl. In several of her letters, which are generally written by a secretary, there are postscripts written by her own hand, which show how imperfectly she understood the language of her own kingdom. A letter from Bowtown, dated 27th

August 1568, contains a specimen of her indifferent Scotch. She sent to the Earl with the letter the present of a horse, which she says is "fer" [fair] "and gud" [yik, hulk [whilk] ye shal rescue. Any Y" [I] "had "better ze schould nocht want."

In another letter dated from Bowtown on the 31st of the same month, there is a postscript holograph of the Queen, which again illustrates the peculiar way in which she adopted substitutes for Scotch words.

In her last letter to the same Earl, dated Wingfield, 8 April 1569, there is a characteristic addition holograph of the Queen, concluding the letter thus: "Zour richt "good sister, and best frind foreuer, Marie R."

In the same collection the royal correspondence is continued by King James the Sixth, from whom there are many letters. In one, written from Stirling Castle on 2nd July 1582, to Colin, sixth Earl of Argyll, the King requests him to come to Perth, on an occasion which is described as weighty, importing both the King's surety and his own. But he mixes up weighty matters with trivial, as was not unusual with his Majesty, anxiously reminding the Earl of the "deir "doggis," which he is requested to send to his Majesty without delay, or to bring with him, and as many as can be spared within his bounds. There are also letters from King Charles the First, one of which from Carsbrook on the 23rd December 1647, shows the extremity to which the King was then reduced. He appeals to Argyll, notwithstanding their former differences; to embrace his cause, as it rested on grounds which were never in question between them.

Although many letters of the sovereigns of Scotland to the Argyll family have been preserved, it is certain that many more have been lost or misplaced. As an instance of this I may mention a collection of letters addressed by King Charles the Second, soon after the death of his father, to the Marquis of Argyll. These letters were written by Charles from Jersey and Breda, and after he came to Scotland from Falkland and Perth, &c. From them it appears how much Charles relied upon Argyll for his restoration to the throne of his ancestors, and how anxiously he implored Argyll to use his influence in his behalf. Charles is profuse in the promises he makes of remembering and rewarding the services of the Marquis. His mother, Queen Henrietta Maria, writes to Argyll to the same effect; the Duke of York, in his correspondence with him, dwells on the hopeful conditions of affairs in Scotland, acknowledging that Argyll had greatly contributed thereto, and assuring him of his affection and friendship. These letters are in possession of Sir Robert Menzies, Bart., of Castle Menzies, in the county of Perth, whose custody of them may be easily accounted for. Lord Neil Campbell, of Ardmadzie, the second son of the Marquis of Argyll, married Susan Menzies, daughter of Sir Alexander Menzies, first baronet of Menzies. Christian Campbell, their daughter, married her cousin, Sir Alexander Menzies, the second baronet. Captain James Menzies, brother of Sir Alexander, the first baronet, married Ann Campbell, daughter of Lord Neil Campbell, by his first wife Lady Vere Ker, of the Lothian family.

Through these intermarriages of the Argyll and Menzies families, the important collection of letters addressed by King Charles the Second to Argyll came to be deposited in the Menzies charter chest by Lord Neil Campbell, who was intrusted by his father the Marquis with much of his business.

The following letters which were addressed by Charles the Second to the Marquis of Argyll, culminated with the following obligation, written, subscribed, and sealed by the King, promising to create him a Duke, a Knight of the Garter, a Lord of the bed chamber, and also to repay him a debt of 40,000l.

"Having taken into my consideration the faithful "endeavours of the Marquis of Argyll for restoring me "to my just rights, and the happie setting of my "dominions, I am desyrous to let the world see how "sensible I am of his real respect to me, by some "particular marks of my favour to him, by whiche "they may see the trust and confidence I repose in "him: and, particularly, I doe promis that I will mak "him Duk of Argyll, and Knight of the Garter, and "on of the gentlemen of my bed chalmre, and this to "be performed when he shall think it fitt.

"Whensoever it shall pleas God to restor me to my "just rights in England, I shall see him payed the "40,000 pouds sterling which is due to him. All "which I doe promis to mak good upon the word of a "King. St. Jhonstown, September 24, 1650.

"CHARLES R."

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

The original of this obligation is not now in the Argyll archives. A copy of it, holograph of the Marquis of Argyll, was found by me in the year 1868 in the charter chest of Lord Forbes at Castle Forbes.

The promise of a prince, and the word of a King, were in this instance ultimately worse than worthless. The instructions written by Charles the Second from Breda, on 17th May 1650, for the Marquis of Ormonde, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, noted in this report, show how profuse King Charles was in making promises to accomplish particular purposes. His Presbyterian subjects in Scotland, and his Roman Catholic subjects in Ireland, required different treatment, and promises corresponding to their respective positions, were made in public and private documents, the public promise meaning one thing and the private promise another and different thing. Among other services rendered by the Marquis of Argyll to King Charles the Second, was the placing of the Scottish Crown upon the head of Charles at Scone in the year 1651. Nine years elapsed before Charles was fully restored to the throne of his ancestors. During that time much occurred to change the state of parties, and to alienate the feelings of the King from his former friends. The English army under Cromwell and Monck completely established the authority of the Commonwealth in Scotland as well as in England. Many of the adherents of Charles, unable to resist the English armies, were obliged to succumb to secure their lives and properties under the rule of Oliver Cromwell, and had his son Richard been of equal capacity with his father, the Commonwealth might have been continued for another generation. During the sway of Oliver, and with the prospect of a son to succeed him, there was little hope of a speedy restoration of the exiled Charles; but when the restoration of Charles II. actually took place, the old services which the Marquis of Argyll had rendered to him, and the promises of reward which Charles had made to him, were not only forgotten, but Argyll was actually persecuted to the death. In the libel which charged him with no fewer than fourteen different criminal acts, the most odious charge was that of conspiring the death of King Charles I. The Marquis indignantly denied that imputation, and the letters of King Charles I. himself, and those of King Charles II., his mother and brother, recently discovered at Castle Menzies, corroborate the statement of the innocence of Argyll. Had he been implicated in the death of King Charles I., Henrietta Maria, the widowed queen of that monarch, her sons Charles and James, could not have written in the affectionate terms in which they wrote to the murderer of a husband and a father. Argyll's public denials of the crime during his trial, and also a private letter written at the time to his son, Lord Neil Campbell, also confirm his innocence. In that private letter he says: "Tho I do not deny my declaring and swearing in Parliament that I nather had knowledg of, no[r] accession to his leat Royall Majesties murder, yet I may say that after Cromwels or Irtons declairing the contrair was bot fals calumnies, for doubtless it is known to all the Englishe armie, that Irton was not at all in Scotland." [Original letter at Castle Menzies.]

The charge against Argyll of being concerned in the death of Charles the First was so false that it was practically abandoned during the trial. The other main charges against him consisted of his compliance with the usurpation of Cromwell. Several letters now reported on, from Argyll to Monk, bear upon this question, and also upon the fact, which has been a matter of controversy, whether the letters were recovered by the Lord Advocate during the trial for the express purpose of securing a conviction against the Marquis. The special indorsations on the letters which were written during the trial indicate that they had been specially obtained, as they are not specified in the libel against Argyll, while other letters of less importance are particularly libelled against him.

After the Restoration, General Monck, who had then become Duke of Albemarle, supplied two testimonials explanatory of certain acts of Argyll during the Commonwealth, including the attendance of the Marquis at the proclamation of Richard Cromwell at the Cross of Edinburgh. If these testimonials were intended to exculpate Argyll it was inexcusable for Monck to furnish the private letters of Argyll, who had never given Monck trouble during his command in Scotland, but had lived peaceably under his rule. The fate of these two noblemen was very striking: Monck the most active opponent of the King under Cromwell, and who was a principal instrument in excluding Charles the Second so long from his throne, obtained at the Restoration the high honour of a dukedom, while Argyll, who had actually crowned the King, and was promised by him a similar honour, with other rewards, was cruelly put to death.

The hard fate of Argyll was much commiserated by his friends, and at last regretted by his enemies. He suffered with Christian fortitude. His trial was protracted, and his conviction took place on Saturday, 25th May 1661, when he was sentenced to be executed on Monday the 27th, thus, only two days preparation being allowed him for a violent death, and no time for an appeal to the king for the exercise of the royal clemency—an appeal which is accorded even to the worst of criminals. On the day before his execution, Argyll wrote a farewell letter to his son, Lord Neil, which is given at length in this Report. The handwriting of the original affords no indication of the trying position in which the writer was placed, but is as firm and distinct as any of the numerous letters which he wrote during the stirring times of the Covenant, to be found in almost every important charter chest in Scotland. The Marquis's second daughter Lady Jane Campbell was married to Robert Lord Ker, afterwards fourth Earl of Lothian. Lord Ker was a witness of the execution of his father-in-law, and in a consolatory letter to Lady Jane he thus describes the bearing of Argyll at his execution. "The hearing by me who was an eye and ear witness of his heavenly, Christian, grave, yet magnanimous and resolute carriage in this last and greatest step in all his life, will give you greater joy and comfort than any reasonable sorrowing can occasion. Truly, deare hearte, I was ever a lover of your father, but this last action of his hath made me an admirer likewise, and I am sure his behaviour this day hath galled very many of his enemies. God was pleased wonderfully to uphold him in his sufferings, and I am sure he would not change one moment of his immortal condition for all the happiness imaginable this world can afford: and, as he said at the receiving of his sentence, I am confident God hath crowned him with an immortal crown of glory. I intend, God willing, to come forth to-morrow. In the mean tyme, deare hearte, comforte yourselfe in the true comforter, who will never be hidde from any that seeke him. I am your most affectionate husband till death, Kerr." [Original letter at Newbattle.]

A letter in the present Report from the Earl of Loudoun to Lord Lorne, son of the Marquis, dated at Edinburgh, 6 June 1661, also thus describes his trial and execution:—"God was gracious to him in clearing him from the most heynous crimes, and in giving him strength to die with much Christian courage and patience."

The head of the Marquis of Argyll was placed on a spike on the gate of the Old Tolbooth, the same spike on which had been fixed the head of the Marquis of Montrose, which shortly before had been taken down and honourably interred. The head of Argyll continued there for three years. It was taken down in the morning of the 8th of June 1664, as appears from a letter of that date, written by James Campbell, who states the fact, and that he was going to accompany the Lord Marquis of Argyll's head to the burial place. [Original letter in Argyll Archives.]

While I was engaged in writing the present Report, I had the honour to receive a letter from his Grace the Duke of Argyll, dated Inveraray, 5 November 1874, intimating that he had that "day received a lot of valuable letters of the Marquis of Argyll. One of the lot seems to be the original letter of the Marquis to Monk, which was produced at the trial and beheaded him."

The letters referred to were immediately forwarded by his Grace to me, and I have given their import in the present Report. Three of them have special indorsations which certify that they are the very letters to Monck that were produced at the trial of Argyll.

After much keen discussion among historians even as to the fact of the existence of such letters, it is satisfactory that the originals have at last been discovered. They explode all the ingenious arguments by which it has been attempted to establish that the letters were never written, and that Monck was incapable of such inhumanity as to sacrifice Argyll by the voluntary production of them.

The record of the criminal prosecution against the Marquis of Argyll is not known to exist. Whether the proceedings were removed by those who instituted them, or at the instance of his successors when the forfeiture was rescinded has not been ascertained.

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

In a petition by Archibald tenth Earl of Argyll, to the Parliament of Scotland, various reasons are given for reducing the decree of forfeiture of the Marquis his grandfather. It is stated "there were six letters produced against the Marquis, four of them said to be 'his own hand, and two of them by other hands, but subscribed by him; and there is a minute of process that they were made use of and sustained as proofs, and yet there is no signature bearing 'either that 'they were proven to be the Marquis' letters, or that 'he himself had owned them as such.'"

In the argument for reduction it is farther stated that the six letters were "by way of surprise produced against him."

From these and other minute descriptions of the letters which are given in the pleas for reduction, and which are accurate as to the handwriting, &c., it is probable that these letters had remained in the process against the Marquis, and had been delivered to the grandson when the process of reduction was completed. They afterwards strayed out of the family and were presented to the late Duke of Argyll by a clergyman then of the Free Church of Scotland, along with a letter of presentation which is dated 25 September 1845.

The authenticity and genuineness of the six letters cannot be doubted. I have seen much of the handwriting of the Marquis of Argyll, and I can say with confidence that three of the letters are entirely in his own holograph, and that the other three are subscribed by him.

Mr. Burton in his history of Scotland says, that the record of the trial of the Marquis has disappeared, but probably the loss to history is not serious. "If we had the indictment and pleadings they would probably furnish us with nothing better than confused material for a distorted history of the times." [History Vol. VII., p. 151. 2nd Ed.]

Although the original proceedings are not known, copies of the principal portions of them were printed at the time of the trial. In the Argyll Archives there is a small quarto volume bearing to be "printed for the satisfaction of all those that desire to know the truth, 1661." It contains "The grand indictment of high treason," and amply justifies the remark of Mr. Burton. It consists of fourteen charges or counts of high treason, ranging from the year 1630 to the year 1660.

The character given of Oliver Cromwell in the twelfth charge may be quoted as a specimen of the style in which he was generally portrayed by the Royalists: "The said Oliver Cromwell, that monster of men, vilest of traitors, most cruel murderer, bloody tyrant and usurper, having reached, as he thought, the end of all his devilish plots and treasonable machinations, by usurping the dominion and authority of his 'Majesties three kingdoms,' &c."

The indictment runs in the name of and is signed by Sir John Fletcher, Lord Advocate, who appears to have conducted the prosecution of Argyll with much asperity, in order to gratify the Earl of Middleton, the Commissioner, to whom, according to Bishop Burnett, he was considered to be "Inquisitor General." In the course of the proceedings of the trial an unfeeling remark was made by Fletcher to Argyll, contrasting his position as a criminal at the bar with his former governing at the Tables. Argyll retorted with great effect. But these personal asperities did not descend in the two families. Successive representatives of the Marquis intrusted the management of their affairs to a collateral descendant of the Lord Advocate Fletcher. Andrew Fletcher, Lord Justice Clerk, was the confidential correspondent of even four Dukes of Argyll, the second, third, fourth, and fifth, and his grandson the present Mr. Fletcher of Salton, has in this way a store of Argyll correspondence. He himself was known as a boy as Mr. Andrew Campbell of Boquhan, the old Argyll inheritance in Menteith, and his brother now possesses that estate under the two reconciled surnames of Fletcher-Campbell, through an entail made by a Campbell lady.

The same volume contains the petition of the Marquis presented to Parliament on 12th February 1661, and subsequent petitions; also his defences against the "grand indictment."

Previous to the printing of the volume of letters by the late Duke of Argyll for the Maitland Club, a similar volume was published in the year 1829 by the late Mr. Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe. It consisted of letters written between the years 1663 and 1670, by the son of the Marquis, Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyll, to John Earl of Lauderdale, afterwards Duke, who was secretary of state for Scotland. The originals of these letters were preserved at Ham House, the residence of Louisa, Countess of Dysart, who presented the letters to Mr. Sharpe, as explained in his prefatory notice in the separate publication, in the year 1828, of the letters of Lady Margaret Kennedy to the Earl of Lauderdale.

The Duke of Lauderdale and the ninth Earl of Argyll were closely connected by matrimonial alliances. The first wife of the Duke was Lady Ann Home, and her sister Lady Margaret became Countess of Moray. Lady Mary Stuart, the eldest daughter of the Countess of Moray, was the first wife of the ninth Earl of Argyll. This connection between the Earls of Argyll and Lauderdale obviously led to the speedy restoration of the title of Earl of Argyll, and the Argyll estates, after the forfeiture of the whole by the Marquis. Lauderdale appears to have much consulted the Earl of Argyll on the affairs of Scotland, and the printed letters of Argyll to Lauderdale during the seven years from 1663, relate nearly as much to public as to private affairs. The Earl, in a letter dated from Inveraray, September 21, 1665, alludes to the attempts made to raise a ship of the Spanish Armada, which was sunk in the sea at Tobermory. The papers connected with this ship, and its supposed valuable contents are quoted in the present Report. The "Melgum" referred to in that letter is not Alexander Murray as stated in a note by the editor but James Maule of Melgund, who had acquired a reputation for raising sunk vessels, and who entered into a contract with the Earl of Argyll for raising the contents of this Spanish ship.

The printed collection by Mr. Sharpe includes a juvenile letter written by the Honourable John Campbell when a boy, about a New Year's time. I allude to it here, in consequence of a similar letter, being in the possession of Mr. Richard Almack who acquired by purchase much of the correspondence of the Duke of Lauderdale. Mr. Almack communicated to me a letter as the production of John the second Duke of Argyll, when a boy, addressed to the Earl of Lauderdale. But from a careful comparison of the two letters, I am satisfied that they were both written by John Campbell, second son of the ninth Earl of Argyll, to John Earl of Lauderdale, who was his godfather and also his uncle by marriage. In both letters the boy promises certain good things for "Ould Lang syne" which appears to have been a popular song of that early date. In a note to the printed letter his father adds—"This is a song he is much taken with. He dances all dances to that tune, and repeats the words on all occasions." One of these two juvenile letters is subscribed "Johnne Lawderdail," and the other "John Lawtherdall."

The Earl of Argyll in a letter to Lauderdale, dated Inveraray, November 11, 1667, alludes to the joy of his nameson, the same boy letter writer, on the birth of Lauderdale's grandson, who afterwards became third Marquis of Tweeddale. The Earl of Argyll says that when his son heard of "your grandchild's birth, he leaped, and dancet, and sung, and said, 'Now Lord 'Godfather hath two of us, two Johnes,' but whither 'that be or not, he owns without sant ceremony to be 'his brother. Now if Abruchell be still ther, he can 'tell your Lordship ther is a thing called in the High 'lands a coult, which is a relation they reckone stricter 'then to be brothers or cousin germans.'"

Few of the counterparts of the correspondence between Argyll and Lauderdale are now at Inveraray, two or three of Lauderdale's letters being all that remain. Lady Mary Stuart, Countess of Argyll, died in the year 1668, during the correspondence. Lauderdale in a letter dated 6th June of that year, writes to his son in law, Lord Yester, "I am not a humour to write, for the sad news of the death of my deare neice, the Countess of Argyll, greived so much, that I sent immediately for my coach, and came hither to comfort my poor wife, who is mightily afflicted for it." [Original at Yester].

From the relative positions of the houses of Argyll and Montrose, it has been sometimes assumed that there was a rivalry between them. The Marquis of Argyll and the Marquis of Montrose may be said to have begun public life at the same time, as prominent promoters of the National Covenant. Montrose left the Covenanters, while Argyll continued their steadfast supporter; and in several pitched battles between the troops of the Royalists and the Covenanters, Montrose and Argyll were the leaders of the respective armies. They were thus pitted against each other on many occasions, and when Montrose was forfeited, Argyll got a grant of his ancient estate of Mugdock; again, when the Marquis of Argyll was forfeited, the second Marquis of Montrose obtained, in turn, a gift of the estate of Cowal belonging to Argyll. On the restoration of Montrose and Argyll, many reckonings took place between them for effecting an amicable settlement in regard to their respective estates. The second Marquis of Montrose and the ninth Earl of Argyll at length effected a friendly arrangement. And on the death of the Marquis in March 1669, Argyll came all the way from Inverary to attend his funeral in Perthshire. This appears from a letter written by the Earl to his friends to accompany him to the funeral. [Argyll Archives.]

Among the letters of the ninth Earl of Argyll now reported on, are two farewell letters expressed in similar terms to his sons John and James Campbell, as well as a separate advice to his eldest son. These letters were written immediately before the execution of the Earl, and are similar in spirit to the farewell letter of his father the Marquis to his second son Lord Niel Campbell before referred to.

The ninth Earl of Argyll was not a favourite of Lord Macaulay, who thus contrasts him with his immediate progenitors and his own progeny: "He was the descendant of eminent men, and the parent of eminent men. He was the grandson of one of the ablest of Scottish politicians; the son of one of the bravest and most true hearted of Scottish patriots, the father of one MacCallum more renowned as a warrior and as an orator, as the model of every courtly grace, and as the judicious patron of arts and letters, and of another MacCallum more distinguished by talents for business and command, and by skill in the exact sciences." [History of England, Vol. IV., p. 296.]

The two brothers here referred to, are obviously John and Archibald, the second and third Dukes of Argyll. But the writer is mistaken in saying that they were the sons of the ninth Earl. They were the sons of Archibald, tenth Earl of Argyll; and Macaulay has overlooked the fact that their father, the tenth Earl, was made a Duke by King William the Third. Lord Frederick Campbell in a letter in 1806, reported infra, says "King James cut off the Earl of Argyll's head, and King William made his son a Duke."

John, second Duke of Argyll, rendered important services to the government in putting down the rebellion of 1715. John Earl of Mar who headed that insurrection, when Secretary of State for several years previously, was a frequent correspondent of John Duke of Argyll. This correspondence, indeed, continued nearly up to the time of their meeting in hostile array at Sheriffmuir. Many of the letters of Duke John are preserved in the Mar Charter Chest, and will be noticed in a report on them, for which permission has been accorded by the Earl of Kellie.

In the rebellion of the year 1745, the Argyll family again took an active part on behalf of the reigning sovereign. Archibald, third Duke of Argyll, was then intrusted by the Government with the management of the affairs of Scotland. His chief correspondent was Andrew Fletcher of Salton, Lord Milton, and Lord Justice Clerk. Much of the correspondence of Duke Archibald is still preserved at Salton. It will be noticed in a Report on the Salton MSS., for which permission has been granted by Andrew Fletcher, Esquire, of Salton.

Another member of the Argyll family who took an active part in quelling the rebellion of the year 1745, was General John Campbell of Mamore, who afterwards became fourth Duke of Argyll. During that year he held the command of the King's army in the West Highlands of Scotland. Many of his letters are preserved at Inverary and also at Salton. They show the activity and energy which he displayed during the insurrection, and the difficulties with which he had to contend when so many of his Highland countrymen had become disaffected.

The eldest son of General Campbell, fourth Duke of Argyll, also followed the military profession, and like the second Duke, he became a field marshal. There were thus two field marshals in the family in quick succession. In this Report, at the close of the royal letters, several letters from Field Marshal the Duke of York, commander in chief, and other members of the royal family, are shortly quoted.

In my first Report is included a large collection of commissions by sovereigns to the Earls of Argyll. A number of additional commissions which I have since found are noticed in the present report.

They present a more remarkable series of commissions than were perhaps ever conferred upon any other family. For centuries the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, like the Borders, were portions of the kingdom extremely difficult to govern. Clans were at war with clans, and at the same time they combined against the crown. On numerous occasions, successive chiefs of the Argyll family obtained special commissions to put down the MacGregors, Macdonalds, MacClaines, MacEans, Camerons and others. The narratives of the commissions reveal the extent of the depredations complained of.

Certain papers connected with the vessel that belonged to the SPANISH ARMADA have been referred to. These are given under a special heading in the report. The great amount of specie said to have been in the vessel that was sunk made her a subject of anxious search. The Marquis of Argyll obtained a gift of the vessel from King Charles the First, and the Lord High Admiral, and the right to the ship was inherited by his son the ninth Earl; although his right was contested, but unsuccessfully, by James Duke of York as High Admiral. The vessel was sunk at Tobermory in the Island of Mull, the country of the MacLeans, who appear to have taken liberties with her.

On the 20th March 1588, King James the Sixth granted a remission to Lauchlan McLean of Dowart for the cruel murder of certain inhabitants of the islands of Rum, Canna, and Eigg. From the remission was excepted the plotting of felonious burning and blowing up, by sulphureous powder, of a Spanish ship, and of the men and provisions in her, near the island of Mull. [Register of Privy Seal.]

In the MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS described in the present Report, several documents are quoted which afford an illustration of the injuries inflicted by one clan upon another, and of the unsettled and unsafe state of the Highlands in regard to life and property, as compared with the present happier times.

I. ROYAL LETTERS, 1566-1797.

Five letters from Mary, Queen of Scots.

- (1.) To Archibald, fifth Earl of Argyll. Edinburgh, 31 March 1566.

The Queen acknowledges the receipt of Argyll's letter in favour of Lord Boyd's pardon, and states that the pardon has not been expedited because in it the participation in the late conspiracy and "attempal" done in her presence was not excepted. She refers to this determination to except this attempt from pardon as the result of an interview held with the Earl, to which the Queen had summoned him. The Laird of Gormok is to be set at liberty under surety; 'bot' adds she, "the sourties ye knaw mon be Lawland men and not of the gretast of our nobilitie, unphilkis ar not com-monie taken sourties in sic caissis." When Gormok was relieved, he was to go to Argyll and abide in the Earl's company till the Queen were "further avisit." The Earl is to entertain familiarity with O'Neill in the best way he can.

The close of the letter is in the Queen's hand. "Wateuer bis sayed, bi sur off my gud mynd, and that ye sal persayue. Command my to our bruder. Zour richt gud sister, MARIE R."

2. (2.) To the same. Carlisle, 7 July 1568.

She is in good health. Lord Fleming has arrived at Carlisle from London, and has passed into Scotland. Lord Herries has written to her that Queen Elizabeth has declared to him that she has written expressly to Lord Murray to use no further extremities against her (Mary's) favourers.

"Your gudsister, MARIE R."

3. (3.) To the same. Bowtown, 27 August 1568.

She understands the Lord Huntly has got some defeat and is anxious till she hear the truth of the report. She has received two holograph writings from Queen Elizabeth which she has got translated into Scotch, and of which she has sent copies to Lord Herries and the Bishop of St. Andrew's. The chief item of news therein is that there is a company of Frenchmen either on the sea to pass into Scotland, or else already arrived there, at which Queen Elizabeth is ill pleased. It had been falsely reported to Her Majesty that some Scotsmen had invaded the English borders and made slaughter with destruction of houses. Queen Mary believes that the principal of the invaders was the young laird of Seswood, but Queen Elizabeth lays the whole burden on her and her party, and writes that there are some commissioners coming of whom the Duke of Norfolk is one.

The concluding paragraph in Queen Mary's letter is holograph thus. "Wi send zou a hors, fer and gud lyk, Six letters from Queen Elizabeth.

6. (1.) To Colin sixth Earl of Argyll. Mannor of Grenewiche, 28 May 1578.

She has heard how well he is devoted to the maintenance of amity between King James and her, and feels bound to let him know how well pleased she is thereby, and how glad she would be by effects to shew the same. She is grieved to find there has lately been difference and contention among personages of the best estate in Scotland, and best able to serve the King, and no less well affected to the amity between the two crowns, but through the intervention of certain persons of quality these differences are being removed, especially between Earl Morton and Argyll. Therefore she be-seches him, foreseeing the mischief likely to ensue by the continuance of such differences, in the nonage of the Prince, that if any disagreement still remain, or be revived between the said Earls or other of the nobility, he would use her minister in Scotland as a mediator to remove all cause of further unkindness. And for confirming the reconciliation, she wishes him to be the means of getting the King to call Earl Morton about him, whereby, besides discharging the office of a Christian nobleman by yielding the fruits of true reconciliation, he would greatly advance the king's service; Earl Morton being a man well able to govern, having had good experience. Your loving cousin, Elizabeth R.

7. (2.) To the same. Palace of Westminster,
28 February 1578.

She expresses her confidence in his forwardness and good inclination to maintain the friendship between her and King James, and doubts not he will shew his constancy by continuing his good offices between the two crowns. "And for that there is now occasion offerid
"to make some particular triall thereof, about the "matter of th' intendid matche betwix your said
"sovraine and some foreign prince, wherof we haue
"receaid sundry advertisementis, we pray you to "have a care that nothing be don therein without "our preuitey and knowledge, the same being a matter
"of such weight, and that towchith so neere the state "of both realmes; wherbie as we shalbe encouraged "to continue our accustomed care and good meaning "towards that realme, so shall you be assurid, for your "owne particular, to winne no small interest in our "favour; praying you to geue credit vnto our servant
"Bowes in that which he shall further saie vnto you
"touching this matter in our name.

"Your loving cousin and frind. ELIZABETH R."

8. (3.) To the same: Manor of Richmond,
20 January 1582.

Right trustie and right welbelovid cosin, we grette you well. The care we have hitherto had, and do still continue of the safety and well doing of our good brother the king, your maister, and the weale of his estate, moveth vs to esteeme and favour those noble men, and other his servauntes about his person, that shewe themselves well affected to the mayntenance of the state of religion, the fartherance of his service, and continewance of the good amitie betwene the two crownes. Among whom, having many waies heard very good reporte and great commendacioun of your forwardnes and good inclinacioun in all these three pointes, we could not but perticularly let you vnderstand by our owne lettres how we do thinke of you for the same, and th' interest you have thereby wonne in our speciall favour, and good liking of you; which we nothing doubt, but that you will geve vs cause to continewe still towards you, by your constant perseverance in your good zeale towards God, and dutie towards the servis of your Prince, whereby you shall discharge your conscience towards both, and winne thereby, both to yourselfe and to your posterity hereafter, that reputation that apperteyneth to a man of your calling and qualitie. Geven vnder our signet at our Manour of Richmond, the xxth of January 1582, the five and twentieth yeare of our raigne.

9. (4.) To Archibald, Seventh Earl of Argyll.
Manor of Nonesuch, 25 October 1594.

Right trusty and right welbelovid Cousine, wec greet yow hertelie well. Wee haue so manie waies ben informed of the honorable disposition which yow haue shewen in performance of faithfull services to the King your sovraine, even nowe in the tyme when practise and corruption haue appeared in his greatest subiectes, as wee are willing ever out of the full measure of our affection to our good brother, and his estate, to apprehend any good occasion to renewe that correspondence with yow which we had in former tymes with the Erle, your father, of whose loyaltie to his sovraine, as also good inclination to all such as were the neare allies, and surest friendes to the kinge's estate, we doe persuaue yow are as well the true inheritor as of his house and fortune. Wee haue at this tyme written to the king to use his authoritie for restraining diverse of his subiects the north of Scotland, who daylie are wayed by such of our Irishe as haue shewed themselves traytrouslie affected to our gouernment; wherein, for that we are of opinion that no subject he hath is of greater commandment then yourselfe, wee haue thought it not amysse (besides the recommendation of a tymelie reformation of the same to the Kinge,) to desire also of him that you maie knowe his mynde therein accordingle; and haue declared vnto him, that wee haue written to intreat you for the same cause; and therefore doe, by these our lettres, not only earnestlie moue you to vse an honorable circumspection in the same (the rather for our sake), but also doe assure you by this, that in any occasion offred vs to doe you or yours pleasure, you shall find no prince readier to performe all the best offices which in any reasonable sorte may be demanded of vs, wherof wee pray yow to make no question. And to the end yow may knowe some particulars of the matter, wee doe send yow

some litle note, in what numbers and by whose meanes those Scottis are sent, as also by whom they are waged, and where they are dispersed. By which small instructions we doubt not but you will worke suche a further reformation as shall yeld vs honorable satisfaction, being required from so noble a subiect of such a Kinge, with whom we are so strictlie joynd in all perfect amitie. Which being all we haue for this tyme to write vnto yow, we doe commits yow to God's protection, and wish you all honour and good fortune. Written at our Mannour of Nonesuch, the xxvijth daye of October, 1594, in the xxxvijth year of our raigne.

10. (5.) To Archibald Seventh Earl of Argyll. Mannor of Greenwich, 23 July, 1595.

Right trustie and right wellbeloued Cousin, wee greet yow hartlie well. Wee haue vnderstoode so fullie by our seruant Bowes of your great care of such thinges as he of late hath recommended vnto yow, that we cannot any longer forbear to acknowledge the same by our owne lretres; thereby to assure yow, that such is our contentment to find yow alsweil the successor of your noble father's love and good will to our estate as the inheritour of his fortune, that we are more and more desirous to vnderstand from yow in some particuler howe we might demonstrate our desire to pleasure and gratefie yow, being one whose actions haue confirmed to the world not only your constancie and faith to your Soueraigne in tyme of greatest tryall, but also your judgement in discerning clearelie, how dishonorable it would be for any man of noble blood to yelde the least countenance and assistance to so base and malicious rebellis. Lett theise lynes, therefore, serue, wee pray yow, for this tyme, and for some other particuler giue faith to our servant Bowes. And where we vnderstande that your Cousin Maclane is much at your deuotion, and one of power and commandment in those Isles of the Northe, we doe desire yow that he may find by yow, howe well yow are disposed towards vs, which wee doe knowe will much directe his courses, and for which wee wilbe found most ready to requitt him. All which we doe the more recommend to yow, because wee are informed that our dearest Brother the King of Scottis did deale with yow for the same in the presence of one of our owne seruantis employed in Bowes his absence. Given at our Mannor of Greenwich, the xxiiij day of Julie, in the xxxvijth yere of our raigne, 1595.

Your most assured lovinge cousin,

JAMES R.

To our richt traist consing and counsallour the Erle of Ergile, our chancellair.

14. (3.) To the same. Stirling Castle, 2 July 1582.

The King requests him to come to Perth on the 8th or 9th instant, where he will not be detained more than 24 hours, if his health or other occupation do not allow him to stay longer. The occasion of his visit is weighty importing both the King's suretie and his own, but he will learn particulars on his arrival. In the meantime he is reminded of the "deir doggis," which he had been required to send to the King, as the time was at hand when they should be sent off. He is directed to get as many as can be spared within his bounds, and to bring them with him or send them along with some of his own.

15. (4.) To the same. Perth, 30 August 1582.

The King informs him of his resolution to take order for the quieting of the troubles lately fallen out, by a convention of a good number of his Estates to be assembled at Edinburgh on the 20th of September next, and requires his attendance at the same in peaceable and quiet manner accompanied only by his household, that by his presence and good advice this weighty matter might be settled "to the plesour of God, our obedience, and the common tranquillitie of our realme."

16. (5.) To Archibald Seventh Earl of Argyll. Stirling Castle, 21 September 1588.

Requesting him and his friends to furnish 400 able footmen with bows, or as many as possible, with haggbutts, and send them to Edinburgh, 200 of them to be sent upon 28th September then instant, with sufficient leaders, and provision for 30 days, and the other 200, likewise provided, to be ready to relieve them before the end of October next, and to serve during the month of November. By so doing the Earl would give the King a proof of his affection according to the lovable custom of his ancestors.

17. (6.) To the same. Honour of Hampoun, 8 February [1604].

Being informed that the Laird of Auchinbreck, the cousin and vassal of the Earl, had made no redress of the "vyld oppressiouns," and wrongs committed by him and his accomplices upon the Sheriff of Bute and the feuirs and tenants of the King's lands within the Isle of But, and which the Earl of Argyll became bound to see redressed, but that the oppressions were continued, and no caution had been found for Auchinbrek keeping of the peace in that country, in respect whereof he had been charged for redress and to find caution for the time to come. The King, therefore requires Argyll, as chief and maister of Auchinbrek, to present him before the Council to be taken order with by them as they shall think expedient, and the King warns Argyll that in case of any farther oppression being heard of he will impute the blame to the latter, "and provyde sic remeid as sall not stand with your contentment."

18. (7.) To John Earl of Montrose, Chancellor of Scotland. Whitehall, 9 February, 1604.

JAMES R.

Right trusty and welbeloued Cowsen and Counsellour, We greete yow hartely well. We haue considered of the seruice of the Earle of Argyll, and finde it such as deserueth not only high commendation but speciall rewarde, whereby others may be encouraged to undertake the like. And therefore it is our pleassour that ye enforme the rest of our Counsell there both of our good mynde towards him, and contentment which we haue of his seruice. How and in what meassour we are to recompense the same we haue not yet thought good to aduertise yow nor them, alsell in respect of other weighty affaires which we haue in hand as also because our Secretary of Scotland is shorthie for our seruice to be here, to whom we will at full communicate our resolution in that point, whome wee shall likewise commaunde to impart the same vnto yow. Thus we bid yow farewell. From our Pallace of Whitehall, the nyenth of Februarie 1604.

To our Right Trusty and welbeloued Cowsen and Counsellour, the Erle of Montrose, our Chancellour of our Kingdome of Scotland.

19. (8.) To Sir Thomas Hamilton of Monkland, Knight, afterwards Earl of Haddington, King's Advocate. Whitehall, 27 December, 1605.

Desiring that the process of forfeiture against McCloyde of Hereis for certain crimes "of lese majestie" and tresoun specialle libellit in the summons, be continued in next Session of Parliament, that no process be led therein that Session, but that it be continued in the same force and effect to the next ensuing Parliament thereafter.

20. (1.) Whythall, 12 June, 1641.

The King is informed that one Lieut.-Col. Stewart, employed, it is said, by the Earl of Montrose, has deponed something of his dealing with Traquair, and that by him the King has given assurance of disposing of some vacant places to such persons as were joined in a late Band by the Earl of Montrose, thereby insinuating that the King's journey to Scotland was only desired and procured by Montrose and Traquair, and that his intent therein was rather to make parties than to receive from and give contentment to his subjects. He is anxious, however, that his actions and intentions in making such a journey should not be misunderstood, and therefore he thinks fit to tell the Marquis, (first) that he intends thereby to settle the affairs of Scotland according to the articles of the Treaty, and in such a way as to establish the affections of his people to him and a happy harmony among themselves; (second) that he never made any particular promises as to the giving away of places in Scotland, but means to dispose of them for the best advantage of his own service and so as to give satisfaction to his subjects. As for his letter to Montrose, he avows it, "as fit for me to wryte both for the matter" and the person to whom it is written, who for amie "thing I yet know is no wais unworthie of such a fauor." Having given these explanations he expects Argyll's help to clear away any misapprehensions which may arise on the occasion of his journey to Scotland.

Your assured frend

CHARLES R.

Yorke, 9 of May 1642.

Argyle, this is a tyme wherein all my seruants that ar able and willing will haue occasion to show them selves, and (according as they now appeare) will approue them selves worthie, or not, of my fauor; amongst whom, as it is well known your power wants not to serue me, so by your large expressions at my last being in Scotland and hauing by some reall testimonies shouen the estimation that I haue of you, I cannot dout of your reddiness; and therfor I haue most particularly commanded this bearer, Mungo Murray, to acquaint you with the occasion of this next Counsell dayes meeting, as lykewis which way I expect your seruice therein; of which being confident that I shall haue a good account,

I rest

26. Anne of Austria, Queen Dowager of France, to Archibald Marquis of Argyll, Paris, 8 July 1644.

This letter introduces Sir Gray, Baron de Scheues, one of her servants whose father was a Scotchman, and who was returning to Scotland, and assuring the Marquis that any favour he may shew the Baron will be very gratefully remembered by her.

Sixteen letters, &c. from King Charles the Second and others to Archibald Marquis of Argyll.

27. (1.) Jarsey, January 12 [1650].

My lord of Arguile, I cannot but know how much you are able to contribute to the agreement betwene me and my subjects of Scotland: and desiring it so much as I doe, I can much less forbear to intreate you to giue all furtherance to the sending away Commissioners to Breda, and to the moderating of there instructions as much as reasonably you may. It is now in your power to oblige me to a very great degree, and it shall be my care to remember, and to acknowledge that which you shall now [do] for my aduantage, and to remaine euer your affectionat friend,

CHARLES R.

For the Marquese of Arguile.

28. (2.) Breda, 4 May 1650.

The King says that he is sure the accounts which Argyll would receive from the Commissioners of what had past at Breda would let Argyll see that the aduice he had given him in his letter had had its due weight; is confident that Argyll really wishes his happiness and prosperity; promises to endeavour to satisfy that kingdom, and to show his particular affection and confidence in Argyll, and his inclinations and capacities to assist the King.

29. (3.) Breda, 15 May 1650.

Asks Argyll not to credit any reports that might be made to him in relation to himself; but to suspend his belief till he should speak with him, which he hoped to do shortly. The King repeats his particular confidence in Argyll.

30. (4.) Breda, 17 May 1650.
The King would not let Will. Murray depart without some mark of his particular kindness for the Marquis. "I know he will tell you how much I depend upon your aduice and assistance in all things."

Your very affectionate friend,
CHARLES R."

31. (5.) Breda, May the 19 [1650].
Wishes Argyll to give credit to William Murray in what he shall say from the King, and when the King comes to Scotland the Marquis would see the sense his Majesty had of the kindness of Argyll to him.

32. (6.) Breda, May 24 [1650].
Expresses the King's satisfaction with assurances which Lord Carnwath had given him from the Marquis, who would see the confidence the King had in him when he came to Scotland. In the meantime the King assures Argyll that he is "Your very louing friend."

33. (7.) At the Bog, June 26 [1650].
States that the King had sent Dunfarmlin before him to assure Argyll of the confidence he had in him; and desiring him to believe all the bearer should say from the King to him.

34. (8.) At the Boge, 26 June [1650].
Private Instructions for Dunfarmlin. To assure the Marquis of Argyll of the King's esteem for him; to ask him "to be thinking about settling my family as the King my father's was"; to follow Argyll's directions as to whom he should speak with about the King's service; to speak with Argyll that no exceptions should be taken to any persons that had come with the King, or if there were that he should be advertised privately; to assure David Lessly of the King's esteem for him, and to ask Argyll to come to him as soon as possible.

35. (9.) Falkland, July 18 [1650].
Asking Argyll to assist Lord Eglinton in raising the King's Regiment of Guards, as the Earl received so little assistance from the Committee of Estates.

36. (10.) Falkland, July 19 [1650].
Wishes Argyll for the care he had of what he had written him about; desires him not to let the Committee send positive orders to David Leslie either to fight or not to fight, but to leave it to his judgment what to do. "I have seen the sad experience of sending a generall positive orders when one is not vpon the place."

37. (11.) Perth, 28th of October.
States that the Marquis would receive from Lord Lothian his letter to him to encourage the Highlanders to fight against those in the north now in arms, but hopes there would be no occasion, as he had sent positive orders by Lord Ogilvy to them to lay down arms. Desires Argyll, being a person that the King does so much rely upon both for his ability and affection to the King, to come to Perth to give his counsell and advice in those things that concerned religion and the good of the kingdom, and expresses the King's reliance on his ability and affection to him. The King assures Argyll "that in what condition soever I am in, I shall ever be your most affectionat and constant frind, CHARLES R."

38. (12.) Letter in French from Queen Henrietta Maria to Argyll.

Paris, 20 August 1650.

Thanks him for the part he had taken in the service of the King her son; and prays God to bless his arms, and put him in a condition to punish the murderers of his father, being assured that he would contribute to that with as much good will as he had begun to re-establish his son. She would do everything she could to that end, and if no otherwise by her prayers.

39. (13.) Another letter from Queen Henrietta Maria to Argyll, in French.

Paris, 20 August 1650.

Having heard that some of his domestics had been removed from the King, among others one named Arden, she certifies that he had always served his master with love and fidelity, had always been about him since childhood, and one she esteemed highly, asking Argyll to help him to be restored to his service.

40. (14.) Letter from James Duke of York to the same.

Jersey, August 4, 1650.

States that he had sent a gentleman to congratulate the King on the hopeful condition of his affairs in Scotland, makes acknowledgments to him for the part he had contributed therunto, "which, knowing to be a very considerable one, you may assure your selfe of a proportionable share in my affection and friendship." Signed, "your affectionate cosen, JAMES."

41. (15.) Instructions by King Charles the Second to Thomas Weston, Esquire, to the Marquis of Ormond, Lieutenant-General of Ireland.

Breda, 17 May 1650.

To acquaint him of the Treaty of Breda, and the concessions he had made to his subjects of Scotland, which he had agreed to after vainly endeavouring to bring them to more moderation, specially that concerning the agreement the King had made with his Roman Catholic subjects of Ireland. The Scots had proposed a clause making void all treaties, &c., which the King would not grant, but they insisting rigidly on it, or to break the Treaty, he had been inforced to give them a private note under his hand, which was sent to the Lieutenant in cipher. The Lieutenant was to consider what was fit to be done for the King's service, to inform Lord Inchiquin of the Breda treaty; the note in cypher the King thinks should be kept secret from his Catholic subjects. Though some thought that it was no breach of the agreement, yet because he did not know to what particulars he might be further pressed when he came into Scotland, to ask the Lord Lieutenant and Lord Inchiquin to consider how necessary it was to adhere to that agreement, and if they thought it fit to do so to use the blanks sent for letters, declarations, &c., for the King's service amongst his Roman Catholic subjects, and in that case to send persons to Scotland with reasons from them and other Protestants to help to persuade the Parliament there not to press him to any further act to break the peace with his Roman Catholic subjects. But if they judged the continuance of the peace was no longer of importance to the King's affairs, and if the Ulster army and the Irish of that faction had done many things contrary thereto, they were to send a true state of things in Ireland, with breaches of the peace, that the King might publicly and avowedly declare the said peace broken and void, if pressed to it by the Parliament of Scotland; with directions for the safety of both his Protestant and Catholic subjects, whichever line of policy the Lord Lieutenant should recommend to take.

42. (16.) Letter by Archibald, Marquis of Argyll, to his son Lord Neill Campbell, written the day before his execution.

"Edinburgh, 26 May 1661.

"Loving and dear Sonne, The blessing of the Lord maketh riche, and he addeth no trouble therewith. Therfor I send you my blessing with it, which I hope the Lord will blis wnto you, both for your spirituall and temporal advantage. I shall say no mor, but entreat you to entertain amitie and writie with your brother and sisters, and dwlie to your dear mother. So I rest, your loving father."

"For Lord Neill Campbell.

45. James Duke of York to Archibald ninth Earl of Argyll.

London, 8th September, 1677.

My Lord of Argyll,

I have read a letter from you which came to my hands about the 25th August last, wherein you make a civil apology to me for justifying your pretensions to the sunken ship nere the Isle of Mull, which I cannot chuse but allow of, since it is naturall and reasonable for any to defend what they beleive to be their right: and on the other side, I doe assure you that I had very good reasons grounded on the concurrent opinions of able lawyers, to beleive my own title was the better of the two, and that, I might very well endeavour by legal wayes to make it out. But since the Lords of the Sessions have declared in your favour, I looke on the case as one of those intricate ones in law, wherein wise men's judgements doe frequently differ; and I make noe reflection on what hath passed, any wayes to lessen or prejudice the esteeme and kindnesse I have for you, as being really

Your affectionat freind,
JAMES.

For the Earle of Argyll in Scotland.

Six letters from Field Marshall Prince Frederick Duke of York and Albany, Commander in Chief, to John fifth Duke of Argyll, F.M.

46. (1.) April 9, 1795. Promising to lay before the King the name of Lieut. Cheap of Lord Lorne's Fencibles for an ensigny in an old regiment.

47. (2.) 22 March 1796. As to recommendation of an officer for the Lieut. Governorship of Guernsey.

48. (3.) August 1st, 1796. Acquainting his Grace that the King had been pleased to appoint him to the rank of Field Marshal.

49. (4.) March, 22, 1797. As to His Grace's recommendation of a chaplain, and stating that the patronage of chaplaincies was in the hands of the Secretary at War.

50. (5.) 6 August, 1800. Intimating his willingness to attend to his Grace's wishes in regard to Col. Clavering so far as lay in his power.

51. (6.) 6 September, 1800. Another letter on the same subject.

(Signed) FREDERICK, Commander-in-Chief.

52. Letter from Prince William Henry Duke of Gloucester and Edinburgh, brother of King George the Third, to John fifth Duke of Argyll, dated November 3d 1797, thanking His Grace for an offer of an ensigny for any one whom his Royal Highness might name.

(Signed) WILLIAM HENRY.

53. Two letters from Prince William Frederick, second Duke of Gloucester and Edinburgh. London, November 3, 1797. Recommending Lt. William Maxwell of the West Lowland Fencibles, a near relation of the Duchess of Gordon, for a vacant ensigny in the 3rd Regiment of Guards.

54. Norwich, December 1, 1797. Regretting that the King had not approved of Lt. Maxwell for the last vacancy and thanking His Grace for his promise to recommend him for the next. "I trust he will prove himself worthy of your goodness, which I doubt not from his present character; and you will make an old officer with a large family very happy by this kindness to his son."

(Signed) WILLIAM FREDERICK.

II. ROYAL GRANTS OF OFFICES, LICENCES, CHARGES, &c., 1543-1686.

55. Letter by Marie, Queen of Scotland, constituting Archibald, Earl of Argyll, and John Campbell of Calder, Knight, Commissioners for setting and raising if need be "of all our landes of the Southron Isles and lordship pertainyng" thereto for the space of three, four, or five years, as the Commissioners thought expedient. The letter prescribes the use of the "rentall maid be the Kinges grace our derest husband," that they set it as near under the avail of the said rental as they may, not giving occasion of insurrection or disobedience for "defalkin" of the rental, with full power to do all necessary in the premisses for keeping good rule. Given under the signet and subscription manual of Mary Queen Dowager, at Linlithgow, 6th May 1543.

Autograph of "Marie R." and impressed with her signet impaling the Arms of Scotland and those of Loraine.

56. Gift by Mary Queen Dowager of Scotland to her loved cousin Archibald Earl of Argyll, and Colin Campbell, his son, "gotten betuix hym and wmqhill Margaret Grahame his spous," and the longer liver of them, and to their deputies or subtenants, of the keeping of the forest of Glenfinglass in the lordship of Mentethe, with the steading of the Brigend thereof, during "all the days, space, and terms" of the granters lifetime. "Doand" therefor yearly by themselves, their deputies or subtenants the keeping of the forest duly as effeirs. Falkland, 23 October, 1546.

The following postscript is in the handwriting of the Queen Dowager:—"Je don et pouron que la fores set bien gardee, et que ne set mes annemis, et non autremen."

"MARIE R."

I give and provide that the forest be well kept and that they be not enemies to me, and not otherwise.

57. Letter by Marie Queen of Scots addressed to the Sheriffs of Inverness, Perth, and Nairn; setting forth that Alaster McRannald McDonald graise had refused to enter pledges for good rule or make his obedience to the Queen Dowager's authority, although required so to do. And further, in contempt of said authority, the said Alaster "cruelly slew Duncane Mowyll upon auld feid and forthocht felony;" and had further, on being charged to underly the law, made a bond with John Moidyart, and the rest of the Clan Rannald and Clan Donald, also rebels. The confederacy thus formed threatened a descent on the "trew and obedient" inhabitants of Lochabar and Donald Dow, Captain of the Clan Cameron. The Queen's letter authorises a proclamation at the market cross of the head burgh in each shire, forbidding all assistance to be given to the said Alaster and others; and in case of an actual raid being made, the said sheriffs are to summon all inhabitants of the bounds to the assistance of the said Donald Dow. Given under the signet and subscribed by the Queen Mother as Regent. Linlithgow, 27 February, 13 year of reign [1554-5].

Autograph of "Marie R."

58. Marie Queen of Scots, setting forth that, "It is understandin to oure deirest moder, Marie Queen dowriare and regent of oure realme, that our cousing Archibald Earl of Ergyll is in reddines, and intendis with his kin and friendis to pas schortlie to the partis of Ireland without licence" of the said Regent, and containing a warrant for summoning the said Archibald Earl of Argyll, "after the performance of his busines in his awin cuntre," to return to the presence of the Regent under the pain of treason. The letter assigns as the reason of this urgency, "that thair is diuers greit and wechty materis concerning the common weill of oure Realme to be treated, quhairin our said cousingis presens and counsaile is verray necessar." Given under the Queen's signet, and subscribed by her mother as Regent, at Edinburgh, 9th October and 13th year of reign [1555].

Autograph of "Marie R."

59. Letter by Marie Queen of Scots, granting to John Campbell of Skipinche, "seruand and daylie in the service of" Archibald Earl of Argyll, licence to "remane at thame" from all assemblies to be made by the Queen, her lieutenants, or wardens within the realm or without, by sea or land, during the Regency. His coming to Court in attendance on the Earl of Argyll is alone excepted. And this favour is granted absolutely, and all officers of the Crown are discharged from interfering in any way with the said John Campbell, or his lands or goods. Providing that he come at all times with the Earl of Argyll sufficiently furnished and provided, as accords. Subscribed by the Queen Mother and given under the signet. No reason is given for this favour beyond that of certain reasonable causes. At Haddington, 14th August and 15th year of reign [1557].

Autograph of "Marie R."

60. Letter under the signet and hand of King James the Sixth of Scotland, granting licence to "Archibald

ARGYLL

"Erll of Ergyle, lord Campbell and Lorne, and [three] persons with him in company, to depairt and pas furth" of our realm "to quhatsumeir partis he pleis, and to remane furth thair of the space of fyve years nixt to come efter the date heirof." Provision is made that the said Earle and others shall not suffer in any way during their absence. A special clause provides the taking of the Earle of Argyll's "wyffe, bairnis, men, tennents, servondis, and proper dependaris with their landis, &c.," under the King's special protection. The letter concludes with a provision that the Earle, during his absence from the realme, "behave himself as ane dewtifull and obedient subject to us, and do, nor attempt na thing in hurte or prejudice of us, our estate and realme, nor the trew religion presentlie professit within the same;" otherwise, this letter shall have no further effect. Given under the signet and signed at Linlithgow, 8th October, 1596.

Autograph of "James K." and countersigned by "Mr. J. Lindesay, secretarius."

61. Letter in the name of James, by the grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland; setting forth the need for furtherance of authority, and repressing the insolence of "the broken men of the Ileas." For this end the letter commands the King's messengers in that part to charge Angus McConneill of Dunnyvaig, and Hector Maclane of Dowart, the keepers of these fortalices respectively, to render and deliver the same to Archibald Earle of Argyll, "to whom we have given some speciall directionis anent the materis of the Ileas." The said Angus McConneill and Hector Maclane are to remove themselves and property from the fortalices within 24 hours after being charged to do so, under the pain of treason. Failing delivery of the castles, the keepers shall be held traitors, and sentence of forfeiture pronounced on them. Given at Holyrood House, 20 September, of our reigne of England, France, and Ireland the first, and of Scotland the 37th year, 1603.

The cachet of "James R." is at the head of the letter in place of the sign manual.

62. King James the Sixth to David Lord Seone, Comptroller, to allow Archibald Earle of Argyll 20 chalders of victual out of Kintyre, and 20,000 merks Scots, for his services against the Clangregor, "notorious lymmeris and malefactoris."

James R.

David Lord of Seone, our comptrollare, we greet you wele. Forsameikle as, in consideration and recompance of the goode and notable service done to ws be our richt trusty and weil-beloued cousing and counsaillour Archibald Erle of Argyll, Lord Campbell and Lorne, against that insolent and weikit race of the Clangregor, notorious lymmeris and malefactoris, specialie in the inbringing of the larde of McGregor, a nowmer of the principallis of that name, quhilk wer worthlie executed for their transgressionis, and for reducing of a goode nowmer of vtheris of that clan and their associatis to our obedience, we ar graciousslie pleased to bestow vpon our said cousing sameikle of our landis and lordship of Kintyre as will amont in zearlie rent to twentie chalders of victuall, heretabillie to him and his airis, togidder with the sowme of twentie thousand merks Scottis money to be payit to him at Martines nixt. It is thairfor our plesour that yee designe sameikle of our said landis and lordship of Kintyre as will affourde twentie chalders of victuall yearlie, with the kynd of victuall, and pas, and cans be past and expaid our infettment thairvpon in favours of the said Erle and his airis; and for thair forder securitie see the same confirmit in our present parliament. And heirwithall it is lykuis our plesour that zee answer and mak payment to the said erle of the said sowme of twentie thousand merks money fairsaid, at the said terme of Martines nixt; and the same salbe thankfullie allowit to zou vpon compt., keipand this present, with his discharge vpon the resait thairfor, for your warrant. Gevin at our Courte in Whytehall, the nynteyn of July, 1607.

63. King James the Sixth, to the Lords Commissioners of Rents. 19 January, 1615. [Extract.]

At Edinburgh, the nyntene day of Januar, the year of God j^e vi^e and tyftene yeiris. The whilk day his Maiesties letter directit to the Commissioneris of the rentis being presentit and red before thame, whair of the tennour followis:

JAMES REX. Ryght trustie and weil-beloued cousing and counsaillour, and trustie and weil-beloued counsaillouris, we greet you heartlie weill. Whairas the Erle of Argyll did bind himself and certane cawtioneris in our Bookis of Chekker of that our kingdome, that, within the space of fyve yeiris thereafter, he suld bulde ane town within Kintyre, meit and sufficient to be erectit in one burgh royall; and, falyeing thairfor, that at the nixt terme immediatlie following the isschew of the saidis fyve yeiris he suld pay to ws and our comptrolleris to our vse, all in ane summe, the haile dewtie addettit by him to ws for his landis in Kintyre for the space of the saidis fyve yeiris: In consideration whairfor we did then suspend all payment of the said rent for the saidis fyve yeiris, and did condition with the said Erle that he and his airis suld be exempt, frelie for ever fra payment of the saidis fyve yeiris rent, in caiss he performed his condition in building of the said town. And now, becaus our service against the Clangregor hes for the space of the last twa yeiris withhaldin him, and in all apperance is lyk this yeir to withhald him frome building of the said town, we can not in resoun impute this vnto him as ane breache of promise vpon his pairt and tak that advantage whiche in law we may haif of him as his cawtioneris, bot haif the rather inclynt to accept of this just excuse, and to discondisc vnto ane prorogation of the building of the same town for the lyk number of yeiris. And thairfore our pleissour is, that yow call the said Erle before yow, and tak suche ane cours with him as yow sall think most fittig for assuring the wholl payment of ancht yeiris rent to ws for the saidis landis at the first terme nixt following the last three yeiris, in caiss before the isschew thairfor he erect and build not the said town. And so, willing yow cairfullie to advert heirto, we bid yow heartlie fairweill. Frome our Courte at Theatfurd, the ellevant of Marche, 1613.

The saidis Lordis Commissioneris, remembering that the samyn letter now be the space of ane yeir and ane half since was presentit vnto theme by Archibald Campbell, seruitour to the erle of Argyll. At whilk tyme they, respecting the dewtie they did aw to his maiestie, and considering what prejudice did aryse to his Hienes by yielding to any suche grant, bothe by want of his dew rent and the altogidder vnliklie and vnprobabil apperance of any benefyte, which myght accres to his patrimonie by the building of any suche town or burgh as is vndertaken and promised; [quhairas] on the vther pairt, his Maiestie doeth quyte yeirle, indureing the yeiris dischargat, aboute four thousand markis at leist, which lose will hardlie be recompansit in many ages: Thairfore the saidis Lordis at that tyme, without geving any answer thairto, willit the said missive letter to be reseruit vpe. And vpon sum new motion concerning that bussines, the aforesaid letter being of new presentit and red in presens of the saidis Lordis, they then still as of before hold the yielding to this grant of discharge of the ancht yeiris dewtie aboute specefet to be verie hurtfull to his Hienes proffit; and gif his maiesties plesour be not in the contrarie, they think it expedient that not only the sute for the last three yeiris be refused, bot that the Erle of Argyll, in regard of the not fulfilling of his condition promised by him for the discharge of the first fyve yeiris, for the not performinge whierof he can not schaw any just and dew excuse, suld also be burdenit with the payment of his maiesties cofferis of the saidis first fyve yeiris, according to the expres claus content within the discharge of the same: the saidis Lordis, alwyse in all humilitie submitting the censure of there oppinionies to his Maiesties avin superexcellent wisdom and gratious pleissour.—Sic subscribitur, Alexander cancellarius, Johne Prestoun, Seone, Bining, Alexander Hay, Alexander Drummond.

64. Letter from King Charles the First addressed to "oure right trustie and welbeloued counsaillour, the Lord of Lorne," appointing him to the office of Chief master of the King's household on the occasion of the King's visit to Scotland, in the event of the absence of his father, who has held the office for many years. Dated at Whitehall, 30 March 1629. Superscribed "Charles R."

65. Letter of King Charles the Second, dated at Newmarket, 17 March 1682, contained in extract decret of the Lords of Treasury and Exchequer, dated 21 March 1682, under the hand of Sir George Mackenzie, Clerk Register. This letter was accompanied by a royal signature, reserving to Archibald, late Lord Lorne, the lands in which he and his lady stood confirmed, and appointing out of the lands disposed to the trustees as much of annual rent as, with the revenue of the lands in which he was confirmed, should amount to 15,000*l*. The letter requires the Lords Commissioners to take care that in the passing of the signature the grant should be secured from the claims of creditors either of the late Marquis of Argyll, his grandfather, or the late Earl of Argyll, his father. The decree is subscribed by the Marquis of Athole, and recommends the Commissioners nominated in the signature to attend to the instructions of his Majesty's letter, and particularly that the late Lord Lorne be secured in the sum of 15,000*l*. of yearly rent, according to the King's inclinations.

65. Letter superscribed by King James VII., and subscribed by John Viscount of Melfort to the Secret Committee, informing them that application had been made by "the late" Lord Lorne setting forth his straits and difficulties, and the King himself, being sufficiently convinced that "he had no accession" to the crimes of his late father, and being desirous of extending the royal compassion towards him, requires the Committee to send to him their opinion as to what methods of relief might be consistently adopted by the King. Dated at Whitehall, 12 December 1685. [Contemporary copy.]

67. Letter superscribed by King James the Seventh, and subscribed by John, Lord Melfort, to the Commissioners appointed for the disposal of the estate of the deceased Earl of Argyll. 1686.

Authorises the Commissioners to give copies of the decreets of locality, pronounced by them in favour of Archibald late Lord Lorne and his younger brother James Campbell, to these gentlemen; and to require the trustees of the estate to put them in actual and peaceable possession of the locality. [Contemporary copy.]

III. GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE ARGYLL FAMILY, ALPHABETICALLY ARRANGED.

68. Archibald, seventh Earl of Argyll, writes to his son Lord Lorne, asking him to pay a Mrs. Wright her wages owing to her by the Countess of Argyll. The letter is written from "my house in Holborne, the 21 of June," no year, but before 1638, when the earl died. The earl adds a postscript, which shows his anxiety to have the creditor discharged of her debt. He says, "Send her not bak to me, for sche is a railing wyf."

69. Letter from the Marquis of Argyll to Dowgall Campbell, of Inverawe, for burning the Lord Ogilvie's house of Forthar, &c. [July 1640.] Probably written from the Camp at Airlie:—"Dowgall, I mynd, God " willing, to lift from this the morrow, and therefor ye " shall mett me the morrow at nicht at Stronarnot, in " Strathardill: and caus bring alongs with you the " hail nolt and sheepe that ye have fundine perteneing " to my lord Ogilbie. 70. Archibald Marquis of Argyll to John Campbell, of Drumsny, keeper of the Castle of Carrick, ordering him to transport from Carrick to Dumbarton Castle 40 barrels of powder, with all the match, and also the musket balls obtained from Quintin Mure. Stirling, 12 May 1652.

71. Another letter from the Marquis of Argyll to the same John Campbell, dated from Stirling, 15 May 1652, in which he states that he thinks it more secure to deliver the ammunition upon a just inventory to Sir Charles Erskine, keeper of Dumbarton Castle, to be kept in the Castle of Dumbarton till it be sent for.

Correspondence, &c. between General George Monck and Duke of Albemarle and Archibald Marquis of Argyll. 1651-1661.

72. Pass by General Monck for allowing the Marquis of Argyll to go to St. Johnston's, from the Highlands, along with his servants, provided that they did not exceed thirty in number, with horses, arms, and necessities, to treat with General Monck, or whatever person he might appoint, and to return without interruption. Dundee, 7 November 1651. Subscribed "George Monck."

73. General George Monck to the Marquis of Argyll. Dalkeith, 13 January 1654.

Desires the Marquis to discover what loss the burgh or parish of Inverness had suffered through the fault of some in the shire of Argyll who had not sent in timely provision for the garrisons in that shire. Subscribed "George Monck."

74. General George Monck to the collector, heritors, and inhabitants of the Shire of Argyll. Dalkeith, 29 April 1664. Authorising assessment of Argyllshire for the two months following the first of May. Subscribed "George Monck."

75. To the Marquis of Argyll. Dalkeith, 28th July 1655. General Monck requests his lordship to intimate to the gentlemen of the shire of Argyll that, they were to make punctual payment of the four months' cess from the first of May to the first of September 1655, by the first of September next. As he was to remove the garrisons from the houses of Inverary and Ardkinlas, he desired that he might have such assurance from the gentlemen of the shire as his lordship should find necessary for their concurring with his lordship to keep the same peaceable; and might take course with those who should refuse. He was much troubled with some soldiers in Captain Weddall's troop and others, who had suffered losses in Argyllshire in 1652, and therefore he desires his lordship to advise the gentlemen "to provide " something for satisfaction to the soldiers lest it should " turne to the greater prejudice of the shire, if it were " not done."

76. General George Monck to the Marquis of Argyll, Dalkeith, 4 August 1659.

In answer to a letter of the Marquis the General writes: "I cannot conceive that the martial power " hath any authoritie to putt people into any right of " their lands; itt must be done in a legal way. Besides, " I have not heard what the other partie can say for " himself, and therefore I shall desire your lordshippe " to excuse mee from giving any such order at present, " untill such time as I have either heard what the " gentleman can say for himself, or that a decreete passe " before the judges for putting him out of possession. " . . . I thank you lordship for apprehending the boy, " and likewise of Penmore's wife. I shall send the " examination to Judge Mosely, who went then the " circuit when the business was examined, and write " to your lordshippe agen. I much wonder . . . [torn] " should convey away the murderher of Robinson. I " could wish I knew the truth of itt. According to " your desire I have sent an order for the carrying of " two guns in your boate.

(Signed) GEORGE MONCK."

77. General Monck to the Scotch Burghs. Edinburgh, 18 November 1659. [Old copy.]

Intimates that he had "a call from God and his " people" to march into England to maintain the Parliament and ancient constitution, and exhorts the magistrates of the burghs to hold no correspondence with any of "Charles Stewart's" party, but to apprehend any who should cause disturbance, and to "encourage " the godly ministry, and all that truly seek God in " the land." He hopes that his absence will be short, and promises to obtain from the Parliament, if he could, abatement of the "assesess" and other public burdens.

[Indorsed.] Copie of General Monck's letter to the burghs, 18 November 1659.

78. These are to certifie all whome these may concerne that the Marquess of Argyll did raise a companie of one hundred men in the year 1654 for the security of Argyllshire, and countenancing of his friends. These were paid by the pretended Parliament for a short time; but I, finding that the men did the Parliament little or noe service att all, thought fit to disband them, and they

79. These are to certifye all whome these may concerne that the occasion of Archibald lord Marquesse of Argyll his being present att the Crosse att Ednburgh, for the proclaiming of Richard Cromwell in the year 1657, was vppone a desire of the then Councill in Scotland that all noblemen of that kingdom then in Ednburgh should appeare there. Given under my hand and seale, at the Cockpitt, the 7th day of December 1660.

ALBEMARLE.

Two letters from the Marquis of Argyll to General George Monck, commander in chief of the forces in Scotland.

80. The first of these letters is without date, but indorsed 18 September 1654. The Marquis expresses his desire to retain the General's good opinion, and to be of service to him, and requests an order for a convoy that he may wait upon him.

Indorsed thus: "Ed^r 24th May, 1661. Produced be the K. Advocat in parlia^r, and acknowledged by my Lord Argyll to be his owne hand writt, and the subscriptione to be his owne hand writt."

81. Letter [dorso 16 December 1654.] Argyll encloses a letter from his son, with whom he had also had a meeting. At the meeting his son "was content to declare that he could not agree to our desire till he "exonerated himself first with Middleton, whom he "termed his General." The Marquis also refers to an engagement which had taken place betwixt some of the McGregors and the Laird of Lenie, wherein some were killed on both sides, and Lenie was wounded. He expects to hear from his Honor both anent the garrison and cess of Roseneath. Though his land in Rosneath was not wasted, yet he says, the people were so impoverished that they could pay him scarce any rent at all.

Indorsed thus: "Ed^r 24 May 1661. Produced be my Lord Advocat, and acknowledged be my Lord Argyll to be all urettin and subscriuit with his aune hand."

Three letters from the Marquis of Argyll to the Right Honourable Colonel Lilburne, commander in chief of the forces in Scotland.

82. In one [dorso July, 1653] the Marquis intimates that he has taken some men into his company for defence of his own person, having good grounds for jealousy, even in his own family. Having asked his eldest son to declare "if he was free from engagements with those "people now stirring," and for an assurance "that he "would never engage with them, he declared that he "was not resolved to engage with them, but would not "declare on the negative, tho' he said to some in "private he intended not at all to join with them." However immediately after going out of sight, the Marquis, his son "took horse and went to Glenurquhy, where "he had appointed a meeting with Auchinbreck, "McNaughton, Sir Arthur Forbes, and such as are of "that crew." His lordship had sent his last warning to his son, but had not learned his resolution. The Marquis offers to wait on Colonel Lilburne, if he will protect him from the violence of creditors. Promises to do his best to hinder the country people from raising men, which they are very willing to obey. Prays that the guilty may find their own weight, and that the innocent suffer not with them.

83. In another, dated Inverary, 21 July 1653, referring to his former letter as to his son's professed intention not to join the Highlanders the Marquis says, he hears now that his son has resolved the contrary. He does not think any in Argyllshire, except Auchinbreck, McNaughton, Strauchurre, and Ardchatan countenanced, his son in the course he was then following, and is hopeful that they will get little concurrence in that county in their desperate designs. The county gentlemen are very willing to do their duty in regard to the cess. On hearing where the Colonel is, he proposes to send an express to wait upon him, being desirous in every thing with the Lord's assistance to walk uprightly.

84. In a third letter dated Roseneath, 30 August 1653, the Marquis acknowledges receipt of one from Col. Lilburne from Dalkeith, dated 24 August; informs him that the Highlanders who came together were divided, and most part gone home, only he hears that Lord Kenmore, McNaughton, and his own son are toward the heads of Monteith, bent on mischief and threatening to fall upon any who will not concur with them. What he wants anent the assess his lordship is striving to make good, though all the impediments are cast in his way that disaffected people can, and he fears it will be impossible to get it in money. He acknowledges it was a great oversight that Colonel Lilburn was not informed before the gentlemen in Kintyre had sent for certain commodities referred to, and while professing his own ignorance of it also, until it was done, gives certain explanations in extenuation of the offence. He concludes by entreating Colonel Lilburn to command him what is his pleasure, and it will be done, for "I trust "in the Lord whatsoever the malice of men shall either "openly calumniate me in or privately suggest against "me, my way shall be found straight, doing no other "than what I profess; and that in his strength alone, "who is only able to sustain his own and guide them "in a way they know not. I want not presently the "malice of all who are perversely disposed in this nation, "which wants not its own weight of trouble and difficulty. But the wrath of man works not the righteousness of God."

Letter from the Marquis of Argyll to Mr. Clerk, secretary to the Commander-in-chief.

85. Encloses copy of a letter from the Earl of Glencairn and his answer thereto, to be shown to the commander in chief. Says that though he is like to suffer loss through his attendance to the Highlands for the public peace, yet he has no desire to leave off that duty till matters be farther advanced, and General Monck gives him leave. Considers his being with the forces a better protection for Argyllshire than anything else he can do.

Indorsed thus: "Ed^r 24 May, 1661. Produced be the K. Advocat in Parliament for proving actis of "hostilitie with, and assisting of the English by coun- "sell; and acknowledged be my Lord Argyll to be all "writtin and subscriuit wth his awne hand."

86. Letter from Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyll, to Lord Macdonald, dated at Dunstaffnage, 10th September 1675, says that a herald and a trumpeter had arrived there that night, and letters of treason were to be intimated by them to those in arms. The earl states that upon their refusing to give obedience, he must in obedience to his Majesty's commands, concur with those that had the commission of fire and sword, and were "ready to go about the business." The Laird of Lawers and the Captain of Claurannald were at Dunstaffnage. "I am confident," he adds, "you will not make their "word good who say that you will assist the outlaws of "the McLaines in opposing his Majesty's commission."

87. Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyll, to the Earl of Linlithgow. Dunstaffnage, 14th September, 1675.

Informes the Earl of Linlithgow that a frigate sent by the writer from Leith, had been becalmed near an old castle in Ardnamurchan, and attacked by the McLeans with 14 boats and 300 men. The frigate succeeded in driving off the boats after she had received 104 shot in her mainsail. The Macdonalds of Glangarry and the Brae of Lochaber were all together, and the outlaws bragged much of their assistance; but Lord McDonald would pretend the convocation was held only that he might be a mediator. The Clan Cameron was likewise assembled, and, remarks the writer naively, "it is lyk they will pretend, it is to keep the cows." As to the McLeans, after Captain Oughton offered them a full indemnity, they not only refused to give a full obedience to the laws, and to lay down arms, but they even kept parties together in his view, and "straitened" him in his quarters.

88. Letter written by Archibald, ninth Earl of Argyll, to his son John Campbell, on the day of the Earl's execution. Edinburgh Castle, 30 June [16]85.

Deare Jhone, We parted sudenly, but I hope shall meete happily in heauen. I pray God bless you, and if you seeke him, he will be found of you. My wife will say all to you. Pray love and respect her. I am, your louing father, ARGYLL.

For Mr. Jhone Campbell.

89. Another Letter written by the same earl to his son James, on the day of the Earl's execution.

[Original at Salton.]

Edinburgh Castle, 30 June [16]85.

Deare James, Learne to feare God; it is the only way to make you happie here and hereafter. Loue and respect my wife, and hearken to her aduice. The Lord bless you. I am, your louing father,

ARGYLL.

For Mr. James Campbell."

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

90. Order by Archibald, tenth Earl of Argyll, narrating that Sir John McLean had surrendered the Castle of Dowart and fort of Carnabullog; and allowing him to pass without molestation, as he was "desirous as a further mark of his submission to the present Majesties to goe to Flanders, or elsewhere, to through himself and all his concerns at his Majesties feet." Inverary, 31 March, 1692.

91. [The Managers of the affairs of John, Duke of Argyll, to the Duchess of Argyll.—1715.]

The Duke of Montrose had resigned his post of secretary, which had been supplied since that time by Lord Townshend and Secretary Stanhope. Of the relations with France, the writers state that the King of France was much surprised by the preparations in Britain, and had been imposed upon, believing matters there were otherwise than they really were. The Earl of Stair was meeting with greater victory than before. The embassy of the Duke of Ormond to France was not so acceptable to the French court; and it was said that he had been better employed to be upon the head of 30 or 40,000 men for the Pretender in Britain. It is interesting to observe how the following event is noticed. "The news from Paris says that Maddam 'Mantanna [Maintenon] is dead, and that the King of France will shortly follow, and sleep with his fathers.'" [Original draft.]

92. John, fifth Duke of Argyll, to King George the Third.

March 20th, 1778.

Sir, I lament extremely that my health prevents me at this critical time from laying myself at your Majesties feet, and offering to your Majesty my dutiful and affectionate services.

I trust that the separate command which I now hold in Scotland may continue, without interfering with any arrangement your Majesty may judge proper at present to make. But if your Majesty thinks otherwise, I cheerfully submit my situation as commander in Scotland to your Majesties disposal, with the same duty and affection that I wish'd to have offered my services had my health allowed me.

And whatever your Majesty determines, I most humbly intreat that your Majesty will believe that I shall ever continue to be, with the utmost respect and most zealous attachment, your Majesties most devoted and most dutiful subject and servant, ARGYLL.

93. John, fifth Duke of Argyll, to the Duke of York. Inverary, 7th August 1796.

Sir,—I have the honor of your Royall Highness's letter acquainting me that his Majesty has been graciously pleased to appoint me to the rank of Field Marshal.

Your Royall Highness's goodness in having recommended me to this rank of his Majesties favour claims my warmest thanks and acknowledgments, and your having been pleased to communicate the appointment by your own letter, is an additional circumstance of satisfaction to me, which shall ever be remembered. I have the honor to be, with every sentiment of duty and respect, Sir, your Royall Highness's most obedient humble servant, ARGYLL.

94. John, Marquis of Athole, Lord Lieutenant of Argyll, and Tarbert, to the parish of Kilchoan in Ardnamurchan, ordering those commoners who had been compelled into the service of the rebels to appear before him, or the governor of any garrison appointed to grant such protection, to take the oath of allegiance before the 20th June then current. That ignorance might not be pretended as an excuse, it is recommended to the ministers of the respective parishes in the shires of Argyll and Tarbert, and to schoolmasters or readers, or in their absence to any other loyal person able to read, to make public intimation of this order after divine service on the Lord's day immediately following the delivery of the order. Dated at Inverary, 3 June 1685.

C.

95. D. Campbell of Inveraw, to Mr. George Norworuall, Advocate, Inverary, 14 July 1651.

Complains of an order passed by the Committee of Estates for citing the Laird of Ardkinglass and others before them for alleged contravention of some articles granted to Lammont at the "intaking" of his house of Toward without any proper summons or charge. The writer warrants Norworuall to appear for Ardkinglass and the others (the writer includes himself, though he supposes he was not cited), and urge on the Committee to allow them a legal summons and proper hearing. He thinks it extremely hard that men who had faithfully served the public should be called in question by the public for anything they had done against the rebels. This action appeared to him to be a great discouragement to honest men.

96. Four letters from Sir Dugald Campbell of Auchinbreck, knight. Addresses wanting, but apparently to the Marquis of Argyll.

Kilmichel, 29 December 1652.

Acknowledges receipt of his Lordship's letter, desiring him as having charge of the divisions of Argyll, to convene the gentlemen of that division to proportion the cess. He was never mindful nor willing to do the English any service nor pay them cess, and when the rest had written to his Lordship to be a mediator between the English and them, he did not subscribe the letter. He was mindful to keep himself still free from doing them any service. He would consider till May-day whether he should himself pay cess; but, while he would hinder none from paying, he desires his lordship to employ some other person than himself for the task he had asked him to fulfil.

97. Kilmichel, 4th April 1653.

Writes that as he for his own part never delighted to own such meetings, and was resolved not to assist in anything that might contribute to strengthen the English, he would not attend the meeting, intimidated by his lordship, to consider the losses of the English and to take measures for the assess. He intended rather patiently to suffer whatever might fall than to enter any more in composition with them, knowing that the Lord, who had "appointed them for a scourge" to this nation, would limit them that they could do "no more than he would permit."

98. Glenlean, 3 September 1653.

Writes he had been informed by some of his tenants of Glendaroval that his Lordship's officer took up of their goods in payment of the cess. He had never subscribed to pay it, and was still resolved not to do so; and he had therefore taken the boldness to go and get back these goods till he was further advised about payment of cess.

Glenlean, 3 September 1653.

Threatens to be "fit yd" with him, if he should again "take up any pounds" from his lands of Knockmelie and Cleenlettir.

100. Kilmichel, 6th September 1653.

He had written to ministers in the Lowlands in whom he confided much, desiring their advice as to paying cess to the English; but as they had told the bearers of the letters that they had no will to write their mind before, he could not rashly pay till May next; but he would use all diligence to bring some of these ministers to a personal meeting with himself in some place near the Highlands before that time.

101. Archibald (?) Campbell of Inveraw, to the Earl of Argyll.

27 February 1677.

Says that he had written to the sheriff that upon the 24th of that instant a party went out of the house of Duart, seized a boat with Irish victual in Lochelie, six miles from Duart; and on Saturday night brought her to Duart. On Monday morning, before the boat was unloaded, Archibald, Ardgour's uncle, and the laird of Kengerloch's brother, "came under" a rock betwixt the boat and the house with about three or four score men, and hindered the pass. Sixteen of his men in the boat kept the boat and victual till Wednesday. The country having convened, although the specials however did not appear, they were necessitated to row to the shore, having no firewood to prepare victual, when the load and victuals were seized and carried away by the McLeans. His men went safely to the house standing to their defence. The house was loth to fire lest they should harm their own men, and did not fire; when they seeing their own men safe and not "prejudged" except in the seizure of the boat, which they afterwards claimed under a commission from Angus McHutchison alias McDonald, from the counsel for the Isles, notwithstanding that his (Campbell's) men were the first seizers of the boat.

be at Fort William by that time. If Glengarry surrendered there would be no difficulty in disarming the Highlands. Most of the arms in rebel's hands in that country had been secured, except what they sent in to Carnaburg, "which was the best of these arms. "Whether they may be soe wise as to desert that rock "or not, I cannot well tell you. As yett the number "of arms got does not at all agree with the number "that was in rebellion." The Lieutenants were to go from that district to Morvern, thence to Ardnamurchan, thence to Coll, in order to disarm all the rebels in the shire.

115. James Campbell, sheriff depute of Argyllshire [no address.] Inverary, 4th May, 1719.

The writer says, "We were for a considerable time "in the mist about the number of these men that "landed in the north. Sometimes we were alarm'd "about a new landing in Cromarty bay, sometimes in "one place, sometimes in another. Some called their "number more, some less, but by the best accounts " . . . they will not be above 300 of regular forces and betwixt 60 and 70 officers, besides the Scots "gentlemen and their servants." Last week, he continues, there went nine ships through the sound of Mull northward, some of them men-of-war. They gave out that they were from Liverpool going to Norway. As they came near Tobermory they fired some guns. The country was alarmed, and believed them to be Spanish ships, though he was convinced they were the frigates Sir John Norris had detached northward to cruise between the . . . and Kintail.

Locheill had come home to Lochaber with his proportion of the arms and ammunition. Clanronald was gone to Uist among his friends with his "accountretments." Glendarowell had gone from Kintail to Glenelg and thence to the Isle of Skye to raise the McLeods and McDonalds, a course, however, to which they seemed very averse, at least till they heard of a landing in the south.

On the Friday preceding all the McLeans were to have a grand meeting in Mull, where it was thought Glendarowell was to be incognito, but he (Campbell) was persuaded he would have little success. About ten days before he had sent to Brolas, the leading man amongst the McLeans, advising him to beware of involving himself and others in new misfortunes from which they could not get themselves so easily extricated as last time. He had sent similar messages to the clans in his neighbourhood, and he did not think that any of them would incline to stir, unless there should be a landing in England.

Tullibardine, the Pretender's general, had some time before written circular letters for a rendezvous in Lochaber, but "that exact general had forgotten to "condescend either upon the time or particular place." Probably he was at a loss what to say in that matter till he heard what had become of the Spaniards. The writer was told, by pretty good authors, that if the clans should go to arms they had laid it down, as their unalterable resolution, to use all manner of hostilities to force a universal insurrection. They proposed to raise Glengarry first, and he his next neighbours, and so on forward; and to make all good, that a body of men should follow: they were to take their route from Lochaber to Appin, thence to Lorne and Argyll, till they came to Kintyre: being resolved, whatever should be their own fate, to force their neighbours to the like, which they judged very practicable, since there were no arms to oppose them. Yet he was told by others that they were to force nobody, but such as were under former engagements to them, or that they had some interest in. But since in all appearance they were disappointed of a landing in England, they would hold themselves very quiet, and the few that had landed in the north would take to their heels as soon as they understood the disaster of the Spanish fleet, or that they were pressed by the loyal troops, and would only skulk in the hills till they had an opportunity of going off.

. . . . The silver medal you put into my hands was so much worn that there was no judging of its excellence. I met with one at the British Museum, sharp and in perfect preservation, of which I made Tassie, the engraver, take a mould. This and your medal is now in a small box to be conveyed to you by John Ferrier as far as Edinburgh, and then forwarded to Inveraray. In the same box you will find a very good mould of a medal of King William, which I likewise met with in the British Museum. It is of the same size, and work'd by the same medalist, as you may see from the initials on each. Thus I have sent you the Bane and the Antidote. King James cut off the Earl of Argyll's head, and King William made his son a Duke. . . .

As to publick news, as I know you study the papers, you are fully as much inform'd of them as I am. To say the truth, I am not very inquisitive. I have no great confidence in the present ministers. But they are in power, and we are in imminent danger, therefore I most heartily pray for their success. The truly great minister, as I conceive, and my very good friend, is gone. I follow'd him with the most heartfelt grief to the grave. With my best wishes to you and your family, I remain, my dear Brother, your affectionate, 118. Henry Dundas to John, fifth Duke of Argyll.

Parliament Street, 22 February 1797.

My Lord Duke,—I submit to your Grace's view a plan which the Duke of York has put into my hands. I own I was very much struck on the perusal of it. Perhaps at the time the laws were made for restraining the spirit of clanship in the Highlands of Scotland, the system might be justifiable by the recent circumstances which gave rise to that policy. It has for many years been my opinion that those reasons, whatever they were, have ceased, and that much good, in place of mischief, may on various occasions arise from such a connection among persons of the same family and name. If this sentiment should be illustrated by the adoption of any such measure as the accompanying paper suggests, I should have reason to be still more fortified in that opinion. I have not, however, thought it right to give his Royall Highness any advice on the subject, without having some ground to judge how far there was a likelihood of its being carried into execution. The most obvious method of doing so is by addressing myself to your Grace, and the other persons suggested, as the cements of the different classes of families referred to.

If the plan takes place, it does not occur to me that there can be any reason of distinguishing such a levy as this from any other Fencible Corps in respect of establishment and pay.

I have the honor to be, my Lord Duke, your Grace's most obedient humble servant,

HENRY DUNDAS.

119. William, Earl of Glencairne to the Earl of Argyll, then Lord Lorne. No date, but circa 1655. [Copy.]

The Earl regrets that it was his misfortune, "ane "artifice verie frequent in thir tymes," to have been misrepresented to his Lordship as a person unworthy of his favourable opinion. What is aimed at is a perfect unity among all good and honest hearted Scotsmen. Had his Lordship been in Edinburgh "in thir late "tymes," he would have seen in what respect he was held.

120. James, third Marquis of Hamilton.

Hyolrood House, 25 October 1688.

The address of this letter is wanting. But it has apparently been addressed to Archibald Lord Lorne, who soon thereafter succeeded as eighth Earl of Argyll. He entered the famous Assembly of Glasgow referred to in this letter, as Lord Lorne; and by the death of his father the seventh earl, Lord Lorne became Earl of Argyll during the sitting of the Assembly.

Acknowledges receipt of a letter from [the Earl] of the date, 16 October, intimating that his endeavours had "still the wished success." The Marquis, who was surpassed by few of his noble contemporaries in bad spelling, continues: "The people in their partes ar still made [i.e. mad], and continous in the same coursie they ner in, and laboeres by all meanes to hinder subscription to the Kings Couenant (as they call it): with most they preuall. Yett in Clidsdall ue haue had reasonabill succees. Kennoull in Pearthshyre and Southask in Angus, heath had sume succees lykways." The Marquis was sorry to hear that the well affected ministers in the north, were unwilling to come to the Assembly, and he urges on [Lord Lorne] to persuade them, pledging himself as to their safety in Glasgow, and promising that their expenses, from their setting out to their return, should be defrayed by the King. It was his Majesty's pleasure that all his council, with the exception of Argyll and a few others, should be at this Assembly. "The treuth is," says the Marquis, "his [Majesty] will not consent nor is itt fitt your Lordship should be out of the north till ue sea hou this Assemble ends, which I ame most confiden of uill nott be weill." The Lord Bishop of Ross was returning from court, where he had gone to learn how "my Lords" of the clargie should carry themselves at the assembly.

121. Letter from James third Marquis of Hamilton, created Duke of Hamilton, addressed to "My nobill lord and dear brother," probably John Earl of Crawford and Lindsay. Hamilton, the 6 August [after 1641.]

That in the midst of so great affaires as I find by your letter hath beine in agitation at this Assemblie, you should still be myndfull of your absent freind, shoes the kayre you haue of them; of the which I ame ueri sensabill.

I shall say nothing in answer to yours concerning the passages of the assemblie: only this, in my opinion nothing hath beine doune, since the pasification att Rippon, in this kingdome that hath so much displeased his Majestie as this will doe. The blame must still be laid on sume, and it is easie to guess who they will be. And thoe I haue beine absent, yett I knoe I shall not want my share of the thanks. But that is not to be regarded.

The Commissioners discourse to you concerning his desyre of an accommodation, and of haying my opinion, with his seeming esteem of me, would appeare strange, if I did not knoe his Grace, and had beine bread a courteour. For if I may belue reportes, I ame not beholding to him of late, and that shutes not with thoes expressiones he hes used to you. The answer that you gaive him was both a treuth and neri good.

Upone serious consideration I conceaue ther may be sume use mead of this desyre of his: for I beline he would haue mead no shuch motion without warra[n]t, which if he hath, it is for one of thes tou endes, eather to trye us that ar heare, or that an accommodation is really desyred; and perhaps both. Ue ar warned, and so armed. And therefore, in my opinion, he wou'd be incorged to goe in thoes thoughts and assurances giuen of our affectionous to his Majesties seruiss, and the peace of his dominious: for therby ue may come to a cleirer knoledge of what is intended then other wayes we shall haue: and so accordingly will be the better inabled to carrie our self. The way of douing [th]is I leaue to you, if you be of the same mynd; but if you be of a contrairie iudgment, what you haue already said to him is sufficient.

Urges on him to "losse no tyme in taking such course for safetie, . . . by treatie and agreement, on capitulations, as he shall judge most fit and expedient for the good of his persone, familie and estate." The letter contains a most flattering eulogy of Lorne's conduct in the war. He is spoken of as having been "principallie [engaged] in the enlivening of the war," and one of its chief and first movers, and his "deportments in relatione to the enemie and this late warre," are characterised as "beyond all parallell."

131. General, afterwards Earl of, Middleton to Lord Lorne. Paris, April 17, 1655.

Praises his Lordship's services in the war. Middleton professes it is, next to the ruin of the service, his chiefest regret, that he could not wait on Lorne before leaving Scotland, as he might then have settled a method of correspondence, and have been able to make his Lordship understand him better than he now did. "I should have been plaine in evrie thing," says he, "and indeed have made your Lordship my confessor." [Contemporary copy.]

132. John Earl of Middleton to King Charles the Second. Edinburgh, 8th March 1661.

Recommends to the King, in the name of the Parliament, a petition which he encloses in that letter, and which had been presented to parliament by Donald Macdonald of Moydart, Captain of Clanranald. He refers to the petitioner as having been "a constant adherer to the authoritie and commands of his Majesties royall father, and ane eminent sufferer for the same."

133. Letter unsigned but indorsed from Sir Robert Murray to the Earl of Argyll, 24 September 1668.

"Just as I had made an end of the other, the King came into his laboratory, where I am now writing; and amongst a great many other things we talked of, he said he never saw such herring as those you sent him last year, and that he must have more of them: and when I told him I had been writing to you, he ordered me to write again for more herring. Soon after he commended your Aqua-vite too. You must therefore not fail to provide him with both." Then follow some directions for the better dressing of the herring. Care was to be taken, they were neither trodden upon nor flung about from one place to another, and they should be salted as soon as possible after they were taken. On coming to Edinburgh the barrels should be opened, and new brine put into them, as they often lost brine by the way. "He did also commend above all other wayse of preserving herring, the gutting and splitting of them as soon as they are taken, and hanging them by the tail on the shrouds, and twice or thrice a day dipping them in brine or salt water "till they be "thoroughly win." The learned president of the Royal Society then directs how they should be dried on shore, and recommends what he considers a better method of curing them by smoke. If this way of "ordering" them were once in vogue in London the herring would come into "such reputation that there could be no better way of improving the trade."

134. Letter to the Earl of Argyll by Lauchlan McLeane, bailie of Tiree. Coill, 2 May 1675.

Though he was most willing, he could not hazard to obey his Lordship without a safeguard, as all of the name of McLeane aimed at his life, and had sent on purpose to Tiree to apprehend him. 135. Letter from Captain Francis Nicholl at Kilmartin to Lady Lorne. Inveraray, 18th January 1655.

The writer intimates that her Ladyship's presence in that district was very much to the prejudice of the commonwealth and the peace of the country, on account of her reception of the rebels then in those parts. He orders her Ladyship and family forthwith to remove from the Shire of Argyre; and if her Ladyship did not obey this order, by her "obstinance," she would draw confusion upon herself and family; and threatens the writer, "hittle civillty shall be found at my hands."

136. John Earl of Rothes to Archibald Earl of Argyll, London, 21st December 1641.*

This letter has special reference to the treaty of Ripon which was then concluded at London. Desirous to have Argyll brought to London, Rothes had persuaded Bedford, Warwick, Mandevill, and Savill to aid him in urging on Bristol the speaker, that Argyll, being a man who was much interested in the public business, was by his knowledge, action, and great power fitted to be a witness to the conclusion of the treaty, that he might both the better know, and be the more particularly engaged to see it kept thereafter. Bristol afterwards spoke to the King, whose consent being given, the proposal was laid before the rest of the Commissioners. The Earl of Argyll was to hasten to London, and he is assured of the friendship of the Marquis who had greatest power there.

Speaking of the prospects of his own promotion, Rothes adds that, as promotion was never proposed by him, neither was it expected, nor had he ever opened his mouth for advancement here or there. He waited a fair calling to anything he undertook, and would endeavour as little as any man for himself; only some of the wisest both of the Scotch and English Lords thought that London's being the centre of business, required one to be there that had action and skill of affairs, and they were pleased to think that he would be meet, not only for moving business, but for debating with the King, and could make the Marquis employ himself the more diligently for the public than any other man. This he calls a "touch" to Argyll himself, and to be mentioned to no other.

137. John Duke of Rothes, Chancellor of Scotland, to the Earl of Argyll. Edinburgh, 2 April 1673.

The Lords of Council require the Earl of Argyll to put in execution the power committed to him in the suppression of conventicles in terms of the Acts of 11th August 1670, and 4th September last, and of the present proclamation.

138. John Duke of Rothes and other lords of council, to the Earl of Argyll. Edinburgh, 7 June 1679.

Wee doubt not of your Lordship's readiness vpon all occasions to give commendable proofes of your loyalty and duty to his Sacred Majesty, and you cannot give a more signal testimony thereof and of your zeall for the peace and happines of the Kingdom than by a reasonable assistance against these rebels . . ."

139. The Duke of Rothes, to the Earl of Argyll. Edinburgh, 16 October 1679.

The Privy Council, having notice that His Royal Highness the Duke of York was expected very shortly in Scotland had resolved to meet him at the border of England, and the precise time of his arrival not being then certain, his Lordship, as a Privy Councillor is desired to repair to Edinburgh to attend the motions of the Council. He is requested to acquaint any noblemen residing near him that the Council expected they would give attendance on that occasion. Most sacred Sovereigne,—I not beeing in a conditione to waite on your Majesty (by reasone of the sad affliction I am now lyeing vnder by the death off my wyffe) to give ane accompt off what I know off the matter contrayert betwixt the Marquise of Montrose and the Erie of Argyll, have taken this course to signifie to your Majesty all that consists in my knowledge in relatione thereto; which is, that I verie well remember, and know perfectly, that in the actione at Montrose his instance against the late Argyle both parties were fully heard to debate there rights—that the dispute was in wryteing,—that Argyle was the last speaker—that I was appointed one off those who were to audite there accompts, that nothing was charged on Argyle bot what he had received from this Montrose, for the redemptions off his father's landes of Mugdock, and the free rent off the saids lands intromitted with by him, deducting cesse and publict burdein, which was instructed by fitted accompts betwixt Argyle and his owne chamberlaine, vnder his hand, for befor the processe came to be considered in Parliament Montrose did freeleie discount from his charge the interest off Argiles intromissions, amounting to twentie thousand pounds Scots, or thereby, which in my judgment, and off all the members off Parliament I ever spok with wpon that subject, he might have most reasonably craved: and that the whole debate was fully read and considered in Parliament and a sentence pronounced thereupon most deliberately, advisedly, and justly. And all this to be off truth is subscribed to by, Most Sacred Sovereigne,

Your Majesties most humble, most loyall, and most obedient subject and servant,

TULLIBARDINE.

IV. COMMISSIONS FROM SOVEREIGNS AND LORDS OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL TO THE EARLS OF ARGYLL, &c.
1564—1681.

142. Commission under the signet of Mary, Queen of Scots, to her sheriff in that quarter to make proclamation of the Earl of Argyll's Commission against the Clan Gregor. The Commission narrates that the Clan Gregor, being rebels, and at the horn for horrible crimes and offences committed by them, had put themselves in great companies and drawn to them the "broken men" of sundry countries, and had most cruelly burned, slain, and "harried" the poor lieges of the realm and otherwise oppressed them, that divers lands were laid waste; and that for remedy of this, Her Majesty had granted full power, general and special, to Archibald, Earl of Argyll, to assemble wherever he should think expedient, all the lieges within the sheriffdoms of Argyll, Tarbert, Dumbarton, Bute, her Majesty's Stewardry, Earldom, and whole country of Menteith, the lands and country of Braidalbalin, Boquhan, and so much of the sheriffdom of Stirling as lyf west of Boquhan. With these he was empowered to pursue and apprehend the malefactors within these bounds or farther as occasion should occur, and to bring them to her Majesty's Justice or his deputies to be punished for their demerits; and failing that, to pursue them till they were expelled from the realm. Her Majesty in the present letters commands the sheriffs immediately to pass to the market cross of each of the burghs within the bounds above written, and in Her Majesty's name and authority to make publication of the said Commission, and charge all the lieges within these bounds to "comply with" the Earl or his deputies at such places as he should think expedient and to act under his direction. Dated at Perth, 18 March 1564. [Original.]

143. Commission under the great seal by King James the Sixth, with advice of the Regent, constituting Robert Dunbar of Durriss, Alexander Keith of Clakreach, James Dunbar of Tarbat, David Dunbar apparent of Durriss, and James Innes of Achintoyll, or any two of them conjointly, his Majesty's Justiciars in that part, with special power and commission to hold courts of justiciary anywhere within the bounds of Moray, and to apprehend all persons accused or suspected of using sacks, stand nets or spears, in the waters of Spey and Findorn and water of Nairn, and to punish them according to their offence, and to make them compear under a penalty of 40l. Scots, with power to intromit with and raise the amerciements and escheals of the said Courts, and to apply them to their own use for their labours. This Commission aimed at carrying into effect the statutes regarding the preservation of smolts, grisle, kipper, and other black fish in waters that flowed into the sea. These statutes, says the narrative, were held of but little account, especially by a great number of persons about the Spey. Dated at Leith, 15th May 1572.

144. Commission under the Signet, in name of King James the VI. to Archibald, Earl of Argyll, against the Clan Gregor. Dated at Hairsuidhouse, 24 February 1603.

Stating that whereas "the disorderit and wicked "thevis and lymmaris of the Clangregour quha hes "sa lang continewit in murthour, bluidsched, thift, "reif, sornig and oppressioun vpon our peaceable "and guid subiectis," had in February instant "in "oppin hostilitie, enterit within the Lennox, quhair "in maist barbarous and cruell maner they have "murdreit and slane sax or sevin scoir of our honest "and peaceable subiectis, without respect to man or "bairnes," and had "herryit the haill cuntrey" to the displeasure of God, contempt of the King's authority, and slander of the whole nation, if the offence should remain unpunished. Therefore "we and lordis of our "secrete counsall, hes resolvit and avowed that this "viperous and vnhappy generatioun schall followit, "huntit, and persewit, with fyre and sword, ay and "quhill they be extirpat and ruit out, and expellit the "haill boundis of our dominions." For that purpose making Archibald, Earl of Argyll, justice and commissioner within the bounds of Argyll and Tarbat, with power to convene the inhabitants, pursue all of the name of McGregor, apprehend them, and execute justice on them according to the laws, and to prosecute them with fire and sword and all kind of rigour and extremity, and never to leave off the pursuit of them until they be utterly expelled from the said bounds; and to warn the justices of the neighbouring bounds to which the said "limmaris" might flee; to levy a hundred "able "fechtand men" within the said bounds, with warlike provisions, appoint chieftains, and commanders, &c., and that these be ready to meet with the forces to be raised by the other justices at the head of Lochrannoch, on the sixth day of April next to come, and concur with them in the pursuit of the said limmers. With power to appoint watches, and as he might need to employ some men "quha ar not answerable to our lawis," promising they should not be challenged while so employed, only that he must be answerable that they did not "reif, "sorne, herry, nor oppress the cuntrey, nor tak meit "and drink bot for redde and present payment." With power to the barons and gentlemen to lay on a stent for the support of said forces. And charging all the inhabitants to concur with the Commissioner and follow his directions in the pursuit of the Clan Gregor, "vnder "the paine of tinsall of lyfe, landis and guidis."

145. Extract Commission by the Lords of the Privy Council to Andrew Lord Stewart of Uchiltree, his Majesty's Lieutenant, ordaining that he should take such orders for breaking and destroying all "lumfaddis" galleys and "birlinges" upon the Continent next adjacent to the Isles, belonging to persons "not lawfull "and obedient subjects, but always disobedient and "rebellious;" and for taking and demolishing the houses and strenghts on the Continent belonging to such persons as he had done or should do with the houses, galleys, &c., within the Isles. Dated 1st September 1608.

146. Commission by the Privy Council, narrating that, whereas his Majesty's Commission was granted to Archibald Lord of Lorne to be Justiciar within the North and South Isles of the kingdom, and a question had arisen between some of the North Islanders and the Lord of Lorne as to the place where the court was to be held: therefore the Council, on the suggestion of his Majesty's Advocate, by this present warrant, authorise the Lord of Lorne to hold his court at Inverness for the North Islanders, although it was beyond his Lordship's grant and infettment; with the same power as he had in virtue of his previous grant within the shire of Argyll, allowing him to hold courts in any other parts of Argyll where by virtue of his former commission he might do the same: and ordain him to give public intimation thereof to the North Islanders by open proclamation at the market cross of Inverness and other places needful. Dated 4 September 1629.

147. Act by the Lords of the Privy Council in favour of Archibald Lord of Lorne, ordaining that no commission should be granted in favor of any one of the Islanders, till the Lord of Lorne, his Majesty's justiciar, was first heard, and his opinion craved thereanent. Dated the 26th day of August 1631.

148. Act by the Lords of the Privy Council, anent the supplication presented to the Lords, of Privy Council by Archibald Lord of Lorne, heritable Justice within the sheriffdom of Argyll and Tarbet etc. making mention that his Lordship was informed that sundry persons, suspect of witchcraft and other capital crimes, had been apprehended within the isles of Bute, and that James Stewart Sheriff of Bute, and his deputies, purposed craving a commission for their trial from the Lords of Privy Council, to the prejudice of the heritable office of Justiciar held by the said Lord Lorne. Lord Lorne petitioned the Lords of Privy Council to forbear granting a commission to any person or persons for trying any criminal matters occurring within any part of the said Lord of Lorne's commission: And the Lords declare in this decret that having considered his application they will grant no commission for trying any criminal matters within the bounds of Lord Lorne's commission, till the said Lord Lorne be warned of the granting thereof. Dated 14 February 1632.

149. Commission under the Signet by King Charles the First to George Earl of Seaforth against the Islesmen.

Narrates that numbers of disordered and broken men of the Isles repaired very frequently in troops and companies to the country of Ross, where they committed not only individual injuries, but also open, and sometimes barbarous and cruel slaughters and bloodsheds, and that these broken "limmers" were encouraged in their lawless courses, because no one of power in that quarter was authorised with warrant to oppose them and repay their insolence. His Majesty, understanding that the Earl of Seaforth was very willing to employ his forces against these "broken limmers," gives full power and commission to the Earl to assemble his friends and vassals in arms on all occasions when descents were made from the Isles to Ross, to pursue and apprehend the rebels, and to deliver them to the sheriff of Inverness and his deputies for trial and punishment, and commands all the lieges to assist the Earl in the execution of his commission. Dated at Edinburgh 25 March 1634. [Contemporary copy.]

150. Commission under the Signet by King Charles the First; narrating that it had been shown to his Majesty by Archibald Lord Lorne, heritable justiciar of the Isles, that upon information made to the Lords of the Privy Council by the Earl of Seaforth of some alleged insolences and depredations committed by Islesmen in the country of Ross, the lords had granted a commission to the Earl for the apprehension of such broken men and for bringing them to trial before the sheriff of Inverness; and that Lord Lorne was heritable Justiciar of the Isles and had power to hold Courts in the burgh of Inverness, and do justice there on Islesmen who transgressed the law, and that he and his deputies were very willing to use the authority granted to them. His Majesty, therefore, commands his sheriffs in that part to charge the Earl of Seaforth, and the sheriff of Inverness and his deputies by whom any of the Islesmen should be apprehended, to exhibit them at the burgh of Inverness, to be tried by Lord Lorne or his deputy. Dated at Edinburgh 1 July 1634.

151. Commission by the Committee of Lords, allowing the Marquis of Argyll to repair to the West Country to make up his regiment. So many of his men as had been with him in time past, as well as those to be collected, were to have their maintenance in the same manner as the other forces in the kingdom. The committee recommend the Marquis to hasten his retinue within twelve days. Dated 22 March, 1645.

152. Extract commission of fire and sword granted by King Charles the second in favour of Sir John Campbell of Glenurchy, Sir James Campbell of Lawers, the Laird of McCleod, Sir James McDonald of Sleat, and others, against John Campbell of Lerages, Alexander his brother, Archibald Carswell his servitor, and a number of other persons specified, who had been declared rebels, and put to the horn for not appearing before the Earl of Argyll to answer a charge of rape alleged to have been committed by them on the person of Jean Campbell, relict of the deceased Archibald Campbell of Archdattan. The extract is dated, 14 December 1665.

153. Commission under the signet by King Charles the Second, to the Lyon-King-at-Arms, his Majesty's sheriff in that part, narrating that forasnauch as the Lords of the Privy Council were informed that, contrary to law and several acts of council, the craig and fort of Cairnebulg, at the back of the island of Mull, continued to be garrisoned by order of Lauchlan McLain of Broilisk, Hector Oig, his brother, John McLain of Ardgour, Allan McLain of Souvrescavallid, John McLain of Kinlochallan, Lauchlan McLain of Torloisk, Donald McLain of Kingerloch, Hector and John McNories, uncles to McNorie of Ulva, Hugh McLain, son of Keanlochallan, Charles McLain of Ardmacroish, Lachlan McLachlan in Morinish, Allan McCharles in Minsineish, Donald McCharles in Arrois, Hector and Hugh McCharles, his sons, Hector and Alexander McLains, brothers of Kingerloch, Hugh McLain of Carnae, Hector McLain his son, Allan McLain in Killintyn, and Hugh McLain, late baillie of Tirie, who were denounced as rebels and put to the horn for not appearing before the Privy Council to answer for that and several other crimes; therefore it was his Majesty's will that the foresaid sheriffs should pass, with the royal coat of arms displayed, and by open proclamation at the market cross of the head burgh of the shire, by sound of trumpet in his Majesty's name and authority command all the above-mentioned McLains, or any of them, who had the fort under their command, to deliver the fort and house of Cairnebulg to Archibald, Earl of Argyll, or any one having his order, within the space of fourteen days after they were charged to do so, under the pain of treason. Dated at Edinburgh, 22nd December 1680, with execution thereof, dated 7th January 1681.

V.—COMMISSIONS FROM THE COMMITTEE OF ESTATES, 1641-1646.

154. Act of the Committee of the Scottish Parliament, dated at Newcastle, 1st March 1641, appointing Archibald, Earl of Argyll one of the Commissioners from the Scottish Estates of Parliament to treat "upon the way of seteling a solide and perfite peace betwix both kingdomes." The Earl is empowered to repair to London or to join the other commissioners, wherever they might be. The Earl is declared to be furnished also with his Majesty's "safeguard and "protection wnder the broad seale of England." Autograph of the Lords Committee.

155. Commission by the Committee of Estates to Archibald, Marquis of Argyll, to freight as many barks and boats for transporting as many men as he might be authorised to do by the Lieutenant General, to Argyll to assist the inhabitants of that shire against the rebels. All expence of freight, or repairs of the vessels were to be considered as a public debt and paid out of the "first and readiest of the moneys dew to the "public." Dated at Glasgow, 17 September 1645. Autographs of committee.

156. Nine blank commissions by the Committee of Estates appointing officers to troops of horse and companies of foot required from the army in Ireland. All dated at Glasgow, 8th November 1645. Autographs of the Marquis of Argyll and others of the committee.

157. Extract Order by the Committee of Estates on the treasurer of the army for providing 500 bolls of meal for Sir Charles Couts' garrisons in Ireland, to be disposed upon at the Marquis of Argyll's discretion. Glasgow, 8th November 1645.

158. Extract Renewed Order by the Committee of Estates, for the delivery of Lieutenant Colonel Ogilvie, —Ogilvie of Shannallie, and —Ogilvie, his brother to the Marquis of Argyll; with warrant to the keepers of any prison wherein they might be, to deliver them to the Marquis. Edinburgh, 17 March 1646.

VI.—BONDS OF MANRENT, 1548-1629.

159. Bond of Manrent by Nele Montgomery of Langschaw, who being "come of a noble and mighty lord, "Archibald, Erie of Ergyle's house, and his lordship's "tender friend and kinsman;" the Earl having also given him his bond of maintenance, binds himself to the Earl in manrent, and to accompany him with his kin and followers "as well in the Queen's grate armies as at "all other times." Dated at Edinburgh, 5 September 1548,

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

160. Bond betwixt Archibald, Earl of Argyll, on the one part, and John Makallaster, Captain of Clanrannald, and Alane McEane Ye Allaster his son, on the other part; whereby the latter bind themselves to the Earl in true manrent service; the Earl, on the other hand, binds himself to maintain and defend them. Inter alia, it is provided that so long as Angus McConile of Dunnavaig, and his heirs are servants to the said Earl, the said John and Alane are "licentiat" to do them pleasure; and if any of the Clanrannald should be "contrarious" in acknowledging the said John and Alane his son as their chiefs, and to serve them as their ancestors had done, the Earl obliges himself to assist John and Alane with his forces, in bringing the clan to obedience. Dated at Inverary, 23 November 1571.

161. Contract between Hector Maklayne of Dowart and John Dow Maklayne, his brother geman. Whereby the said Hector sets in tack to the said John the 25l. 6s. 8d. land in the dominion of Morvern, 25 merk land in Glennoherry in Islay, and other lands therein mentioned, with the office of bailie over these lands, and also the office of bailie over certain other lands belonging to the said Hector Maklayne. The inhabitants of these lands are to rise with the said John Dow at MacLeans command, and to have liberty to move from place to place on these lands. John Dow McLane is content to "live on his own particular living" and to avoid all oppression, and if he should commit any manner of crime against any of Hectors "native men, "tenants and freeholders," it shall be fully redressed. Hector is to accept John as a principal counsellor in all weighty matters, and if Hector should send his forces to Ireland or Scotland, John is to have preeminence over the rest of his kin, &c. in the absence of Hector. Hector consents that John resort not to the Earl of Argyll till further favors be obtained. Hector McLane also consents to his brother's marrying the laird of Coll's daughter, if he can do so lawfully without slander or offence to the Kirk of God; if he cannot lawfully marry her, he may do with her as he please, independent of the said Hector "till God provide remeid." Dated at the head of Loch Alyne, 14th May 1573. [Contemporary copy.]

162. Bond betwixt commissioners for Colin Earl of Argyll, on the one part, and John Mudeorlach Makallaster McAllam, Captain of Clanranall, and Alane McBain his son and apparent heir, on the other part; whereby the said John and Allan give their bond of manrent to the Earl. The said John and Allan, inter alia, demit the lands of Glenelg in favor of Tormoud McCloyd, bind themselves to join with the McLanes, and to refer all matters regarding McCloyd of Harra to the said Earl. The Earl is held bound to maintain and defend the said John and Allan, and others, and to do diligence on McCloyd of Harra. Provision is made that Lauchlan McLane and others shall pursue and invade the Clanranald, if this bond be not kept by them. Dated at Ardluig, 19th September 1576.

163. Bond of maintenance between Archibald Marquis of Argyll, designated therein Lord Lorne, and Alexander McConnell of Largie; whereby they, being willing to renew the friendship that had existed between their predecessors, bind themselves,—the Marquis and his heirs to truly and legally protect, assist, maintain and defend Alexander McConnell and his successors, Lairds of Largie (being dutiful subjects to the king) in all their lawful actions as far as law would, from generation to generation; the said Alexander and his heirs in return, to infest the Marquis and his heirs in an annual rent of eighty pounds out of the tenantry of Largie. Dated 19th May 1629, registered in the books of Council and Session, 28 December 1633.

VII.—PAPERS relating to the WRECK of the SPANISH ARMADA, 1641–1694.

164. Gift by James Duke of Lennox and Richmond, Earl of Darnley, &c., Great-Admiral of Scotland, with consent of King Charles the First, to Archibald, Marquis of Argyll, his heirs and assignees. This gift proceeds upon the narrative that in the year 1588, when the great Spanish Armada was sent from Spain towards England and Scotland, and was dispersed by "the mercie of God," there were divers ships and other vessels of the Armada, with ornaments, munition, goods, and gear, which were thought to be of great worth, cast away, and sunk to the sea ground on the coast of Mull, near Tobermory, in the Scots seas, where they lay, and still lie as lost; and that the Marquis of Argyll, near whose bounds the ships were lost, having taken notice thereof, and made inquiries therefor, and having heard some "doukers" and others expert in such matters state that they considered it possible to recover some of the ships and their valuables, was moved to take and to cause pains to be taken thereupon at his own charges and hazard. For this reason the great-admiral, with the King's consent, gives, grants, and disposes to the Marquis the said ships, ornaments, munition, &c. of the Spanish Armada, and the entire profit that might follow, or that he had already obtained therefrom with full power to the Marquis, his "doukers," seamen and others to search for the ships, and intromit with them, providing the Marquis were accountable and made prompt payment to the Duke of Lennox and Richmond of an hundredth part of the ships, &c., with deduction of the expenses incurred for their recovery, pro rata. Dated from the Court at St. Theobald's, 5 February 1641.

165. Warrant by Archibald, Earl of Angus, vice-Admiral of the kingdom of Scotland, to the Marquis of Argyll to intromit with a French bark of the burden of 40 tons, lately cast away on the coast of the island of Colonsay belonging to the Marquis, hail ornaments, apprelling and pertinents thereof, with the hail goods and gear therein, and to sell, use, and dispose thereupon at his pleasure, and to do every thing necessary for his intromissions with the said bark and goods, and disposing thereof to his own use as he shall think expedient. Dated 22 January 1650.

166. Contract between Archibald, Earl of Argyll, on the one part, and James Mauld of Melgund on the other part, setting forth that forasmuch as the deceased James, Duke of Lennox, Great Admiral of the realm, by his letters of gift, dated 5 February 1641, did give, grant and dispose to the late Marquis of Argyll, father to the said Earl of Argyll, the wreck ships, and other vessels, with the ornaments, ammunition, goods and gear therein, of the Spanish Armada, cast away and sunk to the ground of the sea upon the coast of Mull, near Tobermory in the Scots seas in 1588, as at more length contained in the gift, the right whereof is now established in the person of said Archibald, Earl of Argyll. And the said Earl being sufficiently informed of the notable skill of said James Maulde in recovery of wreck and sunk ships &c., therefore the said Archibald, Earl of Argyll sells, assigns, and disposes to the said James Maulde, his assignees, and partners, the said wreck ships, and other vessels of the said Armada, and specially the ship or vessel which has been discovered at the bottom of the sea opposite or near to the lands of Queyneis in the Isle of Mull beside Tobermory, with the hail ornaments and furniture thereof, and the hail ammunition, guns, gold, silver, metal, goods, &c. therein, with power to said James Maulde, his "dowcars," seamen, craftsmen, and others, at their own charges to search, recover, and intromit with the same, and to apply the same to their own profit. And, inter alia, the said Earl binds himself that the said James Mauld shall not be molested in his work, and that his workmen &c. shall have peaceable living in these parts during their stay, and travelling through the Highlands and Isles, and shall be free from all robberies, thefts &c. so far as the said Earl can prevent the same. The said contract provides further lodging houses for the workmen at the usual rates, and is fixed to endure for three years after 1 March 1666. Said James Maulde to deliver the said Earl one fifth part of the ships and others that shall be found therein, and that upon the nearest shore where the same shall be recovered free of charge. And in case nothing be recovered, the said Earl shall be free from refunding to said James Maulde any part of the charges he shall happen to expend in the search thereof. Dated 1 and 20 March 1665. George, Earl of Panmure is one of the attesting witnesses to the contract.

167. Inventory of the furniture of the ship called the "Charlott," now called the "Jean of Kirkwall," delivered by the Earl of Argyll to Edward Sclar, present skipper thereof. July 19, 1675.

168. Articles of Agreement between Archibald, Earl of Argyll, and John Saint Clare, son to John Saint Clare, minister at Ormiston in Scotland, for himself and as taking burden for his father, and as having power and authority from him.

Inter alia, the Earl obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to subscribe all right he had or might have to the wreck or ship lying at Tobermory in the isle of Mull, formerly one of the Spanish Armada, much about 1588, with all her guns, furniture, gold or silver, coined or uncoined, and whatever else could be found about her, to and in favour of the Saint Clares above mentioned, their heirs, etc., with power to them to recover the same, for three years from 10 May 1676, and to appropriate them to their own use, except such share or shares as are reserved for the Earl, viz., one third part of what should be recovered during the first year, the other two third parts going to the Saint Clares, and one half of what should be recovered during the last two years, the other half going to the Saint Clares. The iron and timber work is excepted from the Earl's share, and was to be for the sole use of the Saint Clares. The second provision is, that if the Saint Clares were disturbed during the first year, so as not to be able to work or raise wreck without damage to their persons (apparently this disturbance was expected to arise from the unsettled state of the country), the contract should be regarded as not taking effect for a year. The Earl binds himself to produce before 1 November 1676, his right to the ship, under the great seal of Scotland, at Edinburgh, and to deliver a copy of it to the Saint Clares. John Saint Clare, younger, binds himself, for himself, and his father, to repair with all diligence to the place where the vessel lay sunken, to use all skill for its recovery, and for the recovery of the valuables during the space of three years, and to make true account and payment of the shares above reserved to the Earl and his heirs, etc.; lastly, both parties oblige themselves faithfully to observe all the articles of agreement under the liquidated penalty of 2,000 merks Scots. Dated at London, 10 May 1676.

169. Contract between John Sinclair, minister of Ormiston, and John Sinclair, younger, his son, on the one part, and Lord Neill Campbell, brother to Archibald Earl of Argyll, on the other part. Dated 18 December 1676.

The Contract proceeds on the narrative of the immediately preceding Contract, and that further Articles of Agreement had been settled upon on 29 July 1676, by which John Sinclair, the one party, assigned to Hans Albright van Treileben, the other party to the agreement, the Contract or Articles of the 10th May agreed upon between the Earl of Argyll and the Sinclairs concerning the Spanish ship; in consideration of which Master Treileben obliged himself to use all possible endeavours to get up all that might he found in the water in and about the ship, as gold, silver, bullion, jewels, etc., and to begin by the last day of December 1676, otherwise to be excluded from the agreement, and consented to the division in the manner mentioned in the Contract of all that should be "buoyed up" out of the water. It is further agreed that the Sinclairs should denude themselves of the premises in favour of Lord Neill Campbell, and by this Contract they sell, assign, transfer, and dispose to him, his heirs, executors, and assignees the whole profit and benefit that could in any way redound to them by the two previous contracts; while Lord Neill Campbell as principal, and the Earl of Argyll as his cautioner, bind themselves conjointly and severally to make payment to the Sinclairs, and their heirs, of the following sums: 100*l*. sterling out of the readiest of any brass or brass guns that should be recovered out of the ship by Lord Neill Campbell or the Earl or Hans Albright van Treileben, and 300*l*. out of the first and readiest of the gold, silver, bullion, etc.; 50*l*. were to be paid in case of failure, and in case it should happen that there should not be recovered so much of brass or valuables, Lord Neill and the Earl are only to pay so much of the sum as corresponded to the value of what should be recovered.

170. Transference by Lord Neill Campbell to Archibald Earl of Argyll of the two Agreements (10 May and 29 July 1676) and of the assignation (18 December 1676) relating to the sunken ships of the Armada, especially to the wreck at Tobermory. 19 December 1676.

171. Contract between Archibald Earl of Argyll on the one part, and Captain Adolpho E. Smith for himself and taking burden on him for Hans Albright van Treileben, on the other part, whereby the Earl sells and disposes to Smith and van Treileben and their factors and substitutes all the wreck ships, and other vessels of the great Armada of Spain sent towards England and Scotland in 1588, with the whole ornaments, etc., that shall happen to be found in the ground of the sea on the coast of Mull, near Tobermory, with full power to them and their "douckars," etc., to search for these for three years from 1 May 1677 to 1 May 1680. Smith and Van Treileben engage to use their "utmost art" for the recovery of the wreck, to deliver on the spot to the Earl's factors or servants, who are daily to attend the work, and to be witnesses of what is recovered, the profits in the following proportions:—100*l*. sterling worth of the first brass or copper obtained, and that before any division; the third part of all copper and brass afterwards recovered; 3,000*l*. sterling worth of the first silver or gold recovered, out of the whole stock before division; and the half of whatever gold, silver, or jewels, etc. should thereafter be recovered. The iron and wood were to fall entirely to Captain Smith and van Albright. Should the work be impeded by the violence of the country people, it is provided that the term of the contract might be lengthened. The instruments were to be provided by Captain Smith. The work of recovery was to be commenced on or before the first of May 1677; and the party that failed in the performance of their obligations should pay to the other a penalty of 300*l*. Dated 26 December 1676.

172. A Representation of the Earl of Argyll's right to the Spanish ship sunk near Tobermory, narrating, inter alia, that the deceased Duke of Lennox disposed this ship to the Marquis of Argyll in 1641, and that in pursuance of this gift, the Marquis employed skilful persons, by whom several cannon were raised. This right devolved on the Earl, his son, and his Majesty ratified the gift in his favour in 1667; granting of new any right his Majesty might pretend to. Acting in virtue of both these rights, the Earl, after much expense, "secured the raising of what he had not actually raised," when a process is unexpectedly commenced at the instance of his Royal Highness, in which it is pretended that these gifts were null, at least give no further right to the ship, except so far as recovery had been made before the death of the Duke of Lennox; what remains it is pretended, belonging to his Royal Highness as High-Admiral for the time, for the reasons specified. The representation contains answers to these reasons. [This appears to be a Draft Representation in 1677.]

173. Information anent the Spanish wreck ship which the Earl of Argyll hath a right to. It is reputed to have been the "Admiral of Florence" in the Armada of 1588, a ship of 56 guns, and that there was aboard thirty million of money. It was burnt and so blown up that two men standing on the cabin were cast safe on shore; that it lies in a very good road, "land lott," betwixt a little island and a bay in the Isle of Mull, a place where vessels do ordinarily anchor, free of any violent tide, hardly any stream at all, a clean hard channel with a little sand on the top and little or no mud in most places about, upon 10 fathoms at high water, and about 8 at ground ebb, so calm that the Earl of Argyll caused dive at all times of the tide in seasonable weather, and even when it was white water within less than a mile of the place. The fore part of the ship that was above water is quite burnt, so that from the mizzen-mast to the foreship there is no deck left. The Earl caused search, but found nothing but a great heap of cannon balls about the main-mast, and some kettles and tankers of copper, and such like in other places.

It is concluded that if the money expected be fallen upon, the fifth part will quickly pay all expenses, and reward the ingenious artist; and if that fail, the cannon will certainly defray the charges.

[This appears to be a draft. Circa 1677.]

174. Copy letter to the Duke of York from the Earl of Argyll, relative to the latter's being lately defender in a process pursued against him by the Duke of York, about a wreck, which obliges him to vindicate himself that it was no unwillingness to yield what was just to the Admiral Court, but that he was forced to it that it might appear to his Royal Highness and to the world that he had neither attempted to procure any new right nor use any old right to the prejudice of the said Duke's concerns . . . that the Earl of Kincardine knew of his right, and they have talked of it; but he (the Earl of Kincardine) directly nor indirectly never said anything to him of said Duke's interest, till he sent him a summons, which obliged him to compare to answer for himself. The letter concludes with a hint by the Earl that "after all this noise," if he be fortunate, he will give the Duke of York an account, and perhaps present H. R. H. with somewhat, to shew what respect he hath towards him. Dated on back 1677.

The answer of the Duke of York is noted amongst the Royal letters. Vide No. 45.

175. Extract anent the libel pursued before the Lord High Admiral of Scotland and the Isles, at the instance of William Aikman, procurator-fiscal for James Duke of Albany and York, Lord High Admiral of Scotland, against Archibald Earl of Argyll, relative to the wreck ship at Tobermory, the right to which said procurator-fiscal craves might be declared to belong to the said High

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

Admiral. The rights, reasons, and allegations of the parties, and the gift and ratifications therein referred to, produced by Archibald Earl of Argyll, being at length heard and seen, the Lords of Council and Session assailed the said Archibald Earl of Argyll, from the hail points and articles of the summons libelled or precept intimated and pursued against him at the instance of said William Aikman, procurator-fiscal of the Admiralty, before said Lord High Admiral and his deputies: and decerned and declared him quit thereof and free therefrom in all time coming. Dated 27th July 1677.

176. Memorandum by the ninth Earl of Argyll about the Spanish "Wrack." 1677.

The memorandum states that the Spanish wrackship was reputed to have been the "Admiral of Florence," one of the Armada of 1588, a ship of fifty-six guns, with 30,000,000 of money on board. It was burned, and so blown up that two men standing upon the cabin were cast safe on shore. It lay in a very good road, land locked, betwixt a little island and a bay in the Isle of Mull, a place where vessels ordinarily anchored free of any violent tide, with hardly any stream, a clean hard channell, with a little sand on the top, and little or no mud in most places about, upon ten fathom at high water and about eight at ground ebb. The fore part of the ship above water was quite burned, so that from the mizen mast to the foreship no deck was left. The hull was full of sand, and the Earl caused it to be searched a little without finding anything but a great deal of cannon ball about the main mast, and some kettles and tankers of copper, and such like, in other places. Over the hindship, where the cabin was, there was a heap of great timber, which it would be difficult to remove, but "under this is the main expectation." The deck under the cabin was thought to be entire. The cannon lay generally at some yards distance from the ship, from two to twenty. The Earl's father had the gift of the ship, and attempted the recovery of it, but from want of skilful workmen he did not succeed. In 1666 the Laird of Melgum, who had learned the art of the bell in Sweden, and had made a considerable fortune by it, entered into a contract with the Earl for 3 years, by which Melgum was to be at all the charge, and to give the Earl the fifth part of what was brought up. He wrought only three months, and most of this time was spent in mending his bells and sending for materials he needed, so that he raised only two brass cannon of a large calibre, but very badly fortified, and a great iron gun. After this, being invited to England, he wrought no more, "thinking his trade a secret, and that the "Spanish ship would wait for him." On the expiry of the contract, the Earl undertook the work alone, and, without the aid of any who had ever seen diving, recovered six cannon, one of which weighed near six hundredweight.

The Earl afterwards entered into a contract with a German, who undertook great things, and talked of bringing a vessel of 40 guns, but, instead, brought only a yacht, and recovered only one anchor, going away soon after, "taking his gold with him, and leaving some "debt behind." The contract with the German had expired, and the Earl is provided with a vessel, bells, ropes, and tongs, and with men to work by direction, yet, although he is confident in his own understanding of the art of diving with the bell, he is willing to enter into a contract. He will dispose the vessel for three years, provided the contractor should keep four skilled men to work in seasonable weather from 1 May to 1 October. The Earl will furnish a ship of 60 or 70 tons with twelve seamen, and give his partner a fifth part of the proceeds. If a Crown were found it was to be excepted from the division and presented to his Majesty.

177. Notarial instrument at the instance of William Campbell, skipper to the Earl of Argyll's frigate, called "Anna of Argyll," whereby he, as procurator for the Earl, having appeared, desired, and required Captain Adolphin E. Smith and his men to "duck" and work at, the wreck-ship, conform to the minute of contract betwixt the Earl and him, otherwise to give the bells, sinks, and other instruments necessary for ducking, to William Campbell and the men on board the Earl's frigate, who would duck there without any regard to the threatening of the Macleans. Notwithstanding this, Captain Smith and his men refused to duck and work, or to give over the bells, etc., necessary for the work to William Campbell, who thereupon, as procurator for the Earl of Argyll, asked and took instruments, and protested against Captain Smith for cost, skait and damage conform to the contract. The instrument was taken by Donald McKellar, notary public, at and aboard the yacht belonging to Captain Adolphin E. Smith, lying in the Bay of Tobermory, in Mull, 7 September, 1678.

178. Instrument at the instance of Captain Adolphin E. Smith against John McLean of Kinlochalen and John McLean, servitor to Lauchlan McLean of Torloisk. Captain Smith compared before the notary public after mentioned and passed to the personal presence of the two McLeans complained against, who had convoked six or seven score of armed men, and exhibited to them a royal warrant bearing his Majesty's protection and free liberty to Captain Smith and his servants to work at the wreck-ship at Tobermory, and prohibiting any of his Majesty's subjects from interrupting them. Captain Smith then required the McLeans to dissipate the armed men, part of whom were in a port or trench at Tobermory, newly built by them for interrupting the work, and the rest in the place or houses adjacent—as John McLean of Kinlochalen acknowledged,—and in his Majesty's name required them to give him and his men liberty to prosecute their work at the wreck. Upon this Kinlochalen answered that the men in arms were not commanded by him, but by Hector McLean, brother of Lauchlan McLean of Torloisk, and others; and he declared that not only would Captain Smith and his men be hindered, but that the men in arms would shoot guns, muskets, and pistols at them, should any of them offer to duck or work at the wreck. Whereupon Captain Smith took this instrument, protesting against the fore-said McLeans and their accomplices, at Tobermory, in Mull, 7 September 1678.

179. Minute of agreement between the Earl of Argyll and Archibald Millar in Greenock. Millar obliges himself, as soon as needful, to enter the Earl's service in preparing what is proper to be done by him for his Lordship's frigate the "Galbert," or any other vessels to be hired for his Lordship's work at Tobermory, and thereafter to attend his service at Tobermory, and give advice and assistance in the work of diving, &c., for the recovery of the wreck at that place belonging to the Earl. The Earl engages to pay to Archibald Millar 40*l.* Scots monthly. Dated at Inverary, 6 April 1680.

180. Retocession by Alexander Campbell younger of Calder, in favour of the Earl of Argyll of one half of the sixteenth part of the gold, bullion, jewels, etc. to be recovered from the wreck at Tobermory within seven years from 1 April 1691, according to the assignation made to him by the Earl on 16 March 1691, in consideration that he had granted to him by the Earl, on the date of the retocession, an ample assignation of half of the sixteenth part formerly disposed in his favour by the Earl, Alexander Campbell reserving for himself the other half of the sixteenth part. Dated 22 December 1694.

VIII.—PAPERS RELATING TO THE ROBBERIES BY THE MACDONALDS, MACLEANS, CAMERONS, AND OTHERS. 1676–1690.

181. Letters of Charge by Sir John Nisbet, Knight, his Majesty's Advocate for his Majesty's interest, and John Campbell of Airds (the party grieved) against Sorley McAllan, Alexander Cameron, son to Angus Cameron of Innerlochy, and many others, who under silence and cloud of night, armed with guns and other weapons, had come to the lands of Ledgrianach pertaining to said John Campbell, and carried off many cattle; "stobed" one of the tenants daughters in the body with a dirk, and tied two of the tenants with their hands behind their backs with ropes from the heads of the tenants' horses, and had taken away the whole butter, cheese, back and bed clothes, and 20*lb.* of money, stripped their wives, children, and servants naked, and taken their clothes with them; by which robberies the 10 pound land of Airds was totally wasted. The offending parties are charged to compare before the lords of privy council thereabout. Given under the Signet at Edinburgh, 1 June 1676.

182. Letter of Charge at the instance of Sir John Nisbet of Dirltoun, Knight, his Majesty's Advocate for his Majesty's interest, and John McLauchlane of Kilbryde against John McCharles alias McLeane and others, and their accomplices to the number of three score men, who had broken into the complainer's house with hammers and other instruments, and taken the whole silver work, money, brass, and iron work, furniture, linen, &c. and stripped his wife, children, and tenants and their children and servants to the skin, "leaving not so much as a rag to cover them," and had beat and wounded them and put out all the fire in the Isle, and taken the hail meat and drink they found.

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

They had continued to act in this way till daylight, when they gathered together the hail horse, cows, and sheep that were upon the Isle, viz., 40 great cows, 12 two year old cows, 12 stirks, 4 horses, and 120 sheep, and brought them to the seaside, and with their swords slaughtered all the cows and sheep, and put them and the horses in the complainer's boats carrying the whole away. They left 32 "souls," men, women, and children, naked upon the Isle, 12 miles distant from the continent, without meat or fire, "the like of which cruelty, barbarity, and inhumanity," says the charge, "can hardly be known to have been committed amongst Turks and savages, far less in any part of the Christian world where law and justice do take place." And charging messengers to command them to compare before the Lords of Privy Council, &c. Given under the Signet. June 1676. [Old copy.]

183. Letters of Charge by Archibald Campbell of Inneraw, William Campbell in the Isle of Keirour and others, and William Scott, servitor to the Earl of Argyll, Archibald Earl of Argyll for his interest against—McLain of Lochbowie, Lauchlan McLain of Broolis, Major David Ramsay and others, who had landed in the foresaid Isle of Kerrera, and armed with guns, dirks, swords, &c. robbed and took away from the said William Campbell and others, many cattle, bulls, stirks, kye, &c. McLain and his complices are charged to compare before the Lords of Privy Council at Edinburgh thereanent. Given under the Signet at Edinburgh, June 1676. [Not signed.]

184. Abbreviation of the claim of Alexander Campbell of Lochneall, party grieved, against Lauchlan McLean and others, narrating that Ewine Cameron of Lochzeill, Lauchlan McLean of Broolis, and others their accomplices, armed with swords, guns, and other weapons, did come to the lands of Migharie, Carwallan, and others pertaining to said Alexander Campbell, and did by force and violence seize upon and rob forth of said lands 650 lambs, 650 sheep, 161 horses, 500 goats, 230 bulls corn, and 24 bear; and from the lands of Ardnamurhine and others belonging to him, 26 lambs, 12 horse, 40 sheep, 50 goats, and other goods, extending in all to 5,000l. Scots; by which robberies said lands were casten waste, the rent thereof would extend yearly to 5,000l. Scots, besides the damage sustained to the complainer and his tenants.

To which is appended.

1. Note of Campbell of Aird's Libel, stating that he and his tenants had been robbed by Cameron of Lochyeel and his accomplices who came with guns, pistols, &c. with 100 persons, the number of 200 cows, 160 goats, 100 horse, and household plenishing, wines and others—the value whereof will extend to 7,000 m. They have cast the complainer's lands waste, extending to 1,000 m. yearly.

2. Another libel raised by McConachy and others, mentioning that McLean of Lochbowie and Cameron of Lochyeel, with their accomplices, had robbed and taken away from Campbell of Inveraw, &c., 80 cows, 20 horse and household plenishing, having lanced men in the Isle of Lismore in the night time, and plundered and took away all belonging to the parties, which depredations and damages extend to 2,000 m.

3. Note of John McLaughlan's libel stating that John McCharles alias McClane and others armed with guns, culverings, pistols, swords, &c. at command of McLean of Lochbowie, under silence and cloud of night, did come to the Isle of Garvillach belonging to the complainer, in 3 boats; and thereafter came to John McLaughlan of Kilbride's dwelling house in said Isle, of purpose to seize upon and murder him, but by God's providence he escaped, and they instantly broke the doors of his house and of his tenants, and with axes, hammers, &c. they broke up 16 chests and took forth thereof the hail silver work, money, &c., and striped his wife, children, tenants, and servants to the skin, and left not so much as a rag to cover their nakedness, and beat and wounded them, and put out all the fire in the Isle, and did take the hail meat and drink they found; and at day light gathered all the horse, cows, and sheep on the Isle, viz., 40 great cows, 12 two year old cows, 12 stirks, 4 horse, and 120 sheep, and brought them to the seaside where their boats were; slaughtered the cows and sheep and put them together with the horse in John McLaughlan's own boat and took them away, &c., and therefore they should be decreed to make payment of 4,888l. 13s. 4d. the value thereof. Dated on back, 1677.

185. Information of the damage and loss sustained by John McLaughlan of Kilbride in the Small Islands, and of the goods and others stolen and away taken from him and his tenants there by McLean of Lochbowie, since the Council's Act of 7th October 1675.

Setting forth that on 18 October 1675, McLeane of Lochbowie, elder, did find out John McCharles alias McLeane, and McLeane of Kingierlochs brother, with three birlings stuffed with men to the number of three score, who under cloud and silence of night landed in Isle of Garvillach, and there apprehended the boats belonging to the said John McLaughlan; and thereafter came to his house, and having violently broken into it, they carried away the whole silver, iron and brass work, clothes, &c., did drive away the whole kye and sheep, and killed and carried so many away, with many of the best horses, as their boats were able to board, leaving in said Isle 32 persons naked and utterly destitute of meat and fire, and in a starving condition.

To exhibit the condition of the inhabitants of the island of Garvillach at this time, we give a complete list of the articles stolen.—40 great cows; 12 two-year-old cows; 12 stirks; 120 sheep; clothes chests [value in part of MSS. torn away], brass and iron work, 436l.; 1 great cauldron, 40l.; 4 pans, 12 pounds; iron pots, 40l.; iron work, 12l.; 12 silver spoons, 80l.; 4 silver dishes, 100l.; 2 wine cellars, 40 merks; 1 six-oared boat, 100l.; 30 stones of butter; 40 bolls of victual.

186. Commission by Archibald, Earl of Argyll, who held commission from his Majesty, with consent of the Privy Council, to disarm and reduce Eneas, Lord McDonald, Archibald McDonald of Keppoch, McLain of Torlusk, McLain of Broolis, McLain of Ardgour, or any other parties suspect of popery, or rebels. And in order thereto to require and command them in his Majesty's name and authority, to deliver up any manner of arms and ammunition in their possession. Giving full power and warrant to Alexander ——— sheriff depute of Inverness, to require and command the persons above named to deliver to him all manner of ammunition and arms in their possession, as they would be answerable to his Majesty upon their highest peril. Dated at Inveraray, 24 April 1679. [Contemporary copy.]

187. Commission by King Charles the Second, with consent of the Lords of Privy Council, in favour of John, Earl of Caithness, Archibald, Lord Lorn, Lord Neill Campbell and Sir Hugh Campbell of Caddell, Sir Duncan Campbell of Auchinbreck, Sir James Campbell of Lawyers, Colin Campbell of Ardinglasse, the Laird of McCleod, Alexander Campbell of Lochinnell, Ninian Bannatine of Kaimes, Robert Campbell of Glenlyon, the Laird of McFarlane, the Captain of Skipnish, and others. Granting them conjunctly and severally, full authority and charge to convocate his Majesty's lieges in arms, and to pass, pursue, apprehend, and, in case of resisting or hostile opposition, to pursue to the death Lauchlan McLaine of Broleis, Hector McLaine his brother, John McLaine of Ardgower, Hewgh McLaine, fiar of the same, Archibald McLaine, brother to Ardgower, Allan McLaine of Inversavadill, John McLaine of Kenlochallan, Hector McLaine his son, and others specified in the Commission, who were denounced rebels for not comparing personally in the tolbooth of the burgh of Inveraray on 23 June 1675, before John Campbell of Moy, Sheriff Depute of the sheriffdom of Argyll; and were lawfully cited on 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29 May 1675 by Duncan Clerk, messenger, to answer the law for convocating 300 or 400 men in arms in April 1675, by sending fiery crosses through the Isle of Mull, Morvern, and other places; for remaining upon the lands of Knockmartine in a warlike posture from the 22d to the last day of that month; as also for convocating 100 men, and keeping them in arms the space foresaid at Gaderly and Glenforsay; and for garrisoning the house and fort of Carnbulg in the same month, with a number of armed persons, and appointing a captain and other officers for keeping the fort and securing the country against the execution of the law; for their violent seizure of corns, bear, horse and swine, arrested upon the lands of Crossiboill and Kilmavaig in Teirrie, by Duncan Clerk, messenger. If for their defence the rebels should flee to strengths and houses, in that case the Commissioners were to pass and pursue them and besiege the strengths and houses, raise fire, and use all kind of force and warlike engines for winning and recovery thereof, and for the apprehension of the rebels and their accomplices. Given under the signet at Edinburgh, ——— November 1679.

188. Note of the goods taken from Duncan McArthur of Inshdrynich and his tenants by Lord McDonald and his army on 31 May and — June 1679, being several horses and mares of the total value of 800l.

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

189. Account of goods taken from Colin Campbell of Inveresgig and his tenants by Donald McDonald of Inveroy, Archibald McLaine brother to Ardgoeur, John McLaine brother to Torloisk, Donald Gow McLean of Sheba in Mull, directed there by Lord McDonald, 24 May 1679.

The articles stolen and other losses were: 16 horses, 734 merks; house-plenishing, 1,258 merks; 106 cows, 2,650 merks; 21 score and 9 sheep, 1,287 merks; yearly rental of lands wasted, 333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; the entertainment of Macdonalds men for a night, 400 merks. One of the sufferers was "ane poor old widow called Katrin "McPhillip" who lost 20 sheep, 8 lambs, 12 goats and 2 kids.

190. Scroll of all the losses sustained by Aird's tenants in Appin on the last invasion by Lord McDonald of the shire of Argyll, through Lord McDonald's army, 27 May 1679. The losses are estimated at 3,656*l.*

191. Account of goods stolen and uplifted by violence by the party of McDonald and McLane who invaded the shire of Argyll in May and June 1679, from Donald Monro of Stukagey in Glenshiro, and his neighbours in that town. The loss is estimated at 2,158*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

192. Account of the "heirship and spoil of the goods "and gear" uplifted and robbed from Duncan Dow McInturner at Brae Lochfine by the party of McDonald and McLane who invaded the shire of Argyll in May and June 1679. The entire losses amount to 764*l.* Scots.

193. Account of the goods "unjustly robbed and "taken away" from Dugald McEllar of Kiblaan and his tenants by the party of McDonald and McLane, who illegally and violently made invasion of the shire of Argyll in May and June 1679. The losses amount in all to 2933*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The special actors in the robbery were the McEans of Glencoe, McDonalds of Keppoch and the McLanes of the family of Aour.

194. Account of the goods taken by Lord Macdonald and his accomplices on the 3rd June 1679, from the land and persons therein mentioned, viz., taken from Nether Glenoro, from Gilbert Mac In Taylour 9 cows, 3 calves, 1 stirk, 14 goats, and others.

195. A particular account of goods taken from Duncan McInniuern Achindach in June 1679, when the Macdonalds were at Glenfallishe, including a sword estimate to 16*l.* Scots and one dirk.—Taken from Donald McWilliam, 1 gun; 1 dirk; one new yellow plaid; a new red girkeinate; a bonnet; a belt; purse; and three marks of money. Amounting in all to 600*l.*

196. List of the goods taken from the tenants of Glenaray and Glenshea by Lord McDonald in June 1679 Besides other live stock, there were stolen 264 cows, 129 horses, and 899 sheep.

197. Account of the goods plundered by the party of McDonalds and McLanes who made invasion on the shire of Argyll in June 1679, from John McInturnour and Malcome McInturnour fears in Drumbie. This robbery was principally committed by the said party, but most especially by the McEans of Glencoe and McDonalds of Keppoch. The total loss was 280*l.*

198. Account of the goods plundered by the McDonalds and McLanes party in May and June 1679 from Ellar McEllar and Duncan McEllar his son, and John McEllar inhabitants and tenants in Stukskardan in Glenshiro. Amounting to 2,245*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

199. Account of the "heirships and depredations" committed on the barony of Glenisla by Donald McDonald, brother to McDonald of Morlogan, and his associates who lived in the Brae of Lochaber; the Clan Dulich and McGregor in the Ranoch; the Clan Cameron in the Brae of Lochaber; and McDonald in the Brae of Lochaber, from July 1670 to June 1679. The losses amount to 6,191*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

200. List of the cows, horses, and other goods taken by the Clans Ewin and Cameron from the lands of Ardnamurchan pertaining to the Laird of Lochinell and his tenants there. [No date.]

201. Scroll of the goods taken by the McDonalds from the friends and tenants of Archibald Campbell of Inveraw. Amounting in all to 2,607*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* [No date.]

202. "Condescendence of the Earl of Argyll to those "that broke out the third time in arms." States that the tenants of Mull who settled in the year 1674, did afterwards unlawfully rise in arms, and for four years paid nothing to the Earl. Notwithstanding this he forgave them, on promise to deliver up their arms and pay a year's rent, and "by-run" public dues; but instead of paying a year's rent, and truly delivering up their arms, they reserved many of them, and joined in a new rebellion, and paid no rent at all. The Earl declares that he is content of new to forgive such as will pay rent and dues, and swear to discover what arms they concealed and what they have, and to deliver all they can, and never to purchase, receive or use any without warrant from him. Dated on back, 7 and 8 August 1679.

203. Minute anent the Earl of Argyll's commission. The commission and instructions given to the Earl of Argyll against the McClaines and others, to be continued until the 1 of March 1680. Dated at Edinburgh, 6 November 1679.

204. I. The case of McLeane of Ardgoeur.

Represents that though he had often himself told the Earl of Argyll that he had been singularly protected by the family of Argyll, even against the oppressions of some of his own clan, and that by said Earl's friendship he had his estate, which he holds "every furr," of the Earl; yet he could not deny that he was not so kindly to the Earl as might have been expected, and for several years he never paid feu duties. The Earl, however, freely and frankly forgave him, and not only entered him gratis, but discharged him of a considerable sum wherein he was cautioner for McLeane, notwithstanding, he not only associated himself with others in opposition to his Majesty's laws, but was specially active to incite others; and, when he had no castle of his own, took on him to garrison other men's houses for his wicked and rebellious ends, and was very instrumental in the violent possession of the Earl's property in Ardnamurchan and Snamart, in plundering all the McLeans that submitted to the Earl and resolved to live peaceably, and by his brother invaded some, and killed one soldier under his Majesty's pay, when there was no attack made on him.

Should he be pardoned by his Majesty it is prayed that he make compensation for his intromissions with the McLean's estates which pertained to the Earl of Argyll.

II. Case of McLean of Torloisk.

Represents that in the year 1674 Torloisk was peaceable himself, as several of the heritors of the McLeanes were, but in the year 1675 he joined with Brolois and the rest, and afterwards in every thing disorderly acted as any. Should his Majesty think to pardon him his opposition, and the Earl pass from his criminal process against him, it is prayed that he be liable to satisfy his intromissions with the McLean's estate, which belongs to the Earl, and to repair the damage sustained by any of his Majesty's good subjects.

205. Letter by Archibald, tenth Earl of Argyll, empowering the tutor of Torloisk to show to the Laird of Lochbry, Argour, the Laird of Kinlochalin, and several cadets of the name of McLean, who were on treaty to lay down arms, and submit to the Government, that the Earl grants them this day (22 October 1690) to advise about the manner of doing it; that he cannot and will not receive them under his protection unless they deliver up to him their arms upon oath, and surrender their forts, taking the oath of allegiance; in which case he promises, if need be, to go to London to procure their remission for life, and to grant them assistance in the matters therein referred to. Dated at the Camp, near Finckness Bay, the 22 October 1690.

IX.—PAPERS connected with the TRIAL of ARCHIBALD, NINTH EARL OF ARGYLL, 1681.

206. The Council's letter to his Majesty concerning their having committed the Earl of Argyll. Edinburgh, 8 November 1681.

207. The Earl of Argyll's explanation of the Test.

208. The Council's answer to the Earl of Argyll's first petition to have counsel allowed him. November 22*d.*, 1681.

X. MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS.

216. Letter in the name and under the signet of King James the Fifth, to the Sheriff of Aberdeen, narrating that whereas Janet [Keith] Lady Glamis, relict of John Lord Glamis, was retoured under his Majesty's briefes, of the third of the lands of Balhelvys, Cutes-toun, and Drumgowane, in the shierdrom of Aberdeen, pertaining to her by way of tere, through the decease of John Lord Glamis, and entered thereto by "her" "cavill to the sone," as she had to shew, nevertheless the tenants of these lands were owing rents to her, and would make her no payment thereof. Wherefore it was his Majesty's will that the sheriff should call both the said parties before him and take cognition in the matter, and to cause the tenants to make payment of their rents to Lady Glamis. Dated at Edinburgh, 27th July, and nineteenth year of his Majesty's reign. [1532.]

217. Act of Justiciary by Archibald Earl of Argyll, Lord Campbell and Lorne, &c., Lieutenant within the bounds of the shires of Perth, Forfar, Kincardine, Bute, and the Isles, stewartries, and bailieries within the same, Justice General of Scotland, and Great Master of Household of her Majesty. In consideration of the murders, thefts, and oppressions, &c. committed within these bounds, especially in Argyll, Lorne, Knabball, Cowell, and the Isles, the Earl, for prevention of the said crimes, and to promote peace and tranquillity of living in time to come, with advice and consent of the nobles and gentlemen within the bounds, ordains that those of them who held lands or other property, should apprehend all persons committing such crimes, and hold them in durance till they should be brought before the Justice General or his deputies: The criminals to be brought before the court within three days after the complaint. Should the lords and barons fail to do as above mentioned, they should themselves be punished as the committers of the crimes. If any evil disposed person should molest the lieges in any way, a cry was to be raised through the country, and any one failing to give assistance in the criminal's apprehension, should be accounted an abettor, and punished accordingly: and if any one in the pursuit or apprehension of a criminal should wound or kill the criminal, or any accomplice, he was to be held skaitless, and rewarded according to his merits. Dated at a Court of Justiciary held in the burgh of Bute, 8th July 1550. (Original.)

218. Letters of remission under the privy seal by Henry and Mary, King and Queen of Scots, in favour of Archibald Earl of Argyll, William Master of Eglintoun, James Campbell of Ardkinglass, Archibald Campbell of Clauchane, Donald Campbell of Auchwilling, Neil Campbell of Blair, John Campbell of Carrick, Robert Campbell of Douchlege, Dougal Campbell son of Archibald Campbell, Archibald Campbell Duncanson, John Sympill of [Foulwood], William Sympill in Barnhill, Constantius Walkinschaw, Alexander Douchell, John Campbell dean of Murray, Gregor MacGregor of Glenstra, and George Montgomery, burgess of Dumbarton, their families, tenants, and servitors. The letters grant remission for participation with James Duke of Châtelaunt, Earl of Arran, Lord Hamilton, &c. and his accomplices in his treasonable withholding from the Crown the Castles of Hamilton and Draffin in the month of September immediately preceding, and for all other crimes of lese-majesty, &c. committed by them at any time, violent and traitorous laying of hands on the royal persons being excepted. Dated at Edinburgh, 21st March 1565. [Original.]

219. Complaint by Lauchlan McClane of Dowart to his Majesty and Lords of the Privy Council, against Colin Earl of Argyll. The complaint sets forth that the Earl had "cruellye conspirit the slaughter" of the complainant, and especially in March 1577, had "perswadit" & "conduict with" the uncle of the latter, John Dow McClane, by promising him great rewards for performance of his "malicious and weilkit interpryes" upon him, and his sister's son, and for taking and spoiling of his (Lauchlan McClane's) place of Dowart. This conspiracy was frustrated by the confession of McClane's uncle, but the Earl was not by this turned from his purpose, and had stirred up Angus McConnell of Dunnyveg, to carry it into effect. Angus McConnell, assisted by some of Lauchlan's enemies from Ireland, and others, to the number of 1,200, besieged the House of Lochgormie with fire and sword. In this and other depredations he was assisted by the Earl with a land-force of two hundred, and also by sea with a galley and men, and had promise of further support. On another occasion Lauchlan McClane's servant, while on his way through Argyll to the Lowlands, was imprisoned by Campbell of Lochgoilhead at the special command of the Earl: and every hindrance was given to the kin and friends of Lauchlan McClane in trading with the Lowlands, all access through the country of Argyll being denied to them, and their persons being imprisoned till payment of ransom. The Earl had also, by two hundred of his servants, visited the island of Lovng, driven thence a large number of cows, horses, and sheep, and despoiled the women and children of their clothing. Various other complaints are made against the Earl. Petition is made that the Earl and his accomplices be summoned, under pain of rebellion, &c. to answer the foregoing. Indorsed on the complaint is an order of the Lords of Secret Council to charge the Earl of Argyll and Angus McConnell to appear and answer to the complaint. This decree is dated at the Castle of Stirling, 29th December 1578. [Contemporary copy.]

220. Obligation by Lauchlan McClane of Dowart to compare within a certain date before Colin Earl of Argyll, Chancellor and Justice of Scotland, to deliver pledges for his abiding trial at a future date. Failing these pledges the said Lauchlan binds himself to infest the Earl in a forty merk land, as a security for compearance to answer for damage done to the lands of Schayne O'Dochtrie of Glach, in Ireland, with power to the Earl to dispose of the pledges at his pleasure, or retain the lands. Dated at Inverary, 27th August 1579.

221. Obligation by Lauchlan M'Clane of Dowart setting forth the tenor of a former letter of obligation to deliver hostages to underly the sentence of Colin Earl of Argyll for invasion of the lands of Schayne O'Dochtrie of Glach in Ireland. He now further binds himself to pay and content the said Schayne O'Dochtrie and to produce a sufficient discharge of the same to the Earl, and for greater security against failure, binds himself to infest the Earl in certain lands of 200 merks yearly value. A clause of registration in the books of Council is inserted in this writ. Dated 27th May 1580.

222. Letter of confirmation and protection by King James the Sixth, ratifying and approving the testament and will of the deceased John Earl of Argyll, Chancellor and Justice General of Scotland, whereby the Earl committed the care and protection of his young son Archibald, with his house and friends to his Majesty. For the Earl's true obedience and singular tokens of his affection towards his Majesty, the latter takes under his firm patronage, maintenance, protection, defence and safeguard Archibald Earl of Argyll, son and heir to the deceased Earl and Dame Anna Keith his relict, and their children, counsellors and friends appointed for the government of the Earl's house, lands, affairs, honours and offices. Dated 2nd October 1584.

223. Discharge by John Lord Forbes and John Forbes of Tolleis for themselves and their tenants, servants, and dependants, in favour of Archibald Earl of Argyll and his kin, friends, and dependants, whereby the former party accept from the latter the sum of 1800 merks Scots, in complete payment of all sums of money, goods, gear, coins, cattle, "insycht" pleuishing, &c. taken away by the Earl and his friends at the conflict of Balrennes, and renounce all action of spuilzie competent to them. Edinburgh, 5 December 1595.

224. Act by the Lords of Privy Council by which promise is made to Archibald Earl of Argyll, that if he said Earl at the first day of June should crave any silver to be given to him for the furtherance of his Majesty's service against the Clan Gregor, and the council should see a necessity for it, and a likelihood that it would work some good effect, in that case they should cause money to be advanced to the Earl and thereafter, if they should find that it had produced good effect and been worthily expended in his Majesty's service, they should cause more to be advanced according to necessity and the probability of its doing good. Dated 19th April 1605. [Original.]

225. Another Act of the Privy Council on the same day authorises the Earl of Argyll to grant remission to so many of the Macgregors as will change their name, and find caution for future good behaviour.

226. Receipt by Mr. James Kirk to Adam Modervell, burgess of Renfrew, and his company, for furnishing the Earl of Argyll with the following articles "at the host" "passand upone the Clandonell in October 1607." The articles enumerated are:—

"To his Majesties schip, tū hoggat of wyne and ane
" twn of beir : price of the tūa hoggats wyne, i.ii.iiij.^s.

 "Item, mair, my lord beand in the bark and vther-ways, four lib," vjs. viij.
 Dated 13 October 1607.

Receipt by Adame Modervell for the above, the whole sum amounting to 209l. 16s. 8d.

227. Letter from King James the Sixth to his sheriffs in that part, narrating that Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy, Knight, Sir Dougal Campbell of Auchinbrek, Knight, Colonel Laurmonth of Innerrie, . . . Campbell of Duntrune, . . . Campbell of Parbrek, Mr. Donald Campbell of Parbrek, Lochow, Duncan McQuorcadail, of Santelans, Duncan and John Stewart of Appin, had been accused before the Earl of Argyll, Lord Campbell &c. as justiciar ("they for the manifest frustrating of justice, and fearing the event of their tryell upon sinistrus wniust and disdainful informations maid aganes the said Earl), had obtained summons of exemption in the mean time, and the action had sleipit and lye in over," to the Earl's hurt and prejudice until now. Wherefore the said sheriffs are to warn and charge the said Sir Duncan Campbell and others to compare before His Majesty and the Lords of Council at Edinburgh to answer as effeirs. Dated at Edinburgh 19th February 1614. [Original.]

228. "Conclusions anent the Clan Ean."

The Laids of Calder, Auchinbrek, Ardkinglas, and Lochinell, and other friends of the House of Argyll, having convened to consider the misdemeanour of the Clan Ean and their associates, and to resolve on a course for keeping his Lordship's country in peace and safety, it was concluded:

1. That the Laird of Auchinbrek, as commissioner of Argyll and Knapdale, should with all diligence appoint watches at all convenient places within the bounds near the sea-coast, that warning might be given to the country in case the rebels should repair thither to resist them: and those watches should give warning to all the bailies and officers of Argyll and Knapdale.

2. That the Laird of Lochinell, as Commissioner of Lorne, should similarly appoint watches within the bounds of Lorne.

3. That warning should immediately be given to all the inhabitants of Argyll, Lorne, and Cowall, to repair and make ready their galleys and boats, according to their obligation to attend on his Majesty's and his Lordship's service.

4. Mr. Donald Campbell undertook to defend and keep Castle Magrie in Ardmurchan till 1st June succeeding, and from that time his Lordship was to furnish men and provisions for its maintenance.

5. That John McDonnell VcKeane, elder, and Donald McEane his son, should immediately be taken out of the hands of Mr. Donald Campbell, and there kept in captivity in Inchconnell, till they were presented to underlie the law for the crimes to be laid to their charge, and that Lord Lorne should be advertised before they were put to trial.

6. That Alister Brukeche McEane and his son should have, at his Lordship's expense, one firloft of meal a week for their maintenance, till his Lordship's coming to Argyll, because he had been "harried" by the rest of the Clan Ean and durst not go to the Isles to live there. Dated at Inverary 13th April 1625, and signed by the lairds above mentioned. [Original.]

229. A document attached to the preceding, dated at Inverary, 4th May 1625, states that on that day Archibald Lord Lorne, Sir John Campbell of Calder, Knight, Sir Dougal Campbell of Auchinbrek, Knight, and others of his Lordship's friends, having convened and considered at length a Commission by the lords of the privy council to Lord Lorne and his friends above-mentioned against the Clan Ean and other rebels associated with them, and letters of publication raised thereupon for execution of the Commission, (1) that the letters of proclamation should with all haste be proclaimed at the market crosses of Inverary, Tarbert, and Inverness: (2) that three hundred gentlemen, and of the ablest men in the country, should be convened in arms for the said service and should punctually attend on the commissioners at Dunstaffnes: (3) that this host should take a month's "loun" with them for maintenance.

230. Conclusions anent the Clan Ean. Narrating that Archibald Lord Lorne, Sir John Campbell of Calder, Knight, Sir Dougal Campbell of Auchinbrek, Knight, Sir Colin Campbell of Ard Kinglass, Knight, and Alexander Campbell of Lochnell, Commissioners appointed by the King and Lords of the privy council for pursuing the rebellions "himers" of the Clan Ean with fire and sword, had met with their friends and resolved anent the execution of their Commission. It had been before resolved at Inverary, that one man with a month's leuin should be sent out of every eight merk land in Argyll, Cowall, and Lorne, for this service, and the whole host should have been there by the Wednesday previous to the present meeting which was the 11th inst. They all now with one mind determined that there should be paid out of every eight merk land in Argyll, Cowall, and Lorne, half a boll of meal, two stone of cheese and two merks money for sustaining the men chosen for the said service: but for the first month only. In case the service should not be ended ("which God forbid") in a month, there should be paid monthly during the time of the commission, out of every eight merk land in Argyll, Cowall, and Lorne, one firloft of meal, one stone of cheese, and one merk money, or two merks for each firloft of meal, and two merks for each stone of cheese. Dated at Dunstaffnes 15 May 1625, and signed by Lord Lorne and Sir J. Campbell of Calder. (Original.)

231. Contract between Archibald Lord Lorne and Captain David Alexander in Anstruther, anent a voyage to be made by the latter for the discovery of an island, which, Lord Lorne had been credibly informed, lay without the Hebrides Insule, had not yet been discovered or planted, and could be found out only by navigation. The captain binds himself to set out with the ship UNITIE of Anstruther, fully provided with sails and anchors, &c., and manned by an expert skipper, a master's mate, and ten mariners, against the 20th April immediately following, proceeding from Anstruther to the Western Isles; and thence into the main sea outside of the Hebrides. He was to "searche, seik and vse all vther and exact "diligence" for the discovery of the isle, and take perfect notice of its extent and commodities, to observe whether it was inhabited, and how far, and in what "airth" it lay from the Hebrides; and to report on the results of his voyage to the Lord Lorne before the first of August. Captain William Campbell was to sail, under Lorne's orders with the company of the Unitie, to guide her through the islands, and assist in the discovery of the unfound isle; and in the homeward voyage he was to be set ashore on Canna, or some convenient place in the isles from which he might with greatest speed reach Lord Lorne with a report of the expedition. Captain Alexander was to receive 800l. Scots before the departure of the Unitie, and 400l. on his return, for the expenses of the voyage; Lord Lorne reserving to himself what remuneration he should make to the captain for his "awne paynes," if the isle were discovered. Dated at Holyrood house, 14 March 1633, and signed by the two parties and three witnesses.

232. "Act of Approbation in favour of the Marquis "of Argyll" passed by the estates of Parliament after receiving from the said Marquis an account of the progress "of his late expedition against the Rebells." The Estates find that the said Marquis "hath carefullie, panefullie, wyselie and diligentlie behaved "himself in that charge, and thairfore that his carriage "therein deserveth publick thankis and approbation, "and that himself should be intreated and encouraged "to continue in the service, with that forwardnes of "affection whiche in all his actiounes he hath ever "constantly witnessed to religion and kingdome." Extracted from the Books of Parliament. Act dated at Edinburgh 19th February 1644.

233. Letters of safe conduct by King Charles the First, under the Great Seal, in favor of Archibald Lord Lorne, eldest son of Archibald Marquis of Argyll, whereby his Majesty, with the consent of the Estates of Parliament, recommends Lord Lorne to all kings, princes, commonwealths, and others having jurisdiction by sea or land, that Lord Lorne, his servants, and others of his company may have full liberty to pass and travel, and that he may be received by them with all respect according to the dignity of his birth. Dated 7th January 1647.

234. Contract between Margaret Douglas, Marchioness of Argyll, and John Campbell, clothier in Musselburgh, Edinburgh, 17th November 1652.

By this curious contract John Campbell binds himself to remove from Musselburgh to Inverary, along with his family and two workmen before the 1st

DUKE OF
ARGYLL.

February 1653; and with his two workmen to attend on his work weekly for twelve months. John was to be held accountable for what should be gotten for any work he might do during this time to others by her Ladyship's order. At the end of a year an agreement as to his wages was to be made with him. The Marchioness on her part was to pay the expenses of the removal of the tailor and his family, to furnish him with a house, before the expiry of the twelve months, and to supply all the materials necessary for his work. He was also to have a "caizaird," two cows, grass, and two acres of land; and during the twelve months he and his servants were to have their Sundays' meat furnished by the Marchioness. The weekly wages to be given at first were 10s. to John himself, 6s. to one of his men, and 5s. to the other, which they might have either in money or in victuals.

235. Bond by Archibald, Lord Lorne (son of the Marquis of Argyll) as principal, William Earl of Lothian, James Lord Rollo, and James Hackett of Pitfarren, and Major General James Holborne, his cautioners, setting forth that the Lord General Monck, commander in chief of the forces in Scotland, has given liberty to the said Lord Lorne to go "about his occasions" for the space of 12 months. Lord Lorne and his cautioners bind themselves "unto the keepers of the liberties of England" in the sum of ten thousand pounds lawful money of England, that Lord Lorne shall during these 12 months do nothing against the parliament or commonwealth; that he shall not go above 25 miles from the Bog of Gight, now known as Gordon Castle, except with a pass under General Monck's hand; that he shall return to Boggygeith on the expiration of time fixed by the pass; and that at the end of the 12 months he shall render himself again a prisoner to the said General under the penalty foresaid in case of failure. Dated at Dalkeith and Burntisland, 20th and 23rd June [1659].

Indorsed "20 June 1659. Lord Lorne for 12 months from 21 July 1659, 10,000."

236. Decree obtained before the Estates of Parliament at the instance of James, Marquis of Montrose, against Archibald, Marquis of Argyll, decreeing that the latter should pay to the Marquis of Montrose thirty two thousand six hundred and sixty four pounds, three shillings and four pence, Scots money, as the said Marquis of Argyll's intromission with the rents of the lands of Mugdoch, a part of the said Marquis of Montrose's estate, during the year therein mentioned, with five thousand pounds as the price the Marquis of Argyll received for the said lands of Mugdoch from the Marquis of Montrose, with the annual rent thereof from Whitsunday 1655. Dated 16th April 1661.

237. Remission under the Great Seal by King Charles the Second in favour of Archibald Campbell, son of the late Marquis of Argyll, narrating that, although parliament in the year 1662 had adjudged that he had incurred the penalty of the loss of life and goods for the crimes and offences specified in the indictment by the Lord Advocate, and had decreed that he should be beheaded, nevertheless his Majesty, from certain knowledge, his own motive, special favour, goodness, and grace, remitted the said decree and sentence in all its consequences. Dated at Whitehall, 4 June 1663.

238. Summons under the signet of King Charles the Second making mention that though the Earl of Argyll, the complainer, as Justice General and Sheriff of the Sheriffdom of Argyll, had supreme jurisdiction in all criminal causes, yet Sir William Allan McLain of Dowart, a private person, and having no power or jurisdiction in any cause importing life or death, illegally and unwarrantably apprehended McIlldonich McKilcharrich, dragged him to his house at Dowart, where he kept him prisoner all night, and on the morrow proceeded against the said McIlldonich and executed him; and also apprehended some other persons, most violently bound them with cords, and dragged them therewith, whereby two of them were tortured to death; also the said Sir William Allan apprehended one McPhail in the lands of Lorne, and took him to Dowart, refusing the Earl of Argyll's request that he should be sent to Inveraray to be put to legal trial. Warrant is given to charge the said Sir Allan McLain and other persons therein mentioned to compare before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council at Edinburgh, to answer to the foresaid complaint. Dated 5 November 1672.

239. Petition of Lachlan McLaine to the Earl of Argyll.—Narrates that the petitioner had been baillie of Tiree till 1675, when the cruelty and robberies of John McLean of Kenlochalin, and his accomplices, who had conceived a deadly hatred towards the petitioner for his faithful discharge of the trust committed to him by the Earl, had forced him to flee from the isle into the protection of his Lordship, and to leave his wife and children behind him at the "cruell mercie" of his enemies. His loss had amounted to 3090*l.* Scots, and since that time he had been indebted for his support to the Earl of Argyll. His wife and children had at last been compelled to leave Tiree in a very distressed condition; and the petitioner prays the Earl to grant him and his family relief in their present straits.

This petition bears no date, but in a letter from Lorn, 20 April 1676, the same Lachlan McLaine writes of his wife and children as "famishing in the ysle of Coille, "denuded of all earthly comfort," suffering from the "savage cruelty" of "thes good gentlemen of his "name," who had not only taken from them all they possessed, but actually restrained others from acting charitably towards them.

240. Instructions for the Earl of Argyll, relative to his commission of council, dated at Edinburgh, 12 April 1679, and signed by the Earl of Rothes, Chancellor, and other noblemen and gentlemen.

To obtain from the archbishops and bishops in the bounds of his commission, the names of, and to disarm, Papists or such as were suspected of Popery, and to call from the sheriffs, stewards, and others within those bounds for an account of their diligence upon the late proclamation. To appoint diets for the delivering of their arms, and of the arms of those in rebellion: If they obeyed, to give them a full indemnity: To concur with the Laids of McIntosh, Glenmorestown, and others who had been dispossessed, in seeing them restored to the possession of their respective lands. He is most earnestly desired and ordered to apprehend all priests, Jesuits and Papists, or Popish schoolmasters, with their vestments, Popish books, ornaments, and letters.

The Lords of Council further ordain and command the sheriffs, stewards, baillies, and other magistrates, to hold courts and call before them all Papists or persons suspected of Popery, and to use all efforts for discovering them, and also what arms they had abstracted, and to fine them in the value of the arms, besides causing their delivery.

241. Articles of capitulation and agreement between Archibald, Earl of Argyll, and Donald McLane, and all others with him within the castle of Breckachie, according to a list made out by the said Donald McLane. Dated at and near the castle of Breckachie, 2 July 1679.

The six articles contain an obligation by the McLeans to march out of the castle before sunset, delivering all the arms and ammunition therein to the Earl of Argyll or whatever persons were appointed by him; to become obedient subjects, abstain from the committal of robberies and other crimes, not to hinder the execution of the law, to raise no forces, or hold unlawful convocations, to deliver up all their guns, halberds, and other military weapons on the 8th July, and to purchase no others without the warrant of the Earl of Argyll. The Earl promises that they should be free from all criminal proceedings at the instance of the Privy Council or the Justiciary General of Argyll. [Original.]

242. Articles of capitulation and agreement between Archibald Earl of Argyll, and Lachlan McLean, son of the Laird of Ardgour. Dated [dorso 30th] July 1679, and signed by Argyll and McLean. McLean, and those in a list under his hand, engage to surrender the castle of Kenlochaline, with all arms and ammunition, and march forth within an hour, on condition of being discharged from all criminal process.

243. Agreement between the Earl of Argyll and the McLeans. Narrates that Lachlan McLeane of Brolose, John McLeane of Argour, John McLeane of Kenlochachene, Ewen McLeane, fiar of Ardgour, Hector McLeane, fiar of Kinlochachene, Alan McLeane of Inverscad, convinced of their error in their so long continued contempt of his Majesty's authority by their disobedience to the laws of the realm, and undutifulness to the Earl of Argyll, and desirous to return to loyalty and obedience, engage themselves to dismiss all the prisoners lately taken by any of them, by 12 o'clock on the 13th instant. They entreat that all acts of hostility be forborne against them till they should have access to the Earl of Argyll to understand from him upon what terms they might be admitted to lay down their arms, and be received under the protection of his Majesty and the Earl; and faithfully bind themselves, during the recess which was to be granted to them, not to trouble or invade the persons, goods, or houses of any of the Earl's friends, tenants, or followers, or any of his Majesty's subjects, or strangers travelling along the coast. Wherefore Lord Niell

DUKE
ARGYLL.

Campbell, Eune Cameron of Lochiel, and three others, having commission from the Earl of Argyll, granted cessation to the foresaid McLeanes and their friends, requiring all officers and soldiers, under the Earl's command, not to molest them, provided they behaved as was becoming, and did not enter the shire of Argyll in any place outside of Mull, without passes from the governor of Dowart or his depute. This arrangement was to continue to 1st September following, and as much longer as the Earl of Argyll should think fit. Dated at Tobermory, 11 August 1679. [Original.]

222. Copy letter. King Charles the second to the Privy Council of Scotland, desiring them for the removing of differences betwixt Archibald, Earl of Argyll, and the Laird of McLean, on which "the settlement of "the peace of the Highlands doth very much depend," to enquire into the agreement made between the Earl of Argyll and the Laird of McLean, then in the Earl of Murray's custody, to ascertain what the Earl of Argyll had promised to bestow on McLean, to which the king was resolved to make himself an additional purchase from the said Earl of so much more as would make in the whole an estate of five hundred pounds for McLean; and also to inquire into the value of Tirie, where the king had resolved to make the purchase for McLean's benefit, the excess of the purchase money to be secured to the said Earl out of the feu duties for his own lands. Dated at Windsor Castle, 10th July 1680.

225. Copy letter of the Scotch Privy Council to the Secretary (Earl of Murray), stating that it was not advisable for the King to purchase so much of Tirie as (with the 200*l.* sterling which the Earl was to settle on McLean) would make up an estate of 500*l.* sterling for him; and desiring the Secretary to lay before the King McLean's petition to be allowed to enjoy 300*l.* yearly out of the Earl of Argyll's feu duties for his maintenance and education: Edinburgh, 1 October 1681.

226. Copy letter superscribed by King Charles the Second, and subscribed by the Earl of Murray, to the Scotch privy council, authorising them to draw precepts on the Earl of Argyll for the yearly payment of 300*l.* to the Laird of McLean. Whitehall, 19 October 1681.

227. Petition by Archibald, Ninth Earl of Argyll, to the King, requesting his Majesty to "repeone and restore "him against the [unparalleled] sentence of for- "feiture pronounced against him and the whole effects "thereof" [1681].

The petition states that the Earl had been more than a twelvemonth under forfeiture, until this time, without addressing the King. "Perceiving that this my quiet "submission doth rather encourage than abate the evil "designs of some against me and my family, and under- "standing with much joy . . . that your Majesty "hath at several times been pleased to express your "juster thoughts and more gracious disposition towards "me: And seeing I dar confidently affirm befor all "men, and appeal to your Majesty as my best judge "and witness, that, rather against your Majesty, the "law, nor the church have I offended any thing at all; "but, on the contrary, to avoid all ground of mistake, "I have hitherto concealed many material defences, "and some which I confesse are only proper for your "Majesties own royal hearing." He prays that if the King "shall judge it needfull in anything to have a "more particular information, your Majesty may be "pleased to appoint the way and method how it may "be best done, and with that requisite safety and "security to my person which I know your Majesty "allows."

228. Paper, 4 pages folio, entitled "An account of "the several examinations of William Spence, prisoner "in the Marshalsea Prison, before the King and "Council, as also of his examination by Sir Alexander "Forrester." It says that on Tuesday, 26th June 1683, there was apprehended one Major Holmes, who (as was reported) on his examination before the King and Council, made mention of the name of one Mr. Butler, and where he lodged. Whereupon the place being searched on Wednesday, there was one William Spens seized in his bed. On Thursday, the 28th, and Friday, the 29th, of the said month he was examined before the King and Council. In reply to the questions put to him, the prisoner answered that his name was William Spens, and that he had no other name. He was born at Sandreford, in Fife, and leaving St. Andrews had come to London on or about the 4th October of the preceding year, and resided there till the November following. He then went to Holland and attended the College of Utrecht. He had returned thence about a week previous to his examination to buy books, some for use and some for sale, and to bestow a little money on anything that he could gain somewhat by when he returned. In answer to the statement of his interrogators, that Secretary Jenkins thought it strange that one of his quality should employ himself in such mean things, he averred that he was a person of no great quality, and born to no fortune. He had not preached since he came to London, as he was not qualified to do so. He had seen James Stewart (not Mr. James, he said) in Leyden, and President Staires in Leyden. He knew the Earl of Argyll by sight. On being asked if he had seen the Earl of Argyll in Holland, he refused to answer in the present circumstances of the Earl, for being no lawyer, he knew not what such questions might infer. (Here the Duke of York seemed to be displeased.) The Lord Keeper said it was best to answer his Majesty, and the King said it would be worse for Spens if he were sent into Scotland. After protestation of his innocence of any crime, and reiterated attempts of Lord Keeper Halifax to obtain an answer to the previous question, he denied having been sent over from Holland by the Earl of Argyll to "transact with" Major Holmes, but said he had been a servant to the Earl, and he had never seen anything of the Earl but what was honourable, loyal, and virtuous. On being shown a letter, he said he believed it to be the Earl's hand. He had no orders to pay him 128 guilders. He denied all knowledge of the 30,000*l.* in the letter. He knew nothing of the 10,000*l.* Part of the letters was read, stating that one W. B. was to be sent, but Spens declared that this was not his name, that nothing in the letter was binding on him, and that he could know nothing of such matters, which were above his station. Nor did he know anything of the printed papers of the Earl's case, nor was he sent over to disperse them. He knew nothing of the success of the Colchester. When interrogated if he had ever heard of her, he begged to be excused from answering such questions, and his Majesty, who had assisted personally at the examination, then, it is stated, seemed displeased, addressing the Council with the words, "Ask no more at him." The King refused to hear what Spens wished to say about the ship, and after maintaining his innocence further before Halifax and the Duke of York, he was sent back to custody. Irons were put on both his legs, and no friend, acquaintance, relation, or other prisoner was allowed to converse with him.

This document further continues, "Bot they say he is "of good courage from the assurance of his own inno- "cence and good sufficiency in his own tyme, to make "it appear to his Majesty, who he hopes will graciously "grant his liberty, when it pleases his Majesty in his "royal goodness to take his condition to further con- "sideration. He waits God's tyme and prayes he may be "enabled soe to doe without wearying, and that he may "be supported by God himself from the testimony of a "good conscience, and that he may take this as God's "call to him to remember his creator and redeemer, "whom, to his greif, he hath soe much forgot hitherto "in his youth and tyme of his liberty."

No papers were found with Spence, except a "little "pocket paper book, and a memorandum little book, a "note of some books, and a memorandum of things he "was to ask after, and a letter directed to one Gray."

Major Holmes was committed on the 2nd June for high treason for correspondence with Holland. It was said that a great many letters, with the keys, and all the ciphers, had been found in his possession, and that they cast great suspicion upon him.

229. Paper entitled "An account of what passed "betwixt Sir Andrew Foster and Mr. Spense upon "Thursday, the 16th of August." In the course of inter- "rogation, Sir Andrew Forrester (it is so written) stated that the King had proof that Spens conversed with Argyll, by letters under the hand of the Earl; and that though Spens's name was not expressed in them, yet he was there spoken of as "W. B." initials which were intended to designate Spens, according to the cipher used in communication between the Earl and Major Holmes. Spens declared that he had never had business with Holmes. He repeated his denial of acquaintance with the printed papers of Argyll's case, and their authors; and stated that he had lived innocently in Holland with the children and friends of faithful subjects of the King, among others a friend of the Lord Chancellor, S. G. M., and a son of Lord Finlater. Forrester's interrogations failed to elicit anything from Spens, who, appealing to Sir Andrew's humanity, declared himself to be "a young man striving to wrestle "through this world as quietlie as he could live, and "that hitherto he had had his lott prettie hard, &c." Sir Andrew said that for his own part he believed Spens knew nothing of Argyll's design, except what he might guess; but that his refusal to answer smaller things the King was certain Spens knew of caused him to be suspected in other things.

[The writer of these two papers evidently obtained his materials from reports. A statement at the close of the second paper intimates this.]

250. Royal protection given under the Great Seal by King Charles II. to Archibald, lately Lord Lorne, from all captions, incarcerations and other executions of the law against his person for a civil claim or debt for the space of two years from the date of said protection, and inhibiting all judges, magistrates, and officers of justice from apprehending or molesting him for said civil claim or debt during the space foresaid. Dated at the Palace of Whitehall, 19 February 1684, in the 36th year of his reign. Written to the seal, registered and sealed, 26 February 1684.

251. "List of crymes of which informatione is to be taken" [circa, 1685]. (1.) All persons accessory to the rebellion at Bothwell Bridge, or who maintained intercommuned persons or vagrant preachers. (2.) Deserters of the ordinary ministers, or hearers of conventicles, and particularly of the recent preachings at Lochhead and other places in Argyll and Tarbett, or who had caused baptisms and marriages to be celebrated by "rebellious preachers." (3.) Heritors who were absent from the King's host. (4.) All persons in any way accessory to the rebellion of the Earl of Argyll. (5.) All robbers, &c. in the shires of Argyll and Tarbett. (6.) Murderers, committers of mutilation and dismemberment. (7.) All incestuous persons and adulterers.

252. Paper [circa, 1685], indorsed thus: "My grandfather Archibald Earl of Argyll's advice to Archibald Duke of Argyll, his son, when going to be executed. Thes copied by Jean Countess of Lothian, his sister, my grandmother."

This paper is holograph of Archibald, Ninth Earl of Argyll, extends to 3 pages folio; one page of advice, and two pages of passages of Scripture, to which he specially directs his son. The instructions commence thus: "Deare son,—Instead of a legacie all I can now leave you is a short and serious advice." He then advises him to search the Scriptures; to read good books, especially such as will help him to understand and apply Scripture, and let him know the lives of good men; to keep good company and love religion, and the fear of God, wherever he may see it, to love the brethren; to have prayers in his family; and to pray at least twice a day in private.

253. Covenant with God by Jean Campbell, signed 10 times between 1681 (when she was 20 years of age) and 1701. The annual renewals of the covenant are generally made at Ferniehirst. The one for 1699 bears to be subscribed "with all my heart."

254. Instructions by William, Lord Viscount of Strathallan, commander of all his Majesty's forces in Scotland, and his Majesty's Commissioner and justiciar for the shires of Argyll and Tarbet, to the justices of peace in these shires: Inverary, 10 November 1686.—The object of these instructions is the examination of commoners guilty of participation in the rebellion of the Earl of Argyll. Any who refused to answer the interrogations contained in the instructions, were to be threatened with exception from the general indemnity, and their names were to be preserved.

255. Instructions by the Earl of Argyll to John Campbell, baillie of Jura, and governor of Arosse, to march with the party under his command to Arosse, and with all speed to fortify the old castle; to seize upon the persons and goods of all in Mull, Coll, and Tirie who continued in rebellion, and to take pains to discover if any persons who had the Earl's protection were arms, and to treat such as if they had not that protection.

256. Instructions from the Earl of Argyll to Colin Campbell, of Bragleine, to receive the house of Lochbuy, and to garrison it with 24 men under his own command. Dated 1690.

257. Order by John Earl of Tweeddale, Chancellor of Scotland, to allow Sir John McClean of that ilk, who was lately in rebellion, and his two servants, with their horses and arms, on consideration that Sir John had surrendered the houses which he and his accomplices had held against the Crown, to travel from the place of his residence to any place in England or Flanders, that he might throw himself upon his Majesty's mercy. Edinburgh, 26 April 1692.

258. Resolutions made by numerous gentlemen of the shire of Argyll to act in defence of the King against the Pretender, an invasion by whom had been intimated as designed. Inverary, 11 August 1715. (Facsimile.)

259. Also a letter from John Duke of Argyll thanking those gentlemen who had entered into the Resolution. Dated London, August 27, 1715. (Facsimile.)

WILLIAM FRASER.

Edinburgh, 32, Castle Street,

REPORT ON THE MUNIMENTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF MORAY.

The papers of the Earl of Moray are preserved in the Charter Room at Donybristle, and are of unusual extent and importance. They were stored in a number of boxes when the collection underwent a partial arrangement by the late John Earl of Moray, but they have not been put up in strict sequence, nor is there any inventory of them.

By the kind permission of the present Earl of Moray, I was allowed to select and carry away for examination from the vast masses of papers in the Charter Room, whatever seemed likely to suit the objects of the Commission, and I have thus been enabled to copy and describe all those which were of historical importance.

For the sake of convenience, I have arranged the collection in divisions, and now subjoin a general description of each.

Under the first head are a few documents connected with Sir James Stewart, of Beath, Commandator of St. Colmes Inch, and his son Sir James Stewart of Doune (afterwards Lord Doune), also Commandator,—those connected with the father's investiture in the Abbey,—a diary of his son's journey to Paris in 1561,—ecclesiastical papers addressed to the latter in 1572 by the Archbishop of St. Andrew's and Superintendent of Fife.—Letters from the Regent Mar and the Duke of Lennox, &c.

In the second division is a series of letters from Mary Queen of Scotland, and documents relating to her.

Of these, six are letters from the Queen to the Commandator of St. Colmes Inch, afterwards Lord Doune, and two are from her Majesty to the Countess of Murray. Of the other papers, one is a letter from Queen Elizabeth to the Regent Mar, on the "pernicious practices" of the Scotch Queen, another a letter from James VI. to the Earl of Murray on the death of Queen Mary, and there is a memorial of proceedings to be adopted in France for the execution of her will, a letter to the Queen from John Acheson on the subject of the coinage, where he describes an interview with the Duke of Chatellerault at Hamilton, &c.

In the third section are two papers connected with the Earl of Bothwell.

The first is a letter from the Earl to Cockburn of Langton, written at Spynie, after his retreat from Dunbar, and just before he sailed for Orkney;—and the second is an account of the receipts from the lands of the forfeited Earldom of Bothwell, and payments therefrom.

The fourth is occupied with letters and documents connected with the Earl of Murray, Regent of Scotland.

Among these is the original Remission, (with the subscription of Darnley as King of Scotland) to the Earl of Murray and others, in 1566; as also the original of the Articles to be fulfilled by the King to Murray and the other banished lords.—Letter to the Regent from the Queen of England.—Bond by the Regent to Sir James Balfour.—Lists of jewels and silver work supplied to the Regent, and also of the silver work pledged by him with the Earl of Morton, and with various lenders of money.—A letter from the Regent to John Wynnarm describing the Queen's favour towards him.—Contract for the erection of the Regent's tomb.—Inventory of his goods in Edinburgh.—Inventory of the furniture, hangings, and effects which belonged to him when he was Earl of Mar, and the contract of marriage between him and Lady Anna Keith in 1561.

In the fifth division are papers of the Countess of Murray, widow of the Regent.

Among these are many letters both to and from the Countess. Several are from the Lady Margaret Erskine, mother of the Regent, dated from Lochleven, the seat of her husband Sir Robert Douglas. Others are from Sir William Kirkcaldy, of Grange, while Governor of Edinburgh Castle,—Randolph, the English Ambassador (in one of whose letters is conveyed Queen Elizabeth's message of sympathy on the Regent's murder, and an expression of the love which she had borne to him.) Letters from Mr. John Wood, Secretary to the Regent, from the Earl of Leicester, the Earl of Huntley, the Regent Lennox, the Regent Morton, King James VI., and the Countess of Sutherland, formerly wife of Bothwell.

Among the relative documents are various memoranda of instructions and demands to be proposed on the part of the Countess by her agents at the English Court and elsewhere, a discharge to her by the Regent Morton for certain Crown jewels, also an account of her household expenses at Darnaway and elsewhere, 1575.

The sixth division is called "The Balmerino Papers."

These consist of several bundles of documents which may, for the most part, be considered papers on affairs of state in the reign of James VI.

Lord Balmerino was Secretary for Scotland in the years immediately previous to the King's accession to the English throne, and the letters addressed to his Majesty or to the Secretary on the business of the kingdom were preserved among the private papers of the latter. An intermarriage between the families of Moray and Balmerino occurred in the following century, and out of the connection thus formed, it is probable that the Secretary's papers came to be placed at Donybristle.

Of the correspondence in this division, one prominent branch is a series of letters from the Master of Gray to the King, the Duke of Lennox, and Lord Balmerino. These are dated at a time when James was full of nervous fears of every incident which could be supposed to affect his claims on England. The earlier plots and intrigues of the Master of Gray with reference to Queen Mary, are well known; but the letters in this collection throw light on a later and less known period of his diplomacy. He was still full of plans and political combinations which he proposed to manage for the King's advantage; but he indulges in complaints of the want of the royal confidence, while at the same time he obviously retained means of access to many people of power in France and other foreign countries.

In this lot is a copy of a letter from James to the Pope, dated in 1599, in which the King asks his Holiness to promote the Bishop of Vaison, a kinsman of the Secretary, to the dignity of cardinal. This letter, as it turned out, was surreptitiously included by the Secretary among other State papers requiring the King's signature, and having been discovered by the Master of Gray, then acting as a spy at Rome for Queen Elizabeth, it led to a repudiation of the document by the King, and a denial that it had ever been written. A few years later the matter was revived by Cardinal Bellarmine, who proved the existence of the letter, and at last the Secretary confessed the false part which he had acted.

This was a subject on which the King, from various considerations, was specially timid, lest he should be mixed up with the Roman Catholic party.

It appears also curiously, from one of the Master of Gray's letters to the King, that that restless intriguer, after having scented out the King's supposed intercourse with Rome, had himself roused the royal fears, inasmuch as he was suspected of having made offer to the Pope of the Prince's education.

In a second bundle are two characteristic letters from the Queen of England to the King; also letters to him from the Queen of Denmark, the Duke d'Elbeuf, the Count de Choisy, the Count of Nassau, and others.

Another series consists of letters from David Foulis, the Scotch Minister at the English Court—and these contain much minute political information,—accounts of interviews with Queen Elizabeth and her ministers,—and generally they throw light on the fluctuations of events and speculations bearing on the great point of the King's accession to the English throne.

Along with these are several letters to the King and his Secretary from Beaton, the deprived Archbishop of Glasgow, who acted as Ambassador for James at the Court of France; and several from Deniston, the Scottish Conservator in the Low Countries.

A third bundle consists chiefly of letters from foreign princes, which do not contain matter of special interest.

The writers are Christian, King of Denmark, 1597-8. Ulric Duke of Holstein, 1601, Monsieur de Villeroy, 1599, The Duke de Bourbon, 1598, the Duke of Mecklenburg, 1598, the Duke d'Elbeuf, 1598, the Duke de Mayenne, 1598, Cardinal Albertus (at Brussels), 1598. There are many letters also in the same bundle from Laurence Whitaker, dated from Drury Lane to the Earl of Somerset at Chiswick, 1624.

From the importance of the documents connected with Queen Mary, the Regent Murray, and his widow,

I have given full transcripts of most of them, as well as of those in the first part of the Balmerino Collection. If it had not been for swelling out this report too far, I should have been disposed to have included copies of other documents in this series, but if the Commissioners should wish hereafter for further transcripts, I feel sure that their noble owner will afford every facility for their being made.

Under the head of "Miscellaneous Documents," I have grouped several old parchments and records which were found in the course of my search.

Among these is a charter by Sir William More, of Abercorn to the Monastery of St. Colm, about A.D. 1373. An instrument on a claim by Walter, Abbot of Inchcolm [Walter Bowmaker, the Continuator of Fordun], made to the Chamberlain of Scotland, in 1434. License by King James V. to the Earl of Murray to treat with the King's rebels, 1531. Dispensation by Pope Clement VII. to James V. to enable his four bastard sons to enjoy his ecclesiastical benefices, 1534. Testament of the Earl of Murray, 1540. Letter of Mary of Guise, the Queen Regent, to the Lady Inverneath [1547], and a Book of Ordinance for the officers and attendants of Queen Anne, the Prince Henry, and the Lady Elizabeth, signed by the King and Queen in 1601.

In the Library at Donibristle is a manuscript of Fordun's History, (or rather the Scoti Chronicon of Bower, his Continuator,) written in double columns on parchment (Skene's Fordun, Pref. pp. xv. xvi.). It was not accessible at the time of my visit, but it appears, from a colophon on the M.S., to have been a copy made for one of the chaplains of St. Giles, who after his death bequeathed it to the Canons of St. Colm's Inch. From the Library of the Monastery the manuscript would naturally come into the possession of the Commandator, and descend with his other property.

The Chartulary of St. Colm was formerly in the Library of Donibristle, but has for some time been mislaid. A transcript of the volume is among the Macfarlane manuscripts in the Advocate's Library,—and a modern copy of part of it is among the miscellaneous papers in the Charter Room, but it has been made by an unskilful hand.

Besides the historical documents above specified, there is a large collection of charters and miscellaneous writs connected with the transmission of the vast estates belonging to the Earl of Murray, dating from the end of the sixteenth century. These relate to the lands formerly belonging to the Abbey of Inchcolm, which became vested in Sir James Stewart of Beath, as Commandator of that monastery, to the lands of Doun and many lands in Menteath, of which he received grants from the Crown, and to the lands of the earldom of Murray to which Sir James Stewart, the son, succeeded, on his marriage with Lady Elizabeth, the elder of the two surviving daughters of the Regent Earl of Murray.

These papers are for the most part of the ordinary business kind, and do not demand special notice.

JOHN STUART.

I.—LETTERS AND PAPERS OF SIR JAMES STEWART OF BEATH, Commandator of St. Colms Inch, and of his son SIR JAMES STEWART OF DOUNE, also Commandator.

The following documents addressed to the Lord Doune, Commendator of St. Colme, by the Archbishop of St. Andrews, illustrate the transitional character of ecclesiastical government in Scotland at the time.

The prelate in question was John Douglas, Principal of St. Mary's College, who was promoted to the office of Archbishop by the Earl of Morton. The Earl had obtained a gift of the temporalities, and he agreed to put Douglas into the see on condition of his surrendering to the Earl a large part of its revenues. Douglas was accordingly elected under a congé d'élire from the Regent Mar to the new Chapter, which consisted of the ministers of the parishes formerly belonging to the Augustinian Priory of St. Andrews,—but although he was thus ostensibly Archbishop, he thought it prudent still to style himself "Superintendent of Fyf."

Assignment by John, Archbishop of St. Andrew's and Superintendent of Fife, of stipend to the minister of Inverkeithing and Dalgatie, 2 April 1572.

Johne be the mercy of God Archbisshop of Sanct Androwes and Superintendent of Fyf, being requirit maist earnestlie in the synodall convention halden at Sanct Andros the xv day of Apryll 1572, be the hail ministerie, the barones, gentelmen, and elders of kirkis within Fyf, being present for the tym, to mak and gif furth assignationes to the said ministeris, exhorters, and reders, in victualis and silver, particularelie and in consideration the said request is conform to the act of the generall assemblee, and alswa ratifeit be the hail assemblee at Perth the viii day of August last was, therefore assigns to John Burn, minister of Inverkeithing and Dalgatie, (who has by the year 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*), for easy payment of a part thereof, 30*l.* to be paid to him by the Lord of St. Colm, in part of his stipend of his thirde, and charges the said Abbot of St. Colme and his chamberlains to make payment to the said John, of the said sum of the readiest of his thirde, of the year 1572. Dated at St. Andrew's, 2 April 1572, and subscribed "Johne Archbisshop of Sanctandros."

LETTER FROM JOHN, ARCHBISHOP OF ST. ANDREW'S, to the COMMENDATOR OF ST. COLME, 11 June 1573. It is written by himself at St. Andrew's, and announces an assignation in favour of John Burn, minister of Inverkeithing and Dalgatie of 30*l.* out of the thirds of his Lordship's benefice of St. Colme, requesting the Commendator that for "the setting furth of the glorye of God and propagating of the trew religion," he would see that payment of the said sum was duly made.

"The few product of the Abbacie of St. Colmes Inch."

This document (on which there is indorsed the date 1604, but apparently in a later hand than that of the paper itself), contains a list of the Abbey lands, as feued out, with the respective feu-duties and services stipulated for in the feu charters.

The names of the principal vassals are John Melvill of Raith, Andrew Lord Stewart of Ochiltree, James Stewart, son and heir apparent to James Stewart of Doune, Henrie Stewart, James Stewart, brother to Andrew Lord Ochiltree.

The payments and services consisted of bear, oats, capons, poultry, days work, pittance to the convent, carrying of mill stones, areage and carriage, coals, and specified sums of money.

EARL MORTON.

EARL OF MORAY.

Missive from John Earl of Mar, Regent of Scotland, to Sir James Stewart of Doun (afterwards Lord Doun), Commendator of St. Colms Inch, from Leith, 1 April 1572.

Having by a previous letter commanded Sir James Stewart, Captain of the Castle of Doun in Menteith, to keep Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme, Knight, in a close house within the said Castle, without having intelligence or receiving of letters in or out, he is now authorized to relax his guard and to permit Sir Walter to have the same freedom which he had previous to the issuing of the said order for his restraint.

Letter from James Earl of Morton, Regent of Scotland, to the Commendator of St. Colms Inch, dated 26 September 1573.

The Regent requests the Commendator to receive into his house David Elliot of Braidlie, as one of the pledges taken for the peace of the Borders, and to keep him until he is relieved by the Regent. He is not to be careful "for his strait and sure keeping," provided he remains in the Commendator's company, seeing that the prisoner has found security that he "shall keep his ward and not "eschaip nor eschew quhill he be releivit."

Letter from the Earl of Atholl to the Earl of Moray, dated Dunkeld, 7 August 1586.

Thanks his Lordship for his "hundis," which he has received and trusts that he will come to visit him at Dunkeld, for 10 or 12 days.

Letter from Esme Duke of Lennox to James Lord Doun, dated Paris, 4 June 1583.

Letter to the Commendator of St. Colm's Inch from James Earl of Morton, Regent, dated Holyrood House, 17 May 1574.

The Regent intimates that Hob Billie, pledge for the gaig of Gorraberry, is now relieved by the entry in his place of the bearer "namyt Arche Elliot, callit Arche "Kene, whom he is required to receive and keep in sure "firmance, because no surety has been found that he "shall keep his word."

Another letter from the Regent to the Commendator, dated Dalkeith, 4 June 1576, sets forth that "It was "thocht gude and concludit in the conventionioun of the "nobilitie that the lordis, baronis and gentlemen of the "incunturie suld haue in their keeping the brokin men "and pleigeis as they cum in, and impute the pane "of twa thousand pundis to the keparis that they lett thame not libertie, Quhairfore we desire and in our "Soverane lordis name chargeis you to ressaue the "berar namyt Eumond Arnastrang of Quhesligillis, and "keip and detene him, on nawayse letting him to libertie "out of your house and company, quhill y ressaue our "expres warrant for his releif."

Monsieur de Saint Cosme, Si j'auoy mauuaise opinion de vostre constance et fidelite ennemy moy, je le vous eusse dict aussi librement comme je vous ay tousiours parlé. Et par ainsi assurez vous que ce qui vous a est rapporté que j'auoy autrement parle de vous qui vous a est rapporté que j'auoy autrement parle de vous que de l'un de mes bons et loyaux subiects et seruiteurs ont faulement controuuë ceste calomnie et imposture avec beaucoup d'autres dont ils se seruent a l'encontre de moy. Mais je vous scay bon gré de m'en auoir aduertie comme je vous pry continue de faire à toutes occasions et occurrences. Et afin que plus hardiment vous me puissiez escrire, je vous enuoye le chiffre cy enclos pour en user en ce que verrez d'importance. Quant au bruit que mescriuez que lon fait courir en Escosse de ce qui se passe en troubles de France et de Flandres; ce sont toutes mensonges, car le prince d'orengé a esté chassé des pays bas. Et d'autre part le Roy monsieur mon beaufreire a en tel aduantage jusques a ceste heure sur ses rebelles, que Dieu mercy, je nay encore entendu nouvelle sinon bonnes de ce costé là. Ne faisant double sil y en auoit d'autres quelles ne me seroient ceelles. A tant Monsieur de Saint Cosme je pry Dieu vous auoir en sa saincte garde Escrit à Bowton le xvij^{me} jour de Decembre 1568.

En escriuant la prescrite jay receu vne despesche de France par laquelle j'ay de nouuelles certaines que la xviii^{me} de laute moys le Roy a gagne vne bataille contre ses rebelles au pres de Poictiers, Ou il est demeure toute leur infanterie xxxiii enseignes en ont este apportees aux sieur dont les xvi ont este mys en leglise nostre dame de Paris, et viii en celle de Chartres. La chaullerie des rebelles voyans que les gens de pied estoient defautz abandonna le champ. Apres laquelle monsieur frere du Roy poursuuant sa victoire est allé avec quatre mil cheuaux et troys mil harquebusiers qui ont este montez des cheuaux mesmes des ennemis et de ceux de l'artillerie tant du Roy que des rebelles quilz ont abandonné. D'autre coste mon oncle monsieur d'aulmale deffait la sy de devant xvi^{me} de Novembre sur les frontieres de Lorraine le secours que ceux de Geneue enuoyoyent au prince d'orengé, de dix enseignes quilz estoient de gens de pied il en a enuoyé les sept au Roy,

Mary Queen of Scots to the Countess of Murray,
28 March 1570.

My Lady Murraye. Albeit your lait husband had savinnaturally and vnthankfully offendit ws in many sortes who had promoted him to all honour, and done him so many good deidis vnderseit at our handes, and newer merit yea of a stranger lat be a brother (as he had the honor to be so named) to haue bene reuwardit with sic ingratitude as he did to ws, quihilk God of his iudgement hes shawin on him for his seuerenes (in deid aganis our will). We desyrt not his bloodshed for we had rather he should haue lyved to recognosce his dewitie, and cumit in repentance for his great and heavy offences maid to ws nor to haue bene so miserably cutt awaye, if we might haue stopit the same. Our nature will not permit ws to forget what he was to ws in blood, but man be sory for his death. Sence the quihilk we ar informit ye haue taue in possession certane of urre jowellis sic as urre H of dyamant and ruby with a nombre of other dyamantis rubiz, perles, and goldwark, wherof we haue the memoir to laye to your charge, Quihilkis jowalles, incontinent eftir the sycht heirof ye sall deliuer to urre right trusty cousigns and consualouris the earle of Huntley urre Lieutenant, and my Lord Setoun, quha will in sa doing give yow discharge of the same in urre nayne, and will move ws to haue the more pitie of yow and your children. Wthirwyse we assure yow ye sall nether brwik landis nor goodis in that realme, but to haue urre indignation as deservis. Thus wishing yow to wey with good conscience, we commit yow to God. from Tutbery

The Queen of England to the Regent Mar, as to the "pernitious practises" of the Scotch Queen, 2 October 1571.

Rycht traistie and rycht veilbeluift cusing we greit yow vele, quhairby your letter sent to us by Villiame Stewart, and presentit to ws by hym and James Cunnyngghame, yow haif signefit to ws the reasonabill caus of your forbering to vreit ane sonner after the deith of our cusing the erle of Levenox, lait regent ther, (quhois saul God haith in his keiping) ve haif verray vele allowit of the excuse for the delay, and seing it pleisit God to call our said cusing to his mercy, we ar ryocht vele that choise haith bene so guid for the veil of that realme, and preseruatioun of our deir cusing the king, as to name yow to the place of regent, for that suirle we think nane culd haif bene nemmit in that realme moir plausabill to that natioun, nor mair metar for that charge, althoutht we knaw vele your self of guid visdome vald haif forborne it. And to suche thingis as by James Cunnyngghame haif bene mowit to ws, and by our marschall of Beryk Sir Villiame Durrie, also reportit to ws frome yow we haif haid considera-tioun thairfor. And althoutht, afor this tym we haid ane ernst desyr that the king ther suld be preseruit howsoever mycht haif bene accordit by tratywe for the quene his mother, that now we haif verray litill, by Goddis grace discoverit suche pernitious practises of the said quene aganis ws our person and stait, as we as necessarlie occasioned and so fullie by aduise of our counsele reasoned, nocht to deale any farder by tratywe or vther vays in hir favour, to haif any rewl by our means to the preiudice of hir sones estait, assuring our selfis that Almychtie God, by quhois onlie guidnes, as it var miraculustie, we haif discoverit these lait dangeris, will contenton his favour towards ws, and stay hir forthir proceydingis, that tendit to the subversiou of. Cristiane religioun professit in our realme, and to the setting on fyr of both the realmes wyth weyris, by bringin in into the samyne of power of strangers, and therfor quhowseuer we war befor this tyme disposit to haif traitit, being as we now sie therin abusit by hir and hir ministeris, yow may be assurit that therin we mene noth to gif yow caus to doubt of our intencion to the trouble of that estait, and for forder dealing in your favouris helpe yow to ane vniuersall quyetnes by ane generall obedience to the King, according as we vnderstand that all the estatits of that realme (ane few onlie exceptit) haif now in the last parliament accordit. We men that yow salbe maid preyit therfor presentlie frome our said marschall of Beryk, and als one after as may be by our cusing my lord of Hunsdane, our governor ther, quho is appoyntit presentlie to repaire to ther, and sall haif power to trait and conclud wyth yow and the rest of the nobilitie, of suche thingis as may to the common repois of both the realmes, and quhair this berar Mr. Cunnyngame haith abyding long heir sence the resait of your letter, we requyr yow noch not to imput the same vnto hym, bot to the occasionis we haif haid to be occupit in vther matteris wyth our counsell, as we culd nocht sonar expedit hym wyth our letter. Your loving freind.

ELIZABETH R.

Althoutht we doubt nocht bot yow vill haif guid regards to all such causis as may concerne the estait of our deir cusing the Ladie Margaret, lait vyf to the erl of Levenox, alsveill for her awne particuler entereasse as for the benefeit and advancement of the hous of Levenox, yeit we can noch bot both for the affection we beir to hir, and our guid vill to the hous of Levenox, and continuance of the same, moist hartlie requyres yow to schau to all suche as sall sollicit hir caus ther both for hir self and for the vele of the hous, suche favourabill hering of thame, and suche expeditioun in the effectuall ansering therof to ther contentatioun, as we may therby persaiif that our recommendatioun haith in sum part plesorit hir. And forthir moir, we think it verray reasonable to keipe yow in guid remembrance that all suche as haif alreadie bene parteis and accessoris to the deith of our said cusing of Levenox the lait regent, or that heirafter salbe fund any vays participant therof, being noch alredy executit, may be wyth all seueritie pwnishit, to the terrour and exempill of any such mischeif to be devysit and attemptit, and in this behaulf we trust the rest of the nobilitie joynt wyth yow in the obedience of the King, vill joyne wyth yow as in honour and justice that such to do. Gevin vnder our signet at our maner of Richmonthe, the 2 of October.

(Dorso.) 2 Octobris 1571. The Quen of Englandis letter to my Lord regent.

The Countess of Sutherland, (formerly Countess of Bothwell) to the Countess of Argyll, 5 May 1576.

EARL OF

Madame, Efter my maist hartlie commendatiounis, pleis your ladeschip my lord and husband hes derect this berar vnto your ladeschip wyth ane precept of clare constat to be sellit and subswryit be your ladeschip, and my lord your husband for his entres, off the landis of Kyntessoch, conform to his retour and seruire maid befor the Schereffis of Elgin and Fores, as the said berar will schaw your ladeschip at mair lynth. And sen my lordis desyr is reasonable, douts nocht bot your ladeschip will sell and subswrywe the said precept of clare constat wyth plessour and gude will, and siklyke will caus my lord your husband do the samyn, the rather of my requiste, and gif we may acqwite my lord and your ladeschip wyth sik steid, plessour or kyndnes, ye salbe assurit thairof at our power. Referring the rest to your ladeschippis gude mynd and anser wyth the berar, and sua committit your ladeschip in the protection of the eternal God. From Elgin the v. of Maj 1576.

I haue bene the mair hammelle to put your ladeschip to this charge that I haue evir found your ladeschippis gud favor in all my turnis; lukiug it sal be na var nor of befor, seing my lord my husband and I is willing to deserue the same.

Your ladeschippis cusinges at vitir pouer,

JEANE SUTHERLAND.

To my verray gude ladie, my ladie Comptas off Argill and Murray.

King James VI. To James Earl of Murray. On the death of Queen Mary. 15 March 1586.

Ryocht traist cusing we greit yow weil. The strait quhairin thair recent newis of the quene oure moderis maist dolorous and cruell death hes cassin ws, baith in honour and estate, being the gristat that befell ws euir sen our natiuities, and quhairin we haue gristat need of the assistance and aduise of our nobilitie and estatits, to tak sic resolutioun as may be to the preseruatioun of Godis tren religioun, oure honnour and the quietnes of oure estate, we haue thairfor thocht meit to assemble our estatits at Edinburgh vpon the xx day of Aprile nixt, and to the same effect will desire yow maist affectuallie, that in any wayes ye fail not to be present wyth ws the said day and place, as ye will testifie vnto ws your willing mynd to do ws seruire, and will deserue thairfor our specialle thankis. Thus we committ yow to God frome Dalkeith the xv day of Marche 1586.

We luke that ye will cum accompaniit with xxxiiii personis allanerlie, according to our proclamation.

(Addressed.) To our richt traist cusing the erle of Murray.

Memorial of the proceedings to be adopted in France for the execution of the Queen of Scotland's will.

A paper, indorsed "Anent the Frenche affaires Andro Melu, 20 Januarii 1596."

It commences as follows: "It vill pleis your L. quhen your leasur may serve, to call to your L. remembrans the purpos quhairof I wes in hand with your L., and to reid this present memore, quhairin thair is sum particulars not to be neglected, specially seing the sam consens baith his Majesteis honor and profit, and that delay thairfor may prejuge baith the ane and the uther."

The memoir sets forth under distinct heads that the Queen (the King's) mother's testament can only be carried out by his Majesty and in his name, and that the steps therein specified were necessary for its accomplishment.

First the King would require to send to France some person, with power to employ procurators and counsel, who might be consulted and advised with on all necessary points, and who should be authorised to collect debts due to the Queen, to sell her house of Fountainbleau "and to tak order with her lands of Cressigny, quhilik landis it aperis hir Majesty leaves to a sister of this Duk of Guyse in cais she hapin to mary in theis partes, uther ways not."

"Their is also a gret soum adebit to the King of France, as sommes borrowit be King Hary 2d of France, our Quenis gudfather, and also a gud soum adebit be his son (King Charles) and King Hary, anent the ex-cammo maid betuix the duchy of Tourain and the Lands of Vermandois, quherein the Queen gat mekill the worst."

"Their is also borrowit siluer be the King of France, and gret sommes adebit of the Quenis pensioun, quhairof this King mon be debitor."

"Now the way to proceed, is to send a gentilman in France, becaus a gret man can not be send without gret charges, quhilik is not meit, and also to renew the old higg, quhilk is not pertinent for the tym, becaus of the new ligg contractit betuix Ingland and France, quhilk France will not brekk, as thair estat standis for the present."

EARL OF

"This gentillman mon haif a speciall commission from the King to the King of France, quherein he mon congratulat all his gud successis, and excuse the not sending to him before, becaus of the trouble he wes involvit in, saifing in the requyrring of him to be his gossop, quhilk albeit the King of France wes in the warres for the tym, and not leasuret to wait vpon sik affaires, yet he haid namet the prens efter his name Hary, and maid a speciall chois of him beyond all uther prensis, and haid caused mair reuerens his chair nor any ambassador that wes thair sen the tym."

The persons suggested to be employed as procurator and counsallour are these,—

"The Bischop of Glasco as the first and speciall, as weill for his proven fideleity as he that is best acquainted in all the Quenis affaires, as also hes the best part of all the vrytes and evidendis in keping." "Next ther wer in office ane Monsieur Dolbi, that was Superintendant as I beleiv of hir affaires in Poitu and haid sein quhen he wes yong her treserer, a very honest man and of gud moyen, also Monsieur du Ruessseav, her chancellor, and Monsieur Chevellin her advocat, a very honest and fameuss man; and if ma be requyrit, they may be chosen be the Bischop of Glasco his aviss, and if Mr. Wyllyam Ballentyn wer in Paris, he might also be a help in the lawes, and in uther materis."

"Now my Lord your Lordship will excuse my boldnes to gif avis in sick materis, for her Majeste at her deth desyreit a promis of me, that as I had been faithfull to hir during her lif, sua I wuld remane faithfull to hir efter hir deth, and I can not be faithfull if I insist not in this mater, quhilk tuechis baith honor and consciens."

Letter from John Acheson to the Queen of Scotland, 22 April 1561. (In dorso) Iean Ascheson et xxii^{me} Auril 1561. To the Quenis grace.

Conforme to my dewtie and detfull service, hawing your gravis writtingis concerning your cunze in this realme, I hawe thocht it neidfull to writ this present with this bearrar, quhairby your grace may sufficientlie understand nocht onlie my payrt in putting your hienes letters to executioun, and delivnering the missiouns conforme thairto, bot als the ansours and guid will that I resawit of syndry with sik vther purposis as I hawe knaun. In this meintyme, in the first I arriuit in the town of Edinbrough the last day of Marche, quhair I delivierit to my lordis de Villemor, clerkis of Register and Justice, and Mr. Johne Spens, your gravis writtingis, and schew the ordonance concerning the cunze maid be Marcel, quhilkis consellit me to lait it vnkownin quhill your gravis coming in Scotland, quhilk the hail pur and mony of the griut vissis to be sone, and that for the emotioun of trubill, sua that the said ordonance lvis deid, quhill your gravis nyxt writting.

The first of this instant, I past to Hammitown and thair delivnerit your gravis missive to my lord dwik, quha wes werray glad, and gewe for ansour, the abot of Kilwinning being present, that he was bot ane, and had no mair credit than any of the rest, counselling me allways to supersaid all sik affairs to the parlement. Quhairto the said abot ansourit and said, that he thocht it best that the proclamation concerning the discharge of Johne Hart grauers finouris, and transporting of the monies, with all the rest war dewlie put to executioun, and the ansour to your grace quhom by thair war stoppit. Bot as concerning the said ordonance, quhilk I schew to thaim was nocht as yit cumit, be the aduice of the persons aboue writting, he thocht it best to supersaid that to the parliament, or at the leist to mylord James ansour, quhom in as I understand, lvis gouernement of the hail affairs of this realme at this present, quhom with your grace may resone at lenith.

At my departing thairfra, I send your gravis lettre with ane of my awin to my lord of Saint Andrews, and hes resawit the ansour, quhilk is that he is and salbe ay reddy to do your grace service, nocht onlie in that, bot in all vther thingis, and hes thocht it best to proclame all the vther letters, reseruing the ordonance, quhilk I keip as yit secret, conforme to thair awice befoir specifeit, and at my retourning to Edinbrough, I fand my lord pryours lettre to the suppriour to be send to him be the awice of Maister James Magill, and thinkis it best that your grace gottin for to that effect all thingis vald be wyslie handillit.

* Here the letter breaks, for the most part, into cipher. The decipher on the margin, and is here copied.

And be resonne that he is to com thair, it sall pleis your grace cause him resonne vpon all thingis with Marcell in presence of your Magestie counsell, for I am assurit he hes nocht his ansour to seik. I hawe not &c. (Dorso) To the Quen's grace.

The Regent Murray to the Lord Herries, with his reasons for accepting the Regency, and as to the state of the nation. (A draft. No date.)

My Lord, after my maist hartly commendacion, I have ressait your letter and vnderstand the same, quhair as your Lordship wrytis of the ernist guid will ye beyr to me and my honour, I do thank your lordship maist hartly, especialle for that I newir experiencit vther at your hand heitfoir, nayther can I remember that vther
I haif meritit. As I cawit ernistly, sa wald haif I bene maist glaid to haif communicat with you my mynd frely in the acostumyt maner, befor my acceptacion of this present wechtye charge that is layd vpon my shulderis, but hawing vnderstand be the Q(uein)s mowth, conferring priualye with me, hir awin desyr nothing variand, but rather insinand in hir former deliberacion towards the commission direct to me, And persawing be oculair inspection, that sic thingis as seam to be the chifte swite of sum confidencis of the nobilitie, how thair desyr culd newir bring quyetnes, but rather ane manifest desolucion of this state, with impvinite to that maist horrible mwrthir committit vpon the King of latte memorye, I wes compellit and conuict in consencie to yeld to the manyfold preassingis of many noble mony godly and best men heirabout, and to accept vpon me this charge, wechtye aneuch, quhilk can bring to me nothir prouffeyt nor commodite quhilk I regard, saif only ane perpetual trowble of spreit and anxiete of mynd to se my dewyte well discharged. And lett God be judge betuix me and thais that sall fynd be busynes gyf I seik vther then the quyetynge and perpetual weall of this puir realme with the commodite of the hail body thairrof. And thayme gif thair mean treuly the thing that thair mowthis speik, and wald seam to the ward thair wald faynest craif, and nocht rather for thair particulere respectis, is content to mixt fyir and walter, heawin and earth together, yf it mycht stand with the suyrtye of my souerayne the Kingis Maieste, the pwnischement of that wyld mwrthir, the weale and con-tentement of the maist and best sort of the subiectis, I for my awyn pairt (my God is wytnes) culd with better will dimitt the charge nor ewir I resait it, butt being I haif lyfit my hand to the Eternal my God deliberative, lett all men think with thayme selfis I haif no repenting nor bak lwyking frome the pleucht. God and the King mwst be obeyt, and I thought vnoworthy in my rowme, during my charge, or ellis ane of the tna mon leif the rowme, my hoip wes ewir in you my Lord to haif hayd your faythfull concurrence in planting of the treu religion, justice, and pollytte within this miserable cuntrye. I can nocht think that for that I am chosin be the Q(uein) and admitted be ane grypt number and all that wer present of the heigis to that rowme, that thairfoir ye wald change your guid affection towards the seruice of the common weale. Yf ye do it, I may be dissauit soyr against my will, and beyr with all priuatt inuuries doyn to me or in my respect and lett all rewenge pas, but the contempt of the King my soueraynes auctorite I will no wayes remitt, nor suffer to pas in ewill exemple, yf my wytt or force may amend it, heirfor rather I wald desyr your lordship to cum towards me quhair ye salbe in als full suyryte as my awin lyif, and lett ws confer vpon the weal of the hail body. If may be particularis doyth leyd ane grypt number of the world, butt let us bayth renounce our pryvatt affectionis, and serue the common weal that standis in danger so extremlye. And forthir my Lord of all your desyris, at meitting, ye salbe satisfyt

JAMES STEWART.

Obligation by the Earl of Huntly to the Earl of Murray. 18 April 1567.

Extract Registered Obligation by George Earl of Huntly, in favour of James Earl of Murray, and for the great favour which the latter bare towards him, whereby he engages to keep the tacks set by the said Earl of Murray of the Castlelands of Inverness, and in special a nine years' tack set to Donald Ferguson of the lands of Dawachcareauch and others, and not to molest them in the said tacks, nor remove them therefrom during the periods for which they were to run; and that he shall cause his mother to renounce all tacks and title, right or possession she might claim to the said lands, and renouncing his own claims thereto in favour of the said Earl of Murray and his heirs, and engaging for himself, his mother, and all his "brether and sisters" to warrant and keep skaitheless the said Earl of Murray, Mr. John Wod, John Stewart, and others, his servants, of all goods, geir, jewels, "and vther graith" intromitted with by them, belonging to the grantor's father, now deceased, or that might belong to the said brother and sisters of the grantor, by assignation from their said father; and because the said Earl of Murray was bound to James Ogilvie of Findlater, in the event of the lands of Findlater, Deskford, etc., disposed by the Queen to the said James by reason of the forfeiture of the late John Gordon the grantor's brother, being evicted from the said James, to infest him in the lands of Strathnairne and Caddell, therefore the said Earl of Huntly engages to free the said Earl of Murray from that obligation, by infesting him in as much and as valuable land as the said lands of Caddell and Strathnairn; also to relieve the said Earl of Murray of the teinds of the Kirk of Inverness due to the commendator of Aberbrothok for the year 1565, etc. Dated at Halyrudehouse, and recorded in the book of the Acts of the Lords of Council, 18 April 1567.

(Dorso.) Obligation of the Erle of Huntlye to my Lord of Murray.

The restoration of the Earl of Huntly from his forfeiture was formally completed in Parliament on the day following the date of the above document, viz., 19 April 1567, on which day the celebrated banquet occurred in Ainslies tavern, when the Earl of Huntly joined with the other nobles in recommending the Earl of Bothwell, then his sister's husband, in marriage to the Queen.

Lord Hunsdon, Governor of Berwick, to the Regent Murray. 15 January 1567-8.

After my verie hartie commendatiouns to your Grace. Whereas the Quenes Maiestie my Soueraingne, hath sent Sir Henrie Gaetis kighte, one of her maiesties counsell at Yorke, for certen her grete and weightie affayres vnto your grace, Her Maiestie hath also willed me by other pryvatte letters to sende Mr. Drewrie, Marshall of this towne with him, as one in whome she hath the especiall truste and confidence, bothe for his fidelite towards her Maiestie, and for his acquayntance with your grace: whome I neede not muche to recomende vnto you because your grace knowes him sufficiently, but onlie to geue your grace to understand that he is sente by her Maiesties appoyntement.

And towching the effect of thir messuage and demandis frome her Maiestie, they are so reasonable as I trust theye will not be denied: although I do heere yt commonlie bruted that dyuers of the nobilitye of Scotland arre determined rather vppoun a self will, then vppoun anye reason, not to consent vnto them. Yet trustinge that they will so well consider of hit, as not to geue her Maiestie so iuste cause of vnkyndnes. I comitt your grace to the tuition of thAlmightie. From Barwick this xth of Januarie 1567.

Your Gracys assured fend

Queen Elizabeth to the Regent Murray. 2 January 1569.

Right trusty and right welbeloued Cousyn ye grete you well. Likeas we never bestowed our fauour in any benefitt vpon youe but we thought the same either well merited by youe before, or that we shuld fynd it gratefully afterward acquited, in respect of the syncerite that we haue observed in all your actions both priuat and commun : so at this present we have had very good and playn prooff of your redynes to shewe yourself grateful vnto vs, in that youe have so spedely repared with so good forces towards our borders, for the withstanding of the entree of certeyn of our rebels, being dryven by our forces out of our own realm ; for the which we do giue youe our hartly thanks. And therewith we doubt not but yourself doth well consider, how in this matter, shewing your redynes to pleasur vs, youe haue also wisely thereby prouided for the inward quietnes of the countrees wherof ye haue the government. And now considering we certeynly understand, how by your diligence and careful order diuers of our rebels be taken in that realme, and amongis them the Erle of Northumberland the principal of them is brought to your custody, we do hartly requier you, that the said Erle may be safely deliured to our trusty servant the bearer herof, in such place vpon our frontiers as he shall think mete for the more surete. And in like manner we desier you, that the rest of our rebels apprehended may be deliured to our wardens of our marches, as shalbe thought moost convenient by youe in respect of the places where the sayd rebels shalbe apprehended. And for the rest not yet apprehended within that realm, we doubt not but as youe haue alrede begon to vse great diligence, so ye will employ your power for the apprehension of the rest, being as mete for the quiet state of that realm to be suppressed, as for our own where they have ben borne. And if hereafter any occasion may happen wherin any of our officers may shew you the like fauour (although we wold be sory of any like cause to be ginen) you shalbe well assured that they shall (following our commendement) acquit the same. Geven vnder our Signet at our Castel of Wyndesour, the second day of January 1569, the xijth yere of our reigne.

Your frende,

Efter my maist hertlie commendationes. Tueching the purpos that was haldin betuix vs quhen ye past vp to court. I haif declarit my mynd in that behalf to the berair heirof my servaunt M^r Johnne Wod, sa that quhatsoever he speikis to yow in my name I pray you credit the same as ye wold do my self. And farther because he may peraventure haif occasion to tary langar at the court nor anyther I or he presentlie can ymagine, and that I haif gevin him in charge to do sum service convenient for me gif he can find the tyme propre. Quhilk may crave a gude pece of money to the outred of the same; Thairfor I will desire and pray you effectuaslie, vpon the pruf of that gadewill quhilk I haif already fund with yow, that ye will lett him haif a lentre of exchange to London, to be anserit of twa hundredth pound sterling, or les or mair, as he hes neid of, and tak his lentre vpon the resait of the same, quhilk I sall not fail, God willing, to see thankfullie satisfit and pait in sic maner and at sic tyme as ye and he sall agre and appoint betuix you. And sua for the present having na farther occasion, I commit you in the tuicoun of Almightie God: At Edinburgh the xxij of Marche 1568.

Your assurit freind,

Counsels to the Regent Murray for the right administration of his government, and the management of his private estate and affairs. 29 June 1569.

Paper beginning "Apud Abirdene penultimo Junii 1569. It plesit your grace to charge me this vthir day in Elgin, to accept sum particular charge of service vnder ane generall heid that careit with it mony particulars. My ansuier than wes that gif it plesit your grace to consider your awin seruices, to deuide the same in heidis, and appoynt euerie man to his place . . . than it suld nocht be the werynes and febilnes of my body (mair brokin be travale and labouris in your graces service nor naturalie aigcit becaus of yeiris) that suld excus me from reasaving the burding and doing my dewtie, in my rank to be appoyntit, first to God, secundlie to my native cuntrey, and the common wealth thairof, and thridlie to your grace in particular, in quhois service now alreddy I had consumit the twa parte of my dayes . . . It plesit your grace to command me to pen the generall heidis of your services that your grace mycht tak ordour thairwith, quhilk maist glaidlie I will obey." There follows a statement of the objects of government, and the means of effecting them, so as by "persuasion or constraint to induce the haill multitude and euerie member thairof in particular, to render his just dewtie to God and to man, to the effect the same haill multitude, yea and euerie member thairof, may enjoy ane "godlie honest and blisist lyfe."

The means to accomplish this are described as,

1. The scolis and the ministerie.
2. The lawis and the ordinarie executioun thairof.
3. Ane force to sustene the execution, and repres rebellis and forane invaderis.
4. Ane publick rent and procuratioun thairof.

A good deal is said regarding the careful choice of men endowed with suitable qualities for the various public charges. The paper then goes on thus:—

"And becaus fruct cannot cum of sic menes labouris onles the same be continewit and be autoritie mantein, like as also it must be first approv befor it be executit, it is maist necessar your grace suld cheis twa, thre, or four of your previe counsaile to mak continewale residance with your grace, and to find thame selfis euerie day but fail in the counsaile chalmere, be sevin of the knok in symmer preceislie, and sit quhill ten; and in winter be aucht houris and sit quhill xi houris, and appoynt to euerie minister of the forsaids charges his seuerall day in the owk, to haif his complayntis and ouerture, with his desyris hard, resonit, admittit, or repellit, and being admittit, your grace to put the same be your autoritie in executioun, and that be way of prouisioun, to ane parliament. As for examplitt, to the minister chosin for the scuillis and ministerie to appoint Mounday, to him that is for the lawis and executioun thairof Tewsday, to him that is for the forces Thursiday, to him that is for the publick rentis Setterday, Veddisiday for the incident effairis, and particular complayntis, and Fryday likewise."

And in concluding, the writer adds: "and than for my owin parte (quhowsoever my insufficiencie in all respects be best knawin to my awin self, to discharge the menest parte of any of the necessar charges foresaidis) but gif I mycht anes se (to my grit comfort) the course taking and the ordour appoyntit for building vp of the hous of God and this rwyne stait of this my native cuntrey) I suld be content with breid and watter to serue for ane barrow man, or mortar becare, in so godlie, so necessar work. And I suld schaw diligence and graid zeall, quhair knawlege and understanding inlaikit, evin to my vtermaist, as knawis he that serches the hart and reynis, quha mot move your hart and thais of your honorabill counsaill, to vse the foresaidis menes and ordour, or sum vthir moir profitabill quhatsumener."

Then follows a series of counsels for the management of the private and personal estate of the regent, and the appointment of officials for that end.

EARL OF MORAY.

Alexander Clark to the Countess of Murray, as to her fishings on Spey, and her Currachs on that river; also as to a Convention to be held at Dalkeith, where Randolph had urged Mr. Sadler to be present, 23 February 1569-70.

Madame, after my humble commendation of service, I have send this bair towards your Ladyship, to know your plesour and will of your fishing of the twa part cobyll of Spey, and quhat direction ye will gif hym, swa that he may vs hym self in all thingis conform to your direction, he is ane quhom I credithe and hes sufficient experience of his dealing and lawtie. I have thought it best that James Anderson be dischergit, quha was ane of the fishchirres and of quhom your Ladyship was plenteous, and that David Mawer and this my seruand namyt James Wilson haue the charge, and that thair be twa lokis put on the Corshous dur, the ane to be kept be the said David Mawer, and the other be my said seruand, for swa I think it best that the ane can do naething bye other, and to this effect it may pleis your Ladyship writ to David Dumber your chamerlen to repair the Corshous and mak it swir, as also to put on gud lokis on the same, attour it will pleis your Ladyship writ and command your said chamerlen to mak the sett of your currokis, for now is the tym of yeir, and that he tak gud caution of them, and to poynd for that quhilk restit ouer his last yeir, and sidik may pleis you writ to my Lord Huntle desyring his Lordship to command all his tenentes of the Engye and otheris his Lordships landis, that thair mak na impedymnt to your Ladyships currokis, and that na pokers nor speir men cum in your wateris, quhilk wilbe ane great ais for your ladyships currokmen, gif your Ladyship thinkis any other way better, gif this berrer command, and he will follow the same. Mr. Jhon hes writtin to your ladyship of all that hes occurrit sens your Ladyships partyn, I think thair salbe als meikle ille done at this nixt convention as was at the first, I haue hard that this day or the morow the eryllis Argyll Mortoun and Boyd metis at Dalkeith, and the secretar with them, Mr. Randolphe hes writtin to haist Mr. Sadler to this convention. Thair liuk heit that thair salbe heir the maist pairt of the haille nobilitie. The Hammyltonnis ar prouder nor that wer, in respect that thair sa no man tak any thing in hand. I will not trouble your ladyship with longer letter at this present, bot commitis you to the protection of the Almightie, quha mot comfort you with his holye Spreit. Fra Markinche the xxiij of februer 1569.

Your Ladyships maist humble seruand reddie,

Alexander Clark.

(Dorso.) To the richt honorable his special Lady and Mistres my Lady Countes of Murray.

Mr. John Spens of Condy, to the Countess of Murray,
20 March 1569.

Letter from Mr. John Spens of Condy to the Countess of Murray, reminding her of a "sobir dett" of 500 merks which the late regent had borrowed from him, and for which the writer had courteously refused to accept a pledge of "siluer vescheall," which his Grace had offered in security, assigning the reason that "he wald preier his Grace na ferther bot with his awin "handwritt," which "suld be als gude and sufficient "to me as any pledge." He does not urge for immediate payment, as he doubted not that her Ladyship was "empestet with mony otheris." Dated at Edinburgh 20 March 1569.

Sir William Kyrkcaldy to the Countess of Murray.
[20 March 1569-70.

This is to aduertise your Ladyship me Lordis that wer presently conuenit ver sa occupit with sa gret and wechtye affayris, that me lord of Mar and Lard of Lochleuin and I could get na lainsur to speik togither, therfor your ladyship mon haue patience at this tyme, and be not offendit at the slawnes of us, nor yit at the follye of utheris, quahay trulye hes done bayth ingratilye and vnbonestilye vnto you. But I am assurit that vertue and honestye quhilk hes always bene in your ladyship will not be ouercum with thair ingratil maner of dealing, quaharin I hartlye pray your ladyship to contenen, And I dout not in the end bot ye sall cum to your intent, thairfor lat not this lait iniury neyther move nor alter your ladyship, bot still follow out that course ye ner of mynd to do, for in sa doyng the follye of them quahay hes schawin themselfis indiscreit sall apier heirin. I will not trubill your ladyship becaus of the sufficiencye of the berar, but luk quaharin I may do your ladyship service I salbe redye to obey the sumen to the vittermaist, sa I humlye tak my leif of your ladyship at Edinburgh Castell the xx of Marche.

Your ladyship's to command with seruice,

(Dorso.) To my Lady Murray.

Sir William Kyrkcaldy, Governor of Edinburgh Castle, to the Countess of Murray, on the state of the Kingdom after her husband's murder. 20 May 1570.

I resauit your Ladyship's lettre this xviij of Maii, quhairof I maist humlye thank your Ladyship. As for any report that is cum to your Ladyship's eares of me, I dout not in the end ye sall vnderstand the contrairye, for albeit I haue just occasion to do as I do presently, yit with Gods grace I sall neuer leave my duetye towards my Lord your husband quahay restis with God, but to declair my self als willing to revenge his deathe and sett forwardis the causis of all his weil willers to the vittermaist of my power as ony be in Scotland, but heirin the end will declare euery man part. I haue vnderstand be Walter Melvill that your Ladyship is myndit to cum to thair parties, to mene your causis to the consall, quhilk at this tyme for my awin simplill oppinion I can not fynd, for nowther is ther ony certane rull and regement, nor yit is ther ony sure part in this cuntreye to ony to traivell into, for thair hail parties ar sa lows that na man may traivell without he be vpon his garde. And to writ the treuth to your Ladyship, it aperis that this hail realme is lyk to be brocht to vther ruyne be the inbringin of strangers, for presently England is brocht in the bowellis of our cuntry, and them that hes brocht them in intendis to wrak quhom they pleis, for men ar spuizeit and robet bayth be England and Scotland self sway that ther is na man sure. Our Lordis says the Englismen ar cum to mentene the Knygis auctoritie and revenge me lord Regent murthour, but the Englismen selfis they ar nether cum for the ane nor the vther, bot onlye to seek thair maistres rebellis and perseu ther mentenors, this the principallis hes said to me, and in effect the erll of Sussex hes writtin the same vnto me, Madame, I assure you gyf thynngis continen as thay do, I see nathing but a playne conquest to be maid vpon our cuntreye be them that could be the defenderis of it, for England says planely that they wald neuer haue cum in Scotland without we haid desyret them, gyf I vnderstand ony vther thynng your Ladyship salbe aduertised therof. Sa I humlye tak my leif of your Ladyship. At Edinburgh castell, the xx of Maii 1570.

Your Ladyships to command with seruice,

(Dorso.) To the Rycht honorabill
Lady the Cowntesse of Murray.

Mr. John Wood to the Countess of Murray, 24 February 1569-70.

After maist humble commendation of my seruice pleis your Ladieshie resauie heirwith ane Letter from Maister Randolphe, the somme of it I can vnderstand of the Quene his maistres nayme he wald communicat with your ladyship in but general headis, offring hir maisteie rady to pleasour you in any thing sche can for the luif sche buir to your husband. Ane sum quhat specialie that yff your ladyship fand your state troublesom heir, and your husbandis Enymeis burdenable, ye sould be most hartly welcum to England, with sic fauouris as your ladyship myght justly cawe, as me seemeth he meaneyth to depart shortly after schir Rauffe Salladris arraywall, and after we haif vnderstand the ysue of matteris betuix the Quenis Maisteie and nobilitie heir, after the said schir Rauffis arraywall I think I salbe shortly at your Ladyship to know your Ladyship's mynd in this and all vther thingis. I haif maid sic contract as I culd mak with Jhone Wardlaw, mayre referring always to your ladyship to accept or refuse the same after your ladyship hes considerit the same, It is the best I culd haif ayther of him or any vther, for Alexander Arbuthnet plainly refused. I can gett byaris to your viduals of Buchquhane that will gif abufe xx merkis the chaldre. Your ladyship may vse thame as my Lord your fader dois his. As to the trasporting of lym, Madayne onles ye wald build sumwhat this foyr yer it is but sa mekle labour lost. Marye this I remitt to your ladyships awin wisdom, for the matter is but smal. I pray your ladyship wrytt earnestlie agane to my Lordis Mar, Loycheleuin, and Grange that David Ormis comptis may be haistalbye hard and the restis appointed to pay dettis. Yff thair mycht any support be gottin out of Murray or Bamfe to redeme the siluer wes-sell with, it wald help fordward same matteris, and thar for lett your ladyship do thairin as ye think good. And wrytt earnestly to Drumlaynrik that he wald bring his to Edinburch quhair he sall resaeue his money. I am advysed in any sort to raise no breifis to your Ladyship, quhill we se quhat God sendis of your ladyship is wambe. pleis your ladyship to thank Grange good will, for tretly I find him mair foidwart nor vtheris, but James Murray hes said to him als largely and als far as he knawis, of any thing that eur past betuix your ladyship and him. And it is now ane commoun fable in all menns mowths, for bayth he and the thesaurer hes schawin me mony things that I did neur heir of befor. I list not to trowble your ladyship herwith, but when I sall haif oportunyte to speik with your ladyship ye sall understand what I smell of the ward, quhill is and wilbe eur lyik the self. I pray your ladyship lett me understand your pleasour amply be sic as cumis to this nixt conventioun, and it salbe obeyt to my vtermaist, God willing, als faythfullie as sumtyme to my lord your husband. And so remitting all vther things to your ladyships answer and forder advertisement of your pleasour, I comitt your ladyship to God, from Edinburch the xxiii of Februar 1569.

Your ladyships maist humble and obedient serviteur,

Mr. Jhone Wod.

I pray your ladyship to haist bak the wrythingis suld go to James Creychtoun of Carco, I preas ye mycht be tutrix to that barne, and the esperance of your wambe but watt not whome at to craif the same. In my awin swtte I cum als huly speed and is not but compeditouris anew.

(Dorso.) To my Ladie countess yf Murray thes be deliverit, etc.

Mr. John Wood to the Countess of Murray, as to the delays in revenging her husband's murder, and Randolph's movements, 4 March 1569-70.

After maist humble commendation of my service, pleis your ladyship I resaeue your letter of the xxv. of Februr, as to the slawnes of the persecution of my lordis mwrthour and slak resoluing therupon, It was found als grytt falt with heir as culd be, be all the gentiemen and baronis. Treuth it is, sum better appearance thair is att this tyme, sawing that the slaknes of the noble men in thair resoluing thairupon hes as offendit the baronis, and specialle thayme of the west cuntry, that we luik for few or nayn of thairne att this convention. It sall not be vnpreasid and vntrawailit for to menis viter most. Marye thair was merwelous grytt falt found be all men with the absence of my Lord your brother, and the lard of Pyttarrou. And mekle mair wilbe gif thay cum not to this conventioun. Off maister Randolphe I can na ways vnderstand that he will in any sort depart quhill maister Saidlairs arrywall, quhill for any thing I can persaeue will not be sa soyn as we hoippytt for. I truist att this convention in the nixt vacance I may at guid laseir wist your ladyship, as God willing I sall, and return agane befor maister Randolphe departeur. As concerning my trawail with my lord of Mar and Loychlewin in their ansueir we playn thair wald neur be ayther executouris far less intromettouris. Marye to further your Ladyships causes, to red your husbandis dettis thair wald do quhat thay culd, yf preassing or trawilling with may do any thing it sall not be left vndoyn. Twyching James Murray and his brother Jhone I resaeue werray schort ansuearis, butt I sall trawail with my Lord of Mar and Loychlewin to draw thayme to ane point yff it be possible, for be way of justice presently I can do nothing, be reason of the testament not maid nor conformed. Yff ayther the Lard of Grange my lord of Mar or Loychlewin, will do it than salbe preassing for ane Inuentary. I haif desepchit Antoyne, and myndis in the nixt shippis to pwti awa Neger. As to Harye Lairmunth, he not only denyis the matter I askytt of him butt insistis and perseueris thairin. Sum thing of his young proceedingis your ladyship may persaeue be this vther letter sent me from my brother. I besek your ladyship not to seame to ken the matter butt lett thame be doynge ane quhyll. Your ladyship may outirak thame schortly heirafter. As to Jhone Wardlaw I hoip he hes mett with your Ladyship or nou. And as twyching the redemption of the siluer plat, Albeyt I hayd als mekle money in hand als wald mak it all, for I dar not meddle schortly thairwith, thair is sa mekle youtheid in sum personis that I wald not haif hoippytt for. And yit I salbe layth thay gett advantage vpon me be Goddis grace, for my awin adwyis I think it maist mete your ladyship preas David Dunbar and George Bayrd with thair restis, and specialle David Dunbar, for that I suppose he sall alledge mekle restand in the Clanchattanis handis, and thairfor it salbe best to be resolut of his restis in tyme. The fwtt of his compt wilbe ja^o lib. I fear me in deboursmentis he salbe found slaw aneuch. I wald wyshe yff it wer possible I myght meyt with him and George Bayrd bayth in Dunnoter, in the passion owyk quhair I salbe God willing, I sall madame do in your service I sall ansuear to God and you And bring the mynd of your freindis with me to you. And sa referring the rest to the sufficiencye of this gentile man bringer heirof, and to my cummyng towards your ladyship. I hartly pray God to be your ladyships perpetual comfort, and grant you ane happy byrth, from Edinburch the fayrd of Marche 1569.

Your ladyships obedient serviteur at commandement

Mr. Jhone Wod.

(Dorso.) To the Ryght honorable Lady, my Lady Countess of Murray.

Mr. John Wood to the Countess of Murray, as to the movements of the Laird of Lochleven, and the opening of her own coffers. 4 April 1570.

May it pleis your ladyship, passing towards the baillie of Arroll by Auchterhouse, I vnderstuid my lord and lady Buchquhane wer bayth at hayme I lychtyt and did my reuerence, and after sum discourse haid with my Lady, fand hir better willing to commoning nor I was informit of befor, and yit I truist salbe found extream aneuch. In discourse with the baillie I fand him of guid opinion towards obedience of all thingis concerning the proprietye of Sanchquhair in Anguse, but of the superiorte and they thingis of the west in grytt dowbt. In Loychlewin I fand the lard new rydding to Striwing. I fallowit and onirtaik him four myll vpon the way, delywerit your ladyships wrytting and oppynnit my credit. I gatt delaying ansueris vnto the tyme he cam to Sanctandros on the nixt monunday, quhill he prevented vpon brwyttis past of the surprysing of that Castell, quhairfor he hayd dywers aderteismentis. I past to Loychlewin, and spak my lady your mother, of whome I resaeue werray grytt and guid Intenement, and werray lowinglie and honorable spak of your ladyship. I fand your dowchter myrry, and werray lustye, and guid lyik praysed be God, and the nwryis wele waid, lacking nothing, sawing that sche cravis your ladyship wald prowtyd for ane vther to the barne within ane monethy for that sche is werray grytt, and may on force reitir hir homewart quhill sche prayed me to signifye to your ladyship: on Fryday the lard of Loychlewin arrywt heir, with whome albeit I trawailled importunely, I culd neur haif resolut ansueris, but of ane heyd that he wald haif no meddling with that besynes. Twyching that desyr of your awin habillements culd haif no kynd of favour of no hand. Yit seing my playn refusal to meddle with the haill, the boyt man obtayned Hendry Lawmonthis guid will to los the same, and transport it to the abbay, quha maid the same be layd in the gardero; and when your coffers wer oppynnit and the rest of the geyr inwentaryt, fynding no vther remeid, I tuik instrumentis in Hendry his presence that heir wes in thair four coffers nathing but your ladyshipis habillements, and vtheris trifillis conform to that inwentary, and thairfor offerd to fynd him and Walter Cockburn thair present caution sufficient to ansuer thairfor as law wald, protesting yff thair refused the same, or wald not lous it, that the skayth and damage suld cum vpon thaim, and being refused past to the baillies and fand Alane Watson caution thairfor, and as lousid the arrestment, thairefter came and desyred to haif thame delywerit and drawin furth to me, and being refused, I tuik instrument and maid protestation as of befor, and incontinentis thair arrestit all agayne be the baillie of the abbay. Yit because the principall coffer quhair your ladyshipis cleythingis is, hes the ane lock brokin, I haif gottin grant frome Hendry that the same with his guid will and licence salbe transported to Alayn Watsoune for swyrties cause, and Alayn becom caution to mak it furth cummyng: the rest is placed in the gardero; be Hendry and Walter Cockburn with Alex^r Hwmes and my consent, quhairin I haif protestit in thair presence. I did nathing but in my awin nayme, as ane faythfull seruant to the defunct, and ane well willar to his barnis, and na thing in your ladyshipis nayme. And maid the boyt man grant befor thaim he hayd nather command nor lyence of your ladyship nor nayn in your nayme to los nor transport any of that geyr. And on all this materis I haif takin instrumentis with als mwcht ado and fasherye as our I hayd in the lyik besynes. I haif sent to Edinburch to rais letteris to call thaim, but all that mwst be alterit nou, and delayt to my returning, whatsoeuer becum off me, yff I may, the goyr with Hendry his consent salbe in Alayn Watsonis handis as layd in be ws my lordis serwardis handia, and na vtherwis, all instrumentis ar taking in Mr. Jhone Boukle and maister Jhone Scot with Mr. Robert Flescheornis handis The lard of Loychlewin departit in haist this day to his awin house, and vpon Thursday myndis to be in Sriuiling; for all myndis to go to Glascow quhair he has requyred me to be, assuring me that my lord my maisteris death salbe reuengit. Madame, belewe me thair is na earthly thing myght haif caused me haif neglectit your ladianshipp commandement in repayingr towards your ladiship in this your tyme of byrth and dangeir, Except this only ane occasion, quhilk as I am assured wilbe maist comfortable to your ladiship and gryttest surtyre to your babes. Sa is it the thing in the world I craif of God I may se execut and be partaker thairof, quhilk or it wer doyn and I away, I hayd rather forsuear Scotland for enir. I beseik your ladianship of your goodnes to consider me heirin, as I speik from ane vufeynd hart, and be not offendit with me for my absence. Yff it pleis God to wisit me, my compt and your memorialis with all things in my handis salbe cawit of my brother James, for my rekenyngis and comptis ar in my tronk besyid your ladianshipp self, and I sall leif with him the rest, yff it sall pleis God to grant ws guid successe, and lyif be reseruit, I sall cum directly frome Glascow to your ladianship as my horse will beyr me. Yff any stay beis, I sall mak no tarye, Beseikking God that I may heyr good tydence of ane happy byrth to your ladiship, to the comfort of thaim that did vufeyndly luif my lord your husband, for the comfort of whais posterite I beseik your ladianship in my maist humble maner to treat your self and be cairfull of your awin health and lyif. And I dowt not but that God that hes blessed yow hythertillis, sall yit be your comfort and your posteriteis, I sall earnestly call to him that I may haif ane comfortable returning to your ladianship, whene it salbe his guid pleasour, to the quhilk I will refer all other thingis : from Sanctandros the feyrd of Apryll 1570.

I beseik your ladianship be not offendit with Ioneitis long tarye, for she wes compellit, and I to, against bayth ourwillis.

To the Ryght honorable Lady
My Lady Countess of Murray.

Mr. John Wod, who had been Secretary to the Regent Murray, and much mixed up with his affairs, was himself assassinated within two weeks of the date of this letter.

Lady Margaret Erskine to the Countess of Murray, announcing the death of the daughter of the Regent Murray. (Not dated).

Madame, Efter maist hertlie commendatioun, this is to aduertis your Ladyship that it has pleisid God to tak your doichtor my bairne to himself, quhilk is the greittest greif that ever came to my hert, for ony of hir yeiris othwer of my awin beiring or of ony uthers. Nocht the les I man gif thankis to God as I haue done in greittr materis. Leitle the Doctour wes heir on Weddisday wes aucht dayis, and departit on Thursday, and sayed that sche had wormis, in her waym and heicht to send our sum thing that suld be remede for the wormis, and the defelatioun that fell out of hir heid to hir lychtis, and it was Tyisday or ony thing cum agayne fra him, and sche wes seik and so handillit that I durst gif hir ne thing, bot thoillit God [to] be hir medisenar, and so sche centeneuit, as the lungar the seikar, and nevir sleipit, nor wald nochtly down, nowther in the bed nor cradill, bot satt evir up and centeneuit se one quhill Thursday at nycht, herand, seand, and speikand with all uther gud remembrance and newer misknew [ony] bodye, quhill sche deperit with ane instant. I could getti ne bodye out of Edinbruch be resoun of greit woud, bot causit the samen man bowell her that bowald hir father quha restis with God to open hir and consider the deisse and maledye, quhilk wes meist pairt in hir lychtis, for thai wer blekynnit, and tynt thair collour and growin cloiss to hir sayed. To trubill yow nocht mair of this mater, the berer cane schaw quha wes present, bot always it is beleuit that sche hes had this deisse fra hir motheris wayme, or ellis sayne thairefter. I pray your ladyship be of gud comfort, and treit yourself weil that ye may lewe to bring wp the leif be honest folkis, for ne bodye hes gottin the greittest lois bott I. I dout nocht bot God sall send your Ladyship barnis efter this to do you plesseur, for ye ar young anewch, but thair is neyn abill to do me sic plesseur as sche did, bot I comitt all thingis to the pleasour of God, quha conserue you eternal. Of the New hons the xvii day of instant, be your mother at power. Margaret [Erskine].

Thair wes na wormis within hir, nor no sic thing, for all the doctors saying. Appardone the berer, for I causit him remayn by his dyet.

Lady Margaret Erskine to the Countess of Murray (undated—but 1570.)

Madame, efter meist hertlie commendatioun, I haue rasawit your letter and aquavite, quhairfor I thank you hertlie : as for your cuming in this countray, I think be resoun of decessis leitle ye may nocht gddie traywell se suyn, bot I wat ye will nocht be forgetfull of thame that are heir. As for newis heir, ye sall wit my twa sonis and brother my lord of Mar with the rest of wther frindis ar in Edinbruch remaynand thair quhill the Inglismenis cuming, quha will be with tham schortlie, and thairefter ar myndit to pas fordward to suyt the rawenge of the murtouraris, becaus thair is se few frindis of Scottismenis I dowt bot salbe with tham in thair waige. Annabill is blyth and in gudhelth thankis to God, and quhen ye pleis to cum and wesie hir, ye salbe hertlie with quhat wther thing that lysis in my power, as knowis God, quha conserf you eternal, with my hertlie commendation to Elisabeth.

The Earl of Leicester to the Countess of Murray, 5 April [1570] relative to her requests made to the Queen of England.

Madame, Albeith I haue no soner or oftener vysyted you with my letters, yet I doe hartly pray you not to think me less myndfull of the great friendship I had with my Lord your dere husband and you in tymes past, or that I haue lesse good wyll now God hath taken him away, to doe you seruyce or pleasour than I had in his lyfe tyme duringe both your prosperities. And so my desyer ys, Madame, that you should reckon of me, that to my power you may comande me, and shall alway fynd me thankfull for the good friendship that heartofore ye haue offred me. And touching your request Madame, that you haue made to me by your letters, and also by L. of Morton for such your particuler causes as concerns you with the Q. Ma's. my sofferayne, I haue moued her H. therto, and as her maieste ys not voyd of spetyall care towards your L. for the great affectyon she dyd know to be both in your late lord and husband as in your self toward her ma's., she doth meane to shew you all the fauour that she may any way, And touching this case, I haue made my sayd L. of Morton such answer as for the tyme I know your L. wyll not mylyke. And dowbtis not of some further better occasion, wearine I may doe you also more pleasure. Whereto I pray your L. to think there shall neuer want my best good wyll for your help. And so I most hartly comytt you to God, whome may gyde you alway with his spyryte : in som hast this vth of April,

Item ye sall seik Mr. Randill quhair euer ye may haif him, befor ye present ony writing to ony man, yea thocht he war ane dayis jurnay fra the court or theraut, and schaw him that ye are cum frome me, and desyr him that he keip your cuming secreit, and that as he hes done of befor in all my gud caussis, sa man I put him to charge now, and pray him maist hartlie to do for me as he was vount to do, for the mistir is grait, and the parrel is imminent, and the day schort, And God willing, I and my husband sall acquit it him and we happin to leif.

Item ye sall cans him be the presenter and director of ony of the wrettingis that ar send, or ellis do ye as he biddis you anent thame, for sa is it maist expedient baith becaus I haif experience of his favour and fidelitie, And alsua, becaus he knawis best how the samin could be visit.

Item, giue he sall present yow to my Lord of Lecheester, and that ye get avdience to speik him, ye may schaw how my Lord regentis grace hes bene ay gud and favorabill vnto me sen my husbandis depairtour, And that quhill he dois now, is nocht samekill of his avin desyr, as for satisfiactioun of vtheris of his counsall, quha ar my small freindis, and was sa to my husband befor, And as I am credable informit, desydz na better nor ane wretting of the quenis maistie of Ingland to be his excusatioun, quhairfor ye sall schaw his Lordschip, that as I haue hiddirt in all my affairis euer trublit his lordschip, and put him to pains to procur vnto me and my barnis quietnes, sa now into this my grait mistir, I man neidis burding his Lordschip, and to besaik his Lordschip that he will get me ane favorabill wretting of the quenis magistie to my lord regent, desyring him nocht to trublit me for the Jewellis that I haue, and that my husband gave me for relief of the grait dettis he had contractit, pairtie at the quenis maistieis avin handis, pairtie at vtheris creditouris in this realme, And the relief of the grait thraldome that he hes left his landis into to me his relic and his airis, And thocht he had power be act of parliament to dispone vpon the samyn at his plesour, yit the samin is nocht respectit be the partialtie of sum men that favourit nocht my husband, bot the first day of November assignit vnto me for exhibitioun and deliuerie therof. Quhairfor pray his Lordschip to help you to your speidie despesche or ellis we will kep grait skayth.

Item, ye sall schaw his Lordschip, that with the avise of my lord of Murrays huill freindis, I maryit this gentill man, quhome ye may assur him of to haif als mony gud qualiteis as any ane in Scotland, for albeit his brother provydit him to ane ressonabill levying of the lordschip of Lorne, yit that is nocht the principall, Bot he is as ye knaw, of statur and corpulence, as als the nobill blod that he is cumin of, of the hous of Argyll, And of the erlis of Menteth, quhillis befor war erlis of Stretherne.

Off the hous of Argyll ar cumin the erle of Casullis, the erle of Eglintoun, the erle of Huntlie, the erle of Mar, the erle of Atholl, the lord Sempill, the lord Setoun, with all the grait men of the Hiland of Scotland. As alsua the blod of the hous of Menteth his maist antient, that war our lang to repeat, beyd this his brother at this present is depairtit, and left him the hail heritage and levying that he had, quhairby havand as he hes that roume, he may do the quenis maistie of Ingland sum veray gud service and save vnto hir for ane small soume, that he may bestow vpon hir subiectis and Illismen for reteneing of thame within the cuntre and keip thame out of Yrland, that grait coist that hir maistie makis, as alsua keip ane thousand inconuenientis of that cuntries, and hir hienes subiectis.

Item mak him to know that the erll of Argyll is euer the third persone in Scotland in the memoritie of the prince, for his grait power and friendship beiris away the maist part of the affairis of this realme, that quhat gait he will gang he hes the graitest part to be with him, for this effect it salbe weil done that the quenis maistie wreit sum favorabill wretting vnto him, to desyr him to keip gud nychtbourheid with hir maistieis subiectis theraway, and interteine freindschip, for he may do mekill in thir north partis. And give ye may procur better, lat it be with that visdome that it seme nocht that we desyr ony thing of thairis as we haif no mister, bot gif that think our freindschip may be half stedabill vnto thame.

Alvays ye sall assur my lord Lecheester in particular, that quhat plesour he sall do to my husband he sall find him veray thankfull therfor, and schaw him how that his avin gud favour and behaviour towards me, in procuring me all gud, makis me the baulder to put him to panis for my saik and relief, and pray his Lordschip to put me agane to charge quhair I may, And pray him to present the quenis maisties wretting heir inclosit with his avin, and to help yow to your spedie despesche.

VI.—BALMERINO PAPERS; BUNDLE I.

Queen Elizabeth to King James VI. 1595.

[Holograph.]

My Dear Brother

May hit agrie with my desartes, that what hathe bine, shuld ether be so forgettin as hit be not acknowledged, or so neglected as if aught wer forslowen that mete wer for the season, was Hit my gilt or your error that your rebels when I knewe the wer suche, had so stronge hold in your favor as many a moneth past, or you wer pleased to count them but yours in stanchist sort, yea when the wer full mean, than the must not be seen, but so dandele as best merite could scars craue more, what neded ane armie to pursue suche as might so soon be had, Why put you your person to suche a laborious voiage when many a day afor you might with les pain and more honor haue had them, but who was than in depe Lethergie, that gaue so long a brette to so evil a cause, and brede a caused doute no suspected Lacke but to plain ane oversight, And must I for all my warnings, for al my presentes, for al my watchful houere care, be so wel rewarded as one that ether brake vowe or ouerskipit matter, for the first I never knewe you at other nede than that your wyl made you, and so that turne might easily be borne with, les than that I sent you to neglect your causes, wold God you cured as wel your diseased state as I haue narrowly wached to see hit preserved That many monethes hathe past sins my letars visited you not, Lay not the burden on the shuldars that deserved hit not, but remember what courage was geuen to procede furdar, when yet the thanks ar to be geuen for that was last bestowed, and wel hit wer if that wer all, I yrke that my pen shuld write the rest,

AY.

Suppose you that so long a raigne as mine hathe so few freindes or want so narrow intelligence, as that complaints and mones made to foraine estates of strait dealings, made by suche as aught most have helped you, could be kept secret from my knowlege, but if you shuld be axed what you wold have done more than pursue them to your confines, I thinke you wold have answered them at laisur, to make them suppose more than could be sayed, Now deare brother, thinke with your selfe what moeyen this is, to get a nue or kepe the olde, I am more sory that by my example the may have cause to doute your true measure to them, whan better and firmer have had so ivel requital Ther is nor king nor potentat to whom I thank God I nede yeld account of my actions, and yet so sincere the shal enen be as the shal enen pas' current with honor amides all ther censures, and wyl disdaign that any have the precedence of bothe my words and actions, Of wiche even them seluis have geuen me soe good testimonie, that I belive your persuasions came to Late to make them beline the contrarie, Juge now with me wether my silence have had Just ground, and wether any Of my ranecq if I had used them so wold have forgotten so vnseeming a part, And yet for all this, if I may perceaine you to regret suche a traitment, and to assure to bide suche one to me as you affirm, you shalbe sure that, if any your traittors with ther combined faction shal any way assail you, you shal find me awake, as having no drousy humor, whan your affaires nide speedy assistance, And wold not have you dout, that I trust more at our enemies handes but the worst the can and most the may, If you had beleued hit as wel, your Lordes had not been in place for ayde, nor out of your handes to treat as you list. And thus with my assured affection to your person, and for your good, I end, committing you to Godes safest tuition (Dorso.) Quein of England with hir awin hand writt,

To the King of Scotland.

Queen Elizabeth to King James VI. (holograph).

Delyuerit be Roger Ascheton, 20 March 1596.

That the ivel motions he so wel calmed in your towin my deare brother hit pleaseth me not a litel, As also I can but most gratefully accept the care that you take to follow my aduise in the spidy appaising of suche disorder, As likewise in kind sort I do take the sending of this bearer, to satisfie my mynd that ever gladeth to see the wel settelment of factions in your state, and thereby perceive that you take me for suche as wyl ever have waching regarde to your best ordering of your affairis, as she that elz shuld neglect you for whom I have hitherto not wanted any hide to suche occurcencis as might concern you, And for suche right iugement receive with this my many thankis, As for the frantike man that shewed in pulpet the haddelnes of his hed, I owe you most thankfulness for taking hit so evil, But of him I disdaigned my self to make mention of, but did refer bothe his punishment and al els to your best disposing. But now I pray you let me not in silence kipe that wich bothe may dissow our frank amitie and let loose my dishonor, I must nidis tel you that without more excusis deferrings or lingerings, Buckleuech and Sesford must be rendered to my handis in my borders, as all right and reason requirith, And do trust that thes wer deferred to gratifie me more by your selfe, than let alone to the commissioners charge, for God forbid that any so sinister counsel shuld be folowed that might shake you with your best frend, and dishonor you to the whole world, that be spectateurs bothe what princes do, and what the suffar, Consider in right weights the burden of this cause, and suppose hit that no trifling in so vrgent a point can be taken, for princis wil beare anything but opin dishonor wiche enemies workes, and no friends enur tolerate, Regard therfor my deare Brother the poix of this balance, and redres thes intolerable wronges, as Kings for dignitie and friends in amitie ought to do And with this assurance I wil ende troubling you with longer lines, with desiar that God may prosper your good actions, and have regard to kepe your affectionate friendis, among wiche never any shal go afore

Your most affectionat sister

The Master of Gray to the Duke of Lennox, 9 November 1598.

My Lord, I haid same litle Thing to do That, maid me stay in picardie sune tym, bot immediatly efter, I came to this toun I spak with M^r De Dimes. Ther efter I tuk post and be the vay spak with Th^rarle of Gouray at Orleans, and remaint with my Lady your Lordships mother at Obigne four dayis. I scheu her all your affaires and estait: I perceait That sche suspectit a pairt of your voyage hither ves for taking ordre with your aun particulaire, and This apprehension sche took one a letre of M^r Hendry Keires, vrottin long since. So sche reiterat oft that sche wold partage bothe with you and your brother. I scheu her That your Lordships meaning ves fare vther, and That ye thocht no thing of that maiter, bot referit all to her discretion: Sche said if ye did so, ye should be maister of all, and that sche sould never compair you and your second brother. So with the first commoditie, I pray your lordship tuitche sune thing of this point. Hauing haid it be me, That ye thocht meit to assur her ladicship That ye hane no sik meaning as to do in any of your aunin particulairs bot as sche shall Think meit. This your lordship vill do becaus I haue spokin it to her. Sche is a verie hard woman, yet with good vage ye may be master of all sche hes. Your lordships father left The leining far ingadgit. Sche hes degadgit a great part of it, and at this hour sche may spend without ten Thousand frankes. Sche hes sune in her coffres, so in my opinion, seing your lordship hes hithertill leuit without it, as yet to prease to leue besyd it, referring all to her self: in this doing sche and her brother will be The greater forerthers of your tournis heir of better veicht: for I perceau The cheif cause That They haue ever skaire aduyst your voyage hither, hes bein for fear That sche had of This. Efter my retourning from Obinie, M^r d'entrignes came to this toun expreslie to speik vith me, quhair he, M^r de dunes and I spak at length in all your tournis. They thocht it good I should speik vith the king indrectly. So I red to the king to moncear who hed bein seik, M^r De Pirneance told him That I ves thair, so albeit many had not access, I ves brocht to his chalmere, quhair

he maid me verie veilcom, he askit for the king, and marvelt That his maiestie hed not send him houndes, I said That The season ves spent, and That as he iudgit ves the cause That They came not, bot I doubtit not bot befor The season he vould heue to his maiesteis contentment. And he desyrt me to vryt to his maiestie for this effect. At this tym I am verie seik so your lordschip vill suppedat That defection. Efter long conference of many thinges past, his maiestie said he lookit for ane embassadour from his maiestie our maister, and heiring that I ves come, he beleuit it haid bene in embassade. I scheu his maiestie, That I ves only come to passe my tym. And so fare as I beleueit, The cause That his maiestie had defferit to send ane embassadour, ves respect your lordschip ves aneis nominat, and to send one of lesse qualitie it micht be That his maiestie heir had not construit it veill, and that your lordschip hed sik importantes of your ain, That ye could not be redy befor the spring. Besyd That finding That honour to be borne his subiect, ye vould befor ye interpryse The voyage, be villing to knou whether it should be agreeable to his maiestie or not. He answerit That Ther should be nane so veilcome both in your ain particulier, and his maiesteis affaires: I said that I should adverteis your lordschip vith all diligence, to thend ye micht accelerat your voyage; mais dict il monsieur de Gray quil ne vien point sans chiens. Therfor your lordschip shalbe no les cairfull to prouyd dogs and propre hekenays as of your propre fournitour. I took leue of his maiestie and came bak to Paris quhair I heue ever bein seik since; M^r d'Entragues et Dunes came in to The toun to see vat hed past betene the king and me, and ver verie glaid of his ansuer. Ve haue all Thre vrottin for my Lady, who vilbe heir on Tusday nixt, and they vill send your lordschip resolution in all pointis, and I shall depetch ane expresly vith it. In the mid tym, finding commoditie of This berar, I heue vrottin This to Thend your lordschip may be more diligent vith his maiestie for your moyens, for this fare ye may assur his maiestie, That he vill get all pointes of The ancient league confirmit, and vat farther he can crave That is reasonable at This tym. Becaus my doingis speikingis and vrytingis hes bein so mal gratiuse to his maiestie This quhyll, I vill not vryt to him, nor never shall, till I knou a better acceptation nor hes bein, Bot if my last offeris to serve him hed not bein so fare detractit as they ver: and buckelit to some vhom of he vill not drau That seruice That I can do him, I should nou heue done good vill to heue seruit his maiestie, and should heue latin his maiestie knou affaires as They pass, and intelligence That his embassadour vill never attein to, and albeit he micht attein, I doubt if he vill hazard his estat heir for any thing he can look for there. He could never heue seruice better scheip of no man Then to do That dewtie to me That a prince ancht to his subiect, and to exoner me of That debt quhilk ves for his ain body. As for vther dettis quhilkis ver contractit to do his maiestie seruice I caire not for them. If yet his maiestie vill mend to me I vill gang to do him service in any part in Europ for all is to me alyk: I vill spend querever I am, and vith the grace of God as far to his maiesteis honour and my countrys as any subiect he hes without it, albeit sum be in rank befor me. I request your lordschip to sound his maiestie, and lat me knou in deid his meaning towards me vhen my man shall bring your pacquet. I am for ocht I knou presently to tak journey towards Italie, bot I shall leane vord vith my Lady your mother quhair your lordschips letters shall come to me. M^r d'Entragues villis you to prouyd tuelue Thousand Crounes for your voyage, for he thinks les can not serve your tourne. Bring vith you to serve your tourne for ther is none to be hed heir. Ye shall find God uilling at your coming heir, that I heue done my dentie both to his maiestie and your self, and if ye be straittit, That I heue moyen to get your lordschip the borrowing of a couple Thousand crounes. So till my nixt quhilk your lordschip shall luk for shortly, I commit your lordschip to godis eternal protection, and shall ever remaine.

As tuitching your lordschips sister, I heue delt That fare vith my lady, That obtaining a dispence of the pope, They vill set her furth, Bot I pray your lordschip never Insist in it till a partie be prouydit, for I shall ever one advertisement get her a dispence, and shall cost you no Thing. My lady vould not be content That my Lord of Gowry visit her, for I moueit him to it, and red that vay expresly, my Ladyis reasonis ves becaus The rest of religious vould heue skornit.

Acquent M^r Keir vith this post of my Letters That I gene his pensoun to my Lord of Glasgow, who at first gene a hard ansuer, Bot since I heue spokin vith him, and he sayis M^r Hendry and he sall aggrie.

To my Lord

my Lord Duk of Lenox.

Letters of Elphinstone the Scottish Secretary, afterwards Lord Balmerino.

"Copie of my lre to the Secretar of England dated 1 Marth 1598."

It begins with an expression of the King's displeasure with his servant Foulis for exceeding the limits of his commission in the matter of Valentine Thomas, and for agreeing to accept such satisfaction theranant as was no ways agreeable to the King. States that his Majesty has written at great length on the subject with his own hand; urges the granting of a trial for proving his Majesty's innocence of the vile calumny made against him, and the procuring of such a patent as would manifest his innocence.

In the end the writer refers to the treasonable traffickry of the Earl of Bothwell, of which the King has become aware. The dangers of it will be guarded against, and similar precautions were enjoyed on his correspondent.

The letter appears to be a draft, and is corrected in another hand. On the back is an indorsation in a different hand from both. "The K. is dissatisfied wth M^r. Da. "Foulis for accepting so slight a vindication of honour "in the matter of Val. Thomas contrary to his instructions, dangerous to his succession to the Crown of "Engl. by reason of the Act of Association in England."

"Second copie of his Majesteis lre writen over be me 24 Februari 1598 to the Quein of England." It is indorsed in the same hand as the indorsation on the draft of the Secretary's Letter of 1 March 1598 "The K. is "displeased wth the Q. of Englands patent Anent Val, "Thomas."

It begins "Madame and dearest Sister, Since the returne of my Servand Foullis, I found myself uncessantlie pricked by the law of that honest frendship quhilk I bear wnto you, to hasten wnto you howe some my lasor might any way permitte the trefw portraite of my thoctis upon that ansuer to my moste iuste petitions quhilkie it pleased yow by the handis of my said servand to returne wnto me.

The ground of my request was to be frye of that as wntrew as wyld imputationis and calumnie layed aganis me, by so infamous a villain, seduced thairto ather by his own self love, seiking thairby the furthest oft thoct most detestable deathe, or ellis by my malicious thoct undeserved haiters. Not that I ment or neidit to crave tobe made cleir of any suche trecherous attemptis, quhairof indeid I ever was moste clear, but that my effectuall innocency might be made knowne, quhilkie now may in sum mesour be obscured by murmuring surmyes flowing from this filthie spring, but as for the meanis for attayning to the same, I remitt you to your owne memorie quhat choice and diversite of thaimie I maid to be proponed unto yow, and in end relayed my cheifste surite thairin upon your awin deryce, quhilkie out of your owen wisdom, tempered with your kyndest love towards me, I looked ye wuld find out. But now quhar I haif riplie considerit and weyed in the iuste balances of a reasonable and unpassionat judgement the trefw force and pithe of your ansuer, I must plainlie confess (except I wuld faime with you, quhich, is the foulest error that in a mutuall freindship can be committed) that I can nocht find in any point thairof anything neir to my iuste satisfactioun."

The Master of Gray to Lord Home, 3 Nov^r 1599.

My Lord as I promist when I left you, I vrot immediately efter my arryvall heir of my reception, nou haneing takin my leue of thair princes bothe infant and Archduk I thoctt good to assure your lordschip that I haue in all keptit promeis, for I haue refustit reasonable conditionis, at least bether then is offerit as yet to the Scottis man of best rank heir: for the mis-report of my vnfreindis in Scotland may do me more herme then any benefit I could receaue, althocht I micht verie veill haue takin without preiudice of my alleageance to his Maiestie our Soueraigne. I haue sein in tuintie tua dayis remaining the princess euer vhen I pleisat, for I spak vith the archduk fyue tymes, vith Th^r infant thyrse, quhilk no stranger hes done since thair arryvall, as Colonnell Patoun vill vryt vnto you: The hollie best tonnes saue Enuers quhilk I forbure to see, for that thearle Bothwell ves in it, for seing he and I ar in the terms as your lordschip knois, I thoctt for the sicht of a toun quhilk I may sie when I please, I would not giue his maiestie nou occasion of Jeloysie, nor my vnfreindis of speiking, chiefly becaus the treuth is he lookis verie schortly to gang in Scotland, and it might be his Maiestie should think I ver one the Counsell, bot I haue tournit my bak bothe one Scotland and the' earle of Bothwell, who giueis bruiteis that he is to gang in Spaine and in Italie to get of the pope and king of Spaine ther lettres to th' emperour, to be generall of all English and Scottis in the Christian armie, Bot as said is, his meaning is for Scotland, and hes auantit to the principals of this counsell that he is To be brocht heame be the principals of the name of Stewart and dyuers vther noble men, and is seiking money for that end: I ansuerit That I ves assurit he did vrong to the principall Stewart in Scotland fra the king and the prince donn, I am not to seall all Thearle speakis bot I knoe be his greatest counsellour This is his meaning. And abydes only anser from Scotland, and his healtie of a terrible disease, for all his head is contit, and four or fyue Inches of his harne paaune to fall furthe quhilk may be thoct a vonder, bot it is verie treu. Of this his resolution I thoct good to aduerthes your lordship, for seing for his maiesties cause ye haue imbarkit your self farrest agensit him, so if it hit rycht, it vill tuitche you farrest being furth of the country, seing in Scotland men preasses to hould out vho ar out. He hes during The tym of his seiknes maid a gown for a gentilewoman, a manison multis pantounes and schoes brondrit with pearles, deirer Then tua thousand Crounis, He causes the publict bruit gang, That Gibbie Lauder vho of lait is come to him hes brocht him vord, That his douchter is to be mariit vith your allya Thearle of Mortounes oye. Bot when hes vantit he sayes they ar for Scotland bot to be employit vtherways I leane to you to gess quhilk I am assurit is a lie, Bot he can not leue without vantage: for neuis I haue nane, nor nane is heir saue That companie who ves directit be Th' Archduk to England is retournit with the queineis anser That sche is content that commissioneris meit bot vher or when is not yet condiscendit one. Heir, all is accomodit to peace, And since euer I kneu good be evil, I never nether Did see nor heir a prince desyrus of peace-mak him self so peaceable, if he get not peace, without question. All his auin prouinces vill revolt: for They ar all of opinion That This disposition of the Low Countreys to Th' infant is only collusion to moue Holand to obedience. This is all I can vryt of neuis. I am sorie that vord is spred be evil affectit to our soueraigne That he amuses only in vriting commentaris one The apocalips. It is spokin to Th' Archduk, quhilk I may affirme to be treu I knen not vhat to say. The vork is good, bot Ther is carles aneu to vin ther leining Throu vryingt bookes. If his maiestie had of me a neu conception, I should send him a subiect should amuse him more profitably Than Th' apocalips, bot I think it be bot leis of men heir, vhom your lordship may suppose, I pray your Lordship send me vord of all neuis of Scotland for I haue hard nane saue it Th' English Embassadour send me thir fyne monethis: send them to Rome, for Jhone Gray vill not find me till I be at Lucerne in Allemaigne, The Duk of Savoya hes vrottin to Th' infant That he is to be befor Yeull in france to settle all thingis, quhilk ye vill knou when it comeis. So praying your Lordship to treatt my page veill, I commit your lordship to Godis holy protection. Bruxelles, this 3 of Nouember 1599.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, 24 Novr. 1600.

My Lord This 22 I receauit yours of daif 12. It maketh mention of one vrottin to me be a seruant of Th' Earle of Craufurd, quhilk in deid I neuer receauit. And That I vrot not more frequently, The cause ves as ye Judge, my traueling, for till I came bak from Germanie to fandres I neuer recidit 20 dayis in one pairt Together. I haue receauit one from his maiestie, vherby I perceaue his maiestie haith condemnit me vnhard, for The letter sayeth I haue bene bissie in maters aboue my raitch: and efter that definily sayeth he can not bot Think my bisnesis. If it ver to do his Maiestie serueice I say That I vill mak my raitch als Laige as any That euer his maiestie employit, bot for my bissines, I protest to God The greatest of it haith bene to keep my self from necessitie of hunger and could, for I defeie all prynces in earthe to say That I am in Ther danger of one chilling. And your Lordships self vrytis to me That sune seruicis them vith my ministerie, and haueing seruicit Ther turne Little re-gardes The instrument. I meruell ye should estime me so sillie: If euer my ministrie or seruice serue any prince, assur you I shall knou verie veill vherfor: bot I protest to God I neuer haue seruicit any prince bot my auin, since my being furth of the country. As if his maiestie hed not bene transportit vith Calumnie I should haue giuen him Rekonnung sufficiently. Bot vherin is This I could preiudge his seruice! I ves I neuer acquent vith any his dissingis, vhen knaifs Innothy beastis vhom he employit, Throw Ther foolish cariage abansit his name, Then becaus it may be I haue better access to prynces then sune vthers hes, They seik to excuse Ther Innothyneis be me. I protest to God I haue bene eschaimit I think without a sooir of tymes, to heir Employments That foolis hes alledgit them to haue of his maiestie, yet I would not bissie my self to vryt all thois vaniteis, althocht I ves verie sorie for it, To craue all reportes it ver tedious, bot I would humbly beseik his maiestie chuse out the most apparent vher-with my name haith bene tuitchit, and if I cleir not my self of it, Then vse me not as he nou proponis, bot lyk a traitour, and in doing This he shall oblis me to his seruice, and he satisfiit pairtly of Th' impression he haith of me. Vher your lordship vrytis that the aduertismentis cometh from so good pairt, be God I say the aduertisers ar fals knaifs, and I shall abyde be it, and vher ye accompt The best pairtes, I am assurit they haue least good intelligence to send his maiestie, for me I am sorie for it, for if They had good or assurit intelligence They would not amuse his maiestie vith so frenulous lies of his auin poor subiectis. As for obeying his maiesties letter, I ves neuer of vther deliberation, for I came only heir to see my vyf and bairnes if the storme hed permittit, and if Restalrig hed send my letters as they ver derecit, I hed bene in France or nou. Bot that my retiring vill cleir me, it is folie. I haue sufficient preufe of the contrarie, for fyue yair befor my perting, I leuit in Scotland lyk a paysant, and yet I ves euer vrongously calumniat, and his maiestie incensit agensit me, and now I intrudit my self in a monastere, vher I protest to almightie God I medlit neuer vith estait, yet all anaillis not. So if I would become a monk I knou it vill not serue the tornre. Yet I shall obey, and shall serue vher euer ther is varres in Europe, for I vill get a horsmans pay, and be God I vill tak it, for that vill mak me leue, and the sicht vill giue me contentment, and ther, deuill a man Ther is vith vhom I can deall: If this can not serue, in conscience I knou not vhat vill. As for to desyr my freindis to procur my retourniing, I am for to pray them in many thingis befor that, for if my auin deliberation hed bene to come heame, I would not haue socht leue, seing I ves not contremandit, and hes maid me neuer affrait I shall ones vryt to your Lordship befor my perting, and shall obey his maiestie, and euer remaine your Lordships louing freind, Chillinghame this Gray.

To his verie honorable freind My Lord Secretary to his Maiestie of Scotland.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, 9 Dec. 1600.

My Lord I content my self verie veill vith the reasons content in your letter for not acquainting me vith any the misreportes maid of me, and renderis your Lordship heumle Thankis for your pleyderie for my innocence, I hoyp to let you see your pleyderie to haue bene in a verie honest cause, as at lenth I haue vrottin to his maiestie, quhilk I doubt not he vill impert to you. So vhen ye heir it, ye vill see vthir I haue vrottin as one vho little regardeth all that is spokin, seing I best knou my auin deportments. Bot I vill not insist in This. So fare as is requisit for to come to your knowledge, receaue from patrik quhytlan my couising vhom please credit. As tuitching my freindis, of all I complaine not, for I haue sune als honest and als louing as any Scottisch borne, bot in deid of my father and sune vthers I haue hed sufficient preufe of vnkindnes. As for That regret your Lordship alledgis both your self and Them to haue, That I am Caryed from a desyr to settle my self and to leue quyet, Think not my lord That I am That sensles, but I haue a desyr as any in Earth hes, bot all men knoueth not my difficulteis. It is not on the triffle I haue, That quyet leining can do my tourne, and if I should leine longer in that sort, I discredit my self perpetually, Not bot That I intend alwayis to be a Scottisman, and all the Caire I haue in Earth hou To be it, vith my auin honour and contentment of my freindis. As for my fathers cariage, my lord think not That it vill mend villingly, for he hed neuar a caire yet ether of bairne or house, and if I hed takin rigourously The benefit of the laues,

I neidit not to haue bene pindit with him as I haue bene, bot let maiters work as shall please God. I am neuer to appeir Inthankfull for my generation. In the maiter of the teindis of Bagillo it is reasons ye hed your awin with the better. And for the fischings of bruchtie, Robert flescher vrytis That my man mistuk it, he spak he alledgys of the teindis only. Bot this I all remit to my retourne, for ye shall chuse no layis men in our Contranerseis. Remembering aluays This vord That villiam Grey prefeins not vye to unit his conquies in my heritage, he shall repent it, if I leine, for he hes prouen ingrat. According as I shall heir I shall accommode my affaires, and remittis me in all to the berar,

To his honorable freind my Lord
Secretary to his Maiestie.

King James VI. to the Master of Gray, 14 Dec. 1600.

Trustie and weilbeloued we grete yow wele, we haue receaued your letter Chillinghame the 9th of December instant, and where ye write that for our contentment ye wald retire your self out of England, we think if ye be disposed according to your letter, that your retreat can be in no part els better nor in Scotland, for comming as ye write vpon your awin perill, if they be calumnies that haue bene hether to layed against yow, clearing your self of them and giuing vs prooffe of your affection to serue vs, we cannot bot think well of yow, neyther can we think but as ye write your greatest well may be expected at your handis wherof ye sall rest assured if your deportementis bipast be as ye write, and your intention like wise continue hereafter, for as we will not be ingrate to any, and speciallie to our awin, who by their good desert merite fauour, Sa will we punishe mar rigorously the misbehaviour of them who of bounden dewtie are most oblished, thus not doubting of your disposition to be suche as ye write, we think your returning hame to be the surest maner to cleare yow of all bygone imputations, and to enable yow to giue vs prooffe of your affection in time comming, we committe yow to God, from Halyrudhous the xliii of december, 1600.

James R.

Gif ye be able to do me sic service at this time as ye grie hope of, ye may asure your selfe not onlie of my good will, but of a rewarde worthie of your service, for as I haue euer bene to all my good subiects, I wilbe glader of your doing well then your selfe can be.

of Gray, 14 december 1600.

Lord Balmerino to the Master of Gray 15 Dec. 1600.

My lord I receaued your letter from Patrik Quidtlan and conferred with him anent his credit. I haue since delt with his maiestie, quha wald be glade that quhat hes bene said to him heretofore of your practises sould proue false, and that all your dealing in tyme coming sould tend to his maiesties honour and your awin standing, quhairof he is induced to take some greater hold by your last letter, wherof ye sall herewith receaue answer.
As to my aduise in thir maters, blood and many other obligations bindis me to viss that your defens wer possible, but I am in that misceance quia tam misere cupio vt credere non valeam, better ye had neuer taken any thing in hand nor to vndertake and not effectuate.
Pardon me to speak as I think, because I see the danger.
And albeit I can weill imagine that the folkis ye haue ado with may perhappis be of the inclination ye informe, yet it may be your our greate credulitie do you harme, the turne not succedand as ye haue proiected, the hail inconuenient redound to your selfe. As ye think in your letter ye are not sensesles, sa think others haue some feling. It may be your particular dealing with greate personages hes giuen you a light vsne to vs quha walkes in this darknes of affaires, bot be ware least the ouer greate cleernes of the obiect offend not the sense, and that ye being disappointed get not the stakes to hold. For as the merit wilbe the greater and worthier of the ware if it succed, so if it fail, it will draw with it a remembrance of all bygone informations.
This is not to discourage yow from prosecuting so honest an interprise, but frendlie to entreate yow to go warie therein, in quihk doing, I sall enforce my selfe by all good means to furdre all in me lyes, the contentment of all parties, by some good service to his maiesties honour, and assurance of your well rather by your ministerie then of any other, His maiestie luikis that ye will cum hame as ye think expedient, and when ye please, to the quihk, or nixt occasion remitting the rest,

I remaine allwayes

Your Lordships verie assuerd frind.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino. 16 Dec. 1600.

My Lord I receanit This last of your lettres, befor the receipt thereof, I ves alreidy on my Journey, And am glad Therby to vnderstand, that his Maiestie opinion in theis bruittes spred of me is at least suspence.
As for my desinges, taking as I haue propomit them, I see not vhy your Lordship should be miscreant so deiply, as ye affirme ye ar, for all I haue said is this, That I can serue his Maiestie in his greatest deseing in als good offices, as any subject he haith; uth is verie possible, and in it I shall tak no thing in hand, bot verie ad-uyseltly: for I know what it is to promeis and not to performe to a prince: And for me, I vill promeis no thing without a sufficient ground, nether shall credulitie abuse me, nor any brichtnes of Th'object offend my sensos.
In deid, if I kneu not als mikil as many vthers, be dealing with great personages as ye vryt, and cheify in This point wherin I offer to serue his maiestie, I might be accounted verie sensesles, bot I knou not, That in alledging my self not sensesles I did vrong to the feiling or merite of any vther, as vould appeir be your Lordships letter, for I am not so presumptuous to think That I am of better capacite or yet of equall to many: Bot I shall in this proceeding carie my self so, God-willing, that at least, no blame shall licht on me, for it shalbe in his maiesteis option, haueing hard, to deall or not, and not dealing, it seasais of vill: and dealing, his case shalbe his marchants, and I shall not excoide commandement, And the stakis shall remaine with the auner, To vryt further in particular it is not necessari, bot that I haue said to Patrik Quidtlan, I am able to performe. He alledgis in his lettres, That my good brother kneu what he had to say from me. He is abused, my good brother and vyf bothe, kneu what my lettres vrotin to his Maiestie did beare, bot what I villit him for to impert to your lordship none in earthe kneu nor knowis At least from me.
I shall from Londoun vryt oueis agene, and shall send or then go for my coffres to Paris. And then shall God willing see you, haueing nou his Maiesteis varrand so to do. In the mid tym shall assuredly remaine,

Your Lordships verie louing freind to serue you Master of Gray.

Neucasfell 21 December 1600.

To my verie honorable lord and freind my Lord Secretary to his Maiestie.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, 13 January 1601.

My Lord I promisit in my last to vryt from Loundoun.
Sume subiect haith occurrit, at that tym, I did not look for. At my retourning hither I fand all I had vrottin to his maiestie, all I baid said, and many thingis I nether vrot nor said, giuein vpe to The quene heir: yet
I thank God it haith not done me the herme perhaps bothe Th' Advertisers, and Ther informars thoctit it should, for all I vrot, and all I said, I abyd be it, and shall in grace of God performe, at his maiesties pleasur.
I haue maid a seute to his maiestie That it may please him grant me a supercedere of my hornings fra my coming in Scotland for eight or ten monethes. If his maiestie shall propone it to your lordship, be a furtherer of it. And if not, I pray you be a procurer of it.
His maiestie haith sume reason for him, for he is addettit to me be allowance of his escheiker in far greater sommes then I am at home for. Yet I am to be as I haue bene euer, a gentle crauer till God prouyd better. I haue bene and am yet verie seik. Yet I am of mynd to go to france for my coffres, and to tak leine of my freindis in it. In The mid tym, If I can haue This supercedere, I vill immediatly God willing address my self homewart. Receaue sutch aduises as occurrit.
And hold me ever

Your Lordships Louing freind to serue you

M^r of Gray.

Loundoun 13 Jan. 1601.

To his verie honorable freind My Lord secretary to his Maiestie.

Send this to my vyf I pray your Lordship.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, 22 May 1601.

My Lord I hed wrottin sonner, bot I lookit to haue sene you at your awin honss Saturday nixt the 23, Nou

EARL OF MORAY.

MORAY.

this day my Lord of Loundores hes wrottin to me That his Maiesitie sent for him, and commandit him in his name vryt to me to be no whither from my ain house till he send for me, quhilk my Lord Loundores affirms wilbe within 4 or 5 dayis at farrest, for The quhilk I have wrottin to my Lord Home to keip his maiesities dyet, for I wische he wer with The king at my repairing to him. I have sindry tournes wherin I was to have aduysit with my Lauers, bot nou I mon differ. I have proclaimit my fathers breifeis to be seruit The 12 of Junii, for anoiding This maiter of Craufurdes persente; for That is The actioun in my absense may herme most, and nou it is no Thing when I may do in it my self. The nixt is This action of Dempster, wherin I understand in my absense Th' Erle of Mar kythit more depily, Then in deid I would have belseit he would for sik a knaif, bot it may be he forgot The benefit, when the Iniurie will yet be recent in my breist, so a man ould spit or he loup. Aluays to put me out of trouble, and my house, I request your Lordship send for him, and sound him, if he wilbe content of The principall sounne, I will giue it him with some consideration at your lordships sicht, if he will not, I shall ether reduce The comprysing and mak him lose his lyf, or it shall cost me the eight chalders he hes comprysit. In all our wther tournes, I have couenent my freindes and takis ein The lykliest ordre I can, hou euer Things shall fall furthe, as your lordship shall knou at meiting, particularly I mete at lenthe with The Comptrollour as I wrot to you in my last, and hed sindrie proposis in hand: He efter conference hed of your Lordship willit me to assur bothe my self and your Lordship, That he wes and should be as fare your freind as any Scottis horn. The occasion wheroun This conference greu, I differ to meiting, aluays I see ye haue bene riuen at Court with sune. The berar at his retourne from Dungleas will tak your Lordship's ansuer. And I am,

Your Lordships to serue you

Mr. of Gray.

Huntly 22 Maii 1601.

(Dorso.) To his speciall honored Lord, My Lord Secretarie to his Maiesitie.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, 8 June 1601.

My Lord, I receauit your Lordships together with sume letters from England and Sir George Homes concerning me. I would be glaid to understand what his maiesities meaning is in sending Sir George to my Lord Home and to your Lordship for my letters wrottin to him, Hon deip he can sift me, I wilbe The more glaid, for he shall euer find les subiect to quereil my actiounne. Bot vher his Maiesitie constantly affirmeth That I receauit in England 300 li. stg., I will speik to you treuly, be God he is ill Informit as ye shall knou at meiting. In deid I micht have receauit further Then That sounne, Bot I would stand so cleir That in deid I receauit it not: And I The greater fool, for it is no fault The king being nether in ware nor ill termes with England yet that will try as all the rest: for I protest to God I borronit siluer of two handes in England not yett payit and brocht not in Scotland 40 Scottis li. with me of all kynd of money. As for Th' Earle of Mar, Let him say what he please, ye sau I haue warrand for all I said it is treu at his perting and befor he hes maid promeis to freinde me more Then freindly aneuch Hon since his retourne, he hes performit I am not to accuse, nether any of his actiouns in his negociation. I accompt me far oblist to you for your fre and freindly letter, which is the witness of menis myndes, And it is easie to perceaua a plaine letter from a sophistical meaning. I am at This tym vnable to requyt my freindes, Bot I shall not sit doun, nor in end preufe ingrati. This I promeis, and euer to remaine your Lordships affectionat freind to serue you.

Mr. of Gray.

Huntley 8 Junii 1601.

I differ all Englisch newis till meiting.

(Dorso.) To his speciall honorable freind, My Lord Secretarie to his Maiesitie.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, 21 June 1601.

My Lord in deid I dayly expected word, for my hopping dayly to kiss his maiesities handes maid me that I could medle In feu of my ain tournes. As for my negociation in Florence, It is certane I had no negociation, bot That I delinerit a letter of his maiesities to the Great Duk, wherof his maiesitie receauit ansuer In Dundie from my wyf. So I merueill depily his maiesitie should not haue rememberit better, bot That I delt ether in alliance or any wther maiter In particular, or That

The Duk said farther to me Then is contained in my letter, I giue your Lordships full assurance it shall preufe verie fals: and I shall cause Cavalier Vinta secretair to the Duk bothe send The letter I gene and all passit betuene Them and me, if it be requisit. As tuitching Goury They do me extraordinarie wrong, for I wes in Flandres when I hard it, and I protest to God when I tuk leine of Th' archduk I tould him frely as The maiter hed past on the first sicht of the maiter, And if I hed bene so beastly as to haue offendit in 20 pointes, yet The seruice I did him in That point, bothe in france, flanders and England cheifly, might haue excusit many of them. Bot I will dryue away all Thir wuiteis Lyk smook in wind. All farther to meiting,

And am Your Lordships to serue you

Mr. of Gray.

Your Lordship haid reasone to say ye neuer geue me a letter to the Duk of Florence, for it wes Mr. Jhone Lindsay geue me 3 and my patent, wherof I shall geue Rekening, and shall render one of them. Huntly 21 Junii 1601.

(Dorso.) To his speciall honored Lord, my Lord Secretarie to his Maiesitie.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino (no date).

My Lord I receauit yours with my supercedere inclosed. The cheif maiter in absense lykly to trouble me is This of Dempster, seing your lordship is not freindly with him I shall use . . . expedient for alreidy I receauit The thesaurers . . . hes maid ansuer. This night I haue re . . . Mr. Secretary Cecyll letters of the 18 quhilk day Th Earle of Mar tuk Journay. It wer long to wryt all, Bot The letter is freindly as your lordship shall see. Th' Earle of Mar tuk leine once and obtent no Thing. Efter The quene send for them and hes only grantit 2000 l. in augmentatioun of his pension, and That with many cautious, and Efter This If The king change not course, sche hes protestit sche will not continou The augmentatioun. As your lordship will see by The letter sche hes wrottin her self to the king Sche insisit mikill with them of Ther Intelligence with Essex, bot They still denyit, quhilk sche tuk not weil: for sche knou all particularis as ye shall knou at meiting: Bot The letter is of tuo scheittis of paiper. This far I pray your lordship That If ye enter with the king ye tak no knowledge of The author, bot If Mar be not yett come, seime not to be ignorant. I shall Goduilling follou your aduys, for in deid it is treu. This I haue only send your lordship to Th' end ye may let the king see That your intelligence extendis as far as Th' embassadours despatch, for in feu words ye knou all That is done, and ye shall see The particulaire at greater leneth at meiting. Mr Secretary hes bene seik of a disease in his eis This long tym. I wrge not to haue but I am assurit I will get it immediately efter The Embassadors retourne. This is

Your Lordships freind to serue you

Mr. of Gray.

(Dorso.) To his speciall honorable freind
My Lord Secretarie to his Maiesitie.

The Master of Gray to King James VI. (undated).

Bot I shall settle doun all particular occurrences to your maiesitie secretair, as I would be glaid to serue you ein in all I could from my hairt. Bot that seruice done vnto your maiesitie abyeth The sensur of so many: And it is hard to content euerie manis sensis, vitch many tymes haith maid me forbear, for fear of wrong construction. Bot if I haid your ain Judgement to content only, I should neuer onit any occasion, wherin I could serue you; for I could satisfie ein as your self haid commandit me. In this ye do your self double wrong, for ye knou more Then all the subiectis ye haue in earth without all flatterie. I feir I see a fore the hand. I am in this seruice to haue many ennemis, for all who haue present imployment ar to be ennemis, and all who be Ther desyrus of imployment, besyd all opposites to the course, And in England all who did serue The quene of Intelligencies as alreidy doeth appeir, for if so it please you, I am of opinion to bring your selfe to better intelligence with vthers, Then euer ye haid in your Lyfe. In vitch doing intelligenciers vill lose Ther Latin. All The benefit I haue to craue for a beginning is a supersedere of all hornings fra my arryuell in Scotland, for eight or ten monethes as your maiesitie shall find good: Vitch I desyr to be done by your self, only to Th' end I be no manis obligit, bot your ain, and I shall in That tym do diligence to red my self of all hornings. Sume reasone your Maiestie haith, for ye ar indebit to me be allowance of your escheiker in greater soumes Then I an. Yet I am to be a verie gentle Crauer till God prouyd better fortune. And shall neuer spaire the litle rest of my fortune to do your Maiestie Seruice. If either heir or beyond sea your Maiestie vill haue me to do any thing for you, befor I shall haue The honour to see you, Let me knou it by a note of your awin, That none knou, and if ether it decouer or be not veill dou, Then think me the knaif. I pray God preserue your Lyf from Inexpected trescherie, and all thingis vill fraime better nor ye look for, bot princes be in greatest perrell of all men in earth, for That men who Loueis Them dare not many tymes acquent Them with their awin dangers. I tak leine in all humilitie, praying God to send your Maiestie contentment: I am and so shall die.

Postill.

Please your Maiestie I accusit Sir Hary Cromcour in deid That he should haue said to you That I maid offe to the pope of the prince his Education: my vfy vrot to me and spak to me to get the maiter tryt for that your Maiestie spak it. I haue sene Th' aunsuer, And I affirme vho euer said it with humble leine of your maiestie he is a leer and so shall preufe. As in all reportit of me.

Sir William Yures haith in deid grantit speiking with you, yet I pray your maiestie ein as ye haue done in it at This tym still to deny lichtly, to Th'end no fault appeir on your pairt, and ether by my nixt, or at meiting I shall schau you all That maiter.

A neu traittie is nou in hand with spaine and Th' Archduk: yet it haith greatt opposition and many enemies, bot all The parties ar inclynable to sweare.

Your Ma^{ties} most humble and more obedient subiect and seruaut

Mr of Gray.

(Dorso.) To his Maiestie of Scotland.

King James VI, and Lord Balmerino to the Master of Gray, 11 November 1600.

Trusty and welbeloued, We receaued your letter wherby ye desired to receane our commandement concerning your proceedingis quhilk ye wald enforce your selfe to follou, for aunsuer wherof we assure you in respect of the manyfold aduertismentis giuen to vs of your ouer greate busynes in maters aboue your reache, and that this comming to remayne so neare our bordouris can carie no good presumption howsoeuer ye may be innocent of thingis layd to your charge, it is therfor our will that with all goodlie expedition ye retire your selfe oute of the boundes of England to France and there take your residence in Orleans, or any other parte at your pleasour distant from thewea cost for a certayne space during our will, quhill we see by experience and your quiet behauiour your more willing affection to our service then we haue bene informed of hir times past, Vtherwayes we cannot bot take your greate busynes in euill parte, and be dailie more confirmed in the verity of the reportes of you quhill from all partes come daylie to our eares. Thus not doubting but our will shalbe a sufficient warrant to yow w^e wishe yow if ye intend to enioy any benefit vnder vs, to follow those courses that may be to your awin honour and our contentment, from Halyrudhouse the xi of November 1600.

James R.

My lord since I writ with a seruaut of my lord of Crauford aunsuer vnto those quhilk I receaued by James Grahame in Julie was a yeir, I had no letter from yow, quhilk I ascriued to your peregrination being in Italie and other partes wher ye had not the commodity as ye wald. And now being directed be his maiestie to send yow aunsuer of a letter of your awin, quhilk pleis heirwith receaue, I wald not omit to accompany the same with ther few lines, wherby ye sall vnderstand that as I wait to yow before his Maiestie is more and more incensed against yow, being informed of your dealing in many purposes nothing to his maiesties eyther wele or honour. The aduertismentis comes of so good parte that it is hard not to credit them, and except ye be transported from the opinion I haue sene yow in they are not likely to be trew. The particulars are so many and langsome that they were tedious to write, but in short, for the good will I haue euer professed to your selfe and your house and that coniunction of blood that is betwixt our bairnes, I pray you obey his Maiestie retire your selfe oute of the world for a season till your parte and other mennes doing may be sene, for I hope they serue them self of your ministerie that their turne being serued they haue small regarde to the instrument, and others continewes their credit by calumniating of yow when it may be they bewray his maiesties seruice them selues. Your retreatre will make ther thingis manifest and continuing your selfe in obeying his maiestie, and neyther for good nor euill meddling yow with any matter of estate salbe your first beat. And when it sall please his maiestie to giue yow accesse vnto him, ye shall seeallis layed against yow and by whome. And albeit I haue earnestlie prayed that his maiestie suld put yow to a tryall, he hes refused will first ye giue obedience to his command, by retiring your selfe to some solitude in France for a short space. In doing wherof as ye will liberat your selfe of many calumnies, so will it giue place to your frendis to procure your returne. Thus not doubting but ye will consider of his Maiesties will as apperteynes, and follow your awin weill, I sall alway continu at my vttermost.

Your verie louing frend Elphinstoun.

(Dorso.) Copie of his Maiesties letter and myne to the Maister of Gray. xi Novembris 1600.

The Master of Gray to King James VI. (not dated).

Sir, At my retournig hither The first reconten I haid ves an aduertisment send to The quene of my vrying to your maiestie, and of dyuers great offes I haid maid you. In deid sume I knew of my awin, and yet the most part all inuentiouns, for me I caire not vbat They can aduertis, for in place to disgrace me, They haue done me great honour, and haue gretfully augmentit my credit, I can not sente so mutch for your maiestie heir nor speik so far to your aduantage, but the quene vill Think The better of me. And in demanding many Thingis, I assure your maiestie I vill obtaine part: If I do not all I can for you my naturall prince, ye thinking of me, bot as of any indifferent subiect, it is not lykly I should deall veill for any vther: Yet I am sorie That your maiestie should be so euill visit, for this, and The deconerie of this Gentleman, vho of good vill did hazard in priuat to speik with your maiestie, as nou him self haith deposit, engendreth Jalousie in The quene: maketh your freindis inclynable to alienation, and confirmeth your ennemis in Their opinion vho euer gene Th' Aduertisement of Th'one geue it in lyk maner of Th' uther. In deid I see sume ther be most desyrous for to insinuat Them selvis heir, for The seruice they can do Ther, And I am most desyrous for to reinsinuat my self with your maiestie for the desyr I haue to serue you heir: yet reasone vould it should cost them Ther prentise fie, as it haith done me, befor They come to great perfection heir. I in all humilitie beseech your maiestie as a dutifull subiect, an euin in remembrance of that loue wherwith oneis your maiestie did honour me, to tak the course All princes to this aige vho euer perseuinit did tak, A doing in your awin important affaires your self, and not Think euerie man capable of all, nor to impart all to any one, bot to euerie man according to his capacite: And let euerie one aunsuer for his awin chairdge. In this doing, euerie man shall bear his awin bourding, and the knaif decernit from the honest man. This course taketh The quene of England. This doeth the King of france, and seemeth to do no thing, yet he doeth all: This did the lait king of Spaine, to omit all precedentes of tym past. As for the pointes ves falsly allegit I did not propone first ves That I should procure your maiestie to be proclaimit second persone A maiter In deed I neuer thoct, for the quene haith oft said to me, sche vill neuer couit her awin Throt. An vther that I promisit Mr. Secretary should be yours, vbat I said in That I do confirme it, That if your maiestie shall fall agene In sound dealing with the quene, I assure you Mr. Secretary vill prefue one of The best freindis ye haue in England, bot look neuer to haue him vtherways, for I neuer sau any heir about The quene, haue hes hopp to futur fortune Then he, And I Think in my Conscience he Thinkis The present bourding great, for the fabrique of the body is no vavis Correspondent to The capacite of the mynd. As for all vther Thingis I ether vrot or yet That Their insinuatours haith allegit I did vryt, I abyd by them all: for if your maiestie fall agene In sound course and good intelligence with her, I think I may moue her, neuer to see you vont necessitously, bot to preueine all necessitie: bot That sche is, or vilbe of This disposition, without A meiting on your pairt, and a sufficient tryell of The same, I think in deid I, nor no man in England may affirme it. And to Th' end I be not sune day accusit for villall Indentifules, I must craue pardone for to vryt my awin opinion frely, and I wish it ver trompettit Throu Europe, That your maiesties only veill is to tak a sound dealing with The quene heir and estait: for albeit The quene of her self neuer geue you benefit, yet your aantage is great, to haue a free familiaritie betuene you and The subiectis of England, vher nou ye ar as a stranger prince to them, and in vors case. And if all The wourld shall see That she loueis you, and shall vse you in an vther sort Then costumably sche doeth her nichtbour princes, and fare vtherwayis Then hithertill haith done her prediceours, yours: Albeit it be not to proclaim you second persone actually, yet ther is neuer a subiect in England so blind bot shall see clerly it is in the quene a tacite consent That so ye are: for it is of neu That theis tuo nations be so freindly, and it could not be, nor haue bene so long bot on our pairt for the benefit ve hopp to receane, and on Thers heir, for it They think to bestou: And I do Think in my conscience if the quene kneu to die presently, for all that is past sche would leaue you her air in testament, vhat I haue for me I will not vryt in particular, seing Counsell is not only so euill keipit, bot imputations forget: This I will vryt That I haue hard her say, sounding to that propose, That I looik neuer to haue hard out of her mouth. I would Sir let you know my opinion particularly of all the princes in Europe Bot seing I am a stranger, and must leine amongst Them, till I know hou to leine at home I forbeare. Bot the conquest of the hairtes of the subiectis of England is aible to profit you more Then all The princes in The wourld, for vho of them would, may not, and vho may, will not. The Conquest of the hairtes of The subiectis of England is easie for you, ein in The quenes auin tym. In dealling kyndly and naturally with her self, and by good government of your auin subiectis, and estait of Scotland, to serue for a mirrouir to Them heir. At my retourning heir I fand dyuers letters from beyond sea for me, and I perceane amongst vther Thingis, They haide bene verie hardy informit of Gouryes death: I haue retournit ansuers verie particularly in that point, and haue vrotin, no man can better tell the treuth for if I haid found he haid not deseruit his death, at least I should, for bloodis cause, haue bene silent. I haue lykuais satisfit The quene and Counsell heir fully in that point, for albeit I hard litle saue from my cousing my Lord Home, yet I gessit at the treuth ein from the beginning, as my Conscience moueth me. So Mr. Robert Brus's conscience and myn, as our beleueis, ar discrepant. Adnyse is come heir That Bothuell is In This Armie witch cometh from Spaine, bot I Think not. Aluays I shall by my nixt adurtis your maiestie hou he is, and vhair, and of his offres maid in Spaine, vherof I am to receaue a Copie. The peace is concludit betuene The king of france and D. of Savoya by the Cardinall Aldobrandino his mediation. And The armie of Italiens and Spaingolles appointit for the varres of Sanoy, shall go Into flandres.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino, (undated).

My Lord I vryt this to your self: I first merruelt That in your Letters ye vryt definitely to me, as if all ver treu is blasonit of me: nixt that your Lordship for your auin priuat satisfaction did not acquent me with sune the most apparent reportes maid of me. I see be my Lord Homeis letter and vthers, The cheif is that I should deall in England heir for peice with Spaine. In general I sueir to your Lordship as I shall anser to Godis Judgement, since my being furth of Scotland I haue neuer delt with any to his maiesties disauantage. And this in particular, accompt me the Inhonnestest flesch in earth if euer sik maiter ves propoinit to me, or if euer I propoinit it to any flesch in earth. It is treu I kneu becaus I came from flandres to England and ves veilcom in bothe, That men did gess it ves for traithing in that maiter, bot all ves bot gessing. And as in this, so in many, Th' adurtismentes comeis in Scotland gessingis. If I haid found his maiestie in an vther disposition, in the dissing he would faistest be at, I could haue second you better then any subiect he hes leiuand at this hour, bot I will let them vork. I am not at this tym to moue your Lordship deall with his maiestie in any point. Bot I promise this be the freindschip I haue avoinit with you That I shalbe fre of all princes! althocht I should leine The more soberly till sik tym as ye adurtis me that ether Ther is no hope of Reconciliation, and Then I will do for my self, or Then That his maiestie is satisfit with me, And in the mid tym shall continou my self capable to serue him in that point vhen ye find meit. This is all for the present.

Nou my Lord I can vryt in particular no thing to you touching Th' estait of my priuat affaires, for as yet I am ignorant of them, bot I shall vryt vith Patrik quhytiau. I heir my father and sune kinsmen ar misreporters of me, as for my father he is pardonable, bot for my kinsmen if I haid bene dead borne Ther memorie haid bene bariit: Consider them all, and vhat I haue done for them, and your lordship will think if they do not deutie to me they ar les vorth to any. I vryt this, for that I heir they speik to nane more then to your self. Bot vhen all Thir stormes ar past, I am to be more steadable to you and yours, then all That appertenis me in earth can be, and ye ar to haue of me at least your bairnes further honour. Robert flescher vrytis bot, not be tongue he bade the berar schou me that your Lordship haid sommonit him, anent the fischingis of Bruchtie, I can vryt no thing one incertaintie, bot in my absence let no sik maiter be, for vhat ever is your interest, Ther shall neid no process for it. Robert fleschers interest is bot small: feu In Scotland can informe you of that maiter. I haue all that auld Balombe could do vho haid the title, and all that this auld man could do, and for fyue hundreth l. might haue hed the vrytis delynerit be this young Laird: So the maiter is not as is suppoit, Bot however it be, your Lordship shall haue measur if it come to that, And in absence Let not your name and myn be hard. Th' erle of Craufurd hes summonit me for nonentrees of Leitfie, till I see my vrytis I haue vrotin to my advocatis to protract. All this comes throu my fathers nilfulness, for lying out of the land. Bot efter sight of my vrytis, I shall tak best ordre I can vith it.

The Master of Gray to Lord Balmerino (undated).

My Lord seing your Lordship oblisiss me so fare be your freindly adurtisment and yet forder for that your Lordship hes ansuerit so for me to his maiestie, deutie reciprale comandis me to let you knou particularly my auin deportemente, And first as twitching The erle Bothuell, The treuth is Ther is no man in earth in vors terms, for at my first coming heir Th' earle heiring of it, becaus sune opinion they hed of me in flanders, he tuk in hand to cause me do vhat ever they would haue me. And one This promiseis They geve him lyurance of fyue hundreth crounes to mak his voyage hither, and fyftein hundreth to gine me. Coming hither I ves adurtisit of all from flanders, so I refusit to speik vith him, efter he hed stayit heir ten dayis I being at soupper with the Bischop of Boullougne: He enterit and in presence of God I kneu him not till he spak, vhen he spak he says to me, brother This is not The first botche cloutit I hene giuen you I ansuerit deuil hene my saul my lord if I receaue it at This tym for I ves not content of his forme. Efter entering in conference he scheu me a letter of the archdukes, and that Cardinall Androes hed directit him to me vith offe of fyue hundreth crounes in the moneth and fyftein hundreth crounes he brocht me. I ansuerit I ves come out of Scotland vith the king my masteris licence, and would enter in societie vith him nor nane bot be his maiesties knowledge, vtherwayis in his Lordships particulaire I hed no evill will. And for to receaue pensiou of any prince in europ I would not, nether would I imbarik my self for a fidlers vadge, in all as I shall anser to God That past betuene him and me, and I neuer sau him bot That tym be surpise at my soupper. He remanit sune tym efter This quhill one houris and bying of trittle tratlis he spendit all the siluer, for his auin excuse Vhen he vent bak he said to the Cardinall That the siluer offerit me ves litle, and for pensiou I would not accept of it, for the quhilk cause I refusit to come cheifly for that his altesse hed not vrotin to me. Capitane Gray and Bonitoun being then in flanders, The'arle Bothuell obtenis the Cardinals Letter desyring me to come down, and to accept of The litle soume he hed send me only for a viatik, quhilk ves Thre thousand crounes, for becaus The'arle hed said That I accomptit The soume litle The Cardinall augmentit it double. He haueing The vther fyftein hundreth crounes, he bocht siluer vessail vith it, so that he directit Capitane Gray vith his altesse letter and only sevin hundreth crounes, The rest he said of Thre Thousand could be redy at my coming ther. Vhen Capitane Gray came I ves offendit at him That he sould ether haue receauit letters or siluer to me vithout my knowledge. So I nether would receaue The siluer, nor yet Th'earles Letter In deid I red the Cardinals Letter, And all I van one That ves That I geue Capitane Gray fyfte crounes of my auin to carie bak The siluer and Th'earles Letter, The siluer a great part of it he playd at cartis be The vay, The rest The earle would not receaue, and Thocht to hene slane Capitane Gray as he alledges becaus of a letter I vrot not to The Cardinall bot to a secretaire vith whom I ves aquent, at my last being heir, quhilk bure That I would not presume to answer his altesse letter, bot prayit him to scheu his altesse That I visit not to mak my barganes be borroit mouthes, and that no earle nor vther man hed that pover over me as Thearle hed vantit, and besocht his altesse That I hed not takin his offre to think veill of it, for I ves to serue no prince as yet, since this tym till within Thir tua dayis I never spak vith Capitane Gray. At my being in Boullouigne I spak vith this same secretaire for I red in Flanders, and then refusit as God shall judge me to speik vith The Cardinall, And schen the secretaire Th' abuse of the siluer to Th' end The earle should not alledge That I had recauit it. And in deid he ves see provokit That The Cardinall would not see him efter. So that I am assurit nixt The King and his vyf I am the flesch in earth he vould fainest be quyt of. If his maiestie hed vst my vyf in her litle tournes since my parting bot only as he vould haue done ane indifferent subiect, I sould heue decl. . . . The earle to . . . of france, flanders and England, for I could haue product a letter of his send to me from England quher he desyrit to haue intelligence, and That his necessitie hed compellit him to tak The course he hed done, bot he sould let That quene knou when tym seruit That he ves ane Englisman quihik sche knou only to be a lie. The moyen he visit in England ves be M^r Jhone Couilli. This is the treuth as I shall answer to God in his judgement. And a great pairt of this Bonitoun knou befor his parting, yet I am advertist That all thir taillis comeis be him, quihik I can not beleue, for he knouis the treuth and he dare not abyde be them nor yet no vther That hes spokin them. As for siluer I protest to God I am oblist to no prince in earth worth a feig, since my being out of the Country, nor shall not be heastely. Indeid if I see That his maiestie continnouis without my fault of evill disposition towards me, I protest to God I shall do as I hed never sein Scotland, nor bein borne in it, for I vill tak me to any lyf rather then to liue subiect to misreproche or tyrannie, I could do his maiestie better service then all thir bodyis That he employes, for he thinkis him Ritch enuech of intelligence when any litle trattertelis him the scrufe of a taill. And when the Laird of Veimis who is heir of great credit In deid, and of fare better vit, vrytes to him a rapsodie en Rablese, for me natural deutie bindis me to visch his maiestie veill and my country dulcedine natalis soli Bot all leiuand creature resents Them who dois Them euill, if they may. I conclued vith the page, if his maiestie vse me vtherways Then he hes done, I shall let him see I can serve him, If not althocht in sua patria nemo gratus, yet I shall God uilling, leue honorably fruth of it.

Manuel Count of Nassau to King James VI., 22 Feb. 1603.

Sire,

L'assurance que j'ay de la benevolence et faueur singuliere que de tout temps il a pleu a votre maieste me porter, et a ce qui me touche, m'a occasionné de m'adresser tant plus librement a votre maieste pour luy représenter certain affaire concernant ma ville de la Vere en l'Isle de Walcheren c'est Sire que ceulx du magistrat de madite ville m'ont puis naguerres fait entendre l'advertissement ou plustost la cominication qu'on leur a fait de transporter l'estaple des deures et marchandises Escossoises hors madite ville, et par ce moyen faire desloger hors d'icelle les marchans Escossois subiectz de votre Maieste, pour se retirer ailleurs, contra et au preiudice des accordz et concordatz cy devant dressez et passez entre les Rois de Escosse, et tres louable memoire predecesseurs de votre maieste, et les Seigneurs et magistrats de madite ville, Estant mesme cest affaire anisi que j'entens par aucuns peu affectionnez a madite ville, et menez par quelques passions particulières plus que par Raison conduit si auant qu'on auroit voulu persuader a votre maieste de donnez son consentement au transport de lestaple desloement et retraicte desdites marchands Escossois hors madite ville, or d'autant. Sire que jamais il n'apparoistra que les magistrats ou bourgeois d'icelle en aient donné la moindre occasion a vos dits subiectz. Mais lesdits magistrats ont tousiours par tous moyens et avec tout soing et debuoir requis, procuré l'entretenement des traictez et accordz susdits, et suinant ce non seulement recueilly les marchans Escossois avec toute honnestete et courtoisie, mais aussy rencontré, et leur fait jouir de tous les avantages franchises et immunitez que les subiectz de votre maieste ont peu desirer, et a quoy j'ay tousiours tenu bien soigneuse main, ainsi que je m'assure vous concederont librement. Cest cause que je supplie votre maieste bien humblement que me continuant, et aux miens voz faveurs acoustumees, votre bon plaisir soit de n'ajouter foy au sinistres rapports qu'on pourroit auoir fait a votre maieste de ce que mes subiects et bourgeois de la Vere se seroient comportez envers nos subiects autrement qu'il n'appertient ou par infraction des traictez et accordz susdits leur auroyent donne occasion d'offense, sans ouyr premierement les defenses de mesdits subiects, et que cependant riens n'y soit innoué, mais que le tout puisse demeurer en estat jusqu'es a ce que votre maieste aura moien, apres bonne et due information, d'y asseoir son Royall jugement, ce que je receurai volontiers a accroissement des obligations precedentes que j'ay a votre maieste, pour luy faire bien humble service, quand il luy plaira me honorer de ses Royaulx commandemen Et en cest endroit.

Sire Baisant bien humblement les mains de votre maieste je prie Dieu vous faire Regner longuement en tout bon heur et prosperité. De la Haye le 22^e de februar 1603.

Mons. de Vitry to King James VI. (undated).

The writer presents his two children, for the honour of kissing his Majesty's hands, as having been born in the house of Chatre in his kingdom, and now for the first time leaving the land of their birth; also offering to his majesty such a present as the writer, a gentleman who in the service of the King of France exercised the profession of arms and hunting, could offer, knowing that his majesty was fond of these exercises.

Letter from King James VI. to Lord Balmerino his Secretary of Scotland and keeper of the Palace of Holyroodhouse. Dated from Hampton Court 26 September 1605.

The King has heard that the South yard of the Palace of Holyrood is wholly without dressing and repair, and that sundry of the great trees growing about the same had been cut down by the late gardener, who was so careless of his charge as to remain in England without appointing a substitute to the dressing of the garden, quhairby againe the tyme of our cumming this nixt "yeir to our palace thair, it can nocht bot bringe ane deformite to that hail place of our residence, to sie "any place in the view of our windowis so unformall "and ewill favoured for laike of dressing, and thairfore "our speciall pleasure and will is that ye caus presentlye "sum sufficient and skillfull gardener to undertak the "dressing and guyding of the said yairde, and that the "dew fies and dewytes that hes been usually yeirly "payed to the former gardiner may be heirafter payd "to that new gardiner quhome ye sall appoynte to "haile the charge of the keiping and dressing that "garden."

Certaines demandes of the States Generall of the Lowe Countries and Monsieurs answeare thereunto.

These will be understood from the following specimens—

2. "That the freedoms prehemiances and liberties may be conserved."

His highness will maintaine the freedoms liberties and preuiledges whiche in former times they haue enjoyed.

3. That the religion which they terme fredde may be to eache one freely permitted and universally maintained.

His H. will mainteyne the same as it hathe been agreed by the State.

There are six demands and answers in all.

Memoriall of news and reports. [1582.]

The paper first refers to reports to a conflict in America between three brethren on the one side and their uncles sons, and to the victory by the Queen of Englands ships over some of those of the King of Spaine which were bringing home much treasure. "The King of Spaine hes tint in thir shippis thrie costlie materiell crouns, curioslie vroicht be the maist ingenius and handy craftsmen in all thar pairtis, quhair of ane vas of massy gold veyand neir tua stane vecht; The second vrocht with gold and fyne oriant diamentis, and the third with gold diamentis, perlis, sapheiris, and agattis of incredible vertew, and fyne fedderis quihik wes jugit to be the most pretius of all. It wes beleft giff all haid succedit veill that ane of thir suld haif bene send to thir pairtis of Scotland.

The Pope haid send ane number of Catholik suldours to Yrland to the ayd of the Spanishe King quha ar holie kyllit, ye nocht on eschapi, to schaw the Poipe for relieff of thair puir saullis aither out of pagatorie or hell.

It is beleft that this lang nowing of our Mistres be the Duik de Allainsoun sall now haif sum gud effect.

We heir say that thair is greit weir lyklye to fall out betuix the Kingis of Swadyne and Poyll for the superiorie of the toun of Danskin Greit is the preparatiounis on everie syd. It is belevit that league salbe maid betuix the King of Swadyne and the Frenche King, the better to follow out that weir.

Thair is ane maister churcheyard, ane gentilmann of our nation, ane Sansie Jeaster and gud poet, quha is cum to Scotland to vey the Scottis court, and to understand the factiounis of that countrie, speciallie betuix Lennox and Mortoun, quha is worthy of gud tretment for his myrry Jeastis and saucy snakis.

It is spoikn that Maister Alex^r. Howm haid gottin ane gud dispatche from the Court of Iugland, quhairby the bordoris ar lyk to hald fast, and gud concurrence of the wairdanis on ather syd lyk to follow.

Thair is no greit appearance of greit gudwill amangis the Cheif Courtouris.

The Ministerie alsweill in Edinburghe, as in the Abbey, hes wehementie inveyit aganis this Franche Court, and Minister McCancell spairis nocht to call the gydaris of curt ruffianis.

nixt*

Johnne Dury on the last preaching day sparit nocht to augment the same with ane bonat, defying the name and applying it to Monser Monburne, calling him ane ruffiane, quha is dissolut in behauiour, riche in wyces, and indewit with mayne vertew, as the dancing dames of Edinburghe can testefie.

The report of this preaching cam to the Court. "My Lord of Lennox complenis to the Kingis G. that the evangell culd nocht be prechit be the ministeris, nor thair ordinarie text keipit, bot that the maist pairt of thair auditouris aeris wes fillit with sic language. Heirapoun all the ministeris cummis to the Court, and comperis befor the Counsale. Thair sermons quihikis war prechit wes deyrity to be vrettin and exhibitit befor the Counsale, quhairat the Ministeris stryvit and thoct the King and Counsall na Juges to thame. At lenght the Counsal be voit findis thame ordinar Jugis, and thairpoune Mr. Dury wes chargit within xlviii hours to deluyher his sermon in vreit, quihik wes obeyit. And since that tyme the Ministeris ar moir general in thair reprouffis nor of befor.

Yit the Ministeris spairis nocht to show that thair ar mony choippis full of brethis, alsweill in the Kowget as in the Cannaget, and it is ane commone proverbe in Court, and amangis thame all, God send you the Cannaget.

The merchantis that laitlie cam from France sayis the hering and salmond geff small price this yeir, quhairby the wyynn of this wintage ar the deirar, bot now hes concludit fra this furth to salt thair coldendgis, quyttingis, and haddokis, and to send thame in France, quhairby ye may haif gretar commoditie to pak and peill the fishes nor to send thame dalie freische to the mercat, as ane cadgear dois.

EARL OF
MORAY.James VI. to the Duke of Pomerania, 6 October
(no year).

Jacobus sextus dei gratia Rex Scotorum Illustrissimo principi ac domino D. Barnino seniori Stettinen: Pomeraniae: Cassubarii Schlanourumque Ducis, et rugiae principi et comiti Buchhomae amico et consanguineo nostro salutem:—

(Then follows a vehement complaint regarding the injuries sustained by Robert and David Kinloch, natives of Fife, and John Naif, Englishman, who, in the month of April 1585, had set forth their precious wares as merchants, in a town of Pomerania, when one William Clest, inhabitant of that town with associates, not obtaining the wares at such a price as he offered, uttered abusive language against the merchants, and then by force stole the wares, and the carriage on which they were borne; and when the injured merchants thus despoiled, sought redress at the law, they had spent about two years in litigation without any settlement: whereupon the duke is earnestly urged to see justice done in this matter, that other Scottish merchants may not be discouraged from trading in foreign parts. Dated at Edinburgh the 6th Kalends of October, (year wanting) and signed by the Regent Murray.

VIII.—MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS.

Judgement of an assize in a Court at Hadyntoun, on a disputed claim of annual rent, 4 July 1391.

Univeris ad quorum noticiam presentes litere pervenerint Thomas de Dun, Johannes Scot, et Willelmus de Hadyntoun, balliui burgi ejusdem Hadyntoun, Salutem temporalem et eternam in domino. Sciatis quod coram nobis et communitate dicti burgi, in curia nostra, tenta juxta crucem in loco qui vocatur Lukynbuyis quarto die mensis Julii, Anno domini Millesimo ^{mo} nonagesimo primo, comparuerunt coram nobis Johannes de Cranford et Katerina Sponsa sua, filia quondam Johannis bullo, dicti burgi burgensis, et Willelmus filius Roberti burgensis ejusdem burgi, qui vero Johannes predictus fecit clameum in quoddam annuo redditu dicto quondam Johanni bullo hereditarie debito, in quoddam tenemento jacente in vico regio infra dictum burgum, ex parte australi ejusdem, inter terram Johannis Bowmaker* ex parte occidentali ex parte una, et terram Ade Broustar ex parte orientali ex parte altera, ratione Katerine antedictae sponse sue, allegans eam inde sayisnam hereditariam habuisse, et post hoc in eadem curia, et eodem die, predictus Willelmus filius Roberti clamavit sibi deberi duos solidos annui redditus in eodem tenemento a predicto Johanne bullo, comparati, pro quadam certa pecunie summa sibi plenarie persoluta, et inde sayisnam hereditariam allegans se prius recepisse, quod per certas evidencias, in scriptis sigillo dicti Johannis bullo signatis demonstravit. Que quidem partes cum instantia petierunt dicta clamea sua per ejusdem curie assisam penitus declarari: et de dictae assise deliberacione utraque pars fideliter fatebatur concentrare. Et super hoc, eodem die, assisa de melioribus et fidelioribus qui hujus veritatem melius sciuerunt, cum consensu parcium, Balliuorumque curie electa ad premissa determinandum, fideliter jurati dixerunt illa clamea nullius valoris roboris, vel vigoris, sed irrita cassa et inania, quia de dicto annuo redditu nulla pars sayisnam inde primitus recepit, Sed dixerunt quod dictus Johannes bullo in dicto annuo redditu obijt vestitus et sayisatus et quod Willelmus bullo filius ejusdem, sibi fuit legitimus et propinquior heres de eodem. Quem vero illo die in corporalem possessionem, et sayisnam hereditariam, coram illius curie communitate, secundum formam juris imposuimus, Quod omnibus quorum interest vel inte-

Confirmation by Janet prioress of the Nuns of Haddington and the convent thereof, of a Grant by Sir Allan Qwhite chaplain, in favour of the Church of St. Colme of the Island of Emonia, and to the Abbot and Convent thereof, of two tenements of "burgages" lying in the Nungate and Nunsyde, on the east side of the water of Tine, beside the burgh of Haddington:—The one of which tenements, viz., that in the Nungate, is situated between the land of Sir Walter of Bickirton, Knight, on the east, and the land of Sir William of Cokburne Knight, on the west: the other tenement, in the Nunsyde, lies between the land of Sir John of Saint Clare of Hirdemanstoun on the west, and contiguous to the Winde or loan on the east: which tenements were assigned by the said Sir Allan, to the church of St. Colme, for the welfare of the souls of his father and mother, and other ancestors, and for the maintenance of one lamp in the choir of the said church, for the greater security of which gift, the said Sir Allan, with consent of the chapter of the convent of Haddington, resigned the said tenements in the hands of the said Prioress for confirmation, to the said monastery of St. Colme, Paying therefor to the said convent of Haddington, for the lands in the Nunsyde sixteen pence, and for the lands in the Nungate eighteen pence, yearly. Sealed with the common seal of the chapter, at the Monastery of Haddington, 26 August 1421.

Instrument on the intimation of a Bull, emitted by Pope Martin fifth, directed to Alexander Abbot of Dunfermline, and intimated by Mr. John Bowmaker rector of the church of Monyabroch, as sub-executor of the said Bull, in presence of Robert bishop of Dunkeld, who refused to hear it read by the said Mr. John, inhibiting the said bishop and all others, under the penalties contained in the said Bull, from molesting the Abbot and convent of the Island of St. Colme, in their possession of the union of the vicarage of Dalgathy to the said Monastery. Done in the cemetery of St. John's Church, Perth, about eight o'clock before noon of March 17th 1425; Witnesses, Donald, dean of Dunkeld, Michael de Staynton vicar of Aberulendy, Robert of Cornon chaplain, and John Tarbart notary. [The last named, and William of Boyis, are the attesting notaries.]

(Dorso.) Instrument upon Inhibition maid and intimated be the Abbate of Sanct Columbe procurator, Be vetiver of the papais Bull, nocht to trubill the vniune maid of the vicarage of Dalgathe to the abbacie of Sanct Columbe.

Instrument on the delivery by Mr. Edward of Laweder, archdean of Lothian, in the Church of St. Andrews, judge sub-delegate, to Sir Adam of Gordon vicar of the parish church of Craigmoud, of certain letters remissory and affixed to an appeal presented on behalf of the said Sir Adam by the said sub-delegate at the Roman See, on account of a sentence definitive given by the said sub-delegate on behalf of the Abbot and Convent of St. Colme of Emonia, and against the said Sir Adam, vicar of Craigmoud, in the matter of a certain pecuniary sum or pension of 40 shillings sterling, payable annually to the said Abbot and convent. Done in the nave of the parish church of Edinburgh, about nine o'clock of the day, on 22 July 1427.

Instrument narrating that on the first of February 1434, Walter Abbot of St. Colme* "insinuated" and showed to Sir John Forester, Knight, chamberlain of Scotland, that a tenement in the burgh of Kingorne, recently granted to the said Abbot and convent, and to their monastery, by Hugh Scot, burgess of Kinghorn, was recognised in a iudiciary circuit court at Kingorn in the month of January preceding; and the said Abbot and convent desired that the said Sir John, as High Chamberlain, should suffer the said tenement to be demitted in pledge to them, which the Chamberlain refused to do, because he was not sufficiently informed of the recognition. Done in the chamber of the Castle of the said Chamberlain at Corstorphyn.

The only witness whose name is legible is Peter Mason, canon.

Letters of Attorney by King James the Fifth, under the Great Seal, in favour of William Duraham of Grange, empowering him to act on behalf of his majesties son natural James Stewart the firstborn, in all matters, pleas etc. which might affect him. The mother of the Commendator of St. Colm was Margaret Lindsay, a daughter of the house of Byres, and relict of Richard Lord Innermeath. Her Husband Sir James Stewart of Beath was killed at Dunblane, by Edmonstone of Duntreath and his followers, on Whitsunday 1547, out of resentment for the loss of the office of hereditary Stewart of Menteith, which having been formerly vested in their family, was conferred on Sir James Stewart. The Queen Regents letter refers to his death, and the note has been added by his son the Commendator, afterwards Lord Doun.

SECOND REPORT ON THE MANUSCRIPTS OF LORD MONBODDO.

My First Report on the Manuscript Collections of Lord Monboddó is printed on pp. 518-521 of the Appendix to the Fourth Report of the Commissioners. It included the portion of the manuscripts at Monboddó House, the country residence of Lord Monboddó, in the county of Kincardine. Another portion of his lordship's manuscripts was referred to as having been transferred from Monboddó House to a grandson of Lord Monboddó, Mr. Arthur Burnett, Advocate, late Sheriff substitute of Peebleshire, and now resident at Peebles. Through the courtesy of Mr. Burnett I have been allowed to inspect the collection of the Monboddó manuscripts in his custody, and have obtained the permission of himself and his nephew Mr. Burnett, the present proprietor of Monboddó, to make this second or supplementary Report.

As he says in one of his letters, it was the delight of Lord Monboddó, when freed from the labours of his profession as an advocate at the Scottish Bar, and afterwards as a judge on the Scottish Bench, which occupied his time during half of the year, to cultivate in the first place philosophy: and this he did with no small measure of success. Although he writes in one of his letters, that like Varro the Roman he resolved never to publish anything on the subject of philosophy, and for the same reason—that the learned would not read him, and the unlearned would not understand him,—he did not adhere to that resolution; but, on the contrary, published several works of great learning and originality on "Language," "Metaphysics," etc. There are several manuscripts containing notes on his published works, and on his general reading, among the papers now reported on. There are also in manuscript, "Observations upon the History of Scotland," "Of population in ancient and modern times," and particularly of the population of England," "Of the orang-outang, and whether he be of the human species," "Of the Records in Scotland;" all of which are written with that elegance so characteristic of Lord Monboddó's style. His lordship carried on an extensive correspondence with many of his contemporaries, who were eminent in literature, and several of the letters are noted at length in the present Report. Of the many elaborate letters which Lord Monboddó wrote to his friends in the months of his vacation, the original drafts are still preserved. These letters are generally of great length, several of them extending over 20 folio pages. A mere extract of one from Lord Monboddó to Dr. Horsley in November 1780 is upwards of 20 folio pages.

In a letter to Sir George Baker, dated, Edinburgh, 12th December 1782, Lord Monboddó alludes to the length of it,—“If I have been long in answering your letter I am sure I have not been short, but have run out into a dissertation upon the pronunciation of Languages, which I did not think of when I began to write.”

In a letter to Dr. Horsley, dated, Monboddó, March 1781, Lord Monboddó writes,—“I have now got out of the noise and smoke of the town, and the hurry and tumult of business, and am here at home. Hic vivo regnoque, simul ista relinquo, which many people reckon the greatest enjoyment in life.”

He concludes that long letter with the following postscript: “I hear a very remarkable thing of our late provost or mayor of Edinburgh, Mr. Hamilton. He was a remarkable player at whist, and now, though he has lost his judgement and memory on everything else, plays as well at whist as ever. There is nothing so wonderful in nature as the human mind; the more I study it, the more I am amazed.”

The letters of Lord Monboddó were dictated by his lordship to his clerk for the time, and the letters show that he did not spare himself any labour on his favourite philosophical subjects, even in the time of his official holidays. These letters embrace a wide range of subjects. He corresponded with the Lord Chancellor Thurlow on the Philosophy of Plato;—with Dr. Horsley, on the subject of the Newtonian Philosophy; Reasons for the Church of England's encouraging the Philosophy of the Ancients; on the subject of Ideas; and on Sir Isaac Newton's Astronomy.—With Dr. Richard Price on similar subjects.—With Mr. Welbore Ellis on the omnipresence of God, and the place of the intellectual mind.

Lord Monboddó formed a philosophy of health as well as of other things. In a letter to Lord Chancellor Thurlow, dated Edinburgh, 18th May 1792, he writes, “I hope you will excuse this trouble which I give you to be informed of the success of the antient Regimen, of which you was to begin the course the day I left London.—Everybody who knows how much you have honoured me would be surprised if I had not the greatest concern for your health; and I think not only your health is concerned, but the health of all the people of rank in England, for the example of a man of your lordship's dignity and eminence, if it succeed, will make many people follow you; by which I am persuaded that men would live longer than they do, and what I think of greater consequence in better health. The Antients, tho' they practised exercises in their Palestras, and much more regularly than we do, yet they thought the regimen of bathing, anointing and rubbing, or what may be called currying, was absolutely necessary for preserving their health and vigour, and accordingly they practised it daily for very good reasons, which I shall explain to your lordship at meeting.”

Lord Monboddó visited London annually, travelling to and fro on horseback. In the same letter to Lord Thurlow his lordship thus alludes to his mode of travelling: “I hope you continue your resolution of visiting Scotland this summer; and I was glad to hear you say that you proposed to ride a part of the way; and I am sure you will find it to be true what I told you, that a journey on horseback continued for several days is very much better for health than airings on horseback, or occasional jaunts. The Romans had an exercise which they called Gestatio, of which their physician Celsus speaks a great deal. It was much practised by the old and infirm, and also by the indolent and luxurious. It hardly deserved the name of an exercise as they took it, which was always in a litter, or in a wheel carriage driven gently upon some level spot of ground which they had at their villas, set apart for that purpose. But a gentle trot of a horse of blood is, I think, a pleasanter kind of gestatio, and at the same time more exercise; and I would advise your lordship to make the exercise still greater by walking a little, which I find in my long journeys is a kind of rest to me. In this way I came down from London at this time in 12 days, tho' I took

"Oxford in my way, which made my journey about 50 miles longer, and I was less fatigued the last day of my journey than the first. But I do not advise your lordship to ride so much, but to go the greater part of the way in your carriage, which you will have with you."

During these journeys Lord Monboddo's mental activity was very remarkable. There is extant amongst his MSS. an essay on "Population in ancient and modern times, particularly in England." That essay extends to 73 pp. folio, and it bears an indorsement that it was "written on the road from London, in June, 1787." It is all in the holograph of Lord Monboddo.

Besides Lord Thurlow, Lord Monboddo was a great admirer of another eminent judge, Lord Mansfield. In a letter to Lord Stormont, dated 23rd February 1785, Lord Monboddo writes: "I have had the good fortune to be known and esteemed by the greatest judge that has been in Scotland in our time, I mean President Forbes; and by Lord Mansfield, the greatest judge in England, who, the last time I was in London, honoured me so much with his company and conversation, that I should be most ungrateful if I ever forget it."

In his work on the Origin and Progress of Language, Lord Monboddo started the idea that human beings originally had appendages like cats tails, which exposed the author to sharp criticism, and occasionally to jeering even by his brother judges. Lord Kames declined his precedence on one occasion, insisting that Lord Monboddo would walk past, "that I may see your tail." Another eminent judge, Lord Hailes, having received a copy of Lord Monboddo's book in which the subject was started, thus alludes to it, "I thank you for attention in sending me the book of Origin of Language. The truth is that I have done little else since it was advertised but read it, so that my curiosity was even greater than your politeness."

"If it is written by your clerk he is a learned clerk; that I will say for him, and where he does not convince he entertains and instructs."

"I wish he had sometimes been more diffident of his authorities.—Koenig, I take it, has been in a mistake as to the cats tails. Navarette was at Nicobar about 1668 and saw the natives. Churchill's Collections, vol. 1, p. 302. He says, 'Several boats came out to us with fresh provisions: Our people dealt for hens, cocos, plantans, and some amber, all for old rags. The vessels were extraordinary fine, some had thirty oars, and rowed to the admiration of us all. The people were somewhat black, and had red hair, which is wonderful. Among them that rowed there were women, all naked, saving just before and behind, where they had some dirty rags, as they said aboard our ships. Those people were so warlike that they had boarded a Dutch ship.' Frighted sailors may have mistaken the rags here described for tails, or perhaps what they saw might have been a natural appendage of female boatmen. Navarette certainly suspected nothing of the nature of cats' tails: if he had, he would not have omitted it, for he does not dislike the marvellous; witness his account, ibid. p. 249, of a man who lay every day with a mermaid for six months together."

Sir Joseph Banks, President of the Royal Society, who was a frequent correspondent of Lord Monboddo, alluded to the subject of the tails in a letter dated May 7th, 1784. "The enclosed short extract, which is translated from a German book published the year before last, seems so favourable to the system of mankind having, in a former period of the existence of their species, been endowed with a tail or tail-like appendage, that I have taken the liberty of enclosing it for your perusal."

The extract referred to mentions the title of the Emperor of Ceylon as "The greatest, most invincible" and "tailed Emperor." The first of the race is reported to have had a fleshy excrescence full a foot long and two inches thick." (Wolf's journey to Ceylon, 1782, p. 146-7.)

Lord Monboddo's activity as a literary correspondent continued till near his death. In a letter to him from Dr. Horsley, then Bishop of Rochester, dated Westminster, March 14th, 1799, he acknowledges receipt of a letter from Lord Monboddo, dated on the 9th of January preceding. It gave the Bishop great pleasure to learn from it, "That notwithstanding of the impressions which time makes upon us all in the external part, as in all other earthly tabernacles, you have still health and spirits left for the highest enjoyment of man, the exercise of the faculties of the mind upon the highest subjects. I regret that you give us little hope of seeing you again in London."

In about two months after the date of that letter Lord Monboddo died, at the advanced age of 85, on 26 May 1799, at his residence No. 13, John Street, Canonsgate, Edinburgh; a house in which his lordship, in imitation of the ancients, had entertained, at his learned suppers, most of the eminent literary men of his time.

Allusion has been made to the great length of Lord Monboddo's letters to his correspondents. Many of their letters to him are equally voluminous. A letter from Dr. Horsley, dated April 1787, concerning animal magnetism, extends to 15 quarto pages, and another of the same writer to 27 quarto pages, all in his own small, neat handwriting. Other letters from Dr. Horsley are also of great length.

Professor Dugald Stewart in a letter on the Newtonian System, dated 1778, expands it to 13 quarto pages all holograph.

Professor John Hunter of Saint Andrews and several others were also voluminous correspondents of Lord Monboddo.

A few of the more important letters in the collection may be given at length for the eminence of the writers, and the interest and importance of the subjects discussed by them.

The following letter by Lord Monboddo has no address, and is without date. It is endorsed "Letter on Education."

"Sir, "I have read the letter you put into my hand containing a list of authors, or rather pieces of authors, fit to be read by a young student of Greek. As the author of this letter seems to propose nothing else but to teach the scholar the words and phrases of the language, I think the authors he proposes are unexceptionable. For tho' they are of very different kinds, they are all classical; nor do I believe that he will learn in any of them a bad word or phrase; and this is more than I can say of all the Greek authors that are taught in schools and colleges. Herodian, e.g. is one of these, and yet in him are many words and phrases which are not classical, but vulgar idioms of the age in which he lived, being justified neither by the use of good authors, nor by the analogy and propriety of the language."

"But my idea of education is something different from this gentleman's. For I think that lads should learn Arts and Sciences at the same time that they learn words: nor can I conceive a greater drudgery to a liberal mind, or a more unprofitable waste of time, than the consuming so many years as we commonly do in learning the words and phrases of a dead language: and yet, in common speech, he is called a scholar who has read a great many histories, poems, and orations in Greek and Latin, but who cannot be said to be learned in any one art or science. Upon the supposition therefore that a better plan is to be followed, I would recommend to the young student of Greek, after he has learned the Grammar in the ordinary way, to read some things of the moral kind, such as there [are] many in Greek, tending to excite him to virtue and industry. Of this, tho' there be great choice, I know nothing better than the Memorabilia of Xenophon, and the Cyropædia of the same author, which last will serve him both for history and morals. In reading these the teacher should be very careful to make him apply his grammar rules and analyse exactly every word. If this be done, by the time he has finished these two works, he will have a sufficient stock of words, and a practical knowledge of the language which will enable him with the help of a master to read authors that treat of Arts and Sciences. The first art he should learn is the art of that language, and which is best learned in that language itself. For this purpose I would recommend to him first to read Lascaris' Greek Grammar, which is very short and easy, and will teach him the grammatical language of the Greeks, with a good deal of the grammatical art. Having done this he will be enabled to go a little deeper into the language, and to study it in its very source, I mean Homer, the first five books of whose Iliad he should read most diligently with Eustathius' Commentary upon them. . . . In this course of reading, at the same time that he makes progress in the language, he will learn the mythology, the Heroic history, and the ancient manners of Greece. Along with Homer and his Commentator he should read a Life of Homer com"monly ascribed to Plutarch, wherein are better explained than any where else I know the figures of speech; and it will be the best introduction to the study of the ornaments of language, which it is now time he should know something of, after he is supposed to understand the grammatical part. When he has done with this task, I would recommend to him another thing of the same kind, most elegantly and accurately written, I mean Dionysius the Halicarnassian's Treatise of Composition: and, after all this, I think he should study, in order to complete the grammatical part of his education, Theodorus Gaza's Greek Grammar, which will bring him as near to the Science of Universal Grammar as the study of any particular language can do.

"After that, nothing further can be done as to language except acquiring a taste of what is beautiful in style and composition; and this can be done no other way than by reading over and over again some approved good author: and he should begin with prose, the greatest artificer of which is in my opinion Demosthenes; and with him he should read the Halicarnassian's criticisms upon him, and others of his critical works, which, at the same time that they are most accurate and scientific, are most elegantly written, and are themselves excellent models of composition. For I hold him to be the best Greek writer in prose that has written since the days of Demosthenes, that is, the best author that has formed his style by imitation; for after the days of Demosthenes fine speaking and writing were no longer living arts. And at the same time that he thus acquires a taste of what is most perfect in writing, he should be learning the practice, and be forming his style by the constant exercise of translating from those great authors, the only way in which a style of any value can be formed."

The writer then recommends that Euclid's first six Books of Geometry in the original, and that some of Plato's Dialogues should be studied. Should the student wish to go deeper in philosophy, "he must apply himself to Aristotle." A course of Greek history is marked out beginning with Herodotus; after which the study of Homer is to be resumed, and the "Poetics and Rhetorical Art of Aristotle" taken up. He concludes, "I have detained you too long in giving you a plan of study which I doubt you look upon as little better than Utopian; and indeed to execute it well would require more industry in the scholar, and, I doubt, greater abilities in the master, than this age can furnish: and besides our young men are in so much haste to make a figure in conversation, to write books, or to excel in some money-making profession, that it is not to be expected they should submit to a plan of education, which to execute well would be the work of several years."

The following extract is from a characteristic copy letter on education, written by Lord Monboddoo, apparently to some gentlemen who had been consulting him as to a plan of education for his son. This letter has only the year 1756 marked upon it. After describing an elaborate plan of education, mental and physical, he recommends the father to send his son to one of the great public schools of England. Here the scholar would learn "Greek and Latin much better than at any school in Scotland," and also to read and speak, which he would "not learn at all" in any Scotch school. The student is afterwards to be sent to a university in Scotland for a year or two and then for a like period to a foreign university. But this the writer says "is upon the supposition that he has a genius for letters: if not, after he has learned to speak English at Westminster or Eaton, I would send him directly into France, and there let him be bred a French gentleman, which, if you cannot make a scholar of him, I maintain is the best education you can give him. If his genius be too low even for this, then I positively advise to make a foxhunter of him, for a man of that genius is only capable of being well employed in bodily labour, and that and such like exercises is the only fashionable labour for a gentleman; and I do maintain that a foxhunter, though living in his kennel and stable, has more enjoyment of life, and is really better employed, than any fine gentleman or man of pleasure according to the English fashion.

"If he should not even have spirit enough for this kind of life, I am somewhat at a loss what to advise you to do with him. I hope it is a case that there is no occasion to make any provision for; but if it should happen, I can think of nothing else for the present but to apply him entirely to money-making, which I

MONBODDO.

"take to be the very lowest occupation of a rational creature: yet this vice, mean and laborious as it is, makes a man, I will not say more happy, but less miserable, than that dissolute idle and insipid life which is commonly known by the name of a life of pleasure. It has one advantage perhaps above any other kind of life, and that not a small one, which is, that it constantly employs you; for the man of money, what with getting money, with saving it, or with counting it, has not a vacant hour. Besides, in the management of these counts, he may shew parts (for these low creatures sometimes have parts) as a man does at a game of draughts or cards, and by that means acquire a kind of reputation in a country where money is so much esteemed; and I have observed that vanity is no small ingredient in the passion of avarice."

Scroll letter from Lord Monboddoo to Mr. Harris, the author of Hermes.

This letter is dated Edinburgh, December 8, 1768. Lord Monboddoo writes to acquaint Mr. Harris "of a phenomenon in the literary world, which has appeared in the east . . . It is an original Greek composition, printed at Leipsic in the [year] 1766; the author, Eugenius Diaconus, a professor in the Patriarch's University at Constantinople. The subject of it is Logic, and it is the completest system of the kind I have ever seen." His Lordship proceeds at some length to notice the work, speaking of it and of its author in terms of high praise. As to his style, he remarks, "If it has any fault it is too Attic, that is, 'abounding with certain idioms and phrases, an artificial arrangement of the words, and a great many metaphorical expressions, taken from the particular customs of the Athenians, which are all the characteristics of the Attic style, and which soberly and moderately used make the finest composition in the world . . .'"

The same to the same.

[The son of Mr. Harris mentioned in this letter was a distinguished diplomatist, and the negotiation referred to, the transfer of the Falkland Islands to Britain. He had the order of the Bath conferred upon him, was created a peer of the realm with the title of Baron Malmesbury, and advanced to the dignity of Earl of Malmesbury in 1800. His "Diaries and Correspondence" were published in 1844].

Dear Sir, Monboddoo, 31 December 1772.

I believe I am as long of answering your letter as you were of answering mine, tho' I have not so good an excuse. For I do not wonder that you were much taken up with the joy of seeing a son, who had conducted a most important negotiation with so much honour to himself, and so great advantage to his country. It is to him, so far as I can learn, that we in a great measure owe the blessing of peace which we now enjoy, the greatest of all blessings, if it be procured, as this was, upon honourable terms, and never at any time more necessary to Great Britain, if I judge rightly of the present state of the nation. He is gone to Berlin to succeed a very worthy man, a friend of mine, and I think I wish nothing bad to him when I wish that he may discharge his duty there as well; at the same time, if he does better, I shall heartily rejoice.

As for myself, I can only say, by way of excuse, that my office, which is a very laborious one, employs me about one half of the year. The other half I spend in the country, and there my occupation is, first, your favourite occupation, philosophy, and then farming, which is next to philosophy in the judgement of old Cato . . . But I have another excuse, which I am glad of this opportunity of letting you know. I am going to publish something upon a subject which I believe I mentioned to you in the beginning of our correspondence, I mean the History of Man; but I have not taken in the whole of that plan, which I found too extensive both for my abilities and the time I had to bestow upon it; but only a part of it, tho' a considerable part, viz., The History of Language, upon which my thoughts have been turned for a good many years; and I had collected a great deal of materials on the subject, but without any design of publication, till they grew very bulky; and being written, like the Sibyl's Prophecies, upon loose leaves, which my children stole, and at other times they were in hazard of being applied to more ignoble uses; I thought the best way of preserving them, and making a fair copy of them, was to employ a printer for an amanuensis. The book will be entitled Of the Origin and Progress of Language, and you will have a copy of the first volume of it pretty early in the spring. As I thought I could not give a philosophical account of the origin of language without accounting for the origin of our ideas, this has led me deeper into philosophy than ever I proposed to have gone in any work I was to give to the public. For I had resolved, like Varro the Roman, never to publish anything upon the subject of philosophy, and for the same reason, namely, that the learned would not read me, and the unlearned would not understand me. As to the first, I hope I shall be so far mistaken that you will read it, and if it have your approbation, I shall very little value the censure of the many As the origin of language has naturally led me to enquire into the state of our nature before we had the use of language, I have spent a great part of the book upon that subject, which I thought a very curious as well as a new subject of inquiry; and in that state, I believe, I shall be thought by many to have sunk our nature too low. For tho' nobody has a higher idea than I of human nature, when it is improved by the arts of life, and exalted by science and philosophy, I cannot conceive it before the invention of language to have been in a state much superior to that of the brute. In short, the mutuum ac turpe pecus of Horace, is my notion of man in his natural and original state But if you do not like my system of man, I am sure you will be pleased with what I say of superior natures, for I have brought in a good deal of the first philosophy; and, in general, you will find a variety of matters in the work which I believe will a little surprise you (how properly introduced you will judge)

I ever am, with the greatest regard, your most obedient humble servant,
and faithful Friend.

In a postscript he adds, "Tho' I have let some of my particular friends know that I am to be an author, I will not set my name to the book, nor would I wish that it should be publicly known."

Letter from Mr. Harris to Lord Monboddo.

My Lord,

May 14, 1773.

Tho' your lordship's book came late to my hands, and tho' parliamentary time is not the most favourable to philosophy, I have not been negligent in the perusal of so curious a performance. I have great satisfaction in seeing so masterly an attempt to revise and explain the noble tenets of the Pythagorean school as they were adopted by Plato and his disciple Aristotle, I freely subscribe to your ideas of Mr. Locke. Ignorant of all ancient literature, he had an inclination to spin out everything from his own brain, as if so stupendous a work as an analysis of the Human Understanding could be raised by the effort of one unassisted man: Euclid and Archimedes among the antients, Copernicus, Kepler, and Galileo among the moderns, preceded our illustrious Newton. 'Twas thus that Homer and Tasso pointed out the road to Milton. Life is too short, and the labour too immense, for a single man to carry anything to perfection.

Mind and soul are terms acknowledged by our language, and most other modern languages have terms analogous. But, alas, tho' they pass very well in common conversation, our philosophers are well satisfied with Body and its attributes. These last are abundantly sufficient for their purposes, and solve every part of their systems to their intire content. If anything be wanted further, (which rarely indeed happens), if the fluids grow too thick, or the solids too thin, then, perhaps, to help matters out we have θεός and ψυχάνης.

I think myself happy, as I am about to publish my Predicaments, that I have so learned and so able an introducer as yourself. Readers will be a little prepared for that sublime philosophy to which their ears have been so little accustomed, and which, in spite of all my endeavours, will, I fear, be thought somewhat strange. But your lordship has been so good as to give them a sample, and to rescue me from the danger.

I don't wonder your lordship or any writer under the heavens should give offence to bigots if you do not adopt their tenets and lift in their gang. Not to give offence, is not enough for them; and yet, this perhaps is as far as any liberal and disinterested man was ever able to go. 'Tis not enough, not to offend: their bed like that of Procrustes must do for all, and if the lodgers don't fit, they must be lopt or stretched till they come to the standard.

Your lordship's interpretation of λόγος in St. John seems perfectly clear and rational, but being no theologue, I can't tell but it may be heretical.

I have a second time read carefully over your lordships two passages on the categories, the formation of species and genus, &c. I have no objection but to your too candid and your too partial mention of one who honours your friendship, and thinks himself happy in being a labourer with you in the same vineyard

After making some critical remarks on Lord Monboddo's book, he states that he sends a copy of two curious fragments of Plutarch, which had been discovered in the British Museum by a learned gentleman, Mr. Tyrwhit, late clerk to the House of Commons. Besides the above there are other letters from Mr. Harris chiefly with regard to Metaphysics. Speaking of the office to which he was appointed in 1774, that of secretary and comptroller to Queen Charlotte, in one of his letters he says, "I am happy to say my office is an honourable one, and that I verily believe my Royal Mistress to be one of the best women in Europe."

Letter from Sir George Baker to Lord Monboddo.

The letter is dated, Jermyn Street, 3 September, 1782. After apologising for being so long in answering Lord Monboddo's letters, the writer says, "I thank you for putting me in mind of a very fine passage in Lucretius, which is undoubtedly superior to the original, as well with respect to the justness and propriety of the application as to the sublimity of diction.

Carmina sublimis tunc sunt peritura Lucreti, Exitio terras cum dabit una dies.

"This said Ovid, (if I do not mistake,) of that great poet. How happens it that there are so few scholars (I find it so here), who are acquainted with Lucretius? Surely if Virgil be excepted, no one comes near him You have shewn your skill in your judgment of Dr. Heberden of whom you have taken a true measure. He is an excellent scholar and philosopher, ever zealous in promoting whatever tends to the improvement of any branch of learning, and, in particular, of that profession to which he is an ornament. Besides this he is a serious Christian, and a most candid and benevolent man; whenever we have the misfortune to lose him, we shall not have his like remaining among us. He is about the age of seventy years, an age which spem nos velat inchoare longam." [Dr. Heberden, a distinguished physician was born in London, 1710. He was the author of "Medical Commentaries on the history and the cure of diseases." He also translated the letters of Cicero.]

Letter from Dr. Horsley to Lord Monboddo.

[Dr. Horsley (1733-86) afterwards Bishop of Rochester, was educated at Cambridge. He was a man of great learning, and his works on theological, scientific and other subjects are both numerous and important. With Dr. Priestley he, for a long time, carried on a controversy on theological matters, but it was not conducted with the same forbearance as the one mentioned below.]

This letter is dated 3 November 1780. After stating that he had been much employed with Sir Isaac Newton's Chronology, which he was preparing for the press, and which had left him little time for the speculations of philosophy to which he was more and more inclined, he says, "However, I have found some little leisure to read over again some favourite dialogues of Plato, particularly the Theætetus, the Sophistes and the Parmenides. In the latter I have still the mortification to find some things hard to be understood; or to speak more plainly, which I do not understand, and which I much fear I never shall. This however I think is very manifest, that Plato held that the ideas of things originally existed in the mind of God, and were from thence conveyed, by what method of tradition is not clearly explained, to inferior minds."

In the course of this letter the writer notices the controversy between Dr. Price and Dr. Priestley on Materialism. He says, "In the present state of metaphysics in this country, I do not wonder that Dr. Clark should carry all before him. Dr. Cudworth excepted, I think Clark and Butler may justly claim the first rank among the English metaphysicians. I must confess myself however wholly unacquainted with those metaphysicians among the Dissenters, whom Dr. Priestley mentions with so much commendation, and from whom it seems he received his first rudiments of this science. But if we are to judge of the master's skill by the pupils' proficiency, these writers, would hold but a moderate place in your lordships esteem. I wonder that Dr. Price should not perceive that Dr. Priestley's penetrable matter, and Dr. Clark's extended spirit, are pretty much the same thing. Yet I believe we must not be hasty to tax men with impiety as long as they believe in God and his providence. If Dr. Price could once perceive

"that extension is inconsistent with the nature and attributes of the Deity, he would be as averse as you are, or as I am, to the notion of an infinite extension of the Divine substance. Dr. Priestly, I am persuaded, would reprobate his whole system, if he were sensible of the consequences, which to you and me seem necessarily to arise from it. I am well persuaded therefore that whatever there may be of error in the opinions of either of these gentlemen, there is no impiety in their hearts."

In another part of his letter Dr. Horsley asks Lord Monboddoo whether he has any acquaintance "with that madman Lord George Gordon. If you have," he says, "try if you can convince him of the civil importance of a learned priesthood, and of competent establishments for such an order; that he may not again raise the spirit of puritanism against the Episcopal form of church government. Strange scenes were exhibited here some weeks after your Lordship left us, for which many have died; but the author of the mischief, I much fear, will defy the justice of his injured country."

Letter from Dr. Richard Price to Lord Monboddoo, dated September 25th 1783.

[Dr. Price a distinguished dissenting minister and political writer, was born in Glamorganshire in 1723. He published two pamphlets, "Observations on Civil Liberty," and "Observations on Civil Government," during the American war, with reference to the dispute with that country. He enjoyed a high reputation as a financier, and was consulted by Mr. Pitt on the best means of liquidating the National Debt at the close of the war. Besides the pamphlets mentioned above, he published many other pamphlets and sermons, and contributed largely to the Transactions of the Royal Society of which he was a fellow. He died in the year 1791.]

After thanking Lord Monboddoo for his favourable acceptance of his book upon annuities, he says, "The Act of the Legislature in 1744, which your lordship takes notice of, by which, in order to raise money, the prohibition of spirituous liquors was taken off, was indeed very pernicious. The consequence was that the lower people destroyed themselves so fast by drinking gin, as to oblige our governors in 1751 to restore the prohibition. The grand business of government among us has been, for many years, raising money, and increasing the revenue by all possible means. The value of everything has been estimated by its effect in this way. The value of America in particular was thus estimated; and an attempt made to tax it. But never did a measure defeat its own end so miserably. By attempting to draw a pepper corn to the revenue from America we have lost one of the main sources of our opulence, and added to a debt, before intolerable, 120 millions: thanks be to Lord North for this. The enclosed pamphlet may give your lordship an idea of our state in this respect." He desires Lord Monboddoo's acceptance of his pamphlet as a further testimony of gratitude for your volumes on Antient Metaphysics, from which, tho' I do not always agree with you, I have derived pleasure and instruction." The writer then mentions that Dr. Priestley is likely to be engaged with Dr. Horsley in a warm controversy; and that he does not think it will be conducted with the same friendliness as the one between himself and the former gentleman on the subjects of Materialism and Necessity. The subsequent history of this controversy proved the correctness of Dr. Price's surmise.

Letter from Lord Chancellor Thurlow to Lord Monboddoo.

St. James Square, Monday, May 13, 1799.

My dear Lord,

I return you many thanks for your sixth volume, which aptly covers in a system, no less regularly constructed than agreeably displayed.

Your printer has left out all your accents in the Greek quotations. I suppose he had no such types, at least I conjecture it is accidental, because you use them in your former volumes.

I am aware that the conductors of the Clarendon Press at Oxford, and some other scholars do this industriously, meaning to read Greek with the Latin accent.

It might have been expected that Quintilian's authority would have prevented this error. In the 10th cap. of 12th book among other disadvantages of the Latin language in comparison with the Greek, he reckons their accents so stiff and monotonous, "ut nostri Poetæ dulces carmen esse voluerunt, illorum id nominibus exor-

"nent." And Quintilian had a knowledge of both languages which perhaps no scholar has the means of attaining now.

But since the Greek has ceased to be a living language, not only the rhythm, but the sense (which in many hundreds of words depends on the accent,) seems to require the use of accentual marks to deliver it from ambiguity.

The context may assist conjecture. But considering the numberless disputes among the best commentators upon every Greek author, which turn entirely upon the accent, one would wish to have the surer guide of those accentual marks, which are either found in the best MSS. or are settled by the best consideration of critics.

However, as I don't mean to give a lecture on this subject to a proficient so much farther advanced in it than myself, I shall content myself with expressing my regret that Greek literature, which lies already under impediments enough, should incur still more difficulty from this very strange error.

I have the honour to be,

My dear Lord,

Your most obliged and obedient servant,
THURLOW.

Mr. Edward Chamberlayne having asked Lord Monboddoo's opinion of the second volume of Gibbon's History, his lordship wrote the following letter on the style and composition of that volume.

Monboddoo, 6 April 1781.

Dear Sir,

I had the honour of your very polite letter together with your observations upon Mr. Gibbon's second volume, which I have read with a great deal of pleasure. The work I have not yet seen, but from the specimens which you give me of it, it appears to be just in the style and manner of the first volume. I really do not know what name to give to Mr. Gibbon's style unless it be the name which Mr. Gay gives to his Farce, The what d' ye call it. It is neither historical, poetical, rhetorical, or didactic, but a jumble and heterogeneous mixture of all these. The faults of it as you observe are the farthest from these—quas aut incuria fudit, aut humana parum cavit natura. Mr. Gibbons is so far from being careless or negligent that he labours very much to write ill; which offends you as much as studied and affected graces in behaviour. Such a man in company pleases you most, when he is negligent and studies to please you least, and that is the case of Mr. Gibbons in his writings. Some passages that he has laboured, I am sure, very much, offend me exceedingly; while others, that he appears to have bestowed very little pains upon, I like very well. Of this kind is his Preface to his first volume, which is plainly and simply written, without any affected ornaments; and therefore I like it better in point of style than anything in the book. The characteristic marks of such a style as Mr. Gibbon's are numbers of epithets, periphrases, and minute descriptions, tending to please the fancy, or move the passions. These belong to poetry; and belonging to rhetoric you have the antithesis, and the measured periods, consisting of members commonly of the same length, and of the same form and structure.—As to epithets, there is nothing in my judgement that more distinguishes verse from prose than the frequent use of epithets. Take from Homer his epithets and his versification, and his language is, I am persuaded, nothing but the common language of the time in which he wrote. Now Mr. Gibbons abounds with epithets; and you very often have his periods concluded with two nouns, and each its attendant epithet. In one of the passages you have transcribed we have royal pupil, and immortal bard. Would Herodotus, Xenophon, or Julius Caesar, the three most perfect models of the historical style, have written so? As to periphrases, you have, in the second passage you quote, a most ridiculous periphrase for an historian, of casting nets in the waves of the ocean, for fishing in the sea; and in another passage, for excommunication, you have devoting a man to the abhorrence of earth and heaven. And as to the minute and circumstantial descriptions, which are so proper in poetry whose business it is to paint, but for the greater part exceedingly improper in history, you turned up, one evening that I had the pleasure of being in your company, a remarkable example of one, and upon a very strange subject, which however Mr. Gibbons has thought proper to adorn with all the flowers of his wit and eloquence. The subject I mean is the mad pranks of Commodus, which a grave historian would not delight to dwell upon, or to relate circumstantially, even in the plainest manner. As to his rhetorical ornaments, and

particularly the antithesis, there is more of that figure in his historical style than is to be found in the orations of Demosthenes. And as to the composition of his periods, he has that tiresome sameness of periods, of two members answering exactly to one another, which I observe to be a common fault in almost all the writers of history of this age, and indeed writers of every kind; and I would have you compare their works in this respect with my Lord Clarendon's History of the Civil Wars, or Milton's History of England, particularly the beginning of the first and second book; tho' I do not think that Milton excels so much in the historical as in the rhetorical composition. But even in his History you will find periods of several members of different lengths, and agreeably varied in their form and structure. But the worst of Mr. Gibbon's style I have not yet mentioned, which is, that it does not make his narrative credible, and therefore is entirely improper for history. If you had not turned up Herodian, and proved from him that he had no authority for several circumstances he relates of the pranks of Commodus, I should not have believed one half of the story as he tells it, but should have looked upon it as a tale, if not entirely invented, at least very much exaggerated, in order to please and amuse. In this respect I would have you compare Gulliver's narrative of his travels, or Lucian's true history, with Mr. Gibbon's narrative, and tell me, whether, setting aside the facts, the style both of Dean Swift and of Lucian is not infinitely more credible. I don't wonder that his style draws the attention even of such a judge as you. If a man had never read any authors of history but those three I mentioned, and had formed his taste of the historical style upon them, the style of Tacitus when he first read him would certainly draw his attention, and surprise him very much. But I am sure it would not be a surprise of approbation; and if his attention continued long to such a writer as either Tacitus or Mr. Gibbon, it must be the matter, not the style, that should attach him. As to Mr. Gibbon's matter, from the samples you give me of it, I am disposed not to have a good opinion of it any more than of the style. I remember in the first volume you shewed me a passage, which, I am persuaded, by many readers is thought very clever and fine, but upon examination, you and I agreed that it was absolute nonsense. I think it was concerning religion. But I am weary of writing more upon such a subject, as I believe you are of reading it, so I leave Mr. Gibbon to the admiration of the vulgar, to whom a history written as a history ought to be, would appear very dull, and insipid. You know the French proverb, "Aux gens de vilage, trompettes de bois."

As you have begun this literary correspondence with me, I hope you will continue it, and oblige me as much in that respect as several of my acquaintances in London have done, ladies as well as gentlemen, since I left it. I will send you in a post or two a criticism upon a remarkable passage of Herodotus, concerning the dimensions of the Great Pyramid, and the time that was taken in building it; which passage I think hitherto has not been well understood. I have sent a copy of it to a learned friend I have in Oxford, and another more learned still that I have in London, Dr. Horsley; and I have their approbation, but I am very desirous of yours.

I am, with great regard and esteem,
Your most obedient and faithful humble servant.

Several other letters passed between Lord Monboddoo and the writers of the preceding letters on matters of philosophical and literary interest.

From the Duke of Queensberry there are several letters relating to the Douglas Case, and to Lord Monboddoo's appointment as a Judge in the Court of Session, 1764-67.

From Sir James Foulis of Colinton, near Edinburgh, there are letters written between 1773-79, on Egyptian Antiquities and on the subjects of Lord Monboddoo's published works.

Lord Lyttleton sends two letters, 1773, enclosing some criticisms on "The Origin and Progress of Language," which he had read "with no small admiration of the great ingenuity, learning, and acuteness discernible in it." There is also, on the same subject chiefly, a series of letters, 1773-76, from Sir John Pringle, President of the Royal Society.

There are two letters, 1778, from Professor Dugald Stewart, on the Newtonian Philosophy, and a letter on the same subject from the Earl Stanhope, dated 1781.

From Professor Hunter, of St. Andrews, Dalzel, of Edinburgh, and Young, of Glasgow, there are letters written between 1781-85, on literary matters.

Sir Joseph Banks, President of the Royal Society, in letters which he wrote to Lord Monboddoo, 1780-84, treats of various matters of Natural History, including "Men with Tails." There are also letters from

Thomas Percival, Manchester	-	-	-	1799

With others which do not however call for special mention.

Among the other papers of Lord Monboddoo are his notes on the famous Douglas Case, in which he was counsel for Mr. Douglas. These extend to great length, and are made up of manuscripts, entitled, "Notes on the proof in the case of Douglas"; "Notes about Sir John [Steuart's] Declaration"; "Mr. Burnett's plan of his pleading for Douglas"; "General plan of my pleading in the Douglas cause." Towards the close of the last he, says, "Will speak with decency, as I have a respect for noble families; but must say what is proper for the cause; and the friends of that family must not pretend to be offended, as they have used so much freedom with the parents of Mr. Douglas. Sir John [Steuart] and Lady Jane [Douglas] have been assailed with assertions which are foreign to the cause, without proof, and contrary to the proof, ought not to have been said, especially by the family of Hamilton, who derive their chief from their connection with the family of Douglas, of which she was the undoubted heiress.—Will shew so much respect to the family of Hamilton, and no more, as to keep within the proof."

The following "Catalogue of MSS," is also among the papers, and bears the date 1794:—

REPORT ON THE PAPERS AT GORDONSTOUN BELONGING TO SIR WILLIAM GORDON GORDON CUMMING, BART.

Sir Robert Gordon, the founder of the branch of Gordonstoun, was son of Alexander, fifteenth Earl of Sutherland, and having acquired various estates in the shires of Elgin and Forres, had them all united into the barony of Gordonstoun by a Charter under the Great Seal, dated 20th June 1642.

He was a favoured servant of James VI. and Charles I., being a gentleman of the bed-chamber to both these kings. By the latter he was created a baronet, and was the first of that new order. He held the office of Vice-Chamberlain of Scotland, under the Duke of Lennox; was a member of the Privy Council, and was Sheriff Principal of Inverness.

He was known during part of his life as Tutor of Sutherland, from having been called to the administration of the estates of his minor nephew the Earl of Sutherland; and his "History of the Earldom of Sutherland" is a monument of his historical tastes, as well as an evidence of his political standing with his contemporaries.

The more important part of the papers at Gordonstoun consists of the correspondence of Sir Robert Gordon, of documents which he collected, or which came at a later period into the family archives through connections formed by the marriages of his descendants.

Among the letters will be found specimens from Charles I., the Duke of Lennox, the Earl of Carlisle, the Marquis of Montrose, and General Monk.

Among the miscellaneous papers are several connected with Sir Robert's father-in-law, John Gordon, the learned Dean of Salisbury, and others, relating to the settlement of Nova Scotia and the newly created order of Knight Baronet.

An interesting mass of documents described in the Report are those of Sir Robert Farquhar of Mounie. These include correspondence with the covenanting leaders, accounts of public expenses for the army, and papers of the eccentric translator of Rabelais, Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromarty.

A later series contains letters of Robert Barclay of Ury, the apologist of the Quakers, relative to the Settlement of East Jersey, in America, of which he was Governor; papers and reports on the Scottish Mint, and letters from Samuel Pepys.

Another branch of the papers reported on are the Records of the ancient family of Cumming of Altyre, now united to that of Gordonstoun, consisting chiefly of the Charters and Barony Court Books of Altyre.

In examining this large and important collection, I had the assistance of Captain Edward Dunbar-Dunbar, who has spent much time in their arrangement, and has printed specimens of them in his volumes on the "Social Life of Former Times."

As yet there is no list of the miscellaneous documents, but it is to be hoped that a careful calendar will yet be prepared, so as to make them available for the history of the North of Scotland in the seventeenth century, for which they afford many materials.

Some documents relate to the troubles in the time of Charles I., and show Sir Robert Gordon acting as a mediator between the opposing parties. One of these is entitled "Instrucciones fra the Gentrie of Murray to Sir Robert Gordoun of Gordounstoun, Thomas MacKenzie of Pliscarden, and John Innes of Lewchars, appoyntit to confer and appoynt with the Marquis of Montrois for their sautie and preventing the destruction of their cuntry."

By the first they were to demand "that no partie be send out durning the parlie that may offend the cuntry peopill within the shyre of Murray and Narne, and the burrowis within the same, and for some tyme after the parlie."

In the third it was represented that "since thair is a treatie betuix the Kingis Majestie and the Parliament of England and Commissioners of Scotland, and expectation of some happie successe, his lordship wald desist fra ony hostill invasion against us durning the tyme of that treatie, durning which tyme we sall doe nothing prejudiciall to the Religion, the Kingis honour and authoritie, and the good and sautie of the Kingdom."

It is signed by Innes of that ilk, Cumyng of Altyr, Leslie of Finrasse, Grant of Moynes, Sutherland of Duffus, Rose of Kilravock, Kynnard of Cowbin, Dunbar, younger, of Binnis, and others.

There is a letter to Sir Robert Gordon from the great Marquis himself, in which he shows his anxiety to attach his correspondent to the King's cause, which he had now espoused. It is in the following terms: "Sir, I received your, and heane spoke with my Lord Gordone concerning you, and shall rest very confident that you will be ready to aduance his Majesties service be all possible meanes, both openly and in secret, as occasion shall offer, and his Majesties authority may protect you in, By which you shall be assured ever to find me, your most affectionat friende, MONTROSE."

"Collen, 5 March, 1643. I thank you for the quike dispatch of those letters and intreats your labours with your nephew, Sutherland, since according to his behaviour much will lye upon you."

A letter written by Sir Robert to a kinsman in the following year refers to the dread of the country as to the movements of Montrose. It is addressed to "George Gourdon Messinger at his house in the Cowgate at the foot of the Blacfreer Vynd at Edinburgh."—"Loving Cousing, Wee ar in such a fright heir that wee can not think of any particular bassines: for Montrois stryvis to make his winter quarters heir in Murray; he hath been these sextein days at Spey syde, about Rothemurches, and now he is in Badenogh: We expect him daylie in Murray: I have written to Mr. Robert Farquhar to pay some detts for me at Edinburgh, but what is betuix yow and me, I have reserved to compt with you, and to pay yow myself when it shall please God to blowe away this storme. . . . This is all I will trouble yow with at this terme, and so praying the Lord to send us peace, I rest ener yowr louing Cousing, ROBERT GORDON. Elgin the 26 of November 1644."

The following order by Lord Strathnaver, dated in 1685, affords curious evidence of the difficulties which attended the muster of Highland Clans except under the immediate command of their own chieftains:—"His Excellencie the Duke of Gordon, his Majesties Lieutenant in the North, having sent his orders to me, John Lord Strathnaver, who am by him entrusted to bring up the Northern forces toward Argyleshire, for commanding away in haste six hundred men out of the whole army, by way of detachment, finding upon the deliberate advice of the whole officers convened in a Council of War, it being found impossible to perswade or command a Highland people, not yet regulated, to do any service except under the command of their own Chieftains, it hath been concluded absolutely more conduicible to the promoting of his Majesties service, and answerable to his Excellencie the Duke of Gordon's design, to send away rather particular bodies of men then a detach'd partie. Therefore, I hereby command the Master of Tarbet, with the men under "his command, Thomas Fraser of Beaufort, with such as under his command, and Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonstoun, with the Frasers of Stratherrick, the Grants of Urquhart and Glenmoristoun, and the Duke of Gordon's men of the Castlelands of Inverness, under the command of the said Sir Robert Gordon, to march with all expedition forward till they joyne His Excellency the Duke of Gordon. Given at Drumwichter, the sixteenth of June 1631, viz, eightie five. STRATH-NAVER."

An account of the battle of Bothwell Bridge, subscribed by Sir Thomas Dalsell, Lieutenant-General, and dated 25 June, 1679. In it he sets forth, "The general call before the Ingagement was addressed to by two Commissioners from these rebells with one petitione subscrybed by General Hamiltonne in name of the covenanted army craving that presbytery might be erected, Episcopacy throwne downe, and all the Lawes anent Supremacy and which ar contrar to presbyterian Government abolished. This the general received with all moderation and desired to know if they haide any further to say for the message was not pleasant. Whereupon they sent new Commissioners desyring ane Cessatione for some few dayes, which being denyed, the general gave order to assault three enemy, who without strok of sword or shoatt except some cannon, did runn and flee."

There is a large collection of letters, addressed to Sir Robert Gordon by correspondents connected with him by ties of politics, kindred, or business.

Among these are several from Jane Countess of Sutherland, the wife of Sir Robert's nephew, John, fourteenth Earl of Sutherland, on matters of business from Dunrobin, 1636; in one of these she asks Sir Robert for food and clothes, as she can get neither; and one from Drummond, the residence of her father, James Earl of Perth in 1632, thanking him for his great care in sending of her "graith."

There are also letters from Lady Jean Gordon, their daughter, addressed in 1657 to Sir Ludovick Gordon, touching a proposal of marriage made to her.

She is well disposed to the proposal herself, seeing the gentleman's estate "is five thousand mark a year, and he offers me the half for my congeinie, which I think is very fair, considering the condission I am in, for it is good taking an good occation whill offered. He does profes a great dell of love to me; for my owne part I could lend my lyff with the man, for he sime to be a very deserveng gentillman, and one I hop of a good disposition, and any thing he has is frie." The result is not stated.

A series of letters from the Dukes of Lennox to Sir Robert Gordon, 1619-1630.

The Dukes were Great Chamberlains of Scotland, and Sir Robert was Vice-Chamberlain.

In 1620 Ludovic, the second Duke, writes to Sir Robert, then in Paris, as his loving cousin, and entreates him "to send me over some dozen of masks for gentlemenn, which you must bespeak, that they may be higher in the brow than the ordinary. You must send me also a dozen pair of such gloves as the gentlemenn there do weare, and some working silk of dark colours, some reasonable quantity of each. If Madame de Gie and Madame La Marquise de Vermont be at Paris, you may take their advyce in choosing them."

In July 1633 the King, when at Falkland, issued an order to the Duke of Lennox, commanding him to visit or cause visit our wardrobe here, and make the master thereof give an accompt and inventarie of such things as are within the same to you, that you may acquaint Us therewith."

Proceeding on this is an order by James, the fourth Duke, to Sir Robert Gordon, referring to the Royal command: "and in regard of my necessary attendance upon his majesties person, and his other more weighty affaires, I shall not, in this short time of stay, have leisure to performe it myselfe, I doe therefore require, and by these presents authorize you as Vice-Chamberlaine, to visit the said Wardrobe, and to cause the master thereof to give you an accompt of all such things as shall be found therein."

In February 1638 is an order by Philip Earl of Pembroke, Lord Chamberlain of England, commanding Sir Robert Gordon to be at the city of York on the 1st of April, "with a horse and russett armes with gilded nailes or studs after the fashion of a Curassier for yourselfe, and white armes as a Hargobusier for your servant or servants that you shall bring along with you."

On the 2d of May 1639 the King wrote to Sir Robert from Durham, with special reference to the loyalty and sufferings of the Marquis of Huntly, adding, "You may assure him from Us that Wee have always reposed a great trust in his affection to our service, and will continue in that mynd; showing him withall, that shortly (God willing) Wee will take a course for his and his sone's enlargement; till which tyme assure him that no Covenantor shall have any pardon from Us, and that at our first conveniency he shall find the effects of our favour."

The following document relates to the widow of Ludovick, second Duke of Lennox, and is entitled "A Note of such things as my Lady Duches of Richmond and Lenox gave to her brother, the late Duke of Lenox and his sonne, the Lord Darnly, which were hers by lawe, being movables, but she freely gave them to him, for the maintenance of him and the House of Lenox after him, out of her dutie to her deceased Lord, and her love and care of the House of Lenox:—

"1. The proffittes of the patents of the Vinage after seven yeares, after which time there will bee fortie moe years to come. Her Grace hath now for that foure and twentie hundred pounds yearlye, the Kings rent paid, but afterwards it will be a greate deale more."

"2. The Patent of the Greenwax in present (which is fifteen hundred pounds yearlye) for one and twentie yeares, and three thousand pounds of arrerages payeable out of the Hamper."

"3. The Patent of the Newcastle Coles for one and twentie yeares."

"4. The Patent of Sweete-wines and Sugars for one and twentie yeares."

"5. The thirds of Setterington, Cobham, and all other lands and leases in England."

"6. The thirds of the whole Dukedome of Lenox; of all which my Lord Duke of Richmond was seized; and so her Grace was capable of the thirds of them all; but my Lord Duke of Lenox that last died was not seized of any."

"7. My Lord's Collar of Esses with a George of diamonds at it; three other Georges and Garters; which is all he had excepte one which is upon his Effigies at Westminster."

"8. My Lord's riche sworde sette with stones."

"9. My Lord's robes and two seales."

"10. All the furniture which belonged to my Lord's lodgings of the Gatehouse at Whitehall, with a wrought bed that had been my Lady Margaret Lenoxes, and of her working; with a great bason and ewer that the French King gave my Lord; three gault candlestickes and two gault bowles upon the cupbord."

"11. All my Lords progresse stuffe; a red bed with chairs and stooles suiteable to it; and hangings and carpettes for the bed chamber and dining chamber."

"12. Three rich coaches, whereof one of yellow velvet, another of yellow satten imbrodered with fleur delices of black velvet and gould, the third of black and yellow figure satten; six rich imbrodered coates; six livery clokes, where of three for coachmen and three for groomes, all which were never used; and foure coach-horses."

"13. Five hundred pounds in money, which my Lady had lent to my Lord Duke of Lenox, whereunto he promised to put as much more, together with the three thousand pounds arrerages of the Greenwax, to bee imployed towards a portion for his daughter the Ladye Elizabeth Stewart."

A letter to Sir Robert Gordon from Arthur Forbes, dated Pitsligo, 23rd June 1619, contains a reference to some of the Perth Articles, enacted at the General Assembly recently held at Perth:—"Ther is no nouells that I heir off bot sum that ar nocht guid, quhilk is ther is grytt stryff in Edinburgh amonge the ministrey about this geniculacione, and sum off the best off them vardin, to vit Mr. Robert Bruce, Mr. Henry Blyth vardin in Inverness, Mr. David Foster, minister at Leith vardin in Aberdein, and the stipendis tane from them, and hes no liberty to teche: the Lord in mercy amend it, and send peace and quietnes to his glory, the veill off his kirk and the King's Majesties contentment, and it is thocht and ferid that this sall ryss to ane gryter hicht and extremity, for ther is no minister in Scotland that will nocht obey the actis off the general assembly bot sall be ather vardin or pute to sylence, and the maist part and best off them (as is reportit) vill byd the extremity."

The King and the Earl of Carlisle had agreed to act as godfathers at the baptism of Sir Robert Gordon's fifth son Charles, and the following letter was addressed by the Earl to a friend, whose name does not appear, asking him to act as his deputy.

"Hampton Court, the 27th September 1632.

"Sir,—I hath pleased Sir Robert Gordon, my noble and speciall friend, to call me to an action of double honour in joyning me with his Majestie as an assistant and witness to the christening of his chyld. I owe the gentleman so much respect, and for this particular favour so many thanks, that nothing but his Majesties service and urgent affaires should have hindred me to wait in person upon him at that solemnities, had it bein to go to the remotest part of England; and as I hope that this will excuse my absence, so lykewyse I entreat it may serve to make an apologie for the boldnes I take to desyre You, Sir, to act, and better, my part in that ceremonie with his Majestie's deputy . . . Carlike."

Sir Robert's mother was Lady Jane Gordon, the divorced wife of the Earl of Bothwell, and thereafter wife of the Earl of Sutherland. There is a very interesting letter from her to her son Sir Robert. Also her 3d marriage contract with Ogilvie of Boyne, dated 1599. Being a member of the Roman Catholic Church, she, on various occasions, was persecuted on account of her religion; and towards the end of her days, she was excommunicated. In 1627 Sir Robert, in consideration of the sentence being relaxed, undertook, by a formal bond to the Bishop of Caithness, that his mother "shall outterlie forbeir and absteine "frome receypting of preistis and Jesuitis, and frome "heiring of mass in tyme cuming." It seems likely that his own reputation for orthodoxy suffered from his adherence to his mother, and in 1646 the Presbytery of Elgin granted a testimonial in his favour, setting forth that "since his residence amongst us heir "in the presbytery of Elgin, Sir Robert Gordon hath "bein a main advancer off the true religion, and a "great forderer and helpe in what concerned this "present reformation; and is weill affected to the "church and peace off this country, and hath yielded "full and constant obedience to all publick ordinances "off the church."

A document of a like purport was signed by the lay friends of Sir Robert Gordon in July 1646, which, after various statements like those in the preceding testimonial, adds: "And in speciall Wee (the Commander and "officeres off the Garrison of Spynie) can not but "acknowledge the said Sir Robert Gordoun's assistance "and willingnes to helpe us during thir sturres, and "whilst wee were besieged by the enemy: And Wee "do all hereby declare that whatsoever hath escaped "the said Sir Robert, proceeded from the violence off "the enemy residing in his bounds, threatening dayly "both his own and his tennants ruine with fyre and "sword. Which Wee do earnestly and humbly recom- "mend to the consideration off the honourable Com- "mittee of Parliament. Among the subscribers are "Alexander Sutherland of Duffus, John Grant of "Ballandalloch, Ninian Dunbar of Grange, Walter "Innes of Auchincart."

Among the papers is "The latter will and testament "of me Sir Robert Gordon of Gordonstoun; wrytten "and subscribed by me at Gordonstoun the ellewynth "day of July jaj sex hundreth fifty four yiris."

He appointed his wife ("whom I have ewer found "loving") to be his executor, and the Earl of Sutherland to be "overseer" of his will; and he particularly recom- mended his wife and children to the care of Sir Robert Innes of that ilk, the Lord Brodie, Sir Robert Farquhar of Mounie, Colonel David Barclay (his son-in-law), Robert Gray of Arbo, and Maister John Hay, Commissary of Murray, his worthy friends.

He made the following bequests:—

"Item, I do leave to my sone Lodowick and to his heyrres male my order of Knight Baronet, with some dyamonds upon it; and if he please he may carie it upon a small golden chayn about his neck, als weel as upon a ribbon."

"Item, I doe leave to my grandchyld Robert Gordon (Lodowick's sone), and to his heyrres male, as a small token from me, my sasaphas coope edged about the mouth with silver, and my table men of whalebone; and I do appoint them to be kept for him by his grand- mother so long as shee lives."

"Item, I do leave to my grandchyld Robert Barclay my silver peices and puspennies, as a small token from me, and I do appoint his mother to keep them for him so long as shee lives."

"Item, I do expect that my wyff will leave her great Dyamond Jewell (with King James his picture upon it) to my sone Lodowick and his sone Robert Gordon, as a memorie to the house, which I do entreat, her to do, seeing it was her unquhytle mother's will that it should be so: unles shee be forced to sell it for the payment of our detts."

"Item, I do also expect that my wyff will giwe to our grandchyld Robert Gordon (Lodowick his sone) and to his heyrres male, as a token from her to the house, the bed and furniture of tent stitich wrought upon grein cloth; with the curtains, valance, coopboard, cloith, stools, chair, and couth apperteyning thereto; all wrought by my mother in law Dame Geneewie Petaw."

"Item, I do recommend the building of the church of Dreynie to my wyff and to my sone Lodowick; but particularlie I do recommend the building of a share therof to my wyff; for seeing wee have taken down the old church of Kinneddor it is reason that wee help to build another."

Sir Robert Gordon was married in 1613 to Louyse Gordon, only daughter of John Gordon, Dean of Salisbury,—a union which accounts for the occurrence of a set of documents in the charter room.

John Gordon, who was son of Alexander Gordon, Archbishop of Athens and Bishop of Galloway, is represented as having been a man of great learning, and a constant maintainer of the privileges of the Church of Salisbury. He was married to Genevieve Petaw, daughter of Monsieur de Moylett, first president of the Court of Parliament in Britany; she died and was buried at Gordonstoun.

One of the papers of this series is the contract of marriage, written in French, between Sir Robert Gordon and Louyse Gordon, dated 23rd February [1613]; she was brought up with Queen Henrietta Maria.

Another is the will of John Gordon, Dean of Salisbury, dated 16th September 1618. In the commencement he returns thanks to God for his many mercies, among which he specifies "that he made me to bee instructed "and taught from my youth up in scholes and colleges, "as well in Scotland as in Fraunce, in all good disci- "pline and liberrall artis and sciences, and in the know- "ledge of the Greeke and Hebrew languages and other "orientalls, and by that means called me from the "Invocation and adoration of creatures inferiors to the "Saide holy and blessed Trinitie practised in the now "Romaine Church and other doctrines, "transubstantiation, and adoration of the hostia missalis exercised therein, and hath called mee to the reformed "Church of England, Scotland, and Ireland, protesting "by me before the Eternall and Almighty God and before the celestial powers, Archangels, Angels, Cheru- "bims, and Seraphimes, and all other his ministeriall spirits, that by the grace of God and the assistance "of his holy Spirit, that I shall constantly persevere "and continue unto the separation of my soul from my "body in the doctrine of Salvation now preached in the "said church. I give also thanks to the said holy "Trinitie who after I had bene Gentelman of three "Kinges chambers in Fraunce, to wit Charles the 9 and Henry the thirde and foverth in the flower of my "age, and there was assailed with many corruptions "as well spiritual as temporal and many dangers of "my life, that my said lord and saviour did miracu- "lously preserue me and deliver me from all the saide "danger, and called me by King James my "soveraigns grationsnesse to this habitation in England "and to this holy ministrie, being then of 58 yeres of "age . . . And that I may leave to posterity all "the bookes that I have written both in Latine and also "in English in matters of Religion, praying earnestly "Sir Robert Gordon of Sudderlan, my sone in lawe, "that if God shall call mee to his heuently Kingdome "before I may publishe the said bookes, that he will be "carefull of them that they that are in English be pub- "lished in Scotlande, and these that are in Latine "beyound the seas, so that the great and long labores "and paines that I by the grace of God have bestowed "in composing the saide Bookes be not lost. Now "because the Apostell Heb. 9 v. 27 hath taught me and all Christians that Statutum est hominibus semel mori "post autem hoc judicium, it is ordained to men once "to die and that after that is judgement, I belieue con- "stantly and firmly Christ saying in St. Johns Gospell chap. 5 v. 24, qui verbum meum audit et credit ei qui misit me habet vitam eternam, et in judicium non venit, sed transiit a morte in vitam, he that heareth "my word and beleeueth in him who hath sent me "hath everlasting life and shall not com into condem- "nation, but is passed from death unto life, and therefore "seeing that God hath given me an assured and stedfast "faith that the eternall father hath sent his eternall "sonne in this world for to redeeme from Satan, hell, "and condemnation all faithfull believers according to "his eternall forknowledge, purpose, election, predesti-

The dean of Salisburie was a writer in verse as well prose. Two of his productions occur in a contemporary hand, which may be his own. The title of the first is as follows: "Quod Papa jus regna transferendi et dandi
"usurpans est Vicarius Satane."

The second is thus "englied" by the author:—

"When Neptun saw in Adrian surges stand
Venice, and give the sea laws of command:
Now Jove said he object thy Capitoll,
And Mars proud walls, this were for to extoll
Tiber beyond the Main, both Tounns behold;
Rome men thoult's say, Venice the Gods did mould."

Sir Robert Gordon was the first of the order of Baronets of Nova Scotia, created by King Charles I. in May 1625, and the charter in his favour under the Great Seal is preserved. By it he had a grant of "all the sea "coast at the south west part of land upon the eastmost
"side of that bay called Port de Moutone (in Nova "Scotia), and from thence going southward three miles
"along the coast, and from thence passing northward
"from the said sea coast into the mainland, anent those "three miles, till the quantity thereof extend to six-

"teen thousand acres of land being always three miles
"in breadth . . . and all erected in a full and "free barony, called the Barony of Gordon, with power
"of Regality."

Sir William Alexander (afterwards Earl of Stirling) had been constituted His Majesty's Heritable Lieutenant of New Scotland, and on the 4th of June 1625 he in that capacity executed a deed, which narrated that "albeit "that Sir Robert Gordon, Barronet, Gentleman in
"Ordinarie of His Majesties Privie Chamber, as prin-
"cipall, and Sir Alexander Strachan, Baronet of Thorn"ton, as cautioner for him, be their hand beheard date
"herof, are obleist to pay and deliver to me my aires
"or assignies whatsoever the soume of Three thousand "merks, usall money of the Kingdome of Scotland, as "principall soume, upon the eleventh day of November
"next to cum, . . . nevertheless for the regard I "have to the well and furtherance of the plantation
"of the said cuntries, and whereby they may be the better
"encouraged to plant and cause inhabit their own "particular bounds within the said cuntries, I bind and "obliss me and my forsaid to warre and bestow Two "thousand merks money forsaide of the said Three "thousand merks, after it beis payed to me or my for-
"said, towards the setting forth of a colonie of men
"furnished with necessaire provision, to be planted be
"me, my aires, or our deputies, within the said cuntries,
"be the advise of the said Sir Robert Gordon and the "remanant Baronetts of Scotland, adventurers in the "plantation of the same, or so many of them as shall "meete and convene with my aires or our deputies "within Scotland, and that at our meeting we appointed "for that effect to be at St. Johnston the xxvii day of "August next to cum, or at any other meeting to be "appointed be us at that time, and that the time of the "setting forth of the said colonie shall be likewise con-
"descended upon be their advise."

By a subsequent deed, dated at London, 2nd July 1625, Sir William Alexander, in consideration of sums of money paid to him granted to Sir Robert Gordon a tack for nineteen years of "all and hail the Admiralltie of all
"the sea coastes, ports, and harbours of all lands and "bounds pertaining heretablie to the said Sir Robert "Gordon within the said cuntries of New Scotland." In return, Sir Robert became bound to pay "yearlie,
"during the space above written, within St. Giles Kirk
"in Edinburgh in Scotland, upon Whitsunday-Even,
"the Soume of fyve merks usall Scottes money."

Robert Barclay, the grandchild of Sir Robert, to whom, as has been seen, one of his bequests was made, was the son of Colonel David Barclay of Ury, and became celebrated as the author of an "Apology" for the Quakers, and other works written in defence of that body. His mother was Katherine Gordon, Sir Robert Gordon's eldest daughter.

William Pen who acquired the territory of East New Jersey in 1681, became associated in a business partnership connected with it, of which the Earl of Perth,
Robert Barclay, and David, his son, were members.

In 1683 one of Pen's original partners disposed of his share to Sir John Gordon of Durno, advocate in Edinburgh, and among the papers is a letter written to Sir John by Robert Barclay, the apologist.

It is dated "Ury the 4 of the 1st Month 1684. Dear
"Cousine, I suppose thou has wrotte ere now to London
"to thy brother George, and proposed to him to bring "down his vessell here to cary passengers to East "Jersey. I doubt not but he may make as good a "venter that way as any he can propose, and knows "how to project a retourn for himself. There will not "want passengers, besides those that fills another ship to "be hired, and one that is going from Glasgow with "Manyward, which will be the best way. And besides "those George may carry upon thy brother's accompt
"and thine's, if he want, it is but getting men from "Strathnaver, to carry over at a venter, which is as "profitable a commodity as he can trade in; the sooner
"something can be done the better."

A letter from Gawen Laurie, Deputy Governor of East
New Jersey, to a correspondent whose address has been lost, is also preserved. It is dated 26th March 1684, and gives many curious descriptive details of the province.
"It is," he says, "beyond what I expected, situated in a "good aire, which makes it healthy, and there is a great "convenience of traveling from place to place through "the province in boats, from a small cannoe to vessells
"of 30, 40, 50 and in some places 100 ton
"The soyle is generally black, in some places a foot
"deepe, beareth great burthens of corne and naturally
"brings forth English grape after two years plowing.
"The ground is tender and the plowing very easy."

"The trees grow generally not thick, but in some places 10, some 15, 20, or 30 upon an acre; this generally but in some particular places they are 100 on one acre but rarely. The trees are very tall and straight, the general sort are oak, beech, walnut, chesnut, gum-tree, cedar, white wood like our poplar tree, and makes sufficient boards; and in some places there is abundance of fir trees. Wallnuts, chesnuts, and acorns lye thick on the ground for want of eating. Peaches, vines, strawberries, and many other sorts of fruit grow commonly in the woods. Ther is plenty of oysters, fish, and fowle. Pork is two pence per pound, beef and venison one penny per pound, a whole fat buck for five or six shillings, Indian corn two and six pence per bushell, oats twenty pence, barley two shillings. Wee have good brick-earth and stone, for building, at Amboy and elsewhere. The cuntry farm-houses are built very cheap; a carpenter with a man's own servants builds the house; they have all materials for nothing, except nailes, their chimneys are of stone. They make their own ploughs and carts for the most part, only the iron-works is very deare. The poorer sort set up a house of 2 or 3 roomes themselves in this manner: the walls are of cloven timber about eight inches broad, lyke planks set on end in the ground nailed to the raising which they plaister very warme; they build a barne after the same manner; and these cost not the landlord above five pounds apiece; then to work they go: two or three men will cleare in one year five acres, in some places sixty or more; they sow corne the first year, and afterwards maintain themselves, and the encrease of the corne, cows, horses, hoggs, and sheep comes to the landlord.

"Our English people are far better husbandmen than the New England men that settle heer. Servants work not heer so much by one third part as they doe in England, and I think, feed much better.

"When they are out of their tyime they have land for themselves, and generally turn farmers for themselves. . . . Send over some hundred men, cuntry fellows that can plough, sow, reap, thresh, and looke after cattle, &c., and I will sett thee out a brave plantation, but thou must send some goods to stock it withall. I desire thee to encourage some of our friends, especially the proprietors, to send servants to stock some land. . . . There is one man, who since I came hither, sold his plantation for fifteen hundred pounds; the whole was 1600 or 1800 acres, whereof 120 were cleared, but on which he had a house, barns, orchard, and garden planted.

"The Scots have taken a right course, they have sent over many servants, and are sending more; they have lykeways sent severall poor families, some for seven years, some for ten years, allow halfe the encrease to their landlords except the milk which the tenant has to himselfe. . . . Now I have laid these things before thee, I desire thee to impart them to some of the proprietors and other friends, that they may consider the same. I am thy loving friend, GAWEN LAURIE."

There are, besides the letters already noted, letters written by George Earl of Caithness, 1619; James Lord Frendraught, 1661; Alexander Earl of Murray, 1675. One signed "Lauderdail," addressed "To my Lord Balcarras at St. Andrews," is dated "Tower, ye 14 of Decr. [no year]." James Earl of Murray, 1644; Lord Duffus, 1678; Earl of Seaforth, 1627; Earl of Balcarras, 1651; Alexander, Master of Elphinstone, 1618; news letters from London to Sir Ludovick Gordon, 1650, and later dates; Earl of Dumfermline, 1616; Earl of Forfar, 1682; Lord Berridale, 1623; Earl of Buchan, 1619; Lord Reay, 1688.

Among the miscellaneous papers is a Report of the Commissioners appoynted for tryall of the Minte of Scotland at Edinburgh, 4th August 1682. It is subscribed by G. Gordon, Lord Chancellor; Queensberry, Atholl, Montrose, Perth, Sonthesque, Tweeddale, Geo. McKenzie, R. Gordon, and others.

Fragment of a letter dated "Lambeth, 24th February 1614," in which the writer asks Sir Robert Gordon, "I pray you ask the Deane what he has done with his book upon the Sacrament, for I can hear no word of it, and thus till furdre occasion, restes, remembering me to the Deane, Madam your wyf, and all your worship's cousing at power to do commandment."

Among the papers at Gordonstoun is an extensive series of miscellaneous documents and correspondence which belonged to Sir Robert Farquhar of Monnie; Sir Robert Gordon's eldest son Sir Ludovick married the daughter and co-heiress of Sir R. Farquhar.

This gentleman, originally a burgess and magistrate of Aberdeen, who received the honour of knighthood from King Charles II. 1651, was a prominent actor in the civil strifes of the period, having acted as Commissary depute for the North, under the Covenanted leaders, and thus the centre of a varied correspondence with the public men of the day, and agent in raising levies of troops, and supplies of money, for the armies of the Covenant.

His papers contribute many authentic materials for a picture of the stirring scenes in which he moved, adding as well notices useful for local and family history. There are letters from the Earl Marischal, Major General Baillie, Major General Monro, and communications of various sorts, addressed to Farquhar by the Committee of Estates.

Several detailed accounts of the monies received by him in public loans and levies, with his expenditure for the Covenanted forces, are among the papers, and furnish many useful details.

Sir Robert Farquhar, while a magistrate of Aberdeen, was taken prisoner by the local cavaliers, and carried first to Strathgogie, and then to Auchindoun, where he was confined for a time.

A letter from Sir Robert Gordon, sent to him at Auchindoun, is preserved, with a draft of a letter which he addressed from the same place to the Marquis of Argyll, detailing the circumstances of his imprisonment, but acknowledging that he had received kind and courteous treatment from his captors.

In a Petition addressed by him to the Council of the Protector, he details his many public services and exertions "for suppressing the common enemy in Scotland," and the no less numerous trials to which he had in consequence been exposed, whereby he had been all but ruined; and concludes with a prayer that their Lordships "might be pleased from their Christiane compassion and equitie, to design some present expedient upon the whole nation (altho' it were for some months or years space whereby it should be but little sensible to the people) for a stock of credit, and mean of subsistence to him, his family and relations, rather than that they should utterly perish, for supplying so many thousands in their Lordship's interest in their great necessity."

One of the letters is from "Mackye, M[aster] of Rey," eldest son of Lord Reay, and is addressed to Sir Robert Farquhar as the writer's "loving foster father." It is dated "Copinhome 6 October 1628," and states that the writer and his brother have hitherto been at a Dutch school, "and now haueing at last obtained of the King of Denmarkes Majestie to giue us frie interinament, his Majestie hes derecked us to a Universtie called Soare, quhilk is eight duth myle laying from this toune, and there we three gat frie meat and chamer, our father furnishing the rest off our necessities."

Farquhar has preserved among his papers an order by General Monck, dated at Dundee, 7th October 1651, against the enforcement of unlawful oaths, and denouncing all who should tender or take such oaths without order from the Commonwealth of England as public enemies; also copies of public letters of the day.

One of these is from the Protector Cromwell, dated Edinburgh, 25th October 1650, and is addressed to Colonel Strachan. Another, from the Protector to the General Assembly of the Kirk, is dated Musselburgh, 3rd August 1650.

A letter signed by General Monck, and dated Dalkeith, 27th October 1656, is addressed to "The High Sheriff of the shire of Cromarty." He transmits printed copies of "A true Narrative of the late Success of the Fleet of "the Commonwealth on the Spanish Coast," with directions to send one of them to each of the parish ministers within the shire of Cromarty.

A letter, written by Farquhar to Sir Robert Gordon in August 1644, gives the gist of a letter which Lord Burleigh had received from the chancellor. It contains the following reference to Montrose: "My Lord Montrose is denyit to have any comand over the Inglishes, because it is said to him they can hardlie trust him who was not tref to his own natione."

In 1627 Farquhar accompanied Sir Donald Mackay (afterwards Lord Reay) to Germany, when the latter commanded a regiment in the service of Gustavus Adolphus. One of Farquhar's papers is an account of the money disbursed in Scotland and Holland for Mackay, from 2nd January to 22nd March 1627. It is remarkable for the number of entries for wine and other drinkables. On embarking at Leith there is paid "for ane rabber of Frensche wyne, 21l. 12s.; afterwards for fyve pynts of seck, 4l. 10s. Left with the Master of Crawford and Captain Mackenzie when we went to Nimmikin, the 6 of Februar 20l. For Spanisch wyne thair 1l. 2s. Our supper in Bremmell 13 of Februar 8l. 2s. Payit seing the kirk thair 4s., drink-silver 8s. Payit seing the kirk and steppill of Dori 12s. Payit in syned-hous for wyne and breid thair 12s. Our supper in Rotterdam, 15 of Februar, 6s. Drink-silver thair and for beer, sauc, and nutmugs 14s. Payit in Delf seing the saltpiter made, and seing the spinhuis 80s. Supper in Harlem, and wyne and fire 6l. 14s., and drink-silver thair 12s. For ane new sword to his Lordship in Amsterdam 15s. Payit for mending and washing the Colonnell's blew wastcoat in Amsterdam 18s."

Farquhar died in 1666, and some of the outlays at his funeral point to the survival of customs of an early character. Thus Thomas Davidson, master of the music school of Aberdeen, got his fee "for singing at unquhill "Sir Robert Farquhar of Monny his Lyk." John Cormack, schoolmaster in Aberdeen, was paid "for reading "at Sir Robert Farquhar and his Lady thair Lykwakes "as the custome is in this place." The kirk officer is paid for "tolling of the kirk-belles of Aberdene," and another payment is made "for ringin of the Tolboth- bell for Sir Robert Farquhar his beriall." Twenty-five pounds were paid for painting his arms on flags and on Lossones, "one for the yeat and another above "the buriall place." Two trumpeters were paid "for going thorow the towne and discharging our dewitie "before the corpses of Sir Robert Farquhar at his burell." And, lastly, 25l. 12s. were expended "for printing of fyve "large epitaphs in English and Latin, for a lesser one "in Latin, and for nyne queare of paper at aucht "shilling per queare."

Among the Farquhar papers are several curious productions from the pen of Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromarty, the well-known translator of Rabelais. Sir Thomas shared the misfortunes of those engaged on the side of Royalty in the battle of Worcester, and had to retreat to the Continent. Sir Robert Farquhar would seem to have been a creditor on his estates, and to have conveyed his right as such to John Urquhart of Craigfintrie, cousin to the eccentric knight.

To this kinsman Sir Thomas addressed a lengthy epistle, dated from Middleburgh, 1st July 1658. It thus commences: "Cosen—I shall not neid (I hope) to de- beate heir how justly I intend to discuss the slender ground which that notorious usurious oppressor " (from whom you derive your title to the land of Cromartie) had to dispose of any parcell of my estate."

He then proceeds to reproach his cousin, "whose "greatest honor being to be a cadet of my house," nevertheless "without any regard had to those obligations wherein you stand engaged to me off being your chief and hereditary owner of the estate and baronnie of Cromartie, together with the baronies of Bray and Fisherie, from the which three your aforesaid great-grandfather extracted that peccuniarie substance, quhair- by he was enabled to make acquisition to these other "above-mentioned Lairdships which by birthright you did inherit, most inhumanly abuse and unreasonably employ and lay out this very means thus gratis obtained, as helps and aides, by the which through the suggestion of the devil (for no honest man could have advised you to it) you have made the within specifeit and unhalloved purchase. Who is able with any face of reason to justify your unnatural and canniballyck "proceedings against me? What more heidous, enormous, and intollerable contempt of one could you "have plunged yourselfe into then to offer without "asking my consent to fall in terms with that weil- knowne Lambe-devouring Fox, Sir Robert Farquhar, "for the lands of my ancient inheritance."

Sir Thomas then proceeds to enlarge on his cousin's conduct ("mor lyke a cheating cosner than a loving "cosen"), and especially to his misconduct at an interview with Sir Thomas's mother, at which she represented that his possession of her son's estate would not be prosperous. He "did so unmannerlie behave yourselfe that "like a surly Jacanapes, you immediately arose from "the seat quhairon you were sitting, flung out from "that room, untaken your leave, and to the hearing of "thirie of my brothers told that if I had let fall half so "much you wold have tryed whose sword-point had "been sharpest; hence it is clearlie enough apparent "you over wauled me exceedingly, be the overvening "hologhness and ambition of serving yourselfe up to "be my equal, whilst at best you ar but as a yester- dayes grown up mushrome, mishapenly swollen to the "greatest quhairin by the gracious sunshyne of the "noble disposition of my father upon the "of "that terrestrial drope which did administer nourish- ment to the enriching of that cadet of his house to "whom (though the latest of all other) (and you stand "in opposition with me) your greatest honor, wealth, "and fortune. Nevertheless, least you should escape "unrebuked for so great unconvillie quhairin I am con- cerned in my reputation, I will descend many hun- dred steps below myselfe to become your equal; "and that you may be the readier to cope with me in "the termes proposed by yourselfe, hear have I pro- tested, and does protest, that I do not only justifie "the bare veritie off those words of my mother quhairat "you take exception, but withall avoche in the presence "of God Almighty and the whole world that had she spoken a thousand tymes more to your prejudice in "that particular, she wold have said ten thousand tymes "lesse than she might have justly withall to the eter- nall reproche, shame, and imputation of you for your "most detestable, infamous, abominable, and viperis "actings to the ruine and destructione of him to whom "you owe your being and subsistence, as to your cheif "and prym representer of that familie, quhairfo to be "a descende is the greatest credit you can claime to. "Yet did ye not stick to vaper and braver that if I "had let fall halfe so much ye wold have weyed the "sharpnes of your sound-poynt with myne (I take you "at your word), and you are (a coward, a knave, a "skelme, and a liew if ye stand not to it)."

He then goes on to arrange for the proposed duel. "I shall to that effect provyde a couple off sourses "whairof you sall have your choyse; and seing no pairt "off the whole Ile of Britaine nor yet the sevin untill "provinces ar convenient for such a preliarie concerta- tion, I will appoynt a place more convenient for the "purpose and equalle fit for us bothe, quhairwith I "make accompt to accout your yow within sex weikes "after the receipt of your ratifications of my exception "of your challenge, quich that it may be the sooner "intimated, I desyr you as either ye wold tene the "repute of either ane honest man or ane gentleman, "that after the day or tuo at most after the sight "heiroff, ye deliver unto the bearer the anser heiroff, "quhairin expect ye will be pleased to specifice the tyme "quhairin ye will be pleased to cum to the place be me "and to be appoynted, with one only gentleman with you, "and by the grace of God I sall bringe another alonge "with me, which tuo ar to be judges, parrares, and "umpires (so called in the militarie idiom) betwixte "me and you, to the end ther may be no trecherie or "superioritie on either syd."

Sir Thomas then at great length details the baseness of the proceedings against him and his estates, and in conclusion he writes: "You ar the first after my selfe "who have read this letter, and iff your answer prove "satisfactorie, I have given order that after your send- ing therof, it shall not be unclosed untill it cum to my "hands, by which means we may regulat the businesse "with secracie, as becometh men of discretion and "judgement. The tuch stone of satisfactorinesse is to "be made apparent to the bearer be thes words of "yours 'I have very cordially embraced the proposalls "mentioned in the letter quich you have delivered to "me." You are unworthy of the name of a man if you did and fitter to be called ane amphibian animal, that is of a mixed nature between the owle and the ape, then a rational creature. Nevertheless (suspending my judgment of your cowardise untill I hear either off or from you in what may concerne your answer heirt) I doe promise quhen all lets shall be removed after the manner aboven specified, that then I will not only forgive quhat you have done unto me, but withall subscribe my selve your louing and affectionat freind and cozen."

The letter is not subscribed, and is entitled, in an old hand, "Sir Thomas Urquhart, his letter to the Laird of Cromartie."

An earlier letter is in the handwriting of Urquhart, and is addressed to Sir Robert Farquhar, from London, on 30th July 1653. It begins—"I received your letter, and according to your desire therein shall doe what lyes in me for oftaking the sequestration which the publick affaires of this land, together with an inward grudge against our country in general, hath hitherto retarded. You wrote to me that the Laird of Innes claimeth right to some of the quarter tiths of Cromartie; but for all the mischief Dundas hath done I can show tacks upon them. If you have got a charge from the Laird of Innes send me the copie thereof, and I shall doe my best to rack his title." He subscribes himself "your assured friend to doe you a service."

Contract of marriage between Thomas Urquhart of Cromarty and Christian, daughter of Alexander Lord Elphinstone, dated 9th July 1606.

Draft of a Petition by Sir Thomas Urquhart to the King for a protection from his creditors. It is titled on the back in a contemporary hand, "Cromertie's bill to his Majesty for a supersedere for his debts."

A document entitled "Sir John Urquhart his declaration that he is satisfieit with Dunlugos his consent to Sir Robert Farquhar his dispositions of Cromertie." It is dated at Edinburgh in September 1663, and seems to have been intended to supply a want in Farquhar's title, referred to in Sir Thomas Urquhart's letter to his cousin, and founded on by him as a flaw.

Sir Robert Gordon, the third Baronet of Gordonstoun, was a man of extensive knowledge and learning, skilled in mechanics and chemistry. He invented a pump for raising water, which was tried in the fleet, and which gave occasion to the following letters addressed to him by Samuel Pepys:—

Admiralty, 24th May 1687.

"Sir,—I took the opportunity of my attendance on his Majesty on Sunday last to communicate to him your letter to me of the day before, with the account annexed thereto, upon which hee was pleased to direct my preparing a warrant for his signature for the present payment of soe much thereof as is said to have been by you paid to the severall artificers mentioned in your sayd account, amounting to the sum of 318*l*., which I have accordingly done, and send you the same enclosed under a cover to the Commissioners of the Navy (with a copy thereof open for your persual), not doubting the present execution thereof upon your tendering them the same.

"Sir, I am obliged to you for your courteous expressions at the close of your letter. But (as I sayd to you on the like occasion the other day) I doe againe assure you that I never yet suffered myselfe to rob his Majesty of any part of the thanks due for his favours to private persons, and will not begin to doe otherwise in the case of Sir Robert Gordon, to whom, if I have in any wise been serviceable, I think myselfe abundantly rewarded for it by the industry I have seen him use to render himself soe to the King my master. I am, with great truth, your most humble Servant,

S. Pepys."

The copy of the warrant above referred to, and dated 22rd May 1687.

Another letter from Pepys to Sir Robert Gordon, dated Admiralty, 10th June 1687:—

"Sir,—Being now (and not till now) informed by yours of this day's date that your two new pumps are furnished with their spare provisions, I am at liberty to move his Majesty for his warrant for the payment for them, and shall doe it, and see it dispatched the very first time I waite upon him, which will be on Sunday morning next. Sooner then this you know I could not doe it without misleading the King to pay for what hee had not then had delivered to him, nor in severall days after the date of your demand thereof, as appears by the date of Capt. Shovell's complaint of the want of them. But now (as I have sayd) you tell me they are actually supplied I doubt not to bring his Majesties warrant for your payment on Monday morning next, as being your most faithful humble Servant,

S. Pepys."

The families of Gordonstoun and Alttyre became connected through the marriage of Robert Cumming of Alttyre, with Lucy Gordon, daughter of Sir Ludovick Gordon; and the estates were carried to the family of Cumming by the destination of Sir William Gordon, the last baronet of Gordonstoun. The fourth baronet was much maltreated by the Stuarts party after Culloiden and his tenants robbed. There are voluminous papers on the subject. He claimed the earldom of Sutherland, and the cause was given in his favour in the Scotch courts, but reversed in the House of Lords in favour of the young countess.

The papers of the Cumings of Alttyr, a family of great antiquity and importance, are consequently now arranged with the muniments of the Gordons at Gordonstoun. They consist mainly of Charters and documents connected with their lands of Alttyre and other possessions in the province of Moray. The charter room also contains a collection of public proclamations, beginning 1630.

The earliest in date is a Charter by King David II. in 1342, confirming a grant by John Randolph, Earl of Murray, to John of Urwell of the lands of Schanquhar, Tulach, and Drom, with the keeping of the forests theroff. [Date imperfect.]

In the following year a Charter was granted by the same King, confirming a grant by John Randolph, Earl of Murray, to the said John of Urwell, of the lands of Drumm, near Pluscardy, with the keeping of the forest thereof; at Aberdeen, 1 May 1343; and a Charter of Confirmation of the first grant was given by the King at Kinloss, on 24 December 1362.

Registered extracts of an Indenture betwix Sir Thomas of Dunbarre, Erll of Mureff, on the ta part, and Alexander Cumnyne on the other part, that the forsaidd Erll sall gif his gude will to the marriage of his sister Eufame and xx marksworth of land within his lands of Glencharny. Dated at Fynelter, 28 May 1408.

Precept by Alexander de Ile Comes Rossie ac dominus de Narne to Donald of Caldor, his baillie of Narne, for giving sasmine to Alexander Fraser of the lands of Golphurde, Petquhuyn, Kynoudy, and Bordland. Dated at Inverness, 9th January 1436.

Instrument by which Thomas Cumming of Alttyr, in presence of his brothers, John and Alexander Cumming, declares the mill of Alttyr to belong to the monastery of Pluscarden. January 23, 1456. In this charter the name is spelt five different ways in two lines.

able and perpetual depts of the said office" . . .
25 October 1619.

The Register of the Court of the Barony of Altyr contains several entries illustrating the state of society and the condition of agriculture. It commences in 1683, when Alexander Cumyng was the baron, and Robert Cumyng of Relugas his baillie.

On 20th June 1688 an Act of Court was passed, directing that "ilk tenant and grassman within the Barony
"furnish himself with a sufficient sword and gun."

No tenant or grassman is to accept of a servant or servitrix to his service from any other parish without sufficient testimonials from the place whence they came.

The following is a specimen of the punishments inflicted on delinquents. John McPherson, lawful son to the late James McPherson, sometime in Bellatenen, was convicted of "stealing a gray mair from off the greens "of Altyre during night." He was ordered to be "scoured 'twixt the Milltown of Altyr and Lorstoun
"be the hand of John Gowie, locksman, to the great
"effusion of his blood, and to be banished out of all the "bounds wherein the Laird of Altyr is concerned, and "never to return under pain of death, not being capable "of faith." This sentence was a modified one, "by "reason of the youthhead" of the culprit, and was ordered to be presently put to execution.

Other Statutes were enacted for regulating orchards, for servants, peats, farns, cutters of woods, &c.

A similar record of the Barony of Gordonstoun is preserved, beginning in 1663. It contains various Acts of Court for the regulation of the affairs of the Barony, such as an Act "anent pasture on Kirkhill," "Act
"anent brewers," "Act anent the ferryboat," "anent
"ware," "anent the mills," "anent the moss," "anent quarries."

In 1679 Janet Grant was convicted of "Stealing and away-taking out of Alexander Young's loome two "webs, whereof there was ane of Satinsgobe and ane
"other of Dornick; also of carrying out of his chist
"to the corn fields where she did break it and took out
"twenty rex-dollars, with six ducat-downes, and six four-
"tain-shillin pieces, with four pound of small monie,
"with four rex-dollars, with ane ducat-donne in ane
"purss, with two webs of linin, whereof there was "thirteen ellns in ane web and six ellns in ane other,
"with two ellns and ane half of wadk pladin."

The sentence of the judge was that Janet should be carried to the Loch of Spynie and there be drowned under water till she be dead.

Among the papers is one entitled "A full and im"partial account of the whole transactions of this "present Simon Lord Lovat, from the beginning of his "troubles in his own country, and the most remarkable "steps of his acting abroad, written by Major James
"Fraser, who was his comrad at his first taking arms
"in Scotland, and was partly with him abroad."

There is also a characteristic letter addressed by Lord Lovat to Captain George Cumyng, son to the Laird of Altyr, and dated "Beaufort, 1st March 1745."

Captain Cumyng had written to his Lordship requesting his assistance to raise recruits for the army. His Lordship thanks his kinsman for his "very kind, polite,
"oblidgeing well-writ letter," but was extremely sorry
"and troubled that it was not in his power to serve
"him as he would wish."

The postscript gives a curious picture of the habits of the Peer, who was then in his 78th year: "I believe "you will not be ill pleased to know that I have kept
"my health better since the beginning of July last

"than I have done these thirty years past, and notwith"standing of this extraordinary severe storm, that I do "really believe that the like of it was never seen in this "country, I take the cold bath every day, and since
"I cannot go abroad, use the exercise of dancing every "day with my daughter and others that are here with "me, and I can dance as cleverly as I have done these
"ten years past."

The original name of the lands which came to be known as Gordonstoun was Ogston and Plewlands. An Inventory of the old titles of these lands is among the papers, and is dated in 1616.

The earliest Charter described in it is a Charter by Marjorie Countess of Murray to John Hogstoun of that ilk, son and heir of Sir Rnald Hogstoun, his father, dated at Bamf, 6th May 1417. The lands passed into the possession of Innes of Invermarkie and Balveny, in the early part of the sixteenth century, and were acquired by the Marquis of Huntly from that family in 1616. They were purchased from him by Sir Robert Gordon, in 1638.

The collection now reported on is very extensive and miscellaneous, and contains many authentic materials for the domestic history of the North of Scotland during the seventeenth century.

Lady Gordon Cumming has bestowed much care in selecting and preserving the more interesting portion of the papers, and my work was much facilitated by her allowing me to carry away such of the documents as I required for leisurely examination.

JOHN STUART.

REPORT ON THE MANUSCRIPTS OF SIR ROBERT MEN- ZIES, BARONET, OF THAT ILK, AT CASTLE MENZIES, IN THE COUNTY OF PERTH, BY WILLIAM FRASER, EDINBURGH.

The family of Menzies of that ilk, which is now represented by Sir Robert Menzies, Baronet, who is the chief of the name, is one of the ancient baronial houses of Scotland. Meygners or Meyneris was the form in which the name was written in the early charters of the family.
Gradually the name was changed into its present form of Menzies.

When King Alexander the Third succeeded to the crown, in the year 1249, Robert de Meyners, Knight, was made Great Chamberlain of Scotland, being designated "Camerario nostro" in a charter granted by that King in 1250. Sir Robert held the office till the year 1253, when he was succeeded by Sir David Lindsay as chamberlain. When the disaffected barons rebelled in the year 1255 Sir Robert Meyners adhered faithfully to King Alexander the Third, and figured prominently during the first half of the reign of that monarch. Sir Robert died in the year 1266, as stated by Fordun.

Sir Alexander de Meyners, son of the Chamberlain, was also noted for his patriotism and firm attachment to Scottish interests. Having opposed the pretensions of King Edward the First of England as Lord Paramount of Scotland, Sir Alexander Meyners was imprisoned in 1296, when 50 merk land of old extent was allotted for the support of his wife and children. He was at length released and survived to enjoy the confidence and favour of King Robert the Bruce.

At this early period Sir Alexander de Meyners obtained from John de Strathbogie, Earl of Athole, the lands of Weem and Aberfeldy, in Strathgath. Weem was afterwards erected into a barony, and it became the territorial designation of the successive owners, who were styled lairds of Weem till they were created baronets in the year 1665. Their mansion-house was called the Weem, or the Place of Weem, till the year 1510. The name was then changed to Castle Menzies, when the Barony of Menzies was first erected by King James the Fourth, as is afterwards shewn. The Barony of Weem has continued to be the inheritance of the family from the time of the original grant in 1296 to the present day. They have also possessed from an early period the Barony of Rannoch, in the same county, including the beautiful loch of that name.

Besides the Baronies of Weem and Rannoch, in Perthshire, the Menzies family possessed other baronies in several other counties. The Barony of Durrisdeer, in the county of Dumfries, belonged to them from a remote period. It was resigned by Sir Alexander de Meyners in favour of James Stewart, his brother-in-law, third son of James, High Steward of Scotland. But it was reacquired by Sir Alexander, and King Robert the First granted a charter of Durrisdeer to him.

SIR
W. G. G.

SIR R.
MENZIES
BART.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

In addition to the Barony of Durrisdere the Menzies family early possessed the Barony of Enoch, also in the county of Dumfries, and this barony continued in possession of the family for centuries. The old castle of Enoch, which was their residence, is now a ruin, and forms part of the great estate of Drumlanrig belonging to His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry. The Menzies family had also the Barony of Vogrie, in the county of Edinburgh, and the Barony of Culter, in the county of Lanark, and several others.

The Stewarts of Fortingall, in the year 1503, in consequence of a feud with their neighbours as to the ownership of that estate, made a raid upon the mansion-house of the Menzies family, then known as the place and forte of the Weem, when this baronial residence was destroyed by fire, and most of the more ancient writs perished in the flames.

After the destruction of the mansion place of Weem in 1503 Sir Robert Menzies built a new castle, which he called Castle Menzies, and this new designation was confirmed by the charter of the barony now quoted.

One of the causes for granting the charter was the good and thankful service done to the King by Sir Robert, and also the destruction of his charters in the downcasting of his mansion. The clause of the charter referring to the loss of the muniments of the family is in the following terms:—

“Et pro eo quod intelligimus quod ipsius Roberti carte et evidentie predictarum suarum terrarum, tempore combustionis sui loci de Weeme per malefactores combuste et distructe fuerunt, fecimus. . . .”

[Charter in register of the Great Seal.]

In the insurrections in the years 1715 and 1745 Castle Menzies was again unfortunate. The Menzies family were on the side of the Government; but at both these periods their mansion-house and lands were plundered by the Highlanders. Yet, notwithstanding the injuries done to the family papers on these occasions, many of the earlier charters were saved, and a considerable collection, including charters, correspondence, and miscellaneous papers has since accumulated.

Several of the papers in the Menzies charter chest now reported on have reference to the damage done to the family at the time of the Fortingall raid, and the claims for compensation which they made on the depre-dators. Under the section of miscellaneous papers forming the twelfth head of this report several documents are quoted in regard to the destruction of the mansion of Weem. Sir Robert Menzies of that ilk, Knight, obtained a decree by the Lords of Council and Session against Neil Steuart, of Fortingall, for the wrongful destruction and downcasting of his mansion place and forte of the Weem, and for the burning and destruction of divers victuals, insight goods, and other goods. The decree contains a valuation of the articles destroyed, which shows the extent of the destruction, and what was the furniture of a mansion of that early date (vide No. 199, infra). Half a century later Sir Robert Menzies, then of that ilk, Knight, son and heir of the deceased Sir Robert, who had his mansion burned, sued—Steuart, son and heir to the deceased Neil Steuart of Fortingall, for the burning and destroying of the place of Weem, and the spoilation of the insight goods, amounting in all to three thousand merks (vide No. 202, infra).

Seven years after the destruction of the mansion of Weem, Sir Robert Menzies obtained a charter from King James the Fourth, under the Great Seal, on 2nd October 1510, erecting the lands and barony of Enoch, the barony of Coulter, the lands and barony of Weem, Aberfeldy beg, Ardferelemore, Ferleyar, Bawir, Dal-rawy, Glassy, Kynnaldy, Glengolantyne, Cumrie, Auchillus, Fernauchty, Merynche, Edromuk, and lands of the thanedom of Cranryk called Cranrych, Auchmore, Duntrosk, and Candknok with Roras in Glenlyoun, the patronage of the Kirk of Weem, and office of Tostoch-dereaschipe of Artholomy, within the sheriffdom of Perth, and the lands called Menzies Croft, in the town of Kinross, into one whole and free barony, to be called the BARONY OF MENZIES, and the Castle and Manor place of Weem, to be called the CASTLE OF MENZIES, and to be the principal messuage of the barony.

During the greater part of the long period that the family has existed, Castle Menzies was surrounded by very powerful neighbours—the ancient Earls of Athole, the Campbells of Breadalbane, and the Stewarts of Grandtully. Yet the Menzies family managed to hold their own, and they are now the oldest family in Strathguy, with an unbroken descent in the direct male line. Situated in a district rife with the rivalries and animosities produced by Highland clanship, the chiefs of the Menzies family often could not, without a severe struggle, maintain their position. The correspondence in this collection abundantly shews the difficult part which they had often to play.

They received pressing letters from the Marquis of Argyll to join him in support of the Covenant, and they received not less pressing letters from the Marquis of Montrose to act with him on the opposite side; and the Baron of Menzies having abused Montrose's messenger as well as otherwise shewn his disinclination to join the Marquis, the latter plundered his lands.

In the course of their long history, the Menzies family made intermarriages with several noble Scottish Houses, including those of the High Steward, Argyll, Atholl, Bute, and others.

To their alliance with the Argyll family is owing the preservation at Castle Menzies of a collection of remarkable letters from King Charles the Second to the Marquis of Argyll. These letters have been specially noticed in the second Report on the Argyll manuscripts, which is included in the present Report of the Commissioners.

Without special notice of these letters addressed to the Marquis of Argyll, the Report on the Argyll correspondence would have been incomplete; and it was also necessary to include them in the present Report, as they exist in the charter-chest of Castle Menzies.

The ancient charters noticed in the present Report contain several of considerable interest; and among the Royal letters are two from Queen Mary, shewing her progresses. The Queen was at Luncartis in Glentilt, on the 3rd August 1564, and she was a Drymnen, in Menteith, on the last of August 1566.

A tradition exists in reference to Queen Mary's visit to Glentilt, which is part of the forest of Athole, that on the occasion of her visit to the Earl of Athole she witnessed deer hunting. Her father, King James the Fifth, and his mother, Queen Margaret, both visited the Earl of Athole in the year 1529. The Earl built a palace or shooting lodge for them on Loch Loch. The Duke of Athole is the owner of Glentilt; and in a letter with which His Grace has favoured me in reference to Lunkartis, where Queen Mary was in 1564, he explains that Lunkartis must be a misspelling for the Gaelic Longaird (pronounced long arst), long a boat or ship, aird a height, thus the boat-height, or place where boats were hauled up high and dry out of a loch. As the Tilt is not a river on which one could use a boat, this place must have been on Loch Loch.

We know no place of that name there now, but there is a little hillock called Tom nan Ban (i.e. Queen's knoll), close to Loch Loch. But whether the Queen's knoll applies to Queen Margaret or Queen Mary is uncertain. His Grace adds, “It is curious, with the amount of legends about the Forest, and the fact that every burn, hill, and glen, &c. has a name, that nothing more is known of these royal visits. We do not even know the exact spot where James the Fifth's hunting lodge was situated, except that it was on the shore of the Loch.”

Robert Lindsay of Pitscottie, in his history of Scotland, gives a graphic account of the visit of King James the Fifth and his mother to the Earl of Athole, of their costly entertainment, of the palace which was erected for them in the wilderness, and the burning of it as soon as it was vacated by the royal party, much to the astonishment of the Nuncio of the Pope, who was of the party, and was not aware that it was the practice of the Highlanders to burn down such temporary erections.

In the charter-chest of the Duke of Athole there is preserved an interesting letter holograph of Queen Mary, addressed to the Countess of Athole. By permission of His Grace, I had an opportunity of printing and lithographing that letter in “The Lennox.”

The letters from King Charles the Second are very fully stated, both in the present Report and also in the second Argyll Report, to which reference is made.

The entire collection of correspondence opens up a good deal of information upon the state of the Highlands at different periods, and the other papers also disclose the proceedings of the MacGregors and other clans connected with the central Highlands.

The Manuscripts included in the present Report are arranged under the following heads:—

1. Charter by John Earl of Athole, son and heir of David Earl of Athole, in favour of Sir Alexander de Meyners, son and heir of umquhile Sir Robert de Meyners and his heirs, for his homage and service, of all the granter's land of Weem and Abyrfeally-beg [Aberfeldy], in Atholl, extending to three davachs of land, with the pertinents, under reservation to the granter and his heirs of the patronage of the church of Weem. To be held for payment to the Earl and his heirs of one penny sterling yearly at Whitsunday, and for rendering the King forinsec service pertaining to so much land, and one suit at the granter's court at Rath* in Athole.

The charter is without date, but belongs to the same period with the Ragman Roll [1296], as the names of granter and witnesses prove. These latter are:—Sir John de Inchmartyn, Sir John de Cambrun, Sir Archibald de Levingystoun, Sir Robert de Cambrun de Balenely, Sir Laurence de Stratbolgyn, Sir William Olifard, and Sir Henry de Inchmartyn, Knights.

2. The following charter is in French, dated 3rd April 1315:—

43. Letter of Justiciary, under the signet by King James the Sixth to James Menzeis of that ilk, narrating that whereas it was known to the king and council what great crimes, oppressions, and wrongs had been committed on his "lout faithfull subiect and seruitour" "James Menzeis of that ilk," and his friends and tenants of Rannoch, and his other lands by "sandre thieves, murderarris, sornerris and oppressouris of vickt and perversit clannis of the Hie lands, and others adiacent to his lands and rowmes," and lately by "the slauchteris of sum of his tenentis and seruandis," "casting doune of hys mylnis, housis and biggins" "thairoff, reveing and spuileing of his tenentis guiddis" and geir, hoicheing and slaying of mony and sandrie cattell and guiddis," and specially committed by "Donald Makewin v Gilloch Clych, Donald Roy Makcar-quhar, Neil Leiche, James Makconell ve Cranuel, and Gregour Gow with their complices;" appointing the said James Menzeis of that ilk his justice in that part, to take the persons named and their complices, to put them to an assise, and punish to the death or otherwise as their crimes deserved, or to imprison them till justice could be ministered, with the same power as the King's justice general had in such cases. Commanding all the lieges in the bounds adjacent if required to "ryse, ryde, gang, assist, fortifie and convene with our said justice in that part or his deputis;" and if neid be, with power to make oppin durris, asseige housis and strenthis, "rais fyre and vse other rigour to that effect, incais they will not be takin." Dated at Holyroodhouse, 23 April 1585. Subscribed by the King and lords of secret council.

44. Warrant by King James the Sixth under the signet in favour of James Menzeis of that ilk, his tenants, etc., to use "hagbuttis, pistolettis, and all vther ignynis of fyir werk," in pursuit of certain "lymmaris and brokin men of the Hielandis," who had committed against them "gretsornings, depredationis and enormiteis."

Dated 1585 [ante July 29].

45. Licence under the signet by King James the Sixth to Alexander Menzeis of that ilk, & his tenants & servants, to remain at home from the army summoned to convene at the Castle of Craufurde, for the purpose of proceeding towards the borders against "our rebellis and disobedient subiectis." The reason assigned for the letters of license is that between the kin, tenants, and servants of John Earl of Athole and those of Alexander Menzeis, there had been "sindrie slauchteris, depredationis, and reiffs committed on ather syde," and that the latter party could not pass from their lands without "forther inconvenient to follow." Dated at Stirling, 28 October 1585.

46. Licence by King James the Sixth under the signet in favour of Alexander Menzeis of that ilk to pass home or elsewhere on business from the service of the King. Dated at Aberdeen, 29 April 1589.

47. Order from King James the Sixth to Alexander Menzeis of that ilk and his bailie to stay proceedings against Donald Schairpe for crimes of theft. Dated at Tullybardin, 1 January 1592.

48. Licence by King James the Sixth to Alexander Menzeis of that ilk to depart home from the host passing north "for persuite of certane our rebellis, conspiraturis aganis Godis trew religioun, our persoun, crown, and this our realme." Dated February 1592.

49. Similar licence to Alexander Menzeis to remain at home for a month from the army summoned to convene on the 28 October instant, stating that he had attended upon the King during the whole time of the proclamation. Dated at Ferryhouse, October 1594.

50. Letter of Justiciary by King James the Sixth, under the signet, to Alexander Menzeis of Weyme, for the trial of sundry thieves, to wit, Donald Menzeis and Finla McRobert, who had been already apprehended; and Alaster Clerksoun, after he had been apprehended; all for the crimes of theft, open reif, her ship and oppression, and to punish them as their crimes deserved.

Falkland, 31 July 1599.

51. Letter by King James the Sixth for a remission under the Privy Seal to Alexander Menzeis of that ilk, and others, narrating that "the wicked and insolent behavior of the disordourit and brokin men of the Hielandis, quha delytis in na thing bot in marthor, slauchter, reif, theft, soirning, and oppression, hes mowit and sterit vp certane baronis and weill effectit gentillmen, luifaris of peace and quietnes, to resist be force the invasionis of the said brokin men, quhairupone slauchteris, imprisoning, reliving of prisonaris and mony vtheris thingis hes happynit and fallin out fra tyme to tyme;" remitting all slaughters, &c. committed by the persons named in the King's letter in resisting the said broken men. Dated 1600.

52. Letter by King James the Sixth to Sir Alexander Menzeis of that ilk. Whitehall, 14th November 1608.

"James R. Trustie and weilbeloved, we greit you weill. Understanding that the Laird of Garnetully, vpon no necessity, but vpon some late conceived grudge against Sir William Stewart of Strabrane, knight, our servitour, and his appearand heire, intends to make some sale and disposition of a parte of his lands unto you; as we know that tyme will worke out the cause of that discontentment conceived by him against our servant, so we would desyre you in the meane whyle to forbere anye blockeing or buying of any parte of these lands pertyning to the said laird of Garnetully; wherein you shall doe vs acceptable service. And so we bid you farewell. From our Pallace of Whitehale, the xiiiith of November 1608."

(2.) The same to the same. Newcastle, 10 June 1646.

(3.) [The Scottish Parliament to the Speaker of the English House of Peers]. 29 June 1646.

(4.) The same to the same. 11 July 1646.

55. Copy of letter of King Charles the First to the Speaker of the House of Lords pro tempore, to be communicated to the Lords and Commons in the Parliament of England at Westminster, and the Commissioners of the Parliament of Scotland. Holmby, 12 May 1647.

56—69 Fourteen letters of King Charles the Second, Queen Henrietta Maria, his mother, and James Duke of York, his brother, to Archibald Marquis of Argyll.

I. Letters of King Charles the Second.

56. (1.) Jersey, 12 January [1650]. The King entreats Argyll "to give all furtherance to the sending away "commissioners to Breda, and to the moderating of
"there instructions as much as reasonably" he might. The King signs "your affectionat friend,
"CHARLES R."

57. (2.) Breda, $\frac{1}{2}$ of May 1650. On the result of the meeting of the commissioners at Breda. The Marquis would see that the advice he had given in his letter to the King had its due weight and effect. The King expresses his confidence in Argyll's good affection to him.

58. (3.) "Breda the $\frac{1}{2}$ of May, 1650.
"My Lord of Arguile,—I am soe very desirous "to preserue in you a right understanding of my "intentions and actions, that I shall earnestly intreate
"you to giue noe credit to any reports or relations
"that may be made to you concerning me, but to "suspende your beliefs of any thing of that kind,
"vntill I speake with you, which I hope will be shortly;
"and then I doubt not but you will clerely discern the "particular confidence I haie in you, and the sincerity
"wherewith I am,
"Your very affectionate friend,
"CHARLES R."

59. (4.) Breda, $\frac{1}{2}$ May 1650. The King expresses his unwillingness to let Will. Murray depart "without "some marke of my particular kindness" for the Marquis. Murray would tell him how much he depended on his advice, and he hoped shortly to do so himself. [Signed as in No. 3.]

60. (5.) Breda, 19 May [1650]. The King desires the Marquis to give credit to what the bearer, William Murey, should say as from the King to him. Expresses his sense of the Marquis's affection and kindness. The King signs, "Your very loving friend,
"CHARLES R."

61. (6.) Breda, 24 May [1650]. The King expresses himself as well satisfied with the assurances that Lord Carnwath had brought from the Marquis, and desires the Marquis to believe what Lord Carnwath should say to him from the King. [Signed as in No. 5.]

62. (7.) "At the Bog" [of Gight, now Gordon Castle], June 26 [1650]. Expresses the King's confidence in Argyll, and desires the latter to credit the statements of the Earl of Dunfermline, the bearer of the letter, on the same. The King hopes to see Argyll within a very few days.

The following instructions, holograph of the King, bear the same date and place of writing as the last letter:—

63. (8.) "Priuat Instructions for Dunfarmlin. You shall goe to the place where my Lord Marquis of Argyle is, and assure him of the confidence I haie of him.

"You shall desire my Lord of Argyle to be thinking "about settling my family, as the King my father's was.

"You shall know of my Lord of Argyle what persons are fit for you to speake with about my service, and what he shall direct, you are to follow."

"You are to speake to my Lord of Argyle that there be no exceptions taken at any persons that come with me, since they may be both usefull to me, and to this kingdome, and that if there be any particular exceptions to any of my servants, or any else, that then I should be advertised priuately, that I may send them away before there be any publick order against them.

"You are to assure David Lessly of the esteime I haue of him, and becaus the English are vpon the borders, he canenot come where I am; but I hope to be with him in the army before it be long.

"You shall desire my Lord of Argyle to come to me as soone as he can possible.

"And that you are to meet me againe as soone as you can conueniently. Boge, June 26,

"CHARLES R."

64. (9.) "Falkland, July 18 [1650].

"My Lord of Argyle,—My Lord Eglington has lett me know the difficultes he met with in raising the regiment of my gards by reason of the littel assistance he receaues from the Committie of Estats, and has entreated me to recomend the care of it to them, which I know not how to doe so well as by entrusting you with it. I doe therefore desire you to solisite that business very particularly that some present order may be taken about it, which will be very acceptable to "Your most affectionate frind,
"CHARLES R."

65. (10.) "Falkland, July 19 [1650].

"My Lord of Argyll,—I receaued yours of this month iust now, and I thanke you for the care you had of that I writt to you about, which I find by the Committes letter, which I am very well satisfied with. I will be at Dunfarmlin a Twesday night and a Wednesday at Sterling; therefore I desire you to make prouisioun accordingly.

"The enemy being aduanced so farr, there is one thing I shall desire you to doe; it is, not to lett the Committie send any positive orders to David Leslie, either to fight or not to fight, but to leane it to his iudgment what to doe, for certainly he can tell vpon the place best what is to be done. I haue seene the sad experience of sending a generall positive orders when one is not vpon the place.

"I am,
"Your most affectionat frind,
"CHARLES R."

66. (11.) "Perth, 28th of October [1650].

"My Lord of Argyll,—You will receaue from my Lord Lothian my letter to you, to encourage the Highlanders to fight against those in the North that are now in armes, if there be an occasion for it; but I hope there shall be none, for I haue sent them a positive command by my Lord Oglesie to lay downe armes, which they said they would obey. This being a time wherin so much depends vpon the well managing of things, and you being a person that I doe so much relie vpon, both for your abilitie and affection to me, that I desire you to come hether that I may receaue your counsell and aduice in these things that concerne so much religion and the good of this kingdome, but I shall leae this to your iudgment, knowing that you will doe that which is best for both. I shall not trouble you more at this time, only to assure you that in what condition soeuer I am in, I shall euer be "Your most affectionat and constant frind,
"CHARLES R."

67. (12.) Henrietta Maria, widow of King Charles the first, to her "cousin," the Marquis of Argyll:—Paris, 20 August 1650. The Queen expresses her interest in all that affects her son, and prays God to bless his arms, and to place him in a position to punish the murderers of his father. She feels assured that the Marquis would continue his efforts to restore her son with the same affection with which he had commenced to exert them, and promises to use all her own endeavours, at least her prayers on his behalf.

[Written in French.]

68. (13.) Henrietta Maria, widow of King Charles the First, to the same :—

Paris, 20 August 1650. She had heard that they had removed from the King's service several of his domestics, and among these one Arden. She desires the Marquis to obtain the restoration of this man to his master's service; asserting that he had always comported himself with affection and fidelity towards his master, "et fort elloygne de caballe," and that he had attended him from his childhood.

[Written in French.]

69. (14.) James Duke of York, afterwards King James II., to the Marquis of Argyll :—

"Jersey, August 4th, 1650.

"My Lord, —I have sent this gentleman to congratulate to his Majesty the hopefull condition his affaires are put into now in his kingdom of Scotland, which I cannot remember without making some acknowledgements to you for that part you have contributed thereto, which knowing to be a very considerable one, you may assure your selfe of a proportionable share in my affection and friendship, and that I am always ready to give you the best proofes I can thereof as

"Your affectionate cosen,
"JAMES."

70. Instructions by King Charles the Second entitled, "Instructions for our trusty and welbeloned Thomas Weston, Esq.," superscribed by the King "Charles R.," and subscribed by "Rob. Long." The instructions are ten in number.

1. Enjoins Weston to deliver to the Marquis of Ormond, the King's Lieutenant-General in Ireland, the letters and other papers sent with the instructions.

2. To acquaint him with the concessions he had found it necessary to make to his Scottish subjects in the treaty of Breda, "they insisting upon severall particulars, in which we have endeavoured to bring them to more moderation, but failing therein, we have at last condescended to their propositions in the terms contained in the paper herewith sent."

3. "You shall observe to him that in our answer to their propositions, we have omitted that clause in the third article concerning the declaring void all treaties, &c.; which is likewise observed upon the margin of the paper, for hauing, with all sincerity and candour on our part, made and confirmed the agreement with our Roman Catholique subjects of Ireland, we resolved to consent to nothing that might be contrary therunto; but they insisting rigidly to have satisfaction in that particular, or to breake the treaty, we were enforced to give them a private note vnder our hand in the words herewith sent him in cypher."

4. States that the King is resolved to "govern ourself" in Ireland entirely by the Marquis's advice, and orders Weston to say and act according to the direction of the Lieutenant.

5. The King conceives it would be necessary to acquaint Lord Inchiquin with the treaty, and also with the paper in cipher, which should be kept very secret, and not communicated to any of his Roman Catholic subjects. The Lord Lieutenant and Lord Inchiquin were to consider seriously the state of Scotch affairs, and should they deem it right for the King to adhere constantly to the agreement, then the Lieutenant was to use the blanks sent, for letters, declarations, &c., as he should think fit.

6. In that case some fit person or persons should be speedily sent from the Lieutenant, Lord Inchiquin, and other Protestants in Ireland, to persuade the Parliament of Scotland not to press the King further towards breach of the peace with his Roman Catholic subjects; and to represent the disadvantages that might thence arise to the King and to themselves.

7. "But if they shall judge that the continuance of the said peace is no longer of importance to our affaires, and if it be true, as we have some reason to suspect, that the Vister army and the Irish of that faction have not observed the same, but have done many things contrary therunto, we in that case desire our said Lieutenant and the said Lord Inchiquin to make and transmitt to vs into Scotland a true state of things in Ireland; together with the particular breaches of the peace and agreement on "the part of our Irish subjects, and with such other arguments and reasons as may enable vs with honour and justice, publicly and auowedly, to declare the said peace broken and void, if we shalbe pressed thereunto by our Parliament of Scotland . . ."

8. Should the Lieutenant incline to this last resolution, he and Lord Inchiquin are desired to represent to the King what further steps he should take in Irish affairs; and they are to take measures for the safety of themselves, Lord Ardes, and other Protestants of Ireland.

9. The King being anxious for the safety of very many of his Roman Catholic subjects in Ireland, of whose "dutiful and respectiue carriage" he was entirely satisfied, desires his Lieutenant, in case of the foregoing resolution being adopted, to use the blanks sent according "to the particular and respectiue merits of persons" there, and to the value and esteeme we haue of them."

10. Desires this to be transacted with all possible speed, and deputies to be sent from the Lieutenant and Lord Inchiquin to Scotland with addresses to the King and Parliament. The King names a number of loyal Roman Catholics, whom he wishes to be informed by the Lieutenant of such part of the present despatch as he should judge necessary: the Marquis . . . the Earl of Castlebrouen, Lord Muskery, Lord Dillon, and Lord Taaph; and he requests that timely notice may be given of the resolution, so that these and other moderate Roman Catholics may escape in safety.

Dated at Breda, 17 May 1650, in the second year of his reign.

71. King Charles the Second to the Laird of Weimes. Chantilly, 2 November 1653.

"Charles R.

"Trusty and welbeloued, we greet you well. Since the affection of our good subjects in our Highlands is now soe notorious, that the rebells themselves begin to confesse some apprehension of their power, and the mischeiue would be irreparable, if after so gallant an attempt to redeeme their country from the slavery and dishonour it groanes under, they should for want of concurrence in the whole nacon be reduced to extreameity, and made a prey to the bloody and mercylese English rebells, who intend an utter extirpation of the nobility and ancient gentry of that Kingdom; we haue thought fitt in an espetiall manner to recommend soe important a consideration to you, and to desire you that if upon any private and particular reasons you haue hitherto forborne to engage your selfe with those who are intrusted in arms by vs, that you will (as soon as they who are intrusted by vs shall desire you) ioyne with them and use your utmost interest and power to aduance our service, by drawing all your friends and dependants to a coniunction with them. And as we are endeavouring all we can to procure armes, ammunition, and other supplies to be sent unto you by degrees, and in such manner as we finde most conuenient, soe we haue directed Lieutenant Generall Middleton himselfe to repayre speedily to you, as soone as he can obteyne such a supply as we hope will not requyre much more time. And we doubt not but God Almighty will blesse you in this enterprise, and we shall neuer forgett the service you shall doe vs, and the alacrity you shall expresse therein. And so we bid you farewell. Given at Chantilly, the 2d day of Nouember 1653, in the fifth year of our reigne.

"To our trusty and well-beloued, the Laird of Weimes."

III. LETTERS OF THE ARGYLL FAMILY, 1638-1661.

72. Letter, Archibald, seventh Earl of Argyll, to Alexander Menzies of that ilk.

Inverary, penult June 1602, referring to the honest duty of the laird toward John Menzies and his bairns, and craving him to continue in the like form towards them in time coming.

Letters of Archibald, Lord Lorne, and Earl and Marquis of Argyll.

73.

Kendloch, 21 July 1638.

Lord Lorne desires the Laird of Lawers to be present at the meeting of his friends, which Lord Lorne had appointed to be held at Inverary on the 1st of August.

[Dorso.] A note from James Campbell of Lawers to [the Laird of Weem], asking him to come to Lawers to consider whether they should go to this meeting.

Lawers had sent letters to the same effect addressed to the Lairds of Glenlyoun and Glenurchy.

74. Inverary, 13th February, 1639.
The Earl of Argyll desires the Laird of Weem to meet Argyll and other nobles and gentlemen at Perth on the 14th March, to consult as to means for suppressing the "Lymmeris and brokine men" of the Highlands.
The Earl addresses the laird as his "Loveing freind."

75. Stirling, June 4, 1639.
The Earl of Argyll in this letter alludes to the "mis-reports" concerning the laird's unwillingness to stand up for the "defence of the religioun, crown and countrie;" states his assurance that he would never suffer himself to be "brandit with such foule aspersions," and earnestly requests him to give an example of obedience to the general and estates of the kingdom.

76. Stirling, June 10th, 1639.
The Earl of Argyll again urges his "Loveing freind," as he addresses the Laird of Weem, not to make any delay, but with all diligence to send out his "folks" according to the order already received.

77. Edinburgh, 30th May 1640.
The Earl of Argyll states in this letter that the General and Committee in Edinburgh were suspicious of the conduct of the laird's son. Advises him if he was not able to travel himself, to send some of his men at once to Edinburgh to declare themselves in time; to avoid the "hard course" which may be taken with the refractory. In a holograph postscript the Earl adds, "your wyf and you to may think it straining, as I do, that [I] should be forced to be ane enemie to any of your children."

"ARGYLL"

78. Commission of Archibald Marquis of Argyll, by virtue of the authority given to him by Commission of the Three Estates of the Kingdom, convened at St. Andrews, for levying a regiment of Highlanders, appointing James Stewart of Ardyte to be one of the Captains of the said regiment, with full powers and all honours belonging thereto. Dated at St. Andrews, January 1646.

79. Archibald Marquis of Argyll to his second son [Lord Neill Campbell]:—

Edinburgh, 11 May 1661.

"Loving sonne,—These papers which I signed at "paytinge are to be mad use of by your brother's "advyce, who doubles will know what may be most "effectuall, and whairin the preiudice of words or "mater may ly.

"It is fit you remember what I have often spoken "in Parliament, that ther needed no probation for "maters of fact. I was ever willing to declair all "things really as they wer circumstantiat, and to remit "the consideration of all, with my self and what concerned me, to his gratus Maiestie; but it is indowed that the maters of fact may be known without the circumstances, though it was never refoosed to a subiect in my condition to lead probation for eliering his innocencie, which was ather doune by way of preognition befor tryell, or exculpation in the tym of it.

"Tho I doe not deny my declairing and swearing in "Parliament that I nather had knowledge of no[r] "accesion to his leat Royall Maiesties murder, yit I may say that ather Cromwels or Irtons declairing "the contrair was bot fals calumnies, for doubles it is known to all the Englesche armie that Irton was not at all in Scotland. I shall wret more at some "other occasion, so at present with my blessing I rest

86. James Earl of Morton, Regent of Scotland, to James Menzies of that ilk. Dalkeith, 5 January 1577.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

B.
MS.
12.

Acknowledges receipt of a letter from the Laird of Weem, "shawing that ȝe are evill handillit betuix the "Campbellis and the Erll of Athole diuers wyse, and "that now ȝe are maid to understand that the erll of "Athole is content that freindis sicht the maters "questionable betuix him and ȝow and not to seik the "circumstance of the law." Advises him to accept such a settlement. Favours his intention to "mak "warningis" on the Clan Gregor for their removal from his lands, as he received from them neither "profit nor obedience." States that the Regent had given order for the acceptance of Menzies' composition for the raid made at Dumfries.

87. "Marie Countas of Atholl" to her "laifing sister" the Lady Weem. Cuppar [Cupar], xiii November 1578.

The writer was Lady Mary Ruthven, second daughter of William Earl of Gowrie. The second daughter of this Countess of Athole, Lady Mary Stewart, married James Earl of Athole, who was the stepson of her own mother.

Desires Lady Weem to come over to Cupar to show her the fashion of the country where she is to "gang" to, as there was none there "weill aquentit" with it.

88. Alexander Maknachan of Dundaraw on Loch Fyne, Argyllshire, to his "speciall freind" the Laird of Weem. 1579.

Chiefly with reference to the state of the Isles, the men of which he says "are agreit."

"The Kingis Grace hes send to my lord Ergile ane "wryttin that come to his Magistie from the Duik of "Obaine [Aubigny] out of France, menand that the "said Duik wes on the seie cumane to Scotland. It "is reportit that he desyris to be Erle of Lennox, "because that he is nerrest lynale dissendit."

89. William fourth Lord Ruthven, created in 1581 Earl of Gowrie, "to his weilbelowitt gossop the Laird "of Weym." Holyroodhouse, 14 December 1579.

Chiefly concerning a proposed marriage to which the King had given his consent, and it shall be in Perth. The writer says: "The Counsall hes bene occupeit all "this tyme bygane vpon the bordour effars quhilk "hes bene the occasioun of langer tayrie here."

This Lord Ruthven was the eldest surviving son and successor of Patrick the third Lord, who took such a prominent part in the murder of Rizzio. William Lord Ruthven was created Earl of Gowrie, and he was the hero of the famous conspiracy at Perth which bears his name.

90. [Sir James Douglas of] Drumlangrig to the Laird of Weyme. Edinburgh, 16 August 1580.

Intimates his inability to accompany Weem to the meeting of the Secret Council to be held at Stirling on the 20th of the current month; and praying to be excused, as the country was "getumlie broken."

91. William fourth Lord Ruthven, afterwards Earl of Gowrie, to his "weilbelowitt em" the Laird of Weym. Holyrood House, 21 October 1580.

Concerning the proposed arbitration by the Earl of Argyll of matters between the Laids of Weem and Glenurchy.

Ruthven signs, "Your loving and assured em."

92. John Stewart, fifth Earl of Atholl, to the Laird of Weem. "Cowpar," 25 November 1580.

Intimates that Lord Ruthven, Atholl's father-in-law, had desired Atholl to be present with some of his friends in peaceable manner without armour or weapons, at a meeting of the Secret Council to be held on the penult of the month, when Ruthven was required to appear with Lord Oliphant; and wishing Weem to meet him in Perth on Sunday at 11, or otherwise to be with some friends. Cupar "this Settruday" at 11. to accompany him.

93. R. Creightoun, of Clunie to the Laird of Weem. That as the writer (for the upbringing of his daughters) has contracted a marriage with a daughter of Burnbuals on 9 November next, he wishes the Laird of Weem to provide for him some wild fowls and aquavite, and to send the same to the place of Burnbual to the care of the lady thereof; and he will requite him of a greater matter. Dated at Clunie the 12 of October 1572.

He has to prepare himself for his marriage, and as he gets no great tocher he will not hurt his bairns in giving of any great dowry, and wishing one yoke of drawing oxen to his ploughs, &c.

He doubts not Weem "salbe contentit of the woman "that I haif chosen to be my wyf, for sche hes mony "gud qualities in wewing, schewing and vther handie "craftis, quherin sche may be helpe to your dochteris "and myne."

94. William first Earl of Gowrye, to the Laird of Weem. Holyroodhouse, 1 June 1582.

Relative to the Earl of Athole's position. He refers to "the reparatioun of the invasioun intendit for "removing of certane of my Lord of Atholl's best "tenandis;" in whom no change had been made since his father's decease. Gowrie mentions that he had written to Athole himself on this, and on "vther thingis "that ar done within the bounds of Athoill, that tendis "mekle to his dishonour for laik of dew pvnischement "and tryell in convenient tyme, sic as the steilling "away of frie personis vnder silence of nycht, and in-certaine quhither they be murderist or not, and "rasing of fyre in vther pertis of his boundis quhilkis "thingis are suaput in heid to the King that vnfreindis makes ther advantage heiryvoun, sayand that gif "Garntully and vtheris of his associatioun had bene "in my lords favouris, sic thingis durst not haive bene "attemptit, albeit they be of lytill abillitie other to "resist or remedy sic thingis." He hopes shortly to be at Perth, when he trusts to meet with Weem.

95. The same to the same. Holyroodhouse, 29 April 1583.

Asking the Laird of Weem to appoint a day when he should meet the Earl of Argyll at Stirling for arrangement in a friendly manner of the difference between the lairds of Weem and Glenurchy.

96. Letter, William first Earl of Gowrie, to the Laird of Weem. 29 April 1583.

"Eme,—Efter my verra heartlie commendation. "This is till mak yow foirseine that I haue beine in "termes with the erll of Argyll anent maters debata-bill betuix you and my cousing of Glenurquhey, "quhom I find maist willing to see the samen in "freindlie maner composet, and for this effect wes "desirous till haue ane appointit tryist thairanent "afoir his passing till Argyll."

"The place thairto metest for his eis is thoct to be "Stirling, becaus it is ewast to Castell Campbell quhair "presentlie the said erll remains. That thairfore he "may be foirwairnit in dew tyme of the day of meting, "I thoctt meitt heiry to desire that betuix and the "xvj of May nixt ye mak me aduertisit quhat day "thairabout ye find maist convenient till keip tryist "with your freindis in Stirling, according to my Lord "Argyllis desire, that in the menetyme I may baith "latt his lordship be foirseine thairof, as als my "cousing, quhair I sall nocht spair my awin trawail "to kelp to put the samen to ane point. Thus resting "on your ansuir committis you to the protection of "God. From Halyrudhous the penult of Aprile 1583.

V.—LETTERS WRITTEN BETWEEN 1600 and 1700.

97. Alexander [Earl of Dunfermline], Chancellor, and the Earl of Dunbar to the Laird of Weyme. Edinburgh, 16th August 1607:—

This letter narrates: "This proude rebelloun and "dissobedyence of the barbarous and detestable lym-maris callit the Clangregour, who so lang hes con-tinewit in committing of bloode, theft, reiff, and "oppressioun vpon the Kingis Maiesties pecciable and "goode subiectis, having most iustlie procurit his "Maiesties haviie wraith and displeasour againe thame, "insofar as suche a handfull of miserable catiues dar "presome to continew rebellious, whenas the haill "remanant clannis, alsweele of the Heylandis as of the "Yllis, are become ansuerable and obedyent," &c. Then expresses his Majesty's resolve to suppress the rebels, giving orders to the Laird of Weem, as had also been given to the Laird of Glenurchy Lawers, and others, to assist the Sheriff of Perth in its execution.

98. The Marquis of Huntly to his "right speciall cousing" the Laird of Weem. Aboyne, 9 November 1619. Requesting him to assist Huntly's servant, Norman Leslie, in recovering the "geire" which had been taken out of Huntly's land of Strathavin by the Stewarts and some of the "Glenegregorie."

99. License by the Privy Council to Sir Alexander Menzeis of Weem, his lady, and such persons as might be at table with them, to eat flesh during Lent and on the forbidden days of the week, for the space of a year.

Holyroodhouse, 11 March 1628.

100. The Earl [afterwards Marquis] of Montrose to the Laids of Weem. Dunnotar, 7 June 1639.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

"Honorabill and loving freindis,—Having desyred the Earle of Atholl to bring with him all the Highland men he can gett for this expedition, these are to desyre yow to accompany him with all the people that you can possibly make to come alongst under his command.

"As for these that are refractarye and unwilling, he hade warrand to take such order with them as he shall think expedient. So hoping you will be most careful and diligent to send all your people, and that they come willingly rather than to be compelled, am,

"Your most affectionate freind,
"MONTROSE."

"From Dunnottar the 7 of June 1639."

"For my honorabill and loving freindis, the lairdis of Weine, these."

101. James Marquis of Montrose to the Laird of Weem.
[No date, circa 1645].—

"Sir, I must admire of your answer which I could heane very littell expected. Aluayns you will beleave that, as I am loth to be seure, so I will not be dallied. This is the tyme when ther can be no lurking nor inderferency, bot all must syde on way or ane other. If feare keipe any from serueing ther Prince, shall it not much more from serueing rebells against him? If they would be cruell in the one will not we be just in the other? So there ar bot on chose: to hazard all for your natie and kyndly prince (which danger I hope shall not be great), or wentor all contrary to the laues of God and man against him. The last, I hope (with the assistance of God) shall be found the greatest danger. Wherefor, Sir, lett me againe requyre, in his Maiesties name, to keipe the former dyett, with your self and all you can eather desyre or command, or say that you declayne your Prince, and his commandements by
"MONTROSE."

"For the Laird of Weime and all belonging to him."
This letter is holograph of Montrose.

102. "The humble supplicatioun of Captane James Stewart of Arditie, and Robert Menzeis my Lovetenant ovir the Erle of Tullibardines men of Glenalmond, to the lordis and wthers of the honorabill committee of Estaite.

Lykas since my entrie in the publickis service, I only ressaunt thrie monethis mentenance in mail, and ane monethis pay in money, the remanent thereof is all restand me; quhilk your Lordships will be pleisit to caus satisfie.

"Farder, without any cans on our part, we are denudit of our chaire, and our wyffs and bairnis put out of the hous of Logy, exposit to the enemie, quhilk your Lordships wald also tak to your consideration and do therein quhat seruis best to your Lordships, for we ar content to serue the publick to our witermoist poweir.

"Your Lordships gratiuous answer humble wye besick."

Indorsed "My humble supplication."

103. General George Monck to Captain Henry Beke or the Governor of Weems for the time being. The camp near Garth, 15th June 1654.

Giving orders as to the liberties and treatment to be afforded to the Laird of Weem and his family and tenants, while the castle was held as a garrison.

104. General George Monck to the Laird of "Weems."

"Vnderstanding that the Lairds of McGriggour have bin ancient tenants and possessors of the lands of Ranough belonging to your self, and have vntill this time paid their duty for the same, and are yett content to give all due satisfaction and payment and securitie for to pay all duties for the time to come, I desire you therefore, that neither your self nor any appointed by you for the management of your affaires will give them any interruption in their possession of the said lands of Ranough; and I shall take itt as a favour done to,

"Your very loving friend and servant,
"GEORGE MONCK."

"Edinburgh, 30 March, 1657."

105. Captain William Daniell to [the Laird of Weem].
St. Johnston, 16 May 1657.—

Urges on the Laird of Weem to allow the Clan-Gregor to remain on his lands of Rannoch, from which he had resolved to remove them. The writer uses various arguments to this end: that it was a matter of moment to the quietness of the Highlands, especially when there were some appearances of troubles, that this very act of the Laird had almost turned some of the clan desperate, as they would not suddenly be received as tenants by other gentlemen, and would be forced to maintain themselves by violence, a result which would draw upon the Laird greater inconvenience than he might then be able to apprehend; that, should he deal rashly with the Macgregors, he might cast his land waste and in all probability all Scotland not afford him tenantry to remain on them. He also presses him to consider "the blood and violence" that might follow this occasion, and to have the quarrel settled by the laws of the nation and by the approbation of the Lord General, "and not by seeking to builde his owne house to sett his neighbours house on fire."

106. Pass from General George Monck, dated at Dalkeith, 25 August 1659, to allow Menzeis, Laird of Weem, to pass and repass about his occasions in Perthshire with his servants and horses " (one exceeding the value in the proclamation), hee engaging vnder his hand to the officer commanding at Weems to pay treble the value in case the said horse shall be taken from him by any enemy and employed against the Commonwealth of England."

107. "Coppie of the Schires [gentlemen of the shire of Argyll] Letter to my Lord General Monke"—

Inveraray, December 1659.

The writers acknowledge the receipt, on the 14 December, of the General's letter of the 15 November; render many thanks to his Lordship for the favourable expressions in his letter "to the afflicted nation of Scotland" and this schire in particular, and assure him that it is their resolution to continue to live peaceably, and that they will not be wanting to suppress "all tumults, sturrings, and unlawfull assemblies if any occur in our schire." The letter ends thus: "We pray the Lord that mercie and truth may meet together and righteousness and peace may kisse each other, for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God, but there is a blessing promisit to the peace makers which wee wish all may seek after," &c.

In a postscript they thank his Lordship for remitting three months' cess.

108. General George Monck, addressed, For the Right Honourable Archibald "Lord Marquesse of Argyll;" Coldstream, 23 December 1659 [apparently in answer to the preceding letter].—

"My Lord and Gentlemen, I received your letter, and doe returne you many thanks for the same, and for your intentions and resolutions to live peaceable, in which I shall be ready uppon all occasions to protect and encourage you, and in what I may to serve you; remaining your Lordships very humble servant, George Monck."

109. The Earl of Glencairn to Sir Alexander Menzeis of Weem. Edinburgh, 14 November 1661.—

Advises Sir Alexander to defer the process against the tutor of Macgregor and his cautioner concerning some lands in the "Brynock" till the Duke of Athole returned home, at which time they should endeavour to give Sir Alexander all satisfaction.

110. John Earl of Rothes, afterwards Duke, to the Earl of Athole. Lesly, October 16th, 1662.—

Rothes, from his relation to the Laird of Weem, is pressed to write to the Earl of Athole, and request him, should he have an opportunity of meeting with the Tutor of McGrigore, who, with his cautioners, are tied by bond to the Laird of Weem for a sum of money, and "is registrat at the horne," for the same, to signify to the Tutor that it would be "best to take course for so just a debt."

111. J. Malcolm of Balbedie to the Laird of Weem. Balbedie, 18 October 1662 :—

"I am just now come from Edinburgh. My Lord took journey yesterday. If my Lord Athol had come to Edinburgh, he had been spoken to by my Lord. Reseau heir inclosed a letter to my Lord Athol, ane other to my Lord Advocate. Efter ye hau read them ye may close them with the seall ye seall your owine letteris, for itt is only a fancie. Efter ye hau deliuered my Lord Athol's letter, iff ye find nott the effects which ye wold, latt me hear from yow; and as I wreat vp weicklie to my Lord Rothes, I vill acquaint his Lordship thairof, quho, I know, will finde out a way for your satisfaction."

112. Sir John Campbell of Glenurchy, afterwards Earl of Breadalbane, to his sister, Lady Weeme [Agnes Campbell]. Edinburgh, 1 August, 1663 :—

A long, but generous, complaint of the position his brother-in-law, the Laird of Weem, had taken against him. "I never expected to have hade so sodd ane occasion to wreat to you, which should give me grounds of prejudice betwixt your husband's familie and ours, who has lived these so many sear of years in so near and intimatt neighbourhood, and that in your tym and myne (when the tye is strangest and the obligation greatest) there should be any prejudice is my great trouble."

"Sister, it wold taik vp mor paper then I can wreat to express my resentments for so baise, so unworthie, & so vnhappy ane accident as hes at this tyme occasiond and been the rease of this which I abhorre from my soul, and wold to God it could have been prevented, and I wish it may be remedied."

He then speaks of his endeavours to reconcile Menzies, having sent to him to speak with him, but received nothing but slights and reproaches, and all this he suffered for her cause, and after urging upon his sister to use her influence, adds, "You have but the halfe of the work to doe, for although I have been traduced with accession, reproached with ignominious expressions, yitt all these I pass as effects of passion, from which I bliss God I am free, and assurs you that I am as inclinable and disposed as you wold wish me."

113. Mr. Thomas Murray to the Laird of Weyme. Edinburgh, 25 November 1663 :—

Baron Comrie has been with him showing that things are not yet concluded between Comrie and Weem, that Comrie professes to have great willingness to have all things ended, which can only be done by legal documents, which if once settled there might be a more constant and cordial amity among them, and stating that, "Yesterday my Lord St. Andrews and Bishop of Aberdeen went for Court. Your cusin, my Lord Rothes, is very kyndly and favorably accepted be the King at his coming to Court, and the next day was made a Privie Counsellour of England, and to be one of the Garter."

114. The Earl of Tullibardine to the Laird of Weyme. Tullibardine, 28th April 1664 :—

Promises to meet with the Tutor of McGregor in a few days, and seek to further the payment of the duties of Rannoch.

115. The Earl of Rothes to the Laird of Weyme. Lesly, April 28th, 1664 :—

Desiring him to assist in the recovery of 24 oxen and 16 "keyne" that had been stolen by night from the Laird of Cushnie, a vassal of Rothes, especially as some of those connected with the crime were Menzies men.

116. Henry Macky (indorsed as "Secretary to the Earl of Rothes") to [Sir Alexander Menzies]. October 4th, 1665 :—

"Honored Sir,—Thes are only to give you the trouble as to let you know that I brought doune your patent to be knight-barranate under his Maiesties hand, and it is in my Lord's custodie, who for a word of your self will order it to passe the Great Seale; and it is only proper that his Grace give it you out in his own hand." . . .

117. H. M. to the Laird of Weem. Oxford, 17 October [and Holyroodhouse, 23 October] 1665 :—

States that the Bishop of Munster's envoy would receive supply for the prosecution of the war, as his Majesty had promised, and that "The Stats of Holland are advysed to take caire of their prisoners 20 days hereafter, in respects some of them hes misrepresented the civilities done to ther prisoners, ther being now in custodie 3,000." His Majesty approved of the Earl of Sandwich taking some goods out of two East India prizes, and the whole council of war was very well satisfied with his conduct. The Dutch were off the English coast.

118. The Earl of Athole to the Laird of Weyme. Dunkeld, 11th April 1666 :—

Intimates that Lord Tullibardine would be at Dunkeld on the morrow, being "Thursday, the twelft instant" for settling "that business" betwixt Menzies and McGregor, and asks him to be present, and to "bring doune my bound with yow when you come."

119. The Laird of Glenurchy to Mr. Robert Campbell of Dunfallandie. Finlarg, 16 December [16]67, indorsed 1669 :—

He met Donald McGregor on his way to Finlarg, and challenged him for the attendance they made us all give, as to which he alleged ignorance; and expressing Glenurchy's determination to have the affair of the Macgregors settled in the interest of his brother.

120. Alexander Campbell to Mr. Robert Campbell of Drumfallandie. Weym, 17 December 1667 :—

Requests him to advise the Laird to guard against all passion and hastiness, but to carry on his business quietly and calmly, and not to yield anything that may tend to his prejudice, nor utterly to cast off the Macgregors, and rather to delay than altogether to give up.

121. James Menzies to Sir Alexander Menzies of that ilk, Knight and Baronet. Burntisland, 5th March 1668.

With reference to the meeting with McGregor to be held at Falkland on the 13th instant, the writer urges on Sir Alexander not to exact too much of the Macgregors for their land; and intimates that the Earls of Athole and Tullibardin might become security.

122. The Earl of Athole to Mr. Robert Campbell. Falkland, 22 April 1668.

Expresses his pleasure that there is so right an understanding between the Laird of Weem and Macgregor, and wishing Campbell to meet him at Dunkeld on 1 May, to speak about it.

123. Extract Protection by the Lords of the Privy Council in favour of Sir Alexander Menzies of Weyme to enable him, in order to the settling of the peace in the Highlands, to compear before them on the 3rd March 1669, to find caution, conform to the laws and acts of Parliament made anent landlords and chieftains of clans. Said protection to endure till 18th March of that year. Dated at Edinburgh, 18 February 1669.

124. Thomas Hay [Secretary to the Privy Council] to [Sir Alexander Menzies]. Edinburgh, 19 June 1669 :—

A committee had been appointed to hear Athole, Perth, and Tullibardine, anent the McGregor bond. The last affirmed he was bound only for the rents of the Rannoch, and there was nothing extant on record to make it out against him. McGregor had been acquainted of the meeting, but had not appeared, and was not to be found.

125. Alexander MacNaughtan of Dundaraw to [address wanting] :—

"Dundarav, Apryll 1, 1671.

"Much honored,

"I fynd it my dentie to advertyse youe of ane sad accident that is latlie falline out at Inveraray. Your coussine, Collonell Meinzie, was yesternight drinking with the Laird of Lochineall and jung Lochbuy. Being eftir cups, Lochbuy offred to beat the Collonell. The candill went out, ther was ane pis toll discharged, and Lochineall was shott deid through the heide. When the candill was lighted, Lochbuy and Inehonell, being Lochineall's sons in laue, thought to have killed the Collonell, but Inerliver and other gentellmen who were present did not permit theme. My Lord was advertysed who cam presentlie and apprehended all the company. Collonell Meinzie denies the fact, but it is geiuen out that he is the actor, the most pairt of the name of Campbell ar to be att Inveraray this night. I feire the Collonell will gett hearde measure if ther be not ane tymlic prevention. I sent tyuce this mornening to try iff any might have accesse to hime, but all to noe purpose. I wish ye wold presentlie obtaine ane ordour from my Lord Chancior to bring Collonell Meinzie to Edinburgh to his tryall; for iff he suffer ane jury att Inverary youe may conclude hime lost. And in the meane tyme it wer goode that some advocatt wer sent hither in all heast to see faire play; possiblie my lord may not prove violent, yeite I feire the worst. I beg ane thousand pardones for presuming to prescrive rules to your Lordship; my interest makes me committ such impertinences,

SIR E.
MENZIES
BART.

"I have not advertysed his Lady but I wish yone cause
"sume freinde doe it. I shall add noe more but that I
"ame, much honored,

"Your most humble servant,
"A. McNACHTANE."

126. Dundarab, April 1 "att ten a'clock at night."

"Much honored,

"Since the wrying of my last I have I thank "God receaved good newis. Ane servant of Collonell "Meinzies called McGrigar is found to be the acter.
"He hes confest the slaughter, and declares that he "did it without the advyce of any persone; but being "drunk, as they wer all, and seeing Lochbuy offering "to abuse his master, he shot att hime with ane littill
"short peice he caryed loadined with draps. He "missed Lochbuy and killed Lochineall. The yung
"mane being informed that his master was accused for "the slaughter did most ingeniously, without examina"tion, acknowlegd the guilt, wherupon he was taken "out of the Tolbuith wher he was prisoner to the "Castell and putt in irones. Howevir I wish Collonell "Meinzies wer gotten out vpon bale, leist he be "wronged; but I hop being my Lords prisoner he 127. Letter, John Murray, second Earl (afterwards Marquis) of Athole to Patrick Stewart of Ballaquhan-Edinburgh, 23 January 1672:—

Very much dissatisfied with a riot committed by the Stewarts, therefore desires Stewart of Ballaquhan to send a party of men to apprehend and imprison them till they find caution. Not only Thomas Menzies whom they keep prisoner and all his friends shall be harmless, and skathless of them, but they and all who were with them shall compear at the Earl's Court whenever they shall be required, and return the arms to Thomas Menzies and his brother which were taken from them.

[Contemporary copy.]

128. Patrick Stewart to the Laird of Weem. Logierait, 19 April 1672:—

With reference to the riot referred to in preceding letter; and that his Lordship has desired an officer to summon the two young men referred to, to be at Dunkeld on Monday 22 April 1672; and the Laird of Weem to send the Pursuers; and his Lordship will bind them to keep the peace: and as he has a party quartering on him wishes 20 dollars to be sent him, and to collect the excise as he has 82 soldiers to deliver at Leith, and requires all the money he can get to remove them.

129. Letter dated Edinburgh, 21 May [16]72. Without name of writer or address:—

On the progress of the Dutch and English fleets. The English fleet had taken a Dutch vessel laden with ammunition bound for their fleet, and an English junk taken by her a little before, with one of their best fire ships. The Dutch have released all English, Scots, and Irish ships arrested by them before declaration of war:—The Earl of Dunfermline is dead and buried.

130. John Earl of Athole to the Laird of Weem, Canongate, 24 July 1672:—

Giving him notice to wait on the Lord Commissioner at the Bridge of Earn on Saturday 3rd August next, on his progress to the shire of Perth.

131. George fourth Marquis of Huntly [created Duke of Gordon] to the Laird of Weem. Boog, 18 May 1677:—

Desires an amicable settlement of the quarrel that had arisen from the stealing of horses from some of Huntly's friends by the tenants of the Laird of Weem.

132. John, first Marquis of Athole to the Laids of Weem, elder and younger. Tullib[ardine], 8 August [16]84:—

The Marquis intimates that he had received from his Majesty a commission of Lieutenantancy, and desires the Laids of Weem to have fourscore of their best and ablest men well armed with guns and swords, to be in readiness on twenty four hours notice to follow him into Argyll with eight days provision, of which he shall have due notice.

133. The same to the same. Dunkeld, 31 March 1685:—

Desires them to furnish one man out of every 40s.
land belonging to them, well armed with guns, swords, and four days loan, under the command of some discreet
"pretty man," and to meet his men at the ford of Lyon on the 7th April next, where he has a general rendezvous, whence they were to march to the shires of Argyll and Tarbat, under the command of the Laird of Ballechan.

134. The same to the Laird of Weem. Dunkeld, 21
May 1685:—

Warrant to the Laird to call all his fencible men between sixty and sixteen to meet at the "fuird" of Lyon, on the 25th instant, with arms and twenty days'
"loan," to march into the shire of Argyll on his Majesty's service.

135. Instructions by the Privy Council to Captain McKenzie of Suddie. Edinburgh, 15 October 1685:—

The instructions are five in number, and are chiefly directed towards the suppression of robbers "lurking in "the hills or drying goods," and to assist in the collection of public dues and crown rents. [Contemporary copy.]

136. William Duke of Hamilton to the Laird of Weem, younger:

"Edinburgh, 19 August 1689.

"The Lords of his Majesties privie councill,
"aveing thought fitt to ordour Major General Laneir
"to march into Athole, and tof garisone your house,
"and to attack the castle of Blair, and thereafter to "march to Findlayrig, and to put garisones in these "places, yow are desired to goe alongest and concur
"with him: and they have writte to him to intrust yow
"with the command of that garisone to be put in the
"Weeme."

137. John, first Earl of Breadalbane to Duncan
Campbell of Dunneaves. Balloch, 11 October 1689:—

Complaining of "on that calls himself a serjant and "a duzan of fellows with him, notorious rouses and
"theives," who under an order from the Laird of Dunneaves had quartered themselves on John McNab in Duncrook, "on pretence of brewing," although McNab had neither "brewin vented" nor tapped ale, nor aquavite for a year; and desiring Campbell to order his party to remove immediately.

In addition to the letters specially before mentioned, there are others which may be generally noted.
Between the years 1660 and 1669 there are several letters from John Earl of Rothes, the Marquis of Huntly, Lord Lyone of Glamis, Macdonald of Keppoch, John Earl, afterwards Duke of Rothes, Sir Thomas
Stewart of Grandtully, Campbell of Glenurchy.

Between the years 1660 and 1664 there are letters from John Duke of Rothes, who addresses the Laird of Weem as his "much honored cussin," the Earl of Tullibardine who also addresses the Laird of Weeme in the same terms, Lord Stormont, Earl of Athole, George Bishop of Dunkeld, Campbell of Glenurchy: also between the years 1665 and 1669, there are letters from the Earl of Atholl, Campbell of Glenurchy, the Earls of Perth and Tullibardine, Lord Lorne, Marquis of Huntly; and between the years 1670 and 1699, there are letters from Henry Bishop of Dunkeld; Sir John Drummond of Logie Almond. The Duke of Rothes in 1678, writes from Leslie, asking a visit of his "much honored cossen the Laird of Weyme," on the 6th of October, "for the morrow after, I intend to marry my "daughter to the Earle of Haddingtoun."

There is a letter from Alexander Robertson of Strowan, the poet, dated Mount Robertson, 7th October 1735.

VI.—LETTERS of Major General HUGH MACKAY,
Commander in Chief of the Forces in Scotland, from 26 July 1689 to 13 August 1690, with Notices of the movements of Viscount DUNDEE previous to the battle of Killiecrankie.

138. St. Johnston, 26 July 1689. For the Laird of Weems, younger, at Weems:—

"I received yours of last night at ten of the cloack.
"I doe not believe that Dundie is so neare, though "I wish he were, let his forces be what they will. I "forgot to speak to you to send out men for inteli-"gence, which I pray you to doe. I would take on "9 or 10 persons in pay during this expedition at "such a rate as that they be content, for guides and "intelligence, which I pray you to look out for, and "that they be men who know the countrey perfectly "well; but faile not vpon recepte hereof to send "towards the enemy for sure intelligence and where "they are. The persons I shall pay as you shall "judge reasonable. I shall dispatch my march as much "as possible.

"I am, Sir, your most humble servant,
"I march just now. H. Mackay."

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

139. Blair Castle, 2 September 1689. To the same:—
The weather had been so discouraging that the General was obliged to send on the English to St. Johnston, and if it continued so he was resolved to follow immediately. He wishes to know what number of men would be needed for the garrison at Weem, which he thinks should be made stronger, as no garrison could conveniently be placed at Finlarig.

140. Perth, 30 September 1689. Orders the Laird of Weem, younger, to allow men from his garrison of Weem to assist the collectors of cess and excise in Perthshire, in gathering the dues.

141. Perth, 7 October 1689. To the Laird of Weem, younger, captain of an independent company, and commander of the castle of Weem:—

Desires him to establish a sufficient garrison in the house of Miggernie in Glenlyon, should the said house be capable to secure it, for the better protection of the country against the rebels.

142. Perth, 7 October 1689. Order to the Lord Bargany, colonel of a regiment of foot, or whoever should command in his absence, to cause a company of his regiment of at least 50 men without picks, to march to the house of Weem when the Laird of Weem, commander of that house, shall call for them.

143. Edinburgh, 12 October 1689. To the Laird of Weem, younger, captain of an independent company and commander of the castles of Weem and Miggernie:—

Replies to two letters of the Laird of Weem. Mackay says: "This no matter what Glenlyon says about the 'fitness of the house of Miggernie for a garrison.' He is satisfied with the statement of the Laird of Weem that it was so. Glenlyon grumbled because he was not placed in trust of the house himself. He desires Weem to obtain sure intelligence out of the Highlands, and for that end to dispose some persons who are not suspect to them, as some of those Strouwen's men had not accepted the act of indemnity. Mackay intends to bring their case before the council at its next meeting, and wishes Weem to give them some assurance that they should not be troubled. Weem could obtain intelligence from the North earlier than himself, and from Lochaber earlier than those at Inverness. Mackay was to order the Commissary to let Weem have what meal he requires, but the less the better, except he transports it himself, for they must furnish the whole garrison of Blair with meal for the winter, that country not being able to furnish any. "That 'house of Braid Albins may be burnt by consent, otherwise he will resent and shew his dislike of it, 'which time will let vs see. There is no great matter for vs, because we had no desseyon upon it.' Weem's outlay shall be repaid by the Government. In a postscript he writes Weem to inform Captain Rollo that he approves of his 'way of doeing,' and intimates that the council should issue an order that 'a good 'kow be sold at 19 marks and a weather at 2½ marks.' He asks Weem to get the prices of meal, barley, malt, butter, and cheese 'adjusted.' He had also written to the Earl of Breadalbine on these matters.

144. Edinburgh, 1 November 1689. To the Laird of Weem:—

Stating that Weem's news was the same as he had from other quarters, and desiring him to "name a 'sounie for what you have been out of pours vpon 'intelligence,' and he shall get it allowed.—He had also obliged the Master of Forbes to do the same, Government being unwilling to allot sums of itself. He proceeds: "I wish they were lesse heats and more 'true tenderness for the commun safty of all syds 'than ther is. I have my full of Scotland, and wish their Majesties service may never require my return hither againe, if it please God I be ons out of it. 'The president of the session is cum down, and this day they had a full hous, Glenlyon made a great busle here, concerning Miggernie, but I dispatch'd him with a short answer, that I judged the disposition 'allready made most contributing to the King's service and therefore doe not find good to alter. The subject of his jealousy of you is, that he beleeves 'you to favour the Marquesse of Athols interest against 'him too much. I told him I took no notice of their 'family disputes, but did what I thought best for the 'forsaid end. Pray let him have no relevant occasion 'of complaint against the garrison."

145. Edinburgh, 4 December 1689:—

Orders him to send from his house of Weem to Finlarig for planting "palisados," one dozen "speads," one dozen "shuffells," and one dozen mattocks.

146. Edinburgh, 18 December [16]89:—

Asks the Laird of Weem, younger, to get some person he can trust belonging to the enemy to furnish timely intelligence of what might be resolved at their meetings. Mackay would pay for what he shall ingage for, and the king will order his other disbursements.

147. Edinburgh, 24 December [16]89. To the Laird of Weem, younger:—

Desires him to lodge out of danger of surprisal, the corporal and 10 horsemen of Lord-Newbot's troop whom he had ordered to the Weem, and also to "make 'credit for them,' as all the forces were then living on credit. Wishes regular intelligence out of Lochaber from time to time. "You must not fatigüe the hors 'with guards, neither shall you send them in partys 'further then the strath and in plaine ground."

148. The camp at Inverlochie, 17 June 1690. To Robert Menzies of Weem, captain of a company of foot, and Lieutenant-Governor of Fort William in Inverlochie:—

Orders him on sight thereof to remove with his company from the camp to Fort William (alias of Inverlochie), there to remain in garrison and receive further orders from Colonel John Hill, governor thereof.

149. Perth, 20 June 1690. To the Laird of Weem, captain of an independent company of Highlandmen, ordering him to march with his Highland company from its present garrison in the house of Weem to join the army according to directions given to him.

150. The camp at Ruthven of Badenoch, 30 June 1690:—

Grants liberty to the Laird of Weem to answer any letters received by him from the men of Lochaber, and to meet and converse with them till farther orders.

151. Fort William or Inverlochie, 16th July 1690. The commission for Robert Menzies of Weem to be Lieutenant-Governor of Fort William not having yet come down from His Majesty, and the service requiring that he be presently put in exercise of his said office: Therefor Mackay appoints him Lieutenant-Governor of the fort and garrison of Fort William, formerly called the Fort of Inverlochie.

152. Edinburgh, 13 August 1690. To the Laird of Weem, Lieut.-Governor of Fort William and captain of a company of foot; to command all officers belonging to the garrison of Fort William in Lochaber immediately to repair to the said garrison, under the pain of cashiering them from their respective offices, and such officers as are sent out for recruits to bring with them such men as they have already levied.

VII.—LETTERS FROM COLONEL JOHN HILL, ON THE STATE OF THE HIGHLANDS.

153. Colonel John Hill to the Laird of Weem. Inverlochie [Fort William], 11 August 1690:—

States that all was quiet in the district, tho' not easy to keep the Highland soldiers in discipline. The weather was extremely bad with high winds and great rain, and this combined with the continual desertion of officers and soldiers and the number of sick, caused the progress of the works to be but slow. The soldiers having no money to buy provisions were living only on meal and water. Some of the Laird of Weem's soldiers had deserted in his absence whom he should look after and punish.

With reference to the doubtful party he says: "Hereabouts are none in armes, except some few broken 'men and chiefs, which the countrey promiseth to take 'care of. These gentlemen are shortly to have another 'meeting: what the result of that will be I yet know 'not; but when I doe, shall acquaint you. They have 'great newes of England and other partes, which blowes 'them up, and may possibly put them into a humour 'of trying their fortune once more, of which I am 'aware, but Lochel seems one of the most backward 'to itt, as beleueing it will be all like the rest, tho' 'hee nor any of them is to be trusted."

He must have amongst others, if possible, Captain McNeil, who is very good in "Physick and Chirurgery," and a pretty stout man and has the language. There were some Lochaber men, and others of the district in the Laird of Weem's company, and he desires him to repair his force with men who could speak English or Scotch.

Complains of the sickness and roguery of the carpenters, and of the want of deals, so that the buildings go on slowly. Enjoins him to be very strict with the tutor of Appin, as he might "be apt to be blowne up 'with stories, and might thinke to stand out still."

154. The same [to the same]. Inverlochie, 28 August 1690:—

"Sir,—I lately writ you at large by the post, and 'desired you to communicate what I writ to my Lord

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

"Commissioner, my Lord Leven, Lord Tarbat, and the Major General, for that I could not write to them for want of paper, my stocke being run out (tho' prittie considerable), and the ships from Glasgow wherein I hane more, not yet come. The last night came to me some Highland newes: that Buchan had 400 horse and 100 dragoones; that my Lord Aboyn and Lord Fraser of Monghall, my Lord Kintore, and Sir Peter Fraser had joynd him; that he was come to Colloiden's house, and had been there two or three dayes (tis pritty if true); that nobody was within to welcome him; and that he went that wayes in order to joyne my Lord Seaforth, who (as they say) has a thousand foote and 120 dragoones, and is marched down to Rosse; and that the Major General is marched North; and that all the Chnrch of England is for King James; and that there are still 50,000 men in armes for him in Ireland. But both Lochiel and Glengary send me word they will not rise to joyne Buchan; for Lochiel beleues Buchan's foundation will not stand for tho' all Scotland were in armes for King James, if England were not for him, or nott divided amongst themselves, 'twould all signifie nothing,—see that hee resolves to be quiet." He believes McLean will be hot-headed and not governable tho' quiet at present, the broken condition of his estate rendering him desperate. The country was quiet. They had "brave" weather, and the works were very "forward" and well done. Fears a general desertion of the soldiers for want of pay.

155. [From the same?] circa 1690:—

The tutor of Appin seemed "very fair." Most of the people of Appin and Glencoe had come in and submitted to the Government, except the Laids of Appin and Glencoe, who were not at hand. The tutor desired only time for delivering Island Stalker, till the writer had acquainted the Government with the tutor's condition; that he had spent 5,000 merks in obtaining and maintaining the house, and had suffered certain specified losses at the hands of the Highlanders.

VIII.—LETTERS FROM 1700 to 1750, ON THE STATE OF THE HIGHLANDS, &c.

156. John, first Duke of Athole to [Sir Alexander Menzies], Blair Castle, 15 August 1707.

Refers to a "tumult" at Fortingall Market, in which some of Menzies' men, Founab's soldiers, and some Glenlyon men "were very much guilty of disorders," and in which the Athole men did not "do their duty." He also mentions a "little scuffle" at Logyrate Market, in which one of Menzies' men, called ——— McDonald, was concerned, who had been sent for examination to the Duke, but who shall be very favourably dealt with.

157. The same to the same. Blair Castle, 2d August 1707. On the Fortingall riot:—

158. Lady Christian Leslie, Marchioness of Montrose, to [Christian Campbell, Lady Menzies]. Kinross, 29 May 1708:—

Urging her to solicit her husband, Sir Alexander Menzies, to vote for Mr. Haldane, elder, of Gleneagles, at the election of the Perthshire Commissioner.

159. Papers produced in a suspension before Lord Pencaitland, the Duke of Athole, charger, and Charles Stewart of Ballachan, suspender, for a bill granted by the said Charles to his Grace for a part of the money extorted by the Duke from him for concealing his being in the rebellion.

160. Neill Stewart, factor to the Duke of Athole, to the Laird of Ballachan. Blair Castle, 9 December 1715:—

States that he is ordered to write that the Laird is expected to have removed as soon as possible the horses that were quartered on John Robertsone, John McGyllivie, and another for destroying their corns. It is said that the Marquis of Tullibardine was informed that neither Robertsone nor McGyllivie were in the stables next the castle that night his Lordship came to the door thereof.

161. [Copy only, thus inscribed: "The principle of the following was destroyed at Lord James Murray's desire by Ballachan, but affidavits may be had that this is a trew copie, and Lord James will not, it's thought, deny it."] The writer, McGlashan, was the Duke's confidant in the transactions between Glengarry, &c. and himself.]

John McGlashan to the Laird of Ballachan. Blair, 11 December, 1715:—

"Sir,

"I received yours and read the same to your friends, and you may believe it was acceptable. I gave the memorandum to Lord Edward, which he read to my Lord Duke, and he was very well pleased with it. I told all you desired me at the parting and what I thought might be satisfying to his Grace, and [he] seems to be better pleased with you than was expected, and desired me, notwithstanding of all our news, to earnestly write to you that you shall use all your endeavours with my Lord Marquess that his Lordship may not subscribe any association or capitulation till such time as he better consider on it; and his Grace expects you'll continue to be instrumental for the good of the countrey and the good of the younge callant, for he has a harling-kindness for him. Yet my Lord D. asked me what reason he could give for coming to his stable door; I answered, I understood his Lordship's design was, that seeing Carnoustie was seized by his Grace, he had a mind to seize Lude and others for a reprimall, and it seemed that his Lordship was informed that 24 men lay each night in the stable which he thought to a gotten which was the main motive, and not the taking away of his horses."

162. Neill Stewart, ut supra, to the Laird of Ballachan. Blair Castle, 13 December 1715:—

Desiring him to prevail with the Marquis of Tullibardin to set at liberty Patrick Stewart of Bogmilne, who, although he had the protection of a pass, to take care of the forest of Cluny and tend the deer, had been made a prisoner.

163. Alexander Murray, Secretary to the Duke of Athole, to the Laird of Ballachan. Blair Castle, 16 January 1716:—

Asks him to send by the bearer some letters to the Duke and Duchess of Athole which had been taken at Perth, and which the Marquis of Tullibardine had desired Ballachan to forward to Blair Castle.

The Duke wished to know the reason of their having been so long kept back by Ballachan.

164. "Memorandum. Lord Edward Murray to the Marquess of Tullibardine:—

"The Duke of Atholl proposes to the Marquess of Tullibardine, Glengary, and Frazardale, that each of them should write to his Grace, assuring him that they will leave the Earle of Mar and his party, and desiring of his Grace that he will represent this to the Government; and that upon the Duke's getting a return they may expect their pardon they immediately surrendering themselves to the said Duke or to the Government as shall be directed, and in the meantime they are to withdraw themselves from the party till they have an answer.

"The Marquess of Tullibardine having rejected the like offer formerly, if he does not now embrace this opportunity, all the intercessions the Duke of Atholl or his other friends can make for him hereafter will be ineffectual.

"That its probable the favour the King has shewen to Lord Charles Murray, the Marquess his brother, in giving him a reprieve for a month, is only to see if the Marquess and Lord George can be reclaimed, and their still continuing obstinat may not only prove fatal to themselves but to him.

"The Duke expects they will leave the party immediately, if they will agree to this, and give their word of honour that they will not act against the present Establishment till his Grace gives them a return from the Government.

"This is the last proposal of this nature they can expect from the Government." [This document is in the handwriting of Lord Edward Murray.

165. [Answer to the preceding offer, unsigned, but indorsed, "Perth 1715"]:—

"My Lord,—We have agreed in an answer to your Graces memorandum, which is sent by Frazardale, one of the principal persones concerned and underscriber, to whom your Grace may give full credit in every thing yow desyre to be further informed of concerning us, which we think is all that can be necessarie from,

"My Lord,

"Your Graces most dutifull sons and most faithfull humble servants."

166. "Memorandum for Frazardale to his Grace the Duke of Atholl in name of my Lord Marquis of Tullibardine, Glengarie, Lord George Murray, and Frazardale himselfe.

"with us, of a general indemnity, we are then to enter one the articles his Grace proposes; for it cannot be expected that we should leave on syde till we be assured of safety on the other, which the Duke may reasonably represent to the Government.

"The Marquis proposes for himself that the Duke should use the most pressing instances that Lord Charles and Lord Nairne with all those who wer taken with them in there regiments at Preston, and also William Murray of Ochertyre with the Atholl prisoners taken at Shirreff Moor, may be fully included in the same conditions of indemnity as shall be agreed on with him the said Marquis."

168. Copy Letter, Captain James Menzies to the Duke of Athole. Comrie, 5 February, [1716].—

States that the castle of Weem was occupied by Glenlyon, with about 30 men from Fortingall and his mother's jointure lands, who had relieved a detachment of the clans, and that as they had little provision (only 10 bolls of meal), he (Menzies) had ordered the countrymen to block them up. This had been done for two nights, and was to be continued.

168. Copy Letter, the same to the same. Weem, February 6, 1716:—

Glenlyon, finding himself in need of provisions and firing had surrendered the house of Weem on condition that he should be allowed to march off with his soldiers and ammunition; which, says the writer, "I presum'd to grant to save further trouble to the Government."

169. Copy Letter, the Duke of Athole to Captain James Menzies. Huntingtower, 10 February 1716:—

The Duke states that, after the receipt of Menzies' letter of the 5th, he had on Tuesday morning drawn up his men at Logyrait to march against Weem, when the second letter arrived with news of the capitulation and escape of the garrison. He proceeds:—"I am surprised at your so doing, and that you did not acquaint me before you did any thing of that nature; wherfor I desire you will come here as soon as you can, and give me your reasons for so doing. James Menzies informs me that he told you on Sunday that I was to send a party to take in the house of Weem. John Mackglashan [who had commanded under Glenlyon at Weem] is one of the greatest rogues in Athole, and has been guilty of forcing and apprehending my men there. He was concern'd in making an attempt on my castle and office-houses of Blair, whyll I was in it; wherfor I have sent you an order to apprehend the said Mackglashan and bring him prisoner to me, which if you do not, you must be answerable for allowing him his liberty to go off. You will no doubt find him still in the country, and probably about Tullimet, being formerly Lord James my brothers servant."

170. John, first Duke of Atholl, to Mr. Neill Campbell, Advocate, at Edinburgh.

"Huntingtower, February 21st, 1716.

Sir,

"I had writ to you sooner, and sent you the enclosed copies of letters from Captain James Menzies, and my answer, but I was not sure you was at Edinburgh untill I saw Deneavus. The Duke of Argyll having wrote to me from Arroll, as he marcht north, desiring I might put a garrison in the House of Weem, I immediatly sent James Menzies my servant to bring me an account what numbers of the rebels were in it, and what circumstances they were in, who returned to me on Sunday with the first letter from Captain James, on which I reckon'd I was sure of apprehending all the rebels were in it. For this end I toke with me about 200 men upon Munday the sixth to Logyrait, where I lay that night, and I dispatch'd one to Dunkeld with an order to bring meal next day to maintain the men the time they were besieging the House; which meal being come to Logyrait, and my men drawn up just ready to march to Weem, I receiv'd the second letter from Captain James, of which I also send you a copy, which both surprised me and disappointed me very much; and in which he has ventured much more then I am sure I would taken upon me to have done. I hear the Duke of Argyll is not to come to Perth, but goes to Edinburgh by Dundie, wherfor I desir you will shew the copies of these letters, that if it be thought proper to keep a garrison there, which I must own I think it is, there may be a party sent to it from the regiment lying in Dunkeld commanded by Collonel Clayton, for I did not think it proper for me to send a garrison of my men to it, after it was possess'd by Captain James, who is one of the tutors of the Laird of Weems, untill I should "have your and the Lady Weems oppinion about it. I desire to give my humble service to her Ladyship, and I am,

"Sir,

"Your humble servant,
"ATHOLL."

I have neither seen nor heard from Captain James since my letter to him, of which you have also a copy.

To Mr. Neill Campbell,

Advocate, att Edinburgh.

171. [Alexander Menzies to Lady ———]. London, 11 March 1716:—

None in London had petitioned for banishment except five Irish gentlemen, who had attempted to escape, and were afterwards put in irons. They wished to enter the Venetian service and fight against the Turks. The Scotch and English were both "fond" of the Duke of Argyll's arrival in the city, as he was "above revenge, and of such a noble and mercifull temper that he might doe a great deal of good." Lord James Murray had also arrived, and the writer says: "He will be for sparing the Athole men's lives; I will not ansur for their purses."

172. The same [to the same]. Newgate, 8 May 1716:—

He was at Westminster, in order to be tried, yesterday, but was not; but one Mr. Gascoyne was tried at Westminster the other day, and was likely to be executed, and has got double irons and close prison. Colonel Oxburgh, an Irish gentleman, was found guilty and put in the condemned hole. "They are very sever after Foster and McIntosh's braking out of this, with some others that went away. We are all in irons and close prison in our rooms, but very hearty. The fever again is begun, quich make[s] us all afraid." The writer was to be tried on Friday, and was the first Highlaundman who was to undergo a trial there.

"The mobe heir has altered since we came here, that ther is no going out to our tryals for them. My Lord Darenwater's brother and I was in our coach yesterday to our tryals, but the mob stopd our coach, and notwithstanding that our coach had 6 seiers, they had almost drawn us out of our coach. All the ladies and mob cryed and weepd, and cryed that the Almighty would preserve us against all our enemies. When we went into our coach at Westminster the coach I was in was a long space after the rest, but we almost never could come home; twentie thousand folowed us, and all for Darenwater's brother," and wishing influence to be used on his behalf.

173. The same [to the same]. Newgate, 16 May 1716:—

The day following (17th) had been appointed for the execution of the writer, but a reprieve of a fortnight had been granted through the efforts of Argyll, Islay, Lord James Murray, etc. He was the first commoner who obtained a reprieve, and expressing his gratitude and to continue her influence.

174. Aeneas Macdonell to Lady Weem. Kinchlacher, 2 November 1719:—

Informs her ladyship of the seizure of one of her tenants, Ewen MacCoill Roy, alias Cameron, and refers to the great harm done to the lieges by the Rannoch men during the preceding summer and harvest.

175. Colin MacLaurin, the Mathematician, to [Lady Weem]. Edinburgh, April 19, 1729:—

"Madam,

"If I had not a very particular honour and regard for your Ladyship, I had never troubled you with this letter.

"Some moneths ago it was hinted to me that your Ladyship had taken something amiss of me. But being conscious to myself I never had given you the least reason to take the least offence, and that I had acted with you in every part with honour, truth, and sincerity, I could not give credit to it.

"I have now been told that your Ladyship was informed that I was carrying on some private designs in your family unknown to you. Nothing ever was invented by the most flagrant malice and deceit farther from truth, and more groundless than this. I do not know the authors of this story. But I have that sincere regard for your Ladyship, and your family, as to wish such persons may never gain credit with you as are capable of imagining and repeating such falshoods. If I knew them, the use I would make of it would be to shun them as I would shun the plague.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

SIR R.
MENZIES,
BART.

"I assure you, Madam, it never entred in the least into my thoughts to form any such design. I am not so apt to meddle in private affairs of families, especially such as are of that nature. I never spoke to your son on that subject once while I was at the Weem, and never wrote of it to him since. I wonder one of your Ladyship's penetration does not see the folly of the story. Your Ladyship was the only person concerned I ever spoke to on that subject since March was a year.

"I have now been so long known to your Ladyship, and I believe I have acted such a part as might give me some title to expect I would have been spoke to before such a story had obtained credit. Your Ladyship has formerly expressed a great deal of goodness for me, and I vainly flattered myself that I had more of your Ladyship's friendship than it appears I had, when you could easily give credit to those stories. Tho' I never deserved your friendship, I am not afraid to say I deserved it better than your anger. But it is my principle that Truth will at length prevail, and I doubt not but your Ladyship will sooner or later do me justice to believe me to be with great truth, Madam,

"Your Ladyship's most faithfull most humble
"Servant,

"COLIN MACLAURIN."

"P.S.—If I knew their names who have told these falsehoods to your Ladyship, I doubt not that I could make them contradict themselves.

"I beg leave to add that as I never heard your son speak of you but with great respect, so no person ever heard me insinuate the contrary; and in whatever manner you use myself, I will ever esteem you for many good qualities, but especially your love to him."

176. Copy Memorial for Sir Robert Menzies of Menzies, Baronet, sent to the Right Honourable Henry Pelham, Esq., London, indorsed November 1745-6.

Narrates that the Duke of Cumberland, on his arrival at Perth in pursuit of the rebels in February 1745-6, ordered a detachment of 500 men under Lieutenant-Colonel Leighton of Major-General Blackney's regiment, to fix a garrison at the memorialist's house near Taybridge, and that the garrison of 200 men, besides officers and occasional parties from the Argyllshire levies continued there from the 9th February till the 18th August 1746. That the memorialist and his family had to remove from Castle Menzies on an hour's notice, leaving his furniture in the rooms, kitchen, and offices; and had to repair a house in the neighbourhood for his family; that, owing to the presence of rebels in the neighbourhood, his house had to be put in a state of defence and some of the buildings were destroyed; that, besides the consumption of fuel and meal, the furniture was rendered useless by the outbreak of an epidemical fever among the troops; and that the entire loss to the memorialist was 1,000*l*.

"That as the memorialist and his predecessor's attachment to Revolution principles and to the present royal family is evident by the appearance his grandfather made at the Revolution, being the only gentleman in the Highlands of Scotland who join'd General Makay with above one hundred of his tenants before the battle of Killlicranky, and that the memorialist's country and house were plundered by the rebels in the year 1715 on account of the opposition made to them by his friends, one of whom stayed in the house in order to have defended it, but had the misfortune to be taken and carried prisoner to Dundee, where he remain'd confined till released by his late Majesty's army: And as in the rebellion of 1745 his country was assessed by the rebels in five pound ten shillings sterling upon the plough of land, as he had openly declared against them and did all in his power to keep his tenants from joining: So he humbly hopes that his Majesty will be graciously pleased to order remede, the memorialist's case being intirely singular, there being no other garrison planted in any subjects' house in Scotland except one, and that was attacked and dammified by the rebels."

Dated at Edinburgh, 4 June 1761.

XI.—PAPERS RELATING TO A DISPUTED SETTLEMENT OF A MINISTER IN THE PARISH OF DULL, IN THE PRESBYTERY OF DUNKELD AND SHIRE OF PERTH. 1712-1713.

This case occurred about the time of the Restoration of Lay patronage by the Act of Queen Anne in the year 1712. John, first Duke of Athole wished to exercise his right of patronage in favour of a nominee of his own, while Christian Campbell, the Dowager Lady Menzies, wished another person to be appointed minister. The principal proprietors in the parish, and the parishioners appear to have sided with Lady Menzies. She was a grand-daughter of Archibald Marquis of Argyll; and she appears to have exercised her hereditary right to take an active part in the settlement of the Presbyterian clergyman in the parish of Dull in which her son, the young Laird of Menzies was a principal owner of landed property. Several of the papers and correspondence are still preserved at Castle Menzies. The following excerpts from them will show the keen feeling on the subject.

192. Notes from memorandum, &c. anent the church of Dull.

The church of Dull, within the Laird of Weem's interest, and a mile of his house, becoming vacant two years ago by the death of the late incumbent, the Presbytery stirred up all concerned to call a minister. The Tutor of Weem, the Laird of Grantullie, and other heritors, who have the greatest interest in the parish, and twelve elders, petitioned the Presbytery of Dunkeld for one of their number to moderate a call which the Presbytery delayed to do for several months in deference to the Duke of Atholl since he did not concur in the petition, albeit his interest in the parish be very considerable.

At last the Presbytery thought fit to appoint a call to be moderated upon 1 April 1712, which after due intimation was accordingly done, wherein at a meeting of all the heritors and elders duly qualified, Mr. Menzies was voted to be their minister namine contradicente, and on the 2 of April the call was presented to the Presbytery.

For various reasons the Duke of Athole, though he had no objection against Mr. Menzies, opposed his settlement, to the great grief of the large parish, which is 24 miles long, and contained 4,000 souls, and after various appeals from the Presbytery to the Synod, and back again to the Presbytery, they went on, and on 10 Sep. it was carried, namine contradicente that the call was legal.

Upon this the Duke by proxy offered a presentation, pretending to the patronage, to which he had no right, on behalf of another minister, who refused to accept.

The Presbytery thereafter referred both the presentation, and Mr. Menzies entering on his trials to the next Synod, who approved of the procedure of the Presbytery, and ordered Mr. Menzies to be set on trial, and he having been put on trial, and approved of, His Grace caused the kirk door to be closed up twice, and made another presentation to that parish.

Mr. Menzies having passed his trials with approbation, the affair came before the Synod at Stirling in April last, and unanimously ordered the Presbytery of Dunkeld to ordain Mr. Menzies minister at Dull. The 7 May following was fixed for his ordination, but when the Presbytery came to go to the church to call the edico, they were met by Niell McGlashan, servant to the Duke, at the head of 100 armed men, and presented a paper, in the form of a letter, to Mr. Archibald Campbell, minister at Weem, and drawing their swords at the same time, who asked what meant this armed force, and by whose authority ; to which he answered it was by the Assembly's. Not finding it safe to enter the church, they went the length of the stile of the church yard ; the party beat the ministers off with their swords, and calling them rascals and traitors, who protested against the opposition as illegal for the reasons therein stated.

The Duke of Athole, by his influence, got the Commissioner of Assembly to suspend Mr. Menzies from the exercise of the ministry in that parish, and there has been no sermon there ever since.

A keen correspondence took place regarding this business.

193. In a letter from Christian Campbell, Lady Menzies, to Colin Campbell of Carquhin, dated Sunday night, she states that she was that morning surprised with Lindsay, a servant of the Duke of Athole, coming to see how she was, it being Sunday. She was more surprised when informed by him that he had come over on a Saturday night to lock the doors of the church, and to take the keys to his Grace, to whom they belonged as patron, and went immediately off when the doors were fixed. This step created much alarm, for if friends will not bestir themselves the honor and interest of the family (of Weem) might suffer, and as Bizet was at the Duke's, spurring him up to this, which, had Mr. Campbell concerned himself, as was expected, he durst not have done so, and left Campbell to extricate them out of those troubles his negligence had brought upon them. The Duke states that he walks by the advice of the President and Queen's Advocate, and reflects on Mr. Campbell for neither acting nor giving advice. Russell was desired to look the Register for the Duke of Athole's charter, so as to ascertain the nature of his right, for the right of patronage is reported to be in his signature.

194. In a letter from the Duke of Atholl to Lady Weem, dated Blair Atholl, Sept. 2, 1712, the Duke expresses his wish to have a minister settled for the kirk of Dull, he and his vassals having a considerable interest in that parish, and complains of the ill-usage he had received regarding that matter, and had it not been for Captain James Menzies who had taken, during the Duke's absence in London, unmanly and illegal methods by giving a call to Mr. Menzies to be minister of that place whom the Duke did not know ; and also complains that when the day to moderate in a call was come "Capt. James took upon him to administrat the oaths in English to several of the elders who did not understand a word of that language, which was a great profanation of an oath, and also to administrat the oath to one Mener, a proxy for Garntully, which was illegal, since by the law the Heritors present ought to take the oaths and not a proxy for them." Notwithstanding Captain James has continued his opposition to the Duke. But the Duke, considering that Mr. Menzies is related to the family of Weem, and at her Ladyship's desire, should he be qualified for the ministry, he would concur in settling him in some other parish, providing there be no more insisting in that call to the parish of Dull. That he would very soon present a Presbyterian minister to the church of Dull against whom there could be no objection.

195. In a letter from Christian Campbell, Lady Menzies, to the Lord Nairn, dated September 13, 1712, she expresses her surprise that the Duke of Atholl had sent a presentation to Lord Nairn's minister to the parish of Dull, but was glad to hear of his prudent and civil behaviour in that matter, and trusts that his Grace may be inclined to deal more favourably in the matter.

196. Also in a letter from Ja. Stewart, Mouline, to Lady Weem, dated Mouline, 25th October 1712, the writer states that he had seen the Duke of Atholl, who wished him to wait on her Ladyship regarding "the affaire of Dull parochine," and report to him. But not being able to be at Weem, he had been requested to write her Ladyship, stating the Duke's inclinations, who gives the names of parties whom he considers suitable for the church. Mr. Stewart expresses his concern for the congregation, and is very desirous of a suitable settlement to the satisfaction of all concerned ; and that from her Ladyship's concern for "religion" and the well of souls to be so great that she will fall in with the most proper method to get that "numberous and desolate" parochine speedily planted, he humbly proposes that the call to Mr. Menzies should be fallen from, so as to keep a good understanding between the two great families, that of his Grace and that of Weems, and another person agreed upon ; and that the business of the patronage be referred to two lawyers, such as the Lord Advocate and the Lord President, and should like her Ladyship and his Grace to agree to this.

197. Elizabeth Duchess of Argyll writes on 15 August 1713 to Lady Weem, congratulating her on her success. "And for Grace of Atholl's thundering letter I think with men of sence it should have noe waigt, but I find the rest in ther owen opinion thinks disobliging . . . So great men will ryme the risk of overturning the church government ; but I fansie depending upon such fellows as the Duke and Earle may be a means that that will not fail of vndermining it, for wee doe not see that humain wisdom governs the world. I wish they discourer not ther folly to late."

XII.—MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS, 1503-1747.

198. Extract Decreet by the Lords of Council in favour of Robert Menzeis of that ilk, Knight, against Neil Stewart of Forthirgill, "for the wrangwis destruction and downcastin of his mansioun place and fortlice of the Weene, and for the birning and destruction of diuers victualis, insicht gudis and other gudis," committed by Stewart in the year 1503. Dated at Edinburgh, 16 March 1504.

In the valuation of the articles destroyed there are enumerated the following: 200*li*. for the destruction of the house ; 30*li*. for the "beddin of the said place" and certane clathis ; 10*li*. for three "stand" of harness ; 20*li*. for twelve "jakkis" ; 8*li*. for certain "splentis" ; 1*4s*. for a breast "splent" ; 2*5s*. for two "sellatis" and "gorgeatis" ; 20*s*. for a howmond ; 40*s*. for certain steel bonnets ; 48*s*. for 24 spears ; 40*s*. for four culverins ; 8 merks for certain bouis and arrows ; 12 merks for certain swords, bucklers, and "gluvis of plate" ; 3*li*. for certain "burdeclathis" and towels. There follow pewter vessels, chandeliers, pots, cauldrons, pans, "girdillis," spits. The grain is thus valued : 12 merks for 12 bolls of meal and malt ; 32*s*. for two bolls of wheat ; the chaldre of oats with the "fodder" is valued at 8 merks ; the chaldre of bere at 16 merks.

199. Notarial instrument certifying the assignation by Mariot Ne Kinla, Donald Moyr, her spouse, Makvelane Afrik, daughter of the after-mentioned Angus M'Kinla, and others, the nearest kinsmen to the deceased Angus M'Kinla, to Alexander Menzeis, son and heir-apparent of Sir Robert Menzies of that ilk, of the assythment to be made for the slaughter of Angus M'Kinla, by Gregor Clerk, and John Dougalsoun. Dated at Dull, 14 February 1540.

200. Composition for remission in favour of Lyon Blair and Lyon Martoun, dwellers in the shire of Perth, of the offence of treasonably absenting themselves from the Queen's host summoned to assemble at Gladsmuir in August 1548, for the siege and recovery of the town of Haddington from the English ; for absenting themselves from all past hosts whatever ; and for all other crimes and offences, treason and other felonies excepted Perth, 18 July 1553.

The sum paid by way of composition is 40*s*. for each. The paper is signed by Culross, Sanquhar, &c.

201. Summons of Reduction in name of Queen Mary, given under the signet, at Edinburgh, the 18th of September 1553, at the instance of Robert Menzeis of that ilk, Knight, son and heir to the deceased Robert Menzeis of that ilk, Knight, against John Earl of Athole, grandson and heir of the deceased John Earl of Athole, and — Stewart, eldest son and heir to the deceased Neil Stewart of Forthirgill, for reducing and annulling the infeftments of lands of the barony of Forthirgill granted by the deceased Neil Stewart to the said deceased John Earl of Athole, and in fraud, hurt, and prejudice of the said late Sir Robert Menzeis, and the said Sir Robert, his son, as his heir. Because the late Sir Robert had, on the 15th of March 1504, or thereabout, obtained a decret of the Lords of Council against the said Neil Stewart for 200*li*. Scots, "for byrning and destroying of his place of Weyme," and divers other sums "for spoliatioun, awaytaking" and withholding of his insicht, victuals and vtheris "his geir," extending in all to 3,000 merks ; which decret had been transferred to the said Sir Robert, as heir to his father, in March 1533 ; and because the said infeftments had been granted fraudulently to prevent apprysing of the lands belonging to Stewart at the instance of Sir Robert Menzeis, and thus frustrate him in payment of his claims.

202. Letters, in name of Queen Mary, given under the signet at Edinburgh, 9 February 1553, to the Sheriff of Lanark. Narrating that Robert Menzeis of that ilk, heritable proprietor of the lands of Wolf Clyde, within the barony of Culter, had before Whit Sunday, 1552, warned his tenants to flit and remove, which they had neglected and refused to do; therefore ordering the Sheriff to take cognition of the matter, and compel them to remove, if the allegations were found correct, and refund such profits as might have accrued from that term.

203. Letter in name of Queen Mary, and given under the signet at Edinburgh, 30 March 1558. Narrating that a complaint had been made by Alexander Menzeis of that ilk, that he had raised a brief of the chapel of the regality of James Earl of Mortoun, superior, whereupon he had been served and retoured to the our quarter parts of the lands of Carnelopolis, in the barony of Lyntoun; but though the inquest served affirmatively, and Sir John Rannald, Clerk of Court, had made a retour thereon, yet he defers to close the said retour, with the brief inclosed, and deliver it to the said Alexander, causing him to "tyne the Witson" day mailis of his said landis; "charging therefore John Menzeis, sheriff in that part, to require the said Sir John to close the retour, and deliver it to the said Alexander Menzeis within six days after being required, "under the pain of rebellion."

204. Summons in name of Queen Mary, and under the signet at Edinburgh, 29 September 1564.

On the narrative that a complaint had been made by James Menzeis of that ilk, that whereas he had the lands of Rannoch and forestry thereof in few-ferm heritably; and because Coline Campbell of Glenruqhay, and Rannald McRannald McConiglas, under pretext of a gift of escheat to the said Colin of the goods of the Laird McGregor, the Queen's rebel, and at the horn, had intruded themselves wrongously in the Isle of Lochrannoch, and the said James' lands of Rannoch "be-est the "vatter of Erachtie," and were bigging and fortifying the said isle, to the trouble of the whole country; the said Rannald and his complices being of the Clanrannald and Clanchamroun and "vtheris of the maist brokin "clannis within our realm." That the said James had complained of this to the Queen at her late being "in "Atholle in the Lunkairtis;" where being in her progress she could not take order for reformation thereof, but wrote to the said Coline to cease from building in the said isle, and bringing in of strangers of other clans and countries, and to meet the Queen on her return either at Saint Johnston or Dundie, where she would take such order as might appertain to his reasonable contentment: Nevertheless they had still continued to fortify the said isle: And that when the Queen had given the said Colin gratis the gift of the escheat, it was for the expulsion of the Clangregour, and not under pretence of it to fortify the said isle; which strength had been demolished in her father's time, and again at her command by the said Colin; nor had ever command been given to repair it, or occupy the said James' lands to which Clangregour had no right; far less would it be allowed to place in the said James' lands the Clanrannald and Clanchamroun, who if once permitted to get possession would ever after elaim kindness thereto; that the said Colin had met the Queen at her home coming at Perth, and was commanded by "our bruther James Erle "of Murray" to come to Edinburgh to answer the said complaint, which he had failed to do: summoning the said Colin therefore to appear before the Queen and the Lords of her Council within 10 days after warning.

205. Receipt and discharge by William Cragy for five pounds to buy a Bible for the Kirk of Weem, 27 June 1575:—

"I, William Cragy, redar at the Kirk of Weyme, granttis me to haif resuit fra the handis of ane "honorabill man, James Menzeis, of that ilk, the sowme "of fyve pundis money to by ane Bible to the Kirk "of Weyme, eftir the tenour of our souerane lordis "leteris dierect thairupone; of the quihil sowme of "fyve pundis I the said William Cragy healdis me "well content and payit, quhilames and dischargis "the said James Menzeis thairfor and all vtheris to "quhame it efferris for now and ever, be this my "acquittance. 206. Submission by Colin Campbell of Glenruqhairt and James Menzeis of that ilk, to abide by the decret arbitral to be pronounced by Colin, Earl of Argyll, justice-general and chancellor of Scotland, James Earl of Glencairn, and six others as arbitrators in behalf of the Laird of Glenurchy, and by John Earl of Athole, John Earl of Montrose, and six others on behalf of the Laird of Menzeis, anent the contested right to the lands of Cranmycht, the alleged possession acclaimed by the Laird of Glenurchy to the teinds of Auchmore, etc., and the alleged slaughter and destruction of certain kine pertaining to Glenorchy and his tenants, alleged illegal execution of one of Menzeis' tenants, and spoiling of their goods, and all other quarrels depending between the two lairds. Stirling, 25 August 1580.

To this compromit is added a further agreement between Glenurchy and Menzeis to continue the above compromit at the request of the Earl of Argyll to the 4th January 1581, when the arbitrators should meet at Perth. Dated at Balloch, same year.

207. "Thee iniureis, oppressionis and wrangis committit be thee larde of Weme and his tenentis, of "thee quhilkis thee larde Weme humelie compenis to "the Kingis Maiestie and counsaile." [Circa 1580.]

There are seven distinct charges:—

1. That four years previous to the date of this memorial Glenurchy had sent his son Colin Campbell with 40 men to Menzie's lands of Kinaldie, and that they had stolen 24 "heid of nolt" with a number of sheep and goats. 2. That Glenurchy had seized and imprisoned a tenant of Menzie's in Morinche, and refused to release him till he had found caution to pay 40*l.* to Glenurchy, who for this sum caused the "pure mans "four pleuch hors" to be taken from him. 3. That when Menzie in January 1578 sent some of his men to execute the King's letters at the Balloch, Glenurchy wrested their weapons from them, and "bosit and "schorit" to have slain them. 4. That Glenurchy having had sent to him John Stewart, natural son to John Stewart of Appin his servant in Lorne to be his servant, had offered him land and money to pass to the Laird of Weme's bounds, "quhair the guidis "laitle was slane, and to slae the same," which he refused. 5. That he had caused some of Stewart's men to take away four horses from the poor tenants in Tullichdowle, and had put them in Glenurchy's stable. 6. That on the 20th July preceding the date of this memorial, Glenurchy had sent men to three different parts of Menzie's lands, Glengowlandie, Thome-tewgle, and Tullichdowle, and that they there "bee "manifest oppression slew to the number of twentie "heid of nolt," &c., taking others away. 7. That on the 22nd July Glenurchy had taken a Menzie's man "ane "tailceour, ane common man readie to wrik to euirrie "persoun for his leving, he passand throw the cuntries to seek his craft," and had imprisoned him for seven days in the Balloch, and when Menzie had obtained letters from the King and council charging Glenurchy to find caution to set the tailor at liberty, "eftir the "geving of thee charge, thee said larde Glenurchy, in "contempt of the Kingis Maiesties authority, maist "cruellie hangit the pure man quietlie, being thee "Kingis Maiesties lege and ane trew craftsman."

Decret-arbitral by John Earl of Athole, anent the lands of Wester Morinche contested between Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy and James Menzie's of that ilk, decreeing the latter on the date of this decret to set these lands in tack and assedation for 13 years to the Laird of Glenurchy; the latter engaging to permit none of the Macgregors or any others in their name to "labour, use, or manure" the lands thus awarded him. Dated at Perth, 15 November 1583.

208. Extract Entry from the Books of Privy Council respecting the acting and obligation of Merser of Mekillour and James Scrymgeour of the Myres, as cautioners for Thomas Stewart of Grantullie, that the said Thomas should assist with his whole forces those under his Majesty's commission for the assieging of the place and fortalice of the Moynes and pursuit of its detainers, and all other "rebelles, fugitives and broken "men troubles of the common quietness of the cuntries," under the penalty of two thousand pounds. Edinburgh, 1 May 1585.

209. Office copy from the Register of Privy Seal of Letter of Gift to George Earl of Huntly of the ward and nonentry of the barony of Menzeis and other lands belonging to the deceased James Menzeis of that ilk; with relief of the same, and marriage of Alexander Menzie's his heir. Stirling, 27 September 1585.

Holyroodhouse, 24 May 1592.

212. Ten papers (1575-1604) relating to quarrels between the Laids of Glenurchy and Weem, as to the right to the lands of Cranach, the Rannoch, Auchmore, &c., and to acts of spoliation committed by the Laird of Glenurchy and his vassals on the Laird of Weem and his tenants. By a contract, dated at Perth, 14 November, 1583, and to which the Earl of Athole and George Drummond of Blair were witnesses, the long-continued and serious quarrel as to the lands just mentioned was settled, and all other disputes were referred to the arbitration of John Campbell of Lawers.

213. Discharge by Alexander Forbes, servitor to the Duke of Lennox, in favour of Sir Alexander Menzies of Weem, for resetting of the Egyptians, threatening that in case the like danger should occur again his whole goods should be confiscated, without any favour to be granted by the King's treasurer or treasurer-depute. 30 March 1620.

[From the numerous writs issued for the apprehension of horse-thieves, sheep-stealers, &c., we select the following for notice]:—

214. Warrant of Justiciary, under the signet, by King Charles and Lords of Council, to Alexander Menzies of that ilk and Sir James Campbell of Lawers, for the trial of and other legal action against Muldonache M'Idoune, then a prisoner in the hands of Sir Alexander Menzies, and "a common and notorious theefe, who," it is said, "has lived this long tyme bygane vpon "thift, resset of thift, pylkerie and oppression." Edinburgh, 4 February 1636.

215. "Accomp of the losses done by the enemie to "the lands of Achylle, and Drungzie pertaining to "James Stirling of Balvill" [ante 1646]. The losses arose from the stealing of horses and kine (the latter especially), and the destruction of house plenishing, and one entry is "of cornes & stray be the enemes "quartering thriescore horses thrie nights . . . estimate to the value of fyvescore ten bolles . . . 5*lib.*" The sum of the particular losses is 2396*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The account is attested by Mr. Thomas Henderson, minister at the Port, and three of his elders.

On this document there is indorsed a decret of four commissioners appointed by the estates of Parliament, James Drummond, fiar of Machanie, Mr. Patrick Murray of Achtertyre, and other two, for trial and cognition "of the lands within the presbyteries of "Ouchterardure and Dunblane quhillkis are brunt "plunderit and waistit," relieving James Stirling of Balvill from the payment of any monthly maintenance or other public dues from his lands of Achyle and Drungzie. Sir John Haldane of Glenegles appeared for Stirling and his tenants, as by reason of "the "plague of pestilence" then raging in that district, the distance of place and stormy weather, they could not themselves appear. With reference to the attestation of the account by the clergyman and elders, it stated that as they were "men famous and of guid estieme," and, "according to the custome of the countrie" they were, "in regard of the necessitie of the tyme, "appointit for that effect, as men wha best knowes the "condition of thair owne peopill, thier worth and "losses. Quhill minister, gentillmen and elders in their "approbation declars and testifies 'that upon their "conference and credite, they did examine the within- "vritin parties and ther vittnesses in all the particular "losses given in be them in ther compts, and as they "are particulare set down in this samyne paper, and "that they and ther vittnessid did depon upon ther "great oath, that ther losses and skaith sustent be "them throw the enemie and his adherents being "estimate be them within the value did extend to the "sommes of momey vithin written, ilk one of them for "ther owin parts therof as the vithin written compt "bears; and that they all for the most part through "sustening thir losses are altogether haried and re- "ducit to povertie, so that except they be releavit the "vil never be abill to labour the ground againe bot to "beg thier bread". . . . Dated at Ochterardare, 1646.

216. Bond by Robert Andrews of Parckley, accepting his share of the liability of 2000*l.*, which had been accepted conjointly by himself, Alexander Menzies of that ilk, and Robert Campbell of Glenlyon, as cautioners in a bond made by the Laird of Glenurchy, younger, to Lord - General Monck, that the house of Balloch should be kept safe and secure by the said Glenurchy from all enemies of the Commonwealth, and should be re-delivered to the Lord-General or the Commander-in-chief in Scotland for the time, on seven days' demand, or, in case of inability to defend it, should be offered to the Lord-General or Commander-in-chief, and kept for fourteen days. Perth, 24 July 1658.

217. Copy of the libel against Archibald Marquis of Argyll, containing 14 separate charges. [1660.]

218. Bond by a number of Macgregors, Camerons, and others, indwellers in the barony of Rannoch, narrating that it was complained that many of the Rannoch people were "killers and daily destroyers" of deer, roes and wild fowl, and expressing the obligation of the subscribers that from that date they would not kill any deer or wild fowl in the forests or hills belonging to the Marquis of Huntly, the Earl of Athole, or Sir Alexander Menzies their master, under a penalty of 100 merks totes quoties Arharich 6. and Aivillich 7, August 1667.

219. Commission of Fire and Sword under the signet, by King Charles the Second and the Lords of Council [Rothas as Chancellor Caithness, Douglas, Argyll, Airie, Tweeddale, Annandale Kincardin, and Halcartoune], to Sir Alexander Menzies of Weyne, John Campbell, younger, of Glenurchy, Sir James Campbell of Lawers, and—Campbell of Glenlyon, to apprehend and proceed with fire and sword against [Ronald] McDonald of Fersett, Alexander and Archibald McDonalds, his brethren, Donald McDonald, alias "the Halkit-Stirk," Angus McO'rig and Donald his brother, — McDonalds, sons of "Halkit-Stirk," the Laird of M'Gregour, Duncan Roy M'Osham. They had been declared rebels for not having appeared before the Lords on the 27th July immediately preceding to "answer for their and their assistants and complices "entering into the lands of Ranach, and by force and "violence taking of possession of a part of the said Sir "Alexander Menzies his lands, and manteaning of the "same by force of armes, and committing of divers "other outrages," and notwithstanding the letters of denunciation, the narrative relates, they not only continued in this violent possession of the lands of Ranach, but openly repaired to kirk and market, as if they were "frie leidges." Dated at Edinburgh, 1 August 1671.

The letters of denunciation of the 27th July show that the Macdonalds and Macgregors had entered Menzies' lands in June, driven out his tenants, settled their goods, sent forth scouts and posted sentinels, and in this same month of June, a party of sixteen or eighteen had attacked some merchants "belonging to" the Laird of Ardgowrie and places adjacent, seized and broken their swords, and taken the more desirable portion of their goods.

220. Extract Commission by King William III. in favour of Robert Menzies, younger, of Weem, to be Captain of the Independent Company, consisting of 100 foot sentinels, raised by himself. Hampton Court, 23 August 1689.

221. Commission by Major-General Hugh Mackay in favour of Captain Robert Menzies, younger, to be governor of the garrison in the castle of Weem. Perth, 30th September 1689.

222. Paper indorsed, "Scroll Clause in the Tacks of Rannoch, 1747."

Obliges the tenant to bring his cows and horses—on oath if required—before any person authorised for their inspection by Sir Robert [Menzies], at two terms in the year, or oftener if required, and to give a faithful account of whatever cows or horses he received into his possession during these terms, stating how he came by them; to keep but one cottar betwixt him and the possessor of the adjoining half-merk land, and that cottar to be of "the Shishmein people," unless liberty for some other person were obtained from Sir Robert; not to give any traveller whatever one night's quarters without acquainting his neighbour while the stranger was with him, or within two hours after his departure; not to keep company with nor to give quarters for two successive nights to a known thief or any person of a bad character, under a penalty of 12*l.*; to hinder cattle stealing, and to assist other tenants for a certain sum for every day so occupied in the recovery of stolen cattle; and to watch no other bounds but those of Sir Robert.

I cannot conclude this Report without acknowledging the kindness and courtesy with which Sir Robert Menzies placed his Manuscripts at my service for inspection. Sir Robert, I believe, will readily consent to a fuller calendar of his muniments should this be deemed necessary by the Commissioners.

MANUSCRIPTS OF THE FAMILY OF CARRUTHERS OF HOLMAINS, IN THE COUNTY OF DUMFRIES.

MILY OF CARRUTHERS OF HOLMAINS.

The family of Carruthers have been long settled on the borders of Scotland, and in the county of Dumfries. Formerly there was a parish named Carruthers, which existed as a separate parish till the year 1609, when it was united to the parish of Middlebie; and these two parishes, along with Penesax, also united to them, form one parish, under the name of Middlebie.

In the original parish of Carruthers, on a height above the village of that name, on Fultonburn, there stood a British fort or castle, which gave rise to the name Caerhryth, signifying the fort of the assault.

Besides the family of Carruthers of Holmaims, there were Carruthers of that ilk, Carruthers of Mosswald, Carruthers of Dormont, and others.

William Carruthers of Mosswald obtained from King David Bruce a charter of the lands of Middlebie, dated 10 September 1351; and John of Carruthers, probably the son of William, obtained from the same sovereign a charter of a part of Mosswald, which belonged to John of Rafhols, dated 10 December 1361. The descendants of William Carruthers possessed Mosswald for many generations. When the Earls of Douglas became Lords of Annandale the family of Carruthers appear to have held their lands under them. Several charters by the Earls of Douglas as Lords of Annandale are preserved in this collection. In the year 1411 Simon Carruthers of Mosswald was buckler bearer to Archibald Earl of Douglas, Lord of Galloway and of Annandale. Simon, the buckler bearer, may have been the Sir Simon Carruthers who is commemorated by a stone statue, which lies in the aisle of the parish church of Mosswald. The head rests on a pillar, the feet on a bar; the hands are placed in the posture of supplication. The statue has neither date nor inscription, but it is traditionally known as that of Sir Simon Carruthers.

The same Earl of Douglas granted several charters of lands to Simon Carruthers, his buckler bearer, in the year 1411, including the lands of Middlebie and Dornock, Heatlandhill, Applebrechall, Hoddam, Tunergarth, Westwood, and Rockcliffe.

The Christian name of Simon was a common one in the Mosswald family, and it occurs at an early period in the parish of Middlebie. Simon, the parson of Middlebie, swore fealty to King Edward the First, in 1296. Besides the Sir Simon Carruthers above mentioned there was Simon Carruthers of Mosswald in 1485, and in 1501 Walter Scott of Buccleuch granted to Simon Carruthers of Mosswald the lands of Roberthill. In 1512 King James the Fourth granted to Simon Carruthers, son of Simon Carruthers of Mosswald, a charter of Mosswald, Middlebie, &c. In 1535 Simon Carruthers was heir to Simon Carruthers in Mosswald and other lands.

This last named Simon Carruthers died between the years 1544 and 1548, leaving no sons, but two daughters, Janet and Marion Carruthers, who were the co-heiresses of his estate of Mosswald. The ward and marriage of the heiresses was given by Queen Mary to James Douglas of Drumlanrig, by gift dated 13 August 1548. Janet Carruthers, the eldest daughter, married Thomas Rorison of Bandaroch, and she and her husband conveyed her half of the lands of Mosswald to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1562.

Marion Carruthers, the younger co-heiress of Simon, conveyed her half of Mosswald to Charles Murray of Cockpoole, ancestor of the Murrays, Earls of Annandale. But that conveyance was disputed by James Douglas of Drumlanrig as having right to the ward and marriage of Marion Carruthers, and her elder sister joined action with Drumlanrig against Cockpoole. Drumlanrig provided a husband for Marion Carruthers in the person of a John Macmath; but Marion declined him, and, rather than be concussed into a marriage with him, she committed suicide by leaping over a crag. In consequence of that act her estate, real and personal, escheated to the Crown, and William Douglas of Hawick obtained from the Crown a gift of the escheat, dated 29 November 1590. Janet Carruthers was the heiress of her sister Marion, and from Janet, Douglas of Drumlanrig appears to have acquired the other half of the lands of Mosswald. The two halves of the lands thus acquired were provided to a younger son of Drumlanrig, and gave designation to the Douglasses of Mosswald, till the lands were reacquired by the Queensberry family.

The information about the family of Carruthers of Mosswald now stated is derived from the Mosswald charters at Drumlanrig, and it illustrates a point in the feudal law as to the marriage of heiresses.

The present report refers to the family of Carruthers of Holmaims, which is now represented by Alexander Erskine Murray, Esquire, Advocate, one of the Sheriff Substitutes of Lanarkshire, at Glasgow. The last Mr. Carruthers of Holmaims had no sons, but a large family of daughters, and his property of Holmaims was sold. The eldest daughter, Christian Carruthers, married John Erskine of Aberdonia, who was the great grandfather of Mr. Erskine Murray. She lived till above the age of 90 years. The eldest son of that marriage, and the only one who left issue, was James Erskine of Aberdonia, who was the grandfather of Mr. Erskine Murray, whose mother, the late honourable Mrs. Erskine Murray, was his only child. He is thus the representative of the family of Carruthers of Holmaims. As such, the collection of family papers was left to him by the late Major J. P. Carruthers Wade, into whose possession the papers had come, as the son of a younger sister of Mrs. Christian Carruthers, or Erskine.

The collection is contained in a large old oak chest, which has been courteously transmitted by Mr. Erskine Murray for my inspection. The following is an abstract of the more ancient of the charters of the family of Carruthers, which date from the time of King David Bruce, and contain also charters from successive Lords of Annandale, including the Dunbars, Earls of March, the Earls of Douglas and Longueville, and Alexander Duke of Albany:—

1. Charter by King David the Second, as Lord of Annandale, to John of Carrotheris, of the half of the lands that formerly belonged to John of Rafhols in the tenement of Mousfald. 10 December, 33d year of reign. [1361.]

8. Charter by James the Fourth, King of Scots, under the Great Seal, in favour of John Carrutheris of Holmendis, of the lands of Little "Dawtoun," Butterthuate, Kirkhill, Deneby, and Egilfeichane; with the mills of Little Dalton and Egilfeichane; and advocacy and gift of the churches and chapels thereof, in the Stewartry of Annandale and Sherifdom of "Drumfries," to be held by the said John and his heirs of the King and his successors in fee and heritage for payment yearly of three suits at the three head Courts of the Stewartry of Annandale, with ward and relief and marriage. At Edinburgh, 14 Feb. 1507.

This charter proceeds on the narrative that the above lands had formerly belonged heritably to John Carrutheris of Holmendis, held of the King in chief, and that they had been lawfully appraised and assigned to the King by his steward of Annandale, to remain with the King in property, for payment of five hundred and fifty merks due to him by the said John Carruthers, and were in the King's hands for the space of five years after the apprising; and for which sum the said John had now made composition with the King's Treasurer. The King, therefore, willing that the said John should have full regress to his foresaid appraised lands for the said composition and payment making according to the tenor of the Act of Parliament made on apprising of lands for debt, grants the above charter.

9. Letter of Procuratory by Robert Lord Maxwell, addressed to King James V. and John Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland, to the effect that he had appointed James Johnston of that ilk, Symon Carruthers of Mouswald, John Carrutheris of Holmendis, John Charteris of Amysfeld, John Charteris of Lochtounne, Archibald Carrutheris in Loganovend, Adam Carlile in Bridkirk, Robert Ferman, Dean of Glasgow, and Patrick Coyntre, Dean of Lawstawrik, his procurators, for resigning in His Majesty's hands his lands of Sorowisk and Medilschaw, in the lordship and stewartry of Annandale, in favour of Robert Carruthers of Medilschaw. Dated and sealed with the seal of the grantor's arms at Lochmabane, 14 November 1517. Witnesses: Harbert Maxwell, the grantor's brother german, Richard Heris, Edward Maxwell, John Maxwell, Robert Vaus, &c.

10. Sasine proceeding on royal precept addressed to Robert Lord Maxwell, as Steward of Annandale, and his bailies, for infefting John Carruthers of Holmendis as heir to John Carruthers of Holmendis, his grandfather, in the lands of Littell Daltonne, Butterthuate, Kirkhill, Denby, and Egilfeichane, and in the advocacy and donation of the churches and chaplainries of the lands of Raffeldis and Howthuate, Plewlands, Perisbie, Altoune, Eriscabank, Copvold and Bengallhill, in the lordship of Annandale. Done on the ground of the lands of Littell Daltonne, at the principal message thereof, and on the ground of the other lands, between the hours of two and three afternoon, 21st May 1523. Witnesses: Cuthbert Murray, son and apparent heir of John Murray of Kokpule, Knight, Adam Murray, John Carrutheris, Sir James Carruthers, rector of Vamfra, &c.

11. Contract of sale between Gilbert Grearsoun of Daltonn, on the one part, and John Lyndesay, son and heir of umquhile John Lyndesay of Barclay, and Master James Lyndesay, Burgess of Edinburgh, his tutor, for his interest, on the other part; whereby the said Gilbert binds himself and his heirs to sell, and whereby he sells to the said John and his heirs his twenty pound land of old extent of Daltonn and Dormant, with tower, fortalice, orchards, yairds, &c., and advocacy of the parsonage of Mekill Daltonn, in the stewartry of Annandale and sherifdom of "Drumfries," to be held of the Queen and her successors for the service and duties due therefrom formerly; and promising to infeft them therein, betwixt the date of the contract and the first of October next to come; and to that effect to resign the lands in the hands of James Duke of Chattelherault, Earl of Arran, Lord Hamiltonne, "tutour, administratour, gyder, and governour to our soneane lady, as in her 'highness' hands" for infeftment to be given to the said John and his heirs, thereof heritably, to be held as above; and further promising neither to sell, wadsett, dispone, nor sett tackes of the said lands to any other except the said John. And the said Gilbert makes the said John and his heirs his lawful assignees to the reversion made to the said Gilbert and his heirs by John Carruthers of Holmendis, upon the redemption and out-quitting of the said John Carruthers and his heirs of the one half of the said lands, &c. containing the sum of seventeen score merks Scots, and transferring from the said Gilbert and his foresaids to the said John Lyndesay and his heirs all right which he had to the said reversion for redeeming the said half lands, &c. from the said John Carruthers, in the same manner as the said Gilbert could have redeemed them; the said John Lyndesay and his tutor paying to the said Gilbert at the time of the resignation seven hundred merks Scots. The contract to be registered in the books of "our soneane ladies counsels." Dated at Edinburgh, 8 August 1552.

12. Charter by Mary Queen of Scots, under the Great Seal, in favour of John Carrutheris, grandson (nepos) of John Carrutheris of Holmendis, elder, and his heirs of the ten merk land of old extent of Rammirskailis and Harthweth, in the parish of "Lowmabane," stewartry of Annandale and sherifdom of "Drumfries," which ten merk land of Rammirskailis and Harthweth formerly belonged heritably to William Ramsay of Sipland, and were resigned by him by his procurators and letters patent in the Queen's hands at Aberdeen. To be held of the Queen and her successors in fee and heritage for ever, as freely as the said William Ramsay or his predecessors held them of the Queen or her predecessors, for payment of the services due and wont. Dated at Aberdeen, the penult day of October 1562.

In addition to the charters specified in the foregoing report, the Holmains' oak charter chest contains a large collection of correspondence and miscellaneous papers. These relate chiefly to the management of the estate, and do not fall within the scope of the Commission.

WILLIAM FRASER.

Edinburgh, 32, Castle Street,
1st July 1876.

REPORT ON THE PAPERS OF HUGH MACKAY GORDON, ESQ., OF ABERGELDY.

The lands of Abergeldy, in Strathee, of old formed part of the vast territory of the Earldom of Marr, but Thomas Earl of Marr, the last of the direct male line of Marr (and who died in the year 1357), by a Charter (undated) granted to Duncan, son of Roger, the lands of Abergeldy and others lying in the Earldom of Marr.

The vassal of the Earl, by this Charter, was taken bound to give suit at his three head courts, held "apud lapidem de Mygvethe"—a stone at the Earl's great manor of Mygvethe, or Migvie, in the adjoining country of Cromar.

The Earldom of Marr, on the death of Alexander Stewart, Earl of Marr, in 1435, was held to vest in the Crown; and in the beginning of the following century Sir Alexander Gordon, of Mygmar, got a Charter from the King of the lands of Abergeldy and Estoun on his own resignation.

Three extracts of this Charter are among the papers at Abergeldie. It is dated at Inverness, 9th November 1501, and by it the King erected the lands into a free barony.

It appears, however, that the representatives of Duncan, the son of Roger, to whom the lands had been conveyed by Earl Thomas before 1377, had still certain rights in them—as appears by a notarial instrument in the Collection here, dated 24th March 1507, wherein it is set forth that in the Court of the King's Justiciar, held at Dundee by Thomas Maxwele, son and heir apparent of William Maxwele, of Teline, the depute of the Justiciar, there appeared Thomas, son of Alexander, asserting himself to be heir of Cristiana Roger, his great grandmother, in the lands of Abergeldy and others in the Earldom of Marr, and confessing that he had been fully satisfied and paid by George Gordon, of Mygmar, for his rights therein, his claims being thereby renounced, and the original Charter granted by Thomas Earl of Marr to his predecessor being now delivered to the said George Gordon. The instrument is witnessed by John Earl of Crauford, Thomas Lord Lovat, Sir Thomas Maull, of Panmure, Sir William Scot, of Balnery, Sir Adam Crichtoun, of Ruthwenis, and John Ogilvy, of Innerquharrie.

It would appear that at this time claims had been put forward on the part of the Crown, as coming in place of the old Earls of Marr; but these were rejected by the Privy Council in an Act whereby it was found that "the

GORDON,
Esq.

H. M. GORDON, Esq. "landis of Aberyeldie ar distinct landes fra the Erledome of Marr."

The Royal Confirmation of this Act is among the papers, and is dated 26th February 1507, the Act itself being dated on the 25th of that month.

By it the Lords "assolzeis George Gordoun, of Mygmar, the sone and are of umquhile Schir Alexander Gordoun, of Mygmar, Knycht, fra the petition and clame of oure Souerane Lord to here and se the landis of Abiryeldy adueit to pertene till oure said Souerane Lord, because thai ar of the properte of the Erledome of Mar. And also because the infetment made to the said umquhile Alexander of the said landis was made the tyme of umquhile Duke of Albany . . . And decernis the said George qwite fra the said petition and clame . . . because it was clerly sene . . . to the said lordis that the sade landis of Aberyeldy war distynct and separate landis fra the properte of Mar, quhen the Erledome of Mar was oled with ane Erle, and quhen it was unclod with ane Erle, as our Souerane Lordis adoll rollis and new rollis sene and considerit propertis."

Two days after the date of the King's confirmation the lands were resigned into the King's hands by George Gordoun, for a Charter to be granted in favour of himself and Margaret Stewart, his spouse.

On 2nd May 1548 Alexander Gordon got sasine of the lands of Aberyeldie as heir of his father, James Gordon, "quha deit last . . . seisit . . . in the feild of Pinkyeleucht, strikin the tent day of September, yair of God j^m v^e fourtie and sevin yeris."

Security was directed by the King's precept to be taken "of the soun of xiiiib. vis. viiid. for the fermis "of the saidis landis and barronie . . . for the last "Merimes terme, and xxviiib. xliis. iiid. for relieff of the samyn."

There seems to have been some confusion regarding the property of Abergeldy at this early period, for while the lands were granted, as has been seen, before 1377, to Duncan, son of Roger, and the rights of his representatives were recognised in 1507, yet in the accounts of the Chamberlain of Marr, in 1438, a few years after the Earldom came into the hands of the King, a payment is entered out of the rents of Camnakist, by the King's grant, of ten pounds to John Mowat, for his right of the lands of Abergeldy for the two previous years; and in the years 1445 and 1446 the receiver of the King's rents is ordered to inquire carefully who is in possession of the lands of Abergeldy, and to find out about their value and occupation.

In 1449 he reports that the lands of Aberyeldy are occupied by the Earl of Huntly; and in 1451 the Chamberlain accounts for ten pounds as the rent of these lands which are said to be in the Earl's hands.

The Charter from the Crown in 1501, already noted, was . . . the Earl's son, Sir Alexander Gordon, of Mygmar, but it was not sufficient to give a complete right until the claims of the heir of Roger, the grantee of the Earl of Marr, had been bought up. Even then it seems to have been imagined that a right remained in the Crown, as in place of the Earls of Marr, to the property of Abergeldy; and it was only after the decree of the Lords of Privy Council had rejected the King's claim that the full right was established in the Gordons.

The later writs consist of the ordinary deeds for the transmission of the lands from father to son, and do not furnish materials of a historical character. Besides the usual titles of property, there are numerous writs of adjudications and appraisings, dated in the 17th century.

JOHN STUART.

REPORT ON ANCIENT DOCUMENTS belonging to KING JAMES'S HOSPITAL OF PERTH.

KING JAMES'S HOSPITAL OF PERTH.

Prior to the Reformation there were many religious establishments in the burgh of Perth. Of these the more prominent were the monasteries of the Dominicans, the Carmelites, the Carthusians, and the Franciscans.

In the year 1569 King James VI. founded an hospital for behoof of the poor members of Jesus Christ residing and abiding in the burgh of Perth, and for its support he assigned all the lands and properties which previously belonged to the monasteries, churches, chapels, and altars within the liberty of the burgh of Perth.

It thus happened that all the Charters and other documents connected with these various institutions came to be the property of the King's Hospital, and they are still preserved in the muniment room of that institution at Perth.

They are very numerous, and for purposes of genealogy and local history they contain much useful material. The most important series is that of the monastery of the Blackfriars, and from some of the records belonging to it, glimpses may be got of the religious ideas and devotional customs which prevailed at different periods, while they throw much light on the general state of the country.

The following notes relate to the Charters of this series which seemed specially interesting:—

The founder of the monastery was Alexander II., King of Scotland, and the oldest document now in the collection is a writ granted by that King at Forfar on the 31st October 1241, addressed to his provosts of Perth, wherein he commands them to pay from his farm of Perth yearly to the friars preachers of Perth "unam pislam ceream de quaquidam pisa cere dotavimus annuatim ecclesiam eorumdem fratrum predicatorum de Perth, cum dictam ecclesiam fecimus dedicari." The witnesses to the writ are Philip de Maleville, Robert of Montealt, justiciary of Scotland, and Robert of Meyners.

On 7th June 1244, the same King granted to the monks "totam illam placeam in qua fuit gardinum nostrum," also "ut habeant conductum aque de stagno molendini nostri de Perth, habentem in quadram quatuor pollices." The witnesses to this writ were William Bishop, of Glasgow, chancellor, William Earl of Mar, Alan Durward, justiciary of Scotland, Alexander Cumyn, John of Vaux, and Robert of Meyners, at Holyrood.

By a writ addressed to his provosts of Perth, dated at Scone, 31st May 1251, King Alexander III. renews the grant made by his father of a cake of wax for lighting the church of the monks on the day of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, and also enjoins an additional payment out of his farms of Perth, "facientes de eisdem firmis dictos fratres pasci singulis septimanis uno die." The witnesses were Robert of Ross, Robert of Meyners, chamberlain, and William of Lowther, sheriff of Perth.

The same King granted a writ at Scone on 18th October 1265, addressed "Præpositis suis de Perth et Pircmaris suis de Cragny et Malhena uni vel pluribus qui pro tempore fuerint," directing payment to be made to the monks "quinque celdras boni frumenti et bene vannati et decem celdras boni braseli." They were also "similiter habere faciatis eisdem fratribus singulis annis de firma burgi nostri de Perth septem libras et sexdecim solidos pro procuracione sua annua, et unam pislam ceream cum melius horum cere fuerit in anno."

By a Charter dated at Perth, 12th April 1316, King Robert Bruce confirmed to the friars preachers, "villam de Perth presentibus et futuris nostris dotis ecclesie earundem pro bonæ memorie dominum Alexandrum regem Scotie predecessorem nostrum ultimo defunctum constructæ, non tamen per ipsum dotata, et pro sustentacione ipsius ecclesie et Luminarii, et fratrum ibidem servitium, cum aliisque operibus ad divinum cultum in eadem ecclesia necessariis quadraginta et quatuor marcas Sterlingorum," one half from his farms of the town of Perth "et aliam medietatem de nostra custuma que dicitur Maltod de Villis de Dundee et de Perth."

The same King, by a Charter dated at Berwick-on-Tweed, 26th April 1323, on the narrative that King Alexander III. had granted freedom to the friars from payment of multure of 5 chalders of wheat and 10 chalders of malt, and that with respect to the same and all their corn ground at the King's mills of Perth for their own use, they should for ever retain the privilege of Roumfre after the corn belonging to himself and his heirs "et post bladum in Tremodium inventum." Confirms the said privilege.

By a Charter dated at Erle, 6th May 1324, Sir Gilbert of Hay granted to the friars twenty shillings "de firmis Pomeri nostri de Inchesyreth dum ad hoc sufficere possint sin autem de principalibus firmis integri tene menti de Inchesyreth per manus Ballivi ejusdem," for supplying light to a lamp in the choir and another before the great cross of the friar's church. Witnesses: Nicholas of Hay, dean of the church of Dunkeld, John of Hay, rector of the church of Erle, brother of Sir Gilbert, Nicholas of Hay, his son, John of Inchmertyn, sheriff of Perth, knights: Edmund of Leyis, Thomas Ban, John of Kinfaunes, John Marescall, burgesses of Perth, and others.

By a deed granted at Perth on Sunday within the Octaves of the Ascension, in the year 1334, Sir John of Inchmertyn granted to the preaching friars "nationis Scoticane in regno Scotie constitutus," to be received by the hands of the prior of the preaching friars of Perth, or his deputy, "pro pastura unius diei omnium fratrum" in capitulo suo generali convenientium ubicunque "fuerint infra regnum Scotie," the sum of twenty shillings sterling, payable out of his lands of Kynhard and other lands in the Earldom of Athol; also for the same purpose four bolls of good wheat and eight bolls of good barley out of his granary of Inchmertyn. Witnesses: Innocent, abbot of Scone, Sir John of Strivelyn, sheriff of Perth, and others.

On 1st March 1369 Alan of Erskyn, Lord of Inchmartyr, with consent of his wife Isabel, the heir of John of Inchmartyr, confirmed the last grant, and at the request of his wife added other four bolls of good wheat. Witnesses: William, abbot of Scone, Roger, abbot of Lindores, Robert Stewart, of Innermeath, sheriff of Perth, Laurence of Spens, provost of Perth, Thomas Cumyn, John Scot, William Whitson, and Andrew Stot, bailiffs of Perth, and others.

On the Feast of St. Mary, Virgin, in the year 1375, John Lorymar conveyed to John Henryson, burgess of Edinburgh, his land on the west side of the Curfar Raw, to be held of the friars under burden of an annual payment to them of five shillings. The grantor appended his seal, together with the seals of Adam de Brechayne, reader of the Order of Blackfriars of Perth, John of Cogherane, canon of Dunkeld, and John of Gray, burgess of Perth, before witnesses, Thomas of Spens, Laurence of Spens, John of Petscoty, William, called Squyer, John of Lundorys, and others.

On 18th September 1389 Hugh Barday, of Kippo, granted to the friars ten shillings sterling annually out of his barony of Aryngosk, for supporting a lighted lamp in the choir of their church. He appended his own seal to the grant, as also the seal of William of Rothvann, knight, and John Gylle, provost of Perth, William of Spens, and John Petscoti, burgesses of Perth.

On 3rd December 1405, King Robert III., by a Charter granted at Dundonald, conveyed to the friars the chapel of St. Laurence, within the town of Perth, for the weal of the soul of his father, Robert II., and especially for the soul of Elizabeth More, his mother, who rests in the church of the said friars. Witnesses: Gilbert, bishop of Aberdeen, chancellor, William of Bathket, and Malcolm of Bute, chaplains to the King, Henry of Conyngnam, and others. On the same day the King issued a precept to the bishop of Aberdeen, as chancellor, with directions to "cause due investiture to be given at the gates of our "chapel to the said friars."

By an Indenture dated about 1420, Thomas of Lyn, burgess of Perth, granted to the friars a croft at the Clayhill of Perth for the celebration of three masses in any week only before the altar of the Blessed Mary in the church of the friars. Witnesses: Michael Mercer, of Mokklour, John of Chalmers, John of Seres, Richard of Stratherne, William of Stratherne, David of Ferne, Patrick Chartres, Andrew of Moncreif, Cristin of Dunyng, John of Logy, and William Umfra, burgesses of Perth.

On 20th August 1452, William Earl of Erroll granted to the monks four pounds, to be taken yearly out of his lands of Inchyray, and also confirmed Sir Gilbert Hays' grant of twenty shillings out of the same lands, for the weal of his own soul and that of Beatrice his wife, their parents, predecessors, and successors. It is conditioned that a well qualified brother of the said place should celebrate one mass every day for ever between the hours of 10 and 12 at the altar of St. John the Evangelist and St. Nicholas the Confessor in their church, where some of the grantor's predecessors are buried, and he shall be bound to exhort the people at the beginning of the said mass to say one pater noster with the angelical salutation, and in no wise omitting the collect Fidelium Deus.

On 24th June 1525, Elizabeth Gray, widow of Alexander Earl of Huntly, made a grant to the Dominicans of her half lands of Littleton, in the barony of Langfordgruud, for the weal of her soul and that of her late husband. She narrates as her reason for selecting the friars for her bounty that they were poor, promoters of religion, conforming to the rules of their spiritual fathers, so that in life and doctrine they were a becoming pattern to the people.

The friars were to chant and celebrate solemnly "cum "nota in vestimentis carn[u]lis," with deacon, sub-deacon, and accolites in their choir, between the hours of seven and nine daily, a mass of repose for the grantor and her husband, except on solemn days and principal festivals, which according to the ordinary or calendar of the said friars were double, on which days a mass should be celebrated out of the festival with a collect and memoriam for their souls. Also every year on the anniversary of her husband's death, namely the 16th of January, they should celebrate for their souls exequies or an anniversary of nine lessons. But if the friars should fail to celebrate, they should be bound to resign the said lands of Littleton into the hands of the superior thereof in favour of any other religious house willing to accept the said burden, at the choice of the archbishop of St. Andrew's, and of the bishop of Dunkeld for the time. And the friars or their ecclesiastics performing the said offices, should be bound to submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the said archbishop and bishop, by renouncing their own proper jurisdictions, exemptions, and privileges, so that the said archbishop and bishop, or their vicar-general, officials, or commissaries, might compel the said friars or others accepting the said burden to a due observance of the premises.

And farther, because the said Elizabeth, countess foresaid, contributed a sum of three hundred marks for repairing the dormitory of the said monks when it was ruinous, they and their successors should be bound to say every night after complines and matins the psalm De Profundis, with the prayer Inclina at the sepulchre of the said Alexander Earl of Huntly, her husband, who lay buried in the choir of their said church, reciting their names ALEXANDER and ELIZABETH, and that for the weal of their souls. Every week also in their chapterly meetings, they were to commend their souls in their suffrages, special and general, as well of their masses as of their other prayers, and in the then present year they were to make special mention of her state and of the soul of her said husband. In the event of the failure of the friars to fulfil their duties, and the neglect of the others whom she had named to compel them, then the said Elizabeth constituted the prior and religious men of the Carthusian monastery, near Perth, guardians of her foundation so far as they might. Granted at Perth before witnesses, Alexander, commendator of Scone and Inchaffray, and Patrick Charteris, provost of Perth.

On the same day seisin was given to the friars in virtue of the precept of the countess addressed to Sir David Lindsay of Edzell, Master David Lindsay his son, and Andrew Hervey, her bailies.

The Countess of Huntly had been previously married to John Lord Glamis, and her son by that marriage, the feudal superior of Littleton, declined to enter with his superior, and for a time defeated the claim of the monks to possession of the lands, and various legal proceedings before the Privy Council and elsewhere were resorted to before they were finally successful.

The later Charters are of little general interest, and consist mostly of feu rights which the monks began to grant of their possessions. The monastery was one of the first to be destroyed at the time of the Reformation, but even before that event, the monks seem to have lost their hold on the reverence and affection of the citizens.

Thus, on 28th May 1543 they raised a summons against several of them, in which they narrated that "Alexander Chalmers, of Potty, John Henry, George "Crichton, Walter Pyper, John Davidson, James Rynd, "John Mason, with their complices and servants, of "their causing command and rathabitation recently upon "the 14th day of May instant betwixt eight and nine "hours before noon, our said orators being actually "occupied in divine service, came to their said place, "and struck up their fore yett, broke the locks and "bands of the same, and sicklike broke up two inner "doors of the throughgang on the north side of the said "cloister, and took away with them the locks of the "same doors, and broke up the frater door, and took "away out of it chandeliers and glasses, and broke "their kitchen door, and took off the fire the kettle "with their meat, and carried it about the town, and "yet withhold the kettle and pewter dishes one or "more from them, and also broke their closure yett "which was new made, with great violence and contemtion."

The value of each of the locks was estimated at eight shillings; two gross brazen chandeliers, twenty shillings; two glasses, three shillings; a great kettle, three pounds; two pewter dishes, each six shillings, Scots money.

The account book of the friars is among the papers, and is entitled "Liber Rationarij Fratrum Predicatorum "Burgi de Perth quoad in Pecuniis fact. Die et anno "quibuscunque supra in Principio." It was begun on 20th June 1557 and was continued to the 6th of May 1559, five days before the demolition of the monastery by the citizens and mob.

The usual attestation is "Ita est Fr. David Cameron, "Prior." A very large number of the original Charters remain; others are only known from their appearance in the chartulary of the monastery. This register is divided into two parts, and originally consisted of 138 quarto leaves, chiefly of parchment, but from the second part 25 leaves have been abstracted. On the outside leaf of the first part is written "Incipit Copia Cartarum et Evidentiarum Locorum Fratrum Predicatorum prope Burgum de Perth." The title of the second part is "Liber Registri omnium Cartarum et Evidentiarum Locorum Fratrum Predicatorum prope Burgum de Perth, factum Anno Domini Millesimo Quingentesimo Octavo." In the second part some of the Charters in the first part are re-engrossed, but many of the Charters still extant appear in neither.

The monastery of the White Friars was erected at Tullilum, near Perth.

The earliest Charter is one by King David II., dated 7th May 1361, at Aberdeen, wherein he confirmed all the donations which his predecessors and others had granted to the Carmelite friars within the kingdom of Scotland. On 15th May 1426, King James I. issued a writ enjoining on all who were indebted to the Carmelite friars of Tullilum that they should make payment without delay.

Their property appears to have consisted of small sums payable out of tenements in the town of Perth, and the Charters by which these were secured to them present no features of interest.

The house of the Carthusians, at Perth, was founded by King James I., and the earliest record connected with it is a letter by William, prior of the house of Great Chartreux of the diocese of Grenoble, dated at Chartreux, 19th August 1426, wherein the authority of a general chapter of the order is conveyed to the King, for the erection of a house of the same order near to the burgh of Perth.

It was declared to be for the accommodation of 13 monks and their attendants, and the King was to endow it with 200 merks, and to establish its privileges in correspondence with the arrangements of the order, as related by the prior of the Mount of Grace and by Dean Bryce, professed of the same house, who had carefully surveyed the place with their own eyes.

The writer trusted that under the blessing of God the new structure, with an endowment worthy of the royal munificence, would soon be carried to a good issue, and in case the King should desire the presence of two monks who might afford more detailed information concerning the buildings in their correspondence to the form of the order, the writer had addressed himself by letter to the said prior of the Mount of Grace.

The endowments consisted, for the most part, of small annual sums payable out of tenements in the town of Perth, the Charters relating to which are mainly of local interest. It appears, however, from documents in the Breadalbane Collection (Commissioners' Report) that the monks had property in Glendochart.

King James I., who was murdered in the monastery of the Dominicans, was interred in the church of the Carthusians of Perth, and here also was buried Margaret Tudor, the wife of King James IV.

Among the hospital papers is a large collection of Charters granted by the founders and benefactors of chantries and altars in the parish church of St. John the Baptist at Perth. Among the altars there were foundations in honour of St. Ninian, St. Margaret, Queen of Scotland, St. Fillan, St. Kentigern, St. Bride, and St. Roque. One of the altars, in honour of the name of Jesus, was called the Nomine Jesu altar. Another was founded by the confraternity or united brethren of the order, assumed in honour of the Holy Trinity in the parish church of Perth, and was commonly styled Confraternity or Trinity altar.

The Charters relating to chapels and altars exceed two hundred in number, and are for the most part of local importance. Of the Charters connected with the Carthusians above 90 remain, and of those belonging to the Carmelites about twenty.

The Rev. James Scott, who was minister of Perth in the end of last century, did much to illustrate the history of the Burgh by transcribing many of the old charters above described. His collections are in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh. A careful inventory of the charters has recently been prepared for the Governors of the Hospital.

JOHN STUART.

REPORT ON THE MANUSCRIPTS OF GEORGE ROSS, ESQ., OF PITCALNIE, IN THE COUNTY OF ROSS, BY WILLIAM FRASER, EDINBURGH.

G. ROSS,
ESQ.

Mr. Ross of Pitcalnie is the heir male of the ancient Earls of Ross, who were also Lords of Skye. This once powerful family was ennobled at a very early period of Scottish History. An Earl of Ross appears in the reign of King Malcolm the Maiden, who reigned from 1153-1165. Farquhar Earl of Ross founded the Abbey of Fearn, in the reign of King Alexander the Second.

More than one of the family of the Earls of Ross intermarried with the Royal family of Scotland, and the power of the Earls of Ross, especially in the north of Scotland, was so great as frequently to cause serious trouble to the Monarch.

But in the fifteenth century this family suffered an eclipse. In the year 1476 the Earldom of Ross was forfeited by an Act of the Parliament of Scotland, and inalienably annexed to the Crown.

William, Sixth Earl of Ross, who was Justiciar of Scotland, north of the Forth, obtained from King David the Second a charter, dated 23 October 1370, of the Earldom of Ross and Lordship of Skye. He had issue two daughters; the elder, Lady Euphemia Ross, who succeeded her father as Countess of Ross in 1372, married first Sir Walter Leslie, second son of Sir Andrew Leslie of that ilk, and Sir Walter, in terms of the Crown Charter of 1370, became, before 14 August 1379, Earl of Ross. Of the marriage there was issue a son and a daughter, the former of whom, Alexander Leslie became Earl of Ross. He married Lady Isabel Stewart, daughter of Robert Duke of Albany, by whom he had only one daughter, Lady Euphemia Leslie, who succeeded her father as Countess of Ross. Resolving to become a nun, she resigned in 1415 the Earldom of Ross to her uncle, John Stewart, Earl of Buchan; but her aunt, Lady Margaret Leslie, wife of Donald, Lord of the Isles, successfully claimed the Earldom and title of Ross, and the Earldom of Ross and the Lordship of the Isles continued conjoined till the year 1476, when, as stated above, they were forfeited.

Through the marriage of a Monro ancestor with a lady of the family of Lord Macdonald, the heir general of the ancient Earls of Ross and Lords of Skye is George Home Monro-Binning Home, Esquire of Argaty, in the county of Perth. The younger daughter of William, Sixth Earl of Ross, Lady Johanna Ross, married Sir Alexander Fraser, who obtained with her the lands of Philorth in the county of Aberdeen, which still form part of the inheritance of Lord Saltoun as the descendant and representative of the Lady Johanna Ross or Fraser.

Hugh Ross of Rarichies, second son of Hugh Earl of Ross and Jean, daughter of Walter the High Steward of Scotland, obtained a charter in 1374 from King Robert the Second, in which he is designated his brother-in-law, of the lands of Balmagowan, and Rarichies. That Hugh Ross continued the family in the male line. After the forfeiture of the Earldom of Ross the lairds of Balmagowan regarded as the head of the clan Ross, and they continued as such for many generations. David Ross, last of Balmagowan, sold the estate to General Ross, brother of Lord Ross of Hawhead, who although of the same name was not of the same family. David Ross died in the year 1711 without issue, and the representation in the male line then devolved on the Pitcalnie branch of the family.

The Pitcalnie Collection consists of Charters, Letters, and Miscellaneous Papers. Among the Charters is a Notarial Instrument of the year 1475 regarding certain matters in dispute between John of Ross of Balmagowan and Alexander of Sutherland of Dunbeth, and also a bond of agreement, dated 10 August 1595, entered into between certain persons of the name of Rollok on the one part and the family of Balmagowan on the other. It appears from that bond that the Rolloks, in consideration of certain sums of money, forgive "hairtily with their hairtis" the slaughter of their brother Patrick Rollok by Nicolas Ross and others, and agree to take no action at law against the Rosses. This mode of settling such a serious dispute is very suggestive of the difference between the time when the agreement was made and the present.

In 1545, Cardinal Beton granted a charter of confirmation to Charles Carnecors of the lands of "Pitcalene," &c., belonging to the Bishoprick of Ross. These lands, as will be seen from a subsequent charter, were conveyed by Henry Bishop of Ross, as superior, to Alexander Ross of Balmagowan and Katherine Mackenzie, his spouse. In 1587, Alexander Ross of Balmagowan

G. Ross,
Esq.

granted a charter to his son, Nicolas Ross of the lands of Pitcalnie and others, and Nicolas was afterwards known as the first Laird (Ross) of Pitcalnie.

The agreement of date 20th July 1676 entered into between Balmagowan, the head of the clan Ross, and some of his kinsmen illustrates a point regarding the relation of the chief to the clan about which there has often been misconception. It has sometimes been supposed that the chief could do no wrong in the eyes of his followers, and was not in any way responsible for his bearing towards them. But this agreement, the occasion of which was that the Laird of Balmagowan had cut with his "whinger" the head of one of his kinsmen, shews this to be an error, bearing that in the event of Balmagowan's acting unjustly towards his kinsmen, they would withdraw from following and serving him.

In the correspondence is a large number of letters from William eleventh Lord Ross of Hawkhead to the Laird of Balmagowan. Lord Ross was anxious to be recognised as the head of the clan Ross, and made great promises of advancing the interests of all who bore that name, if Balmagowan should favour his views.

The letter from Archibald Earl of Argyll to the wife of Balmagowan probably refers to Lord Lovat's first trial. Balmagowan was Lovat's cousin, and seems to have interested himself in the defence.

The letters from Duncan Forbes, Lord President of the Court of Session, were occasioned by the son of Mr. Ross of Pitcalnie joining the party of Prince Charles Edward in the year 1745. Young Mr. Ross while at Aberdeen College had impressed his professor as a student of great promise, but at the same time as one who required a strong rein and a steady hand to govern him. The subsequent actings of the young man showed the correctness of the Professor's opinion, for all the entreaties of his father and the reasonings of the Lord President were not sufficient to draw him from the cause which he had espoused.

There are a great many other letters in this collection which it has not been necessary to note, as well as other papers, among which is the petition of Munro Ross of Pitcalnie in 1778 regarding his claim to the Earldom of Ross, with relative papers.

The charters previous to 1600 are noted and annexed hereto.

1. Notarial instrument, certifying that on the 24th day of January 1456, a noble man, John of Ross, Laird of Balmagown, craved of Alexander of Sutherland, Laird of Dunbeth, a bond for 20*l.*, usual money received and paid back. To which Alexander of Sutherland made answer saying that he was fully paid, and entirely quitclaimed John of Ross for the sum, although he could not find the bond, yet he engaged that the said bond should never come in prejudice of the said John. Whereupon the said Laird of Balmagown paid Alexander of Sutherland a certain sum of money for the wadset of the lands of Culyndoray and Moyblare, and asked the charter of wadset to be returned to him. But Alexander of Sutherland refused to give up the charter till John of Ross gave him a merk, usual money, beyond the sum for the mail of the land from the term of Martinmas for the eight days past before payment, which John of Ross refused. Whereupon, with consent of both parties, the charter, with letter of reversion, was given to William Monilaw, notary public, to keep till the plea was settled who had right to the merk. Done in the Church of Tayn, the above date. Present, Magnus Enge, rector of Olryk, Thomas Colyson and William Monilaw, chaplains of Tayn, Donald McTrissoun, and Christian of Forbes.

2. Charter of Assedation by Robert Bishop of Ross, commendator of Ferne, to Charles Carnecors, of the lands of Culderere, Culnahaa, Pitcallene, Annot, Stronnamadde, and Amott Aeggils. To be held of the Bishop of Ross in feufarm and heritage for ever. Paying for the lands of Culderere five merks, half a mart, two sheep, six capons, six poultry, and two kids, and forty eggs for six pennies, one boll of oats, commonly called "suggering ates," and for gressum twenty two shillings and three pennies. For the lands of Culnahaa forty shillings, a fourth part of a mart, &c. For the lands of Pitcallene five merks, half a mart, two sheep, six capons, six poultry, two kids and forty eggs for sixpence, one boll of oats, and for gressum twenty two shillings and three pennies, &c. And for arriages and carriages and other services from these lands two merks Scots: And giving three suits at the three head courts at Chanoury. With a duplicand on entry. Dated and signed by the bishop at the Chanoury of Ross, 18 May 1543. [Seals wanting.]

The preamble of the charter refers to the statutes past by the King and parliament of Scotland for leasing of lands, and the benefits thereby to accrue through building of sufficient houses, inbreking of land, amelioration of barren grounds, planting of trees, &c., enriching of the tenants and possessors of the leased lands, and provision of arms, and warlike engines for the King, and for defence of the kingdom against ancient enemies, or any other invaders.

3. Precept of Sasine by Robert Bishop of Ross, commendator of Ferne, for infetting Charles Carnecors in the above lands of Culderere, Culnahaa, Pitcallene, Annot, Stronnamadde, and Amott Aeggils. Dated and subscribed by the bishop at the Chanoury of Ross, 18 May 1543.

The bishop's rental was increased by the lease by the sum of two merks "bestowed for the adornment and policy of the commonwealth of the kingdom," besides a sum of money paid by the infeeffer.

4. Precept of Sasine by Robert bishop of Ross, commendator of Ferne, for infetting William Carnecors in the lands of Vestir Terbat, with brewhouse, &c., lands of Litill Terrell, Sandvik, Canlochmore, Boithbege, Roarchireachtrach, Researchirorthrach, Canoichthrach. Dated at Chanoury of Ross, 18 May 1543. A memorandum on the back states that Sasine was given on the 3 July 1543.

5. Charge by Cardinal Beton, rehearsing the lease by Robert, late bishop of Ross, to Charles Carnecors, layman of Glasgow diocese, of the church lands of Culderere, Culnahaa, Pitcallene, Annot, Stronnamadde, and Amott Aeggils; and a petition by Charles Carnecors for confirmation by the Apostolic See, commanding the subchanor of Moray, and Gavin Leslie, and Thomas Gadderar, canons respectively of Aberdeen and Moray, to call together the dean and chapter of the church of Ross, &c., and to ascertain whether the said lease was for the weal and benefit of the church of Ross, and bishops of the see, and if so to confirm and ratify the same. Dated at Edinburgh, in St. Andrew's diocese, ix Kal., Februarii, 1545. The Cardinal appears to exercise his authority in this matter, because of the decease of the Bishop of Ross.

6. Charter of Alienation by William Carnecors of Cowmislie to Alexander Ros of Balmagown, his heirs and assignees, of the lands of Boith Beg, Kendlochmore, Rewfarquhare Earththraich, Rewfarquhare Oichthraich, and Canochthraich, lying in the lordship and bishopric of Ross, and shire of Inverness: To be held from the grantor, his heirs and assignees, of the Bishop of Ross and his successors, in feufarm and heritage for ever, for payment of the sum of five pounds, thirteen shillings, and four pennies Scots, half a mart, three sheep, &c., and in yearly augmentation of the rental of the bishopric four shillings and six pennies, with three suits of court at the three head courts held yearly at Chanoury, in name of feufarm; and a duplicand by the heirs at their entry. Dated at Edinburgh, 28 July 1548.

7. Precept of Sasine by William Carnecors of Cowmislie for infetting Alexander Ross of Balmagown in the lands of Boith Beg, Kendlochmore, Rewfarquhare Earththraich, Rewfarquhare Oichthraich and Canochthraich, in the lordship and bishopric of Ross and shire of Inverness, according to the preceding Charter. Dated at Edinburgh, 28 July 1548.

8. Precept of Sasine by John Dunevn, lord of the third part of the town and lands of Arkboll, for infetting Alexander Ros of Litill Terral and Elizabeth Ros his spouse in the third part of the town and lands of Arkboll in the Earldom of Ross and shire of Inverness. Dated at Terral Litill, penult day of January 1566.

9. Confirmation by Mary Queen of Scots under the great seal of Charter by John Dunovn, with consent of Katharine Ros his spouse, to Alexander Ros of Litil Terral and Elizabeth Ross his spouse, of the third part of the town and lands of Arkboll. To be held from the grantor of the Crown. Charter dated at Terral Litill, penult of January 1561. Witnesses, John McCulloch of Mekill Tarrell, &c. Confirmation dated at St. Andrews, 24 February 1662.

10. Charter by Henry bishop of Ross as superior, to Alexander Ros of Balmagown and Katherine Makkenzie his spouse in conjunct fee, and the heirs male of their bodies, whom failing to the heirs of the said Alexander whomsoever of the town and lands of Culderie, with brewhouse, &c., extending to a half daroch of land, lands of Culnahaw with brewhouse, &c., lands of Petcallene extending to a half daroch, fourth part of the lands of Terbett, lands of Annot, Amot Egils, Boith beg, Kenlochmoir, Eistir and Westir Reinfarouharris, Kayndwochtherache, fourth part of the croft of the said lands of Terbett called lairds croft (crofta domini), fourth part of the Brewhouse of Terbett, fourth part of the

Fishers croft and fourth part of the mill of Terbett, lying in the diocese of Ross and shire of Inverness; which formerly belonged to Alexander Ross of Balmagoun heritably in feufarm, and were resigned by him in the Bishop's hands at Roslyne: to be held of the Bishop of Ross. The reddendo is given at length. Among the services to be rendered were the leading of "nyne" "scoir laidis of fewell, peittis or turffis," to the bishop and his successors in manse of Nyg or Terbet when required at their own charges, but the fuel to be cast and win at the bishop's charges, and to send ten horses for three days' laboring, and to give assistance in leading the teind sheaves of Nyg and Terbet, and the tenants to assist in upholding the "jaïr" of Kyncarne as formerly; with three suits at the three head courts at Chanoury of Ross, with a duplicand. The said Alexander and Catherine his wife and their heirs to make oath of fealty and homage to the Bishop at their entry, to maintain and defend his goods, lands, teinds, and the orthodox faith to their power; with other clauses and conditions, one being that if he rode or went on foot with any person, secular or ecclesiastic, against the Bishop, or deforced his officers, he should lose the feu-farm. Contains a Precept of Seisin, and is dated at Roslyne, 22 April 1563. Witnesses, William Sinclair of Roslyne, Sir John Robeson provost of Roslyne, Mr James Gray prebendary of Corstorphin, Sir Mark Jamesoun, vicar of Kilspindy, Alexander Pedder, vicar of Urray, notaries public. 16. Agreement betwixt Balmagown and Walter Ross, Bailie of Tayne, 20 July 1676. [Copy.]

Forasmeikle as vpon the day of Junii J^m vi^e secentie sex years, David Ross laird of Balmagowne did cut with his whinger the head of his kinsman Walter Ross, bailie of Tayne, in the house of James Hay late bailie ther, vpon a debat fallen out betuixt them; and now seeing both the saids parties are content and consent that the said act, and what might follow thereupon, may be rather then legally, amicably and Christianly mediat and composed; therefore, both the saidis parties do vnanimously submit the decision and accommodatioun of the said act, as said is, to the arbitrement and determination of the freinds under writrin, mutually chosen and nominat be us to that effect: that is to say, Walter Ross of Invercharron, Malcolm Ross of Kindease, John Ross of Achnacloigh, Mr. Andrew Ross minister at Tarbat, Mr. Alexander Ross minister at Fearn, Alexander Ross of Little Tarrell, James Ross of Jye, Alexander Ross of Easter Fern, John Ross bailie of Tayne, William Ross Lachlinsone, late bailie there, Robert Ross of Aldie and Mr. Robert Ross minister at Tayne: And to

G. Ross,
Esq.

G. Ross,
Esq.

that effect we the saids parties, David Ross of Balnagowne as cheife and Walter Ross do hereby impower the for-said freinds to appoint and propose not only betuixt us, bot lykewise betuixt me the said laird of Balnagowne as chiefs and me the said Walter Ross as kinsman in the above writin act and consequences thereof and all other our kinsmen in tyme coming as to our respective carriage and behaviours in our severall stations. To which final sentence and determination of the above writtin friends or the greater part of them to be pronounced betwixt and the day of J^e vi^e seventie sex years, to be filled up vpon the blank upon the back hereof, we the said laird of Balnagowne and Walter Ross bind and oblige vs, our aires, executors and successors faithfullie to adhere to and performe the said decreeing and decreet arbitral in all points, vnder the falsie of ane thousand marks vsuall Scots money, to be payed be the partie failing to the partie willing to performe. And for the more securitie, we, the saids parties consent to the registrations hereof in the Books of Council or Session or any other books competent, to have the strength of a decreet of ather of ther judicatories, that letters of horninge and all other executorialis needfull may in forme as effeirs pass theron; and to that effect constituts our procurators, &c.

In witness whereof we the saids parties have subscrivit this presents, writtin be the said Mr. Robert Ross, with our hands at Tayne the twentie day of Julii J^e vi^e seventie sex years, before ther witnesses David McCulloch, Andrew Ross younger, merchant of Tayne, Lachlan Ross, merchant there, and Thomas Ross servitor to me the said laird of Balnagowne: Sic subscribitur, David Ross of Balnagowne. [&c.]

The arbitrators find that the "act of ryt or blood-ing" done by the said laird of Balnagowne on the said Walter Ross was the result of a mistake and groundless jealousy, and that having regard to the welfare of both parties, they cannot excuse the said act: They oblige the said laird of Balnagowne to acknowledge the wrong and injury done by him to the said Walter Ross, and to be more friendly for the future: And they determine that if any of the kinsmen of the said laird offend or injure him, then the offender, real or supposed, shall be "convened" before them, and the matter decided "by the sober advyce and counsell of us the said friends;" And further they resolve that if any friend be found to have done a real injury to the laird of Balnagowne, and shall not subject himself to the regulation of the said laird, according to the advice of the said friends, then they shall concur with the laird in reducing the "refractorie" person to order; "and in case he continue contumacious, that he be declared and held be the laird of Balnagowne and his friends as a stranger." "And finally if it shall happin (as God forbid), that contrar to the above writtin course and determinatione the said laird of Balnagowne shall injure or wrong any of his kinsmen in ather their persones or interests, then and in that case, all the laird of Balnagownes kinsmen shall concur to repair themselves as accords in law off any injurie done be the laird of Balnagowne to any of them. And further it's hereby judged and determined that if the said laird of Balnagowne shall not be advysed be his friends, as said is (as God forbid) . . . then the said freinds shall withdraw from following or serving him as kinsmen." The Decreet to be registered in the Books of Council and Session or other books competent, 21 Julii 1576.

17. Letter by John Earl of Sutherland and others to the Laird of Findrassie, calling a meeting at Forres about the Innovations of the Service Book.

Invernes, 26 April 1638.

Very honerabill,—We have receivit letters from the rest of the nobilitie, datit at Edinburgh the 26 of March, desyring ws to meit heir at Invernes on the 25 of this month, which we have obeyit, to the effect that their commissioneris might informe ws trewlie of their proceedingis concerning the novationes of the Service Books and vthers abusis, so much threatening the overthrow of religion, lawis and liberties of this kingdome: Quhairin we find our selfis sufficientlie satisfieit, and that they have done nothing in all their proceedingis bot quhat is legall, to the glorie of God, the honour of our dreid soveraigne the King our maister, which is and salbe warrantit be the lawis of the Kingdome. And following their good example, wee have communicat the samen with the whole gentrie, ministers and borrowis of the schyris of Cathnes, Sutherland, Invernes, Cromertie. We have find all kynd of people weill satisfieit, and for your better satisfactioun we have resolvit to be at Forres on Saturday nixt be aught hours the 28 of this instant, quhair se will be pleased to meit ws, and to receive the lyk satisfactioun, or gift your oppinion in a matter so neirle concerning ws all. So expecting to sie you there as we sall ever remayne

Your affectionat good freinds.

[Signed by John Earl of Sutherland, Lords Lovat, Reay, and Sinclair, and the lairds of Balnagowan and Strichen.]

To our werie honorable and luffing friend and cussing the Laird Finrassie—theess

18. Archibald tenth Earl of Argyll to [the wife of Balnagowan.]

Edinburgh, January 18th.

Madame,—This goes by the Lord Lovatt who I have done my best endeavours to serve, in proceution of the severall recommendations I have had from Ballengown chiefly, and from his other freinds. I have hitherto had successe in what I attempted, and since matters are come so good a lenth, it were said if now anie thing should miscarry. He resolves to stand his tryall to clear himself of these false calumnies laid to his charge. Non has hitherto appear'd so publickly for him as Ballengown, so that both for Lord Lovatts interest, and Ballengowns own honor, in my humble opinion it is highly reasonable Ballengown come hither with him, and own him at his tryall. He'll gain no new enemies by it, but shew his firmnesse to his freind in supporting him in so critically a conjuncture. This I offer as my opinion, and must intreat of you to advyse him the same. I am, Madame,

Your most affectionat nephew, and humble servant,
Argyll.

19. Duncan Forbes of Culloden to Alexander Ross of Pitcalny.

Culloden, 25th October 1745.

Dear sir,—I never was more astonished, and but seldom more afflicted in my life, than I was when I heard of the madness of your son. I cannot conceive by what magick he has been prevailed on to forfeit utterly his own honour; in a signal manner to affront and dishonour me whom you made answerable for him; to risk a halter which, if he do not succeed, must be his doom, without any other tryall than that of a court martial, and to break the heart of an indulgent father as you are, which I am perswaded must be the case, unless he is reclaimed.—The villain who seduced him, proffing of his tender years and want of experience, tho I hope I am a Christian, I never will forgive, tho him I will, if he return quickly to his duty without committing further folly. But if, trusting to indulgence on account of our relation, he persist in the course in which I am told he is at present engaged, I think it is but fair to declare to you, in the most solemn manner, that the very relation and connection to which he may trust will determine me to pursue him, with the utmost rigour, to that end which his conduct will most undoubtedly deserve. And, when I have said this, I can take God to witness that he is the only person concerned in the present unhappy commotion, for whom my heart would not lead me to be a solicitor, when things have that issue, which I believe they will soon have. In justice and friendship to you, and in hopes that he may repent before it is too late, I give you the trouble of this letter, and have desired your friend Mr. Bailly to deliver it to you, not doubting that to save a son and to prevent my dishonour, you will do all that is in your power.

I am, dear sir, under great concern, Your most obedient and most humble servant,

Dun. Forbes.

[Address.] To Alexander Ross of Pitcalny, Esq^r.

20. The same to the same.

Culloden, 7th November 1745.

Dear sir,—I need not tell you what concern Malcolm's folly has given me. I sent him repeated messages to come and see me, which produced no other effect but a letter from him promising to do so, if I would give it him under my hand that he should be at liberty to return to Perth, whither he was by his parole of honour bound to return. I, without losing a moment, wrote him to that effect a letter in the strongest terms last Monday, which was that day delivered to him, but to no purpose. Either his own apprehension or evil counsellors have got the better of him, and I confess my concern for him is very great. The only thing, however, like an ouvert act he has done, is the dispersing the men that were assembled in order to form the Independent company. Now if none of those should

G. Ross,
Esq.

actually follow him, I should hope that discouragement will be so great that he will choose not to venture further than he has done, but rather to return to where he was confined than to make such a figure as in that case he must make should he follow the opinion of his present advisers. It is for this reason, dear Sir, that I give you the trouble of this line to entreat that you will lend your assistance to the other gentlemen of the name to whom I have wrote, not only to prevent the debauching any of the men, but also to prevail with them to form the Independent company now forming, that all the world may see that the unhappy youth's folly had no encouragement from you. I need to make use of little argument with you to enforce an advice so agreeable to what I daresay are your own inclinations, nor need I spend time in assuring you that I am with great sympathy as well as sincerity

Your most obedient and most humble servant,
Dun. Forbes.
To Alex^r Ross of Pitcalney, Esq^r,

WILLIAM FRASER.
Edinburgh, 32, Castle Street,
4 September 1876.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE MOST HONOURABLE THE MARQUIS OF ORMONDE, KILKENNY CASTLE.

My Report of last year on the previously unbound and unarranged letters and papers of this collection terminated at the end of the year 1664. I now submit, in continuation, a catalogue of letters and papers from 1665 to 1679, which, in number nearly 4,000, have since been examined and arranged in chronological order.

In 1665, the commencement of the period at present under notice, the Duke of Ormonde was Viceroy of Ireland, and continued in that office till superseded by Lord Roberts in 1669. In the latter year, Roberts was succeeded as Viceroy by Lord Berkeley. The office was conferred, in 1672, on Arthur, Earl of Essex, who retained it till 1677, when Ormonde was re-appointed Lord Lieutenant. The Duke also held the offices of Steward of the Royal Household and Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

The general subjects with which the letters and papers in the present portion of the collection are mainly connected, may be stated as follows:—Government of Ireland and progress of public affairs in that country as well as in England, Scotland, and abroad; proceedings in execution of the Acts of "Settlement" and "Explanation"; supervision of the political movements of Roman Catholics and Presbyterians in Ireland and Scotland; pursuit and suppression of outlawed Irish styled "Tories"; appointments to and applications for bishoprics and Church preferments, and for posts in the army and militia, with lists of commanders and subalterns; establishment of the Phoenix Park, Dublin; erection of forts and coast defences in Ireland; the education, under Bishop John Fell, at Christ Church, Oxford, of Lord Ossory's son, James Butler, subsequently second Duke of Ormonde; the affairs of the Isle of Man, and of its proprietor, William Stanley, Earl of Derby, to whom the Duke of Ormonde was guardian, and who married Lady Elizabeth Butler, eldest daughter of the Earl of Ossory; the career of the Duke's third son, Lord John Butler, Earl of Gowran, and the arrangements in connexion with his marriage to Lady Anne Chichester, heir of Arthur, Earl of Donegal; the controversies in connexion with Lord Ranelagh's undertaking or contract with the King for the management of the revenue of Ireland, and payment of the army and charges of the Crown there; attempt to establish woollen manufacture at Clonmel and Carrick; preparations for Parliament in Ireland; apprehensions of invasion of Ireland by the French, and of the combination of many of the natives with them; discovery of the alleged plot in 1673, and consequent proceedings for ejection and apprehension of Roman Catholic ecclesiastics and laymen against whom charges of disloyalty had been made by some of the then numerous body of informers or "witnesses."

Of the persons of importance whose letters are in the present portion of the collection, the following may be named:—

Peers: Albemarle, Anglesey, Arlington, Arran, Atheny, Athol, Barrymore, Blayney, Burlington, Carlisle, Castlehaven, Cavendish, Chesterfield, Clanricarde, Clare, Conway, Danby, Denbigh, Donegal, Drogheda, Dunbarton, Dungannon, Essex, Feversham, Fitzharding, Granard, Grandison, Huntingdon, Inchiquin, Kingston, Lanesborough, Lauderdale, Longford, Manchester, Massareene, Mayo, Middleton, Monmouth, Mount Alexander, Mountgarrett, Newburgh, Orerry, Ossory, Peterborough, Power and Curraghmore, Ranelagh, Rothes, St. Albans, Salisbury, Shannon, Stratford, Suffolk, Sunderland, Townshend. Sir J. Allen, Sir Jerome Alexander, Sir N. Armorer, Isaac Barrow, Bishop of St. Asaph's; Sir Daniel Bellingham, T. Bentick, Sir G. Blundell, Michael Boyle, Chancellor and Primate; Sir F. Brewster, Sir A. Brodrick, Sir Valentine Brown, Sir R. Bulstrode, Sir Robert Byron, Sir Thomas Chicheley, Countess of Clancarty, Sir T. Clarges, Col. Cooke, Sir Henry Coventry, Secretary of State; Sir J. Cuffe, Sir Paul Davys, Sir W. Davys, Sir E. Deringe, Sir James Dillon, Sir William Downville, Sir Maurice Eustace, Col. Thomas Fairfax, John Fell, Bishop of Oxford; Chancellor Finch, Col. Robert Fitzgerald, Sir William Flower, Sir Arthur Forbes, Sir Robert Forth, Sir Stephen Fox, Hugh Gore, Bishop of Waterford and Lismore; Comte de Gramont, Sir Mathew Hale, Sir G. Hamilton, Sir Hans Hamilton, Friar Thomas Harold, Sir E. Howard, John Keatinge, Sir William King, Sir George Lane, Col. Richard Lawrence, Humphry Lloyd, Bishop of Bath and Wells; James Margetson, Archbishop of Armagh; Francis Marsh, Bishop of Limerick; Sir James Middleton, Robert Mossam, Bishop of Derry; Sir E. Ormsby, Thomas Otway, Bishop of Killala and Achoury; Sir Thomas Page, Admiral Sir William Penn, Sir Nicholas Plunket, Thomas Price, Archbishop of Cashel; Sir G. Rawdon, John Roan, Bishop of Killaloe; Sir R. Robinson, Sir James Shaen, Sir H. Slingsby, Sir H. Stanley, Sir Thomas Stanley, Sir Robert Southwell, Edward Syngue, Bishop of Cork; Sir William Talbot, Sir J. Temple, Sir William Temple, Sir Henry Tichborne, Lady Thurles, Col. Edward Vernon, John Vesey, Archbishop of Tuam; Sir Robert Vyner, Peter Walsh, Sir B. Walsh, Sir Christopher Wandesforde, Sir James Ware, Sir P. Warwick, Edward Wetenhall, Bishop of Cloyne; Sir Thomas Wharton, Griffith Williams, Bishop of Ossory; Sir Cyril Wyche.

An interesting and hitherto almost unknown part of the Ormonde correspondence is that between the Duke and his sons, the Earls of Ossory and Arran.

Thomas, Earl of Ossory, Deputy Governor of Ireland for his father (1665 and 1667), was a Lord of the King's Bedchamber and member of the Privy Council in England, and sat in the House of Lords there as Lord Butler, of Moore Park. He distinguished himself in military and naval engagements,* was created Knight of the Garter, and sent as envoy from England to the Court of France. He was appointed successively Rear-Admiral of the Blue and of the Red, and for a time had command of the English fleet. He was especially confided in by the King's brother, James, Duke of York, and it was he who first proposed to William of Orange the alliance with the Duke's daughter Mary. William was much attached to the Earl of Ossory, whose wife, Emelia de Beverwaert, was related to the Orange family. In 1676, Ossory was appointed Chamberlain to the Queen of England, and, in the following year, joining the Prince of Orange, he commanded the English brigade in Holland, and acquired further renown by his military services and intrepidity, especially at the battle of Mons.

Ormonde's second son, Richard, Earl of Arran, was also a Knight of the Garter, and Colonel of the King's Regiment of Guards for Ireland. He served with distinction on land as well as on sea; and, in 1673, was created a peer of England under the title of Baron Butler of Weston, in the County of Huntingdon.

The nature of the correspondence between Ormonde and his sons will appear from the following:—Duke of Ormonde to Earl of Ossory,—"6 of Nou. [1677]. I reciev'd yours of the 23 of the last yesterday, with others of the 27 and 30 from other hands on the subject of the Prince of Oranges good successe in his pretention to lady Mary. I wish hee may finde all the satisfaction and advantage hee proposes to him self in it, and that wee who reioyce at it may continue and have cause so to doe, as I doe not dout but

* "My Lord of Ossory is, I thank God, in good health, though in the last engagement there were left upon his quarter deck but himselfe, his page, and Capt. Narborough. Wee haue not yet an account of the particular men lost in this fight, which has been very desperate and bloody." Letter from Henry Gascoigne to George Mathew, from Clarendon House, 19th Aug. 1673.

ORMONDE.

"wee may and shall if all the consequent benefits that may be gathred from it bee rightly and constantly pursued. I am glad you went with my Lord Candish to Westminster. I hope after all his mistakes and misadventures hee will prove usefull to the Crowne and his cuntry. I can not imagine that what the Prince of Orange desires for you will bee so soone taken into consideration, but that you will have time enough to think it over and advise with your friends, for if there bee not a very great change in counsellors and in inclinations since I left the court ther is no appearance that the king will so farr owne a body of his subiects to bee in the states service as to give any allowance to his domestick servant to command them, and without some such authentick allowance it may bee worth considering how fit it may bee for such a one to undertake it; if a general or particular peace bee made or an alliance betwixt the king and the states shall bee entered into in order to a general peace, there can then bee no difficulty in your aiming at it, but I am affraid there will bee in that case difficulty in your obtaining it, and perhaps the king may not bee pleased you should before such a peace or alliance affect it. I still wish you in that post as you ought to bee in it, that is by the king's command and with capitulations, conditions, and establishments made by the states with the Crowne as heretofore; or at least that you have the king's command for it, and I dout things are not yet brought to that posture. This is all I can say at this distance on the subiect."

Duke of Ormonde to Earl of Arran.—"Memorials for my sonn Arran to be made vs of as these shall be occasion the 7th of January 1677^s.

"1. The state of the Revenue is fully represented in severall dispatches in Mr. Secretary Countrey's hands as farre forth as is possible till the accounts of the Lord Ranelagh and his partners undertaking shall be taken and the reasons are given why the taking of those accounts is retarded.

"2. By what is remitted to Mr. Secretary it will appeare that this Revenue must fall short not only of makinge those provisions fit to be made in tymes of greatest peace and security but of answering all the partes of the establishment by reason of the overcharge fallen vpon it by the northern expedition. How farr then it will come short to make those preparations and provisions requisite when a forraigne warr is probable and the fomenting of a civill warr is to be expected may easily be supposed.

"3. Of what numbers the army consists I suppose is well knowne there, but if it should not readily be remembered you are able to tell, and how few men are left of the worst in the army to doe duty in the most important garrisons. As to the officers I doe more doubt of their sufficiency then their loyalty, what order I have given to be informed of the number of unserviceable men in the army you know.

"4. Of the state of the fortes, stores, and magazines the Master of the Ordnance is able to give an account, havinge received one lately from hence, but it is soe bad that it is noe lesse shame then danger that it should be knowne, and concealed it cannot be.

"5. I suppose the people of this kingdome may be best distinguished by the truly loyall and conforming. The Irish Roman Catholics, and the non conformists who will be called Protestants. The two later are soe opposite in religion and civill interest that they are in some sort such a ballance to each other that neither dare to rise against the government for feare it should make use of the other to suppress and chastize the first disturbers, and even among the non conformists some distinction may reasonably be made betwixt the Scotch and English. The Scotch I take to be more heady, more united in opinion, more compact in habitation and neighborhood, more ready to abandon their wretched residences, and for all these reasons more apt to be inflamed and put into action by their vagabond teachers. The English are more sett upon trade and improvements, not soe unanimously bent one way, more scattered in the country, and will not soe easily be persuaded to quit their much more comodious homes.

"The Irish, though I think more in number then all the rest, I doe not conceive are soe much to be apprehended as the other party but in case of an invasion, or when any other party shall have begun, but then it must be expected that many of them will joyne with the invaders or in the other case will endeavour to forme a third party, as they did when they found a breach in prospect betwixt the king and the rebellious parliament, signed Ormonde."

Ormonde to Arran.—15 Jan. 1677. "I have yet nothing to add to what you carryed with you except the copy of my letter by this post to Mr. Secretary Coventry, which relates onely to the necessity of securing the harbour of Kinsale. As I remember I told you it was fitt you should visit my Lord Treasurer, and if he shall give you the occasion I know no reason why you may not freely impart to him anything that relates to the affaires here. I am of opinion he will receive you civilly, if he does you may accordingly be the more frequent in going to him: he has much businesse and is not easy of accesse, so that unless you shall have particular businesse with him I thinke the dining time will be the fittest time for you to go to him. I hope you will not forget the resolution you went a way with; there are few things that can happen that would trouble mee more then that you should. I desire one thing more particularly, which is, that whilst you are at London you would not go to any of the eating houses or tavernes upon any occasion; the king is not hard to be avoyded considering you have a house and family and so many tables to go to there, and yet it would be great satisfaction to mee. I send you the copy of the last lettre I had from my Lord of Granard, that you may observe that the lords of Scotland still continue to take no notice of mee in all this affaire but give their directions to my lord of Granard as if he were under their command. Whether it proceed from affected pride or ignorance I will not determine, nor shall any omission of common civility in them in the least slacken my industry if occasion call for it to serve ye king's affaires in that kingdome. If I had been to have received help from them for the king's service here I should certainly once at least have taken notice to them of their care and readiness to obey the king's commands. I do not intend to make a quarrell of ceremony of it, and therefore do not desire you should take notice of it to any body, unless it be to my lord Chamberlin and Mr. Secretary Coventry. I have always been unfortunate in my endeavors to serve the most considerable of this nation: those I have preserved have forgott it; those I could not thought I might and impute their ruine to mee—may even those I have advised and put into the way of doing themselves good, and through sloth or ignorance have neglected to pursue their interest, impute the disappointment of their pretentions, to mee, as if I were obliged not onely to direct and favor them but become their solicitor and agent. A fresh instance of this is my Lord of Carlingford, who with his friends I heare is dissatisfied with mee and you that he succeeds not to his father's pension, and that it is given to Sir James Cuffe and Mr. Carr. The case as I am concerned in it is thus: My lord of Carlingford you know came hither long before his father at his first visit to mee after I had inquired of his father's condition as to his health and that he had told mee there was little hope of his recovery. I told him I beleevd he would not be left in such a state but that the continuance of his father's pension to him would in some measure accommodate him, and advised him to procure the reversion of it whilst his father was alive, or to gett his father to surrender his patent and take out a new one for both their lives. Hee thanked mee but never spoke sillable more of it to mee since, nor it seemes employed any body in England to obtaine this for him, which certainly an easy mediation would have gotten him; and now I am charged with his disappointment, with havinge recommended Sir James Cuffe and Carr, and in effect with breakeing my word, for they have the gift of laying that causelessly to my charge, taking an advice for a promise. It may not be amiss that you say this or transcribe this part of my lettre to the king and duke, especially if you heare any think of it. They say they will yet retrieve the thing and gett Cuffe and Carr struck out of the establishment and my lord Carlingford put in. I would be glad of any good to that lord, for I think him a very worthy gentleman, but justice and the king's honour I consider more."

Ormonde to Arran.—"24 Jan. 1677. I have yours of the 15, giving an account of your safe arrivall, and your disposing of the dispatches and letters you carryed with you. I think you are not to presse for more knowledge in affaires then you find there is a disposition to impart them to you, yet it will be fitt you make your court assiduously not in the drawing room onely when every body is there, but at the king's and duke's rising, which besides that it is a

"duty (especially in an officer and person of your station in such a time), opportunities may happen, and discourses set on foot, wherein you may properly beare a part or usefully take notice of them, and if you can introduce your selfe (as I think you may very easily) at places and hours of more retirement, it may be of advantage: but remember sloth and too nice a modesty can be of no use. Mr. Secretary in his lettre of ye 12 inst. gave me a large account of affaires as they then stood there, what he writt it will not be hard for you to collect from the returne I have made, which is onely to be imparted to my Lord Chamberlain, who is of ye Committee of forraigne affaires, and was, I suppose, present when Mr. Secretary was ordered to write to mee. I gave your brother [Ossory] the best advice and ye most pertinent caution I could, but I feare his hast to be in action will transport him beyond his prudence. I am sorry my Lord Chamberlain contested to warmly and unsuccessfully for the rights of his place in a particular depending on a custome onely connived at, and which therefore may be abolished whenever the king shall please to reduce his office and mine to be of lesse value then will possibly support the dignity of them. I know not wherein the king instanced me, or to what end; if it was that he had disposed of any places usually given by mee and my predecessors, I remember none without my owne consent first given to ye pretender, as to Sir Winston-Churchill. It is true in my lord of Buckingham's height of favour I think an answer was put in by him to ye Board of Greencloth out of his turne for a turne the Avenor had, and then the Master of ye horse makes the Avenor. But this is not to take my right quite from mee, but to suspend my making use of it, which differences the case from that of my Lord Chamberlain, who by this determination it seemes looses for ever the making of a groom porter. I have had Mas Douglas a weeke with me, but he is still a greater mystery to mee. The man certainly knows very much, but whither he came on purpose to declare his knowledge and od the king service, as he seemes to pretend, and as the little care he tooke to conceale himselfe gives some probability to, I know not. If what he sayes of 445 and 342 be true 726. 91. 33. 425. 93. 58. 384. 54. 700. 720 but it seemes 732. 573. 526. 32. 643. 214. 55. 440. This is a tryall whether you are skilfull in decyphering, els it might have been written in plaine letters. I desire you would in my name make a visit to Mrs. Gwyn and assure her of my readines to serve her." Arran to Ormonde. — "London, 5th March 1674. I had last night yours of the 26th and 27th of last month, and will now begin to take pains to write with fewer blotts, but for the ill sence, which I suppose is your meaning by ill-written letter, I can't promise to mend, haueing taken as much care of that in my letter of the 19 as the time would permit. The explanation I make about Cap. Trelany's business is, in short, that my Lord Blessington received three months' pay of the arrears due to Cap. Trelany, which by contract his Lordship ought not to have done. I was the more careless in that matter because Mr. Trelany told mee his agent would inform your secretary particularly how the business stood. "I heard of the death of Major Broughton from noe body but your self, and am not yett informed how all the vacancies are filled vp; but I hope you have not forgot my Lord Charlemont's sone. If hee bee provided for before Bromwich dy's, I think there is one Mr. Dingley, who treyles a pike in my company, will very well deserve his colours. I am very glad you have favored Major Feilding with Broughton's imployment, and am the more so that it was done in my absence, for I confess notwithstanding my great byas of affection for him, if I had been vpon the place I should have appeared for Hungerford, especially since the account I gaue you of what hee said to mee. I am also much against Livetenants succeeding Captains in that regiment, at least against making a president of itt. "I shew'd my Lord Treasurer yesterday your letter of the 23 last month, and gaue him the proclamation and proposals about wool, which he perused before mee, and has kept them in order to advise with his officers vpon them, and has promissed an answer within a little while. Hee is of opinion that when the matter is agreed upon itt ought to bee brought before the house of commons; but itt is beleived the bill now passing, prohibiting all french comodities, will in a great measure doe the work you desire, for when wee can have nothing in truck for our wool, wee

"shall be forced to work itt att home; besides there is a clause in the bill that every body shall wear cloths or a garment made of wool for 5 months in the year. "This afternoon I waited vpon my Lord Treasurer att his house and gaue him your letter of the 27th, which hee desired mee to leaue with him and to return you his thanks for the favour you have done him in itt, which hee will doe himself by letter either this night or next post. His Lordship, I beleive, intends to show your letter to the King. Hee vsed me very civilly, and has invited mee to come often to his house. Hee seems to wonder very much att this aspersion, for hee told mee if he had not singly opposed Mr. Rider hee had gott 10 a year abated vpon a contrived meeting with his Majesty at Will Chivars his [sic]. "This night goes away your authority for your proceedings in the parlement, as full of all the particulars you sent over as could bee procured. I have not had a sight of the paper, and therefore can make noe observations; all I know is from My Lord Ranelagh, whose intends to goe for Irelande next month, in order to bee att the meeting of parlement. "My Lord Burlington desired mee to put you in minde to send a company again to his town of Youghall, now the party is come out of the north. "You sent mee with your last letters two inclosed for the duke, but not mentioning any thing of them or the matter they contayned, I was afraid you had mistaken, and that one of them might bee for the King; but I delivered them both this morning to his Royall H., for whom itt seems they were both designed. "I suppose itt will bee the middle of May before the parlement can meet, therefore I design to goe towards Irelande some time next month, for itt would bee to soon to travail with a wife and children before that time, especially with a wife who had as live goe to Jamaica as Ireland. "The Duke declared yesterday that by the first of May hee would be ready to goe with our army into Flanders, and after hee is gone one makes but an ill figure here. "Wee had this afternoon att the Committee of Privileges many long and learned speeches upon the manner of trying my Lord Pembroke for the killing one Mr. Cary; it was agreed that report should be made to the house, that dureing the sitting of Parlement a peer is to bee tryed by the whole house, and the king is to appoint a high steward. About 10 days hence matters will be ready for his tryall. "The king has not yett signed my letter for the reversion, but I beleive hee will this night. I doe not intend to enter itt att the signett office vntill I am just going away." 1677-8. Ormonde to Arran. — "Dub[lin], 9 March. Before mine of the 7 could get out of the harbour yours of the 2^d was brought mee owneing the receiving both mine of the 23 of the last. The proposition touching wool is like to come too late for the house of commons, a bill for that affaire haueing proceeded farr there, so that if any thing I sent shall prove materiall it must be offered at a Come^s of the Lords when the bill shall be brought thither. When any occasion shall be fitly offered, I wish you would aske the king why he may not think itt fit to send one or more reg^{ts} of Scotch and Irish out of this kingdome, which might as well be spared here as easily rayssed if men of their owne nation might haue the command of them. "It is and always shall be my rule to prefer men who attend their charge and doe their duty before those that do not whatever pretence they may haue to gradual succession, which is the case betwixt Feilding and Hungerford. Chetwyn I think neuer saw his company since he bought itt, yett if he come in any reasonable time, that is, before Easter, his absence till then shall not hurt him. I doubt Sir Cyrrill Wych will not be pleased with the returne I made to him upon his pretension. I beleive him a very honest gentleman, and a modest man, but his pressing mee so hard for the 500l. a yeare is no argument of itt, but a strong one that he loves the summe." 1678. Ormonde to Arran. — "Dub[lin], 4 June. You will by this bearer, Barrington, receive this dispatch, which I was not willing to venture by the post; not that I am affraid of owneing itt anywhere, but because I doe not know how itt may suit with the king's desire or service that I should. If what wee heere out of Scotland be true, that kingdome is not in the posture I wish itt, and I am much affraid the king will not find that all that pretend zeale to his service there

"will abide a day of tryall; however I am confident a good party of sure men in the north of Ireland will have no ill effect in Scotland, and that cannot be well spared from hence without we have recruits, for Tories begin to grow bold and numerous, and may in a short tyme, if they are lett alone, arrive at the dignity of rebels, and I am assured many families and some preachers come daily out of Scotland, and you may be sure they are not the well-affected. What these and their numerous bretheren already planted here may doe when the flower of the army is transported into Scotland may well be apprehended, and possibly the Councell of Scotland may looke againe for the same countenance from hence which they cald for the last yeere. This is not the only argument for his Majesties re-inforcing his army heere. The rest, as my Lord Chausseur say'd in his speech, is fitter for contemplation then discourse. I would have you to take a fitt tyme to beg an audience of his Majestie, and to shew him my other letter and the proposition for recruits, and then attend his pleasure for what he will command to be returned."

1678. Ormonde to Arran.—"Dub[lin], 4 of June. Our Primate has from great health fallen into the jaundis and labour'd under it for some dayes, and I am now told he falls into frequent fainting fitts, inosomuch that his frends are in greete feare for him. It is in many respects of greate importance to his Majestie to have in that place a man of activity and courage, which have not been qualifications soe eminent in the present primate as his gentlenesse and piety. If his Majestie would make it his owne choice to send the bishopp of Rochester to vs, I think he would fill the place of Archbishopp of Dublin and Chancelleur if the present Archbishopp would change both for the Primacy, and I think he should be offer'd his choice. If this cannot be effected, the next best choice his Majestie can make in this kingdom is of the Archbishopp of Tuam, for whome I will write to Mr. Secretary, and desire this proposition may not be taken notice of. If his Majestie approve of the thing, he will give you leave to move it to the bishopp of Rochester as from himselfe, or employ any other he thinks fitter, but lett me know what his Majesties pleasure is, in case the Primate should dye."

Ormonde to Arran.—"Dublin, 4 June 1678. Vpon the best information I have of the state of affaires abroad and at home, and vpon the best judgement I can make of them, I conclude that if his Majestie shall disband his army in England or any parte of it, it will be for his service to enforce this heere.

"It is not my part, considering the distance I am at, to enter vpon a particular enumeration of the advantages that may accrue to the king and all his dominions and good subjects by haueing as considerable army heere as can be maintain'd; nor doe I think long discourses on the subject very proper or seasonable. But I think it is my duty to lett his Majestie know that it will exceedingly contribute to the peace and happynesse of Ireland, and to the safety of the Protestant English Interest, and I am hopefull be able to provide for the subsistence of such recruits as shall be sent ouer, lett them come as soone as his Majestie pleases. I am sure all my industry, credit, and fortune shall be employed towards it.

"I chuse to acquaint his Majestie with my conceptions this way by you rather then by a formall letter to Mr. Secretary, that it may be in his Majestie's choice to lett the proposition fall, or to consult who he pleases in it, as the conjuncture shall direct to either, and I have put my opinion of the manner of re-inforcing this army in a paper by it selfe, that if his Majestie shall soe think fitt the whole matter may appear to be the result of his owne thoughts and not of mine."

Arran to Ormonde.—"London, 15 June [16]78. I rather chuse to write another letter of the same date then intermix any other business with what I have in command from his Majesty or by his orders to say to you, least it may hereafter bee thought necessary to produce my letter. Att the same time that I attended the king about your proposall I spoke to him concerning that of the vacancy now like to hapen, and his Majesty gave mee leave to sound the B. of R., but before I did, I acquainted his R. H. with it, who aproved of itt, and withall said hee would speake to him himselfe about itt; but the bishop excuses himself vpon the account of his bodily infirmity, haueing been lately very sick, and being att present indisposed. Hee would mee hee had formerly some discourse "with you vpon this subject, and owne himself infinitely obliged to you for the favour you design'd him, and with a great deal of a speaker of the house of comons, modestly protested hee was not fitt for soe great a post, and desired mee to tell you (though I did not own I had any thing in charge from you) that you might find a thousand persons properer then hee for soe great a charge, soe that you must pitch vpon some other, though the king was of opinion hee would have accepted of itt when I said it was worth over 4000^l per an., for hee beleived most bishops would think that gain is great godlyness. I dont dout but whom ever you please to recomend will have the place if the other should dye.

"Mr. Stanop is lately come to town, and hee assures mee that all the reports concerning my Lord of Chesterfield's great disquiet of minde are false, and that altho he is very much troubled yett for the loss of his lady, hee goes abroad, and intends to come to London att Michaelmas, but att best I am affraid that way of living will doe noe small prejudice to his daughter, who has nobody to converse with but his young children.

"I was desired by an old freind and acquaintance of yours to know of you whether you would part with your employment here; his proposall is to give you soe much a year (and good land security) as you shall agree vpon. I would not refuse the giving you his proposall, but I shall bee farr from encouraging or giving you my advice that you should part with itt in this conjuncture.

"My Lord Carbery desired mee to write in his favour that hee may have his creation mony payd him.

"My brother beeing lately come over, I show'd him your letters, and acquainted him with the resolutions vpon them, and would have gone along with him to the Duke, but hee left itt to mee."

Arran to Ormonde.—"London, 15th June 1678. On tuesday night last Mr. Barrington brought mee your dispatch, in which I had four letters from you, all dated the 4th of this month; the next morning I waited vpon his Maiesety with the proposall for re-inforcing the Army of Ireland, and show'd him your two letters which had relation to itt, with which his Maiesety was exceedingly well satisfied, and commanded mee to carry them to the Duke, which I immediatly did, and his Royall Highnes did also very much approve of the design, and the whole matter being left to him hee commanded mee to attend this day for an answer, which hee gave mee this morning att the house in presence of my Lord Treasurer; hee commanded mee to tell you that 20 companys shall bee very soon sent over, and that you need take noe farther care in the matter, for they shall be transported and sent to the places you mention, with their officers, who will be contented to bee without pay for the time you mention, and hee has promised mee to chuse such officers whose dependance here shall not make them desire often lycence to bee absent from their commands. His H. has your proposalls in his hands, and when the men are ready to move you shall have timely notice, that you may dispose them into such garisons as you shall think fittest for the worke you design them, and for the recruits you will bee furnished, as you desire, with 500 men of the best that shall bee disbanded, which may bee conducted by some of the officers that comand the other companys, and save the trouble of sending an officer out of Ireland to comand them. This is the sum of what I have in charge, from his Maiesety, by R. H."

Ormonde to Arran.—"Dub[lin], 22 of June [16]78. As long as the matter of sending men to reinforce the army here shall bee in agitation, it is lyke you will receive two letters a post from mee on the same subject. My other letter of this date you will soone finde is to bee offered to his Majestie, the Duke, and my Lord Treasurer. If it shall bee looked vpon as a retraction, because I seeme to add conditions not contained in my first proposition, it will easily occur to you to answer that though they were not exprest they must necessarily have bin supposed, for nothing can be expected from a parlement that shall not bee satisfid that they shall bee safe in their propriety, encouraged to im-proue, and in some measure asured that what they give is lyke to bee spent amongst them, and to keepe them in peace; but if any great sum bee charged on the overplus after the payment of Bridges it will exceedingly disbarren and discompose all heere, and therefore, though it bee fit to know the "worst, yet I am affrayd to ask how it stands, or to "presse to know it, haueing once written to Mr. Secretary

"Coventry about it, and had no answer."

Arran to Ormonde.—"London, 29th June [16]78. I had "yesterday your two letters of the 22 instant, but the "King and the Duke were gone to Windsor, and this day
"they had a reuew vpon Hounslo heath of a great part "of the new raised men. They made vp, with two squa-
"rons and two battallions of the gards, about 10,000 men;
"they were all very well clad, and most of them very "promising men; the Dragons and grenadiers were "indifferently hors (oblit.) rest of the horsemen were very "well mounted. The King will come back soe late "that I shall not have an opportunity to show him your "letter this night, but on Monday at the house I "believe I may finde the Duke, his Majesty, and "Lord Treasurer together, and that will bee, in my "opinion, the properest time to show him your letter,
"and I don't doubt but I shall give you a satisfactory
"answer, for I ventured, knowing how the revenue is "charged already, to inform his Majesty, before I re-
"ceaved these letters, that I believed you depended
"vpon what the Parlement would give and the over-
"plus money when Bridges his contract is satisfied, for
"the substance of the forces you desired should bee "sent over, and tould the same thing to his H. R. I "never knew before that anything was charged vpon
"the overplus found, and I confess I went very much "alarmed immediately to the Secretaries to know how that "matter stood, but hee was gone to his lodge, for I "took itt for granted by some letters I had formerly "from you that the King had granted that found "intirely for this or the like vse. The army is not to
"bee disbanded here att soonest vntill the latter end "of next month, as you will finde by the proceedings "of Parlement, soe that your charge will not come soe
"soon vpon you as you expected, and if the news now
"rife in town bee true you are not like to have any of "these forces, for they say a warr with france is not "to bee doubted of."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Nou. 16th [16]78. I had oc"casione this morning to speake to the king concerning
"my lord Chancellor of Ireland. I finde he intends "him to be translated to the diocess of Armagh; he "spoke very fauourably of him, but said he was so "taken up with the important affaires of Parliament
"that he had not time to thinke of any thinge els-
"where. I minded him of a report that in France
"many shippes were fitted out, and that it is also said
"that ten thousand foot were drawing towards the sea
"coasts ouer against us; that the time of the years
"was too late for any expedition in fauour of Sweden;
"that Mons. de Belfond, that in the year 66 was in"tended for a diversion to be made vpon Ireland, was "now in fauour; and that, as I had bin informed, the "French Ambassador has given out that his master
"would see the Irish have the benefit of the peace the "Catholicks made with you. Upon these apprehensions "of myn I begged the king to finde out meanes to know "the truth as to matter of fact of these notions in "France, and afterwards, as he shall see cause, to pro"vide for the security of Ireland. I spoke vpon the "subject of calling a Parliament, and shewed both the "king and duke that part of your letter which men"tions it, but they seeme apprehensive of haueing one "at the time this shall be sitting. Sir Thomas Chichly "says you promised him a troupe. Mr. Brabson, who,
"I am informed, has captains pay till he have one,
"does also pleade for this vacancy. The king, I am "told, will leave to you the decision. Every post I "believe I shall write to you, though I have very littell
"time, by waiting on the house and queen."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Whitehall, Nov. 28, [16]78.
"Upon the orders given for putting all the Roman "Catholicks out of the army, which the Duke of "Monmouth told the house he had performed, I "desired the king that you might have his pleasure
"signified so that regiment of Macartys wherin were "many papist officers and soldiers. I spoke to the "duke and Chancellor, Duke of Monmouth, and others
"so plainly that you might not be inconuenienced by "their giving no orders, that I am assured they will,
"at the Cabinet Councell tomorrow, take that affaire
"to their consideration; the giving on account of the "Irish having of armes at present, and what has formerly
"be don on this occasion, will be very requisite. I re"member when I was commanded by you to take away
"all their gunns; and I thinke none could travell with "or haue any without special leave of the chief gou-
"ernor. I leave it to your consideration whether "you should renew any such order on this occasion,

"but begg you would transmitt to me what has bin
"don, and what is the present methode of the time."—
"Ossory to Duchess of Ormonde.—"November 30th
"[16]78. I have bin in actions of importance; but have "not bin more troubled during their being in suspense
"then I was all yesterday while wee were debating "whether the poore queen should be so unfortunate as "to haue booth houses address to the king that he would "remooue her vpon Oteses accusing her to haue under"taken the poisoning of him. At lenght we carried it "in the negative, eight only haueing voted for con-"curring with the Commons: the king carried himself
"most worthily, shewing a detestation of what some "thought might be acceptable to him. On Thursday,
"when her Maiesty was in publick, she shewed not "the least emotion; but yesterday, when she was in "private, she ceased not weeping, bewailing her con"dition, and saying how much the Duke's misfortunes
"were short of hers, his sufferings being vpon an "honourable score, but here vpon what was the most "infamous. I was the first that brought her the good "news of our dissenting with the Commons, which you "may imagine was no small consolation, she being all "day uncertain whether Whitehall, Somerset House,
"or perhaps a restraint might not haue bin her destiny.
"It fell in my way to haue bin a littell servicable to "her by carrying Otes to Somerset House, my lord of "Bridgewater being commanded with me by the king,
"where in matter of fact as to the house, wee found "him in a manifest lye, which will appeare under our "hands, the relation wee made being in the Par-"house, a copy of which, last post, I sent to my "father. I have not bin negligent in my endeavours
"vpon this occasion, and truly the queen seemes satisfied "with them, and is so gracious as to consider more
"my zeale then my weake performances. All her
"Roman Catholick seruants are to leane her this day,
"except a few women excepted in the Act; it is a "hardship for her to quit those who haue so long "serued her, and so faithfully and discreetly. Sir
"Robert Southwell, who is a worthy and a usefull "friend to my father, will give him an account of "publick affaires; by him it will appeare that I forget
"not things tending to his service. I pray God send "us better times then what wee deserve, or reasonably
"are to expect; and give to my father and you all "happines. Be pleased to tell him that a littell time "since Mr. Hide informed me that the ratifications of "the peace were come from Spain."

Ormonde to Ossory.—"Dub[lin] 23 Apr. 1679. I re"ceived yours of the 15 late last night, and am just "now to celebrate the day. It is not hard to guesse by "whom the inquiry concerning the grant supposed to "be for the benefit of Fitzpatrick, is sett on, and since "things of that nature are come in play, possibly I may "be able to informe of some much less justifiable then "that in question. About a weeke hence I may be "better instructed, and I suppose that will be time
"enough if the Parl^t proceeds upon those discoveries
"and matters of greater consequence they haue taken "in hand. It is no lesse easy to guesse whence the "clamor ag^t my Lord Primate proceeds. I am confident "vpon a fair hearing, which I do not doubt but he will
"haue, hee will be found to haue administred justice
"very ably and uncorruptly.

"I doubt it is not knowne or remembered there that "in the time of my Lord Berkelyes government there
"issued a proclamation to lett all papists at one blow
"into Corporations, and if Mr. Bridgeman be examined
"hee is able to tell at whose sollicitation the letter com"manding such a proclamation was procured. It may "concerne my Lord Chamberlain to looke into this "matter if he was then Secretary. Upon this occasion
"the glut of papists got into townes and cityes
"contrary, I think, to the intent of the Act of Parl^t,
"which leaues a power in the Cheife Gou^r and Councell
"to admitt some, which has but sparingly been exercised.
"For my townes, first, there is none of them a sea
"towne, and what euer they are thus 9 parts of tenn of "the papists that inhabit them are got in. Wee now "here vpon looking into this matter before the votes "of the Lords came to us, and wee have received from "most townes an account of the popish inhabitants,
"and from some the number of papists the desire should "remaine amongst them, as some principall traders and "usefull artificers. From Limerick, where my Lord of "Orerry is Gou^r and in a great part proprietor, wee
"haue yet no return, which hee excuses vpon the death of "the Mayor, who was one of those who were to make "the inquiry and report; and if it be safe to say so, it is "apparent that trade cannot be carried on in townes

"nor husbandry in the country without some popish
"merchants and very many popish tenants, unless a "large plantation of English of all sorts could be sent "returne of Irish papists. The matter of the fast and

"pointing of it and the manner of solemnization and

"these things, and to auoid repetition it may be fitt to "giue copies or extracts of it to our friends. My Lord
"Massereen tells mee he does mee justice upon all "occasions; you shall do well to incourage him by
"civility and familiarity."

Ormonde to Ossory.—"Dub[lin], 11 May [16]79. I haue
"yours of the 3 and 6, and in one of the former date
"from my Lord Longford I had the queries relating to "my vaste gettings, small estate before the rebellion
"and miscarriages, which it was not hard to find, for "they are at least of ten years standing, and many of "them composed by Peter Talbot, titular Archbishop "of Dublin, now prisoner in this Castle. So that who"euer brought them is not to value himself vpon the "service. It were of vse to haue any new objections,
"if there are any such, really fram'd, as I much suspect
"there are not, unlesse hee that brought the Queries
"composes them himselfe and would haue them passe
"for the worke of some dangerous ingeneere. I wish
"he may be prest to produce them, yet not so as that "hee should doubt he is suspected, for it is safer as the "world goes to anger twenty quiet honest men then
"one busy knave that cares not what he says or swears.
"I haue such computations as you desire, but I am not "of opinion they should be exposed in answer to lybells
"or to stop mouths, because it will not do the worke,
"but draw on replies and rejoinders fruitlesse and
"endlesse."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"May 13th [16]79. Last night I
"receued your letters of the 3^d and 6th of this month;
"the first related to the affaire* of my lord Marques of "winchester, of which I can not yet giue you an account,
"my intention being to deale cautiously and with "advice, for several reasons. To your last, relating to "discourses of accusations, I ame confident my lord of "Shaftsbery does all he can, and employes Thornhill
"and one Monsil that was casheered in Ireland. St.
"Leger this morning told me of libellois queres in "the hand of the former, and will endeavor to gett
"me a sight of them. I will vse my endeavours to "gett such a discouery of this fellows practice as to
"haue him punished, which consequently may concern
"others also. I intend to deliuer Mr. Secretary your "letter, and to censure him neither to make vse of it or "to lett it be known. My lord of Longford hauing "communicated to him the scope of that letter vpon
"occasion of a letter my Lord Chancellor writ about him"self in that concern, I thought he might suspect our "confidence in him if wee should conceale our inten"tions, though our purpose be changed, as will appeare,
"I beleuee, reasonable vnto you, by Sir Robert South-

* This refers to a negotiation with the Marquis of Winchester as to an arrangement with Ormonde for the post of Lord Steward held by the latter. On the value of that post Sir William Pym writes as follows to Ormonde, from Whitehall, on 3rd of January 1679.—

"May it please your Grace, to call to remembrance that about 7 or 8 "years since you were pleased to command mee to giue you a note of "the profits and perquisites belonging to the Lord Stewards place, "in the reignes of King James and King Charles the first, which "amounted to 3,100*li.*, besides the disposal of places, as by the in"closed paper it doth appeare. In the beginning of this kings reigne
"it amounted not to haue so much, and now (by vertue of this new "retrenchment) it is dwindled to less then a quarter part, beinge re"duced to 600*li.* per annum, vizt., 100*li.* wages and 500*li.* board wages. And the "daily paynes and constant attendance of the 2 cl^{as}. of the Greencloth "and the 2 cl^{as}. comptrollers are valued, or rather undervalued, at 200*li.*
"a yeare a piece."

In the reignes of King James and King Charles the first of Blessed memory.

"The Lord Steward of His Maj ^{ties} most Honor ^{ble}
"Household had a hundred pound wages, and a "Dyett served in kind consisting of 16 Dishes of
"meate a meale, with a proportionable allowance	ii. s. d.
"of Bread, Beere, and Wyne, which after the rate	2,648 06 00
"of the markett price came yearly to the summe
"of
"The Wood, Coales and Lights, Spices, Butter, and "Eggs, Linen, and all other necessaries incident "to the dressing and serving up of the said
"Dyett, together with the Lord Stewards double	0,351 14 00
"messes and commands, had cummibus annis
"amount to the yearly summe of
Sm. total	3,100 00 00

"And for the pleasuring of his friends and preferment of his servant,
"hee had twice as many places to dispose off then the present Lord
"Steward hath, and each of those places were almost twice the values"

"wells last letter writ by my Lord Chamberlines and "my aduice. I did buy a picture for you of Mr. van hill "who printed the paper concerning your trasactions
"since the plott, I tooke that occasion to gratify him
"rather then giue him dry mony; fifty guyns I gaue
"him. They say it is touched by Vandick; the history is "King Solomon, and I will send it by the first oppor"tunity."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Windsor, Sept. 6th [16]79.
"I shall not faile to giue you an account of my spanish
"iourney. I am not so engaged nor at all resolved to "make it, if I finde not appointments both certain and "sufficient. My lord of Essex did assure me of his "assistance in this matter. I ame very glad that the late "addresses of the Lords are now vnder your considera"tion; to giue them satisfaction will conduce much to "the kings service as well as your own advantage. The "affaire of young Aylmer will certainly be made vse of "boath to your own and my preiudice, therefore all "dilligence ought to be vsed to bring him hither and "afterwards to ovr religion. Whatever my lord of "Shaftsbery may say to Sir Richard Stephens, I ame
"of opinion that, according to the course he steeres, he "will endeavor to remouee from posts of power all "persons of your principles; however, I thinke it prudent
"to receve ciuily any expressions or overtures from "him. I haue formerly sent you the detail of the pay "boath of guards and army of the Prince of Orange; if "you please I shall again transmit it. I haue had it "from Sir Alexander Colear, who I am sure would not "giue me an imperfect account. Since troopers must "be clothed, I know no reason why they should not "be contented to haue them of the same sort and colour,
"so that in providing them they be not abvd by their "officers. The care you take, and the methode, for hauing
"the foot well trained, will be of infinite vse. I doe
"easily comprehend the difference and disadvantage
"of companies being scattered and not regimented.
"I wish some inconsiderable pay in time of peace, if a "Par[liament] in Ireland sits and giues supplies, may "be settled vpon field officers, and that regiments might "at some time of the yeare be drawne together, other"wise you will finde a greate defect whenever they "forme a battallion. You will pardon me if vpon this "occasion I reminde you of a company for my self, it "being with out example that any in my station should "be without one. Last post I gaue you an account of the "Dukes arriual; I am informed that generally his "comming is well taken. Whether he returns or re-
"mayns here is not as yet known; I beleuee you will
"however thinke it necessary to complement him vpon
"this occasion. Mr. Fitzpatrick that formerly was boye
"to my Lord of Oxford and since a Captain of foote, "desired me to minde you of some hopes giuen him,
"that you would make him Lt. to the guard that tom
"Farfax commands."

Ormonde to Ossory.—"Dub[lin], 4 Oct^r [16]79. On "the approach of euery session of Par^l I haue con"stantly been alarum with impeachments, such as "you mention in yours of the 23 of the last, and I
"haue still been promised to know the authors and the "articles, but could neuer gett any but some collection
"of old things taken out of prints or from letters out
"of Ireland, or suggested by such fellows as Sir H.
"Ingolsby or one Mansell. If your man of quality "will furnish you with something more solid and "authentick hee will lay a great obligation vpon mee.
"Wee heare out of Munster that my Lord of Orrery is "past all hope of recovery, but hee has been often sayd
"to be so, and yet recovered well enough to trouble all "about him, and the Government to boot. If your "spanish journey be capable of delay I should thinke it
"reasonable you should not leaue England till you see "what state the next session of Parliamt^t [will] be. If "it shall please God to dispose the Par^l to moderation
"and cooperation with the king, when you see them in "that track, you may safely absent yourselfe for such "a time, but I think the strongest reasons till then are "against it. I am now in my designe settled here for "all the winter, and if it were not a crime I would say
"there is no danger of any disturbance here, unlesse
"they haue examples from the other kingdomes, and "even then I think I am able to giue as much trouble
"as I shall receive. God keep vs from the tryall."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Newmarket, Oct. 6th [16]79.
"The king leaves the affaire of the chusing bishops to "you in case the diosis of Kilkenny become void. If "you haue not fixed vpon a person already, I presume
"to recomend Doctor Young, who was my chaplain in "flanders; he is an Oxford man, eminent for preaching
"and for a good life. I beleuee you would receve all "manner of satisfaction in him both as to the publick and your own content: when I know your pleasure I shall accordingly govern myself. I am just taking coach for Evstons, where I wish the hawks out of Ireland were come."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Whitehal, Dec. 6th [16]79. I performed a friendship to Sir Robert Southwell the other day, much against both my inclinations and interest, he has or [sic] a long time desired to part with his place of Clerke of the Covncell, and chose me to speake to the king for leave to part with it, which he agreed vnto, in favour of one Mr. Winn, who you may have often seen with Mr. Seymour, and was a member of the two last Parliaments, where they say he behaved himself very dutifully; vpon the king's declared intentions of dispossessing the Duke of Monmoth of all his places, and hearing of many pretenders, I spoke so early in behalfe of my lord of Chesterfield, and his Maiesty was pleased to confer vpon him that of iustice and heyers, the thing passed extremely well, and the king satisfied with his choice, and the other very much with the manner as well as the obligation laid vpon him. I have not seen the Duke of Monmoth, though most have don it. I will prefer decency to my master to all other considerations, and I thinke it not consistent with that to complement any that stands in his present circumstances; the friends of the Duke of Monmoth gives it out that this iourney was with the aduice of the Prince of Orange, and that he was soone to follow in order to persue the same ends, but since I have reason to beleeeve that there is not any truth in this report, and I doubt not but I shall have this in an authentical manner."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Jan. 6th [16]79. I have since the writing of my letter of this days date spoke to some of your best friends concerning the promotion of the Bishops of Kilala,* and they are all of opinion that appearing for this unhappie Prelate, who I fear me so, since he could doe so exorbitant a thing as without law to execute a man, can not but hereafter be of greate prejudice to you, it being no way justifiable for a private man to kill one outlawed, unless the malefactor did make resistance. I confess I have a sorrow for a man in holly orders that has embrewed his hands in blood, and among many omissions I thought it a very greate one to see another of that function to remain in it since the kings restauration. I wish wee may not feell the ill effects of that error. I doe not in the least make a comparison of the guilt of these and other persons; my lord of Essex sayd the pardon of that fact was not don when he was in the gouernment. I doubt not but you will pardon my being warme vpon this occasion, it being absolutely vpon your account, not having euer seen the person I speake of, and hauing no other kind of obiection but what I now mention."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"January 6th [16]79. I have according to your commands solicited his Maiesty in behalfe of those you would have preferred by the vacancy of the bishoprick of Derry, all which are granted, and I beleeeve letters to that purpose will be dispatched to you this night. I have heard much good of the Bishop of Kilala, but I know not how liable it may be to sensors to prefer a clergyman that was so indiscreet and violent as to make a tory's heade be cutt off in his house, when brought in a prisoner. My lord of Essex told me the story, and though he sayd many things of the persons meritt, yet he is capable to leaue out that part as occasion may offer; this action, though vniuersally known, I "was ignorant of till of very late. I thinke it vorthy of your consideration, whether you will proceed vpon the king's commands or not; perhaps this perticular may not have come to your knowledge. The king spoke freely enough of persons recommended by the Bishops of London, and I beleeeve his recommendation as to any to be preferred in Ireland will be of littell force. I wish Parson Young, that was in flanders with me, were preferred in Ireland; he is an extraordinary pious man, and an excellent preacher; he is an Oxforde man, and very well reputed in the vniuersity."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Jan. 17th 1679. Having had seuerall promises to be sett vpon the establishment in Hollonde according to my articles, and the death of Prince Maurice of Nassau giuing so easy an opportunity of doing me iustice without a new found, I have desired my leaue. I thinke it sufficient still as for the humble part relating to the Prince of Orange, who I really beleeeve has foud himself mistaken, when he gave me his word to see me have right don, if vpon what I say my pretensions are satisfied, then I continue and no harme is don. I have sometimes displeased you by engaging myself too sddly; I hope I shall not doe so now by withdrawing, hauing his Maiestys consent and the aduice of my friends. What comes of this matter, any thing els that I thinke important I shall not fail to communicate it vnto you. My lord of Essex makes it his worke to catch hold of anything that may prejudice you, especially in what relates to the late Irish bill; his party blames the slighingnes of your answer, which when obiections to seuerall paragrafs were made all the returns were that here they may be mended or thrown out. I finde my lord of Burlington very kinde to you, though some would inflame him, because his name was not inserted, nor the victoreasers, which they say is of course in most commissions; it is also sayd that Sir Nicolas Plunkett made the first draught of that bill. I would be glad to have the deniall of this from you, though at present I doubt not the falsity of that report."

Arran to Henry Coventry, Secretary of State.—"Dublin, Jan. the last. My Lord Livettannant is not yett soe well recovered as to bee able to write himself this post; hee has yours of the 24th instant, where you inform him of his Ma^{ty}s purpose to send vs a Chief baron from thence to succeed ours, who dyed about three days since. You may please to remember that it was his desire by my last letters that in case none of the persons he recommended should bee pitched vpon, a fitt person should bee sent from England; the truth is the busness of that court is not very well managed now, and has been worse as my Lord of Essex very well knows, but the fault was not soe much the insufficiency of the late Lord Chief baron, as the great power given my Lord Rannelaugh, and partners, in controuling that court; this with the reducing of the officers fees which hapened then, might make them more negligent then formerly, all which a person well versed in exchequer proceedings there may remedy. In case the course taken in that court may bee found practicable with vs, his grace is not soe much concerned for any person recomend as hee is that the king's affairs should bee well managed in that court, tho hee beleives one of them might bee as fitt for the place as any either my Lord Privy Seal or my Lord Essex will recomend."

Ossory to Ormonde.—"Febr. 24th [16]79. I received yours of the 14th with much satisfaction to finde your fitt of the goute beginning to leaue you. Of the affaire of the Chancellorship I have not heard a word more, perhaps it was a false report or a wrong information. I alwaie tell you what I heare and my authors, but will not be answerable for the truth of my informations. I thinke without vndecey you cannot put by my Lord of Sunderland from the affaires of Ireland, and since that is his portion, I thinke the soonest and ciuilist advances to be best; in this Sir Robert Southwell's and my opinion goes together. Of what wee owe to that worthy friend I need not vse arguments to perswade you, hauing foud him so usefull on all occasions; the king has remitted him his quitt rents in Ireland, which amount to about seventy for a year. The king's letter with the vsall formes from the Lords of the treasury will shortly be sent you, and I hope you will lett him see how ioyfull and ready you will be to dispatch anything of good relating to him. The Duke and Dutches arrived here in good health, the king mett them at

* Thomas Otray was Bishop of Killala and Acherry from 1670 to 1679. The above-mentioned affair does not appear to have been hitherto published in connection with him. On the destruction of "Tories" George Philips wrote as follows to Ormonde from New Hall, 8th October, 1678: "May it please your Grace.—I presume to acquaint your Grace that in obedience to your commands and instructions I have used all possible diligence for the destruction of the Tories of this country, and for the discovery and punishment of their harbours and abettors, of w^{ch} I shall give a more particular and distinct account when I shall have the honor to kisse your hand. And having continually pursued them, publicly by the soldiers and secretly by spies, and costly intelligence, I made an opportunity at last to doe some good service, for on Friday last intelligence was given by a fellow who was their taylor, and whom I employ'd as a spy, and two of my brothers, with 5 or 6 countrymen surprized 2 of them, whereof one escaped being wounded, the other they killed, and I have sent his head to Derry. His name was Shane O'Callan, the captain and leader of all the Tories of this country. I dare not compare him with Count Hanly, but certainly next to him he was the most dangerous and active rebel in Ulster. He hath bin out these 6 years, and hath committed innumerable robberies and some murders. There are now only 4 known Tories left in this country, in y^e pursuit of whom I have employ'd some trusty persons, and do confidently hope within a short time to give your Grace a good account of them."

"S.N. [1676. My Lord,—I receaved this weeke the "honor of two letters from your Grace by Captaine
"Ire and another gentleman, but both upon the same "subject, which was that of their late misfortune heere,
"which I thought a very great one since I began to "believe it undeserved. It seems to appear so now by "the confession of Capt. Platt and the flight of Capt.
"La Valyn their two accusers, of whom I am forced to "believe more ill upon this occasion then I could "almost have imagin'd mankind capable of, which "was by forging accusations upon counterfeited letters
"to offer at taking away not only the employments
"and honors, but the lives of severall gentlemen, onely
"to advance one of them to bee major and revenge the "other upon some little quarrels between them. The "prince himself confesses hee believes this forgery
"which is come out within thees ten days and so not "unseasonably for thees gentlemen coming over, yett
"his Highnesse saies hee is sure there was intelligence "between some officers of that regiment and the "garrison of Mاسترخت, and that a trope of horse from "thence attended them severall days in their march,
"so that though Mr. Skelton spoke to him from the "king, yett I found hee was unwilling to giue them a "discharge in the usual and honorable terms they "desired, but said if they would have a tryall by a "council of warre they should. What the gentlemen "have by Mr. Skelton's advice resolved on I cannot "tell, having not seen them since hee left this place
"upon his journey towards Vienna; but that day Cap"tain Ire dined with mee and seemed unresolved what "to desire. When I hear further of him I shall doe

"innocency, and from the very great deference I shall "ever have for any of your Grace's recommendations.
"Otherwise I avoyd concerning myself in anything that "passes among thees troops as having been leyed
"without his Majesty's permission, and in a measure "against his commands, and thereby lying out of the "protection of his ambassador heer. I am very sorry "to finde what your Grace is pleased to tell mee of your "ignorance in some of those things which passe there,
"and seem to concerne you so much, yett I doubt not "but you know as much of them as you desire. I am "sure your Grace has as much part as you please in "all my dispatches to the secretarys from hence,
"finding they are still communicated to the Committee
"of foreign affairs, and the resolutions upon them taken
"there, which makes mee not trouble your Grace with "accounts of matters already knowne. I will onely say "that upon the whole matter the campagne seems to
"goe on as fast as the treaty, on all hands, and if it "begins before to ther endes. I beleve the Prince of "Orange will certainly bring it to a battaile, and that "must give measures afterwards. I begg your Grace's
"pardon for this interruption, and your beleefe that I "am ever, with equall passoin and truth, my Lord, your Ormonde to Sir William Temple.—"Windsor, 12 June

"[1677. Having had notice of your son's purpose to "passe over to you, I thought I could not better then
"by him acknowledge your Excellencies kindnesse and "favour upon occasion of his Majesties making choyce
"of mee once more in his service for the gouvernement "of Ireland. Considering my age, I am like there to "act the last public part of my life, and shall therefore "endeavour to make it the best, that I may in some "measure redeem all the errors of ignorance and inad-"vertency I may have been guilty of; for others I shall "want humility to owne, and this advantage I have,
"that my carriage heretofore in that gouvernement hath "been exposed to so strict, not to say malitious exami"nation, that I am reasonably well instructed and "warned for my future deportment, a benefit which I "doubt was not intended mee or foreseen by some of "the inquisitors. There is no circumstance attending "the honour his Majestie lays upon mee that satisfies
"mee more then that I find my Lord of Essex is not "displeased at my succeeding him, and does not mis-
"understand the part I had in obtaining the succession;
"but on the contrary all things have passed betwixt us
"upon the occasion as they ought to doe betwixt men of "our condition and profest friendship. With this as "with what I beleve will not displease you, I shall "conclude my letter, when I have repeated to you that "I still am and resolute to be, my Lord, your EX^{ty} most
"faithfull and most obedient servant, ORMONDE."

Sir William Temple to Ormonde.—"Shene, Nov^r. 27,
"1677. My Lord,—As I can never neglect any occasions "of your Grace's service, so I fall unwillingly into "those which can bee onely of trouble, and yett at "this time and upon the late losse fallen upon our "family, I cannot forbear the sensible acknowledg"ments I owe your Grace, both for the last honor you "were pleased to doe to the memory of my father,
"and for the favor you were pleased to expresse to"wards my easy succeeding him in his office, by your "Graces dispatch to Courte upon that occasion which "my brother gave mee an account of. I cannot but "renew to your Grace the memory I shall ever retaine
"of having owed the reversion of that place (many "years since) intirely to your favor, and so I shall now
"reckon that I doe the possession of it, since I finde it "was so early in your Graces thought and intentions,
"nor should I have made my application heer to his "Majesty upon that occasion before I might have done
"it under your protection, but that my stay in England
"depends upon such uncertaintys that, though it has "drawne out into lengths I could not expect, yett I "can seldome reckon upon one post before mee. The "retirement I have past heer in the country for neer
"this weeke since the news of my father's losse allows
"mee no pretence to say anything of publike, besides "that I know your Grace receaves it constantly from
"better hands. Yett I will venture to say this onely,
"in shorte, that wee are very neere the greatest crisis
"that has yett happend in his Majestys affaires, or "those of Christendome, for upon my Lord Fever-
"shams returne, which must now bee very neere, wee "shall see whether France will bee content to make "the peace without the conquest of Flanders, or such "tearmes as must evidently make way for it upon the "next invasion. If they will not, his Majesty must in "a very little time, and once for all, resolve whether hee will looke on and see that country lost the next campaign, and feele the consequences that will have upon Holland, or whether hee will by some newe measures endeavor to prevent it, and upon this the fate of most affairs at present on foot will certainly depend. I aske your Grace's pardon for this presumption; and your beleefe that what place or condition of life soever I may fall into no man can bee ever with more constant passion or greater truth then I am, my Lord, your Grace's most obedient and most humble servant, W. TEMPLE."

John Evelyn to Earl of Ossory.—"14 Feb. [1679]. My Lord,—I am extremely sorry for my Lord Dukes sake, but especially for your Lordships, that you reject the opportunity is presented to you for the purchasing of that sweete place at Chelsey, vpon so easy termes, because I am certaine that if ever the times should settle into any tollerable composure, it will not lie vpon their hands who haue interest in it for a much more considerable summe than what is now demanded for it, and that then it may not possibly be in my power to serve your Lordship as now it is. I haue formerly acquainted your Lordship with the particulars; that besides a magnificent house capable of being made (with small expense) perfectly modish: the offices, gardens, and other accommodations for aire, water, situation, vicinity to London, benefit of the river, and mediocrity of price nowhere to be paralleld I am sure about this towne, or any that I know in England. There are with it, to be added, as many orange-trees, and other precious greenes, as are worth 500*l*. The fruites of the gardene are exquisite; there is a snow house—in a word, I know of no place more capable of being made the envie of all the noble retreates of the greatest persons, neere this Court and city, so that it euer grieues me your Lordship should not be master of it. I almost forgot to tell your Lordship that there is neere one hundred pounds a yeare in good tenements, vnder-rented; so as vpon the matter I do not esteeme your Lordship giues aboue 3,500*l*. for the whole, which realy is not aboue a third part of what it would sell in other circumstances. Not one argument of all this would I vse to your Lordship after what your Lordship has communicated to me, since you went into Ireland (where my Lord Duke cannot haue so perfect an notion of it as your Lordship, who is so neere it, euery day), because methinks I cannot haue acquitted myselfe of the many obligations I remaine vnder to your Lordship without making your Lordship this second offer of my service, whilst it is in my power, who am, my Lord, your Lordship's most humble and most datifull servant, J. EVELYN. Feb. 14,—80."

Earl of Ossory to Ormonde.—"Febr. 21, [1679]. Having received from Mr. Evelyn the enclosed, which by Sir Stephen Fox, who was once about purchasing the house mentioned in it, I doe finde to be a very great bargain, and the summe demanded not very considerable, besides a morall certainty, if the times be quiet, that at any time it may be parted with at advantage. I thought it not amies to send you the proposall; the conveniency and indeed decency of your hauing an aboad in England, if your affaires can permitt your laying out so much mony, hauing inclined me to make this stepp, which, if proceeded in, I doubt not but you will be satisfied of the price and the good repayre that both house and gardens are in. I am desir'd to intreate your fauour in some affaires of Sir Richard Belings, which I did vndertake for, as farr as consisted with formes and your power to assist him. By coniectures of the winde since Monday last, which was the day the Duke embarked, we expect him tomorrow or next day. I am extreme sorry that you have bin so much troubled with the goute. I wish you a perfect recovery and all happines."

"A perticular of Chelseyhouse.

"There belongs to Chelseyhouse 16 acres of ground, with severall large gardens and courts, all wald in, and planted with the choycest fruite that could be collected either from abroad or in England.

"The whole house is in perfect good repaire, the apartments altered according to the mode, my Lord of Bristol having laid out upon it 2,000*l*.

"The outhousing is very good, ample, and commodious, and all the offices supplied with excellent water.

"The tenements belonging to it are now let for 1000*l*. per ann., and may very considerably be improved as the leases expire.

"The purchase was at first 7,000*l*.

"For this particular, with the addition of all orange trees, and other greenes, fruites, and flowers of all kinds, with seates, rowlers, tables, and all garden vincills. Alsoe, within the house all fixt necessarys, as greates, chimney peices, and wainscot, the billiard table, and a pare of marble tables and house clock, there will be p^d - - - 5,000*l*.

"Thus offered 26th June 1679.

"By Sir Step: Fox."

The following are specimens of the letters concerning the English and Irish in military service abroad, and the relations of the Earl of Ossory with the Prince of Orange:—

Lord Clare to Earl of Ossory.—"from Perrois, 6 leags from Charleroye, 30th July 1674. My last was of the 23^d to your lordship upon our march from Park neer Lovaine, which we continued all that night to joyne next day with 10,000 German horse at Bonuff; thire foot, being but 10,000 more, came last night to us, we hauing layed between them and ye enimie. Ther went 5,000 German foot and 3,000 horse from us to assist the Pallatinatt armye; we haue the finest armie that ever was seen, we are at least 17,000 horse and 35,000 foot.

"The Prence of Conde fortifies himselfe close to Charleroye, and it seems he hath noe minde to us, though we be come heer to him. I beseech your lordship to send this to my Lord Duke for Ireland, since I cannot write by a quicker way to his Grace, and that heer in our campe we haue noe certaine way of sending by reason of ye boors and enimie, but as by chance we meet with conyoes."

Lord Clare to Earl of Ossory.—"16 Augt. 1674. I have writ to your lordship from our campe neer Niuel and from Senef, wher we came neerer to the enemies campe at Tresini: we wer at Senef two nights in vew of the enimie, and upon Saturday the 11th of this moneth we marchd from thence towards Mariemont, leauing a thowsand foot and 2,000 horse and dragones in the rear garde under the Prence of Vodemons command. Our armie marchd in 3 seuerall ways to Marie Mont, and our bagage in 3 more; the disposition of the march being always left to the Spanish comandars in this countrie, though that day the Prence would haue his bagage goe further about to the right hand rather then take the neerer way that was full of ill passages and verie narrow, but it was not observed which obliged our gardes to keep thire poste soe longe that the Germans wer encamped and most of the Spanish and Holland armie got to Mariemont two leagues and halfe from our garde to see our wagens passe the first narrow way thy met with. In the mean while the Prence of Conde drew out his armie behinde a hill which was oposit to our garde, and which he attackt with two regiments of dragones and foot on 9 of the clock in the morning, and we disputing the ground, he brought to peeces of artillerie and sent more men to fire upon us. When we saw our wagens passed the first narrow passage we retired to a bridge that was behinde us, and there we disputed the passage, but being overpowered by the enemies foott we wer forced to give way, hauing lost yonge Prence Moris of Nasaw, colonel to one of the foot battallions, and the colonel that commanded the other battallion, with most of thire officers. Then our horse kept noe ground, being all inclosures about us untill we came a leage further, wher we wer receaved by Count Valdeck, Margrave de Asentar, and Duke de Villahermosa in the head of 5 regements of foot and a thowsand horse; thy allsoe had 2 smalle peeces of artillerie planted on a rising grownd before them, and there after a sharp dispute and giving a stopp to ye enimie the Prence left the poste to those great comandars and went to putt ye rest of his armie in a posture of fighting. . . About halfe a leage further he found his artillerie and the winge of the Holland foott, which the Reigne Graue (a brave man and lieutenant general of ye foott) commanded. His Highnesse got this artillerie planted on a high neer Mariemont, and drew his foot and some horse to defend it. In the mean while the Marquis of Asentar was taken prisoner, Count Valdeck wounded, and most of the comandars and soldiers of those 5 regiments lost, and thire 2 guns, our horse hauing not stuck well to them, only the Duke do Villaher-

Then the Prencce of Conde attackt our artillerie about 1 of the clock with all his force, but it was resolutely and bravely defended by the Prencce of Orange: he drew thither all his foot, who fought admirable well, and 5 German regiments; he had allsoe some squadrons of horse, but the grosse of our horse wer on the bottom and plaines neer us towards Mons, to which plaines some of our great comandars would perswad the Prencce to retire. But his Highnes told them he would make good that place, and it was necessarie, for if we had lost it we had been in danger of looseing all. The hill was leuell and large on ye topp and surrounded with woods and orchards; the enemye pressed through these orchards to come upon, us and planted three artillerie upon some houses and heights which wer in them, and continued sharpp fighting untill 12 of the clock at night, having broak in twice in the night with some squadrons of horse on our flank, crying to us to lay downe armes, but thy wer beaten out againe. The enemye and we set many houses afire to give us light in ye night. Thy retired about 1 of the clock in the morning, and we continued untill 8 in the same place wher we fought, then having taken all the wounded men with us, and the bodys of ye dead which were of qualitie, we marchd as formerly we intended to the plains between Marie Mont and Mons, wher we now are; but few of our horse could come that day to service. Count Sours and all our generalls wer on ye place, but none soe active, soe steddie, and soe brave as ye Prencce of Orange, who from 9 of the clock in the morning untill 12 at night was in the heat of all ingagements, and indeed all that while it was a continued one. His Highnesse fortunatly escaped, haueing once or twice come to ye head of one of the enemy's squadrons of horse to comand them to follow him, and the second time asking the Captain whye he did not follow at ye first comand, he answered he was puting his men in order. Upon which the Prencce discovering his white scarfie, he clapt spurs to his horse and went to ye head of another squadron, which immediatly he broght upon the enemye and defeated him. We lost 2 small peeces of canon, and ye greatest parte of our Holland army's baggage. I belive ther was 4,000 of our side kil'd, and aboue 2,000 wounded, and that the enemye had as many kild and wounded of thires. The Prencce of Loraine, Prencce Pio, the Reigne graue, the Prencce of Furtenbergh, the Duke of Holstin, Lieutenant Generall Alnay, and a great many more officers of qualitie wounded. Prencce Salmes, Count Solmes, Colonel of the Prencce of Orange's gards of foot, and a great many other officers of ours, prisoners. Yow shall have a perfecter account of what wer kild, wounded, and take by the next, but I give yow now a true and impartiall account of the engagemnt, as I have been eye witness to it from first to last, haueing noe other charge that day but the honor of following the Prencce. Sir Walter Pane dyed this morning of his wounds, haueing behaued himselfe with much credit and applause. It was a sharpp ingagemnt, and obstinaty pursued by the French. Your brother Querik behaued himselfe gallantly, and recead a musket bullet in his head, but did not break his scull; he is now ready for another bout. The Conde Monte Rey sent us this day a good body of fresh horse and 5,000 Spanish foot. The Prencce attributes our disaster to Monsieur Lavigne, as designed to haue us affronted, and soe much his Highnesse told him before Duke de Villahermosa, Prencce of Vademont, and many others. I pray send this to my lord Duke your father, with my most humble dutie.

"Marquis de Assentar dyed of his wounds, and I pray excuse my blotts."

Lord Clare to Ossory,—"from ye Prencce of Oranges Campe, neer St. Gilline, 25th Augt. 1674 new stile. I cannot give your lordship more perticular account of our engagemnt with ye Prencce of Conde on ye 11th, then I gaue your lordship of ye 15th enclosed to Sir Jo. Williamson, onely that most of the officers of our Holland foott werither kild, wounded, or taken; 6 Colonels kild, 5 taken, and 8 wounded: by that your lordship may judge of ye rest. The brunt of the day fell upon our foot, and its noe better with the French, we heer they lost 8,000 men; and notwithstanding our losse we are now marching towards Valencian, 40,000 foott and 24,000 horse effective. The Prencce of Conde removed from Tregini, and passed ye Sambre, thy say to meet some forces which are to joyne with him from Monsieur Turenne. Ther

MARQUIS

ORMONDE:

"are 17,000 men of ye Duke of Brandenborgh's on there march to joyne with us, but I should thinke we have men enogh, if we had more.—Ther was neuer such a thinge as our coming on such ground in sight of the Prencce of Conde's armie without resolution to falle upon him, and with soe little care in our march from him, all which I presumed to tell his Highnesse beforehand, but he is led by wiser men.—We wer the day we came to Senef taken in ye strangest confusion that could be, had ye enemye come upon us, for our entelligence and parties abroad goes noe further then our generalls can see; and then (as we thought) the Prencce of Conde and his armie wer in battallia close to us on ye other side of a little wood. My lord, I fear it will be the same still with us. Wher in my last letter I told your lordship we had but 2,000 horse our rear garde we had 4,000, but by what they did a man should not take them to be 400. We are alsoe verie uncertaine in our resolutions. The Prencce hath a hard tuggle of it. What one generall promises ouer night he forgetts it in ye morning, and the other is not willing that any great action should be don by another in this countrie, though he knows not how to doe it; and the under generalls which manages all the affaire according to three severall factions and abilities, are such a of people as thire actions hitherto have shewd, and I fear will shew. But not a word of this to Sir Gabriel who goes thither this day. I hope your lordship sends these letters to my lord duke, or that yow would tell me, soe that I may write aparte to his Grace in order to my dutie."

Prince of Orange to Duke of Ormonde,—"Au Camp de Lokeren, ce 15 Juin 1677. Monsieur,—Je crois estre obligé de vous temoigner ma reconnaissance de tous les honneurs que vous avez fait a Mr. Bentinck, et des bons conseils que vous lui avez donne. Je ne vous rendrez pas mes remerciements de l'amitie que vous luy avez temoigne avoir pour moy, puisque je scay que vous savez qu'il y a deja longtemps que j'en suis entierement persuade, et que je me flatte aussi que vous me faites la justice de croire la passion que j'ay pour tous vos interests et pour tous ceus de vostre maison, laquelle je vous prie d'estre assuree qu'elle continuera toujours, et que je tacheray de vous temoigner en toutes occasions avec combien de zele et de verite je serez toute ma vie, Monsieur, vostre tres humble et tres affectionne serviteur, PRINCE d'ORANGE."

T. BENTINCK.—Lokeren, ce 3 Juillet 1677."

Lord Clare to Ormonde,—"Hague, 15th January 1675. I thinke it alonge while since I had the honor of kissing your Graces hand, but it was some satisfaction me to haue my Lord Ossorie heer these six weeks past to wait on him. Vppon Sunday, in the afternoon, thy said from the Brill, and the Prencce went almost out of sight of land with them, haueing that day dined aboard thire yaght. I hope thy are landed ear this in England, the weather being verie faire. Admiral Trump went with my Lord Ossorie to see the King. It is certain that Brisak is releued by Mons^r Turenne, and some say the confederats are beaten, at least they retired. We are preparing of some troops to stop the Swede from ouerrunning the Elector of Brandenbourgs countrie, wher he is now enterd with an armie of 18,000 men and a great traine of artillerie."

Justin McCartie to Ormonde.—“Paris, Mar. the 17th [1676]. I have once since my coming hither given your Grace the trouble of a letter, but I know not whether it came to your hands; and now, my Lord, I must importune you again, for I am so alarmed at the bill I hear that has past the house of commons for the recalling of us out of the french service, that I know not what to doe, unless your Grace can by your interest get me particularly excepted, which is the onely hopes I have that can prevent my ruin, havinge bene at vast expence to equip myselfe for the field, besides a certaine disappointment of making my fortune, which I am in a good way of doinge, if I were permitted to continue here. I beseech your Grace, if nothing can be done in this business, at the least that I may have your advise how I shall cary my selfe, for without it I shall not stir.”

Lord Clare to Ormonde.—“Carigahoulte, 1 Dec^r. [1678]. The place I live in, and the pleasure and profit of a cuntry life, to which I betook myselfe to recover the losses I had by a heavy quit rent, makes me ignorant of all matters that stir abroad. Yet I hear a nois of militia and rumours as if some vnturnat troubles wer like to be in the King's Dominions, which obliges me to offer my service to the Crowne, with the affection I euer professed to Your Grace, and particularly vnder your command, and to let your Grace know that there are a sorte of people of this nation, to a considerable number, that will therein follow me, let what speties soeuer of religion be suggested to them to the contrary; at least I will secure Your Grace the force of this countie to whatever you please to command.”

The correspondence with Henry Coventry, Secretary of State, may be illustrated by the following:—

Coventry to Ormonde.—“Whitehall, March 1st. 1678. Since my last to your Grace of the 2^d instant I have perused the results of these Lords to whom the king committed the consideration of the points in your letter of the 22 of Jan., concerning the things likely to be demanded and fitting to be proposed in Parliament, which are these following:—

“1. His Majesty resolveth a Parliament shall bee calld in Ireland as soone as the necessary formes will allow it.

“2. That in it the Decrees of the Court of Claymes may be confirmed by Act of Parliament.

“3. That means may be found to free the interests from the vexation of Commissions of inquiry.

“4. That there may bee a remission of all old debts, forfeitures, and arrears due to the Crowne, but a particular care taken that the so doing bring not out demand of defalcation upon his Majesty, or, at least, if it doe, that the quantum of yt bee ascertained and his Majesty enforced of it.

“That all care that canne bee reasonably desird bee given the people from the vexatious clauses in the Chymney Acts. That such Acts bee prepared for the settling and securing the Protestant religion as shall be approved of by the Lord Lieutenant and Councill.

“On the other side his Majesty expects from the Parliament a grant of subsidies, which hee is willing shall bee wholly and entirely appropriated to the building and repaying of the fortifications, and the furnishing of stores, and therefore leaveth the naming of the summe necessary for those uses to your Grace and the Councill with you. Upon many accompts his Majesty findeth it absolutely necessary to encrease his army in that kyngdom, and that when it is so there will bee the lesse neede upon any suddaine occasion to arme either the Scots, the Non-conformists, or the old Militia, none of which canne be done without some danger. Hee iudgeth that tenne thousand men effective, besides officers, is the number he would constantly maintayne; then hee estimeth that increase of men cannot bee maintayned without an addition of betwene 30,000^l. and 40,000^l. a yeare to his constant revenue. Therefore hee requirith that your Grace and the Councill prepare one or more Acts for imposing such new or additional dutys upon commodittys exported or imported as may encrease the revenue to that yearly summe. Still provided that care be taken that no such impositions may either prejudice the trade of that kingdome or entitle the farmers to a demand of defalcations. In the preamble of such Act or Acts his Majesty is willing it should bee declared that what is thereby graunted is the better to enable him constantly to support such an army there; and for the further satisfaction of the people that hee desires the encrease of his revenue for that onely use, hee would have orders given out before the meeting of the Parliament for raying the recruits necessary. His Majesty likewise desireth your advice whether it will bee more advisable to encrease the army by filling up the old companies or by raying new ones, and that you send an estimate of the charge along with your advice.

“His Majesty is fully resolved to employ that part of his new revenue which is made over to repay the money lent by Mr. Bridges, for the constant supply of his stores there, and such other publique uses as shall be thought necessary, the sayd repayment and such other debts which must unavoidably come upon it being first cleared. And now, my Lord, I have performed what his Majesty hath commanded mee as to this matter, and I believe have I beleive made accomplishment to your gout by relieving it with a fitt of a letter much more troublesome.”

Ormonde to Henry Coventry.—“Dub[lin], 17 Mar. [1677]. I have yours of the 5 instant containing his Majesties directions concerning the calling of a Parliament. I am confident hee will receive the fruits of his great goodnesse and care expressed towards his subjects of this kingdome to the vtmost of their ability, and that there will bee more difficulty to finde what and how they shall give then to perswade them to give.

“The leadeing bills shall bee prepared with all diligence for transmission, and had bin more ready then they are if his Majesties pleasure had bin sooner known.

“That which is to confirme the decrees of the Court of Claimes, I am tould, will not so easily bee drawn as was supposed. If it shall not put an end to all the feares of those in possession, and to the hopes of those that are not, it will not reach the end designed; and if it shall many hard cases will want releaf, which if they shall endeavour to get by particular provisos much time will bee lost, and perhaps the bill vpon which that of suplys will depend. Wee shall therefore here view all such as shall bee offered, and doe hope his Majestic may think fit to doe soe there.

“The bill of subsidies will soone and easily bee drawn, if the augmentation of the revenue must not bee comprehended in it; but if it must, it may take vp more time, by reason of his Majesties two most necessary cautions not to overcharge trade nor intitle the farmers to defalcations. How to raise the revenue to the proportion proposd, that is, vpon what to impose additions and not to obstruct trade, and how to satisfie the Parliament that they shall not bee kept perpetuall beggers by the exportation of the overplus of the revenue (which may by the retrenchment of the establishment bee at any time enlarged), are the most difficult partes of the work.

“I am for the present humbly of opinion that it will bee beter to raise new companys than to fill vp the old; but the later being the more frugal way, it will bee hard to resolute vpon the other till the estimat I am commanded to send shall be compar'd with what wee may hope to raise in addition to the revenue.

“How farr the remitting of old debts, forfeitures, and arrears will entitle the old farmers or the Lord Ranellagh and his partners to defalcations may very well bee iudgeth of there where both the bargains were made, and where all pretences to defalcations haue bin heard and determined; yet the judges and the kings councill here shall bee consulted about it, but I conceue it will be very difficult to ascertain the proportion of what will bee remitted till the E. of Ranellagh and his partners shall haue fully accounted or at leaste given in a lyste of arrears standing out, which also must bee done by the old farmers, that care may be taken that no allowance bee given for desperate arrears in case of remittall.

“I am humbly of opinion that it will bee enough that I declare his Majestic's intention to reinforce his army to 10^m, and keepe it so till wee haue some more certaine prospect of what may be rayed to support it, and till his Majestic shall think fit to declare and ascertain what those unavoidable debts amount to which must bee paid, besides the money lent by Mr. Bridges, before that parte of the new revenue can bee aplyd to the vses mentioned in the later end of your letter.

“I conceine it is not his Majestic's intention I should make any publick vse of the caution hee commands concerning the arming of the Scots, the nonconformists, or the old militia. Any distrust of the last would bee very vnseasonably exprest at this time, and I think not very reasonable in it self, considering the

ORMONDE,

"time that may bee spent in the discourse of it and preparations towards it, the care that may bee taken in the choyce of officers, and the great difficulty there is in bringing it to anything serviceable or dangerous; if more paines should bee taken in it, then, now I know his Majestie's pleasure, I meane to imploy vpon it.

"I am afraid I shall not bee able to satisfie Mr. Ryder by my proceedings vpon his Majesties letters of the 3^d of February, and yet my inclinations are (as far as they ought to bee) for him, not because I know him better, but because I doe not know him so well as some of the others. The king will haue that matter once more represented to him to reueiew his final determination, and care shall bee in the meane time taken that his revenue shall not sufer by the delay."

Ormonde to Henry Coventry.—"Dub[lin], 30 Apr. 1679. I do not remember any session of Parliament held when I was out of England, but that I was hoely alarm'd by my friends of preparations and contrivances to accuse mee, and I haue sometimes made voyages thither principally to prevent or to be ready to answer anything that could be objected against mee, and it has fallen out that vpon my arrival I haue still been suffered to be quiet. I have now again the same informations, and I haue at least as much reason to giue credit to them as heretofore, and if I were at liberty would hasten over to defend my honor, innocence, and conduct in the trusts that haue been reposed in mee as well as I could. I know the chiefe grounds of men's ill will to mee are malice, because I would not beare calumny and envy to the places I hold, which are motives that will neuer dye or be at rest as long as the object remains, and I am now come to an age and inclination so fitt for retirement that I would be content to purchase it at any rate but that of dishonour or prejudice to my fortune and family. Therefore, though I could with all imaginable cheerfulness and content lay this great and envied place at his Majestie's foot from whose hands I received it, yet I cannot bring myself to offer it as a ransome or composition, but had rather undergo the strictest inquiries and tryall of my actions. Thus you know my case and present disposition as well as I know it myself, and it is now time you should know that my humble desire is that his Majestie would send mee over a permissiō to attend vpon him at court in the usual formes, which I think may be found in your office, that I may be at liberty to make use of it when I shall think fitt; that my sonn Ossory may be sent with it, and power given that he may remaine deputy in my absence; or if his Majestie approues not of him in this conjuncture, that the lord chancelor and my sonn Arrau may be surties, or in the last place, if his Majestie finde reason not to appoint any of these, of whom I would not haue proposed any if I could think of fitter, that he would direct into what other hands to put the government till he shall haue resolved either to returne mee to it or where else to fix it. I do not intend that whoever his Majestie shall place here in my absence be any addition of charge, but am content that the usual allowance shall be taken out of my appointments. That which I would farther desire is as much secrecy as the matter will beare, and a speedy signification of his Majestie's pleasure."

Ormonde to Henry Coventry.—"Dub[lin], 25 May 1679. I am abundantly satisfied that my remoue from this place at this time vpon my own desire would bring all the inconveniencies you mention vpon mee, and perhaps some that cannot be foreseen, nor do I know but that the knowledge of my supposing there may be such a conjuncture wherein I ought to beg his Majesties leave, for it may be taken advantage of to my prejudice; yet I could not refuse the putting such a letter as mine of the 30^d of the last month into your hands, vpon the advice of my friends and in confidence you would not present it but at a fitt time, if any such could happen. My head is so filld with the expectation of some great event, from the state affaires were in when you writt, that all I can do is but to keep up the outward shew of government and the formal part of businesse, with the same preparation you expresse of doing my duty when I shall understand wherein. The course held with the Duke and D. Lauderdale is not a greater argument of hast then it is an instance and exercise of power. There is indeed great disparity in the cases; the subject matter about the Duke, as well as his person, are the highest that can come in question in our world, but since to the determination of that the Commons allow the king and house of Lords a share from which vpon the matter they are "both excluded in the other case, for the Lords are not invited to joyne in the addresse, and it is worded as if little were left to the king's consideration. This I say considered, and the unlimited consequence of such a proceeding, I do not know to which to giue the preheminance. At the very time this may come to your hands these reflections may serue, or in truth they may be frivolous and insipid."

The collection comprises unpublished letters of Roger Boyle, first Earl of Orrery, all of whose papers of this period were hitherto supposed to have perished. Roger Boyle took an active part, both as a soldier and a statesman, in England and Ireland, and in connexion both with Cromwellians and Royalists. On the Restoration, he obtained the title of Earl of Orrery, and the office of President of Munster, in which province he exercised extensive power. He was suspected by the Duke of Ormonde to be frequently engaged in promotion of political schemes for his own purposes, but nominally for the advancement and protection of the English interest. Orrery unsuccessfully sought reputation as a poet and dramatist, and as a military engineer and writer on the art of war. Ormonde, who for some years had not been on terms with Orrery, was directed by the king to consult him with reference to the projected Parliament for Ireland.

The following are specimens of the letters of Orrery, and of his relatives Michael Boyle, Primate and Chancellor of Ireland, Richard Boyle, Earl of Burlington, and Francis Boyle, Viscount Shannon.

Michael Boyle, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, to Ormonde.—"April 23, 1677. Your Grace haue such a perfect and experienced knowledge of the condition and government of this kingdom that it were a greater impertinency and presumption to say anything to your Grace upon that subiect; but ye difficultyes that are most likely to press you, being such as shal bee put upon yow out of England (as your Grace well knowes) rather then any yow shall (in probability) meete upon the place, give me leave to hinte unto your Grace 2 or 3 of them which I have observed since your Grace's access from hence, and which, in my opinion, have made the government somewhat easy. Your Grace may make what use of them you please.

"1. That no letters from ye king for any graunt, &c., are to be allowed and proceeded on by ye chiefe governor, nor, unless they have first had ye approbation of the Lord Treasurer of England. There is (as I suppose) some private instruction to this purpose. What restraint this puts vpon ye Chiefe Governor your Grace can best judge.

"2. The Lord Treasurer hath in some matters of money underwritten ye kings warrant with his owne name onely, and without ye privy signet; which is not thought a legal authority sufficient to justify ye Chiefe Governor eyther for payment or discharge of ye kings money, if ever he should be called to an account for it. Besides, if such a letter should come unto your Grace, eyther you must pursue it, or refuse it: if ye former, yow doe that which perhaps yow cannot answer; if ye later, yow will give occasion of some difference, or jealousyes, which may be very inconvenient. This I know hath bin pressed vpon our present Chiefe Governor in 2 or 3 instances; but he hath alwayes (as I beleieve) waved them as unsecure and unjustifiable.

"3. I have heard by a very good hand that the Lord Conway (who it is sayd was once vpon the expectation to come over our Deputy) declared it as his opinion that the Lord Treasurer of England hath as good authority, even by virtue of his office, to dispose of the king's revenue in Ireland, as of the revenue of England. If this should become a received opinion, this government would indeed be uneasy, and ye consequences may be fatall.

"4. Another thing which hath of late subjected this government to greate inconveniencies, is the contracting in England for concernes of Ireland, and ye allowing of defalcations vpon those contracts without ye knowledge or privy of the chiefe governor here, who, being vpon ye place, must certainly understand them best, and would doubtless be ye best husband for ye kings revenue, since ye lessing of that must necessarily conduce to the uneasiness of ye government. I doubt it is much easier to reflect vpon these things then to remove them; but perhaps, while your Grace are there vpon the place where yow may discourse freely, matters may be better adjusted and made smother then by ye debate of letters at a distance. As to the business of ye revenue, which indeed is ye greate business of this kingdom, your Earl of Orrery to Ormonde.—"Castlemartyr, the 17th of Sept. 1677. I pay your Grace my most humble and reall acknowledgments for the very grate honour of your letter of ye 15th instant, which I received this evening, and for the many high obligations your Grace has heaped upon me in it. I will not so much injure the lively sense I have of them as to attempt to express it by my words, but whenever my actions and services can doe it, they shall speake for me. I most faithfully assure your Grace that, tho I am in effect a man retired out of ye world, yet whenever you command my poore opinion I will with all truth freely present it to you and lay it at your feet. Not that I am soe vaine as to fancy it can be of any use to a person of such grate experience and of soe excellent a judgment as your Grace is happy in, but to evidence I will obey you in every thing, since I will doe it even in what must too much demonstrat my weakness and folly. The two heads your Grace mentions of ye Treasury and of a Parliament, under which, as your Grace most truly observes, all other dependent things are comprehended, and on which your Grace would have me employ my thoughts, I will not faile to doe it, and at present humbly lay before you what at first blush occurs to me. I humbly beleue ye true state of ye first wilbe easilier knowne then remedied. I am not ignorant grate art and industry have bin of late made use of to disguise it; but tricks in publick affaires are neuer longe lived, and noe sophistry can resist ye mathematicks, since it is a science that depends on demonstrations, as I belevee ye good or euill managment of a Treasury does and ever will. I am perfectly satisfied that your Grace desyes to haue the ills of it cured; and, if I were conuincied that all others concerned in it were soe too, I might with som confidence presume to say the remedy would be easy, sure, and lasting, since the most difficult steps to ye cure are to be sensible of the disease, and then really desyring to be freed from it. I speake this with the less diffidence because the noble person who was your Grace's immediat predecessor in the government of this kingdome was pleased to honour me from time to time with all his transactions in that affaire, and sometimes to command my insignificant opinion on it; which I could not refuse either to his authority, or to his person, wherby I was but too much satisfied that ye desyer of the remedy was not a little, if not most needfull to the obtayning of it. But of all this your Grace is ye most competent judg, only I cannot but say unless the justice, if not the absolute necessity of the thinge itselfe, and your Grace's interest ther, cannot preuent the determinations in England concerninge the Treasury heere, and ye disposall of it ther before you are fully consulted with, I feare the consequences will not be good. As to ye other great head, that of a Parliament, I was engaged about two yeers since to busy my unworthy thoughts on that subiect, and now since your Grace commands me, I will more intently employ them on that affaire. But I must ingenuously acknowledg unless I could know from your Grace how farr his Majestys owne royall goodness and your Graces fauorable mediation would goe as to passinge of bills to oblige his subiects, and if I did not also know how much is expected to be added to the reueneue, on what such addition shalbe rais'd, how longe it should continue, and to what ends it should be employd for ye safty and benefit of the land, while the power of ye kingdom may enable his Majesty to dedicat it to thos ends, without preiudice to his affairs in his other kingdoms, or in forraighn ports, I should not be able to present your Grace with my humble thoughts on this considerable affaire, with those reasons which I heartily wish may still accompany whatever I write or speake to your Grace. But this I may say in generall: nothinge probably can happen in ye time of your Graces government which will need more consideration then this one thinge will. And tho I foresee many great difficulties both in the layinge and managment of it, yet I will not dispaire but that by his Majestys gracious concessions to his subiects their loyalty and gratitude, together with your Graces grate knowledge of men and intrest in the kingdom, and ye deepe prudence which formes and guides your actings, thos many difficulties may be overcome. And really, my lord, I would not for more then I will mention that, if his Majesty desyes a supply, he should faile of it, and alsoe doe it under your government. In what I have presumed to write on thes two considerable heads, your Grace I hope will see I am resolved to haue nothinge in reserue in whatever you command my opinion. And also that I will to ye utmost of my power (which is very insignificant) contribute to make your government as acceptable to the kinge as engaging to the kingdom; and as easy and honorable to your selfe as if my brother were in your Grace's station. I am heartily sorry to finde in ye extracts of newse that your Grace descended to import unto me that soe gracious and truly noble a person as my lord Ossory should present his assistance to a people whos present demeanour makes them unworthy of that honour. I had a letter last night from a very authentick hand in Court, which has thes very words in it; viz.—[notwithstanding ye Spanish Ambassadors (or rather enuys) rantinge, yet he offers as a firme alliance, ports and fortresses in Flanders, nay, carte blanche, or what we please, if we will ioyne in ye confedracie and make warr in France], to which he adds [this has already much deuided us, and I doubt will more]. And that I beleue is more intended by ye Spaniard then an embargo, and consequently a war. I should be very unworthy of your Grace's favours if I were not highly satisfied with them, and more unworthy of them could I hope to meritt them."

Ormonde to Earl of Orrery.—"Dublin, 26 Jan. 1677. I am encouraged, by finding your lordship is of my opinion touching the securing of the harbour of Kinsale, to desire your assistance in so good a worke. The trouble I would giue you for the present is that you would make a computation of what your lordship conceives will serve to begin, and what weekly to continue, the whole, so as that it may not stand still. I know your lordship will take in all particulars, and therefore I forbear to mention any. Wee have two engineers, of which for one I mean Mr. Robinson, who I conceive to be very knowing; the other one Capt. Archer, who has had more practice, haueing been at ye takinge and defending of many places in the French service, an Irish man and a Papist, and yet one for whose fidelity I will answer, haueing had long experience of him. His eldest sonn is of his owne profession—I mean an ingeneer—and a major in the service of ye Prince of Orange. Hee himselfe is in the king's pay in England, and another sonn of his was sent to Virginia, upon Bacon's rebellion, to lay out somethinge of fortification there. These in their severall wayes will be usefull. Archer will have leasure to be constantly upon the place to oversee the worke, which the other cannot, haueing an employment in the office of ye ordnance that will take him intirely up, for though wee have no money I am upon credit fitting a marching train of artillery."

Earl of Orrery to Edward Denny, Esq., at Tralee.—"Castle Martir, ye 28th Janu. 1677. I doubt not but you knowe the probabilitie there is of his Maiestie haueing a warr with France, and I am sure you cannot but beleue, if that should happen, that the discontented natives will be forward to disturbe the peace of his Maiesties kingdom, and all his good subiects in itt. Wee are preparinge the best we can to whether such a storme, should God permit itt to fall on us; but in regard timely intelligence is essentially requisitt, and that the countie of Kierry is one of the most suspected parts, and alsoe that I knowe you to be zealous for his Majesties seruice, and verry actiue and vigilent, I write this expressly to yow, and send itt to Sir Boyle Maynor with a flyeing seale, to conuay it safely and speedely to yow, and to desire you earnestly and diligently to lay out for the early discouery of any designes against his Maiesties government which may be brewing in that countie, and by express messengers (whome I will pay) to giue me speedie notice if any thinge be discouered by yow which is considerable, and alsoe to doe this from time to time. Whoeuer yow shall employ therein that shall make discoueries which are materiall, I will both see them sufficiently rewarded and haue their names alwayes concealed. I haue severall such now abroad in other parts who have already brought me an original letter of an Irish officer in the French service, of a great familie neer this place, where he enioynes his correspondence to list men secretly, and to assure them they shall not want money. Earl of Orrery to Ormonde.—"Castlemartyr, ye 22
"of Feb. 1677. I presume to present your Grace with "a Treatise of ye Art of Warr, which I fynished last "spring, but could not get it printed off by reason of "ye cuts till ye beginning of this winter. I have two "excuses for this confidence; the one is that your "Grace was ye first generall who gave me a com"mission to be an officer, the other is that your Grace
"is ye last generall I haue ye honour to serve under,
"soe that your Excellencie haue a double title to this
"booke. Thos who are not accustomed to flattery
"assure me it has mett with a much better reception
"in England then I could reasonable hope it should,
"or then I feare it does deserve. I attribute wholly to its "being ye first booke on this subject that has bin
"published in our language, and therefore ye novelty
"more then ye treatise it selfe may be liked. Thos
"bookes sent me over stayed six weeks at Bristol, and "I have stayed 3 weeks for a conveniency to send this "to Dublin, which are ye causes why this meane
"tribute has bin noe sooner layd at your Grace's
"feet."

Earl of Orrery to Ormonde.—"Castlemartyr, the 10 of "June [1678]. From the time that I received ye honour "of your Excellency's commands concerninge the for"fications at Rincorran, I have not omitted my duty
"ther. Tho I doe not often trouble your Excellency
"with accounts of what progress is made, I haue
"every ten days an accounte from Capt. Archer (who "is very diligent) what they doe, and a draft of what "is done from ten dayes to ten dayes. But I never knew "till of late that ye lower batteries were generally "about 14 foot above high water marke at platforme
"high, at which I was troubled, because ye cannon
"in them must shoot under-mettle to doe execution on "any ships of ye enemy, for usually men of warr which "atempte shippinge in a harbour fall in about $\frac{1}{2}$ flood,
"that if in 2 or 3 houres they succeed not they may "have ye ebb to carry them out. And at ye water
"risinge about 14 foot, the cannon wilbe at $\frac{3}{4}$ flood
"about 17 foot higher than ye water, which is higher "than ye hull of most men of warr. I could not see "this in Mr. Robinsons plat, for in it was no proof "of ye batteries, nor indeed could be, because they "were neither to have rampart or graff. But when at "my desyr to Capt. Archer he sent me howe euery part "of ye worke did rise from ten dayes to ten, I found
"ye batteries were 14 foot high at platforme height,
"on which I writt instantly my apprehensions to him,
"and my thoughts that a battery might easily be raised "for 8 cannon neere high water marke, the lengthe of "ye curtaine 18 l., which would doe most execution.
"This is begun, but ye most part towards ye shoulder
"G. is a thicker and a harder rock then towards ye
"east end by ye shoulder K. But what Capt. Archer
"writt to me yesterday, and ye pla he sent me, and "my answer to his letter, I humbly present to your "Excellencie. And upon ye whole beg your Graces
"orders for the followinge particulars, and such others
"as your Excellencie shall judge fitt. First, whether "Capt. Archer shall begin to employ his masons and "labourers on ye bastions 1 & 2, that is, begin ye maine
"forte. Secondly, whether it be not more advisabile to "complate ye crowne worke on ye 4 sides MA., AE.,
"EL., and RN., before we goe on any thinge of ye maine
"forte; for tis the crowne worke only which is ye "security of ye harbour, and ye forte is to secure the "crowne worke from ye landward. 3rd. It is now
"time to know your Graces pleasure whether or noe
"your Excellencie will soone proceed on ye mayne
"forte, for if you resolute to goe on with ye forte, our "next worke must be on the ravelin 3, and ye bastions
"1 & 2 of ye forte. Whereas if your Excellencie will "not soone goe on with ye forte, in my humble
"opinion we should with speed goe upon ye shuttinge
"up of the crowne worke between N and M soe as to "make ye crowne worke defensible by land, as well as

"usefull for ye safety of ye harbour; and also that ye "works which shall shutt it up betweene N and M may "be, with as little charge as we can denise, cast downe
"again when ye maine forte is gone upon, the resolution "of carryinge of which on I hope and beg may not be "out of your thoughts. If ye present shuttinge up
"ye crowne worke be ordered by your Grace, and that "you thinke fitt to leave ye manner of doinge it to "Capt. Archer and your servant, we will contrive in
"ye best we can; and if this be your Excellencies "pleasure, I wish Mr. Robinson could be spared in "a few dayes to be with us, that we might also have "his advice, which to me is very desirable. Your "Grace will see how pressinge Capt. Archer is to haue "me to goe to Rincorran (but as to his opinion of "my skill I looke on it meerly as a compliment),
"and therefore, if I am able, I intend to goe rather
"then ye worke should be at a stand, or that my "little assistance and aduice should be wantinge. My "unhappy distemper is such that I am still carryed in "a chaire, and therefore cannot be carryed up staires
"that are not very broad and easy; my brother Shan"non therfore has provided me at his howse a lower
"rome, and all thos conveniencies which necessity has "made me inuent in my owne howse and his howse
"beinge but 8 mile from Rincorran, I intend to ly
"ther and goe in ye morninge early to Rincorran,
"and returne at night to my brothers. I therfore
"beg your Excellencies commands on the above par"ticulars, and that I may order ye sinkinge of that "battery for ye 8 cannon if I finde it compassable with
"noe greate expense, for that little battery wilbe highly "usefull. I beg also your Excellencies commands
"whether you will allow me then to name ye crowne
"worke, and what name your Excellencie will order
"shalbe giuen to ye forte. Ther has bin last weeke
"much heate and dispute betweene ye magistrats of "Kinsale and ye soldiery at Rincorran, and Capt. Archer;
"for workmen have bin arrested on ye works by execution
"out of ye Tolsell of Kinsale, which both Capt. Ar"cher and Capt. Hamon have resented, and ye arrested "person has bin rescued. The soueraghan also sends "his officers to wey bread, etc., within ye Crowne
"worke, and therefore their officers haue bin clapt up "on ye guard, which clappinge up on ye garde such "as are civill officers I did much dislike. I spent most "part of yesterday in hearinge their ugly disputes, and "at last I haue pacified all; but I beg your Grace to "know what priuiledge shalbe allowed to workemen
"within ye Crowne worke, and how ye magistrats,
"Capt. Archer, and Capt. Hamon shall be regulated as "to priuiledges within that place, which is within their "charter, but now ye king's forte. I haue made them
"agree that noethinge shalbe done by ye civill authori"ty against workemen or soldier before Capt. Archer "and Capt. Hamon haue notice, and noe thinge done
"by them against townesmen but on complaint to ye
"soverain. And I haue ordered that Capt. Hamons
"sergeant who committed on ye guard for 40 hours
"8 under officers ye soueraigne sent, should openly "acknowledge his fault and desyre ye corporations for"giveness, which both his Capt. and he are willinge
"should be done, for it was a very ill action. We doe
"very much want ye wheeles and axletrees which were
"bespoken at Dublin, for we haue ye bodys of carriages
"reddy at Kinsale for 40 ordnance, and I would as
"soone as I could gett ye cannon mounted on ye plat-
"formes, and both their brest works and embrasures
"finished, that somethinge might be compleated of ye "worke, and the harbour be secured. I humbly beg "your Excellencies pardon for this longe letter, and as "soone a signification of your commands as may consist "with your Graces conveniencie, least els ye work
"should be at a stand."

Michael Boyle, Primate and Chancellor of Ireland, to "Ormonde.—"Blessington, Aug. 17 [1678]. I must beg "your Grace's pardon that I forgot in my letter of "this dayes date to your Grace to give your Grace
"intimation that Sir Maurice Eustace being lately
"here, he tooke occasion to aske me whether I had "sent any order about putting Sir Rich. Bulkeley out "of the Com^{rs} of peace, according to your Grace's
"directions. I told him that I had, to which he re"plied that he doubted your Grace had bin misin"formed concerning him, for he had enquired into the "matter, and he found that Sir Richard Bulkeley went "to his parish church as well as to the convenicles,
"and he did beleene that if your Grace knew so much
"you would not deale more seuerely with him in that "particular than you would doe with many others.

"I made him no returne, but diverted the discourse to another subject. Now that affayre stands thus: I sent a warrant to the Haupier to prepare a writ for the seale to supersede Sir Richard Bulkeley; that warrant was returned me the same day that Sir Maurice spoke to me, but I have since forborne to put the seale to it vntil I know your Graces farther pleasure therein, for I supposed that your Grace's discourse to me concerning Sir Richard Bulkeley had bin vpon something that Sir Maurice had enforced you."

Earl of Orrery to Ormonde.—"Castle martyr, 29th of November 1678. I received last night at once the great honour of both your Excellencie's letters of the 23rd and the 26th instant. Your Excellencie's commands in them concerning Bantry Fort and Major Beversham's Company shall, with all diligence, bee punctually obeyed.

"There is noe place that I know of or can heare of in Kerry that is tenable and of consequence but Rosse; for I did believe (thill my cozen Ed. Denny better inform'd me) that Tralee, which held out so long a siege, was strong; but both his father, Sir Arthur Denny, and himselfe have made it a convenient country gentleman's house.

"I am very sorry to find by the honour of your Excellencies letter of the 23rd instant, that any haue attempted maliciously and cunningly to cast the false scandall on the Government, as that they wanted zeale and care for the preservation of the Protestants. I hope that such as haue attempted to cast the scandall on it will be punished for it.

"Possibly some honest men, who love the Government, being frighted with the daily alarmes, may have thought that the remedies not being soe hasty as the danger seemed pressing, may haue too much lamented that the motions of the Government did not keep pace with their desires, nor considering how many difficulties those in authority are to struggle with, the circumstances they are vnder being duely weighed. But maliciously and cunningly to asperse the Government merriits an exemplary punishment, which I heartily hope those guilty of it will not escape.

"I most humbly begg your Graces permission to assure you that, whatever former misunderstandings I might haue had the vnhappyenesse to be vnder as towards your Grace, yett, ever since the discourse your Grace had with my brother Burlington at my Lord Devonshire's concerninge mee, and ever since those letters you were pleased to oblige me with soone after your landing, I haue in all things vnder my little power as vnfeinedly endeavoured to make your Government prosperous as if that brother had bin in your Grace's station.

"I was, therefore, pressing in the beginning of this yeare, when most believed we should haue a quarrell with France, that the militia might be sett up, it being so great a security, and of soe little charge; and I did then presume to acquaint your Excellencie that severall who I know were fitt to supply the vacancies in it, had desired me humbly to recommend them to your Grace, but that I would not doe it till I had your Graces good liking to doe it.

"But to this I received no answer from your Grace, and therefore I was silent, for I am not an importunate solicitor in things merely of favour.

"Nor should I euer haue renewed the motion had I not been urged to it lately, both for his Majesties service and your Graces. For I saw that the method the raising the militia was putt into would neither be expeditious nor soe effectual as I am sure your Grace desires it should be.

"Since I think, without vanity, I may say, there are not very many which know better then I persons and the state of things in these western countyes. And experience had taught me, that when the militia was first raised, had I not bin armed with full authority, and bin very pressing, the Com^{ms} of array would never haue done the worke, and if then it had bin hardly compassable when we were quiett at home, and had only the Dutch for enemies, in degrees of proportion the difficulties would be vnconquerable when every country gentleman and Protestant out of a garrison goes to bed in feares.

"And since the militia is to be filld, and kept vp when filld, by the influence the Captains of it haue on the inferiour officers and private men, I too easily foresaw it affair, being managed only by the Com^{ms} of Array, would haue a very slow progresse and no expected resulte, for their number is 13 in "this county, and the quorum seven, five whereof must still, of course, be merchants, or men of much lower degree, and what interest such were likely to haue on the numerous gentry of this the largest county in all his Majestie's kingdoms was not hard to determine. The rest, though gentlemen of good quality, yett being really or in their own esteem equalls, the advances therefore could not be soe quick as the need seem'd to require.

"Your Graces long absence having much alterd persons and things, it was naturall enough to doe as your Grace did, refer it to a Com^{tee} of the Councell. But so few of any Lords who now sitt at the Board having euer lived in this province, and that one noble Lord onely who did (my Lord Chancellor) having not resided in it for above 2 prenteships of yeares, I did presume to think they might haue needed information.

"This I take the confidence to believe, had they commanded mine, the Militia might ere this haue bin in a better posture; but I love not to intrude where I am not call'd, and indeed, my Lord, I retired into Ireland, in hopes that I might spend the little life I haue remaininge in this solitude, but seeing the times grow cloudy, I was sendeing my wife for England, and intended to haue followed as these times did mend; but I was forced from those designs by the universall application which the poor Protestants made to me, and I assure your Grace they were made without my own seeking; and when I found that my humble applications to your Grace in their behalves was believed would be more effectual then their own, I could not in duty but stay and make them.

"Many were troubled, and I confesse I was one, that tho' the beginning of 7th the horrid plot was detected, yett till the 11th of November not soe much as a letter came for setting vp the militia, and when it came some of those to whom it was directed did not find it answer their hopes or feares. And though it was dated the 11th, yett they mett not till Tuesday last, the 25th instant, and when they were mett, they found many things soe lye in their way that they resolved to imploy 5 or 6 of their number to me, to desire my help and advice. They came here yesterday, and I assure your Grace I was surprized at it.

"It had not bin soe long before I had written that large letter to my L^d Chanc^r which he troubled your Excellencie and the Councell with, but that I still apprehended that representing what I thought could only doe the businesse, such representation might looke as I sought something for my selfe, or would I ever therefore haue made it, but in duty to my King, my country, and your Grace. This I solemnly protest; for had I affected to be in the streame of the world again, I could haue bin in it more advantageously in England then in any thing I could pretend unto in Ireland, and I should not lye did I assure your Grace that my best friends in England, and some in power, haue halfe fallen out with me for not taking there two implements better then the government of this province. But I had seen and felt enough of the world not to embarque into it again by my own choice.

"But possibly written assurances may not be soe convincing evidence of this truth as demonstration. Therefore I presume to acquaint your Grace that tho' the 6 gentlemen imployed by all the rest of the Com^{ms} of array, finding themselves at a losse how, with secrecy, to appoint rendezvous for the militia, and to order them as the King's service required, did more then five times presse me earnestly for my permission that they might move your Excellencie to name me for those ends, yett I as often flatly refused them.

"And because my L^d Chanc^r, in his letter to me of the 26th, intimates writes something, as if your Excellencie and the Lords had some thoughts of putting that employment on me, and having some blank commissions sent me to fill vp the vacancies of the commiss^{rs} officers vnder captaines; I most humbly and heartily begg your Grace and their Lordships to free me from that honour and burthen. Not but that if your Grace and their Lordships comand my best help and advice, to whomsoever your Excellencie shall comiss^{rs} for that end, I will most cheerfully obey in both, and as zealously as if I were to haue the honour of the success or to beare the burthen of the want of it; but really I would practically evidence not only that I sought not my selfe in what I writ to my Lord Chancellor, but also that I vndisguisedly

"covett to live in that retirednesse which both my mind and my body affects and needs.

"And if your Excellencie will allow me the favour while I stay in Ireland humbly to lay at your feet what I shall believe conduccible to his Majestie's service, your Grace's, and the quiett of my country, I shall faithfully doe it, and be as intirely pleased to see the peace and good government of the kingdome continued, as if I were wholly to engrosse the honour and benefit of it.

"I did not omit both to ask of my brother Shannon and others who were privately advised by a priest and other well affected Irish, to send vnto garrisons their best goods, what was the reason of their giving such advice; nay, I promis't myselve to one Irish gentleman of Kerry, who warr'd an English neighbour of his to desist from building (the Englishman who came on purpose out of Kerry to informe me of it) for the times were likely to be troublesome, that if he would discover any materiall thing of any designe of the Irish, that I would mediate for your Graces pardoning, concealing his name, and rewarding him. But all agree in one answer, viz., that these are distracted times; that there are many loose and neccessious people in the country, who are but too apt to breake into houses and to robb things of value, and beyond this none of them will speake, though never soe much promised or threatened.

"By the words of your Graces letter to me on this subject, I am apprehensive that some unhappy expression in my letter might have seem'd to make your Grace thinke I thought you looked on these advertisements as a jest; if they did, I am sure that was farr from my thought, and I meant to say that your Grace would not believe the priest was in jest, since he durst send my brother that advice.

"I do not thinke euer the late plott has been more talked of in all these partes then the businesse of Bennett's bridge, and the news of it dispersed by severall creditable persons who then coming from Dublin into these partes either lay or bated there. I will to-morrow send for some of these gentlemen who with their own mouthes told it mee, and, in obedience to your Graces commands, I will, in writing, returne you what they said.

"Yesterday, about 3 o'clock, afternoone, I receiued a letter from my brother Shannon; a branch of it I heere humbly present your Grace. I am confidently assured the thing is absolutely false, for had it been true, I should haue had expresses of it last night; however the noise is flown farr. I haue this morning, early, sent an expresse to my brother Shannon to secure the men, and to send to Captain Hodder for to know if he told this alarm-bearer what he said he did, that if he did not he may be soundly punished, for it is such confident lyes that does make men half distracted.

"I humbly begg to know of your Grace if lately one Mr. Fitzgerald, of the province of Connaught, assured your Excellencie that the plott would take effect, there were soe many great persons engaged in it, and that the Irish by the help of the French, would be masters of Ireland by March next, for this has lately bin written by a news writer of Dublin to two gentlemen of this county, and the letter itselfe has been read by divers, two of which, being honest men, come from beyond Bandon hither yesterday to assure me they themselves read the letter, and the noise of it has much amazed the people. I assured them I was confident it was a notorious lye, and bid them assure all they spoke with that I was confident it was soe. The letter was directed (as those two gentlemen told mee) to Lt.-Coll. Mead and one Mr. Briggs. I sent an expresse this morning to Lt.-Coll. Meade with a letter of which the inclosed is the copy; for I believe this one businesse well traced will find out those who make the people halfe madd, and they, if well punished, will deter others.

"The master of the Plymouth ship which came into the west, and made it the Exchange discourse at Corke that the Governors of Portsmouth and Dover were fiedd, I haue sent to stop, that he may be legally punished for raising such scandalls of such persons.

"The Provost of Bandon, and the chiefe of that truly Protestant Corporation, were heere with mee on Wednesday, and gave mee a most sadd account of that place. They haue not one pound of powder or bullet, all their platformes in their towers are fallen, their iron ordnance haue been gone they know not how, and the last great raines have carryed

"away two arches which supported neare fifty foot in length of their town wall. They did earnestly desire me that I would relieve them all I could, and what I could not doe, that I would mediate for them to your Excellencie.

"I admired their ordnance were gone they know not how, but they explained the expression thus. That in the beginning of the troubles in 1641, Sir W^m Hull and others who had ships lent them ordnance, and that they were carryed away without their consents by those who did pretend to be owners of them.

"I have this post writt to my brother Burlington to desire him to contribute to make vp their walls, I haue made them promise to make vp their platformes, and I haue six or 7 Iron ordnance which I kept for the safety of my family in the war, that I am ready to lend them to plant on their towers, in case your Grace gives me leave. And in regard they haue in that towne a good militia troop, & 2 or 3 foot companies, if they might haue one barrell of powder, and one of ball, with match proportionable for their militia, it might serve till more might be got.

"The Mayor of Corke hauing sent me the deposition of a soldier of the garrison that went formerly to masse, but now is an officer's servant, one musterd, that one Garrett Fitzgerald, a popish priest, had since Auguste last in his hearing often taught his parishioners that the king of England was only king of the protestants of Ireland, but the king of France was king of the papists; I sent him to goale. I haue writt severall other things to my Lord Chancellor, haueing too much tired your Grace, for which your pardon is beggd."

Viscount Shannon to Ormonde.—"Corke, 17 Dec^r 1678. I most humbly beg your Graces pardon for this confidence, which is occasioned by several letters I receiued from my brother Orrery about an account was given your Grace that I should recieue advice from a preist to send my plate out of my house to this towne. I do assure your Grace my brother much misunderstood mee, and much misinformed your Grace, for I neuer had advise or message or anything like it from any preist to send away my plate, and all I knew relating to this businesse is that a cousin of mine, called Dick Poore, living in a mile of mee, advised mee to send my plate to Corke, being I was alwayes ther myselve, and my house very open, and my servants very carelesse, and often rambling abroad, might giue encouragement to loose rogues to steale my plate; and one that was a preist's brother sayd hee gaue me good advice, for now and then there was but one servant left in my house. This I assure your Grace was every word that was sayd, without the least mentioning of a plott or anything that tended to it; so that I have nothing to say against any preist, and my cousin Dick Poore is a very good Protestant, and I am confident as little knowing in this wicked plott as myselve. Therefore I most humbly beg your Grace not to punish them with your commands to wait on your Grace at Dublin, for I know of no fault they haue committed, nor haue I a word to say against them, nor is my cousin Poore at present able to travayle to Dublin, haueing been dying of a cold these three weekes. I beseech your Grace to believe this reall account and pardon this tedious trouble."

Earl of Burlington to Ormonde.—"10th Jan. [1678]. The honor of your letre of the 21st of 10th found me laid vpp of the gowt, which has held me near 16 weekes, and falling most heauilye oppon my right hand and arme has made them as yett vlesse vnto me, soe as I am forced to make vse of a shee secretary to expresse the just sence I haue of your Graces fauor in the obliging expressions you vouchsafe me in it, and I hartilye wish that there had bin noe occasion giuen you to lenthen it with any other matter; butt much to my greefe I find that your Grace has receiued great dissatisfaction by my brother Orrerries late actings towards you, to which I was wholly a stranger till your Grace was now pleased to acquaint me with them, whose presumes on your pardon if I yett retain a hope that his intentions may proue less faulty then they yett seem to be. This I say nott to lessen his miscarriage, if it proue such, as your Grace conceaues it to be; butt a great part of the exception you take against him being for misrepresenting the state of thinges in Ireland to courtiers, parliament men, and others heer in England, it is possible a worse glosse may from thence be putt

"vpon his representations then he intended. Howeur, I have nott failed to lay that charge home to him in all the circumstances theroff as your Grace has made it to me, and haue thereby giuen him the opportunity to say to your Grace what he justly can in his owne vindication, or if he transmits it to me I shall offer it to your Grace, who will I hope doe me the justice to beleue that nott anye one action of mine shall contradict the professions I haue made you of a constant and faithfull seruice, which during my life shall be alwayes made good.

Primate Boyle to Lady Ranelagh.—"Dublin, Ap. 14, [16]79. I am infinitely obliged to your Ladyship for the honour of your Ladyships of the 8th instant, which I receaued yesterday, wherein you haue bene pleased to giue me the greatest argument of friendship that is expressible, by letting me know what in these busy times those who haue no kindness for me haue been pleased to speake to my disadvantage. To what your Ladship writes of Coll. Fitzpatrick, I must not deny but that I haue a respect and kindness for him; he was a neere relation to my wife; he is one whom I haue long bin acquainted with, and who hath bin ciuill to me by many obligations. I must acknowledge that he had a more then ordinary interest in this cuntry, and especially upon his owne cuntrymen; but I must inform you that he hath euer had disagreement with the titular Archbp. Talbot and his partizans, and (as I beleue) shockt them more then any one of his perswasion did in this whole kingdomes affayres. Standing thus betwene them, why it should not be reasonably supposed that I might make as good vse of him for the advantage of the protestant interest, and for his Majestie's seruice as he should influence to their prejudice, I cannot readily assigne a reason. But that occasion of offence is now remoued, for neere a weeke since he hath quit this place upon the commands which his Majestie sent ouer for that purpose vpon the address from the House of Lords. As to the Bills were sent ouer preparatory for a parliament here, which your Ladyship are pleased to tell me haue some reflection vpon me, I answer: the whole counsell that were in towne signed them as much as I did; every peticular paragraph and line of them were argued with all the freedom that was desired, as well at a committee as at the counsell table; and when they were transmitted hence they were submitted to such amendments and alterations as the king and counsell of England should think fit. And how the protestant interest in this kingdom should be designed to be prejudiced by those Bills is beyond imagination; they were to pass a Protestant counsell here, a Protestant counsell in England, a Protestant parliament in this kingdom, and what is more, a Protestant parliament whose fortunes were for the greatest part of them made up of the new and forfeited intrests in this cuntry. And how under the test and tryall of all these it could be possibly supposed that bills designing the prejudice of the protestant intrest should pass, seemes to me a kind of riddle which I cannot resolve. Perhaps indeed there may be differences, and by consequence mistakes, in opinion; and some may think one way best for the settlement of the intrest which others do not aproue; but that there could be any designe or intension to wrong the protestant intrest cannot be well conceaued. I must acknowledge that times are much changed and the face of affayres much altered since those bills were sent away; we had then no knowledge or suspicion of any plots and conspiracies by the papists, and therefore those measures which might haue been thought convenient at that time to perfect the final settlement of the English intrest may be very reasonably rejected now, and this lyes still before his Majestie and counsell to consider; but why this should haue any reflection vpon me, or vpon any other single person of the counsell, I cannot apprehend; but I find by some letters out of England, as I doe likewise by the honour of your Ladyships, that I am discoursed of there by very many that I am a great fauourer of the papists (whether it be vpon the occasion of those bills or no I cannot say), or vpon what other reason I cannot guess; truly I cannot recollect how the papists haue deserued any such kindness from me, unless it be by haueing bin as great a sufferer by them, euen from the beginning of the rebellion, as they could make me. But as to the objection. If by being a fauourer of the papists they intend that I am a

"fauourer of there religion, it is a scandall which I disdayne to answer, since my whole life, conversation, and profession from my youth up until this day hath bin a constant uninterrupted testimony against, to the utmost of my capacity. If they mean that I am a fauourer of there intrests in this kingdom, it can imply no less then that I am a traitor both to my religion and my cuntry, which is more uncharitable and seueren then the former; for to the former imputations this must likewise be added, that I am a mad man to. Few sober men designe against there owne intrest: that little fortune which I haue is for the greatest part of it vpon the new intrest; I haue many children, and relations, and freinds, and those not very inconsiderable whose being and subsistence depends vpon the acts of setlement and explanation; and for me at this time of the day (being about 64 years old) to decline the consideration of my selfe, my children, my freinds and relations, for nothing but a wayne, aery, and impossible supposition that I should expect a better provision for myselfe and them under an Irish-papist intrest then I now enjoy, must needs conclude that I stood more in need of helebore to cure my madness then of any other conuiction or reproofe. Besides, those who know how far I haue been publicly engagd against the pretensions of the Irish Intrest before the king and Councell in England, in my attendance vpon the act of setlement for the Protestant intrest in this kingdom (whereof my Lord of Orrerie is a competent witness), for I was then employed by the Lords Justices (whereof his Lordship was one) vpon that seruice, must conclude that I who went so far and was so successful against them in the greatest concern that I had in the world (viz^t there fortunes and estates), ought neuer expect any saffie, much less advantage, from there fauour.

"Another objection which I am informed is taken up against me is that my two employments of Primate and Chancellor are inconsistent in one person.* As to the primacy, I must confess it was not ambition that put me upon [obit.], nor any peticular benefit, for I was well enough before, and my advantage was not considerable thereby; but for reasons referring to the publicke it was thought fit that I should be recommended to the see, which I submitted to, though with greater reluctance then is supposed or will be beleied by some. But as to the inconsistency of them together, there is doubtless no other argument then for the inconsistency of the chancellorship with the Archbishoprick of Dublin, against which I heard no objection all the time that I was Archbishop of that see. Nor is there any difference in matter; for there lyes appeales equally from both vnto the king in chancery, and it euer hath been so where the Great Seal hath been comitted vnto either of those Archbishops, which hath been very frequent; and this satisfaction I haue to my selfe in that particular of appeales to the delegates (for the appeale is not to the Chancellor himselfe, but to such delegates as shall be appointed for the cause, who are usually constituted of some of the Judges, and of some eminent diuines and ciuill lawyers, and those are to be named by the consent of both Chief Justices, of the Master of the Rolls, and of the vice-treasurer, or of any two of them, whereof the vice-treasurer to be one), that euer since I had the honor of serueng the king in the condicon of Chancellor, which is now about ten years, I neuer yet had any complaints against the proceedings of the delegates, for all matters of this nature are managed by persons of quality of publick employment and in publick places. Madam, I am much out of countenance that I haue drawn this letter into such a tedious length, but I presumed to doe it for your

* On this subject Secretary Coventry writes to Ormonde as follows from Whitehall, April 8, 1679:—"I doubt not but my Lord of Ossory hath acquainted you what hath passed in the Lords' House concerning Ireland, and I haue severall aduertisements there are intentions of bringing in complaints into our house. Theyre open complaints are against my Lord Chancellor, but you haue your share by consequence. Amongst these complaints none is aggravated more, and that by reason of consideration, then his endeavouring to encrease the grante charges of Church and State in his owne family. They think Primate in the Church and Chancellor in the State to bee too much in his owne person, and if to this he adde the prime place of iudicature in the law hee given to his some-in-law, the whole gouernement of spirituall and temporal is his, in that the present aduancement of Sir W. Davis would make that flame that already smokes, and it is the opinion of all your freinds here it will bee of grante prejudices both to my Lord Primate and to my Grace; and for the reason I told you in the enclosed note vpon this subiect some posts agoe. I do not beleue the King in a disposition to agree to his promotion, though you should persist in it. But else I beleue whoeuer you shall nominate will take place, though at present be disapproved of the two named in my letter. My Lord of Essex is not only Commissioner of the Treasury, but is of the Cabinnett council and seemeth to bee in very good grace."

"Ladyships satisfaction, and for the satisfaction of such who shall discourse to your Ladyship upon that subject; and I cannot doubt but since your Ladyships goodness gaue me that occasion for it, your abundant charity will pardon it."

Michael Boyle to Ormonde.—"Ap. 30, [1679]. I think it would be a difficulty vpon your Grace to write vpon any subject and not to write all that the subject would beare. Your Grace's letter to Mr. Secretary is so full to your purpose that very litle may be added to it, or substracted from it, except in that one particular which refers to me; wherein vpon the consideration of present circumstances I must presume to differ from your Grace's opinion, and humbly propose that my Lord Arran may be named single as Deputy if my Lord of Ossery doth not come, against which there can be no other exception but his relation to your Grace, and if that be looked vpon as an argument of any force, then it must follow that whosoever shall be named by your Grace will be disallowed there, so that your Grace doth vpon very good considerations leane his M^{ty} to his owne choyce for Justices. But if your Grace should think fit that my Lord Arran should have a colleague, perhaps my Lord Granard may be now more acceptable, or free from exception because he was once justice then many others. As to my owne particular, I must acknowledge that I have not the least inclinations vnder the present juncture to appeare more to the world then necessary I must, vnless it may be for your Grace's service."

"Pardon me, My Lord, that I do not understand the connexion of those words in the fift line of your letter—And it hath so fallen out that vpon my arrivall I have still bin sufferd to be quiet—I beleue the transcriber hath omitted some wordes which render the meaning somewhat difficult."

"Your Grace's letter to my lord of Orrery is mightily obliging, and will certainly beget your Grace a whole volume of acknowledgements."

Michael Boyle to Ormonde.—"August [1679]. I have receaved a lamentable letter from Sir Brewster from Dingle; he complains mightily that the people in that place are so apprehensive of the Turkes that they haue quit there houses and the cntrey in a greate degree; and if your Grace will not recover them there heartes againe by sending a company into Dingle to countenance them against the attempt of that formidable enemy, he doubts that parte of the cntrey will be vterly forsaken."

"Your Grace as I remember did promise them a company; and that Corporation vpon your Grace's promise have raysed 20^l to fit vp that castle for the receipt of the souldiers (as he tels me). I humbly presume to become year Grace's remembrancer in that particular, for certainly there is not a place in all Kerry that stands more in need of a company then Dingle."

"I begin my journey towards Droghedah vpon Munday next, and hope to be returd vpon the Saturday following. If I may recuue the honor of your Grace's comands, there shall not any person living be more punctuall in observing them."

The letters of Sir Robert Southwell are among the most important and interesting in this portion of the collection.

Southwell was born at Kinsale in 1635, and was distantly related to Ormonde, by whom he was much trusted and consulted in confidential affairs. Through the Duke's influence, he was appointed in 1664 one of the Clerks of the Privy Council in England, and by continuous letters he communicated to Ormonde when in Ireland all the important political and general intelligence of the day.

Intimation of the statements made by Oates to the Privy Council, on the 28th Sept. 1678, as to the alleged plot and intended assassination of the King and Ormonde, was despatched to the latter by Southwell on the same night in the following letter, still extant, in this collection:—

Sir Robert Southwell to Ormonde.—"28 Sept. 1678. 'Tis now after 11 at night, and till now almoste the Council haue been sitting and I dispatching away 6 warrants to seize soe many Jesuites for a design to take away the life of the King, to begin rebellion in Scotland, and the like in Ireland, which was to begin with the death of the Duke of Ormonde, contrived by the A. B. Talbott and 4 Jesuites imployd therein. "All this information when the Council satt on it in the morning looked ridiculous, when one Dr. Tongue gave in the informations he had got from one Oates, who from Protestant had turned Jesuite and now lately repented and flew off to discover these things."

"But when he himselfe came this afternoone to tell his tale, with all the particulars of it, the Lords stood amazed, and could doe noe lesse than send for those he vpon oath accused as comyrdes, Pickering, Ireland, etc., and Dr. Fogerty."

"And Sir George Wakeman is alsoe wanted to attend the board to-morrow, for the counsell will sitt on the Sunday."

"By the next post I may haue time and better foundation perhaps to enlarge on this subject to your Grace."

Among the letters connected with Southwell's retirement from office in England, in 1679, and the arrangements with his successor, are the following:

Southwell to Ormonde.—"London, 6th Decem^r [1679].

"The enclosed letter from Mr. Francis Gwyn is to accompany the news of my surrendering to him yesterday my place of Clerk of the Council. I did acquaint your Grace this last summer of my [oblit.] therein, and I have sinse been casting about with some care to find a man devoted to the Crown, and who would be obliged to be my rival in zeal to your Grace, which were two indispensable points that I sett my heart upon; and having lately mett with this gentleman, whom I knew well fixed in the first point, I soon discover'd that no relation to my Lord Conway, nor acquaintance by that meanes with my Lord Ranelagh, had the least impression upon him, but that he was full of acknowledgments to your Grace of favour done him, and resolved to do all things that might merit the continuance thereof. I did not know untill Wednesday night whether his Majesty would gratify me and accept of him. But the joint application of my Lord of Ossory and Mr. Seymour his kinsman had an [oblit.] and as to me with a circumstance [oblit.] very fond of. For I was on my own account unwilling to be thought a deserter in this cloudy time, and as little willing to cast any reflexion upon the service by what I did herein, and therefore my first request was, that his Majesty would vouchsafe me some employment in his service abroad, and in the mean time to lett me sett what I had bought towards the discharge of my debts. And his Majesty was pleased accordingly to acquaint the Board that he designed me for employment abroad. So that I am still as a candidate to his service, and many wishing joy to the promotion that is intended me. I beg pardon that I do so particularly acquaint your Grace with my private case, but having now for more than fifteen year labour'd with fidelity, I was willing to withdraw without reproach; and I thank God my enemys at Whitehall are as few as my friends, which is some good fortune, and I go with a resolution to be always ready at his Majestys call, at home or abroad, whenever he shall think fit."

"I purpose about March to convey my family to Kingsweston, to step myself from thence to Kinsale, and soon after to kiss your Grace's hand at Dublin. And his Majesty has allowed me, when I depart from hence, to transfer the care of my place in the Excise Office to Mr. Blythewayte; and now my principal care must be how to extricate myself from debts, for till those be overcome my mind can not be at rest. "Mr. Gwyn gives me 2,500^l. But the place is much better than when I bought it."

"I have the honour of your Grace's of the first instant, and observe how the plot begins to ferment, or at least the informations to encrease on that side."

"Certaine there are printed here in one forme a multitude of petitions dispersed into the several countys [oblit.] confided to certain gentlemen therein, to go from parish to parish, and not onely to gather hands, but to set down those that refuse, that their good qualitis may in convenient time be made known. "The hands to these petitions in each county are to be cut off and pasted to one copie, and brought up by ten gentlemen from each county, and so presented. "That in Essex there are already neer [oblit.] thousand hands, and I am told that to-morrow the Confederate Lords, under the character of councillors by birth, will address to his Majesty, after coming from chapel to sett forth in a few settled words the danger his royal person is in from the Papists, and to advise him to ascertain the meeting of the Parliament. "Wee shall see what to-morrow will produce. In the mean time it is now in every bodys mouth that these Lords have not onely the concurrence of the Duke of Monmouth, but the interest of the Prince of Orange, that all cry allowd for a Parliament. And Penn told me plainly this day that he saw plainly so much extremity intended on this syde, as well as on that of

"[oblit.] that he resolved to withdraw himself from all manner of meddling, since things to him appeared violent and irreconcilable.

"This day the Irish Committee met, and having some foresight how the Bill of Confirmation would by some good friends of your Grace be called the Bill of unsettlement [oblit.] was. I got Mr. Secretary early there with your Grace's letter, to testify how little you were concerned in the fate thereof. The Lord Chancellor also came there, who shewed those notes your Grace had formerly seen, and when your Grace's letter was read after the Bill, it was observed there was no great difference between your Graces judgment and theirs. So that they have agreed to [oblit.] that this Bill be layd in the chest, and that it be left to the Parliament when they meet there to propose what they think fit.

"I confess I rejoyce much in that fortunate letter of your Grace's, which was the same formerly shewn by me to the Lord Chancellor, and Lord [oblit.] as I told your Grace.

"As for the other Bills, copies, [oblit.] appointed to be made thereof, and given to the Lords, and for such Bills as are taken from the pattern of England, the difference, where any is made, is to be shewn; and this is all that past.

"I thank your Grace for remembering my Lord Courcy, and on Monday I hope to meet Sir Cyrill Wyche about Rincorran."

Francis Gwyn to Ormonde.—"London, December 6th 1679. After my allegiance to his Ma^{ty}, it was made an indispensible article that I should be an humble servant to your Grace. And vpon these termes, soe suitable to the Rules of honor and of my owne inclinations, I come to succeed Sir Robert Southwell in his employment of Clerk of the Council.

"His zeal for your Grace's service I shall indeavor to make my pattenne, as your Grace is the great one of all good subjects. Therefore I doe with a perfect and steddly resolution devote my selfe to your Graces commands, and shall always approve my selfe you Graces most humble and most obedient servant FRANCIS GWYN."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"Spring Garden, 17 Feb. 167⁹. It was agreed at the Cabinnett on Sunday night that I should goe in quality of Envoye Ex^{ra} to the Duke of Brandenburg, and that with all speede, in order to some alliances in those parts, to knitt in some better understanding the interest of England with them, and Holland together.

"Thus much I heare without dores, having not yett entered into the knowledge of my instructions. But I perceive the thing arises from the Prince of Orange, and that I must goe thither, and from him derive a good part of my instructions.

"This expedition overthrowes all my private concernes for the time it will last, and altho they tempt me with a dispatch of all in 2 or 3 months, yett I know what it is to reckon without myne host. My Lord Sunderland, who moov'd the matter to me, would not lett my owne concernes stand in the way; nor did I much struggle when he once told me that his Ma^{ty}s service required me, to which I must ever be devoted and will sacrifice.

"The Treasury here seeme at this time a little propitious to me in considering what service I did in the recovery of the Queene's portion, and I think they will doe me some good turne.

"I have not any thing more to enlarge vpon at present."

Ormonde to Mr. Gwyn.—"Dublin, 24 Dec^r 1679. Yours of the 6 of this month informes me in a very obliging manner of your coming into Sir Robert Southwell's roome in the kings owne immediate service, and the particular advantage I receive by gaining one and not losing another worthy friend. I imbrace the offer and profession you are pleased to make of your friendship, which I shall no longer expect you should continue to mee then whilst you find mee in all events stedy to the service of the Crowne and just in my retournes to you. To your letter of the 12 imparting transactions on that side you will expect no other answer then my thanks, and yett I shall pray the continuance of such informations, because they do not barely divert, but may often guide mee in my station. I will giue order that you shall be constantly informed of all that shall passe here of moment; for what has past no body can better informe you then Sir Robert Southwell; and I hope you will be appointed to attend the Com^{es} for the affaires of this kingdom constantly, which I conceive will more facilitate dispatch then that your fellows "should take their turnes and be put to spend a good part of their quarter in lookeing over and understanding what past in the former. If I shall giue this as my opinion to Mr. Secretary, I know not whether I am to ask yours or your brethrens pardon for it.

"As Sir Robert Southwell is caution for the performance of your part of the friendship hee has contracted betwixt us, so let him be for mee that on all occasions I will bee your very affectionate, humble servant"

Ormonde to Southwell.—"Dublin, 24 Decemb^r 1679. Yours of the 6, 9 and 13 came all in one post barke, so long wee were kept from knowing these transactions on that side which must produce some great change. God send it may be to the better.

"At my first reading the beginning of yours of the 6, where you acquaint mee with your demission to Mr. Gwin, I began to cast up what I was like to loose by the change; for such thoughts will naturally have the precedence, lett us pretend to as much generosity as wee please. But by degrees equitable considerations began to take their proper place, and I now find it is not just I should be sorry for what my friend finds ease and convenience by. So that I can hartly congratulate your satisfaction, and that my sonn had a part in obtaining it for you. I have returned what I think I ought to two of Mr. Gwin's letters, and proposed not only to him but to Mr. Secretary Couentry that hee might be assigned to the attendance on the Irish Com^{es}; my reasons you will be made acquainted with by both. I aske no more of Mr. Gwin then the first character you giue him, of a man thorowly devoted to the Crowne, for I have ill luck and worse conduct if I do not make such a man my friend even against the [oblit.] stations of alliance or former acquaintances.

"The letter of mine you put Mr. Secretary in mind to produce at the com^{es} was very seasonably read; and if speeches against the Bill of Confirmation shall be made at the Report with implied reflection on those that sent it, I hope it may there be read againe. It is hard that any of those Lords should not allow any body but themselves to have a worse opinion of and lesse kindness for Papists since the discovery of the plott then they had before; the opportunity of manifesting mighty zeale against the Papists by declamations against the bill that seemes, and but seemes, to do some of them some justice was too visible to be [oblit.] when private interest came into the ballance also. If wee have a Parliament here, it is most like to be about the time you propose to passe over and see this place. In that case I suppose you may without inconvenience be chosen for Kinsale, and giue mee leau to send for a letter to haue you sworn of the Privy Council."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"24 Feb. 167⁹. The Duke and Dutchesse arrived this day at Whitehall; both very well, and received with all demonstrations of joy. But the king did forbid any expression to be made in the City by my Lord Mayor, yett at this end of the towne the Bells are ringing and the Bonfires numerous.

"Monday next is assigned for my day of departure, but before that time I hope to write to your Grace, as his Ma^{ty} I think alsoe will in my favour, being thereunto incited by the Lords of the Treasury, who are so convinced of my care and merit in the matter of the Queenes Portion, that they advise his Ma^{ty} to forgiue me 751. per ann. of my Quitt Rents in Ireland, which it seemes is the only method left whereby I can haue any gratification, and altho I am sensible this will not sound well in Ireland, yett if I stay till I offend noe body I may continue to labour 15 yeares more, and never be the better for serving his Ma^{ty}. I doubt not but your Grace will concur with a powerful warrant and authority for the thing, and obserue to those that oppose it, whether they haue not in soe many yeares of equal service benee better gainers by his Ma^{ty}s bounty then this amounts unto.

"I have soe long lookt after Sir James Shanes deduction about the 12,000l. that I was even tyred with a vague solicitation before this Brandenburg adventure tooke me off; but I hope if your Grace doe but enlighten the Lords of the Treasury in it, their diligence and authority will bring it to a period."

William Blathwaite to Ormonde.—"Whitehall, 6th of March 1679. I humbly take leau to acquaint your Grace that Sir Robert Southwell sett saile for Holland on Wednesday the 3d instant, towards the Court of Brandenburg, and that before his departure he had "left with me all the papers that were in his hands relating to your Grace's affairs, which according to his directions I shall keep and dispose as your Grace's commands and your service shall require.

"The great hurry Sir R. Southwell was in upon his departure hindred his giving your Grace this account."

Francis Gwyn to Ormonde.—"London, Jan. 27th 1677. Upon my coming to towne last night I received the honour of your Grace's favorable reception of the tender of my services, which I have intirely devoted to your Grace; and although with great submission I must acknowledge my want of experience, and a great many other good qualifications which my predecessor was master of, might render him more capable, yet I must beg pardon to vy with him in a stedy resolution and ready obedience to your Grace's commands.

"I most humbly thank your Grace ffor the good opinion you have been pleased to entertain of me in designing me to attend the Comitte of Irish affairs. I have already wayted on my Lord of Ossory to beg the flavor of his discoursing with Mr. Secretary Coventry in order to it; and I hope in a little time to giue your Grace a farther account, being very ambitious of being employed in an affair where I may more frequently expect your Grace's directions and commands.

"I cannot give your Grace any perfect account as yet of the proceedings; but I find there hath very little been don (except giving out orders), since the last I presented to your Grace, in the Committee for suppressing popery, the Comissions to the severall countys being yet in hand and not perfected till there is a regulation made of the justices of Peace in each county, which is likewise now under consideration.

"I have inclosed His Majesty's speech upon the prorogation of the parlement, and the successe and answers to the petitions from severall places your Grace will meet with from other hands.

"The arrivall of his Highnesse suddenly out of Scotland is much talked of, and there seems some ground ffor it.

"By the next I shall be able to give your Grace a more perfect account of the proceedings of Council. And humbly beg this addition to your Grace's flavors, that you will please to believe that the profession I have made is with all the sincerity, and the resolution of resigning my selfe to your Grace's service shall be kept with all the strictnesse that any man is capable of."

From the present part of the collection it appears that the Duke of Ormonde and Sir Robert Southwell entertained the project of having published under their supervision a history of the affairs of Ireland from the year 1641, and on this subject we find the following in the correspondence:—

Southwell to Ormonde.—"[London], 9th October 1677.

"I hope your Grace received the paper I sent relating to the Prince of Orange. His Majesty read it here with great attention, saying that, in the lump, hee had heard of some dissatisfactions towards his nephew, but the particular sources of it were never made plain to him before, and he fear'd that even his nephew was not sensible of all that did concern him therein. The paper was drawn by one Mr. Hill, who has been, for some months, lately on that side. It was he that writ the Zealander's Choice, being then minister to the English at Flushing, for which the States ordered his banishment, as a thing judged by them of too much service, in that conjuncture, to England. But, since his late returne, hee was enjoyed to correspond with his friends on that side, and especially to find out the general opinion touching the Prince's coming over. Whereof, what his advices amount unto and what is put down to his Majesty at Newmarket your Grace has here in the inclosed paper, which I hastily took, having his allowance to communicate the same to your Grace, for whom (though vknown) hee has a great estimation, as you will see. But first, as to the Prince's coming over, when we heard that the States made some kind of pause thereupon as a thing altogether new, and they not consulted therein till the day before the arrivall of the yachts from hence. It was said by Mr. Secretary [W.] that the whole business of the Prince's coming arose from himselfe, and without any invitation from hence. And as to the point of the marriage, it is a matter altogether as yet in his Majesty's brest. A little time will now explain the whole.

"I suppose your Grace has heard of this Mr. Hill I mention, and has seen his book of the Zealander's Choice. He is a man of very good learning, and one that is often with mee, and knows very well how the world goes. And being a man acquainted with books, and with the press, and meeting (among many other things) with a manuscript writing the affaires of Ireland, from 1641 to 1660, in about 24 sheets of large paper, and pretty close writ, hee told mee hee had never met with soe great a vindication of the late King, in reference to the affairs of Ireland, or of your Grace's government, as in those papers, which he left with mee to read. But I, doubting my own capacity, did think Peter Walsh would be much a better judge. And hee, having read them over, does assure mee that 'tis an excellent history for the truth of all those transactions. And hee could heartily wish, for your Grace's sake, that it were put in print. Vpon this testimony thereof I discoursed farther with Mr. Hill, and was in hopes that Mr. Walsh would have dined here with him this day, or have conferred vpon this subject. But hee was hindred to come. However, this is the result of my conference with Mr. Hill: hee says he has leasure and good will, and if your Grace think fit, he will take upon him to draw forth, in a more proper and acceptable stile, the whole matter contained in those sheets. That as he draws forth every sheet the same shall be sent to your Grace for approbation and amendment before he goes to the next. And hee will first alsoe consult here with Mr. Walsh as hee goes on. And finally that he will take care to see it printed as it ought to bee. And, says hee, when this is done, all I shall expect for my recompence shall bee only his Grace's recommendacion and good offices for mee with his Majesty. I told him, as to this part, I would be answerable if the work went on, that hee should not be a looser. Hee does not tell mee who writ these papers, but says it was a person of Ireland who is now dead, and that in time I shall know his name. I guess the papers came casually into his hands, but soe as that they are now his owne. Thus your Grace sees what I here represent. And 'tis left in your own choice freely to say what you think best. I will only add thus much, that Mr. Hill is master of a clear and perspicuous stile, and a man indefatigable in whatever hee is to doe. And I conceive your long life and many years of employment, and variety of fortunes, will deserve a little care, even from your selfe, to see that justice be done. Since every man is a debtor to his family, and 'tis not enough to leave great heaps of materials behind, if they must be left to the mercy of those who shall not employ them aright; therefore I am soe far in the other extreme that I would even press and importune your Grace to have somebody capable of the work, imployd in nothing else (while you are in the Government there, and have all papers about you), to write the memoirs of your whole life, and if not to the world, yet to bequeath them to your family. I know your Grace will pardon my presumption herein, as being assured that I doe it with a faithful mind and for your Grace's service."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"[London], 16th October, 1677.

"Your Grace will here inclosed see how far beyond my last motion touching Mr. Hill and the peece I told you off, Peter Walsh does go. Tis surely a matter worthy of your consideration, and as such I will attend your answer in it."

Friar Peter Walsh to Southwell.—"[London], 16th Oct. 1677. I am right sorry it was not in my power to meet Mr. Hill according to the appointment you had made. For I must confess that brief history of the main affairs or rather intrigues of the late wars of Ireland, which you had from him, would in my opinion be more for the vindication as well of his late Majesty as of his Grace the Duke of Ormond than any papers I have yet seen. It wants nothing to make it extraordinary fit for the press but the castigation of the phrase or style by a man of so much leasure, affection, and mastery of the language as Mr. Hill is. You tell me he hath both the former, that is, leasure enough, and good inclinations also to the thing, if encouraged; and I know myself, by what I read of his some few years since, that he is master of an excellent stile. Besides, I remember you have told me that he is a healthy, strong man, and of indefatigable labour. All which when I had considered, I thought this also further, that he might be a very fit man, and perhaps the fittest of any, all circumstances considered, to undertake a far greater worke of that subject; I meane the history at large of that

"whole unfortunat war, both as to the military part and politic designs, and all transactions relating to it. This I have the more seriously reflected on, because I see there is nothing of that nature to be expected from Doctor Floyd, though otherwise the most excellent and fittest man I know to undertake it, if he were not infinitely slow, irresolute, and weary presently of composing. He hath, his true, prepared all the materials, that is got together all the books and papers necessary to begin and goe through with such a work—nay, he has in his own cabalistic short hand even a diary of that whole war—but after all, I have no kind of hopes that he will put pen to paper so much as to begin the work itself. Which is the reason I could wish with all my soul you would effectually represent to his Grace my opinion of this whole matter. First, of that small tract of four and twenty sheets in writing, (peradventure in print it would not much exceed twelve or thirteen sheets), that I doe think it a very fit and necessary forerunner of the history at large; and no time to be lost in keeping it from the press. It will be every man's money, because so short and clear. Besides, it will the much more be valued and sought for by reason it goes through all the years and main affairs, from the very beginning of the war to the ending of it by the surrender of Galway to the Parliament forces. As for the design I conceive the author of that piece had in writing it (whoever he was, and I am sure he was in that work an honest, just man to all sides), an indifferent person would thinke it was no other all along than both to iustifie and magnifie the Earle and Marquis of Ormonde as he deserved. Next of the polishing and refining the style of it by him who is the proprietor, Mr. Hill, as one that can doe it exactly according to the mode of this age, in the shortest and clearest periods: and of his abilities, fitness, and readiness to vndertake the larger work, if his Grace approve of it, and command me to put the materials into his hands, for Doctor Floyd will be content with all his heart, as having no leisure nor hopes indeed to make the intended or designed vse of them himself.

"Lastly, that his Grace cannot purchase at too deare a rate the time and abilities of such a man as were qualified for so necessary and so much desired a work.

"This is what I pray you to represent by this very poste of my opinion of this matter. To which also if you will add, that I heartily wish his Grace may get into his own hands Mr. Bellings history as soon as may be, and, if it be possible, the Protestant Bishop of Meath's too, I shall heartily thank you for it, and his Grace will take the speediest and best course may be to speed in both. I think there can be no more desired, besides what we have already, to begin and promise the exactest history that could be wished."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"[London], 10th Nov. 1677. Yesterday [Peter] W[alshe] and Mr. Hill dined with mee. I returned him the manuscript, and hee will fall to work upon it, in the manner I have already mentioned; and they are to dyne with mee once a fortnight at farthest, for the better comparing of notes. I did venture, with Mr. Hill, into a discourse of the whole subsequent history, as mentioned to your Grace, for in this point nothing had been said vnto him before; but he was not prepared for any other answer in that matter, though I gave him prospect of requital, than that hee would first goe thorow with this small piece, and, if therein hee could acquit himselfe to your Grace's approbation, hee would then better know how to frame his thoughts to the greater book; and I think his answer is not much amiss."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"[London], 31 June 1679. Our Zeland friend is invited over againe to be a professor at Leiden. He is very well bent to pursue that worke I sent your Grace so long agoe touching the Irish transactions, and hath read many things since upon the same subject, soe as to be able to enlarge what he hath already done. If your Grace can have any leisure to see those sheets, so as to say whether the thing be worth your encouragement or noe, I shall be glad to give him answer, for he seames willing to goe on, and gett the whole printed on your syde when it is done."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"The 5th July. I am told that now the press is at liberty that one Dr. Burlace, who lives about Chester, is actually printing that narrative of the Irish Rebellion which I sent your Grace, and which Mr. Hill intended to file over. This I had heard before; but saw it verified by some epistle writ by one Mr. Piggot, who is chaplain to the Earle of Darby, that corresponds with him, sending a long fustian apologie by way of answer to the libell in February last against your Grace, which the said Dr. on the other side advised him to put in print; but I have desired Mr. Muls to obstruct it, for that it excuses the matters that are objected, and disproves none, tho' they are notoriously false."

Southwell to Ormonde.—"[London], 10th Jan. 1679. I had lately a visit from [Peter] W[alshe], who desired me to peruse a long letter he had writ to fh. [Duke of Ormonde], wherein he bemoaned the not having heard any thing since his being on that syde, and the comfort he should have to receive a few lynes, but acknowledging in the mean time that he did receive the effects of former favour punctually continued unto him. I did upon discourse so convince him of the inconvenience that might happen either by his writing or receiving of answers, that he presently flung his letter into the fire. And further, to prevent any inconvenience that might fall out in this busy time, he promised to search over all his papers for any letters he could find, having of himself, a year ago, burned all, as he thought, but one. Yesterday morning he came to me again, shewing me two, which he had found, leaving them in my hand to burn or dispose of as I thought fit, resolving to extinguish every shadow of inconvenience that way.

"The first of them is dated from Whitehall, 21 Nov^r 1668, where somewhat is toucht of the forged authority of J. Tjaaffe] (who was brother to the Earle of Carlingford), also of the malice of mn. and the Papists then raging against him.

"The next letter is from Clonmell, 30 Aug. 1674, touching upon the recommendation of a certain writer to Sir John Duncomb; then of his kindness to the Remonstrators, who have been constant, and pitying those that were compell'd to retract, enlarging upon the interest of the English government, to support those that were well affected to it. Then mention is made of a large letter sent to the Lord Lievtenant, etc.

"These two letters he has left with me to dispose of as I thought fit, not thinking in his own opinion, nor I much in mine, that they deserve the fire. However, I keep them in my hands for a time, and to do him right, he was heartily concern'd to do everything that I thought advisable in that point.

"I suppose your Grace has seen the Irish History put forth by Dr. Burlace, which, being a quite different thing from what Mr. Hill had under his hand, [Peter] W[alshe] was very inquisitive to know whether your Grace would never think more of that matter, for if you thought the continuance of what I sent worthy of the labour, Mr. Hill, though now fixed in Holland, would be content to carry it on."

A key to cyphers used in the correspondence between Southwell and Ormonde is furnished by decipherments in the Duke's hand in some of the letters from the former. From these the following are extracted:—

The character of the correspondence with Colonel Cooke is exhibited by the following:—

Ormonde to Colonel Cooke.—"Dub., 20th of March [16]78. According to our new way in correspondencies of this nature, let vs leave out the formalities of titles in the beginning and subscriptions at the end of our letters. I doe not wonder that yours of the 8th instant is the first I had from you a good while, or of intelligence which you can best judge when it is most usefull to your friends. You were in the right when you supposed some of those papers you sent me would be omitted by others, as that remarkable one concerning Whitebread was; he seems to be another Clancy in divinity, and like him is coming towards his proper period. In all your long letter I find not one word of horse, hawke, or hound; not that I believe you have reformed your course of life, but other things fill your head, and, perhaps, will doe till buck hunting comes in, but then your old road will take place. I am here in my old station, pelted at on all hands; time was I was some where beleev'd too much an enemy to French and papists, now I am said to be absolutely at their service, but I feelee my selfe just as I was."

Colonel Cooke to Ormonde.—"Wednesday, May 14. 79. The Committee of both houses being mett, instead of theirs proceeding to adjust the methods in order to the tryalls, the Commons desyred an exposition of their last nights resolve in the case of the Bishops, that they might playnly and cleerly understand in what cases they should, and in what cases they should not sitt and vote. The Lords there present gaue their sense, derind from the debates of the houses and words of the resolve, but for their conelusive satisfaction promis'd to report their doubt to the house, and did so, where the vnanimous interpretation was, that in all cases relating to law the Bishops are to sitt and vote, but when judgment on life and death is to be given, then they would withdraw. The rest of the day the Lords spent in perfecting and finishing the Bill for tryall of Peeres in the intervall of Parliament, which they ordered to be sent doune, and so adjorn'd, it being too late to begin any new busyness. The Commons seem'd at first to answer the King's spur with greate metle, in relation to setting forth a flete; but after the Lords had made and declar'd the interpretation, they could on a suddaine, adjoining that important debate so necessary for the nations safety, and so remote a day. For althings else relating to that house, I humbly refer your Grace to their paper of votes.

"Thursday 15. When the Committee of both houses mett, that pertended expeditious way of dispatch proved a delatory one, for the Commons not having reported the Lords declaration of their sense in relation to the Bishop, which for want of time was omitted, instructed they were tyed vp by their instructions not to proceed in any other matter till full satisfaction was given in that of Bishops, which advantag my Lord Privy Seale presently tooke to arraigne this new expeditious way of a Committee, when had they trod in the old track of conferences all had bin quickly adjusted. But since he saw no prospect of such a settlement of aflayres as was propos'd, he moud that they might appoynt a day for the tryall of the 5 Lords. For it had no small reflection on the Supreme Court of Judicature that they should be ignorant of formes and methods they ought to observe in Judicature; but the whole nation greedily expected the tryall, also the Lords themselves had petition'd for it, nay, the Commons had told them they were redy for prosecution, so that the fault would singly lye at their doore, and how could they answer it to Magna Charta that the King's free subjects should be vnder so long a durance without being try'd? But his Lordship hapned to be interrupted by a Bill of the Commons sent vp for reingrossing the Records that had bin burnt in the Temple, which being read and order'd for a 2^d reading, my Lord Privy Seale resumed his discourse, pressing for a day to be fixt for the Lord's tryall; but the Lord President, after he had magnified the greatness of that

"Lord's parts, his courage and zeale for justice, craue leaue at this time to differ, considering how important a thing it was to settle that doubt of the validity or invalidity of the pardon, which though he should allow to be duly obtayned, and in it selfe without exceptions, yet considering it was granted, depending on impeaching the whole frame of gouernement turned on that single thing, for if that could be such a king might be that would thereby shelter all criminals from justice, nay, and tho' there was but one pardon now appearing, yet who could tell but that might be the case of all the other Lords when this should be allow'd, the same Lord reply'd, That could not be, for had they pardons by them, they had made a plea of innocence, and so disouind their pardons. Therefore moud for their tryall, where there could be noe such rub, but the house seing euer one sett for the debate, and it being late, adjorn'd both debate and house till next morning. Amongst the Comons proceedings of this day, the most remarkable was (and possibly a more remarkable one never did happen, nor (I hope) euer will againe) that Bill to disablen the Duke of Yorke from inheriting, etc. It loades him with the guilt of holding correspondence with the Pope and Cardinals (for the subversion of our religion), nay, and to be consenting to the death of the king, etc., not onely disinheriting him, but vityerly banishing him, and make it treason so much as to correspond with him, nay, to oune him the rightfull heyre, etc. Munday is the next day (as I vnderstand) for the second reading. Some struggled to haue delay'd the first reading, vrgeing the thinness of the house, occasioned by a dog match at Hampton Court, and a horse match at Bansteed dones; but no arguments could stem the tyde, but read it was. Now one word of sporte. At Bansteed 12 horses run for 3 plates, a plate a heate, where Roger Pope's horse threw and bruid him, and Tom Warton threw him, and he was taken up for dead, yet is alive againe, but much battered, and this they call sport. The Duke of Monmouth escaped narrowly; there was so vast a crowde, no other could be expected. My providence (to which success makes me sacrifice) kept me from being a jocky, to avoyd which I avoyded the very place.

"Fryday 16. The Lords receau'd another report from their members of the Committee of both houses, that the Commons did adhere, and would not enter upon the debate of any other methods till they are fully satisfied as to the Bishops withdrawing at all the tryalls. Some looked on this as too much imposing on the Lords, and against the ingagment of the Commons, an intermeddling in judicature; others (according as their judgment lead them) advocating for it; but this brought on the adorned debate againe, it being vrge'd that if the Commons would be resty that could not excuse a fayler of justice in the Supreme Court of Judicature, nor could they be so ignorant of their oune methods in such tryall as to need consulting the Commons. Therefore it was moud that a day of tryall ought to be appoynted, and at the debate of this controverisie there was mutual caleing to the barr betwene the two great Lords, the Lord persident and privy seale. The latter tooke (it seemes) offense at two expressions, the first that the Earle of Danby's pardon was cald an arbitrary pardon; the other, that in aggraueing the crimes of the Earle of Danby beyond those of the other 5 Lords, this expression hapned, that the Earle of Danby is a great man still. This was wrested to asperse the king, and had bin so construed, had not my Lord Hytesburys notes cleard my Lord Shaftsbury, by whom he sate, that the words only were, he may be a great man still; some observ'd, that was one sure way to make one less, by the head, and that the same was a sure way to preuent greatness, which it seemes was the great crime. But my Lord Essex would not allow that all the crimes of which my Lord Danby stood impeacht of, tho neuer so true, could equal theirs, who sought the murder of the king, the chang of religion, and subversion of the gouernement. After all the struglings and fencings by the greate masters of that art, came that common end of all debates in parliament, the by which it was carry'd by fewer to one, than on Thursday next the 5 popish Lords shall come to their tryalls, and so adjorn'd. The Commons (as their votes and former resolutions shew'd) did little; nothing of importance. I forgett, that as soone as the was ouer rul'd for the tryall of the 5 Lords, the Bishops desyrd leaue to "withdraw at the tryall, which was granted accordingly; however, they lodg'd their claime of right. This day the Lords began with priuate bills, till in a fuller house they recea'd the report from their part of the Committee of both houses, that the Commons were not satisfied with the order for the tryall of the 5 Lords, nor the Bishops withdrawing in their case, but expected it; they also expected it should be ownd that the Lords had no right to sitt on any of the tryalls, the contrary being implied from their lodging their claime to it; they also expected the Earl of Danby should first come to his tryall, because they had demanded judgment against him alreddy, and that till they were satisfied fully in that particular relating to the Lords Spirituall they would not proceed to adjust the methods of the tryalls. This inflamd the and made the Lords not only adhere to their resolution of trying the Lords on Thursday next; but they also ordered their Committee of priviledges to sitt this afternoone to debat and consider former president, in order to the methodeizing the tryall; and that they might have the more time, they rose the earlier. The Commons I leaue to speake for themselves in their votes. What I infer from both houses is, that we are almost run a ground, for the Commons are determind to trye the Earl of Danby first, the Lords haue ordered (as they conceaue they had right to doe) the tryall of the 5 Lords first. Again, the Commons are not content that the Lords spirituall should withdraw and lodg their claymes, but would haue the Lords confirme their vote, that the Lords haue no right to sitt in such iudicatures. And I really beleue the Lords are determind to yield in neither. We are on the very brink of confusion. I haue sent your Grace the copy of the bill against the Duke of Yorke. I wish it were better written, that it might not create a double trouble."

Colonel Cooke to Ormonde.—"Hignam, Aug. 4, [16]79. I receau'd your Graces of June the 7, by that slow but sure messenger, Will: Fleetwood, the end of last month, on whose account, as also his brother Gustaues (besides the numberless numbers on my owne), I humbly acknowledg my selfe vnder many obligations, yet do presume on your Graces goodness to repeat my addresses for the continuance of your fauor to them both, chiefly the latter, as most helpless, and consequently the greater object of charity. I shall remitt to Will: Fleetwood when his infirme carcas reaches his Irish home againe, to be accountable to your Grace for my melancholly expense of my time betwene my brother's parke and Deane Forest, and how euery meale your Graces health floates in good briske small beare. I really designd to haue surpriz'd your Grace with an Irish visit, and had done it had not a double misfortune and obligation obstructed me—first, Jack Howes death, and next, my Lord Poulett's, both leaneing me as executor, and though both left a plentyfull, yet a distracted fortune behind them. I question not her Graces managery at Kilkenny and Dunmore, no more then I do that the splendor of each place is enough to tempt an enuious Irish rebell to destroy, and an ambitious French mons' to inioy; but hope I shall neuer liue to see the proprietor changed, no, not for my Lord Ossory himselfe, as well as I loue him. I can not sufficiently express my brother's grateful resentment of the honour he receaues by your graces remembrance of him; but as for the Cambrabritane at his welch enchanted Castle, and his Redbrete wife, I shall next weeke trye how they can undergoe so great a load of honour as your grace hath bin pleas'd to lay on them. If my next letters giues an account that either or both, which is probable enough, haue remoud their lodgings from Llanoyhangel-killorennewell, near vnto Skenadvare, in Lindithobathly parish into Newbedlum, persume pride is the cause, and your selfe the causor. To your Graces wishes I owne my protection; my sport hath bin great, my falls few and soft. For my other satisfactions your Grace hath added to your charitable wishes, 'tis in your owne power to make me most happy, since I am not capable of a greater honour or satisfaction then to be ownd by your Grace as absolutely your owne to all intents and purposes, and as so freely to be commanded and disposed of by your Grace."

Colonel Cooke to Ormonde.—"London, Nou. 18, [16]79. A monstrous nationall concerne of a greyhound match between the D: of Albemarle and Sir Ralph Dutton, obliging my judgship to appeare hear, giues me a specious pretence of addressing to your Graces,

"That if any journey worke of any sort is cutt out I may haue your Graces custome. As for newes, some is too dangerous and some too doubtfull to be written. Of the former sort, I darre not so much as thinke; of the latter, the two maine poynts are, whether a parliament or no parliament, or whether a League offensive and defensive. They say that my Lord Essex last wednesday moud in Council that his Majesty would be pleas'd to satisfie the longings of his people by some assurance of that kind, and that Roberts, Cauendish, Sir. H. Caple, etc. seconded it, but the king should answer, he had not yet thought of it. As to the other, the two riuals for our strict allyance are France and Holland. We beleue the former are the franker chapmen, and consequently will carry it; and the greater the allyance the greater the sum; so that it comprehends all enenies, both domestick and forraigne. And some resolute the niceness of touching French money to be the reason that makes my Lord Essex squeasy stomach, that it can no longer digest his impliment of first Com' of the Treasury, who certainly is quitting his seate in that chambers, and Mr. Hyde (now making Viscount Killingworth) is to step out of his owne into it, being next to it, and that Sir Steph: Fox makes up the number of 5. One passage I must repeat, whose truth was affirm'd to me yesterday, that Lord Hollyfax, at his coming lately to towne, sent for his excuse why he did not wait on Lord Shaftesbury that he had a senere fitt of the strangury, who sent him back word he mistooke his disease, that it was Ormond lay very heauy cross his stomaik, and he could neither gett it up nor downe. But to leaue these constrained forced discourses, I craue leaue to returne to what is more naturall and easy to me. Yesterday the two great antagonists for the lawrell of being the best greyhound master (Albemarle and Dutton) haue match'd five greyhounds for 100*l*. each dog, and one more, the odd match to be run the first day the weather will permitt. The iudg for both, I haue backt my countryman with 55 giny's. Of the succease your Grace may expect a perfect account heare after; as also of all things else dureing my stay heare that shall happen to my knowledge, and be iudgd worthy your Graces. And because Lindsey house is lett, as I greedily couet your Graces comands, so I humbly beseech, for the future, that they may be directed to my new correspondent, my Lord Oxford's porter, at his Lordship's house in St. Jame's Square; as also your Grace's beleife that as they shall be joyfully recea'd, so they shall be rededly obayd."

The letters and papers of the commissioners and lawyers entrusted by Ormonde with the arrangements connected with his lands and properties in England and various parts of Ireland abound in details illustrative of progress and social economy in the 17th century. While absent from Ireland, Ormonde's chief confidential adviser on his affairs was his step-brother, George Mathew, of Thomastown.

Of the woollen manufacture and trade in Ireland much information is derivable from the letters here of Colonel Richard Lawrence, who was appointed manager of a factory established by the Duke of Ormonde near Dublin. The following paper, submitted by him to Ormonde in 1677, gives the heads of a treatise which he subsequently published with modifications in 1682, under the title of "The Interest of Ireland in its Trade and Wealth stated:—"

" of Ireland's poverty, proceeding from the great ex-" pences it is at in maintaining forraighners, to its

" 3d Sec. contains some reflections upon the Duke " of Ormond's government, wherein is observ'd the " condition his Grace found this kingdom in, at his " arrivall in the year , and the state he left it in in " the year 1669, and the condition he found it in at his
" returne 1677, as to trade and wealth. 4th Sec. treats
" of other causes of the nation's poverty, as the bad
" payment the gentlemen makes to the tradesmen; the " universall liberty people of all ranks takes of wearing
" silk and other forraighn manufactures; the multitude " of idle unprofitable people, that, like drones in the " hive, consume the honey others brings in, with ex-
" pedients for remedies.

" 5th Chap. reflects upon the ancient policy of the " Crown, in governing Ireland by noblemen of Eng" land, rather then English noblemen of Ireland, and " considerations whether the reasons first movinge to " that policy in the government be not alter'd on the

In connexion with the attempts to establish woollen manufacture in Ireland are the following:—

Doctor Desfontaines, Physician General of the Army of Ireland, to Captain Mathew at Kilkenny.—" Dublin, " ye 28th of March 1671. Being in London about a
" yeare ago, I had the honour to see his Grace the " Duke of Ormond, who made me understand that he " had a great desire to settle french Marchants in " Carick, to sett up a manufecture, and to bring in " trading to that contrey, which I have indeavour'd
" so to do, having a very great passion to serve his " Grace, and to that purpose have engaged severall
" french Marchants to go and abide att Carick, being " induc'd to it by the protection and generosity of my " Lord Duke of Ormond, who promised and sett out " advantageous Articles and pruiliges unto me and " them strangers that would go settle in Carick; so that " having written my designe unto his Grace my Lord
" Duke of Ormond, and y^e there was Marchants re" solved to go and take houses and land at Carick, as " well as tradesmen who have ingaged themselves by " bond to come with me there, his Grace hath been
" pleas'd to send me a letter directed unto your worship
" for to treat with me and the others, and did lett me " know that his desire is that wee should settle the " trad'smen in Carick sooner then elsewhere. Therefore,
" Sir, I do humbly intreat you to send me by the first " opportunity a note of all the houses and land that may " be dispos'd of in the s^d Carick, or in other places fit " for trading, vid., att Rosse, Clonmell, Waterford, or
" of any toune fit for forwarding the trade. My Lord
" Duke promiss'd me a dwelling place in y^e Castle of " Carick, and five hundre acres of land belonging to " the sayd place, which I hope you will grant me, ex" pecting att y^e soonest an answer to this, and an " account of the situation and being of houses and " land. Having designe as well as all the other
" gentlemen to settle in the contry this springtime,
" we do intreat you to give us notice where we shall " meet with you for to conclude an agreement, or to " order som man or another to do it in your stead.
" You shall direct your letter, if you please, unto " Docteur Desfontaines, Physician gñal of the army of " Ireland."

Edward Nelthorpe to Ormonde.—" London, Octob^r
" the 8th, 1674. Having allways (since I had the " honor of being acquainted) made it my cheife buisness
" to contrive how I might be most servisable to your " Grace, obliges mee at this time to make these fol" lowing proposalls. Being encouraged by some in" telligent clothiers to sett up a considerable manu" factory in Ireland, in which at least twenty thousand " pounds or a greater summ will be constantly " employed, for the making of the finest searges and " cloaths, and finding sufficient invitation from some " other great persons in Ireland, I thought it my duty
" first to give your Grace the preference. I humbly " conceive nothing would more conduce to the advance" ment of rents and encouragement of tenants, and in " process of time to the great advantage of trade in
" generall, and an employment for a great many idle
" poore people, for they must spinn most of the yarne,
" and by degrees be taught the whole mistery. Soe
" that I leave your Grace to iudge the great benefit
" must necessarily ensue upon such an undertaking,
" especially if it may have the kind influence of your " Graces assistance, which neither I cannot doubt of " from one that is soe great a patron and lover of " his countrey. And that which I humbly begg is " that your Grace would assigne this bearer, Mr.
" Humphry Hill, such convenient worke houses and " dwelling houses in Clonmell as may be most proper
" for carrying on this affaire, without paying any rent
" for twenty one yeares save one piece of fine searge
" yearly, as an acknowledgment, I meane, for his owne
" house and worke houses.

"And whereas severall ffamilys will remove out of England as dyers and others, proper workemen to carry on this affaire, that such convenient dwellings may be assigned them at reasonable rents, as thereby they may [sic] encouraged. That your Grace would please to vouchsafe letters of recommendaicon to the Cheife Magistrates in Clonmell, That Mr. Hill and other manufacturers that come out of England with him may have their freedomes and libertys in Clonmell as denizens of the place without charge, and have all encouragement. Also that there may be such by laws made as may compell such refractory idle begging poore people to worke, and due punishments ordered for neglects and spoyling of worke. That the cheife manufacturers be exempted from all publike offices for the terme of seven yeares, the better to perfect the manufactory. These being the cheife things in memory which I have to crave of your Grace, and what other things may further be necessary shall be intimated, not questioning but your Grace will favourably grant your kind assistance for the promoting of soe propitious a designe, and that Mr. Humphry Hill may at all times have your Grace's encouragement and protection, being the cheife mannager, and who will more fully discourse with your Grace concerning this matter, to whom I refer your Grace."

Edward Nelthorpe to George Mathew. — 22 June 1675. That which most nearly concerns mee, and consequently soe highly oblidges mee, are your frequent fauour and kinde assistance to Mr. Hill in promoting the manufactory in and about Clonmell, and I must intreat you convey my thankfulness to your worthy brother, whose hath shewed soe great a forwardness as Mr. Hill informes mee, and since I am resolved, god permitting, to promote this affaire with all possible vigore and industry, which I doubt not in time will be very benefitiall to all those partes, and espetially to his graces concernes, and I hope you finde such proceedings at Clonmell as may amount to more then a probability of a future success, but wee cannot goe on cheerfully without your kinde influence in our future progress. My lord Duke freely assures mee the grant of all I can reasonably desyre, and that which occurs at present is the want of some wood out of Carricke, if it weare but 10 or 20 trees being [sic]; the other place you have assigned wood from is soe far it will not quit the coste in bringin home, and I hope soe few trees will not dammage Carricke, being to incourage an affaire that may promote the revenue in time of all my lord Duke's concernes. I have alsoe writt Mr. Hill to branch out the manufactory to Carr [Chahr] . . . Collen, but I must intreat you to afford us the continuance of your kindness in letting us have conveniant houses and some ground for incorragment. The Fryery at Carricke is very convenient, and in time I doe intend small vessills to saile up and create a traide there; but I am very loath to displace Mr. Smith againe, and yet I doubt shall not be otherwayes accomodated to cary on soe great a bussiness.

"His grace tells mee hee has writt to you concerning the oppositione the Corporation of Clonmell giues Mr. Hill, as allsoe howe to prevent other little manufactoryes that may be sett up on purpose to destroy oures. Your assistance in these things will giue mee the highest instance of your freindshipp and fauoure, but the greatest satisfactions is that all you can doe in this affaire will be as high a piece of searvice to his grace and all the ffamilly as it can be an obligation upon your most affect. and humble servant, ED. NELTHORPE. If his grace cannot spare trees of timber out of Carrick, I doe understand hee may by a letter pervail with Mr. Hall he accomodated us out of his wood." Michael Boyle, Archbishop of Dublin and Chancellor of Ireland, to Ormonde. — "Blessinton, Aug. 17. [1678. I have received the honor of your Graces of the 14th instant; and I have read over all Sir Peter Pet's papers upon this project of hemp and flax. I am thus far of Sir Peeter Pet's opinion, that by a prudent management of the Act of Parliament which wee have already in this kingdom vpon that account, a very considerable benefit may arise thereby, both to the king and kingdom; but Sir Peeter Pet hath certainly very much mistaken his measures in making his computations according to the proportion of acres within this kingdom, wherein it is very well knowne what a vast number of acres wee have of bog and mountaine, and of such a sorte of lands (viz., boggyish and mountaneous) which may pass for profitable lande and yet will not beare hempe or flax.

"Nothing in my poore opinion hath given a greater discouragement to the linning manufacture then Coll. Lawrence fayline in his workes at Chapel Izod. Eyther he must not haue vnderstood the trade, or else he must be a gross hypocrite; for from his fayline the argument is thus drawne to the disadvantage of that manufacture. If Coll. Lawrence could not support that small vndertaking with all the advances that he had of money from the Government, and the continual help of faking of his linnen in very great proportions for the vse of the army, how can it be expected that any greater or considerable benefit may be raysd by that manufactory? But notwithstanding the force of this objection, I must yet beleene that exceeding much more may be made by the linnen trade in this kingdom then yet hath bin done, and very considerable advantages by the cordage of the hempe; but I cannot as yet aproue his proposition of shaking any settled established branch of the king's revenue for what is yet only in prospect and imagination. But, as your Grace obserues, there will be time enough to consider all these difficulties before the 2^d transmission.

"What your Grace's obserues makes vpon the state of the farmer's account I shal, according to your Grace's directions, remit to Sir Charles Meridith and vnto Dr. Topham; but I shall not presume to interpose betweene them, for I must confess my vnskillfulness in figures.

"This last packet will carry your Grace an account of a sharpe engagement for the releefe of Mons; but I finde by letters from Whitehal that they have not as yet any true relation of that matter, and it is written doubtfully whether Mons be releevd or no. But by all letters I finde that my Lord of Ossory had a large hande in that dayes business, and it is sayd that he is come off very safe, but they write that he was taken prisoner, but released, and I do not in the least doubt but he found the danger if there were any. I pray God in heauen bless him and protect him. What disadvantages this discoursed of peace may bring vs I shall not presume to foresee; but this certaine advantage it hath I hope brought your Grace, that you have secured a some by it. Dublin hath very little news, but what is brought by packet; and your Grace have all that to the ful, it would be rude to repeat it. Our Lord primate continues much as he was; rather worse then better. I heare nothing of the Deane of Armagh; so that I presume your Grace may haue some time to consider vpon those matters. The bishop of Kildare hath bin ill; he is now gon to Dublin for physick. I doubt he is not long liued; he is an honest gentleman. My Lord Conway and my Lord Granard are gon together to the North, as I do heare, for I saw neyther of them."

Earl of Anglesey, Lord Privy Seal, to Ormonde. — London, August 5, 1678. Haueing in concert with my Lord Chamberlain fully considered of what moment it may be to all the King's dominions, and to our common safety and advantage, that the designe of planting of hemp and flax and making of cordage and sailcloth may be improved in Ireland, and encouraged by the King receiuing some of his revenue and duties in those species, your grace will receiue from Sir peter pett, a person long versed in the study and examination of that affaire, such measures thereof as may incline your Grace to giue a rice to the worke by the transmission of some bill from thence in this concerne, wherein by a subsidy of sailcloth and linnen yarne his majesty may be invited to expend the value thereof in money imployd to purchase Eastland Hempe seed and flax seed to send into Ireland to stock that country therewith, and artificers for the trade from Flanders and Germany and other parts, with their engines and loomes and tooles, and to be discharged of the penalties already incurred, the people will be the willing to such a subsidy.

"I doe now only introduce my thoughts to your Grace in this affaire; if it relieth with you I shall second it with further notions for the promoting of it and obviating obiections."

The following letters supply some new particulars in connexion with two important Roman Catholic ecclesiastics, Oliver Plunket, Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of all Ireland, and Patrick Tyrrell, Bishop of Clogher, and subsequently of Meath. Friar John Moier, or Mac Moyer, the writer of the first of these letters, was a member of the Ulster family, which, till the seventeenth century, had the hereditary custody of the ancient manuscripts known as the Canon of St. Patrick, or Book of Armagh. He was one of the principal witnesses on whose testimony Plunkett was found guilty of treason at London and executed, in 1681. Plunkett declared that Moier had made most false statements; that he was under ecclesiastical censure; and that he had been found guilty by a jury for "giving powder and shot to the rebels." Moier, in his evidence, alluded to the informations he had furnished to Sir Hans Hamilton, to whom the present letter is addressed.

"April the 15th, 1678. Hon^{ble} S^r. The loyalte of a naturall true and reall subject towards his Royall King, his fidelitie to his noble prince, his obedience towards his heavenly Creator, his zeal and homadze towards his earthly soveraigne, causeth mee to exhibit and shew my dutifull respects and sincere obligacon vnto his Majestie, being altogether bound with the rest of all his loyall subjects to the preservation and safetie of his peacefull realms and dominions, as likewise being obliged both by divine, naturall, and humane law (wherever wee should understand the least touch conuincing to the ruine or destruction of either king or commonwealth) to informe his Majestie's officers and magistrates therof, that they might the sooner prevent any evil event or bad effect that thence after might succede, which, Hon^{ble} Sir, caused mee to make this my applicacon, now secondly in this particular vnto your Honour concerning some more than wicked persons who hath both by private letters to floraine countreys, clandestine operations, and private viewings of all the forts and castles of the moste partes of this kingdom, done their best endeavours to draw vs all into a thraldome and perpetuall bondage, regarding neither God, King, conscience, or Comonwealth; for first after as I did informe your Honour about a yeare and a halfe agoe (which I seriously crane you to consider how things as if by him just procured did thence even happen), haueing really spied this realme, and worked in writing to Rome, and last summer beinge a twelve-month, haueing alsoe travelled and taken his course over all Leinster and Munster, he trusted vnto many as true and faithfull coadjutors in spyeing this province of Vlster, whereof I doe certainly know one Bryan Ma Poirke [sic], titulated Deane, and now Vicar Generall of Ardmagh, vnto whom hee wrote severall tymes, and had many conferences concerning these iniquous proceedings, and especially he sent (I meane Doctor Oliver Plunkett, Primate of all Ireland, soe called) one letter inclosed into Thady Fallon of Ardmagh, saddler, desiring him to deliver it secretly, and with all secreesye, to this Bryan Ma Goirke [sic], wherein hee greatly blamed him that hee did not write to him more than vsuall, and that he was very glad hee spoke to my Lord of Glanawly soe stoutelie, and also that he himselfe should then shortly keepe a Provinciall Councell, wherein hee was to confirme all his cruell intentions to bee sent over seas, which now hee intends to performe, his tyme being come to fulfill his desire, as evidently by his papers your Honour may judge; but the heavens may preserve vs from all mischief, and if this McGoirke [sic] bee brought to question, your Honour will thereby know these peoples wicked policy, for the Primate desired him earnestly to doe his best whenever hee should write to him to alter and change his name, and that with a strange character, least their letters should bee surprized or intercepted, which they haue done hereunto, for then hee did not subscribe Oliver Plunkett, but Michael fletcher, and now hee vses, being of that name discovered, to write his name Thomas Cox, which likewise I desire your Honour to consider. Secondly, haueing a chapter last all Saintes, being a twelvemonth, at George Bleerkes, his [sic] the Primate went thence to Kinard, where hee kept another, and haueing staid there two dayes, there came one Patrick Tyrell, Bishopp of Clogher, a more dangerous man then Dr. Plunkett in every way of policy, who both went thence together to the fryarye, being as they thought very private place to communicate with ff^r Shean o Neile, Guardian, then made over the fryaryes indeede against their whole consent, fearinge these persons proceeding by Dr. Plunkett's perswasion, judgeing Shean o Neill to bee sonne to Owen Roe o Neill, Generall of the Irish army in the late warre, made him his trustie instrument in Tyrone to perswade the poore gentrye, being much prone and inclined, as your honour may really know, to be released, and very desirous of being delivered from any thraldome, leaded by such "great persons of qualitie, one being Lord Primate of Ireland, the other Lord Bishopp of Clogher; one sonne to Owen o Neill, whose relations were Earles of Tyrone, Religious and Guardian of Ardmagh, whose teaching, encouragement, and instructions the common thinkes to bee very serviceable to God and pleasant most vnto men, regarding noe justice, peace, nor tranquillity of either King or Country (I might suspect that this man vnder pretexte of preaching doth privately sollicite when hee thinkes to bee more secrett and private to his faction); the other Deane and Vicar Generall of Ardmagh, and verilye I doe much suspect one Luke Plunkett, made Vicar Generall of Raphoe, who usually keepees in the county of Derry; and Patrick Burne, of late made Vicar generall of Downe, Connor, and Drumore, by Dr. Plunkett. And moreover Guardian Shean o Neill before his coming to Vlster staid in Dublin two yeares or thereabouts, keeping correspondence with Captain Conne o Neill in frinace, and Captain Bryan o Neill in Spaine, both his brothers and bastards to the aforesaid Owen Roe o Neill, who expects nothing else but to gett their fortune by the sword here after the french peace with other nations, all which they thinke to performe in getting this provinciall councell's answer, which last yeare was hindred by the discovery of the afore related letter of Dr. Plunkett to Bryan Mc Goirke, and now shortly to bee kept, as they judge haueing the greater libertie, and especially because hee did informe many of the peers that it was purposely to bee kept to cause his cleargie to sweare fidelitie to his Majestie, which is but meere policye to gett libertie to further his wicked intent, and make open the way to destroy both King and Country to his vtermost; but God give vs peace and defend vs from all cursed operations furthermore. Hon^{ble} Sir, Dr. Plunkett sent an agent last yeare to Rome concerning these matters, who caused a deale of monyes then to bee collected for that agent over all the country, as he did this same yeare against the Provinciall Councell, whose letters were then kept with ff^r. Phelamy o Conogan and Murtagh o Kelly. And likewise ff^r. Shean o Neill sent one of his fryars with a packett both from himselfe and the Primate to flanders about this tyme twelvemonth. All which your Honour may as you are wonte always gravely consider and piously endeavour to protect, defend, and save him from these emulous and oversene [sic] persons darts and mortall venome, who as your Honour now, the Lord be blessed, did their best to put him out of date, and passe him away, if not by God, your Honour, and truth protected, for partly understanding, knoweing, and manifesteing these theirer maledicted proceedings onely, who alsoe deservedly will spill the last drappe of his blood for your Honours credit, reputation, and meritorious glory, and am to death, Honourable Sir, your Honours most obedient and most faithfull servant to command, JOHN MOIER. To the Hon^{ble} Sir Hans Hamilton, Knt. and Barrt., one of his Majestie's most Hon^{ble} Privy Councell for the Kingdom of Ireland, these. This is a true copy, examined by mee, WM. DAVYS."

"1st no^r 1679. May itt please your Grace,—Your Graces of the 28th 8ber I received, in obedience to which I will leave noe means vnattempted to obey your commands. I am confident iff do[ctor] p[lunkett] comes to this cuntry I shall heare off itt; butt I was about 4 daies agoe tould by a popishe priest, whose sune fewe daies befor had gotten induction to a parishe from him, that hee had left him at a certaine place within sevn meiles off dubline; that hee had cutt off his beard and haire, had gott a leight cullored wigge, and went by a fained nam, which I haue forgott, for then I had not had your Grace's commands. The following are specimens of the letters and papers connected with the movements of the Presbyterians in Ireland and Scotland, relative to which much apprehension was entertained by Government:—

Thomas Otway, Bishop of Killala and Achonry, to Earl of Essex, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.—"May it
"please your Excellencie,—Though we are far from "your Excellencies eye, yet we are neere your care,
"and we with all thankfullness acknowledg in your
"Excellencies appointing us a marshall to reprove the "insolencies of the Tories. I am forced to be a petitioner "to your Excellencie for the few protestants of these "parts, that they may be saued from Scotch Presbyters
"who ramble up and down to debauch the people in "their releston and Loyalty, which are as much more "dangerous then Tories, as our souls are more pretious
"then our goods. It seems the Scotts in Ulster haue "their classes (or, as Hugh Peters more aptly desipherd
"them, their Cl-Assizes), who like the Jessuites haue
"their missions to gaine people to there presbiterary, as "they to the papacy. Two of these Geneva calves "(Cleveland's Bulls is too big a tyttel for these "suckeing presbiter) were lately sent stragling into "these parts, one named Hendry, of Gragstown, in the "county of Donegall, the other Halliday, of Rapho.
"Hendry held forth within two miles of me to the "greate perill of the apron-strings, which were much
"endangered by the deepe signes of the wastcoaters.
"At this distance from the sceen of affaires I know not "what tolleration his Majesty allows them; but I was "confident that no part of it permits them to wander
"up and down to peruert his subjects; whereupon I "apprehended Hendry, and found about him many "scandalous papers against prelacy, the common "prayer, and the ceremonies, which I thought un"worthy of your Excellencies view, being butt there "old crambe. I found one malicious paper against his "Majesty, which I have, with a letter likewise found "with him, sent to your Excellencie, by which your
"Excellencie will se some of their employers, agents, "and harborers with their pockett instruments. They "ride up and down the cuntry like martiall Euan-"gelists with sword and pistols, as if they came not to "prate down butt storm our releston. They are impudent "beyond sufferance. Hendry after hee had left me to "be his silly herd—that he would not only come to the "assizes, butt preach their. Halliday told the minister "who questioned him for his conuenie in his parish,
"that he might preach anywhere, and that he would
"goe to Dublin and preach in your Excellencies eare.
"I know I shall be rayled at lustely for what I haue
"don, butt let them talke on, I will take care that they "shall neuer justly charge me for betraing Episcopacy
"to presbitery, or the English interest to the Scotts,
"the ruin of both which is aym'd at by this faction. I "most humbly beg your Excellencies commands for "prosecuting of Hendry if your Excellencie thinks itt
"fitt, and to know whither I may not indite him for "sedition, for his rambling preaching contrary to law,
"and for his seditious papers. I subscribe my selfe, my

"Reuerend and deare Sir,—I could not get occasion to get an answer from Mr. Vause as to your desire soeone as you desired, but I partly know that cuntry as well as he. This is a very short day for those godly men to take such a jurney in hand; saueing your owne wisdom, it had been better advised that they should have gone about the beginning of March. Its a sad matter for godly men to trust their poore fraile tabernacles in such a season of the yeare, to goe among a people that is so litle acquainted with pure ordinance (but for this I pas); for the way they haue to goe I make no great doubt butt they will be guided. The first stage is Mr. Crawford in Sleigo; if they get employment there it is well, butt the four miles beyond Sleigo they must part at a place they call Balledarah, one of them to goe to Tirrerragh, where he will be kindly welcome to a gentleman that lives in a place called Donaghoy, L^d Leuan by name; he was once married upon a sister of Mr. Temple's, and he will direct him to this francis Alexander whose lettre I haue here sent you; butt for the other that goes to the County of Roscommon he hath 40 miles to goe from Sleigo, before he comes to ye people that looks for a vissitt. He must haue directions from Mr. Crafford where he shall lodge the first night of his journey; butt the next night he will reach to the place where he will be welcomed in the County of Roscommon, in a place they call Lisnavally, where a very discreet man dwells that they call Corporall Thomas Michell, who will order his dyet there; its hard by the place where the gentlewoman lives that will kindly entertain him. The way is very good in this road if he can get any company, which is all ye account that I can giue, desiring the good Lord to be with them in there jurney. I haue a great could which keeps me in a feavor, otherwise I had seen you myselfe: this is all with my hartly loue remembered to you and yours. I remaine, Sir, your most obliged servant, JON. BOYDE. December 2, 1676."

Michael Boyle, Archbishop of Dublin and Chancellor of Ireland, to Ormonde.—"Dublin, Feb. 10, [16]76.
"May it please your Grace,—The enclosed, which are
"copies of papers sent vp by the Bishop of Killalla
"(and taken out of a presbyterean preachers pocket),
"with a letter of his owne, will enforme your Grace of "the continued practises of that sort of people against "the King and Government, notwithstanding any thing "that is pretended by them to the contrary, and not"withstanding the many favours extended to them by "his Majestie. It is not for me to take occasion from
"hence to offer my weake thoughts upon this subject,
"since I am more then confident that his Majestie takes "his measures in these cases from the best counsaile
"in the world; butt I must needs acknowledge to your "Grace that it sticks mightly with me how they can "be credited in any thing they promise for his Majesty's "safety and advantage, since by the Articles of their "beloved covenant (which is the Greate Charter of
"there Religion, and unto which they seeme as greate
"hygots at present as ever I knew them formerly) they "are engaged by a religious vow to advance there "covenant by all the industry they can, and that the "most famous traitors amongst them have positively
"declared, and published in print, that the covenant
"being a public and a nationall oath, all persons that "shall succeed in public places and public capacities
"in the Kingdom are obliged to pursue the thing
"covenanted for, and that obligation is for ever to re-
"maine and abide, and by no humane act to be obsolved
"or made voyd. And how destructive that covenant is "to the very being of the king and of our protestant "Government I need not paraphrase. What may "be further discovered out of this matter I am not yet
"able to foresee; butt I am well assured that our Lord
"Lieutenant will pursue it as far as it will go. The "two missionary presbyters are sent for already into "Conaught, where I hope the Bishop of Killalla hath "secured them; and vpon the first intimation of there "being being in custody I know his Excellency intends "to send for those classical prebyters in the North
"mentioned in Boyde's letter. Your Grace shall receive "a farther accompte thereof if it comes to any thing. I "should haue acquainted your Grace with this matter
"by the last packet, butt that I did not think itt good "manners to prevent our Lord Lieutenant's accompte
"thereof unto his Majestie in the first place. I pray
"God preserve the King and bless your Grace and all
"yours. I am your Graces most faythfull and most

"bishop of Killalla to his Excellency, and the Presbyterian doctrine taken out of the preachers pocket, I received on the 17th inst, at a time when the business of the house of Lords concerning those lords now in the Tower was at the hottest, so that I could not well till now acknowledge the receiving of them or my obligation to your Grace for communicating them to mee. I am since informed that those seditious fellows have upon the matter made their escape, the penalty of the bonds taken for their appearance being inconsiderable, as perhaps the parties to them may be. I wish the good bishop had been lesse witty and more wary. It is plainly observable that since the commitment of the lords and the prosecution of the pamphlets which asserted that this Parliament was dissolved, the Nonconformists of all sorts have been disappointed in their expectations and that a proportionable dejection of spirit hath seized them; and wee have a very hopeful prospect of a good session of Parliament, not I thinke to be endangered, unless wee think our selves too sure and so grow negligent, or too strong and so presume too far upon that. I hope this calmenesse here, if wee carry it to the end, will have good effects there, as I presume the contrary expectation made those itinary presbiters so busy at that time. The ordinary transactions of this time and place your Grace receives from other hands. When any thing shall happen worth your knowledge of another nature, it shall be imparted to you by your Grace's most faithfull and most humble servant, ORMONDE.

G. Montgomerie to Hugh Montgomerie, Drogheda.—Edinburgh, ye 17th of Decemb^r 1677. Deare Sir,—My constant company since I came hither has been b^t [sic], who gives this following account of affayres here, vizt, that things being come to that height in ye west and elsewhere here in Scotland as to build meeting houses, and meet in great numbers (though not neare soe great as was reported then in Ireland), and well appointed, as they say for their own defence and they preachers, who are onely a pack of insignificant rebellious persons never taken notice of when Presbytery was in its strength. Some where of being denounced rebells for Pentland Hills, and the rest noted for keeping conventicles in ye field, it being here capital ride usually with a gard of 10 or 20 horse, and sometimes incognito only with a boy. His Majesty has now sent down a letter to the Councell to know whither they will rather chuse their own Highlanders, the English, or ye Irish, or all to suppress the insolence of that people. Though it is not at all feared that any of these parties, if they doe come, should meet with any publick resistance, the Councell has determind to send downe commissioners to ye severall shires, my Lord Rosse to Renfrew, my Lord London and some other to Kyle and Carrick, Broughton and Baldune to Galloway, to see if it be possible to quiet the minds of the people. On Thursday they goe hence; the event of this is feared will be unsuccessfull, for the people are extravagantly zealous for the liberty they have in Ireland, &c. Yesterday the Councell sate and turned out all the clarks, which is not usual, and the oath of secrecy was read to them all upon some particular message from ye King, which cannot yett be known, but it is suspected by some that they designe to send downe the standeing forces to disarme and ly upon the west (this suspicion). There is one D^r Lesly primas of the new Colledge of Aberdeen, who wrote a letter to the Bishop of London, informing him that the Church of Scotland was in a very peaceable and settled condition before ye cominge downe of Duke Lauderdale, but that now he took such courses as would ruine the affayres of both Church and State, which letter was sent by the Bishop of London to ye Councell here, and immediatly an expresse sent to ye sheriff to apprehend and bring in the body of the said Lesly, who is reported to be but a simple man; if he be caught it is thought he will be hangd, for the Chancellor will be much his enemy, least he should be suspected to have had a hand in it. There is noe possibility of communicating from hence but by London. I have got a friend of Broughton's who is a man for the purpose. I hope you heard from the west. I designe to leave this within two or three days. My duty and love to all to whom dew. I am your most dutefull Sonne, G. MONTGOMERIE.

"servant, and desirous so to approve myself when I have ye opportunity. I have been told, not by way of information but discours, that in the towne of Antrim there is a legall and orthodox minister, and a Church for him to celebrate divine service in, but that throughout the yeare there are not above halfe a dozen of the inhabitants or neighbours that on any Sunday or festivall of the Church assist at that service, though a meeting house, erected and frequented without and contrary to law, is very frequently and much better filled, and this in some measure is attributed not onely to the want of your lordships good example, but to your contrary practice, for it is suggested that you never go to the Church, and that you constantly are present at a conventicle held and publicly resorted to in your owne and your mother in lawes house. I hope this may not be true; if it be not, I would be glad to be able to say you do deny it; if it be, neither your lordship nor I shall be well able to excuse, much lesse justify it to the king, considering how you are trusted by him. Whatever the case is I desire to be informed in it by your selfe, that I may thence consider what I have to do as the King's cheife Governor, and, my lord, your lordship's most affectionate, humble servant, ORMONDE.

Viscount Massareene to Ormonde.—"Antrim, Jan. 18th. May it please your Grace,—The honour of yours of the 12th inst, coming on Monday last when I was from home, as I was also the day after, I could not till now returne my most humble acknowledgments. And however any by way of discourse may have acquainted your Grace with what you are pleased to mention concerning me and ye inhabitants of ye parish of Antrim, I shall, having your Grace's command for it, as neare as I can recollect, and with all ye duty and humble submission imaginable, give your Grace an account of both. This vicarage being in ye gift of our family, I did (when it last fell vacant), with ye advice and desire of the then bishop of this diocess, bestow upon Mr. George Evans, hee having other small livings contiguous which without this scarce afforded him maintenance, and besides what these yielded, I otherwise (not inconsiderably) gratified him. That he is a legall orthodox minister as your Grace hath heard I never doubted; neither did I ever present any but such where I am patron. That he does in our Church sometimes celebrate divine service I can affirme, for I have often heard him. As to ye number then present, I have seene divers times as I judged them about one hundred at divine service, and more at ye sermon, both in the time of one Mr. William Dowdall and Mr. Evans, besides whom there was no other incumbent since ye kings restoration, which makes me wonder that it is otherwise represented. One reason possibly may be because our late domestick chaplaine, who used to preach in ye Church, removed into England, from whence he came, and there being a great difference betweene him and Mr. Evans, ye one an able preacher of good expression, ye other not so cleere and to some little intelligible. And as to my selfe, Mr. Evans (who I had so gratified) in some respects disoblige me, for which causes I have neyther heard him so oft as I did formerly, nor as I did others in ye same church who were here before him; neither did I thinke my selfe bound to give him ye same countenance, yett did not withdraw what I formerly gave him as additional to ye parish allowance. This so falling out at present is ye ground I humbly conceive of what hath been told your Grace, by what author or upon what designe I am not curious to inquire. It is I hope without offence no way disallowable to make some difference in my carriage to persons, which yett hath been but to a very small degree, if any at all, observable in this case. It hath indeed been my great care, both by argument and example, as much as I could in my capacity to keep up ye assembly in ye Church, and free from all manner of differences, but, my lord, this is not in my power. I can rather heartily wish than thoroughly effect it. I have my satisfaction in that I have endeavourd to discharge my conscience in all things that may conduce to union, which I take to be ye duty of every good Christian. As to that particular of a meeting-house, I did all I could prudently (in my circumstances) to prevent its building in this parish, but there is one without ye towne, and I have at a distance from ye high way seene a thatcht house they call so, to which I never went, so know not what number resort to it: I am certainly informed it is not used in ye time of ye morning or evening church service, but “ betweene 12 a clock and about 2 a clock. As to that of hearing sermon in my lady Massarene dowager her house, with whom I have ye happiness and leave to reside, she being unable to goe abroad, I have heard ye same minister in her house; she does, and so doe divers of our servants and tenants who choose so to doe, they being not prohibited by her ladyship. Whatever trust I have been honoured with, I have, according to my best skill and knowledge, as well as ye purport of ye oaths taken on such occasions, faithfully performed ye duties which in ye place of a justice of peace and member of ye privy Councill lay upon me. I have had no imployments save these, civill or military, but that commission to be governour of ye County of London-derry in my Lord of Essex's time, which at your Graces last access to ye government I humbly tendered to you, and you were pleased to renew, by all which I have no profit accruing but ye opportunity of serving ye king and country, and that indeed I doe value before all other. Now if after all my faithfull and continued desires to serve ye king and your grace, and my knowne practice in religion (which I had rather actions than words should demonstrate), some present discourses or remarks concerning me by those who do not, it may be, wish or know me well, should create thereby an opinion in your Grace that I am not fit further to serve in these capacities, I submit them to your Graces pleasure. And as nothing but your injunction can excuse ye trouble of this long letter, so next to his Majesties and your wonted favour extended to those who serve him faithfully, I humbly pray my constant loyalty to ye king and steady adherence to the reformed establishd religion may justify mee. I have now (may it please your Grace), with all ye cleerness, I could observed ye contents of your letter, and submitted this to your great judgment. Whether any thing on this account be worthy your further notice, or in my department unsutable to a good Christian, a loyall subject, and your Graces most humble, obliged, and most obedient servant, Massarene.”

There are also in the collection some documents connected with Douglas, a Presbyterian preacher mentioned in the following letters:—

“ Belfast, 26 Dec. 1677. My ever hon^d Lord,—On monday last I had notice given me of one Mas-Douglas, an eminent preacher and co-partner with Maj. Welsh in the great conventicles lately held in Scotland; and that night Mas-Douglas came vnto this towne, of which I had present notice. I presently had him in my chamber, where after spending some heavy sighs and groans with him, and promising unto him kinndes and friendship, and that he should be provided for in this kingdome, provided that he would disclose what was truth to his knowledge of the designs now on foot in Scotland, he did condescend unto it. I went immediately and acquainted my Lord Granard therewith, and brought him unto his Lordship, and after my Lord had a while discoursed with him, he commanded me to take Mas-Douglas out with me, and to try what I could gett out of him, for he could not gather anything out of him to purpose. I took him to my chamber againe, and after renewing my promises unto him, he has related unto me—

“ That there is a full purpose in the phanaticks of Scotland to take the sword in hand, and that the covenant is there renewed.

“ That there is (as Mas-Douglas calls them) papers past and subscribed throughout the greatest part of the kingdome, and the greatest noblemen and gentlemen therein concernd.

“ That Mas-John Welsh has at this time in England and has promised faithfully to the people to returne againe unto them by the 30th of January next, and that in the mean time he has left orders that they should not meet in any great numbers. Mas-Douglas doth expect within two or three dayes to haue some letters out of Scotland, whereby to confirme what he has now declared, and much more, and has promised me that if I will but keep him here secret, that he will in short time doe very eminent service for God, his King, and country. My Lord Granard would haue confined him, but I haue prevailed for his liberty, and have taken his parole that he will not stir from hence; and since he has declared that if he had bin confined he would thereby have bin made incapable of doing the service he designs, by some words that fell from him, I doe heartily wish he were with your Honor for some few hours discourse; and if the letters he expects out of Scotland doe arrive there before my Coll. comes away for Dublin, and that I find in them any thing of moment, I will, if I can prevayle, perswade Sir William to take him along with him to your Honor.

“ My Lord, he has discovered and named to me a very eminent statesman, whome he says they are affierd off, and two more of the greatest seers of that kingdome, which by my Coll. I will give your Honor an account of, and what further I can gett out of him. My Lord, I am your irrevocable obliged and obedient serv^t att command, Rod: MANSELL. For the R^t hon^{ble} and my ever Hon^d Coll. Richard Earle of Arran, Coll. of his Majestie's Regiment of guards in Dublin.”

“ Belfast, the 29th X^{bris}, 1677. My ever honored Lord, —Ther has not any boeatt come from Scotland vnto any of these parts since my last vnto your Lordship, for that the gent is now in my custody and charge has not recieued the papers hee dayle expected from thence, as alsoe letters how the state of affayres goe one ther; which makes mee that I cannot giue your honor that account I promised in my last. But, how ever, I haue obtaynd from him to putt downe in writing the names of those pahnatick preachers, and whatt thayer dayle preachings vnto the people haue bin and are; alsoe howe and by whome thayer damnable and deep treassons haue bine a laying for this two yeares past, and whoe haue bine the chiefe instruments there in, whoe is to lead them and whoe was employed to treatt betwixt them and him, whatt answers hee received and whatt encouragements giuen; alsoe whatt numbers of armes they haue had bought out of Holland, the seuerall marchants names that bought them, by whatt ways they wear conuaynd into that kingdome; alsoe whear they now ley hid to the number of tenn thousand fyer armes, and the perticular townes and places alsoe whear the papers and engagements that are subscribed doe ley att this time; and much more. The perticulars att large your honor shall receive by my Col^l, whoe comes from hear one Munday next; but I humbly begg that your Lordship would haue Mr. Douglas vnto Dublin, to discourse with his Grace and your Lordship, for reasons which I shall giue your Lordship by my Col^l. I am siure that I need not press your care that nothing of this come vnto an Scotchman's knowledg, but Mr. Douglas presses mee to giue your honor that cawtion. Craueing your honor's fauor to persent my humble duty vnto his Grace my Lord L^t, I begg leave to bee, my Lord, your faithfull, affectionatt, obeydantt servannt att command, Rick: MANSELL.”

“ May it pleas your Grace,—I this day received this enclosed from Mr. Dowglas, and I perceiue by his letter vnto mee that hee is in greatt fear of his life. Hee begs earnestly that I would take care to send vnto your Grace an express, and not to trust it by the poste, which I haue accordingly don. Hee for my encouragement soe to doe, assures mee that besides letters and subscriptions which hee will produce vnto your Grace, and that vnder the hands of those your Grace doeth least suspect, hee will furthar disclose vnto your Grace the hole contrivances of affayrs now on foote in Scotland, which shall be greatt searce vnto his Maiesy and the good of his kingdoms, which I thought fit, as in duty bound, to acquaint your Grace. Humbly begg leave to subscribe my selfe your Graces most dutyfull and obedient, humble searv^t att command, Rodk: MANSELL. Belfast, January 7th 10th, att six of the clock in the morning. For the Moste Hon^{ble} James Ducke of Ormund, his Grace Lord Lieu^t. Gen^l., and Gen^l. Gouvernor of Ireland, for his Maiesities special searce: att Dublin humbly persent.”

(Enclosure.)

“ These are the perticulars hee promised mee to disclose and deliuer vnto his Grace when att Dublin.

“ (1.) that hee would certainly deliuer vnto his Grace the subscriptions of the nobilityty and gentry.

“ next that, to confirme them, hee would alsoe deliuer the severall letters boeath of the nobilityty and gentry concernd in this designe.

“ Alsoe whatt sumes of moneys was collected, and by whome, boeath in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

“ Alsoe produce two letters from two Knights out of England concernd heerin; and that hee had recieued those letters from the Earle of Quinsburrow's owne hands.

“ Alsoe severall letters from my Lord Granard. Hee said that to the beast of his memory he had seauen of his; but that one of them was but a little bitt of a note vnto the Dutches of Laderdale, and one that was datid the 2nd of October last.

2. Memorandum respecting Beddoes.—"When I was last at Brecon, hearing of one Beddoes that had made a great discovery, and enquireinge who and of what quality this man was, I had this relation of him. That he was a fidler's son of Chepstow, that some time (not long before) he had been in that town, in a very handsome habit and equipage, where some of the gentlemen of the town (according to the hospitable humour of the place towards strangers) entertain'd him with a great deale of civility and respect. From thence he went into Carmarthenshire, and there to Sir Rice Rudd's house, where he enquires of a servant of Sir Rice Rudd's whether his master were at home; he told him yes, and desired to know who would speak with him, tell him (says Mr. Beddoes) God Almighty is here. The man (not a little wondering at the answer) went in and told it his master. All this while the stranger sate on horseback at the gate. When Sir Richard came to the doore, Mr. Beddoes told him that he had heard he was an honest hospitable gentleman, and that he was (though a stranger) come to wayte upon him. Sir Richard desired him to alight and walk in, which he did. After some time and discourse, wherein he made frequent mention of Middlesex, Rochester, and Tidley, with such a familiarity, and giueing them noe other addition to their names, as if he had been some great man of birth, chard, and education. In the midst of their discours, Sir Rice Rudd receiues his post letters, and with them a gazzett, wherein there was an advertisement of the losse of a horse, with a description of the person who was suspected to have stolen this horse. While Sir Rice was reading this advertisement, he sometimes cast he eye upon his guest, then reads, then again takes of his eye, and obserus how the character and the stranger agreed. Mr. Beddoes obseruing this, makes an apology to goe out of doores, calls for his horses, and away he goes that night (as they heard) towards Pembroke-shire. But they neuer heard of him after till he was in euery body's mouth for the great discovery. And the gentlemen at Brecon were well laught at, and frequently ralley'd for the great entertainment they had given this piece of eraunty, when they came to understand his quality." Order of Council in England on education of Lord Dunkellin's son.—“After our very hearty commendations to your Grace: Wee did formerly by our letters of the 30th of May last recommend it to your Grace

ORMONDE.

ORMONDE

" to take such security from the Earle of Clanrickard
 " as might hinder the education of his Grandchild, the " Lord Dunkellin's son, in the parts beyond the seas, in " regard of the many inconveniencies that might happen
 " by his being sent abroad so young, and taking into " consideration that the said child is now arrived to an " age capable of being instructed as well in the prin" ciples of religion as in other good learning, and that
 " the neglect thereof may give occasion to his said
 " Grandfather to take him from his Mother, and to " bring him up in the Roman Catholique Religion,
 " which his Ma^y being desirous by all means possible
 " to have prevented, hath commanded us to signify the " same to your Grace and the Lords of His Ma^y Privy " Council there, and once more effectually to recom" mend it to you (as Wee do hereby) to take care that
 " the said child be educated in the Protestant Religion,
 " and in order thereunto that you cause him to be " placed in the house of one of the Bishops of that " kingdom, to be carefully instructed and bred up in " the doctrine of the Church of England; and to use your " utmost endeavours with the said Earle of Clanrickard

" to make such allowance for the support of his " said Grandchild and charge of his education as is " answerable to the relation he hath to his Lordship.
 " And so nothing doubting of your more than ordinary " care in this affair, Wee bid you very heartily flare-" well. From the Court at Whitehall, the 20th day of " February 16th. Your Graces very loving friends,

CIRCULAR OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMISSION.

CIRCULAR
SECRETARY
OF THE COMMISSION.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

Rolls House, Chancery Lane.

Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint under Her Sign Manual certain Commissioners to ascertain what MSS. are extant in the collections of private persons and in institutions, which are calculated to throw light upon subjects connected with the Civil, Ecclesiastical, Literary, or Scientific history of this country. A copy of the Commission is inclosed, which will best explain the object Her Majesty has in view.

The Commissioners think it probable that you may feel an interest in this object, and be willing to assist in the attainment of it, and with that view they desire me to lay before you an outline of the course which they propose to follow.

If any nobleman or gentleman express his willingness to submit any paper or collection of papers within his possession or power to the examination of the Commissioners, they will cause an inspection to be made by some competent person, upon the information derived from whom the Commissioners will make a private report to the owner on the general nature of the papers in his collection, such report will not be made public without the owner's consent, but a copy of it will be deposited and preserved in the Public Record Office, to which no person will be allowed to have access without the consent of the owner of the papers reported on.

Where the papers are not mere insulated documents, but form a collection which appears to be of Literary or Historical value, a chronological list or brief calendar will be drawn up, and a copy thereof presented to the owner, and to no other person without his consent, but the original of such calendar will be deposited for preservation in the Public Record Office, to which no person will be allowed to have access without the consent of the owner of such collection.

The Commissioners will also, if so requested, give their advice as to the best means of repairing and preserving any papers or MSS. which may be in a state of decay, and are of Historical or Literary value.

To avoid any possible apprehension that the examination of papers by the Commissioners may extend to or include any title deeds or legal documents, I have to call your attention to the fact that nothing of a private character or relating to the titles of existing owners is to be divulged, and to assure you that positive instructions will be given to every person who examines the MSS.
 that if in the course of his examination any title deeds or other documents of a private character chance to come before him, they are to be instantly put aside, and are not to be reported on or calendared under any pretence whatever.

The object of the Commission is solely the discovery of unknown Historical and Literary materials, and in all their proceedings the Commissioners will direct their attention to that object exclusively.

In no instance will any MS. be removed from the owner's residence without his request or consent, but if for convenience any MSS. be intrusted to the Commissioners, they will be deposited in the Public Record Office, and be treated with the same care as if they formed part of the Public Muniments, and will be returned to the owner at any time specified by him.

The cost of inspections, reports, and calendars, and the conveyance of documents, will be defrayed at the public expense without any charge to owners.

The Commissioners will feel much obliged if you will communicate to them the names of any gentleman who may be able and willing to assist in obtaining the objects for which this Commission has been issued.

I have the honour to be,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN ROMILLY.
