COMMISSION.

VICTORIA R.

L.S. Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor Sir George Jessel, Knight, Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Records in Chancery; Our right trusty and entirely-beloved Cousin and Councillor Robert Arthur Talbot, Marquess of Salisbury; Our right trusty and right well-beloved Cousin David Graham Drummond, Earl of Airlie, Knight of Our Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle; Our right trusty and right well-beloved Cousin Philip Henry, Earl Stanhope; Our trusty and well-beloved Edmond George Fitzmaurice, Esq. (commonly called Lord Edmond George Fitzmaurice); the Right Reverend Father in God Charles Bishop of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe; Our right trusty and well-beloved James, Baron Talbot de Malahide; Our right trusty and well-beloved Richard Monekton, Baron Houghton; Our right trusty and well-beloved John Emerich Edward, Baron Acton; Our trusty and well-beloved Sir William Stirling Maxwell, Baronet; Our trusty and well-beloved Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, Knight, Deputy Keeper of the Records; Our trusty and well-beloved Charles William Russell, Doctor in Divinity, President of the College of St. Patrick, Maynooth; and Our trusty and well-beloved George Webbe Dasent, Doctor of Civil Law, greeting.

Whereas We did, by Warrant under Our Royal Sign Manual bearing date the second day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and by subsequent Warrants, authorise and appoint Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor John, Baron Romilly (since deceased), together with the several noblemen and gentlemen therein named, or any three or more of them, to be Our Commissioners to make inquiry into the places in which Documents illustrative of History or General Public Interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference, as by the tenor of the first-recited Warrant under Our Sign Manual, dated the second day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, does more fully and at large appear:

Now know ye, that We have revoked and determined, and do by these Presents revoke and determine, the said several Warrants and every matter and thing therein contained:

And whereas We have deemed it expedient that a new Commission should issue for the purposes specified in such Warrant of second day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine:

Commission appointing Commissioners to make inquiry as to the places in which Documents illustrative of History or General Public Interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference.

Further know ye that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your ability and discretion, have appointed, and do by these Presents nominate, constitute, and appoint, you the said Sir George Jessel; Robert Arthur Talbot, Marquess of Salisbury; David Graham Drummond, Earl of Airlie; Philip Henry, Earl Stanhope; Edmond George Fitzmaurice (commonly called Lord Edmond George Fitzmaurice); Charles, Bishop of Limerick, Ardfer, and Aghadoe; James, Baron Talbot de Malahide; Richard Monekton, Baron Houghton; John Emerich Edward, Baron Acton; Sir William Stirling Maxwell; Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy; Charles William Russell; and George Webbe Dasent, to be Our Commissioners to make inquiry as to the places in which such Papers and Manuscripts are deposited, and for any of the purposes set forth in the original Warrant under Our Sign Manual, dated second day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine :

And for the purpose of carrying out the said inquiry We do hereby authorise you to call in the aid and co-operation of all possessors of Manuscripts and Papers, inviting them to assist you in furthering the object of this Commission, and to give them full assurance that no information is sought except such as relates to Public Affairs, and that no knowledge or information which may be obtained from their collections shall be promulgated without their full license and consent :

And We do further by these Presents authorise you, with the consent of the owners of such Manuscripts, to make abstracts and catalogues of such Manuscripts :

And We do hereby direct that you, or any three or more of you, shall form a quorum, and that you, or any three or more of you, shall have power to invite the possessors of such Papers and Records as you may deem it desirable to inspect, and to produce them before you.

And Our further will and pleasure is that you Our said Commissioners, or any three or more of you, do report to Us from time to time in writing under your hands and seals all and every your proceedings under and by virtue of these Presents :

And for the better enabling you to execute these Presents We do hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint Our trusty and well-beloved John Romilly, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law, as the Secretary to this Our Commission to attend you, whose services and assistance We require you to use from time to time as occasion may require.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Seventh day of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, in the Thirty-ninth Year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command.

RICHD. ASSHETON CROSS.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To Our right trusty and entirely beloved John Alexander, Marquess of Bath, greeting.

Whereas We did, by Warrant under Our Royal Sign Manual, bearing date the seventh day of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, authorize and appoint Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor Sir George Jessel, Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Records in Chancery, together with the several Noblemen and Gentlemen therein named, or any three or more of them, to be Our Commissioners, to make inquiry into the places in which Documents illustrative of History or general public interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference.

Now know ye, that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your zeal, discretion, and ability, have authorized and appointed, and do by these Presents authorize and appoint you the said John Alexander, Marquis of Bath, to be a Commissioner for the purposes aforesaid, in addition to and together with the Commissioners whom We have already appointed by the above-mentioned Royal Warrants.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Twenty-fourth day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, in the Fortieth year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command.

RICHD. ASSHETON CROSS.

John Alexander, Marquess of Bath, additional Commissioner to make inquiry as to the places in which Documents illustrative of History or General Public Interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To Our trusty and well-beloved William Hardy, Esquire, Deputy Keeper of the Records, greeting.

Whereas We did, by Warrants under Our Royal Sign Manual, bearing date the seventh day of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, and the fourth day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and by subsequent Warrants, authorize and appoint Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor Sir George Jessel, Master or Keeper of the Rolls and Records, together with the several Noblemen and Gentlemen named in such Warrants, or any three or more of them, to be Our Commissioners to make inquiry into the places in which Documents illustrative of History or general public interest belonging to private persons are deposited, and to consider whether, with the consent of the owners, means might not be taken to render such Documents available for public reference.

Now know ye, that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your zeal, discretion, and ability, have authorized and appointed, and do by these Presents authorize and appoint you the said William Hardy, to be a Commissioner for the purposes aforesaid, in addition to and together with the Commissioners whom We have already appointed by the above-mentioned Royal Warrants.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Twelfth day of July one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, in the Forty-second year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command.

RICHD. ASSHETON CROSS.

William Hardy, Esquire, additional Commissioner to inquire as to Historical Documents of public interest.

EIGHTH REPORT

OF THE

ROYAL COMMISSION ON HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

WE, Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed by Your Royal Commission to inquire what papers and manuscripts belonging to private families would be useful in illustrating constitutional Law, Science, and the General History of this country, and to which their respective possessors would be willing to give access, respectfully beg leave to submit this our Eighth Report to Your Majesty.

The death of the Rev. C. W. Russell, D.D., President of St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, has deprived Your Commissioners of a most esteemed and gifted colleague, whose wide historical attainments, and intimate acquaintance, more especially with all matters relating to the affairs of Ireland, have been of invaluable service to the Commission.

The ordinary work of inspection during the past year has been carried on by Mr. A. J. Horwood, Mr. J. C. Jeaffreson, Mr. R. B. Knowles, and the Rev. J. A. Bennett for England; by Mr. Fraser for Scotland; and by Mr. Gilbert for Ireland. Mr. Sheppard has made a further Report on the muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, and the Rev. W. D. Macray has completed his Report on the manuscripts of Magdalen College, Oxford. Your Commissioners are also indebted to Mr. L. O. Pike, of the Public Record Office, for an exhaustive Report on the Duke of Manchester's papers, the importance of which has quite justified them in directing that it be published as a separate part of their Appendix to this Report. Mr. Knowles' preliminary report on the remarkable collection of the Earl of Ashburnham is printed as Part III. of the Appendix.

Considerable progress has been made with the Calendar of the manuscripts of the Marquis of Salisbury at Hatfield by the Officers of the Public Record Office occasionally engaged thereon. The papers of the early years of Queen Elizabeth's reign have been chiefly dealt with, but as it will be impossible to bring together all the papers relating to this period until the whole of the collection has been examined, Your Commissioners have decided to postpone the printing of the Calendar for the present.

The number of collections examined under the directions of Your Commissioners since the issuing of the first Commission is now about 500; accounts of some of them have yet to be published, but a complete list of those already described is attached to this Report, with a reference to that Report of Your Commissioners which contains a description of the collection named.

The Reports of the Inspectors, printed in the Appendix, Parts I., II., and III., include the following collections:—

In England and Wales.—The House of Lords; the Duke of Manchester; the Duke of Marlborough; the Earl of Ashburnham; the Earl of Denbigh; the Earl of Jersey; the Earl of Portsmouth; Lord Braybrooke; Ralph Bankes, Esq., of Corfe Castle and Kingston Lacy; G. Wingfield Digby, Esq., of Sherborne Castle; Edward Hailestone, Esq.; the Trinity House Corporation; the Royal College of Physicians; the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury; Magdalen College, Oxford; Ewelme Hospital; the Corporations of Chester, Leicester, and Pontefract; Queen Anne's Bounty Office; &c., &c.

In Scotland.—The Earl of Glasgow; the Viscount of Arbuthnott; Miss Hamilton, of Barns and Cochno; A. C. Stuart, Esq.

In Ireland.—The Marquis of Ormonde; Lord Emly; Lord Talbot de Malahide; the O'Connor Don, M.P.; Trinity College, Dublin.

Among other collections, accounts of which are being drawn up for publication in future Reports of Your Commissioners, may be named those of—the Duke of Abercorn; the Duke of Hamilton; the Duke of Leinster; the Marquis of Drogheda; the Marquis of Waterford; the Earl of Leicester; the Earl Manvers; the Earl of Pembroke; Lord Braye; Mr. H. Chandos-Pole-Gell, of Hopton Hall; Mrs. Sackville Stopford Sackville, of Drayton House; the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's; the Corporations of Barnstaple, Canterbury, Ipswich, Plymouth, Stratford-on-Avon, Wisbeach, and Great Yarmouth; the Sessions Rolls of the West Riding and North Riding of Yorkshire; &c., &c.

Your Commissioners beg to subjoin a brief account of the chief collections the examination of which has been completed since their last Report was issued. Full particulars of each collection will be found in the Appendix.

House of Lords.—Mr. Taylor and Mr. Skene report a number of interesting documents of the reign of Charles II. in the collection of the House of Lords, among those which are calendared in the Appendix to this Report (p. 101). One very important class of papers is connected with the legislative efforts to improve the financial and commercial condition of the country. Foremost in this class are the minutes of the Committee on the fall of Rents and Decay of Trade. This Committee examined some members of the Council of Trade (a list of the Council is among the papers), and some of the most eminent men of business of the day, including the well-known Sir Josiah (then Mr.) Child, whose “New Discourse of Trade” appeared in 1668, and was written mainly to advocate a reduction of the rate of interest, a subject dealt with at great length by the Committee. The evidence of these witnesses is very fully given in the minutes, and throws much light on the financial state of the country and the principles of trade current among leading men at the time. A list of exports and imports, delivered in by Sir John Westenholme, a farmer of the customs, contains, so far as can be ascertained, the earliest detailed information of that kind, and is the more valuable since the destruction of the old records at the Custom House by the fire of 1814. Among other papers in this class may be noticed those connected with Bills for remedying the scarcity of ready money (No. 229), and for supplying the defect of population by the naturalisation of foreigners, who were to teach manufactures.

Some importance may be attached to an engrossed proviso to the famous Bill to prohibit the importation of Irish cattle (No. 21a), so vehemently insisted on by the Commons against the King and the Council of Ireland and opposed by the Committee of Irish Adventurers as tending to ruin their trade (No. 21). The Corporation of London had petitioned the House to be enabled to accept a present of 20,000 live cattle, charitably subscribed by the Irish, at the instance of the Duke of Ormonde, for distribution among the sufferers by the fire. This offer was derided by the enemies of the Duke, including Lord Ashley, as a politic contrivance to put a stop to the Bill; and a proviso was drawn up by the Duke of Buckingham and the Lords Ashley and Lucas to render it nugatory, which ultimately led to the Corporation declining the gift as useless.

The papers connected with the Poll Act of 1666 (No. 54) show the amendments made by the Lords in favour of aliens and the clergy, and include also their proviso, so obnoxious to the Commons, for making their grant to the King in their own name.

Particular attention is directed to the report of the Accounts Commission, presented to both Houses on 26 October 1669 (No. 213). Its contents have been set out at some length, since the only account of them hitherto published has been the short abstract given by Ralph from the collection of Lord Halifax. The detailed balance sheets of the moneys voted for the Dutch war are supplemented by full particulars of unaccounted balances and expenses “for other uses than the war,” founded on separate accounts tendered by Sir G. Carteret and the Earl of Anglesey, Treasurers for the Navy; by Colonel Legg, Treasurer of the Ordnance; by Sir Stephen Fox, Paymaster-General of the Land Forces; and by Lord Ashley, Treasurer for Prizes.

Some instances occur in these papers of the attitude of toleration adopted by the Lords after the fall of Clarendon. Such, for example, are their amendments to the Conventicles Bill of 1670, which show their successful efforts to mitigate the rigour of that measure, as brought from the Commons. A Bill, which originated in the Commons in 1667, is interesting as a first attempt to make atheism a statutory offence. The draft of a Bill against duelling (No. 168), presented by the Duke of York with a declaration from the King in Council that he would not in future pardon anyone who killed another in a duel, contains a curious preamble, and provides for the appointment of a court of honour.

The papers relating to the Earl of Clarendon’s impeachment (No. 108) define the part taken by each House in the Bill for his incapacity and banishment. The clauses in the Act incapacitating the Earl from “any other employment,” besides places of public trust, and subjecting his correspondence to the scrutiny of a Secretary of State, are found to have been added by the Commons, who, as is well known, acquiesced in the measure reluctantly as not severe enough.

Under date 14 January 1670–1 (No. 352), will be found the minutes of the Committee appointed to inquire into the assault on the Duke of Ormonde in the previous December, together with a mass of papers then produced, which supply many particulars hitherto unpublished—the design of the offenders, as reported by Lord Arlington, appears to have been, not to rob or kill the Duke, but to carry him to some obscure place and oblige him to ransom himself for 10,000*l.* or 20,000*l.*

With regard to another outrage of this time, the assault on Sir John Coventry, it appears from these papers (No. 355) that the famous clause in the "Coventry Act," making maiming, "with intent to disfigure," a felony, was an amendment introduced and insisted on by the Lords, having been prepared by Chief Justice Vaughan and Mr. Justice Windham. Bills for the prevention of highway robberies (No. 179)—Claude Duval had been executed the previous year—child stealing (No. 289), and frauds by servants (No. 339), deserve notice, and the Bill for transporting English subjects prisoners beyond the seas (No. 276) is the earliest form of what afterwards became the latter part of the Habeas Corpus Act. A petition of poor prisoners for debt in and about the city of London and elsewhere (No. 341) gives a graphic account of their miserable condition and of the causes of their destitution, and complains of the failure of other Bills for their relief.

The entries in the celebrated case of Skinner v. The East India Company, which were erased from the MS. Journal at the time, as a means of healing the quarrel between the two Houses, have now been deciphered, and are printed at length in a Supplement. Hitherto, the precedent relied on, and the arguments employed on either side in this controversy, have been known only at second hand from a pamphlet attributed at the time to Lord Holles, and published in 1669 under the title of "The Grand Question concerning the Judicature of the House of Peers, stated and argued."

A large increase in the appellate business in the Lords is evidenced during the period comprised in this Report, and much light is thrown on the judicial practice of the House by the Minute Book of the Committee for Petitions appointed after the Restoration. There is an appeal (No. 64) in which the Lord Chancellor Bacon was a party concerned in the original suit, and another (No. 79) in which the Lord Chancellor Clarendon, being charged with partiality in favour of one of his relations, defends his conduct in a Report to the House. Various instances occur to illustrate the constant changes of property at this period, alluded to by Hallam; and there are cases of estates being assigned in trust during the Civil Wars for preservation, and then appropriated by the trustees (Nos. 107 and 121). Cornelius Holland, the regicide, figures in a suit (No. 192) brought against the Backwells, who had "crept back into favour" (Alderman Backwell appears elsewhere as having lent money to the Government), and had appropriated Holland's property, after having, as alleged, assisted his escape.

A Bill (No. 343) introduced in the Lords in 1670, but rejected after "long debates," deserves notice, as an attempt to restrict the abuse of privilege of Parliament. The papers relating to alleged breach of privilege are numerous, and more than half of them relate to the servants of Peers and Peeresses. The grievances alleged against Lord Gerard by Carr, a clerk to one of the troops of the Life Guards, are set out in his printed petition to the House of Commons (No. 119), which was voted scandalous by the Lords. Another petition, reprehended as containing "scandalous and saucy" expressions against the Earl of Denbigh, prays the King to order the Lord Keeper, or the justices of the peace for Leicestershire, to examine how the Earl's receiver has disposed of sums received for the repair of the highways (No. 104). There is a petition from the Earl of Anglesey (No. 222) in reference to his suspension from the office of Treasurer of the Navy. The minutes of the Committee for Privileges, to whom this petition was referred, record that the Earl subsequently abandoned his complaint. Papers occur in connexion with some angry litigation between the Earl of Peterborough and his mother (No. 317), and with a dispute between the Earl of Westmoreland and Lord Holles (No. 326), in which the latter was heard in person at the bar, the Earl's petition being finally rejected, "taken away from the table, and torn by Lord Newport, and the pieces taken away by the Earl of Anglesey." There is an account of a violent entry into Lady De Warr's house in Clerkenwell Close, for her refusal to pay her tailor an "unreasonable bill" of 26*l.* (No. 304). Lady Audley complains of being arrested at her lodgings in Covent Garden, the bailiff being told to pretend that he brought a letter from Lord Bridgewater, in order to gain access to her (No. 227); and Lord Audley complains that his lodgings in King Street, Westminster, were broken into by some "pretended constables with their crew" (No. 251). The old Earl of Berkshire recounts a singular affray one afternoon with three men in London, who after having dragged him and his coach, in which he had sought refuge, into the street, were driven back into the house by the neighbours, the Earl eventually being sheltered for the night by an old servant of the Countess of Exeter (No. 147).

In connexion with the great fire of 1666, there is little matter of interest to report; the inquiry into the causes of it was conducted by a Committee of the Commons. Mr. Child, in his evidence before the Committee on the Fall of Rents, speaks of it, together with the Plague, as one of the causes of the depression of trade; and the account of Poll Money receipts delivered to the Accounts Commission computes a loss of 52,000*l.* on that account. The first Act for rebuilding the City was brought into the Commons by the City Members, and passed almost untouched through the Lords. Among the papers connected with the Additional Act for that purpose, which the Lords largely altered, may be noted a proposal to establish a registry of unfree artificers, many of whom had been "turned out of work by the freeman and reduced to beggary." The question of putting the City churchyards to other uses than burying places was mooted in Committee; and there is a draft proviso for converting the sites of certain churches and churchyards into public store yards for coal and fuel, and a proposed clause to enable the purchase of burial places at a "convenient distance" from the City (Nos. 203 and 293). It may be noted that the Bill of 1667 to prevent the sale of offices (No. 97), made half the penalty, imposed for offences under the Act, go for the next 10 years to repairing the churches "lately built within the City and suburbs." Reference is made to the "new workhouses" in Tothill-fields and St. Martin's-in-the-Fields in a petition (No. 204), praying the Lords to assist in finishing the building, without further taxing the inhabitants, so that the streets might be kept "clear and free from begging poor;" and annexed is a letter thanking the House for its assistance, whereby the parish had been saved 200*l.* a year.

A petition of Margaret, Marchioness of Worcester (No. 83), whose case was recommended by the King, prays the House to consider her necessitous condition, brought about by the vast sums expended and great debts contracted by her husband in the service of Charles I. A similar instance of Royalist impoverishment occurs in the petition of Charles, son and heir of Warwick, Lord Mohun (No. 366).

The circumstances connected with Lady Roos' divorce are detailed in the evidence taken on the Bills to illegitimate her children (No. 20), and to enable Lord Roos to marry again (No. 263), and in her petition for a maintenance (No. 135). A similar petition of Lady Read, complaining of ill-treatment by her husband, gives the particulars of a case in which the King subsequently interested himself on her behalf. Lady Prettyman also appeals for protection against her husband, the Sir John Prettyman who was expelled from the House of Commons (No. 378). There is a petition of Lady Castlemaine (containing her autograph signature as Barbara Villiers), praying for compensation for the loss of her allowance out of the fees for coining silver, which were abolished by the Coinage Act of 1666. The amendments made to the proviso which she offered for that purpose show the restrictions imposed by Parliament in granting her request (No. 35).

The Duke of Marlborough.—The manuscripts at Blenheim are very numerous and important. They include some Latin charters, of the 13th and 14th centuries, to the abbey of St. Albans; numerous proceedings by the Committee for Bedfordshire during the Civil War, showing the sequestrations of the estates of the royalists; and some interesting letters, in 1645 and 1646 giving accounts of the movements of the contending parties; some papers relating to Major Oliver Cromwell (a relative of the Protector), who died in Ireland in 1649; copies of letters of the Earl of Bristol to Cardinal Mazarin; copy of agreement between Oliver Cromwell and Mazarin; and many papers relating to the intended aid by Spain to Charles II., when in exile, for a descent on England; letter books of the first and second Earls of Sunderland at the end of the 17th century and beginning of the 18th century, and papers relating to the government of Ireland at the latter period; Original letters of General Palmeto to Lord Sunderland from Turin and the camp of the Duke of Savoy; letters and papers about Lord Griffin and others who were taken prisoners in the "Salisbury" in 1708; a long letter of De Foe to Godolphin, and two from him to the Earl of Sunderland; and several letters of Alexander Pope to the Duchess of Marlborough. There are original commissions in the army to John Churchill by Kings Charles II. and James II.; appointments by King William III. of Marlborough to be Plenipotentiary, and ratifications of treaties concluded by Marlborough; many papers by the Duchess relating to her disputes with Queen Anne, and upwards of 300 letters of Anne as Princess and Queen to Sarah Lady Churchill afterwards Countess and Duchess of Marlborough; letters of Queen Anne to the Duke; correspondence between Queen Anne and Lord Godolphin; some original letters of Prince Eugene; some documents relating to the 2½ per cent. paid to Marlborough out of the moneys stipulated for foreign troops; a notice of the disturbance at Dublin on the occasion of Garth's prologue to the play of Tamerlane being read there in 1712; letters to and from Richard Steele; a MS. copy of Addison's play "Rosamond." There are many thousands of letters to the Duke from crowned heads, foreign towns, and military and private persons from 1705 to 1719; copies of the Duke's letters from 1702 to 1712; Bishop Hare's narrative of the Duke's campaigns; and copies of letters to Louis XIV. from the French ambassador in Spain at the end of the 17th century. (See Appendix, p. 1.)

The Earl of Jersey.—In the library, that contains the fine collection of Caxtons and other specimens of early typography, bought by Mr. Child of Osterley from the executors of Brian Fairfax, the Earl of Jersey preserves at Osterley Park, together with other manuscripts of less moment to historical inquirers, a treatise, covering two hundred and twenty-four closely written pages, on the domestic troubles and discontents of England towards the close of the reign of Henry the Eighth, entitled "A Discourse of the commonweale of thys Realme of Englande," and several official records of the seventeenth century relating to matters of diplomacy, naval administration, postal communications, and Irish business; one of the most noteworthy of these being a careful memoir of the daily proceedings of the English, Spanish, and Austrian commissioners at their conferences in London, in the year 1604, for the negotiation of a Treaty of Peace. Of the other official writings the most important are two summaries of payments made at the Receipt of His Highness' Exchequer in the years 1656-7 and 1657-8; a collection of evidences relating to the public expenditure of England and Ireland in the year 1659; and a set of papers touching new buildings about London, that take notice of the measures of successive governments, from the reign of Elizabeth to the time of Charles the Second, for restraining the excess of buildings in the immediate vicinity of London and Westminster, and checking the dangerously rapid growth of the metropolis. "The mischiefs," says the draftsman of a Petition to the King's most Excellent Majesty, for new legislation against the evils of centralization, "and inconveniences arising by the vast increase of new buildings near and about the cittyes of London and Westminster are soe notorious and evident, That both the citty itt selfe and all the countreyes in generall feel at this day the smart and vnhappy effects thereof; the Head swelling to too great a disproportion, that itt is att once both become unweildy and destructive to ittselfe, and hath alsoe left the other parts of the kingdome languishing and deprived of its nutriment." The facts and views set forth in these curious papers, if not brought together for the first time, seem to have been submitted in their present form to official consideration shortly before Lord Keeper Finch (afterwards Earl of Nottingham), in April 1675, called the attention of Parliament to "the excess of new buildings near London and Westminster" as being "a growing mischief which for a long time hath depopulated the country, and now begins to depopulate the city too, by leaving a great part of it uninhabited." Of the less important writings of the collection that are not devoid of historical value, one of the most entertaining is the fragment of Sir Francis Child's "Short Account of his travels thro' some parts of the Low Country, Flanders, and Germany" (1697), that gives a vivid picture of the Hague at its gayest season, and commemorates the stately pomp maintained there by the Earl of Pembroke during the negotiation of the Treaty of Ryswick; and connoisseurs especially concerned in the history of famous works of art will pursue with interest the catalogues of the pictures by Rubens, Poussin, Lely, Claude Lorraine, and other celebrated painters, which in an early year of the eighteenth century, Sir Francis Child, the banker, moved from his house in Lincoln's Inn Fields to Osterley Park. (See Appendix, p. 92.)

The Earl of Denbigh.—In his present report upon the Earl of Denbigh's manuscripts, Mr. R. B. Knowles brings his examination of his Lordship's collection to a close. He has been enabled to make an addition to the extracts from the News Letters of 1688-1693, contained in his last report, and he has placed it beyond doubt, that these letters were addressed to Dykevelt by a correspondent in London who had the confidence of the Dutch statesman, and who kept him informed from week to week of all that was passing in the political world. Later on in time, there is a series of letters addressed by Lord and Lady Bolingbroke to Isabel, Countess of Denbigh. These also are highly interesting, and the Commission is much indebted to the Earl of Denbigh for the liberality with which he has placed his collection at its disposal for the purposes of Mr. Knowles' present and former reports. (See Appendix, p. 552.)

The Earl of Portsmouth.—The number and value of the Hurstbourne MSS. have been greatly lessened by the Earl of Portsmouth's recent gift of the scientific papers of his collateral ancestor, Sir Isaac Newton, to the University of Cambridge; but, together with other writings of interest, there still remains at the seat of the Hampshire

Wallops a remarkable collection of documents, affording a complete view of the great mathematician's various and often vexatious duties as Warden of the Mint, and demonstrating in a curious manner his inaptitude for the clerical labour requisite for their performance. The more notable of them touch such matters as the recoinage of the Scotch currency; the manufacture of the copper money that afforded Dean Swift a welcome opportunity for embarrassing the Irish Government; the suppression of the five country mints at York, Bristol, Exeter, Chester, and Norwich; and the serious losses coming to the Crown from the Cornish tin contracts. In the rough draft of a report from the officers of the Mint to the Lords of the Treasury on the qualities of Mr. Wood's famous half-pence and farthings, Sir Isaac Newton certifies that the decried money was in metal and manufacture greatly superior to any copper moneys minted for Ireland in former time. "We reckon the copper of Mr. Wood's half-pence and farthings," runs the draft, "to be of about the same goodness and value with the copper of which the copper money is coyned in the King's mint for England, or worth about 12*d.* or 13*d.* per pound in weight averdupois in the market, and the copper of which the half-pence were coyned for Ireland in the reigns of King Charles, King James, and King William to be much inferior in value, and almost of no value in the market, the mixture being uncertain, and not bearing the fire for converting it to any other use." The notion that Sir Isaac Newton's successive offices in the Mint were places of easy employment, allowing him abundant time for his scientific pursuits, is strangely irreconcilable with the revelations of manuscripts that prove him to have been a painful toiler at petty and uncongenial tasks. As Master of the Mint it devolved on him not only to give general directions for Mint prosecutions, but also to take an active and personal part in the details of measures for discovering the clippers and punishing the counterfeiters of the sovereign's money; and from the draft of a curious letter preserved at Hurstbourne, it appears that he earnestly entreated the Lords of the Treasury to relieve him of an obligation so fruitful to him of discomfort and obloquy. "The new reward of forty pounds per head," he urges, "has now made courts of justice and juries so averse from believing witnesses, and sheriffs so inclinable to impanel bad juries, that my agents and witnesses are discouraged and tired out by the want of success and by the reproach of prosecuting and swearing for money. And this vilifying of my agents and witnesses is a reflection on me, which has gravelled me, and must in time impair and perhaps wear out my credit. Besides that, I am exposed to the calumnies of as many coyners and Newgate solicitors as I examin or admit to talk with me, if they can but find friends to believe and encourage them in their false reports and oaths and combinations against me. I do not find that the prosecuting coyners was imposed on any of my predecessors (tho' some of them have done it) or is consistent with the Privy Seal; for he that gathers up the estates of convicted criminals should not intermeddle in the matter . . . 'Tis the business of an attorney and Solicitor General; and they are best able to go through it, especially with such assistance as they can procure. And therefore I humbly pray it may not be imposed upon me any longer." Of the difficulty with which Sir Isaac Newton discharged the literary functions of an office that made him a frequent correspondent with the Treasury, impressive evidence is afforded by the number of his rough drafts of papers that would have caused him little effort had he been a scribe of average address. It was seldom that he produced an official memorandum without making a second preliminary sketch of the performance, and he sometimes worked on as many as half a dozen several rough drafts before he was satisfied with the wording of an epistle that on completion was by no means remarkable for grace or perspicuity of expression. The several documents touching Sir John Erskine's silver mine in the parish of Alva, near Stirling, and the memorandum relating to the Scotch gold mines worked in and near Crawford Moor in the times of James the Fourth and James the Fifth of Scotland, should not be overlooked by readers especially interested in the history of British metallurgy; and of the several writings in the same collection that have no connection with the Mint, perhaps the most important is a careful statistical paper (dated 25th March 1673) on the population, resources, and social condition of Ireland, that, after glancing at the relations of England and the sister island, recommends that "both kingdoms should be united and governed by one Legislative Power." (See Appendix, p. 60.)

Lord Braybrooke.—Preserved at two different places, Lord Braybrooke's MSS. have been broken into two separate collections of writings: (1) the manuscripts still retained at Audley End, and (2) the papers (American and East Indian) of Charles, first Marquis Cornwallis, recently presented by his lordship to the Public Record Office for the convenience of students of Anglo-American and Anglo-Indian history; together with a curious account book of the churchwardens of Walden, co. Essex (17 Henry VI.—5 Henry VII.), kept by turns in French, Latin, and English; the books of the first-named set of writings comprise the folio “Chartulary and Deed Register” of Sir Thomas Cornwallis (1 Mary—25 Elizabeth)” and “The Book of the Duke of York’s Household (1660–1673),” which latter, while revealing the grandeur and disorder of the prince’s establishment, yields numerous data for the enlightenment of biographic illustrators of Charles the Second’s London. The interest of the unbound writings would be greater had not the correspondence of Sir Ralph Winwood and Sir Henry Neville of Billingbere, including Winwood’s bright picture of the celebration of the marriage of Henry the Fourth of France with Mary de Medicis, been published in Edmund Sawyer’s “Memorials of Affairs of State in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and “King James the First” (1725). But though the more entertaining of the earlier letters have long been public property, the papers, which came to their present possessor from Richard Neville Aldworth Neville, M.P., Secretary to the British Embassy at Paris during the negotiation of the Definitive Treaty (1763), offer several matters of novelty and moment touching that treaty; and a piquant and amusing letter, written by David Hume in 1764, during his official residence in Paris, which should appear in future editions of the philosopher’s correspondence. To the second set of writings, from which Mr. Charles Ross drew the material of his three comprehensive volumes of “The Correspondence of Charles, First Marquess Cornwallis” (1859), are found many documents of interest hidden amongst writings that were only of ephemeral worth, valuable chiefly for hitherto unpublished letters by Admiral Arbuthnot, Sir Henry Clinton, K.B., and Lord Rawdon. The American papers give numerous particulars respecting subordinate actors in the War of American Independence, and a still larger body of facts that, though they may not be historic in a high degree, will seem by no means trivial to American biographers and the historians of American families. More may be said in commendation of the East Indian Papers, which, though they include much that had better be studied in Mr. Ross’s pages, and much that may be styled mere official waste paper, contain confidential writings from diplomatic agents, which supplement the deficiencies of the printed narrative, by showing the various influences and circumstances that shaped the policies and determined the actions of the soldier and administrator throughout his long and brilliant tenure of vice-regal authority. (See Appendix, p. 277.)

Mr. Ralph Bankes.—In the year 1853 the Right Hon. J. Bankes published at full length in his story of “Corfe Castle,” sixteen of the letters of historical value of Charles I.’s time, which are preserved at Kingston Lacy. These are simply mentioned, with their dates, in the Report now presented. A few others which were not published with the rest, including one from Archbishop Laud, of the year 1637, are reported upon more fully. One MS. of interest is a commission, dated 1634, for the redemption of some of the Crown jewels pledged in Holland; a paper which supplies one of the gaps in the Crown Jewel Accounts, now in the possession of Captain Mildmay, R.N., and noticed in the last Report. Besides these documents, two MS. volumes of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Parliamentary Committee for the county of Dorset seem to be particularly worthy of notice. (See Appendix, p. 208.)

Mr. G. Wingfield Digby.—The earlier portion of Mr. Digby’s MSS. contains much correspondence between James I., Prince Charles, and the Earl of Bristol with reference to the Spanish Match. The later contain many letters of the years 1753–1757, which passed between Henry Fox, Lord Ilchester, Lord Digby, and others, all of great personal and political interest. (See Appendix, p. 213.)

Mr. Edward Hailstone.—Chiefly remarkable for an almost perfect assemblage of printed works, by Yorkshire men of letters or having some relation to the history of the three Ridings, the library of Mr. Hailstone, F.S.A., at Walton Hall, near Wakefield, contains among the MSS. some devotional works of the 12th and four following centuries surpassed by few private collections of such literature; and amongst his charters and other instruments of the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries he preserves some noteworthy evidences touching Buckland, Fountains and Kirkstall abbeys, the priories of Plympton and Newburgh, and other religious houses. In addition to these ancient books and deeds, Mr. Hailstone has volumes of heraldic and genealogical illustrations of Yorkshire families; a few scientific papers by John Flamsteed the astronomer; some notebooks and separate sheets of memoranda (personal or scientific) by Abraham Sharp, the mathematician, for some years Flamsteed’s assistant at the Greenwich Observatory; and the collections of Church notes and transcripts from Church registers of the North Riding of Yorkshire, made by Mr. Dixon of Middleham. (See Appendix, p. 636.)

The College of Physicians.—The manuscripts consist mainly (irrespective of medical works) of the Annals, in folio volumes, the first volume being written by John Caius, President of the College in the time of Queen Elizabeth; these Annals detail the proceedings of the College in the election of members, and their action against empirics and unauthorised practitioners. The Sovereign and noblemen often, but sometimes in vain, solicited the College to authorise persons to practise medicine; and the Admiralty consulted them as to the victuals and medicine necessary for ships. Among other interesting items is the report on the cause of the death of Arabella Stuart, and notes of proceedings against the notorious Simon Forman. In 1684 Dr. Goodall, a fellow of the College, published the Acts of Parliament relating to and some of the charters granted to the College, and a historical account of the College's proceedings against empirics down to the death of King Charles I. In compiling this work he had access to and quotes the Annals. (See Appendix, p. 226.)

Corporation of the Trinity House.—The earlier manuscripts were destroyed by fire long ago. Those at present existing (besides their charters) consist of folio volumes, containing entries of the proceedings by and letters from and to the Corporation, the earliest being in 1609; from these may be seen the exercise by the Corporation of their jurisdiction with regard to the River Thames and the lighthouses and beacons on the coasts, references to them by the Admiralty concerning ships, the propriety of grants of patents for lighthouses and other matters, and their proceedings thereon; the names of the Masters and some of the brethren, among whom will be found William Pryune and Samuel Pepys. (See Appendix, p. 235.)

Ewelme Almshouse.—The manuscripts consist of documents of the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries. The Almshouse was, in pursuance of a royal license dated 15 Hen. VI., founded by William de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk, and Alice his wife, who was a daughter of Thomas Chancer, son of Geoffrey Chancer the poet. The statutes for its governance were not framed until its founder became a Duke; they are curious for the regulations made and interesting as a specimen of the English language at that time, being very free from archaisms in words and spelling. The original statutes are not at Ewelme, but there is a contemporary copy on vellum. The other documents consist of deeds and court-rolls relating to the manors wherewith the Almshouse was endowed, audit accounts, and an interesting list of the furniture, hangings, books, and ornaments at the Almshouse in the reign of King Edward IV. (See Appendix, p. 624.)

Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.—Mr. Sheppard has continued his examination of the MSS. belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The Fifth Report of this Commission contained an account of the Chartæ Antiquæ Cantuarienses, a collection consisting of a large number of original charters and other documents which have descended to the present Cathedral Body from their predecessors, the Prior and Chapter of the ancient monastery of Christ Church, and in the Appendix (p. 315) to the present report there is a continuation of this account in a description of another class of historical MSS., still preserved in the Muniment Room of the Cathedral, the Registers, namely, of the same Priory. These Registers contain contemporary copies of many important writings, which, if not thus enrolled, would have been lost, seeing that the originals have disappeared from among the Chartæ Antiquæ.—A 12th century copy of the Domesday of the Monastery, founded upon, and in style resembling, the great royal survey, gives an accurate idea of the possessions of the House at the time of the compilation, while five thick folio Curularies, beautifully written upon vellum, carry the same kind of information down to the beginning of the 15th century. A valuable series of royal and episcopal deprecatory letters and professions of canonical obedience contain much evidence relating to the succession of mediæval prelates. In the former, the Chapter of Canterbury are asked to waive their right, pro hac vice, of consecrating in Christ Church various suffragan Bishops of the Province, and by the latter these and other suffragans profess and confess that their Sees are subject to the Metropolitan Church. A collection of about 400 ancient wills proved, during several vacancies of the See, before the Commissaries of the Prior and Chapter, and therefore not to be found elsewhere, serve to fill up the lacunæ which occur in the series of wills to be found in the principal registry of the Court of Probate. Copies are there to be seen of such wills as were proved in the ordinary course before the officials of successive Archbishops, but these Canterbury wills being proved, sede vacante at Canterbury, have always remained there, and have never found their way into the general public collection. Other volumes contain the regulations, enacted from time to time by act of Chapter, for the domestic management of the monastery, and two treatises on Rural Economy, in French, are included for the instruction of the Monastic Stewards and Bailiffs. To render valid the acts of the Archbishop, which deal with the patronage or property of the See, it was required that the confirmation of the Chapter of his Cathedral Church should be obtained, and hence it happens that many deeds, illustrating the history of the See, are found here, where only such as narrate the vicissitudes of the monastery might be looked for. Many royal writs are addressed to the Prior, both in his capacity of Head of a religious corporation, and as a magnate of his country. These Registers, to which Spelman, Somner, Wharton, Wilkins, and Kemble had access, and from which they made such extracts as suited their immediate purposes, contain, as will be seen from Mr. Sheppard's report in the Appendix, an enormous amount of hitherto unedited material, which still awaits a competent editor and a sufficient endowment to make it available for the illustration of our national history, and of the social and domestic life of a great Benedictine monastery during several centuries of the Middle Ages. The length to which the description of the Registers has extended has made a division into two parts necessary. The first half is given in the present Report, and the remainder will follow in due course.

City of Chester.—These MSS. consist of 61 charters and letters patent, beginning with Henry the Second's writ of license to the citizens of Chester to trade in Durham as they were wont to do in the time of Henry the First; 550 books and upwards of 500 letters and notes, covering the period from the time of Henry VIII. to the time of George I., and copious accumulations of Court rolls and files. Remarkable for the number and diversity of its contents, the collection is even more remarkable for the historic interest of the more important records. The charters of Ranulph, Earl of Chester (the 4th Earl of the De Meschines), illustrate the relations of the earls and burghers of Chester in the 12th century; and King John's charters (two of them dated before his accession to the throne), for the protection of citizens of Chester in Ireland and their license to trade there, are noteworthy items in the list of our evidences touching the intercourse of the peoples of the sister islands in the later years of the 12th century and the opening years of the 13th century. Attention may also be called to the charter of Richard II. for a remission of fee-farm and other rents to the citizens of Chester. This beautifully written and perfectly preserved record has escaped the observation of local historians, who are chiefly accountable for the misconception that the Dee was navigable for vessels of ordinary burthen up to the city's walls till an early date of the 17th century, and that the port had in earlier times experienced no serious inconvenience from gradual depositions of mud and silt in the channel of the river. Important information may be gathered from the sheriffs' year books respecting the commercial fortunes and the fluctuating populousness of Chester from Henry V. to James I., and respecting the intercourse of England and Ireland in days when Dublin looked to West Chester for despatches and news from the Sovereign's Court, and English troops under orders for Irish service were marched from their respective counties to the havens of the Dee for embarkation. The official correspondence, which is so important a feature of the collection, yields also many matters of moment to inquirers, who would get a perfect view of the relation in which the north-western city stood to Westminster on the one hand and to Dublin on the other. A considerable proportion of the letters and notes may be described as papers touching Irish affairs from the accession of Elizabeth to the last years of James the First; and the general interest of these miscellaneous epistles is not independent of the brief and emphatic orders to mayors and postmasters for the quickest possible transmission of despatches to Ireland. The embarrassments and misadventures necessarily arising from the difficulties of intercommunication between the two countries are vividly suggested by Richard Gardener's letter (dated 7 June 1598, and marked on the cover, "Haste, haste; poste haste"), urgently requesting the Mayor of Chester to forward all despatches for the Irish Government resting in his hands to Holyhead, where "there shalbe a boate" "ready attending to bringe them ouer by tyding and other paynes of rowing, although" "the wyndes should contynue contrarye." Besides letters, each bearing several signatures from Lords of the Council, the Elizabethan correspondence comprises separate and individual communications to Chester mayors and other local officers from the Earls of Leicester, Derby, and Huntingdon, Lord Chancellor Hatton, Lords Burghley, Hunsdon, and Buckhurst, Sir Francis Walsingham and Sir Arthur Chichester; and in subsequent times from the Earls of Salisbury and Nottingham (temp. James I.), Oliver Cromwell, Secretary Thurloe, and Isaac Newton; this division of the MSS., closing with a series of letters from Peter Shakerley, M.P., in the times of William III. and Anne, to his constituents of Chester, which exhibit the politician's views on public events, and the pains he took to keep his friends "the merchants of Chester" fully and precisely informed of all parliamentary matters affecting their especial interests. (See Appendix, p. 355.)

Borough of Pontefract.—Were it not for the somewhat worn and defaced charter, dated on 6 June, 5 Richard I., by Roger de Lacy, constable of Chester, to his burgesses of the Broken Bridge, and the charter of Insepimus and Confirmation, dated by Henry de Lacy in the sixth year of Edward the First, in renewal and perpetuation of Roger's concessions, the muniment closet of the Pontefract Moothall would not contain a single writing of unusual antiquity or moment. But whilst in the earlier of these two charters it retains an evidence deserving the consideration of historians especially concerned in the origin and development of municipal institutions, the Yorkshire borough possesses in the later instrument a record that, by the inaccuracies of its recital of the older deed, is calculated to inspire students with a wholesome distrust of the verbal exactness of the recitals embodied in confirmatory letters. The same useful lesson is inculcated by two of the later charters of the same collection of MSS., the Letters Patent of Insepimus and Confirmation, dated 5 May, 4 Edward VI., and the Letters Patent, dated 2 March, 4 James I.; each of which records, under the Great Seal, commits the curious and exemplary error of attributing to Henry the Fourth the Letters Patent by which Henry the Seventh, in the fourth year of his reign, reconstituted Pontefract a free borough. (See Appendix, p. 269.)

Borough of Leicester.—Few English boroughs possess an assemblage of records so rich in important evidences and pleasant memorials of old English manners as the carefully arranged manuscripts that have been lately removed from a dark and insufficient closet of the former Town Hall to a suitable chamber in the new municipal buildings of the borough of Leicester. Comprising charters and letters patent, the earliest of which were dated in the twelfth century; guild-rolls whose first entries were made in the time of Richard I.; instruments of various kinds illustrating the careers of Simon de Montfort and the most famous of his Plantagenet successors in the County of Leicester; divers sets of financial records, including tollage-rolls of the 13th century and Chamberlains' accounts from an early year of Henry the Eighth to the first year of George the Third; a large quantity of correspondence and official literature relating to the municipal interests and domestic concerns of the people of Leicester in the sixteenth and two following centuries; many hundreds of deeds, municipal or private, abounding in noteworthy examples of ancient tenures and mediæval conveyancing; and 94 manuscript volumes or folios of collected manuscripts, comprehending a series of communal registers, a chartulary of the fourteenth century, a Latin Bible (15th century) said to have been used devotionally by Charles the First, and the famous "Codex Leicestrensis." The collection is so copious that to obtain a general view of its multifarious contents readers must examine two of the longest catalogues of the Appendix to this Report. All that can be done in an introductory note is to direct attention to a few of the most considerable matters that have been discovered or brought into fuller light by the recent inspection of the writings. Among the 13th century records may be named Simon de Montfort's charter for the remission of gable-pence and bridge silver to the burgesses of Leicester; and the original schedule of the payments by which the men of Leicester obtained from their Lord this remission of pecuniary obligations. For the particulars of the preliminary inquisition for the origin of the two exactions we are indebted to a memorandum in Latin, giving a vivid picture of the trial by wager of battle that determined the men of Leicester, before the end of the 11th century, to pay a yearly house-tax to their earl for the perpetual restoration to them and their successors of their ancient process of trial by jurors, which had been temporarily superseded by the judicial method imposed upon them by the Norman intruders.

The jurors, whose verdict has been thus fortunately preserved and regained, found upon their oath "that in the time of Robert de Medland, then Earl of Leicester, it "happened that two kinsmen, that is to say, Nicholas, the son of Acres, and Geoffrey, "the son of Nicholas of Leicester, waged a certain duel for a piece of land, respecting "which a suit had arisen between them; and they fought from the first hour even "unto the ninth, and longer, and thus fighting one with another, one of them drove "the other even to a certain little pit, and as he stood over the little pit and ought to "have fallen into it, his kinsman said to him, 'Preserve thyself from the pit lest thou "fall into it;' and immediately there was made so great a clamour and so great a "tumult by those standing around and those sitting around, that the lord earl heard "their clamour even at the castle, and he sought then from certain persons what that "clamour was, and it was answered to him that two kinsmen fought for certain land, "and one of them drove the other even to a certain little pit, and as he stood over the "pit and ought to have fallen into it, the other warned him. The burgesses truly then being moved by piety agreed in such manner with the lord earl that they would give to him three pence per annum for each house whose gable was placed towards the High Street, on condition that he would grant to them that all the pleas happening to them should be discussed and determined by the twenty-four jurors who were appointed in Leicester in olden time; and this was granted to them by the Lord Earl, and thus were first raised the pence which are called gouel-pence."

Even more noteworthy is the noble French indenture that sets forth Edmund Crouchback's Ordinances (A.D. 1277) for the reformation of the laws and usages of the Portmanmote of Leicester. From its magnitude as well as from the number and importance of its provisions, this instrument may be fitly styled The Great Charter of Leicester; and its recent discovery in a packet of comparatively modern writings is the more remarkable because history has long lost all knowledge of its execution and consequences, and because historians have concurred in representing that Edward the First's younger brother never took any conspicuous or memorable part in the government of the borough that came into his hands, together with the dignity of Simon de Montfort's earldom. (See Appendix, p. 403.)

The Earl of Glasgow.—The muniments of the Earl of Glasgow at Crawford Priory, in the county of Fife, have already been partially reported upon by the late Mr. Stuart in 1872. The portion now reported on by Mr. Fraser (App. p. 304) is distinct from the former, and refers more especially to the ancient family and possessions of the Lords Lindsay of the Byres. They contain a number of very interesting charters, ranging from about 1210 to 1500, and referring to various classes of holdings, both feudal and ecclesiastical. Among others may be noted charters granted by Earls of Fife of the race of Macduff. The charters relating to ecclesiastical possessions include early writs of the estate of Struthers, now called Crawford Priory, interesting in their mention of certain clerics of note, chiefly connected with the See of St. Andrews, among whom appears John Major, the tutor of Knox and Buchanan. They are also illustrative of the high sounding titles of certain prelates before the Reformation. A short series of titles refers to the ancient chapel of St. Mary of the Rock, also called Kirkhugh, near St. Andrews. Its site has long been covered by the sea at high tide, but it was from early times a religious establishment of considerable importance. Among the miscellaneous charters and documents appear several writs by Sir Walter Haliburton of Dirltown, son-in-law of Robert Duke of Albany. The celebrated Scottish Admiral, Sir Andrew Wood of Largo, and Sir David Lindsay of the Mount, the poet, also appear together in one writ as valuers of sheep and oxen.

The Viscount of Arbutnott.—The MSS. belonging to the Viscount of Arbutnott at Arbutnott House, in the county of Kincardine, reported on by Mr. Fraser (App. p. 297), consist chiefly of title deeds of the family estates. These are, however, varied by certain curious documents of an ecclesiastical nature, one being an indulgence for contributing to an expedition against the Turks; another is a special permission to have a portable altar; while a third contains a form of absolution in articulo mortis. There are several letters from King James the Sixth, and a few of interest from private persons, among others, one from the famous divine Mr. Samuel Rutherford, author of Lex Rex, &c. But the chief interest of this collection centres in the MSS. books, of which there are several; one of these, known as the "Missale de Arbutnott," was edited by the late Bishop Forbes of Brechin in 1864, but only a limited number of copies were printed. Another, a history of the family, was compiled by Mr. Alexander Arbutnott, Principal of King's College, Aberdeen, and if in referring to it more space has been given to a notice of the family than is usual in these reports, it is because this MS. alludes to more than one point of historical and antiquarian interest.

Miss Hamilton of Barns and Cochno.—The family papers in the possession of Miss Hamilton of Barns and Cochno, in the county of Dumbarton, are reported on by Mr. Fraser (App. p. 308). This collection supplies many items of use to local antiquaries as to various customs, local prices of grain, &c. In some of the miscellaneous papers appear evidence of the unhappy relations which so long subsisted between the Highlanders and the Lowlands of Scotland, until after the Rebellion of 1745, and the opening up of freer intercommunication.

Alexander Charles Stuart, Esq.—The collection of papers in the possession of Mr. Alexander Charles Stuart of Eaglescairnie, in the county of Haddington, reported on by Mr. Fraser (App. p. 310), refers chiefly to private family affairs. It contains, however, some letters written during the first half of last century, which give interesting glimpses of Scottish life and manners. The receiver of the letters, Mr. Patrick Lindsay, was M.P. for Edinburgh at the time of the Porteous Riots, and the letters contain reports made to him by the Lord Provost and others of the state of popular feeling in Edinburgh. There are also two letters from Allan Ramsay, the poet, very characteristic of the writer, and not very complimentary to those who opposed his desire for the licensing of a theatre in Edinburgh. There are also a few papers relating to the Rebellion of 1745, the most interesting of which is a "Journal of Route with the Hessians" evidently written by one who accompanied this corps in their movements against the Pretender. Among the miscellaneous papers is one recording the presentation by the Convention of Royal Burghs of a gift of table linen to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

In Ireland a large amount of work has been successfully carried out by Mr. John T. Gilbert, in continuation of his previous labours for the Commission. The Irish collections on which Reports by Mr. Gilbert are printed in the present volume are those of the Marquis of Ormonde, Lord Talbot de Malahide, Lord Emly, the O'Connor Don, and Trinity College, Dublin. The extent of the valuable and original historical information brought to light from these documents will be seen by consulting the Reports themselves, which may be here briefly referred to, as follows :—

The Marquis of Ormonde.—From these archives, at Kilkenny Castle, a calendar has been prepared of an unique collection of petitions, addressed by persons of all classes and on a great variety of subjects, to the first Duke of Ormonde as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the years immediately succeeding the Restoration of Charles II. This calendar is appended to the present Report (App. p. 499). The documents noticed in it have been hitherto unpublished, and abound in details which illustrate the social condition as well as the Governmental arrangements of the time in Ireland; while they likewise supply much valuable and authentic historical, biographical, and genealogical information. Among the many papers of historical interest thus for the first time rendered accessible are several in connection with the Republican Conspiracy, in which the noted Thomas Blood and his brother-in-law, the Rev. William Lecky, were involved against the government of Charles II. in Ireland, and for which some of those concerned were executed at Dublin in 1663.

Lord Talbot de Malahide.—The manuscripts here reported on include a document of the Viceroyalty in Ireland of the famous John Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury; letters of Lord Melfort and Richard Talbot, Duke of Tyrconnell, Viceroy of James II., and a detailed account of the private estate of that King in Ireland. These letters of Tyrconnell were written to his brother-in-law, Richard Hamilton, during the residence in Ireland of James II. They are of much interest in an historical point of view, as well as from the references in them to the writer's brother, Anthony Hamilton, of the Mémoires de Gramont. (See Appendix, p. 493.)

Lord Emly.—The correspondence and papers of Edmund Sexton Pery, Speaker of the House of Commons in Ireland, noticed in the present Report (App. p. 174), extend from 1757 to 1779. They include many interesting letters and papers written during an important political period by William Gerard Hamilton, Edmund Burke, Francis Andrews, Hervey, Earl of Bristol and Bishop of Derry, Lord Townshend, Earl Nugent, the Marquis of Buckinghamshire, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord North, and others. Among the letters is one in which Lord Townshend describes the scene which he witnessed in the House of Lords, in 1778, when Lord Chatham was suddenly attacked there by "a deadly convulsion." The collection also contains a curious and hitherto unknown historical narrative written by Pery for the information of the Duke of Bedford, embodying personal and private details, not elsewhere on record, in connection with the chief conductors of the Government in Ireland for some years antecedent to 1757.

The O'Connor Don.—Charles O'Connor, of Belanagare, in the county of Roscommon, whose letters and manuscripts are here reported on, occupied during part of the eighteenth century an important position in Ireland as a politician, man of letters, and investigator of the ancient native literature of his country. The letters and papers of O'Connor which are here noticed extend to 1769, and supply a large amount of new information on social, political, and literary affairs during those times, both in England and Ireland. (See Appendix, p. 441.)

Trinity College, Dublin.—In sequence to Mr. Gilbert's Report, already published by Your Commissioners, on the manuscripts of Trinity College, Dublin, a second compendious catalogue by him is here presented, which comprises two further important sections of this collection. Among these, it will be seen, are some original documents of importance and several transcripts; and as deserving special notice we may mention the "Depositions" relative to 1641, and the unique account of affairs in Ireland from 1641 to 1652, entitled an "Aphorismical Discovery of Treasonable Faction." There are also here various papers connected with political transactions of the seventeenth century. Amongst them are tables of cyphers used in the Irish Governmental correspondence during the Protectorate, and subsequent to the Restoration, specimens of which will be found in our Appendix (p. 572).

In addition to the above-named Reports now published on Irish collections, reports are in progress on those of the Duke of Leinster, the Marquis of Drogheda, Archbishop Trench of Dublin, Lord Macartney, the MSS. of Rinuccini, Nuncio to Ireland, the archives of the town of Galway and of the Franciscans and Jesuits of the Irish Province. We have also been favoured with permission to inspect and have reports made upon the collections of the Marquis of Waterford, the Earl of Bessborough, Lord De Vesci, the ancient archives of the cathedrals of St. Patrick and Christ Church, Dublin, and those of the See of Ossory.

At the moment of drawing this Report to a close your Commissioners have received news of the sudden death of Mr. Alfred J. Horwood, by whom so much valuable help as Inspector under the Commission since its establishment in 1869 has been rendered. Mr. Horwood had peculiar qualifications for the very delicate and responsible duties assigned to him, and it is with much regret that your Commissioners thus briefly record the loss they have sustained.

APPENDIX.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH, AT BLENHEIM, CO. OXFORD.

THERE are several early charters to the Monastery of St. Alban's, the first being by King Henry III., and tested at Woodstock. Two or three papers about Prince Charles's intended marriage with the Infanta of Spain; copies of some speeches to the Parliament by King James I. A large bundle of proceedings by the Committee for Bedfordshire during the Civil War regarding sequestered estates, and letters by Sir W. Waller to the Committee at Bedford, and by the Earls of Northumberland and Londond on military matters; and some letters showing the importance attached to the town of Newport Pagnell, and the difficulty which the Committee had in effecting the orders received by them for slighting the fortifications of the town of Bedford. In 1645 and 1646 there are numerous letters on military matters for the Parliament. There are some papers about Major Oliver Cromwell, who died in Ireland in 1649; and drafts or copies of many letters by the Earl of Bristol to the Cardinal Mazarin during the Protectorate, and letters and papers about the support which Spain was to give to King Charles II. while in exile, for recovering his kingdom; and copy of an agreement between Cromwell and Cardinal Mazarin. There are some letters to Robert Earl of Sunderland in the latter half of the reign of King Charles II.

But the bulk of the papers are those of John, first Duke of Marlborough, and of Charles, Earl of Sunderland. Here are several commissions in the army to John Churchill from Charles II. and James II.; appointments of him to various offices; instructions to him when he undertook those offices; letters to him from King William, Queen Anne, and many foreign crowned heads, states, towns, and other authorities, and from English ministers and other persons; and many volumes of copies of letters by the Duke and by the Secretary Cardonnel; also Hare's journal of the Duke's campaigns. Many letters and papers relating to the war in Spain in Queen Anne's time; and Lord Peterborough's doings there. Numerous letters and papers connected with the Duke's actions in the Low Countries, including letters to him by Lord Treasurer Godolphin, the Earl of Galway, the Earl of Sunderland, and other peers. The Earl of Sunderland's Letter-books, 1653-1710. Some papers of Charles Earl of Sunderland, while Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; among these is one enclosing copies of two intercepted letters, seemingly addressed to Swift; and a letter in 1715, noticing the Jacobite tendencies of many members of Trinity College. A number of letters to the Earl of Sunderland in 1708, 1709, and 1710, from General Palmes, while in attendance on the Duke of Savoy. Letters and papers about Lord Griffin and others, who in 1708 were taken prisoners in the French ship the "Salisbury;" and notices of the arrest in England of the Muscovite Ambassador in 1708. Papers about the Healing Gold in 1706 and 1707, and a copy of the Pretender's proclamation on the accession of King George I. In 1716 Lord Stair writes from Paris to the Duke of Marlborough, giving an account of a conversation with Lord Bolingbroke. Some portfolios arranged by Archdeacon Cox, contain amongst other things a copy of the report by the physicians employed to dissect the body of King William III.; letters in 1707 and 1708 by the Earl of Galloway (in Spain) to the Earl of Sunderland; and original drafts for the Duchess of Marlborough's Vindication, published in 1742, and other papers relating to that business. A letter by Harley to Lord Godolphin in 1703 mentions De Foe, and there are three letters by De Foe at Edinburgh, one in 1708 to Lord Godolphin, and two in the same year to the Earl of Sunderland.

In 1709 there was a great influx to this country of German Protestants from the Palatinate; and there are several letters on the subject.

There are some letters by Steele while he was in the army, and a letter from him to the Duke of Newcastle declining to continue in the Stamp Office; letters about Drury Lane Theatre; a number of letters addressed to the authors of the "Tatler" and the "Spectator;" and several poems addressed to Steele.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Among the letters by Queen Anne to the Duke is one expressing her dislike of the Elector of Hanover coming to settle in England; another complaining of the Earl of Sunderland's conduct; and another complaining of the conduct of the Duchess.

There are upwards of 300 letters by Anne, as Princess and Queen, to Sarah Jennings, as Lady Churchill and Countess and Duchess of Marlborough; some of them were printed by the Duchess in the Account of the Conduct, &c. The letters to the Duchess from other persons are very numerous; there are 19 from Alexander Pope, in such terms that it seems impossible that Atossa, in Pope's Epistle on the Characters of Women, can be meant for the Duchess. There are a number of letters and papers by Arthur Maynwaring, who was a great friend of the Duchess.

There are a few volumes in Italian, Spanish, and French, including an amusing account in Spanish of the travels of three ecclesiastics from Rome to Persia and back, at the beginning of the 17th century. Also two original treaties of peace between King Charles II. and the Emperor of Morocco, and a copy of the inventory of the statues and pictures belonging to King Charles I.

There are two or three letters by King George III., in 1783 and 1784, to the then Duke of Marlborough, on political matters.

The letters in the old Sunderland library are tied up in packets, and the nature of the contents of each packet is endorsed on the cover. In many cases I have been content with copying the endorsements, but in some cases have given extracts from the contents. Archdeacon Cox evidently made use of them, as well as of the papers in the Muniment room.

23 Ed. III., Feb 6th, Langley. License to William le Parsonce of St. Alban's, and Matilda his wife that they for messuages, 20 acres of land, 9 shillings of rent in St. Alban's, may give to the Abbat, &c. and the reversion of another house; and to Andrew Power of Mentmore, clerk, and Thomas le Palmer, chaplain to give the reversion of three messuages in St. Alban's, which W. de Langley and Mabilla his wife held for life. (W. Bret, Escheator.)

21 Ed. III., March 20th, Redyng.—Teste Lionel, our son, guardian of the Kingdom. Pardon to the Abbat and Convent for having demised various lands at full value. License for them to approve waste and demise tithes, provided that the appropriation is not against the Statute. John de Coggeshale, the Escheator in co. Hants has certified that the allowances are not ad damnum, they being by Letters Patent bound to the King in 1,000 marks for a certain vacation of the Abbey and have paid him 10 marks. Great Seal.

38 Ed. III., Feb. 14th, Weymouster (French)—Indenture between the King of the one part, and Thomas Abbot of St. Alban's of the other part. The King lately sent writs to Richard late Abbat to give a corrody to Isabel atte helde for life. She had it. Then to Robert Albin; then the King recollected that he previously put in Hugh Treganore, and revoked that to Robert. Hugh had it, then Walter de Denham, then to Henry de Burlone, then William Chenpau, otherwise called Robert Fool. The King in consideration of the corrody releases certain lands in Abbots Langley for charge from the corrody after the death of Robert Fool. The bounds are given.

1405, Oct. 4th.—Agreement between W. Abbat of St. Alban's and Richard Horwode, perpetual vicar of the parish church of St. Leonard of Sandridge.—About Richard Horwode for the future regulating the small tithes, and making certain payments, and about repairs of the chancel of the church.

Confirmation by Simon Southery the Prior and assent by Richard Horwode. (Four seals, the first is gone, the second and third in bags broken, the fourth gone.)

31 Hen. VIII.—By a deed it appears that John Jenyns of the King's Hospice, Gent., got a grant for 21 years of the manor of Combe-Newell in the parish of Kape Thamis, part of the possessions of the dissolved monastery of Marton.

(A.) Moneys issued for the Palatinate since Michaelmas 1619 until this present (in all) 534,386l.—Debts owing over and besides the money issued (in all) 14,836l. 9s.—The sum total of all this is 661,670l. Moneys received upon the titles following, Contributions upon strangers for suppressing pirates, 12,300l.; contributions of the lords and others for the Palatinate, 34,618l. 6s. 8d. Subsidies, two of the laity and three of the clergy, 200,321l. Contributions for the Palatinate by the laity and clergy, 88,699l. 11s. Imposition upon wines 33,851l. Upon hops, 1,850l.—Total 317,164l. 4s. 7d., which deducted from the 661,670, his Majesty has disbursed out of his own purse 290,300l., whereof he owes to the King of Denmark 80,000l. &c., &c.

Notes and abstracts taken out of the speech of the Duke of Buckingham assisted by the Prince's Highness to both the houses upon a meeting at Whitehall 20th Feb., and reported in the Commons House by Sir Richard Weston and Sir F. Cottington 27th of Feb. Beginis, He said that since the King's Majesty had laid upon him. (7 pp.)

Copies of letters, 1622 Sept. 3rd., G. [Archbishop of] Cant. at Croydon to his Majesty. Therefore calling to mind the saying of Tertullian. (This seems to be the end of a letter.)

1622, Sept. 3rd. Mr. Archdeacon—My Lord Bishop of London having received letters from the most reverend father in God the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury his Grace, the tenor whereof ensueth; My very good Lord I doubt not but before this time, &c.

1622, Aug. 12th, Croydon.—G. Cant. to the other bishops followed by directions concerning preachers.

The prince's arrival and entertainment in Spain (2½ pp.) Beginis, On Tuesday being the 7th of March O.S., the Prince and Marquis arrived in perfect health at Madrid in Spain, 13 days from Paris, being 750 miles, they went at once to Lord Bristol's house.

1617, April 16.—Copy of the King's commission to Sir John Digby to treat of the marriage of Prince Charles with the Infanta.

1624, April 23.—His Majesty's speech to both Houses at Whitehall.

The Lower House of Parliament to the King. Address advocating the abandoning of the treaty for marriage, and their desire to support his daughter and her husband the Palatine.

Another against popery, &c., and remedies; calling home children abroad, &c.

King's speech, alludes to his stile of Pacificus.

Abstract of King's speech; four causes of calling the Parliament. 1. The making of laws. 2. Matters of religion. 3. Supply of wants. 4. The distressed state of Christendom.

Copy of Lord Bacon's letter to the Lords (2½ pp.). He finds matter sufficient and full both to move him to detest the offence, and to move their Lordships also to censure and condemn him.

1624, July 10.—Copy of the King's commission for the relieving of poor distressed prisoners for debts in the prisons about London and Surrey. (2 pp.)

1 Car. 1, January 26.—The King to the Chancellor of Cambridge for restoring the old discipline of the University.

1625, Feb. 6, Suffolk House.—T. Suffolk to the Heads of Houses at Cambridge, telling them to attend to the King's letter. He would not like Parliament to interfere.

Charles 1.—Commission to Edward, Earl of Dorset, Lord Chamberlain to the Queen, W. Earl of Morton, Captain of the Guards, W. Earl of Sterling, Secretary for Scotland, George Lord Goring, Master of the Horse to the Queen, Sir Francis Wortley, Baronet, and many others, including Sir John Jennings, K.B., to inquire and make returns of offenders of the law relating to inhabitants of cottages. Seal gone.

1626, Dec. 7.—Sir William Lytton, Kt. late Sheriff to Sir John Jenyns now Sheriff of Herts. Certificate that he has delivered, by Wm. Webb his late under sheriff, to Jenyns all the prisoners in goal, viz.: (names and causes).

(B.) A bundle of Parliamentary and Civil war letters, &c.

1638, May 19th.—William Boteler to Nicholas Crouch, Thomas Dix, and Robert Charnock of Westowning, and to either of them. By virtue of His Majesty's writ for providing a ship of 300 tons at the charge of the county of Beds, and a letter from the Privy Council commanding him to make payment of the sums assessed in the county.—Requires them to collect and levy the several sums on the undernamed persons and send to him at Biddenham, on the 24th of May.

There are 24 names, and the sums vary from £2 10s. to 1s.

1638, May 28.—Another letter from the same on the same subject.

1637.—A true report of the levies upon the county of Bedford, for providing a ship of 300 tons, &c. Upon 9 hundreds the total was 2,880l. Signed by W. Boteler.

1636, November 18.—Copy of warrant for assessments on the county of Hertford, for ship money, and two other papers.

1644, June 16.—Samuel Luke to . . . , Gentlemen. I have sent you a carpenter for the implements I writ for . . . His Excellency is marching towards the relief of Lyme, and lay at Dorchester the other night. The news from the North which came last to me you shall receive herein enclosed.

Petition by Ann Gifford, wife of Robert Gifford, minister of Chellington, to the Committee for Safety of the county of Bedford. If they do not think him fit to continue minister yet she prays them to give his liberty and allow a portion out of the parsonage for them and their children.

Mr. Gifford's petition. He was surprised by Scouts, and thinking they were the King's he spoke many foolish things; he is sorry.

1644, July 30.—Derby House, P. Wharton, and Jo. Maitland, (in the name and by the warrant of the Committee of both Kingdoms), to the Committee of the county of Bedford, urging the raising of the proportion of forces appointed for that county by the ordinance of 12th July last.

DUKE OF MABL-BOROUGH.DUKE OF
BOROUGH.

1644, Aug. 15.—W. Say and Sele, and Jo. Maitlan, to the same. We have appointed the forces at Newport, of Col. Ayllo's regiment to march forthwith to Abingdon, and the rest of the forces there very shortly. We desire you to put your new levied men upon the ordinance of 12th July, into Newport, for the keeping thereof . . . the enemy now having no force in the field, nor any danger near it. P.S.—Order was given the 8th of August for Sir John Norwich with his three troops of horse to march forthwith to the Earl of Manchester.

1644, Sept. 28.—Ben. Hodson to the Constables of Carleton, near Chellington. Order to levy six labourers to work at the fort at Bedford.

1644, Sept. 28.—Sam. Luke to Sir W. Botteler, Kt., at Biddenham. Requests the Committee to perfect the number they intend to send into this garrison (Newport). Lieut. General Cromwell, sent me word this morning that the King was come back to Oxford, with a great strength, the which, if true, I cannot expect him long from hence.—Asks more money for the Newport garrison, there being six months in arrear. The clamours of other counties for want of Bedfordshire paying in their monies are so great, that I cannot in modesty desire it of them till my own country have forwarded their part in same proportionable measure.

1644, May 11.—[The Earl of] Essex, to Sir John Burgoyne, Sir Wm. Boteler, Humphrey Munox, James Beverley, and John Neale, Esquires, Committees for Bedford, or any two of them.—He has received an order from the House of Commons by a Committee that the works at Bedford be slighted and the arms and magazines there secured. He directs them to do it.

1644, May 11.—The estate of Thomas Cheyney, Esq., was sequestered after his death. Then the sheriff levied upon an execution at the suit of Francis Pippcott for 115*l.* on the goods of Cheyney to the value of 30*l.* or 40*l.* before any seizin of the sequestrators. The execution was just, the amount will not pay half his debt. They think it reasonable he should have the goods towards satisfaction of his debt.

1644, May 29.—Bar. St. John, Ch. Leek, Roger Burgoyne, and Sam^l Browne, to Sir W. Boteler, Humphrey Munox, Esq., and others of the Committee of Bedford. When the addressees have received commands from His Excellency to slight the works at Bedford, and have accordingly summoned and employed labourers after the usual rates of the county, the writers ask that their countrymen may understand their wish that they voluntarily and speedily pay in their proportions, that there be no occasion of complaint to His Excellency.

1644, June 1.—Copy order by Thomas Alston, Jo. Burgoyne, Hum. Fish, and Edm. Jones.—George Gerye, Gent., of Little Stawton, co. Bedford, being before his delinquency indebted to Geo. Seigneur, barber-surgeon in 90*l.*, they grant the latter an annuity of 40*l.* out of the manor of Little Stoughton, co. Bedford, until it is paid.

1644, June 1.—Allowance to Mrs. Jucie St. John of a rentcharge of 32*l.* out of the manor of Teddington, granted by Thomas Earl of Cleveland and Thomas Lord Wentworth his son and heir.

1644, June 4.—Certificate that Sir John Brackyn, Kt., the King's servant (who it was supposed might fall under the ordinance for sequestration of papists and delinquents estates) might receive his estate and rents as formerly.

1644, June 4.—A like certificate for Lawrence Beresford.

Same date.—Order for Mr. John Combe, to receive a redeemable rentcharge of 30*l.* per ann. due to Mr. Oakley, granted by Riccard Gerye, father to Wm. Gerye.

Same date.—Order for Wm. Newdegate to receive out of Charles Ventry's estate the balance of 800*l.* debt, 7*l.* damages and costs, for which he was outlawed.

Same date.—Order for Henry Lynne, clerk, to have 25*l.* per ann. quarterly from the parsonage of Higland Gobyon.

Same date.—Order to discharge John Duke Esquire's estates supposed to be Charles Ventry's.

Same date.—Order for James and Nathaniel Butler, two of the sons to receive an annuity of 20*l.* each, granted by Sir Wm. Butler, Kt. and Bart. in sequestration for delinquency.

Same date.—Order for John Leigh, Esq., brother to Sir Thomas Leigh, Kt., a delinquent, to receive his rents and estate as formerly; he having taken the Covenant and not being a Delinquent or a Papist.

1644, June 5.—Order taking off sequestration from his manors of Stratton and Egworth, co. Bedford, supposed to be Sir Thomas Cotton's.

1644, June 7.—Order that Lady Fane, Excentrix of Sir Geo. Fane, or the feelees, may enjoy the hereditaments in Teddington, conveyed to feelees to secure 500*l.* to Sir Geo. Fane.

1644, June 7.—The Committee of Bedford for Sequestrations, certify at the request of Sir Robert Napper, Bart., that the Committee being informed that he being a member of the House of Commons did in August last depart from London and Westminster, and neglect the service of the House until December, did according to the ordinance of Parliament and order of the House of Commons sequester his estate in the county, and that his brother pretending he would come, the sequestration was suspended; but he not coming in, the suspension was taken off, and sequestration commanded to be executed.

1644, June 10.—The estate of Matthew Beedles in Kempson was taken into safe custody until it might appear what the carriage and obedience of Beedles was. He has now brought in a certificate by Edward Fanner, Esq., sheriff of the county, and from others, testifying his obedience and conformity to the Parliament. The Committee think fit that he should have the receipt and benefit of his estates.

1644, July 3, Toucester.—William Waller to the Committee at Bedford. Is informed that the King's army quartered last night at Chipping Norton; hence concludes his march is northward. "My instructions are to follow him, which I will observe as long as I have breath. "But the complexion of this army is not suitable to this design, the forces thereof consisting most of foot. I have therefore moved the Committee of Northampton to make a levy of all the horse they can to mount the musketeers upon, with this rule that to every nine horse so raised for the service there shall be added a county man and a horse who shall take charge of those nine to hold them upon service and to return them home again. If any be embeseled the captain of that company must be responsible, and for such as are lost upon service the State must answer." He urges them to advance that proportion in their country; he cannot do anything without mounted musketeers.

Copy of the above, and on the same paper copy of 1644, July 6.—Order from the Committee to Sir Samuel Luke to raise out of the hundred horses with saddles, &c., and for every nine to provide a man and horse, and send them to Sir W. Waller at Warwick on Monday next, and tell the constables to make a return.

1644, July 6.—W. Waller to the Committee.—Thanks for their letter of the 5th, and their readiness; wishes that the horses may be sent to Warwick.

Same date.—The Committee to Waller.—They acknowledge his letter of the 3rd. His desires have already (in part of their county) been performed by Sir Samuel Luke. They tell what they have done.

1644, July 9.—The manor of Houghton Conquest and other estates of Richard Conquest are sequestered for delinquency. He and Lewis Conquest did for 1200*l.* in 4 Car. grant to Richard Evelyn, of Wotton, co. Surrey, and others to his use, certain hereditaments in Houghton Conquest and Wootton, to be held to Evelyn in fee to secure 1,488*l.* The money was really paid by Evelyn and entry made on the lands. R. Evelyn is conformable to the ordinances of Parliament and has taken the Covenant so he is at liberty to take proceedings.

[1644, July 12, so indorsed].—A list of the number of soldiers impress in the several parishes within the hundreds of Stoddan Willey and Basford. In all 119 and 36 defaults.

1644, July 15, Westminster.—Grey of Wark, Speaker of the House of Peers, and W. Lenthall, Speaker of the Commons House in Parliament to the Committees of the co. of Bedford, (seal, a bugle horn stringed, impaled with a fleur-de-lys). The Houses have heard from the Committees of the Kingdom and from Sir S. Luke, Governor of Newport Pagnell, of the great wants of that garrison in men and money occasioned by Bedford not sending their proportions. That garrison is of great consequence for the association of Lord Manchester and for the City of London. They are commanded to send their proportions immediately of armed men and money, and to send an able man to be of the Committee there to see the money distributed among the soldiers.

1644, July 15, Derby House.—Northumberland and Jo. Maitland (Committee of Safety), to the Committee of the co. of Bedford. Thanks for their great readiness (told by Sir W. Waller) to supply him with horses for mounted musketeers.

1644, July 19.—The estate of Charles Hupton in Tempsford is sequestered for recusancy. But it belonged to Paule Coulbrooke who died without issue and it descended to Mary, wife of Upton and Ann late wife of Thomas Wigg, his sisters and co-heirs. Alice is daughter and heir of Ann and is now aged 17. Thomas Wigg frequents church and receives the sacrament, pays taxes and dues, and has taken the Covenant, and Alice frequents church. They think that her half should not be under sequestration, but that Thomas Wigg and his daughter ought to enjoy it. Signed by John Burgoyne and Francis Fetry.

1644, July 22.—The Earl of Cleveland and his son Thomas, Lord Wentworth, did in 15 Car. I. for 545*l*. grant to Sir Matthew Mennes, K.B. 60 acres of land called Milwood in Tuddington co. Bedford, and four acres adjoining for 13 years at a peppercorn rent. The estate of the grantors is sequestered, but the lease being duly executed and the rent being 96*l*. paid to Sir R. Mennes, it is thought fit that he should receive it and in default of payment have his remedies.

1644, July 27.—The estate of Sir Henry Cason is sequestered. On application, on behalf of his nine children, (their mother is dead), the Committee order a fifth part of the rents to be paid to some one for the children, over and above what is paid to Henry Lynn, minister of Hyham Gobyon for his maintenance out of the parsonage there.

1644, July 30.—The Committee to the Constables of Cranfield. The estate of Geo. Bury, gent. in Cranfield co. Bedford is sequestered. The tenant is going to stack the corn to be cut from 50 acres off the land. He is to be forbidden.

1644, Aug. 2.—Beatrice Key deceased, grandmother to Beatrice Bigg and also to Daniel, Sarah, and Mary Bracy, younger children of Daniel Bracy, gave 150*l*. to the said three younger children and put it into the hands of Beatrice Bigg in trust for them: this Beatrice married Thomas Joyce, clerk, who by marriage became possessed of an estate of 28*l*. per annum, in Shillington, during the life of Beatrice, and they agreed at the request of Danl. Bracy, that the tenant paying the 28*l*. should pay the rent to Daniel until the 150*l*. was paid if Mr. Joyce should so long live. 42*l*. are paid. The agreement was made before Joyce's delinquency. Mary is conformable, &c. The 28*l*. is to be paid to him or his appointee to the use of the children until the balance is paid.

1644, Aug. 2.—The estate of Christopher Turner of Milton Earnest is sequestered on supposition of delinquency, but it not being proved his estate is restored.

1644, Aug. 3.—Order for the parishioners of Littleington to pay their tithes to Richard Jones.

Same date.—Francis Walsall, D.D., chaplain and sub-almoner to His Majesty, is sequestered from his parsonage of Sandy and Girtford by reason of his long absence and residence at Oxford. Ordered that he may house the tithes and receive the profits of the parsonage, giving a bond of 400*l*. with one surety to account to the State.

Same date.—The Committee ask Mr. Viner, the minister of Barton, just put in by the Parliament, that he would make amends to Mr. Gardner, late curate there, who was unpaid his last year's salary of 30*l*. by Dr. Moore, the late incumbent.

Same date.—The Committee to the Constables of Bletsoe. Christopher Lawry is appointed by the Committee of the House of Commons for minister to officiate in Bletsoe, and to have possession of the parsonage house, tithes, &c. John Elmore, late parson, prevents him. They are to take forcible possession, and put Lawry in possession.

Same date.—The Committee to the Committee of the House of Commons for sequestrations. They have sequestered the estate of Elizabeth Wyngate, widow, for being absent at Oxford for about six months, and not having returned home in 10 days, according to ordinance of Parliament. She says the cause of her going was to prevent the wardship of her son, and of her long stay, her sickness and weakness of body, which at the request of Henry Chester, Esq., her brother, they certify.

1644, Aug. 5.—The Committee to the Committee of the House of Commons for Sequestration of Papists and Delinquents. At the request of Francis Walsall of Sandy-cum-Girtford, D.D., &c., they certify that he was in January found delinquent, and his estate and parsonage sequestered, and that upon his submission he had been discharged of the particular attendance upon His Majesty at Oxford, and the order for sequestration was suspended, and so remaineth until pleasure known.

1644, Aug. 21.—Order of the Committee. 33*l*. 11*d*. are due to His Majesty for arrears of tithes payable by Henry Lynn as incumbent of Higham Gobyon, co.

Bedford. Sir Henry Cason has a lease of the parsonage for years, which is worth about 100*l*. per annum, out of which he was to allow the incumbent 20*l*. per annum, and pay His Majesty the tithes and other taxes; but Cason being a delinquent, and the parsonage sequestered, the incumbent cannot pay the tithes. Ordered that the receiver of the revenues of the Queen in the county of Bedford forbear to levy the said arrears on Lynn, the new incumbent, and demand the same of the sequestrators, who are to pay during the sequestration.

1644, Aug. 31.—Sam. Luke to the Committee at Bedford. Has writ many letters to put them in mind of the ordinance of Parliament for this garrison (Newport). Captain Annis is returned from the Parliament with an order to receive six weeks' pay for his troop. They have given him arms. The association have done so much that he cannot expect any sudden payments from them, they having paid the soldiers daily, and a double proportion towards the works. Asks them to order payment of the arrears. (On the other half by a different hand, "Propositions (9 in number) concerning "the disposing of the money raised upon the ordinance "of 12 July 1644.")

1644, Sept. 5.—Copy of order for lease to Sir S. Luke, of the manor of Layton Bussard, for one year at 460*l*. per annum, to the use of the State, and paying the rent of 260*l*. reserved to the chief landlord; he to have allowance for taxes and payments laid by ordinance of Parliament.

Same date.—Copy of the Certificate of the Committees of Bedford to the Committee of the Lords and Commons. Doctor Walsall was found delinquent for going to Oxford, and his estate and parsonage were sequestered. He has paid money on the propositions, and taken the Covenant, and pressed it on his parishioners, &c.

1644, Sept. 6. Certificate to the Committee of Lords and Commons. Inter alia, they have sequestered the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Wyngate, widow. She has explained, and she had a pass from Col. Tirryll to go to Oxford.

Same date.—Warrant to stay execution on certain goods of Anthony Kefford at the suit of Mrs. Deckham of Astwicke, widow, because her late husband was a delinquent in arms against the Parliament.

1644, Sept. 4.—Two parts of the estate of Lord Vaux, at Patenham and elsewhere, were sequestered for his recalcancy, amounting to 200*l*. per annum. Order to let the same to Wm. Knighton and W. Fusly for one year, at a rent of 150*l*., making them an allowance of 50*l*.

1644, Sept. 7.—Copy of the Committee's letter to Sir R. Cotton, Kt., at his house at Epworth, requesting his attendance to tell them what he knows of the monies and debts of Robert Finett, of Amptthill, a papist.

Same date.—The rents of Sir Matthew Menes, Kt., at Tudington, &c., were by order made stay of, because it was informed he had been indicted for manslaughter. The King, by patent of 31 Oct. 16 Car. 1, pardoned him, and restored him to his former rights. They order that Sir M. Menes shall receive his money and rents.

Same date.—Certain goods in the house of Lady Mordant have been seized, which she says belonged to John Lord Mordant, as bequeathed to him by the will of the late Lord Mordaunt, to continue as standers in the house. Capt. Smyth is to take an inventory of the goods bequeathed by the will, and Lady Mordant on a certain day to produce witnesses to show the goods therein mentioned to belong to John Lord Mordant.

Same date.—Copy of the Committee's letter to Capt. Pentlo about rent due from him for lands late of Sir Lewis Dives, a delinquent.

Same date.—Lady Palmer, wife of Sir W. Palmer, has petitioned to have one-fifth of his estate allowed for the maintenance of her and her children according to an ordinance of Parliament. She is to get able tenants to take the same for a year at 346*l*. 14*s*. per annum, and to give a bond for 500*l*.

Same date.—The Committee's Order. Anthony Warters, vicar of Bromham, has received 36*l*. by composition for small tithes of the demesne tenants there, and has 18*l*. due for half a year, as appears by confession of several tenants of Sir Lewis Dives. Ordered that he shall have the 18*l*. by payment from Capt. Smyth, and 9*l*. every quarter during the pleasure of the Committee.

Same date.—The estate of Wm. Geary is under sequestration. His wife has petitioned for one-fifth for herself and her children. She is to have 28*l*. 18*s*. 4*d*. and the lands are to be let for a year at certain rents.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Same date.—Order for Geo. Gamble to attend the Committee to give information of some estate of Lord Stafford sequestered by him.

Same date.—Order for Stephen Smyth of Bromham, out of the estate of Sir Lewis Dives, to receive 4s. per week, he, Smyth, and his wife having agreed with Sir Lewis Dives to have certain payments.

Same date.—Order for Lady Spencer to be restored to receipt of her rents in Dunton-cum-Mello and Gaudy, staid because they were supposed to belong to Lord Spencer, a delinquent.

1644, Sept. 14.—Original certificate that Mr. Godfrey Barton, of Reynold, had taken the Solemn League and Covenant.

1644, Sept. 28.—Ben. Hodson to the Constables of Carleton near Chellington. Order to levy six labourers to work at the fort at Bedford.

Same date.—The like to the Constable of Eaton-Goton for 14 labourers with mattocks and shovels.

Same date.—The like for the town of Colmotte to furnish eight labourers, &c.

1644, Sept. 30.—Sam. Luke to the Committee of Bedford. Again urges payment of their proportion. Hopes they will be as careful for Newport garrison as for the Mount at Bedford.

1644, Oct. 10.—Articles exhibited to the Committee in the co. of Bedford against Richard Jones, gent., of Littlington. Jones has the impropriation of the parsonage of Littlington, and is a malignant. He hinders levies and taxes, and will not pay them. The collectors have been forced to distrain. He threatened the inhabitants that they should be undone if they stood against him, and some of them have been pillaged by the cavaliers; that he feasted the cavaliers, and made a tax on the parish for it, and intends to give another feast to them: is a common swearer, and sues many in the commissary's court.

Same date.—Articles exhibited against Thomas Power, vicar of Littlington. He preached that it was unlawful to resist the King or his cavaliers, and inveighed against those who hindered the King's proclamation, preaches against the Parliament, countenances the Proclamation for the Sabbath day with feasts and sports, and says it is unlawful to give money to the Parliament, &c., &c.

Same date.—The tenants of William Wollastone, of Whelampton, were required to forbear payment to him of their rents until the Committee were satisfied of his conformity, but having received certificates of his conformity they think the Committee may pay him the arrears.

1644, Oct. 11.—The estate of John Foxe, gentleman, at Kempson, is sequestered. John Towers, Esq. married Foxe's daughter, and paid the 20l. assessed on Foxe for the 5th and 20th. They think that Towers ought to have the 20l. out of Foxe's estate. Four of the Committee are to read the deed made by Foxe on the marriage, and if it appeared that Foxe has only an estate for life the lands are to be discharged; but if the lands have descended to the daughter, the Committee are to make a report.

Same date.—Copy order of the Committee for Mr. Jones to attend the Committee.

Same date.—Copy order for Mrs. Mary Grigg to enjoy one-fifth of the estate of her husband Michael Grigg, Esq., in Dunstable, the whole being let to Mr. Atkinson for one year at 40l.

Same date.—Miles Conquest, Esq., has an annuity of 40l. for life granted by his late father Sir Edmund Conquest, Knight, out of the manor of Houghton Conquest, now under sequestration for the delinquency of Richard Conquest, eldest brother to the said Miles Conquest. Miles Conquest conforms. They order the annuity to be paid.

Same date.—Order for Martha Ironmonger to have one-fifth of the estate of her husband Humphrey Ironmonger, sequestered for delinquency.

Same date.—The estate of Richard Watson, Esq., of Amphilh and Millbroke, is sequestered for delinquency, out of which an estate of jointure was made to Ann, late wife of Robert Watson, gent., deceased son of the said Richard Watson, of certain lands, in all about 117 acres, which are supposed to be the estate of the said Richard. Ann Watson is a papist recusant, so two parts are due to the State. They order that she shall have one-third of the rents which the collector has received out of the Michaelmas rent now due, and also a third of all rent in arrear since the death of her late husband.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Same date.—Order for Lady Leigh, wife of Sir Thomas Leigh, Bart., to have one-fifth of the rents of his estate in Layton sequestered for delinquency. (Sir Samuel Luke was farmer of the estate.)

Same date.—Order for Mr. William Tayler, minister of Southill, to have 10s. out of the rent of the lythe mills called Thefford Mills, in the parish of Southill, part of the estate of Charles Ventris, Esq., sequestered for delinquency, which rents are accustomed to be paid as tithes belonging to the vicar of Southill.

Same date.—The estate of Mary Deckham, widow, at Aswicke, is sequestered on suspicion of her late husband's delinquency. On her proving her title as jointress, guardian, or dowress, and giving a bond for some goods seized by her, she may sell and make advantage of the goods.

1644, Oct. 12.—Draft of certificate to the Committee of the House of Commons for plundered ministers that certain articles were exhibited against Thomas Carr in August last, and answer put in by him in September last. Nothing appears against him, and his neighbours give him a good character.

Same date.—Order that Capt. Smith, out of money in his hands as collector of sequestered estates, repay to the money collected for the defence of Newport, 100l. which the Committee had spent thereon for forwarding the business of the committee for sequestration of delinquents estates.

Same date.—Order for Capt. Smyth to make tenantable the house, &c., in Layton of Mr. Heines, sequestered.

Same date.—Certificate by the Committee to the committee for plundered ministers, that they had sequestered Nathaniel Hill from the vicarage of Reynolds, in December last, for long absence and being in the King's army, and that they had put in Godfrey Barton.

Same date.—Order that Capt. Smyth shall, out of lands in Amphilh, sequestered, pay to Mr. How, clerk, late vicar of Amphilh, the tithes which he shall show to be in arrear, and usually payable by the landlords or owners.

Same date.—Order for Mr. Geo. Gamble, late undersheriff, to appear before the Committee, touching certain rents, goods, and money received by him for the use of Lord Stafford.

Same date.—Order for taking the examination of Sir Thomas Cotton, Kt., to be taken by certain of the Committee at Biggleswade, touching a debt due to Robert Huit, Esq., a papist.

Same date.—Order that Robert Morris, bailiff of Richard Conquest, of Houghton Conquest, should pay to Mrs. Dorothy Conquest 40s. balance unpaid of 12l. which Richard Conquest before the sequestration of his estate had ordered to be paid to her.

1644, Oct. 15.—Order that five parishioners (named) of Millbrook, attend the Committee to pay what is in arrear due to Dr. Cuckson, late incumbent of Millbrooke, who had agreed to pay Thomas Carr, late curate, 30l. per annum, of which 27l. are unpaid.

1644, Oct. 16.—Order to six persons (named) debtors to John Foxe, of Kempson, not to pay any person until further order.

Same date.—The like to some other debtors of Foxe, who died a delinquent.

1644, Oct. 21. Derby House. P. Wharton and Loudoun (for the Committee of both Kingdoms) to the Deputy Lientenants for Bedfordshire.—On the intelligence of the King's marching eastward, we thought fit to join the several forces under the command of His Excellency the Lord General, the Earl of Manchester, and Sir W. Waller, apprehending the design of the enemy is to march this way or fall on the associated counties . . . we think it necessary you put your whole forces, trained bands, auxiliaries, and volunteers, horse and foot, with all speed in a position of defence, and appoint a rendezvous in your own shire, that upon advertisement you march to a general rendezvous. We have written to the adjacent counties and their Committees to the same end . . . P.S. Our armies are joined at Basing, and the King's forces are within 10 miles of them . . . we expect hourly when the armies may engage.

1644, Oct. 31, Derby House. W. Say and Sele and Loudoun to the same.—You may forbear to bring your forces to a rendezvous till you receive further order. The enclosed is a relation of the action at Newbury sent to the Committee. (Enclosure) Oct. 28, account of the battle of Newbury. (1½ pp.)

1644, Nov. 7.—The estate of Thomas Earl of Cleveland at Harlington, and elsewhere, is sequestered. Diana Bowles, of London, widow, produces a deed dated 17 May, 7 Car. I., whereby the Earl for 700l. demised to

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Sir Samuel Luke and another the parsonage of Harlington and 44 acres of pasture tithes, &c. for 99 years redeemable by payment of 728*l.* on the 17 of Nov. following. She received the rents after they were forfeited until five years last past. The Committee think it right she shall receive the rents and all arrears.

Same date.—The estate of Sir W. Howard now Viscount Stafford is sequestered for delinquency. About 16 Car. I, he was outlawed in a plea of debt at the suit of Robert Stephens; and Richard Child, the sheriff, seized the manor of Wyborton, and other messuages of the value of 150*l.* per annum. And afterwards Geo. Gamble under-sheriff levied 83*l.* 2*s.*, and paid 10*l.* to Mr. Holliman, and still retains the rest. The outlawry is since discharged. Lord Stafford has become delinquent since, and his real and personal estate are due to the State. Ordered that Gamble ay Sir John Burgoyne for the use of the State 68*l.* 18 4d., and to Thomas Holliman, late solicitor to Lord Stafford, 4*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, by him disbursed to reverse the outlawry, and Sir John Burgoyne is then to pay Gamble his just disbursements, and pay to Holliman 1*s.* in the pound on every 30*l.* by him received of Gamble, according to an ordinance of Parliament in that behalf made, for his service to the State in discovering that money. Signed by John Burgoyne, W. Boteler, James Beverley, and John Fenton.

Same date.—The estate of Sir Edward Alston, K^t, is sequestered by reason of his long absence in the King's quarters. His lady has formerly desired a fifth for her and her children, and that the mansion house in Wympington and some land may be allowed in part of the fifth, wh^{ch} the Committee have agreed to; Capt. Smyth is to value the property and to report. Some other land in Wympington was conveyed to Sir W. Alston from William Bletsoe for 320*l.*; the greater part of the money was money of William Alston, his son, given to him by his uncle, William Alston, and intended for his present maintenance. The Committee order that William Alston may receive the rents.

Same date.—The Earl of Cleveland's estate is sequestered. Sir Christopher Wraye shows to the Committee for Sequestration of Papists and Delinquents Estates that the Earl with Thomas, Lord Wentworth, by lease in 1639 in consideration of 2,000*l.* demised to James Fynes, Esq., and Sir C. Wraye, Tuddington Park, of about 136 acres, and other lands about 50 acres, and Harlington Park of about 186 acres for 99 years. The 2,000*l.* are due to Sir C. Wray and Francis Lord Willoughby, of Parham, who bought Fynes's interest. Ordered that Wray and L^d Willoughby may have and receive the profits of the lease.

1644, Nov. 11.—The Collector has received or secured about 25*l.* as due to Mr. Osbalston, prebend[ary] of Lincoln, for half a year ending Lady day last, in the hands of Col. Michell, tenant to the said prebendary, lying in the parish of Biggleswade. They conceive that the intention of the ordinance is not to sequester the profits from such persons unless guilty of delinquency, &c. Osbalston is not a delinquent, but conforms. Ordered that Osbalston may have the half years rent due at Michaelmas. As for that to be due at Lady day, it is to remain until the Collector and Michell be summoned to attend the Committee, and further order.

Same date.—Order for certain people, debtors to the estate of John Foxe, to pay Capt. Smyth collector.

Same date.—The estate of Henry Lyde, at 14, grandchild and next of kin to Henry Lyde, late of . . . is thought to be liable to the ordinance by reason of his continuing a scholar at Oxford and in the tuition of Thomas Manley, his guardian there, by the space of six months and more. Anthony Cogan produces a Statute staple entered into by Henry Lyde, the grandfather, and Henry Lyde, the son, father of the infant, to Thomas Strowd to secure 800*l.* marriage portion to Ann Posthuma Perryman and Elizabeth, two of the daughters of Dorothy Perryman, daughter of the said Thomas Strowd, and the Statute was extended for the portion of Ann Posthuma whom Anthony Cogan married. The Committee order that Cogan shall produce the writ of extent and affidavit that Elizabeth died before the marriage, and that he married Ann Posthuma, and has not received the money; whereupon they will give further order.

Same date.—The Committee are informed that Mrs. Elizabeth Riley, alias Fountayne, has been and continues at York in the enemy's quarters for 18 months, and is still absent; and that rents, annuities, and sums of money are due to her in the hands of Henry Withead (quære Whitbread, see Nov. 29, post) of Carington, Matthew Billing of London, scrivener, and others. They order

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Withead and Billing to make stay of all such moneys, and tell Billing to warn other people indebted to Mrs. Riley, otherwise Fountayne, not to pay until they receive order from the Committee.

Same date.—The estate of Charles Conquest is sequestered. Stephen Cooper, of London, mercer, produced a Levary facias on a judgment for 9*l.* with costs and damages against Conquest. Cooper and his attorney are to bring copy of the judgment, &c. to be shown the Committee at the general meeting on Monday at Mr. Hearne's house in Fleet Street.

1644, Nov. 18.—The estate of W. Gerrey is sequestered: it is affirmed that two years' arrears due to the King for tenths, amounting to 40*l.* 10*s.*, are in arrear. Ordered that the Collector pay that sum, and more if proved, to the receiver of His Majesty's rents out of such rents as he has received or shall receive from Gerrey's estate. Mrs. Gerrey is to attend and give certain information.

Same date. Order for Mr. Billings to account punctually, and present it at the next meeting, he not having satisfied the Committee at the former attendance about Mrs. Riley's, alias Fountayne's estate.

Same date.—The estate of Richard Conquest is sequestered: his brother, Charles Conquest, has an annuity of 40*l.* out of Richard's lands. Charles was long indebted to Stephen Cowy, of London, in 9*l.* 7*s.*, and afterwards confessed a judgment. Ordered that Capt. Smyth, the collector, shall pay the 9*l.* 7*s.* out of the annuity. (Original and Draft.)

Same date.—Two parts of the estate of Robert Huett, a papist, are sequestered. W. Daniel, of London, goldsmith, produced a lease for seven years, made by Huett to him in consideration of 100*l.* Ordered that Daniel shall prove the lease, and then Capt. Smyth shall set out to him so much felleable wood on the land demised as amounts to 100*l.*

Same date.—The estate of Richard Conquest is sequestered. Thomas Daniel, a trustee for Robert Huett, a papist, paid to the said R. Conquest 1,200*l.*, and R. Daniell 50*l.* more, for which R. Conquest conveyed lands in Houghton and Ampthill of about 200*l.* per annum; and he desires to have the property.—Ordered that Daniell shall prove the deed, to whom and by whom the money was paid, where the money was, that the deed was executed at or near the date, that the money was not repaid according to the proviso, and afterwards the sum of 4*l.* per annum reserved by the deed to Mrs. Elizabeth Danyell, late wife of Richard Danyell, Esq., shall be paid to her by the collector, and Conquest's estate is to remain under sequestration notwithstanding the deed.

1644, Nov. 21, Northampton.—Edw. Farmer, Edw. Nicolls, Ed. Hardy, and John Norton, (the committee at Northampton) to Sir William Boteler. Asking reasons concerning taxation of land of Boteler, called Allisoe, in Northampton.

1644, Nov. 25.—Order for Mrs. Daniell to have her 4*l.* yearly, but the rest of the rents to go to the Commonwealth, the Committee having received no satisfaction touching the lending the 1,200*l.*

Same date.—James Butler and Nathaniel Butler, two of the sons of Jo. Butler, Esq., deceased, formerly asked that 40*l.* per annum each for life granted by their father, and now issuing out of the estate of Sir William Butler, might be allowed them, which has been ordered. 20*l.* are in arrear, because Sir W. Boteler by help of the King's forces levied the same upon his tenants. Order for payment of the 20*l.* by the collector.

Same date.—Whereas upon a supposition that there was only a quare upon the estate in Tuddington of Sir Matthew Memms, K.B., forfeited to the King by reason of a manslaughter whereof he stood convicted, and to which he pleaded a pardon produced before the Committee at Bedford in 7 Sept. last, the Committee then ordered that he should receive his rents. It appears that the estate was sequestered as the Earl of Cleveland's estate, and claimed by Sir M. Memms as mortgagee. Ordered that the estate shall continue sequestered and Capt. Smyth receive the rents, and Sir M. Memms have notice of this order, and if he has received rents by virtue of the former order he is to repay them to Capt. Smyth.

Same date.—The Committee to Capt. Pentloe. Urging him to pay the 75*l.* due for the rent of Sir Lewis Dives' woods, which they let to him: having abated the 25*l.* remainder of the rent because of his losses; if he do not pay they will charge him the full 100*l.*

Same date.—Order for assignment of wood to Daniell out of Sir Lewis Dives' lands to the amount of 100*l.* and interest.

DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Same date.—Certificate of the Committee to the Committee of the Lords and Commons. The estate of Humphrey Iremonger was sequestered on the 30th of April last for the causes in the paper annexed contained. Given at the request of Iremonger.

1644, Nov. 26, London.—G. Pauncefote to Capt. Smyth. The Committee order that 30*l.* lent to Sir Robert Napper] at the request of Edmund Wygate be called in and paid to the use of the State within 21 days.

1644, Nov. 29. The Committee to the House of Commons.—At the request of Peter Beauvoir des Granges they certify that he has this day attended with an order of the House of Commons, dated 5 Sept. 1643, purporting that the inhabitants of the island of Guernsey, which have sustained loss by Sir Peter Osborn beating down their houses with shot from the fort, and have been at charges about the fortifications against the castle, shall have reparation out of Sir P. Osborn's estate, which is sequestered, and has produced a testimonial of his damages to the value of 400*l.*, besides the restraint of his person; but they find they are stopped by an order of 27 April 1643, which by virtue of an order of 10 April, assigned payment of all the rents of Sir P. Osborn's estates to Mr. Jo. Blackstone, M.P.

Same date.—Order for Geo. Bury to attend the Committee to give information necessary to understand his petition.

Same date.—The Earl of Cleveland's estate is sequestered. Sir John Thorowgood, K^t, this day produces a decree in Chancery, dated 12 Dec., 16 Car. I., that if certain moneys were not paid he might enter in lands mortgaged to the Earl and Thomas Lord Wentworth. The money was not paid, and he entered. The Committee order that he have the benefit of the decree.

Same date.—Order to Henry Whitbread, of Cadington, to stay payment of all rents and monies in his hands belonging to Mrs. Elizabeth Rile, alias Fountaynes, she being in the enemy's quarters.

Same date.—Copy letter of the Committee to Sir Tho^r Cotton. They are not satisfied with his answer concerning moneys due to Mr. Huett, of Ampthill, and desire him to attend the next general meeting at Bedford.

1644, Nov. 29, London.—Order to Mr. Anthony Coggen to show his statute staple for 1,600*l.* by Henry Lyde, &c., and then proceed at law notwithstanding the same sequestration.

Same date, London.—Order [referring to that of July 9], that Henry Evelyn, Esq., son and heir of Richard Evelyn, might receive the rents of the lands mortgaged by Richard Conquest; but the rents due at Michaelmas, and received by the collector, are to be for the use of the State.

1644, Dec. 20.—The Committee to the Committee of the Lords and Commons for Sequestrations. The estate of George Bury is sequestered for going into the King's army and not returning within 10 days after sequestration. He went to Newport to find his son, then being in the King's army, where he was imprisoned, and could not be discharged until it appeared his son was in the King's service. Then he went to Towcester, when he persuaded his son to lay down his arms, and go home, which he not obtaining, escaped, and came away before 1st of March last. He has lent horses to the Parliament and paid all taxes, &c. The Committee think he ought to be free of sequestration, but as they know no ordinance which authorises them to discharge sequestrations, they submit the same to the consideration of their Lordships and the rest of the Committee.

1645, Feb. 22.—Northumberland and Loudoun, (for the Committee of both Kingdoms) to the Committee of Bedford. Asking for prompt payment of the arrears of money due upon the ordinance to the garrison of Newport, and for a return of what is in arrear, and in whom the fault is that it is yet unpaid, that they may take order for the supply and security of the place.

1645, March 3.—The same to the Committee and Deputy Lieutenants of the co. of Bedford. We are informed that great numbers of horse and foot belonging to our several armies have deserted their colours and quarters, and are returned into their several countries, also that the enemy's forces are stirring and together in considerable numbers, and likely to make some impression in those parts yet in our power. To prevent all which we have thought fit to recruit and strengthen all our forces. Use all diligence in pursuance of the ordinance herewith sent to send back to their several colours and quarters such as have straggled.

1645, March 5.—Copy of the Committee's orders to Sir Samuel Luke, Governor of Newport Pagnell, to send out warrants for carts, men, and horses to assist in making and repairing the works there.

1645, March 12.—Copy of warrant by Sir Samuel Luke to the constables of the hundred of Mansett, to order the petty constables each to send from his town or parish one able team and cart with two carters on Monday next for service at the works.

1645, April 5.—The Committee at Coventry to the Committee for Bedfordshire. Lady Leigh, of Stonely, is desirous to agree for her jointure lands at Leyton for a yearly rent. They highly praise her honour and her inoffensiveness. Signed by R. Skeffington, John Barker, Peter Burgoyne, Jo. Hales, William Colmore, Godfrey Bosseville, Gamuel Purefoy, Chris. Hales, and Geo. Wolcott.

1645, April 12 (Copy).—Northumberland and Loudoun to Sir Samuel Luke. They desire him to send at least 100 horse with all possible expedition.

1645, April 14, Newport.—Sir Samuel Luke to the Committee of Bedford. He expects according to their promise a good sum. Sends some gentlemen to press for the loan of 200*l.* to pay troops which are to go on the Lord's commands. The matter is pressing, as they may see by the enclosed second letter of the Lords. Bids them take care that the two months tax be speedily gathered and brought in. Not half of the other three months tax has been brought to this garrison as yet. If it comes not, he fears they will suffer more by his forces than he could wish, for both horse and foot are resolved to come amongst them: hitherto he has prevented it.

1645, April 24, Newport Pagnell.—The Committee for the garrison of Newport to Sir W. Boteler and the rest of the Committee for the co. of Bedford. Mr. Love, the receiver of the taxes, who without the expected moneys is come to the garrison, affirms that Sir W. Boteler says he supposes that the co. of Bedford is little or nothing in arrear to the garrison. Asks them to let their treasurer, Mr. Cockayne, meet them at the Swan at Bedford, on Saturday, and bring his accounts. The reasons are, 1st, because the receiver has brought so little money they cannot hope to keep the soldiers from mutiny nor the garrison in safety. 2d, upon the change of the Governor they desire to set all reckoning even between the garrison and the counties thereto associated. Signed by Edw. Elliston for Essex, Joseph Barker for Hertfordshire, Ra. Malory for Bedfordshire, John Pollard for Bucks.

1645, April 26.—Sir Samuel Luke to the Committee at Bedford. That there may be no mistake he sends some gentlemen with the treasurer to meet their treasurer, that both treasurers may settle the accounts. . . . Most of the other counties lay the blame upon the Bedford Committee that they are behind at all. All except theirs have come in reasonable fairly since the Lords letters.

1645, May 1.—Sir W. Boteler's order to allow W. Childs 23*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, being about one-third of his claim of 69*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* for services in the chapel of Windsor, to be paid out of the rents of the canons of Windsor within the co. of Bedford (the other two-thirds being to be borne by the counties of Berks and Bucks). This was made on a reference of his petition by the Committee of Lords and Commons for Sequestration of Delinquents and Papists.

1645, May 6.—The Committee of Northampton's order about the tax on Sir W. Boteler's land called Allisoe.

1645, May 7 & 31 & June 21.—Accounts and memoranda on two sheets of paper about tithes detained from Mr. Richard Jones.

1645, May 17.—The Committee of Newport to the Committee for the co. of Bedford. Urging payment of arrears to the garrison of Newport.

1645, May 31, Derby House.—Northumberland, & H. Kennedy to the Committee at the co. of Bedford. The siege of Oxford being by the Houses appointed to be put in execution and to be presently blocked up in order to it . . . we desire you to have 400 foot in readiness to come to such rendezvous as we shall appoint.

1645, June 1, Derby House.—P. Wharton and Loudoun to the same. The town of Leicester being now taken by the enemy makes them more solicitous for the adjacent garrison. . . . They direct speedy payment of arrears to the garrison of Newport.

Copy of an undated letter to the Lord General by some of the Committee at Bedford.—They had made good progress in slighting the fortifications of Bedford notwithstanding divers affronts and opposition . . . they are so far demolished that there is not any considerable strength in any part of them. The Mount is still defended from us with violence by Capt. Hudson and his soldiers, whose answer to us we send enclosed, which they use as a refuge and a prison. They ask for forces to reduce it.

1645, June 2, Derby House.— . . . and London to the Committee of the co. of Bedford. The keeping or slighting the works at Bedford they leave to the Committee's judgment. If slighted let the men be sent to Lieut.-General Cromwell in the Isle of Ely.

1645, Sir Samuel Luke to the same.—Has received a letter from the Lords, and accordingly the Committee there (Newport) have proportioned Beds, Bucks, and Northamptonshire (as adjacent counties) for a set number of men answerable each to other and a quantity of provision suitable. Sends a copy of the warrant to their high constable. (This letter is not signed: at the foot is the following:—"We being a full number of the Committee have made bold to open your letters and despatched them away to you at the same instant. The warrants shall come to you as soon as they are despatched.") 1645, June 9—Copy, signed by Sir Samuel Luke of his letter to the Committee of both Kingdoms. Has received the original of the enclosed copy letter from Major-General Browne, who, it seems, had been appointed to succeed Luke as Governor of Newport Pagnell. Luke complains bitterly, he having been entrusted with the place by the Earl of Essex and the Earl of Manchester; and he complains that Browne has power to send Major Temple (who, he hears, has been dismissed from Sir Thomas Fairfax's army with a small disgrace) to command in chief.

1645, June 15.—W. Love to Sir W. Boteler at his house near Bedford. Explains (after a visit to Gifford) how it was that Gifford spake as he did.

1645, June 16.—Declaration of Robert Gifford, minister of Chillington, of certain passages and speeches between him and some of the Parliament forces. On the 6th of June, he being at Archercher, co. Northampton, was surprised by several whom he supposed to be some of the King's forces, and fearing bad usage from them, did for the safeguard of his person and the preservation of some friends and neighbours, utter words contrary to his judgment. Sir W. Butler, of Bedfordshire, being enquired after, he said he was a loyal subject of the King and had been Gifford's scholar, and perhaps for his estate's sake he might do what he did. It was merely to save him from plunder. He asserts his own approval of the Parliament's proceedings and laments his miscarriage.

1645, June 16, Westminster.—R. Knightley to Sir W. Butler and the rest of the Committee for the co. of Bedford. Has received the examination of Ensign Richard Thoroton, who has given 100l. bond to the Sergeant-at-arms to procure his exchange for Ensign Poell, prisoner at Leicester, or render himself prisoner at London within 20 days. Wonders what captain dared to take away his parole given him by the Committee of the House of Commons.

1645, June 19.—The information of Humphrey Taylor a trooper under Major Temple taken before Sir W. Boteler.—Being at the house of Richard Beckett at the White House, Bedford, on the 18th of June at 10 p.m., in company with Beckett, his wife and son, and an old man, Fitzhugh of Willden, he pretended he was a king's soldier (a prisoner) that would gladly escape, and Beckett changed some part of his dress with him and sent him off towards Broomham, &c. &c.

1645, June 20, Derby House.—P. Wharton and Jhonston to the Committee for the co. of Bedford, appointed by ordinance of 18 October last for relief of the British forces in Ireland. They recommend further assessments and levies for the remainder of the whole year, and that they use good means for collecting the new assessments and recovering the arrears of the former.

1645, June 24, Derby House.—Manchester and Jhonston to Sir W. Butler. Thanking him for his activity in the matter of the last letter altho' he was accidentally omitted from the Commission.

1645, July 5.—Order of the Houses of Parliament that the proportions (below) of horse be forthwith raised by the several counties, to be employed at Grantham or thereabouts, for the defence of the associated counties: Lincoln, 120; Suffolk, 100; Essex, 100; Norfolk, 100; Hertford, 32; Cambridge and the Isle of Ely, 32; Huntingdon, 16.

1645, July 7, Derby House.—Warwick and Jhonston to the Committee of Bedford. Through the blessing of God on the endeavours of our forces, the strength of the enemy is now retired to places remote from the association. To improve the victory they think fit to prosecute the enemy where is his greatest strength with their whole forces. So Sir Thomas Fairfax with his whole army is marched west, whereby Taunton is already relieved. The King with the horse that were left at Naseby field have been since beyond Severn in Worcestershire, Herefordshire, and parts adjacent, where he has been endeavouring to recruit. Against them the Scots army have marched, which we hope is this night about the Severn. Lest the frontier of the association should be plundered by any of their garrisons, specially Newark, likely to be increased by the forces of Carlisle upon the late surrender thereof, the Houses have ordered 500 horse to be forthwith raised in such proportion expressed in the ordinance enclosed. They recommend speedy compliance.

1645, July 8, Westminster.—Laurence Whitaker to the Committee at Bedford. The Committee of Examination not being quite satisfied with Mr. Gifford, send him down for examination and for the Committee of Bedford to do their pleasure.

1645, July 17.—A direction for disposing of the 1,000 horse and 500 dragoons into regiments and troops, as it was agreed on at a general committee consisting of members of the several counties, Star Chamber, Westminster, 17 July 1645. The City of London and Middlesex, Kent with Canterbury and the Cinque ports, Surrey and Sussex. Bedford furnished light horse to the number of 494 in five troops. London and Middlesex, Hertford and Bedford, Kent, Surrey and Sussex furnished 251 dragoons in two troops. Col. Ludlow was recommended as colonel.

1645, July 18.—The Committees of Berks, Bucks, and Oxford to the Committee of the co. of Bedford. They send several ordinances of Parliament for the raising of forces to secure the associated counties from the adjacent garrisons of the enemy, and for raising money to maintain the same, and a model agreed on at a general meeting for forming them into regiments and troops. They urge the Bedford Committee to be quick and to send the names of such captains and other commissioned officers as they should make choice of, so that Commissions may be procured, (14 signatures, amongst them is Henry Marten.)

Same date.—At the Committees of the three counties of Berks, Bucks, and Oxford, sitting in the Inner Star Chamber, 18 July. Whereas the 20,000l. to be raised on the credit of the excise by ordinance of Parliament of the 1st instant is appointed to be issued out by the Committees of the three counties of Berks, Bucks, and Oxford for the advance of the service for reducing of Oxford, and by an ordinance of the 18th 1,003 horse and 506 dragoons are to be raised by certain counties and cities, the Committee will pay such of the horse and dragoons as shall come into the service of the three counties during two months. Signed by Henry Marten.

1645, July 19, Newport.—W. Love to the deputy-lieutenant and Committee for the co. of Bedford. Has been 10 days in several counties to collect moneys for the garrison, and yesterday brought to the garrison 1,000l., and has returned to London for their use near 300l., but the soldiers and people are not satisfied, and he is reviled. Every county blames them, and he thinks justly, he grieves to see the straights of the garrison. If Hertfordshire were not so far before other counties in payment they should be applied to. Advises them to supply money.

1645, Aug. 2, Westminster.—R. Knightley to Sir W. Boteler, and others, the Committee for co. Beds. Has acquainted the Committee with their letters of the 23 July. They desire them to send John Stanforth with James Stanforth, his brother, a messenger of the House. Such wounded prisoners as are in gaol at Bedford are to have parole to go to Oxford or Bristol or near garrisons to get exchanged. If any will not to your assurance ever bear arms against the Parliament they may on oath not to bear arms be set free.

1645, Aug. 5, Derby House.—W. Say and Sele and J. Balmerino to the Committee for the co. of Beds. By appointment of an ordinance of 18 July last, 20 horse and 11 dragoons are to be raised in Beds. They are to be at Ailesbury on Friday the 8th August. (Boteler received this letter on the 8th.)

1645, Aug. 6, St. Albans.—S. Titus to the Committee of Bedford. Having a commission for the horse and dragoons raised in that county, he has sent by bearer an order by the Committee of both Kingdoms for the rendezvous. Would have come himself but for bad health.

1645, Aug. 9.—Kathren [Countess of] Bedford to the Committee of Bedford. Understands that they have sent for the ceasers of Wolburne, by a warrant to appear before them, and as informed by the instigation of Mr. Stanton who has quarrelled with her son. Asks that they will wait and hear her son's defence.

DUKE OF

1645, Aug. 19, Newport Pagnell.—The Committee at Newport (Richard Cokayne and two others) to the Committee for co. Beds. Say they had sent soldiers to gather up the taxes in the county due to that garrison, who have collected 100*l.*, and it was paid to Mr. Cokayne, their treasurer. Ask that it may be sent to the garrison, their need admits of no delay; the soldiers knowing it is gathered and in the treasury at Bedford, "we and "you are hourly threatened our ruin." They urge the sending of it.

1645, Aug. 30.—James Underwood having lately been a soldier in the Parliament's service in Ireland, and being taken in this country coming with the King's forces, has this day taken the national covenant before us. W. Boteler, Hum. Monoux.

1645, Aug. Note of prisoners released, (1 p.)

1645, Sept. 4. (Copy.) At the Committee of the House of Commons for the eastern association. Order, that whereas the Houses have ordered payment of arrears up to 1 June 1645, every county formerly assessed towards payment of the garrison of Newport should pay to Mr. Love, receiver for the garrison, one month's assessment imposed on every county by virtue of the ordinance. (Signed by Miles Corbet.)

1645, Sept. 5, Hunts.—The Committee of Hunts to the Committee for co. Beds. Asking for news of the King's army, "and if you please to appoint a rendezvous of "such horse as the cavaliers exchanged, sold, or left "in your army, and give us notice thereof, we will "acquaint our county that they shall claim such horses "as they shall there find taken from them by the King's "army at the plundering this county.

1645, Sept. 25.—Beauchamp St. John to the same. I have spoke to Mr. Knightley about the prisoners at Bedford, who tells me that Committee can give little ease in it, this town being so full of prisoners that they are sending some into other parts; but that if any can be persuaded to take employment in foreign parts they will send down officers to take them away. He said also if any would give money for their enlargement it might be allowed toward the maintenance of the rest.

Same date, (Copy).—W. Love to the Dep. Lieutenants and Committee for the co. of Beds. Urging sending supply of money for Newport. (At the foot is a copy of Miles Corbet's letter of 4 Sept.)

1645, Sept. 26, Dutchy Chamber.—Miles Corbet (for the Committee of the Eastern Association) to the Committee for the co. of Beds. Tells them of an ordinance for the payment of the garrisons of Newport Pagnell, Bedford, Cambridge, Huntingdon, and Lynn, which he sends, and desires them to have four months' assessment forthwith levied and paid to Mr. Buckler of Cambridge, who is appointed treasurer.

1645, Sept. 10, Derby House.—Northumberland and Ro. Barclay (for the Committee of the Kingdoms) to the Committee for co. Beds, appointed by ordinance on 18 Oct. for relief of the British armies in Ireland. In consequence of the Bedford Committee having after 50 weeks sent up only a small sum, and not having returned the assessments, advances are refused by contractors, and the armies run the hazard of perishing. They urge the speedy and effectual prosecution of the affair.

1645, Oct. 4.—Copy by Sir W. Boteler of his letter to Sir Samuel Luke. About a week since Mr. Rowland of Bedford, surgeon to Prince Maurice, came home with his wife from Worcester, expecting to return again by virtue of his ticket from Col. Morgan. He says Prince Maurice gave Col. Morgan a ticket for his wife to pass to him, with goods and servants, through the King's quarters, and by that means he procured Col. Morgan's pass for him to come to Bedford and return. He says he intends to desert his employment in the King's quarters if he can once be at a certainty for the pay which is due to him from Prince Maurice; and whether he can get it or not is resolved ere long to put himself into the protection of the Parliament. It seems he tendered his services to Lord St. John when he first paid his regiment, but his Lordship having no use for him, he has ever since served as surgeon in the King's army, but, as he says, never took any arms; nevertheless, the Committee have put him under restraint. Some of the men of Eaton Socton have been taken by the King's forces, and kept at Worcester until they pay 60*l.* fine imposed on Eaton, and he proposes that Rowland shall be made a means to get the men sent back without payment, or to get himself by way of exchange. He asks directions. (Inside are written copies of the passes for Rowland and his wife, and also of a particular of the Hundred of Redburnstok of two months' tax for Sir Thomas Fairfax's army: 14 towns, with names of assessors, collectors, and the sums assessed, in all 273*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*)

1645, Oct. 9, London.—Sir Samuel Luke to Sir W. Boteler at Hidnam. Thinks that Rowland's pass is not to be denied unless it prove counterfeit. Has not been able to move the House in it, but thinks he may be safely restored again upon the same pass.

1645, Oct. 10, Hunts.—The Committee of Hunts to the Committee of Parliament for the co. of Bedford. Are informed that the King intends to keep his winter quarters at Newark, so that both counties will be in continual danger. To prevent this they have made unpassable all the fords upon the Ouse from Earith to Emshurie, and made drawbridges at St. Ives, Huntingdon, and St. Neots. They advise the making useless all fords in the Ouse, in the co. of Bedford, from Embury to Newport, and to make drawbridges where necessary. Ask them to join in a petition to the Committee of both Kingdoms for a strength of horse dragons to be between Ailsbury and Newport, or rather at Newport, to interrupt the passage of the enemy from Oxford, Banbury, and other of the King's garrisons. They have written to Northamptonshire to do similar work on the river Nyne.

1645, Oct. 11.—Henry Pelham (from the Committee of the Lords and Commons for the Eastern Association) to the Committee of the co. of Bedford. By ordinance of 12 August last for raising 700 horse and 300 dragoons for the gaining of Newark, and likewise for money to pay them, the proportion of Bedford county is 309*l.* 7*s.* Asks them to pay it to Thomas Buckle, in Cambridge, who is to pay it to Major Henry Gibb's regiment, which sum shall be reimbursed to the several counties and cities out of the estates of delinquents within the said counties and cities.

1645, Oct. 18, Newport Pagnell.—Col. Charles D'Oily to the Committee of Beds. The enemy from Borstal have issued warrants into the country within six miles of this garrison to bring in all their carts and horses, and all men from 16 to 60 to come in. I cannot imagine their design. Last night came a post which tells that Col. Rositer met with the Princes Rupert and Maurice with 300 horse, and routed them, took a major, three captains, 60 gentlemen, 150 horse, many slain, the pursuit reaching to the walls of Belvoir Castle, the Princes and others of name narrowly escaping.

1645, Oct., Fast Day, Leicester.—Capt. Ben. Hodgson to the Committee of co. Beds. Asking assistance to get many of his soldiers who have deserted and are now in Bedford. Puts them in mind of a month's pay due to his company upon the slighting of the fort.

1645, Oct. 31, Derby House.—W. Say and Sele and Loudoun. The public affairs are in a hopeful posture. Many garrisons of the enemy are reduced, and our quarters thereby very much enlarged. The forces of the enemy beaten out of the field, except those in Devonshire, who are also attended with the whole army of Sir Thomas Fairfax. The King is still in Newark, where he is watchfully blocked up with a sufficient number of horse, to which, if a sufficient number of foot were added, the reducing the place might be feasible. Their garrison is not very numerous. This is resolved on, and 100 out of the county of Bedford are appointed. By no means fail to be at the rendezvous at Grantham on Friday, 7 November, or sooner, thence to march as they shall receive order from Col. General Poyntz. The Committee of the Eastern Association will take care to have money ready for them that are to be employed.

1645, Nov. 11.—Miles Corbett (at the Committee of Lords and Commons for the Eastern Association.) The Committee of Herts was ordered to pay 752*l.* and Bedford 309*l.* for maintaining Capt. Titus's troop, consisting of 70 horse and 84 dragoons, and they have received none though they have served at Chester. It is this day ordered that the Committee of Herts shall receive the sums, and pay them to Mr. Barber for bringing horses, &c., to recruit the said troop, which shall then be employed under the command of Major-General Browne.

1645, Nov. 18, Westminster.—Grey of Wark, Speaker, and William Lenthall, Speaker of the House of Commons, to the Committee for the co. of Bedford, &c., for relief of British armies in Ireland. Again strongly urging obedience to the ordinance of 18 Oct. 1644. The warrants to be published in each parish church.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF MAL-
BOROUGH.

1645, Nov. 1^o. Derby House.—W. Say and Sele and Balmerino (the Committee of both Kingdoms) to the Committee of the co. of Bedford. We are informed by some gentlemen of Buckingham, of the parts of Newport Pagnell, that the horse from the King's garrison have taxed the country thereabouts at great sums, which they intend to levy on Tuesday next. Send what horse and dragoons you can spare to Newport to join with their horse and the horse of Aylesbury for preventing the levy.

1645, Dec. 1.—An assessment made for raising 18*l*. 2*s*. 8*d*. for two months' tax towards the maintenance of the army under the command of Sir Thomas Fairfax, rated on our parish of Keyshoe by ordinance of Parliament. (2 long columns of names and sums).

1645, Dec. 10, Cambridge.—The Committee of Cambridge to the Committee of the co. of Bedford. They regret not being able to send assistance, their proportion of the 1,800 horse sent to Lincolnshire having drained them. (Signed by Thomas Parker, Mi. Dalton, Tho. Bendish, Tho. Symms, Robert Clarke.)

1645, Dec. 16, Cambridge.—The same to the same. Urging them to send up the numbers of foot completed according to order, and provide them with constant pay.

Town of Bolneshurst.—A tax for Sir Thomas Fairfax's army for two months, granted by ordinance of Parliament of 6 Oct. 1645, the sum being 13*l*. 2*s*. 2*d*. One column of names and their assessments. Signed by W. Boteler and John Horby.

Staughton Parva, 1640, Nov. 29.—Assessment made for raising 10*l*. 2*s*. 4*d*. for the same purpose.

Town of Risely.—A levy or assessment for the same purpose, 18*l*. 8*s*.

Yelden.—Tax for 2 months for the same purpose, 11*l*. 3*s*.

Clapham.—Taxation for 2 months for the same purpose, 10*l*. 10*s*.

Manor of Melchbourne.—A tax for 2 months for 13*l*. 17*s*. 6*d*. for the same purpose. 4*d*. a score pasture, 2*d*. a score land, 1*s*. 8*d*. a double cottage, 10*d*. a single cottage.

Oakley.—Tax for 2 months for the same purpose, 10*l*. 17*s*. 8*d*.

Town of Tillbrooke.—Tax for raising 1,000*l*. a month for this county, whereof Tillbrooke is laid at 3*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. a month. The sum is 6*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. taxing every £ at 1½*d*. the pound.

1645, May 1—1645, March 21.—A bundle of 215 orders by the Committee of Bedfordshire for sequestrations.

1645, Jan. 6.—Order by the Eastern Committee for the Committee of co. Bedford to raise 4 months tax (Signed by Miles Corbett, W. Masham, J. Potts, W. Heveningham and Henry Pelham).

1645, Jan. 7.—Dutchy Chamber. The same to the Standing Committee for the co. of Bedford. Major Gibb's regiment of horse is greatly in want of money; 309*l*. 7*s*. was assigned in co. Bedford, by ordinance of 12th Aug. 1645, and 20 horse and 12 dragoons. Only a little money is lately sent. Send the remainder.

1645, Jan. 21.—Order by the Committee for Sequestrations that the collector shall pay to Mr. W. Child, late organist at Windsor, and his son 24*l*. 8*s*. for 7 months arrears, for the Dean and Canons of Windsor.

1645, Jan. 29.—Order by the Committee of Lords and Commons for the Eastern Association that the Committee for co. Bedford forthwith make 4 months assessment in pursuance of the ordinance of 3 Sept. 1645, for maintenance and pay of the garrisons of Newport Pagnell, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge and Lynn Regis.

1645, Feb. 6, Cambridge.—Thomas Buckley to the Committee for co. Bedford:—asking for the 309*l*. 7*s*., ordered by the Committee of both Houses, on 12 Aug. 1645, to be raised by co. Bedford for reducing Newark.

1645, Feb. 17.—Dutchy Chamber. Nath Bacon, (for the Committee of the Eastern Association) to the Standing Committee of Bedford. Ordering them to comply with the order of 11 Nov. 1645, for recruiting the troop of Capt. Tytne, of the neglect of which he has complained.

1645, Feb. 19. Bnshy. Capt. S. Titus to Sir W. Boteler, at Biddenham. I have received the letter you did me the favour to send me, and though I did little expect the news it brought me (for I did think I should rather have heard of the execution than of the revocation of my order) yet I was not so vain as to think it strange that just orders should be subject to the fate of good laws, or as to imagine it probable that only matters of justice which concerned myself should be exempt from interruption in their passages, when all men complain in this kind that are anything more interested in the present affairs than those that are dead. But, Sir, when I had spoken with the Committee of the Association, and accused them of a crime they had never committed nor intended, when I urged Mr. Buckley to shew me a later order to mine, and was answered by him that he never pretended nor urged any, but only sent for the money in the general capacity of treasurer, not knowing of a particular of mine that did contradict it, and that now he must desist; truly then (Sir) I must confess I did wonder what the reason should be that the Committee should give more credit to what another only alleged (if at all alleged) than to what I had produced (except that my order having now lain three months dead in their hands, they now thought it time it should be buried). If so (Sir) the enclosed I hope will give it a resurrection, and make it again of the number of things in force . . . I have nothing more but to tell you how unfortunate I think myself that I met you not at London, not that thereby I mist an advantage to have troubled you with complaints and solicitations, but that I failed at an opportunity to tell you how much I am obliged to be your most humble affectionate servant.

1645, March 23, Westminster.—Manchester, Speaker pro tempore, and W. Lenthall, Speaker of the House of Commons to the Committee in the co. of Bedford, &c. Ireland. The Lords and Commons lately applied themselves to raise money by a weekly assessment for one year in all counties of England and Wales, and for that purpose addressed their ordinance of 18 Oct. 1644 to the Bedford Committee, who gave a good account and return of 1,925*l*. 12*s*. or thereabouts, which has been laid out for the relief of the armies in Ireland. The ordinance has been continued for six months longer. More troops are wanted in Ireland. They are to send in the arrears on the first ordinance, and also proceed to raise the assessment for the other six months.

1646, April 2, Bnshy.—S. Titus to Sir W. Boteler. At my coming to London, I found Mr. Love was gone two days before to Newark; the pretence of his journey to pay the Bedford forces there, his return not expected these three weeks. Sir, I must once more press the Committee to take some more speedy course to supply me, and desire them to believe I have been already sufficiently misused by delays. If there be any credit to be given to men of my profession, and if we lose not our honesty when we take up arms, I profess that small remnant of a troop I have left lose their part of 4,000*l*., because they are below the number of a troop, and yet not reduced under other command. Besides, I give occasion of suspicion to our Committee, that I suffer the moneys raised here to be dormant, and not employ it according as it is ordered. But I have already found that you are sufficiently sensible of my condition, and that you have employed your interest to my furtherance.

1646, April 3, Derby House.—P. Wharton and Loudoun to the Committee of Bedfordshire. We have appointed Capt. Rainbrowe, who is now before Woodstock manor to make another quarter for the closer blocking up of Oxford. To enable him to it we desire you forthwith to send to him a troop of horse for that service.

1646, April 4.—Col. Richard Gervys to the Committee for Bedford. Asks that Smith, one of his soldiers, who it seems had committed some outrage, might be sent to him to be tried by martial law. Asks that the State's horse and arms might be sent back, and if they think Smith's brother should be brought to a court-martial, asks them to send him.

1646, April 14.—Order by the Committee of the Lords and Commons for the Eastern Association that the Committee for co. Beds., certify to them duplicates of the assessments made for a whole year in pursuance of the ordinance of 3 Sept. 1645, for maintenance and pay of the garrisons of Newport Pagnell, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge and Lynn Regis.

1646, April 16, London.—S. Titus to [Sir W. Boteler]. Complaints of the delay in sending the money. Asks, if it will not prejudice him as to the remainder, for 200*l*. on account, to be sent to him at the Queen's Arms at Holborn Bridge.

1646, May 1, Evesham.—Thomas Morgan to the Committee of both Kingdoms. I have sent the bearer, Major Cromwell, on purpose to solicit the business on behalf of the brigade, for our proportion of the 6,000*l*., and concerning his own arrears since he came to Gloucester, where he hath received but little pay as he can show by his accounts under the Committee's hand. His reality and sincerity in the cause is not unknown to them, and I am confident is not unknown to your Lordships, and how gallantly he hath behaved himself on all occasions since my coming hither and before . . . not doubting but that he may be discharged to his trust again with all expedition.

1646, June 4.—Order by the Committee of Lords and Commons for the Eastern Association, that as there is now no such need of their daily meetings and sitting as formerly, there be no longer any allowance to the chairman or to any member of any Committee for the co. of Bedford till further order.

1646, June 4.—Order by the same that the Committee for Beds. certify to this Committee duplicate of assessments for maintenance of garrisons for one year. John Denny's messenger to the Committee is to repair to that Committee to receive them.

1646, June 15, Hoxton.—Sir Thomas Alston to Sir W. Boteler. He has been down to the House of Commons to speak to the Bedfordshire members about some petition which had been sent up. As the House was then engaged in the settlement of church matters it was thought better to delay presenting it. It will be better to consult with other counties as to what is to be done with disbanded horses.

1646, June 27.—Copy certificate by the Committee of co. Bedford to the Committee of Parliament for plundered ministers. That the tithes of Leighton and the hamlets are demised by the Prelendary of Lincoln to Sir Thomas Leighton, a delinquent, at the yearly rent of 76*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; before the troubles, they were let at 46*l.*, whereof the tithes of Stoubridge are part, and were formerly let for 100*l.* per annum.

1650, Jan. 16.—By the Commissioners for compounding, &c. In the case of John Chapman, Richard Ren, and other creditors of William Viscount Stafford, on the report of Mr. Brereton, to whom it was referred, it is ordered that the Committee of Sequestration, certify the time of the first sequestration of the lands in the report mentioned, and for what cause, and whose delinquency, whether Lord Stafford or Sir George Bynion, &c. And it is resolved that the deed, whereof allowance is desired is void as to the two-thirds of the estate sequestrable for the recusancy of Lord Stafford.

1651, June 13, Staughton.—T. Cromwell to his sister [Ann Cromwell]. Mr. Preston had given a bond for 50*l.* to the colonel, who before he went abroad left it with Lord St. John's steward to indemnify him against a bond in which he had stood surety for the colonel, and in which the steward said he was a loser to the amount of 80*l.* Nevertheless, he gave the bond to the widow to do what she could with. Preston lives near, and he (T. Cromwell) will endeavour to get the money from him.

1651, Aug. 2, Staughton.—T. Cromwell to his sister [Ann Cromwell]. He says his brother Noll owed him two several twenty pounds, one on bond and the other on a bill of exchange.

n. d. Ann Cromwell to Thomas Cromwell.—In reply to Thomas Cromwell's letter of 13 June. About the debt owing by Preston.

1651, Aug. 19, London.—A. Cromwell to her brother. About a debt owing from Mr. Preston.

1651, Aug. 20.—Copy power of attorney by Ann Cromwell, of the city of Westminster, administratrix of the effects of Oliver Cromwell, appointing T. Cromwell, gentleman, her attorney, to sue on the bond by William Preston, of Drayton, co. Northampton, dated 12 July 1642.

1651, Sept. 12.—T. Cromwell to his sister. Preston is from home, so he (T. C.) cannot get on with the business.

1651, Oct. 12.—T. Cromwell to Ann Cromwell. Preston will pay the principal but not interest, for he says he offered years ago to pay the money, but Oliver Cromwell could not find the bond.

n. d.—Ann Cromwell to T. Cromwell. Acknowledges T. Cromwell's letter of 12 Oct. She cannot give up the interest, being only administratrix and answerable to Oliver Cromwell's creditors.

1655, March 31, Staughton.—T. Cromwell to Ann Cromwell. Says that Oliver Cromwell received the 50*l.* from Preston on the bond of 12 July 1642, as appears by his own receipt annexed to the letter. He (T. Cromwell) lent O. Cromwell 20*l.* on the 22nd March 1638, and he paid to John Yate 20*l.* for him, making together 40*l.* He has received from Preston 30*l.* for interest, which he keeps in part of the 40*l.* Sends a letter of

O. Cromwell, and a particular of debts due by him and to him, but never could get any of the money.

A bundle of papers relating to Major Oliver Cromwell, who died in Ireland in 1649.

1647, Jan. 20.—Copy affidavit of James Arleby, a trooper formerly under the command of Major Oliver Cromwell in the regiment of Col. Massie, and some time under the command of Col. Morgan, governor of Gloucester. Had been under the command aforesaid three years. Never knew that Major Cromwell received from the State either horse or arms but only six cases of pistols, and still his major's troop had been recruited without any charge to the State. His major lost four saddle horses of his own and 18 more besides, about Sully House, in the forest of Dean, and he had at the disbanding of his troop 80 or 100 horse, officers included.

Affidavit of Stephen Jobbins, trooper, to the same effect.

1647, Jan. 26, Gloucester.—The Committee of Gloucester (Will. Leigh, Will. Shephard, and Jo. Dorney) to the Committee of the Army. At the request of Major Oliver Cromwell they have perused his accounts for his services in their county, and think it true and fair, and send the same inclosed, and that he behaved himself very gallantly and honestly during all the time he served with them.

Major Cromwell's account of horses he hath lent upon service.

To the Right Honourable the Parliament of England, the humble petition of Major Oliver Cromwell. That he is in arrears 2,138*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, as by the annexed papers appear. About 5 Oct. 1646 he raised a troop of horse, under the command of Lord Lisle, for the service of Ireland, and disbursed at least 800*l.* for the furnishing thereof (80 soldiers) with arms and necessaries, and continued the troop till 15 July following, all which, with the pay due to him, amounted to 1,400*l.*, all which is still owing, as by certificate appears. Now that he is again to go upon the Irish expedition, and is irreconcilable by any Committee, and cannot attend the House, having neither time nor money suitable, he asks for payment.

(Copy).—P. Lisle (Lisle ?) to Sir John Veile, K^t., paymaster for the forces at Bristow, that is to be transported to Ireland. Major Oliver Cromwell has, according to his contract with the Committee for Ireland, raised a troop of horse and men, officers included. These are to desire you to muster the rest, and allow money constantly for their subsistence as you shall think fit.

1646, Oct. 15. Commission on parchment, signed and sealed by Philip [Lord] Lisle, Lieut.-General of the Kingdom of Ireland, and General of the Forces there, to Oliver Cromwell, captain. A commission to be captain in a troop of horse in the regiment of Col. Leonard Lydiott, which troop he is by virtue of that commission to raise, &c., &c.

Same date.—Commission by Lord Lisle for Oliver Cromwell, major, to be major in the same regiment.

1646.—List of the troop and its officers: Oliver Cromwell, major (three long columns). On the fourth column, 11th Dec. 1646, certificate by John Stone of the mustering of the troop of Major Oliver Cromwell. The major or captain, lieutenant, cornet, and quartermaster, three corporals, two trumpets (a farrier and saddler absent), 60 troopers, whereof one absent, also 18 other troopers absent. Below is a letter signed by Oliver Cromwell to Sir J. Viel, requesting him to pay the money belonging to the troop, 12*d.* per day per man, to John Stone, muster-master, every Friday; and a letter by him to Stone, desiring him to receive the money.

1649, July 5. Lord Lisle recites that under an ordinance of Parliament of 4 Aug. 1646, he granted a commission to Major Oliver Cromwell as major of Col. Lydiott's regiment of horse, and captain of a troop in the same regiment for the service of Ireland, and the major received no moneys for raising the men and horses which he brought to Bristol, and were mustered by Sir John Viel or his deputy, although he ought to have had 8*l.* for the raising and transporting each man and horse. Thinks that consideration ought to be had of his (Cromwell's) disbursements for the raising of the said troop, and that his accounts should be audited.

Petition to the supreme authority of the nation, the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, by Anne Cromwell, administratrix of the goods and chattels of her brother Oliver Cromwell deceased. Her brother had an arrear of above 3,000*l.* due to him for his service to the Parliament in June 1649. It was ordered that he should be paid out of discoveries in Haberdashers' Hall; but there it could not be had, and shortly after he went over with His Excellency the now Lord General upon the Irish expedition, and died in Ireland in the Parliament's service. She has been at great trouble to find out and promote discoveries before the Committee, but has been prevented by the late Act of Oblivion. She has now found out 6,000 acres in Swinhead fen, commonly called the See fen. She pays 1,000 acres in satisfaction.

Another petition by Anne Cromwell, praying that her late brother's arrears may be paid out of the fines and compositions of delinquents' estates which she shall discover and report.

[17], Jan. 24th, Thursday, indorsed "For my Lord Sunderland." Begins. This letter from Queen Mary to her sister so full of power and majesty was wrote upon the late Lord Rochester's advice and without any manner of offense given by me. The pretence was that the King having removed the Duke of Marlborough from his employment his wife would not serve the Princess, who retired to him from her house bought of the Duke of Leeds, to which she had as good a title to live in as any other subject had to theirs; but she had a mind to do all things that showed the greatest respect and submission to the Queen, except putting away one whom she had honoured with a long possession of friendship, which Queen Mary in many letters had so much approved of as to write to me what follows:—"I hope my sister and you will never part, &c. &c." (10 $\frac{1}{2}$ lines) At St. James' church the Queen sent to forbid the parson to send her (Ann) the text or to make her a bow; and I have a letter now from a Secretary of State writ to the Mayor of the Bath, a tallow chandeler, to order him not to pay any civility to the Princess. Sends the letters in the two Queen's own hands, "but I desire you will tell "Mr. S. that I shall not sleep till I have them again."

1722, Oct. 9th.—Bill of Claudius Amyand, H.M. principal and Serjeant Surgeon. Among the items:—1722, April 19th. Called out of bed to bleed the Earl of Sunderland. Bleeding again and attending all day till death, 5 guineas. 20th April. Opening the body, 10 guineas. 22nd April. Opening the body of the Hon^{ble} Wm. Spencer, 5 guineas.

1722. Account of books owing by the Right Hon^{ble}, the late Earl of Sunderland to Mr. John Gibson, Anno 1725, 10 pp. and summary on the 11th page. Total, 510*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*—The first parcel was in Dec. 1719. A great number of books printed in the 15th century. The price for each book is stated. Dante, folio, 147*s.* 5 guineas. Dante, folio, Naples, n. d., 2 guineas. Cicero, Epistolæ familiares Venet. Spira, 1469 on vellum, 15 guineas.

1722. Quarter ending Lady Day and thence to 19th of April when Lord Sunderland died.—Account for the Hon^{ble} Mr. Charles and Mr. John Spencer's board, &c., at Eton, 37*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* Their board was 17*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*; to the master, 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*; bookseller's bill, 14*s.*; rent for their chamber, 1*l.* 15*s.* It seems to be the dame's bill. The receipt is by Wm. Banister for my sister Mrs. Mary Naylor.

1723, March 11th.—Policy No. 4,047 of Royal Exchange Assurance. Policy for 10,000*l.* on the library of books, in brick building called the library, in the garden of the dwelling house of Robert Earl of Sunderland, on the north side of Piccadilly. The premium was 25*l.* annually.

1733, June 10th, Temple.—Receipt by T. Burnett for 25*s.*, being half of the subscription for the 2nd vol., large paper, of Burnett's History of his own Time. (Seal, an old man's head.)

1738, Janry. 8th.—"S. Marlborough" to ——. Mentions a talk that Parliament will be put off a little upon the difficulty the ministers will find to give reasons for the Spaniards taking a ship or ships lately. Thinks, however, they will soon meet. Whood, the painter, has drawn your brother's picture in the figure of an old Roman consul with a truncheon in one hand and one arm drawn quite naked; I suppose going to do some great execution. A gentleman that saw it found fault with the arm, saying it seemed too large. Pardon me, replied Mr. Whood, it is as it should be, for my Lord Duke sate himself naked to have it done exactly by the life. . . . I think it would have been as well if he had deferred drawing this graceful figure till he had been in some battle. He attends the court very constantly, and lost his money upon Twelfth Night . . . if he lives till he has a son 21 he will destroy his grandfather's settlement upon the rest of the family. . . . They say Lord Bateman has consented to do great things in this separation, which, if true, shows he is very much frightened. I believe it's certainly true that Lady Bateman is to be lady of the bed chamber, and 'tis said that Lady Bateman has worked up Lady Valmonde to put my Lady de la Raine into disgrace. She is gone to the Bath, pretending to be sick.

1787, Aug. 2nd, Eton.—Messrs. Pitt and March to Thomas Walker, Esq^r, at Woodstock. The Blenheim banner was this day delivered to Windsor Castle by Pitt and March.

1797, Dec. 18th, vellum.—The thanks of the Chancellor, members, and scholars of the University of Oxford for the Duke's gift of paintings to the University. Seal in silver box.

1812, June 17th, 87, Pall Mall.—David Wilkie to the Marquis of Blandford. Understanding that Lord Blandford is the proprietor of "The Jew's Harp," painted for the late Mr. Annisley, asks that it may be replaced in his (Wilkie's) exhibition during the remaining four days.

1812, June 20th.—The Same to the Same. Letter of thanks and returning the picture.

1816, Nov. 10th, Warren Street, Fitzroy Square.—Mr. Turner to the Marquis of Blandford. (This is Charles

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Turner, the seal is C. T.) Offers to come at Lord Blandford's appointment.

1817, Aug. 15th.—B. R. Haydon to the Duchess of Marlborough (2 pp.). A letter written in the third person asking that he may stay among the Rubens for the whole two hours of the public view.

1714, Dec. 24th.—Eugene de Savoye to (Marlborough); French. He has received Marlborough's letter by Mr. Stanhope, who left last evening after having dined with the Count de Tinsendorf. His Imperial and Catholic Majesty to whom he (Eugene) communicated Marlborough's letter, is pleased at the King's sending a person of such consideration as Mr. Stanhope. His Majesty is ready to enter into engagements to secure the safety of Europe, but the writer doubts if the Dutch dare do anything to displease France. He is glad of the choice the King has made of Lord Temple. His Majesty would have before sent to congratulate the King on his accession, but was embarrassed in the choice of a minister of distinction who would be agreeable.

1715, March 26th, Vienna.—The Same to the Same. He sends the letter written three months ago, (the letter above I suppose). Sends by Mr. Cadogan, who will give an account of this commission, and that His Imperial and Catholic Majesty thinks of a great satisfaction for Marlborough. This helped to defer the first letter as he wished to be able to say something positive. He hopes the King will know the confidence which His Imperial and Catholic Majesty has in him, and that all he does on behalf of the Barrier is for his sake. At Vienna northern and eastern affairs take up all the time.

4to (68 pp.) dated 1713, July 4th, London.—Account in the shape of a letter to Mr. — of the writer's transactions with Lord [Oxford?] who engaged him to act as a spy among the Presbyterians in Scotland. In the latter end of Oct. and the beginning of Nov. 1712, he had interviews with Lord —. After much hesitation he in January sent a letter to Lord —, signed T.G., accepting his offers. He had a private interview. At the next interview he, Lord —, gave instructions (p. 11), of which the third was that he was to pretend to be a secret agent of the House of Hanover; the fourth, he was to get secrets from and be a benefactor to Presbyterian congregations. The sixth, he was to correspond with all parties of them, particularly with Patrick Campbell, bookseller in Dublin, whom he called a great rascal. A few days afterwards (that is after the middle of January) he (T.G.) was arrested for debt. Lord — paid the debt and Mr. — (the addressee) came and got him out the 30th of January; Lord — gave him several times money, but never more than 3 guineas at a time. At p. 17 he gives an account of letters he wrote to Lord — about opinions of divers persons, and of a plot against the court in which he afterwards thought Lord — might suspect himself and Madam Og — rp. Mr. — advised him that Lord — aimed at self aggrandizement only, and that his letters to Lord — must make out that that he would serve him (without reference to public good). Lord — suggested that he should in public use treasonable words to get arrested. To speak against popery and the ministers, and abuse Lord —, and intimate a plot. This was to disgust the Whigs and make them enemies. Lord — gave him 6 guineas. He was told to write, and he did write letters to Lord — offering his service as spy amongst the dissenters. The practice of physic which he had studied would preserve him from suspicion of being a spy. Not being able to get a letter of indemnity from Lord — he left off writing or going; but at the instigation of the addressee wrote at last a long letter on May 28th, asking Lord — reasons for deserting him. Lord — asked him about the Duke of Argyle; he evidently did not like him. The writer sent a letter showing that he was willing that the Pretender should succeed. But notwithstanding many letters and interviews Lord — did not employ him, but offered to get him a place in the Indies. The writer did not like it, and asked where, &c., &c. To another letter Lord — was huffy, and at the date of the narration the writer had not seen or heard from Lord — since. (This 4to was found among the Townsend Papers).

From No. XII.—37 quarto pages (closely written) in David Mallet's handwriting, containing a list of books and manuscripts lent to him by the executors of the Duke of Marlborough, and at the end a receipt for the same signed by him, and dated 2 Nov. 1751.

First comes a list of 14 volumes in folio, of letters from the Duke to divers persons at different times. (These volumes are in the Muniment room and nearly all the contents were printed by Sir Geo. Murray in 1845).

Twenty-eight bundles of letters and papers. Each bundle as follows:

1709 (7 pp.)—Narrative of some late proceedings in the Lower House of Convocation in Dublin. Begins, In the year 1707 Mr. Parcivall, a deacon of Cashell, and Mr. Higgins, proctor for the diocese of Ossory, being in London, were summoned or desired to appear in the Lower House of Convocation at Westminster to give an account to that House of several proceedings, rights, and claims of the Lower House in Ireland. They went Mentions a pamphlet published in England, "Some proceedings of the Convocation in 1705 faithfully represented." The document ends with a protest by certain members of the Lower House of Convocation against the resolution of the House on Tuesday the 28th concerning the dropping of the message relating to Mr. Browne. Signed Peter Drolincourt, Dean of Armagh, and 12 others. And a reference of the protest and narrative to the Queen's Attorney and Sol^r General.

1715, April 14, Dublin. William (Archbishop of) Dublin to Joseph Addison, Esq., at his Excellency's the Earl of Sunderland's 5 pp.). His reflexions on the circumstances of Ireland. The last harvest was bad in France. Much export from Ireland this year; revenue increased; but he considers the future. In consequence of vast demand for beef, young cattle are slaughtered and sent abroad, and the stock diminished. Bread dearer in Dublin than in London, and all sorts of provisions doubled. Their nobility and gentry go to England. Regiments are put on Irish pay that never come to Ireland, &c. &c. He writes for the information of the Lord Lieutenant.

1715, April 15.—Memorial to the King to have the militia of Dublin and the north arrayed, and horses and arms taken from Papists, &c.

Instructions to Lord Pembroke on his being appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 1707.

Memoire given Mr. Palmes by the Duke of Savoy in 1708.

Instructions to Mr. Palmes on his mission to the Duke of Savoy in 1708.

1705, Nov. 16, Dublin.—Lord Cutts to the Duke. Recommending Count Fekkersomb for a commission.

1702, April 1st, Haye.—(Copy.) Lettre de l'ambassadeur de Lielenroot, pour le Comte Piper.—Says he has effected a put off of the treaty with the King of Poland. The King exposes himself too much: some accident may happen, and the Duke of Holstein may succeed to the Crown. Lord Marlborough, the English ambassador, is well disposed to the King, and has promised before he goes to do all he can for his service.

1702, July 6.—Copy of the Queen's grant of 2½ per cent. Recites that John Earl of Marlborough had agreed with the persons authorised to treat for taking into her service foreign troops, that then he received 2½ per cent. out of the monies payable to and for the said troops towards defraying such extraordinary expenses relating to them as cannot otherwise be provided for. She confirms the agreement.

(French.) Louis de Baden promises to repay the Queen the 100,000 florins which she had advanced for payment of troops.

1713, March 23, Hanover.—George Duke of Brunswick, after reciting that 10,000*l.* were given in the proportion of secret service money of British subjects serving in the army, and that it was not enough; he granted to the Duke 2½ per cent. to be deducted from money stipulated for the pay of Brunswick troops. It was done without requiring account. Is satisfied that it has been properly applied.

Copy of memorandum (French) by the Duke of Savoy for employment of troops.

Brief sheet.—Proofs ex parte Domine Regine.

Copy of depositions of five witnesses about the disturbances at the birth-night. The play was Tamerlane, Dr. Garth's prologue was read, which caused the disturbance.

1712.—Copy of a memorandum of Sir R. Levynge, Bart, Attorney-General's information about it. In the 11th year of the Queen's reign peace was published between her and the King of France. On the 4th of November, Tamerlane was to be acted at a theatre in Dublin. Joseph Ashbury applied for leave to read the prologue: "A prologue for the 4 Nov. 1712, being the anniversary for the birth, landing, and marriage of William III., written by Dr. Garth." The Lords Justices, &c., prohibited it, yet Dudley Moore went on the stage and spoke it.

1708, June 23, St. Germain en Laye.—Two letters (copies) in French, by David Nairne, telling of six Irish, Holmes, Nicolson, Stanford, Cavenach, Terrily, and Campbell, who had undertaken to assassinate the Duke of Savoy as author of all the ills of France. Three of them had had 1,000*l.* put on their heads in England.

1709, April 23.—Queen Anne to the Duke of Lorraine. In concluding a peace, his loss, by having given up Montferrat, shall be considered.

1719, Aug.—Long letter by — to [Godolphin?] on the Dissenter's Controversy, and Harley's intrigues to gain them.

1706.—Copy of what was writ to the States General concerning a peace.

1711, Dec. 31.—Duplicate of the Duke's letter to the Queen on her dismissing him (printed in the Vindication); also a copy indorsed "The Queen's letter was so very offensive that the Duke flung it into the fire, though he was not a man of passion."

14 pp. folio. A discourse on Bigamy, addressed to a Lord ("probably alluding to Lord Cowper").

2 pp. folio. Copy of the Duke of Shrewsbury's letter to — denying that he was a Papist.

— June 6.—P. H. Price to the Duke of Marlborough. He sent the Duke a part of Addison's Campaign in Latin, and now proposes to print it. Asks leave to dedicate it to the Duke.

1706 or 1707. 5 pp. folio. On what took place after the removal of the Duke of Queensberry. (Scotch affairs.)

1705 Feb. 3, Valentia.—Mr. Stanhope, to Lord Sunderland. Lord Peterborough has complained of his writing about the misunderstanding between Peterborough and the King. Says he thinks it his duty to write and say when they are in difference and when in good understanding. Peterborough insists he should say what he knows of Peterborough's going from Guadalaxata, and from thence on board the fleet and to Italy, which he hears has been disapproved. "What I am in justice obliged to say in this particular is that it was in a council of war at Guadalaxata judged by everybody to be for the service that his Lordship should leave the army, and, according to the orders his Lordship said he had, go on board the fleet and endeavour to secure a port for it to winter in, and to get money from Italy."

1707, June, Copenhagen.—Copy letter to secretary Harley, (the end is gone), about the negotiation for the renunciation by Prince Charles, Queen Anne allowing him a pension.

1707, June 1st ½ Turin.—News letter. This morning the Earl of Manchester left this place for Venice. He embarked on the Po, which will carry him on his journey's end.

(1703 or 4) Feb. 4, n. s., Rotterdam.—Jurien to the Duke (5 pp. French), pressing for support of the Protestants in the Cevennes.

1704, Feb. 16.—P. de Goes to the Duke (French), regarding money which the Emperor had engaged to pay.

1704, Feb. 8, 9, 13, Vienna.—Extract and copy of letters from Mr. Whitworth to Secretary Hedges. About a projected loan of 150,000 crowns to the Elector Palatine by the States General. Vienna alarmed at an advanced party of the malcontents having plundered and burnt Mannoelooft, &c. "Since I received your order to desire that the directions of this Court concerning the military operations might be forwarded to the Hague while the Duke of Marlborough was there. I have lost no time, and on the 10th addressed myself to the Elector Palatine, Prince Eugene, Prince Salm, and Count Zinsendorf, who thought his Grace had designed to stay on this side till the opening of the campaign; but being informed of the contrary, they have applied themselves with all possible diligence to finish this affair, and their resolutions have in these three days been drawn up and approved by the Emperor, and will be to-morrow despatched by Count Lecheraine."

1704, Feb. 9.—De Somerfeld to the Duke (French), promises that the troops shall be ready.

1704, Feb. 1, Vienna.—Charles Whitworth, to the Duke. Conference with Prince Eugene as to operations for the campaign: the Prince's plans are somewhat opposed to Prince Louis's, and he authorized Whitworth to manage the matter delicately so as not to give offence to the Margrave.

DUKE OF

1702, July 20, Overassel.—Consideration sur la conjonction presente, (Military).

1706, Sept. 15.—(Copy). Earl of Peterborough to Col. Southwell, from aboard the Resolution. Says that his wife and Mr. St. John will talk to Southwell of his project, which is that they do not need any more troops to Spain, which now the French ships are out would come with great hazard and not come in time; but that of the 19 regiments here nine be incorporated with the 10 remaining, which will not altogether complete them; that the officers of the nine regiments be sent home to recruit; that nine fresh regiments be sent to Portugal, &c. That the same method be taken with the Dutch, the men taken to fill up to the 3,000 of my establishment, and then their entire Portugal quota to be sent to Lisbon or ours. There are 6 regiments of horse to what purpose in Ireland I cannot imagine. They might have a quieter and safer passage from Ireland to England. Some of them should pass for Lisbon. The project makes all safe and easy. We should have in Castile by this means 26,000 men; we might have 5,000 on this coast, and an army of above 25,000 men invading Spain by Salamanca and Toledo. What could resist this disposition? . . . If my proposition be heard I will be answerable for the events; if not, others take upon themselves. My Lord Galloway may go back to an army of 20,000 men in Portugal. I think I understand Spain better, and, by what appears, war as well.

1706, July 16.—Part of the King's instructions to Peterborough, Admiral and Commander-in-chief of the Navy, but if on shore to Sir John Leake, Vice-Admiral of the whole squadron, or to the Commander-in-chief of the Fleet in the Mediterranean for the time being.

1706.—Some letters of news, in French.

1707, July 8, Barcelona.—A letter about the movements of the French armies in Spain, they being more numerous than was thought. "Our whole force consists of 4 battalions of English, 7 Dutch, 4 Portuguese, 6 of the King's troop and one Spanish regiment, which my Lord Galloway pays, which was paid by the kingdom of Aragon. He has besides begun to raise 4 Spanish regiments . . . In this account of our forces I do not reckon the garrison of Alicante.

July 14.—Copies of two letters in French about the battle of Oudenarde.

1707, Jan. 19, London.—Le Comte de Briancón (Envoy Extraordinary of Savoy) to Lord Sunderland, asking him to get an order from the Queen to Admiral Schonell (Shovel?) to give a sufficient convoy to Capt. Cornell du Pon of the King William, charged with munitions of war for his Royal Highness, and take them safely to Oueille, where they are to be disembarked. The ship is to go to Lisbon with the Dutch convoy already set out from the Texel.

1707, May 19, Barcelona.—James Stanhope to Mr. Chetwynd, (French). All our infantry was last month defeated at Almanza. We have recourse to Her Royal Highness and Prince Eugene to enable us to maintain Catalonia this summer. We only ask 5 or 6,000 men. We will try to send quickly Byng's squadron with as many boats as possible to transport this corps . . . If boats can be found in the Italian ports we hope Prince Eugene will make use of them. If for that corps troops are taken in the pay of England and Holland, he suggests that they should bring with them money for 3 or 4 months.

1708.—Journal from the camp before Lille (2½ columns). Sept. 3.—Offensive acts in the trenches; many killed by grenades. Sept. 4.—Trenches relieved; a mine begun . . . not above 6 workmen killed; a major and a captain killed. Sept. 5 and 6.—Continuing the mines; saps advanced; two killed and 8 wounded; engineer wounded, 20 privates killed and wounded.

1709.—Compte du subside extraordinaire d'Angleterre de l'année courante, 1709, et des frais de la part de Son Altesse Royale pendant la campagne de la même année. Les finances de S. A. R. recen de celles de Sa Majesté Britannique, 1,600,030. Dépenses &c. (6 pp. folio).

Some account of the Duke of Ormond after the Duke of Marlborough was put out. (2 pp. by the Duke).

On the conduct of the Duke of Ormond when requested by Prince Eugene to concur in attacking the French. (By the Duke of Marlborough 4 pp.)

1704, July 8 and 13, (French).—What followed the conference at the Hague when the deputies and generals there thought that the army should attack Marshal Boufflers.

170½, Jan. 31, n. s.—Lord Cutts to Lord []. Ready to embark these six days, but the wind is contrary. Lord Rochfort is come here and will embark as soon as the wind permits.

1702, July 22, Overassel.—Memoire au sujet du passage de la Meuse. (2 columns, 17 items).

1702, July 18, Camp d'Hallanc.—The Marshal duc de Boufflers to [the Duke]. Has received the letter of the 16th; has written to Calais for the prisoners of the Duke's troops there: when he has an answer he will write.

1702, Aug. 5, Camp de Beringhen.—The Same to the Same. Compliments. Thanks for good treatment of the St du Villars and the other prisoners. Has ordered an account to be taken of the Duke's and States Generals troops in the army of the Duke of Burgundy or in French places: sends back all who are here and will send the others immediately. Sends copy of reply from M. de la Tour Montfort Commandant of Calais, whence he will see that if it is certain that England will send back prisoners to be made of French sailors, they will send back the captain and 22 Scotch soldiers mentioned. If they had been under the writer's authority he would have sent them at once. He has even offered to the naval authorities to pay their ransom.

1702, Nov. 7, Camp de Tomdrain.—The Same to the Same. Hopes for the speedy liberty of M. de Violame and another, and all officers and soldiers prisoners of the citadel of Liège.

1703, Dec. 10.—Projet pour une descente en France. (It occupies 46 half pages.)

Proceedings of the general officers in relation to the rank of the forces (17 pp.).—Begins with Wyndham's letter to the Judge Advocate, 28 July 1712. Ends, 6 May 1713. Major-General Wyndham yielded the rank to Brigadier Preston, which was confirmed by Her late Majesty's orders, dated 10 June following. The dispute between the two regiments was referred to the Earl of Orkney, Earl Barrymore, and Major-General Primrose, but how determined does not appear by the Judge Advocate's books, &c. (True copy, 30 Sept. 1714. A. Thurston).

1717. Papers about the case of Ensign Gore, who was tried by court-martial and cashiered for negligence and disobedience of orders and being absent beyond his leave of exemption. The Duke interested himself on the occasion. Gore seems to have been a little insane.

1703, Sept. 6, Camp de St Tronce.—(Copy). Duke of Marlborough to the States (French). Complains that they prevented his forcing the enemy's lines.

1708, Jan. 16.—Memoire touchant les affaires de Son Altesse Royale le Duc de Savoye en conference à la Haye.

Points du Mémoire du General-Major Schulenberg au nom de S. A. R. le Duc de Savoye à M. le Duc de Marlborough, et à M. le Prince Eugene. Present le Comte de Maffié, M. de Schulenberg, et M. Palmes. Points du Memoire. Responses des Princes. (Seems to be about the deficiency of the army of the Duke of Savoy).

Translation of Dr. Clarke's dedication of Caesar.

1702, July 5.—Consideration au sujet de la marche vers Cliffe et Zanten. (2 leaves area).

Prologue to Anthony and Cleopatra (acted at Bleinheim) by Hoadley, Bishop of Bangor. Begins—

Whilst ancient dames and heroes in us live,

And scenes of love and war we here revive.

(1718?), Nov. 14, Fribourg.—Letter in English by a spy; some parts in cypher decyphered. Begins, I was yesterday with Mr. Bandon. (It is in the Jacobite interest).

1705, Feb. 13, Brussels.—(Copy). Marlborough to the Speaker, acknowledging the vote of the House of Commons.

Same date.—Marlborough's private letter of thanks to the Speaker.

Character of Louis XIV. (English, 7 pp.)

1707, Sept. 26.—Extract from a letter by Sir J. Leake aboard the Albemarle in Portsmouth harbour. All he recollects of the council of war concerning the expedition to the West Indies is, that it was debated privately between himself, Sir Geo. Byng, and Sir John Jennings what ships should go, though Lord Peterborough was pleased to make some alterations in the list when he came to Alicante; and before they sailed it was discovered publicly where they were bound, yet he believes the design was only surmised, for since they came home their captains all declare they never knew until Sir John Jennings opened the orders off the Canary islands.

171½, Feb. 23, Vienna.—Translation into French of Carlogan's letter to Lord Townshend.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

1706, Sept. 3, Alicant.—[] to [] (from one in the suite of Lord Peterborough). When the French army was known to be in Roussillon it was considered by all that the King should go to Madrid by way of Valencia, and agreed on a council of war. My Lord went before with 6,000 men to Valencia. There we had news of Lord Galway being at Madrid. Nothing was wanting to the entire possession of Spain but that the King should get into his coach and drive to his capital. After waiting almost a month we found that the court had altered their mind at Tarragona, and resolved to go round by Arragon under pretence to conquer that kingdom. (This he lays to certain members who wanted to plunder). The Portuguese Ambassador and our Envoy protested. The enemy had 6,000 in the way. The King said it was not for his Catholic honour to go without his retinue. Mr. Stanhope told him King William went post in a hackney coach with a few dragoons to London, or else he had lost the crown. However, folly prevailed, and they went their way, trifled at Saragossa, bent their course to Valencia, and begged my Lord would meet them, though they had hoped to put a stir on him by getting to Madrid without him. In a few days he joined. At Guadalaxara, 12 leagues from Madrid, they found the enemy were very strong, 20,000 on the other side of the river, and the enemy seized Madrid, and then Segovia, Toledo, and Salamanca revolted, and the communication with Portugal was cut off. Then all the generals and officers were for a battle, but Peterborough resisted; if they were defeated there was no retreat. Peterborough had all his baggage taken at Huelte.

1708, Nov. 5.—Mémoire de ce que S. A. R. le Duc de Savoie m'a fait l'honneur de me charger avant mon départ de la Venerie. Justification pour la campagne passée (2 cols.). Projets pour la campagne prochaine (8 cols. with notes on the opposite sides).

After the accession of Geo. I. Miscellaneous.—Correspondence and papers of the Duchess relating to her squabbles with Queen Caroline and Sir Robert Walpole. 1711 and other years, letters about Windsor Park, of which the Duchess was ranger.

1723 or 6.—Vindication of herself against Sir Robert Walpole (8 leaves): probably in reply to Hare, who endeavoured to effect a reconciliation.

1733, Sept. 10.—The Duchess to Mr. Onslow. (Copy). Assures him of her devotion to the Government according to the Act of Settlement; but she will not give her interest in any county from her several estates until she knows who are the candidates who stand for M.P.

1736, July 22.—Godolphin to the Duchess. About allowing the making a road (at Wimbledon) for the Queen.

n.d.—The Duchess to Queen Caroline. (Copy). About her rangerish of the park and the grant that was made to her by Queen Anne of the park, &c., apropos of a lodge being built and a keeper not under her being appointed.

(1737, it alludes to the Porteous murder).—to the Duchess.—The writer highly praises the characters of the Duke of Montrose, the Earl of Chesterfield, also Lord Marchmont. "These were the gentlemen that at the time of the Excise scheme first set up the standard against Sir Robert's measures with the advice and assistance of Lord Cobham, a very good Whig with a great deal of knowledge and a very good understanding." Says that the King used often to meet and confer with them on foreign affairs, "which to them appeared wonderful and unaccountable, for almost in everything our minister took the counter-pied of what had been done by King William and Queen Anne in the beginning of her reign. They (William and Anne), at a vast expense of blood and treasure to the nation, endeavoured to humble France and establish a balance of power in Europe. Our minister, at a very great expense to the nation, made it his business to unite France and Spain, then at variance, and to join with them against the house of Austria." He says those gentlemen and he told the King their opinion of the inexpediency of a too close connexion with France, and the danger of having the balance of power lean too much to the side of France, and to Her Majesty he did the same, also to Sir Robert. They all opposed the Excise scheme as bringing too much power to the Crown, although they should lose the King's favour. They did not do this with a view to get into office. Is pleased to find that Sir Robert was disappointed in his judgment of the writer and his friends. "He told me, in dissuading me from opposing the Excise, among other things, My Lord, you don't know the folks you have to deal with as well as I do; there is no number of people that you can take measures with to oppose but I shall get one-half of them in one week's time. Very soon after we had taken our resolution to oppose the Excise we were joined by Lord Clinton, the Duke of Bolton, and the Earl of Burlington . . . and soon after by many other lords, and once brought the House of Lords to an equality, a thing which Sir Robert did not at all expect; but at that time several wise men thought we should have the disposal of the leaves; in expectation of more and better bread they followed us. But as soon as it appeared that we had not the leaves the multitude left us and followed Sir Robert. . . . This two years past I have been absent from London." Speaks of Sir Robert's popularity out of doors, although trade diminishes and our merchants in some places are plundered with impunity. Wonders that in his situation he should think fit in gayeté de cœur to quarrel with the clergy of Scotland, and in the next place to bring things to an open breach with the heirs of the Crown. Tells a story:—There is a certain very great Jacobite in Sussex who every day of his life after dinner drinks to Sir R. Walpole's health and King George the 2nd, the two best friends, he says, his master ever had, and then he drinks to James the Third's health. "It is very possible Sir Robert may see this before it comes to your hand." Hopes the Prince of Wales will never enter into any treaty with Sir Robert. A postscript in the writer's hand, signed S., acknowledges the addressee's letter of the 25th.

Some computation of the Civil List money: the certainty of the sums may be easily enquired into.—Another paper on the Public Debts.—Another on the King's Revenue (seemingly Mallet's copying), making it to be 1,440,000*l.* with much comment, ($\frac{3}{4}$ pp.) Indorsed by the Duchess, "An Account of the King's revenue, but not all."

1742, Oct. 9.—(Copy). The Duchess to Lord Wilmington (6 pp.) asking his influence to get a certain allowance for Windsor Park. She mentions Mr. Legge, who was made Surveyor of His Majesty's Woods, &c. as a great excombi. She alludes to the Queen's behaviour in the Wimbledon Road affair.

A memorandum by the Duchess about what the Queen said at a drawing room to the Speaker about Wimbledon, and her intention to go to law with the Duchess.

Copy ($2\frac{1}{2}$ pp.) of the Duchess's statement of her consenting to a loan of trust money to Government, and what she asked Sir Robert to do in return.

Several papers by Arthur Maynwaring (who was in high confidence with the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough and Lord Godolphin and their party). The packet in which the same are enveloped is endorsed by the Duchess, "Some imperfect papers writ by Mr. Maynwaring when Abigail was destroying all the advantage gained by this country over France by her power with Queen Anne." Among them is an original (and a duplicate) sketch of a paper which is called in another part "Advice to the Electors of Great Britain occasioned by threatened invasion from France." (It seems to be for the new Parliament in 1710, praising the Whigs and reproaching the Tories.)

Scraps of translations from the classics, &c., in the handwriting of Maynwaring, alluded to in his correspondence with the Duchess: also a letter by him to the Tatler in 1709, containing a sarcastical character of Harley.

XVII.

Sixty-two letters from General Francis Palmes to Lord Sunderland, written from Turin and the camps of the Duke of Savoy, and also from Vienna in 1708, 1709, and 1710.

1708, April 3, Hanover.—Prince Eugene arrived here last night. Spoke to him about Article 7: he did not think it reasonable one power should put their troops entirely into the hands of another: he, (Palmes), has not yet touched on the other heads which he is ordered to transact, but intends it before Eugene leaves the Court to-morrow.

1708, May 19, Vienna, (8 pp.)—Prince Eugene is much surprised by Major-General Stanhope going for Spain without giving direction about the embarkation of the troops designed thither, he having all instructions, power, and money for that affair; but I suppose there is some mistake in it. I have looked over my instruction for the Duke of Savoy, and do not find in 'em that I have any power either relating to the troops in her pay, or the troops of the Duke of Savoy stipulated by treaty, or the money given for the operations of the campaign. I hope your Lordship will in your next bring me out of the dark in this affair.

1708, June 13, Turin.—V. Amadé, (Duke of Savoy), to General Palmes.—Thanks for his efforts regarding the Duke's treaty with the Emperor, hopes he will stay at Vienna till it is finished.

1708, June 6, Vienna.—The Court has thought fit to execute the treaty made with the Duke of Savoy, to publish the ban of the empire against the Duke of Mantua, and to grant the public investiture of the Montferrat The Emperor desired I should give something in writing to the minister of the Duke of Lorraine on Her Majesty's part, to content the said Prince as well as possible . . . I shall give him such a writing as my instructions and the tenor of the treaty will enable me Prince Eugene left here on Sunday night.

1708, June 23, Vienna.—On Monday the ban will be published against the Duke of Mantua, and in a few days His Royal Highness' minister will receive public investiture for the Montferrat, which I hope will put His Royal Highness in humour to attempt something this summer. Encloses a copy of the Duke's letter, (ante.)

1708, July 7, Vienna.—This day the Count de Tassen received the investiture of the Montferrat, and as soon as I can have my audience of leave, I will make what diligence I can for Piedmont This Court is positive that the people of Palermo are ready for a revolt. Says the Emperor is in favour of it. If it could succeed he (Palmes) knows Sunderland is sensible how much it would support the war in Spain and secure our trade in the Levant They are very desirous here that Marshal Stahrenberg should have a full power over Her Majesty's troops in Spain, and over those of the States General. Will not write till he gets to Turin.

1708, Aug. 30, Turin.—I arrived here yesterday. Will deliver Her Majesty's cachette to His Royal Highness to-morrow at the camp before Fenestrelle Every one I meet here concludes the campaign at an end.

1708, Sept. 4, Turin.—Has been with the army and delivered his credentials, &c.; is preparing to follow His Royal Highness the next campaign, which he thinks will not be long The Duke of Savoy gave him the reasons for his mode of action on hearing the true account of the battle of Audenarde. Palmes gave his objections to the courses proposed by the Duke, P.S.—The Count of Briancon will be often curious to see my letters, but I desire your Lordship will never let him see any of them. (6 pp.)

1708, Sept. 11, near Fenestrelle, from the camp at La Mantouille The Duke of Savoy's distribution of his troops His Royal Highness will in two days give Major-General Schlenkberg his instructions for the Duke of Marlborough. He has been pleased this day to communicate some part of 'em to me.

1708, Sept. 13, n.s. same place.—Gives part of a conversation with the Duke of Savoy who suggested a meeting between himself, the Elector of Hanover, Prince Eugene and Marlborough, and if so, he wished Palmes to go with him in order to signify his thoughts to 'em more fully than he could do by M. de Schlenkberg.

1708, Sept. 26, Pignerol.—Military movements. Mr. Chetwyn has received a letter from the Duke of Marlborough, saying the Duke would be proud to wait on him after the campaign. Mr. Chetwyn is recovered and his brother is here, they will take care that the money be sent into Spain as Mr. Stanhope desired, and the Resident goes to Leghorn in order to it The Genoese have raised 4,000 men. The Imperialists will have 10,000 in the Ferrarois in October His Royal Highness hopes he shall be put in a condition by Her Majesty to execute an offensive project next year, or otherwise he would not desire, I believe, the congress.

1708, Oct. 10, Turin.—Marshall Dawn has told him the Emperor's resolution to send the Marquis de Drie to Rome to negotiate the affair with the Pope, and the said Marshal into the Ferrarois with all the troops the Emperor has on this side Italy Other military matters By all accounts I see from Rome the Pope has 25,000 men, such as they are; but he has so little confidence in his subjects, even in Rome, that he is obliged to keep 40 guards in the town The King of Prussia's treaty He thinks that if Her Majesty engages in the Pope's affairs, some of her ships in the Mediterranean should appear on his coast, which would in three weeks time starve in a manner the city of Rome, and augment the general discontent in that city and country.

1708, Oct. 17, Turin.—He has acquainted His Royal Highness with the precaution Her Majesty has taken relating to the Prussian troops. He says he does not doubt to enter France, and act there so as Her Majesty and the allies will be satisfied with him. Recommends that confidence in him should be shown. Congratulates Lord Sunderland on the taking of Port Mahon Supposes Stanhope's aide-de-camp will have told him of the loss of his brother, the sea captain, out of his calling Mr. Chetwyn is gone to Genoa where neither he nor his brother have any credentials; that little state will give no ear to him without 'em, but I am of opinion that they should be spoke to roundly.

1708, Oct. 20, Turin.—His Royal Highness has at last assented to the march of the Imperial troops to the Ferrarois No account yet of the enemy's making any movement on the frontiers, though Marshal Villars is come to Briançon At Rome the French work to hinder any accommodation between the Emperor and the Pope. I doubt not that Sir Edward Whitaker, who, I am told, commands the winter squadron in the Mediterranean has orders to have an eye that way. I do not fail to inform him of it I doubt not the Count of Briançon has laid before you the account of the expenses necessary for the next campaign, as well as what was laid out for the last, however I have sent you a copy of the former I send enclosed a copy of a letter writ by His Prussian Majesty to His Royal Highness with a discovery of a design formed against his life. This Arkenhead, a Scotchman, who makes this discovery is the same who pretended to make discovery the last year relating to Her Majesty's life I believe he is a rascal who lives by making informations of that kind Asks Lord Sunderland to see if his letter has been tampered with.

1708, Oct. 27, Turin.—Says that His Royal Highness offers his services to make an end of the quarrel between the Courts of Vienna and Rome by amicable means, and said that the King of Prussia consents that his troops shall act against the Pope in case of rupture.

1708, Nov. 3, Turin.—Will after next post set out to wait on the Duke of Marlborough at the Hague or elsewhere The Imperial General Count Daun acts so vigorously that the Pope will be soon obliged to an accommodation.

1708, Nov. 17, Olinghen.—Will proceed with all expedition to the Hague. There is with me one Mr. Davis, a captain in Lord Portman's regiment, who has letters for you from Mr. Stanhope since he left Port Mahon.

Here occur eight letters from the Count de Briançon to the Earl of Sunderland, with two or three enclosures.

The first is dated 170³, Jan. 8, and the last Nov. 6, 1708. They are on the affairs of the Duke of Savoy. In the first he asks that Mr. Band, his secretary, may be arrested and tried. On the 17th of April he asks, now that danger to Ireland has passed, that the Duke of Savoy's application for leave to levy 1,400 men in Ireland may be entertained. On the 30th April he asks Lord Sunderland to get the Queen to send a remonstrance to the Emperor on his not supplying troops. On the 7th of May he recurs to the subject and encloses copy of part of a letter of the Duke of Savoy in that behalf. On the 9th of May he says he has received a letter from the Duke of Savoy for the Queen to congratulate her on the failure of the enemy's undertaking, and asks for an appointment to present it. On the 17th of July he says he hears from the Duke of Savoy that Admiral Lacke [Leake?] has orders to go to Civita Vecchia to demand contributions from the Pope by reason of money supplied by him to the French for their attempt in Scotland, &c., and the Duke compliments the Queen. The Duke urges the Queen to send immediate orders or the fleet cannot go until it has taken the destined reinforcements to Barcelona The claims of the King of Spain and the Duke of Savoy to investitures in Naples Asks the Queen to order Vice-Admiral Lake to act in concert with the Marquis de Prié who is going to Rome by commission from the Emperor Asks for an order for Lake, which he (Briançon) has directions to send by an express. On Oct. 24, he sends a letter from the Duke of Savoy on the subject on which he spoke the day before yesterday, and asks Sunderland to send to Marlborough as he promised, so that he may recommend the matter to the Queen's Resident at Brussels. On the 6th of November he asks that Lord Sunderland will withdraw the depositions of Band.

LETTERS OF PALMES CONTINUED.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

1709, April 17, Vienna.—Has not yet had audience, but has been round with the ministers of the new constituted conference who seem here to decide of all affairs relating to the House of Austria Count Zinzendorf sets forth in six days for the Hague, and tells Palmes that he shall be referred to Count Wratislaw in his absence.

1709, May 18, Vienna.—Hopes next post to send an answer they will give in form to the memorial to be sent to Mr. Secretary Boyle by the post of 1 May, and to that which he now sends. What Wratislaw told him was to be done for the Duke of Savoy.

1709, June 15, Turin.—The Duke of Savoy was well pleased with the news from the Hague, and the Duke of Marlborough's letter to him, but when the post from France came on the 12th telling that the King of France had broken off the treaty, he changed and said he would not head the army this campaign till his interests were settled to his satisfaction. Palmes remonstrated, and asked for his resolutions in writing. Then he went to M. de St. Thomas and spoke in still stronger language. On the 15th His Royal Highness said he would not give the Memoire till Monday or Tuesday. The minister of the States and Palmes intend to remonstrate with His Royal Highness.

1709, June 19, Turin.—Has had several audiences, but His Royal Highness still persists in his resolution not to go into the field until his interests at Milan are in some manner adjusted. He wished that Palmes should be present at the conference at Milan Marshal Dawn arrives this night.

1709, June 22, Turin.—The Duke has declared to Palmes his intention of not going in person with the troops till such time as his interests are satisfied by the Emperor's commissioners at Milan. . . . operations, Palmes finds very little likelihood of the Duke's intending to execute the projects concerted. He intends to despatch a courier to Her Majesty with the reasons for his inaction. . . . Marshal Dawn is perplexed, he told his Royal Highness he had no orders but to command the Emperor's troops under him; but says if he cannot bring him to better terms in a week, he will march the troops to the mountains, and act if His Royal Highness does not come in person.

1709, June 26, Turin.—The Duke of Savoy says he will give all necessary information to Marshall Dawn. . . . Sends the memorial given by His Royal Highness as reasons for not going in person, and a copy of the orders and information he gave to Marshall Dawn.

1709, June 29, Turin.—He sent his last of the 27th by a courier of His Royal Highness directed to Mr. Day-rolle at the Hague. . . . The Duke of Berwick has been very busy in fortifying several posts, but by advices from France we are assured that M. de Bezons is to supply his place. . . . Says he assured His Royal Highness of Her Majesty's punctuality in money matters.

1709, July 23, Turin.—The court of Vienna delays sending Count Selycke to Milan. Palmes thinks His Royal Highness wants only some salvo or pretext to head the army. . . . Says that on Friday he shall go to Milan to meet whatever minister the Emperor shall send there, and lay before him the necessity there is of taking some measure to content His Royal Highness, but will not stay more than six or seven days: hopes he shall be ordered to follow the army. Marshal Berwick who is now to continue the command of the enemy's troops, has hitherto made his disposition to oppose us very soldierlike, but we hope their want of money, their magazines being so ill furnished, and their being so apt to change them for the worse at the approach of an enemy, will make our attempts easier than His Royal Highness and the Marshal seem to believe, if they really intend to endeavour what Lord Marlborough and Prince Eugene, who knows the country well, thought feasible. Mr. Chetwyn, having taken up money for Spain, intends in three or four days for Geneva, in order to transmit it.

1709, July 10, Milan.—Came here the 6th instant. If it be Baron de Nesselrod, bishop of five churches, who comes minister for Vienna, Palmes is sure he will act for His Royal Highness as far as his instructions permit. The disorders in the Cevennes increase. General Pates regiment of horse is arrived in the Milanais.

1709, July 17, Milan.—The minister from Vienna not yet come. The ministers at Vienna think that the army would act very well without His Royal Highness. Says that on the Duke of Savoy's repeated desire he continues there (at Milan.)

1709, July 20, Milan.—Sends copy of Marshall Dawn's

DUKE OF

letter to Palmes, and of his letter to His Royal Highness (inclosed.)

1709, Aug. 7, Turin.—His Royal Highness wished Palmes to remain at Milan till the arrival of the Bishop of five churches; but at last was contented with the reasons Palmes gave for taking the field, and in four days Palmes intends to wait on the Marshal at the army, who wishes for him, and alleges that the presence of the Queen's minister will animate the Commissaries. Has told His Royal Highness of the Queen's message that she would continue to support his interests. He is very active in supplying the army, and says he will be firm in supporting the common cause. Palmes thinks he repents. Palmes thinks the 96 battalions and 45 squadrons which the enemy have will be sufficiently employed and that they may even be obliged to send for more troops from Germany or Rousillon. News to-day from the enemy's frontier that the populace at Grenoble seized 20,000 pistoles sent for payment of the army.

1709, Aug. 8, Turin.—Extract of letter from Marshal Daun to His Royal Highness, about state of the enemy's forces (enclosed in Palmes' letter of the 10th.)

1709, Aug. 7, Conflans.—Copy of proposition of the council of war for operations of the army. (French, inclosed in Palmes' letter of the 10th.)

1709, Aug. 10, Turin.—Palmes sends the two above.

1709, Aug. 14, Turin.—Leaves 'to-morrow' for the army. The Marshal is at a stand for want of horse.

1709, Aug. 25, Camp at Faverges.—Arrived there on the 22nd. Position and state of the army. You will see by the position the army is in that the Duke of Berwick has taken just measures to hinder any further progress into their frontiers; his army is superior to ours in foot. . . . The intended expedition to Sicily, and the Queen's intimation that she consented provided the army on this side should not be diminished. Thus he (Palmes) hopes that the enemy by our firmness here may be obliged to bring hither more of their troops which came out of Spain, and consequently debarasse Lord Marlborough on his side. . . . Baron St. Remy has marched to Chambéry with 3,000 foot.

1709, Aug. 26, Camp de Faverges. Four half pages of copy of report or letter on the proceedings of the army. (French.)

1709, Aug. 29, Faverges.—St. Remy has returned, the enemy upon his march having quitted all their posts on their mountains.

1709, Sept. 15, Faverges.—The enemy daily reinforce themselves in their camp at Montmellon and Chambéry. As we cannot establish winter quarters in Savoy, the Marshal has ordered the cannon and part of the equipage to repossess the mountains.

1709, Sept. 20, Faverges.—Everything here disposes for the retreat of the army, and the 19th the Marshal ordered Te Deum to be sung and the army to fire for the taking of Tournay, the same night the 10 pieces of cannon (all we have) began their march; the 27th all will decamp. I have represented to His Royal Highness and the Marshal what little encouragement Her Majesty has to make any further expense on this side since the misunderstanding of the two courts of Vienna and Turin have rendered the said expense useless. The Bishop does not seem to hasten any accommodation. . . . We have just now by the way of France the victory gained by the Duke of Marlborough.

1709, Oct. 5, Turin.—His Royal Highness on information of the Duke of Berwick's motion with 40 battalions towards Briançon has ordered 20 battalions with ammunition and provision to march into the Valley de Suze. His Royal Highness is very dissatisfied with Vienna. Congratulates Sunderland on the Duke of Marlborough's victory near Mons.

1709, Oct. 9.—The President de Granary says that the Bishop says he has not any decisive power lodged in him. . . . Hears of great quantity of corn being sent by the Genoese to the ports of France. Palmes and the Holland's minister have resolved to write to the Republic about it; advises that they should be spoken to in strong terms, because about two years since at the demand of the French minister the Republic prevented corn being sent to Barcelona, &c.

1709, Oct. 13, Turin.—His Royal Highness is very dissatisfied, but says he will not separate from the interests of the Queen and the States, he is impatient to know what she and the allies will do if the war continue. The troops on both sides are ordered into winter quarters.

1709, Oct. 19, Turin.—Count Tarini has arrived here from Vienna.

1709, Oct. 23, Turin.—Has seen two letters from Sunderland to Chetwyn, the first brought him orders to assist at the conferences at Milan. . . . Has information that the King of France has sent jewels to the value of 500,000 pistoles to Genoa to be engaged there for the said sum. The Commissary General of the Emperor says it is to buy corn.

1709, Oct. 26, Turin. Military details.—Has asked for his Royal Highness's and the Marshal's sentiments about the next campaign, and what measures they thought proper, that he may communicate them to Her Majesty and also to the Duke of Marlborough before he and Prince Eugene part.

1709, Oct. 30, Turin.—Alludes to the Pope's recognition of King Charles in the same form as he did King Philip.

1709, Nov. 2, Turin.—Has told His Royal Highness, pursuant to a letter from the Duke of Marlborough, how necessary it would be, in order to the taking of measures at the Hague or elsewhere, that he would communicate such views as he may have for the next campaign. His Royal Highness said he had written to Count Maffei about it, but in general his views were the same as last year. Told him also that he ought to have a minister at Vienna. A noble Venetian has been here these 10 days who had with him a Secretary of the Republic, and is yesterday gone to Genoa; his pretence has been to travel for his pleasure, but others will have it that he came with a proposal relating to the Mantuan; he is not of an age to travel for his information; his name is Grimani, a Savio grande of the Terra firma.

1709, Nov. 5, Turin.—Palmes, on the Duke of Savoy's command, recommends the bearer, M. de St. Hippolite, to Lord Sunderland. He came over with King William at the Revolution, and served most of the last war as captain, and being on half pay in Ireland at the beginning of the war, and seeing no likelihood of being employed by Her Majesty, came into this country on the Duke of Savoy declaring for the Allies, and has served ever since as volunteer or aide-de-camp to His Royal Highness, and distinguished himself at the sieges of Verruc, Chivas, and particularly at that of Turin, where the Duke of Savoy and Marshal Daun made him major of the citadel during the siege. Recommends him for a commission as colonel, and the establishment as half pay in Ireland, or to be employed where the Queen shall think fit.

1709, Nov. 9, Turin.—Has signified to His Royal Highness that the Queen had ordered Lord Ambassador Townsend to insist at a General Treaty on all such demands as are already made by His Royal Highness in relation to his barrier against France. His Royal Highness thanks Her Majesty. He hints that since the enemy's demolition of Monmeilan has left Savoy uncovered, and that in a rupture with France it is impossible to preserve Savoy any footing on the other side of the mountains except upon the treaty of peace, the Allies should think of procuring him Briançon, or Barrean, or both. As to the disputes between the court of Vienna and him he is more easy.

1709, Nov. 13, Turin.—Yesterday he delivered Marlborough's letter to His Royal Highness on the taking of Mons; on which he ordered Te Deum to be sung on Sunday next in the Cathedral at Turin.

1709, Nov. 16, Turin.—Conversation with His Royal Highness as to his intentions for the next campaign, troops, &c. He will go in person if possible.

1709, November 20, Turin.—Is glad that the Queen has ordered Mr. Chetwyn to speak to the Republic of Genoa to hinder sending corn to the enemy. Seems to think that His Royal Highness' particular interests will sway him. However he was pleased at hearing that Marlborough and the Pensioner had spoken warmly to the Emperor's minister at the Hague about the slowness of the proceedings at Milan, &c.

1709, Nov. 23, Turin.—Encloses copy of Marshal Daun's letter, showing his sentiments regarding the next campaign. (Copy inclosed.)

1709, Dec. 14, Turin.—Sends an account how the extraordinary subsidies granted by Her Majesty to the Duke of Savoy have been expended.

1709, Dec. 18, Turin.—The Marquess de St. Thomas has showed him the Duke of Savoy's Representation to be presented to the Court of Vienna (gives the substance of it). Palmes told the Duke he had received orders to prepare for Vienna to look after the Duke's interests there; and told him the Queen was displeased at the Emperor's having marched a considerable body of horse out of Italy.

1709, Dec. 28, Turin.—Thinks to stay four or five days at Milan. His Royal Highness still says his views for the next campaign are the same.

1709, Jan. 4. Memoire sur les interests of Son Altesse Royal à M. le General Palmes à l'occasion de son voyage à Vienne.

1710, Jan. 7, Turin.—Encloses the last above "from which you will see that His Royal Highness continues firm in his resolution to obtain the entire execution of his treaty or else not to command the army in person the next campaign. This day I set out for Vienna."

1710, Jan. 25, Lintz.—Gives Sunderland an account of the transaction regarding the fiefs which led to the present difficulty.

1710 Feb. 5, Vienna.—Says he is clear the Court of Vienna cannot according to treaty, justice, or equity, longer detain from the Duke of Savoy the Vigermasco, the four villages between the Po and Tanner, nor the possession of the Fiefs des Langhes, provided he will submit to the decision of the Aulic Chamber concerning the Emperor's right to the said fiefs.

1710, March 29, Vienna.—Shall, he thinks, in a few days receive the resolution of that Court relating to the remaining part of His Royal Highness's interests. As to that Court's resolution touching the equivalent offered, he does not see how His Royal Highness can refuse it according to the articles in the treaty. As to the four lands between the Po and the Tanaro, the articles in the treaty, written in Italian, which he, Palmes, never saw before, entirely excludes His Royal Highness from any pretensions to the other villages.

[1710, April 19 n.s., received April 24] Vienna.—His Royal Highness does not expect the decision as to the Fiefs de Langhes will be favourable to him. . . . If Dr. Newton quits the station of Florence, and that it will be only supplied by a Resident, I recommend one Mr. Willis, a gentleman who has been abroad with me there two years. He speaks good Italian, German, and French, he is a very good Whigg.

P.S. Has just received the resolution about the fiefs: will send copy by the next post.

1. Ningo rebulgo en sus versos canta.

Quarto, paper, 1604, Spanish.—Relacion de las cosas del Re i Reino de Persia, (72 p.p.) It is addressed to Doctissimo y reverendissimo señor. The author relates how in the year of the jubilee, Francis de Acosta, (a jesuit and native of Goa), and Diego de Miranda, a Portuguese and secular, came from the East Indies to Venice. Acosta in passing through Persia had heard that the King was well affected to the Christians, and had sent ambassadors to the Pope and King of Spain; and Diego de Miranda had heard the same from a Persian merchant named Acadebeck; so the two, assisted by the Bishop of Pistoia, and his brother, went to Rome and got a commission to go from the Pope to the King of Persia, the Pope deputed the management of the affair to the Cardinal St. George, who thought it proper to send a third person with them: So the Cardinal sent for the writer and told him all about it, and having got the Pope's blessing they set out from Rome, Sunday the 20th of March, and passing through Loretto reached Venice 1st of April. Acosta and Miranda squabbled for preeminence: they got to Prague, May 23, and left it, June 5; got to Wratislav, June 9. Acosta complained of the high charges at the inn, and tried to carry off some bed clothing; they left Wratislav June 11, reached Warsaw June 16, The Pope's Nuncio lodged them near his palace, and presented them to the King, who seeing that the letters referred to Acosta, a jesuit, and that Acosta was dressed as a bishop said, Is this a jesuit? The Nuncio told him that the Pope had given him the title of Protonotary. They wanted to beg money of the King, but the Nuncio prevented them. Miranda opened a letter which Acosta was sending to Rome, and finding that Acosta maligned him they quarrelled horribly, to the great scandal of the Nuncio and his household. The Nuncio gave them each 75 ungaros, each worth 15 reals. They left Warsaw June 26, got to Wilna July 6; more squabbles; the Bishop of Wilna interfered: he gave Acosta a chalice and paten of silver, a missal and a vestuary, and an ornament for the altar to say mass in Persia, and 150 ungaros and a carriage and 4 horses, and to Miranda a carriage and 2 horses. They left Wilna July, 13. Got to Orsa bordering on Russia, July 20. The governor was very hospitable; at his palace they had organ music, feasting, and dancing; he wrote to the Governor of Smolensk. Acosta and Miranda squabbled terribly. They left August 1, the two usurping the title of ambassador, and taking 15 persons they lodged in Smolensk; got to Mosca August 16. Were received by two nobles, 50 horsemen, and much foot. As the Grand Duke thought they were ambassadors, and that he ought to give public audience, he wished to know how the Pope addressed him; the letter said "Our friend the Grand Duke of " &c."; he wanted to be called Emperor. Acosta said the Chancery might have blundered, and that they were ready to give any title. A squabble. Miranda wanted to go on the right hand; the Russian said No, that Acosta was an ecclesiastic and was named first. Acosta went dressed as a bishop. The writer describes the reception by Boris Theodore, aged about 44. He sent them, on leaving the palace, to their lodging 80 great silver gilt dishes full of food, 8 large silver ones full of wine, and 18 other silver vases full of victuals in use in the country. The gluttony of the two was dreadful; they would not let a servant have any. On September 2 they took leave; the Grand Duke gave them leave to pass through, a boat to go by the Volga to Astrachan, and a ship to pass the Caspian Sea; he sent also cattle and other provisions. They left July 6, going to the river Mosco they entered the river Oca, and then the Volga. On Monday, Sept. 24, they arrived at the city of Cassan, and left it the 26th. Miranda tried to poison Acosta by means of sponge in an egg tart on Friday, Oct. 4. On Oct. 14 they embarked for Saracine, and on the 18th got to Astrachan near the Caspian Sea. Squabbles. Miranda abused Acosta, said he was notable to say mass, and Miranda and his people never heard any. Miranda claimed to be chief; his conduct was scandalous; so Acosta thinking the time ready, accused him not only of what he had done, but of what he had not. Miranda came and begged pardon. Acosta was ruthless. They left Astrachan 1 June 1602. The two were reconciled during a tempest. On July 3 they got to Guilan, (there is much more amusing matter). On the 10th of January 1604, they got back to Venice and on February 20 reached Rome. The last 8 pp. are occupied with "El viaje que hizo a la Persia Luis Felix hispano." (He it was who went with Acosta and Miranda, and this is the rontier, giving the places and milos.)

Folio, paper, 17th century, Spanish, about 250 leaves. Several entries in each page of the names of places and estates, and a short statement of situation and ownership. The last 14 leaves are occupied with "De la segunda parte de la recopilacion de las Leyes del Reino, libro " sexto, tit. 3."

Folio, paper, 17th century, Spanish, 92 leaves. Descurso sobre quantos y quales son los modos de los principados y de que suerte se adquieren. (Seems to be a translation of Machiavelli). Fo. 72, La vida de Castruccio Castrucan ide Luca.

Folio, paper, 17th century, about 150 leaves, Spanish. Copies of letters; the first dated 20 November 1603, the last dated Acapulco, 5 August 1607. They seem to be copies of letters to the Council of the Indies.

Folio, paper, 17th century. Calf, gilt with arms of the King of Spain on the sides. Arms and proofs of "hidalgua" on the petition of Francis Alarca Maldonado a nature of Toledo who sets out his pedigree.

Folio, paper, 15th century, Greek, beautifully written by two hands. Apollonii Rhodii Argonautica, two leaves are wanting in book 1. Ends with book 4, some wanting at the end.

Folio, paper, 15th century, Greek. Imperfect at the beginning. Seems to be a work by Mathias Blastares, fl. 1330. See Oudin 3, 828.

(No. 15.) Papers relating to Steele, Addison, &c.

1703, June 17, Land Guard Fort.—R. Steele to —Carrell. About a deserter. Asks Carrell to solicit a certain major to write to Steele per next a letter of advice about money. "you know we are paid but to the 24th, and the misfortune 'will be to tick." (On the back is "Preface to General Lover.")

1703, Dec. 28, Land Guard Fort.—Richard Steele discharges Oliver Linnacre, who had served six months in the regiment of foot under Lord Lucas whereof Steele was captain.

1705, July 3, Dublin.—Lord Cutts to [R. Steele]. Denies that he owes Steele anything. Says that the services he did Steele were admitted to be balance of the service Steele did him.

1705, Aug. 31.—From my lodgings at Mr. Keen's an apothecary in Bennett Street, near St. James [R. Steele] to Lord Cutts. (Draft). Excuses his conduct, being provoked by Lord Cutts postponing his pretensions to those of a young gentleman he (Lord Cutts) hardly ever spoke to. Sends a note of 7l. 10s. which he paid for a lodging in Scotland Yard, taken by Lord Cutts's order.

1713, May 23, Stamp Office.—R. Steele to [Duke of Newcastle]. Defends what he wrote in the Guardian in opposition to the Examiner. Asks to be left out in the next Commission for the Management of Stamps, as he hopes to get into Parliament.

1713, June 4, Bloomsbury Square.—R. Steele to [the Duke of Newcastle] Draft. Having an inclination to serve in the ensuing Parliament, he resigns his Commission in the Stamp Office. Alludes to the Duke having promised him a better place if he (Steele) could name one. "I am going out of your dependence and will tell " you with the freedom of an indifferent man that it is " impossible for any one who thinks or has any publick " spirit not to tremble at seeing his country in its " present circumstances in the hands of so daring a " genius as yours." Assures him of his regard.

1715, Nov. 27, v.s., Paris.—Lord Stair to Sir Richard Steele. Baxter and his companions are engaged to a woman for the fair of St. Germain, which begins 2 Feb. Baxter has 5,000 livres from her. The time being so short they are unwilling to make the journey into England. When the fair is over you may command them.

1714, Nov. 8, Inner Temple.—Fortescue Aland to Capt. Richard Steele. Recommends the bearer, Daniel

Bolton to serve in the West Indies as one of the Commissioners to be appointed for settling that part of the island of St. Christophers taken from the French, or surveyor of the south part of North America, vacant by the death of Mr. Quarry.

171², Jan. 24.—[Sir Richard Steele] to Mr. Welsted. I have writ 3 couplets for the toasts. They are to be printed under their names for the Kitt Cat Club. These are the verses:

Bright dames when first we meet unheeded passe,
We read frail charms on monuments of glass;
In joyless streams the purple chrystall flows,
Till each is named for whome each bosom glows.
Then Friendship, Love, and Wine unite their fires,
Then all their homage pay where each admires.

171³, Feb. 6, Cockpit.—J. Stanley to Sir Richard Steele. The Lord Chamberlain says that Steele is not to entertain any person in the theatre in Drury Lane, who has performed or been entertained in the Opera since May last.

171³, Feb. 10.—Draft of Steele's answer to the above. There has been no application to gain any one from the Opera. Doubts not, but that he shall receive as much favour as the other Patent against which the Lord Chamberlain denied to protect the late license and sent Steele to the lawyers.

Papers relating to Steele's project for conveying live salmon from Ireland to England.

1722, May 16.—William Addison to Sir R. Steele. Asking him to intercede with some of the nobility to put him (Addison) into the Charterhouse. There were six vacancies.

1723, Feb. 22, Dines Hall.—H. M. Bullock to Sir R. Steele. Wants to know why he objects to his daughters being placed with Mrs. Snow who keeps a good house, terms 100*l.* a year including every thing but masters clothes, pocket expenses, doctors, and apothecaries.

Petition (in French) to the King by Sir Richard Steele, asking for the office of Governor of the Charterhouse.

Schedule of leases granted on the estate of Sir R. Steele and Mary his wife, within the county and borough of Carmarthen, and when they will expire. (The rents amounted to between 200*l.* and 300*l.* a year.)

Some minutes of accounts by Sir R. Steele.

Money disbursed for the Playhouse use, and others. Petition (in French) to the King by Sir R. Steele. Since the King granted to Steele and others permission to form a company of comedians, another company has been formed under a patent of King Charles the 2nd. They have enticed away some of Steele's troop; the remainder demand higher wages. He prays that the King will forbid actors or actresses of either house to pass over to the other without the express permission of the Lord Chamberlain.

n.d. Draft letter by Sir R. Steele to . . . At the Lord Treasurers desire he desired the addressee to speak to his Lordship that 250*l.* due to him as pension from the Queen might be paid. Has at his own expense prepared a room in York Buildings for select audiences, which cost him 1,000*l.*

1709, Oct. 12, Lisbon.—John, King of Portugal, to the Duke of Marlborough.

1714, Nov. 24.—The Emperor Charles the 6th to []. Translation.

40. Miscellaneous.

The Duchess of Marlborough's letter to the Queen the morning she sent her away.

1705, Ordre de bataille de l'armée des Alliés au camp d'Elft en Juin 1705. S. A. le Duc de Marlborough, Capitaine General. (1 p. folio.)

1705, April $\frac{9}{10}$.—Extracts from two letters by Lord Ambassador Methuen (Portugal) to Sir Charles Hedges (about ranking English officers).

1707, Aug. 7.—The Duchess of Marlborough to the Queen.

1707, Aug. 20.—The Earl of Galloway to Lord Sunderland.—No succours can be effectual or timely but those we have from Italy.

1707, Aug. 16, Camp of Soignies.—The Earl of Peterborough to Lord Sunderland. (Duplicate). I understand so well the reasons of my being sent for home, that I was confident it was sufficient my being sent out of Spain and Italy. I am ready upon the first notice to embark.

1707, Nov. 16, Vinbody.—The Earl of Galloway to Lord Sunderland. Asks if the Queen is pleased to recall the power she has given him of filling up the vacancies in the service. The granting commissions in England to the prejudice of those that serve here not only puts a slight on my condition, but puts all in confusion. Thinks it will be best for him to retire. Is surprised to hear that Mr. Erle should have leave to retire. Was in hopes to have left the command of the Queen's troops to him.

1707, Dec. 11, Tarragona.—The same to the same. Military doings in Spain. Wants money.

1707, Dec. $\frac{2}{3}$, Barcelona.—The same to the same. Will wait at Lisbon for Her Majesty's commands. Will commit the English troops to Mr. Stanhope. (8 pp.)

1708, Jan. 24, Tarragona.—The same to the same. Military.)

1708, May $\frac{1}{2}$, Lisbon.—The same to the same. Military.)

1708, June $\frac{1}{2}$, Lisbon.—The same to the same. Military.)

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

1708, June $\frac{9}{10}$, Lisbon.—The same to the same. Thinks the opposition he meets with is with a design to sour matters; that if England should refuse to send further succours it would be a means to induce the King to hearken to the proposals of France. (5 pp.)

1709, April $\frac{3}{4}$, Lisbon.—Thomas le Fever to Lord Sunderland. He received last night an express from the Earl of Galloway who advises that on the 18th he and the Marquis de Frontera were going that night to Villa Vicosia to assemble what forces they could, upon advice that the Marquis de Bey was assembling his army. (6 pp.)

7 Anne, July 15. Gift by the Queen to the Duke of Marlborough of the 14,366 oz. 12 dwt. of white plate and 412 oz. of guilt plate delivered to him as ambassador to the States General.

1709, July $\frac{3}{4}$, Lisbon. Thomas le Fever to Lord Sunderland. (Duplicate). He writes for the Earl of Galloway. Thinks the expedition against Cadiz will be now impracticable. Mr. Stanhope has a project to enter France by Roussillon. He thinks that instead of going to Cadiz the forces should go to Vigo. He cannot animate that Court to the prosecution of the war as Lord Sunderland recommends.

Some papers about the building of Blenheim.

1721, Aug. 16. Copy report by Robert Raymond and Philip Yorke to the King on the borough of Christchurch Twynham, co. Southampton, recommending a new charter of incorporation.

1689, May 1. (Copy.) King William and Queen Mary appoint the Earl of Marlborough Commander-in-Chief of the Forces to be employed by them in the service of the States General of the United Provinces.

Lists of David Mallet of some of the Blenheim papers.

A PACKET.

12^o. Methodus medendi a celeberrimo medico Domino Doctore Branthwait in praxi sua usitata et proprio manu conscripta.

4^{to}. Anti-Cato, or the political letters in the London Journal examined, and their false reasonings and fatal tendency exposed; humbly offered to the consideration of the Committee appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into libels. (77 pp.)

The Courtier's Creed.—I believe in King George, the greatest captain and the worst monarch between heaven and earth; and in Sir Robert Walpole, his only minister, our lord, who was begotten by Burrell the attorney, born of Mrs. Walpole of Houghton, accused of corruption; was convicted, expelled, and imprisoned; he went down into Norfolk; the third year he came up again; he got into the administration, and sitteth at the head of the Treasury; from thence he shall pay all those who vote as they are bid. I believe in Horace's Treaties, the sanctity of the Bishops, the independency of the Lords, the integrity of the Commons, restitution from the Spaniards, and the discharge of the public debts. Amen.

Folio. A discourse of the original and fundamental cause of natural, customary, voluntary, and necessary war, by Sir Walter Raleigh. Kt. Beginis. The ordinary theme and argument of history. Ends. Those isles were annexed to the diocese of Winchester.

Narrow folio. Extracts (in English) from Montaigne's Essays, by Sarah Duchess of Marlborough.

No. X.

Papers on the Blenheim cause. Some imperfect. Among them are: Abstract of Lord Chancellor Macclesfield's speech in 1724, when he pronounced his decree.

Various letters from Sir John Vanbrugh to the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough, selected by the Duchess to be produced in evidence in the suit.

No. XI.

Family papers, comprising, amongst others, wills of Sir Winston and Lady Churchill. Papers on the will, illness, death, and funeral of the Duke of Marlborough. Papers relating to Lady Tyrconnel (about her jointure). Letters from the Duchess in 1723 to Mrs. Kingston, and by her to the Duchess. Letters to and from Mrs. Scrope.

1720, Dec. 14.—Copy of the Duchess's letter (in French) to King George I., denying complicity in the plot attributed to her and the Duke by Lord Sunderland.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Account (about 1721) of the Duke of Marlborough's property, and the disposition of it.

7 pp. folio. Account, signed S. Marlborough, of the seizure of the Earl of Sunderland's papers after his death.

Copy of letter to the Lord Chancellor reproaching him for his decree in the Blenheim case.

Old pedigree of Jennings.—Papers on the family quarrels.

1744, Sept. 13.—The Duchess to Mr. Scrope. She is tying up papers to enable two very able historians to write the Duke of Marlborough's history. There were three or four hundred original letters of Lord Godolphin to the Duke. He wrote to the Duke to keep his letters, for he had no time to copy them.

In another letter the Duchess says she believes there are at least 20 great books of Mr. Cardonell's (Cardonell's) copying of the Duke of Marlborough's letters to the ministers at home and the Princes abroad.

1723, Aug. 20, Blenheim.—Copy of letter by the Duchess to the Duke about the improvements and works at Blenheim.

1744, Sept. 22.—Account of the Duchess of Marlborough's method in keeping the Privy Purse accounts. (4 pp.)

No. I.

Original drafts, which formed the basis of the Duchess of Marlborough's Vindication, &c. published in 1742.—1. Account of the misunderstanding between King William and Queen Mary and the Princess Anne, written for the information of Mrs. Burnett.—2. Duplicate copy in Bishop Burnet's hand, with occasional alterations.—3. Original draft of the Conduct, written in 1711 and submitted to Sir R. Walpole, but suppressed by his advice.—4. Two drafts or copies of the same, in the handwriting of Mr. Maynwaring.—5. A more connected and regular sketch of the Conduct, written by Mr. St. Priest, while the Duke and Duchess were at Antwerp, in 1713 and 1714.—6. An account of some matters of fact relating to the Duchess of Marlborough's conduct at Court.—7. A duplicate of the same except the first page; and another copy in the same hand.

No. II.

1. Two different versions of part of the Vindication, apparently written for the press, but differing from the printed copy.—2. Detached and imperfect papers connected with the Vindication. Among these are various letters to Bishop Burnet on the causes of the Duchess's misunderstanding with the Queen, written in 1710, and an anonymous abusive letter to Mrs. Masham, sent by penny post, with the original draft in the handwriting of the Duchess.—3. Memoranda of Mr. Hutchinson, written after the Duchess's return from abroad, containing an account of her various altercations with the Queen and Mrs. Masham.

In this packet is a letter from David Mallet to the Duchess, acknowledging the receipt of certain papers, and engaging to write the life of the Duke of Marlborough.

No. VI.

Letters by the Duchess to Mrs. Clayton, 1712-1722. Some are from abroad. Among them are—

March 8, o. s.—Yesterday I was invited to a show, something like my Lord Mayor's in England: there were seven great things drawn by horses: the first was to represent a stable, and the Virgin Mary sat by it with a child in her lap, nodding her head upon it, as if she had been talking to it. The second pagon (pageant) was the Virgin again upon an ass, and a child in her arms, with Joseph leading it: then immediately followed our Saviour discoursing with the Doctors. The other four machines represented all the passion of our Saviour, all which is the most impious thing one can imagine to see carried about the streets: there were a great many figures dressed in rich clothes, which I believe were Jews; and then came the Virgin with a great many fine attendants in great ceremony, with a new long train of fine stuff, and many jewels of value: last of all was the Sacrament, with such a thing over it as the Queen had at the Coronation, a vast number of white wax lights at noon-day, several bagpipes playing; but notwithstanding that merriment, all the people fell upon their knees before it in the street as it passed by. 'Tis said the bishop of this place will not suffer the procession to be made any more.

March 21, o. s.—At a play-house in this town, where the dancers and the ropes were, before Lent began, and where there is a pit, box, and gallery, the lowest price 3d., there is all the history of our Saviour represented by the tradespeople of the town twice a week, music between every act, just as it is at any play-house; all the Scripture repeated and a great deal added to it; the Sacrament is given, and the same words used that are in our Church, and the whole thing most impious.

Address to the Queen (4 pp.).—Another address to the Queen (104 pp.).

1711, April 26.—The Duchess's account of proceedings in the House of Commons. The compliments to Harley when he was stabbed by Count Guiscard.

Memoire touchant les affaires du Pays Bas.

5. Account of the attempt to pass the Ysche, and the opposition made to the Duke of Marlborough by Stangenbergh, &c.—A state, showing what forces have been from time to time supplied by the Queen for service in Flanders since the beginning of the war, 1701-1711; and a state showing what forces, &c. by the States General for service in Flanders since the beginning of the war. (The Queen supplied 72,197, the States 129,548, from which 42,000 were deducted for garrisons; so that the total of the forces for the field was 159,655.)

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

1708, Sept. 14, o. s., London.—J. Craggs to the Duke of Marlborough. The Lord Treasurer was pleased to approve Mr. Stanhope's engagement for the 4,000 men, but does not think it possible to let a squadron winter in the Mediterranean till we are masters of Port Mahon. I communicated the subject of the King of Spain's letter to your Grace, which he recommended me to be very silent of, and the Duchess did the same. His Lordship assured me that I should obtain the Residentship in Spain by your Grace's recommendation.

6. 1707, March 7, Valencia, June 11, Barcelona, July 11, Barcelona.—Copies of letters of these dates from the King of Spain to the Duke of Marlborough.

Hunter was a brigadier in the army; he complains of his salary and authorized expenditure not being paid.—Abstract of the produce of the revenue of Ireland, from March 1713 to March 1714.

10.—Keys to different cyphers.

11.—Nine letters from the Queen to the Duchess of Marlborough when Lady Churchill. In one she says, "As to Mr. Hodely who you are desired to recommend to me, the Archbishop of York did, amongst others, name him as one he thought might be proper to succeed Dr. Beveridge, but said too that he was young and might stay for preferment better than others; and the last time I saw him (which was Saturday), he told me that by all the inquiries he had made he believed Dr. Waugh would be the fittest man for this living of Dr. Beveridge's, and upon his saying so I told him he should have it.

12.—1717, Dec. 13.—Receipt by Dan' De Foe to the Earl of Sunderland by the hands of Mr. Buckley for 25*l*. being 17 Nov. last.

1702, July 17, Whitehall.—C. Hedges to the Earl of Marlborough. In consequence of the Queen being informed that some English merchants have been confined and their effects seized in Spain, she has given orders for confining the Spanish merchants and seizing their effects here; but no such persons or effects are to be found: only the Spanish Consul is in custody. The fleet was under sail on Tuesday morning, standing westward from Torbay. Sir John Munden is cleared by a court-martial.

1707, March 23, Turin.—Victor Amade' to the Duke of Marlborough. Informs that he is put in possession of Alexandria, La Lomelline, and the Valley of Sesia.

The 6th is a commercial treaty with England and Holland. Warns him against M. van Stucken, the Envoyé from Denmark to England, as one who has a penchant for France.

1707, Dec. 18, Whitehall.—Earl of Sunderland to Earl of Peterborough. (Copy.) The Queen is dissatisfied with Peterborough's answers to the several particulars mentioned to him by her order in Sunderland's letter of the 28th of September, 1st, he did not march to Madrid as he ought to have done, &c.

Considerations sur la guerre en Italie (4 pp.).

Disputes with Sir C. Wren and the workmen relative to the building of Marlborough House.

1708, Aug. 13.—From our Camp at Chaumont. J. Chetwynd to the Duke of Marlborough. Chetwynd seems to have been then filling Palmes' place, in attendance on the Duke of Savoy.

A large bundle of warrants to the Lord Treasurer.

NO. XIX.

Journal (in English), of the Campaign against the Turks, in 1738. Begins, 27 May, 1738, Semlin. Marshal Wallis took the command of those troops that were to rendezvous. (95 pp. with maps.)

All the MSS. above noted are in the Manuscript room.

The following large collection of letters and papers is in what was formerly the Sunderland Library in the Bachelors' Gallery at Blenheim.

A 1-1. 1604, to about 1650. Among these are,—

Copy of the Treaty with Spain, 1604—1615. Articles which the chief constables of every hundred are to observe and answer unto at the beginning of every assizes by commandment of the judges. (14 pp.)

Resolutions of all the judges on divers questions concerning Popish recusants.—List of recusants (131), sued for their wives recusancy, Michaelmas Term 1619 —List of recusants convicted, indicted, and prosecuted in 1625, in the co. of Northampton.—The Commission and Instructions concerning Popish recusants.—Form of commission to a pursuivant to seize priests seminary. Secular popish priests and others and their agents, &c. Dated at Lambeth.—Letter from Sir Geo. Heneage, 1625.—Copy of Marriage Articles between the Prince of Wales and Henrietta Maria.—1626, April 6. Copy of the remonstrance by the Commons in Parliament to the King.

A 1-2.—Copies of letters by George Digby (Earl of Bristol) to Cardinal Mazarin.—1646, Dec. 7, Dublin; 1647, Dec. 7; 1647, Dec. 17, Louvre; 1648, Feb. 16, Louvre. Having expected the commands of your Eminence all this week touching the Marquis of Montrose and la depesche to be made into Ireland, and both running risk by delay, I remind you the condition of the Marquis does not permit him to wait longer. And there is such a change in the affairs of Ireland, that if la depesche is not very soon made, and you do not give instructions to your ministers conformable to its present state, you will reap no fruit.

1648, April 23.—Wants money, has bought over officers from the enemy, who only wait their passports to join him at the frontiers, they promise to get two or three good companies.

1648, July 1.—Has received from M. le Tellier 1,000 of the 1,500 pistoles promised for mounting and arming a company of 100 maistres; for the ordinary rate of 15 pistoles each, "instead of asking assistance from "those whom I make my officers I have to give it, "they being persons ruined in the service of the King, "my master, and in following my fortune." Asks for the other 500 pistoles, "Le Tellier will tell you that I "have had 1,600: true, but the 600 was for bringing "over 200 men from England for my company and that "of the Marquis of Ormond.

1648, Dec. 5, Louvre.—A merchant has come express on the part of my correspondents in England who undertakes to land for you 4,000 men at Calais or Dieppe for the service of France at 10 crowns a man; but nothing to be paid until they land.—He proposes alternative modes of securing the payment.

n.d. The Marquis of Ormond has resolved to take service in France. Some persons have come from Ireland, who should be sent back when Mazarin has taken his resolution; and having retained a light frigate for that purpose he (Bristol) could not make them wait and bear the expense.

n.d. Is surprised at Mazarin's coldness yesterday in what related to the Marquis of Ormond, and is more so to-day since he has received an express from Ireland assuring him of the contrary of what Mazarin seems to have learned by the letter of M. de la Moignerie, viz., "that they continue their resolution and have greater "power than ever to transport the forces they whom "already proposed to the service of the Prince to whom "I shall engage myself: for the Marquis of Ormond, "he learned at the time of sending the dispatch that "the Parliamentarians had taken him prisoner. They say nothing will divert them from their resolution if occasion do not present itself of bringing back that kingdom to obedience to the King, of which they say there is more hope than ever, not only because of the power which the King's party have acquired in the council of the confederates, but also by reason of intelligence formed with some very considerable chiefs of the Parliament who seem at this time to be well inclined, and for that effect they have sent the Marquis of Antrim and Viscount Muskerry to see if the affair can be arranged here with the Queen and the Prince of Wales." In that case the writer says Mazarin must not expect a corps d'armée from Ireland, or that the Marquis of Ormond can for long engage in person, but he may be assured of the friendship of Ireland and that Spain can then make no use of it.

1649, Aug. 2, Casteau Cambresis; Aug. 29, De Condé; Nov. 12.—Three letters of these dates.

1649. Viscount Muskerry and the Marquis of Ormond are both about to quit.

1650, June 17, St. Quentin.—Tells what the Marshal intends to do for the relief of Guise which has corn for only 4 days, viz., during a skirmish to send in 500 horsemen with corn behind them. The enemies troops desert excessively, if any place would hold out 10 days they would not have one-third of their infantry left; not a day passes but 30 come in, every Spanish regiment has lost more than 200 men.

1650, June 17, La Fere, 11 at night. Alludes to the previous letter. Doubts if the scheme can be put in force, and explains why. Asks Mazarin's determination.

1650, July 3.—Congratulates Mazarin on the success of the siege of Guise.

1650, July 4.—Recommends the bearer, the Sicur de Feau, capitaine dans Persan, for his services in the siege of Guise.—July 13, Paris.—July 27, Robemont.—Sept. 22, Argenteuil.—Oct. 8, Mante. (This month of October is the third in which his pension of 1,000 francs a month has been unpaid).—1652, Jan. 16.—1652, Feb. 24.—Hears that people are wishing to deprive him of the command of Mante.—1652, March 25, Mante. Thanks for the government of Mante.—1652, March 26; 1654, Jan. 22; 1654, Feb. 23; 1654, June 14, Montauban. He has explained to M. le Tellier the reasons which obliged him to choose (according to the liberty which Mazarin gave him) the service of Piedmont, where he is going to march his troops with all diligence.—1654, July 1; 1654, Sept. 8, College des Jesuites, Fior d'Alby. Asks for his pay.—1655, Aug. 10, D'Alby. Hears from le Tellier that Mazarin has kept his troops for him; and from the Abbe Montague that the Cardinal destines the writer to the service of Italy, so he goes at once to join his troops. Montague will explain his miserable condition.—1655, Aug. 23. I will go at once to Prince Thomas, and will try by my application this campaign to let you see how wrong those are who have tried to do me a bad turn.—1655, Sept. 17, Camp de St. Martin. A short notice of the siege of Pavia (Pavia), and their being obliged to raise it. Wants to know Mazarin's answer about the Irish.—1655, Oct. 18. Complains of want of pay, asks leave to serve jointly the Duke of Modena.—1655, Dec. On quitting the service.—1655, Dec. 29, Paris. Mazarin to the Earl of Bristol.—1660, April 29, Grenada.—Bristol to Mazarin.

A 1-3.—Letters from foreigners (French and Italian) to the Earl of Bristol in 1650-55. In a letter of 20th Sept. 1655 is an account of a quarrel at Pavia between the Earl and M. de Toucheprest; and drafts of letters by the Earl (he was Lieut.-General des armées du Roi).

A 1-4.—Letters to and drafts of letters, by the Earl of Bristol, 1656-1662, among them are letters by Fouquet and Louis de Bourbon, Prince de Condé. In 1656 are letters to and by Sir James Dillon, who was in the French service.

1656, Sept. 20.—Copy of the King's order to Col. Grace to come with his regiment to Bruges.

1657, April 4, Bruges.—"Charles R." and wafer seal). To our trusty and well-beloved subjects, all or any of the officers and soldiers of the Irish nation in La Bassie. The Catholic King has a war against our rebels, and is resolved to give us the best assistance he can for recovering our dominions, and to that purpose has assigned quarters to such of our good subjects to resort to who desire to serve us, where they shall be put into regiments under our commission. He commands them to repair to him with those under their command. (Counter-signed by Edw. Nicholas.)

Copy of another royal proclamation, dated 27th August.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

1657, July 30.—Copy of paper delivered to the King by the Earl of Bristol about Spanish assistance for his restoration.

Lord Newbourg and Mr. Strodé's relation of what took place between the Earl of Bristol and Lord Taaf about some Irish soldiers who staid behind in St. Gislain after the yielding of the place.

1657, Feb. 27.—Copy of the King's command to the Irish soldiers, Dillon's regiment, in the town of St. Gislain to repair to him at Bruges.

1657, March 10, Bruges.—Copy. Commission by Charles II. to John Ferdinando de Marchin, Comte de Gravelle, to be Commander-in-Chief of horse and foot.

Copy (in Spanish) of memorial to Don John of Austria about the quartering of the troops of the King of Great Britain.

Draft Memorial à Son Attesse, about troops for England. (6 pp. 4to.)

6 pp. folio. What His Highness ordered the Marquis de Caraza and Don Alonzo de Cardenas to answer to the Earl of Bristol on the propositions made on behalf of the King of Great Britain for the expedition into England.

Memoire (in French), by King Charles II. to His Highness. The King having sent the nobility who were with him into England is expecting news of the last arrangements for the undertaking. He is receiving news of some intended notable outbreak against Cromwell on the occasion of his pretension to the Crown, so that the King urges His Highness to put the last touch to the preparations for the descent into England. 1st. That the 10,000 crowns be put into the hands of some one named by His Highness to be distributed amongst those to be named by His Majesty. 2d. The 1,500 infantry and 1,000 horse to be put under His Majesty's command, and lodged near the sea, and the artillery promised be sent to Ostend by the 10th of next month at latest. 3d. Some of the 10,000 crowns to be advanced at once for the equipage of the King and his brothers and general officers.

1657, April 27.—Copy of a paper given to His Highness. The King of Great Britain is persuaded that the assistance of an army, &c. promised to him by the treaty which His Catholic Majesty signed in April 1656, to make a descent into England before the end of the said year has not been given, only by reason of accidents and inevitable misfortunes. He thinks it will be well to put it off till November next; but the army must appear to be purely the King's; if that be conceded the Spanish may have the use of them. And the King has made such arrangements with regard to his subjects still remaining in the service of France and Sweden and elsewhere that he engages to make up his body of infantry to 6,000 by the 1st of July, if His Highness will contribute the moderate assistance mentioned below. Six points.

1657, Feb. 4.—Copy in French of Don John's engagement to Lord Dillon that if he succeeded in getting Arras into the power of the King of Spain, 300,000 florins should be paid by instalments.

1657, May 9.—Draft in French of a Memoire. He is expecting from Spain orders on the subject of the formation of an army for the King of Great Britain.

1657, Jan. 18.—Memoire to His Highness. The King of Spain has only perhaps 500 Irish under arms, but there are many more in the kingdom, and some say that 3,000 of that nation can be got together if they have the avowal of the King, and can tell their compatriots that they are got for an undertaking capable of re-establishing them in their country, or certainly for the descent into considerable ports.

6 pp. folio. French Memoire to His Highness.—On the paper which M. le Marquis de Caracion and Don Alonzo de Cardenas gave me yesterday at noon on the part of your Highness and on your discourse thereupon, I take the liberty of presenting for your consideration the following things. (It is an argument against the feasibility of a descent into England.)

1657, Oct. 12, Burbourg.—S. Reynolds to Major General Morgan. Since you went we have prepared for the cleaning and fortifying of this place; orders being sent to Mr. Shomberg, that this town be divided into two equal parts for the winter garrison; one-half whereof is to be left to the English. Whereupon I have wrote to Marshal Turenne to mind His Highness of his resolutions when no French force appeared (which I hear are now rallied) that the English should be quartered here

according to their number equally with the French foot. I have likewise mentioned the exchange of Major Pickering, and the other English prisoners, whereof some have been exchanged this summer.

1657, Sept. 12, Burbourg.—S. Reynolds to the Lord Ambassador. I now find Burbourg is at length to be for the quarters of 2,000 English and the like number of French, which is another slip from resolutions taken here, as the giving the English a third part of Burbourg was a slip from resolutions before in your Lordship's presence. I have wrote a long letter to Marshal Turenne, wherein I insist upon a third part at the utmost of this garrison to be of English. But if Mardyke were well fortified I should willingly endure three battalions to be here. Marshal Turenne intends four, and not to return with the army to Mardyke, which I fear will be thereby lost. How to get more men into it is difficult, and to lodge them no less; but to fortify the place, except the wooden fort in the sea, I judge impossible. Nevertheless, if your Excellency advise, I shall try what may be done by putting myself into it.

1657, Feb. 12.—Instructions, in French, for les Sieurs de Fay et Lane to go to some place near St. Gelain, and get all particulars about it, and the fortifications, and troops there, and see if the Irish there would leave and serve King Charles.

Orders, in English, to Lane to pursue the instructions given at Brussels, and to give an account by letter to Col. Slingsby, and let him know under what name and to what place Col. Slingsby shall direct letters to him. He may offer the person with whom he treats, over and above the proportion of money which he is authorised to promise, that a regiment shall be provided for him in the same manner that the King's other regiments, in case the design upon the place succeed by his means.

1657, Feb. 19.—Lane to Earl of Bristol. His kinsman does not answer as to the strength of the garrison. Hopes he will not be so shy when he is acquainted with the overtures which Lane is to make.

1657, Feb. 28.—Lane to Lane. His Highness is so satisfied with Lane's cousin's manner that he has commanded to be deposited with the writer 40,000 florins to be given to him if the town of St. Gislain is His Highness's 15 days after the regiment quits it. (Other alternative rewards.)

1657, March 1.—De la Rue or Lane to the Earl of Bristol. Your Lordship will find that I sent His Majesty's first orders, it being expressly promised in the first paper, for fear it should occasion any delay in the work.—He acknowledges Lord Bristol's directions of Wednesday at noon, "which I have just now received, it being sent in by the courier over the walls with direction to the guard to bring it to the secretary of the King of England, for whom they demanded in my lodging; but tho' I denied myself, yet looking upon the address, I shewed it to the guard, telling him that the letter was for me, but that I was no such person as the courier told him. I wonder how the devil any messenger employed from thence can be so indiscreet."

1657, March 2, Tournay.—The same to the same. Within a few hours after sending my letter of yesterday M. de Fay came . . . Your Lordship will find by the enclosed that the writer dare not undertake the business, and I fear, tho' M. de Fay is most confident that he will get somebody else to venture with the dispatch I gave him into the town, that he will find none to be attempted while the Governor is in any apprehension of those troops drawn so close unto him. However rather than the business should not be attempted for want of that despatch, I have committed it to his discretion; being to confident of it, that I believe he will not hazard the discovery of the design, or the ruin of all my friends, by exposing it to the possibility of being intercepted.

1657.—Question to the King, whether it will not be better to demand of the Spaniards in lieu of the whole army and embarkation promised by the treaty the sum of 500,000 crowns, which paid by the 1st of November next, and your troops maintained either in the field or in quarters until the 1st of December ensuing, your Majesty will oblige yourself to raise such a war in England as they shall be fully satisfied of the well employment of that sum; or in case that your measures in England, or in the execution here should so fail that you should not go through with the designed embarkation, that from the 1st of December forward you would free them from all charge in maintaining your troops upon your account, and leave them entirely to their disposal in such way as they should judge most expedient to their own interest, severed from the consideration of yours.—At the foot of this is written the following by the King's hand. "I approve of this proposition, and command the Earl of Bristol to make it to Don Juan in my name. "Brussels, the last of July 1657. C.R."

1658, Feb. 13, London.—Marquis of Ormond to the Chancellor. As I could not effect a rising, and being exposed to danger by Cromwell laying hold of all sorts of people, and by some bruits of my being in England, I thought my best course to pass immediately over to France, whence I might without much hazard pass into the west to head the insurrection, which will be infallibly there in case the assistance designed from Flanders appear, or if not, wait suddenly upon His Majesty to serve him in what other resolutions should be taken. Although our friends will not venture their lives and fortunes upon the uncertainty of the winds, nor of the the Spaniards preparations, which they will not believe to be in a readiness, the dispositions are universally better, and the grounds they go upon solidier than I could have imagined.—Recommends Yarmouth, or Sold, or Alford for the King to land, where there can be nothing to oppose him, Cromwell not daring to draw any of his army out of London nor trust the train-bands to assemble. I have left all things disposed and in the best hands, therefore let me know suddenly at Paris the King's and Don Juan's, resolutions, that accordingly I may either pass into the west to Bristol from some port in Normandy or Brittany according as I have promised our friends if the business go on, or, having signified to them that there is no hope of the Spaniards assistance, return to you into Flanders.

1661 and 1662.—Letters to and from the Duke of Modena.

A 1-5.—Letters to the Earl of Bristol, mostly undated.

The Cardinal's and Cromwell's undertakings.

The Cardinal undertakes to hinder, by all ways and means, the general peace; and if a treaty thereof is begun, he is to acquaint Cromwell from time to time with all the proceedings in the treaty, that he may, in case the treaty comes near to a peace, break or hinder it by making an incursion into France, and stirring up the Hugonots there for that purpose. And if the general peace be forced upon them, then the Cardinal is to include therein Cromwell and exclude the King, &c. &c.—To hinder any strong alliance with the King &c. in France and everywhere else, and to give speedy intelligence when any such thing shall be begun.—The Cardinal to take into his own or his surest friend's hand the government of two or three of the strongest seaports in France, &c.—To gain and continue a good understanding and amity for Cromwell with the Pope and other Princes of Italy, and in order thereunto some English Catholics have or do promise to use some endeavours with the Pope to get the King excommunicated upon some undertakements of Cromwell.—To procure in a convenient time for the Hugonots of France some new liberie of conscience and the exercise of public and other offices, and that at the instance of Cromwell for the more gaining and securing to him the affection of the people of England and Hugonots abroad.—The Cardinal is by the King of France's countenance to gain the affections of the Scotch nation to Cromwell, and a Scotch colonel is sent by the Cardinal already to Scotland for that purpose, whereof they find already good effects. The Cardinal is upon any urgent occasion of Cromwell, as hindering the peace as aforesaid, or the carrying on of any other business of equal concernment to them, to lend Cromwell a considerable sum of money, not exceeding a million francs.

Cromwell undertakes to hinder a general peace by all ways and means,—and to furnish and send anywhere 20 or more ships of war with 4,000 land soldiers over and above the 6,000 already in France, with much more arms, ammunition, and other furniture of war, and to stir up the Hugonots of France against their King, of purpose to hinder the general peace when begun, or a treaty thereof.—And in the meantime he is to give and continue to the Cardinal the love and affection of the said Hugonots of France whereof he thinks to find some effects already.—He is to furnish the Portugals with 5,000 soldiers and 20 ships of war at their charges, which is already in the way of preparation.—A safe retirement in case of necessity for the Cardinal and his friends and his goods in England.

Draft memorial (in Spanish) to [Don Juan] for placing Lord Middleton at the head of troops to effect a rising in Scotland, and for raising troops for that purpose.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Memoire pour l'entreprise d'Angleterre.—It must be made by the beginning of December at latest, so that during the three months that the weather hinders formal sieges, they work at fortifying the post. 2,500 foot, 500 horse, and horses to mount 200. Ten cannon (4 battery and 6 field) and other particulars. Calculation of expense of ships.

Draft memorial to Don Juan for a passport for the Marquis of Ormond, Viceroy of Ireland, to go to Prague.

Memorial (Spanish) by the King of England to Don Juan for permission to correspond with Antwerp, which he thinks is favourably disposed to him.

Memorial to the King asking him to write to Don Alonso that His Excellency may advertise the King of Spain's ambassador at Rome how the Bishop of Clowmacnott, Goghagan, and others of the Irish nation are all endeavours to continue a breach between their countrymen, by renewing old quarrels, &c., to the end that such only as opposed His Majesty's service in Ireland may bear sway for the future, and be provided for in all vacant places of dignities and benefices, excluding others because they have opposed the Pope's Nuncio in a lawful matter out of the Nuncio's sphere. . . . That the Spanish Ambassador be warned against Bishop Goghagan and a Franciscan friar called Daniel Guilgrim, of which two in particular His Majesty has reason to beware, as also the Secretary of Propaganda.

Memorial (English) to [Don Juan] Since it is of the greatest concernment to both their Majesties that Cromwell receive as much disturbance as is possible, as well in Scotland and Ireland as in England, that both his shipping and his men be diverted from sending succours to the Indies, and for the expedition into Scotland, Lieut.-General Middleton is making all preparations. His Majesty asks His Highness if he thinks it agreeable to the King of Spain that the Irish now in Spain, and such as come over from France, shall be sent immediately into Ireland. If so the king will send a person to Madrid to solicit the same, and also send a person of honour, a Catholic, to command the men.

Answers (Spanish, and another in English) to the three propositions made in the French memoir to His Highness by King Charles (see A. 1-4). All are negatived.

Dessein pour la campagne (3 pp. French). If His Highness approves the design proposed for the formation and employment of an army under the name of the King of England, he will consider that if the formation is deferred until approbation came from Spain, the greatest usefulness of it will be lost. Reasons. Measures to be taken to insure success.

Draft proclamation by King Charles inviting all his good subjects of his kingdom of England to the uniting themselves for the vindication and restoration of His Majesty and the people to their just rights, laws, and liberties. Alludes to the assistance of the King of Spain. Offers pardon to all who within 20 days after publication of the proclamation, by any public act declare their acceptance, except Bradshaw and Oliver Cromwell, and those who shall be legally convicted of sitting in judgment and voting for the late King's death, and the executioners.

Bennet's note to [the Earl of Bristol].—Asks him to get His Highness to get Don Francis de Meneos to receive Bennet into his company to make the journey into Spain.—Your Lordship will let His Highness know that you have gained M. Richard, maitre de la grande poste de Paris, into whose hands all letters to and from all parts are brought, by whom under colour of making himself useful to the King of England's service, packets of any kind may be intercepted and copies taken.

Memoire touchant le duc d'York et les affaires qui viendront de la France.—If Don Juan think it well that the king should call immediately the Duke of York, the writer has the King's commands to issue such orders as His Highness shall think fit for drawing all his subjects to the service of the King of Spain.—About money for the officers.

Copy of instructions and recommendation for a movement in Scotland, at the same time the King expects his friends in the north of England to move, so that Monk may not be at liberty to march into England with part of his army, which consists of the best men the rebels have. With this view the King intends to send Lieut.-General Middleton to Dantzic to draw off the English and Scotch in the King of Swedes service, or shall be sent thither by him, the principal officers whereof expect a summons from the King, and some have engaged only to that end, with which and other levies he intends in those parts, he shall have put himself into Scotland before the end of November, and he doubts not to find Monk work enough in that kingdom to divert him from visiting England.

Draft of instructions (French) to Sir Henry Bennet, Envoy to Spain.—1. To address himself in the first place to Don Louis d'Aro, and receive his orders in all things. He is to represent that King Charles would like it to appear that he was supported by the King of Spain. At the Diet of Ratisbon the Emperor gave him 100,000 crowns which are not yet paid.

Copy of instructions to Mr. Trevors, sent to the French Court (7 pp.).—About the revocation asked by the French King of an Order in Council about ambassadors' carriages, and about the precedence of French over Spanish ambassadors at public ceremonies.

Copy of a letter by the Queen (Henrietta Maria) to the Bishop of Alby.—Thanks him for his care of the Earl of Bristol. Has asked Lord Jermyn to write to him.

Memorial in Spanish (5 pp.) to the King of Spain on the whole design of the English expedition.

The present state of your (the King's) affairs with reference to England. (What aid he might expect in different parts.)

Translation into French of the King's reasons for coming to the army.—At the end is a copy of a letter dated from Brussels 22 Aug. 1657, saying that as Don John seems to object he will defer to his reasons tho' he does not see them.

In 1576 Queen Elizabeth lent 40,000*l.* to the States of Flanders with the privilege of Philip the Second, and the towns of Antwerp, Ghent, Bruges, and Ipres became bound to the Queen under their common seals. King James and King Charles often asked for it. In 1640 and 1641 there was a suit for it in the court at Maelin. (King Charles the Second) offers to release it if he can get them to lend money to him. Wishes to begin with Antwerp if Don John approves.

Proposal to Don Juan by the King of England that all importation of English goods to Spain should be prohibited except such as was authorised by passport with increased duty.

Proposal that no English be allowed to pass or inhabit in Flanders except those in the King of England's service.

A paper indorsed propositions and papers of Mr. Chancellor.

1657.—Commission (in English) to John Ferdinand de Murchin, Earl of Graville, to be the King's Lieut.-General of all forces raised and to be raised and transported into England, horse and foot, and to command the same by sea and land, and of all to be levied in England and Wales.

Memorial to Don Juan of ways to obtain supplies of money.

Requisites for the execution of the undertaking (the enterprise on England.) (Spanish).

A 1-10, 1671-1684.—Letters to Robert, Earl of Sunderland. In 1671 are letters by Mr. Southwell at Brussels. In 1684 letters by Lord Preston at Paris.

1684, Sept. 6, n. s.—Lord Preston to the Earl of Sunderland. In pursuance of instructions he has laid before the Abbé Balati, the several particulars of the late horrid conspiracy against the King and the Duke, who answered that he was surprised that there was any occasion to remonstrate anything to the Princes of the House of Lunenburg, his masters; that being at Hanover the Duke expressed his detestation of it, and said if the chief person concerned applied to him for protection he should order him to withdraw from his estates, and he was sure the other Princes of that House had the same sentiments. He asked if I knew the name of any conspirator that had been protected by the Princes of Lunenburg, and said he never heard of any person disaffected to His Majesty who had been near these parts except Sir William Waller. I told him if the Princes had shown any countenance to that person they could not have done it to one who deserved it less, or merited worse from the King than he did.

1684, Oct. 11, n. s., Paris.—The same to the same. Will pursue the directions formerly received concerning the violence acted upon His Majesty's subjects at Port Nelson, and solicit that orders may be sent to the Governor of Canada not to continue hostilities against them there, but thinks that M. de la Barre will rather be ordered, by sending more forces thither, as he intimates in his letter to the Governor of Boston, to assure his conquest.

1684, Oct. 25, s. n.—The same to the same. The King of France gave him audience at Fontainebleau on Sunday last, when he acquainted the King that

Don Pedro Ronquillo, Ambassador of Spain in the Court of England, having lately by a memorial to the King of England mentioned the deplorable condition of the Spanish Low Countries which renders it impossible for them to pay the great sums demanded by the King of France for the arrears of contribution within the time prefixed for it, tho' the Marquis de Grana had consented it by an inevitable necessity, and to oblige the French troops to go sooner out of the said provinces, the King, his master, had commanded him to communicate to the King of France what had been represented to him by the said ambassador, and to intreat him to consent to a prolongation of the term and that nothing might arise on that side to discompose the peace of Europe, which was of late so happily re-established by the conclusion of the late truce. He answered that the Spaniards made it their business to cry out against him, and represent his proceedings as unjust in all the courts of Christendom; that they had done it more in England than in any other place, and had never ceased to importune the King of England with their ill-grounded complaints; that he had already enough shown his bounty and charity to the subjects of Spain in the Low Countries, by having remitted three millions of livres and more due to him but that nothing would content them, and that they were not to be dealt with in any other way than that of constraint, and that he could not consent to any delay in the time of payment. Relates his conversation with M. de Croissy on the subject, who said the King, his master, was resolved to relieve Courtray and Dixmude till satisfaction should be given to him upon that point. (11 pp.)

A 1-11, 1681.—Letters to his Grace from various persons.

A to W.—These are 7 letters by King William in 1689 and 1690. Letters by the Earl of Sunderland, Heinsius (5), Sir C. A 2-27, 1707.—Letters to his Grace from the Pensioner, M. Buys, M. Geldermalsen, M. Singelandt, M. Vryberg, the Greffier Fagel, M. Bothmar, Count Maffei, Count Lescheraine, Count Goes, Count Gallas, Baron Spanheim, Baron Schyzt, M. Matucoff.

B 1-1, 1708.—Letters to his Grace from the Earl of Sunderland and Mr. Boyle, Secretaries of State.

1708, April 13, Whitehall.—Sunderland to the Duke. Has laid the Duke's letters to Boyle before the Queen, "who says that as there is no probability of obtaining "any troops from King Augustus, or getting any others "to replace the Imperialists proposed to be sent to "Catalonia, and that therefore there is no possibility "of any more troops being sent thither without levy "money being given, she is so sensible of the necessity "of such a body of troops for the supporting the war "in Spain that she would have you conclude this "matter with Prince Eugene as soon as may be upon "the best terms you can, and that when it is concluded "you would send over the account how much the levy "money for the 4,000 men amounts to; and she wishes "that Prince Eugene may immediately dispatch the "orders to Italy for their being in a readiness to embark when our fleet arrives. . . . I send you "enclosed a copy of the Queen's letters to the States, "by which you will see Her Majesty leaves the matter "of your coming here again, or not, to what you and they "should judge best for the common cause."

1708, April 30.—The same to the same. The Queen approves what the Duke has done in relation to the 4,000 Imperialists to be sent to Catalonia. "I can't but hope "that if that body of men can get there by the second "campaign that we may recover our affairs in that "country. I am glad you have settled everything so "well in Hanover. . . . P.S.—Our own campaign "began this day by the election of Southwark, which "has gone as one could wish, and without being "sanguine, one may venture to prophecy a better "Parliament by much than the last."

1708, May 4.—The same to the same. By command of the Queen he sends an extract from a letter by Mr. Chetwynd, in which the Duke will see the heavy complaints the Duke of Savoy makes against the Court of Vienna. Comte Briançon has also represented the same. The Queen directs Marlborough to write to Prince Eugene and Count Wratislaw in the strongest manner. (Extract from Chetwynd's letter is enclosed.)

1708, May 7.—The same to the same. Sends inclosed by the Queen's order a copy of a memorial by Count Briançon by which the Duke will see that things get worse and worse at the Court of Vienna. . . . Prince Eugene's part has been so very extraordinary for a great while towards the Duke of Savoy, that it is not to be expressed how far people's suspicions do carry them. Sends inclosed a copy of Sir John Leake's instructions with relation to the Pope, which as it will be for the Queen's honour, so he dares say will be of use to the common cause in striking a terror into those Italian Princes. Our elections go on hitherto very prosperously, and there is no reason to doubt we shall have a very good Parliament; but if the court go on in the way they are it will be much alike whatever Parliament be chosen. (The instructions to Sir John Leake are to demand 400,000 crowns of the Pope for abetting the late intended invasion by the pretended Prince of Wales. Sir John is to sail to the coast of Italy, and at Civita Vecchia or some other port, and tell the Pope that if the demand be not instantly complied with his country is to be put under military execution by burning and destroying his ports and shipping, and by any other means that shall be judged most proper.)

1708, June 15.—The same to the same. Acknowledges the Duke's letters from Tesbank of the 17th inst., n.s., with the enclosed memorial of M. Guiscard. . . . "I "can't but think we might make some use of Guiscard "if he were employed in a proper place. . . . I have "a letter from Venice from Mr. Palmes of the 6th, n.s., "in which he tells me that everything in relation to

MARLBOROUGH.

"the Duke of Savoy, and the Palatinate is finished, so that I suppose he will be now soon at Turin."

1708, June 25.—The same to the same. Sends copy of Mr. Burchett's letter, in which Marlborough will see the opinion of the Prince's council in relation to a wintering of a squadron in the Mediterranean. "Indeed I believe they are right, that it can be with no safety but at Port Mahon."

1708, July.—The same to the same. Col. Cawfield taken prisoner at the battle of Almanza, wants M. D'Orivall, who is prisoner in England, to have leave to go over on parole to endeavour to get himself exchanged with Cawfield. D'Orivall is positive that the Court of France will consent to this exchange, and he has the same under the Duke of Berwick's hand.

1708, July 27.—The same to the same. Sends inclosed letters from Lieut.-General Erle and Sir Geo. Bing, by which Marlborough will see the difficulties they apprehend in this expedition. However, it is resolved they shall go on and do all that is possible towards landing and seizing Abbeville, only with this difference from their first order, that they are now ordered to come straight to the Downs to join the store ships and other transports there, by which as the wind sits they will lose no time, for they will certainly with this wind be in the Downs to-morrow morning.

1708, July 27.—The same to the same. Recommends to Marlborough's favour and protection Mr. St. Clare, son of Lord St. Clare.

1708, May 2. Althorp.—The same to the same. News received of Admiral Wager's having fallen in with the galleons, and having taken and destroyed most of them, and by the accounts they are the richest that have for many years returned to Europe. This must in all probability prove a fatal blow to France, for I believe this was one of their last resources for carrying on the war.

1708, Sept. 6, at night, Whitehall.—The same to the same. Her Majesty has ordered Sir Geo. Bing to sail forthwith with the land forces aboard him to Ostend, where he is to land them, and then return to carry the Queen to Portugal. The Queen was willing to comply with all the pressing desires of the States in this; they are directed upon their landing to obey such orders as they shall receive from you.

1708, Sept. 7.—The same to the same. Marlborough's letters of the 7th, 8th, and 10th of September were laid before the Queen on Sunday night, who approves of what the Duke of Moles writes much better than of Mr. Palm's proposals. You may be sure no notice shall be taken of the Duke of Moles's letter. I acquainted you yesterday by the Ostend packet that the Queen had ordered all the troops on board the fleet except the dragoons to sail immediately to Ostend in compliance with what the States desired. You will please to let the States know that nothing but their pressing instances and the great desire the Queen has of doing anything they think may be of use to the common cause, could have induced her to comply in this matter; the sending of the troops there discontinues entirely all the other services for which they were designed. You will send your orders to meet the troops at Ostend as soon as may be . . . I have by the Queen's order writ to my Lord Galloway to prepare a draft of a new convention with Portugal in relation to the payment of the troops, and the other points insisted on, because, since it will make the expense considerably greater, the Parliament will never agree to it without it be settled by a formal treaty, and with the prospect of advantages. (Enclosed is a copy of Sunderland's letter to the Earl of Galloway.)

1708, Sept. 14.—The same to the same. Acknowledges Marlborough's letter of the 17th instant to Mr. Secretary Boyle, with the enclosed convention, signed by Marlborough and the Prince of Savoy. Is sorry to find the siege goes on so slowly, but hopes it won't fall at last. The Duke of Savoy presses extremely for the renewal of the treaty with the King of Prussia for his troops that are in Piedmont, apprehending he designs to recall them; though I believe he means nothing but to get something more for them. However Her Majesty would have you, as soon as possible, renew that treaty for another year . . . I send you enclosed by the Queen's order an extract of Mr. Stanhope's letter in which he gives an account of the violation of the capitulation of Tortosa by the French in forcing so many of the garrison to take service with them. The Queen thinks it absolutely necessary to make some reprisal upon them, and as she hopes it will be in your power at the taking of Lille, Her Majesty would have you do it in the manner you think properest.

1708, Sept. 17.—The same to the same. Is sorry the siege has gone on so slowly . . . By the account the Ostend letters give us of the attack upon the outworks last Friday, and their being taken, I hope we may reckon ourselves now pretty secure of taking the town.

1708, Sept. 21.—The same to the same. Sorry to find Marlborough has so little hopes of success in the siege, but the news of Major-General Cadogan having defeated M. la Motte's party, makes us hope things are altered for the better.

1708, Sept. 24.—The same to the same. Went yesterday to Windsor with the good news Marlborough's letter of the 29th, n.s., brought. One can't but think they must be in very great want of ammunition in Lille when they attempted supplying it in so desperate a manner. . . . We have ordered a great supply to be sent to you to Ostend, which together with the convoy, will be ready to sail by Sunday or Monday, so that if the wind serves it will be at Ostend by Monday or Tuesday, so that you will please to send your orders to Ostend what you will have done with it when it comes. There will go with the same convoy a great quantity of provisions for the garrison of Ostend, and the troops with Lieut.-General Erle, he having written that they were in great want of them.

1708, Sept. 28.—The same to the same. The Queen is very uneasy at the account we have from Vienna that they intend to bring back their troops with the Duke of Savoy so far into Italy as not to let them quarter in France, which is just doing what they did last year when they refused to comply with the Duke of Savoy's proposal for quartering in Savoy; so that next year the whole campaign will be spent in passing the mountains and doing nothing. This Her Majesty would have you represent to Prince Eugene as a proceeding of the Court of Vienna not to be borne, which the Queen thinks will have much more effect than anything that can be said by the Envoy at Vienna. Her Majesty would also have you at the renewal of the treaty with the King of Prussia, which nobody but yourself can bring about, insist upon his troops being entirely under the command of the Duke of Savoy, that they may not scruple quartering where he would have them; for except the Prussians, the Saxe Gotha's, and the Imperial troops be under his direction all the expense the Queen is at there is to no manner of purpose.

1708, Oct. 1.—The same to the same. Acknowledges Marlborough's letter of the 4th instant, n.s. Hopes they may reasonably expect now to hear of the taking of the town in a few days. Sends a copy of what he wrote to Lord Raby about the Prussian troops in Italy, and what he wrote to Mr. Palmes by that post by the Queen's order. Her Majesty would have you speak to Prince Eugene in relation to this dispute with the Pope, to convince him of the necessity of putting an end, one way or the other, to that affair; for otherwise it must necessarily end in a lingering war, which will draw all the Imperial troops from Piedmont. I have just now an account from Portsmouth of the two regiments of Hill and Macartney, and 3 or 4 hundred sick men that Mr. Erle left behind who are since recovered, of their being embarked and ready to set sail with the first fair wind. Orders are gone to Scotland for embarking the regiments of Stranhamer and Grant for Ostend, that you may have all the force can be sent you from hence for the reduction of Bruges and Gand, or any other operations you shall undertake.

1708, Oct. 5.—The same to the same. Incloses by the Queen's orders, and an abstract of Sir Philip Meadows's letter, in order that Marlborough may be apprised of that whole matter in order to take what measures he shall judge properest to prevent the King of Prussia making use of this pretence not to leave his troops in Italy. To-morrow the Queen intends a Council to order a proclamation for appointing the Parliament to meet on the 16th of November. The Lord Treasurer went this morning to Newmarket. Major-General Webb is not yet come to town.

1708, Dec. 28.—The same to the same. Congratulations on Marlborough's good success at Gand, which puts so complete an end to this glorious campaign.

H. BOYLE'S LETTERS.

1708, March 30.—H. Boyle to the Duke of Marlborough.

1708, April 2.—The same to the same. Yesterday, about 5 p.m., Her Majesty prorogued Parliament to the 13th.

1708, April 6.—The same to the same. Has sent to the Lord Treasurer a copy of the Prince of Savoy's proposal about the 5,000 men for Spain. There is nobody now in town of the Cabinet Council except Lord Sunderland, my Lord President, and myself, and my Lord Privy Seal, who is not well enough to stir abroad.

1708, April 9.—The same to the same. . . . M. Vryberge delivered this afternoon a letter from the States desiring Her Majesty to dispense with your Grace's return to England, and to allow your Grace to go to Hanover to concert measures with the Elector and the Prince of Savoy; but Her Majesty, not having your Grace's sentiments by this post, and this request seeming to differ from your Grace's intentions expressed by the last, Her Majesty will return no answer 'till my Lord Treasurer return to town.

1708, April 20.—The same to the same. I send your Grace a copy of Lord Mordaunt's letter to me in answer to mine, which expressed Her Majesty's displeasure to him for his behaviour to the Justices of the Peace at York. Since he puts himself upon his justification I beg your Grace's direction in what method to proceed. Yesterday my Lord Griffin, Lord Middleton's two sons, and Lient.-Colonel Walpole, a Scotchman, were of the Queen's order brought from the yachts at Deptford to Whitehall to be examined before Lord Sunderland and myself. The first (who looks almost just as he did 20 years ago) said he knew nothing against anyone, nor more of the invasion himself than that a few days before the King's leaving St. Germain (as he called him) he was asked if he would not attend him, upon which he went. The Middletons said they were in the French King's service, and when ordered to their posts thought it their duty to obey, without knowing or inquiring where they were to be sent. The last went into France upon the treaty of Limerick, and has been in that service ever since; he has been employed in Italy most part of this war, and was at Cremona when M. de Villeroi was taken. They were all four committed to the Tower for high treason. The rest of the Queen's subjects that are prisoners will be committed to-night to Newgate for the same crime. The French prisoners are intended to be sent to Nottingham in a few days. . . . The writs for a new Parliament will be ordered next Thursday in Council. The execution of Grey will be to-morrow se'nnight. To-day I received the Queen's order to prepare a warrant for Dr. Fleetwood to be bishop of St. Asaph. (Enclosed is a copy of the Queen's gratulatory letter to Stanislaus 1st King of Poland).

1708, April 23.—The same to the same. The new writs were ordered yesterday in Council, but are not to bear date till next Monday, at the desire of the Scotch, for the greater convenience of their elections. The Queen has signed a warrant for Sir Charles Turner to be a Commissioner of Trade in the room of Mr. Stepney.

1708, May 21.—The same to the same. The Court goes into mourning next Sunday for the Prince of Orange, which the King of Prussia ought to take as a great distinction, it being an unusual compliment for so young a child.

1708, June 1.—The same to the same. The Queen's Bench has made out a rule of court upon an outlawry for the execution of the late Lord Griffin on Wednesday fortnight.

1708, June 15.—The same to the same. I am sorry any disgust should be given to King Augustus from hence, especially where it was not intended, any more than by barely acknowledging King Stanislaus according to Her Majesty's promise. . . . The Queen is not at all inclined at this time to allow of any exchange for Lord Middleton's two sons, and Her Majesty thinks that the prisoners taken in the Salisbury, especially her own subjects, ought to have the least favour and not to be the first exchanged. Lord Griffin, who was to have been beheaded to-morrow, is reprieved, not upon account of any discovery he has made, but because the Queen cannot bring herself to let him suffer, whom, she says, she has known so long.

1708, June 18.—The same to the same. . . . The Prussian Ambassador has pressed very often for the Queen's answer for his master's letter about the title of Mecklenburg, and to-day he sent his secretary to demand that all the titles as Prince of Orange shall be given to the King at the same time; but I believe Mons^r. Spanheim will not much insist upon this at present, knowing that it can serve to no other end than to put a stop to Her Majesty's answer upon the other point. I must observe that the Envoys of Sweden and Hanover are against the King of Prussia having the title of Mecklenburg, tho' the former says he has received no instructions about it, and the other has orders not to appear against it publicly.

1708, June 22.—The same to the same. . . . I am commanded to send to Mr. Dayrolle by this post an extract of Sir John Leake's instructions relating to the Pope, that he may communicate it to the Pensioner, and obtain the consent of the States to join their ships to that expedition, which Vice-Admiral Wassauer does not think himself empowered to do without an express order from his masters. The Prince was very ill last week, but is now pretty well again, and the Queen is so much better of the gout that her journey to Windsor is fixed for next Saturday.

1708, June 29.—The same to the same. . . . Lord Sunderland received this morning an express from Col. Collier, Deputy Governor of Jersey, giving an account that they were under great apprehensions of an immediate invasion from France. I send your Grace a copy of that letter, with other papers relating to that intelligence. The Lords who met this afternoon upon this occasion thought it advisable that Sir Geo. Bing and Lord Dursley, who are now in Plymouth Sound with 16 men-of-war, should have orders to leave three ships of their squadron with the transports to sail with the first fair wind to Ireland to bring over the regiments, and that the admirals, with the rest of their fleet, should sail to Jersey and Guernsey to take care of those islands, if they are really in danger, and also to look into St. Maloes, and as soon as they find that the coast is clear they are to come into Spithead.

1708, July 2.—The same to the same. The day after I sent your Grace an account of the intelligence from Jersey, Col. Collier sent another express to Lord Sunderland, which does in a great measure contradict what he wrote before; for the ships which were seen prove to be French merchantmen, with two privateers for their convoy, upon which the orders that were sent to Sir G. Bing upon this occasion are countermanded. (Enclosed are letters by Col. Thomas Collier and Sir Edmund Andros, Governor of Guernsey, on the subject, and copies of depositions by three persons who escaped from prison at Dinan).

1708, July 13.—The same to the same. The Queen has appointed the public thanksgiving for the victory to be on the 19th of August.

1708, July 19, Windsor.—The same to the same. In reply to Marlborough's letter to the Lord Treasurer relating to the descent upon the coast of Picardy, Her Majesty has ordered me to send this express to acquaint your Grace that (wind and weather permitting), the fleet and the troops, amounting to above 6,000 foot, shall be at St. Valery the last day of this month, old style, with orders to make themselves masters of Abbeville as soon as they can, and expect your detachment to join them; there, with instructions from your Grace to General Erle for the guidance of his future proceedings, as your Grace shall judge most proper.

1708, July 20, Windsor.—The same to the same. I had the honour to write to your Grace by the express which went from hence last Sunday night. Lient.-General Erle and Sir Geo. Bing were sent for from Plymouth, and attended Her Majesty this morning at the Cabinet Council, when they were acquainted with the intended expedition they are to go upon . . . and those two gentlemen are to return this afternoon to their commands.

1708, July 23, Whitehall.—The same to the same. . . . Last Wednesday, the Muscovite Ambassador was arrested and taken out of his coach by bailiffs; this I believe is an outrage without precedent, and yet I doubt our law will not admit a reparation equal to the offence. . . . I find him in a better temper than I should have imagined upon such an occasion; at the same time our Russian merchants are very apprehensive of the consequences of this affront. I have this day acquainted the Secretary at War that there is a vessel at Dover ready to carry over the English officers that ought to return to France upon their parole.

1708, July 27.—The same to the same. Last Sunday, by order of the Queen in Council, the bailiff, three attorneys, and three of the creditors were committed to the custody of a messenger for being concerned in taking the Muscovite Ambassador. I am to wait upon him this morning by the Queen's order, to give him an account of it, and to acquaint him with the great concern Her Majesty is in for the indignity that has been put upon him, and to assure him that he shall have all possible reparation; he says he will acquaint his master with it; but at the same time desires a passport to go to Holland with the Dutch convoy that is to sail next Saturday. He refuses to take with him his recredentials or to accept of any present, and has hired a private vessel, because he will not go over in the yacht.

1708, July 30.—The same to the same. I gave the

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DECK OF
MARLBOROUGH.

Muscovite Ambassador an account yesterday that the Council had committed to prison ten more persons concerned in the arrest, and that they were ordered to be prosecuted with the utmost rigour. However, he thinks himself under the necessity of going away, and will be gone for Holland to-morrow. I acquainted him this morning that the Queen intended to send some person of distinction to the Czar upon this occasion, with which he seemed very well satisfied. Lord Carmarthen is at present thought of for that employment.

1708, July 31, Windsor.—The same to the same. Last night Lord Sunderland received letters from Sir Geo. Bing and General Erle of the 29th, with the resolutions of a council of war of the same date from the Downs, wherein it was agreed that the fleet and transports should sail over to Boulogne Bay, and there expect further orders, and that it was not advisable to attempt landing the troops near St. Valery, as all the pilots that could be met with have given it under their hands. This I am commanded by Her Majesty to communicate to your Grace.

1708, Aug. 6.—The same to the same. Encloses copy of a deposition by John Pocock, of Maidenhead, about a conversation which he overheard in a wood near Maidenhead between two foreigners and an Englishman, about what he considered an intended assassination of the Queen. . . . Several of the persons concerned in arresting the Muscovite Ambassador have been admitted to bail by Lord Chief Justice Holt.

1708, Aug. 10.—The same to the same. Last Sunday evening the fleet under Sir Geo. Bing appeared off Dover, and the next day sailed to the westward, being joined that morning by the transports with the dragons on board; they intend directly for the coast of Normandy in pursuance of their first instructions. . . . The Queen agrees to the exchange between Col. Canfield and M. D'Orival . . . and I send to Mr. Lewis by this post Her Majesty's commission appointing him Secretary at Brussels.

1708, Aug. 17.—The same to the same. Enclosing copies of letters by General Erle, aboard the "Humber" in La Hogue Bay, and minutes of a council of war declaring the landing of the troops unadvisable.

1708, Oct. 19.—The same to the same. Congratulations on the taking of Lisle. The surrender of the castle of Port Mahon has determined the dispute about keeping a fleet in the Mediterranean after this time of the year, since orders are gone to-day to Sir Geo. Bing signifying Her Majesty's pleasure that he should winter in that port with 16 or 17 men-of-war. This will at least terrify the Italian Princes and States from engaging in the Pope's quarrel.

1708, Oct. 26.—The same to the same. The Prince is so dangerously ill, in the manner he used to be, that the doctors don't think he can live many days. The Queen watched with him all last night, but Her Majesty has promised to take some rest this afternoon.

1708, Oct. 29.—The same to the same. Yesterday morning the Prince grew worse, and died between 1 and 2 in the afternoon. The Queen removed soon after to St. James's, and is under the greatest affliction.

1708, Nov. 2.—The contest that was like to happen between Sir Richard Onslow and Sir Peter King about the Speaker's chair is thought at an end, and the latter will be persuaded to desist by some of those that set him up. . . . I find by Mr. Whitworth's letters that the Muscovite Ambassador has aggravated all he can the affront he received here; the satisfaction demanded, amongst other things, is that the bailiffs that arrested him be put to death.

1708, Nov. 9.—The same to the same. The Prince will be buried next Saturday, much after the manner of King Charles. The Parliament will be opened next Tuesday by Commission, which is to consist of all the Peers of the Cabinet Council; the speech will be spoke by my Lord Chancellor; there is no precedent of this since the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

1708, Nov. 16.—The same to the same. The Parliament met this day and was opened by Commission. The House of Commons have unanimously chosen Sir Richard Onslow for their Speaker, who is to be presented on Thursday for the Royal approbation, at which time the speech here inclosed [not there] will be spoke to the two Houses by the Lord Chancellor as first commissioner.

1708, Nov. 23.—The same to the same. Congratulations on Marlborough's victory at the passing of the Skeld.

1708, Nov. 30.—Sends copy of the Queen's letter of the same date to the States General animating them to continue the war.

1708, Dec. 3.—The same to the same. The Land Tax has been read a first and second time, and committed. The Malt Act is not intended to pass until after Christmas.

1708, Dec. 14.—The same to the same. I am sorry that those passages were put into our Gazette, that your Grace complains of in your letter of the 17th; whatever Mr. Cardonnel has wrote to Mr. Tilson against Mr. Steel putting anything in the public news relating to the operations of your Grace's army except what came directly from your Grace's camp, was showed to him, and 'tis very strange that it has not had a better effect. . . . Now I hope there is care taken that the same error shall not be repeated.

1708, Dec. 22.—The same to the same. In consequence of the States' letter to the Queen, she leaves it to Marlborough to do what is most proper for the good of the cause. Congratulations on the taking of Gand.

DECK OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

1707, March 21, St. James. — Original instructions from Queen Anne to the Duke, Captain-General of our forces, &c., and Ambassador Extraordinary to the States General. Is informed that the President Ronillé has been despatched from the Court of Franco to Antwerp with overtures of peace, and has had conference with certain Deputies of the States. The Duke is to go to the Hague and see the Pensionary, and tell him that no negotiation of peace should be entered upon with France till the preliminaries are first adjusted between the Queen and the States General. Hopes that the States General will be of her mind that no peace can be safe unless the whole Spanish monarchy be restored to the House of Austria. Expects at a peace that the French King be obliged to own her title to the Crown, and the Protestant succession as established by law. That the Pretender be removed out of the French dominions, and not be suffered to return to disturb her. That the fortifications and harbour of Dunkirk be demolished. A sufficient barrier for Holland.

1710, June 6.—Lord Somers to the Duke. Complimentary. (On the cover the Duchess writes, "My Lord Somers' letter of 6 June 1710 is a very good one, and "I believe sincere, so far as he wished the Duke of "Malborough good success; but it is certain that he "betrayed him to the Queen, and made his court both "to her and Mrs. Hill about the time that the dispute "was about giving him my Lord Essex's regiment; "after he was brought into her service she was "persuaded by private ministry to be very kind to my "Lord Somers, and that was so well managed that "he passed many hours with her without ever saying "the least word to make her uneasy, but put the "task upon the Duke of Malborough and the Earl of "Godolphin, and did think that he should be the chief "and govern all things in a little time. I had a "thousand proofs of this, and both the Duke of "Malborough and Lord Godolphin gave in at last; "and one thing was very plain, that when the Whigs "were put out and some of them quitted, his message "from the Queen was much civilier than the Duke of "Devonshire's; and after all the Whigs were out he "went oftener than was natural for the head of his "party do doe, at that time; and I know a very "honest gentleman that was very intimate with "my Lord Masham, and spoke of my Lord Somers "with great kindness before the Whigs went out, and "said he did not know why he might not serve the "Queen tho' the others were out; this looked as if the "reports at that time were true that he went to my "Lady Masham; but this I am sure of, that after he "knew I had lost the Queen's favour, which I showed "him myself in a month after he came into the Court. "he left off visiting me, and after I was removed out of "my employments he never came near my house, no "more than if I had had the plague, tho' I had been a master for him and his friends; and we never had any quarrel or the least difference; but when he saw I could do him no more services he thought it righter to court those that had the power. I know a thousand scandalous things as to his double proceedings with Lord Godolphin and my Lord Marlborough, and everybody knows how he deserted in Dr. S's (Sacheverell's? trial)." (1710), Jan. 19. Lord Somers to the Duke of Marlborough. Tells of his conversation with the Queen, who said that her friendship for the Duke was as great as ever. Recommends the Duke to see the Queen. (On this the Duchess writes, "but that which appears most extraordinary is that he should write as if he believed 'her' at that time when he knew the contrary, and 'when there was reason to think he had done the Duke of Marlborough ill offices in order to serve himself.'")

1711, Aug. 28.—Earl of Oxford to the Duke of Marlborough. Sept. 8th The Queen has had a fit of the gout, attended with more pain than usual . . . she is now very well. This has hindered Lord Stair's departure, Her Majesty having resolved to write by him to your Grace. You will learn by this post of the sudden departure of Lord Jersey at 5 on Sunday morning . . . I have delayed mentioning a particular of great moment because I have no cypher to write to your Grace, but I shall reserve the whole to send by Lord Stair. In general it is this: the French made an offer to the Queen of a general peace, and to do it by the canal of England. The Queen's answer was she would enter into no separate treaty, neither should it be transacted here, she had several things to demand for the good and quiet of her dominions, but she was resolved not to act without her allies, and particularly the States. They sent a paper in general promising satisfaction to all the allies, in barriers, in trade, and all other articles: this being thought too general they have sent a man over to explain it: what he says will all be transmitted over by Lord Raby. The Queen is come to a resolution to make the Bishop of Bristol Lord Privy Seal, his ability and integrity your Grace knows very well. I am heartily glad the siege of Bouchain goes on so well.

Draft of reply by the Duke to the above, dated 17 Sept. 1711, Oct. 13.—Copy of a letter in French signed G., to Lord Dartmouth, asking him why he sent a copy of the preliminary articles on the part of France for a general peace, and if they were new preliminary articles which the Queen had actually arranged with France, observing that the Sieur Mesnager had used, in signing, the expression "We, &c. have decreed."

Copies of letters by the Duke of Marlborough to the Lord Treasurer, dated from the Hague, 10 March 1711; 1711, Aug. 10, Sept. 24, Oct. 15, Oct. 22, Oct. 26, Oct. 27, Nov. 10. On that of Oct. 22, the Duchess writes, "I imagine that Mr. Walkin writ these letters, who I believed betrayed the Duke of Marlborough all the time 'he served him, and it is certain L^d Oxford made use of what the Duke of Marlborough writ to the disadvantage of himself and of the allies."

Duke of Argyll (Jan. 23, 171 $\frac{1}{2}$). The King approves marching against Perth.

1716, June 16, Paris.—Lord Stair to the Duke of Marlborough. Your Grace will see that I have writ to Mr. Secretary Stanhope upon the subject of Lord Bolingbroke, you'll see the conditions he puts there, which he thinks necessary to preserve his reputation with his friends, but these reserves don't regard your Grace; he orders me to tell you that he will have no reserves of any kind with you, that he will tell you all he knows, that he will depend upon your protection and be entirely governed by your advice; he will likewise freely tell the King everything he knows, and do everything to deserve His Majesty's pardon; but he would avoid being put into the hands of some persons who may have personal ill will to him, and would give such persons no hold on him to bring him to a public examination before the Council. In my humble opinion his intentions are very sincere to do the King and his country all the service he can, to make amends for the false steps he has made; he speaks to me already with great freedom, and tells me he will give me an account of everything he knows as soon as he hears from England that he may hope for the King's mercy.

1706, May 17, Kensington.—The Queen to the Duke. Congratulations on victory. The Prince desires me to congratulate your great success.

1707, Aug. 25, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke As to what you say, I must either put my business into the hands of 4 or follow 10 measures, I should be glad you would explain yourself a little more on that; for I know no measures 10 has but what were laid down when 40 was here, and I do not know I have broken any of them; for I can not think my having nominated Sir William Daws or Dr. Blackall to be bishops is any breach, they being worthy men, and all the clamour that is raised against them proceeds only from the malice of 18, which you would see very plainly if you were here. I know this is otherwise represented to you, and I believe you have been told, as I have, that these two persons were recommended to me by 4, which is so far from being true that he knew nothing of it till it was the talk of the town. I do assure you these men were my own choice; they are certainly very fit for the station I design them; and indeed I think myself obliged to fill the bishops' bench with those that will be a credit to it and to the Church, and not always take the recommendation of 29 who all the world knows is governed by 26 Now I must give some answer to a long letter 10 read to 17, which he received by the last post from 40. In that I find 41 has said 17 had an entire confidence in 4. I know so much of 17 inclinations that I am sure she has a very opinion of 4, and will never change it without she sees cause; but I wonder how 41 could say such a thing when she has been assured from 17 by me that 17 relied entirely on none but Mr. Freeman and Mr. Montgomery. 40 seems very much concerned at this thing that 41 said, and upon that tells 10, Mr. Freeman and Mr. Montgomery, should speak their minds freely to 17. It is what I desire of all things they would do, for I can't see any other measures to be taken than what has been already laid down; and I am sure 17 has no thought of altering them. I can think of but one thing to be added, which is a resolution to encourage all those that have not been in opposition that will concur in my service, whether they are 18 or 19, which is a thing I wish might be put in practice, believing it would do a great deal of good, and I am sure it is not for 17 service to dissolige anybody In the meantime continue your justice to 17 in believing her intentions are honest, and be assured she will be to her last moment most sincerely your humble servant.

1707, Sept. 11.—Lord Godolphin to the Queen (copy). The liberties of all Europe, the safety of your Majesty's person and of the kingdom, the future promotion of the Protestant religion, and the glory of your reign, depend upon the success of the next session of Parliament, and indeed upon every session of Parliament while this war lasts, to which, except it please God to give a favourable conclusion, your Majesty can never hope to enjoy any settled quiet during your whole reign. This being truly the case what colour of reason can incline your Majesty to discourage and dissatisfy those whose principles and interest lead them on with so much warmth and zeal to carry you through the difficulties of this war? and what appearance will it have, what reflexion will it not cause in the world that all these weighty things together cannot stand in the balance with this single point, whether Dr. Blackall at this time be made a bishop, or a dean or a prebend? Your Majesty I am sure will remember how uneasy the Parliament was about the extraordinary expenses of the war in the last year, tho' that was a year of greater success than had ever been known before; the present is a year of great misfortunes and disappointments, and yet the extraordinary expense, by the pay of the Saxon troops, and the attempt at Thonlon, is greater than in the last; how then can one hope to be supported in unsuccessful irregularities against an inveterate number of men who will hearten and encourage one another from this mark of your Majesty's favour to their friends and adherents, unless there be a considerable majority in either House that will shew a warmth and a spirit to support your Majesty and your administration in all your zealous endeavours towards a good and speedy conclusion of the war.—Begs the Queen to give him leave to retire from business. (With this are 3 pp. by the Duchess in praise of Lord Godolphin. She says, at this time the Queen was under the influence of Mr. Harley and Mrs. Hill, but made all their counsel her own opinion, and assured Lord Godolphin and Lord Marlborough that she loved nobody but them.)

1707, Sept. 15.—Copy of the Duke's answer to the Queen's letter (ante) of the 25th of August. (From this it appears that 10 means the Lord Treasurer and that 17 means the Queen.)

1708, June 22.—The Queen to Lord Godolphin. I write to let you know I have had better success in the elections in Scotland than could be expected after such opposition, and such extraordinary ways used to get an ill election. I send you inclosed a list of the peers that are chosen, and it is very plain from all the accounts that come from Scotland, if it had not been for the industrious endeavours from

MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF

hence, the whole list would have been such as would have voted as I would have them. Lord Sunderland has assured me he has neither directly nor indirectly made use of my name, but at the same time owned he had writ his own thoughts about the elections to some Lords of the Squadron, as they call them; and I find by all his discourse on that subject he intends to continue in opposition to what I think for my service; now though he did not mention my name, I think in effect what he has done is the same thing, for whatever comes from one in such a post on such a subject must be looked upon as done by my approbation; so that I cannot but still resent this usage very much, tho' I have not yet taken the seals from him. I can not forbear putting you in mind of the promise you made to me when I first took this person into my service, which was that if he did anything I did not like, or something to that purpose, you would bring him to make his leg and to take his leave. I need not mention the many instances that are past of his behaviour; you must remember them very well, and I have now given you a very fresh one.

1708, July 22, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke of Marlborough. Complaints of not receiving particular answer to the last of her two letters, "For tho' you say you will serve me as general, but not as a minister, I shall always look upon you as both, and never separate those two characters, but ask your advice in both capacities on all occasions. You seem to wave giving any answer to these two letters I have mentioned, and, after answering my sincere congratulations on your last glorious success, you tell me you think I am obliged in conscience as a good christian to forgive and forget all resentments I may have to any particular person or party. I thank God I do forgive all my enemies with all my heart, but it is wholly impossible in human nature to forget people's behaviour in things so fresh in one's memory so far as to have a good opinion of them . . . I can never be convinced that Christianity requires me, nor that it can be for my service to put myself entirely into the hands of any one party." Gives an account of her interview with Lord Haversham, who told her his business was to let her know that there was a design laying between the Whigs and some great ones to have an address made the next session of Parliament for inviting the Electoral Prince over to settle here, and that he would certainly come to make a visit as soon as the campaign was over; and that there was nothing for her to do to prevent her being forced to do this (as she certainly would) but her shewing herself to be Queen and making it her own act. "I told him I was sensible this was a thing talked of to asperse your reputation . . . but if this matter should be brought into Parliament, whoever proposed it, whether Whig or Tory, I should look on neither of them as any friends, nor would I ever make any invitation, neither to the young man, nor his father, nor grandmother. To this he answered he did not think you had anything to do in this design, but that it was certain the Whigs were laying it . . . I am of opinion that there are designs laying for giving me uneasiness of all kinds, and this I do not doubt is one. Now what I have to say upon this subject at this time is to beg you to find whether there is any design where you are that the young man should make a visit in the winter, and contrive some way to put any such thoughts out of their heads, that the difficulty may not be brought upon me of refusing him leave to come if he should ask it, or of forbidding him to come if he should attempt it without asking; for one of these two things I must do if either he or his father should have any desire to have him to this country, it being a thing I cannot bear to have any successor here, tho' it were but for a week; and therefore I shall depend upon you to do everything upon the other side of the water to prevent the mortification from coming."

July 3, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke of Marlborough. I am very sorry you continue still in the desire you mentioned to the Lord Treasurer of retiring after the campaign . . . but though you are never so desirous to be at quiet, I conclude, till you see in what condition you can leave things abroad and how you find things at home, you can take no resolution, and therefore I will not now trouble you with everything I could say to persuade you out of this melancholy thought; but leave it to you to consider how mortifying a thing it must be for me if ever you put it in practice . . . What you desire concerning Lord Treasurer was not at all necessary, for I have so true a sense of his friendship to me, and so real a value and esteem for him, that if ever anybody should endeavour to do him any ill office, it would have no effect upon me . . . great care must be taken that no cause be given to our friends abroad to think that there is any fear of business going ill in England, and you may be sure I will advise in every thing with those you desire; the partys are such bugbears that I dare not venture to write my mind freely of either of them without a cypher for fear of any accident. I pray God keep me out of the hands of both of them (on the back of this the Duchess writes "a letter of the Queen's to the Duke of Marlborough, very kind, and she desires to be kept out of the hands of either party; but then was advised by those that turned out the Duke of Marlborough and Lord Godolphin. I hope when she wrote this letter she was not trusted with her own affairs.")

[1708], May 4, Kensington.—Having attended a council, and being tired, she will defer answering his of the 9th until the next post.

Copy of a letter by the Duke to the Queen acknowledging hers of the 26th of last month. Agrees that both parties have it too much in their heads to govern. Abuses the Tories, praises the Lord Treasurer, and begs she will lose no time in taking such measures with the Lord Treasurer as may make the next sessions of Parliament enable her for the carrying on of the war, without which all must run to ruin, for the French are so insolent upon the success they have had that they talk of nothing but continuing the war. Says he shall never make court to any of either party.

1708, July 6.—The Queen to the Duke. Compliments on victory.

July 17, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke. Thanks for his two letters, and the pains and cure he has taken in his last great success. "I am very glad to find by Mr. Secretary's letter that he has such good hopes of the new Parliament. I must confess I am of a more desponding temper than he is . . . what you have done will it is to be hoped have some effect upon the parties . . ."

1708, June 18.—The Queen to the Duke. I had thanked you for yours of the 18th by the last post, but that I was then troubled with a sore eye, which made it uneasy to me to write. I heard soon after I had writ to you about your proxy that it was gone, so that it has got there in good time, which was all I was in pain about, for one would not lose the least assistance at such a critical time as this that there is such a mighty struggle, and there is no wonder opposition should increase when one of my own servants is at the head of it, as you will see by the inclosed, which I could not forbear sending you to give you a view of the ill treatment I receive from the person that is mentioned in it: there are larger accounts come to day from other hands, all to the same purpose; it is such a behaviour, I believe, as never was known, and what I really cannot bear, nor what no other I dare say would one minute; but I am willing out of sincere kindness and consideration I have for you to defer taking away the seals till I receive again more confirmation of what the enclosed contains; not that I have doubt of the truth of it; all Lord S's own actions having shown so much of the same spirit. I have told all my thoughts pretty freely to 10 on the subject, and I do not doubt but what he will give you an account of what passed between us, and what his opinion is, and therefore will not say more on a subject, which must be so disagreeable to you, only that it is impossible to bear such usage; and I am sure you are too reasonable, if you consider this matter impartially, to blame me when I send for the seals, and be assured I shall ever be the same sincere and faithful friend to you as ever. (The Duchess writes on the cover "A letter of the Queen about Lord S. and the Scots business, and Lord Marlborough's answer. I understood that Lord S. was misrepresented by the Jacobites, and if he gave any occasion for the Queen's displeasure, it was really for her true interest and the good of England; but at that time she was persuaded that nobody should be chosen in Scotland or anywhere, but such as would blindly obey her directions.")

Copy of the Duke's reply to the above. He acknowledges the Queen's letter of the 18th and 22nd of June, which took such an effect upon my body as to make me very ill, but it pleased God to bless me with such great success as in great measure recovered me . . . I am glad to observe that the impressions which your Majesty seemed to have in yours of the 18th of my Lord S. having made use of your name in his letter to Scotland had been so far set right by the assurances he gave you as to let you see that all possible endeavours had been used from thence to incense you against him; and tho' he may have

"done upon that occasion what your Majesty does not like, yet I beg leave to say with all humility and duty to your Majesty, that I did flatter myself nobody could have prevailed with you to carry your resentment so far against him in my absence as is mentioned in your letters, and to give me so great a mortification in the face of all Europe at a time when I was so zealously endeavouring to serve you at the hazard both of my reputation and of my blood; but tho' any consideration of me were wholly out of the case, I should hope for your own sake you would suspend any further resentment in this one matter, till I have the honour to see you, and opportunity of thoroughly examining and reasoning upon it with your Majesty. For God's sake Madam, consider that whatever may be said to amuse or delude you, it is utterly impossible for you to have more than a part of the Tories; and though you could have them all, their number is not capable of doing you good, no more than their inclination; they can do you hurt by making the Whigs jealous and uneasy, and that is their great aim, for they know that that must have the consequence of dividing the Whigs, and by that means enabling them to cast the balance on the side of those who are and will always be in opposition to your Majesty's administration and government. These things are so plain that I can't doubt but that your Majesty will be convinced nothing can be so fatal to your service as any way to discourage the Whigs at this time, when after the blessing of this victory you may be sure that if you show a confidence in their zeal for your interests they will concur very cheerfully to make you great and happy as I wish."

1709, Oct. 25, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke. Hopes he will alter his resolve to quit her service when the war is over. Defends Masham.—I saw very plainly your uneasiness at my refusing the mark of favour you desired, and believed from another letter I had from you on that subject, you fancied that advice came from Masham; but I do assure you you wrong her most extremely, for upon my word she knows nothing of it, as I told you in another letter; what I said was my own thoughts, not thinking it for your service or mine to do a thing of that nature; however, if when you come home you still continue in the same mind I will comply with your desires. You seem to be dissatisfied with my behaviour to the Duchess of Marlborough. I do not love complaining, but it is impossible to help saying on this occasion I believe nobody was ever so used by a friend as I have been by her ever since my coming to the Crown. I desire nothing but that she would leave off teasing and tormenting me, and behave herself with the decency she ought both to her friend and Queen, and this I hope you will make her do. . . . Since I began this I have received yours by the Duke of Argyll, and have told him he shall have one of the vacant garters, and have enjoined him secrecy.

[1710], April 13, St. James.—The Queen to Lord Godolphin (marked printed, and on the cover the Duchess writes "At this time when the Queen writ to my Lord Godolphin she tells him that she hoped for his approbation in all her actions; but long before this letter did nothing but by the advice of Mr. Harley and Mrs. Masham, and in a few months after this letter she wrote another letter to him, where she ordered him to break the stick, as if she had been angry with him for many years, an account of which is given in "another paper.")

1710, April 15, Newmarket.—Lord Godolphin to the Queen. (Copy). A long letter arguing against the propriety of her having taken the Duke of Shrewsbury into her service.

1710, June 13, Tuesday.—The Queen to Lord Godolphin. Just before I saw you I had sent for Mr. Secretary in order to give him my directions to fetch the seals from Lord Sunderland, and I do not see why the Duke of Marlborough's letter should make me alter my resolution, unless I could agree with him that I had done him some hardship, which I am not conscious to myself I have, and I can't but think all impartial people will be of the same opinion. It is true indeed that the turning a son-in-law out of his office may be a mortification to the Duke of Marlborough; but must the fate of Europe depend on that, and must he be gratified in all his desires, and I not in so reasonable a thing as parting with a man who I took into my service with all the uneasiness imaginable, and whose behaviour to me has been so ever since, and who I must add is obnoxious to all people except a few. . . .

Wednesday morning, 9 o'clock.—The Queen to the Lord Treasurer. . . . I have no thoughts of taking the Duke of Marlborough from the head of the army, nor I dare say nobody else; if he and you should do so wrong a thing at any time, especially at this critical juncture, as to desert my service, what confusion would happen would be at your doors, and you alone would be answerable and nobody else; but I hope you will both consider better of it. Yesterday, in the afternoon, Mr. Secretary Boyle came to me, and I then ordered him to go this morning to Lord Sunderland for the seals, which I think proper to acquaint you with before you hear it from other hands, and to let you know Lord Dartmouth is the person I intend to give them to, who I hope you will approve of.

1710, Aug. 8, Kensington.—The Queen to the Duke. The Lord Treasurer having for some time shown a great deal of uneasiness in my service, and his behaviour not being the same to me as it was formerly, made it impossible for me to let him keep the white staff any longer, and therefore I intend him this evening to break it, which I acquaint you with now that you may receive this news first from me, and I do assure you I will take care that the army shall want for nothing.

Copy of the Duke's letter to the Queen, complaining of the Earl of Essex's regiment being given to Mr. Hill, and reminding her of what he wrote to her the last campaign of the certain knowledge he had of Mrs. Masham having assured Mr. Harley that the Duke should receive such constant mortifications as should make it impossible for him to continue in the Queen's service. Begs she will approve of his retiring. (On the back the Duchess writes, "The Duke of Marlborough's letter to the Queen in 1710, concerning Mrs. Hill and her "worthless brother.")

May 21, Kensington.—The Queen to the Duke. Congratulations on victory.

July 9, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke. Thanks for his news of the surrender of Ostend. "I am sure my Lord Treasurer has before now let you know I left it wholly to you to do what you thought most proper concerning the King of Spain's commission, and therefore I need not say any more on that subject, but that I should have been very glad both for your particular and for the good of the common cause that you had the government of Flanders in your hands. You may easily believe I shall be very willing to grant any request you make for anybody that I can, especially for one that is so near to you and that has shown so much zeal for my service as Lord Sunderland has lately done, but you know very well that it is not in my power at this time to comply with your desire. P.S.—The Prince gives his service to you."

Aug. 11, Windsor.—The Queen to the Duke. You will easily believe the good news Col. Parkes brought me yesterday was very welcome, but not more than hearing you were well after so glorious a victory. . . . The Prince congratulates your great success and safety.

Tuesday evening.—The Queen to the Lord Treasurer. Give my service to the Duke of Marlborough, and tell him I beg whatever great designs he undertakes that he would in the first place take care of his own person.

Dec. 28, St. James.—The Queen to the Duke. Congratulations for the happy and glorious conclusion of the campaign.

Copy of the Duke's letter to the Queen when she put him out of his employment. (Marked as printed in the Conduct, p. 30.)

Saturday.—The Queen to Lord Godolphin. Complaints of a resolution of the Duchess of Marlborough not to come to see her when she is alone. Asks his influence to make the Duchess change her courses.

B 2-33.—Letters to Lord Treasurer Godolphin.

1703, Sept. 20.—Mr. Harley to Lord Godolphin. . . . I find Poe is much oppress'd in his mind with his usage, and particularly the two lords who examined him in Newgate. I do find he lays the harshness he has suffered upon particular persons, and would be willing to serve the Queen. Your Lordship can judge whether he be worth it; there is a private attempt among his friends to raise the 200 marks for his fine; he is a very capable man, and if his fine be satisfied without any other knowledge but that he alone be acquainted with it that it is the Queen's bounty to him and grace, he may do service, and this may perhaps engage him better than any after rewards, and keep him more under the power of an obligation.

1706, Nov. 16.—The same to the same. An estimate of parties.

1707, Aug. 13.—The same to the same. Asks what should be done with Lord Peterborough as soon as he arrives. Should he not give an account in writing of his proceedings, and that being represented to the Committee if not to the Council, and it appears he has acted contrary to his instructions, ought he not to be committed? It is true he will be admitted to bail, but he may be tried by a common jury for a misdemeanour.

It is better to find him work to clear himself than leave him leisure to do mischief. (On the cover the Duchess writes, "Mr. Harley's letter to Lord Godolphin concerning my Lord Peterborough, who was afterwards a minister with him; before this letter he began to hurt Lord Godolphin and Lord Marlborough with the Queen.") 1703, Feb. 9, St. Paul's, a mile out of Rome.—Duke of Shrewsbury to Lord Godolphin. Mentions the late earthquakes. He quitted Rome because of the melancholy sight of processions and scourgings. Mentions an alarm one night, when all the people turned out at night on a pretended command of the Pope saying that Rome was to be destroyed that night.

1703, July 6, n. s. Rome.—The same to the same. Writes in favour of Mr. Vernon, who is in fear of being dismissed from the Prize Office. Mentions a draught of Whitehall which he had sent with a letter containing a remark that if any part of the design pleased, the author desired it might be corrected and sent to the Duke, that whilst he remained there he might begin a new design after he was better informed of Her Majesty's pleasure. (On the cover of the letter of Feb. 9, the Duchess writes:—"The Duke kept a correspondence with the Earl of Godolphin and the Duke of Marlborough, and professed great friendship, but afterwards joined with Abigail and Harley to bring off Dr. Sacheverell, and to destroy the ministry that had done so much good for England.")

1706, July 9, Lisbon.—Jo. Methuen to Lord Godolphin. . . . The treaty with Portugal, and the prosecution of the war with Spain by that means, has made the Archduke King of Spain, put him on the throne at Madrid, and will put him in possession of all Spain and the Indies. . . . The present reason why I think fit to spare nothing and get Cadiz is with regard to the West Indies; by the first express in two or three days I shall press earnestly at Madrid the sending orders and persons of some consideration to all parts of the West Indies, for which purpose I shall offer some of the Queen's ships to go with them, and which to have a good effect must be dispatched from Seville and Cadiz.

1706, July 16, Edlington, near Doncaster.—R. Molesworth to Lord Godolphin. Gratitude to Lord Godolphin for having taken him up, altho' he was once much opposed to Lord Godolphin.

1706, Jan. 23.—The same to the same. Assurances of attachment.

1706, March 1.—The same to the same. 9 pp. on Dr. Sacheverell.

1705, Sept. 18, Hague.—Lord Portland to Lord Godolphin (French). Has advised the Duke of Marlborough not to leave the army for England yet.

1707, Feb. 22, Valencia.—Earl of Galloway to Lord Godolphin. (Copy.) Acknowledges the new commission the Queen has honoured him with, and her commands to continue in the service there.—Says that the King of Spain always agrees with him when he represents anything to him, but never does what he advises him to do.

1705, Sept. 26, Vienna.—Earl of Sunderland to Lord Godolphin. Oct. 7.

Refers to his letter to Mr. Secretary Harley about the project the Dutch and English ministers had formed with the minister of that Court of Vienna for the assistance of the Duke of Savoy and supporting the war in Italy, and that he will see that half of it is fallen to the ground, i.e., the troops of Wurtzburg and Saxony were refused. Hopes that the Queen has given leave to the Duke of Marlborough to come there; his presence is absolutely necessary.

1709, Sept. 26, n. s.—Earl of Mar to Lord Godolphin. Is obliged to the Duke of Marlborough, who has taken more notice of him than he deserves. The French are now extremely civil. They would not give Mr. Cardonnel a passport for him some time ago, but now they offer as many as are asked for, and in a manner blame Villars for refusing them before. Says he has never travelled abroad before, and is loth to think of returning to Britain. He asks Godolphin to get the Queen's leave for him to go to Italy. Professes duty to the Queen and Lord Godolphin.

1710, Sept. 30, Tedworth.—H. Boyle to Lord Godolphin. . . . Thanks for past favours.—The greatest concern I have at being out of employment is the occasion of my requiring it. (On the back the Duchess writes:—"This letter is to Lord Godolphin from Mr. Boyle; he had vast obligations to him for many years when he had the power; but that did not hinder him from using a mean and a base part with the Duke of Shrewsbury and the new ministry when Lord Godolphin was going out.")

1708, Aug. 3, Edinburgh.—De Foo to the Lord Treasurer (Godolphin). In my last I noted to your Lordship the good use I hope I have been making of the humour of the people here, raised by the two public acts of the Government, one the proclamation for a thanksgiving, the other the letter to the royal burghs expressing the care taken of their ships, pursuant to which the ship "Norwich" is come in from the Bar of Timm' to convey their ships thither for London or the Baltick. I think verily such small things as these will in time bring this people to much better temper than they have ever yet shewn, and I shall not cease to improve it all I can to their conviction. I have often hinted to your Lordship that the Squadron have little or no interest here. I think 'tis discovered more evidently in this than in anything, one may perceive a kind of uneasiness among the best sort of people here, lest they should carry their point in England; which apprehensions chiefly rise from the general notion they spread among the people here that all the Whigs in England are with them, and that the Queen must come under their management, as they rudely call it, and which they gathered from letters which they basely shewed about here, of which I formerly hinted something to your Lordship, both of things and persons. Now they talk loudly of a letter from the Earl of Orkney from the army, which reflects upon the Duke of Marlborough, with respect to delays since the battail, and in which they say there is an expression to this purpose, that at last there is a detachment sent to the frontiers of about 15,000 men, but if it had been 5,000 more he could have gone to the gates of Paris with them; but complains they are both too few and sent too late. I am in hope to obtain all particulars of the letter, for they make nothing a secret here, and this insolence, my Lord, makes the people here apprehensive; for while I have assured your Lordship they have no interest and are not beloved here, it is a very just consequence that while their success is in prospect they will be feared in proportion, and indeed the honestest and best and most sensible people here are afraid of them and very uneasy about them. On the other hand it is not very easy to express to your Lordship what use they make of this letter, and how they value themselves upon it, and I am confident (according to what I formerly noted to your Lordship upon that gentleman upon whom they depend very much for making a party by him in the army), I say, I am confident they shall never want a misrepresenter of his Grace's proceedings on every occasion. This, I thought, very proper to lay before your Lordship for his Grace's particular service. They made their cavils at the victory a great while their shift, and now that grows stale, now they are raising exceptions to the conduct of the Duke, and both carry on the same cause. And here, my Lord, I crave leave to offer your Lordship another observation purely my own, and your Lordship will be judge whether it be just or not. It seems at this time, my Lord, very prejudiciall that the public newsmen, particularly the Daily Courant and the Post Boys, and a postscript by the Flying Post are suffered to translate the bluster and form'd stories which the Paris Gazette, the Mercure Gallant, and Gazette à la Main spread over the world. Without question, my Lord, it would be of no little use if a true account of things as we have them could be allowed to be printed in Paris, and it is most certainly of use to them that the glosses they put on their actions, and which serve to delude and to hoodwink their own people, should be spread among us where they want not emissaries to make use of them, pernicious enough to the publick peace. I remember some years ago an attempt was made to translate the Paris Gazette, and I was offered an annual summe to do it, but it was suppress by the Government. Now, my Lord, your Lordship will allow that the Government in vain suppress the publication of that paper, if the Daily Courant shall in every paper translate such paragraphs as serve their cause; for the authors and proprietors of that paper are known to be of that party. If it be objected that these papers cannot be suppress, I shall presume to say of my own knowledge they are a club of 20 booksellers who are concern'd in the paper, and whose aim is the gain of it, and if Mr. Secretary does not send for the author and reprimand him for the printing the French news, and threaten him, tho' they will not refrain in respect of the Government they will for fear of prosecution, which would both ruin their paper and sink the profit of it; and if once the messenger of the press leaves word at the publishers that the Government has ordered him to prevent the publication and to prosecute, &c., tho' that prosecution would not do much, they would immediately submit from the apprehension, and if they did not it would ruin their paper. In one of the last Flying Posts which I saw here they have news from Ghent that all things were very plentiful and cheap in the French camp, and that their army increased every day; when our advisers from the army published that the enemy were very much straightened in their quarters and found it hard to subsist; at least, my Lord, this makes the people believe that the Government, according to the French mode, orders wrong accounts of things to be spread abroad, and that those are the only true accounts. I need not observe to your Lordship what irreparable mischiefs this brings among us here, and how usefull it is to them, especially at this time while a party among the people are so busy endeavouring to put false representations upon every public action. I submit this thought to your Lordship's observation. P.S.—I humbly ask your Lordship's pardon to remind your Lordship of my former request. I confess I ought not to be impatient, but the just concern which I have laid before your Lordship for a desolate family, and considering I have no advocate but your Lordship's meer goodness to me, these are powerful motives; I have lain, my Lord, at the pool for deliverance a long time, but have ever wanted the help needful when the moment for cure happen'd. I most humbly seek your Lordship's help, which with the breath of your mouth can restore the distressed of your faithful servant, who shall ever dedicate his life and strength to your Lordship's interest and service.

C 1-35. 1706 to 170⁷.—Criminalia. Letters, petitions, depositions on oath relating to plots, robberies, libels on the Queen and Prince, &c. Several papers about Claude Band, secretary to Count Briancon having revealed secrets about the Duke of Savoy being to attack Toulon. On 8th January 1708 he was arrested and then escaped, but was afterwards taken, as there is a petition to Lord Sunderland for his release or his liberty in the house where he was confined.

1708.—A bundle of letters by M. Band.

Papers about two rival mayors of Devizes and a letter by G. [bishop of] Sarum to Lord Sunderland about the matter.

C 1-36. 1708 and 170⁹.—Criminalia.

Examinations taken by J. Addison, of Philipppo Gherardini, Tomazo Bianchini, and Giacomo Guaronani, stating who and what they were.

1708, April 22.—Duke of Buckingham to Lord Sunderland. Asks Sunderland to direct a messenger to let Lord Middleton's two sons know that they may command Buckingham's services.

Representation of Dugald Stewart, brother to the Earl of Bute, asking for trial or liberty on bail. "The Duke of Atholl, on noise of the late descent, having been summoned by council letters issued out against him and others in Scotland to compare before the Lords of Council and give sufficient bail for their own, their vassals, tenants, and followers' peaceable and legal behaviour; he sends in his footman with a packet of letters directed to his door and attorney at Edinburgh, desiring him to take advice of his friends how and in what manner he was obliged to find caution. In this packet were several letters of the Duke's enclosed, whereof one was directed to Lord Balmerno, another to the Bishop of Edinburgh, a third to the Lord of Saltoun, and a fourth to Dugald Stewart; the import of all was that his Grace had some time before written unto one Robertson of Stralock, whom he said he had ordered to come to converse with them, and that they might freely communicate their thoughts to him, and on the cover of these letters directed to one Mr. Scot (the Duke's writer and doer), he orders him that in case the former letters were not then delivered he should cause burn them; and that if they were, he would not fail instantly to deliver those second letters. This packet was intercepted and read in Council and then sent to the Lords of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and thereupon warrants were sent down for securing and imprisoning all the persons to whom the letters were addressed, and accordingly they are actually secured and confined. Stewart says he never received the first letter, never received any letter from the Duke, nor ever wrote to him. Has always been loyal. His business (counsel-at-law) will suffer, and his clients. Stralock and Scot are in London."

1708, April.—Ja. Montague (Solicitor-General) to the Earl of Sunderland. Has had a meeting of Her Majesty's counsellors-at-law to consider in what manner it will be proper to proceed against Her Majesty's subjects taken on board the Salisbury. As for Lord Griffin, who stands outlawed in London for high treason committed in the late King's time, remove the proceedings by Certiorari into the Queen's Bench, to which bar he may be brought by habeas corpus, and the court will have nothing more to do than ask him what he has to say why execution should not be awarded against him, and if he has nothing material to insist upon, as we believe he has not, to award execution. As to the other prisoners they must be charged with levying war against Her Majesty and her subjects, and aiding and abetting the Queen's enemies, and be indicted before the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, who are constituted by 28 Hen. 8.—Recommendation to have witnesses who were at the taking of them. This is the advice of Mr. Serjeant Powis, Mr. Serjeant Parker, Mr. Conyer, Mr. Eyres, and the writer.

State of the evidence against the prisoners taken in the Salisbury.—On the 13th of March 170⁷ Her Majesty's ship the Dover engaged a French man-of-war called the Salisbury, for two hours, the French ship gave several broadsides, and next day the Salisbury was taken by one of Her Majesty's ships of war. (Proved by 3 persons.)

The Salisbury was taken by the Leopard, Capt. Thomas Gorder, commander. (Proved by 3 persons.)

John Lord Clermont, now prisoner in the Tower, taken in the Salisbury. (Proved by 2 persons.)

Charles Middleton, Esquire. Do. (Proved by 3 persons.)

Francis Wauchop, Esquire. Do. (Proved by 5 persons.) 19 other prisoners in Newgate.

The main proof wanting is that the prisoners were born the Queen's subjects, for which I have caused inquiries to be made, but hitherto without effect, and without which the prisoners cannot be convicted.

1708, April 24.—Fr. Wauchop to Lord Sunderland. He was Lieut.-Colonel to Burkes' regiment in his most Christian Majesty's service. He understands that the prisoners committed to the Tower are allowed 40s. a day from Her Majesty. Asks that he may be allowed the same and to write to his friends in France.

1708, May 4.—The same to the same. Asks leave to write to his friends.

1708, March 31.—Certificate of the Mayor and other Justices of the Peace of the City of York of the persons to whom they tendered the oath mentioned in the Act for the better securing Her Majesty's person and government, and who refused (35 in number), alleging that they were strangers to it and desired time to consider of it.

1708, May.—Letter to Lord Sunderland by Griffith Rice, Sackville Gwynne, and J. Warter, saying that they had committed to Carmarthen gaol Samuel Davies of the co. of Montgomery (under the 27 Eliz.), a priest of the Church of Rome, he having on the 19th of April last administered the Holy Sacrament according to the usage and manner of the Church of Rome.

1708, May 10.—James Montague to Lord Sunderland. In obedience to the Queen's command he has caused the record of the proceedings against the late Lord Griffin to be removed by Her Majesty's writ of certiorari into the Queen's Bench.

1708, May 15.—The same to the same. That day be caused the late Lord Griffin to be brought before the Court of Queen's Bench, and the Court ordered a rule for award of execution to be drawn up. (He had been 12 years and more in France.)

1708, May 19.—The same to the same. Sends a copy of the rule, and says that the blank for the day and place of execution must be filled in by instructions from the Queen. He supposes the execution will be only by beheading, that is the usual method. (The rule directs hanging, drawing, beheading, and quartering.)

1708, May 24.—William Courtenay to Lord Sunderland, about a proposition for the escape of the prisoners in the Tower.

1708.—Letter by Patrick Scot in Newgate, asking liberation.

June 8, Tower.—E. Griffin to Lord Sunderland. Declares that he has nothing to reveal, and that he never had any prospect but the Queen's mercy.

1708, Sept. 10, Tower.—G. Maxwell to Lord Sunderland. Was no way concerned in the late intended invasion; has been four months in prison. Asks him to move the Queen to let him out on bail. (There is another letter by Maxwell of the same date reiterating his request to be let out on bail.)

1708, Sept. 10, Tower.—Robert Moray to Lord Sunderland. Asks to be let out on bail.

List of convicts in Newgate.

1708, Oct. 19.—J. Warter to Thomas Hopkins, Esq. Has found persons who will prove Lord Clermont and his brother to have been born in England.

1708, Oct. 18.—Deposition of 9 Frenchmen that on the 14th between 12 and 1, about 150 who styled themselves French prophets assembled in the open fields called Hackney Marshes, co. Middlesex. The deponents wishing to see their way of worship came to see them and staid a quarter of an hour; but the French prophets finding they were none of their sort, one Isaac Havy, one of them, declared to the rest that the deponents were none of their friends, and bade them draw their swords, which they had concealed under their coats, which they did, and fell upon the deponents in a desperate manner, and beat and wounded many of them. The prophets carried a green knot under their upper garment, to distinguish them from other persons.

Same day.—Deposition by Marie Charter, that in February last Francis Poincar, a French prophet, told her there was a young prince coming to England in a little time to take his rights, and that the Queen and Prince George should fall in agitation off the throne.

1708, Dec. 28. Farnham Castle.—Jonat. (Bishop of) Winton to Lord Sunderland. Is glad of the order for the confinement of the Bishop of Quebec and his chaplains for their late impudent perverting of Martha Newland to the Popish religion. Encloses depositions from Mr. Rider, of Petersfield. Complaints of a seminary kept in his diocese for withdrawing young persons from their religion and allegiance, and says that he had rescued two young gentlemen of Norfolk who had been stolen from their Protestant relations.

1708, Jan. 15.—Ja. Mountague to Lord Sunderland. Her Majesty wants to know what has been done in the prosecution of Lord Clermont and Mr. Middleton, his brother. He (Mountague) gave directions to have indictments drawn; but then the Prince, who was Lord High Admiral, died, and the commission determined.—When the Earl of Pembroke was nominated to that office I sent to Mr. Walters, the solicitor of the affairs of the Admiralty, and desired him to sue forth another Commission of Oyer and Terminer, and he informs me that the Advocate to the Admiralty has prepared the bill for Her Majesty's signature to the Commission. When it has passed the Great Seal I shall endeavour to get the Commissioners thereby appointed to proceed thereupon.

1708, Dec. 30.—Wm. Pitt to the Secretary of Lord Sunderland. Asking that the usual subsistence might be allowed to the 18 prisoners in Newgate (taken in the Salisbury), they being indebted in 120*l.*, and the sutler not able to trust them any longer.

1708, Sept. to 1708, Jan.—Packet of papers relating to an accusation against certain Justices of the Peace of Cambridge of their listing men and releasing them for bribes.

1707, March 20, Littleharle.—Ga". Aynsley to Lord Sunderland. Has received his Lordship's letter with an order to stop all persons going for Scotland who have not a pass. . . . Last Thursday we seized on Mr. Charles Carr, of Cnattee, in North Britain, who refused to take the oaths, and by his expressions and other behaviour gave just cause to believe he is not well affected to Her Majesty and Her Government. Most of our Papists horses and arms are put out of the way at present, or sold or given away, or pretended to be so.

1708, March 20.—Order signed by Lord Sunderland to keep Charles Carr in custody.

Letters to Lord Sunderland offering information and requesting advertisements in the Gazette.

Letters by mayors about prisoners.

C 1-37, 1709 and 1710.—Criminalia.

1709, June 13, Worcester.—W. Oxon (Bishop of Oxford) to Lord Sunderland. In favour of John Chape, condemned to death for killing one Kemp, a bailiff. (And certain depositions regarding the case.)

1709.—List of convicts at gaol delivery for Middlesex. (1709.) the 28th.—E. Griffin in the Tower to Lord Sunderland asking him to present "this petition" to Her Majesty.

1709, May 21, Bristol.—The Mayor of Bristol and others to Lord Sunderland. Account of 400 persons from Kingswood coming under pretence of demanding bread and committing great disorders.

1709, May 16, Ferry.—Nic. Corsellis to Lord Rivers (who sent it to Lord Sunderland). Above 100 women with clubs in Kelvedon, and as many more at Coggeshall that have come to this place, and several have threatened to fire divers houses, and shoot several persons, by reason they have been dealers in corn to London, on pretence that they make the same dear.

1709, April 23.—The Justices of the Peace of Northampton write about a Romish priest.

1709, April 2.—The Mayor of Hythe and three others to Lord Sunderland, telling that they have seized one who says he is Col. Robert Hunter, Governor of Virginia, landed by a French boat, and seven Frenchmen.

1709, March 28, Newgate.—Capt. Edward Fitzgerald to —, complaining of the behaviour of Mr. Pitt the keeper. (Indorsed "Left on the table by Mr. Addison.") 1709, June 12, East Loo, Cornwall.—Letter from the Mayor and two other persons about some gentlemen in a boat, who left it was supposed for France. They enclose depositions.

1709, June 6, Petersfield.—Jean Eveque de Quebec to Lord Sunderland. Asks that he will send him over to France by the shortest way, and that he will give a permit for his valet to take over his wife.

1709, June 22.—James Mountague, Attorney-General, and R. Eyre, Solicitor-General, to Lord Sunderland, saying that the persons committed by the Mayor of East Loo do not appear to be guilty of any crime for which they may be prosecuted, but think they should be bound over to the next assizes.

1709, July 22, Tower.—Fra. Wauchope to Lord Sunderland. Asking that he may be exchanged for 20 men as Col. Londy was.

1709, March.—Papers about pulling down Dr. Burgess's meeting-house in the parish of St. Clement Danes.

Petitions to the Queen by women condemned to death.
C 1-38, 1709 and 1710.—Letters and papers relating to the poor Palatines.

1709, May 12, Whitehall.—A letter to Lord Sunderland, signed by Stamford, Phil. Meadows, and R. Monckton (Council of Trade). They say that the German Protestants lately come from the Palatinate are in a starving condition, and that several have died of want. M. Tribbeko and M. Rupert, two of the Lutheran ministers, proposing that the medium to provide for the number of 852 persons now here if carefully distributed may amount to no more than 16l. per day, we signify the same to your Lordship for Her Majesty's pleasure.

1709, June 1.—The Council of Trade to Lord Sunderland. Two thousand have already arrived, besides others expected, and many more will probably follow.

Lord Sunderland wrote to the Mayor of Canterbury about them, and the mayor replied that they had not work enough to give their own poor. The Queen gave orders that tents should be pitched on Blackheath, and the Board of Ordnance wrote on the 21st of June, that being informed of the number of Palatines amounting to 6,520, for which tents will be wanting, they have given directions for providing the same, and carrying the same to Blackheath. On the 7th of July 1709 the Council of Ireland (J. Addison among them) proposed that the Queen should send a number of them to Ireland (and it seems from the Queen's letter to Lord Wharton that 500 families were sent), and a correspondence ensued on the subject between Secretary Boyle and Lord Wharton. It was proposed to transport 450 to Scilly. The Corporation of Liverpool took 150, 650 were sent to North Carolina, and 3,000 to New York. More afterwards came over.

1708, May 20, Edinburgh.—De Foe to the Earl of Sunderland. According to your Lordship's orders to apply myself to your Lordship by Mr. Shute, I did the first post after my arrival here write at large to him, to which I humbly refer. But, my Lord, according to the liberty I humbly crav'd of your Lordship, and which I had your Lordship's permission in, I entreat your Lordship's pardon and paces while I lay before your Lordship impartially and in a manner I care not to trust but with your Lordship the particular observations I have made on the state of this miserable nation I am in. I cease troubling your Lordship with apologies and circumlocutions. I know nothing can be more agreeable to your Lordship or more useful to the public services than plain, naked, and unbiassed accounts both of persons and things, and your Lordship shall always find me endeavouring to act the honest rather than the artful part in my accounts. I know, my Lord, all the accounts are full of the steadiness of the people here, especially the Presbyterians, and of those more particularly the west, and it is very true in the gross that it is so, nor is it without its uses to magnify those reports, and much noise I have made about it myself, and much more praise I give them for it here, which I find they are fondest to hear who are most conscious they do not merit it. But, my Lord, when I view more narrowly the past circumstances of the invasion, when I see how much of the present principle has its foundation in the success, how it was procured, how shallow it lies in the affection of the people, how little of the out-of-humour principle is removed by it, how blind, how prejudiced, and how much averse to English government a large party even of our friends are here, I cannot but say the bank the French have received here is a double deliverance, and it is yet unknown in the greatest part of Britain what in this success we are delivered from. I am not treating now, my Lord, of the Jacobite interest here; for though it be in its turn formidable, yet it is visible, it is known, it is to be provided against by open measures, viz., forces and the iron hands of the law. But, my Lord, these poor honest but ill-natured imposed upon people are to be managed another way. They really merit the compassion of the Government, as they are ignorant, abused by others, and led by a certain je ne scay quoy of temper into violent extremes; yet I must acknowledge they merit some concern from the Government. I mean as to keeping them within bounds, and this with respect to public safety. It is most certain, my Lord, that there are party here who have always served themselves of this infirmity of these people, and, the Government having no agents among them, have wheeled them into several excesses, of which the tumult at Glasgow was a manifest example. The diligence of this party, my Lord, is but too successful, and has but too much matter to work upon. In the affair of the Union, they influenced them by a great variety of suggestions needless to repeat to your Lordship; the radicaded aversion to Episcopacy and to the English were the topicks then. The like aversions to the Union are the foundation now, and I am sorry to say, my Lord, this aversion to the Union had politickly enough been improv'd by that party 'till it had wrought the poor people up to a kind of neutrality, a thing as fatal itself as a direct opposition, and it began to be the general answer in the case of the invasion, That it was the effect of this Union, that it lay between the English and the French, and let them fight it out. There was nothing for the honest people, as they called themselves, to do in it. While they were increasing in this temper of neutrality, and perhaps were come to a greater height in it than your Lordship would imagine possible, the French appeared. What temper then began to shew itself, there was so little time between the appearing of the French and Sir Geo. Bing, bring but one afternoon, that little judgment can be made, and yet here are honest people to be found who speak of it with concern enough. Now my Lord, as I am far from accusing this people, so I think your Lordship, who I know will make a prudent use of it, ought to be informed of the most exact and nicest part of this affair, and to know who are the friends of Her Majesty's interest, and who the friends of her prosperity only. Two things have effectually turned the scale here. Success principally and the diligence of the Ministers. And I take the liberty to assure your Lordship that the strength of Her Majesty's interest in this country depends upon the Ministers, of which I have opportunity to give your Lordship other instances hereafter. But in this case it is remarkable to observe what diligence they used to awaken the abused people, going from house to house and engaging them under their hands and opening their eyes to the delusion they had been under, 'till in some parishes where they had been ready to stone their ministers for praying for the Queen they became the most forward against the enemy. And yet, my Lord, these are the men who will refuse the Abjuration, and tho' firm in Her Majesty's interest yet can not get over their scruples on that account; from whence, and my observation of the Jacobites complying with the Abjuration, I humbly offer your Lordship this Northern Paradox, that her Majesty is in danger from those that take the Abjuration and safe in those that refuse it. I am not pleading merit when I take the freedom to assure your Lordship I am not idle, and I hope not unsuccessful in clearing up the doubts and opening the eyes of these good but out-of-humour people. Here is now a new scene of office opened, viz., of elections of members for the Parliament, and in this there are some perfect novelties of conduct, mysteria politica, that are hard to understand. The Squadron,* and as they call them here the Court party, acting against one another. My Lord, I own I may at this distance take wrong aim, but if the gentlemen called the Squadron here act from a right principle, then the best meaning people here are quite wrong; for there is certainly an error in design or in conduct, that party now setting up Tories on the foot of their party in several places against the honestest gentlemen and truest Whigs in the nation. I am cautious of enlarging on this head, 'till if possible your Lordship will be pleased to signifye either directly, if I may obtain that honour, or by any hand that your Lordship think fit, that this reaches your Lordship's hands. According to what I hinted to your Lordship I have writt of this [to] my Lord T—r, yet I humbly refer to your Lordship my former entreaty that your Lordship will be pleased not to communicate to my Lord the favours I have received from your Lordship, least perhaps it may cool the inclination my Lord T—r has been pleased to express of doing something for me. I presume that Her Majesty's interest is the same in the hands of my Lord T—r, and your Lordship, and that it can not be offensive to either that I give equal hints of things of this nature; nor have I any reason for the caution but what I nakedly and honestly give your Lordship, for which I beg your Lordship's pardon, and am, may it please your Lordship, your Lordships most humble and obedient servant, De Foe.

* See Burnet's History of his own Time under the year 1706.

1708, May 25, Edinburgh.—The same to the same. I have endeavoured to pay the debt of correspondence to your Lordship by the method your Lordship directed, viz., by Mr. Shute, but have not the favour of a line from him to signify the receipt of it, which makes me fear it is not come to his hand. Yet I could not satisfy myself with neglecting my duty to your Lordship on so weak an excuse, and therefore resolved to write directly to your Lordship, and on this head I wrote your Lordship the enclosed. Now you will pardon my weakness my Lord in this; were I keeping a foul and false correspondence between this part and England, a serving two masters, which would be in effect betraying one, I should want to engage either side to secresie. But my Lord, my strait is of another kind, and I find no remedy for it but in an open, candid, and honest stating the case to your Lordship, and depending on your Lordship's generous care for me, of which I have had sufficient testimony. I have, since my coming here, from time to time given my Lord Treasurer an account of affairs here in such a manner as I persuade myself shall be exact as to truth of fact, usefull to his Lordship, and for the good and advantage, even of this country too, and I have the honour and satisfaction of his Lordship approving my thoughts on those things. I have no reason to doubt but his Lordship finding me faithful and capable, will, as he shall think I merit, consider either my services or circumstances, and I leave that entirely to God, and his Lordship's goodness. But when I wrote to your Lordship as per the enclosed, and solicit your Lordship not to communicate the secret of my writing to your Lordship, which looks as if something clandestine was acting, a thing which I thank God in all my life I have abhor'd, it has stockt (stop't) my sending it without this explanation, and that has kept me from forwarding it for some days. I don't not my Lord T—r may have communicated to your Lordship what I have wrote, and I kno your Lordship and my Lord T—r are in one interest, and both entirely in the interest of England, the same interest of Truth, Liberty, and Peace, which all good men love and equally honour your Lordship for; and therefore all my concern, my Lord, in this case (shall I acknowledge it), has been my own interest, a thing 'till now I confess I never pursued, and my distress has been here. I hope your Lordship will not let it be said, I speak it with more ingenuity than discretion, that my Lord T—r supposing you support me, should decline what otherwise his Lordship may design to do for me, or your Lordship supposing my Lord T—r, &c., vice versâ. I need say no more, but begging your Lordship's pardon I venture the enclosed, and, laying myself at your Lordship's feet, recommend me onely for so much tenderness in this case as your Lordship shall think I merit. I have but one humble petition to close this matter with, that if it should be acceptable to your Lordship that I should continue to represent the affairs of this country to your Lordship in the best manner I can, your Lordship will be pleased either by a servant, if not doing me the honour of a line from your Lordship, directed to Robert Davis, at the Post House, in Edinburgh, to signify in two words the receipt of this, and what else your Lordship pleases to command. P.S.—I have some other things of consequence to communicate to your Lordship after I have the honour to kno that this comes safe to your Lordship's hands.

D 1-23. 1714 and 1715.—Letters to the Earl of Sunderland and his secretaries, &c., while he was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, from Mr. Addison, Lord Chancellor Brodrick, Mr. Budgell, Mr. Conolly, Col. Coote, Lord Chief Justice Drake, Bishop of Derry, Mr. Delafaye, Archbishop of Dublin, the Lords Justices, Lord Kildare, Mr. Molesworth, Mr. Moore, Mr. Pratt, Mr. W. Stephen, Mr. Sterne, Lord Tyrawley, Lord Tullamore, and Mr. Whitshed.

1715, June.—J. Addison to "Sir" . . . Yesterday the King reviewed the Horse Guards in Hyde Park. His Majesty made so good a figure on horseback was followed by such prodigious numbers of people who press'd about him to kiss his stirrups, and huzza'd with such acclamations of joy and good will, that it is hoped by his friends that His Majesty will take more frequent opportunities of being seen by the meaner sort of his people. One of the mob called out High Church near the King at his going out of the Parke, for which he was immediately knock'd and used very scurvily by the rest. I hear His Majesty was to dine afterwards with Lord Clare, from thence to go to Windsor, the next day to dine with Sir R. Onslow and to return to St. James's on Thursday next.

D 1-33. 1714 to 1721.—The like.

1707, May 10.—R. Steele to my Lord the Secretary. Mr. Burchett informed me he had orders from the Prince to attend your Lordship with a complaint against the article from Ostend in the last Gazette, where 'tis said a fleet arrived to the great satisfaction and advantage of the people there. He says he was directed to take notice of that circumstance by Mr. Addison at your Lordship's order and used Mr. Stepney's very words . . . There is a dissatisfaction also about the late sea fight. Mr. Burchett indeed told me I had better stay until a further account, but such as there was I might have at the office. And it being Mr. Hopkin's and Mr. Addison's opinion that I had before stay'd too long, and that 'twould look as if the Government had a mind to stifle the account, I went to the Admiralty and made a relation from their letters.

1721, March 24, Wendover.—R. Steele to the Earl of Sunderland. On Wednesday I carried the election here by a majority of 71 voices above Sir Roger Hill, and hope I am in a method of continuing member for this place on any future occasion.—Asks Lord Sunderland to send him the like sum he did before, till he can adjust some affairs of his own.

D 1-34. 1716 - 1722.—Miscellaneous letters principally to the Earl of Sunderland, chiefly of an official nature.

D 1-35. 1713 to 1717.—Miscellaneous papers belonging to the Earl of Sunderland.

D 1-38. 1721 and 1722.—Ditto.

D 2-1. 1721, 1722, &c.—Letters by the Earl of Sunderland to Judith, Countess of Sunderland, and a few of her letters to different people.

D 2-2.—Miscellaneous letters without date, principally addressed to the Earl of Sunderland.

The Duchess of Kendal writes (in French) to Lord Sunderland asking him to influence Mr. Mountain to support Mr. Haldane, who was putting up to be M.P. for Clithrow.

The Earl of Carlisle congratulates Lord Sunderland on his being acquitted on the South Sea business.

The Duchess of Hamilton, writing from Sandon, tells how some of her servants entered the house at Gerard's Bromley and took possession for the Duke of Hamilton; the people in the house came upon them and beat them, and rung the great bell on the top of the house, and in a little time above 200 papists assembled, and bound and took her servants prisoners after they broke a door or two and shot at them. She complains of the conduct of Mr. Justice Broughton; she herself was threatened.

Two long letters by J. Shute on the means to prevent the mob from assembling to accompany Dr. Sacheverell to and from Westminster Hall.

A long letter by John Sinclair detailing his part in the Scotch rebellion, and expressing penitence and soliciting the King's pardon.

(1722).—Proposition by R. Hampden to be appointed Ambassador to Turkey when Mr. Staunyan's five years expire; with answers to objections.

Petition (French) to the King by Count Henri de Brandenbourg for assistance. He says that he has only six shillings a day and is in want. (It is accompanied by a letter to Lord Sunderland.)

C. [Bishop of] Norwich to Lord Sunderland about the succession to the see of Worcester on the death of the Bishop, who was not expected to last many weeks.

A paper indorsed "Memoir for the Lord Chamberlain." If dear Hoppe will have the goodness to forgive this trouble I shall be happy. Lord S. Lord Onslow asks Lord Sunderland's assistance towards the expense of an election in Surrey which will be contested.

John Philipps urges the propriety of a Custom House at Haverford West.

Lord Chancellor Parker explains to Lord Sunderland why he did not appoint Mr. Warren to the church of St. Michael in Wood Street. The Bishop of Winton does not think he is fit for it.

The Duke of Rutland writes because "our antagonists" press upon us in Lincolnshire, where they have set up "Sir Jeffrey Palmer and Mr. Maurice and made a purse of 1,500 guineas to support them." Asks Lord Sunderland what he thinks proper in order to gain Lord Denbigh's interest, who will remain neutral, as his mother says, and that will have the same effect as declaring against us. Lady Denbigh said she would do what service she could, but doubted 'twould not be in her power to do much, for as the tenants had leases of their farms it was not in her power to force them, and that her steward had declared he would give his vote against us, and thought her tenants would do so also; but if Lord Denbigh and her do lay their positive commands upon them I dare answer they'll not dare to refuse them.

D 2-3.—Papers and letters relating to South Sea stock, &c.

D 2-4.—Papers relating to secret service and bounty money.

D 2-5.—Miscellaneous papers of all dates belonging to the Earl of Sunderland.

1714, Aug. 2.—Copies of the will of Louis XIV. and of the codicils dated 15th April and 23rd August 1715.

Copy of petition to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations by the mayor, &c. of Norwich, and the headmen, wardens, and assistant of the worsted weavers of the said city, about the bad state of their woollen and silk and woollen manufactures by reason of the excessive consumption of wrought East India goods and printed linsens.

Reasons (in French) for engaging the allied powers to procure for His Royal Highness (the Duke of Savoy) the most ample barrier against France. (19 pp.)

1701. Copy of treaty between the King, the King of Prussia, and the States General, read in Council, 28 Dec. 1701.

Representation (French and English) of Henry Earl of Suffolk and Bindon concerning the office of Earl Marshal, to the King, on the warrant to assign the arms of the late Francis Barrington, of Tofts, co. Essex, to John Barrington, formerly Shute. He objects to the words "without distinction," as Francis Barrington was only a younger branch, and to the quarterings of Barrington being given to Shute, a stranger. He gives a list of the peers' arms which Barrington was entitled to quarter.

Sussex, M. to the Earl of Sunderland.—Notifies that the King has appointed Sunderland to be carver at the coronation.

1710.—Mémoire touchant la paix, remis par les ministres de Savoye à la Haye à M. le Pensionnaire, le 22 May 1710.

A list of the English noblemen and gentlemen carried prisoners by Major Bland:—Northumberland, Earl of Daringwater (Derwentwater?), Mr. Radcliff, Lord Widdrington, and 17 others. Huntingdonshire, Robert Cotton, of Giding, and 2 others. Middlesex, George Budden and 6 others, all of London. Norfolk, Edward Howard brother to the Duke of Norfolk. Lancashire, Sir F. Anderton of Lostock and 10 others. Servants with those gentlemen 54.

Mémoire pour servir de justification aux points qu'on fait contre les Hollandais. It is complained chiefly of two things, viz., that their vessels were not ready at the time they ought to have been, and that they did not furnish the number they ought. Answers to these objections. (6 pp. 44.)

1720, May.—Copy of part of Lord Peterborough's letter to Mr. J. He complains. I contest not with captains or colonels who were under my command 15 years ago by sea and land in Spain. Lord Berkeley commands the fleet, also was then a captain under me. He has acquired no maritime knowledge and experience since that time. Lord Stanhope has also my wishes for supplementing his Irish competitor. Let them renew my commission as General of Marines, and give me half-pay in time of peace as Her Majesty was pleased to do, that amounts to near 2,000*l.* a year; this is a kind of pension, but with a pretence, and what I can receive with honour, and they all allow if there were an occasion for a mixed service by sea and land I should have no competitor . . . If something of this kind be not the consequence of their fair words, I shall give them and Her Majesty no further trouble; there are more countries than one in which I can employ myself and be respected and well used, if not at home.

Des engagements ou le Roy de la Grand Bretagne est entré dans les Traitez faits entre le Roy de France et ses sujets Protestants. (Begins with A.D. 1626.)

(After 1713).—A proposal for the payment of the public debts, and an account of some things mentioned in Parliament on that occasion, and some few hints relating to that subject.

1710, Dec. 23. Report by Edward Northey and Ro. Raymond to the Queen about Mr. William Blencowe, Fellow of All Souls, on the petition of Dr. Bernard Gardiner, Warden of All Souls, who wanted to turn out Blencowe because he did not take orders within the time appointed by the statutes. Blencowe was employed to decypher letters for the Queen, so was his grandfather Dr. Wallis.

Tarbat and Lord Justice Clerk before the Privy Council. She explains why her son, the Earl of Seaforth, was in France; he cannot get his estate in Scotland.

Memoir (French) of different leases by the Crown to the Earl of St. Albans, and the renewals thereof. King Charles II. leased to the Earl Pall Mall Fields, alias St. James's Fields, for a term at 5*l.* per annum, and that lease was twice renewed; the first renewal was for 29 years from Michaelmas 1691, the second was for 20 years, which will cease in 1740. The lease comprises the four streets, Pall Mall, St. James's Street, Piccadilly, and the Haymarket, and all the houses comprised in the said streets, except what the Earl bought from the Crown, which part comprises St. James's Square, the houses of St. James's Market, the two courts to the stables (called the east and west stable yards) and all the side of Pall Mall which goes from Lord Portland's houses to St. James's Street. The Earl also held from the Crown a part of St. Giles's, the lease of which ends with the lease granted to him of St. James's Fields. He has also holden of the Crown Swallow Street and part of Piccadilly, the lease whereof expires about 12 years hence. Lord St. Albans bequeathed the said leases to his nephew Lord Dover, who bequeathed them at his death to the five daughters of Lord Jermain and their children, except the part of the houses which was the dower of Lady Dover.

(Report to the King).—Representation of the proceedings on the petition of Alexander Burrows, Esq., in the cause of Sherlock v. Annesley. It is an argument that appeals from the Parliament of Ireland may not be brought before the House of Peers in England.

Projects and suggestions.—Petitions.—Memoranda by Lord Sunderland.—List of the Emperor's troops in Italy.—Notes of the political qualities of peers attached to lists of them.

Francis Stribblehill, administratrix of John Stribblehill, a mortgagee under John Thynne of Egham, Appellant, and Henry Brett, Esq., and Richard Brett, assignees of Major Brett, Respondent. The Longleat Thynnes have got the rectory of Thame in Oxfordshire of about 550*l.* per annum, and usually grant leases for lives of it to the family of the Thynnes of Egham in Surrey. John Thynne (the grandfather) of Egham had a lease for life. Thomas Thynne, who was shot in his coach, granted another lease thereof to John Thynne, the father. The now Lord Weymouth, on surrender of it, granted another lease to trustees for the life of John Thynne, the father, and John Thynne, the grandson, in trust for John Thynne, the father. John Thynne, the father, mortgaged it to the appellants intestate for 2,000*l.* John Thynne, the father, devised it to raise portions for his children. John Thynne, the grandson, is alive. Thomas Thynne gave a bond for 500*l.* to Mrs. Potter, and a lease for feigned consideration to Major Brett, in consideration that they would procure the marriage with Lady Ogle. Thomas Thynne sued Lady Ogle in the spiritual court to compel cohabitation. She exhibited interrogatories to cross-examine Brett, and disable him by asking him if he had not a gift. Brett surrendered the lease to Thomas Thynne, and then took the oath in the negative. Thomas Thynne then granted a new lease, the consideration being stated to be 3,650*l.*, but no money passed. The Lord Keeper directed a trial at law, with two issues; 1st. Whether the consideration was paid; 2nd. Whether the consideration for the lease was the procuring the marriage, or what other consideration. Mr. Potter's bond had been set aside.

In a letter to the Duchess, the Queen says that the Duke of Leeds had asked her to give something to Mr. Gilden (Gildon?) a poet who had dedicated a play to her, and asks the Duchess how much would be proper.

[1706], July 4.—I am sorry to find the French party have still so much power in Holland as to fill the States with such jealousy; if they knew my temper they would be very easy, I having no ambition after the King of Spain is settled on his throne but to see an honourable peace, that whenever it pleases God I shall dye I may have the satisfaction of leaving my poor country and all my friends in peace and quiet. I can't help being in pain for this accident, but I hope, as you doe, the Duke of Marlborough may find out a proper expedient to compose it. I am very glad all the difficulties in the Union are at end here, and wish with all my heart it may meet with none in Scotland.

[1704], Nov. 17.—I have the same opinion of Whig and Tory that I ever had. I know both their principles very well, and when I know myself to be in the right nothing can make me alter mine. It is very certain there are good and ill people of both sorts, and I can see the faults of the one as well as of the other, and am not deluded by anybody calling themselves of the Church; for God knows there are too many that talk of religion that have no true sense of it, but because there are some hott headed men among those that are called Tories, I can't for my life think it reasonable to brand them all with the name of Jacobit, when without doubt there are as many of them that will be as much for the liberty of their religion and country as any of those who would have none thought see but themselves.—Acknowledges a letter of Mrs. Freeman's with two books of the Bishop of Salisbury.

1708, April 22, Kensington.—The Queen to the Duke. Has been solicited by Lord Privy Seal and Lord Steward to take Lord Somers into the Privy Council without giving him any employment, since she could not be prevailed upon to make him president; she was not convinced by their arguments. That morning she gave that account to the Lord Treasurer who had heard nothing of the matter before, but joined in the two Dukes' proposals, but he did not convince her; she looking on it to be utter destruction to her to take Lord Somers into her service. Hopes Marlborough will not join in soliciting her in that thing.

1708, May 6, Kensington.—The Queen to the Duke. I have been so tyred to day with importunity's that comes from 18 (the Whigs) that I have not spirits left to open my afflicted hart so freely and so fully as I intended . . . I can now only tell you as to what you mention and what 10 (Lord Godolphin) told me some time agoe of your being prest in two conferences for the making steps toward a peace. I am intirly of your opinion, thinking it nether for my honor nor interest, and do assure you, whatever insinuations my enemies may make to the contrary, I shall never at any time give my consent to a peace, but upon safe and honorable terms. Be so just to me as not to let any misrepresentation that may be made of 17 (the Queen) have any weight with 40 (the Duke of M.) for that would be a greater trouble to me than can be exprest.

Princess Anne to Lady Churchill. I am sorry you have so ill luck at dice yesterday. I won 300*l*. but have lost about half of it again this morning.

Saturday . . .—I am not apt to believe all the reports one hears, soe cannot give into the opinion that there are many Jacobites in England, but I 'me as well satisfied as you can be that those that are so are as much my enemies as the papists, and I am very sensible these people will always have designs against me; for as long as the young man in France lives (which by the cours of nature will be longer than me) nobody can doubt but there will be plots against my crown and life; you may be sure I'll take as much care of both as I can, and I should be very glad to know what care my dear Mrs. Freeman would have me take of myself, and what she would have me do. (On the back the Duchess writes "I think in this letter it is plain she does not intend to put herself into the hands of the Jacobites, and I never could observe that she had any scruples about wearing the crown, nor any inclination to those that were in that interest, if she believed them so, tho' she always loved the Torrys, because she believed they would be for her against her brother, and I believe to the last Mrs. Masham's ministers never ventured further with the Queen than to persuade her that it was best for the Protestant religion for him to come after her death.")

Windsor, Saturday.—Is uneasy at the thoughts of Mr. and Mrs. Freeman retiring.—If ever you should for sake me, I would have nothing more to do with the world, but make another abdycation, for what is a crown when the support of it is gone?

Kensington, April 29.—I desire you would order 200 pieces more of Healing Gold, for I intend (an it please God) when I come from Windsor to touch as many poor people as I can before hott weather coms. I do that business now in the Banqueting House, which I like very well, that being a very cool room, and the doing of it there keeps my own house sweet and free from crouds.

Sept. 8.—To Lady Churchill. I have played to day at Court, at Comet, hand to hand with the Duchess of Portsmouth, and have won three score pounds.

E 19.—109 letters by Queen Anne to the Duchess, and one to the Duke.

[1705], Nov. 13.—The Queen to the Duke. The Prince is very desirous of having his niece, the Princess of Denmark, married to the King of Prussia, that I can not help giving you this trouble to desire you try if there be any hopes of bringing it to pass, for I don't unless you can do anything towards it, it will never be compassed . . . The disagreeable proposall of bringing some of the house of Hanover into England (which I have bin afraid of soe long) is now very near being brought into both Houses of Parliament, which gives me a great deal of uneasyness for I am of a temper always to feare the worst. There has bin assurances given that Mr. Shutes should have instructions to discourage the propositions, but as yet he has said nothing of them, which makes me fear there may be some alterations in their resolution at the Court of Hanover. I shall depend upon your friendship and kindness to sett them right in notions of things here, and if they will be quiet I may be so too, or els I must expect to meet with a great many mortifications. (On the back the Duchess writes, "This letter shews the great aversion the Queen had to the King of Hanover.")

he has not much credit with me; to this I answer I am of opinion, and so I believe all impartial people must be, that I have all my life given demonstration to the world he has a great deale of credit with me. The other is to beg you would not mention that person any more who you are pleased to call the object of my favour, for whatever caracer the malitious world may give her, I do assure you it will never have any weight with me, knowing she does not deserve it, nor I can never change the good empressions you once gave me of her, unless she should give me a cause, which I am very sure she never will. I have nothing further to trouble my dear Mrs. Freeman with at this time, but that whatever opinion she may have of me I will never deserve any that is ill, but will always be her faithful Morley.

May 21, Monday night, Windsor.—I must give you a thousand thanks for the concern you express for my safety, and sertinly if I were never so weary of the world I would take care of myself because you desire it. I do not at all doubt of the malice of my enemies, and shall never be surprised to hear of plots ether against my government and myself, for it is what I expect all my days from the young man in France and those of his religion; but I do promis you I will take all reasonable care of your poor unfortunate faithful Morley, and more than that life is not worthy. What you say to convince me of Coupas being false was not at all necessary, for if you remember when you adored her to that degree that it had almost broke my hart, I always thought her a jade. As to Lord Weymouth I think I never differed with you. I have had a great compliment from him which I take as such, and assure you I have not at all the better opinion of any body's great assurances unless I see other demonstrations of their kindness; and what I said concerning 19 was only an answer to what you had said of him. I end this with assuring you with the same sincerity I should do if I were upon my death bed, that I do believe everything you tell me that you know of your knowledge is true, and that I am as tenderly fond of you as ever, and nothing, not even your own unkindness shall ever alter your own unfortunate faithful Morley. (Inside this letter is an extract from it by the Duchess, and note by her where she says that "tho' she seems to be much against his (the Pretenders) plots and religion I fancy she was harkening to the managers for him at that time.")

[1708], Sept. 1, Windsor.— . . . Assurances of friendship.—I hope you will forgive me for troubling you with soe long an account about the Sheriff, but I could not help endeavouring to justify myself what I did by telling you the whole truth, and I think it is always best to stand or fall by that; tho' the D. of S. could not tell, my giving him no other answer before he went from hence, but that I would speak with him another time, proceeded from forgetfulness, yet he might have bin soe just as to have thought, when I had told him I would do a thing, that I would not go from it without giving him a reason, or at least I think he need not have sett such a story about; it can be nobody but he, for I dont know that I opened my lipps of the thing to any body but the Lord Treasurer, except it weare to the Prince; and I am not sure whether I did to him or no. I told the Duke of Sommerset last night that I should now very soon have an opportunity of knighting the gentleman he spoke to me about soe long agoe, for that my Lord Mayour was to come to me with an address upon Wednesday. I hope this will satisfy his Grace, but if it does not I shall not greive, since I am not in the wrong nor will never willing[ly] obdisoblige anybody . . . I hope whatever hard thoughts you may [have] of 38 you will be so just to 65 and 66 as to believe that everything will be don if it is reasonable both as to sea affairs and everything els when it is a proper time. (On this the Duchess writes, "She was angry with the Duke of Somerset who I always did good offices to, tho' hee was very unreasonable and troublesome; but I thought him honest and in the Queen's interest because of his great state. When this letter was writt she was fond of Mrs. Hill, but 'twas then a great secret.")

[1707 or 8], Oct. 14, Windsor.— . . . 18 is soe well satisfied how unfit a thing it is to see 157, that nothing can prevail with them to do it, which I believe very few will find fault with, and if any should, I know 18 does not care. I have been told that the wind has been fair to day to carry the ships to Holland, soe that I hope the convoy is gone for the Duke of Marlborough, that he may not be kept longer at the Hange than he has a mind to; but as much as he and his friends wish to have him in England I hope in God he will not venture in a yacht alone. (On the back the Duchess writes, "The Queen endeavouring to clear herself from

MARLBOROUGH.

"being changed 'The name that she gives herself often
"of unfortunate Morley was made use of at first upon "the death of her son.")

Tuesday . . . —I was yesterday at Berkeley House, which I like very well, but my Lady looked so mightily out of humour that I did not go into all the garrets nor the wings as I intended, and until she goes out of the house it will be impossible to order anything or see it at one's ease; and when she will be pleased to remove God knows. The Lady that has now such a mind to go to the Bath has I fancy spoke to Dr. Ratliff to persuade me to carry my boy thither, for yesterday without my asking him anything about it, he said I might have the child at a house within three mile of the Bath, for it would be more for my satisfaction than to leave him behind me, and the journey could do him no harm. If I were sure these were his own thoughts, and that the journey was not too great for my boy, I should be mightily tempted to carry him, but since Camden House agrees so well with him, and that there is so much reason to believe people considers there own satisfaction more than mine or then they do the child's good. I think I had better be from him five or six weeks then run the hazard of his meeting with an accident that one may have cause to repent of one's whole life. I will not fail to be with you a Monday night unless I hear anything from you between this and then to the contrary. Lord Lexington has been very diligent since his anger was over, and my poor worthy Lord never stirs an inch from me. I find Lady Frestwell and Lord Lex. are fallen out about something or other, for she railed at him mightily one day as she and I were going to church together.

Saturday night . . . —The Prince does not doubt but your Lord has had an account of the fight that has bin in Flanders either from Mr. Churchill or Mr. Godfrey, which is the reason he does not send him the particulars he has heard of it; methinks one can't help lamenting the loss of so many of one's countrymen, tho' one knows but few of them; and I can't help being sorry for Lord Mountjoy for his poor children's sake, who are now fatherless and motherless and I doubt very poor.

Monday morning . . . —I am at this time in a very spleenatick way, for Lady Charlott is not yet come to me, and I doubt if I should prove with child, 'tis too soon after my illness to hope to go on with it . . . One hears nothing talked of but this fight that has bin in Flanders which I find Mr. Morley thinks by what he has heard of it has been managed with the same conduct that the buisness of Limerick that summer he was there.

Friday 11th, Windsor. . . . I am very sorry you think I can treat anything you say as if it came from Mrs. James. I own I cannot have that good opinion of some sort of people that you have, nor that ill one of others; and let the Whigs brag never so much of their great services to their country and of their numbers, I believe the Revolution had never bin nor the succession setled as it is now if the Church party had not joyned with them; and why those people that agreed with them in those two things should all now be branded with the name of Jacobit I can't imagine. Have they not got stakes as well as them? and that if they had nether conscience nor honour would prevail with them not to give into what would be for their destruction; sure that same argument will hold both for Whig and Tory. I do not deny but there are some for the Prince of Wales, but that number I believe is very small, and I dare say there are millions that are called Jacobitts that abhor their principles as much as you do. You are pleased to say, what I say about the succession is what I have bin told from some people here. I do assure you what I ground my poor opinion upon is what I have heard from all the Scotch ministers long before they went into their own country; for as to this particular of Scotch business, according to the best of my remembrance, I have spoke very little to those people you suspect, and that some months agoe. I do agree intirely it would be very good to have succession setled, but since the Union will do that, I must confess I can't see why one should be in greater hast now than we have bin all this time; if that should not succeed, then indeed it will be absolutely necessary. The Whigs were once extremely for the Union when I first came to the Crown, and the Duke of Somerset was one of those that proposed my recommending it to the Parliament in my first speech; but as soon as Commissioners were named to treat, and came up on purpose, then they were as much against it as they were for it before, and the Duke of Somerset was very early at their meetings; and the meaning of this I cannot comprehend. (On the back the Duchess writes, "A "letter of the Queen, which was in answer to one of "mine, in which I had pressed her to make her "ministers in Scotland be for fixing immediately the "succession. She seems to wish it, but I believe was "not then displeased with any delay.")

[1703, Feb., Saturday. . . . The Parliament is at last up, and now that the Prince's Bill is past, whenever it pleases God to take me out of this world I shall dye in quiet, which I should not have done if I had left him unsetled.

July 5, Windsor. . . . What you said concerning Mr. Graham and Mr. Seymour seemed soe reasonable to me that I was really ashamed to say anything on that subject till I could give you a more positive answer than I had hitherto don, and I can now tell dear Mrs. Freeman that the first of those gentlemen has had his sentence, and the other will have it very soon. As for the other matter, that is of more consequence. I can't tell you it is don, but I do not doubt but it will be compassed. (On this the Duchess writes, "About the removing two men that had done wrong in Parliament, which was thought advisable, because it made room for Mr. Masham, &c.") [1706] June 13, Windsor. —I cannot lett Lord Stairs go without giving him a letter, & assuring you as soon as it is convenient for my affairs I will do for him what he desires; and, indeed, I think I owe it to him, he sortly having lost his election in Scotland by being at that time doing his duty in Flanders. We have had the satisfaction to-day of hearing more good news by way of Ostend, and I hope to-morrow we shall have it confirmed from you, and that I shall have another letter to thank you for by the next post. I was shew'd a letter the other day by a freind of yours that you writt just after the battel, and I must beg that you would explain to me one expression in it. You say, after being thankful for being the instrument of so much good to the nation and me if I would please to make use of it. I am sure I will never make an ill use of so great a blessing, but according to the best of my understanding make the best of it I can, and should be glad to know what is the use you would have me make, and then I will tell you my thoughts very freely and sincerely.

[1709] Saturday evening. . . . You are pleased to accuse me of several things in your last letter very unjustly, especially concerning Masham. You say I avoided giving you a direct answer to what I must know is your greatest uneasiness, giving it a turn as if it were only the buisness of the day that had occasioned your suspicion. What I told you in my letter is very true, and no turn as you are pleased to call it. It is very true I had, the minute before you came into the door, sent for Masham to com to prayers, she being in waiting; and as soon as you were gon I went to publick prayers, and the minute they were over went into my closett to make an end of my privat ones, and did not see Masham again until I went to supper; and I did not think necessary when I writt last to trouble you soe much on this subject, hoping you would have beleevd the short answer I then gave you. (On this the Duchess writes, "About Mrs. Masham, after she had used me very ill, to make me goe away before Mrs. Masham came.")

Oct. 27, Windsor. . . . I am pretty well after my journey, and hope keeping quiet these 3 or 4 days will enable me to beare the fatigue of the birthday, which, tho' there be no ball will be a great one to me, who is a creple, and inclined so much to vapours as I am. I have read the letter you gave me yesterday, which is as ridiculous as the poor little man himself, who, tho' he is very good, is so great a fool that, if I had never see much interest, I would never advance him one step higher; but I leave my answer to dear Mrs. Freeman to be put into better words.

Monday. . . . Ten thousand thanks for the deare ring, which methinks is very pretty, but 'tis a little to big. I have given it to Mr. Murar to do something to, and he promises to let me have it againe to-morrow. When I have onc got it on my finger we will never part; and oh! that my deare Mrs. Freeman could emagin how much I value any mark of her fayvour, but that's impossible. . . . I suppose you have heard of Lord Nottingham being turned out, for it has bin talked on these three days, but they say the seals were not taken from him 'till this morning.

Wednesday, past 4 o'clock. . . . I always took it for granted that Mr. Methuen was to have the title of Ambassador Extraordinaire, as I told Lord Treasurer this morning when he read a letter to me from Lord Nott. on that subject, and I believe by this time he has writt to him to let him know that I would have Mr. Methuen have the title of Ambassador Extraordinary; so you may lett him know it shall be don.

Tuesday.—Sir Benjamin tells me Lady Berkley was mightely out of humour when she was at your lodgings at the Cockpit, and when he mentioned removing to her she said, "Alas, how can I remove, heare's no room " for me; this is only an apartment for my son and my " daughter," and pressed mightely againe to have the Prince's lodgings for herself. . . . I will not prsse her any more about going out of her house, for she must leave it in a month by the articles, and I wish I was in it, that there might be an end of all these disagreeable disputes. . . . Our fleet is come back againe to Portsmouth, whither I am told Lord Nottingham, Lord Sidney, and Lord Rochester are sent.

E 20.—A bundle of letters from Lord Treasurer Godolphin to the Duchess of Marlborough, without date of year. He was aware of the correspondence in E 19, and had to explain to the Queen the true reading of a word in one of Mrs. Freeman's (the Duchess's) letters.

E 21, 1712-1724.—The Earl of Godolphin's letters to the Duchess, and some not dated.

E 22, 1725-1728.—Letters from the Earl of Godolphin to the Duchess.

E 24, 1734-1743.—Ditto.

E 25.—Letters to the Duchess by Mr. Maynwaring, with copies of letters to the Queen by him.

E 26.—Letters to the Duchess by Mr. Maynwaring.

E 28.—Ditto.

E 29, 1709 and 1710.—Letters to the Duchess from Mr. Maynwaring (Politics and Court Cabals).—1712, Letters from Dr. Garth and Mr. Maynwaring's sister and James Craggs about Mr. Maynwaring's illness.

E 30.—Letters to the Duchess from Dr. Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury, Mrs. Burnet, and Sir Benjamin and Lady Bathurst. (These I did not see.)

E 31.—Letters to the Duchess from Mr. Fyshe, with papers relating to the expenses of Mr. Charles and Mr. John Spencer.

E 32.—Letters to the Duchess from Sir John Vanbrugh, and some to the Duke, about Blenheim.

E 33.—Letters to the Duchess from Lady Dillon and Lady Kingsland.

E 34.—Letters to the Duchess from the Duke of Somerset.

E 35.—Letters to the Duchess from Mrs. Boscawen and Mr. and Mrs. Clayton.

E 36.—Letters to the Duchess from the Earl of Galloway, Lord Stair, Lord Halifax, and Lord Peterborough.

E 37.—Letters to the Duchess from Lord Chesterfield, the Emperor Charles, Princess Sophia, Princess of Wales, Lord Nottingham, Lord Finch, Mr. Finch, Lord and Lady Carlisle, Mr. Craggs, junr., Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, Duchess of Somerset, Duke of Chandos, Duke and Duchess of Athol.

E 39.—Letters to the Duchess from Lord and Lady Bristol, Lady Longueville, Duchess of Monmouth, Duchess of Ormond, Lady E. Southwell, Lady Mohun, Mr. and Mrs. Griffith, Lady Rich, Essex Griffin, with some letters of Lady Rich to Lady Diana Spenser.

E 40.—Letters to the Duchess from Lord and Lady Clarendon, Lord Cornbury, Lord Chancellor Harcourt, Lady Harcourt, Lady Hyde, Lady Knightly, Lord Chancellor Macclesfield and Lord Rochester. (Chiefly relative to the expenses of Blenheim and the suit on the Marlborough property.)

E 41.—Letters to the Duchess from Lady Burlington Lord and Lady Clancarty, Lord Coningsby, Lord and Lady Delawarr, and Lady Scarborough.

E 42.—Letters to the Duchess from Mr. Glover, Mr. Pope, Mr. Mallet, Lord Marchmont, Dr. Doddridge, and Stephen Duck.

Alexander Pope to the Duchess.—Your Grace will excuse this short note. I was in town from Saturday last, and must be there again, (I fear) for two or three days more about a troublesome business of a relation of mine. I am not certain what day I shall be sent for, which makes me unwilling to name one, but I think I can come from Wimbledon to London some day next week, of which I will advertise your Grace. I will not go to Bath while you stay there, that I may have the more opportunitie of seeing you. I send the green book with many thanks by the bearer, which I have read over three times. I wish every body you love may love you, and am very sorry for every one that does not.

Sept. 5, London.—The same to the same. I have found it out of my power to get to your Grace from hence; therefore if you please to send for me to Twitnam on Tuesday evening, or to come thither any time that day I will be wholly in your disposal. Your Grace will find me upon further acquaintance really not worth all this trouble, but a little common honesty and common gratitude, for both which I have been often hated and often hurt. But if I preserve or obtain the good opinion of a few, and if your own in particular is added to that of those few, I shall be enough rewarded and enough satisfied.

1743, Aug. 6, Bath.—The same to the same. Your Grace will look upon my letters as you do upon my visits; whenever I have a clear day, or when less dull than ordinary, I have an impulse that carries me to you, mind or body; I do not go or write so much to speak to you as to make you speak to me. If I am awake you enliven me, and if I nod you indulge me. I hope what I said about writing no more under Mr. Allen's cover (where I think yours was opened), will not prevent your favouring me under Lord Chesterfield's. I am returned again to Bath, and find he has not heard from your Grace; but I hear you live, and I hope with all the spirit with which you make life supportable both to yourself and those about you. You will neither live nor die like W——n, who wanted the heart to pity either his country or his servants, and had equally no sense of the public or private obligations. God help him (if he will) that help'd nobody! Much less had he learnt the trick some people have contrived of making legacies in his lifetime. The Scripture has a fine expression upon charity,—he that gives to the needy lends to the Lord; and one may say of friendship,—he that gives to the worthy has a mortgage upon merit, on the best of all worldly security. I shall soon be upon the wing for London. I wish indeed it could be on the wing literally, for every earthly carriage is too rough for me; and a butterfly tho' as weak as a grasshopper has the better of him by having wings. I have been trying the post-chaise to get the sooner home, but it is worse than a waggon for jolting, and would send my soul a longer journey than I care for taking as long as two or three people remain in their bodies. When I arrive at London I will endeavour to set up my rest there against winter, and constantly keep my hive, tho' not an assembly, for I hate a buzz and will drive out drones. I didn't call those that sleep so, but those that go droning about and do nothing, no sort of good at least, tho' they look bigger than the rest of their species and only plunder the flowers without making honey and rob others who can make it. But I'll say no more of these great ones. God hates them and you hate them, that's sufficient. P.S.—As you seldom receive any letters that do not first or last beg something of you, I beg you will order your keeper at Blenheim to send a buck to Bristol, directed to the Honourable Mr. Murray at the Hot Well. Not Mr. Murray who is so like Tully as to plead now and then in a bad cause, but a brother of Lord Ellibank, and your petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

Thursday.—The same to the same. I can't express to your Grace the satisfaction the reading of your papers gave me, as they are now dressed, as you call it. When the remainder is ornamented a little in the like manner they will certainly be fit to appear anywhere, and (like truth and beauty) conquer wherever they appear. Thus you have my judgment and advice in one word which you asked and (which is more than you asked) under my hand. I have again been forced (it is always force upon me) to be in London. I am now at Twitnam, and at your Grace's service on Saturday. I name the first day, tho' I believe not alone, for towards evening I expect Mr. Murray who stays and passes Sunday here.

Thursday night.—The same to the same. Your Grace's remembrance is doubly kind. I am still at Twitnam, but my friend comes whom I expected yesterday, and we set out next day I believe. I shall leave this place with true regret, but as you said you liked it so well as to call here in my absence, I have deputed one to be ready to receive you, whose company you own you like, and who I know likes yours to such a degree that I doubt whether he can be impartial enough to be your historian. Mr. Hook and his daughter (I hope) will use my house while your Grace is at Wimbledon. You see what artifices I use to be remembered by you.

DUKE OF
MARLBOROUGH.

DUKE OF MABL-BOROUGH.

May the 13th.—The same to the same. I promised your Grace to acquaint you of my comings and goings, and all I meant was to keep my word, and merely to offer myself as an idle man whenever you should chance to be an idle woman. I find you however a very considerate one in your obliging memory of my infirmities. I wish heartily your Grace had none of your own to put you in mind of those of others, and that it is as pure goodness in you, now, to forgive my weaknesses as it was heretofore when you forgave what you might justly have been offended at. You are the only great lady that might have been angry at me and would not. So I must confess you to be candid and considerate from first to last to me. In allowing me one liberty you allow me all I want and ask. In that you are willing to leave me your equal, and all the difference is that you must be independent in a great fortune and I will be so with a moderate one. And those that would take it from me would take it from you if they could, which God of his infinite mercy prevent, and so ends my prayer for your Grace. I think it will be a fortnight before I shall be in the way of troubling you, but perhaps it would be better not to do it 'till you send me a day or two's notice, which shall at any time bring me from Twitnam.

1741, Aug. 13.—The same to the same. I desire to address your Grace with all simplicity of heart like a poor Indian, and prefer my petition to you with an offering of my best fruits (all I am worth, for gold and silver I have none tho' the Indians had). Accept, therefore, of these pine apples, and be so good as to let me follow them to Wimbledon next Sunday (for the day after I am to entertain some lawyers upon venison, if I can get it). I will trouble your Grace's coach no further than to fetch me at whatever hour that morning you like, and if you please I will bring with me a friend of my Lord Marchmont's and therefore of yours and mine. I have provided myself of some horses for my own chariot to bring me back. I could not postpone any longer this pleasure, since you gave me some hopes it was to lead to an honour I've so often been disappointed of, the seeing your Grace a few hours at Twickenham in my grotto.

n.d.—The same to the same. I can say nothing to your Grace that is pretty or in the way of a wit, which I thank God was never the character of me in my writing. But I honestly thank you; you are directly kind to me, and I shall love you. This is very ill bred, but it is true and I cannot help it. The papers you favoured me with shew so much goodness, and so much frankness of nature, that I should be sorry you ever thought of writing them better, or of suffering any other to do so. In a word your conquest will be complete over me, but you conquer a cripple that would follow you, but cannot. You are the last person that shall ever see him sleep, tho' he has been, some years, fast asleep to all other great people. If your Grace dares to try next Saturday how long he can talk, at least in his own chair, pray come at any hour and see. I am to be from home till then, and then indeed Mr. Hooke and his daughter are to be here; so that if your Grace likes me best alone, I will wait for this pleasure any other day after Sunday, and will then return into your hand the very obliging deposit you intrusted me with, and which I esteem as I ought, a particular mark of the friendship your Grace honours me with. P.S.—It is so late, and my eyes so bad towards night, that I beg you to excuse what is hardly legible to my own. I hope in God it is more legible to yours, even at your age.

n. d. Saturday.—The same to the same. Your letter is too good for one to answer, but not to acknowledge. I confine myself to one particular of it. I don't wonder some say you are mad, you act so contrary to the rest of the world, and it was the madman's argument for his own being sober, that the majority had prevailed and had locked up the few that were so. Horace (the first of the name, who was no fool), has settled this matter, and writ a whole discourse to show that all folks are mad (even poets and kings not excepted), he only begs one favor, that the greater madmen would spare the lesser. Would those whom your Grace has cause to complain of, and those whom we have all cause to complain of, but do so, not only you, and I, but the whole nation might be saved. Your present of a buck is indeed a proper one for an Indian, one of the true species of Indians (who seeks not for gold and silver but only for necessities). But I must add, to my shame, I am one of that sort who at his heart loves bawbles better, and throws away his gold and silver for shells and glittering stones, as you will find when you see (for you must see), my Grotto. What then does your Grace think of bringing me back in your coach about five, and supping there, now the moonlight favours your return, by which means you will be tired of what you are now pleased to call good company, and I happy for six or seven hours together? In short I will put myself into your power to bring, send, or expel me back as you please. P.S.—The friend of Lord Marchmont is yours already, and cleared of all prepossessions, so that you can make no fresh conquests of him as you have of me.

n. d.—The same to the same. Your Grace might almost think I told you the thing which was not, and which the very horses in Gulliver's travels disdain to do. But the truth is, the day after I sent to your Grace when Lord Marchmont was with you, I was taken so ill of my asthma that I went to Chelsea to let blood by my friend Chelselden, by which I had found more good than by any other practise in four months. But at my return to town I was worse and worse for the two or three days I staid there, and still unable to venture out to you even so little a way as from Lord Orrery's. I was unwilling to inform you how bad I was, and am unwilling to inform you how bad I am still, tho' I've again let blood and taken a hundred medicines. I am become the whole business now of my two servants, and have not, and yet can not stir from my bed and fireside. All this I meant to have hid from you by my little note yesterday. For I really think you feel too much concern for those you think your friends, and I would rather die quietly, and sink out of the world, than give any good heart much trouble for me living or dead. The first two or three days that I feel any life return I will pass a part of it at your bedside. In the meantime I beg God to make our condition supportable to us both.

n. d.—The same to the same. Your Grace may believe me that my uncertainty is what I cannot help, and that I wish firmly to have been sooner with you. But I have had some concerns of Mr. Warburton to manage in town, and others of my own absolutely needful before my journey; and I am so infirm (as you but see too well) that I can't do business or pass from place to place so easily as others. Have put off my journey as late as possible so that I will yet have some days with your Grace. I am almost sorry you are so kind to me. I can be so little useful or agreeable from one unlucky circumstance or other, and so imperfectly show you my sense of what you do for me, that I am ashamed to be what I cannot help. The thing that God made me. If you send on Friday, so as we may come in the afternoon the same day, I will not fail, nor will Mrs. B., I'm sure, if possible, for she is perfectly sensible of the distinction you honour her with.

n. d.—The same to the same. I am not so sorry I could not have waited on your Grace as yet, as Mrs. Blount will be to be disappointed of shewing you it is to yourself and not for any one's company that she desires to come. Indeed she was very uneasy not to have done it sooner; tho' both then and now she is in very bad health. Lord Chesterfield and I will be with your Grace by dinner, if I understood him rightly, and perhaps stay all night. As to lodgings, I care not where I lodge so it be under Heaven's and your protection. P.S.—I have sent your servant to Thistleworth, in case my Lord Ch. be returned from Essex, for an answer to your question.

Thursday morning.—The same to the same. I wish your Grace were younger and I stronger by twenty years, and if we could not dine out boars (doors?), we might at least plant vines under which we and our posterity might sit and enjoy liberty a few years longer. As it is we can enjoy nothing but friendship (the next great blessing to liberty), if any will last so long as our lives. I really think your Grace has brought about one that will (if not two or three), and I can assure you your new lady, if once fixed, is unalterable, as I have experienced for above 20 years, tho' I never once did her any real service only for meaning it. I fear Sir Timothy cannot part from his child this week (who has left all her swaddling clothes behind her in a ship that has not yet arrived). I would have made you a day's visit myself (for I like you very well when you are alone,) and returned to Mr. Allen, who comes to Twitnam again this week for three days, but it happens that a very particular friend of mine (an eminent divine of the Church of England) comes to Twitnam to-morrow and leaves me then. But notwithstanding my regard to divines such as he, I think your Grace's ghostly father, Socrates, ought not to be changed for the best of them. Before the end of next week, or as much sooner as I can, I shall trouble Mr. Dorset and all his horses. In the meantime let it not be a trouble to your Grace to let me know by one line how you proceed doctress in divinity in Plato. P.S.—I ought not to forget telling your Grace how extreme kind my friend Allen took your order for Bucks; but he will extend it no further than one, this year. If all his family were not with him he would have waited on you and paid you his thanks.

Oct. 13, Bath.—The same to the same. I can tell you, Grace nothing of myself so well worth your notice, or so much to my advantage, as that which the inclosed paper will shew you; that I am as mindful of your commands, absent or present, and as much your faithful servant at Bath as at Windsor. The inscription is the very best I can do in this sort of writing, which requires to be so short and so plain. If it can be mended, it must be by Mr. Hooke; but I will venture to say any wit would spoil it. And a writer of plain sense and judgment is as rare to be met with as a woman of plain sense and judgment. I hope you are as well as I left you. I am not, because I have left you, and I will add no compliments because I am truly yours.

n. d.—The same to the same. I found myself sorry to have left you, the moment I grew into better health, as I did this afternoon. Mrs. Blount happened to own her desire to wait on you to Lady Fanny Shirley, who immediately proposed to carry her on Friday and lye a night; but as she, Mrs. B., meant to stay longer, and was not certain whether two together would be quite so convenient to your Grace, she has put it off, and I am glad of it, because we may come together next week, when I intend to stay out all my time with you, and I am sure she will have the same desire. I say I am sure of it, because she tells me so, and she never says a word that is untrue. I think I can be certain of waiting on your Grace on Tuesday, but I'll write in time.

Dec. 22.—The same to the same. It is so long ago as when I was at Bath that your Grace wrote me word that as soon as you was well enough to let me have the pleasure to see you, you would acquaint me. At my return to town Mrs. Blount (who had sent some times to inquire during your illness at Marlborough House) gave me the satisfaction to hear you was better, what Mr. Hook also confirmed. I have ever since been in hopes of a summons from your Grace; but instead of that you have loaded me with presents, which make my friends happier than myself; for without any compliment you may believe I love you better than your venison. Mrs. Arbuthnot and Mrs. Blount pay you their hearty thanks; I pay you imperfect ones, and can pay you no other 'till I see you at Windsor; tho' your bounty has enabled me to make a great figure at Twickenham these holidays, when I am to have two or three friends. Is not that a great number? I hope they are honest men, but that is almost presumptuous. I hope to see better days next year if, for a beginning, your Grace will permit your poet to bring his ode along with him on the 1st of January. I am, present, or absent, with the truest wishes for your ease and welfare, always, &c.

Jan. 18, London.—The same to the same. It has been and still is a thing of great concern to me to find your Grace still unwilling (I should rather say unable) to come nearer us, and that you will not suffer me to come nearer you. Had you sent away Sir Timothy only to recall another, it had been a natural change in a lady (who knows her power over her slaves, and that how long soever she has rejected or banish'd anyone, she is sure always to recover him). But to use me thus—to have won me with some difficulty, to have bow'd down all my pride, and reduced me to take that at your hands which I never took at any other, and as soon as you had done this to slight your conquest and cast me away with the common lumber of friends in this town—what a girl you are! I have a mind to be reveng'd of you, and will attribute it to your own finding yourself to want those qualities which are necessary to keep a conquest when you have made one, and are only the effects of years and wisdom. Well, if you think so well of yourself, leave me off. I could indeed have endured all your weaknesses and infirmities but this. I could indeed have been happy in contributing any way, tho' but for an hour in a day, to your amusement, and have gone to sleep all the rest (unless Dr. Stephens would have been so idle as to leave his other anatomies for my company now and then). But to be more reasonable in my demands, I beg at least, if your Grace do not speedily return, to know if you intend to stay for any time? or at all events to be informed more satisfactorily than I can be from your porter of the true state of your health. I shall only add I sincerely wish it better than my own, and you younger than I, that the tables may be turn'd, and I leave you a legacy at my death. If I had thoughts of casting you off I would give it you now in my lifetime, and so bid you farewell; but God forbid that your Grace should ever meet with such use from, &c.

Saturday, Twitnam.—The same to the same. I hop'd to have seen your Grace once more before my journey to Bath, which I find since must be so soon as to-morrow evening or Monday morning. I hate to take leave, and so I should were I to go out of the world, otherwise than by a written will in which I commit my soul to God and my friends at parting. Both your Grace and Mr. Allen have done for me more than I am worth; he has come a hundred miles to fetch me, and I think in gratitude I should stay with him for ever, had I not an equal obligation to come back to your Grace. I feel most sensibly not only kindnesses done me, but intended me, and I owe you more than I dare say you remember. First, I owe you my house and gardens at Twitnam, for you would have purchased them for me when you thought me fond of them. Secondly, I owe you a coach and horses, notwithstanding I fought you down to an arm chair, and the other day I but named a house in town, and I saw with what attention you listen'd to it, and what you meant by that attention. But alas! that project is blasted, tho' a little one, and disappointed by its being, tho' so little, too good for me. For upon enquiry it cannot be bought for less than double what I was told, and I believe I shall sit down in another (in which I am determined to sleep as well tho' not half the price) a house not unlike myself, pretty old and very crazy, yet possible enough to outlast me with a little repair, and no bad bargain for my heirs, so cheap I may buy it with no imputation on my prudence. It will be laying out my own money well. So that let your Grace mean me whatever good you will, at present I only desire you to send me a new order for Janette Mowat who will want a house and home more than I. You were pleas'd to give my friend Allen an order last year for two bucks, which I think were to be claim'd again this year as you worded it, pray tell me if that was your intention or not. What can I say to your Grace? You think the same things, read the same books, like the same people that I do. I can only wish a thing I can not doubt that you will continue to do so. Be but so good to like me a little and be assured I shall love you extremely. I won't subscribe my name, that I may not be thought a very impudent arrogant fellow. But if you forgive me pray write to tell me as much, and I will declare myself to all the world for your devoted servant.

Jan. 19, Twitnam.—The same to the same. I said nothing to your Grace of patriots, and God forbid I should. If I did I must do as they do, and lye, for I have seen none of 'em, not even their great leader, nor once congratulated any one, friend or foe, upon his promotion or new reveal'd religion or regeneration, call it which you will, or by the more distinct and intelligible name, his new place or pension. I'm so sick of London in her present state that in two or three days I constantly return hither. I shall stay no longer there 'till you come, and then I promise you a day or two more whenever you demand them. I truly am concerned at the account of your uneasy ailments, all I wish either my friends or myself is more ease, not more money, which I think beyond a certain point ruins all ease and makes people either poor or mad; both which I take to be the case of the ignoble Earl you mention. I fear what your Grace has heard about him is not true; but it would be exemplary and a useful lesson to the world if it could be litigated. I can assure you you are not only as well with Sir Timothy as possible, but his heart is uneasy in the fear he is not so with you, nay he is almost suspicious that I am better with you, and is as jealous as the devil at my writing to you. His heart is as good, and his spirits so low, that he deserves double indulgence, and I really wish you would shew him you are as good to him as you are; for any distinction of that kind would make him happy; for my own part I desire no greater pleasure than to meet again all together and see your Grace well enough to enjoy the conversation without one knave or fool to vex you either within or without your doors.

1742, April 3, Northampton.—P. Doddridge to the Duchess. He mentions a note on Machiavelli by the King of Prussia where he "refers the whole fate which "turned on your Grace's breach with the Queen, or "rather hers with you to a contest between Her "Majesty and your Grace about a pair of gloves." He mentions "the reconciliation reported to have been "effected between Her Majesty and your Grace just "before her death, which your arrival at London with

E 57.—Ditto.

E 59. 1759-1761.—Letters to and by Elizabeth Duchess of Marlborough.

E 60.—Letters to Caroline Duchess of Marlborough from Dr. Moore, Archbishop of Canterbury.

E 61. 1782-1804.—Letters to the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough from various persons.

E 62.—Letters from Royalty.

1786, Aug. 29, Windsor.—King George III. to the Duke of Marlborough. Sends him a 10 foot telescope by Dr. Herschell, who will bring it.

1783, Dec. 29, Windsor.—The same to the same The times are of the most serious nature, the political struggle is not as formerly between two factions for power, but it is no less than whether a desperate faction shall not reduce the Sovereign to a mere tool in its hands, though I have too much principle ever to infringe rights of others, yet that must ever equally prevent my submitting to the executive power being in any other hands than where the Constitution has placed it. I therefore must call on the assistance of every honest man, and I trust the Duke of Marlborough will zealously engage his friends to support Government in the present most critical occasion. I know too well the Duchess of Marlborough is ever friendly to me, and hope she will also warmly espouse my cause, which is indeed that of the Constitution as fixed at the Revolution, and to the support of which my family was invited to mount the throne.

Copy of the Duke's reply to the King's letter.—He confesses he did not see the late East India Bill in a dangerous light. He thought it was calculated rather to increase than diminish the power of the Crown or he should not have given his proxy in support. Hopes to pay his duty to the King in London in a week or 10 days, and wishes he may be able in the meantime find out the best method of doing what he can or the King's service, but confesses that at the present moment he does well know how to set about it.

1784, Jan. 17.—The Duke of Marlborough to the King, (copy). Alludes to the King's letter of the 29th of December. Assures the King that the motion made by one of the Duke's brothers (Lord Charles Spencer) yesterday in the House of Commons, was agreed to in a hurry by Lord Charles Spencer himself when it was proposed to him and earnestly requested of him by some of the King's late servants, and this in a great measure proceeded from Lord Charles Spencer's letter of the King's letter of Dec. 29, which the Duke had not yet thought himself at liberty to disclose to his brother.

1784, Jan. 17, Queen's House.—The King to the Duke of Marlborough. The Duke of Marlborough stating his ignorance of Lord Charles Spencer's intention of moving the resolution of last night is a fresh mark of his attachment, but I should have done great injustice either to his head or heart if I could have harboured such an opinion: so strong a measure can hurt none but the promoters of it, as it must open the eyes of all moderate men to their intentions.

1783, March 30, 42 m. past 10 p.m.—The King to the Duke of Marlborough. Has just written to Lord Sydney that the congé d'élire and recommendatory letter to the chapter of Canterbury in favour of the Bishop of Bangor be prepared. The Duke must acquaint the bishop that he must kiss hands to-morrow.

1781 and 1785.—Two letters by the Princess Amelia, the first is to the Duchess and the second is to the Duke.

1785.—Letter by the Princess Royal Charlotte Augusta Matilda to the Duchess.

1795, Berlin.—Prince Henry of Prussia to the Duchess. He sends her a china déjeuner in token of the esteem he had for her son the late Lord Spencer.

1802.—A letter by the Prince of Wales to the Duchess.

1803.—A letter by the Prince de Condé to the Duchess.

1708, May 2, Vienna.—Ditto. (English).

1709.—Twelve letters by the Count Briançon to the Duke, with some inclosures.

1708, June 13 to 1709, April 16.—Twenty-nine letters from the Earl of Galloway, at Lisbon, to Lord Sunderland, and one to Mr. Burgh. The last dated is from Estremoz. Some have inclosures.

1708 and 1709.—Copies and originals of letters by James Stanhope, at Barcelona, to the Duke of Marlborough and to Lord Sunderland.

1706, Oct. 24 and 29, and Nov. 7.—Three letters from James Stanhope, at Valencia, to Sir C. Hedges.

1706, Dec. 12, Valencia.—Earl of Galloway to Sir C. Hedges.

1706, Dec. 10 and 13, Lisbon.—Two letters from P. Methuen to Sir C. Hedges.

1706, Dec. 13, Valencia.—Prince of Lichtenstein to the Duke.

1706, Dec. 14, Valencia.—J. Stanhope to Mr. Secretary.

1706, Dec. 23.—Lord Sunderland to Mr. Stanhope.

1705, Feb. 14, Whitehall.—Delafaye to (Mr. Stanhope).

1707, April 27, Barcelona.—J. Stanhope to Lord Sunderland.

1707, July 9, n.s., Lisbon.—Mr. Methuen to Lord Sunderland.

1707, Aug. 5.—The Earl of Galloway to the Duke.

1707, Oct. 12, Tarrega.—Earl of Galloway to Lord Sunderland.

1707, Nov. 15, Camp at Vimbodia.—James Stanhope to Lord Sunderland.

1707, June 15, n.s., Valencia.—J. Stanhope to —.

1707, March 8, Valencia.—J. Stanhope to Lord Sunderland, (copy).

1707, March 9, n.s.—Earl of Galloway to Lord Sunderland.

1692, Aug. 30.—Lord Nottingham to the Mayor of Bath (copy). Requests him not to give Royal respect and ceremony to the Princess, with whom the Queen was displeased.

1706, Oct. 8, Valencia.—Charles (King of Spain) to the Duke of Marlborough. Encloses a copy of a letter from the States General sent by the Emperor. Sends him a third Patent to form if he pleases a council of persons attached to his service and the good of his subjects, whereof his Councillor Bernardo Vuiros shall be head."

A packet indorsed 'Sunderland State papers relating to Ireland.

4 William III., Feb. 17. Copy.—Ratification of the Articles of Capitulation of the town of Galway, dated 21 July 1691, between Gordell Baron de Ginkell, Lord General and Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland and the Constable and Governor of Galway.

List of the army in Ireland (1 p.) signed by Matt. Pennefather, Muster Master General. Horse, 30 troops; dragoons, 15 troops; foot, 130 companies.

Another list (1 p.)—Horse, 30 troops; dragoons, 15 troops; foot, 230 troops.

List of general officers in Ireland. (1 p.)

List of the judges constituted in Ireland since His Majesty's accession.

Civil list of the kingdom of Ireland, containing all payments to be made for civil affairs, commencing the 25th March 1715. (24 pp.)

Military establishment of the kingdom of Ireland, 1715. (44 pp.)

Copy.—Address by Parliament to the Lords Justices, congratulatory on their appointment.

Copy.—Address by the Commons to the same, declaring their adhesion to the succession.

Two copies of addresses by the Commons to the Queen, giving assurances of their support. (One copy omits a portion of the other.)

Copy.—Resolution of the House to address the King praying him to remove the Earl of Anglesey from his Council and service in Ireland, he being in their opinion one of the principal advisers of her late Majesty to break the army, and prorogue the late Parliament in Ireland.

4 William III., Feb. 24. Copy.—Ratification under the Great Seal of the Articles for the Surrender of Limerick, dated 3 Oct. 1691.

1716, July 6, (copy in 12 pp.) Here follows the last paragraph of the report about the city of Dublin.

1714 and 1715.—A packet of letters and addresses to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (Lord Sunderland). 22 are of the Lords Justices. Some of the letters are addressed to Joseph Addison, Esq., secretary to the Lord Lieutenant.

1715, Sept. 6.—The Lords Justices say that the Duke of Ormond is still governor of the county of Kilkenny, and has so great power in the county palatine of Tipperary that the judge, sheriff, and other officers of the said county are appointed by him and act by his warrants, and that if his Grace should not have surrendered before the time limited in the Bill of Attainder be expired, they think it will be proper for His Majesty's service that the officers put in by the Duke should be changed or hold their places by the nomination of the Crown.

1714, March 18, Dublin.—William (Archbishop of), Dublin to J. Addison. By the last packet we sent his Excellency an account of what progress we had made in searching out the publishers of a virulent pamphlet intitled, English Advice, &c. I find it passed through the hands of those that signalled themselves by their opposition to us under the late ministry, and were the principal tools made use of by it.—He has taken their examination and got them to sign them.

1714, Dec. 2.—Copy. Report in French (10 pp.) to the Lords Justices by the judges and other persons in the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, in the cases of Frances Callaghan and 20 others attainted of high treason at the court holden at Dublin, on the 2d of July last, for having plotted the death of the late Queen and the establishment of the Pretender.

1714, Dec. 15.—Letters by the Lords Justices sending the above report.

1714, Jan. 18.—Letters by the Lord Justices about the enlisters. They have procured a person that will give security for carrying to the Indies those who are ordered to be transported, and have ordered a pardon for those to whom His Majesty has been pleased to grant it, and the sentences will be executed next term on the other two. There are about 20 still in prison on the same account which should have been tried last term, but the number of malefactors was so great that they could not go through so many trials.

1714, Oct. and Nov. 1714 Jan.—Earl of Kildare to the Lord-Lieutenant (4)

1714, Oct. 26 to 1715 May.—Lord Chancellor Brodrick to the Lord-Lieutenant (12).

1714, Nov. 13.—Lord Chief Justice Forster to the same.

1714, Dec. 16, 1714, Jan. 8 and 25.—Lord Chief Justice Whitshed to the same (3).

1714, Dec. 25 to 1714, March 12.—Lord Tyravly to the same (14).

1714, Jan. 11 to March 8.—M. Conolly to the same (7), revenue matters.

Letters by Sir Thomas Smith, Sir Thomas Southwell, Thomas Medlycott, George Gore, and Oliver St. George.

1715, May 10.—O. St. George to the Lord Lieutenant. Lord Chief Baron Dean is dead; hears that interest is making with the Duke of Shrewsbury and the like to have Sir Richard Levinge succeed him.

Same date.—Lord Mountjoy to the same.—Recommends Mr. Gore to be Chief Baron.

Same date.—Bishop of Clogher to the same.—Recommends Mr. Gore to be Chief Baron.

Same date.—Lord Chancellor Cowper to the same.—Recommends Mr. Gilbert to be Chief Baron.

Same date.—Lord Chief Justice Parker to the same.—Recommends Sir R. Levinge to be Chief Baron.

1715, May 19, Dublin Castle.—E. Budgell to the Lord-Lieutenant. Yesterday morning Mr. Jeffreys, agent to the Bishop of Derry, arrived here from London. A custom house officer searching his trunks found two packets directed to Dr. Swift; one of them only contained a book entitled The Conduct of the Duke of Ormonde; the other, together with several libels (such as English Advice, Sir W. Windham's Case, the Ballad on the late Lord Wharton, &c.), had in it two letters which the Lords Justices thought proper to send the same night to Mr. Stanhope, and of which I send copies (enclosed).

Both the enclosed letters are dated 3 May 1715, and are unsigned. One regrets the addressee's absence, and says "Corinmikin and myself drink your health daily; she is come to love a glass of wine much better than she did, with this remark, that it happens in the very worst time. We have no new favourite, nor never can; you have left so sweet a relish by your conversation upon all our pleasures that we can't bear the thoughts of intimacy with any person. A faint copy of a most agreeable original is to be found in a certain reverend divine whom you introduced to our acquaintance, but it won't do even with the advantage of youth. We see him once a week. Tyrant has undertook to furnish you oy this sare hand with all the news. I hear that you desire none. . . . Corinnikin sends you her love and service. I send you her very words."

The other letter says, — . . . Two days before the Captain went abroad he sent for me, and, amongst other things, asked me with great earnestness if there was no possibility of sending a letter safe to your hands. I answered I knew but of one way, and that was to direct to you under cover to Mrs. Vann—. He reply'd, no way by post would do. I then said, tho' I was lame and ill I would go over with it myself if he pleased. He thanked me, and said I should hear from him in a day or two, but I never saw him more. Sir W. Wyndham had a letter yesterday from him dated about eight days ago; he was then very well and Mr. Ford with him. His motions depend upon the report from the Secret Committee, and the Brin—n (with the last instructions from his friends here) will go over, by which he will confirm himself. You have seen a letter which bears his name. I'll tell you a secret, it was writ. by Bishop Atterbury. It hath done a great deal of good and we have not lost a man by his going. It was a great surprise to his friends at first, but everybody is now convinced he would have been sacrificed had he staid. . . . Among other things I send you the Duke of Ormonde's Conduct, which 'tis hoped will do that great man service. He is in the highest esteem here, and last Friday, being his birthday, 200 of his Grace's friends dined at the Devil's at Temple Bar, and at night there were two bonfires on that occasion, one in Newgate Market, the other in the Pall Mall. Mr. P—r is despised by all honest men here for giving up his letters, yours among the rest. Dr. Arb—r was turned out on that score. . . . Lord Wharton's death hath extremely mortified the Whigs. Sunderland is very ill, has been mad for some time, and is going to the Bath. Walpole is in a very bad way, and Stanhope is the bully.

1715.—Letters from the Duke of Bolton, Lord Coingsby, and General Palmes.

1715.—Letters from Ro. Pringle at Whitehall (three in May, and two in June).

1715, June 3.—J. Addison introduces to the Lord Lieutenant the bearer, General Gorges.

1715, May 10.—The Lords Justices to Mr. Stanhope. They send him some examinations and papers shewing how industrious the Pretender's agents are. They are surprised to find the letter to Mr. Houghton superscribed and franked by Sir Charles Bumbury (Bunbury?), one of his Majesty's Commissioners of the Revenue in Ireland. They ordered Houghton's papers to be searched, and found the other letters inclosed with a declaration of the Pretender's, and a great number of seditious pamphlets. Mr. Wight, in London, Mr. Houghton's correspondent, is a half-pay officer in Lord Windsor's regiment, was in Ireland some time since, had the reputation of a man of wit and letters, and was said to act as a sort of private secretary to the Earl of Anglesea.

1714, Oct. 12, Dublin Castle.—W. (Archbishop of) Dublin, Jo. Tuam, and Kildare to the Lord Lieutenant, introducing William Hawkins, Ulster King-at-Arms, going to attend the King's coronation.

Charge of the civil and military lists from Michaelmas 1713 to 6 Sept. 1714. Total of the military list 262,831*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*; civil list 57,028*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

1714.—Several letters from the Lords Justices relating to the election of the Lord Mayor.

List of field officers on full pay on the Irish establishment.

Copy of dissent by Viscount Strabane and several other Irish peers from the question that the outlawry for the rebellion of 1641 of the ancestor of the Lord Viscount Montgarrett, under whom he derives his honour is reversed. They argue that the former judgment of the House might be relied on. (3 pp.)

1715.—Letters from M. Conolly, Lord Chancellor Brodrick, and the Archbishop of Dublin to Addison.

1715, May 30, Dublin Castle.—E. Badgell to (Addison). It appears by several examinations taken before Lord Chief Justice Whitshed that there are many members of the College here highly disaffected to his Majesty's Government. It is even feared that some are downright Jacobites, and that these are far from receiving that discouragement from the governing part of the College which might be expected. He recommends the King to issue a letter putting off the election of Fellows and Scholars until his further pleasure be known.

In a letter of July 7, 1715, the Archbishop notices the Jacobitism of the College.

Copy of comments by the Lord Chancellor on the proceedings against Edward Loyde for printing the Memoirs of the Chevalier St. George, which were dropped after a letter in 1713 by the Lords Justices to the Duke of Shrewsbury, the Lord Lieutenant saying that they thought he was an object of mercy.

1714, Aug.—A return of the army in Ireland. (1 sheet.)

1714, Aug 28.—List of pensions on the military establishments, 24 in all, amounting to 6,324*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

List of governors of counties in Ireland. (1 p.)

List of governors of garrisons. (2 pp.)

Account of the Concordatum Fund.

ALFRED J. HORWOOD.

MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF PORTSMOUTH, HURSTBOURNE PARK, HAMPSHIRE.

INTERESTING to historians as the ancient home of the Hampshire Wallops, whose martial achievements in former times are commemorated in a popular use of their historic name, the Earl of Portsmouth's seat at Hurstbourne Priors, Hants, has for several generations been respected by men of letters and science as the resting place of the large collection of Sir Isaac Newton's official and scientific papers, which after his death passed into the possession of his niece, Mrs. Conduitt, the wife of John Conduitt, Esq., M.P., who, after enjoying Sir Isaac's closest friendship, succeeded him as Master and Worker of the Mint in the Tower of London. Through the marriage of Catherine, Mr. Conduitt's daughter and heiress by the afore-mentioned niece of the philosopher, with John Viscount Lymington, eldest son of the first Earl of Portsmouth, these manuscripts became the property of the Earls of Portsmouth, who have regarded their collateral descent from the famous mathematician as one of the brightest distinctions of a family that has flourished in Hampshire from the time of Edward the Confessor.

The present Lord Portsmouth having recently given Sir Isaac Newton's scientific MSS. to the University of Cambridge, the library of Hurstbourne Park has by that magnificent act lost the larger and more valuable part of the records which made it famous. But it still retains the comprehensive collection of Sir Isaac Newton's Mint Papers, which Mr. John Conduitt arranged and bound in three large folios, as well as the miscellaneous collection of official registers, parliamentary journals, Mint documents, private correspondence, and other writings, which are described in the first of the two ensuing catalogues.

12 October 1571. Folio in leather binding; lettered at the back, "Orders of Council relating to the Coinage;" and provided with an index to the contents of the volume, which exhibits in chronological order the successive proclamations and orders of Council respecting the business of the Mint, from the year 1571 to March 1683-4. The collection seems to have been made by Mr. John Conduitt, who succeeded Sir Isaac Newton in the office of Master and Worker of the Mint.

15 November, 37 Elizabeth. Letters Patent of exemplification (made at the request of Sir Henry Walloppe, Knt.) of the enrolment in Dublin of an indenture made in Henry the Third's time between the bishop and chapter of Fernes of the one part, and Philip de Prendelgast and Matilda de Quency of the other part, touching lands in the county of Wexford. This document (to which the Great Seal of Ireland is attached) is so defaced that it is legible only in a few places, and in those places can be read only with the greatest difficulty.

7 June 1603. Copy (large folio) of the Record of the Assays of the Pix; beginning with the assays of pix-money taken in the Star Chamber before the King's Most Honourable Privy Council on 7 June 1603, and ending with assays of pix-money made and taken in the Mint within the Tower of London on 15 August 1734.

12 February, 8 James I. Letters Patent of exemplification at the request of Francis Goodwin, Knt., and George Fleetwood, Knt., of the proceedings closing with judgment for the plaintiffs, before Sir Edward Coke, Knt., and his associates, justices of the King's Bench, in the suit of Francis Goodwin, Knt., and George Fleetwood, Knt., against Edward Earl of Bedford and Lucy his wife, for the recovery of the manor of Widnere with appurtenances, and one messuage, one garden, two hundred acres of arable land, and six acres of meadow in Great Marlowe, Hambleden, and West Wycombe.

18 August 1695. Official certificate of the vicar and churchwarden of St. Botolph's Church in Cambridge, that Isaac Newton, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace of the county of Cambridge, received the sacrament in the said church in accordance with the usage of the Church of England on the above-named Sunday.

25 December 1699. Folio ledger of the accounts of Sir Isaac Newton, respecting all disbursements made by him for the charges and expenses of the Mint, whilst he was master and worker of the moneys thereof; beginning with the above given date, and ending with the "Account of Sir Isaac Newton, deceased, late Master and Worker of His Majesty's Mint, of all monies by him had and received since the last account out of the receipt of His Majesty's Exchequer and elsewhere; as also of the moneys by him paid and disbursed for the charges and expenses of the said Mint, from 1 January 1725-6 to the last day of December 1726." Also, in the same ledger, the yearly official accounts of Sir John Stanley, Bart., Craven Peyton, Esq., William Thomson, Esq., and Walter Carey, Esq., successive wardens during the same term of the exchange and coyneage of money within the Tower of London.

22 July 1700. An Entertaining Narrative, by a female writer, of a tour through Holland and Flanders. Divided into three letters, each of which is addressed to an unnamed gentlewoman in England, this record of a two months' journey through the Low Countries contains a series of effective pictures of society in the Hague, Schevelin, Leyden, Delft, Haerlem, Amsterdam, Brussels, and other cities. An intelligent woman who regarded the world with her own eyes, and held strong opinions that women were capable of higher work than domestic drudgery, the writer may be regarded as a favourable specimen of the few educated women of a time when ladies of rank were often deficient in the rudiments of learning. An edition of these three letters would afford congenial entertainment to readers of the present day when women achieve distinction in every department of belles lettres. Speaking of the criminal discipline of the Amsterdam prisons, the writer says, "I did not see the Rasp House, nor the Spin House, which answer to our Bridewell for punishing the rakes and lewd women of the town, or any that commit crimes which they think not great enough to deserve death. They are here sufficiently punished by constant and hard work, some for their whole life, and some for a certain time, according to their crime. And if any of the rogues are lazy and perform not their task, nor mend for whipping, they put them into a place where there's a pump, and let in water upon them which would soon drown them if they do not pump very hard, and by this means they learn to work rarely well. The first house is for men only, and the other for women. Those that are diligent to perform their tasks may employ the rest of their time in working either for themselves or any other that employs them. They put officers into these houses, burghers' children, and people of good fashion that are too lewd or debauched, where they keep them as close confined and upon a coarse and spare diet, as long as they think necessary to tame them. But if their friends will maintain them, and desire it, they are exempted from work, and kept in chambers apart; for they are impartial in the administration of justice to the rich, when they deserve punishment, as well as the poor."

— June 1707. Common-place book of extracts from the works of Puffendorff and other writers. Inscribed on the fly-leaf, "Many men many minds, one woman many minds. J. Conduitt, June 1702. Breviarium Historiæ ex Puffendorffo, &c."

25 May 1721. Journal of Proceedings in Parliament, commencing 25 May 1721, and ending 29 June following; and also of parliamentary proceedings from 3 October 1722 to 24 May 1723. In this folio is preserved a loose sheet, exhibiting the rough copy of Mr. John Conduitt's preface to his parliamentary notes, beginning, "My first intention in taking the following notes was to imprint the subject matter of them the stronger on my memory, and to have a fund of arguments ready when the same debates return, which, since the annual meeting of Parliaments, often happens, and with that view I have not only put down all I could catch that was spoke, but any observations that were suggested privately or occurred to me on either side of the question, and particularly several arguments which I had prepared and afterwards made no use of, sometimes because the question they were upon was dropt, or agreed to so unanimously that there was no room for a debate, and often because the House was tired before I could get an opportunity of speaking, but I have distinguished those that were spoke from those that were not." It appears from this sketch for a preface that Mr. Conduitt entertained thoughts of publishing his collections of parliamentary notes.

31 December 1723. Letter from Thomas Hill, Esq., to John Conduitt, Esq. Announcing the writer's immediate departure "with his Grace" for the country, where he will "stay not a moment after the election is over."

3 January 1723-4. Journal of proceedings in Parliament from the afore-named day, when Parliament was opened by the King in person, to 24 April 1724, when the King in person prorogued Parliament. Folio of 284 pages, bound in vellum, and marked as having been examined by Mr. John Conduitt.

12 November 1724. Journal of proceedings of Parliament, from the afore-given date to 19 February next following. Examined by Mr. John Conduitt.

22 December 1724. Letter from Thomas Hill, Esq., to John Conduitt, Esq. Congratulating Mr. and Mrs. Conduitt on their recovery from alarming illness. Dated from Deene.

7 January 1724-5. Letter from B. H. Jackson to Sir Isaac Newton. Announcing the writer's invention and

(e.) 12 June 1700. List or Schedule of the Vouchers of the Account of Isaac Newton, Esq., late Warden of His Majesty's Mint in the Tower.

(f.) Copy (undated) of the following memoir: "To the Worsp^d. Isaac Newton, Esq., Warden of His Majesty's Mint within the Tower of London.—Thomas Fowle, one of the clerks of the Mint humbly presents to your worship as follows:—That since his coming to the Mint, which was about the 20th of July 1672, Sir Anthony St. Leger, then Warden of the Mint, came very seldom to the place, and did not any thing of service more then to come and ask how the affaires of the Mint were, and that was all, and soe went away.

After him one Sir Thomas Wharton, Knight of the Bath, and his sonn Phillip, men of plentifull fortunes joyntly were wardens, who sometimes came to the Mint and asked a few questions relating therevnto, and did some business, and to little or no more purpose than the former.

Succeeded them, one Sir Phillip Floyd, a very ingenious gentleman, a civilian by profession, one of the Clerkes of the Councill, and one of the Secretaries to the then Earle of Danby, Lord High Treasurer of England, who as warden assisted the officers of the Mint in severall affaires proper for the Warden to the Lords of the Treasury, who succeeded the said Earle of Danby, and continued soe for the space of a twelve month and then dyed.

Next to him came one Doctor Owen Wynn, a learned civilian and chiefe secretary to the Earle of Sunderland, whose attendance was frequent and diligent and very serviceable in his station, and not long after his present Majesty's accession to the crown relinquished his employment.

His successor was one Benjamin Overton, Esq., who came from beyond sea with his Majesty as was reported; who came sometimes to the Mint and did some business now and then in a transitory manner, and then went his way, who having His Majesty's favour was made a Commissioner of the Customes, and soe left his warden's place here.

And now at present yourself in the office of warden, which if I may be so bold to say, and with submission, I question not but wee shall find you farr to exceed the rest for the good and privileges of the Mint, more than all your predecessors.

It is further humbly shewn unto you, that in the time of Sir Anthony St. Leger (the first Warden of the Mint since my being here), he made his sonn, Anthony St. Leger, Esq., who was ensigne to Sir John Robinson, his deputy, and there being some who did worke for the Mint imprisoned for debt, and that within the power of Sir John Robinson, application was made to this Ensigne St. Leger and deputy to the then Warden his father, (for preserving the privileges of the Mint) to sett him at liberty, which said Ensigne St. Leger and deputy warden went to Sir Jno. Robinson, his captain and lieutenant of the Tower, and demanded the prisoner's liberty, who refused to grant it, whereupon the said St. Leger told Sir Jno. Robinson that he had nothing to do with anything that belonged to the Mint of that nature, and would have him out whether he would or no, and soe by virtue of his power as deputy warden and of the privileges of the Mint sett him at liberty.

From whom the saide Fowle had this particularly (it being soe long since) he has forgot, but he is sure he had it from such a hand that credit may be given to it.

James Hoare, Esq., late Comptroller of the Mint, deceased, was a very judicious man, and though but of few words, would appear every much for the privileges of the Mint, and being sometimes free in discourse with the saide Fowle would often be talking to him concerning the privileges of the Mint, and vpon an occasion told the said Fowle what passed between King Charles the Second and Sir Jno. Robinson, saying, "Sir John you have nothing to doe with the Mint, 'altho' it be within the Tower, between the beating of 'the travally in the morning and the taptoo at 'night," which said relation the saide Fowle had from the saide Comptroller's owne mouth, or nere to this effect.

Henry Slingsby, Esq., deceased, late Master and Worker of the said Mint, a man of great parts and understanding, would not admitt the privileges of the Mint in the least to be infringed, or the warders to come within the Mint, or by virtue of their places to doe as they doe now, but would and did in a civil way permit them to come sometimes but not otherwise as aforesaid.

Sir Thomas Wharton (Sir Anthony St. Leger's successor) vpon application made to him by a creditor of Mr. Dallovs for that purpose, gave leave to the creditor to arrest him, without even asking or taking to his advice therein any of the officers of the Mint, which he ought to have done according to the constitution and customs of the same, who lay in prison in the Tower for the space of three weekes. This the said Wharton did by virtue of his power as warden, which by the then officers of the Mint (especially by the Comptroller) was looked vpon as a rash and inconsiderate act of his, tending much to the weakening the privileges of the Mint.

The said Fowle coming late one night to the Tower (having been vpon the Comptroller's business) was arrested and carried to the Poultry Counter, and being unwilling it should be known, lay there that and the following night, and acquainted the Comptroller therewith, who therevpon sent for the party aforesaid, and asked him how he durst venture to arrest one that was soe much considered in the Mint, without first asking the officers of the Mint leave. What other words passed between them the said Fowle knoweth not, but soe much he had from the partie's owne mouth, and further I found by his own relation that if he brought me not presently to the Comptroller he should stay and beare me company, whereupon the aforesaid party was mighty earnest to gett me out, and if I mistake not he came along with me to the Comptroller, whereupon all things were presently after settled. No date.

Paper headed "An Account of what belongs to the Warden of Her Majesty's Mint within the Tower of London;" the following note being appended to the memorandum:—"About the year 1633 Sir William Parkhurst and Sir Anthony St. Leger were Wardens of the Mint, at which time the Warden's dwelling-house was accounted from the house wherein Mr. Koettier now lives, unto the kitchen above stairs the aforesaid G. M^r hath, and soe vpwads, and all the rooms over the kitchen and parlour was then a publick office for the Irish money, and the Warden passed to it from his house above stairs." Long after this one Richard Brigot (a Frenchman) made a proposall to King Charles the 1st to coin money by the mill, and presse it better then the moneyers did, so that then he had the said office or rooms above-stairs by a staircase added to those below allowed him by the officers, and he lived therein. And after his death the moneyers tooke possession thereof, and kept it untill the unhappy rebellion, when one Holland came to be warden, and settled his clerke in the said house, and

(e.) 12 June 1700. List or Schedule of the Vouchers of the Account of Isaac Newton, Esq., late Warden of His Majesty's Mint in the Tower.

(f.) Copy (undated) of the following memoir: To the Worspth, Isaac Newton, Esq., Warden of His Majesty's Mint within the Tower of London.—Thomas Fowle, one of the clerks of the Mint humbly presents to your worship as follows:—That since his coming to the Mint, which was about the 20th of July 1672, Sir Anthony St. Leger, then Warden of the Mint, came very seldom to the place, and did not any thing of service more then to come and ask how the affaires of the Mint were, and that was all, and soe went away.

After him one Sir Thomas Wharton, Knight of the Bath, and his sonn Phillip, men of plentiful fortunes jointly were wardens, who sometimes came to the Mint and asked a few questions relating thereunto, and did some business, and to little or no more purpose than the former.

Succeeded them, one Sir Phillip Floyd, a very ingenious gentleman, a civilian by profession, one of the Clerkes of the Council, and one of the Secretaries to the then Earle of Danby, Lord High Treasurer of England, who as warden assisted the officers of the Mint in severall affaires proper for the Warden to the Lords of the Treasury, who succeeded the said Earle of Danby, and continued soe for the space of a twelve month and then dyed.

Next to him came one Doctor Owen Wynn, a learned civilian and chiefe secretary to the Earle of Sunderland, whose attendance was frequent and diligent and very serviceable in his station, and not long after his present Majesty's accession to the crown relinquished his employment.

His successor was one Benjamin Overton, Esq., who came from beyond sea with his Majesty as was reported; who came sometimes to the Mint and did some business now and then in a transitory manner, and then went his way, who having His Majesty's favour was made a Commissioner of the Customs, and soe left his warden's place here.

And now at present yourself in the office of warden, which if I may be so bold to say, and with submission, I question not but wee shall find you far to exceed the rest for the good and privileges of the Mint, more than all your predecessors.

It is further humbly shewn unto you, that in the time of Sir Anthony St. Leger (the first Warden of the Mint since my being here), he made his sonn, Anthony St. Leger, Esq., who was ensigne to Sir John Robinson, his deputy, and there being some who did worke for the Mint imprisoned for debt, and that within the power of Sir John Robinson, application was made to this Ensigne St. Leger and deputy to the then Warden his father, (for preserving the privileges of the Mint) to sett him at liberty, which said Ensigne St. Leger and deputy warden went to Sir Jno. Robinson, his captain and lieutenant of the Tower, and demanded the prisoner's liberty, who refused to grant it, whereupon the said St. Leger told Sir Jno. Robinson that he had nothing to do with anything that belonged to the Mint of that nature, and would have him out whether he would or no, and soe by virtue of his power as deputy warden and of the privileges of the Mint sett him at liberty.

From whom the saide Fowle had this particularly (it being soe long since) he has forgot, but he is sure he had it from such a hand that credit may be given to it.

James Hoare, Esq., late Comptroller of the Mint, deceased, was a very judicious man, and though but of few words, would appear every much for the privileges of the Mint, and being sometimes free in discourse with the saide Fowle would often be talking to him concerning the privileges of the Mint, and vpon an occasion told the said Fowle what passed between King Charles the Second and Sir Jno. Robinson, saying, "Sir John you have nothing to doe with the Mint, 'alho' it be within the Tower, between the beating of 'the travally in the morning and the tappot at 'night,' which said relation the saide Fowle had from the saide Comptroller's owne mouth, or nere to this effect.

Henry Slingsby, Esq., deceased, late Master and Worker of the said Mint, a man of great parts and understanding, would not admit the privileges of the Mint in the least to be infringed, or the wardens to come within the Mint, or by virtue of their places to doe as they doe now, but would and did in a civil way permit them to come sometimes but not otherwise as aforesaid.

Sir Thomas Wharton (Sir Anthony St. Leger's successor) vpon application made to him by a creditor of Mr. Dallows for that purpose, gave leave to the creditor to arrest him, without even asking or taking to his advice therein any of the officers of the Mint, which he ought to have done according to the constitution and customs of the same, who lay in prison in the Tower for the space of three weekes. This the said Wharton did by virtue of his power as warden, which by the then officers of the Mint (especially by the Comptroller) was looked vpon as a rash and inconsiderate act of his, tending much to the weakening the privileges of the Mint.

The said Fowle coming late one night to the Tower (having been vpon the Comptroller's business) was arrested and carried to the Poultry Counter, and being vnwilling it should be known, lay there that and the following night, and acquainted the Comptroller therewith, who therevpon sent for the party aforesaid, and asked him how he durst venture to arrest one that was soe much considered in the Mint, without first asking the officers of the Mint leave. (m.) Collection of notes and extracts from Master John Lonyson's patent for his office of Master of the Mint in the Tower of London: together with brief comments on the passages of the patent that justify the said Master's manner of discharging the duties of his office. No date.

(n.) Paper (in the same Elizabethan handwriting as the last previous document), entitled "A brief Discourse" shewing the causes of the Controversies grown "between the Warden and the Master Worker of the Mynte." The formal and elaborate reply of Master John Lonyson to Warden Richard Martyn's charges.

(o.) The First Compliments of the Warden exhibited against the Master, and The Master's Answers to the same: Being a fuller and more precise exhibition of the matters in dispute between John Lonyson and Richard Martyn. No date.

(p.) The Master's Answer to the Warden's Information, exhibited to the Right Honourable the Lords of Her Majesty's Privy Council, Commissioners appointed to here and determine Mynt Causes. No date. Also three foolscap sheets of rough notes of particulars set forth in the last-mentioned document.

(4.) 8 June 1622. Memorandum of an appointment by undersigned officers of the Mint, whereby Edward Harleage was appointed to "hold and enjoy the place, "houses, and rooms belonging to the keeping of the dyett of the mint for the officers there in soe large "and ample a manner as Richard Millard his predecessor in that place did." Signed, Henry Tweed, Edward Villiers, Richard Rogers, Andrew Palmer.

(5.) 2 May, 1696. Certificate (signed Wm. Lowndes), that Isaac Newton, Esq., Warden of the Mint, took his corporal oath before the Lords of the Treasury on the above-named day "not to reveal or discover (directly or "indirectly) to any person or persons whatsoever the "new invention of rounding the money and making "the edges of it with letters or grainings or either of "them."

(6.) 21 January 1700. Bond (cancelled and defaced) of Isaac Newton of St. James's, Westminster, co. Middlesex to King William the Third, in the sum of 2,000*l*. for the due performance of the duties of his office of "Master and Worker of all monies, both gold and silver, "within His Majesty's Mint in His Majesty's Tower "of London and elsewhere in His Majesty's kingdom "of England." Witnessed by Geo. Wattes and Matt. Hinton.

(7.) 21 June 1700. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury.—May it please your Lordships, it has been usual for the Masters and Workers of His Majesty's Mint to give 2,000*l*. security to the King before the sealing of the indenture of the Mint, and to mention the same in the indenture. Thus did Sir Robert Harley in the second year of King Charles the First, Sir Ralph Freeman in the 12th year of King Charles the Second, and Mr. Slingsby in the 22nd year of the same King. Mr. Neale, having spent a large estate, and being far in debt, made his way into the place by granting half the profits thereof to other officers of the Mint, and giving 15,000*l*. security to the King, and had time given him to find this security after the sealing of his indenture; but his melter, Mr. Ambrose, (through whose hands all the coinage was to pass) gave but 2,000*l*. security to Mr. Neale. The coinage being now much less than in the time of any of the masters and workers above-mentioned, if your Lordships please to accept of the usual security of 2,000*l*., I am ready to give it, that it may be entered in the indentures now to be sealed. All which is most humbly submitted to your Lordships' great wisdoms. Is. Newton. Dated from the Mint Office.

(8.) 20 August 1702. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton (on the renewal of his indentures of the Mint), offering the following security to Her Majesty for his performance of the duties of his office of Master and Worker of the Mint, viz., himself in the sum of 2,000*l*., and Thomas Hall, Esq., and John Panquier, gent., in the sum of 1,000*l*. each. Dated from the Mint Office.

(9.) A rough draft in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting of the letter addressed by him on 21 June 1700 to the Lords of the Treasury, with this additional note at the foot of the paper, "May it please your Lordships, His "Majesty having been pleased to appoint me Master "and Worker of his Mint, and it being usual to give "2,000*l*. security for the due performance of the trust, I "humbly propose the security following. Is. Newton, "M^r and W^r of the Mint, 2,000*l*.; the Rt. Honble. Charles "Montague, Esq. 1,000*l*., and Thomas Hall, Esq. 1000*l*.; "or—Ployer, Esq., 1,000*l*., and Tho. Pilkington, gent., "1,000*l*."

(10.) 11 August 1719. Certificate (signed Matt^r. Hutton, and dated at the King's Remembrancer's Office in the Inner Temple) that Sir Isaac Newton gave due security for the proper performance of his duties as Master and Worker of the Mint, on the 12th day of May 1719, upon the renewal of his indenture for the said office.

(11.) Copy of the oath taken by Sir Isaac Newton to perform and keep all the covenants and agreements of his office of Master and Worker of the Mint. No date.

(12.) 1696. Copy of a form of Letters of Deputation for the Warden, Master, or Controller of the Mint.

(13.) 11 June 1702. Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a form for his bond to Her Majesty for the due performance of the duties of his office in the Mint.

(14.) 5 September 1685. Memorandum of the appointment of Hannah Briggs, wife of John Briggs, by undersigned officers of the Mint, "to have and enjoy the place, "houses, and rooms belonging to keeping of the Diet "of the Mint for the officers there." Signed Phil. Lloyd, Tho. Neale, Cha. Duncombe, Ja. Hoare, John Brattell.

(15.) 23 October 1680. Memorandum of the appointment (by undersigned officers of the Mint), of Frances Harley, widow, to "hold and enjoy the place, howses, "and rooms belonging to the keeping of the Dyett of "the Mint for the officers there, in soe large and ample "a manner as Edward Harley her late husband, deceased, "or Richard Millard, his predecessor, or either of them "in that place did." Signed, Antho. St. Leger, John Buckworth, Cha. Duncombe, Ja. Hoare.

(16.) 18 March 1695. Copy of a warrant under the King's sign manual (countersigned, Godolphin, Step. Fox, Cha. Montague, J. Smith), to Thomas Neale, Esq., Master and Worker of the Mint. Authorising the said Master to retain fourteen pence per pound, Troy weight, out of the new moneys proceeding from the silver of the clift moneys, and to distribute the same amongst the officers and workers of the Mint, in proportions precisely set forth in the warrant, which is drawn in conformity with the provisions of the recent enactment, "entitled an Act for remedying the ill State of the Coyne "of the Kingdom."

(19.) 1603-1692. List of the successive wardens, masters, and controllers of the Mint from the year 1603 to the year 1692.

(20.) 30 September 1689. Bill of incidental expenses (amounting to 73*l*. 7*s*.) for affairs connected with the business of the Mint, described at the head, "A Bill of "Incidents from the 5th of November 1688 to the last "day of September 1689.

(22.) 25 December 1713. Similar statement for the year ending Christmas 1713.

(23.) 22 March 1626-7. Abstracts of the successive grants for life of the office of Master and Worker of the Mint to Sir Ralph Freeman (July 1660), Henry Slingsby, Esq., (August 1670), and Thomas Neale, Esq., (July 1678); from which precedents Joseph Moyle (the writer of an appended note, dated 22 March 1629), argues that the office was usually granted for life before the appointment of Sir Isaac Newton, to whom it was granted only during pleasure.

(24.) Group of papers relating to the office of the Assay Master of the Mint in the Tower of London.

(a.) Paper on the powers and functions of the Assay Master. Combating forcibly the erroneous notion that the Assay Master is a check upon the officers of the Mint, "whereas on the contrary the Comptroller is a cheque "upon the whole Mint, and all the three first officers "are a cheque upon the Assay Master." No date.

(b.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a paper entitled "The State of the Mint in relation to "the Queen's Assaye Master." No date.

EARL OF PORTSMOUTH.

(c.) Joint petition of James Whitacre, clerk and fireman in the Assay Office of the Mint, and Robert Lowe, porter of the Mint, to the Lords of the Treasury, for increase of salary; each of the petitioners having hitherto received only 25*l.* per annum, "being not a maintenance for a single man." No date.

(d.) Rough draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) to the Lords of the Treasury, respecting the competitive examination of Mr. Brattel and Mr. Oadham in the making of assays of gold and silver, in which trial Mr. Brattel has shown himself the better artist. No date.

(e.) Representation and petition of Catesby Oadham to the Rt. Hon. Thomas Earl of Wharton, Lord Privy Seal. Urging that the petitioner has not met with justice from Sir Isaac Newton, who in his recent examination (on 8 April 1713) of the merits of the petitioner and Mr. Brattel for the post of Assay Master of the Mint, was guilty of partiality and unfairness in his preference of Mr. Brattel; and Praying that no grant of the place to Mr. Brattel may pass the Privy Seal until the case has been considered by the Privy Council, in accordance with a direction given by His Majesty. No date.

(f.) Rough draft of a letter in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting. Setting forth the inaccuracies of Mr. Catesby Oadham's letter to the Rt. Hon. Thomas Earl of Wharton, and justifying Sir Isaac's recommendation of Mr. Brattel for the office of Assay Master of the Mint, by showing how far and in what particulars the last-named gentleman surpassed Mr. Catesby Oadham in the competitive examination. No date.

(g.) 31 January 1713. Petition of Charles Brattell, to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain. For the office of Assay Master in the Mint, vacant by the death of the petitioner's brother, Daniel Brattell, to whom the petitioner has been assistant for fifteen years past. At the foot of the document, a note (signed Wm. Lowndes) certifies that the Lord High Treasurer has referred the matter to the warden, master worker, and comptroller of the Mint. Also, a copy of the same petition.

(h.) Rough draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting). Defending the writer's recommendation of Mr. Brattell, and answering Mr. Catesby Oadham's assertions and arguments. No date.

(i.) Rough draft of another letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting). On the same matter, and to the same effect. No date.

(k.) Rough draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) to the Lords of the Treasury. Touching the appointment of an Assay Master for the Mint. No date.

(l.) 21 January 1697. Humble representation and petition of Daniel Brattell, Assay Master of the mint, to the Lords of the Treasury. For the consideration and remedy of grievances under which the petitioner labours at the Mint. Endorsed with a note (signed Wm. Lowndes), that the matter has been referred to the Warden, Master and Worker, and Comptroller of the Mint.

(m.) 6 September 1726.—Letter (signed H. Haynes) respecting certain parcels of gold, suspected by the writer "to be of a bad mixture," which the South Sea Company have recently received from their agents in the West Indies, and sent to the Mint. The company have been requested to take back the suspected ingots, or to indemnify the Mint, in respect to them.

(n.) Description of the processes of assaying and trying moneys at the Mint, entitled "Of the Assaying of Gold and Silver, the making of indented Trial-pieces, and trying the moneys in the Pix." No date.

(25.)—Papers relating to the office of the Weigher and Teller of the Mint.

(a.) Draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) to the Lords of the Treasury. Supporting Mr. Hopton Haines's petition for the office of Weigher and Teller of the Mint. No date.

(b.) Draft of Mr. Hopton Haines's petition to the Lords of the Treasury, for the office of Weigher and Teller of the Mint, vacant by the death of Mr. Tho. Fitch. No date.

(c.) Copy of Mr. Philip Shales's petition to the Lords of the Treasury, for the office of Weigher and Teller of the Mint, vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Fitch. No date.

(d.) Copy of the petition of Charles Brattell, gent., to the Lords of the Treasury, for the office of Weigher and Teller of the Mint, vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Fitch. No date.

(e.) Copy of the petition of Mr. George Foord to the Lords of the Treasury for the office of Weigher and Teller of the Mint, vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Fitch. No date.

(f.) Copy of the petition of Mr. Thomas Edwards, to the Lords of the Treasury, for the office of the Weigher and Teller of the Mint, vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Fitch. Also Memorandum (dated 7 August 1701, and signed Wm. Lowndes) that the Lords of the Treasury have referred the above-mentioned petitions for the office of weigher and teller to the master, warden, and comptroller of the Mint, in order they may report thereon to their Lordships.

(g.) Four rough drafts of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) to the Lords of the Treasury, in respect to Mr. Hopton Haines's petition for the office of weigher and teller; differing only in unimportant details of diction from one another, and from the draft (a.) of the same letter in this group.—Also a copy of the amended and perfect letter, as it was finally sent to the Lords of the Treasury, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting. No dates.—That Sir Isaac made no less than five rough drafts of the not important letter indicates the trouble which his official duties occasioned him, and is significant of a rather remarkable inaptitude for such official work.

(h.) 6 August 1701. Inspector's report on the slight differences between the Exchequer weights and the Tower weights.

(j.) 29 April 1724.—Report by Mr. Hopton Haynes on the defects and errors of the weights used at the Mint.

(26.)—Papers relating to the office of Graver of the Mint.

(a.) 15 August 1698.—Attested copy of the patent (dated 27 July. 21 Car. II.) of the grant for life, in survivorship, of the office of graver of the Mint to the three brothers John, Joseph, and Philip Rottier who "have at our instance and desire quitted their native countries, and are willing to settle themselves in this our kingdom, and to employ their whole time in the said arts for our services."

(b.) 8 August 1704.—Letter from Mr. William Lowndes to the warden, master and worker, and comptroller of the Mint. Transmitting (at the order of the Lord High Treasurer) to the said officers of the Mint the petitions of Colonel William Parsons, Mr. John Croker, and Mr. Rose, for the office of Engraver of the Mint, vacant by the death of Henry Harris, Esq.

(c.) 7 August 1704.—Petition of Mr. John Fowler, medallist, to the Lord High Treasurer, for the office of Engraver of the Mint, vacant by the death of Captain Harris.—Also memorandum (signed Wm. Lowndes) that the petition is referred to the warden master and worker, and comptroller of the Mint.

(d.) Mutilated petition of Colonel Parsons to the Lord High Treasurer, running thus:—The case of Coll^o. William Parsons. That being a Younger Brother and desirous to Raise his Fortune by a Military Employ, he bought a Cornets commission in Ireland in 1680, wh^o through a Violent and Chargeable Illness of y^e Country Distemper he was obliged (although with great Losse) to part with soon after. That in 1682 he bought a Colours in y^e first Regm^t of Guards, commanded by his Grace y^e Duke of Grafton, and a Lieutenantcy likewise in y^e same year; and in 1684, having married a fortune of 1,700*l.*, he bought a Company, which upon y^e late Happy Revolution (being at Portsmouth on Duty, and misrepresented to his Majesty in his absence) was taken from him, and he thereby left wholly Destitute of any Income or Provision to support Himself and Family; deeply involved in Debts on y^e companies acc^t., and forced to apply himself to a trade (though otherwise educated) for a present subsistence.—That his Case being made known to his Majesty by y^e Duke of Grafton, he was some time after made a Land Surveyor of y^e Customs House; but his Lameness increasing through y^e constant Attendance on y^e keys, and finding himself unable to perform y^e Duty required. He exchanged y^e same (in respect only to their Majesty's service) for a Kings-Waiters-Place to be acted by Deputy, although a Place of scarce one-third y^e Yearly Value. That although with this small Income and y^e Blessing of God on his Industry and Ingenuity, he has hitherto (with great Difficulties) maintained himself, and paid 300*l.* and upwards (having been often arrested for y^e same) on y^e Companies account. Yet since no Prospect can be had in such an Employ, either of Raising a Provision for a Wife (whose Fortune was wholly Expended on y^e command) or for Children, who in Case of his Death must be reduced to y^e last Extremities. . . . And since his 16 Years Experience (not without some success too in the very Improvement) of the Mechanics, and more particularly in that part Relating to the Engraving of Seals, Medals, &c. &c. may have fitly qualified him to succeed the late Capt. Harris in the employment of Engraver to her Majesty, it is most humbly hoped he may have your Lps favour in the same, &c. &c. No date.

(c.) Petition of John Croker, Engraver, to the Rt. Hon. Sidney Lord Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer of England, for the office of Engraver of the Mint; in which document the petitioner describes himself as having "by order of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury succeeded Mr. James Rotier in engraving the punchcons and dyes for the coinage at the Tower and five country Mints, and having performed the service of graver to the Mint or Mints under Mr. Harris for seven years last past." No date.

(f.) Copy of a letter addressed by Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord High Treasurer on the question whether the gravers of the Mint should be deprived of or maintained in their ancient liberty to make medals for their private advantage. No date.

(h.) 8 September 1704. Memorandum in Sir Isaac Newton's hand-writing, of "A proposal for regulating the graver's office."

(g.) Single sheet of a rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a report to the Lord High Treasurer on the petitions for the office of engraver of the Mint. No date.

(k.) 2 February 1696. Order (signed—Paul Jodrell), for the seizure by the officers of the Mint of all punchcons, dyes, and presses belonging to his Majesty's Mint in the hands of Mr. Roettier in the Tower.

(l.) 25 June 1722. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. Asking for an allowance of 30*l.* per annum with meat, drink, and clothes, to one Beresford, now the journeyman and heretofore the apprentice of Mr. Croker, graver to the Mint.

(m.) Draft (written chiefly by Sir Isaac Newton's hand) of the report on the qualifications of the various applicants for the office of Graver to the Mint, made to the Lord High Treasurer by the Warden, Master and Worker, and Comptroller of the Mint. The report recommends the appointment of Mr. John Croker to the place. No date.

(a.) 16 June 1712. Letter (signed C. Peyton, I. Newton, E. Philipps, and dated from the Mint office) to the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer. Recommending that an allowance of 35*l.* per annum be made for binding Francis Beresford apprentice to John Croker, gentleman, to learn the art and mystery of graving in the Mint. Endorsed with the Lord Treasurer's warrant (date 15 July 1712), addressed to Sir Isaac Newton, Master and Worker of the Mint, for the payment (out of moneys impressed to the said master at the receipt of the Exchequer), of 35*l.* per annum for apprenticing Francis Beresford, in accordance with the recommendations of the letter.

(o.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the already mentioned letter (f.) touching an ancient privilege of graver in the Mint. No date.

(p.) Notes (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) for a letter to the Lords of the Treasury on the same subject. No date.

(q.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the already noticed report (m.) on the candidate for the office of Graver of the Mint. No date.

(r.) 26 September, 1 Anne. Copy of the patent of the grant, during pleasure, of the office of Engraver of the Mint to Henry Harris, gentleman.

(s.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer, Sidney Lord Godolphin. Recommending an increase of salary and allowance to Mr. Bull, one of the engravers of the Mint.

(t.) Another rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), of the report (m.) on the candidates for the office of Engravers of the Mint.

(u.) Fair copy (with autograph signatures of C. Peyton and Is. Newton), of already noticed letter (n), recommending the allowances of 35*l.* per annum for apprenticing Francis Beresford to John Croker, gentleman.

(v.) 14 September 1722. Humble memorial of Samuel Bull, second engraver of the Mint, addressed to Sir Isaac Newton, Master and Worker of the Mint; asking for increase of salary and enlargement of privileges.

(x.) 13 September 1704. Letter (signed Is. Newton, Jn. Ellis, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, addressed to the Lord High Treasurer, and recommending Mr. L. Clark for the office of third engraver of the Mint, under Mr. Croker and Mr. Bull.

(y.) 22 August, 1704. Fair copy (signed J. Stanley, Is. Newton, and Jn. Ellis) of the already mentioned report (m.), on the candidates for the office of Engraver of the Mint. Also, a rough and incomplete copy of the same letter to the Lord Treasurer.

(z.) 12 October 1704. Fair copy of Sir Isaac Newton's already mentioned letter (f.) to the Lord Treasurer, on the privilege of engravers of the Mint.

(aa.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's hand-writing) of the misunderstanding respecting the terms and stipulations of the contract between Mr. Harris engraver of the Mint, and Mr. Croker, a jeweller, whom Mr. Harris had engaged to serve under him in the Mint. No date.

(bb.) Copy of a memorial to the Lord High Treasurer. Insisting on the importance of the office of the Engraver of the Mint, and making suggestions for maintaining its efficiency. No date.

(27.) Documents relating to the office of the Melter in the Mint, in the Tower of London.

(a.) Rough draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) about the processes of melting and refining gold and silver at the Mint, and the waste attending each of those processes.

(b.) Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter by the Master of the Mint at Edinburgh to the Lord High Treasurer, about the process of melting silver in the said Mint. This copy being made on a sheet of foolscap, headed with this memorandum, [also in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting], of a warrant, "November 28, 1706, Sir, We desire you to pay to Mr. John Flamsteed, Her Majesty's Astronomer, upon account the sum of fifty pounds towards defraying the charge of preparing his Astronomical papers for the publick and correcting the press, and the same sum shall be allowed in your account to his Royal Highness the Prince."

(c.) 10 November 1707. Copy of resolution and orders made by the officers of the Mint at Edinburgh (at a meeting when Dr. Gregory was present), for regulating the meltings of silver in that Mint.

(d.) 5 November 1707. Minute of observations and an order for the melting of silver in the Mint at Edinburgh, made by the officers of the said Mint when Dr. Gregory was present.

(2.) Rough draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), to the Lord High Treasurer, the Earl of Godolphin. Recommending that the officers of the Mint at Edinburgh "be allowed to use their ancient method of alloying the molten silver to make it standard, until the present recoinage of the moneys in Scotland shall be finished." No date.

(f.) 21 March 1713. Letter from Hercules Scott, Edinburgh, to Sir Isaac Newton, about the process of melting silver in the Mint at Edinburgh.

(g.) 9 October 1707. Letter from Dr. Gregory of Edinburgh to Sir Isaac Newton. Giving an accurate account of the last melting at the Mint in Edinburgh.

(h.) 3 August 1680. Copy of warrant (signed by L. Hyde, J. Henly, Ed. Dering, S. Godolphin, Ste. Fox), to Henry Ayloffe, the King's Remembrancer or his deputy, to take due security, for the due performance of their duties and trusts in the Mint, of John Buckworth, Charles Duncomb, and James Hoare, Esquires, appointed by letters patent, dated 15 July, last past, Commissioners to execute the office of Master and Worker of the Mint in the Tower of London.

(j.) 10 December 1696. Letter (signed Is. Newton, Tho. Neale) to the Lords of the Treasury. Respecting the petition of Mr. Jonathan Ambrose, Melter of the Mint, for certain allowances and privileges.—Also, a rough draft of the same letter.

(c.) 25 February 1701. Articles of agreement and contract between Isaac Newton, Esq., Master and Worker of His Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London, on the one part, and Philip Shales of London, gentleman, of the other part, whereby the said Shales agreed to perform the duties of melter in the said Mint, and Isaac Newton bound himself to render him certain payments and allowances.—Also, attached to this parchment, an inventory of the tools and utensils belonging to the melting houses of the Mint in the Tower of London, appraised (8 September 1681) by Edward Silvester and Peter Johnson.

(28.) Papers relating to moneyers of the Mint in the Tower of London.

(a.) 3 November 1690. Warrant (dated from Whitehall Treasury Chambers, and signed R. Hampden, Ste. Fox, Th. Pelham) to the Warden, Master and Worker, and Comptroller of the Mint, to deliver the keys, tools, and engines pertaining to the office of Engineer to the Mint, to "Thomas Anderson, the present Provost of the Moneyers."

(b.) 25 September 1706. Copy of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord High Treasurer Godolphin. Recommending an allowance of 400*l.* per annum to be made to the twenty-one moneyers of the Mint, in addition to their previous allowances; on the understanding that the number of the said moneyers be reduced gradually from twenty-one to sixteen, which last number of moneyers is thought to be "sufficient for carrying on the service of the Mint upon extraordinary occasions."—Also, Copy of the Lord Treasurer's warrant (dated 19 November 1706) to Sir Isaac Newton to pay 400*l.* per annum out of the coinage duty to the Provost of Moneyers, for distribution amongst the moneyers, in accordance with the said Master's recommendation.

(c.) The case of Charles Stuart, one of the moneyers belonging to Her Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London. A curious record (addressed to Sir Isaac Newton) of a trades union amongst the moneyers of the Tower of London, and of the means they took to "ratten" and punish one their number, named Charles Stuart, who refused to acquiesce in the new code of secret laws which the associated workmen framed for the protection of their interests against the action of the Master and other officers of the Mint. "Some two years," it is said by Charles Stuart in this statement of his case, "before his being made a moneyer, the Provost with y^e rest of the moneyers thought good to draw up certain articles of agreement for the better preservation of society and good order amongst themselves, and whereby they obliged themselves if they broke any of those articles to pay some little forfeiture, the very highest of which was forty shillings; and seeing these articles had no other end or tendency than to keep up peace and good order in the society, the said Charles Stuart, when he was made a moneyer, gave his consent to those articles; and by these rules thus voluntarily agreed to the whole society has bin kept in mutual love and peace for many years, till about two years and a half ago new jealousies broke out among them on a very small occasion. The Honourable the Master Worker sending for the Provost of the Moneyers to know the charge of coining copper farthings, and they not agreeing together upon the price, the said Provost came back full of jealousy of the Master Worker, apprehending he had a design to make a separate contract with some of the moneyers only that were willing to coin the copper cheaper, and to exclude the rest. To defeat the Master Worker in his suspected design this expedient was resolved upon by the Provost and the Moneyers. To draw up a body of laws in which the old articles should be inserted, with the addition of several new ones; particularly one, and for the sake of which all the rest were made, is to prevent the making any separate contract; and an augmentation of the penalty from forty shillings, which was the highest sanction of the old articles, to five hundred pounds on any one that should dare to act against these laws." Charles Stuart's refusal to subscribe the new rules stirred the animosity of all his fellow workers, and provoked the Provost of Workers to persecute him in a remarkable manner. "The Provost told the said Charles Stuart to his great

PORTSMOUTH.

"surprise that the salary, which he and the rest of the moneyers enjoy by an Act of Parliament in that behalfe, and which by your Honour's care is paid us punctually, he, the Provost, would deprive the said Charles Stuart of, till he set his hand to these new Laws. Then the said Charles Stuart desired to have a copie of the laws, that he might consider 'em, which also was refused him, telling him he might read 'em himself, but they could not permit a copie of 'em to go abroad. But notwithstanding this hard usage of being denyd a copie of their laws, to consider before he sign'd 'em, and of having a whole year's salary stop't in the hands of the Provost for not signing 'em, the said Charles Stuart has constantly attended the service of the Mint all along, and had he bin inclined by such strange treatment to neglect it, as he never was, yet as often as there was occasion, they called upon him to come to work, who were most zealous in refusing to pay him for his work; and for all that he constantly obeyed their call, but as constantly as he applied himself to the Provost for his salary, and the wages for so many days' work, he positively refused to pay him either." No date.

(d.) Draft of a report made by the Warden, Master and Worker, and Controller of the Mint to the Lords of the Treasury, respecting the charges of the Provost and Corporation of Moneyers for setting up Mints in the Tower of London and in the country. No date.

PORTSMOUTH.EARL OF

in accordance with the rules and orders of the indenture (of Dec. 1700), executed between King William the Third and the said Isaac Newton until a new indenture of the Mint shall be prepared.

(f.) Memorandum in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting respecting the coining of quarter-guinea pieces in gold. No date.

(g.) 2 April. 1 William and Mary. Extract from the indenture of the Mint, made between their Majesties William and Mary of the one part, and Thomas Neale, Esquire, of the other part.

(33.) Documents relating to the prosecution of Clippers and False Coiners.

(a.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) entitled "The Original and History of the Wardens 'prosecuting Clippers and Coiners.'" No date.

(b.) 1 December 1686. Warrant (signed Rochester) for the seizure of the clippings, clipt money, false money, and other chattels and property of clippers and coiners, for the King's use; inventories of such forfeited property to be sent to Owen Wynne, Esq., Warden of His Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London.

(c.) 16 February, 5 William and Mary. Copy of Privy Seal writ addressed to the Lords of the Treasury, the Treasurer and Under-Treasurer of the Exchequer, and the Warden of the Mint in the Tower of London for the seizure of the chattels and all other property of clippers and false coiners.

(d.) 1696. Privy Seal writ addressed to the Warden of His Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London, for dealing more effectually with the forfeited chattels and other property of clippers and false coiners in remedying and checking those offences. Reciting previous Privy Seal writs of 16 February 1692 and 24 June 1693.

(e.) List of the names of several persons who claimed by virtue of their grants the goods, &c. of traitors; delivered to Mr. Attorney-General with other writings in January 1690, pursuant to the order of the Rt. Hon. the Lords Commissioners of their Majesties' Treasury.

(f.) Papers, (addressed to the Lords of the Treasury) of "Reasons why the Bayliffe of Westminster, in virtue of that Deane and Chapter's Grant, ought not to 'claim the goods of Traitors and Felons, nor the 'tools, clippings, &c. seized upon clippers and false 'coiners,'" together with a note (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) about the case of the Bayliffs of Westminster. No date.

(g.) Reasons humbly offered to His Sacred Majesty and the Council for making an Act of Parliament to prevent the Counterfeiting of the Coin. By Joseph Aikin Clark. No date.

(h.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a curious letter addressed to the Lords of the Treasury, in which the writer sets forth his strenuous labours to discover and punish clippers and false coiners, and begs to be relieved of the ungrateful task of prosecuting those offenders. "And the new reward of forty pounds per 'head," the writer urges, "has now made courts of 'justice and juries so averse from believing witnesses, 'and sheriffs so inclinable to impanel bad juries, that 'my agents and witnesses are discouraged and tired 'out by the want of success and by the reproach of 'prosecuting and swearing for money. And this vilifying 'of my agents and witnesses is a reflexion on me, which 'has gravelled me, and must in time impair and 'perhaps wear out my credit. Besides that I am 'exposed to the calumnies of as many coyners and 'Newgate solicitors as I examin or admit to talk with 'me, if they can but find friends to believe and 'encourage them in their false reports and oaths and 'combinations against me. I do not find that the 'prosecuting of coyners was imposed upon any of my predecessors (tho' some of them have done it) or is consistent with the Privy Seal; for he that gathers up 'the estates of convicted criminals should not intermeddle in this matter. . . . 'Tis the business of an attorney, and belongs properly to the King's Attorney and Solicitor-General; and they are best able 'to go through it, especially with such assistance as 'they can procure. And therefore I humbly pray that 'it may not be imposed upon me any longer." No date.

(j.) 5 July 1715. Letter (signed Isaac Newton and M. Bladen) addressed to the Lords of the Treasury. Recommending the appointment of a clerk and solicitor to manage the Mint prosecutions of clippers and coiners, and a scheme of payments and allowances for his services. —Also four rough drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the same letter.

(k.) 1 March 1721. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. Respecting the title of Thomas Dearsly, the informer, to a reward in a particular Mint case.

(l.) 4 April 1699. Petition of Gerard Bovey, button maker, to the Lords of the Treasury, for the restoration to him of a certain engine invented and long used by himself for the manufacture of buttons, which engine is detained by the officers of the Mint as an engine that might be used for the coining of money.

(m.) 4 April 1699. Similar petition, under similar circumstances, of Jacob Wallis to the Lords of the Treasury, that they may be pleased to order the authorities of the Mint to restore to him a certain hand wedge press long since invented and used by him for the manufacture of "hooks and chains for watches."

(n.) April 1699. Letter (signed, Is. Newton, Tho. Neale, Tho. Molyneux) to the Lords of the Treasury, respecting the above-described petitions of Mr. Wallis and Mr. Bovey.

(o.) 7 January 1729. Petition of Thomas Dearsly, the informer, to the Lords of the Treasury, for reward and compensation for his assistance in a Mint prosecution.

(p.) 1 March 1729. Draft of letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) to the Lords of the Treasury, who are informed thereby that there is no precedent for consenting to Thomas Dearsly's petition, as his information has not resulted in a conviction.

(q.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Rt. Hon. Henry St. John, Esq., Secretary of State, respecting the reprieve of Jane Housden and Mary Pitman, under sentence of death for counterfeiting the coin of the realm. No date.

(r.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer. Recommending the allowance of Mr. Weddel's claim for 337l. 1s. 6d. for services in prosecuting clippers and false coiners. Together with a draft (in the same handwriting) of a bill of particulars of another account, amounting to 467l. 15s. 2d., for Mr. Weddel's services in Mint prosecutions. No dates.

(s.) 3 August 1696. An account of the monies expended by Isaac Newton, Esq., Warden of the Mint, in apprehending and prosecuting clippers and coiners between 3 August 1696 and 24 September 1696.—Also a similar account of moneys expended by the same Warden of the Mint for the same purpose between 5 Sept. 1696 and 12 June 1699.—Also other memoranda of expenditure in Mint prosecutions of later dates, viz., in the years 1645 and 1646.

(t.) 7 September 1696. Copy, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of his warrant, addressed to the keeper of the Marshalsea Prison, co. Surrey, to deliver up his prisoner, Charles Ecclestone, committed for counterfeiting, in order that he may be King's evidence at Hick's Hall, in St. John's Street, in certain Mint prosecutions.—Also similar warrants to the keeper of the Gate House, Westminster, and the keeper of the New Prison for co. Middlesex, for the delivery of the person of Joseph Gregory, appointed to give King's evidence at Mint prosecutions.

(u.) Memoranda (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) relating to Mint prosecutions at the Old Bayley and Lancaster Assizes. No date.

(v.) 12 August 1697. The petition of Francis Moore, gentleman, to the Lords of the Treasury, that he may be appointed to receive and recover the estate of William Hawkins of the city of London, lately executed at Lincoln for counterfeiting the coin of the realm, and for his exertions in discovering the same estate may receive the usual bounty.

(w.) Copy of John Rotherham's petition to the Lords of the Treasury, that they would consider his scheme for making gold and silver coins in such a way that "it 'would be impossible to lessen their value by liquids, 'or any other means, without demolishing the whole 'body."—Also draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of memoranda touching the same project. No dates.

(x.) 15 October 1721. Copy of the Order of Council, dated at Whitehall, referring to the proposal of John Rotherham, of Barnet, Hertfordshire, gentleman, for a new method of coining gold and silver money, to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.—Also the letter, dated 11 October 1720, addressed by Mr. John Rotherham to their Excellencies the Lords Justices, respecting his proposal for a better coinage.

(y.) 19 August, 1720. Letter from John Rotherham, of Barnet, gentleman, to Sir Isaac Newton. Sir, I presume to acquaint your Honour that I have for many years last past employed my whole time and much money in the publick service, wherein I have been so successful that the Government has had great benefit thereby, without my being reimbursed my charge, much less rewarded for my service, altho' I produced ample certificates signed by several members of the Hon^{ble} House of Commons to prove my performance. Notwithstanding which (tho' the treatment I have had might have discouraged any one from further endeavours to serve the Government, yet it doth not me for) I am earnestly desirous to exert myself therein to my life's end.

I have a proposal to make to your honour, relating to the coin, whereby the salaries of the Master Worker, Master Melter, and the Master Graver of the Mint will be increased at least two hundred pounds yearly, or as your Honour shall think fit, and the Government save fifteen and twenty thousand pounds per ann., which I humbly hope will be esteemed a matter of such consequence as to have the management thereof, under the conduct of five commissioners of the Mint; and that His Majesty King George would be graciously pleased to grant his Letters Patent under the Great Seal of Great Britain to constitute such new Commissioners, and their heirs for ever, commissioners in fee for managing the coin in the method I shall make known to your Honour (if permitted to do so) with the yearly salary of five hundred pounds each.

Those I would recommend to be joined with your Honour in the Commission are His Grace the Duke of Chandos or Ralph Freeman, Esq.; The Rt. Hon. Richard Hamden, Esq., Joseph Blake, of Red Lyon Square, Esq., and myself. The method found out by me will effectually at all times hereafter prevent the current coin of this kingdom being counterfeited, whereby the lives of many persons in time to come will be saved, who else might suffer the law for counterfeiting. When this is put in practice here, the use of it will be so easily discerned, that not only all courts in Europe, but those of other countries all over the world, where the metals of gold and silver are coined, will take the same way to prevent counterfeiting; but Great Britain being the first who introduced the same into the world, will add much to the glory of the British nation, and be so remarkable and memorable as to be recorded among the many great things done by His Majesty in this his happy reign, and great honour to yourself, being done in the time of your Honour, having the chief directions of the coinage. What remains to conclude these, is that your Honour would be pleased to permit me to speak with you fully on this matter. I am, Sir, Your Honour's most obedient servant.

JOHN ROTHERHAM.

Also the following Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), "In obedience to an Order of Reference of the late Lords Justices, dated 11 October 1729, upon a Memorial of Mr. John Rotherham proposing a new method of coining the moneys of Gold and Silver, so as to prevent the counterfeiting thereof, and to make it more durable, provided he may assured of a reward before he discovers his secret; and praying that it may be examined; I humbly represent that he offers nothing to be examined, and without examination, I am in the dark, and know not what report to make. I take him to be a trifier, more fit to embroyle the coinage than to mend it."

(g.) Two rough drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of memoranda respecting the statements of William Chaloner, the false coiner and confederate of counterfeiters. No date.

(ha.) Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the petition of William Chaloner, gentleman, to the House of Commons; charging the officers of the Mint with conspiring to work his destruction, and with divers illegal practices. No date.

(cc.) Rough draft of a memoir (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), entitled "Chaloner's case," in which the writer sets forth all the frauds and criminal practices of William Chaloner, the counterfeiter, from the time when he exhaled "the sordid garb of an indigent japper" for "the habit of a gentleman," and commenced his curiously audacious and successful career of crime and imposture. No date.

(dl.) 15 February 1696. Order of the Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to examine into the abuses of the Mint, Mr. Arnold in the chair, "That the Warden of the Mint doe against Saturday morning next prepare, or cause to be prepared, such matters and

"things as the Committee this day directed Mr. Chaloner, to the end the said Mr. Chaloner may make an experiment before the said Committee in relation to guineas. Signed T. Arnold."

(ee.) November, 1699. Two rough drafts in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of his letter to the Lords of the Treasury respecting the right of East Indian Company to erect Mints in their forts in the East Indies for coining Indian money, and the petition of the same Company to be allowed to provide themselves with coining engines and tools from the Mint in the Tower of London.

(n.) Table of the various German coins. With five slips of memoranda and calculations touching the same table. No dates.

(o.) Two rough drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury on the value of Imperial dollars, both intrinsically and by way of exchange with Sweden. Also papers of memoranda and calculations used in preparing the same letter. No dates.

(p.) Papers relating to Assays and Values of Spanish and Portuguese coins. No dates.

(q.) Six foolscap sheets of notes and calculations (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) entitled "Consideration about the Rates of the Coins." No date.

(r.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a paper headed, "Inquiries concerning the 800,000 Mexican and Pillar Dollars purchased by Her Majesty" and coyned into two Ryal pieces for the Spanish service." No date.

(s.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter addressed to the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain. Respecting the value of the Mexican and Pillar dollars to be received at Port Mahon. No date.

(v.) 16 August 1711. Order of the Lord Treasurer for a report on the value of an enclosed Spanish piece of money. At the foot of the same order Sir Isaac Newton's report, dated 21 August 1711.

(w.) Another rough draft of the paper (b) on the Mexican and Pillar dollars. No date.

(x.) 8 and 10 June 1711. Two drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a report addressed to the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain. Respecting the value of Mexican pieces of eight, and Sevil pieces of eight.

(y.) Note (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) on the values of Spanish coins. With three sheets of calculations and memoranda respecting the same. No date.

(z.) Group of papers described on the wrapper, "Values of foreign coins in Ireland; and Reasons" against erecting a Mint in Ireland."

(aa.) August 1689.—Four various drafts of a letter (in the handwriting of Sir Isaac Newton), from the officers of the Mint in the Tower of London to the Lords of the Treasury, respecting "the memorial of the Chancellor of Ireland about erecting a Mint in that kingdom." Also, the official copy of another letter (dated 18 August 1698), on the same proposal to establish a Mint in Ireland for coining shillings and sixpences. After considering the policy of England in past times on matters relating to Irish money, and the reasons for approaching with extreme caution every proposal to establish a Mint in Ireland, the writer of the first letter says, "Upon enquiring into the state of the coyn in Ireland, we understand that y^e foreign coyns, which make a great part of their silver moneys, are generally in great pieces, (as Ducatoons or pieces of eight) which are inconvenient for change, and that the want of smaller silver moneys has encouraged the coyning of so great quantities of copper monies for change as to be complained of; and if for remedying this inconvenience a Mint be desired to coyn those foreign monies or any part of them into small English money (shillings and sixpences), we believe it may be cheapest and best for Ireland, and safest for England, to have this coynage dispatch at once by erecting a Mint in Ireland for some short time (as eighteen months or two years), and by lowering the value of the foreign moneys to bring them into that Mint. But we humbly lay before your Lordships that the late Country Mints were in disorder, and left their accompts full of difficulties, and that the breaking up of such a Mint may increase the number of false coyners. And we heare that the English money is now grown much more plentifull in Ireland in proportion to the foreign then it was a few years ago: so that the want of change is in good measure vanishing and decreasing, the foreign moneys having lately found a good market in London for the East Indies."

(bb.) March and April, 1714. Account of the New French Lewd^d (Louis d'ors) followed by a table of "The Current Values of Moneys in Ireland, Moydores, pistoles, ducatoons, pieces of eight, crusados, Pernes, 23-6 broads, 25-6 broads, French Louis, French crowns, and French guineas being rated in the table as well, as English guineas, crowns, half-crowns, shillings, and half-shillings."

(cc.) Draft of a letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), addressed by the officers of the Mint to the Treasury. Respecting the proposal of the Lord Lieu tenant of Ireland (the Duke of Ormond), that certain foreign moneys of gold should be proclaimed current in Ireland, "in order to prevent the counterfeiting thereof." No date.

(dd.) Table of values of foreign coins current in Ireland, taken "from the report which Mr. Hoar, late Comptroller of the Mint, presented to the Treasury Board in 1692," and sent in a letter from H. Haynes (of the Excise Office) to Sir Isaac Newton.

(ee.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from the Warden, Master, and Comptroller of the Mint to the Lords of the Treasury. Setting forth in compliance with their Lordships' order, dated 23 Sept. 1725, "the weight and assay of five sorts of new Portugal Gold coins."

(ff.) 3 March 1711. Two drafts of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer. Respecting the Duke of Ormond's recommendation that certain foreign gold coins should by proclamation be made current in Ireland, in order to prevent the counterfeiting of the same.

(gg.) 7 June 1712. Letter addressed to the Duke of Ormond, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland by the Lords of the Privy Council of Ireland.—My Lord, Her Majesty's Order in Council directing severall foreigne gold coynes to be made current in this kingdom, having bin transmitted to us, Wee did, in order to put Her Majesty's commands in execution, consider the Proclamation issued in June 1701, for making Forreigne Coyne current in this kingdom, which directed allowances to be made for any deficiency in any piece of gold or silver coyne thus made current: But taking notice that in Her Majesty's said order there are not any directions for making such allowances, Wee would not take upon us to make any addition to the directions given by Her Majesty without the signification of her pleasure therein: And therefore we have thought fit to transmit to Your Grace Her Majesty's said Order, as alsoe the said late Proclamation, that you may please to lay the same before Her Majesty for further consideration.

Wee take this opportunity of acquainting Your Grace that in the late fire, which happened at the Councill Chamber, the Originall Proclamation, which passed under the Great Seal, for making Forreigne Coynes that passed in payment here current, was destroyed, so that the Clerke of the Councill cannot certifie that the printed Proclamation agrees verbatim with the originall under the Great Seal, as the late Act of Parliament which passed in 1709 required, for the conviction of persons who shall counterfeit the coyne made current by Proclamation: And, therefore, it being necessary to renew the said former Proclamation, Wee humbly pray your Grace to lay this whole matter before Her Majesty, that Wee may have Her Majesty's Orders (if she shall be soe graciously pleased) to insert all in one new Proclamation, with directions to make the proper allowances for deficiency in weight, as in the said former Proclamation is mentioned, which Wee nevertheless most humbly submit to Your Grace's consideration and remaine. My Lord, Your Grace's most humble servants,—Con. Phipps, Canc.; Jo. Tuam, Abercorn, W. Kildare, Tho. Killaloe, Cha. Feilding, P. Savage, Rich. Cox, Rob. Rochfort, Pierre Butler, Sam. Dopping, Tho. Keighley, Cha. Dering.

PORTS-

(h.) 25 June 1712. Four drafts of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer: Respecting the above-given letter of the Privy Council of Ireland.

(j.) 8 January 1711. Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter addressed by the Lords of the Privy Council of Ireland to his Grace the Duke of Ormond, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, for a new and amended proclamation, for making certain foreign pieces of gold current in Ireland; the last proclamation being insufficient against counterfeiters by reason of certain omissions.—Signed, Con. Phipps, Canc.; R. Ingoldshy. Abercorn. W. Kildare, Cha. Feilding, Rich Cox, Jn^o Percivale, Cha. Dering, P. Savage, Sam Dopping.

(k.) 3 March 1711. Copy, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of his letter to the Lord High Treasurer, respecting the same letter of the Privy Council of Ireland.

(7.) Collection of Accounts, described on their paper wrapper, "Accounts of Gold and Silver coined."

(a.) 23 November 1717. Letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), to the Lords of the Treasury. In answer to their Lordships order of the 19th inst. for an account of all the gold and silver money coined during the last fifteen years, together with a statement of how much of the said money has been newly coined out of plate upon public encouragements, and a return of the amounts of copper money recently coined.

(b.) An account of the moneys coined in the Tower in the years 1696 to 1714: the amounts of the annual coinings in gold and silver being set forth in tabular form. Also three slips of memoranda respecting former coinages and issues of money. No date.

(c.) 16 April 1698. Letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, and signed, Is. Newton) beginning "Sir, "the business of the Country Mints now drawing "towards an end, the Lords of the Treasury are minded "that we should lay your accounts before them, and for "that end I desire you with the assistance of the Master "and Comptroller to fill up the blanks in the inclosed "paper with all the care and exactness you can, and "then to return it to me, or a fair copy thereof, signed "by you all, that we may rely upon it."—Apparently a circular letter addressed to the wardens of Country Mints.

(c.) 15 February 1703. An Inventory of the Plate and other things delivered into the Treasury of the Mint by the Honble. Her Majesty's Commissioners for Prizes. One article described in the inventory being "a Benitier or Vessel for holy Water faced with Philligram Work."

(d.) A Particular (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of silver monies coined from the first day of Queen Elizabeth's accession to the Crown to the end of King James the Second's reign.

(e.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of gold and silver moneys coined in the Tower of London in the years 1696 to 1712.

(f.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the gold and silver moneys coined at the Mint in the Tower of London from Lady Day 1713 to Lady Day 1715; and of what gold and silver remained in the Tower in order for the coynage at Lady Day 1715.

(g.) An Account of the gold and silver moneys coyned yearly at the Mint within the Tower of London for the years 1659 to Christmas, 1715. At the foot of the account this note, "The silver coined in all the five "country Mints in the years 1697 and 1698 amounted "to 1,891,420l. 17s. 4d., viz., at York 308,621l. 13s. 8d., "at Bristol 458,078l. 6s. 4d., at Exeter 459,072l. 10s. 8d., "at Chester 316,840l. 6s. 8d., at Norwich 258,808l." Also duplicate of the same account.

(h.) An Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the Gold and Silver moneys coyned yearly in the reign of their several Majesties successively in their Mint in the Tower of London, from the year 1659 to 31 December 1691.

(j.)—November 1675. Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of an Account of all the Gold and Silver coyned in his Majesty's Mint within the Tower of London, from the first of October 1599, being the one-and-fortieth year of Queen Elizabeth to this present November 1675, being seventy-six years, divided into four parts; shewing how the coyn of the kingdom did increase in the three first parts proportionately to the increase of trade and navigation, and how much it hath decreased in the fourth part, being since this present East India Company was erected in the year 1657. Also, another copy of the same account.

(k.) An account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the Gold and Silver moneys coyned annually in the Tower in the years 1696 to 1714.

(l.) An Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, and signed at the foot—Is. Newton) of the Silver moneys coyned in the four years between Michaelmas 1694 and Christmas 1698.

(m.) An Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the Gold and Silver moneys coyned by the mill and the press from the last day of March 1663 to the first day of January 1693.

(n.) An Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the Gold and Silver coyned at his Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London, from Lady Day 1713 to Lady Day 1715; and of the gold and silver remaining in the Tower in order for coynage at Lady Day 1715.

(o.) Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's hand-writing) of the Gold and Silver moneys coyned in the Tower of London and the five country Mints from the first of January 1695 to the first of January 1698.

(p.) 18 January 1695. Copy of the following discharge given by Mr. Israel Hayes to Mr. Burdikin and Mr. Walford:—"Left in the hands of Mr. Thomas Burdikin "and Mr. Samuel Walford, in the Treasury of the "Mint of Exon, the summ of fourteen hundred eighty- "eight pounds, six shillings, and six pence, and I oblige "myself to make good the same to the balance of the "Treasury, and secure them from any demand. Exon, "18th Jan. 1695."

(q.) 21 July 1696. Attested copy of a letter (dated from Whitehall, and signed George Parke) to Colonel Kirkby, governor of Chester. Enjoining the said colonel, at the command of the Lords Justice, "to permit the "setting up a Mint in such part of the Castle of Chester "as shall be convenient for that purpose in order to "the speedy recoining of the clipt money."

(r.) An Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of the Goynage of the five Country Mints till November 1698.

(s.) An Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the Hammered Money, Plate, and Bullion imported into the five Country Mints until November 4, 1696.

(t.) An Account of the Charges in receiving into the Mint, refining, melting, coyning, and paying into the Receipt of His Majesty's Exchequer one thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine ingotts of Silver, melted down from the Clipt Moneys that were found in the said receipt at the taking of the Twelfth General Remaine on the 24th of June last past; which said 1769 ingotts weighed, when reduced to standard 129,550 lb. 05 oz. 09 dwt. 23 grs. No date of year.

(u.) 10 June 1696. The Mint's Account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) for one thousand two hundred and twenty-three ingots of Silver, and the new moneys proceeding therefrom, being the Eleventh General Remain of His Majesty's Exchequer, on the 10th of June 1696. With the incidental charges of coynage.

(v.) 23 November 1717. Fair copy of letter (a.) of this group (addressed by Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury) respecting the gold and silver money coined during the last fifteen years. Also, a copy of an Account sent with the same letter to the Lords of the Treasury.

(w.) An Account of all the Gold and Silver coyned in the Tower of London from the 1st of October 1599 to

PORTSMOUTH.EARL OF PORTSMOUTH.

November 1675. Endorsed with this memorandum.—
 "The gold exported for India from the 2d of March "1673 to the 11th of March 1674 was, by entry at the "Customs House for the port of London five hundred "sixty odd thousand pounds, beside what was exported
 "without entry and in out Ports. The Company exporting
 "so great quantities of gold and silver has increased the "price of Standard Silver from 5s. the ounce to 5s. 4d.,
 "which is ten per cent., and a 20s. piece of broad money
 "to 24s., which is 20 per cent., and guineas in pro"portion, which is so much value above his Majesty's "coin, that it doth not only hinder the bullion of gold "and silver being coined, but hath occasioned all the "weighty coin to be called and melted into bullion, so "that there's not above 15 or 20 pounds of current "money in 100l. when the light and clift are taken "out. It is thought there's not above 4 or 5 millions "of money left in this kingdom, which is not sufficient "to manage the trade, which is reported to be above
 "40 millions per annum. The Free Exporting of Gold "and Silver, and laying so great impositions by mulct
 "on all the commodities and manufactures of this "kingdom, hindreth the exporting thereof, which hath "brought down the price of Land, Lead, Tin, Wool, and
 "all Woollen and other Manufactures."

(c.) An account of the silver moneys coined in his Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London, from 20 July 1660 to 12 December 1699.

(d.) Another Account of gold and silver moneys coined in the reigns of their several Majesties' successively in their Mynt within the Tower of London, from the year 1659 to the 31st of December 1691.

(e.) 24 June 1696. Fair Copy of the Mint's Account for one thousand seven hundred and sixty-nine ingots of silver, and the new moneys proceeding therefrom; being the Twelfth General Remain taken in the Receipt of his Majesty's Exchequer on the 24th day of June 1696.

(f.) Papers relating to the Copper Coinage.

(a.) 83 July 1703. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Rt. Hon. Sidney Lord Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer, respecting "the annex proposal of Mr. Abel
 "Slaney for himself and partners for a new coinage of "700 tons in half-pence and farthings." After giving particulars respecting the several coinages of copper money since 1672, the writer says, "We do not hear
 "there is any demand of halfpence and farthings at "present, and, tho' there should be a want in some "places, it seems to proceed from an unequal distribu"tion, for we are informed they are overstockt with "them in others, as at the General Post Office, about "Newcastle, and at Leicester. We are further of "opinion that the coinage of half-pence and farthings
 "in this kingdom should be to the intrinsic value, the "charges of the coinage and incidents deducted; but if "that be not thought advisable at present for fear of "stopping the currency of those that are already abroad,
 "we humbly conceive that, whenever a new coinage "shall be thought convenient, it should be done in "small quantities as Her Majesty shall from time to "time appoint, to supply the decrease and loss of those "already coined without danger of new complaints by
 "overstocking the nation."

(b.) 12 March 1713. Three drafts, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from him to the Lord High Treasurer. Respecting the various qualities and properties of different kinds of copper, and the expenses of coining the same metal.

(c.) Rough draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from him to the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer. Respecting the proposal of John Pery, and others "for supplying the Mint with either
 "blanks or plates of fine copper to be coined into half-"pence and farthings." The writer is of opinion that there is no present scarcity of copper money; that the entire manufacture of copper "blanks should be done
 "in the Mint, it being unsafe to have coining tools and "coinage abroad"; and that copper money should be made "of the cheapest fine copper which will hammer
 "when red-hot, and is worth about 11d. or 12d. per "pound weight. In finer and dearer copper we may "be easily deceived, there being no certain list of the "higher degrees of fineness; and the great price will "tempt false coiners to counterfeit the money." No date.

(d.) Copy, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter addressed by him to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer. Respecting the terms on which the Mint should procure copper and coin it. The writer alludes to his recommendation made to his Lordship in the previous autumn, that about eighty or a hundred tons of copper should be coined.

 No date.

(e.) 12 April 1714. Two drafts, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from him to the Lord High Treasurer, the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, respecting coinage of copper. "Since I attended your Lordship
 "last," the writer says in the opening sentence of his letter, "I caused a new furnace to be built in order to a "further trial of what may be done by casting of copper
 "into bars and coining copper money out of those bars.
 "But in the mean time, upon as saying the half-pence,
 "of which I showed your Lordship a specimen, I found
 "the copper coarser than it was by the assay before "casting. Whereupon I ordered Mr. Bagley, the "founder, to supply me with such bars as would fully "endure the assay; but he has not yet produced any,
 "tho' it be about three weeks since I gave him the "order. Whence I suspect that in the specimen of "half-pence, which I shewed to your Lordship, he put "in some Tynn without my knowledge, tho' I stood by
 "to see him cast the copper; but he pretends another
 "cause."

(f.)—1717. Rough draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, for an indenture to be executed between His Majesty the King of the one part and the said Sir Isaac Newton of the other part, "granting unto the said Sir
 "Isaac Newton full power and authority to coin half-
 "pence and farthings of fine British copper which,
 "when made red hot, shall spread thin under the "hammer without cracking, and to cut every pound "weight averdupois of such copper into forty and six "half-pence or ninety and two farthings, and to coin
 "any sum of such moneys not exceeding forty tunns."

(g.) 4 October 1725. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. Begging their Lordships to appoint a day for the trial of the Pix of copper money made since the last trial thereof.

(h.) 27 October 1722. Report addressed to the Lords of the Treasury by R. Powys. May it please your Lordships, in obedience to your Lordships' commands that I should attend at the office of His Majesty's Mint within the Tower of London, to see the opening of the Pix kept for the coynage of copper half-pence and farthings, I went this day, and saw the box opened, and several parcells weighed, and found 23 pence to be full one pound weight. I then went with Sir Isaac Newton and others into the Assay Office, where six of the old half-pence, which were made by the former contractors, were put into the fire, and then tried with a hammer whether they would bear beating out; but they all flew and broke in pieces. Then six of those lately made by Sir Isaac Newton, which have been passed in payments abroad were tried, and they all bore the hammer when red hot without breaking or cracking. Lastly we took out a considerable quantity of the half-pence and farthings that were in the Pix, and after heating them red hot they were beaten out with a hammer without breaking or cracking. All which farthings and half-pence so tried are herewith humbly laid before you Lordships. R. Powys.

(i.) Memorandum, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of sixteen articles of "Considerations about the coinage "of Copper Moneys," addressed to the Lord Treasurer, in some unstatd year of Queen Anne. The first six articles being in the following terms:—1. That six or at most seven hundred tunns of copper moneys are sufficient for all England, and I am opinion that there is above three quarters of that quantity now in the nation.
 2. That whenever there shall be a coinage of such moneys the coinage do not exceed 20 or 30 or at the most 40 tunns per annum. For this money should have time to spread evenly without making a clamour anywhere, before the nation is sufficiently stockt. 3. That it be in the power of the Queen or Lord Treasurer to diminish or stop the coinage at pleasure, for preventing clamours, if there should be occasion. 4. That the moneys be coined in the Mint, it being unsafe to have coining tools and coinage abroad. 5. That the moneys be well coined, and a pound weight cut into no more than twenty pence, lest the ill form and lightness of the money be an encouragement to counterfeiters. 6.
 That about one seventh part of the moneys be in farthings.

(k.) 7 August 1717. Bond of Sir Isaac Newton, Master of His Majesty's Mint in the Tower of London, to Henry Hines, citizen and founder, and John Appleby junr., citizen, armourer and brazier of London, in the amount of six hundred pounds; obliging the said Master of the Mint to receive thirty-tons of fine British copper, in certain proportions, within two years of the said Henry Hines and John Appleby, and to pay for the same at the rate of 18*l*. per pound avoirdupois; it being stipulated that the same copper is to be of such fineness that, when heated red hot, it will spread thin under the hammer without cracking, so "that 46 half-pence and 92 farthings cutt out of the same, according to dimensions of patterns given, shall make a pound weight avoirdupois as nearly as shall be found practicable without erring by design."

(h.) Memorandum, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of "Observations upon the estimate of the real profit of coining 1,500 tunns of copper into half-pence and farthings." At the close of his estimate the writer says, "And this profit in coining 1,500 tunns amounts unto 84,000*l*., out of which something may be abated for house rent, clerks, coining tools and incidents." Also another estimate computing the profit at 97,000*l*. No dates.

(m.) Memorandum, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of seven matters to be observed in coining and issuing copper moneys. No date.

(a.) 8 April 1711. Letter from Charles Parry to Sir Isaac Newton. Offering to hammer farthings at a certain rate.

(c.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury respecting an estimate for coining farthings. The Mint can obtain fit bars of copper at 19*d*. per lb. weight avoirdupois, or under, but scarcely at 18*d*. per lb. weight, the "scissel" being taken back at the same price. No date.

(q.) 1 November 1700. Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) respecting three several lots of tin farthings.

(t.) Collection of memoranda (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) respecting charges for coining copper, on a much discoloured sheet of paper, which also exhibits the following memorandum and letter (in the same handwriting), respecting the scientific instruments at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. "Her Majesty having authorised the Council of the R.S. to appoint visitors of the R. Observatory at Greenwich, and we being appointed accordingly, &c. Gentlemen,—Understanding that a letter dated 12 Dec. 1710, by Her Majesty's order was sent to your Board by my Lord Bolingbroke, signifying Her Majesty's pleasure that you do receive and take notice of such representations as the President should make to your Board concerning Her Majesty's instruments in the said Observatory, and that you should order them to be repaired, erected, or changed as there shall be occasion, or purchased for Her Majesty if they do not already belong to the Observatory. We take the liberty to represent to you that in the great room of the Observatory, up one pair of stairs, there are two clocks which Sir Jonas Moor caused to be made for the Observatory, as we understand by the inscription upon them, but which are claimed by Mr. Flamsteed as given him by Sir Jonas Moor the Younger. If they be not the Queen's, we desire that they may be purchased as necessary for the Observatory. In the same room there is a brass quadrant of four foot radius belonging to Mr. Flamsteed. And such an instrument is necessary for observing the altitudes of the stars. It is not well divided, but if it can be divided anew, we desire that it may be purchased for the Observatory, or else that a new one be made. In the same room there also wanting a telescope of about * * * feet radius, with a micrometer. In the garden there is a house with a sextant, a wall quadrant, with a clock therein. The house should be moved six or eight yards further from the brow of the hill that the ground may not sink under it. The sextant is grown rusty, and should be cleaned and new fixed, and there should be a new wall quadrant, the old one being much worn by long usage, and belonging to Mr. Flamsteed. The clock is also Mr. Flamsteed's, and a better clock would be more usefull. If you would please to give order to able workmen to repair these instruments and make new ones when they are wanting, and take care of moving the house in the garden, some of us will go with them to Greenwich, and shew them what is wanting. Gentlemen, your most humble servants." No date.

(u.) Another memorandum (scarcely legible, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), respecting a coinage of copper money in some year of George the First. Written on the back of a printed notice paper for calling a meeting on 15 August 1717 at the Palace Yard, in Westminster, of "Lords and others, the Commissioners appointed by His Majesty for building the fifty new churches in and about the Cities of London and Westminster." No date.

(v.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury, respecting a proposal and estimate for coining copper. Written on a paper which also exhibits some notes for a scheme of education for the boys "in the School of Mr. Stone's Foundation," the said notes being of interest as a revelation of what Sir Isaac Newton deemed an appropriate education for boys destined for industries having relations with mathematical science. Also three slips of memoranda used in papers (already mentioned) respecting coinages of copper. No dates.

(w.) 11 September 1717. Treasury warrant, (signed Stanhope, Torrington, J. Walpole), addressed to Sir Isaac Newton, authorising and directing him to deliver "one instrument or tool called a cutter," out of the Mint to Henry Hines, a contractor for supplying the Mint with copper for the coinage of copper money, the said instrument to be returned to the Mint when the said Henry Hines has had sufficient use of it for the accomplishment of his contract with the Mint.

(x.) 1 June 1722. Certificate (signed, John Wern for John Midford) of the quantity of copper sold to Messrs. Appleby and Hains since 7 March last, for coining half-pence and farthings, and of the quantity of copper delivered by them to the Tower. With three memoranda relating to the same subject attached to the certificate.

(y.) Two rough drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter, in which a scheme for coining copper moneys was submitted to the Lords of His Majesty's Treasury. No date.

(z.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), respecting various kinds of copper and copper money. No date. Also a fair and amended copy (in the same handwriting) of the same memorandum. No date.

(cc.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) entitled "Considerations about the Coinage of Copper Moneys." No date.

(hh.) Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury respecting the coinage of copper money. Also two slightly varying drafts of the same letter, followed by a slip of memoranda on the same subject. No date.

(ii.) — July 1717. Letter written (at the order of the Lords of the Treasury) by C. Stanhope, to the officers of the Mint. Referring to the consideration of the said officers several proposals for supplying the Mint with copper.

(kk.) Copy of the following petition of William Wood, gentleman, to the Lords of the Treasury. "The petition of W. Wood, gent., most humbly sheweth, that upon advertisement in y^e Gazette for sending proposals to serve copper for y^e coinage, he delivered in his proposals to serve at y^e rate of 17*d*. per lb., yet another person was permitted to send to y^e Tower 30 tons at 18*d*. per lb. (ll.) 4 June 1719. Letter written, at the order of the Lords of the Treasury, by W. Lowndes to Sir Isaac Newton. Referring the above transcribed petition of W. Wood, gent., to Sir Isaac, and requesting him to report upon it to their Lordships. Also another fair copy of W. Wood's said petition, endorsed with a memorandum (signed W. Lowndes), that the Lords of the Treasury refer the petition to Sir Isaac Newton.

 bers. 5. Proposal of John Parker and partners to (ss.) 12 September 1717. To the Rt. Hon. the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury. The humble memorial of William Wood and Partners represents,— "That the said Wm. Wood was one of the proposers for furnishing copper for the coinage of half-pence and farthings, and offered to serve at near five pounds per ton. Nevertheless another is employed for the present to furnish about the quantity of 30 tons for commencing the coinage. After which service Sir Isaac Newton has declared the matter shall be again laid before your Lordships for your appointing who shall furnish the rest of the copper for this service. Sir Isaac has already had a specimen of fine rolled copper from the said Will^m Wood, and approved thereof, and told him he was likely to furnish the rest of the copper after the 30 tons agreed for. But whereas the copper fit for this use is not the common sort, but by reason of its fineness must be prepared on purpose, which will take up much time and expence,—Your memorialist, therefore, most humbly prays your Lordships will be pleased to grant him your warrant for furnishing at 17½d. per pound what copper shall be wanting over and above the 30 tons agreed for at 18d. per pound, that he may be at a certainty, and make such provision of fine metal that there may be no stop in the coinage.—At the foot of the document a memorandum (signed C. Stanhope) that the Lords of the Treasury have referred the petition to Sir Isaac Newton.

 " smiths and braisiers, and to take back the shraff or " sissledge at fourteenpence halfpenny per pound, to " be paid for the same at delivery."

(vvi.) Proposal to the Lords of the Treasury, of John Parker and Partners, to supply the Mint with fine copper for coinage at eighteenpence per pound, the said tender being made in consequence of their Lordship's advertisement in the Gazette on the 25 inst. No date.

(vvi.) Proposal to the Lords of the Treasury of Henry Neale, merchant, to supply the Mint with fine copper for coinage at 17½d. per pound. No date.

(yy.) 30 December 1707 (? 1717). Letter from Thomas Chambers to Sir Isaac Newton, proposing (should the writer's tender for supplying the Mint with copper be accepted by the Lords of the Treasury) to allow Sir Isaac 4l. per ton to save him from "all trouble and " charge in renting, hyring a servant and house for
 " that business."

(zz.) 4 March 1717. Letter for James Bertie to the Treasury. Insisting on the advantages that would accrue to the Crown and the public from the acceptance of his proposal to coin copper money for Her Majesty.
 "I beg leave," he says, "to observe y^t the specimens
 " produced by Sir Isaac Newton are not fine malleable
 " copper, and have an artificial gloss, which will soon
 " wear off, and then will look like those coined in K.
 " William's reign. Mr. Peyton produced one piece, " which he called fine plate copper, and said that could " not be coined at less than 23d. per pound. I am con" tented his specimen shall be my standard, and do not " desire a greater profit than will accrue to me from
 " 21d. per pound, but if your Lordship think fit to " allow 23d., the difference, which is 2d., in the quantity " proposed will be between 18 and 20,000l., which your " Lordship may dispose as you shall think fit. I have " some objections to putting the Queen's arms on the " reverse as in other coin, which I think unanswerable,
 " and shall be glad to communicate to your Lordship
 " whenever you will give me leave to wait upon you."

(aaa.) 13 December 1710. Copy of a letter addressed by Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. In obedience to your Lordship's order of reference of 19 November last upon the annexed memorial of Mr. Palmes for a new coinage of 700 tons of half-pence and farthings of copper in 14 years after the manner of the patent granted in the reigns of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary to Sir Joseph Hearne and others,—Wee doe humbly acquaint your Lordships that wee have enquired into all y^e coinages of that sort since the years 1672, and found that in the reigns of King Charles y^e 2^d, King James y^e 2^d, and in the beginning of the reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, the coinage of half-pence and farthings was performed by commissioners, who had money impressed from y^e Exchequer to buy Swedish copper and tinn, and coined at most at 20d.
 per pound averdupoize, and accounted upon oath to the Government for the charge and produce thereof by tale; And that afterwards upon calling in the tinn farthings and half-pence by reason y^e complaints made against them, the patent above-mentioned was granted to Sir Joseph Hearne and others, who contracted to change y^e same, and to enable them to bear y^e charge.
 They were allowed to coin 700 tons at 21d. per pound weight of English copper, which is cheaper than the Swedish, without being accountable to the Government for the tale. The reason of which allowance now ceasing, we are humbly of opinion y^t the said patent be not drawn into precedent, especially since the money made thereby was light, of bad copper and ill coined; and, as to species of moneys being wasted, there may be some want thereof in London and parts adjacent, but y^t those more remote are unfurnished does not appear to us.

(bbb.) 31 May 1714. Letter of "L.W." to the Lord High Treasurer. Calling attention to the scarcity of farthings, and suggesting that for the convenience of accountants a rearrangement of the coinage shall be made, so that 25 (which the writer calls a "natural number") of these convenient coins, instead of 24 may be the change for sixpence. "The coin," says the writer,
 "used for all small payments under sixpence is copper
 " farthings and half-pence, and if sixpence be paid all in

EARL OF

"those single farthings, they must certainly be 24 in number, and I believe generally weigh about 4 ounces 'troy in the whole sicepence.'" Also, a note (signed Wm. Lowndes) announcing that the Lord Treasurer has referred this letter "from an unknown hand" to Sir Isaac Newton's consideration.

(ccc.) Proposal of Henry Hind, citizen and founder of London, to supply the Mint with copper for coinage at 18*d.* per pound, "the waste or scissell" being taken back at the same price. No date.

(ddd.) Proposal addressed to the Lords of the Treasury, of John Applebee, citizen, of London, to supply the Mint with copper for coinage at 19*d.* per pound, the waste being taken back at 4½ per pound. No date.

(eee.) 24 May 1717. Proposal of Richard Jones, of Southwark, to the Lords of the Treasury. "Proposals having been made for coining one hundred tunns of farthings and half-pence per annum for ten years;—I humbly propose to coin y^e said quantity on the following terms, viz.—The farthings and half-pence to be made of fine malleable copper, with a neat fair impression, to be approved of by such persons as His Majesty shall appoint. Each pound of copper to be cutt into two shillings, one-eight part, when coined, to be allowed to y^e publick, which will amount to two thousand eight hundred pounds per annum, and amounts in the whole to twenty-eight thousand pounds. I likewise propose to allow y^e officers of His Majesty's Mint 2½ for cutting, stamping, and blanching each pound of copper, and in case they refuse the same I humbly desire the use of the Irish Mint may be granted me, and I will be obliged to leave y^e presses, and other utensils in as good order as they now are, and if any objections arise I humbly desire an opportunity to answer them. Your Lordships' most obedient servant, Richard Jones."

(fff.) 24 May 1717. Proposal made to the Lords of the Treasury by Jonathan Holloway, to supply the Mint with fine copper for coinage at 18*d.* per pound, the scissell or waste being taken back at 17½*d.* per pound.

(ggg.) Three separate notes of the proposal of the Provost and Moneyers of the Corporation of Moneyers of the Mint, made to the officers, to draw, cut, blanch, edge, and coin copper fillets and bars into copper money at 4½*d.* per pound. The Queen being pleased to allow 100*l.* towards the cost of requisite tools. No date.

(iii.) Particulars of the charges for repairing and fitting up the Irish Mint for the coinage of copper into money. No date.

(kkk.) Proposal (in the handwriting of Sir Isaac Newton) humbly offered to the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled, for the coining of copper into farthings and half-pence. Endorsed with four several considerations (in the same handwriting) upon the foregoing proposal. "Farthings and half-pence," the proposal commences, "being very scarce, inasmuch that publick houses are forced to use tickets, and it having been thought necessary to coin one hundred tons of copper per ann. for ten years, for supplying Great Britain, Ireland, and the Plantations, several proposals have been made for the doing thereof, all which have been calculated for private advantage only without any regard to the publick." No date.

(lll.) Proposals for coining half-pence and farthings of copper for the English Plantations in America. No date.

(mmmm.) Copy of a comprehensive report to the Lord Treasurer on all the various recent proposals, and the several Mint reports on these proposals, for improving and multiplying the copper coinage. Written by the hand of an office clerk, this copy of an important document contains some corrections and amendments in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting. The report notices (1.) The proposal of Abel Slaney, citizen and woollen draper, and principal undertaker for the coining of half-pence and farthings in the reign of the late King and Queen, who, alleging that he was a very great sufferer in the ranging of tin farthings for copper by tale, proposed in the year 1703 to coin 700 tunns of copper half-pence and farthings in seven years, allowing Her Majesty for the privilege of coining the same a fine of 5,000*l.*, and an annual rent of 1,000*l.* (2.) The proposal of Thomas Rendle, Esq., Edward Ambrose, and Daniel Barton, (former partners of the said Abel Slaney), who prayed that their said former partner might not have his prayer to their injury, but that the new patent for coining money might be granted to them. (3.) The petition (March 1703) of William Shepard and N. Shepard for a patent empowering them to coin forty or fifty tunns of copper every year for eight or ten years. (4.) The petition of the fellow moneyers of the Mint, in the Tower of London, who about the same time prayed that they might be allowed to sustain themselves by coining copper till the Mint should be set to work again on gold and silver moneys. (5.) The petition of Sir Talbot Clerk and partners, who (in consideration and to the compensation of losses sustained by them in carrying out their patent of the year 1686, for melting and refining metals out of ores), prayed that they might supply the Mint with 700 tons of copper blanks at the rate of two tons per week. (6.) The petition of Mr. Chambers and divers other persons to supply the Mint with a hundred tons of copper at 12*d.* per lb., in consideration that they had purchased the patent and works of Sir Talbot Clerk and partners, and had greatly improved the said works. (7.) The petition (1708) of William Morgan, gent., for permission to coin a thousand tons of English copper into half-pence and farthings. (8.) The petition (made 1710) of Mr. William Palmer for a patent to coin seven hundred tons of copper in fourteen years. After noticing these various proposals, the report observes, that upon calling in the tin farthings and half-pence, by reason of the complaints made against them, a patent was granted to Sir Joseph Herne and others, (who contracted to change the same), authorizing them to coin 700 tons at 21*d.* per lb, which patent it is urged, should not be drawn into a precedent, "especially since the money made thereby was light, of bad copper, and ill coined." In conclusion, bearing in mind their previous report against such prayers for patents by private speculators, and their previous recommendation (made to his late Majesty King William, in the year 1694) that copper coinage should be as nearly as possible of intrinsic value, cost of coining, and incidents deducted; and also bearing in mind that the last coinage of 600 tons of copper proved excessive and occasioned loud complaints, the framers of the report entreat "that no more new copper money should be added to that already current than what the people 'voluntarily take off.' Attached to this carefully drawn document are four slips of memoranda, relating to its subject, in the handwriting of Sir Isaac Newton.

(qqq.) Collection of extracts from Journals of the House of Commons, touching the coinage and utterance of farthings. The first of the extracts being, "April 1694. It was resolved that the present Tinn farthings and halfpence not being of the intrinsic value, and being easy to be counterfeited, were an obstruction to trade, and a great grievance to the subject. That the farthings and half-pence, to be made for the future, ought to be made of English metal, and of the intrinsic value, and to be coined by their Majesties at the Mint." And the latest of the extracts being, 1 April 1708 (the last day of the session). "A petition of the inhabitants of Southwark was read, setting forth, 'That they were informed some persons were attempting to obtain a new licence for a new coinage of Halfpence and Farthings, tho' they were loaded with great quantities thereof, and prayed the consideration of the House.' This petition was ordered to lye on the table."

Stafford, to establish at or near Bristol his office for carrying out the affairs of the patent, giving him sole power and authority to coin copper farthings and half-pence for the service of Ireland.

(mmmm.) 29 January 1723. Two drafts in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting of a letter from him to the Lords of the Treasury. Relating to the dissatisfaction of the Moneyers of the Mint with the privileges which it is proposed to accord to Mr. Wood, of Wolverhampton; and observing that the multiplication of Mints increases the facilities for counterfeiting money, "as happened" in the coinage of tin half-pence and farthings in the "beginning of the reign of King William and Queen Mary." To obviate these objections Sir Isaac "proposes that Mr. Wood prepare the blanks of fine copper, and make them fit to be stamped, and then send them to the Mint, to be delivered there by weight, and stamped and delivered back by the same weight;"

the whole charge of which "will not exceed 2½d. per "pound weight, for I reckon nothing for my self."

(nnn.) 13 April 1724. Draft of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury, in answer to their Lordships' order of the 10th inst. for a trial of the Pix of the copper moneys coined by Mr. Wood. Sir Isaac suggests that the trial would be more satisfactory if, instead of being made at Bristol, the moneys (kept for trial in a box under the keys of Mr. Wood and the comptroller of that coinage) were brought up to London and "tried in His Majesty's Mint in the Tower before "the officers of the said Mint, and before the two "parties, Mr. Wood and the comptroller." Also two rough drafts, and another fair copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the same letter.

(ooo.) Rough draft of Sir Isaac Newton's report to the Lords of the Treasury on the qualities of Mr. Wood's copper half-pence and farthings.—"May it please your Lordships,—According to your Lordships' order, the Pix of the copper moneys coined by Mr. Wood for Ireland has been opened and tried in the Mint by the King's Assay Master before us. And by the Comptroller's account (to which Mr. Wood agreed) there has been coined from Lady Day 1723 to March 28, 1724, in half-pence 55 tons 5 cwt. 3 qrs. 0 lb. 12 oz., making in value 15,480l. 11s. 10½d.; and in farthings 3 tons 17 cwt. 2 qrs. 10 lb. 8 oz., making value 1,086l. 6s. 3d. And by the specimens of this coinage, which from time to time have been taken from the several parcels and put into the Pix, we found that sixty half-pence weighed 14 ounces (troy) and 18 pennyweight, which is about a quarter of an ounce above one pound avoirdupois, and that thirty farthings weighed three ounces and three quarters of an ounce (troy) and forty-six grains. And that both half-pence and farthings when heated red hot, spread very thin under the hammer without cracking, as your Lordships may see by the pieces now laid before you. But tho' the copper was very good, and the money taken one piece with another was full weight, yet the single pieces were not so equally coined in weight as they should have been.

We found also that thirty-and-two old half-pence, coined for Ireland in the reigns of King Charles the Second, King James the Second, and King William and Queen Mary, weighed 6 ounces and eighteen pennyweight (Troy) that is 103½ grains a piece one with another. They were much worn. And if about six or seven grains be allowed to each of them one with another for loss of their weight by wearing, they might at first weigh about half a pound avoirdupois one with another. But they were made of bad copper. Two of those coined in the reign of King Charles the Second wasted much in the fire, and then spread thin under the hammer, but not so well without cracking as those of Mr. Wood. Two of those coined in the reign of King James the Second wasted in the fire, and were not malleable when red hot; and two of those coined in the reign of King William and Mary wasted much more in the fire, and turned to an unmanageable substance like a cinder, as your Lordships may see by the pieces now laid before you. We reckon the copper of Mr. Wood's half-pence and farthings to be of about the same goodness and value with the copper of which the copper money is coined in the King's mint for England, or worth about 12d. or 13d. per pound weight avoirdupois in the market, and the copper of which the half-pence were coined for Ireland in the reigns of King Charles, King James, and King William, to be much inferior in value, and almost of no value in the market, the mixture being uncertain, and not bearing the fire for converting it to any other use. No date.

(d.) Another paper of "Proposals for preserving and "encreasing the coyn of this kingdom without hindering "y^e freedom of Trade." No date.

(e.) Paper (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of "Proposals for encreasing the coyn of this kingdom." Observing that the use of gold and silver in the manufacture of clothes, coaches, and household furniture, was forbidden in France last March, and should forthwith be forbidden in Great Britain, the writer makes various suggestions for hindering the exportation of the precious metals, and bringing larger quantities of them to the Mint. No date.

(f.) Minutes (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) for the further encouragement of the coinage. No date.

(g.) Five rough and varying drafts of proposals (e) for increasing the coin of the kingdom. No date.

(h.) Another paper of proposals for checking the exportation of gold and silver, entitled "Proposals for "preserving and encreasing the coyn of this kingdom" No date.

(j.) Collection of memoranda (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) entitled "Considerations upon Trade." No date.

(k.) Proposals touching the amendment of English coins. No date.

(12.) Groups of papers described on their wrapper "Answer to Mr. Pollexfen's treatise upon Paper Credit."

(a.) Introductory paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, to his reply to Mr. Pollexfen, beginning "Since "I first perused Mr. Pollexfen's discourse about Paper "Credit I have been endeavouring to get an account of "y^e quantities of hammered money of Gold and Silver "which have been coyned from time to time since the "reign of Edw. VI., in order to make a judgment "upon the causes of the increase and decrease of the "coinage, but have not yet been able to compass my "designs, the records thereof before the year 1660 being "taken out of the Mint. And, therefore, least I should "detain this paper too long in my hands, I have here "set down such observations upon it as at present "occur to me from such accounts of y^e coyn as are "commonly known or remain in the Mint." No date.

(b.) Observations (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) on Mr. Pollexfen's reply. 1. On the argument against Paper Credit taken from the Course of the Coinage. There being four varying drafts of this section of Newton's answer to Mr. Pollexfen.

EARL OF PORTS-MOUTH.EARL OF

(c.) 7 December 1708. Counsel's opinion (signed Ja. Monnagge) on the questions—out of what fund the three commissioners of the Bank of Scotland for telling money, melting bullion into ingots, &c. should be paid? who should render them their rightful payment? and to whom the order for the payment should be directed?

(d.) Printed broadside, exhibiting two tables, prepared for the Mint house of Scotland (before the union), and dedicated by the author, George Brown, presbyter, to the Rt. Hon. Robert Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain. Table I. showing the true value per grain, drop, ounce, pound, or stone weight of gold bullion of any fineness at 48 pound Scots per ounce, 22 carat fine. Table II. showing what weight of gold, standard fine, one is to have per grain, drop, ounce, pound, or stone weight of gold of any fineness, in which to prevent the trouble of different denominations every grain is divided into 264 parts. No date.

(e.) 12 July 1707. Copy of the warrant under the sign manual (countersigned Godolphin), addressed to Thomas Leabrook, Henry Haley, and Richard Collard. Moneyers of the Mint within the Tower of London, Requiring and authorizing them to repair to the "Mint" at Edinburgh, and undertake y^s recoynage of y^s money in Scotland according to such rules, methods, and instructions as by y^s indenture of our Mint in England, and the Charter thereof are directed and "prescribed."

(f.)—1708. Memorial, addressed to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Godolphin, concerning Her Majesties Mint at Edinburgh, in North Britain, given in by the General and other officers there.

(g.) 22 July 1690. Act of Parliament, allowing the Master of the Mint of Edinburgh twenty pounds Scots upon the stone weight of silver for the coining thereof, and all charges connected with the said coining, instead of the eighteen pounds Scots assigned for the same service by the Act of Parliament 1686.

(h.) Bill (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the prices of such tools and other things as may be useful in Her Majesty's Mint in Scotland. No date.

(j.) 14 February 1709. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer. Respecting "the allowance to be made in the accounts of Mr. Allardes for the late coining of silver moneys at Edinburgh." Also, rough draft of the same letter.

(k.) Copies (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the clause in the indenture of the Mint, appointing the allowance per pound weight for coining; the clause in Her Majesty's warrant, directing the officers of her Mint at Edinburgh to observe the rules of coynage set down in the said indenture; and the clause in the Act of Parliament, made in Scotland, 1690, entitled "An Act anent an humble offer to His Majesty for an imposition upon certain commodities for defraying the expense of a free coynage."

(l.) Copy of a memorial concerning the Mint of Scotland. Praying for an amendment of an Act of Parliament of the year 1707, which, whilst assigning an annual sum of £1,200^l to the salaries and certain other charges of the Mint of Scotland made "no provision for the expense of coynage;" in consequence of which omission no bullion has been coined in the said Mint since 4 August 1710. No date. Together with a "Copy" of the clause in the Act of the 7th of the Queen, concerning the Mint in Scotland.

(m.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from the officers of the London Mint to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Godolphin, Lord Treasurer. Respecting an annexed memorial of y^s General and other officers of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh, concerning the bullion given by Act of Parliament for maintaining a free coining in that Mint, and collected by Mr. Daniell Stuart deceased, and now left in the hands of his executors. No date.

(o.) Copy of a memorial addressed by George Allardes, Master and Worker of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh, to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Godolphin, Lord Treasurer. Praying that the memorialist may be allowed in his accounts certain moneys advanced by him to defray the charges of the moneyers sent from London for the coining of silver moneys at Edinburgh, as well as other expenses of the same coining. No date.

(p.) 12 February 1709. Letter from George Allardes to Sir Isaac Newton. Entreating the latter to afford counsel and direction in respect to the writer's memorial, and also to have care for the claims of Robert Miller, Her Majesty's Clerk in the Mint of Edinburgh.

(q.) 9 August 1709. Letter from George Allardes, Master and Worker of the Mint at Edinburgh, to Sir Isaac Newton, wherein the writer apologises for his apparent dilatoriness in submitting to his correspondent the duplicate of his accounts for the recoynage, his neglect in that respecting being altogether due to his recent illness; and wherein he further begs Sir Isaac to support his petition that his office may be secured in case of his decease to his son, now in his seventeenth year.

(r.) 14 December. Letter (signed by warrant of the Committee of the "Royall burrows", by Sam Johnson Prest.) begging Sir Isaac Newton to "secure an allowance to the Generall and other offices of the Mint at Edinburgh" to coin small moneys, such as two-penny, three-penny, and four-penny pieces, to the amount of £8,000^l.

(s.) 2 August 1710. Letter (dated from Edinburgh) from the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Seafield to Sir Isaac Newton. Announcing that Mr. Scott and other officers concerned at Edinburgh in the late coining "are to sett out this day with pixis for London;" and begging Sir Isaac to use his influence in procuring prompt payment and needful indemnification for Mr. Allardes, "for having so seasonably served the Government and the proprietors of the old money, and having so readily given his credit and pains and attendance at the earnest desire of my Lord Treasurer and the Government."

(t.) 20 June 1707. Copy of the warrant under the sign-manual (countersigned, Loudoun), addressed to Allardes, Esq., Master of the Mint at Edinburgh, and requiring him to coin silver at the Edinburgh Mint into crowns, shillings, and sixpences, with dyes to be sent to him from the London Mint, "to the intent that the said moneys coyned in that our Mint at Edinburgh may be perfectly like those coyned in our Mint in the Tower of London, excepting the letter E set under our effigies to distinguish the moneys coyned in the said two Mints."

(u.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the General and officers of the Mint at Edinburgh. Touching the bullion in the hands of Mr. Stewart's executors, and other minor matters of the Edinburgh Mint. No date.

(v.) 14 April 1708. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from him to the Lord Treasurer, written on the announcement of the recent death of Mr. Daniel Stewart, collector of the bullion for Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh. It is recommended that the late Mr. Stewart's office should be suppressed, and that "the said bullion should henceforth be paid by the under collectors into the hands of the cash-keeper of North Britain."

(w.) November 1707. Account of moneys due from Her Majesty to George Allardes of Allardes, Master of Her Majesty's Mint, for the coining.

(x.) 10 August 1709. Letter (overflowing with courteous expressions) from the Earl of Lauderdale to Sir Isaac Newton. Begging for information and counsel from Sir Isaac Newton respecting the best means of obtaining payment of salaries for the officers of the Edinburgh Mint.

(y.) Rough drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter addressed by him to the Lords of the Treasury. Respecting salaries due to officers of the Edinburgh Mint and other persons concerned in the recent coining. No date.

(z.) An account of the recoynage (i.e. of Scotch money). No date.

(aa.) 28 August 1712. Letter from Hercules Scott to Sir Isaac Newton "at his lodging in St. Martin Street near Lyecester Fields." Apologizing for and correcting an error of inadvertency in his statement of "the account for the recoynage."

(ab.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) respecting the arrangements for maintaining the Mint at Edinburgh, and remunerating its officers. No date.

(ac.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer. Stating the things immediately needful for resetting the coining at Edinburgh. No date.

(ad.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a petition for an order in council that the warden of Her Majesty's Mint forthwith cause to be made with the nicest accuracy two piles of troy weight of Great Britain the one pile to be used at the Mint in Edinburgh, and the other at the Mint in London. No date.

(dd.) Memorandum (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) touching the need for an order in council for the making of six new Standard Trial Pieces of gold and six new Standard Trial Pieces of silver, to be distributed amongst and entrusted to the chamberlains of the Exchequer, the Warden of the Mint in the Tower, the Master and Worker of the same Mint, the Wardens of the London Company of Goldsmiths, and the General and Warden of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh. No date.

(ee.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lord Treasurer, to whom are thereby submitted certain matters relating to the Mint at Edinburgh, which the Lord Chancellor of Scotland thinks "might properly be considered by the Committee of the Council which is to sit to-morrow upon the affairs of Scotland." No date.

(ff.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer, respecting weights, tools, and other things requisite for the Mint at Edinburgh. No date.

(gg.) 23 March 1706. Letter (signed J. Stanley) to the Lord High Treasurer. Respecting measures for continuing the Mint in Scotland, and having an uniform coinage for England and Scotland.

(hh.) 28 December 1708. Letter (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, and signed C. Peyton, Is. Newton, Jn. Ellis) from the officers of the Mint in the Tower of London to the Lord High Treasurer. Touching the memorial of the three commissioners appointed by Her Majesty's late Privy Council of Scotland to receive all the Scots and foreign coin, see it melted into ingots, deliver the ingots by weight and assay, and to certify the deficiency; and recommending that the sum of seven hundred pounds be paid to the same commissioners for themselves, their clerk and other servants, for the remuneration of their services in the said particulars.

(ij.) Memoranda and lists (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of tools and other articles needful for the Mint at Edinburgh. No date.

(kk.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from the officers of the Mint in London to the Lord Treasurer. Touching arrangements and provisions for the Mint at Edinburgh. No date.

(ll.) 1710. Copy of the Indenture of the Edinburgh Mint made by Her Majesty Queen Anne of the one part and John Montgomerie of Giffan, Master and Worker of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh, of the other part; the said John Montgomerie having obtained the said office by virtue of Letters Patent dated 22 June 1710, on the death of George Allardes, Esq.

(mm.) 26 May 1707. Duplicate (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, and signed J. Stanley, Is. Newton, Jn. Ellis) of a letter from the officers of the Mint in the Tower of London to the Rt. Hon. Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer. Announcing that divers articles ordered by his Lordship for the Mint at Edinburgh "are put on board to be sent thither, excepting the weights and scales which are already made," though "the weights are not yet sized for want of authority to make and mark the standard weights," his Lordship's authorization for marking the weights being thereby requested.

(nn.) 1710. List of the annual salaries of the several officers of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh (from the salary of General, which is 300*l.*, and the salary of the Master and Worker, which is 200*l.*, down to the Queen's smith's salary, of 30*l.* per annum.)

(oo.) 7 October 1718. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of His Majesty's Treasury. Recommending the issue of a sign-manual, addressed to the General of the Mint at Edinburgh, for the payment of salaries and charges in connection with the same Mint. Also rough draft of the same letter. Also a rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the proposed sign-manual for the afore-mentioned purpose, to be addressed to Charles earl of Lauderdale, General of the King's Mint at Edinburgh.

(qq.) 12 August 1707. Letter from Dr. D. Gregory to Sir Isaac Newton, touching the recoinage of money at Edinburgh. Sir I. arrived here the first instant, and Mr. Morgan with me, and the moneyers on the 8th. Since then we have been as busy as possible in putting all things in order towards the recoinage, which the Government here urges extremely. Notwithstanding all things sent to London for from this, upon a more strict enquiry by the moneyers, the things in the enclosed list are still wanting. I have sent a copy of it to Sir David Nairn, and it will come regularly to you; but I thought it my duty to send it also to you immediately. I must beg all despatch after it comes before you. I find the Government here urges the coining crowns and half-crowns first, both because greater dispatch can be made, and because more than one-half of the moneys of the equivalent that were sent down is sixpences. Therefore, Sir, the puncheons for the crowns and half-crowns, and as many dyers made as is possible, will be much wanted here. Great difficulties arise daily about the receiving in the coin here, and melting it down to ingots, which seems necessary before the Mint does meddle with it. Tho' this be not my business, yet you will much oblige me to tell me how this was managed in the great recoinage of England, and where the Mint first began to be concerned in the matter. If you send letters directed for me, either to the Scotch Secretary's Office in the Privy Garden, or to the common post, they will come right to hand. I am in all duty, Sir, your most humble and most obliged servant, D. Gregory. The enclosed is from the Master of the Mint here.

(ss.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of "An Account of the money coined in Scotland since the Restoration of K. Cha. II." No date.

(tt.) Memorial of Mr. William Drummond, son of George Drummond of Blairdrummond, Warden of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh, wherein the memorialist prays that he may be preferred to the office of Master and Worker of Her Majesty's said Mint, vacant by the death of George Allardes. One of the considerations on which the memorialist rests his petition being, that on entering his said office, at the gift of Her Majesty, he paid (with Her Majesty's knowledge and approval) no less a sum than 660*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for his office of Warden to the retiring holder of the said place, Mr. Charles Billingham, who "was married to a lady of noble family, a daughter of the Earl of Marchmont," and was in a dying state at the time of his said retirement in the 170*s.*, and had little to leave to his several children. Having to the succour of the late Mr. Billingham's widow and children paid so high a price for an office, the salary of which is only 150*l.* per annum, the memorialist conceives that he has a strong claim to Her Majesty's consideration in respect to his petition for the higher office, with a salary of 200*l.* per annum. Mr. Drummond, in further support of his prayer, speaks of his exceptional and gratuitous services in connection with the recent recoinage of money in Scotland, which recoinage resulted in a delivery out of the Edinburgh Mint between September 1707 and December 1708 of the sum of 320,995*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*

(uu.) 9 March 170*s.* Copy of the Privy Seal granting to the above-mentioned Mr. William Drummond, for life, with a salary of 150*l.* per annum and a convenient residence, the office of Warden to Her Majesty's Mint in Edinburgh. Also copy of the Letters Patent (dated 21 March, 1707) of confirmation of the same grant, made by Her Majesty with the special advice and consent of the Estates of Parliament.

(vv.) 4 December 1707. Letter from George Allardes to the Rt. Hon. Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer, for the allowance in the writer's accounts of certain moneys which he has advanced for the public service in connection with the recoinage of Scotch money.

(ww.) Petition of Robert Millar, clerk to Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh, to the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer, for a suitable reward of the exceptional services rendered by the petitioner as assistant in aid of the three commissioners, Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Bruce, and Mr. Brown, "for taking in the money from the bank," and performing other duties for the recent recoinage of Scotch money. No date.

(xx.) 1708. Fair draft of the representation of John Earl of Lauderdale, General, and the other officers of Her Majesty's Mint at Edinburgh, to the Rt. Hon. Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer. For some new and efficient arrangement for defraying the charges and expenses of the Mint at Edinburgh, the Treaty of Union between England and Scotland having done away with the sources of revenue that formerly yielded a fund for meeting the said charges.

(yy.) 28 June 170*s.* Letter from the Earl of Seafield to Sir Isaac Newton. Touching the Mint accounts of Mr. Allardes, and supporting Robert Millar's afore-given petition, with a recommendation that 50*l.* be paid him in consideration of his exceptional services in the recoinage. The Earl says of Mr. Millar, "He is a good officer and a very honest man, but is poor, and this small sum will be very great relief to his family."

(zz.) 30 January 1708. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord Treasurer. Recommending that the three commissioners in the matter of the Scotch recoinage, viz., Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Bruce, may "receive at present one hundred pound a piece for themselves and sixty pounds for their clerk and servants, in all 360*l.*, to be paid out of the same fund out of which Mr. Allardes is paid for melting the money into ingots in their presence."

(aaa.) 12 March 1709. Letter from William Drummond, Warden of Her Majesty's Mint, to Sir Isaac Newton. Beginning, "Honoured Sir, the recoinage being now over, and the moneyers at an end, they are desirous to be discharged, and to return home, which the officers are very well satisfied should be." In order that the London moneyers may be free to leave London, entreaty is made for the Lord Treasurer's permission for them to do so.

(bbb.) Two rough drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter addressed to the Lord High Treasurer. Respecting the memorial of the three commissioners appointed for the recoinage in Scotland by the Privy Council of that country. No date.

(ccc.) 14 April 1708. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from Sir Isaac to the Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer. For a new order for the payment of moneys to Dr. Gregory, the writer, and his clerk; his Lordship's warrant for the payment of such moneys having become void by the death of Mr. Stuart.

(ddd.) 27 March 1708, Edinburgh. Letter from W. Drummond to Sir Isaac Newton. Touching the Lord Treasurer's warrant to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury of Scotland for the payment of 892*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to Sir Isaac N., Dr. Gregory, and Mr. Morgan.

(eee.) Copy of the petition of Robert Millar, clerk to Her Majesty's Mint of Scotland, to the Earl of Godolphin, Lord Treasurer, for an adequate remuneration of services rendered by the writer as assistant commissioner in aid of Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Bruce, and Mr. Brown, the three commissioners appointed by the Lords of the Privy Council of Scotland for taking in money from the bank by weight and tale, and overseeing the melting thereof at the Scotch Mint. No date.

(fff.) 14 October 1707. Memorandum of proceedings at the Mint in Edinburgh, when order was made for Master Richard Morgan's return to London, the said Master Morgan having fully instructed the clerks of the Edinburgh Mint in book-keeping, rating, standarding, and doing the business of the said Mint. Signed, Geo. Allardes, W. Drummond, W. Boswell, and D. Gregory.

(ggg.) 31 May 1707. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord Treasurer. Accompanying a memorial directed by the Lord Chancellor of Scotland to be laid before the Committee of the Privy Council on Scotch affairs.

(hhh.) 12 July 1707. Copy of the warrant under the sign manual, countersigned by the Earl of Godolphin, appointing and requiring Thomas Seabrook, Henry Haley, and Richard Collard, three of Her Majesty's moneyers of the Mint in the Tower of London, to go to Edinburgh (having an allowance of 16*l.* each for the charges of their journey from London to Edinburgh) and there to undertake and execute the recoinage of the money of Scotland, "so that there may not be the least difference betwixt the coyones of the two 'Mints' of Edinburgh and London."

(iii.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from Sir Isaac to the Earl of Godolphin. Respecting the memorial of the General and other officers of the Mint of Edinburgh, touching bullion given by Act of Parliament for maintaining a free coinage in the said Mint, collected by Mr. Daniel Stuart, deceased, and now lying in the hands of his executors. No date.

(kkk.) 23 June 1707. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer. Containing a proposal that one of the clerks of the Mint in the Tower of London should be sent to Edinburgh to instruct the officers and clerks of the Mint there in the London method of assaying, rating, standarding, and book-keeping.

(lll.) 12 September 1723. Draft of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. Reporting on orders of reference (dated 3 August and 2 September 1723) that a new manual must be procured for putting in force the indenture between the late Queen Anne and the Master of the Mint in Edinburgh, and that 2,100*l.* must be imprest upon account of the said Master for the service of the said Mint.

(mmm.)—1718. Copy of the Royal warrant under the sign manual addressed to the Earl of Landerdale, General of the Mint in Scotland, for the payment of arrears of salaries to the officers of the Scotch Mint and for the coining of the moneys of Scotland in every particular like the moneys of the London Mint, save that in old money coined at Edinburgh the letter E. is to be set under the royal effigies.

(nnn.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from Sir Isaac to the Lord Treasurer. (pppp.) Paper (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of "Considerations about the receiving of Scotch money by weight." No date.

(2.) Papers giving an Account of Sir John Erskine's Silver Mines in Scotland, and the Proceedings thereupon.

(a.) 14 January 1716-7. Copy of the Report of Dr. Justus Brandshagen, James Hamilton, and Thomas Hamilton, touching a survey and trial (made at the order of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Guardian of the Kingdom, given at Hampton Court 3 September 1716), "of the Mine with the Mountain about it, called Sir John Erskine's Mine in the Parish of Alva, five miles from Stirling East and by North." Of the specimens of the ore taken for examination the chief reporter (Justus Brandshagen) says, "I found it of an extraordinary nature, such as to my knowledge few or none like have ever been seen in Europe. It consists of sulphur, arsenic, copper, iron, some lead, and good silver. Of all these the silver is only to be regarded, for the other minerals and metals contained in the ore are of little value, and not worth the charges to separate and keep them." The report is drawn by Dr. Justus Brandshagen in the first person; but it is signed by the Earl of Lauderdale and Messrs. Haldane and Drummond, principal officers of the Edinburgh Mint, who witnessed all the trials of ore, as well as by the mine viewer's assistants, James Hamilton and Thomas Hamilton. Attached to the report are a plan of the works of the mine, a written "Description of the Mine," and a tabular "Account of Ore Assayed at Alva." Also, attached to this report is a note (signed Cromortie) respecting the gold mines of Scotland, calling attention to the following mention of them taken from some unnamed source:—"In this King's reign Gold Mines were found in Crawford Moor by the Germans, which afforded him great sums. They would not refine it in Scotland; but, after they had bargained with the King, they carried over the ore with them to Germany. Besides those mines in Crawford Moor we have an account of others not far from it. In King James the 4th's reign the Scots did separate gold from sand by washing. In King James the 5th's time, 300 were employed for several summers in washing of gold, of which they got about 100,000 pounds of English money. By the same way the Laird of Marchistone got gold in Pentland Hills; great quantity has been got in Langham Water, fourteen miles from Ledd-hill-house in Crawford Moor, and in Megget Water, twelve miles and over Phinland, sixteen miles from that house, and in many other places where pieces of gold of 30 ounces weight have been found which were flat, mixed with the sparr, some with keel, and some with brimstone."

(b.) 3 September 1716. Paper of Instructions given by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Prince Guardian of the Kingdom, to Dr. Justus Brandshagen and his assistant James Hamilton, to be observed "in the Survey and Tryall they are about to make of the mine with the mountain about it, called Sir John Erskine's mine, in the Parish of Alva, five miles from Stirling, East and by North."

(c.) 29 August 1716, Mint Office. Fair copy of a letter (probably from Sir Isaac Newton) to the Lords of the Treasury. Containing recommendations and suggestions for instructions to be observed by Dr. Brandshagen and Mr. Hamilton in their trial of Sir John Erskine's mines in the parish of Alva. It is recommended "That the casks (or old hogsheds and barrells) which were filled with about 40 tunns of ore dug out of the said mines by order of the Lady Erskine in the time of the late rebellion, and buried on the north-west side of her house, just by the gate thereof, be enquired after, and a report made thereof, and of what that ore holds by the assay." Also, "That the burn or channel made in the south side of the mountain by the floods running down about three or four furlongs westward from the said mines, within Sir John Erskine's part of the mountain, be well viewed to see what spars and other signs of minerals or metals be found there, to assay them, and report thereon."

(d.) 22 August 1716. Paper (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) exhibiting the information given to the Lord Mayor of London and Sir Isaac Newton respecting the mines and ore on Sir John Erskine's estate at Alva. "The mine," says the informant, "is just opened, within about two fathoms or 2½ from the grass which grows on the surface of the earth. In it are two veins of ore running horizontally, the one almost three foot above the other; the upper vein about 22 inches broad from top to bottom, and about 18 inches wide, the other about 14 inches broad or deep, and about the same wideness with the former. The colour of the ore is darkish brown, but near the edges of a whiter colour like spar, with a darker colour of metallick ore intermixed. The dark coloured ore in the middle of the vein is usually the richer. From these two veins Sir John Erskine had the ore out of which he received 134 ounces of fine silver before he went into the rebellion. Mr. Hamilton smelted that

"ore, but did not then oversee the mine, but saw the ore raised out of the mine from the said two veins. "And after Sir John went to the rebels, Mr. Hamilton, by order of the Lady Erskin, had the oversight and direction of four miners who dug the ore from those two veins about four months together, or something above, and put it up in old casks (hogsheds and barrells, &c.) to the quantity of about 40 tunns of ore, more or less, and hid the casks on the north-west side of the house, just by the gate of the house. "And then Mr. Hamilton came away to London, and about a fortnight after went to my Lord Mayor, and made an affidavit of what he knew about this matter."

(e.) 1717. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting and signed by him) of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury. Setting forth the payments made at the order of the Treasury, and in accordance with warrants to Mr. Justus Bradsghagen for his services in visiting and viewing the silver mines at Alva, "I humbly represent," says the writer, "that Mr. Justus Bradsghagen received 60*l.* before his going down into Scotland to survey Sir John Erskin's mine, and was further paid 129*l.* for 129 days at the rate of 20*s.* per diem during his stay in Scotland upon this service, and 25*l.* in discharge of bills for clearing the mine of rubbish."

(f.) Rough draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury. Recommending for the sake of dispatch and economy that Dr. Justus Bradsghagen and the two Hamiltons be instructed to smelt the ore buried in casks by Sir John Erskine's house when they have made their report of the mines, if they can satisfy themselves that the yielding of the ore will cover the charges of smelting. No date. Also an undated schedule (in Isaac's handwriting) of incidental charges attending the trial of the ore and mines at Alva.

(g.) 20 August 1716. Warrant (under the sign manual of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, Prince Guardian of the Kingdom, and countersigned R. Walpole, Wm. St. Quintin, Torrington, R. Edgcumbe) for the payment of moneys to Dr. Justus Bradsghagen (at the rate of 20*s.* per day during time of service in Scotland), and to his assistant, James Hamilton, (at the rate of 10*s.* per day), for viewing the silver mines and assaying the ore at Alva.

(h.) Easter term, 1723. Copy of the plaint of James Hamilton made at Westminster in the suit of Hamilton v. Newton, in which the said James Hamilton sought to recover from Sir Isaac Newton 52*l.* 10*s.* the amount of the balances alleged to be due on an account for work done at Alva and elsewhere by the plaintiff at the order of the said defendant, of whom the record declares, "Predictus tamen Isaacus separales promissiones et assumptiones suas in forma predicta factas minime curans sed machinanter et fraudulenter intendens eundem Jacobum in hac parte callide et subdole decipere et defraudare predictas separales denarium summam seu aliquam idem denaria eidem Jacobo nondum solvit nec ei pro iisdem hucusque aliquantulum contentavit."

(j.) 14 November 1716. Memorandum that Sir Isaac Newton is "to write to Doctor Bradsghagen and the two Hamiltons (persons sent out to enquire into the mine in Scotland in the estate of Sir John Erskine) "to draw a bill upon Dr. Fanguier for 100*l.* for their joint subsistence."

(k.) 11 May 1724. Petition of Jo. Walker to the Lords of the Treasury. Representing that when the late Dr. Justus Bradsghagen was employed at Edinburgh on the king's service, the petitioner lent him the sum of ten guineas for his urgent necessities; and praying their Lordships to repay the petitioner the said loan out of money due from the Treasury to the dead man estate. On the back of the petition an endorsement (signed J. Scrope) that the matter has been referred to Sir Isaac Newton.

(l.) Dr. Justus Bradsghagen's bill and application for moneys (113*l.* 8*s.*) alleged to be still due to him from the Treasury for service "in Scotland, concerning Sir John Areskin's Silver Mine." No date.

(m.) 18 May, 1724. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury, on their Lordships' order referring John Walker's petition to the writer. Showing that the late Dr. Bradsghagen was in his lifetime fully paid for his services to the Crown, and that no money is due from the Treasury to his estate.

(n.) Four various drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of an official narrative of all the proceedings of the Treasury and Mint, touching the employment of Dr. Justus Bradsghagen and the two brothers Hamilton to view the silver mine and ore on Sir John Erskine's estate at Alva. One of the drafts containing the following statement about the writer. "It was at first proposed to send down Sir Isaac Newton to examine the mine, but he represented himself unacquainted with such matters, and declined recommending anybody else in point of skill, saying that it would be better to send down somebody of skill from the king's silver mines in Germany," whereupon Dr. Justus Bradsghagen was proposed by others. No date.

(p.) 3 September 1715. Copy of the warrant (under the sign manual of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, and countersigned R. Walpole, William St. Quintin, Torrington, R. Edgcumbe), of instructions for Dr. Justus Bradsghagen and James Hamilton respecting their commission to examine the dug up silver and veins of silver ore at Alva.

(q.) 14 November 1716. Fair copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of Sir Isaac's already mentioned letter to the Lords of the Treasury, recommending that Dr. Justus Bradsghagen and the brothers Hamilton should be instructed to smelt the ore buried in casks near Sir John Areskine's house.

(r.) 27 June 1717. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter to the Lords of the Treasury, in reply to their Lordship's order (dated 17 June), for the particulars of payments made to Dr. Justus Bradsghagen and the brothers Hamilton. Another draft of the same letter, endorsed with copies of receipts signed by the said three mine-viewers.

(t.) Portion (two sheets) of an ill-spelt letter from Dr. Justus Bradsghagen to the Lords of the Treasury. Setting forth some of the circumstances of his engagement, and some of the difficulties he encountered in his endeavour to execute his unsuccessful mission; the statements being an introduction to a prayer for payment of money due to him by agreement, and also for remuneration of his several unlooked for expenses. "I got not," the writer says, "the money out of the Exchequer till the 31st of August, and my instruction not till the 5th of September, and then I could not get a ship for Scotland to carry over myself till the 10th of September, when I sealed with these things I had brought from St. Cathrines, and was three weeks and two days in a dangerous voyage, and in two storms we lost two masts, and were twice driven upon the Sand Bancks. When the ship was repairing all the passengers went on shore, which was very chargeable to me * * * The 15th of October I came to Edinburgh and had a conference with the Right Honourable the Earl of Landerdale, as also with Mr. Haldane of Gleneagles, and with Mr. Drummond as commissioners with him. I found in this conference that no provision was made neither for myself nor the two Hamiltons, nor for any incidental charges. My Lord Landerdale and the other commissioners as well as myself had that time advice from London that Sir John Areskin had obtained his remission upon the fundamen- tal that he should show me his mine himself, and it was then agreed amongst us not to go to the mine before his arrival, which was shortly after, and he was then every minute ready to shew me his mine; but for want of money neither myself nor Hamiltons could then go. I wrote to London about it but got no answer." No date.

(u.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the following letter to the Rt. Hon. Lord Viscount Townshend, respecting the ore in Sir John Erskine's mine. My Lord, the silver which your Lordship gave me to be assayed was produced out of a pound weight averdupois of ore, and weighed not fifteen pence but fifteen pennyweight and same grains when it first came out of the ore. It had some dirt sticking to the bottom of it; and I a piece cut off and flaked with the dirt, and sent by my Lord Mayor to the Mint to be assayed, proved only x dwt. ob. better than standard, because the assay was spoiled by the dirt which stuck fast to the assay piece. By two assays which I caused to be made of clean pieces cut off from the silver, it proved xvii. dwt.

better than standard. Now fifteen pennyweight of such fine silver is worth four shillings and two pence. And therefore the ore is exceeding rich, a pound weight averdupois holding 4s. 2d. in silver. This silver holds no gold. Two ounces troy of the ore which your Lordship gave me to be assayed yielded upon the first melting three pennyweight of silver, which upon the assay proved two pennyweight worse than standard, and therefore was worth 9½d. and after this rate a pound weight averdupois of the ore produces 22 pennyweight of the silver, which is worth about 5s. 7d. An ounce troy of the same ore yielded upon the first melting 1 dwt. 12 gr. and this being melted again with a convenient thin powder left 1 dwt. and 10 gr. of finer silver, and after a third melting there remained 1 dwt. waiting 4 gr., some of the silver being lost among the scorias. This last silver upon the assay proved xiii. dwt. better than standard. The ore holds little or no copper. It is silver ore, but where it grows doth not yet appear to me. All which is submitted to your Lordship's consideration. Is. Newton. No date.

(v.) Copy (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of an unsigned and undated letter, describing a vein of ore at Alva.

(3.) Papers described on the wrapper as "Orders 'About The Arms On The Coin.'"

(a.) 19 June 1689. Copy of warrant (under the sign manual of William the Third, and countersigned Shrewsbury), addressed to Thomas Neale, Esq., Master Worker of the Mint in the Tower of London, for impressing the silver coins, viz., the five shilling piece, the two shillings and sixpence piece, the shilling piece, and the sixpence piece with "the royall arms marshalled as" is depicted in a draught which was directed to be "done by Our Right Trusty and Right Entirely Beloved Cousin and Counsellor Henry Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshall of England." Given at Hampton Court. At the foot of the paper the following memorandum, "The like Warrant from Queen Mary, dated at Whitehall, the 15th day of September 1691. 'Countersigned, Nottingham.'"

(b.) 13 June, 1689. Copy of a letter from the Duke of Norfolk (signed, Norfolk and Marshall) to the Warden, Master, and Comptroller of the Mint. Signifying their Majesties' pleasure that the royal arms should be impressed on their coin "as well silver as gold," in the fashion "depicted in the margin."

(c.) 12 September 1691. Copy of warrant (signed Norfolk and Marshall) addressed to Warden, Master, and Comptroller of the Mint. For impressing the royal arms on their Majesties' silver coin "as depicted in the 'margin'."

(d.) Copy of royal warrant for coining in the manner "depicted in a draught which was directed to be done by our Right Trusty and entirely beloved cousin the 'Earle Marshal of England,' his Majesty's 'moneys of gold and silver, viz. the five pound piece, the forty shillings piece, the twenty shillings piece, and the ten shillings piece of gold," and also their silver moneys. No date on the paper, which however obviously refers to the first coinage of George the First.

(2.) 17 January, 1714½. Two drafts (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. Touching certain accompanying designs for the reverses of the half guineas and sixpences, drawn and proposed so "that the arms in the fourth escutcheons on the reverses of the half-guineas and sixpences may not be too much crowded." Also, draft (in same handwriting), of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury, asking for orders and directions for preparing designs for the several pieces of His Majesty's money, "as soon as his 'Majesty's arms are settled,'" "it being usual to place the King's arms on the reverses of the larger species of the moneys."

(e.) 17 May 1662. Copy of royal warrant (under the sign manual, countersigned, Edw^d Nicholas) addressed to Sir William Parkehurst, knt., Warden, Sir Ralph Freeman, knt., Master Worker, Henry Slingsby, Esq., Deputy Worker, and James Hoare, Esq., Comptroller, and the rest of the officers of the Mint in the Tower of London. For coining His Majesty's gold and silver money "by way of the mill or presse with letters or 'grainings about the edges or thickness of the pieces,' which mode of coining is said to be adopted for the preventing of culling, clipping, and otherwise counterfeiting our current coins.

(f.) 5 February 1662. Copy of royal warrant (under the sign manual, and countersigned Hen. Bennett), for the coining of His Majesty's silver moneys "according to y^e draughts lately made for our new silver moneys "by John Roettiers one of our chief gravers." The warrant runs further, "And wee doe hereby command "and authorise you to cause to be put upon y^e edges "or thickness of our pieces of five shillings and of two shillings and sixpence in silver these words following " (that is to say), Decus et Tutamen, and upon the ring "or edges of our shillings and sixpences in silver, "which are too thin to receive letters, you are to cause "as in all straight or crosse graying only to be put "as you shall judge it most secure for our said "coynes."

(g.) Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting), of a letter to Lord ——. Laying before his Lordship an account of what warrants the writer has met with, directed to the Warden, Master, Comptroller, and other officers of the Mint "for altering the coyn upon "emergent occasions." The warrants so set forth bearing the following dates, 17 May 1662, 22 March 1688-9, 13 June 1689, 19 June 1689, 12 September 1691, 15 September 1691, 21 January 1694, 16 February 1685.

(h.) 1702. Copy of royal warrant, addressed to I. Newton, Esq., Master and Worker of the Mint, for coining in the future gold and silver money, "according to the "forms depicted in a draught which was directed to be "done by Our Right Trusty and Right Welbeloved Cousin and Counsellor Charles Earl of Carlisle, Earl Marshall of England, and showed and approved of by us, and hereunto annexed, You changing the cypher "A into a rose upon the gold moneys, and making "drapery about the neck upon the same gold moneys "like the drapery on the coronation medals."

(j.) Two papers (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of notes explanatory of the designs for coins struck in the time of George the First. No date.

(k.) 30 December 1714. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. Touching the designs for the King's gold and silver moneys.

(l.) 17 January 1714-5. Draft (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of a letter from him to the Lords of the Treasury. Respecting the designs for the King's gold and silver moneys. Pasted on the back of the document are sketches of the designs on three several pieces of paper.

4. Papers relating to Proposals for Medals.

(a.) 24 November 1704. Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from him to the Lord Treasurer. Accompanying certain designs for medals in commemoration of Her Majesty's coronation; "other designs for medals having been communicated by others" to his lordship.

(b.) Eight various drafts of a paper explanatory of the devices and mottoes of designs for Queen Anne's coronation medals; six of the said drafts being in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting. Also, six drawings in pencil of the designs, on a single sheet of paper.

(c.) 3 September 1714. Letter, dated from the Exchequer, from Hopton Haynes to Sir Isaac Newton. Containing proposals and descriptions of six several designs for a coronation medal.

(d.) The following curious paper (in the handwriting of Sir James Garth) respecting designs for medals in honour of Queen Anne;—

1. The Device an Oke, which is the King of Forests. The motto—

Agros, ubi nascitur, ornat Serratque.

It both defends and adorns its native soyl.
Or thus—Ornatque tuetur.

2. Device.—An Amaranthus or Love-flower, and the sun above it drying up the dew. The motto relates to His Majesty's death.

Excitiant lachrymas radii

The rays dry up the tears.

3. Device.—An Atlas supporting the world. Motto :
Nec me labor iste gravabit.—Virgil.
Nor am I weary at the weight.

4. Device.—A rising and setting sun. Motto :
Alter idem.

The other is the same.

5. Device.—An Aurora watering flowers with a watering pot. Alluding to the Queen's modesty when she does good. Motto:

Vix absque rubore.
She obliges with a blush.

EARL OF PORTSMOUTH.

6. Device.—Relates to the confederat*. Three right hands joined within a circle of lambent light. Motto: Hæc omnia firmo.—Virgil.
I confirm the omen.

7th Device.—A sho-eagle crowned with laurell. The females of the hawk kind are the best and boldest. The motto:—
Fæmina præstat.
The female excells.

The 8th represents the Queen's exact justice and fixed temper. The device—a pair of compasses upon a cube. Motto:

Quocunque vertitur, idem.
In all circumstances the same.

The 9th Device.—A palm tree. The naturalists observe this tree thrives best when the male and female are planted by one another. The motto.—
Ægre sine conjuge crescit.

"Tis with regret it grows without its mate.

The winds disturbing the sea, and Neptune appeasing. Motto: Quos ego.

A laurel and an olive; a hand reaching to the olive. Motto: Te potui, or te malim.

Fortitude and Justice supporting a crown. Motto: Per nos.

A Trojan and Tyrian. Motto: Nullo discrimine.
Out of Virgil. The bees an emblem both of monarchy and industry. Motto:

Agitant sub legibus ævum,
Or, Mens omnibus una.

An olive shaded by an oak:—Tuta sub umbra, or protegit.

Brittannia or a Ship on the ocean: Imperium sine fine.
A Fury Bound: Fremet horridus ore cruento, or Vinctus fremet.

(e.) Four slips of paper containing memoranda, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, respecting designs for medals.

(f.)—1718. Printed broadside, exhibiting lists of medals struck in the reign of Queen Anne, and from the accession of George the First to the year 1718.

(g.) 15 April 1702. Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from him to the Lords of the Treasury. For orders and instructions respecting the coinage of coronation medals. Also nine other drafts, in the same handwriting, of unimportant letters from Sir Isaac to the Treasury, respecting the coinage, cost, or delivery of medals struck in the time of Queen Anne.

(h.) An account (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of the medals of fine gold made upon the Peace of 1718, and by Her Majesty's order delivered to my Lord Masham and the Speaker of the House of Commons. The number of the medals struck being 812, their total weight being 591 oz. 11 dwt. 16 grs., and their total cost 2,754l. 6s. 11d. Also two other drafts, in the same handwriting, of the same account.

5. Papers relating to the Privileges of the Mint.

(a.) 16 November, 6 Richard II. Copy of writ from the king to the mayor and sheriffs of London. Enjoining them to allow Thomas Murreaux, Constable of the Tower of London, to enjoy the customs, rents, profits, and enfranchisements, pertaining to his said office and enjoyed by former holders thereof. Given at Eltham. This document is printed at length in Maitland's "London."

(b.) 11 August 1605. Copy of warrant under James the First's sign-manual, directed to the Earl of Dorset, Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Devonshire, Master of the Ordnance, the Master of the Rolls, and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. To deliver the custody of the Tower to Sir William Wade, Knt., one of the clerks of the Privy Council, who has been appointed to the lieutenancy thereof, the said office having been vacated by death. Also a memorandum that the warrant was duly executed by the Earls of Dorset and Devonshire on Thursday in the afternoon on 15 August 1605. Given at the castle of Rockingham.

(c.) 11 August 1605. Copy of warrant under James the First's sign-manual, addressed to Sir William Wade, Knt., one of the Lords of the Council, to take on himself the custody of the Tower of London, the lieutenancy thereof being vacant by the death of Sir George Harvey, Knt. Given at the castle of Rockingham.

(d.) 13 August, 1605. Copy of warrant under James the First's sign-manual, addressed to Earls of Dorset, Devon, and others, to administer the usual official oath to Sir William Wade, Knt., as Lieutenant of the Tower of London; His Majesty having decided to continue Sir William in the said lieutenancy, and no clause authorising the said Lords to administer the said oath to him having been inserted in previous letters. Given at Ashby. Countersigned by the Earl of Northampton and the Earl of Salisbury.

(e.) Copies of the oaths of the Lieutenant of the Tower of London and the Chief Porter of the same Tower.

(f.) 6 July 1608. Copy of warrant, under James the First's sign-manual, addressed to Sir William Wade, Knt., Lieutenant of the Tower. Empowering Sir William to absent himself from his said lieutenancy for a month in the course of each year, provided that he leave in his place, to discharge the duties of his office during his absence, Sir Robert Davison, an esquire of the King's body, and Edward Forest, Esq., or either of them. Given at Westminster. It should be observed that the copyist of this and the ensuing warrant describes the one of Sir William Wade's deputies in the three following ways, viz., Sir Roger Davison, Sir Robert Dalison, and Sir Roger Dalison.

(g.) 18 July 1610. Similar warrant under James the First's sign manual and signet, addressed to Sir William Wade, Knt., authorising Sir William to absent himself yearly at one time or divers times from his lieutenancy of the Tower, so that he be not away from his office more than an entire month in a single year, and provided he leave Sir Roger Dalison, Knt., Sir John Kay, Knt., and Edward Forsett, Esq., or any two of them to discharge the duties of the said place during his absence. Given at Westminster.

(h.) List of Lieutenants of the Tower in the times of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. The first lieutenant mentioned being Sir Robert Chomley, and the last being Sir Allen Apsley.

(j.) 9 July 1608. Articles and ordinances made by His Majesty, to be observed by the Lieutenant of the Tower, Yeomen of the Guard, and others appointed to give daily attendance in the Tower. The orders being issued under the King's sign-manual, and countersigned by T. Ellesmere, canceller, T. Dorsett, E. Worcester, H. Northampton, Salisbury. The copyist adds this memorandum, "At such time as the Duke of Somerset was committed prisoner to the Tower in the reign of King Edward the 6th being Vnckle to the King and Protector of the Realme, he noting the daily and diligent attendance of the wardens of the Tower, did out of an honourable mind to encourage them, promise them that when it should please God and the King to deliver him out of the prison he would procure them that favour from the King that they should weare his cloth as the yeomen of the guard did. The duke not long after being sett at liberty performed his promise and caused the Warden of the Tower to be sworn Extraordinary of the Guard, and to weare the same livery they doe, which had the beginning by his means, and hath ever since been continued."

(k.) Collection of extracts from Patent and Close Rolls, with copies or abstracts of documents headed with these words, "Hereafter ensue the copies of diverse ancient records concerning y^e rights and customes and privileges of the Tower, and of other matters thereunto belonging confirmed from tyme to tyme during y^e reignes of several kings and so continued successively." Containing these following matters.

(1.) 9 April, 9 Henry III. Mandate (Pat. Roll. m. 5) to bailiffs of hundreds of Berkshire to aid Thomas de Blundhill, Constable of the Tower of London, in making arrests.

(2.) 12 August, 35 Henry III. Mandate (Close Roll. m. 6) to the mayor and sheriffs of London to supply Peter Bland, Constable of the Tower, with lead for repairing the King's houses in the same Tower.

(3.) 13 August, 35 Henry III. Mandate (Close Roll. m. 6) to the Constable of the Tower of London, to do needful repairs in the "reclusorium" upon the wall near the said Tower.

(4.) 22 January, 40 Henry III. Mandate (Close Roll. m. 6) to Peter de Blund, Constable of the Tower of London, to deliver to John de Auplie "illud reclusorium quod est juxta ecclesiam que est apud Turrim," a grant for life of the said reclusorium having been made to the said John at the instance of the Countess of Cornwall.

(5.) 3 March, 46 Henry III. Mandate (Close Roll. m. 14) to Richard de Pillebir, Constable of the Tower of London, to see that Edward of Westminster fulfils with proper despatch his engagement to the peers of Calhou and other pear-trees in a certain place near the Tower of London, under the wall of the same city.

EARL OF PORTSMOUTH.

EARL OF
PORTSMOUTH

(6.) ——— 9 Edward II. Memorandum of the pardon granted by the King to the City of London, touching the flagrant outrage of an armed multitude of citizens in pulling down an earthen wall outside the Tower of London, on condition that the mayor, aldermen, and citizens punish the rioters, pay 1,000 marks into the King's Treasury, and rebuild the wall at their own charges; the said pardon and reconciliation being granted after the principal aldermen and citizens had approached the King at Westminster and implored his clemency on their knees.

(7.) 13 July, 10 Edward II. Record (entered on the Fines Roll) of the fulfilment by the citizens of London of the several conditions on which the King granted them his pardon of their outrage in pulling down the Tower wall, with further record of the consequent restoration of the City of London to the royal favour.

(8.) 16 November, 6 Richard II. Already mentioned writ (entered on the Close Roll) from the King to the mayor and sheriffs of London. Requiring their aid that Thomas Murreaux, Constable of the Tower of London, may enjoy without molestation the ancient customs and privileges of his said office.

(9.) 29 November, 9 Richard II. Writ (Close Roll) from the King to the mayor and sheriffs of London. Requiring them to make proclamation of the royal pleasure that Thomas Murreaux should enjoy fully all the ancient rights and privileges pertaining to him as Constable of the Tower.

(10.) Edward III. Statute of Edward the Third concerning the authority of the Constable or Lieutenant of the Tower.

(11.) 1605-1606. A brief note or abstract of the proofs on y^e part of y^e mayor, commonalty, and citizens of London touching y^e differences between y^e Lieutenant of the Tower and them. And the Lieutenant's answer to every one of them severally.

(12.) 29 December 1605. Order of Lords of the Council, made on the information of Sir William Wade, Lieutenant of the Tower, respecting the present controversy between the said Lieutenant of the Tower on the one part, and the Authorities of the City on the other part, on questions of privilege and jurisdiction.

(13.) ——— 1606. Memorandum of proceedings and matters touching the arrest of Christopher Asquith, salter, within the liberties of the Tower, on a plea of debt by the mayor and sheriffs of London, at the suit of Water-ton Payne and Luke Crompton.

(14.) ——— 2 Edward III. Extract of particulars of the account, enrolled in the Great Roll, of Stephen Seagrave, late keeper of the Tower of London.

(15.) ——— 8 Edward III. Similar extract from the enrolled account of the issues of the Tower, of William La Touch, Lieutenant of the Tower.

(16.) ——— 11 Edward III. Similar extract from the enrolled account of the issues of the Tower of London, of John de Weston, junior, late Constable of the same Tower.

(17.) 22 June, 51 Henry III. Writ from the King (entered on the Close Roll) to the bailiffs of the City of London, to pay daily the sum of sixty shillings to Alan la Zuche for his expenses in taking charge of the City and the Tower of London, the custody of which City and Tower has been committed during pleasure to him.

(18.) 16 April 1605. Certificate of Sir Edward Coke and Mr. John Doddridge that the court usually holden in the Tower of London is an ancient Court of Record, that the steward is also the judge of the said court, and that the patent under the great seal granting the said stewardship unto Robert Browne is good and available in law.

(19.) September.—Letter from Lords of the Council to the Lieutenant of the Tower. Touching musters and commissions of array, and written on the authority of a commission empowering the writers to take order for mustering the trained bands in counties having no Lord Lieutenant. "The hamlets," say the writers, "that doth appertain to y^e Tower of London have heretofore in regard of their attendance on y^e place been vnder the charge and care of the Lieutenant of y^e Tower, and it is meet (as in former times hath been vsed) you should see in what order and readiness they bee and how they are furnished." No date of year.

(20.) 13 June 1607. Orders of Commissioners of Sewers for the immediate removal of jutties, privies, and places of easement, causing defilement to and accumulations of ordure in the Tower ditch, and for the abatement of other nuisances prejudicial to the health and dignity of the Royal Castle of the Tower of London.

(21.) 2 July 1611. Writ under the King's sign manual and signet to the Lords and others of the Privy Council. Requiring them to take measures for the stricter and more orderly government of the Tower of London; it having come to His Majesty's knowledge that the Tower "which had the reputation of best order and security is used now more like to a house of hospitality and entertainment of company than of Restraint."

(22.) 30 June 1611. Letter from Lords of the Council to the Lieutenant of the Tower. Accompanying orders for the reformation of abuses that, after creeping gradually into existence there, have grown to a height demanding vigorous correction. "The escape of Mr. Seymour" is particularly mentioned as an example of the unsatisfactory government and discipline of the State prison. Signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lords Chancellor, Treasurer, Privy Seal, Admiral, and Chamberlain, the Earl of Lenox, the Earl of Worcester, and Lord Knollys.

(23.) Orders concerning the Tower of London to be observed by Mr. Lieutenant there and the rest of the officers.—It is specially directed that the Lords Cobham and Grey "are to have only two men to attend upon them with a reader and a Cooke, which is a greater proportion then in former time hath been allowed to an earl or a duke"; that "Sir Walter Raleigh shall not in all exceed the number of foure"; that "the Lady Raleigh must understand His Majesties express will and commandment that she resort to her house on Tower Hill, or elsewhere, with her women and sons to remaine there, and not to lodg hereafter within the Tower"; and that "the Earle of Northumberland, whose offence is in other degree, is to reduce his family to the number of seaven, y^e names of which his necessary attendants were showed us in a list, being a double proportion which in former times hath been allowed to an Earle." It is further remarked, "And because His Majesty doth understand yt coaches come usually into the Tower, which in former times was never permitted without express leave from vs, being a thing inconvenient in itselfe and vnfit to bee used in that His Majesty's Royall Castle, neither used in any of his other houses, his express will and commandment is that from henceforth you suffer no coaches to come vnto the Tower or to any person whatsoever within the Tower." No date.

(23.) 30 November 1611. Letter from Lord Treasurer Salisbury to Sir William Wade, Lieutenant of the Tower. Directing Sir William to set up a bar at the west side of the Traitors' Bridge or Staires, to hinder carts from passing over the wharf that way. "Whereas" continues the letter, "y^e assignes of Sir Roger Ashton are willing at their charges to sett up a crane for y^e taking up of stone and timber and all other things on that part of y^e wharfe which His Majesty hath lett unto Sir Roger Ashton, being y^e easternmost part of y^e wharfe extending from the said Traytors Staires vnto St. Katherine's, by which meanes subjects' goodes maybe as conveniently landed as before, I pray you to permit y^e setting vp of such a crane to so good a purpose."

(24.) 24 February 1612. Letter from Sir William Waade, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, to the Lord Viscount Fenton, Captain of His Majesty's Guard, Respecting the condition of the warders of the Tower; and also concerning certain abuses in the recent appointment of those officers, for which an abatement is suggested. Concerning the livery and status of the officers, the writer says, "Before y^e first commitment of the Duke of Somerset at y^e time of King Edward the Sixth, the warders did never weare y^e king's coate, but he seeing y^e paines they tooke, and to winn their favour, and to leave a memoriall of his favour to them, promised to procure them His Majesties cloth, whensoever it should please His Majestic to set him at Liberty, which he upon his enlargement performed, and soe it was ordered at that time they should be sworn extraordinary yeomen of the Chamber, and that hath continued ever since. When I came to this place I found most of them had been servants in former times to the Lieutenants, and I know no other meanes the Lieutenant hath to recompense his servants that give painefull attendance on prisoners. * * * Truly I must affirme it was a great abuse offered therein both to His Majesty and this place by those that procured soe many reversions of warders' rooms at His Majesties first happy entrance of persons of all sorts neither known to His Majesty, your Lordship,

"or the Lieutenant of y^e Tower, of which sort I find
"there were no less than 16. The second abuse was "that those grants were passed under the Great Seale,
"contrary to the former order which was only under "His Majestie's Sign-Manual; and when His Majesty "thought it meete to add at y^e time of y^e Powder
"Treason ten warders more, I would suffer none of "them to take Pattents of their place vnder y^e Greate
"Seale." The writer advises that the patente warders and reversions to warders' places should be required to surrender their patents, and take office on the old terms so that "they may be the better subject to the orders set downe by His Majesty." He adds, "But "there are already soe many of them as I have noe
"hope to bring in any of my poore servants, vnless
"(as I have done) with compounding with those that "have reversions."—Also, a collection of precedents, showing that the appointments of warders proceed from the Crown either in the first instance or on the recommendation of the Lieutenant of the Tower, and that the patronage of such places never pertained to the Captain of the Guard.

(25.) Paper of Memoranda, headed "Presentments "by the Queen's Majesties Inquest of y^e Tower of "London, sworn by Sir Thomas Saunders, Knight,
"Steward of the said Tower, before Sir Francis Jobson
"Knt., Lieutenant of the same: Containing among "other things the bounds of the Tower."

(26.) 2 January, 12 Edward III. Letters of licence, entered on the Patent Roll, to the Mayor, aldermen, and citizens of London, to pull down and remove a certain house made of wood and stones ("quandam domum Bretagiatam") with certain palisades running from the said house to the Thames; which house and palisades they had built and fixed in a place called the "Petty Gates" near the Tower of London, for the defence of the said city, on rumor of an intended invasion by the King's enemies.

(27.) 20 March, 11 Henry III. Mandate (entered on the Close Roll, m. 15) addressed to the Constable of the Tower. For the removal of a royal fish to the Queen's Hithe, and for its sale there, in accordance with judgment made at the last trials in the Tower Court.
Given at Westminster.

(28.) 20 May, 18 Edward II. Mandate from the King to the Treasurer and Chamberlaine of the Exchequer.
For the payment to the master, brothers, and sisters of the Hospital of St. Katharine near the Tower of London, of 36s. 8d. of those five marks, six shillings, and nine pence, which the King's father, Edward the First, granted to the said bretheren and sisters, to be had yearly at the Exchequer, in recompense of damage sustained by them by the elongation of the foss about the Tower. Also similar mandate given in the following year.

(29.) 26 September, 8 Richard II. John Northampton, draper, late Mayor of London, John More, mercer, and Richard Norbury, mercer, both also of the same city, having been tried at the Tower of London before John de Montecatoto, seneschal of the said Tower, and his companions the King's justices, and found guilty of causing and fostering a serious riot and commotion in the said city, and sentenced to death by hanging;—
Letters patent commutting, under certain conditions, their appointed punishment to imprisonment for ten years in different prisons, in different counties "centum leucas a dicta civitate distantes."

(30.) 26 November, 29 Charles II. The verdict of His Majesty's late Jury for y^e Royall Tower of London and y^e liberties thereof, sworn before y^e Honble Sir John Robinson, Knt. and Bart., Lieutenant of the said Tower, Sir Thomas Stringer, Knt., Steward of His Majesties Court there, &c. &c. by us Daniell Colwall, forman, Nathaniell Montney, Mathew Humberston, William Fisher, George Whatoley, Robert Burgoyne, Thomas Dawson, John Slaughter, Charles Gringand, Henry Hardy, William Knypes, Francis Burgess, Henry Crane, William Bull, and John Cliffe.

(1.) 27 July 1697. Letter from the Rt. Hon. Lord Lucas to the Lords of the Treasury, in reply to the complaints of the Warden and Master Worker of the Mint, charging the writer with excesses and irregularities (infringing the privileges of the Mint), in performing the duties of Lieutenant of the Tower. Declaring the complaints to be in all cases groundless, and in some particulars scandalously libellous, the writer answers each accusation separately. Respecting the fourth count of the indictment, he says, "They pretend that "I twice searched in the Mint, and seized the gates "(without notice to any of the officers); and military
"searches are dangerous to them; and that I demand

"a list of the names of all persons there. Whereas "upon information that y^e late King James was seene
"in Mr. Roteer's house, which was about 7 o'clock in "the evening. I stay'd two hours, in which time I "sent thrice to speak with any officers of the Mint,
"but could finde none, nor the porter, nor any of his "family. Whereupon about 9 o'clock, myselfe, the "deputy-governor, and a Justice of the Peace went in "and searched Roteer's house; and 3 or 4 dayes after,
"by order of their Excellencies the Lords Justices,
"I went againe to Roteer's house, and took the exami"nations of all his family, which is all the military
"searches that were made."

(m.) 16 July 1697. Depositions of witnesses made on oath before Robert Thornhill, Esq., Chief Steward of His Majesty's Court of Record of the Tower of London, and one of the Justices of the Peace. Supporting certain of the allegations of Lord Lucas's reply to the above-mentioned complaints.

(n.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of an humble representation of the officers of His Majesty's Mint to their Excellencies the Lords Justices.
Respecting "the Irish Mint" in the Tower of London, granted by several indentures and charters to the officers of the Mint, and now demanded by the Lord Lucas. Imperfect and undated.

(o.) Rough draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of the complaints preferred by the Warden and Master of the Mint to the Lords of the Treasury, against the Rt. Hon. Lord Lucas, Lieutenant of the Tower. Charging Lord Lucas with divers violations of the privileges of the Mint and its officers. No date.

(6.) Papers described on the wrapper "Orders for Clearing the Mint of the Officers of Ordnance."

(a.) 2 December, 1699. Copy, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter (signed E. Musgrave, Wm.
Boulter, Jon. Charlton) written at the direction of the Rt. Hon. Henry Earl of Romney, Master General of the Ordnance. Announcing that his Lordship will in due course "give an answer to your report concerning y^e House belonging to y^e smith of the "Office in the Mint, when it shall be laid before the "Treasury and sent by their Lordships to him." It is added that the Master General of the Ordnance has a clear title to the house for the Ordnance Office.

(b.) List (in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting) of divers bills, and also of fee-books, commemorating payments for work done by divers blacksmiths in several places of the Mint; the various statements of account being thus brought together in demonstration of the title of His Majesty's Mint to the house occupied by the smith of the Ordnance Office in the Tower of London.
No date.

(c.) 27 April 1699. Letter addressed by Thomas Fowle, a person of long service in the Mint, to the Warden, Master and Worker, and Comptroller of the Mint. Setting forth the writer's recollection of what took place (touching the Mint's title to the house occupied by the smith of the Ordnance Office in the Tower of London) when one Hodgkins, smith in the service of the Mint, and also smith of the Ordnance Office, made over his said office of smith of the Ordnance Office to Edward Silvester, in the time when James Hoare, Esq., was Comptroller of the Mint. The writer certifying that on this occasion the said James Hoare remarked to the said Hodgkins, "Though you have "a right to your place as smith to the Office of Ordnance,
"you have noe right to the house by vertue of your "Office, for the house is the Mint's, and the right of "the House is in the Mint, and belongs properly and
"absolutely to the Mint."

(d.) 17 Juno 1699. Draught of a memorial by the officers of the Mint relating to the Mint privileges.
Complaining of successive encroachments made on the quarter of the Mint by the Ordnance Office and by successive Lieutenants of the Tower; the effect of which encroachments is that the work of the Mint is hindered, and that the precious metals of the Mint are exposed to peril of robbery. The memorialists pray that a new charter may be granted to the Mint, and that the boundaries of the Mint and Ordnance Office may be "exactly adjusted." Speaking of the inconveniences and misadventures arising from the encroachments the petitioners say, "And this intrenchment
"upon us has already, as we have very good reasons
"to suspect, given an opportunity to a burglary
"and robbery committed, as is supposed by a centinell
"who, being posted on y^e line, on y^e back part of our "Assaymaster's Office, did about 6 years since take "our thence an Ingott of Silver of — value; and
"there being a quantity of gold lying in y^e same room

EARL OF PORTSMOUTH.

"a day or two before, it might have proved a far greater loss to the King."

(c.) 18 February 1661. Order (signed T. Southampton, Ashley) of the Lord Treasurer and Lord Ashley, addressed to Sir William Parkhurst, Knt., Warden, Sir Ralph Freeman, Knt., Master and Worker, James Hoare, Gent., Comptroller, and the other officers of Mint. For the exclusion from the Mint of all foreigners, i.e., persons inhabiting houses or lodgings "between the two Mint gates" but having no employment in or connection with the Mint.

(f.) 2 May 1662. Minute of proceedings of the Council at Whitehall, touching foreigners within the Mint. Comprising the order that Sir John Robinson, Knt. and Bart., Lieutenant of the Tower, should enforce compliance with the above-mentioned ordinance for the exclusion of foreigners from the Mint.

(g.) — December 1662. Copy of warrant under the King's sign manual, countersigned by William Morrice, and addressed to Sir William Parkhurst and Sir Antony St. Leger, wardens, and to the auditors of the Mint. Authorising the said wardens to make certain quarterly payments to John Wallis and Thomas Woodward, and John Woodward for their full compensation in respect of certain rents heretofore accruing to them from certain leases of houses and gardens within the Mint, which leases have been taken from the tenants of the said holdings by the said wardens in execution of the orders for excluding foreigners from the Mint.

(h.) 5 November 1662. Copy of order and warrant, under the King's sign manual (countersigned, Henry Bennet), addressed to Sir John Robinson, Knt. and Bart., Lieutenant of the Tower. For the more complete and thorough execution of the orders for excluding foreigners from the Mint; and especially for the removal from the enclosure of the Mint of "the widow and children of one David Ramage, deceased, a monger (who as wee are informed have obstructed our service and been very obstinate)."

(j.) 20th July 1715. Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from him to the Rt. Hon. the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. Complaining that although the Mint is not subject to military authority, but is under the immediate government of the King, the Council, and the Lords of the Treasury, and although an order of Charles II. prohibits foreigners from living within the Mint, "General Compton, the Lieutenant of the Tower, has brought the Earl of Oxford into the house of the Comptroller of the Mint, and there put a guard upon him, as if that house, and by consequence the whole of the Mint, was under his jurisdiction."

(k.) Three various drafts, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from the officers of the Mint in the Tower of London to their Excellencies the Lords Justices. Setting forth certain privileges of the Mint, and touching a present controversy between the Mint and the Ordnance Office, as to title in the house occupied by the smith of the last-named office within the boundaries of the Mint. It is insisted that the house pertains to the Mint, and that the agents of the Mint have no right to bring materials within the Mint gates in order to rebuild the said house.

(l.) 13 February 1699. Extract from a letter from the Board of Ordnance to the Lords of the Treasury. Setting forth the particulars of the board's claim and title to the house inhabited by their smith within the Mint gates.

(m.) 23 February 1728. Letter (signed, T. White, Cha. Wills, M. Richards, T. Wheat, John Armstrong), to the principal officers of the Mint. Being an abstract of an official report respecting the late master smith's house and shops in the Mint, with a design for the improvement of the same, to the adequate accommodation of clerks.

(n.) 24 January 1661. At the Court at Whitehall. Order of Council (signed, Edw. Walker). Requiring the officers of His Majesty's Mint to make a particular return to the Committee of the Privy Council for the Mint, of all persons who have intruded and now inhabit within the Mint or precincts thereof, and have no relation thereto; and also directing that Sir William Compton, Knt., Master of the Ordnance, Colonel William Legg, Lieutenant of the same, and Captain Marish an officer of the same, be required to give evidence respecting their stables within the limits of the Tower.

(7.) Miscellaneous papers. Including papers relating to the Mis-reckoning of the Duties payable upon East-India Unrated Goods; A Proposal for Preventing the Counterfeiting Stamp Paper; Papers relating to the Revenue of Ireland, the Issues and Receipts of the Crown in England, and the Trade of England with France.

(a.) Paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of notes and examples touching the contention of merchants that they should not be taxed for the duty they pay the King, but only for the excess of the value of their goods above the duty. Also a letter, without direction or date, and slips of memoranda, on the mode to find the net duty on East India goods.

(b.) 15 May 1704. Letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord High Treasurer. Reporting against Mr. White's proposal for preventing the counterfeiting of stamped paper. "For whereas he proposes," says the writer, "to paste or glue a mill mark upon the paper, this mark thus becomes a faint one, not well to be seen unless by holding the paper between the eye and the light, and it is also unornamental, appearing on the paper like a patch. And for these reasons it will not please the people." Also, another draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of the same letter.

(c.) 25 March 1673. Official paper on the population, wealth, resources, and social condition of Ireland, entitled "The intended Report of the Council of Trade to his Excellencie the Lord Lieutenant and Council of Ireland." Covering eight closely penned foolscap pages. The yearly rent of all the lands of Ireland (including His Majesty's quit rents, tythes, and tenants' improvements) is computed to be about 900,000*l.*; the value of this yearly revenue being about 9,000,000*l.* The value of all the houses of Ireland, having one chimney or more (excluding cabins without a chimney) is put at 2,500,000*l.* The cattle and live stock of the country are valued at 3,000,000*l.* One million is given as the approximate value of the corn, furniture, merchandise, and shipping, of the country. The money current in Irish trade is believed to be between 300 and 350 thousand pounds, "or $\frac{1}{3}$ of the value of the whole kingdom which is supposed to be about 16 millions." The writers of the report continue, "The number of people in Ireland is about 11 hundred thousand, vizt., 300 thousand Protestants and 800 thousand Papists, whereof $\frac{1}{4}$ are children vnfit for labour; and about 75 thousand of the remainder are by reason of their quality and estates above the necessity of corporal labour; soe as there remains 750 thousand labouring men and women, 500 thousand whereof doe perform the present work of the nation. The said 1,100 thousand people doe live in about 200 thousand families or houses, whereof there are about 16 thousand which have more than one chimney in each, and about 24 thousand which have one; all the other housing being 160 thousand are wretched nasty cabins without chimney, window, or dore-shutt, and worse than those of the savage Americans, and wholly vnfit for y^e making of merchantable butter, cheese, or the manufactures of woollen or leather. The houses within y^e citie and liberties of Dublin are under 4 thousand (vizt., in the city 1,150), and the ale-houses within the same about 12 hundred; and it seems that in other corporations and in country towns the proportion of ale-houses is yet greater than in Dublin, vizt., $\frac{1}{3}$ of the whole * * * * * There are now in Ireland 32 counties, 252 burroughs, and 2,278 parishes; soe as the number of sheriffs and sheriffs' baylieffes, high and petty constables are about 3 thousand persons, whereof not above $\frac{1}{10}$ are English or Protestant, soe as the Romanists (being about 2,700) are Irish papists, and are the civill militia of this kingdom, and have the executing of all decrees of courts, and of Justice of Peace's warrants. This Civill Militia and y^e rest of y^e Irish papists being above 800 thousand are influenced and guided by about 3 thousand priests and fryers, and they are governed by their bishops and superiours, who are for the most part of y^e old Irish gentry, men of forraigne education, who depend vpon forraigne princes and prelates for benefices and preferments." Suggesting the union of the English and Irish parliaments as a remedy for some of social troubles of Ireland, the writers say, "If y^e whole substance of Ireland be worth 16 millions as above-said; if the customes between England and Ireland were never worth above 32 thousand pounds per annum; if the titles of estates in Ireland be more hazardous and expensive, for that England and Ireland are not vnder one Legislative Power; if Ireland till now hath been a continual charge to England; if the reducing the late rebellion did cost England 3 times more in men and money than the substance of the whole country when reduced is worth; if it be just that men of English birth and estate, living in Ireland, should be represented in the Legislative Power, and that the Irish should not be judged by those who they pretend doe usurp their estates; it then seems just and con-

(c.) 1640. Certain general rules collected concerning money and bullion out of y^e late consultation at Court in a speech made by Sir Thomas Roe att y^e Council table, 1640.

(d.) 28 November 1674. Tabular statement of the Exports and Imports of the Trade between England and France during a single year, "humbly tendered to their Lordships." At the foot of this statistical demonstration of the English need for a new treaty of Trade between the two countries, it is observed, "By the account above your Lordships may perceive that the Linen and Silk Manufactures only imported from France amounts to upwards of 800,000*l.*, and that the Manufacturers of Wool and Silk exported from England thither doe not amount to 85,000*l.*; as also that all the other commodities of the product and manufacture of France imported to England amounts to upwards of 320,000*l.*, besides an incredible value of toys, rich apparel, point-lace, &c., soe that it is apparent that the exports of our native commodities and manufactures to France are less in value by the least one million of pounds sterling than the native commodities and manufactures of France which wee receive from thence. And, if it please your Lordships to reflect thereupon, your Lordships will easily discern the great prejudice the English nation hath sustained, and the great advantage the French have and doe daily make by holding this Treaty in suspence; this nation being upon the matter excluded from Trade thither, while the meantime the French enjoy all and as great advantages as they can reasonably expect by any Treaty." Also, a copy of the same tabular statement.

(e.) Paper (two sheets), in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, headed, "The Case of the Parliament of Ireland." The introductory paragraphs of an historical memoir. No date.

(f.) 1683-8. Tabular statement of "The Produce of the Revenue of Ireland in quarters" for the years 1683, 1684, 1685, 1686, 1687, 1688.

(g.) 1664-6. Account of the whole charge of the navy for 27 naval months, accounting from y^e 1st of September 1664 to y^e last of September 1666, as it was drawn up at a committee of y^e House of Commons, and reported 11 October 1666, by Sir William Louth, chairman of the Committee.

(h.) 1687.—Account of the revenue of the Crown for the year 1687.

(i.) Reports upon Seals Engraved by the King's Graver of the Seals.

(a.) 20 May 1724.—Certificate that Mr. James Girard, Engraver of His Majesty's Seals, has engraved, in pursuance the King's warrant dated 12 March 1722-3, a new seal for the Bahama Islands, which seal has been sent to George Phenney, Esq., governor of the said islands.

(b.) 12 March 1722-3. Warrant, given at the court of St. James's under the King's sign manual, and countersigned Carteret. Authorizing James Gerrard, gentleman, engraver of the King's seals, to make "one seal of silver for the use of our Bahama Islands in America." Together with three various drafts of Sir Isaac Newton's certificate (addressed to the Lords of the Treasury) approving the workmanship of the said seal and also Mr. Gerard's bill for making it.

(c.) Papers relating to Tin.

(a.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer, in reply to his Lordship's order for the writer's consideration of what arrangements "may be requisite for lodging Her Majesty's Tin in the Mint, and delivering it out at a certain price and paying the money into the Exchequer." The writer is of "opinion that it may be performed by anyone of the officers of the Mint under the inspection of the other two, with three or more of their clerks to enter the number and weight of the blocks of tin received and delivered, and compute the price, with a store-house keeper, and with a skilful pewterer who understands the sorts, quantities, goodness, mixtures, adulterations, and merchandize of Tin; with one or more porters as there may be occasion." No date.

(b.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer. In which the writer offers to act as receiver and accountant of the tin delivered into the Mint; the officers of the Mint having been appointed by his Lordship to sell Her Majesty's tin, and cause the price thereof to be paid to a receiver appointed by his Lordship. No date.

Also three fair and amended drafts in the same handwriting of the same letter; one of them dated 28 October 1703.

(c.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of another letter to the Lord Treasurer, respecting the arrangement and needful apparatus for receiving Her Majesty's tin into the Mint, and delivering it therefrom. No date.

(d.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer. Respecting divers considerations for and against the renewal of a contract with the people of Cornwall for digging tin. No date.

(e.) Sheet of accounts relating to shipments of tin for "Hollonde" and "the Steights." No date.

(f.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer. Touching an "annexed representation of the Gentlemen Owners of Tin Lands in Cornwall, to the Lord Wardens of the Stannaries, wherein they desire that a Convocation or Parliament of Tinners might be held before the determination of the present contract, that proper measure may be taken to set another on foot." No date.

(g.) Proposals for charges to be allowed for landing, weighing, marking, and casting tin. Addressed to the Lord High Treasurer by Tobias Dixon.

(h.) 28 August 1711.—Two drafts, in Sir Isaac Newton's hand writing, of a letter to the Lord High Treasurer the Earl of Oxford and Mortimer. A long letter, containing particulars of the disposal of large quantities of Her Majesty's tin at Amsterdam and Hamburg. "Mr. Drummond," says the writer, "by a warrant dated October 20th 1704, had 400 tunns of Tin consigned to him and company at Amsterdam, to be disposed of after the best rates, not under 44½ guilders per cwt. of Holland (that is, not under 4*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* per cwt. averduupois), for a commission of two per cent. clear of all charges, and advanced 22,500*l.* upon it at 4 per cent. upon notice of its arrival at Amsterdam." Also, an undated slip of memoranda, in Sir Isaac's handwriting, respecting the sales of tin referred to in the letter.

(j.) Copy, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a representation and petition from the Gentlemen Owners of Tin Lands in Cornwall to the Hon. Hugh Boscawen, Esq., Lord Warden of the Stannaries of Cornwall and Devon. Begging the Lord Warden to intercede with Her Majesty for a Convocation or Parliament of the Tinners of Cornwall, with a view to a renewal of a contract for digging tin. No date. Together with a copy, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a Treasury order (signed, William Lowndes), referring the said memorial of the Cornish Tinners to Sir Isaac Newton. No date.

(k.) 16 November 1709. Draft, in the same handwriting, of a letter from the officers of the Mint to the Lord Treasurer, respecting the last-mentioned memorial and recent sales of tin.

(l.) 28 October 1703. Fair copy of an already mentioned letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord High Treasurer. Respecting arrangements for receiving and delivering Her Majesty's tin at the Mint. Also four sheets of memoranda respecting the same arrangements.

(m.) Three rough drafts, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting of "An Account of the Cost and Charges of sending Tynn to Amsterdam and selling it there by Commission." No date.

(n.) 22 January 1719. Draft of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lords of the Treasury. Announcing that the East India Company are willing to give 7,000*l.* for one hundred tunns of tin, to be paid out of the first moneys they shall receive from their Lordships for saltpetre.

(o.) Rough draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a paper entitled "An Account of the loss which His Majesty may sustain by renewing for seven years the Contract with Cornwall and Devonshire for Tynn, now void by Her late Majesty's death." No date.

(p.) Rough draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from the officers of the Mint to the Lord High Treasurer, the Earl of Godolphin. Respecting his "lordship's pleasure to send tin in bars to store-houses in Lisbon, Genoa, and Leghorn, for supplying Portugal, Spain, Italy, and Turkey with tin," and Mr. Taylor's intimation that the officers of the Mint

PORTSMOUTH.

"should send the tin in Her Majesty's transports to Portsmouth to be there shipped off to Her Majesty's Men of War." There being but few opportunities of transports from London to Portsmouth, it is suggested for the sake of dispatch and economy "that the Commissioners of the Tin Affair in Cornwall should be ordered to run into bars and ship off annually to Portsmouth three or four hundred tunns of the tin at Truro."

(q.) October 1704. Four closely written foolscap sheets, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting. Respecting Mr. Drummond's representations as to the price of tin in Holland; with arithmetical calculations respecting proposals based on those representations, and made by the same agent for the sale of tin.

(r.) Paper "To prove that a quantity of Tin cannot be had in the East Indies." Not dated: but shown by the contents to have been written in the time of Queen Anne.

(s.) Curious statistical paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, showing the amount of tin annually raised in Cornwall, and the prodigiously large loss accruing to the Queen from her operations in raising tin. "The 1,600 tunns of tin" says the paper, "bought annually in Cornwall amounts in Merchants weight to 1,714 tunns yearly, and in all the seven years to be 12,000 tunns. Between April 6th 1704 and September 12th 1705, there has been sold by the Pewterers 600 tons, by the officers of the Mint 488 tons and by Mr. Drummond about 1,000 blocks or 144 tons, in all 1,232 tons, which is after the rate of 860 tons. * * * * *. The Queen pays annually for tin 112,000*l.*, salaries 3,000*l.*, carriage by sea 3,000*l.*, incidental charges about 1,200*l.*, in all 118,200*l.*, and in all the seven years 827,000*l.*, besides interest. Her Majesty has received for 632 tons already sold 48,032*l.*, and will receive further for 860 tons 65,360*l.*, annually, and in all the 54 years to come 343,140*l.* Deduct the 65,360*l.* from the 118,200*l.*, and the 343,140*l.* from the 827,400*l.*, and the Queen will run in debt yearly 52,840*l.*, and at the end of the time of the bargain be in debt 484,260*l.*, besides interest which amounts to about 72,000*l.* more; so that the whole debt will be about 556,000*l.* The price of tin in Cornwall has sometimes fallen to 50*s.* and 48*s.* and even 45*s.* per c. merchants' weight; and the great glut of Tin, when the time of the bargain expires, may make it fall down to 45*s.* per c. in London and lower. The 6,853 tons of tin at 45*s.* per c. will bring in 308,385*l.*, which deducted from the said debt of 556,000*l.*, leaves the Queen 257,615*l.* a loser by the bargain, besides the interest of the debt while the tin is selling off; which interest, if the Tin be eight years selling off, or above, will amount to 194,787*l.* or above. So the Queen will lose at least 452,402*l.* by the bargain." No date.

(t.) Paper of account, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, entitled, "The State of a new contract for Tin upon the supposition that no more is purchased than the consumption will annually carry off." No date.

(u.) Paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, entitled, "Considerations upon the contracting with Cornwall for Tin." Undated; but containing internal evidence that it was written in an early year of George the First's reign.

(v.) Paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of considerations why King George the First should not renew the late Queen's contract with Cornwall for tin. No date.

(x.) Rough draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of "An Abstract of the Account of Sales of 2,680 blocks of Her Majesty's Tin, sent to Messrs. Drummond and Company, by warrant of the Lord High Treasurer of England." No date.

(y.) Paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, entitled, "The State of a new Contract for Tin." No date. With seven sheets of detached notes and memoranda, relating to the same subject. No date.

(z.) 25 October 1715. Paper, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, entitled, "An Account of the Tin remaining unsold in the Tower, in Holland, and at Hamburgh."

(aa.) April, 1708. Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a letter from the officers of the Mint to the Lord High Treasurer the Earl of Godolphin. Recommending that the agents for the Tin Affair in Cornwall should make a test experiment on two lots of black ore of grain tin, taken from the same heap, causing the one lot to be melted in a blowing house, and the other to be melted in one of the new patent reverberating furnaces, with a view to the settlement of a controversy respecting the effect of the reverberating furnace on tin. "Some," the writers say, "affirm that above one tenth part of all the tin in Cornwall used heretofore to prove grain Tin, and think that the furnace of the patentees, by keeping the Tin too long in fusion, evaporates the best part of it, and spoils the grain Tin, and damages the rest. And if this prove true, we are humbly of opinion that the patent is injurious to the Tin Affair. But others represent that not above one twentieth part of all the Tin in Cornwall used heretofore to prove grain Tin, and that the Tin is refined from the drossy parts by being kept in fusion, and thereby becomes better than before."

(bb.) Draft, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of a paper on "The surest method for setting the price upon the Tynn at Amsterdam." No date.

(cc.) An account, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of the costs and charges of procuring tynn from London and housing it at Amsterdam. No date.

(dd.) Draft of a letter from Sir Isaac Newton to the Lord High Treasurer. Announcing that there is room in the Mint "for coining twenty thousand pounds a week of silver, and eighty thousand pounds a week of gold, and at the same time lodging above two thousand tunns of Tinn, without bringing any Tinn into the rooms of gold and silver." No date.

(ee.) Two drafts, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of "An Account of the cost and charges of sending Tynn to Amsterdam and selling it there by Commission." No date.

(ff.) An Account, in Sir Isaac Newton's handwriting, of the Tyn sold in the Tower from Lady Day to the 1st of Sept. inst. The account showing the following sales at the following places:—Turkey 4,297 cwt., Straits 1,422 cwt., Leghorn 42 cwt., Malaga 9 cwt., Cales 107 cwt., Maderas 21 cwt., Lisbon 76 cwt., Bilboa 97 cwt., Amsterdam 2,114 cwt., Rotterdam 1,486 cwt., Bruges 554 cwt., Hamborough 611 cwt., Bremen 884 cwt., Sonnd 631 cwt., Dantzic 30 cwt., Germany 50 cwt., Norway 9 cwt., Russia 386 cwt., Ireland 20 cwt. No date of year.

(gg.)—1705. Three Essays (or an Essay in Three Parts) entitled "Considerations Relating to the Price of Tinne," by John Williams, merchant. In favour of maintaining the high price of tint, as English tin is secure from competition with cheaper tin produced elsewhere.

(hh.)—1705. An Humble Proposal for the Improvement of Her Majesty's Preemption and Coynage of Tin by raising and perpetuating the value thereof. Addressed to the Rt. Hon. Sidney Lord Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer, by William Tyndale.

At the end of this report on a collection of writings so rich in materials for historians of the Mint, and for biographers of Sir Isaac Newton, I have much pleasure in expressing my cordial sense of the courtesy with which the Earl of Portsmouth received me at Hurstbourne, and in acknowledging the facilities which he afforded me for the execution of the instructions of Her Majesty's Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts.

LIKE the splendid collection of Caxtons, for which Osterley Park has long been famous, the more important of the writings noticed in the following list of the Osterley MSS. were part of the library which Mr. Child bought of the executors of Mr. Brian Fairfax by private treaty, after arrangements had been made for its sale by public auction. But together with these more valuable products of the pen, the Earl of Jersey preserves at his Middlesex seat some few records that descended to him from his ancestor, Sir Francis Child, the famous banker and Lord Mayor of London, who brought from Holland the fine painting, by Rubens, of the Apotheosis of William the First, Prince of Orange, which, after adorning for a considerable period the ceiling of the staircase of the banker's house in Lincoln's Inn Fields, was transferred to Osterley House, together with the other masterpieces of art which, it appears from one of the Osterley documents, Sir Francis had at the latest gathered together so early as the year 1706. One of the writings, which may be referred to this celebrated citizen of London, is the incomplete journal of his visit to the Low Countries and Germany in 1697,—a personal memoir that is fully described in the ensuing schedule, as a record to which time has imparted a savour of historic interest.

(1.) 18-24 Henry III.—Memorandum of the charges of the household, retinue, and services of Henry the Third, King of England. On paper, fourteen foolscap sheets in paper wrapper. On the first page of the account this heading: "Heere after followeth the rates of wages of peace and warre expences necessarye of officers and other charge concerning the household of the Prince of noble memorie Edward the 3, as well in tyme of peace, as of warres, and also the number of souldiers aswell by land, as by sea, and shippes retayned in the warres of the king, as by the percelles of the account of Walter Wentwage, Treasurer of the sayd household, from the 21 day of Aprill in the 18 yearre of the reigne of the said kinge, vnto the 23 day of November in the 21 yearre of y^e same kinges raigne." At the conclusion of the sketch this summary: "The somme of the aforesaid expences as well of wages as prestes, as for the expences of the kinges houses houses, and for other giftes and rewardes, shippes and other thinges necessarie to the said parties of France and Normandy, and before Callis, during y^e siege therof, as it appeareth in the comptes of William Norwall, keeper of King's wardrobe from the 15 daye of July in the 22 yearre of the kinges reigne vnto the 25 daye of May in the 24 yearre of his reigne.—337,104 li. 9s. 4d."

(2.) Official Index to enrolments in the rolls of cos. Lincoln and Northampton, temp. Henry VIII., Edward VI., Philip and Mary, and Elizabeth.—Paper, in vellum wrapper.

(3.) 33 & 34 Henry VIII.—Book of Particular Values (Liber Valorum Particularium), of all the honors, castles, lordships, manors, lands, tenements, and all other possessions, as well temporal as spiritual, in the hand and possession of Lord King Henry the Eighth, within the jurisdiction of the Court of Surveyors of the Lands of the King's Majesty, as appears from the several values of the same revenues, duly examined before Sir Richard Southwell, knt., one of the General Surveyors of the lands of the said Lord King, that is to say, for an entire year, ending on Michaelmas 34 Hen. VIII.—The sum total of the revenue, clear of all deductions, being xxxviii^l. iiii^s. li. vi. s. 1d. o. b. q^r.—38,080 l. 6s. 11d.—Containing one hundred and seventy-four leaves. This volume is a fine example of official penmanship, and is in perfect preservation.

(4.) Henry VIII.—A Treatise on the Troubles of England towards the close of Henry the Eighth's reign, entitled "A Discourse of the comonweale of thys Realme of Englande." Covering two hundred and twenty-four closely written pages, this MS. contains three dialogues between a knight, a merchant, a doctor of divinity, a husbandman and a capper on the principal social problems of that time; the dialogues being preceded by a "Preface" and a table of contents, entitled "A table of all thinges most notable, conteyened in this booke." The drift of the discourse is to attribute the prevailing discontents and imminent dangers to the general dearth of food, the withdrawal of coin from the country, the inclosure of common lands, the conversion of arable ground into pasture, the decay of towns, and religious dissensions. "But lett us," says the writer at the opening of the third dialogue, "briefly recompte the griefes, and then the occasions thereof, and thirdly goe to the inquisition of the remedies of the same. First this generall and universall dearthe is the cheefest griefe that all men complayne moste on: Secondly, the exhaustinge of the treasure of this realme: Thirdly, inclosures and turninge of arable ground into pasture: fourthly, decayinge of townes, townshippes, and villages; and laste, division and diversitie of opinions in religion." Respecting excess in apparel and diet, Dr. Pandotheus, who takes the chief part in the dialogues, says, "No dowte that is one great cause of the greater charge of howsholde. For I knowe when a suryngye manne was content to goo in a Kendalle cote in sommer, and a frysecote in winter, and with playne white hose made meete for his bodye, and with a peece of beef or some othre dyshe of sodde meate all the weeke longe. Now he wylle loke to haue at the leaste for Somere a cote of fynest clothe that may be gotten for monye, and his hosen of the fyneste kerseye, and that of some straunge dye as Flaunders dye or Frenche puke, that a prynce or a greate lord canne were no better, yf he were clothe. Thanne theyre cotes shalbe gardede, cutte, and stychede, and the broches of theyre hose or drawn with sylke, that the workemanshype shalle farre passe the price of the stuffe. And this thyng is not restrayned as it

"sholde be, but rather cheryshede of the masters, one stryngye with thothere who maye be moste prowde, and whose retynewe may goe moste layvishe and gaye for a tyme of shewe. Whereas throwe suche excesse theye are fayne alle the reste of the yere to keepe the fewere scrutaentes. And so in excesse of mates, they fare at some tymes in the yere that in the whole yere after they keepe eythere now howses at alle, or yf theye do it shalbe verye smale." After speaking of the evil consequences of debasing and tampering with the currency, the learned doctor is made to say elsewhere, "But assone as it was espyede the ii peces of half poundes went no farther thanne the one peece of a hole pounde went before, and at length as myche as they wonne at the fyrste theyr losse at the laste in paymente of theyre rentes, customes, and censcs. And the neerer caste the farther from weaste. And theyr losse theyre credyte, moche lyke as I haue knowne certayne townes in Englande to hane done, whiche were wonte to make theyre clothes of certayne bredth and length, and to sette theyre seales to the same; while they kepte y^e rate trulye strangers dyd but looke ower the seale, and receyve theyre wares, wherebye these townes had greute vente of theyre clothes, and consequently prospered verye welle. Afterwards some in those towns not content with reasonable gaynes, but contynually desyryng more, devyded clothes of lesse length, bredthe, and goodnes thanne theyre were wonte to be, and yet by the comendacioun of the seale to have asmyche monye for the same as they had before for good clothes. And for a tyme they gate myche, and so abused the credyte of theyr predecessours to theyre singulere lukere, whiche was recompensed with the losse of theyre posteritye. For these clothes were founde fawltie for alle theyre seale, theye were not onelye neuer the bettere trustede but myche lesse for theyre seale, yea althowghe theyre clothes were well made. For whanne theyr vnturthe and falsheade was espyede thanne no man wolde buye theyre clothes vntylly they were enforsede and vnfoldede, regardyng nothyng the seale." Pointing to what the nation lost by impolicy in exchanging her exports of sterling value for the trivial products brought to her from foreign countries, the Doctor says, "And I marvaile that no manne takethe heede to hit; what number fyrste of tryles comyth hether from beyonde the sea, that wee myght eyther clerely spare orels make them within owre owne realme; for the which wee eyther paye inevitable treasure enyere yere, orels exchange substantialle and necessarye wares for them, for the whiche wee myght receyve great treasure. Of the whiche sorte I meane glasses as welle lokinge and drynkynge, as to glasse wyndowes, with dyals, tables cardes, bals, puppetes, pennare, inkhorns, toothepeckers, gloves, knyves, daggers, owches, browches, aglettes, blottes of silke and silvere, erthen pottes, pyennes, and poyntes, hawkes bels, paper bothe whyghte and browne, and a thowsand lyke thynges that myght eyther cleerlye be sparede orels made wythin the realme sufficiencytlye for vs. And as for some thynges they mak of oure own commodites and send it vs agayn, whereby they sette theyre owne people on worke and doo exhauste much threasure owte of this realme. As owr woole they make clothes, cappes, and kersyes; of owr felts they make Spanshe skynnes, gloves, and gerdels; of owr tynne, saltes spones and disshes; of owr broken lymen clothes and ragges, paper both whyghte and browne. What threasure thyng yow goythe owte of this realme for enyere of theys thynges. For altogether it exceedeth the myne estimacioun. There is no man can be contented now with anye othre gloves thanne is made in France or in Spayne, or with kersye but it muste made of Flaunders dye, nor with clothe but Frenche or Fryscado, nor with owche, broche, or aglet, but of Venyce makynge or Myllayne, nor with daggers, swordes, knyff or gerdle but of Spanshe makynge, or of some outward cuntrye. No, not so myche as a spur, but that hit ys fetchede at the Millioners. I haue seene within theyse twentye yers when ther were not of theyse habardasshers that sell French or Millayr cuppes, glasses, knyfes, daggers, swordes, gerdels and suche thynges not a dozen in alle London. And now from the Towre to Westminster long, euery streete is full of theym, and theyr shopes glytters and shynes of glasses, as well lokinge as drynkynge, yea. all maner of vsselles of the same stuffe, poynted cruses, gaye daggers, knyves, swordes, and gerdels."

(5.) 2 & 3 Philip and Mary to 35 Elizabeth.—Folio in vellum wrapper, containing in its present state 39 leaves, but shown by internal evidence to have formerly contained at least 79 leaves. The earlier sheets were at one time numbered, and the numbering indicates the loss of leaves 2, 3, and 4, 29 to 59, 63, 64, 66, 67, and 68; remains of twelve of these missing leaves being retained by the stitching of the volume. Originally this mutilated volume consisted of Exchequer records, of the accounts of moneys received and disbursed by the receivers of customs, and subsidies at different ports of the kingdom between Michaelmas 2 and 3 Philip and Mary and Michaelmas 12 Elizabeth. The accounts being returned to the Exchequer by the customers and collectors of ports of Chichester, Yarmouth, Lynn, Boston, London, Bristol, Plymouth, and Fowey, Southampton, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Exeter, and Dartmouth, Kingston-upon-Hull, Ipswich. The London accounts occupy more space than the returns from any other port; and some of the disbursements made by the London collectors, between 8 March, 3 & 4 Phil. and Mary, to Michaelmas 4 & 5 Phil. and Mary, are noteworthy, e.g. :—

To Sir Richard Southwell, knt., in respect of his annuity of cc li. granted to him for life by Henry VIII. - cc li.
To Sir Henry Jenningham, knt., in respect of his annuity for life of c. granted to him by the present Queen Mary - c li.
To Edward Vaughan, Esq., in respect of his annuity for life of cc marks granted to him by the present Queen Mary - c li.
To Nicolas Lysarde, the Queen's painter, in respect of his annuity for life of ten pounds - x li.
To Davies Pennic and Sibilla his wife, in respect of their annuity of xli. - xli li.
To Thomas Ingrave, the Queen's embroiderer, in respect of his annuity for life of xviii li. v s. granted to him by the same Queen Mary - xviii li. v s.
To Thomas Mountayne, vi li. x s. d. in respect of his office of the keeper of the lord and lady Philip and Mary, king and queen, within their manor of Estegrenewich co. Kent, commonly called the "Quene's Garden," and xxii s. vi d. for his livery vii li. iii s. ii d.

The account of payments made by the customers of Southampton, between Michaelmas 5 and 6 Philip and Mary and Michaelmas 1 Eliz., contains memoranda of the following payments :—

To the Lord Treasurer of England in respect of his annuity of xx li. for the support of the title or dignity of Earl of Wiltes - xx li.
To William Earl of Pembroke in respect of his annuity of xx li. for the support of the title and dignity of heir of the earl of Southampton - xx li.
To Sir Henry Sydney, knt., serjeant of the other hounds, ('S'ient' can't be other hounds), in respect of his annuity of xxviii li. ii s. viii d. ob. - xiii li. xvi d.

Amongst these Exchequer accounts from customers of ports appears first portion of the preamble of the account of Thomas, bishop of St. Asaph, touching the collection in his diocese of the part assigned to the said see of an ecclesiastical subsidy granted to the late king and queen, 4 and 5 Philip and Mary, by the clergy of the provinces of Canterbury and York. On the mutilated fly-leaf of the diminished volume, one comes also upon some Exchequer records of receipts and disbursements by sheriffs (temp. Eliz.) of cos. Noths and Derby, Northampton, Lincoln, and Northumberland. And the concluding sheets of the book exhibit some loosely written memoranda of forms to be used in the collection of subsidies, with particulars of the collection of the subsidies granted by parliament to Queen Elizabeth in the 35th year of her reign.

(6.) 1592.—Copy of Sir Symonds D'Ewes'. "Parliamentarie Journall—A^o 35^o Reg. Eliz., A^o Dm 1592," headed "A Journall of the Parliamentary proceedings in the lower howse A^o 35 Eliz. Ano Dm 1592, very laboriously collected: Being chiefly called for consultation and preparation against the proud and ambitious designs of the Spanishe Kinge, in which alsoe some vnusvall distrust hapened betwene her Majestie and theire howse, by reason of theire intermeddling with her Majesties successour to the Crowne, which shewd be forbidden. This session began on Monday 19 of February 1592, and ended April 9th, 1592." Contemporary penmanship: vellum cover.

(7.) 1603 to 1622.—Book of thirty-three foolscap sheets, neatly written on both sides, and containing, together with other matter, copies of the "Observations upon the Provinces United," and the "Observations on the State of France," attributed to Sir Thomas Overbury.

The first-named treatise is headed in the present MSS.

"Sir Thomas Overbury, his observations, in trayuells, upon y^e state of the 17 provinces as they stood Anno Domini 1609," and is followed by the sketch of "The Archduke's Countrey, 1609." Next in order comes the memoir, entitled, "France, 1609, vnder Henry y^e 4th," which is followed by "Observations of the severall estates of the Pope, the K. of Spaine, the great duke of Tuscanye and Florentine, &c., taken in the year of our Lord 1603;" and a tract described "Reasons Conjecturall of Warre and Truce betwixt the Spaniard and the Archduchess on the one part, and the Lords, the Estates Generall on the other part; drawne from the consideration of themselves, each part of the Allies and Friends respective, and of each of them twoe in regard of thother, 1622." The collection closes with a paper entitled, "For the Freeing of the Pallatinate by Armes, there are 3 wayes" may be propounded to his Majestie." Written throughout by the same penman, the manuscript seems to have been produced in the middle of the seventeenth century, and is inscribed at the top of the first leaf, "Scr Onslow Gardiner."

(8.) 1604 to 1680.—Foolscap Ledger, in thin vellum wrapper, inscribed at the back, "Revenue Matters; New Buildings; Treaty of Peace;" and on the outside of the cover, "Revenue Matters and Treaties, and About new Buildings in London, &c. With a diary of the Treaty of Peace, 1604." Containing—

(c.) A Diary (on fifty-four minutely penned foolscap pages) of the Proceedings in the Treaty of Peace between the Lords Commissioners on both parts of the Right High and Mighty Princes the Kings of England and Spaine, and alsoe of the Commissioners of the Archduke Albertus. Noted on the title page, immediately over the title "n. 195 of Mr. W^m Pierpont." Covering fifty-two closely written pages this memoir opens under the date of Sunday, 20 May 1604, on which day was held the first meeting of the Commissioners, viz., the Earls of Dorset, Nottingham, Devonshire, and Northampton, and the Lord Cecil, Principal Secretary, commissioners on behalf of the King of England; Don Juan De Taxis, Count De Villa Mediana, the Spanish ambassador, and the Seigneur Alessandro Rovido, a senator of Milan, commissioners in behalf of the King of Spayne; and the Count of Aremberge, and the President Richardott and the Audience Vergesne, commissioners in behalf of the Archduke of Austria; to treat for a firm pece between the said princes and their subjects. "Their Lordships," runs the account of the proceedings of the first day, "repayed to Somerset (now termed Denmarke House), beinge the lodgings of "the said Spanish ambassador, and therewith y^e rest of "y^e Commissioners entered into a common conference concerninge the businesse. A faire great chamber heerefore used for the Councell Chamber in the said house, expressly prepared by his Majestie's directions for the said meetinge. And it was thought fitt to give the said "Commissioners the place of the right hand at the table, "in respect of the greater honour done to his Majestie by "the sendinge the said Commissioners to treat heere "within this realme." The greater part of the first day's conference had reference to objections and doubts raised by the English commissioners as to the sufficiency of the commission of the representatives of Spain, who instead of being appointed directly by their king were sub-delegates, commissioned by the Constable of Castile, to whom the Spanish sovereign had granted a special commission for that purpose.—Second Meeting of the Commissioners, on Tuesday, 22 May 1604: The king of England, having dismissed the objections to the nature of the Spanish commissioners' appointment, and consented to regard their commission as satisfactory to his honour, the conference passed to a consideration of the general design of the proposed peace, the day's proceedings closing with an arrangement that the English commissioners should ascertain more precisely their prince's wish, whether the treaty should be for "a General "League Offensive and Defensive," or for "a Particular "League Defensive sine offensio," but binding the parties "to assist and defend each other in case of invasion by a third person," or for "a Peace of firme "Amity and Friendship, with condition not to attempt "anything to each other's prejudice or wrong."—Third Meeting of the Commissioners, on Friday, 25 May 1604: The king of England's desire for a league of the third sort, i.e., "a Peace of firme Amity and Friendship" having been announced, and the reasons for the choice having been set forth, it was enquired by the Commissioners for the King of Spain and the Arch-duke of Austria, whether the King of England would continue to hold intercourse of trade with the rebellious subjects of Holland should they refuse reasonable terme of submission. The English commissioners were firm and clear in resisting the attempts to detach the King of England from the United Provinces. "The Lord Cecil added further "that it was good to lett them playnlie know that the "Trade with those Provinces was of soe great importance to vs, as we could by noe meanes spare the same: "and moreover that the King was no lesse tyed by the "weight of other considerations not to renounce the "holdinge of further correspondency with them, in "due care not to loose the great Debt which they owed "him, and the possession of the Townes which he held "amongst them, and therewith alsoe not to make them "desperate to betake themselves to other Protection, "which might be much more dangerous both for Spain "and England. And therefore he told the said Commissioners that they were not to expect other satisfaction vpon that point."—Fourth Meeting of The Commissioners, on Thursday, 31 May 1604: Repeating their determination to entertain no proposals for limiting England's freedom of trade with the Low Countries, the commissioners of the King of England agreed to leave it an open question for the moment, whether English merchants should "be restrained from venting the "commodities of Holland and Zeland into Spain, and "soe likewise of Spaine into the said Provinces." The Lord Cecil then made "complaint of the wrongs and "grievous vexations which were committd vpon our "merchants trading into Spaine by the authority of "the Inquisition there, whereof he desired that they "might be henceforth discharged and cleered, and a free "liberty of trade to be granted to his Majesties subjects into all the dominions of the King of Spaine "and the Arch-Duke." In reply to this last demand, which included freedom "to trade into the Indies," it was urged by the senator of Milan that as such a liberty had "never hitherto been permitted by the King of "of Spayne to any of his owne subjects or neerest "kindred, or soe much as to his owne children," his present commissioners must be silent on the matter. In the ensuing discussion, the Spanish commissioners, having shown themselves resolute to maintain their master's exclusive right of "trade into the Indies," the Lord Cecil expressed a hope that the Constable of Castile would on his arrival prove less unyielding on that matter; whereupon the commissioners for the King of Spain closed the conference for the day by answering "that the Constable was not more authorised to give "satisfaction therein then they were, being a matter "which they did not expect would ever have come in "question."—The Fifth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Friday, 1 June 1604: When the discussion related chiefly to the terras on which the King of England held certain towns in the Low Countries, and the reasons which forbade the said prince to deliver the said towns "to others then from whom he had received them." Having received the towns "as pawns for good summes "of money owinge to his crowne," regard for the interest of his kingdom forbade the sovereign of England to relinquish them till "he was satisfied of the said debt," and on the payment of that debt honour would require him to return the pawns to those who had pledged them. In reply to a hint that the King of Spain might take the towns by force, in order "to reduce the islands "to their obedience," the Earl of Northampton told the senator of Milan "that the deceased Quene possessed "her selfe of the said townes by the like justice as the "King of Spaine tooke townes in France, and did "ally herselfe with Holland and Zeland by the same "right as he did with the house of Gnisce. Soe as it "ought noe more to be disputed with vs than it was in "their case, whether they took the townes possessed by "them from vero Dominio or not, whereof mention had "been made by him." Towards the close of a delicate and dangerously exciting conversation on this matter, the English commissioners were asked whether an attempt by the King of Spain to recover the towns by force would be deemed a breach of the proposed peace: whereupon the Lord Cecil closed the irritating discussion for that meeting by inquiring "how unwillng their lordships "were (by way of argument), to revive the remembrance of the old differences, whereby they could "sufficiently answer the point of their present proposition."—Sixth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Tuesday, 5 June, 1604: When the King of England's tenure of the cautionary towns in the Low Countries was further considered. The English commissioners still insisting that no arguments would induce their Sovereign to give up the towns without payment of his debt, or under any circumstances to yield them to any but those to whom the English crown was bound to restore them, the senator of Milan proposed that, though the King of England could not engage himself to deliver up the towns to their rightful proprietors, he might consent to an agreement which, after the expiration of a certain time to be named in the new league, should declare him under certain contingencies "at liberty to dispose of the said townes according as should be agreeable to justice and good amity." Whereupon the conference was adjourned in order that the English commissioners might acquaint their sovereign with this overture, and take his sense respecting it.—Seventh Meeting of the Commissioners, on Thursday, 7 June 1604: When through his commissioners the King of England offered to "enter into a new communication vnto the States, and to profess vnto them that, if they would not take order for the payment of their debt by a certaine tyme, or else conforme themselves to the obedience of their princes that their king would bee at liberty to take such course with the said townes as should bee agreeable with honor and conscience." With respect to the question of trade, the consideration of which had been deferred, Lord Cecil signified that, though the merchants of England protested against the proposed restraint, the King of England, in his desire for peace with the King of Spain and the Archduke of Austria, might be induced to "prohibite the transportinge of the commodities of Holland and Zeland into Spain, and so likewise of Spaine into those provinces by any of his Majesties subjects yppon paine of confiscation of the same commodities, and of incurring further punishment and for the better observacion thereof that some seales should be appointed to designe the commodity carried out of England."—Eighth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Friday, 8 June 1604: When the commissioners for the King of Spain and Archduke of Austria accepted the English commissioners' last proposal to restrain by royal proclamation the carrying by British subjects of commodities from Spain into Holland and Zealand, and from Holland and Zealand into Spain. At the same time it was agreed the impost of 30 upon the 100 for all goods issuing out of Spain, unless carried into the Archduke's provinces, should be remitted in respect to merchandise carried from Spain to England; remission being at the same time accorded of the same impost of 30 upon the 100 for all goods imported from England or the Archduke's territories into Spain by English merchants.—Ninth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Monday, 11 June 1604: When the commissioners occupied themselves with recapitulating the matters already agreed upon, and settling the details of each arrangement.—Tenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Wednesday, 13 June 1604: Having asked in vain for a further remission of an impost of 12 on the 100, to the relief of English merchants trading into the dominions of the King of Spain and Archduke of Austria, and obtained a clearer statement of the terms of a previous concession made by the commissioners of the said princes, the Lord Cecil enquired whether the same envoys had any other proposals to make, "Whereunto the President Richardot answered that they had a particular mocion to make in the name of the Archduke for the restoringe to them the ancient jewells of the Duke of Burgundye, which were engaged to the late Queen by those which had no right to dispose of them, and in respect that the said jewells had ever been preserved and left in succession to the Dukes of Burgundye, that they desired the recovery of them more in that respect than for y^e value of them." It was answered then by the Lord Cecil that the said jewells were engaged by the most of the principall provinces of the Low Countreys for good somes of money, and therefore that the King's Majestie could not deliver those jewells without their liking and agreement, and order to be taken for the reimbursement of the said money, for the which that hereafter some better expedient may be found than could bee now."—Eleventh Meeting of the Commissioners, on Monday, 18 June 1604: Opening with the Lord Cecil's proposal to frame and settle the several articles of agreement, with a view to the speedy conclusion of the business in hand: when a rather warm contention arose touching the King of Spain's purposes to restrain English adventurers from trading to the Indies. It being obvious that the Spanish commissioners "had a meaning to exclude vs from the trade of the Indies," it was desired by their lordships to argue that point concerning the Indies before they proceeded any further, and therewith it was declared vnto them that if they could shew any ancient treatyes wherein the like restrictions had been used then that their lordships would yield to reason therein. Otherwise

"there was no cause but that the trade ought to bee accorded vnto vs." In reply to a motion by the senator of Milan in favour of the King of Spain's pretensions in this matter, "the Lord Cecil said, that to speak clearly vnto them, as their lordships did conceive they would be unwilling to graunt vs the freedome of that trade, so they prayed them to vnderstand that they were no less resolved not to assent to bee more restrained now from this liberty of vsing that trade y^e wee had been in former tyme." In behalf of Spanish interests in the new world it was urged by the senator of Milan "that howsoever ancient treatyes had been penned by neglect, yet that observacion shewed y^e the v^s of that trade had never been graunted vnto vs, and seeing the taking of that liberty by colour of those words bred occasion of warr againe, it was convenient so playnly to express them att this tyme, as that all perill might bee avoided, and nothing left that might give interruption to y^e peace." Whereto the English commissioners replied, "That it was not their meaning to dispute now the King of Spaine's right to the Indies, or whether he might lawfully restrayne our trade thither or not, but that the King's Majesty would not so much wrong his honour as to yield to bee more restrained in y^e freedome than France and other Princes by the Convention made with them." Seeing that the King of England would not assent to any article expressly restricting his subjects rights to trade to the Indies, the Spanish commissioners offered to avoid the question by a general article, as had been done towards France, provided that "the King of England would promise by some private article that hee would not approve his subjects trading thither, but that if any should offend in the contrary that hee would both punish them himself for the same and allow the King of Spaine to doe the like." To this suggestion it was responded, that though the King of England would be content with "the general article," he could not by any secret inducement "exclude himself from the Indian trade." "Only hee would be content not to mislike y^e the adventure into those parts should bee left to the perill which they should incur thereby, or otherwise that y^e King would accord to forbid his subjects to trade into any of y^e places which were now possessed by the King of Spaine in y^e Indies, so as the said King would not give interruption to our trading to any other places which were not presently under his obedience." The English commissioners however refused to engage their King to promise in "writing that hee would leave the adventurers to their own perill in such sort as had been before spoken of." It being proposed by the English commissioners to get over the difficulty with an article which should accord to English adventurers the right "to trade to all such places of the King of Spaine's dominions, where formerly they had v^sed to do," and be guarded with protestations that on the one part Spain did not thereby accord a licence, and on the other part England did not forego any of her claims to participate in the Indian trade, the Spanish commissioners "refused to yield thereto," alleging that they would not further declare themselves than they had formerly declared, and protesting vehemently that if the said matter should bee stood upon, they should bee forced to their grief "to breake off the treatye."—Twelfth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Thursday, 21 June 1604: When the discussion was open by Lord Cecil who, after a brief reference to the difficulty respecting the Indian question, "made answer by the King's commandment to those things which had been the day before proposed to his Majestie concerning the licensing of men to passe from thence to the service of the States, the which number (hee said) had not been raised by any assistance of the said authority, but only to y^e gathering of a few voluntaries together; nevertheless because the publike passing of them att that tyme from the Cittye gave scandal vnto the said commissioners that order was taking by the King to restrain the farther transportation of any numbers att that tyme from this place; but that the King must plainly lett them know that hee will not denye his subjects the liberty to imploy themselves abroad in all places in service, which were in amity with his Majestie, to the end to preserve the peace and quietness of his States, which abounded with people hee could not restrayne from looking to make their fortune by service abroad; and the King would therein shew no partiall affection to the States, but would give the like free liberty to the Archduke to draw any number of men from hence, which they should require for their service; and withall it was remembered vnto them that there was

"no reason to limit in that point more his Majesties subjects than those of France and other countreys, which did ordinarily goe to the service of the States."—Thirteenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Wednesday, 27 June 1604: Which was occupied with the consideration of the military assistance afforded by England to the United Provinces, and the reason why the King of England, if he sincerely desire to have friendly relations with the King of Spain and the Archduke, should withdraw his helligerent subjects from the Low Countries. In the discussion of this affair the Spanish commissioners first urged that the King of England should by public edict revoke "the regiments of his Majestie's subjects" and commanders which are in the service of the "States;" and then, on finding that the said prince would not entertain any such proposal, they conceded that "they would satisfy themselves with the forbearance of the said publique revocation, so as the King would promise that there should bee some other private meanes used to perswade them." i.e., the English volunteers in the Low Countries "to returne;" which was thought reasonable by their Lordships to be "promised to beee done, so far forth as the parties serving there could be induced thereto; and thereupon the article were so reformed, as should neither import any such publique revocation, nor to restrain the going of voluntaries thither."—Fourteenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Friday, 29 June 1604: The first and principal business being a review of the articles already agreed upon, an amendment of the general articles touching the King of England's tenure of the cautionary towns, and a consideration of measures to secure "British merchants against the dangers of y^e Inquisition in Spain." Resolutions have been made on these points, and "their Lordships being ready to depart for that tyme, the Spanish Ambassador acquainted their Lordships with a letter which hee had newly received from the Constable of Castile, whereby hee signified that touching the mocion which had been lately made by the King's Majestie for compounding the differences between the Kings of Spaine and France vpon y^e place of 30 yppon the 100, wherein his Majestie offered that himself would be a mediator, that although the King of Spaine had given the Constable no commission to treat thereupon, yet if the King's Majestie would be pleased to deale in that matter, that hee would undertake the King, his master, should ratify whatsoever should be concluded therein."—Fifteenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Monday, 2 July 1604: When an amendment having been made in the understanding with respect to the garrisons in the cautionary towns held by the King of England in the Low Countries, there ensued a long and warm discussion respecting the precise words of the articles for protecting British merchants in Spain from the action of the Inquisition. At first the Spanish commissioners were of opinion that the case would be adequately dealt with by a general article, declaring that our merchants "should not bee subject undeservedly to any molestations in their negotiations vntill they gave occasion of scandall;" whereas our commissioners objected to the weakness of "undeservedly," the vagueness of term "occasion of scandall," and the conspicuous absence of words clearly stating the religious character of the offences for which the merchants would be held responsible. The Spanish proposal to supplement the ambiguous language of a general article in the public treaty with precise terms to be employed in the secret articles of a private instrument was stoutly resisted by the King of England's commissioners, who maintained that the public treaty must be devoid of uncertainty on so uncertain a point. It was eventually agreed that the word "scandall" in the article under consideration should be preceded by the word "publique;" the Spanish commissioners at the same time stating "that they accounted not the use of private prayer by our merchants either in their ships or in their chambers to bee within y^e compass of publique scandall, but to bee matter of adherence to trade."—Sixteenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Wednesday, 4 July 1604: Further precautions being then taken by the English commissioners that the treaty should afford British merchants in Spain sufficient safeguard against the Inquisition. This matter having been arranged in all particulars, the conference passed to a reconsideration of the Indian question, when a controversy ensued which evoked from the Spanish commissioners an unreserved declaration of their master's pretensions in the New World, and from the English commissioners an equally explicit avowal of their master's repudiation of the same claims. In support of the Spanish Sovereign's alleged right to exclude all European adventures from the Western Indies, it was urged by the senator of Milan "that the King's Majesty, his master, was willing to grant libertye of 'entercourse' to English adventurers 'in his other dominions which were great, but for the Indies which hee had discovered with great charge and loss of men, it was reasonable that hee should restrain the same to his owne benefit to answer so great charge.'" As to the King of Spain's prescriptive title to the trade of the seas of the New World, "the Earle of Northampton answered that, touching the acquiring of a right in the sea by prescription it had been resolved by learned men in Spaine that their pretended prescription in this very point was not good, and shewed the same so resolved in Pasquiers, an advocate unto a King of Spaine, and alleged also Zueros to y^e same purpose. Moreover hee remembered the example of Charles the 5th, who in like controversy between him and the Portgall also lately denyed to acknowledge any such right; besides hee signified y^e if first discoveries might give occasion of any such prohibition that then the Queen's Majestie might have restrained their fishing in y^e Northerne Seas, which notwithstanding y^e Spaniards tooke y^e libertye to use; and lastly, that the freedom of entercourse to y^e Indies could not bee prejudiciall to them, but good for both States, our merchants demeaning themselves well in their trades. The Senator of Milan answered hereto that although Pasquiers was of that opinion, yet there were many others that vppen good ground had determined otherwise, and for the Emperour Charles, if he should so answer to the Portgall touching the East Indies that it might have been retored against himselfe in respect of his right to y^e West Indies, and also that the Pope had determined the controversies; and for the example of the discovery of the Northerne Seas, that they had interest in the discovery as well as wee. The Lord Cecil said that to bring y^e matter to conclusion, hee desired to bee satisfied from y^e said commissioners whether by their commission they were restrained, as they could not passe that article for common libertye of entercourse without any expresse prohibition of the Indies, which if it were so, then their Lordships must as plainly lett them know that the King's Majestie would not admit a condition so much prejudiciall to his honour. The Senator of Milan answered that by their commission they could not admit any article in other forme then to exclude any from the libertye of trade with the Indies; notwithstanding which, if their lordships could advise of any means how, the substance being reserved, the King's honour might be duly respected by the alteration of some other form of words then was proposed, they would willingly assent thereto, or otherwise they were sorry that much labour had been taken in vaine, seeing they could not effect y^e which was desired of all parties. Heretvpon after further consideration and much debating it was resolved at length by all parties that in the article conceived for generall entercourse these words should be inserted, 'In quibus ante bellum fuit commercium iuxta et secundum vsum et observantiam antiquorum fœderum;' and so the said article to passe for the kingdome appertaining to y^e Spanish King; whereby their lordships thought it fit rather to leave the matter to the libertye of interpretation of former treaties and observance and use thereof, for that instancing of expresse permission might give interruption to the treaty."—Seventeenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Thursday, 5 July 1604: When the discussion related chiefly to the desire expressed by the Archduke's commissioners for an article that should restore trade and intercourse between the ports of England and the ports of the Archduke's dominions; a discussion that resulted in the production and adoption of a general article, that was acceptable to the said commissioners.—Eighteenth Meeting of the Commissioners, on Friday, 6 July 1604: The principal business being the reconsideration of the terms of the general article framed and adopted on the previous day; which article was slightly amended for the greater satisfaction of the Archduke's commissioners, who "confessed their strength to bee so weak as sea that they were not able to provide for the freeing of their ports from the Impeachment which the Hollanders did give them, and that therefore they desired his 'his Majestie's assistance therein.'" The principal articles of the treaty having been then settled, a hope was expressed by the commissioners for the King of England that "y^e coming of the Constable of Castile Aremberge) who was also indisposed of the gout, after the performance whereof his Majesty departed from London."—Saturday, 25 August 1604: "The Constable and the rest of the Commissioners departed from London, the Constable being accompanied to Gravesend by the Earle of Southampton, and from thence to Dover by the Lord Wotton. The Count Aremberge and y^e rest imbarqued att the same tyme in the River."

(d.) A Collection of Papers touching the Public Expediture, endorsed "The Revenue of England and Ireland, anno 1659, and the charges of the Army and Navy," together with a note of the date (24 June 1673), when the accounts came into the copyist's possession, comprising—(1.) A table of "The Revenue of the Commonwealth, per mensem et per annum," dated 4 December 1654. (2.) The Monthly and Yearly Charge of a Troope of Horse (at the same time). (3.) An Account (of the same date) or near Estimate of y^e charge Annuall and Monethly which this present Government by a Protector, with a Sufficient Guard of horse, foote, and ships at sea will require, with contingent charges necessary. (4.) Schedule of the names, commanders, and strengths (in men and guns) of "The Forty Ships appointed to y^e Winter Guard on y^e Coasts of England and Ireland, dated 4 Oct. 1654. (5.) EARL OF ster, and for the levying the sum of 46,254l. 09s. 05½d. 'in arrear from the Compounders.'" This curious memoir of arguments and measures for preventing the growth of London mentions the several orders in council and proclamations of Elizabeth and James the First, forbidding builders and others to presume to raise new houses in and near London or Westminster without special authority to do so, and other notable decisions of law courts and parliamentary enactments for the same end, prior to the date of the sketch, which was penned in some year of the Long Parliament subsequent to death of Charles the First. "In the 8th year of 'the late King Charles,' says the writer 'one Thomas Ford erected a building for a Tennis Court, and by a writt out of the Exchequer the same was commanded to be demolished and pulled down, and so it was accordingly, as by the said writt and the return and execution thereof remainyng of Record in the Rolles may appeare 8 Car. Roll. 1667, which writt was signed T. C., viz., the Lord Coventry, then Lord Keeper, as wise and discret a lawyer as ever had the honour of that place. The Offences of New Buildings have been excepted out of all or most General Pardons that have passed the parliament neare this hundred yeares, as namely out of the pardons 27, 31, 35, 39 and 43 Eliz. That General Pardon of St. Jacob. ch. 35 in fine hath these words following, viz., 'And except out of this all Offences committed or done by any person or persons in New building, deviding of Tenements, taking of Inmates, new enclosures and other nuses within the city of London or Suburbs of the same, or within 3 miles sd. city contrary to the law, and his Majesty's Proclamations in that behalfe made.' . . . Lastly, 'that this present Parliament about August 1641 vpon full debate vpon a petition of one Newton for liberty to build in Lincolnes Inn Fields voted the same nuses, and staid them by order of the then House of Commons."

(2.) Draft of Petition of the King for new legislation to restrain the growth of London, which steadily enlarges through the presumption and selfishness of builders: headed "To the King's most Excellent Majesty: Proposals humbly offered for an Act of Parliament to be passed to suppress any more new buildings near and about the City of London and Westminster. And to raise a present supply of money for y^e Publique occasions out of those y^e have been erected;" and beginning "The mischiefs and inconveniences arising by the vast increase of new buildings neer and about the Cities of London and Westminster are soe notorious and evident, That both the City it selfe and alle the countreys in generall feel att this day the smart and vnhappy effects thereof. The Head swelling to too great a disproportion, that itt is att once both become unviably and destructive to it selfe, and hath alsoe left the other parts of the kingdome languishing and deprived of its due nutriment." In the opinion of the petitioners the king and parliament might easily and justly raise to his Majesty's use several hundred thousand, if not a million pounds, by laying an imposition on houses built in defiance of successive orders in council and proclamations against new building in and near London. (3.) Draft of another petition for the same purpose: setting forth the several particulars of the Orders in Council and Royal Proclamations against new buildings, and recommending that an imposition should be laid on new houses built within ten miles of London. Drawn in some year subsequent to 13 Charles II. A marginal note certifies that the copyist of the two last-named papers obtained them "from Sir W^m Bolton, Nov. 6, 1675," in the April of which year the Lord Keeper, Nottingham, had called the attention of parliament to "the excess of new buildings near London and Westminster; a growing mischief which nothing but a new law can put a stop to; a mischief which, for a long time, hath depopulated the country, and now begins to depopulate the city too, by leaving a great part of it uninhabited."

(f.) Copy of an attested official copy of the Indenture, dated 9 January 1622, between his Majesty "James, King of England, &c. of the one part, and Sir Allen Applesley, knt., Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and Sir Sampson Dorrell, knt., officers of the Admiraltie and Marine Affaires, and Surveyors Generall of all victuals for the shippes and marine affaires to bee provided and delivered for the victualling of the shippes and other vessells serving his Majesty, of the other partie;" whereby the said Sir Allen and Sir Applesley undertook to "victuall his Majesty's navy in Harborow and at Sea." The first article of the contract being "First everyman to hane for his allowance by the day one pound of

"biskett, one gallon of beere, two pounds of beefewith salt for Sundayes, Mondayes, Tuesdayes, and Thursdayes, or also instead of beefe for two of those dayes in every weeke one pound of bacon or porke salted, a pint of pence, with alle as heretofor hath bene used and accustomed, and for the Wednesdayes, Frydayes, and Saturdayes every man to have by the daye a quarter of one stockfish, halfe a quarter pennid of butter, and a quarter of a pound of cheese, saving for Fryday to have the quantity of fish, butter, and cheese but for one meale, or else in steed of stockfish such quantity of other fish or herrings as the tyme of yeare will afford;" it being stipulated by a subsequent article that the said Sir Allen Apsley and Sir Sampson Dorell "shall haue due allowance and payment for the victuallage of euerye man so victualled as aforesaid, that is to say, for euerye man serving in Harbrow seven pence halfe-penny by the day, and for euerye man serving at the seas eight pence by the day."

(g.) 30 March 1660.—Copy of "Instructions for Sir John Clotworthy, knt., and William Aston, Esq^{rs}, members of the General Convention of Ireland, now employed into England by the said convention. Dated at Dublin, the thirtieth day of March 1660; and signed by order, by Ma. Barry Clke., of the Generall Convention of Ireland." Comprising in all twenty-five articles of instruction.—Twentieth Article: "That "for the greater encouragement and security of the English plantations in the three provinces, Leinster, Munster, and Ulster, the transplantation of the Irish to the province of Connaught and County of Clare maybe good and effectual, excepting to such persons as shalbe thought fitt by the Chiefe Governour or Governours of Ireland for the tyme being to be dispensed with; and that for the performance of articles, and preservation of publique faith, all decrees granted to transplantable persons (except such as haue bene procured vpon fraudulent tytles) and dispositions of lands made vpon satisfaction of such decrees (except such decrees as passed not regularly and according to instructions) and all decrees made on the behalfe of such as haue manifested there constant good affection to the English interest of this nation, except such as haue bene fraudulently procured, may be ratified and made good to the persons to whome the same are assigned, their heires and assignes respectively, to the end they may be encouraged to settle themselves in the said prouince of Connaught and countrey of Clare, and to improve their respective interest."

Twenty-first Article: "That the natives and late inhabitants of the townes of Corke, Youghall, and Kinsale, of the Popish religion, who have not aided, assisted, or abetted the late rebellion, may be exempted from personall transplantation into Connaught or the countie of Clare. And that such decrees that haue been by them obtained vpon their claimes, excepting such as haue bene by fraud or consen, may be made good and effectual, and that the forfeited lands in the Baronies of Barrenmore and Muskearie, in the Countie of Corke, that were formerly set apart for their satisfaction, may be set out to them, according to the respective decrees by them obtained, liable notwithstanding to such quitt rentes, claimes, and other incumbrances as by law they are subject vnto."—"The delegates were also specially instructed to obtain confirmation of grant to the grantees, their heirs, &c. &c. of all lands, &c. granted and allotted to adventurers in pursuance of the Act of 17 Charles I. for the satisfaction of adventurers, and also of all lands assigned in Connaught to Henry Whaley, Esq., and Mr. Erasmus Smith, adventurers, in lieu of their former lots in the barony of Adedee, in the county of Downe; and to obtain parliamentary confirmation to grantees, their heirs, &c. &c. of all lands, &c. granted under the Act of Satisfaction, 26 Sept. 1653, to officers and soldiers of the army in Ireland in satisfaction of arrears of pay; and also to procure similar confirmation to grantees, their heirs, &c. of lands, &c. granted to the Lord Broghill, Sir Charles Coote, Colonel Michael Jones, deceased, and Dr. Henry Jones, as well as of all lands, &c. granted "to the children of Sir Charles Coote, the elder, deceased, as a speciall marke of fauor to them in memorie of the eminent and extraordinary meritts and services of the said deceased father, who was slaine in the service against the rebels in Ireland in the year 1642."

(h.) Five Papers relating to the Postal Arrangements between England and Holland, and the transmission of letters in England and Ireland.—(1.) Paper headed "Particulars relating to the Post Office for England, and for more speedy and safe conveyance of letters beyond seas humbly tendered and propounded by Henry Van-

"der Heyden, Post Master in Holland." (2.) Paper headed "Reasons further Humbly tendered to demonstrate the generall convenience and benefit of the said proposal to the Commonwealth of England." Dated 26th of December 1659, and signed H. Jacobs Vander Heyden. (3.) Plan of the new route for the transmission of letters from England to Holland and Germany, used before Vander Heyden's appointment as Post Master of Holland and Zealand, headed, "The Letters are now carried through the townes and places herevnder named, being all Popish and most in warre with England." (4.) Plan of Vander Heyden's new route for the transmission of letters from England to Holland, and to Germany, via Holland, headed "The Letters will be carried according to these proposalls of Vander Heyden through the townes and places herevnder named, being all Protestant, and in peace and amity with England." (5.) Plans of Post Roads from London to the different parts of England, and from Dublin to different parts of Ireland, with the names and salaries of provincial post-masters, and particulars relating to the charges of the postal service.

(j.) Table of Custom House receipts, headed "Customehouse, London, 1650. The Receipt of soe much of his Majestie's Customes, And new additional duty in the Port of London as are vnder y^e Commissioners' management in the yeare commencing at Michaelmas 1679, and terminating at Michaelmas 1680."

(9.) Introductory portion of a copy of Lord Clarendon's "Short View of the State and condicon of the Kingdome of Ireland from the yeare 1640 to this time: a vindication of his late Majestie of blessed memory, our Sovereign the King that now is, and their Majestie's supreme minister trusted by them for the conducting the affaires of that kingdome from the scandalis and calumnies cast on them by many Scurrilous Pamphlets sett forth in Latin by anonimus writers, and particularly against a Pamphlett lately published by the direction of the Titular Bishop of Fernes and composed by him." Single folded sheet of foolscap. Marginal note.—"This discourse was pen'd by y^e late Lord Chancellor Clarendon, no doubt by concert wth y^e Marquesse of Ormond whom he would excuse."

(10.) 1689 to 1706. Contemporary Record of "The several Transactions of Europe since the Yeare 1689." Two volumes folio, closing with the year 1706. By a writer who derived his information from the public gazettes and journals, whose news he condensed and put in a convenient form for purpose of reference.

(11.) 1690. Catalogue of the printed books and manuscripts in the Library of the College of Arms in London, made in May 1691. On 42 folio sheets of paper in thin vellum of cover. The fly-leaf inscribed "A Catalogue of the Books Printed, and MS. in the Heralds Office, May 1690."

(12.) June 1697. Fragment of a Diary of a Tour From England to Germany via Holland, headed "A short account, by way of journal, of what I observed most remarkable in my travels thro' some part of the Low Country, Flanders, and some part of Germany, which is on the Rhine." The memoir, under date 2 June 1697, opens with this entry,—"I went in a barge from the Temple stairs to Gravesend, where I lay at night, and the next day about noon I went on board the Navy yacht, Capt. Moses, Commander. Wee fell down y^e evening to the Gunfleet, where wee found the transport ships with their convoy at anchor." Giving notes on Terveer, Middleburgh, Dort, and Rotterdam, which towns he visited in the given order, the diarist describes his passage in a "trechtschuit" from Rotterdam to Delft, whose citizens "brew very good beer and are particularly famous for their porcellane or earthen ware, which they paint better than the Chinese, make more large and as beautiful every way, could they but make their small ware transparent, in which the Chinese have the advantage of them." From Delft the tourist goes to the Hague, where he paid especial attention to the modern mansion built by Maurice Prince of Orange, in which our "King Charles y^e 2nd was lodged and treated by the States in 1660, when he came from Breda to embark for England." Describing the chief place of fashionable promenade at the Hague, the writer says, "The Voorhout is a walk boarded like our Mall in St. James Park. On each side is a road with walks of high elmes, where all the quality of this place appear about six at night in their best coaches and equipages, as constantly as our ladys meet in Hyde Park. I have seen 100 coaches of a night. This Voorhout is in an open part of the town, where are many large houses, pleasantly situated on account of the noble trees, but

"more noble tour the fair sex make here every evening. In a house by this Voorhoutt did the Earl of Jersey our 2nd Plenip reside, and kept a table that answered his character and country. Behind the court is a square as big as St. James, but planted so thick with limes that the sun scarce ever peeps into it. It is called the Plain. This grove is much frequented by wild turtles, who every morning by their melancholy notes make the happy neighbourhood imagine they slept in some delightful shade and not in so popular a place." Celebrating the unusually gaily and brilliancy of the Hague during the negotiation of the treaty, which took its name from Ryswick, the king's house in the immediate vicinity of the capital, the tourist remarks,— "As this is the only town in all the Provinces for people of fashion, pleasure, and gallantry so no rich man ever lets his family come hither before he has left off all manner of business, and designs to turn graat Heer, live on the interest of his money, and allow his wife and children to follow the court fashions. In this place is every night an assembly at one house or other, where all the gay young sparks and ladies do meet to pass away the evening: Some play at bassett, ombre, pickett; others talk of the intrigues of the town, but most are taken up with carrying on their own. Any man well-clothed is easily admitted, especially if he has 50 ducats in his pockets, which he must have good luck to bring away with him; for here are many of the fair sex who keep a neat table and handsome equipage by what they win from strangers, who must play or not keep them company, at which being bred up to all sorts of play they are as sharp as our own Poultners. The Hague, tho' always filled with gay inhabitants never appeared in so splendid a figure as at the last Treaty of Peace at Reswick; for all the ambassadors, who assisted at it resided here, excepting the French who lived at Delf. One could hardly pass a street without meeting a Plenipo, with an equipage of 12 pages, 30 footmen, and perhaps with a couple of fellows with grim countenances called Hey Dukes. They every night came to the Voorhoutt, where everyone endeavoured to be the most admired for richness of liverie and number of footmen, and sometimes the French would come to this rendezvous of fine fellows with finer coats. I am as unwilling to leave describing some part or other of this sweet village, as I was to leave living there; but before I do, I am in gratitude obliged to make mention of the Earl of Pembroke, our first Plenipotentiary at this treaty, from whom I received beyond what I could have expected. He was adored by all men of letters for his universall learning, by every one for his sweet temper and easynesse of access, by all the inhabitants of this place whom he weekly paid. He always kept a constant table after the old English manners, in which, as in his noble equipage, he showed himself an English nobleman. He always made his household come to prayers, and by his example taught them to be good; he never suffered any drinking to excess in his house, and governed his family that tho' a numerous it seemed as a private one."—This tourist and writer was the famous banker Mr. Francis Child who two years later became Sir Francis Child, Lord Mayor of London. Like many another tourist he relinquished his purpose of recording the incidents of his excursion and the reflections occasioned by novel scenes. The discontinued diary occupies only a few pages of the folio notebook, that was provided for a larger narrative; the remaining sheets of the volume being left blank, with the exception of the two leaves, which exhibit a catalogue of Mr. (afterwards Sir) Francis Child's works of art that corresponds in its principal items with the more carefully drawn list in the diarist's handwriting, dated 9 March 1706.

(13.) 1697. Folio, in boards covered with vellum, containing a duplicate of Sir Francis Child's "Journal of my Travells through the United Provinces (1697)," differing in some unimportant particulars from the copy already noticed.—Also, in the same folio, another catalogue of the works of art described in the two already mentioned lists.

(14.) 9 March 1706. List of sixty-seven works of art the property of Sir Francis Child, Lord Mayor of London, 1699, inscribed at the top, "A Catalogue of my pictures in my house in Lincoln's Inn Fields taken March 9, 1706, and of my drawings in frames with glasses." The sixty-seven entries comprise the following:—1. The ceiling-piece in my staircase, of Rubens. 2. The Duke of Buckingham on horseback, of Rubens. 7. A Landscape of Claude Lorraine. 11. St. Peter converting in the prison, by Viviano and Carlo Morat. 17. Judith and Tamar, of Salvator Rosa. 21. A large landscape, of Gaspar Poussin. 28. Our Saviour with the woman of Canaan, of N. Poussin. 38. Mrs. Hughes, an ½-length, by Sir Peter Lilly. 39. Lady Suffolk, an ½-length, by Sir Peter Lilly. 40. Sir Peter Lilly, an ½-length, painted by himself. 49. A woman's head in croyons, by Sir Peter Lilly. 50. A young man's head in croyons, by Sir Peter Lilly. 51. A woman's head in profile, by Sir Peter Lilly.—On acquiring Osterley Park, in the earlier part of the eighteenth century, Sir Francis Child moved his collection of pictures from Lincoln's Inn Fields to his country seat.

(15.) 5 December 1730. Letter (holograph) from William Wake, Archbishop of Canterbury, to Dr. David Wilkins, the editor of the Novum Testamentum Copticum, Oxon, 1716, 4^o, and the Pentateuchus Copticus, 1731, 4^o, and author of the descriptive catalogue of the Lambeth Library. Inviting the man of letters to visit Lambeth whenever it may be most convenient for him to do so. "I shall be glad," writes the primate, "when you get clear of this part of your Coptic Works. I am sorry to hear that the Volume you are now about to publish will not bring us your Grammar and Dictionary, which would render your labours much more usefull to us ignorant people. However, as it is it will be very acceptable to your friends, and to none more than to my selfe, who truly am, Good Sir, your faithfull friend, W. Cant." The letter was undated, but Dr. Wilkins annotated it, "Received Dec. 5, 1730."

(16.) 1755.—Note-book of a tour in Austria, Southern France, and Italy. Unimportant.

(17.) 1757-1766.—Private account-book kept by Francis Child, Esq. of Osterley Park, Oxon, and Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, of charges and expenses for work done by carpenters, bricklayers, slaters, and painters at Osterley, and on various farms of the accountant's estate. The collection of Memoranda comprises an "Estimate of a chim piece for the House in Lincoln's Inn Fields for Francis Child, esq."

(18.) Treatise (in French), on the art of besieging fortified towns, entitled "Observations requises an siège d'une Ville," followed by an essay (also in French) on the manufacture and management of artillery, entitled "Traité de l'Artillerie, Des Fontes, Mesures, Alliages, Espreuves, Poid et Force des Pièces." Followed by translations of the same essays into English. Small folio, vellum cover. Penmanship of the eighteenth century.

(19.) A Coptic Liturgy, in Coptic character. Modern copy on paper of early eighteenth century. Vellum wrapper.

(20.) Folio copy (on vellum) of Terence's Comedies. A manuscript of the fifteenth century, with an illuminated first page.

(21.) Memoir (in French) of the wars between England and France during the reigns of Henry IV., Henry V., and Henry VI., entitled "Histoire d'Angleterre et de France; Les Guerres entre les Anglois et les Francois en France durant les regnes des Roys d'Angleterre, Henry 4, Henry 5, et Henry 6." A slovenly MS. of the fifteenth century, with erasures and corrections indicating that the manuscript was a rough draft.—The three hundred and sixty-eight pages numbered throughout. Small 4^o.

(22.) Copy (on vellum) of Virgil's Eclogues, Georgics, and Æneid. A finely executed MS. of the sixteenth century, with an illuminated initial letter at the beginning of each of the Georgics and books of the Æneid.

(25.) Memoir, in French, entitled "Histoire Royale ou de trois Roys. Liure tractant de la destruction de la plus part de Royaume de Cecille, et comment par la vaillance de trois Princes le dite Royaume fut delivré du pouvoir des Tures et Sarrasin cest assavoir fils des Rois de France, d'Engleterre, et d'Ecosse." With a frontispiece containing figures of the three princes in armour, and table of contents.

In conclusion, I should show myself unmindful of the obligations of courtesy, and insensible of gracious consideration, were I to close this report without acknowledging the Duchess Dowager of Cleveland's goodness in affording every facility for inspecting the manuscripts at Osterley Park.

2. Feb. 20. Commission for proroguing Parliament to the 23rd of April next. L. J., XI. 702. In extenso. (Parchment Collection.)

3. Feb. 21. Writ of Summons to Parliament to Charles Earl of Westmoreland.

4. March 22. Same to Walter Bishop of Oxford.

5. March 22. Same to Alexander Bishop of Salisbury.

6. March 28. Same to Gilbert Earl of Clare.

7. April 23. Commission for proroguing Parliament to the 18th of September next. L. J., XI. 704. In extenso. (Parchment Collection.)

8. July 18. Writ of Summons to Parliament to Anthony Earl of Kent.

9. Sept. 14. Same to Thomas Butler, of Moore Park, son and heir of James Duke of Ormonde. [Introduced 18 Sept. L. J., XII. 3.]

10. Sept. 17. Same to Robert Earl of Aylesbury.

11. Sept. 24. Draft of an Act for the encouragement of sowing and planting of hemp and flax. [Read 1st this day. The Bill, which is the same as that of 25 Oct. 1665 (vide Calendar), was passed, with amendments, by the Lords, and sent down to the Commons, who returned it with an alteration on the last day of the Session, when it dropped. L. J., XII. 5, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill. [Made in Committee Sept. 27, Oct. 5 and 19. These include a clause, prepared by Mr. Baron Turner, for restraining tenants from sowing hemp or flax without leave of the landlord.]

12. Sept. 24. Message from the Commons with a vote of thanks to the King for his management of the war.

[Agreed to by the Lords this day. L. J., XII. 5. In extenso.]

13. Sept. 26. Draft of an Act for the naturalizing of Isabella of Nassau, wife of the Right Hon. the Lord Arlington, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State. [Read 1st this day, and received the royal assent on the 18th of January following. L. J., XII. 6, etc. 18 Car. II. c. 2. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

14. Sept. 26. L. Morley's privilege.—Petition of Thomas Lord Morley and Mounteagle. He complains that Beaumont Hastings, who has often shown him great rancour, did, on Saturday night last, with Knevett Hastings, abuse and assault him in Holborn, threatening to run him through, and would have done so with his drawn sword had not a gentleman, then in company with petitioner, interfered. And afterwards they resisted the constable who came to serve the warrant for their arrest, and abused petitioner before the Justice. He prays that in vindication of his peerage and the privilege of Parliament the offenders may be sent for and dealt with as the House shall judge right. L. J., XII. 6. [The petition refers to annexed affidavits, which are not, however, to be found.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 14 Nov. Petition of Knevett and Beaumont Hastings. Petitioners stand committed to the Tower by order of the House for assaulting his Lordship and not behaving themselves so discreetly in their discourse as they ought to have done. They pray for pardon and enlargement. See L. J., XII. 73. [Beaumont Hastings said he knew not it was the L. Morley, and that he gave him no uncivil language. (MS. Minutes, 4 Oct.) This petition was read on the 14th Nov., but nothing was done on it because petitioners had done nothing in order to their peace with the L. Morley. See MS. Minutes.]

(b.) 12 Jan. 1666-7. Petition of same. They have been ten weeks prisoners in the Tower; they have already expressed their sorrow and offered security not to injure his Lordship's person or honour for the future; they pray, therefore, for enlargement from their chargeable imprisonment. L. J., XII. 73.

(d.) 16 Jan. 1666-7. Same of Knevett Hastings. L. J., XII. 76. In extenso.

15. Sept. 27. Draft of an Act for the making void of several conveyances and assurances made by Richard Hopton, Esquire, grandson and heir of Sir Richard Hopton, late of Canon Frome, in the County of Hereford, fraudulently procured by colour of a forged will of the said Sir Richard Hopton. [Read 1st this day, and rejected on 13th November, after hearing counsel and witnesses on behalf of Richard Hopton, the promoter of the Bill, and of Sir Edward Hopton and others, who opposed it. L. J., XII. 7, 27.]

Annexed:—

(1.) Printed case of Sir Edward Hopton, Walter, James, and Richard Hopton, Esquires, sons of Sir Richard Hopton, deceased.

16. Oct. 8. Draft of an Act for supply of part of the jointure of the Lady Elizabeth Noel. [Read 1st this day. Amended in Committee Oct. 11 and 15. Royal assent 18th of January following. L. J., XII. 10, &c., 18 Car. II. c. 3. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

17. Oct. 8. Amended Draft of an Act (18-19 Car. II. c. 11.) for redress of inconveniences by want of proof of the deceases of persons beyond the seas or absenting themselves, upon whose lives estates do depend. [Read 1st this day. Amended in Committee, 11 Oct. and 21, 23 Jan. 1666-7. Royal assent, 8 Feb. L. J., XII. 10, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amended copy of proceeding.

18. Oct. 12. Draft of an Act for the naturalizing of Esther Le Lou, wife of the Right Hon. Denzell, Lord Holles. [Read 1st this day; Royal assent on 8th Feb. following. L. J., XII. 11, etc. 19 Car. II. c. 1 in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill [made in Committee 17 Oct.]

19. Oct. 19. L. Crewe's Privilege.—Paper noted "A copy of part of Mr. Parkhurst's letter of the 13th of October 1666, respecting the ill-use of Wm. Sparrier, a servant of Lord Crewe, by Arthur Jakeman and another at Basoury Fair. L. J., XII. 14.

Annexed:—

(a.) 9 Nov. Petition of Francis Dodford. Is now a prisoner in the Fleet for breach of privilege in striking Lord Crewe's servant. Is heartily sorry for his offence and prays for release. L. J., XII. 25.

(b.) 12 Nov. Similar petition of Arthur Jackeman. L. J., XII. 27.

20. Oct. 22. Draft of an Act for the illegitimation of the children of the Lady Anne Roos. [Read 1st this day; received the royal assent 8th Feb. following. L. J., XII. 15, &c. 19 Car. II. cap. 3. in List of Private Acts, 8vo. See Com. Book, p. 112, &c. for evidence. See also 135 and 283.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to Bill. See Com. Book, 24 Nov. (b.) Proviso against the Duke of Buckingham's claim to the title of Lord Roos being prejudiced by this Bill. Added in Committee 19 Dec. 1666.

(d.) Two printed copies of the Act 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. declaring the children of Anne, Lady Parr, bastards.

21. Oct. 22. Irish Cattle Bill.—Petition of the Committee of Adventurers for land in Ireland, formerly sitting at Grocer's Hall. Petitioners are entrusted with the interests of those who upon credit of an Act of Parliament of the late King, advanced money for reducing the Irish to their due obedience; for which service many of them have received no satisfaction, while others have by a late Act been obliged to retrench one-third of their lands. The object of the Adventurers was to establish an English interest in Ireland and maintain trade between the two countries. In this they have been greatly frustrated by the late unhappy wars, and if now the importation of Irish cattle into England, which is their chief trade, should be forbidde, thousands will be ruined. They pray that the importation of cattle may be permitted, at least while the war with Holland and France continues. [Read this day before the Committee of the whole House on the Irish Cattle Bill (18 & 19 Car. II. c. 2.) which was brought from the Commons on 15th October. L. J., XII. 15. See MS. Minutes of date.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Engrossed provisos added to the Bill by the Lords, (1) that as it has been proposed that 20,000 cattle should be delivered in Ireland for the relief of the poor inhabitants of the City of London who are distressed by the late fire, such cattle may be received and killed in Ireland before 25 Dec. 1667, at the ports of Dublin, Youghal, Carrickfergus, and Kinsale, barrelled up and shipped for London, and there distributed to such of the poor inhabitants as the Lord Mayor and Aldermen shall think fit, but that no part shall be exposed for sale; and (2) that there should be no prohibition of the importation of horses, mares, or geldings. [These provisos were reported 19th Nov., and agreed to by the House after amendment on the 21st. L. J., XII. 30, 31, 32, and MS. Minutes of 21 Nov.]

(b.) 17 Dec. Message from the Commons disagreeing to some of the Lords' amendments, including the above proviso (a.) See L. J., XII. 49, C. J., VIII. 654. [This Bill was debated in Committee of the whole House on the 22 Oct. and following days. On the 24th "diverse of the" lords being gone out of the House the House "was resumed." On the 25th the word "nuisance" is debated, and Chief Justice Bridgman gives a definition of it. On the 26th the words "detriment and mischief" are substituted for "nuisance." The D. of Bucks quarrels with E. Ossory, and also with L. Arlington for words spoken this day in the House by the latter. (See also 27). On the 8th Nov. the clause as to the seizure of cattle being imported is referred to a sub-committee, reported by them, and recommitted to them on the 9th, and reported and agreed to on the 10th, and a proviso concerning Scotland negatived. On the 19th there was a second quarrel between D. Bucks and E. Ossory, his to debate on the above proviso (a), the latter having said that somewhat spoken by the D. Bucks was not true. The Bill was passed on the 23rd by 63 votes to 47. See MS. Minutes.]

22. Oct. 24. E. Cleveland's Bill.—Petition of John, Earl of Crawford and Lyndsey, and Margaret, Lady Belhaven. Pray to be heard against the Earl of Cleveland's Bill, by which their interest in a debt due from one Blackwall to the King will be defeated. L. J., XII. 17.

Annexed:—

(a.) 26 Oct. Similar petition of John Sparrow, praying to be heard against the Bill. L. J., XII. 18.

(b.) Printed statement of the Earl of Cleveland in answer to the above petitions.

(c.) Printed answer of the Earl of Crawford and Lyndsey and Lady Belhaven to preceding.

(d.) Printed statement for the Earl of Cleveland.

(e.) Another printed statement for the Earl of Cleveland.

(f.) Printed case of the Earl of Cleveland.

(g.) Printed case of the Earl of Crawford and Lady Belhaven.

(h.) 8 Nov. Petition of Wm. Willoughby, Esq. Prays to be heard against the Bill on behalf of Francis, Lord Willoughby of Parham, who is now beyond the seas, and has entrusted petitioner with the care of his estate. L. J., XII. 24. [See also Com. Book, pp. 104, et seq.]

23. Oct. 29. Message from the Commons, with a vote of that House, declaring illegal the patent of the Canary Company. L. J., XII. 20. In extenso.

24. Oct. 30. Enclosures Bill.—Draft of an Act for confirming of enclosures made by decrees in Courts of Equity. The Bill enacts that all enclosures of commonable land, wastes, heaths, fen-grounds, and marshes, which have been enclosed by decrees made in the Chancery, Exchequer Chamber, or Ducky Court within the last sixty years, and which have been held by the owners without suit or interruption for twenty years, should be fully ratified, confirmed, and established to be enjoyed by the respective owners, their heirs, and assigns for ever [Read 1st this day, but dropped after commitment. L. J., XII. 20, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 14 Nov. List of Committee on the Bill. L. J., XII. 28.

25. Oct. 30. Vote of the House of Commons for prohibiting the importing of French manufactures, &c., with an addition made by the Lords. L. J., XII. 20. In extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 30 Oct. Draft of addition made by the Lords.

26. Oct. 30. Resolutions to request the King to issue a proclamation for the banishment of priests and Jesuits, and the disarming of recusants. L. J., XII. 21. In extenso.

27. Oct. 31. Petition of George, Duke of Buckingham, praying to be restored to the favour of the House, and to be discharged from restraint. L. J., XII. 22. In extenso. See also 21.

Annexed:—

(a.) 31 Oct. Petition of Thomas, Lord Butler of Moore Park, Earl of Ossory. Is heartily sorry to have displeased the House by his late quarrel with the Duke of Buckingham, and submits willingly to confinement in the Tower; but prays to be restored to liberty and favour. L. J., XII. 22. In extenso.*

28. Oct. 31. Commission to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, to supply the place of the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords. Parchment Collection. [This Commission is not mentioned in the Journals.]

29. Nov. 12. Petition of Thomas, Earl of Cleveland. Complains that there is a suit depending in the Court of Exchequer, wherein the Attorney-General, at the relation of John Jeffes, is plaintiff against certain assignees and tenants of petitioner in the manors of Stepney and Hackney, to his great damage, and against the privilege of Parliament. Prays that proceedings may be stayed, and that Jeffes and his solicitor may be sent for to answer for their breach of privilege. L. J., XII. 26.

30. Nov. 20. Petition of Sir John Ayton, Knight, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, John Browne, Esquire, Clerk of the Parliaments, and Humphrey Leigh, Sergeant-at-Arme attending the House. Petitioners pray for relief against Rowland Gwinn, Roderick Gwinn, Samuel Pritchard and others, who were ordered to be arrested on the 11th of February 1664-5 (upon complaint of Lord Vaughan), and who refuse to pay petitioners

* The Earl of Arlington, in a letter to the Duke of Ormond (20 Oct. 1666) describing the quarrel here referred to, writes: "My Lord Chancellor sends me back a petition I had presented for my Lord of Ossory, with his approbation of it, to be framed when the Duke shall be delivered, advising me to move his Royal Highness to offer it with his hand, which I shall endeavour to obtain of him." Miscell. Ant. ed., 1702, pp. 424, et seq.

HOUSE OF LORDS. their accustomed fees, and threaten to bring actions against those who executed the order. L. J., XII. 27.

Calendar. Annexed:— 1666.

- (a.) Copy of preceding.
- (b.) Copy of order referred to in preceding, 11 Feb. 1664-5.
- (c.) Copy of warrant for arrest of Rowland Gwynn and others, 11 Feb. 1664-5.
- (d.) Statement of William Barrington, that he demanded the fees due from Roderick Gwynn, who answered that he knew of no fees due, and that they who set them at work must pay them their wages. L. J., XII. 27.
- (e.) Affidavit of same, that Samuel Pritchard declared to deponent that he had an action against the serjeant-at-arms and others, for detaining him prisoner, and that he would make it a precedent for others.
- (f.) Account of the fees due from Rowland Gwynn, and others, to the officers of the House, amounting to 23*li*. 19*s*.
- (g.) Copy of preceding.
- (h.) Copy of petition of Thomas Trulocke and Robert Udale to the Lord Chancellor. Samuel Pritchard, who is in petitioners' custody, refuses to give security for his appearance before their Lordships, or to pay any fees, and threatens to commence actions against petitioners and others for detaining him. They pray that he may not be discharged until he has paid his fees.
- (i.) Copy of order of the Lord Chancellor committing Samuel Pritchard to the Fleet until he pays the fees due from him, and gives security for his appearance the first day of the next session of Parliament. 27 March 1665.
- (k.) Copy of order committing Sir Henry Shirley to the Fleet for not paying the fees due to the officers of the House. 25 June 1628.
- (l.) Copy of order committing Edward Lloyd, and others, to the custody of the Serjeant-at-arms, unless they pay the fees due to the officers of the House. 9 May 1664. [This and the preceding paper were no doubt used as precedents.]
- (m.) 6 Dec. Petition of Thomas Trulocke and William Barrington, messengers to the House. In pursuance of the order of the House petitioners took into custody Samuel Pritchard and Roderick Gwynn, who however made their escape. Petitioners pray for further directions, that the offenders and their abettors may be brought to condign punishment. L. J., XII. 40.
- (n.) Statement of Trulocke that when he was searching Samuel Pritchard's chamber Thomas Pritchard desired to see the warrant, and reading it, said it was false and untrue. [Appended to (m).]
- (o.) Statement of Barrington, that in company with Taylor, a constable, he apprehended Samuel Pritchard and Roderick Gwynn, who desired to see his warrant, and whilst Pritchard was reading it Gwynn ran away, and whilst deponent was pursuing him Pritchard also escaped. [Appended to (m).]
- (p.) 17 Dec. Petition of Thomas Pritchard, of Gray's Inn. The House has granted an order for taking him into custody for speaking contemptuously of the order of the House for the arrest of Samuel Pritchard and Roderick Gwynne. But he positively denies the charge, has voluntarily rendered himself into custody, and prays for liberty to make his innocence appear. L. J., XII. 50.

31. Nov. 16. Message from the Commons with a vote to thank the King for his proclamation against Papists. L. J., XII. 29.

32. Nov. 17. Petition of Ralph Herry, of Stevenon, in the county of Bedford, yeoman, for relief against a decree in Chancery, dispossessing him of certain copyhold lands purchased by him from Richard Conquest, of Houghton Conquest. L. J., XII. 31.

Annexed:—

- (a.) 17 Nov. Similar petition of William White, citizen and haberdasher, of London, who also purchased lands from Richard Conquest, and is put out of possession by the decree in Chancery.
- (b.) 17 Nov. Draft order referring the petition of Ralph Herry to the Lord Chancellor. L. J., XII. 31. In extenso.

33. Nov. 22. L. Hatton's Privilege.—Application for an order for release of Wm. Jones, Lord Hatton's servant, arrested at the suit of George Wynn, contrary to privilege. L. J., XII. 33.

Annexed:—

- (a.) 5 Dec. Petition of Samuel Gardiner and William Salisbury, officers belonging to the Sheriff of London. Being employed by George Wynn, they arrested Wm. Jones, but released him on finding he had a protection from Lord Hatton. For this, Wynn threatens to amerce the Sheriff 500*l*., which will fall upon petitioners, whilst they have been committed to the Fleet by order of the House. They pray for pardon for their great crime, for which they are heartily sorry, and for release from their imprisonment. L. J., XII. 40.

34. Nov. 23. Draft of an Act for uniting of churches and raising of maintenance for ministers in the town of Southampton. Of the five churches in the town, one only has for about 20 years past been supplied with a conformable minister, whereby persons of giddy principles frequent private meetings and conventicles. The want of preachers is principally caused by the smallness of the livings, none of which exceed 30*l*. in yearly value, some not 15*l*., some not 10*l*. The Bill therefore proposes to unite the parishes of All Saints, or All Hallows, and of St. Michael's into one, and also the parishes of St. John, St. Lawrence, and Holy Rhoddes into another parish; and if within three months after the publication of this Act the customary rates and tithes cannot be discovered, then such rates shall be imposed upon all the houses, &c. within these parishes as will give to each minister a clear yearly income of 80*l*. Commissioners are appointed for putting the powers of the Act into execution, &c. [This Bill, after being amended in Committee on Dec. 4 and 18, passed the Lords, but was rejected by the Commons as laying a charge upon the people. L. J., XII. 34, &c. C. J., VIII. 683.]

35. Nov. 26. Coinage Bill.—Petition of Dame Barbara Villiers, widow. She has a grant from the King for some years to come of two pence per pound Troy for all silver moneys coined, which by an Act now before Parliament for disposing of the profits of the Mint, and giving recompense to His Majesty, will be taken from her unless she is provided for by the Act. She prays that the annexed proviso, giving her recompense out of the new customs, may be inserted therein. L. J., XII. 35. See also Com. Book, pp. 120. &c., and Calendar of State Papers (Domestic) 14 May 1667.

Annexed:—

- (a.) 26 Nov. Proposed proviso referred to in preceding. Amended as in § 12 of Act.

(b.) 28 Nov. Petition of Sir William Parkhurst, knight, Warden of His Majesty's Mint. For divers hundred years past the Wardens of the Mint have received the profits arising by the coinage of money, and have paid out and accounted for the same, and for about forty-four years petitioner has accordingly received and issued out these profits. But in the Bill for encouraging of coinage, now before Parliament, there is a clause that certain moneys to be issued out of the Exchequer shall not be issued out but by order of the Lord Treasurer, Under-Treasurer, or Commissioners to the Master or Worker of the Mint, and mentioning that they are for the use and service of the Mint to be issued out according to the manner and course of the said Mint or to that effect. The money for the use and service of the Mint has always been paid to the Warden, and he has been accountable for it, and so ought to be, and not the Master Worker, as appears by all former indentures for the regulation of the Mint. Petitioner prays that the clause may be altered, so that the right of the Warden of the Mint may be preserved. L. J., XII. 37. [By the Act for encouraging of coinage, 18-19 Car. II. c. 5, the fees for coining were taken away, and certain duties were imposed on imported wine, cider, brandy, &c., the proceeds of which were to be applied to defraying the expenses of the Mint.]

- (c.) Jan. 4, 1666-7. Message from the Commons respecting amendments in the Coinage Bill. (Two papers.) L. J., XII. 66.

36. Nov. 26. Draft of an Act for enabling Sir Richard Franklyn, knight and baronet, to sell some part of the lands settled upon the marriage of Dame Elinora his now wife, in consideration of other lands of equal or more value to be settled in lieu thereof. Read 1st, 2^d, and committed: no further proceeding. L. J., XII. 35.]

House of Lords.
Calendar.
1666.

Annexed:—

(a.) 28 Nov. List of Committee on the Bill. L. J., XII. 37.

37. Nov. 26. Letter from the Marchioness of Worcester to Sir John Lenthall at the Marshalsea, desiring the release of her servant Wm. Band, otherwise she must appeal to the House of Peers, and claim privilege. [Written below her letter is an answer from Sir John Lenthall, desiring her to appeal to the Lords, whose orders, if they please to discharge her servant, he will humbly obey.] See L. J., XII. 36.

38. Nov. 26. Writ of Summons to Parliament to John, Bishop of Rochester.

39. Nov. 27. Commission to Lord Roberts, Lord Privy Seal, to supply the place of the Lord Chancellor in his absence from the House of Lords. L. J., XII. 36. Purment Collection.

40. Nov. 28. Draft of an Act to enable Leicester Grosvenor and his trustees to sell certain lands for payment of debts. [Read 1st this day, amended in Committee Dec. 6; received the Royal assent on 8th of February following. L. J., XII. 37, &c. 19 Car. II. c. 13. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

41. Nov. 28. L. Rockingham's Privilege. Petition of George Wake, Doctor of Laws. Is heartily sorry for his offence in issuing out a process to Lord Rockingham (to make personal appearance before him in the Ecclesiastical Court in a suit of the Churchwardens of Cotingham, Northamptonshire, against Lord Watson), and prays to be discharged. L. J., XII. 37.

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 Oct. Application that Dr. Wake and others may be taken into custody.

(b.) 26 Nov. Statement on behalf of Dr. Wake.

42. Dec. 3. Lady Huntingdon's Privilege.—Petition of Lucy, Countess Dowager of Huntingdon. George Blagrave has commenced a suit at law and brought an action of ejectment against Job Brooks, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, petitioner's bailiff and tenant, denying her privilege. She prays that Blagrave and Thos. Benskin, his attorney, may be called before the House, and such right be done her as shall be thought fit. L. J., XII. 39.

Annexed:—

(a.) 2 Jan. 1666-7. Petition of George Blagrave, parish clerk, and Thomas Benskin, his attorney. They are in custody for arresting Job Brooks, which they did altogether in ignorance that he was in any way a servant of the Countess. They pray to be released from their chargeable restraint. L. J., XII. 59.

43. Dec. 5. L. Abergavenny's Bill.—Draft of an Act for confirming, explaining, and enlarging An Act intituled An Act to enable John, Lord Abergavenny, son and heir of Henry, late Lord Abergavenny, to sell certain lands for payment of his debts, and preferment of his brother and sisters, and for ascertaining the dower of Elizabeth, Lady Dowager Abergavenny. [Read 1st this day; royal assent on 8th of February following. 19 Car. II. c. 2. in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 40, &c., Com. Book, p. 128.]

Annexed:—

(a.) (b.) Amendments to preceding.

(c.) 10 Dec. Petition of Mary Nevill, widow and relict of George Nevill, Esquire, deceased, for and on behalf of George Nevill, Esquire, an infant, her son. Prays that the Bill for the sale of some of the entailed lands belonging to the barony of Abergavenny may not pass, to the dishonour of her son, now seven years old, who is next heir in tail after the present Lord Abergavenny, an infant not two years old. L. J., XII. 43.

(d.) 3 Jan. 1666-7. Petition of Robert Loggin, of Wincoot, in the parish of Clifford Chambers, in the County of Gloucester. [Addressed to the Committee for the Lady Abergavenny's Bill.] By a mere mistake in Lord Abergavenny's Act certain lands, bought by petitioner, were wrongly described, and now that John Lord Abergavenny and George Lord Abergavenny are both dead, the heirs may pretend title to these lands. A Bill is before the House which, amongst other greater matters, proposes to amend this mistake. Petitioner prays that the Bill may pass. [Com. Book, p. 141.]

(e.) 3 Jan. 1666-7. Petition of the Hon. Mrs. Frances Nevill. Provision was to have been made for her in Lord Abergavenny's Bill, but some stop has been made in the proceedings, which if continued will make her irrecoverably miserable, as she has not otherwise the least hope of any subsistence in the future. She prays that such provision may be made for her as was intended by George, late Lord Abergavenny. [Com. Book, p. 141.]

44. Dec. 10. Brunsell's Privilege. Petition of Henry Brunsell, Clerk and prebendary of Ely. Petitioner, having been elected by the Dean and Chapter of Ely to serve as their proctor in Convocation, was on the 28th of November last, whilst attending his duty, arrested contrary to privilege, by Thomas Ashe. Prays that Ashe may be sent for to answer for his contempt and breach of privilege. L. J., XII. 43.

(b.) 14 Nov. 1667. Petition of same. On the 10th of December last Thomas Ashe was ordered to attend and answer for arresting petitioner, a member of Convocation, during the sitting thereof, contrary to privilege, but petitioner was unable, though he endeavoured to do so, to serve the order upon Ashe before the prorogation. He therefore prays that the order may be renewed. L. J., XII. 136.

(c.) Affidavit in support of preceding.

(d.) 21 Feb. 1669-70. Petition of same similar to his first petition above. L. J., XII. 292.

45. 11 Dec. Petition of Griffith Wynne, alias Bodvell, and Thomas Bodvell, infants. A Bill is now before the House to make void the last will of John Bodvell, by which his estate in the counties of Carnarvon and Anglesey is devised, after payment of debts and legacies, for the benefit of petitioners and their heirs. The case has been twice heard in Chancery; the last time upon a direction from the House, but the plaintiffs were dismissed, and no relief given against the will. Petitioners therefore pray to be heard in support of the will. L. J., XII. 43. [A bill for settling the estate of John Bodvell, Esq^r, deceased, received the royal assent on the 18th of January following. 18 Car. II. c. 4. in List of Private Acts, 8vo., and L. J. XII. 81, &c. For the final proceedings in Chancery, referred to in the petition, see "Roberts v. Wynn." Reports in Chancery, ed 1693, vol. i. p. 236, seq.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Case of Robert Roberts, Esq^r, and Sarah, his wife, sole daughter and heir of John Bodvell, Esq^r, deceased, and Charles Bodvell Roberts, second son of the said Robert and Sarah. They complain of the conduct of Thomas Wynn, in inducing John Bodvell, when weak and not in his right mind, to make a will to the prejudice of his daughter Sarah Roberts and her son Charles Bodvell Roberts, contrary to a previous will made in consequence of a settlement made by Lord Roberts upon his son. Upon a hearing in Chancery it was declared that, in spite of the evidence of fraud, there was no precedent for relief. Application was then made by petition to the Lords in Parliament, who, after examining the case, referred it back to the Lord Chancellor to make a decree in Chancery; but on a re-hearing it was decided that their Lordships' direction did not empower the Court to make a decree, there being no precedent for so doing.

(b.) The case of Griffith Wynn, an infant, son and heir apparent of Thos. Wynn, Esq^r, and of Thomas Bodvile, an infant, and of the said Thomas Wynn, the father (presented to the House of Commons). John Bodvile, of Bodvile, in the County of Carnarvon, on his marriage with Anne, daughter of Sir William Russell, settled his estate and the reversion of his wife's jointure upon his own right heirs, with certain powers of charging the estate if he had only daughters. He had issue two daughters only, Elizabeth and Sarah, of whom Elizabeth died in 1661. There were great differences between John Bodvile and his wife; he was a colonel in the King's service, and his wife procured a warrant to have him tried by a High Court of Justice, which Bodvile escaped by notice from Thomas Wynn. In 1650, under a decree for alimony, Mrs. Bodvile got her husband's estate put into the Bill of Sale, notwithstanding his composition, and obtained a sequestration of it, and in 1657 married her daughter Sarah to Mr. Roberts without her husband's consent. In 1662 Bodvile was arrested by his wife for alimony, and threats were used to induce him to settle his estate on Mr. Roberts and his wife and children. In the same year

Bodvile was arrested by his creditors, but released on bail being given by Wynn, and afterwards Mrs. Bodvile having procured an order in Chancery for her husband's commitment to the Fleet, he removed to Islington, and there lived under a feigned name, and being seriously ill made his will, by which he left 5,000*l.* to his daughter Sarah upon certain conditions, and the residue of his estate to Griffith Wynn and Thomas Bodvile equally. Bodvile died on the 28th March 1663, whereupon Mrs. Bodvile and Mr. Roberts entered upon and still retain his whole estate. In April 1663 they commenced proceedings in Chancery against the trustees to set aside the will on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. The Court decided that they could give no relief, but allowed the plaintiffs to seek relief elsewhere; upon which they applied to the House of Lords, who referred the case back to the Lord Chancellor to make a decree according to equity, though there were no precedents for so doing; but in July 1666, after a very full hearing the Court decided that the plaintiffs were not relievable. The charges of fraud cannot be substantiated; but ever since Bodvile's death the trustees have been kept out of the estate, and debts are unpaid, while the trustees cannot sue at law by reason of Mr. Bodvile's privilege. C. J., VIII. 640, &c.

(c.) Reasons against the receiving of any petition in either House of Parliament against Mr. Bodvile's will.

46. 11 Dec. Petition of His Majesty's sixteen sergeants-at-arms, attending in their turns upon the House of Peers. The House in 1662 granted petitioners 160*l.* for their attendance that session, and 40*l.* to the Knight Marshal's men, which has been paid to the Marshal's men every session since, while petitioners have for four sessions past been unrewarded. They pray that they may receive the rewards of the House for the time past and to come in as punctual and speedy manner as the Knight Marshal's men. L. J., XII. 44. See also 291 and 338.

Annexed:—

(a.) Copy of order, fixing the remuneration of petitioners, of 14 April 1662, referred to in above petition.

(b.) Petition of the Under Marshals belonging to His Majesty's Household. They have constantly attended at the door for prevention of disorders both at Westminster and Oxford during the last two Sessions without any consideration. They are in great want of money and pray the House to order them as before 40*l.* for each session.

47. Dec. 11. Petition of Richard Wilson. Petitioner, as a servant and messenger, has attended the House ever since the Restoration; but he has been arrested out of mere malice, and from design to obstruct him in his attendance, by Valentine Knight and Thomas Potter upon two actions in the Marshalsea Court. He prays the House to maintain its privileges.

Annexed:—

(a.) Affidavit in support of preceding.

48. Dec. 12. Draft of an Act for the improvement of the forest of Delamere. The forest has in the late unhappy troubles been laid waste, and the deer and beasts of the forest destroyed, and the wood, timber, pales, and fences cut, pulled down, and consumed, so that the forest is unfit to be stored with deer. The King, desiring to improve his demesne lands in the forest, has given order for the disafforesting thereof, and has by letters patent farmed the lands for a certain time under a certain rent, but several persons claim rights of common, and unless reasonable satisfaction be first given to them, neither the King nor his farmers can make any considerable improvement. The Bill provides for the appointment of Commissioners to determine the bounds of the forest, to allot such portions as they shall think fit to the King and his farmers to be enclosed, improved, and enjoyed free from all claims of right of common, and further, either to divide the residue amongst the commoners in such proportions as shall be thought fit, or to leave it to be enjoyed in common. The Bill further gives power to the Commissioners to punish persons who may destroy the hedges or ditches of the proposed enclosures, to settle disputes, &c. [Read 1st this day, but not further proceeded with. L. J., XII. 45].

49. Dec. 12. Engrossment of an Act for improving the lead mines in the County Palatine of Durham, granted to Humfrey Wharton, Esquire, for three lives. Humfrey Wharton has a grant for life from the Bishop of Durham of lead mines in the parishes of Stanhope and Wolsingham, under the ancient rent of the Lot ore (which is the ninth part of the lead ore gotten in the mines) and has expended great sums upon the workings, which will in all likelihood be a growing charge for the next twenty years, without which the money already expended will be to no purpose, and the mines will be left unwon; therefore for the advance of the lead trade, and the increase of the bishopric of Durham, the Bill enacts that Humfrey Wharton shall hold the mines for three lives upon payment of the said ninth part of the ore; and that the Bishop shall be enabled for ever thereafter to grant the mines for three lives. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day: read 1st, 2^d, and committed, but dropped in Committee. L. J., XII. 45, &c. A similar Bill received the royal assent the following year, 19 Car. II. c. 15 in List of Private Acts, Bro.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Considerations offered by the Dean of Durham and others to the Committee on the Bill, deprecating the passing of the Bill, as bringing a large fine to the present Bishop to the injury of his successor, as containing no security that Wharton will lay out the money as assumed in the Bill, and as based on statements that cannot be proved. [Considered in Committee 15 Jan. 1666-7.]

50. Dec. 12. Roos Peerage.—Petition of George, Duke of Bucks, Baron Ross, of Rosse, Hamiak, Tresbut and Belvoire, &c., to the King. Claims the title of Lord Ross [Roos], to which John Manners, eldest son of the Earl of Rutland, makes pretence, and prays the King to refer the case to the House of Peers. Noted with the King's reference accordingly. L. J., XII. 45. In extenso. See also MS. Min., 22 and 31 Jan. and 1 Feb.

Annexed:—

(a.) 1 Feb. 1666-7. Draft report from the House of Peers to His Majesty, recommending that the controversy between D. Bucks and E. Rutland concerning the barony of Roos should be composed similarly to the decision of King James in the case of Lord Cecil. L. J., XII. 98. In extenso.

(b.) 1 Feb. 1666-7. Parchment copy of preceding.

51. Dec. 12. D. Bucks Privilege.—Petition of George Mangie, now prisoner in the King's Bench, to the Duke of Buckingham. Has been arrested, though he produced his protection as servant to the Duke. Prays that he may be restored to liberty. L. J., XII. 45.

Annexed:—

(a.) List of persons who would not allow Mangie's protection.

(b.) 7 Nov. 1667. List of persons who arrested Captain Mangie at Oxford, with application to have them sent for. L. J., XII. 131.

(c.) 7 Nov. 1667. Application to the Duke of Buckingham to have the above persons committed.

(d.) 11 Nov. 1667. Letter from William Wright, Mayor of Oxford, and others, to the Earl of Berks, Lord High Steward of Oxford, entreating him to assist in procuring the release of Mr. Carter and Mr. Burnham, late bailiffs, and their officers, who are a second time summoned to appear before the House of Lords for detaining in prison one Mangy, after he produced a protection from the Duke of Buckingham, though they had order to detain him both from the Lord Treasurer and also from the King and the Council, it being His Majesty's concern on which he was arrested. See L. J., XII. 131.

(e.) 23 Nov. 1667. Petition of Sir John Lenthall, Knight, Marshal of the King's Bench. On the 21st inst. the House ordered the discharge of George Mangy, a servant of the Duke of Buckingham. Mangy was committed to petitioner's custody by the Court of King's Bench in November 1665, and has since been charged with actions for several great sums of money, which petitioner will be liable to pay unless Mangy is discharged according to the strict rules of law. Petitioner prays for some further order for his indemnity. [The House this day ordered a writ of Habeas Corpus cum causa to be awarded, and directed Sir J. Lenthall to bring Mangy to the Bar on the 29th inst. L. J., XII. 146.]

(f.) List of sums with which Mangy stands charged since his commitment. [Appended to (e).]

(g.) Precedents of prisoners carried up to the House of Lords by Habeas Corpus. [Appended to (e).]

(h.) Affidavit of Richard Wilson that he went to the King's Bench Prison with the order for release of Mangy, but was refused speech with Sir John Lenthall, and was thrust down the stairs by his servants.

- (i.) Copy of order of 21st November 1667 for release of Mangy. [Dated 20 Nov. L. J., XII. 143.]
(k.) 27 Nov. 1667. Writ of Habeas Corpus directed to Sir John Lenthall, Marshal of the King's Bench prison, commanding him to bring George Mangie before the Lords in Parliament, on Friday the 29th November. See L. J., XII. 146, 150.
(l.) Return to the above Writ, brought in to the House of Lords on 29 Nov., and with Mangie's discharge noted thereon, on 2 Dec. See L. J., XII. 153.

(m.) 2 Dec. 1667. Petition of Richard Carter, Thomas Burnham, and others. Petitioners arrested George Mangie at the suit of Walter Strickland for money of His Majesty, not knowing that Mangie had any protection from the Duke of Buckingham. They were commanded both by the late Lord High Treasurer, the Earl of Southampton, and by His Majesty himself to detain him, for which they are in custody of the Sergeant-at-arms. They have attended several days to be heard, and pray for discharge. L. J., XII. 153.

(n.) 2 Dec. 1667. Petition of Walter Strickland, Esq^r. Petitioner being Receiver-General of the royal aid for the county of York, returned 300*l*. for His Majesty's use by bills of exchange by George Mangie, a goldsmith of York, who is since broke, has long absented himself, and is now in custody, but has produced a protection upon which he is to be released today. Petitioner prays the House (as it is His Majesty's interest) that Mangie may be detained. L. J., XII. 153.—[Noted by the Earl of Southampton that it is fit he be detained until His Majesty's pleasure be known; and the bailiffs are to observe this on their peril.]

52. [Dec. 19.] Printed paper of reasons for the passing of a second Bill for sale of the lands, &c., of the Lord Viscount Strangford, to pay debts contained in the former Act. L. J., XII. 52. [The Bill referred to was read 1st this day, and received the royal assent. 18 Car. II. c. 5. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

53. Dec. 19. Frazer's Naturalization.—Parchment copy of an Act for naturalizing Dame Mary Frazer and others. Signed by John Browne, Clerk of the Parliaments. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day: received the royal assent on the 8th of February following. L. J., XII. 52, &c. 19 Car. II. c. 10. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

54. Dec. 19. Poll Bill.—List of Sub-Committee appointed by the Committee of the whole House to prepare a clause to be inserted in the Bill "for raising moneys" by a poll and otherwise towards the maintenance of "the present war, for the assessing the several ranks of the peers of this kingdom, and to consider of the wording of the enacting clause now in the Bill in conformity therunto, and also to prepare what is fit to be offered at a conference upon the said Bill concerning the several paragraphs of rating officers, servants, &c., and for leaving out the clause concerning "aliens and nonconformists, and that the House of Commons hath no right to assess the peers, and take notice of the violation of that privilege." [Noted. The clause for rating archbishops and bishops, as also that concerning deans and prebendaries, and doctors in divinity was referred to the Sub-Committee, together with the clause for nominating Commissioners for the rating of peers. L. J., XII. 53, 56, and MS. Minutes of date.]

Annexed:—

- (a.) 22 Dec. Draft of heads to be spoken to at a conference on the Bill. L. J., XII. 56. See MS. Minutes, 19 Dec.
(b.) Draft of amendments, etc. made by the Lords to the Bill.
(c.) Later draft of same.
(d.) Final draft of same as reported to the House. 22 Dec. L. J., XII. 55. See Miscell. Aul., pp. 431-4.
(e.) List of Commissioners referred to in the amendments proposed to be added to the Bill by the Lords. [Disagreed to by the Commons at the Conference. See L. J., XII. 72, and C. J., VIII. 675.]
(f.) Fair copy of preceding.
(g.) Parchment copy of clause making a grant to the King from the Peers in their own name; fixing the amount to be paid by Peers and the wives and widows of Peers, according to their several ranks; appointing Commissioners for putting the Act into execution as far as peers, &c. are concerned, and also appointing Commissioners for assessing the officers and servants of His Majesty's household. Reported 22 Dec. L. J., XII. 55. [To this clause the Commons disagreed. C. J., VIII. 673. See Marvell, I. 70-1.]

(h.)-(m.) Drafts of preceding, or of portions thereof.

Five papers.

(n.) 12 Jan. 1666-7. Message from Commons disagreeing to preceding clause, and others of the Lords' amendments. L. J., XII. 72. C. J., VIII. 673.

(o.) Parchment copy of clause appointing certain Commissioners to assess the Peers, inserted by the Lords in lieu of the previous clause on the same subject. [This clause was agreed to by the Commons on the 14th January 1666-7. See § 32 of Act, 18-19 Car. II. c. 1. C. J., VIII. 676. L. J., XII. 74, 75. Priv. Book, 14 Jan. 1666-7.]

(p.) Draft outline of preceding.

(q.) (r.) Note of points to be referred to the Sub-Committee, &c.

55. Dec. 20. Petition of William Nevill, son and heir of Henry Nevill, late of Holt, in the county of Leicestershire, deceased, and the creditors of the said Henry and William Nevill. Pray for leave to bring in a Bill for relief against Henry Bainbrigg, who continues to hold certain lands under a mortgage, though petitioners allege that he has been satisfied with an overplus. [Referred to the Lord Chancellor this day. L. J., XII. 54.]

56. Dec. 22. Petition of George, Duke of Buckingham. He is very sorry to have fallen under displeasure (by his quarrel with the Marquess of Dorchester). It is his duty to beg for pardon rather than to attempt to justify what the House has condemned. He, therefore, with all submission prays to be restored to favour, and to be freed from restraint. L. J., XII. 55. In extenso. [See also Carte's Ormonde, II. 337.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Dec. 22. Petition of Henry, Marquis of Dorchester. He acknowledges his fault and beseeches pardon, and that he may be restored to favour and to his place in Parliament. L. J., XII. 55. In extenso.

57. Dec. 29. Petition of Robert Scawen, Esq^r to the King. Of the two false witnesses on whose testimony his eldest son, Captain Francis Scawen, was convicted of a robbery, of which he was no ways guilty, and for which the King has pardoned him, one has been convicted of perjury, and the other fled when the grand jury found the indictment against him. Petitioner prays the King to assent to an Act of Parliament, of which a draft is annexed, for restoration of his son in blood. L. J., XII. 58. In extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 Dec. Draft of an Act for restoring of Francis Scawen, gentleman, in blood. [Read 1st this day, considered in Committee Jan. 3 and 5, royal assent on 8th of February following. L. J., XII. 58, &c. 19 Car. II. c. 9. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

58. Roll of the Peers of the Kingdom of England according to their births, creations, and offices.—Garter's Roll, signed Edw. Walker, Garter Principal King of Arms. Endorsed, a list of the nobility of England, 1666. (Parchment Collection.)

1666-7.

59. Jan. 2. Petition of Henry Awson. Petitioner arrested John Prosser, but discharged him without fee as soon as he was satisfied that he was a servant of the Dowager Lady Abergavenny. For this petitioner is now in the custody of the sergeant-at-arms. Prays the House to accept his contrition and grant his discharge. L. J., XII. 59.

Annexed:—

(a.) 2 Jan. Letter from John Prosser to Mr. Trulocke, not to detain Awson, as Lady Abergavenny has discharged him. [Read this day, dated 1 Jan.]

(b.) Note respecting the case.

60. Jan. 3. Draft of an Act for the ascertaining the bounds of the several rectories of Swaffham St. Cyriac, and of Swaffham St. Mary's, within the town of Swaffham Prior, in the county of Cambridge, and for the uniting of the two churches there. [Read 1st this day, amended in Committee, Jan. 9 and 10, royal assent on Feb. 8. L. J., XII. 60, &c. 19 Car. II. c. 8. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

61. Jan. 3. Articles of Impeachment by the Commons assembled in Parliament, in the name of themselves and of all the Commons of England, against John, Lord Viscount Mordaunt, Constable of the Castle of Windsor, for several high crimes and misdemeanours committed by him. L. J., XII. 60-62. In extenso. (Parchment Collection.) See also 65.

62. Jan. 3. Resolution of the House of Commons that Sergeant Maynard's name be struck out of the Bill for settling an estate in trust for the benefit of Mrs. Pride and her children. C. J., VIII. 670. [The Bill received the royal assent on 8 Feb. L. J., XII. 110. 19 Car. II. c. 7. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

63. Jan. 11. Amendments to the Bill for selling part of the lands of Henry Mildmay, Esq^r, deceased, for payment of his debts and making provision for his children. L. J., XII. 71. [The amendments were made 9 Jan. and reported this day. The Bill received the royal assent 8 Feb., L. J., XII. 111. 19 Car. II. c. 12, in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) (b.) Two printed copies of the case of Jane Mildmay, and Frances Lucy and Mary, her sisters, daughters of Henry Mildmay, Esq^r, by Jane his wife, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Robert Awnsham, Esq^r, deceased, praying for an Act of Parliament for sale of certain lands, &c. in which they have an interest, and for distribution of the proceeds. See L. J., XII. 66.

64. Jan. 16. Downes v. Hungeate.—Petition and appeal of Francis Downes and Edmond Spring, gentlemen, for relief against a decree in Chancery made in a suit respecting certain lands now in possession of Henry Hungeate, as heir-at-law of Anne Hogan, who obtained possession of them by means of a fine which she fraudulently procured to be levied by her son, an infant, shortly before his death. In 1664 petitioners had petitioned for a remand to Chancery (see Calendar, 6 Dec. 1664). That petition being informal, they now pray that the cause be heard on its merits. [See MS. Min. of date. There is no corresponding entry in the Journal. This and the previous petition were ordered to be compared, 31 Jan. 1666-7. See L. J., XII. 97, where the entry is incorrect, and MS. Min. of date.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 17 Dec. 1667. Petition of same, reciting previous proceedings and praying for a day for hearing. [Read this day before Committee for Petitions. See Pet. Book under date, and also under 26 and 29 Feb. following, when the petition was dismissed by 8 votes to 3.]

(b.) Petition of same, praying that the order of 31 Jan. 1666-7 for comparing their first two petitions may be revived, and that their appeal may be heard. See L. J., XII. 193.

(c.) Copy of order of 31 Jan. 1666-7 enclosed with preceding.

(d.) 2 March 1669-70. Draft of an Act to give Mr. Francis Downes and Mr. Edmond Spring leave to take advantage of a condition that was concealed, whereby they stand now disinherited of an estate of 1,500*l*. a year for non-payment of 10*l*s. Recites the statements contained in appellants' above petition. Read 1st this day and rejected. L. J., XII. 297.

65. Jan. 17. The humble answer of John, Lord Viscount Mordaunt, Constable of His Majesty's castle and honor of Windsor, to certain articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the Commons assembled in Parliament for several high crimes and misdemeanours supposed to be committed by him. L. J., XII. 77-79. In extenso. (Parchment Collection.) See also 61.

66. Jan. 19. Skinner v. East India Company.*—Copy of petition of Thomas Skinner, merchant, to the King. Petitioner having been outrageously oppressed by the East India Company, has since the year 1661 continually petitioned and attended His Majesty for justice, praying that a court constable and marshal might be appointed to hear and determine the matter. His Majesty finding that petitioner had been exceedingly injured, referred the matter to divers Lords of the Privy Council to mediate, and the like references have been three or four times renewed without any effect, the Company refusing to submit the matter to His Majesty, the Privy Council, or any Committee of Lords among them. Petitioner renewed his suit concerning the court constable at Salisbury in August 1665, the consideration whereof was put off until the 23rd of March following, when His Majesty was pleased to order that the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Privy Seal, and Lord Ashley, should treat with the Company to give petitioner reasonable satisfaction. Their Lordships heard both sides by counsel, and desired a case to be stated by Mr. Ayliffe as to the lowest sum the Company ought in reason to pay petitioner, and the Company was to set down what was the most it was willing to give, which being done, petitioner's damages amounted to 17,172*l*., besides loss of trade, &c., and the Company's offer was but 1,500*l*. The said Lords considering the recompense offered to be greatly disproportionate, certified their mediation to be ineffectual. Petitioner therefore prays His Majesty to constitute the said court constable hdc vice, or to recommend petitioner's case to the Lords sitting in Parliament, in order that he may receive a summary and speedy remedy for his intolerable sufferings. [This and the next five papers appended hereto are endorsed, Received 16th Jan^y 1666-7, recommended to the House of Peers from the King by the Lord Privy Seal, Jan^y 19, and read in this House this day.]

to the House of Commons in the name of the Company, which petition was afterwards presented. Petitioner was not present at any meeting of the sub-committee, and had no hand in drawing, contriving, presenting, or managing the petition, nor was he present when it was signed, nor did he give any directions for signing it; he never saw the petition or heard it read, and did not know that he had been named of the sub-committee until two days after his attendance upon their Lordships. He is now a prisoner upon bail, his imprisonment being grounded upon the mistake of Mr. Blackbourne, secretary to the Company, who informed their Lordships that he was present when the petition was signed, which assertion was made through mistake, and is in itself very untrue. Petitioner is a very infirm and aged man, and his daily attendance early and late is very prejudicial to his health. Prays an order for discharge from his restraint, and also an order for the discharge of his bail. [See Supplement under date, and Com. Book, 1 May.]

(e.) 4 Nov. 1669. Engrossment of an Act concerning certain proceedings in Parliament. [The Bill was brought from the Commons this day, and rejected on the first reading on 10 November, when the House appointed a Committee to prepare another Bill on the subject (see next paper). L. J., XII. 260, 265. The proceedings relating to this Bill in the Commons are contained in the expunged entries of the Commons' Journal, printed by Hatsell (Precedents, Vol. III. 380-4), who, in a note to p. 383, has set out the Bill itself in extenso, with the exception of the concluding proviso, denying it any retrospective effect before 25 April 1660.]

(f.) 16 Nov. 1669. Amended draft of an Act for limiting of certain trials and causes in Parliament, and privilege of Parliament, and for ascertaining the trial of peers and all other His Majesty's liege people. The Lords in Parliament being His Majesty's Great Council and Highest Court of Judicature, having so many weighty and urgent affairs concerning His Majesty and the State, and defence of the kingdom and the Church of England, find the trying of civil causes and actions upon original complaints where remedy may be had in inferior courts to be burdensome and troublesome, and to delay their proceedings in His Majesty's more important service; they therefore pray that it may be enacted that no trial or judgment in any civil cause shall in future be had or given in Parliament upon any original complaint other than breach of privilege of Parliament or breach of privilege of peerage, and other than in cases where no relief can be had in inferior courts. Provided that the Lords in Parliament may, according to their ancient right and usage, try, judge, and determine criminal causes, complaints of delay of justice, cases of difficulty upon resort to them, writs of error, and appeals from any inferior courts. And, moreover, for the better security of the liberties and estate of all His Majesty's liege people, and to the end that by the long sitting and continuance of any Parliament, which of late hath been beyond the usage of former times, the subject may not be aggrieved nor the due course of law obstructed or delayed by Privilege of Parliament, the Bill enacts that no person shall from henceforth be attached by any accusation, or taken, imprisoned, or forejudged of life or limb, nor be disseized of his lands, goods, &c., without lawful witnesses upon oath, and being brought to answer by due process of law. Members, assistants, or attendants of either House of Parliament or Convocation of the Clergy, or their menial servants, shall not be protected by Privilege of Parliament, otherwise than in the freedom of their persons and houses of residence, with their goods therein, their coaches and horses, and such other goods as they shall make use of, and that only during each session of Parliament, dating from the writ of summons, and for twenty days before and after, but shall in all other respects be liable, even in time of Parliament, to be impleaded, sued, and proceeded with according to the due and ordinary course of law. Nothing in the Act is to be construed to extend to the taking away or abridging any personal or other privileges which the peers of this kingdom have heretofore usually had, exercised, or enjoyed out of the time of Parliament, or during the times of prorogation. [Reported this day from Committee for Privileges. On the 10th November, the House having on first reading rejected a Bill "concerning certain proceedings in Parliament" (see above (g)), ordered the Committee for Privileges to prepare a Bill concerning privilege and judicature in Parliament. L. J., XII. 265. On the 11th the Committee met and the D. Bucks offered the heads of a Bill, namely, "never to part with a power of trying causes originally which can be tried in no place else; the High Court of Judicature is this House; the House of Commons have no share in judicature;" and, after long debate, the following heads were set down:—That the case of Thomas Skinner and Sir Samuel Barnardiston shall not be mentioned in the Bill; that the Lords are not to part with the judgment of such causes as are not relievable elsewhere; that the Supreme Court of Judicature is this House (to be inserted by way of proviso); that something is to be inserted concerning the trial of peers; that no subject shall be prejudiced in any right or title, estate or liberty, but by due course of law; that there shall be a limitation of the exercise of the power of the Lords in receiving original causes in Common Pleas capable of relief in inferior courts; that the privilege of the members of Parliament and their servants is to be considered. These heads were agreed to, and a sub-committee was appointed to draw up a Bill. Accordingly, on the 13th the sub-committee reported this Bill to be offered to the House, and it was read and amended this day, and also on the 15th and 16th, when it was reported to the House. See Priv. Book, pp. 56-59.] The following seven papers are connected with this Bill:—

(g.)¹ Draft proviso maintaining in force all statutes concerning judicature, except in those particulars taken away in express words. [Offered to Committee for Privileges by the D. Bucks, on 13th Nov. 1669, and agreed to.]

(h.)² Draft clause enacting that Peers and Peeresses shall be tried by forty-one at least of the Peers of this realm. [On the 15th Nov. 1669 a clause to the effect that forty-five Peers were to be summoned at the trial of any Peer or Peeress, twenty of whom were to be present, was discussed and passed over till the pleasure of the House was known, and the House the same day directed the Committee to bring in a clause for the trial of Peers. L. J., XII. 268. Accordingly, on the following day this Draft Clause was agreed to.]

(i.)³ 16 Nov. 1669. Amended Draft of the Act, being the fair copy of the Bill and amendments as reported from Committee for Privileges. [Read 1st this day, and 2nd and committed to a Committee of the whole House on the 17th. L. J., XII. 268. The Bill was sent to the Commons on the 22nd. See expunged entries in Hatsell, III. 385. The Commons rejected it on second reading.]

(j.)⁴ Amendments made in Committee of the whole House on 17th and 18th Nov. 1669. These are mainly to add questions of breach of privilege of Peerage to the original jurisdiction of the House of Lords, to limit the effect of above proviso (h)¹ to the judicature of the Lords, and to provide that no man should be imprisoned without being brought to answer by due process of law or judged but by lawful judgment of his Peers or by the law of the land. See MS. Minutes of date.

(k.)⁵ Paper giving amended wording of first part of the clause concerning Privilege of Parliament. See MS. Minutes of 18 Nov. 1669.

(l.)⁶ 18 Nov. 1669. List of Sub-Committee appointed to word the last two paragraphs of Bill. See MS. Minutes.

(m.)⁷ Paper of amendments made by the above Sub-Committee, and reported 19 Nov. 1669. See MS. Minutes.

(n.) 7 Dec. 1669. Copy of five Resolutions of the House of Commons, dated this day, Hatsell, III. 387. In extenso.

67. Jan. 22. E. St. Albans' Privilege.—Affidavit of William Wetton that, whilst attending some business of the Earl of St. Albans at Guildford, as his agent and servant, and having his protection, he was violently arrested by Henry Ride, by direction of Richard Symes, an attorney, for Thomas Dalmahoy. Annexed:—

(a.) 25 Jan. Petition of Richard Symes, an attorney at law, and Henry Ryde. Petitioners are under restraint for arresting Wm. Wetton at the suit of Thomas Dalmahoy, for four years rent in arrear last Christmas, not knowing at the time of the arrest that Wetton had a protection from the Earl of St. Albans. They are sorry for their proceedings therein, and pray to be discharged. L. J., XII. 90.

68. Jan. 22. Frazer's Naturalisation.—Report from the Committee on the Bill that they have included the name of Sir Richard Fanshawe, Bart., on account of the desire expressed by his father on his death bed, but they are of opinion that care should be taken that this may not in future be a precedent to the prejudice of ambassadors' children born abroad. The Committee have also added to the Bill the names of Dame Mary Masham, Claudius Petit, Peter Southick, and John Daynens. Dated 19 Jan. L. J., XII. 84. 19 Car. II. c. 10. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill.

(b.) 11 Jan. Certificate that Peter Southick is of the Protestant religion of the Dutch congregation. See L. J., XII. 75.

(c.) 11 Jan. Similar certificate for John Deynens. See L. J., XII. 75.

69. Jan. 23. London (Fire) Judicature Bill.—Amendments to the Bill for erecting a judicature for determination of differences touching houses burnt or demolished by reason of the late fire in London. 18 & 19 Car. II. c. 7. L. J., XII. 86. See Com. Book 7-23 Jan. [They limit new leases to forty years (§ ii.), and add a proviso giving appeal.]

70. Jan. 24. Writ of Summons to Parliament to Dudley Lord North.

71. Jan. 24. Same to William Lord Willoughby de Parham.

72. Jan. 28. Bedford Level.—Engrossment of an Act for settling the taxes to be imposed on the Adventurers' lands lying in Bedford Level after a pound rate. The money necessary for the maintenance of the level has, under the powers of an Act of this Parliament [15 Car. II. c. 17.] been raised by an acre tax to the great damage of divers of the Adventurers, as the 95,000 acres [allotted to them] not only vary greatly in quality, but some portions are frequently inundated, and the corn, hay, &c. destroyed. The Bill enacts that the taxes shall henceforth be raised according to the annual value of the lands. It provides for assessment, appeal, &c., and concludes with a clause for the benefit of Samuel and Edwin Sandys, sons of Samuel Sandys the elder. (Parchement Collection.) [This Bill, which was brought from the Commons this day, was dropped owing to the close of the session, but a similar Bill received the royal assent the following year. L. J., XII. 93, &c. See also 77 and 105.]

73. Jan. 28. L. Norris' Bill.—Engrossment of an Act for settling the estate of the Lord Norris in trustees for the benefit of the Lord Norris. (Parchement Collection.) [This Bill, which was brought from the Commons this day, was opposed by Lady Cholmley on behalf of her husband, Edward Cooke, by the Earl of Manchester, and others; and as there was not time to pass the Bill before the end of the Session, a "Proposal" was drawn up and agreed to by all parties, and entered on the Lords' Journals. L. J., XII. 93, 108, &c. See also 76.]

74. Jan. 28. Transcript of record, &c. in the Writ of Error "Goodwyn v. Isted." L. J., XII. 93. (Parchement Collection.)

75. Jan. 28. Votes of the House of Commons, dated 22 Jan., concerning French goods bought and laden on shipboard before December 1666. [Agreed to by the Lords this day. C. J., VIII. 681. In extenso.]

Annexed:—

(b.) Rough draft of preceding.

(c.) Schedule of goods claimed by English subjects on their own account, and ordered by them to be laden in France before the issuing of His Majesty's proclamation for prohibiting of French commodities. L. J., XII. 90. [The names of the ships are given, and the goods, consisting almost wholly of wine and brandy, are attested by the oaths and signatures of the owners. See also Com. Book, p. 166, and Priv. Book 25 Jan.]

(d.) 21 Jan. Affidavit of John Wadlow that a ship of his, laden with goods from Bordeaux, bought in November last, has not yet arrived in England.

See L. J., XII. 93.

(e.) 19 Jan. Affidavit of Edmond Warner that certain goods in the Graffe Frixe, of Riga, and the St. Philip, of Ostend, are the property of English subjects.

(f.) List of fees for swearing the merchants, &c.

76. Jan. 29. L. Norris' Bill.—Petition of Dame Margaret Cholmley, now wife to Edward Cooke, Esq. About eighteen years ago her husband became a trustee of the estate of Bridgett, late Countess of Lindsey, which has since descended to James, Lord Norris, her son, an infant; and now an attempt is being made to procure an Act of Parliament, in the absence of petitioner's husband, to join other trustees with him, whereby his estate and interest in law will be lessened, the settlement made by the Countess defeated, and petitioner, her husband, and their fortune in danger to be ruined. She prays that no proceedings may be taken upon the Bill until her husband be heard. L. J., XII. 95. Com. Book, pp. 168, &c., and MS. Min. of 6 Feb. [See also 73.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 6 Feb. Petition of Dame Margaret Cholmley, wife to Edward Cooke, Esq. Prays that her husband may be heard against Lord Norris' Bill, the Committee having refused him permission, although the Judges reported in his favour; or, if the House think fit to pass the bill without hearing him, that a proviso may be added to protect the person of her husband from the fatal consequences of the Act, so that after his estate is ruined he may still enjoy his liberty to seek a substance for himself and petitioner as God's providence shall dispose him.

(b.) 8 Feb. Draft of the "Proposal" agreed to by all parties concerned in the Lord Norris' Bill, there not being time to pass the bill before the close of the Session. L. J., XII. 108. In extenso.

77. Jan. 29. Bedford Level.—Petition of Sir Robert Henley, Knight, Robert Hampson, Michael Holman, Nicholas Pedley, Esq^{rs}, and others. They are owners of, and concerned in, great quantities of "Adventure lands" in the great level of the fens called Bedford Level, part of the 95,000 acres allotted to Francis late Earl of Bedford in recompense for draining the great level. Petitioners have been at great expense in diking, hassocking, [i.e., taking the uppermost grass, Wells' Bedford Level, l. 371.] ploughing, &c. their adventure lands for many years past. A Bill has now been brought to the House for altering the way of taxing the 95,000 acres for maintenance of the level from an acre tax, which has continued by practice and agreement for thirty-six years, to a pound rate tax, which, if enacted, will not only prove destructive to petitioner's estates, but will totally subvert the work of draining, and be the ruin, consequently of many thousand persons. Petitioners pray to be heard in the matter. L. J., XII. 95. [See also 72.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 Jan. Petition of Dame Bridgett Kingswill. Petitioner prays to be heard against the Bill for Bedford Level, under which it is proposed to vest certain lands in two of the sons of Sir Miles Sandys, deceased, which lands are her security for 500*l.*, with interest unpaid, lent to Samuel Sandys, Sir Miles Sandys, and others in the year 1638. L. J., XII. 95.

(b.) 29 Jan. Petition of Michael Holman, Esq^r, son and heir of Michael Holman, Esq^r, deceased, and Richard Holman, gent. They pray to be heard against the Bill for Bedford Level, and to be admitted to make out their title to 510 acres, which were purchased many years ago from Sir Miles Sandys, and which by the bill are settled upon two of his sons.

(c.) 1 Feb. Petition of Grace Love, the relict of Richard Love, Doctor of Divinity, late Dean of Ely, deceased. Her late husband and James Thompson purchased about seven score acres of "Adventure Ground" in Bedford Level (since vested in her) at 12*l.* the acre or thereabouts. This land has been further improved at great charge, encouragement being thereunto given by an established acre tax; but, without the privy of parties interested, endeavour is being used by an Act of the present Session to alter the acre tax to a pound rate, whereby petitioner's proportion will bear equal charge with ten times the same number of acres, the greatest part of the level of the fens consisting of coarser grounds, vendable at a far smaller value on account of the acre tax. Petitioner prays to be heard by counsel before any further proceeding on the bill. L. J., XII. 99.

- (d.) 8 Feb. Draft report from the Committee on the Bedford Level Tax Bill that all differences concerning the way of raising money &c. should (in regard of want of time to proceed on the bill) be left to the determination of three judges. L. J., XII. 109. In extenso.

78. Jan. 29. Engrossment of an Act for enabling trustees to make leases for payment of the debts and providing for the children of Sir Charles Stanley (Parchment Collection). [This Bill which was brought from the House of Commons this day, was, after passing through the usual stages, returned to that House amended on the last day of the Session, and was consequently lost; but a Bill with the same title passed the following year. L. J., XII. 95 &c. See also 96.]

79. Jan. 29. Pettit v. Hide.—Petition of Henry Pettit, prisoner in the Fleet, and administrator of Thomas Freeman, late of London, merchant, deceased. In 1661 a decree was obtained in Chancery against petitioner at the suit of Lawrence Hide for 893*l*. 7*s*. 8*d*., alleged to be due to him from Freeman for three parcels of brimstone forty years ago. In the making of this decree petitioner thinks he had very hard measure, and is advised that he has no remedy but from the Lords in Parliament. The question at issue being a matter of account was referred to referees (two named by Hide and two by Freeman) who were equally divided in opinion. The Lord Chancellor then appointed Mr. Micoe (who had been before nominated by Hide, but afterwards struck out) as fifth referee, with power to three to report, petitioner in vain excepting against Mr. Micoe as a nominee of Hide. Micoe and the two other referees, nominated by Hide, made a report on which the decree was grounded, and upon that decree petitioner was committed prisoner to the Fleet, and a sequestration granted of his estate, real and personal, under which Hide is in actual possession to the ruin of petitioner and his family. In 1662, petitioner, as administrator to Freeman, obtained a judgment in the King's Bench against Hide for 2,500*l*. for matters no way concerned in the decree in Chancery; but petitioner is stayed by injunction out of Chancery from proceeding under the judgment against Hide, though he has no estate but what is in Hide's possession. After this petitioner obtained a reference from the King to the Commissioners of Grace for relief of prisoners, who summoned Hide before them, and found him indebted to petitioner 2,567*l*. 12*s*., as appears by their certificate. Petitioner implores the House to grant him a hearing at the Bar, to assign him counsel, to order him liberty to attend, and to give him such relief as shall seem meet. L. J., XII. 134. [For subsequent proceedings in 1667 and 1669 in Chancery after the sequestration referred to, see Hide v. Pettit, Cases in Chancery, i. 91, 185. This petition was ordered this day to be shown to the Lord Chancellor. The Pet. Book records that a previous petition of Pettit, of 8 May 1663, in this matter (see Seventh Report, p. 171), was argued before the Committee for Petitions on 14 May, when an Order that it should be laid aside was apparently made and afterwards cancelled. The matter was then postponed; and after a vote of 6 to 3 against resuming the hearing, the point of the appointment of the 5th referee was fully discussed on 2 June, and the petition dismissed by 8 votes to 1, "it being taken notice of that the Court of Chancery is here tacitly struck at and inveighed against, through the name of Lawrence Hyde, who is formally petitioned against, but nothing said against him, but against the Court." A subsequent petition of Pettit was received and read before the Committee on 26 April, 1664, but no resolution was taken.]

Annexed:—

- (a.) Petition of same for stay of proceedings below, and that he be permitted his liberty to attend the hearing of his appeal.

- (b.) 4 Feb. Report of the Lord Chancellor, upon his sight of Henry Pettit's petition, as follows:—

"I have perused the petition of Henry Pettit to the House of Peers, the matter of which was heretofore presented in some session of this Parliament to the said House, and all parties concerned being called before a Committee of the Lords, and Council heard on both sides, the petition was dismissed, and if the Pet^r be grieved with y^e said decree, since he alleges no corruption in the making of it, if there be any error in it, I do not know why he should not have remedy by his Bill of Review.

"It is not possible for me to remember all the particulars in the Cause, which had been long depending in Chancery, and was ready for a hearing when I came in to England, only I do very well remember that because one of the parties was of my name and family (though I had never seen him before the King's return into England, and have had very little conversation with him since) I proceeded with that caution, that I believe very few orders have been made in this Cause, but in the presence of some Judge whom I desired to give the Rule, and I do verily believe that the other party hath more cause to complain of his being my kinsman, than to bragg of any advantage he hath had by it.

"For the nomination of the Referrees, I am confident they were all named by the Court before my coming into England, and if afterwards, upon accidents, I nominated Alderman Micoe, it was without the least motion from the other party, but upon the great reputation of the man, whose Certificates I often observed to give the Court great satisfaction in several occasions, without ever having heard any of them questioned; but I am confident, if ever the Pet^r had made any reasonable objection against him, I should very readily have left him out.

"The proceedings upon the said Decree have been no other than are agreeable to the practice of the Court in all cases of disobedience and contempt.

"Of the Tryall and Verdict in the King's Bench I know nothing, but if the same was upon any matter contained in the Decree in Chancery, I could not deny an Injunction, nor could I have granted it except it appeared upon examination that the matter in issue was contained in the said Decree.

"For the Petition to his Ma^y, and the reference to Commission^r, I can say no more, but that I doubt such References are too easily procured by Masters of Requests without informing his Ma^y of the nature of the business, who would never (as his Ma^y was pleased himself afterwards to declare) have referred the examination of a Decree in a Court of Justice to such Commissioners, who are only authorized to mediate, on the behalf of poore Prisoners in execution for debt, with their Creditors, when it appears that they have no estates to satisfy what they owe, so that it was a great presumption in them to meddle in this matter, which they could not examine, nor had the party concerned any reason to submit the examination thereof to them."

"If the House of Peers shall think fitt upon such a Petition to give a hearing of the whole matter, I presume the adverse party upon notice will make such a defence as their Lo^{pp} will be satisfied with the justice of the Decree. I am sure I thought it so when I made it, and do still think it so, and if it appears to be otherwise upon a Bill of Review, I shall not be ashamed to retract it. All w^{ch} I humbly submit to their Lo^{pp} greates wisdom.

- (c.) 31 Oct. 1667. Petition of Henry Pettit, a duplicate of that presented on the 29th January 1666-7. [Read this day. The Earl of Clarendon to have a copy and to answer. L. J., XII. 129.]

- (d.) 11 Nov. 1667. The Earl of Clarendon's answer to preceding. The Petition is the same as that presented last Session, to which, being then indisposed with the gout, so that he could not attend the House, he returned the ensuing answer, which he presumes remains still with the Clerk of the Parliaments. The rest of the answer is a duplicate of the previous Report. This paper concludes "I know not what to add to this Report "I then made, but that I was since that time "always ready to hear anything that was or "could be offered on the Pet^r behalf, and make "no doubt but that if the House of Peers shall "give any direction for the rehearing of it, they "will not find that I have been in any fault." 80. Jan. 31. Engrössment of an Act for punishing and suppressing of atheism, profaneness, and profane cursing and swearing. Any person who denies or derides the essence, persons, or attributes of God the Father, Son, or Holy Ghost given to them in the Scriptures, or the omnipotency, wisdom, justice, mercy, goodness, or providence of God in the Creation, Redemption, or Governance of the world, or who denies the divine authority of any of the canonical books contained in the Old and New Testament, received in the Church of England, shall upon conviction or confession on the first offence be committed to the common gaol until payment of such fine as shall be imposed upon him, not exceeding 50*l.*, and shall make public recantation in the court in which he was convicted, and also upon some Lord's day in the church of the parish where the offence was committed, during the time of divine service immediately after the reading of the second lesson, and for the second offence shall be transported to some foreign plantation, shall forfeit offices, preferments, goods, and chattels, and shall not return within five years. Persons convicted of profane swearing, or of jestingly using, profaning, or abusing any sentence of Holy Scripture, shall upon conviction forfeit the following sums according to degree:—If a Lord or Baron of England, 20*s.*; if a Lord or Baron of Scotland, 13*s. 4d.*; if under the degree of a baron and above an esquire, 10*s.*; if a dignified clergyman under the degree of a Bishop, 10*s.*; if an Esquire, Gentleman, ordinary Minister, Mayor, Alderman, &c., 5*s.*; if a freeholder, copyholder, or leaseholder above the yearly value of 20*l.*, or having money or goods to the value of 300*l.*, 2*s. 6d.*, and any other person 12*d.* And any person so convicted who shall refuse to pay or has no goods, shall for the first offence, if a gentleman or of higher degree, be imprisoned for one month in the common gaol, unless he shall meantime pay the penalty; and, if under the degree of a gentleman, shall be set in the stocks for three hours unless he shall pay the penalty, and for the second offence shall be set in the stocks for twelve hours or sent to the house of correction and kept to labour for fourteen days. Any justice of the peace, mayor, &c., who upon complaint neglects or refuses to convict shall, upon due proof thereof, forfeit 40*s.*; provided that every offence shall be prosecuted within one month after the offence is committed, and in any case in which the prosecutor is nonsuited or the verdict passes against him, the defendant shall recover treble costs. Provided also that no person punished under this Act shall be punished for the same offence by any other law. (Parliament Collection.) [Brought from the Commons and read 1st this day, and referred to a Select Committee on 4th Feb. L. J. XII. 96, &c., but no report was made, and Parliament being prorogued on the 8th, the Bill dropped, but was revived the next session. See 92.]

(a.) Parchment draft of preceding.

(b.) Draft proviso for making the imposition on coals a credit to raise money on. [Offered by the Earl of Aylesbury 6 Feb. but not agreed to. MS. minutes of date.]

83. Feb. 7. Petition of Margaret, Marchioness of Worcester, wife of Edward, now Marquess of Worcester. The Marquess, in his service for His Majesty, expended vast sums of money and thereby contracted great debts, and although, since His Majesty's restoration, he has paid above 50,000*l.* of those debts, yet there remain so many that his estate is all seized on by his creditors upon judgments, statutes, and recognizances, in so much that he is deprived of his whole estate, and nothing is left for his own and petitioner's support. In particular the Marquess' estate was extended in March last by John Hall upon a judgment of 6,000*l.* for money borrowed by petitioner's husband in 1642 to pay the garrison of Monmouth, then in a mutiny; this extent is assigned to Lord John Somerset, who now threatens (having got most of the estate) to turn petitioner out of Worcester House, so that she will be destitute of habitation and maintenance. She prays their Lordships to consider her most necessitous condition, and to find out a way for her relief, and also to recommend her case to the Lord Chancellor. [The House this day appointed a Committee to wait on the King, and represent to him Petitioner's sad condition. L. J. XII. 106.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Petition of the Lady Marchioness of Worcester, wife of Edward, now Marquess of Worcester, and the several creditors whose debts amount to 54,500*l.* The now Marquess and his late father expended in His Majesty's service in garrisoning towns, buying arms, &c., above 300,000*l.* They also lent in gold and silver to His Majesty above 300,000*l.*, whereof 95,000*l.* appears under His Majesty's hand and privy signet. They lost by sequestration, plundering, cutting down of woods, pulling down of their houses and castle, and in profits of their estate received by the enemy, above 500,000*l.* The now Marquess took up at interest upon his own security from the petitioners (the creditors) a considerable part of these vast sums, besides 40,000*l.*, which he has paid to other creditors since His Majesty's restoration. There are still very great sums due to his creditors, which, as his whole estate is either mortgaged or extended he is wholly unable to repay, while he is also unable to make up his waterwork, which would enrich them, and he is also in no degree able to support his wife, or give any satisfaction to his creditors, inasmuch that the Marquess is forced to secrete himself, and his creditors themselves, their wives and families, will be totally ruined unless relieved by the House. Petitioners pray their Lordships to recommend their sad condition to His Majesty, that the Marquess (for the vast sums so lent and expended by him in the service of the Crown) may be in some degree so considered and relieved that he may be enabled to give some support to the undone petitioners, his wife, and creditors. [Endorsed, Not read.]

84. Feb. 7. Draft of motion by the Duke of York, upon complaint of Lord Gerard of Brandon, that two of his servants were assaulted by Wm. Hargrave and others on the 15th of March 1664-5, contrary to privilege, the reason why the matter was not prosecuted before being that the witnesses were at sea. [Endorsed. Nothing ordered.]*

91. Oct. 14. Wine Bill.—Amended draft of an Act for the better execution of the laws concerning the prices of wines. The penalties under previous Acts made to abate the prices of wines and prevent adulteration being very small, and the prices of wines for many years not set or limited by reason thereof during the late troubles, wines have been raised to excessive rates and prices in the gross, and so consequently by retail. The late Act of 12 Car. II. set a limit on retail prices, but made no effectual provision touching wines in gross, whereby the prices of wines have been still enhanced, to the great grievance of all, especially the retailers themselves; and taking advantage of this the masters of the Spanish and other vineyards have largely advanced the prices of wines in their own countries upon the merchant, and in several parts refuse to accept, as formerly, English manufactures in exchange, but exact ready money. The Bill enacts that no Canary wines, Alicante or Muscatels, imported into England, be sold in gross for above 24*l.* the butt or pipe, and no sacks and Malagas for more than 22*l.*; no Gascoigne or French wines for more than 23*l.* the tun; no Rhenish wines for more than 6*l.* the awme, on pain of certain penalties in each case, half thereof to go to the King and half to the informer. Provided that the Lord Chancellor and other high officers shall every year, between the 20th of November and the last day of December, set the prices of all kinds of wines to be sold in gross, not exceeding the above rates; open proclamation thereof to be made in the Court of Chancery. Failing such prices being so set and proclaimed in any year, the wines shall be sold in gross at the prices limited in this Act. [Read 1st this day, and passed the Lords, but dropped in the Commons. L. J., XII. 118, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Another draft, with title as amended in Committee.

(b.) Amendments to the Bill, made in Committee on 8th and 11th Nov.

(c.) Corrected draft, endorsed "Judges' clause for 'punishing sophisticators of wines.'" Any person, whether merchant, wine-cooper, vintner, or otherwise, convicted of adulterating or of selling or importing adulterated wines shall pay a fine of 100*l.* and 50*l.* for every hoghead of such wine; 40*l.* for every barrell, &c.; and 5*l.* for every gallon or pint. For discovery of such offences assayers of wines are appointed, with power to enter taverns, vaults, warehouses, &c., and taste, gauge, or assay all wines sold or stored therein. Defendants to actions brought under the Act to be allowed to plead the general issue, and recover treble costs if the plaintiff fails. No justice of the peace, mayor, &c., shall be allowed to appoint assayers if he himself keeps a tavern or sells wine in gross or in retail. [This draft was offered to the Committee by the Judges on 3rd Dec. in pursuance of an order of 15th Nov., and being referred again to them for correction, was returned on 4th Dec. accordingly. Mr. Justice Windham and Mr. Justice Morton were the judges consulted.]

(d.) 24 Oct. Petition of several merchants trading for Spain and other places. Pray to be heard before the passing of the Bill, which they conceive will tend very much to their prejudice, and hinder the expense of English manufactures. L. J., XII. 124. [For evidence of merchants and vintners see Com. Book, p. 200.]

92. Oct. 14. Draft of an Act for punishing and suppressing of atheism, profaneness, and profane swearing. This draft differs only from the Bill of the preceding session (see 80) in including, as additional offences, the denial of the immortality of men's souls, the resurrection of the body, and the eternal rewards in Heaven or eternal torments in Hell. [Read 1st this day; reported with amendments and provisos 18 Dec. (see Com. Book, pp. 185-231), the report to be considered on the second day of the next meeting after the adjournment. Referred again to a Sub-Committee 14 March, on whose report, 16 April, the further consideration was again postponed till after the adjournment from 9 May to 11 August, and the matter dropped.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of proposed preamble to the Bill. See Com. Book, p. 185.

(b.) Amendments to the Bill. [Made in Committee on 13th and 14th Dec. The punishment of banishment for the second offence is transferred to the third offence against the Act, and in lieu thereof the offender is to pay double the fine imposed for the first offence and make a like recantation].

(c.) Draft of enacting clause and provisos, referred to in preceding. The clause enacts that the Act shall be read in every parish church by the minister upon two Sundays in the year after morning prayer, i.e., on the first Sunday in Lent and the next Sunday after Michaelmas day. The two provisos concern the peers, the first being that all Lords of Parliament for every third offence against the Act shall be tried by their peers; the second exempting the persons of peers from restraint of liberty for non-payment of the fines imposed by the Act. See Com. Book, 13th to 17th December 1667.

(d.) Copy of first enacting clause, as amended in Committee, with judges' opinion thereon, stating that none of the offences mentioned are of temporal cognizance. [Endorsed, Read 16 April 1668, on which day the Sub-Committee reported. L. J., XII. 216, 223, and MS. Min. See also Com. Book of 10 April, when the opinions were delivered, Mr. Baron Rainsford and Mr. Justice Tyrell having previously been examined on March 16 and April 2 and 6. Subjoined, in another handwriting, is an amendment to add at the end of the above clause ("or shall in any interlude or stage-play make " use of any sentence, clause, or expression of " Holy Scripture in a profane or scoffing manner, " or shall scoff at or deride religion in general or " the Christian religion in particular.") This amendment first appears in the bill of 1673-4, the part relating to stage-plays having been offered by the Bishop of Rochester and agreed to on 18 Feb. 1673-4, and the remaining words having been added on the 21st. See Com. Book under dates. From a later endorsement hereon, in the same writing as the amendment, it appears that this paper was read before the Committee on the bill of 1673-4, and agreed to as part of that bill.]

93. Oct. 15. Amended draft of an Act for settling part of the possessions of John, late Earl of Clare, deceased, and for enabling Gilbert, Earl of Clare, his son and heir, to dispose of some other parts thereof for payment of debts and portions. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 19 Dec. L. J., XII. 118, &c., 19 Car. II. c. 14 in Svo. List of Private Acts.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of provisos to the Bill, enabling grants of leases by certain persons for 21 years. See Com. Book, p. 197.

(b.) Draft of clause introduced in Committee. See Com. Book, p. 219.

(c.) Draft of last clause as amended in Committee.

94. Oct. 18. Writ of summons to Parliament to Henry, Bishop of St. Asaph.

95. Oct. 19. Same to William, Lord Powys.

96. Oct. 21. Draft of an Act for enabling trustees to make leases for payment of the debts and providing for the children of Sir Charles Stanley. [Read 1st this day; received the royal assent on the 9th May 1668. L. J., XII. 121, &c. 20 Car. II. c. 10 in List of Private Acts, Svo. See also 78.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill. Com. Book, p. 207.

(b.) Clause relating to settlement of Ancaster House. See Com. Book, p. 210.

97. Oct. 23. Sale of Offices Bill.—Draft of an Act for preventing corruption, extortion, and abuses in officers by the sale of offices. The Bill provides that the Act 5 & 6 Edw. VI. against buying and selling of offices shall continue in full force in all respects, and be put into due execution, and shall extend to all ministerial and judicial offices belonging to the High Court of Parliament, and to all other Courts of Justice, civil or ecclesiastical, and particularly to the six clerks in the Court of Chancery, all clerks of the Crown, of Assizes, and of the peace, and to all offices disposed of by the Chief Justices of the King's Bench or Common Pleas, or by justices of assize. All persons taking any such office are to make oath in the form specified in the bill, that they have not directly or indirectly given any consideration for the same; and any person who shall directly or indirectly receive any sum of money or other consideration for the gift or procurement of any office, shall forfeit double the value thereof, one moiety to go towards the repairing the churches lately built within the city and suburbs of London or the next ten years, and after that period to the King; and the other moiety to the person who shall sue for the same. [Read 1st, 2^a, and committed; no further proceeding. L. J., XII. 123, &c. and Com. Book 16 Nov.]

98. Oct. 24.—Salvin v. Herne. Petition of Robert Salvin, Robert Blackstone, and others. In 1665 the late Lord Chancellor Clarendon made a decree that petitioners should pay to Henry Herne and Rebecca his wife (daughter of the petitioner Robert Salvin) about 5,000*l.* of the estate of Rebecca Herne, deceased (mother of Robert Salvin, and grandmother of Rebecca Herne) under a supposed trust. The question of trust or no trust was at first referred to a trial at law, but Herne, not daring to abide the impartial way of a trial by jury, prevailed with the Lord Chancellor to hear the point, who upon very weak evidence decreed petitioners to be trustees in the face of a disclaimer from Rebecca Salvin of all pretence to the estate of her grandmother. Petitioners are not relievable by bill of review, because the injustice is not in point of law, but in matter of fact, and therefore appeal to the House of Lords as the Supreme Court of Judicature to review and cancel the decree or to refer the cause to the Lord Keeper for a rehearing, by whose decision petitioners are contented to abide. L. J., XII. 124.

Annexed:—

(a.) 31 Oct. Petition of Henry Herne and Rebecca his wife. The decree of 1665 made in favour of petitioners against Robert Salvin and Robert Blackstone, was confirmed on a rehearing by the Lord Chancellor and one judge. On the 11th October the defendants preferred a petition to the Lord Keeper, for leave to bring in a bill of review, and the Lord Keeper subscribed an order upon it that if the defendant's counsel would set it under their hands that there was just cause of review, he would do therein as should be just. This the counsel did not do, but the defendants presented a petition on the 24th inst. to the House, when the judges then present were ordered to peruse the bill, answer, and proofs on which the decree was founded, and to consider if there were any ground for a bill of review. Petitioners are advised that it is contrary to practice for anyone to apply to the House of Lords for relief against a decree in Chancery before bringing a bill of review, and therefore pray that the order made upon the petition may be discharged. See L. J., XII. 124.

(b.) 11 Oct. Copy of petition of Robert Salvin [Selvin] and Robert Blakstone to the Lord Keeper, Sir Orlando Bridgman, mentioned in preceding, and appended thereto.

(c.) 5 Dec. Another petition of Henry Herne and Rebecca his wife. After repeating the statements of their previous petition (a), they add that they had attended with counsel before the judges, who said they would not meddle with the proofs and other documents produced by the petitioners, and the latter have heard nothing more about the matter. They then repeat the prayer of their former petition. See L. J., XII. 158.

(d.) 5 Dec. Order for the Lord Keeper to rehear the case of Robert Salvin [Selvin], Robert Blackstone and others on appeal from the Court of Chancery. L. J., XII. 158. In extenso.

99. Oct. 29. Certiorari Bill.—Engrossment of an Act to prevent abuses in granting writs of Certiorari. Forasmuch as bills of indictment for various offences punishable by the justices of the peace at quarter sessions or elsewhere, and their orders concerning bastard children, binding out apprentices, relieving the poor, &c., are frequently removed by writs of certiorari issuing out of Chancery and King's Bench, whereby such offenders for the most part escape unprosecuted and unpunished, and the King loses the fines which should have been imposed upon them, if such indictments had not been removed; the Bill enacts that after the 1st May 1668, no writ of certiorari to remove indictments or orders for any offence or misdemeanour cognizable by the justices of the peace shall be granted but upon motion in open court for some just and reasonable cause to be specified in the writ; and such writ shall be delivered only at some Quarter Sessions in open court. The party seeking a certiorari shall first become bound to the person prosecuting the bill of indictment or order against him in a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, with sureties to be approved of by the Justice of the Peace, conditioning to pay to the prosecutors, within one month after conviction, such costs as the local Justice of the Peace shall allow. In default of such security the justices may proceed on the indictment or orders, any writ of certiorari notwithstanding. If any indictment or order removed as above, be not prosecuted within two whole terms, or in any county palatine within six months after such certiorari returned, the Clerk of the Crown Office, where such certiorari was made or returned, shall issue out a Procedendo on that behalf, under pain of forfeiting to the prosecutors 40*l.* for his first neglect, and 100*l.* for every other such offence. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day: read 1st, 2nd, and committed; reported and re-committed, but not passed, though the Commons twice sent messages to the Lords to remind them of the Bill. L. J., XII. 125, &c. See also 129.]

100. Oct. 31. Trial of Peers Bill.—Draft of an Act for the better regulating of the trial of the Peers of England. From and after the 1st of January 1667-8, whenever any peer is accused of any crime for which he ought to be tried by his peers, the Lord High Steward appointed by His Majesty shall, 30 days before the trial, issue forth a summons in the usual form to every peer above the age of one and twenty to attend personally and sit in judgment at such trial, and if by mistake or otherwise any peer be not summoned, it shall still be lawful for him to appear and sit at such trial, at which there shall be present not less than five and twenty peers. Neglect to summon any peer shall not hinder or make void any proceeding. Every custom and usage consonant with the Act shall stand; and peeresses, wives and widows of peers, shall be tried in the same manner as peers. [This

Bill passed the Lords with amendments, but was thrown out in the Commons. L. J., XII. 129, &c. See Com. Book, pp. 199, 202.]

101. Oct. 31. Petition of Richard Birch, gent. Petitioner having brought an action for 30*l.* against Sir John Lenthall, Marshal of the Court of King's Bench, for the escape of John Ashwin, and having obtained a judgment with costs, has often demanded payment to no purpose, though he has obtained several rules from the Court of King's Bench for payment; Sir John Lenthall telling him that he would make him weary of the business, and asking him what good all his rules had done him. Petitioner's only remedy now is to take Sir John Lenthall in execution, but he constantly keeps himself within doors and has made secret conveyances of all his estate. Petitioner prays the House to take the matter into consideration, and to do therein as shall be just. L. J., XII. 129. [From an entry in Pet. Book, of 19 Nov., it appears that this cause was under compromise.]

102. Nov. 6. Juxon's Bill.—Draft of an Act for enabling Sir William Juxon, knight and baronet, executor of the last will and testament of William Juxon, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, to recover part of his estate. [Read 1st this day; received the royal assent on the 9th of May 1668. L. J., XII. 129, &c. 20 Car. II. c. 6. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 9 Nov. Petition of Katherine Pory, wife of John Pory, Esq^r. Sir Wm. Juxon has lately exhibited a Bill to the House, therein alleging that John Pory, as treasurer to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, had in his hands and put out at interest several sums of money, amounting in all to 15,015*l.*, part of which was lent to Lord Leigh, and others, upon securities taken in Pory's own name. Sir Wm. Juxon, as executor of the Archbishop, obtained a decree in Chancery for delivery to him of the money in Pory's hands, and the securities aforesaid, which decree has hitherto had no effect on account of Pory having gone beyond seas. The Bill proposes to enable Sir Wm. Juxon to receive these moneys and discharge the debtors. Sir Wm. Juxon has put petitioner's husband to unreasonable expense, refusing to accept the money and securities aforesaid, though often tendered with a just account of the archbishop's estate. Petitioner therefore prays that as her husband is beyond the seas, and has the securities with him, the House will grant him a protection from arrest by Sir Wm. Juxon, that he may come and answer personally for himself before any further proceeding is had upon the Bill. L. J., XII. 133. See also 139.

103. Nov. 6. Roll of the Peers of the Kingdom of England, according to their birth, creations, and offices. —Garter's Roll, signed Edw. Walker, Garter Principal King of Arms. (Parchment Collection.)

104. Nov. 7. Copy of petition of Thomas Hinsley to the King. Petitioner has for the last four years been persecuted and overpowered by the greatness of the Earl of Denbigh, as will appear by certain papers. Petitioner prays the King to refer the whole matter to the Lord Keeper and others, or to the justices of the county of Leicester, that examination may be made how Mr. Gore, the Earl's receiver has disposed of 50*l.* received by him for repairing the highways, the Earl being a means of turning out one loyal justice, and threatening to turn out others. [A note written below the petition describes it as scandalous and actionable. The Earl of Denbigh complained of this petition to the House, and Hinsley being brought to the bar was reprehended. L. J., XII. 129, 131.]

105. Nov. 8. Bedford Level. Engrossment of portion of an Act for the taxing and assessing of the lands of the Adventurers within the great level of the fens. (Parchment Collection.) 106. Nov. 8. Woollen Cloth Bill.—Draft of an Act for the better regulating of the manufacture of broad woollen cloth of the new drapery within the counties of Somerset, Wilts, and Gloucester. Whereas divers abuses and deceits in the manufacture of that cloth, called Spanish cloth, in the said counties, have brought it into contempt both at home and abroad; the Bill proposes to establish a Corporation in these counties, consisting of the justices of the peace and the clothiers, to regulate the manufacture. A standard of length, breadth, and weight is fixed. The Corporation is to appoint searchers, who shall affix to each piece of cloth a seal of lead expressing its length, breadth, and weight; and penalties are enacted for cloth falling short of the prescribed standard, or made of deceitful material, as well as for counterfeiting the seal, or failing to carry out the Act. Seven years' apprenticeship is made obligatory. [Read 1st this day and rejected; a Committee being appointed to inspect laws concerning the woollen manufacture. L. J., XII. 132. See also 182.]

107. Nov. 11. Morley v. Elwes.—Petition of Cuthbert Morley and Bernard Grenville, Esq^{rs}. Pray for relief against a decree in Chancery under which a release to Jeremy Elwes of the estate belonging to the father of Cuthbert Morley has been recognized as a bar to all proceedings for recovery of the estate, though the release was made in 1646 upon a secret trust to preserve the estate when Cuthbert Morley was prosecuted for a delinquent and obliged to fly beyond seas. L. J., XII. 134. [The arguments at the bar in this cause are given at some length in MS. Min. See also Pet. Book under 14 March 1661-2, and 3 Dec. 1667.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 14 Nov. Motion for leave to insert the name of Henry Elwes in the petition. Endorsed "Lord Paget moved it."

(b.) 16 Nov. Petition of same; similar to that of the 11th inst., except that Henry Elwes is made defendant with Jeremy Elwes. L. J., XII. 138.

(c.) 29 Oct. 1669. Petition of Bernard Grenville, Esq^r, and Ann, his wife, sole daughter and heiress of Cuthbert Morley, Esq^r, lately deceased. Their Lordships were pleased upon the 31st of March 1668, to remit the cause into Chancery with directions to the Lord Keeper to proceed thereupon as upon an equitable mortgage which their Lordships adjudged it to be. On the 1st of June 1668 a decree was pronounced by the Court of Chancery wherein no effect has been given to their Lordship's directions, to the loss to petitioners of nearly 20,000*l*. They pray that their Lordships' order and just intentions may be carried out. L. J., XII. 258. Cases in Chancery 1. 107.

(e.) Copy of decree of the Court of Chancery, 1 June 1668.

(f.) 4 Nov. 1669. Answer of Jeremy Elwes, Esq^r, to the above petition of Bernard Grenville and Ann his wife.—The decree of 1st June 1668 was most agreeable to law and equity, and on a rehearing on 6th July, and again with the judges on 30th October, was confirmed by the Lord Keeper. Respondent prays that he may now at last be left at peace. The suit is abated by the death of Cuthbert Morley, and should first be revived in Chancery. L. J., XII. 260.

(g.) Copy of decree in Chancery of 1st June 1668.

(i.) Copy of decree of 30th October 1668.

(k.) 11 March 1669-70. Petition of Bernard Grenville, Esq. Jeremy and Henry Elwes having objected that the suit against them was abated by the death of Cuthbert Morley, and that petitioner was not a party in the Court of Chancery, and therefore the appeal was improperly before their Lordships, Counsel were heard on both sides; and on the 12th of November last their Lordships resolved that petitioner was sufficiently a party to the suit, and upon the 25th and 29th of November their Lordships resolved that the cause was properly before them, and gave further directions in the matter. Petitioner humbly applied himself to the Lord Keeper to give directions in pursuance of these orders, but his Lordship delayed so to do upon the allegation of the defendants and their counsel that the suit was abated, and petitioner not a sufficient party thereto, although, as petitioner conceives, his Lordship ought not to have taken that into consideration, it being already resolved and adjudged by their Lordships. Petitioner prays that the Lord Keeper may be directed to proceed in the cause according to their Lordships several judgments. L. J., XII. 306.

(l.) Copies of the orders of the 12th, 25th, and 29th of November 1669, referred to in preceding.

(m.) 18 March 1669-70. Letter from Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Keeper, to Lord Chief Justice Vaughan, who sat Speaker in the House of Lords this day in the absence of the Lord Keeper, respecting the cause between Grenville and Elwes. L. J., XII. 314. Almost in extenso.

108. Nov. 13. E. Clarendon's Impeachment.—Copy of proceedings upon the impeachment of the Commons against Wm. De la Poole, Duke of Suffolk. 28 Hen. VI. Rot. Parl. V. 176. In extenso. L. J., XII. 136. [The above was produced this day by the Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, and used as a precedent on consideration of the impeachment of the Earl of Clarendon.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 4 Dec. Copy of the Commons vote on the paper sent by the Earl of Clarendon to the Lords, and by them sent down to the Commons. L. J., XII. 159. In extenso. Endorsed, Received at a conference 6 Dec. [The Duke of Buckingham delivered the Earl's paper to the Commons at the Conference on the 4th, with a desire that it should be returned to the Clerk, as it was the original. [MS. Min. 4 Dec.]]

(b.) 5 Dec. Amended draft of an Act for banishing and disenabling the Earl of Clarendon. [Read 1. this day. See Pepys, 6 Dec. 1667. Royal assent 19 Dec. 19 & 20 Car. II. c. 2. L. J., XII. 158, &c.]

(c.) Lords Amendments in Committee, made 10 Dec. These make the Earl incapable of pardon except by Act of Parliament, but allow correspondence with his children, &c. as in § ii.

(d.) Commons Amendments, reported 18 Dec. C. J., IX. 42. See L. J., XII. 177. These incapacitate him from any other "employment," besides places of public trust; subject his letters to the scrutiny of a Secretary of State; and add the last proviso in the Act respecting his surrender.

109. Nov. 18. Writ of Summons to Parliament to Anthony, Bishop of Exeter.

110. Nov. 19 E. Northampton's Privilege.—Petition of Richard French, Richard Gibbons, and Robert Barrett. In May 1667, Arthur Capes, an underkeeper in the forest of Whittlewood, having, under colour of his office, much wronged Sir Peter Wentworth, was arrested and bailed, but making default, his bail was arrested in October last. Capes bail then promised petitioners that if they would go with him to his master, Mr. Goodman, Lieutenant of the forest, Capes would there meet him. This was done, Capes also calling Goodman his master. During both the arrests Capes never made known that he was a servant to the Earl of Northampton, nor until about a month after the setting of the House was any mention made of breach of privilege. If privilege of Parliament be granted to Capes, as servant to Mr. Goodman, then the Earl of Northampton, upon the same account, has many hundred servants in the forest who may claim the same privilege. Petitioners, who were ignorant of any contempt or breach of privilege of the House, and have been in custody for eight days, the charge of which tends to their utter ruin, pray to be released. L. J., XII. 140.

Annexed:—

(a.) Affidavit of Capes respecting his arrest.

(b.) Note of evidence to be produced.

(c.) Questions to be put to Henry Hamp. [Sworn 6 Nov. L. J., XII. 130.]

(d.) Same to the Bailiffs.

(e.) Same to Sir Peter Wentworth.

(f.) 7. Dec. Petition of Richard French and others. Petitioners having expressed their sorrow for arresting Arthur Capes, servant to the Earl of Northampton, which they did in ignorance, were ordered to be discharged upon payment of fees; but these amount to 84*l*. 14*s*. 6*d*., besides lodgings, diet, horses, and the neglect of their trades for almost a month. Petitioners, who are poor men with wives and children, pray that the fees may be remitted. See L. J., XII. 148.

111. Dec. 4. Diagram, showing proposed alteration in the position of the table in the Painted Chamber, with forms behind it for the Peers at conferences. L. J., XII. 157 [Produced before and approved by the Committee for Privileges this day See Priv. Book, p. 32.]

112. Dec. 4. List of Lords and others who have not paid subsidies. Noted, "Delivered to the House of Peers by the Lord Ashley."

113. Dec. 9. Case of Charles, Lord Mohun, Baron of Okehampton, and his guardians, respecting a debt of 300*l*., for which they are sued by Daves Wymondshall. L. J., XII. 162, 177. See Priv. Book, 14 and 16 Dec.

114. Dec. 11. Copy of Resolutions of the House of Commons dated 12 Nov. 1667, respecting freedom of speech in Parliament, agreed to by the Lords this day. L. J., XII. 166. In extenso.

115. Dec. 12. Petition of Thomas Killigrew, one of the Grooms of His Majesty's Bedchamber. Prays that John Jackson and Thomas Child, his Attorney, who, well knowing petitioner to be His Majesty's servant, have sued him to an outlawry, may be brought to condign punishment. L. J., XII. 167, 169.

116. Dec. 13. Russell v. Spencer.—Petition of Sir William Russell, Bart. Prays that a decree made by the late Lord Chancellor, contrary to clear evidence in a suit respecting a debt of 500*l*. due by Richard Branthwayte to Sir Edward Spencer, for which petitioner became surety in November 1641, may be reversed, as the injury done to petitioner is in matter of fact and not in point of law, for which alone a bill of review would lie. L. J., XII. 169.

Annexed:—

(a.) 12 Feb. 1667–8. Petition of same. His petition of December last was referred to the judges then in town to consider whether relief might be given by bill of review or otherwise, but at the time appointed by the judges for the hearing, neither Spencer appeared nor anyone on his behalf, and the judges thereupon directed petitioner to inform the House thereof. Prays that the matter may be heard at the bar or referred to the Lord Keeper. L. J., XII. 183. Appended thereto are the following papers:—

(b.) Copy of petition presented 13 Dec. 1667. L. J., XII. 169.

(c.) Order referring the same to the judges. Noted with an order for hearing, signed by Sir Matthew Hale and other judges.

(d.) 3 Feb. 1667–8. Affidavit of service of preceding order upon Spencer's solicitor.

117. Dec. 16. Transcript of record, &c. in the Writ of Error "Birch v. Fuller." (Parchment Collection.) L. J., XII. 171.

118. Dec. 16. Copy of preceding.

119. Dec. 16. Printed paper, containing a petition of Wm. Carr to the House of Commons. Complains that being clerk to one of the troops of the Life-Guard, and having advanced large sums of money for the troops, Charles Lord Gerard of Brandon, their Commander, refused to account with him unless he would agree to Lord Gerard's exacting 2,000*l*. a year more than the just pay due to him, a sum which Lord Gerard has exacted out of the pay of the troops for six years. Petitioner refusing to comply with this demand, Lord Gerard threatened to ruin him and his family and to kill him, so that petitioner was forced to withdraw until the meeting of Parliament. Lord Gerard, in petitioner's absence, sent soldiers who seized his house, terrified his wife and children, and seized and brought away some of his books and writings and burned and tore the rest. Petitioner is unable to contest with a peer, and prays the Commons, the only hopes and protectors of England, to consider his lot, which may be that of any commoner under the tyranny of a great Lord, and to do therein as they shall think fit.—Then follows a statement that petitioner when coming to deliver the above petition, was with his clerk seized, wounded, and forced away by the Marshal of the Guard without warrant. [Carr for this "scandalous paper" was ordered to be fined 1,000*l*., set in the stocks, and imprisoned in the Fleet, and the paper to be burned by the bangman. L. J., XII. 171. &c. See Priv. Book 17 Dec. and Pepys, Diary 14 Sept. and 16 and 19 Dec. 1667.]

120. Dec 16. Belon's Privilege.—Petition of Peter Belon, one of His Majesty's servants in ordinary. Complains that Nicholas Maubert, having, unknown to petitioner, obtained a judgment against him for a debt of 7*l*. 10*s*. (long before satisfied), and 8*l*. costs, Lodovick London and Nicholas Gniit, two bailiffs, came in November last to levy the execution, jeered at his protection, called him "French dog," and carried him away, and also a silver standish that he was making for the Dean and Chapter of Windsor, and other goods, and made him pay 18*l*. 10*s*. before he could free them or himself. Prays the House to protect him in his privilege and to order the return of his money. L. J., XII. 172.

Annexed:—

(a.) 17 Feb. 1667–8. Petition of Lodovick London and Nicholas Keife, being under bailiffs of Westminster. The last day of last Session the sergeant-at-arms was ordered to take petitioners into custody for levying 15*l*. upon an execution against the goods of Peter Belon, one of His Majesty's servants in ordinary in the quality of a silversmith; and they are now again commanded into custody. They were quite ignorant that they were acting contrary to privilege, are heartily contrite for their offence, and pray to be discharged. L. J., XII. 186.

(b.) 17 Feb. 1667–8. Petition of Nicholas Maubert, diamond-cutter. Petitioner is a foreigner and unacquainted with the laws of England, but conceives that those he employed proceeded legally for the recovery from Peter Belon of the 7*l*. 10*s*. and 8*l*. costs due to petitioner. He is very sorry if anything uncivil has been said against the Lord Chamberlain's protection or acted towards Peter Belon by the officers who arrested him. Prays to be discharged from further attendance, and that he may not be ordered to repay the money recovered. L. J., XII. 186.

(c.) 17 Feb. 1667–8. Order for Lodovick London and Nicholas Keife to acknowledge their offence and ask pardon on their knees at the bar, and for Maubert to repay the money recovered in execution from Peter Belon. L. J., XII. 186. In extenso.

(d.) 4 March 1667–8. Affidavit of Peter Belon that Nicholas Maubert refuses to obey the order of the House for repayment of the money due to deponent. L. J., XII. 197.

121. Dec. 17. Chamberlaine v. Chamberlaine.—Petition of John and Thomas Chamberlaine, sons of Richard Chamberlaine, deceased, late Clerk of the Court of Wards. Pray for reversal of a decree in Chancery made in 1663 in a suit brought against them by Richard, son of their eldest brother, Richard Chamberlaine, contrary to an agreement made with petitioners and their father for preservation of their estate in the time of the late wars. Noted, Dismissed. [See Pet. Book, 31 March 1668.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 18 Feb. 1667–8. Petition of Richard Chamberlaine, Esq^r., for further time to make his defence to the petition of John and Thomas Chamberlaine, as his counsel are on circuit.

(b.) Copy of order of the Committee for petitions of 17 Dec. 1667, for the hearing of the case. Appended to preceding.

122. Dec. 17. Petition of Nathaniel Eldred, merchant. Petitioner, a subject of England, was employed in Scotland as commissary of provisions under the Duke of Albemarle from 1650 until 1663, about affairs only relating to the English army, and also as commissioner for prizes taken in the former war by English ships only, having in his employments nothing to do with the affairs of Scotland. On the 29th of January 1662–3 petitioner obtained a decree in the Exchequer of England discharging him of all his accounts, as also of the real and personal securities given by him in Scotland to the behoof of the then pretended State of England for the respective balances of his accounts. This decree was exhibited to the Judicature of Scotland, which in contempt thereof, passed a sentence against petitioner on the 14th of July 1663 for 1,200*l*., which supposes him to be so much in arrear in his accounts of provisions and prize goods, and in pursuance of this unjust sentence all petitioner's estate in Scotland, worth above 3,000*l*., has been seized, and his children and family turned out of doors. Petitioner has complained to the King and Council in England, who after hearing him and those who appeared for the interest of Scotland, ordered that he should be restored to all his estate; but this answer was returned from Scotland, That from the supreme judicature of that kingdom (in matters civil) there is no appeal to His Majesty by the laws of that nation, their sentence being ultimately definitive. Petitioner, who is utterly without remedy but by Parliament, prays to be relieved in all his losses and damages by reason of the illegal and unjust sentence of the Judicature of Scotland. [Read this day before the Committee for Petitions and dismissed on the 18 Feb. following, by 4 votes to 4, on the ground that it related to a judgment given in Scotland. See Pet. Book.]

123. Dec. 18. Prisoners for debt.—Commons Engrossment of an Act for the relief of poor prisoners for debt. Parchment Collection. [The substance of this is embodied in the Act of 1671 (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 20.) ss. 1, 3, 4, 5. Brought from the Commons and read 1st this day, read 2^d, but not further proceeded with, though the Commons sent a message to remind the Lords of the Bill. L. J., XII. 175, &c. See also 341.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Proviso, being section 6 of above Act.

124. Dec. 18. E. Northumberland's Privilege.—Affidavit of James Robson that Luke Dod and Charles Robson, Yeomen, did in July last take forcible possession of certain lands in Tindale, Northumberland, which have for the last forty years been in the quiet possession of the Earls of Northumberland. L. J., XII. 175.

Annexed:—

(a.) 18 Dec. Similar affidavit of Dame Mary Charlerton.

(b.) 17 Feb. 1667-8. Draft motion for calling in witnesses to support the charge against Dod.

(c.) 20 Feb. 1667-8. Draft motion for the discharge of Luke Dod, Dod having acknowledged his fault in taking forcible possession of certain lands in Tindale, belonging to the Earl of Northumberland. Dod was discharged next day. L. J., XII. 191.

125. [1667.] Statement respecting the way in which Mr. Bettiscombe of Symondsbury defrauded the parson of tithes on the 7th of August.

1667-8.

126. Jan. 23. Writ of Summons to Parliament to George, Viscount Halifax.

127. Feb. 10. L. Berkeley's Privilege.—Order for John Seldon and others to appear and answer for arresting Richard Harris of Barnstable, in the county of Devon, contrary to privilege. L. J., XII. 181. In extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 10 Feb. Certificate respecting the arrest of Richard Harris.

(b.) 17 March. Affidavit of Philip Harris of Barnstable, Devon, that he shewed John Seldon the order for his appearance, who "pished" at it, and said he would consider of it. L. J., XII. 208.

128. Feb. 13. D. Newcastle's Privilege.—Petition of Richard Mason. Petitioner, a menial servant of the Duke of Newcastle, employed both in London and in the country for the management of the Duke's affairs, was yesterday arrested and imprisoned at the suit of Bold Boughey, Warden of the Fleet, contrary to privilege. Petitioner prays for an order to the Sheriffs of the City of London to set him at liberty. L. J., XII. 183.

Annexed:—

(a.) 13 Feb. Letter from Sir D. Gauden to John Browne, Clerk of the House of Lords. Richard Mason is in custody on an execution for 20,000*l.*, which sum is so considerable that the writer fears that he and his brother, now Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, will lie under great hazard unless Mason is discharged in the ancient way by the House awarding a habeas corpus to bring him to the bar, and there discharging him. This the writer prays Browne to procure, or to advise him what is fit to be done. L. J., XII. 184.

(b.) Copy of writ capias ad satisfaciendum against Mason for 20,000*l.* and 40*s.* costs.

(c.) 15 Feb. Writ of Habeas Corpus directed to the Sheriffs of London, commanding them to bring Richard Mason before the Lords in Parliament on Monday the 17th Feb. See L. J., XII. 184-6.

(d.) Return to the above writ, brought in to the House of Lords on 17th Feb., with Mason's discharge noted thereon that day. L. J., XII. 186.

(e.) 17 Feb. Petition of John Hill, Sergeant-at-mace. Petitioner is in custody for arresting Richard Mason, which he did in ignorance that Mason was a servant of the Duke of Newcastle, as Mason produced no protection or proof. Prays the House to accept his hearty contrition for his offence, and to order his speedy discharge. L. J., XII. 187.

129. Feb. 15. Certiorari Bill. First Report by the Lord Chief Justice upon the Bill to prevent abuses in granting writs of certiorari. There is no want of prosecution by granting writs of certiorari. Indictments for some offences are often removed, but not those concerning the poor. All the people of England will suffer, if such writs are taken away. The Master of the Office is bound to issue process till it come to outlawry. The party indicted is, on taking out a certiorari, bound to bring the business to trial at his own charge. The Judges always examine the cause before they grant such writs. If the defendant or person complained of, after the writ of outlawry or distraints sued out against him, do upon the writ of certiorari remove into another county, the King's Bench Office or Court may send out new writs, which the Justices of the Peace in the said county cannot do; and so the power of prosecuting the indictment, instead of being enlarged and strengthened by the Bill, is weakened and confined to a narrower compass by putting the prosecution of the premises merely into the said justices, who can go no further than their own county, whereas the King's Bench goes on all England. (Undated.) [The Chief Justice gave his evidence this day, and the Committee, after hearing further evidence on the 18th, reported that the preamble was not proved, and desired further instructions. See Com. Book, pp. 235-8. The Bill was recommitted on 13th March. L. J., XII. 294. See also 99.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 22 April 1668. Second Report upon the Bill. The Lord Chief Justice reports, that all indictments are originally in the King's Bench. The Judges get nothing by granting writs of certiorari; but if appeals did not lie there, most men would have cause to complain. Most fines to the King come from the King's Bench and Crown Office. The Act puts an impossibility upon the thing in requiring all business to end in two terms or six months. If the party appears and does not plead, a judgment is entered upon a nilhil dicit; if he pleads, he is bound to carry it down at his own charge. Mr. Justice Twisden reports, that the bill aims at the taking away of all appeals. If a man be put into possession upon a writ of habeas possessionem, he may, by a Justice of the Peace living twenty miles off, be put out for a forcible entry, and no certiorari to be had. When the business is ready for trial, a procedendo loses all. The King's Bench is the speediest way. The Bill will increase the fees of the Clerks of the Peace, and is driven on by them to the ruin of the nation. [The latter adds in his evidence this day that indictments for bastard children are very rarely removed, and that no certiorari should be granted without cause expressed. The Committee reported that the House should hear the Judges' reasons against the Bill, and give the Committee further directions. See Com. Book, pp. 273-4.]

130. Feb. 15. Affidavit of John Scager that Robert Wood and others have cut the banks through in divers places at Saltfleet Haven to let in the sea, and made dams over the ditches, &c. L. J., XII. 185.

131. Feb. 18. Leather Bill.—Petition of the tanners frequenting the Market of Leadenhall, London, in behalf of themselves and the tanners of England; praying the House to pass the Bill for giving liberty to buy and export leather and skins tanned. L. J., XII. 187. [The Bill here referred to received the royal assent on 9 May. 19 & 20 Car. II. c. 10. This petition was read before the Committee on the 19th, and the tanners deposed that leather, before it came to the shoemakers, yielded a very small profit; that there was a glut of leather in the market; that it was sold at 10*l.* instead of 22*l.*; that bark now sold at 30*s.* instead of 45*s.*, and was heretofore valued at the 5th part of the purchase of timber. The Bill was opposed by the Cordwainers and Curriers on the ground that the best hides would be exported and the worst kept; that the supply was not in excess of the demand of the manufacturers here; that the wages of journeymen had already risen through the plague and fire; that leather was cheaper abroad; and that prices here would rise; and that the export of manufactured leather was more profitable than that of unmanufactured. See Com. Book, pp. 233, &c.]

132. Feb. 19. Petition of Edward King, of Gray's Inn in the county of Middlesex, Esq^r. Complains that, he having obtained judgment at common law against W^m Standish, upon a bond for securing petitioner in possession of certain lands at Rowston, Lincolnshire, Standish brought a suit in Chancery to impeach the judgment, contrary to statute, as petitioner pleaded; but the Earl of Clarendon, then Lord Chancellor, not only overruled this plea, but compelled petitioner to deliver Standish out of execution, and caused the judgment to be vacated. Petitioner prays for redress from the House. [Endorsed, Nothing ordered.]

133. Feb. 20. Fitzwalter Peerage.—Petition of Benjamin Mildmay, Esq^r to the King, claiming the barony of Fitzwalter.—Endorsed with the King's reference thereof to the House of Peers, signed by the King and the Lord Arlington. L. J., XII. 189. In extenso. See also MS. Minutes, 1, 7, 21, and 27 April 1668.

Annexed:—

(a.) 19 Jan. 1669-70. Copy of an Order in Council adjudging the barony of Fitzwalter to Benjamin Mildmay, Esq^r, who claimed the barony "as cousin and heir general unto Robert, first Lord Fitzwalter in the direct line, as being a barony by writ." Robert Cheeke opposed Mildmay's claim, affirming that it was a barony by tenure, and ought to go along with the land. The Council, deciding that a barony by tenure has "been discontinued for many ages, and not in being, and so not fit to be revived, or to admit any pretence of right to succession thereupon," and that "half blood was no impediment to the descent of a dignity to an heir general," adjudged the barony to Mildmay (who took his seat on 14 Feb. following). See L. J., XII. 288, &c.

(b.) Pedigree of Benjamin, Lord Fitzwater. See Priv. Book, 28 Feb. and 7 March 1669-70, when the question of his precedence was considered by the Committee for Privileges. L. J., XII. 303.

134. Feb. 20. Statement on behalf of Charles, Duke of Richmond and Lennox, that he having, as he conceives, good title to certain lands in Huntingdonshire, with the tithes, his tenants have been sued for tithes contrary to privilege by Charles Ashfordby, prebendary of Leighton. L. J., XII. 189.

135. Feb. 22. Petition of Dame Ann Roos. About nine years ago petitioner married John, Lord Roos, and brought him 10,000*l.* besides plate and jewels, in lieu of which a jointure of 1,500*l.* per annum was settled upon her; but Lord Roos, conceiving great displeasure against petitioner, has, in her absence, obtained an Act of Parliament to make the children which he had by her illegitimate. By the same Act the estate which she claims in reversion, after the Earl of Oxford's life, is saved to her and her children, but she cannot dispose thereof during the life of Lord Roos. Petitioner has not for four years past had one penny from Lord Roos, has been reduced to great want, forced to leave her native country that her friends and relations might not be eye-witnesses of her misery, and whilst in Ireland could not come over to vindicate her honour from the horrid and false aspersions cast upon her, which she is ready to do if their Lordships will give her leave. She is daily in danger of being arrested for debts, some contracted while she was living with her husband. She implores the justice and favour of the House to order Lord Roos to pay her reasonable debts contracted while she lived with him, and since she last received any maintenance from him; to give her a yearly maintenance proportionable to the portion she brought with her; and to enable her to dispose of her own estate during his life, that so she may provide subsistence for herself and her children, and preserve herself out of gaol. L. J., XII. 191. See also 20 and 263.

136. Feb. 24. Petition of Robert Earl of Lindsey, Lord Great Chamberlain of England, Thomas Earl of Berkshire and Elizabeth his wife, Henry Earl of Stamford [Stamford] and Anne his wife, which Elizabeth and Anne were sisters and co-heirs of Diana, late Countess of Oxford, deceased. Claim the honour and manor of Hedingham alias Hemmingham against Brian Viscount Cullen in the Kingdom of Ireland, and Elizabeth his wife, grandchild and heir of Francis Trentham, and pray to be reheard at the Bar upon the proceedings in Chancery and elsewhere. L. J., XII. 192 and 211.

Annexed:—

(a.) 30 March 1668. Answer of Brian, Lord Viscount Cullen, in the realm of Ireland, and of Elizabeth, Viscountess Cullen, his wife. Respondents claim the manor of Hedingham, Essex, as heirs of Francis Trentham, brother of Elizabeth, relict of Edward, late Earl of Oxford, under a settlement made by the Countess, who purchased the manor in her own or her trustees' names. Respondents' title has been already proved by legal trial, the possession of the manor has for the last fifty-nine years gone according to the settlement, and there is no suspicion of fraud. Respondents therefore pray that the petitioners may be left to their remedy in the ordinary courts of law and equity. L. J., XII. 211.

137. Feb. 28. Petition of John Norden, Esq^r. Prays to be relieved against a decree in Chancery in a suit between him and Thomas Hawles, respecting a lease of a warren and certain lands in the County of Wilts belonging to the Earl of Pembroke. L. J., XII. 193. Endorsed as read before the Committee on 3 March. See also 142.

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 Feb. Petition of Thomas Hawles in answer to preceding. Read before Committee 3 March.

138. Feb. 29. Draft of an Act for the improvement of the forest of Ashdown and the park called the Broyle Park (in the County of Sussex). The park having been laid waste during the late troubles, the Bill proposes to appoint Commissioners with power to enclose the forest after making compensation by allotment to the Commons. [Passed the Lords, but was dropped in the Commons. L. J., XII. 194, &c. See Com. Book, pp. 263-5.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to preceding made 10 April 1668.

139. March 2. Pory v. Juxon.—Petition of Robert Pory, Clerk, Archdeacon of Middlesex. On the death of Dr. Lewis, late Master of St. Crosse, petitioner entered a caveat with the Bishop of Winchester to prevent the admission of any clerk to the mastership until petitioner had been heard; notwithstanding which a writ of quære impedit has been served upon the Bishop by Sir William Juxon, for delaying admission to his clerk upon a pretended right of presentation, without citing petitioner to show cause for his caveat. In pursuance of the writ, Sir William Juxon has proceeded in the Court of Common Pleas, making petitioner a party to the suit without serving him with any summons or notice, and has thus surreptitiously obtained judgment and execution upon a pretended default. All these proceedings have been taken during the sitting of Convocation, and are contrary to petitioner's privilege as clerk and member of that House, by virtue of an Act of the 8th year of Edward VI. Petitioner prays that all the proceedings in the suit may be superseded, and that the judgment and execution thereupon illegally obtained may be reversed. L. J., XII. 195. Nelson's Chan. Rep., p. 137. See also 102 (a.)

Annexed:—

(a.) 2 March. Draft order upon preceding petition, setting aside the proceedings of Sir Wm. Juxon. L. J., XII. 195. In extenso.

(b.) 23 April 1668. Petition of Sir William Juxon. Robert Pory, Archdeacon of Middlesex, has presented a petition complaining of a judgment obtained by petitioner against the Bishop of Winchester for not admitting Dr. John Bargrave to the Mastership of St. Crosse. Petitioner, as executor to his uncle, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, who had the right to the next presentation to the mastership upon the death of Dr. Lewes, presented Dr. John Bargrave, a learned and reverend man, who had been petitioner's tutor, and accompanied him in his travels. Dr. Bargrave thereupon made application to the Bishop of Winchester to be admitted, but was refused on account of a caveat put in by Dr. Pory, whom, being already Archdeacon of Middlesex, parson of Hadham in Hertfordshire, parson of Lambeth in Surrey, residentiary prebendary in Paul's, London, prebendary in Chichester, and having a donation called Hollingborne in Kent, petitioner conceived he could not without scandal present. Dr. Pory had notice served upon him, but did not appear to defend the suit or claim his privilege as by law he ought to do (otherwise no notice is to be taken by the judges at law), but suffered judgment to pass against him. Prays that the order made upon Pory's petition may be set aside. L. J., XII. 230.

140. March 2. Ravenscroft v. Lenthall.—Petition of Thomas Ravenscroft and Dorothea his wife. Petitioner Dorothea, in 1663, brought an action against Sir John Lenthall, Marshal of the King's Bench, for 170*l.* for the escape of Wm. Bingham, and after many delays obtained a judgment against him (confirmed upon writ of error), and at length an order for sequestration of his office, but has never been able to get above 20*l.* As Sir John Lenthall is an officer of the Court of King's Bench, petitioners cannot have the same remedies against him as against other persons; he is very aged, and if he die petitioners' debt will be lost. Pray for a hearing at the bar and for relief. L. J., XII. 195.

Annexed:—

(a.) 5 March. Petition and answer of Sir John Lenthall to preceding. William Bingham, a very poor man, died in the common side prison under the custody of petitioner, in execution at the suit of Dorothy Gifford, who sued petitioner for Bingham's escape. Dorothy has since married Thomas Ravenscroft, under an agreement with whom petitioner has paid 50*l.*, and if more is due Ravenscroft can proceed in the King's Bench. Petitioner therefore prays that the matter may be referred to the law. L. J., XII. 198.

(b.) 10 March. Petition of Sir John Lenthall, Knight. Prays that the hearing of Thomas Ravenscroft's case against him may be put off for a fortnight, as his witnesses are in the country. L. J., XII. 201.

141. March 3. Aulnage Bill.—Amended Draft of an Act for ascertaining the duties of subsidy and aulnage. Recites that in the reign of Edward III. the length and breadth of pieces of cloth were prescribed by law, being 28 yards by six quarters for cloth of ray, and 26 yards by six and a half quarters for coloured cloth; and every piece of cloth sold had to pay to the King an aulnage of one halfpenny, and a subsidy of six pence if of grain, five pence if of half grain, and four pence if there was no grain. In course of time the laws prescribing the size of cloth were repealed, new kinds of cloth were manufactured, and the King was thus defrauded of his revenue, especially since the late troubles and disorders. The Bill therefore provides that all woollen and worsted stuffs offered for sale, of whatever size or make, shall pay the duties of aulnage and subsidy after the rate, and mixed goods shall have an allowance made them for the weight of hair, silk, thread, &c. mixed with the wool. All such manufactured goods are to be sealed by the Aulnager of the County where they are manufactured, or in default to be forfeited, one half to the king and the other to any one suing for the same. Goods specially protected by Act are, however, exempted. [Read 1st this day, passed the Lords, but thrown out in the Commons. L. J., XII. 196. C. J., IX. 84. See Con. Book, 183, 250, 255, and 265-6 for evidence taken before the Committee, chiefly on behalf of the Norwich clothiers against the Bill.]

142. March 3. Petition of Charles, William, and Richard Gilbert. Pray for relief against certain orders in Chancery relating to a lease of a warren and certain lands in Wilts, which it is impossible for them to obey, and under which they have been committed to the Fleet, where, without their Lordships' assistance they must spend all their lives without hope of liberty. They are now tenants of Mr. Norden (see 137), and are on that account sued by Thomas Hawles, from whom their father originally had his lease. See Cases in Chancery, I. 40, and 370. See also Pet. Book, 7 March and 21 April.

Annexed:—

(a.) 14 April, 1668. Answer of Thomas Hawles to preceding. The Gilberts were in possession of the lands in question at the date of the orders, but have since betrayed respondent's interest to Mr. Norden. Respondent leaves it to the justice of the House whether the Gilberts ought not to be enjoined to perform the orders.

143. March 4. Weld's Bill.—Engrossment of an Act for security and satisfaction of a debt due to Sir John Weld from the late Earl of Cleveland. (Parchment Collection.) [This Bill, which was opposed, was referred to a Committee, but not proceeded with. L. J., XII. 196, &c. See also 166.]

144. March 4. Precedence of Peers.—Draft of petition and address of the Peers of England to the King, praying him to establish some rule for preserving the precedence of the English peers over those of Scotland and Ireland. L. J., XII., 197. In extenso. [The preparation of the above was referred to the Committee for Privileges, and by them, to a Sub-Committee, who instructed Lord Howard of Charlton to draft it, after being supplied with extracts of previous proceedings (Annex b.) (See Priv. Book, Dec. 2 & 9, 1667.) The draft, thus settled, was reported 11 Feb., and agreed to this day by the House with amendments. These include the omission of a paragraph reciting that the nobility of Scotland and Ireland taking place in this kingdom without regard to the precedence due to the English peerage "was occasioned by the civility of the English peers paid to such noblemen as for some short time, and in no great numbers, repaired hither. But since not only many of the said nobility have constant residence in England, and enjoy places and employments of great advantage and profit amongst us, but also their number is much increased by the addition of those whose families, habitations, and estates are really English, and yet pretend to a precedence of the peers of this realm." For previous proceedings on the complaint of Lord Darcy, which gave rise to this address, see L. J., XII. 28, &c.]

Annexed:—

145. March 4. Administrators' Bill.—Amended Draft of an Act for the continuing and due ordering of the accounts of administrators. Provides that the Judges of the Prerogative and Ecclesiastical Courts may require bonds from administrators, and otherwise compel them to distribute the funds in their hands according to law. [This Bill passed the Lords, but was dropped in the Commons. L. J., XII. 197, &c. Con. Book, p. 258. See also 167 for engrossments of this Bill.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Statement of proceedings on the Bill. On the 6th of April 1668 the bill was read a third time, after being engrossed, but upon the reading it was observed that one amendment was omitted, and the House thereupon not only entered into a consideration of the way of putting in the amendment, but also took occasion to admit a debate of the matter of the bill; and concluding that the bill read was not the bill intended (by reason of the omission), gave direction to the Judges to prepare a proviso for settling an equality of distribution of intestates' estates, and that the bill should be amended in that part where the omission was. On the 9th of April, the Bill being now engrossed, the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench tendered a proviso, which not being considered full enough, he was directed to amend it against the next day. The House also thought fit to omit the whole preamble of the Bill, and make an alteration in the title. On the 10th April the Lord Chief Justice brought in the amended proviso, giving the widow a moiety where there are no children, and the heir (notwithstanding land) a share of the personal estate; he also proposed certain amendments, to which the House agreed, and thereupon the Bill and proviso were engrossed again, and the Bill thus amended was read the third time and passed.

(b.) Amendments made by the Committee on the Bill. Reported 3 April 1668. See MS. Minutes.

146. March 5. Amended Draft of an Act for the better securing of a portion of 5,000*l.* to and for the Lady Frances Savile, an infant, daughter of Thomas, late Earl of Sussex, deceased, out of part of the estate of James, Earl of Sussex, also an infant, in pursuance of the will of the said Thomas, Earl of Sussex. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 9th of May 1668. L. J., XII. 198, &c. 20 Car. II. c. 7, in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 3 March. Certificate of Benjamin Weston, one of the overseers named in the will of Thomas, late Earl of Sussex, that he assents to the Bill (Bill considered in Committee 18 March).

147. March 7. E. Berkshire's Privilege.—Petition of Thomas, Earl of Berkshire, one of the peers of this House. On the 28th of March 1666 Ralph Marshall and John and James Tisser, violently assailed petitioner, pulling and hauling him with such violence that he was forced in his defence to beat in his assailants into his dwelling house, whither they retired in great haste. This happened about four o'clock in the afternoon, and the season being very cold, petitioner went into his coach, which stood in the yard, to shelter himself from the cold, which towards evening grew to be very much, when, in addition to their former violence, his assailants came behind the coach, and joining their hands and force together, opened the gate of the court and drove petitioner and coach together into the street, upon which the neighbours rose upon them and drove them back again into the house, leaving petitioner in the street in his coach, where he had been forced to lodge all night had it not been for the charity of Mrs. Elizabeth Bordenman, a servant of long continuance to the Countess of Exeter, the mother of petitioner's wife. Prays that the offenders may be sent for. L. J., XII. 199, 200. [The MS. Minutes of 9 March 1667-8 record that no order was made, as the matter took place after the prerogative, and was outside the Privilege of Parliament.]

148. March 9. Freedom of Speech in Parliament.—Transcript of record, &c. in the Writ of Error brought in to reverse the judgment given in 1629 against Sir John Eliot, Benjamin Valentine, and Denzell, now Lord Holles, in pursuance of the votes of the 11th of Decr

150. March 10. Petition of Margaret Whithorne, widow. Prays for revivor, against James Edwards and others, of a suit in Chancery, brought many years ago by petitioner as administratrix of Benjamin Decrow against Adam Edwards respecting a lease of the manor of Rushenden, Kent. [Dismissed by Committee for Petitions by 5 votes to 3. See Pet. Book, 7 and 9 April 1668. See also Reports in Chancery, I. 173.]

151. March 11. Vernon v. Sir J. Lenthall.—Petition of Grace Vernon. Petitioner, having lent 300*l.* to George Farington upon bond in 1659, obtained a judgment against him for 600*l.* and costs, of which he paid 100*l.* Under this judgment he was afterwards taken in execution and committed to the custody of Sir John Lenthall, and by him suffered to escape. After long and tiresome suits, petitioner in 1664 obtained a judgment against Sir John Lenthall for 500*l.* and costs; but he brought a writ of error, which delayed petitioner until 1666, when the judgment was affirmed. Wearied with delays, she then made an agreement with Sir John Lenthall to accept 300*l.* in satisfaction of her whole claim; but Sir John Lenthall, after paying 200*l.*, delays and refuses to give her any further satisfaction. She prays that he may be ordered to attend the House, and that relief may be given her. L. J., XII. 202. [See also Pet. Book, 9 April, for arguments in this matter.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 26 March 1668. Answer of Sir John Lenthall to preceding. He acknowledges the statements in her petition to be true, and says that he is willing to pay the remaining 100*l.* as soon as he can raise the money, but that he is at present out of moneys, having lately paid great debts for other persons. He is ready to prove this, and prays to be dismissed. L. J., XII. 209.

(b.) 26 March 1668. Order referring Grace Vernon's case against Sir John Lenthall to the Committee for Petitions. L. J., XII. 209.

152. March 12. Petition of George Boreman, of London, Esq^r. Petitioner, having obtained judgment for a debt against Francis Craddock, under which Craddock was committed to the custody of Sir John Lenthall, warned Sir John to keep him safely, but instead Craddock was permitted to go at large, and is now in the island of Barbadoes. Petitioner has obtained a judgment against Sir John Lenthall for the debt for suffering Craddock to escape, but the judgment is of no use as Sir John Lenthall is in the nature of a prisoner in his own prison, and stirs not abroad. This is not a particular grievance of petitioner, but one of many others also. Prays for satisfaction from Sir John Lenthall, or that he may be sequestered from his office of Marshal of the King's Bench prison. L. J., XII. 203.

153. March 13. Petition of Sir Dennis Gaden, Knt., and Sir Thomas Stephens, Knt., in the behalf of themselves and the freeholders, tenants, and inhabitants of the several parishes of Yate, Market [Chipping] Sodbury, Old Sodbury, and Little Sodbury, in the County of Gloucester. Petitioners pray to be heard by Counsel against the bill now before the House for enclosing part of the wastes of the manor of Horton, which is very prejudicial to them. L. J., XII. 204. [Endorsed, "Against Mr. Paston's Bill." See Com. Book, p. 268. The bill referred to received the Royal assent. 20 Car. II. c. 5, in List of Private Acts, &c.]

154. March 13. Herbert v. Sir J. Lenthall.—Petition of Zouch Herbert. Petitioner is a prisoner in the King's Bench prison, but upon what just ground he knows not, as the execution against him has been discharged. On the night of the 17th of January last he was barbarously assaulted by about twenty-two persons, servants and retainers of Sir John Lenthall, who with their flaming links burnt his face, and his hair almost off, sorely bruising and wounding him with their clubs, with no warrant but the verbal order of Sir John Lenthall; and in this condition they hurried him away and thrust him into the most noisome part of Bridewell, and for two days refused his wife admission to visit him and take care of his wounds. Petitioner, who is reduced to great poverty by his wrongs, and not able to prosecute the matter in the ordinary chargeable course of law, prays the House to examine this unparalleled act of cruelty committed so near the fountain of justice and appeal, and to give him reparation. L. J., XII. 204.

Annexed:—

(a.) Statement of witnesses in support of preceding, dated 20 Jan. 1667-8. See also 161 (a).

(b.) 18 March. Answer of Sir John Lenthall to the petition of Zouch Herbert. Herbert was committed in 1665 to respondent's custody in execution at the suit of John Sharpe for 29*l.*, and upon giving security was permitted to lodge in the rules of the King's Bench prison. In April last, upon pretence that Sharpe was dead, Herbert procured some one to take out letters of administration of Sharpe's goods, and as administrator to discharge him out of custody. It was afterwards proved that Sharpe was living, and Herbert was again committed under the execution, and notwithstanding his assuaulting respondent's son he was put on the Master's side of the prison, and treated with all civility until he became so unruly and mutinous that it was necessary to remove him to the common side. Here he made such quarrels and disturbances that the other prisoners begged for his removal, and respondent accordingly sent some of his servants without any weapons in the evening to remove him to another house within the rules, when Herbert, having got a dangerous weapon, assaulted the servants and wounded three of them, one so seriously that he was in danger of death. Herbert was removed and put in irons for two or three days, but neither his wife nor any of his relations were refused admission to him. Respondent is ready to prove these statements, and prays to be dismissed. L. J., XII. 209.

(c.) 18 March. Petition of Zouch Herbert. Petitioner, falling dangerously sick by his confinement in Bridewell, the Master took security from him, Sir John Lenthall also having security, and thereupon suffered him to be carried home to use means for his recovery; but as soon as Sir John was served with the order of the House made upon petitioner's complaint of ill-usage, he ordered him to be fetched out of bed and returned to the dungeon in Bridewell. Petitioner prays that he may have the benefit of his house, which is within the rules, for recovery of his health. See MS. Minutes of date.

(d.) 20 March. Letter from Sir John Lenthall to the Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, informing him of the mutinous and violent conduct of Zouch Herbert, as set out in Lenthall's answer to Herbert's petition. The servants could not be blamed if they struck him on the face with their links and burned his periwig. The house to which he was removed was the White Lion; he has sworn the death of Lenthall's son Thomas, and used opprobrious language towards the writer.

(e.) 30 March 1668. Petition of Zouch Herbert.—Sir John Lenthall's answer to petitioner's complaint is altogether untrue. Prays for a hearing before Sir John is dismissed. L. J., XII. 211. MS. Minutes of date.

(f.) 30 March 1668. Petition of Sir John Lenthall, Knight, Marshal of the King's Bench. Petitioner has above a hundred prisoners in his custody, who are in execution for above 40,000*l.*, and lie on the common side, from whom petitioner can have no advantage, yet if any of them make their escape, he is liable for their debts. Zouch Herbert, a prisoner on the common side, has several times mutinied and committed disorders, and especially on the 17th of January last set the whole house in a mutiny, and fell upon the officers and keepers, and beat and wounded them to the danger of their lives; and the other prisoners, encouraged by his example, have several times mutinied, and especially on the 27th of this month fell into great disorder, beating and wounding one another, threatening to break the house open if petitioner did not remove one Allen, to prevent which petitioner was obliged to set a great watch at the gate, lest they should escape, and he be ruined by being charged with their debts, not daring to take such course as they do in other prisons to appease such mutinies, lest he should be undone on the other hand by being put to vast charges in attending their Lordships to defend himself against unjust complaints, which the prisoners will make if he meddles with them. Petitioner prays that Herbert may be ordered to bring his case to a hearing, and if he prove not his complaint, that an order may be made not only for his punishment, but such as will vindicate petitioner, terrify the prisoners from further attempts of the like nature, and encourage petitioner to go on in performing his duty.

(g.) 14 April 1668. Report from the Committee for Petitions upon Zouch Herbert's cause against Sir John Lenthall. Herbert's carriage has been very foul and malicious; his complaints only from malice; and what was done by Sir John Lenthall and his officers was no other than what they might legally do. [See Pet. Book under date for evidence given before the Committee.]

155. March 14. Engrossment of an Act to enable Jane and Henry Perkins to insure lands purchased by Thomas Wharton, Doctor in Physic, in the County Palatine of Durham. (Purchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day. Read 1st, 2nd, and committed. No further proceeding. L. J., XII. 205, &c. The Bill, however, was ordered to be reported (Com. Book 276), and a subsequent Bill with the same title received the Royal assent. 22 Car. II. cap. 22, in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

156. March 17. Irish Cattle.—Paper of amendments to the additional Bill against the importation of foreign cattle. L. J., XII. 207. [On 9 Nov. 1667 a committee was appointed to examine into practices to elude the Act 18 & 19 Car. II. cap. 2, against the importation of foreign cattle, and its proceedings are given in Com. Book, pp. 206, 218-19. Evidence was given of Welsh coalmasters exchanging their coal for Irish cattle. On the 4th Dec. a new Bill was offered to the Committee by the L. Delamere, and was, on the 6th referred to the Judges, who were to draw up an additional Act to make the importation felony, taking care not to weaken the force of the word "nuisance" in the former Act. (See also Com. Book, 244.) The additional Bill was accordingly brought in on the 5th March 1667-8, considered by the Committee, who added several penalties (see Com. Book, 245-8), and received the Royal assent. 19 & 20 Car. II. cap. 12. See also 21.]

157. March 17. Bilton v. Wilson.—Petition of John Bilton. In 1655 Benjamin Bressy, being indebted to petitioner and others to the amount of 20,000*l.*, made over to them the manor of Kynedale and other lands formerly belonging to Duke Hamilton, with divers ships, goods, &c., for satisfaction of the debt; but Anthony Wilson, by petition to the then Council, procured an illegal sequestration of the estate for the benefit of all the creditors, under which petitioner was forced to come to an agreement to take certain coal pits and salt works for a term of nine years, and out of the profits to repay himself 1,350*l.*, 200*l.* to Wilson, and a further sum to William Welsh, another creditor; but before the money was due to Wilson and Welsh, and after petitioner had been at great expense, and had coal and salt ready for sale, the works, coal, and salt were seized and sequestered by an illegal command of the then usurping powers, as part of the estate of another person, the proceeds being paid, as petitioner had heard, to Anthony Wilson, then Treasurer of Sequestrations in Scotland. Until His Majesty's restoration Wilson, knowing petitioner's right, never troubled him for the 200*l.*, but now Duke Hamilton has entered on the lands, and an Act of oblivion for discharge of accountants has been passed, so that petitioner cannot sue Wilson or the other sequestrators, while Wilson has obtained a judgment against petitioner for the 200*l.*, from which he can obtain no relief in Chancery. He prays the House to give him relief, as he is debarred of relief elsewhere. [See Pet. Book under date, and 7 and 21 April. The matter dropped with the session, but a subsequent petition was dismissed. See Pet. Book, 1 March 1669-70.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 7 April 1668. Answer of Anthony Wilson to preceding. He denies all imputations of unfair dealing; his only delay was out of forbearance towards Bilton. He has obtained judgment in his favour both at law and in equity, and prays that the petition may be dismissed and he be no longer stopped from the receipt of his money.

158. March 17. Ballast office.—Petition of Edward Panton. The late King, in the 12th year of his reign, bestowed upon petitioner the office of sole ballasting of ships and cleansing of the river Thames, which petitioner assigned to Mr. Smith and others, upon payment of 500*l.* upon the sealing of the patent, and 100*l.* per annum during the continuance of the grant. The patentees, however, refusing to pay the 100*l.* per annum, petitioner proceeded against them in the Court of Requests, and obtained judgment; but shortly after, the late unhappy disorders interrupted the receipt of the 100*l.* per annum, and the office itself was by the usurped powers given to the Trinity House Company, who held and enjoyed it until His Majesty's restoration, when Colonel Carlos, to whom the reversion of the office had been promised by His Majesty, wishing to vest the immediate interest in himself, compounded with the patentees or their assigns for the seven years unexpired of their term, agreed to pay petitioner 100*l.* per annum, and so, by consent of all parties, obtained a new grant of the office for 31 years. Petitioner, after this, expected to receive the 100*l.* per annum, and doubts not that he would have done so had not the late Lord Chancellor compelled Colonel Carlos to surrender his patent, and made a new grant thereof to the Trinity House Company, subject to a rent of 400*l.* to His Royal Highness (the Duke of York), and 600*l.* to Carlos, without any provision for petitioner, though his Lordship could not pretend to be unknowing of petitioner's interest, as he had been his counsel in obtaining the decree in the Court of Requests. Petitioner, who is not relievable elsewhere, prays the House to order him payment of 100*l.* per annum during the continuance of the term granted to the Trinity House Company. [See Pet. Book 17 April. The matter seems to have dropped.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Answer of the master, wardens, and assistants of the Trinity House of Deptford Strand to the petition of Edward Panton, Esquire. With respect to the granting of the patent to Smith and others, the defendants refer to the documents, if such there be; but they say that the patent was obtained by the patentees by alleging that they had invented an engine for cleansing the river, which was found to be useless, and by alleging that there was no grant of the patent to any others, whereas the office had been long before granted to the Trinity House Corporation, who accordingly refused to permit the patentees to exercise the office. Several suits being commenced about the question, which were not concluded by reason of the late troubles, the Corporation till then holding the office by good title as they are advised since the 36th year of Queen Elizabeth, under a grant from the Lord High Admiral (to whom the office then belonged), for the endowment of the hospital for poor decayed and maimed seamen, and not, as is falsely alleged, receiving the office from the usurped powers, by whom the corporation was dissolved, afterwards, at the restoration, re-assumed the office until they were again disturbed by the assignees of Mountjoy, the surviving patentee; but after controversy both before the House of Lords and in inferior courts, the House, on the 19th of June 1660, ordered that the Corporation should be quieted in possession of the office, until ejected by course of law. But Colonel Carlos having succeeded in obtaining a grant of the office from the King, further controversy arose, which was by consent of all parties referred to His Royal Highness (the Duke of York), the Duke of Albemarle, and the late Lord Chancellor, and by them it was decided that the Corporation should enjoy the office upon payment of 800*l.* to the patentees, and of 1,000 marks per annum for thirty-one years to Colonel Carlos, the Corporation receiving some further privileges from his Majesty. The other allegations in Panton's petition are either untrue or do not affect the Corporation, for if Panton made any agreement with Carlos he can have remedy at law against him, for it would be unjust to charge the office with any further payment under a pretended agreement to which the Corporation were no parties. Defendants therefore pray that the petition may be dismissed with costs. [See Pet. Book, 7 April. For earlier proceedings here referred to, see L. J., XI. 28-188, and Pet. Book, 15 and 17 May and 12 June 1660.]

159. March 17. Primatt v. Good.—Petition of Josiah Primatt, citizen of London, and Anne his wife, sister and heir of John Hulks (Hulse), of Northall, Middlesex, deceased, and of Lettice, his daughter, also deceased. Complain that Charles Good, of Malden, Surrey, enticed from her home and secretly married, by the practice of Dr. Braboner, minister of Northall, Lettice, the only child of John Hulks, who was then only 18 years of age, and entitiled by settlement to the manors of Northall [Northolt] and Ruislip; that he induced her, not knowing what she was doing, to levy a fine of these manors when she was still under age, which passed unobserved, partly because the pestilence was then very hot, and partly because her acknowledgement of the fine was taken by Captain Wm. Frampton and Captain Thos. Salisbury, two very improper persons for the purpose. She died in 1667, only 14 days after she had attained the age of 21, and Good now claims the manors under the fine thus obtained by fraud. The Court of Common Pleas has fined and imprisoned Good, but cannot vacate the fine because it was not complained of in the same term in which it was levied. Petitioners pray the House to summon Good to answer, and to restore them to their just rights and inheritance. [See Pet. Book under date and 3 April, when it was decided by 14 votes to 5 not to hear counsel, and the petition was dismissed.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 3 April 1668. Answer of Charles Good. His wife Lettice, though not of age, well knew what she was doing when she levied the fine. She lived about two months after she came of age, and expressed her approbation of what she had done in the presence of witnesses near the time of her death. There was no combination with Dr. Braborne; the Commissioners for taking the fine were examined in Court and cleared of any irregularity. Prays that the petition may be dismissed with costs. See Pet. Book under date.

(b.) 3 April 1668. Answer of William Frampton and Thomas Salusbury. In taking the acknowledgments of Charles Good and Lettice, his wife, to the fine, they acted without fraud, and under the advice of Arthur Trevor, a Counsellor at Law, not being themselves experienced in law. They took Lettice Good aside, and examined her privately, and she freely consented to the fine; they may not have asked her her age, but she looked and talked as if she were three or four and twenty. See Pet. Book under date.

(c.) 3 April 1668. Answer of Wm. Braborne, Doctor in Divinity, vicar of Northall. At the time of John Hulkes' death, Lettice, his only child, was about seven years old, and was left under the guardianship of her mother, who afterwards married Christopher, now Sir Christopher, Eyre. Lettice, when older, was very ill-treated, any person who came to visit her being discouraged for fear they should make love to her, the intention being, as she thought, to keep her unmarried till she was twenty-one, and then to put her off with 1,500*l.*, and get a conveyance of her estate to Sir Christopher and his heirs. Respondent, as Chaplain to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, was seldom at Northall, but when there Lady Eyre and Lettice herself several times asked him to help her to a husband, and at her request he made inquiries in Surrey about Charles Good, then a stranger to him, who had made some applications to her, and found that he was an honest man of good quality and estate. Good and Lettice afterwards met at respondent's house, and by respondent's advice asked Lady Eyre's consent to their marriage, which was denied, whereupon respondent told Good he could advise him no further. He knew nothing of any further proceeding between them; he was not at their wedding, nor had anything to do with the settlement of Lettice's estate after marriage. Prays to be dismissed with his costs. See Pet. Book under date.

(d.) 28 Feb. 1669-70. Draft of an Act for making void certain fines unduly procured to be levied by Charles Good, Esq^r, and Lettice, his wife. The Bill recites the allegations in Primatt's petition, and prays that the fine may be set aside, as that cannot be done by the Court of Common Pleas. [Read 1st this day, and rejected on the 12th March 1669-70, after hearing counsel for Charles Good, who petitioned against the Bill. L. J., XII. 295, &c. and MS. Minutes of 12 March.]

(e.) 7 March 1669-70. Petition of Charles Good, Esq^r. Complains of the above Bill, presented on behalf of Josiah Primate and Anne his wife. The Court of Common Pleas has decided that the uses declared by the fine were very honest, and nothing can be objected against it except the minority of the said Lettice at the time. Since her death petitioner has married the daughter of Sir Robert Barnham, and made a settlement, including the lands comprised in the fine. The inheritance of thousands depends upon fines levied by minors, and it will be hard to find a precedent for setting aside such a fine by Act of Parliament. Petitioner prays that if the Bill be retained he may be heard further against it. L. J., XII. 302.

180. March 18 Affidavit of William Matchett and another, that in February last the coach and horses of the Countess of Lincoln were taken in execution for a pretended debt of thirty-two shillings and costs at the suit of Thomas Ball, contrary to privilege. L. J., XII. 208.

Endorsed, To the Earl of Anglesey. You may hereby perceive that I am sued in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench at Westminster in an action of trespass and ejectment for part of a message now in your possession. If you claim any title therein you must repair to Mr. Welby, at Clifford's Inn, and consent to a rule, plead, and make your defence, else I shall suffer judgment next term to pass against me by default, and then you will be turned out of your possession.—Yours, William Somerley. Received March 31, 1668.—Anglesey. [All the persons concerned were summoned to answer for this breach of privilege. L. J., XII. 213.]

165. April 2. Hearth money.—Commons' engrossment of an additional Act for explanation of the former Acts, and better collecting the duty of hearth money. Abuses exist in the collection of the tax, and the Bill therefore provides that stone or earthen pots, portable from place to place, used by woolcombers or others, called combers' pots, and stones, called flag stones, used in windmills and private ovens and stills, and smiths' forges or blowing-houses, and furnaces, and places in kitchens for keeping dishes warm or for stewing, and leads or coppers, and places used only for conveying the smoke or receiving the coals drawn out of any oven or furnace or from under the leads or coppers, shall not be deemed or taken to be firehearth or stoves, or be charged with the duty, and that persons living in houses with only two chimneys, firehearths, or stoves, not chargeable for payments towards the church and poor, and not having lands or tenements worth 20*o.* or goods worth 10*l.*, shall be exempt from the duty. The Bill concludes with some further provisions for the more equitable collection of the tax. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day; read 1st, 2^d, and committed, but not proceeded with, though the Commons sent to remind the Lords of the Bill. L. J., XII. 213, &c. Com. Book, pp. 270-8.]

166. April 3. Weld's Bill.—Petition of Philadelphia, Lady Wentworth, in the behalf of the Lady Henrietta Maria, her daughter. Complains of a clause, proposed by Lord Lovelace to the Bill, which affects her child's interest, and prays that the case may be heard at the bar. L. J., XII. 215. See also 143 for engrossment of Bill.

Annexed:—

(a.) Clause proposed by Lady Wentworth.

(b.) Copy of proceeding.

(c.) Amendments to the Bill agreed to by Lady Wentworth.

(d.) Clause proposed by Lord Lovelace. See Com. Book, 17 March 1667-8.

(e.) Proviso for protection of Sir Henry Crofts, of Saxham, in the County of Suffolk. See Com. Book, 17 March 1667-8.

(f.) April 14. Petition of Thomas Penuington, of Toddington, in the County of Bedford. Prays for protection of his interest under a mortgage of certain lands in Toddington. L. J., XII. 222. [The Committee on the Bill read this petition on 22 April, and examined witnesses, but as these (g.) Proviso to the Bill for the protection of Pennington.

(h.) Copy of preceding.

(i.) 21 April. Order for the meeting of the Committee on the Bill.

(k.) 22 April. Draft order of the Committee on the Bill concerning the petition of Thomas Pennington, referred to the Committee. See L. J., XII. 222.

167. April 6. Administrators Bill.—Engrossment of an Act for the due ordering of the accounts of Administrators. (Parchment Collection.) [Read 3rd this day, but being found to have omitted one of the amendments, a fresh engrossment was ordered. MS. Minutes. See also 145.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 9 April. Portion of fresh engrossment ordered as above.

(b.) Another portion of same.

(c.) 10 April. Third engrossment, omitting the preamble, as ordered on 9 April, and using the remainder of second engrossment. See MS. Minutes, 9 April.

(d.) Fourth engrossment, being fair copy of preceding, with amendments proposed by the judges marked thereon. See MS. Minutes, 10 April.

168. April 6. Duels.—Draft of an Act for preventing the fighting, carrying, and accepting of challenges and the fighting of duels. The preamble recites as follows: "Whereas it is just that reparations be made for injuries, and forasmuch as every man doth and always will believe himself injured by those who value him at a less rate than he sets upon himself, it follows that every man will to his power seek reparation from such as undervalue him, and consequently make himself judge in the questions whether such undervaluing be an injury or not, as likewise what reparation ought to be made therein, and from hence men frequently become the executors of their own judgments, and commit those pernicious acts of force commonly called duels, and in regard such persons as thus make themselves judges and executors in their own cases, at the hazard of their souls, lives, and estates, do thereby tacitly reproach his Majesty's government as defective or corrupt, which insolent scandal and contempt ought by all lawful ways and means to be suppressed; and whereas disgraceful and provoking words, gestures, and actions, the contending about place and precedence, and usurpations of arms and other ensigns of honour, have and will, unless prevented, occasion duels and other mischievous acts of force;" the Bill provides for the appointment of the Earl Marshal of England, and others as Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners to hear and determine all questions touching the point of honour between noblemen and gentlemen bearing coat armour, to punish offenders, and commit any to prison who refuse to obey their award, such award being final. The Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners are further empowered to hear and determine all questions touching precedence and the bearing of arms, crests, &c., and as the fighting of duels, though unlawful, has hitherto been erroneously reputed honourable, and all persons who refuse to accept challenges are subject to scorn and contempt, the Bill provides that any person who sends, accepts, or carries a challenge shall be made incapable of holding any degree or title of honour or precedence which he then has or which shall afterwards come to him by descent, shall be disabled from sitting in Parliament, and from holding any office ecclesiastical, civil, or military, and shall be reputed a person of dishonour and infamy, and shall be degraded by such ceremony as the Commissioners shall appoint. The not making known the receiving of a challenge within forty hours shall be considered an acceptance thereof; the killing of either principal or second in a duel shall be accounted murder, and be punished with death, and any principal or second who takes part in a duel, though no death ensue, shall forfeit all his property, real and personal, besides the penalties above imposed upon challengers and accepters of challenges. The like punishment shall be inflicted on any person who sends or accepts a challenge to fight a duel beyond seas. The Bill further provides that for the prevention of quarrels, any person under the degree of a gentleman who uses disgraceful or provoking words or gestures to any other person whatsoever, shall be liable to be indicted for the same in the Court of King's Bench, or before the Justices of Assize, &c.; provided that no peer be tried for any offence made murder by the Bill but by his peers. [This Bill was presented this day by the Duke of York, with a declaration from the King in Council that he would not hereafter pardon anyone who killed another in a duel. The Bill was afterwards referred to a Select Committee, but no report was made. L. J., XII. 216, &c.]

169. April 6. Report of the Committee for Privileges to whom it was referred to consider of and find some remedy for the absence of those Lords who totally neglect the service of the House, or go away before the rising. The Committee find that according to precedent (19 April, 7 Jac.) no Lords were to be excused but for sickness or other necessity; that (18 Edw. III.) the punishment of absent Lords was referred to the King; that (3 Edw. III.) the Bishop of Winchester was indicted in the King's Bench for departing from the Parliament at Salisbury; that (6 Rich. II.) every absent Lord, unless he could reasonably excuse himself was to be amerced; that (3 Edw. III., 31 Hen. VI., and 1 Hen. VIII.) Lords departing from the Parliament without license were fined; from which it appears how absolutely necessary the presence of the Lords in Parliament was, and how just, reasonable, and honest the excuses ought to be in case of absence. See L. J., XII. 207. Priv. Book, pp. 40-2.

170. April 6. Report from the Committee for Privileges upon the printed paper entitled the case of Sir Henry Vaughan, one of the members of the House of Commons, alleged to reflect upon the honour of Lord Lucas. The Committee have, pursuant to the order of the House of the 1st inst., examined the matter so far as relates to Mr. Jervis and others, and find that Sir Henry Vaughan was outlawed at the suit of Lord Lucas, but that his Lordship proceeded as any person legally ought to do. See L. J., XII. 213, Priv. Book, p. 41.

171. April 8. Hamburg Company.—Petition of William Whitmore, Esq^r., executor of the testament of Charles Whitmore, Esq^r., deceased. By order of Thursday last the House gave relief to Dame Dorothy Drummond and other petitioners against the Fellowship of Merchant Adventurers of England, commonly called the Hamburg Merchants. Petitioner prays that a debt due to him may be satisfied amongst the rest. [The order here referred to was made on 2 April (see L. J., XII. 214), the petition therefore must have been presented not later than the 9th. For proceedings and evidence before the Committee on the affairs of the Hamburg Company, see Com. Book, 260-282.]

172. April 7. Sir A. Zouch v. Naylor.—Petition and appeal of Sir Allen Zouch, Knight, and Dame Katherine his wife, relict and executrix of James Hobart, Esq^r., deceased. Pray for relief against certain proceedings in Chancery relating to the purchase of the manor of Steuky Hall, Norfolk, commenced in 1646. In 1647 Elizabeth Bradbury obtained a decretal order in Chancery against petitioners for 1,000*l*. and damages, a Master to take the account. All "delinquents" being required by an ordinance of the pretended powers to leave London, petitioners were forced to absent themselves, and during their absence Bradbury procured a Master to the account at 1,501*l*. and the said decretal order to be enrolled, although without date or docket to warrant the enrollment, and subsequently petitioner's estate was sequestered for the performance of the decree. There being no such decree for 1,501*l*., as is pretended, signed and enrolled, petitioners cannot bring any Bill of Review, nor have any relief in Chancery, but are only relievable by the House of Lords. They pray that the sequestration may be discharged and Sarah Naylor ordered to answer. See L. J., XII. 360, &c. and Pet. Book under date.

Annexed:—

(a.) 21 April. Answer of Sarah Naylor, widow, executrix of Anne Bedingfield, and one of the administrators of the goods of Elizabeth Bradbury not administered by Anne Bedingfield, to preceding. Respondent prays that the appeal may be dismissed, their Lordships having already given judgment in the cause in 1663, when a former petition of Sir Allen Zouch and his wife against Anne Bedingfield was dismissed after deliberate consideration of the matter. See Pet. Book, 21 and 23 April.

(b.) 25 Nov. 1669. Petition of appellants that the proceedings may be revived. See Pet. Book, 1 and 7 Dec.

(c.) Copy of order of the Master of the Rolls in the case, dated 20 June 1661, appended to preceding.

(d.) 22 Feb. 1669-70. Petition of appellants that Sarah Naylor and Francis Naylor may be ordered to answer. See Pet. Book under date.

HOUSE OF LORDS.
Calendar.
1668.

(f.) 22 March 1669-70. Answer of Francis Naylor. The decree of 1647 was only signed and enrolled, and the docket of enrollment was produced in 1666. The filing book was subsequently mislaid. Respondent never saw the book after it was returned to the custody of the clerk, and has no interest in the matters in question. See Pet. Book.

(g.) 22 March 1669-70. Answer of Sarah Naylor, widow. After reciting previous proceedings since 1646, submits that the Lord Keeper in April last, after a full hearing, refused to set aside the sequestration, which judgment, together with that of the House in 1663, concludes the matter. Prays to be dismissed. See Pet. Book.

(h.) Petition of Appellants. The late judgment of the Master of the Rolls was made on the assumption that the decree of 1647 was enrolled, there being in fact no docket to warrant it. The Committee of Petitions reported last session that there was no such decree for 1,501*l.*, and that petitioners' case was fit for relief. Pray that the Master of the Rolls may certify whether or no there be any such decree, and that the House will proceed thereon accordingly. [See Pet. Book, 8 Nov. 1670. The MS. minutes of 19 Nov. 1670 state that the Master of the Rolls at the bar satisfied the House that upon search he found a decree in "Zouch v. Bradbury." Two clerks in Chancery gave evidence that the practice was not to enrol the Master's report, but only the first decree, whereupon the report was confirmed without further decree, and process issued. The question of sequestrations in Chancery was referred this day to the Committee for Privileges. See L. J., XII. 368, 370. See also Pet. Book, 1 April and 5, 8, and 14 May for proceedings on the former appeal. The Committee then proposed a joint petition for a rehearing in Chancery.]

173. April 9. Petition of Robert Starr, of London, Merchant. Prays for relief against proceedings both at law and in equity, under which he has been taken in execution for non-payment of certain sums of money to John and Jacob Bull, as executors of John Bull, their father, petitioner being only security for Robert Downes, and the proceedings having been taken by surprise. See Pet. Book.

174. April 10. Toomes v. Etherington.—Application of Richard Toomes and Robert Etherington that the hearing of the writ of error between them may be put off. L. J., XII. 219. See also 149.

Annexed:—

(a.) 22 April. Petition of James Darcy. Petitioner is informed that, notwithstanding the parties to the writ of error are agreed, the cause is endeavoured to be brought on to be argued this day. Petitioner having purchased lands for a valuable consideration, was informed by his counsel that the vendor being indebted to William Toomes, a felo-de-se, by judgment or otherwise, was pardoned by the Act of Indemnity. He prays that before their Lordships give judgment upon the writ of error he may have time to advise with his counsel. L. J., XII. 229. (Compare Keble's Reports, I. 628.)

175. April 11. Petition of William Byron, Esquire. Prays for reversal of a decree in Chancery, and subsequent proceedings by Bill of Review in a suit brought against him by Dorothy, Judith, and Mary Balston in 1652, under which a purchase of Strelley Park and the coal mines there, in the county of Nottingham, by Nicholas Strelley is declared to be only a mortgage, and petitioner is called to account for the profits, which have been fixed at 1,955*l.* 1*l.* 8*d.* [Endorsed, Read in the Committee 29 Feb. See Pet. Book.] L. J., XII. 220.

Annexed:—

(a.) 11 April. Petition of the defendants, the Balstons, and George Weldon their guardian, praying that as the case has been so often heard and decided in their favour, Byron may before a hearing be ordered to give security for payment of his debt and costs. [Appended to preceding.] L. J., XII. 220.

(b.) Another petition of same that Byron may not be allowed to put petitioners to the charge and trouble of a rehearing. [Endorsed, Read in Committee 10 March. See Pet. Book.]

(c.) Draft Report from the Committee for Petitions that Byron's petition is fit to be retained and to have a hearing at the bar upon the merits. [Endorsed, To be made 6 April. See Pet. Book, 17 and 31 March, when this report was agreed to by 9 to 4. The House disagreed to the report, 11 April 1668. L. J., XII. 220. In extenso.]

(d.) Copy of preceding, made 11 April 1668.

176. April 13. Cornwall v. Hawes.—Transcript of record, &c. in the writ of error. (Parchment Collection.)

177. April 13. Worth v. Weldon.—Petition of Andrew Worth. Petitioner about five years ago lent 100*l.* to George Weldon, who, on his goods being seized for non-payment, obtained an order from their Lordships for their redelivery on the ground that he was servant to Lord Vaughan, and sued the bailiffs Bennett and Baker for taking the goods. Bennett now requires indemnity from petitioner against the actions. Petitioner prays for relief, and that the actions against Bennett and Baker may be discharged with damages for such unjust vexation. L. J., XII. 221.

Annexed:—

(a.) 17 April. Answer and defence of George Weldon. The goods were seized irregularly. No action has been brought against Bennett or Baker as alleged. It is not true that there is no remedy in law against respondent. Prays to be dismissed with his costs. L. J., XII. 224.

178. April 14. Draft of an Act for making of an inland passage for barges and other vessels from Bristol and elsewhere to London, and other rivers and water-courses to be brought to fall into the same, and otherwise to London. [Read 1st this day. No further proceeding. L. J., XII. 222.]

179. April 15. Highway Robberies Bill.—Engrossment of an Act to prevent thefts and robberies on the highways. The bill offers a reward of 10*l.* to any person for information upon which a robber shall be apprehended and convicted, and of 10*l.* and a pardon to any accomplice in a robbery, where no murder has been committed, for the like information. The bill further provides for levying a rate in the hundred in which any robbery is committed for compensation of the persons robbed; the directions of the Justices in Quarter Sessions for watching and warding for the prevention of highway robberies and apprehending malefactors are to be observed under penalties to be fixed by the Justices, not exceeding 5*l.* (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day; dropped after commitment. L. J., XII. 223, &c. Com. Book 277-9.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Proviso that no persons shall be made liable to the duties of keeping watch and ward, who are not already by law liable thereunto.

(b.) Draft of preceding.

(c.) Proviso respecting rating of hundreds in Middlesex.

(d.) Proviso that no person who has not lands, tenements, annuities, or offices to the yearly value of 100*l.* shall carry on a journey on the King's highways or elsewhere any crossbow, gun, or pistol, except a soldier in the time of war or days of training.

180. April 16. Draft of an Act for confirmation of the settlement of the estate of Sir Kingsmill Lucy, Baronet, in the said Act mentioned, and for transferring over some other parts of the real estate of Sir Richard Lucy, knight and baronet, deceased, from Francis Lucy, Esquire. [Read 1st this day. L. J., XII. 224, &c. 20 Car. II. c. 4. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

181. [April 16.] Points of the petition of Edmond Squibb against John Loving. See L. J., XII. 224, and Pet. Book 3, 7, 14, and 17 April. Comp. 225.

182. April 20. Woollen Cloth Bill.—Amended Draft of an Act for the better regulating of the manufacture of broad woollen cloth, commonly called Spanish cloth, and other the woollen drapery of this kingdom. [Read 1st this day but dropped after engrossment (see 193) L. J., XII. 226 etc. This bill is much the same as a former one (see 106), except that it is made to apply to the whole kingdom; that it entrusts the regulation of the manufacture to the justices of the peace in quarter sessions, assisted by three or more experienced clothiers, instead of to a Corporation; that the searchers are to be appointed by the common Auluer and to use his seal; and that it forbids the straining of cloth to make it longer.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments. Made in Committee, 23 April.

183. April 20. Drovers Bill.—Amended draft of an Act to reform abuses committed by drovers to the prejudice of markets and fairs. The bill extends the provisions of the Act to prevent the selling of fat cattle by butchers (15 Car. II. cap. 8.) to drovers and all other persons, &c. [Read 1st this day; passed through several stages, but eventually dropped. L. J., XII. 226, &c. See also 108 for engrossment of this Bill.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments made in Committee, 25 April.

184. April 21. Style v. Martyn.—Answer of William Martyn, Elizabeth his wife, and Robert Bosville, an infant, to the petition of William Style. Respondents pray that the decree of the Court of Chancery appealed against by Style, having been made after many hearings and debates, may not be drawn into further question before their Lordships, but that they may be dismissed with their costs. [Comp. Cases in Chancery I. 150.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 3 March [1667-8]. Petition of William Style. Complains that by a decree made by the Earl of Clarendon in a suit to which he was not a party he has been turned out of certain lands in Kent, and, having tried in vain to obtain redress in Chancery, prays for relief from the House. [Dismissed by Committee for Petitions. See Pet. Book 29 April.]

185. April 21. Apsley v. Satterthwaite.—Answer of William Satterthwaite, of Gray's Inn, to the petition of Colonel John Apsley, of Gray's Inn, by way of case put. Respondent details the proceedings in the various suits brought against him by Apsley concerning the title to certain houses and lands in Sussex, and prays that Apsley's petition may be dismissed, the matter being proper to be tried at common law, where he has already seven actions depending. [See Pet. Book 9 and 21 April, when Apsley's Petition was dismissed by the Committee for Petitions.]

186. April 22. Silk Throwing Bill.—Petition of the Master, Wardens, Assistants, and Commonalty of the Company of Silk Throwers. London. The silk throwers, being incorporated in the fifth year of the reign of His late Majesty Charles I., and considering that the quantity of silk usually imported was not sufficient to keep all their members in constant work without some equal distribution, did by virtue of their Charter make an ordinance or bye-law to limit the number of spindles with which every member of the Company should work, in order that some of the richer sort should not engross the whole workmanship of the silk to the ruin of the rest. This bye-law was duly ratified by the then Lord Keeper and Judges, according to the statute, and has since been confirmed by Act of Parliament. Some refractory members of the Company, against whom judgment has been recovered by the Company upon actions at law for breach of the bye-law, have misrepresented it to the House of Commons as a common grievance and destructive to trade, and are endeavouring to procure an Act for taking it away. The Bill was referred to a Committee, and has since passed the House [C. J., IX. 42, 81], petitioners being taken by surprise and unprepared to offer their defence; and, in addition to annulling the bye-law, a clause is inserted for disempowering the Company to limit or confine any freeman thereof to take a lesser number than three apprentices at a time, which is a matter wholly new to petitioners, and one upon which they have never yet been heard. Petitioners foresee inevitable ruin to the greatest number of their members if the Act should pass, as some few would engross to themselves the working of the whole of the raw silk imported, and would multiply the number of workmen to the destruction one of another. They pray to be heard against the bill, and that another bill may be considered by their Lordships for totally prohibiting the importation of thrown silk, whereby, the greater quantity of raw silk being imported, the members of the Company may have sufficient work for the support of themselves and families. L. J., XII. 228. [The Bill here referred to, viz., 19 & 20 Car. II. c. 11, received the royal assent on the 9th May. L. J., XII. 247. Comp. Coke's Discourse of Trade, ed. 1671, ii. 45.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Printed statement of the case between the Company and some of its members, touching the bye-law limiting the number of spindles.

(b.) May 8. Proviso to the bill. If any silk dyers, broad weavers or other throwers or workers of silk shall come and set up their art in the kingdom, they shall enjoy all the privileges and immunities already granted to linen weavers and tapestry makers. (Two papers.) [This proviso was reported from the Committee, but rejected by the House. L. J., XII. 246.]

187. April 22. Draft resolutions of both Houses respecting the wearing of English manufactures, and the discouraging the wearing of all foreign manufactures. L. J., XII. 228. In extenso.

188. April 22. Herbert v. Lloyd.—Report from the Committee to whom was referred the petition of William Herbert and the answer of Sir Charles Lloyd, that the petitioner is not relievable in the Courts of Westminster Hall, and ought therefore to have a hearing at the bar. L. J., XII. 228. In extenso. See also Pet. Book 14 April.

Annexed:—

(a.) 17 March 1667-8. Petition of William Herbert, for the reversal of a decree in Chancery pronounced against him in 1652 by Commissioners Keeble and Lisle in his suit against Thomas Bynion, respecting the right of redemption of an estate in the county of Montgomery, mortgaged by petitioner's father Richard Herbert to William Bynion, father of Thomas Bynion. [The matter appears by the statements in the petition, to have been in litigation since 1638.] Petitioner prays that Sir Charles Lloyd, who bought the premises for a very small consideration, and who had notice of petitioner's suit, and was afterwards desired not to proceed in the purchase, may be ordered to appear and answer. [Appended to preceding. See Pet. Book under date.]

(b.) Answer of Sir Charles Lloyd. Is a mere stranger to most of the matters mentioned in Herbert's petition. He is questioned for an estate of which he became a purchaser upon a valuable consideration, and prays that a convenient time may be granted him to answer. Having no habitation in London, his writings concerning the matter are in the country, one hundred and twenty miles from hence, where he and his family have resided since the late dreadful fire. [See Pet. Book 31 March.]

(c.) Plea and answer of Sir Charles Lloyd, baronet. The lands in question were absolutely conveyed by the petitioner's father to William Bynion in fee simple, and not under any condition of redemption, trust, or mortgage whatsoever. Respondent gave full value. He positively denies that at the time of the purchase he had any notice of the petitioner's suit, Bynion at the time having been for two years in peaceable possession.

189. April 22. Forest of Dean Bill.—Petition of Sir John Wintour, Knight, Secretary to Her Majesty the Queen-Mother. About four years since, the late Lord Treasurer, for the raising of nurseries towards the growth of ship timber for the future supply of the Navy, contracted with petitioner that he should enclose (without expense to the Crown) great quantities of the Forest of Dean, and at his own cost make put by due course of law, His Majesty's title against all pretences of those who claim right of common therein; in consideration whereof the rest of the wastes were granted to him. The contract was, after full discussion before His Majesty and the Privy Council, drawn up and entered into by the late Lord Treasurer and Lord Ashley, Chancellor and Under Treasurer of the Exchequer, on His Majesty's behalf, and by petitioner on his own behalf. He has contracted very great debts in the performance thereof, and by his constant and chargeable solicitation several decrees in the Exchequer have been obtained on His Majesty's behalf against the pretending commoners to the great advance of His Majesty's concerns in that and other of his forests. Petitioner prays to be heard at the bar concerning the bill, and that if it shall be adjudged by their Lordships that the passing of the bill will be more profitable to His Majesty and the public good than petitioner's contract, then that compensation may be awarded to him before his legal right be taken away or destroyed. L. J., XII. 229. Com. Book 280-3.

190. April 22. Biggs v. White.—Petition of John Biggs, George Vinter, John Tredcroft, and Nathaniel Tredcroft, executors of John Tredcroft, minister, deceased, in trust for John, Edward and Nathaniel Tredcroft, infants and children of the said testator John Tredcroft. In October 1666 the executors of Tredcroft obtained a decree in Chancery against Thomas White, an attorney, respecting the division of certain lands purchased in 1655 in the joint names of White and the testator. Petitioners complain that by the indirect practices of White with the Register, Mr. Dodd, a decree was drawn up and has since been entered contrary to the declaration of the Court and the Register's notes taken at the hearing by which the testator's children are prejudiced at least 1,000*l*. The question being only matter of fact, and not matter of law, petitioners are advised by their counsel that no bill of review lies, and they therefore pray that the cause may be referred by their Lordships to the Lord Keeper for a rehearing. L. J., XII. 229, and Pet. Book 23 April.

Annexed:—

(a.) Answer of Robert Dodd. The decretal order was drawn up according to the decree pronounced, and copies having been delivered, as usual, to the plaintiffs and defendant to be perused by their respective counsel, were duly returned assented unto, approved, and ratified under their hands. The plaintiffs afterwards petitioned the Master of the Rolls to have some pretended mistakes rectified, and the respondent attended with his notes taken at the hearing, and the plaintiffs also attended with their counsel; but nothing that was alleged being made to appear, it was ordered that the decree should stand. The respondent denies any practices between himself and White in the drawing of the decree, and states that the original notes were lost with others by removing at the time of the late fire. [Read before Committee for Petitions 2 May. See Pet. Book.]

(b.) Answer of Thomas White. Respondent states that Tredcroft's executors have suggested many untruths in their petition, and gives at great length his version of the transactions between himself and the testator, with reference to the purchase of the lands and the subsequent legal proceedings.

(c.) Copy of order in the cause of the 28th of June 1666, referred to in White's answer.

(d.) Copy of order of 8th February 1666-7, also referred to in White's answer.

191. April 23. Stanhope v. Trethewey.—Petition of Mary Stanhope, widow and relict of Charles Stanhop. In 1641 Sir Ralph Hopton, afterwards Lord Hopton, borrowed 300*l.* of petitioner, for which he settled an annuity upon her; but afterwards, by reason of the war, he was forced beyond the seas, and for twelve years she did not receive one penny. Lord Hopton's estate being exposed for sale, petitioner was obliged to apply herself to the then powers for some allowance out of it, and obtained but 31*3*l. there being due to her above 950*l.* Lord Hopton very honourably executed a conveyance of her annuity, charged upon the manor of Witham, and sent it over to Mr. Trethewey, his secretary, who delivered it to petitioner, but afterwards desired to have it to show to Lord Hopton's heirs, and petitioner could never since obtain it. With the allowance made her, and other money of her own, petitioner purchased the manor of Alhampton, part of Lord Hopton's estate, and afterwards sold it to Henry Cornish and others with the same title she had from the pretended Parliament, and no other. Upon His Majesty's return, petitioner hoped to have enjoyed her annuity according to her agreement, but by reason of Mr. Trethewey detaining her deed she was forced to exhibit her bill in Chancery against him; but he, pleading his privilege as a servant of His Majesty, refused to answer and advised the purchasers of the manor of Alhampton to prefer a bill against petitioner to have the deed of annuity decreed to them because the manor of Alhampton was, upon His Majesty's return, evicted from them by Lord Hopton's heirs. In 1665 petitioner was decreed to assign the annuity and deed to the purchasers, though she never made any agreement so to do, nor had the annuity any relation to the manor of Alhampton. The decree being signed and enrolled she can have no relief but before their Lordships. Prays that Trethewey may be ordered to produce the deed, and that the proceedings against her in the Court of Chancery may be stayed. See Pet. Book, 23 and 29 April.

Annexed:—

(a.) 5 April 1670. Similar petition of same. See Pet. Book.

(b.) 3 Nov. 1670. Plea and answer of John Trethewey. He was no party to the suit in Chancery and was not concerned in the matter, except as solicitor of Lord Hopton. After Lord Hopton's estate was sold, petitioner applied to the pretended Parliament and got an allowance of 570*l.* for her annuity and arrears. Shortly after she purchased the manor of Alhampton from the pretended commissioners for the sale of pretended delinquents' estates for the sum of 667*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.*, whereof the said 570*l.* was allowed her for the annuity and arrears, and the residue she was permitted to pay in doubled bills, which were then usually sold for half their value. This manor she afterwards sold for 1000*l.*, thereby obtaining more than full satisfaction of her annuity and arrears. Lord Hopton had charged his manor of Witham with an annuity in her favour, and respondent, as his Lordship's solicitor, had the deed and would have satisfied her out of that estate, had not he learned that she had already recouped herself more than to the full. He refused to give her that deed, foreseeing she would make improper use of it. The Courts have ruled that she has had full satisfaction, and he prays to be dismissed with costs. See Pet. Book.

(c.) 22 Nov. 1670. Order of Committee on Petitions, on reading the petition of Mary Stanhope and the answer of John Trethewey, and after hearing counsel. The petition being defective, inasmuch as it complains of no person, petitioner is allowed to withdraw it and bring in another petition, naming the persons complained of. [Appended to following paper. See Pet. Book.]

(d.) 17 Jan. 1670-1. Petition of Mary Stanhopp, similar to her previous petitions, but amended in pursuance of the above order by naming Trethewey as agent for Cornish, Gifford, and Dorvell. See Pet. Book, 10 and 17 Jan.

(e.) 9 Feb. 1670-1. Plea and answer of John Trethewey, similar to his previous one. [See Pet. Book, 28 Feb., when Trethewey was dismissed from the cause.]

(f.) 9 Feb. 1670-1. Joint and several answer of John Gifford and Arthur Dorvell, two of the respondents to the petition of Mary Stanhope (d.) They purchased petitioner's estate and interest in the manor of Alhampton for 1,000*l.*, finding that the original foundation of the petitioner's title was grounded on the annuity granted by Lord Hopton before the wars, which they conceived they were entitled, as purchasers, to enjoy. They would never have given that sum for a "mere Drury-House title." Since the Master of the Rolls and the Lord Chancellor have decreed in their favour, they have assigned the manor of Witham to Thos. Wyndham, Esquire, who now enjoys, in consequence, the full benefit of the decree. [The rest of the answer is substantially the same as that of John Trethewey.]

(g.) 28 Feb. 1670-1. Affidavit by Thomas Langton, of Middle Aston, Oxfordshire, of service of the order of the Lords Committee on the wife of Henry Cornish, ordering him to answer by Tuesday the 7th February. [Sworn 14 Feb. 1670-1. See Pet. Book, 14 and 28 Feb.]

192. April 23. Peart v. Backwell.—Petition of John Peart and Phillip Bell. After Cornelius Holland (one of the regicides) was found guilty of treason by the Act of Parliament, Christopher Widmore and other men of good quality were employed to seize him, then believed to be at Crissloe, Bucks, and to secure his goods, chattels, and cattle; but John and Edward Backwell and the rest of that family, with other friends of Holland, by some strange and subtle practices, caused Widmore and the others to be causelessly imprisoned at Aylosbury for ten days, in which time Holland escaped. Under pretence of seizing Holland's goods for His Majesty's use, Backwell and his confederates seized all for themselves and conveyed to London six trunks and two chests full and very ponderous with plate, coin, and rich treasures: part was sold, and the residue concealed, no return being made to His Majesty of all Holland's estate (only old books and trifles). Holland has never since been heard of, so as to be brought to trial and punished, he being one of the persons exempted from pardon. Petitioners further state that in 1642 Barnaby and John Backwell, being His Majesty's servants belonging to the grounds at Crissloe, drove away all His Majesty's stock of oxen and sheep, sold them for their own use, and otherwise defrauded His Majesty. Edward Backwell indicted petitioner Peart for his life at the Old Bailey, falsely swearing that Peart had robbed him. Although John Backwell was an open enemy to His Majesty during the late rebellion, he has now crept into two places of trust, and Edward Backwell has by some subtle device sued forth a pardon, bearing date from 1662, which he presumes will defend him from all the wrongs he has already done or may hereafter do to His Majesty. Petitioners pray that Widmore and others may be summoned to appear before their Lordships to give evidence concerning Holland's escape and the other matters complained of in the petition, in order that His Majesty's dues may be restored, and petitioners recompensed according to the merits of the case. L. J., XII. 228, 230. [Dismissed this day on report from Committee. On 17 April the Committee for Petitions decided to take the instructions of the House as to entertaining the Petition. See Pet. Book.]

193. April 24. Woollen Cloth Bill.—Engrossment of an Act for the better regulating of the manufacture of broad woollen cloth, commonly called Spanish cloth, and other the woollen drapery of this kingdom. (Parchment Collection.) See also 182.

194. April 24. Duckett v. Ash.—Petition of William Duckett and John Wallis. By the will of the late Seacole Chiver, petitioners were made guardians of his son and heir Henry Chiver, who is yet an infant, and they have for many years endeavoured to get him into their custody, but he is "eloynd" from them by James Ash and others, who have entered into a conspiracy to make a prey of the infant and his estate, which is very considerable. Petitioners pray that the infant may be delivered into their custody. L. J., XII. 232.

195. April 24. Sir W. Penn's Impeachment.—Articles of impeachment by the Commons of England, assembled in Parliament, in the name of themselves and of all the Commons of England against Sir William Penn, Knight, one of the now Commissioners of His Majesty's Navy, for several high crimes and misdemeanours committed by him. L. J., XII. 233. In extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 April. Answer of Sir William Penn to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the Commons. L. J., XII. 237. In extenso.

196. April 24. Affidavit of John Gardner respecting the arrest of John Verrells, servant to the Earl of Dorset, contrary to privilege. L. J., XII. 234.

197. April 29. Conventicles.—Engrossment of an Act for continuance of a former Act to prevent and suppress seditious conventicles. This Act provides for the continuance for seven years of the Act 16 Car. II. c. 4., which was only to remain in force for three years, and makes further provision for recovery of fines levied for offences against the Act. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons and read 1st this day, but not further proceeded with, although the Commons subsequently sent to remind the Lords of the Bill. L. J., XII. 237, &c.]

198. May 1. Drovers Bill.—Engrossment of an Act to reform abuses committed by drovers to the prejudice of markets and fairs. (Parchment Collection.) See also 183.

199. May 1. Prisoners in the King's Bench.—Draft on an Act to prevent abuses by the Marshal of the King's Bench in suffering prisoners to go abroad. The Act recites that many persons who are committed for great debts, are by their own contrivance removed and turned over to the King's Bench, where they ought to be detained, but it is found by common and daily experience that they are permitted to lie in other houses and places in and about the parish of St. George's, Southwark, and to walk publicly in the streets without any keeper. In vacation time they are suffered to go at large into the country, and a few days before the beginning of the next term are by contrivance met with at some appointed place and carried back to prison and there entered as taken upon a fresh pursuit, which is so contrived as to avoid any actions being brought for escapes. By the pretended privilege claimed by the Marshal as an officer of the King's Bench, actions can only be brought by bill in that court. The Bill enacts that for the future any person may sue Sir John Lenthall now Marshal and every other Marshal or Keeper of the prison for the escape of a prisoner in any of His Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, either by original writ, or in such manner as any other of His Majesty's subjects, not privileged, can now be sued. Any Marshal or Keeper who shall hereafter plead fresh pursuit upon any action brought for an escape, shall prove the taking of such prisoner upon the said fresh pursuit, and that he did really escape out of his custody according to the words and tenor of such plea, and shall not at any time afterwards plead the same plea upon any other action for the escape of the same prisoner. It further enacts that Sir John Lenthall shall at his peril remand and bring into custody all prisoners now at large, and keep them safely according to the intentment of the law. No rule for liberty of going abroad shall be granted to any prisoner by the Court of King's Bench, unless upon the oath of a credible person that he saw the prisoner in custody within the prison, or rules of the same, within twenty-four hours at the most before the time of making such affidavit, the common practice at this time being for prisoners to go abroad upon rules obtained from the Court upon the affidavit of one or more servants of the Marshal or Keeper that such prisoners are actually in custody at the time of the oath, when it is notoriously known that neither then, nor for divers years past, have they been within the prison or rules of the same. [The Bill was read 1st this day, having been ordered to be brought in on the 10th March, but was not further proceeded with. L. J., XII. 238.]

200. May 1. Engrossment of an additional Act for the better draining of Deeping Pews, in the County of Lincoln. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons and read 1st this day. On the 9th inst., the day on which the House was adjourned, the Bill was ordered to be read 2^d on the first day of the next sitting. This does not appear to have been done, but another Bill with a similar title was brought from the Commons on the 17th of March, 1669-70 and passed. (22 Car. II. c. 14. L. J., XII. 239, &c.)]

201. May 4. Engrossment of an Act for naturalization of John Comrie and others. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day, but not proceeded with by the Lords, L. J., XII. 240.]

202. May 5. Wine Duty (310,000*l.*) Bill.—Petition of the Master, Wardens, and Assistants of the Company of Vintners, London. Petitioners hear that certain duties are intended to be granted upon the retail of wines from Midsummer 1668 to Midsummer 1670, and that the retailers are to be enabled to pay the same by being authorized to receive as much upon the retail, over and above the established rates and prices, and to have the allowance and abatement only of one tenth part of wines and lees in lieu of all lees, leakage, spillage, and other wastes whatsoever; and that all retailers are to give bond for securing the said duties for their present stores and for all new stores. One tenth part of all wines and lees is lees, and the leakage and other wastes are very considerable. Petitioners pray that they may have an allowance of one sixth part in lieu of lees, leakage, and all other waste, and that there may be provision for a discount of all such wines as shall be in store at the determination of the power granted to retail at the advanced rates, there being few retailers who have not every day five, six, or seven months' store or more in their hands, for which petitioners humbly hope they will not be compelled to pay the duties when they shall be disabled to sell at the advanced rates. L. J., XII. 241. [The Bill here referred to was the Bill for raising 310,000*l.* on wines, &c. and this petition was referred to the Committee of the whole House upon it this day. For proceedings, see M.S. Minutes of date.]

203. May 7. Engrossment of an additional Act for the better rebuilding of the City of London. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons, and read 1st this day; read 2^d and committed on the following day, but dropped with the session. L. J., XII. 243, &c. The provisions of this Bill are with some unimportant variations embodied in the Act of 1670, 22 Car. II. c. 11.]

[Parliament was adjourned on the 9th May 1668 and did not reassemble till the 19th October 1669.]

204. May 22. Letter from the Vestry of St. Margaret's, Westminster, to the President and Members of the Corporation of the Poor of the City of Westminster, thanking them for their assistance in completing the new workhouse in Tothill Fields, whereby the parish has been saved about 200*l.* a year and the streets much freed from common beggars, and would be more, were the constables active in the execution of their offices.

Annexed:—

(a.) Petition of the inhabitants of the parishes of St. Margaret's, Westminster, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, and St. Paul's, Covent Garden. They acknowledge their Lordship's great piety and care in the late Act. They have begun to erect two workhouses, one in Tuttle [Tothill] Fields and the other in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, for setting the poor to work, and have laid out therein not only all the money they can raise by assessments and contributions, but also the parish stock, and are so far indebted to workmen that they cannot proceed further. The Act gives power to raise more money for the purpose, but the present parish taxes are many, and some of them of greater importance. They hope the piety and charity of their Lordships will enable them to finish the work without further taxing the inhabitants, so that they may keep the streets clear and free from begging poor. They pray for charitable benevolences from their Lordships, to be paid to Sir William Playters, the Treasurer of the Corporation for the Port of Westminster. 208. Oct. 12. 'L. Lucas' Privilege.—Letter from Samuel Quilter to Lord Lucas. Quilter complains that John White and others drove away and ill-used his cattle and attempted to drive away his sheep, saying that Lord Lucas had no right to let the land, calling his Lordship "land lord," and saying that time was when they were as good men as he, and he had not a shirt to his back nor a bed to lie on. Quilter, if he have not protection and reparation will be forced to leave his farm. L. J., XII. 255.

Annexed:—

(a.) 12 Oct. Duplicate of preceding.

(b.) 6 Nov. Petition of John White and others. They are in custody under an order 25 October last by the means of Lord Lucas. They are heartily sorry for their offence, being ignorant that they ever did anything contrary to the privilege of the House, and pray for discharge. L. J., XII. 262.

209. Oct. 19. Wool Bill.—Draft of an Act for preventing frauds in exporting wool, woollfells, mortlings, shorlings, wool flocks, or any yarn made of wool, contrary to former Acts of Parliament on that behalf made. Whereas, notwithstanding late Acts against the exportation of wool, many offenders have escaped unpunished from the difficulty of proving intent to transport the same, and large quantities of wool still continue to be exported, the Bill enacts that if any wool, woollfells, &c. shall be seized within a certain distance from the sea coast or any navigable river, or the borders of Scotland, on pretence of any forfeiture under former Acts, the owner thereof, upon any trial at law relating to such forfeiture, shall have to prove that the goods in question were not being conveyed or intended for exportation; failing such proof, the presumption to be to the contrary. Any person duly authorized shall be empowered to call in a constable or other public officer to assist him, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.*, in searching any vehicles and opening any packs, or in entering any house or warehouse within the limits prescribed by the Act. If resisted, they may make forcible entry, and weigh any wool they shall find, and if they find in any one house or place more than a certain quantity of wool, they may seize the same as forfeited and detain it, unless the owner make oath in their presence that it is not intended for transportation, and enter into a bond to the King of double value thereof on condition not to export it, and to make appear afterwards at any time how he has disposed of it. Any person conveying wool, &c. of a certain quantity, at night, i.e., between 8 p.m. and 4 a.m., from the 1st March to the 29th September, and between 5 p.m. and 7 a.m. during the rest of the year, within the limits prescribed, shall be guilty of felony, and all constables, &c. are required to assist in their arrest, upon reasonable demand, on pain of forfeiting 10*l.* If hue and cry is neglected to be made, or the offenders not taken, the inhabitants of the hundred shall forfeit a penalty to the King. All oaths made under this Act to be in writing, and bonds duly certified into the Court of Exchequer within one month, and to be void if not prosecuted within a year. The defendant may plead the general issue and give the special matter in evidence. [Read 1st this day; read 2^d and committed, but not reported from Committee. L. J., XII. 252, &c. Com. Book, 285-293.] The following evidence was given before the Committee:—French stuffs cannot be made without our wool; Dutch thin cloth can. French wool is of a short staple, ours of a long, and runs into a fine thread. We can use up all our wool without exporting it, as the poor are not fully employed. It is a constant trade from north to west to carry wool for working narrow stuffs. Wool is so dear that it restricts home manufacture. The trade of St. Valery, Calais, &c. is cloth, and two thirds of the trade thither consists of English wool from Sussex. Within this year and a quarter 10,000 packs of wool gone to France. Wool traders confederate together. The export of wool to France raises the price of our manufactures, so that they are undersold in Spain and Portugal by the French. We mingle silk with woollen and weave stockings, and outdo their knitting. The staplers complain of high price of wool. Long wool is for combing. The coarse wool, sorted, sells as well as fine wool, because it is fit for combing. No wool is exported from London. Persons caught exporting have compounded with the Custom House officers. They complain of the Irish wool trade.

Annexed:—

(a.) 26 Oct. Order for Mr. Justice Twisden, Mr. Baron Turner and the Attorney-General to attend the Committee upon the Bill, and on the same paper copy of order of the Committee for the Lord Mayor of London to direct the Gentleman Usher to such companies and societies of the City of London as are concerned and skilled in the trades of clothing and wools that they may be warned to send some persons to attend the Committee. L. J., XII. 255. See Com. Book, p. 285.

(b.) 30 Oct. Information and advice of John Wright, concerning transportation of wools, being one of the persons summoned to give in the same at a Committee of the House of Peers, Saturday, 30th October 1669. The transportation of wools was in times past the chief and lawful trade of the Merchant Adventurers of England, who were all transporters of wool, and were all incorporate into the Company of Merchants of the Staple. There was but one Company of merchants in the King's dominions, which was governed in a most excellent manner by the Major and Constables of the Staple and by lieutenants over several societies. When the clothing trade grew so great and was found so beneficial to the nation that it caused a law to be made against the transportation of wools, all the Merchant Adventurers forsook the Company of the Staple because the charters of the Company, which were for the transportation wools, became of none effect; so the Major and Constables of the Staple had no power left them to rule, and the Merchant Adventurers have ever since done what they list, some obtaining private patents to transport staple commodities to particular places, debarring others of trade, and others in a most licentious manner transporting prohibited goods, such as wools and the like by strange ways and at unseasonable times by night, by violence and danger to any that oppose them. Wright's advice therefore is that the charters of the Staple Company should be renewed by putting out the transportation of wool, and putting in the transportation of woollen manufacturers to all nations at peace with His Majesty; then all the Merchant Adventurers would return again into the Company, and restore the right form and government of all the merchants of England to the preventing the transporting of wool and all other disorders in trade, and to the great encouragement of merchandize and shipping. Endorsed. "A paper of the Company of the Staple presented to the Committee concerning Wools. "Oct. 30, 1669." [Read in Committee this day, when also the Staplers evidence was given.]

(c.) Dec. 1669. Experience of the officers of Dover of the difficulties in prosecuting the transporters of wool. They cannot resist the force used in conveying it abroad, on account of the numbers who accompany it with clubs and weapons. The troops of horse are of little or no use quartered about Canterbury, nor indeed any where else, unless divided into small parties in every village along the coast, and keeping constant watch every night. The boats at sea are of little service, for the wool stealers are so guided by lights and signs from the shore that they will defeat the industry of the most diligent persons that can be set to catch them. If they be in danger to be taken, they throw the wool into the sea, and then no proof can be had for punishing the men or forfeiting the boat. If the wool be taken on land with all imaginable circumstances of transportation, the owners then bring persons to swear that it was positively designed for another place and use. The Act of Parliament is so defective with regard to the forfeiture of boats that it is almost impossible to procure the forfeiture of any boat though well known to be a common wool carrier. [Read in Committee on 10th Dec.]

210. Oct. 20. E. Clare's Privilege.—Draft order for Samuel Franchlyn and James Vosper, who have clandestinely proceeded in proving the will of Lady Frances Holles, late sister to the Earl of Clare, to attend and answer the Earl's complaint, &c. L. J., XII. 253.

(c.) 21 Nov. 1670. The Earl of Clare's memorial. After detailing previous proceedings in his case, prays that Vosper, who had not attended the Committee for Privileges last October, when the matter was never determined, may be again summoned, together with Franchlyn, to answer, and witnesses ordered to attend. 213. Oct. 26. Accounts Commission.—Report of the Commissioners appointed under the "Act for taking" the accounts of the several sums of money therein "mentioned" [19 & 20 Car. II. c. 1.], being the sums voted as a royal aid for the support of the navy, the maintenance of the war, &c. The Report is signed by William, Lord Brereton, Sir James Langham, George Thomson, John Gregorie, and Giles Dunster. The Commissioners conceive that the service required of them is to give an account of how the moneys have been received and disposed of. They have sent to such persons as appeared to them to have been entrusted or employed in or about payment or receipt of the moneys. Several returns have been made to them, upon examination whereof the Commissioners have drawn out the state of the several accounts as they at present appear. First come two detailed accounts of moneys received, viz., one of 2,477,500*l.* granted by Parliament for a royal aid, extending to 24 September 1669, as delivered in by Sir Robert Long; another of 1,250,000*l.*, additional supply to the King, extending to 26 August 1669, as stated by William Wardour, Clerk of the Polls, which computes a loss of about 52,000*l.* by the burning of London; a third, of moneys raised by the Poll Bill, amounting to 245,294*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*, with a memorandum stating that this account is imperfect in the absence of duplicates of the charge upon some counties; and a fourth, of moneys raised by the 11 months' tax, amounting to 1,256,347*l.* 13*s.*—Then follows the State of the account of Sir George Carteret, late Treasurer of the Navy, from 1st September 1664, showing 3,605,412*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, charged by him as received, out of which 212,830*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* is discounted, to be transferred to the account of the Bishop of Munster, whereof the Commissioners as yet have no perfect statement, leaving a remainder chargeable on account of the navy of 3,392,581*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* The payments claimed by him amount to 3,390,981*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.*, so that he owes on his own account a balance of 1,600*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, assuming that all his demands and claims are allowed. But from this account the Commissioners except certain alleged payments, and find him chargeable with other sums, with which he had not charged himself, the total of these being 244,051*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* They debit him further with 2,895*l.* interest on certain sums received by him before 1 Sept. 1664, but not charged in his account till December 1665. They add certain observations to the following effect, copies of which they had delivered to Sir G. Carteret; and they had received several payers by way of answer from him:—(1.) That monies received by him out of the Exchequer and assigned by the privy seal for particular services have not been so applied. (2.) 230,731*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* is claimed as paid and deposited for security of interest, but no specification of time is made, whereby no judgment can be made how interest accrues, and the same cannot be allowed. (3.) Several sums are charged as paid for provisions served into the King's stores by officers of the navy, contrary to instructions. (4.) Many bills are passed as paid for provisions, &c., without any particulars to vouch the same. (5.) Large sums are charged as paid in one year, which were not paid till the following, viz., 30,000*l.* and more in 1664, and 125,000*l.* and more in 1665. (6.) 175,000*l.* and more in imprests on several persons are brought to account as paid, whereof 47,000*l.* and more is not expressed to be stayed or recharged by the Treasurer of the Navy, though the person have more monies paid them and charged in the same account than would clear those imprests, and for that very service for which those monies were impressed. (7.) Monies paid twice on several ships to one and the same person for one and the same time. (8.) Several sums in clothes allowed the treasurer and the wages of those persons (where the clothes were so allowed) afterwards paid, and those monies for the said clothes not stayed on their respective tickets. (9.) Great sums appear by the treasurer's cash-books to be in his hands when the ships lay upon charge for want of pay, and seamen sold their tickets to relieve their necessities, &c. (10.) Several sums have been borrowed by him of the goldsmiths for the service of the Navy, yet this money not received when borrowed, but part allowed to remain in the goldsmiths' hands for months together, in which time it has been issued in parcels, and much of it to private hands, and some for bills and tickets bought by the goldsmiths or others at an under rate.—The next head of the report is an Abstract of the receipts of all moneys out of His Majesty's Exchequer and elsewhere for the service of His Majesty's Navy, &c., since the 1st of September 1664, whether by Sir George Carteret, the Earl of Anglesey, or by certificate from the Commissioners of the Navy. The total received amounts to 4,800,115*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.*, whereof the Commissioners conceive that items amounting to 514,518*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.* are "for other uses than the war." These items include payments for provisions and service before the 1st September 1664. The Commissioners then state that, being empowered to inquire into any fraud or abuse in the management of the late war, and apprehending that His Majesty had sustained great damage in his treasure by the negligence and default in the execution of their offices by the principal officers and Commissioners of the navy, they had made a collection of divers matters, and sent the heads thereof to these officers, desiring them to return an answer with all speed, but have received no answer except a letter from Lord Brunker and Sir John Menns, offering reasons why an answer could not be given, and another from Sir Jer. Smith, expressing his opinion that he is not liable to any part of the charge, it having respect to the time of the war, which was a year and a half before his relation to the office.—The observations of the Commissioners on these matters are eighteen in number. Some naval provisions contracted for during the war have not been delivered in by the contractors, and others unfit and unserviceable have been received into His Majesty's stores, without any remedy being taken against the contractors; and large expenses have been unnecessarily incurred in delivery. The books of the treasurer of the navy have been signed without stating the dates when the bills were paid. Although imprests have been ordered to be abated on several bills, full bills have been allowed; payments have been signed without requiring vouchers; bills have been issued and passed on the treasurer's book, without specifying for what goods they were signed, or where the goods were delivered. The proceedings of the inferior officers of the navy have not been duly examined by their superiors, whereby irregularities have been permitted on the part of storekeepers in particular, who, in the absence of a yearly account of receipts and issues, have been enabled to embezzle. Masters of the fleet have not been taken every three months, according to instructions. Accounts of boatswains and ships' carpenters have been passed before verifying the same from the pursers, whose accounts also, as those of slopsellers, have never been compared and examined. Tickets have not been examined by their indentures, or by the sea-books or muster-books, whereby many false tickets have been passed; and, in the absence of a register, double tickets have been passed, and therefore double payments made to the same persons in the same ship. Pursers have, through neglect, been allowed to receive money instead of victuals from the victuallers, whereby seamen have been put on short allowances. Goods have been bought at far higher rates than they were worth; undue favouritism has been shown in the purchase of provisions. Ships, instead of being paid off on their arrival in port, have been suffered to lie for months at the King's great charge, and as a consequence have come to be paid by tickets, to the sailors' great discontent; and lastly, the Commissioners, although they have received several prize ships and goods, have not in some cases charged themselves with the receipt of them.—Then follows the state of the first account of Colonel William Legg, Lieutenant and Treasurer of the Ordnance. The total amount received is 537,590*l.* 7*s.* 2½*d.*, of which the Commissioners point out that 54,947*l.* 1*s.* 7½*d.* has been applied to other uses than the war, and make three observations upon the omission of the officers to keep accounts of the receipts and issues of stores, and other errors.—The next account is that of Sir Stephen Fox, Paymaster-General of His Majesty's land forces; the total received is 383,929*l.* 5*s.* 5½*d.* of which 210,673*l.* 15*s.* 5½*d.* has been applied in payment of His Majesty's Guard and other uses than the war.—Then follows a general state of the account of the 210,000*l.* granted under the Act for ordering the forces in the several counties of the kingdom, so far as ascertainable, no accounts having been returned from some counties. The total is 210,187*l.* 5*s.* 1½*d.*, the overplus being explained as arising from over-balances in several counties. This is supplemented by two statements of accounts, showing the moneys returned over the three months' assessment under the above Act:—(1.) to Sir John Robinson, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and (2.) to Thos. Chicheley, Esq.—Next follows a State of the accounts of Anthony, Lord Ashley, Treasurer for Prizes taken for His Majesty's use during the late war, extending to 29 July 1669. The total of receipts is 437,465*l.* 7*s.* 0½*d.*; against payments 436,704*l.* 3*s.* 6½*d.*, the latter including 26,387*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* “for secret services,” and 46,034*l.* 15*s.* 11½*d.* “for His Majesty's more particular use,” viz.:—

| To His Majesty's privy purse | 7,000 | 0 | 0 |
| For discharge of some debts of His Majesty | 6,130 | 0 | 0 |
| For His Majesty's buildings and gardens | 18,127 | 15 | 11½ | leaving a balance due to the King of 761*l.* 3*s.* 6½*d.*, whereof 500*l.* is mentioned in the account to be repaid by warrant of His Majesty. After noticing an account of Sir Jeremy Smith of 1,915*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, received by him for prize goods and paid to Sir G. Carteret, the Commissioners proceed to report their inquiries respecting the prizes taken in the war. The whole number of ships and vessels taken as prizes in the late war, of which particulars are given, amounts to 1,164 of which 842 are included in the general account, but many of them are not accounted for; two others are accounted for, but not included, while for the remaining 320 nothing appears to have come to His Majesty in money, though some of the vessels are alleged to have been delivered for the use of the navy. The proceeds of the prize ships brought to account amount to 621,527*l.* 11*s.* 3¼*d.*, besides some debts, &c., of small value. The Commissioners add that, in computing the above, they have found some difficulty through the absence of a separate account of prize ships. With regard to embezzlements, they compute the amount embezzled at more than 90,000*l.*, besides the embezzlements out of two East India prizes (mentioned below), and what might be added to that computation from the disproportion which they find between the ladings in several ships and their burden in tonnage. The Commissioners have spent much time in trying to discover the persons who have been guilty of embezzlement, and have proceeded to judgment in some cases, whilst others are still depending; in many of these cases they have great difficulty in discovering the truth owing to lapse of time, deaths of persons concerned, &c. Amongst other prizes two Dutch ships, the “Golden Phoenix” and the “Slothanny,” were taken on the 3rd of Sept. 1665, on their way home from the East Indies, which were of much greater value than the sum brought to account, as appears by an estimate by the East India Company of the goods actually received, amounting to 153,450*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, besides a quantity of saltpetre and copper delivered to the officers of the ordnance, and another estimate of the goods not received, amounting to 115,162*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.*, besides a chest of seed pearls and a square japan box of rubies, not valued. The Commissioners have used their best means to find out embezzlements, but cannot encourage expectations of their making discoveries answerable to the embezzlements; some cases of fraud and other matters are still before them, the expediting of which they will endeavour with all diligence and faithfulness. Dated, Brooke House, 25 October 1669. L. J., XII. 255, &c. [This Report of the Brook House Commissioners, as they were called from their place of meeting in Durham Yard, Holborn, was presented to the House on the 26th October. On the 27th the Commissioners were ordered to deliver in the answers and papers mentioned in their observations. On the 29th they brought some of the original papers (13 in number) and attested copies, when the Lords retained the copies, but redelivered the originals in case the Commissioners should have occasion to use them. On the 4th November further papers (20 in number) were delivered; and on the 6th a large committee was appointed to consider these papers. On the 3rd December the Earl of Essex reported that the Committee had often met and proceeded in the business, but that few Lords attended, and an order was thereupon made that the members of the Committee should attend more diligently; but on the 11th December Parliament was prorogued. It appears from the minutes of this Committee that this account was confessedly imperfect, the Commons having called for it as it stood, and it having been therefore presented at the same time in the House of Lords. An abstract of an account, agreeing with it in some particulars, is given in a note in Ralph's History of England, I. 177, note.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Attested copies of letters, &c., with respect to the accounts of Sir George Carteret, Treasurer of the Navy, and Col. William Legg, Lieutenant and Treasurer of the Ordnance, delivered to the House of Lords by the Brook House Commissioners, and referred to the Committee on Accounts. These are as follows:—

(a.)¹ 13 Feb. 1667–8. Copy of letter from Carteret to the Commissioners. In answer to their letter of the 11th inst., requiring him to send in his account to Dec. 31, 1665, he entreats their Lordships' patience for a very few days. Meanwhile he asks them to begin with his account of 1664, the original whereof is with Mr. Anditor Beale.

(a.)² 28 Feb. 1667–8. Copy of letter from same to same. His accounts for 1664 and 1665 have been ready some days. The rest of his account is waiting for the completion of the making up of the sea-books.

(a.)³ 16 March 1667–8. Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Commissioners, stating the delivery on oath by Mr. Waith and Mr. Penn of abstracts of Carteret's accounts for 1664, 1665, and part of 1666, and of some of his original books.

(a.)⁴ 21 April 1668. Copy of letter from Carteret to the Commissioners. The latter part of his account will shortly be ready.

(a.)⁵ 27 April 1668. Copy of letter from same to same. In compliance with the Commissioners' demand this day, he encloses his answer in writing to the exceptions taken to his accounts. Enclosed is his answer. (1.) It is true that his accounts extend only to the end of December 1665. The remainder, up to 30 June 1667, are being prepared. (2.) The dates of receipts are not in the ledger books, but the Exchequer account and the cash books give them. (3.) The former cash books show the month, but not the day of payments. The cashbooks, however, now put in show the days of payment of most of the greater sums. (4.) Touching the 65,099*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.* mentioned to be charged in one year as paid for interest and procurement of moneys the interest was due to the persons who lent the money, and was paid only by warrant on their accounts stated in the Exchequer. (5.) This exception being general, he refers to his previous answers. (6.) The account, it is true, extends before the 1st September 1664, but the books distinguish the receipts and payments before that date. (7.) He knows not in what particular he has failed, unless in that of sums received on tallies, which he would have specified earlier had he understood it was required.

(a.)⁶ 28 April 1668. Copy of letter from same to same. He sends two books of accounts from 1 January 1665 to the end of his time, which were delayed by accident. He hopes they will help to elucidate his account, though this particularising of weeks is more than was required from any of his predecessors.

(a.)⁷ 15 July 1668. Extracts from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Commissioners. Waith and Penn deliver in on oath their original books.

(a.)⁸ 23 July 1668. Copy of letter from Carteret to the Commissioners. His account, prepared by the principal officers, &c., of the navy, is now all but complete, and will be furnished in a few days, when the Commissioners will find him ready to give all possible satisfaction therein.

(a.)⁹ 3 Aug. 1668. Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Commissioners, recording delivery of Carteret's accounts from 1 Jan. 1665 to 30 June 1667, which are sworn to by him and Waith, Paymaster of the Navy, and Fenn, Cashier under Carteret.

(a.)¹⁰ 12 Aug. 1668. Copy of letter from Carteret to the Commissioners. His Majesty has commanded him to go into Ireland upon an occasion of trust. He will not be away more than six or seven weeks; meanwhile Waith and Fenn and another will represent him. The Bishop of Munster's account is with Mr. Auditor Wood, who will deliver it as soon as wanted.

(a.)¹¹ 12 Feb. 1668-9. Copy of letter from same to same. Papers relating to the balance of his account have been delivered as required, and fuller particulars will be given touching the matter of interest. As for moneys charged as remaining for security of interest in the hands of several persons (specified in his additional account), those persons are accountable. As for the interest charged for 1665, he sends copies of two privy seals, which show the years in which the moneys were borrowed and repaid, whereof but a small part will be found since September 1664, though brought to account in 1665, which could not be avoided from the delay in auditing the accounts and passing the privy seals. It cannot be supposed that the money given for the war has been used to pay interest due before September 1664, there being much more charged on the same account as received from the King's peculiar revenue, and which is no part of the money affected by the service of the war.

(a.)¹³ Copy of privy seal authorizing payment of 60,722*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* to Carteret out of Exchequer, in satisfaction of interest and charges in procuring and borrowing certain sums. [Enclosed with preceding.]

(a.)¹⁴ 10 March 1668-9. Copy of letter from Carteret to the Commissioners. His account for the Bishop of Munster has, as he has already told the Commissioners, been with Mr. Auditor Wood some time. He knows of no further charge or discharge.

(a.)¹⁵ 17 March 1668-9. Copy of letter from same to same. Has deputed Mr. Waith to wait on the Commissioners about the item of ministers' groats and surgeons' twopences.

(a.)¹⁶ 29 April 1669. Copy of letter from same to same. He has been commanded to go again to Ireland for about three months. He hopes the Commissioners will soon conclude the examination of his accounts. Waith and Fenn will represent him in his absence.

(a.)¹⁷ 13 May. Copy of letter from same to same. Sends an answer to some exceptions and demands of the Commissioners of the 7th inst., together with copies of two privy seals, one for 15,000*l.* returned into Ireland, the other for money paid to the King of Sweden and the Prince of Moldavia. The balance of 193,729*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* claimed against him, has been found by dividing his account of 1664, and separating the four last months from it. His credit is thereby reduced to 11,232*l.* 12*s.* 6½*d.*, whereas on the whole years' account, as passed by the Exchequer, it was 203,361*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* He claims credit for the balance on the previous eight months, which reduces the final balance to about 1,500*l.*, as stated. As for the 1,033*l.* 13*s.* claimed as not charged on imposts allowed and stayed, it is possible that some imposts may have been omitted, they being very numerous, and the accounts made up in great haste. Mr. Waith will explain them. Touching the moneys stated to be left for security of interest in the hands of several persons mentioned, the acknowledgments of those persons are the best vouchers he can refer to. The greatest part of the interest charged on his account of 1665 became due and was paid before September 1664, and the allowance thereof on his account is warranted by two privy seals. In bringing to account in 1665 payments for services and provisions before 1 Sept. 1664, he thinks he was well warranted, never having been enjoined to apply all the money he should receive in one year to the service of that year only, or to refuse payment of debts of the navy contracted before 1 Sept. 1664. He has done the same thing accordingly in 1666 and 1667. With regard to moneys affected by particular Acts of Parliament, he has applied them solely for the purposes so appointed. The sums received in 1661 from the East India Company for freight of the King's ships sent to the Company to go to the East Indies under the late Earl of Marlborough were purposely not charged till 1665, to avoid a double charge, as the account between the King and the Company was still depending, and he expected to be charged with that sum regularly out of the Exchequer, not having retained that sum in his hands, he ought not to be charged with interest thereon.

(a.)¹⁸ 24 May. Copy of letter from same to same. Sends an answer to some further exceptions of the 19th inst. Asks for return of Lord Anglesey's original receipt for 112,000*l.*, a copy whereof is with the Commissioners. For answer, he says that it is impossible for the Treasurer of the Navy to specify the particular relation each payment bears to each privy seal, except he be guided by the principal officers, &c. by their appropriating each bill for provisions, &c. to those distinct services, which has not been formerly expected or found practicable. The payment of interest for loans was authorised by a privy seal of 1665. The dates of his receipts of such loans are specified in his accounts, but the dates of repayment can only be ascertained from the lenders themselves and those by whom the repayments were made. His account is vouched by the principal officers, &c. of the navy, and the bills being passed at their board he conceives he was warranted in paying them. With regard to bringing bills to account in one year, which were paid in the following year, it was done simply to answer some part of a much greater value of imposts and tickets for wages, which could not possibly be passed and entered in the years when they were really paid. Many of those bills were taken in discount of such imposts as were paid in the year in which they are brought to account, and doubtless bore date that year, though possibly signed at the Navy Office and also exchanged in lieu of imposts or paid some months after. He has taken no greater allowances to himself than what is warranted by his patent and former precedents, and what has been paid to the principal officers, &c. is warranted by their hands, like other payments. He was not empowered to question the prudence and authority of those that could and did give different employments to one and the same person, or of the Navy Board in assigning distinct salaries for the same. He is sure he never appointed a deputy treasurer that was to his knowledge Muster-Master of the Fleet. His ledger is his proper voucher for his accounts, and that is duly signed by the principal officers and Commissioners of the Navy.

(a.)¹⁹ 25 June. Copy of letter from same to same. Encloses a list of imposts not yet cleared, and offers explanations thereupon.

(a.)²⁰ 16 July. Copy of letter from same to same, in answer to that of the Board of the 7th inst., touching some objections to his account. The objections relate to wages paid twice to one and the same seaman; to wages paid in full upon ticket without deducting the value of clothes, though the latter are made paid in the sea-books; and to wages allowed in the books of arrears as paid to persons who do not appear to have served. He answers, that though some particulars may have escaped through the multiplicity of the business, yet there has been no voluntary default. The objections apply rather to the signing of double tickets than to his account. Mr. Waith will explain. With regard to the dates of repayment of loans, he refers again to the lenders; all that was required from him was to show when the interest thereon was paid. Touching certain payments made by him without the notice of the Board, they were for provisions which the great occasion of expense made scarce, and which they were ordered to procure wherever they were to be had, and in France, where, transportation into England being prohibited upon pain of death, he contracted, by command of the King and the Duke of York, with one Mr. Browne, who came over to England and delivered the stores which were approved; and payment was agreed to by the principal officers, &c. As for vouchers, he has delivered in all in his possession.

(a.)²¹ 15 Sept. Extract from Minutes of Proceedings of Commissioners. Certain imposts transferred to Lord Anglesey's account from Carteret's are to remain as a charge against the latter until he can produce a receipt from L. Anglesey.

(a.)²² 23 Sept. Copy of Sir George Carteret's further answers to exceptions to his account, formerly delivered, together with an answer to their Lordships' exceptions. The answers are directed to the charges of—(1.) Not applying moneys received under privy seals to the particular services they were assigned to. This was found impracticable in time of peace, much more so in a time of war and great action, when urgency was required. (2.) Non-specification of dates to show how interest accrued on loans. The privy seal of 1665 was his warrant for depositing tallies with the lenders as security for interest, which was all he did in that particular, the computation of interest was not his duty, but must be made with the lenders and the receivers, where the tallies were struck, who could control them. The deposits of tallies with Sir Robert Vyner and Alderman Backwell were made by special warrant. (3.) Bills passed, &c. for provisions without particulars of quantity or place of delivery, and sums paid without notice of the Board. Mr. Browne's contract has been explained; he has procured a list of stores delivered at Portsmouth and Deptford, and for what remains to complete the contract, Mr. Browne's obligation is security to the Navy to perform. Considering the part he had taken for His Majesty in this matter, he might rather have expected thanks than an exception. (4.) Payments of bills entered in one year, and not passed or made till the next. He refers for 1665 and 1666 to a list of imposts and tickets for wages, of much more value than the bills, as already explained. (5.) Sums charged for imposts to several persons, but not specified to be stayed or recharged, though money has been paid them more than enough to clear the imposts for the same service for which it was impressed. He refers to his answers of 24 May and 25 June, and adds that his accounts have been passed the Navy Office 18 months since, and a duplicate given them to enable them to call those persons thereby chargeable with imposts to account. (6.) Ships suffered to lie in port on charge for want of pay, &c., though sums available therefor were in the treasurer's hands. Loans borrowed of goldsmiths, but not received immediately at the time of borrowing. The cash balance of 423,595*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.*, stated to be in hand in Nov. 1666, is a mistake of Mr. Portman's in his charging of tallies on the Royal aid, and the 190,000*l.* borrowed of the farmers of the Customs was for the service of the Navy in general, and not for wages only, nor was it received when stated in the exception. So far from no money being paid for wages, about 200,000*l.* was so paid in the period mentioned. As much money was paid as was received, and so, if the ships lay in charge for want of pay, it was not the fault of Accountant. No bills to his knowledge were ever charged to the King's account, and if such were charged he has taken every means by public notice and proclamation to ensure their discovery. He never gave credit for any money borrowed, but from the day he received it, and allowed none to remain in the lenders' hands longer than till he could obtain it. As to the 200,000*l.* lent by the farmers of the Customs, the facts are that in August 1666 Sir Rob. Vyner and others treated with the Lord Treasurer to farm the Customs, and agreed to advance that sum on the contract being completed. This was delayed till October through the fire, and only 15,000*l.*

was borrowed of them by the Lord Treasurer in August on the first treaty, and in October to January following 175,000*l.* more, which sums are duly entered in the cash books and were received by none but those authorized to receive them for the Navy.—Postscript. He sends a certificate from Sir Dennis Gaden, showing how the money received from the East India Company were disposed of. [This certificate is not among these papers.]

(a.)²⁴ 11 Oct. Copy of letter from Carteret to the Commissioners. Asks their Lordships to give him copies of his cash books, &c., which are in their possession, the same being necessary, as he finds so many questions asked of him from time to time.

(a.)²⁴ 12 Nov. Copy of letter from same to same. Referring to the Commissioners' answer to preceding, he asks them to allow Mr. King to take copies of certain books mentioned.

(a.)²⁵ 12 Oct. Copy of letter from Lord Brouncker and Sir John Menns to the Commissioners. In reply to their letter of the 29th ult., referring to their management of the late war, they say that most of the present Board are wholly unconcerned therein. Of the principal officers and commissioners so employed (a list of whom is given) there remain only Lord Brouncker, who acted as Comptroller since January 1666, Sir J. Menns, his predecessor, Sir Wm. Penn, for the Victualling, and Samuel Pepys, the Clerk of the Acts. Of these, only the two former are now in town. Mr. Pepys, who is absent by leave of His Royal Highness [the Duke of York], is best able, from his constant attendance at the Board, to give an account of their acting in general.

(a.)²⁶ 19 Oct. Copy of letter from Sir Jeremy Smith to the Commissioners. Referring to their letter of 29 Sept., observing on the management of the late war, he finds charges reflecting on the Comptroller of the Navy. Having succeeded to that office only on the 24th June last, he is not accountable for anything before that time.

(a.)²⁷ 14 Oct. Copy of warrant to Carteret, dated 5 March 1665-6, to redeem 50,000*l.* of tallies in Alderman Backwell's hands. [This and the following papers of same date were produced this day.]

(a.)²⁸ 14 Oct. Same, dated 26 March 1666, to deliver to Sir Robert Vyner tallies amounting to 105,000*l.*

(a.)²⁹ 14 Oct. Copy of Order in Council of 15 May 1667, addressed to Lord Ashley, directing certain tallies for 40,000*l.* and 20,000*l.*, now in Carteret's hands, to be assigned to Sir Robert Vyner in further security for his loans, with L. Ashley's directions to Carteret to comply with the order. [For original, see Cal. State Papers (Domestic), 1667, p. 99.]

(a.)³⁰ 14 Oct. Copy of letter from Lord Ashley to Carteret, dated 13 Oct. It is as follows:—

"Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, in answer to what you yesterday desired me to consider of, I can give you no other than what I then did, for it is most certain that very often not only my Lord Treasurer and I could not borrow money upon tallies of the bankers, though they were of never so good found, especially if they were any thing remote, and I know both you and we have often been forced to engage to them our personal credits. But I think we shall all take care of that for the future. This cannot be strange to any that have been acquainted with the public affairs, neither can we complain of the bankers for it, since I believe we have owed some of them near a million at a time, so frankly did they venture in the King's affairs when they could command money. Sir Philip Warwick and Sir Robert Long can give the same account, and I wonder it should be a question to any that live in this town."

"Sir, I am your very affectionate "and humble servant,

ASHLEY.

(a.)³¹ 14 Oct. Certificate of Edward Backwell that Sir G. Carteret has often proffered him tallies and other securities for money, when he has not been in a condition to lend him thereupon. Dated 13 Oct. 1669.

payment of the 200,000*l.* advanced by them, and of their inability then to advance more, and of a certificate of Mr. Colville and others to the same effect. To disprove further the charge of having kept cash in his hands, he gives an account of tallies and orders delivered, amounting to 459,525*l.*, whereof, so far from the whole representing cash received, no less than 150,000*l.* remains unpaid.

(a.)²² 22 Sept. Copy of Minutes of Proceedings of the Commissioners, being the examination of Col. Wm. Legg, the Treasurer of His Majesty's Ordnance. Like his predecessors, he has always been allowed 6*d.* in the pound on moneys accountable for by him, and his deputy Capt. Wharton has never been authorized to take more. For a parcel of saltpetre the King allowed him 1,000*l.* by special warrant, bought of the E. I. Company, which was not above the rate of 10*s.* in the 100*l.*, except for what the Parliament hath otherwise appointed. [These words in italics are in brackets.] Neither he nor his predecessors have ever kept any journal of receipts and deliveries of provisions. His office was simply ministerial. He usually kept his cash in the Tower. As for dates scratched out in debentures, he knows nothing thereof, and desires further particulars.

(b.) Papers produced before the Committee from time to time, namely:—

(b.)¹ First instance in support of the Commissioners' first observation in their Report, showing a sum of 313,794*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* diverted from the paying of seamen's wages.

(b.)² Second instance in support of same, showing 16,339*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* more paid to Edward Deering than was due to him; also 50,000*l.* more paid to him, and also 2,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* charged by Carteret as paid to Deering, who denies the receipt thereof. [These charges were investigated by the Committee on the 25th Nov.]

(b.)³ Third instance in support of same. Moneys assigned for wages were applied towards the payment of bills for naval provisions.

[The above three papers were brought in 16 Nov. in obedience to order of previous day.]

(b.)⁴ Copy of observations of the Commissioners touching the patent of 19 July 1660, exhibited to the Committee by Carteret as his authority for an allowance to be made him on certain payments certified. They conceive that this patent was only for arrears, and does not extend to any bills or services delivered or performed after the date thereof, for reasons which they set out at length. Endorsed. Read at the Committee, 23 Nov. 1669. [The patent referred to was produced on the 16th Nov., and the Committee heard both parties thereon on the 23rd.]

(b.)⁵ Copy of reply of Commissioners to Carteret's answer to Commissioners' "first instance" (b.)¹. They concluded by stating that Carteret, so far from having cleared himself from the charges set out in the "first instance," stands charged with 96,699*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* more. Endorsed. Received at the Committee and read 23 Nov. [See Minutes (c) of date.]

(b.)⁶ Detailed statement of moneys charged as paid in Carteret's account, for which no bills or vouchers appear. [Produced 2 Dec. pursuant to order of 29 Nov.]

(b.)⁷ Copy of examination of Sir Dennis Gauden, Knight, Surveyor of His Majesty's Marine Victuals. Sworn before the Commissioners 2 Dec. 1669. On an interrogatory whether Mr. Osborne did not allow Mr. Fenn, late agent of Sir G. Carteret, 3,811*l.* out of such moneys as he should have received for the Victualler of the navy for Mr. Deering, due to him for pipe and hogshhead staves delivered to the said Victualler, deponent states that he does not remember any such stores being credited to Mr. Deering; but being in want of such sort of staves during the Dutch war, he asked Mr. Fenn's assistance, who ordered them accordingly, and deponent bought them of Fenn.

(b.)⁸ Same of Nicholas Osborne, of St. Botolph's, Aldgate, Merchant, Cashier to Sir Dennis Gauden, sworn 2 Dec. 1669. On an interrogatory touching the allowance of 3,811*l.* to Mr. Fenn for pipe staves, &c., he states that he does not know that Sir D. Gauden ever bought anything of Mr. Deering, nor does he remember ever paying Mr. Deering any moneys for Sir D. Gauden. Sir Dennis ordered him to allow Mr. Fenn the said sum for pipe and hogshhead staves, but never to his memory, ordered him to pay any moneys to Mr. Fenn for Mr. Deering. The sum in question is entered in the cash books as paid to Mr. Fenn. Mr. Deering had sometimes asked deponent whether Sir Dennis wanted any pipe staves, &c., and said that he had some in readiness; but whether Sir Dennis bought them of Mr. Fenn or Mr. Deering, he knows not.

[The above two papers were produced on 2 Dec. They relate to the first allegation of the Commissioners in their "second instance" (b.)².]

(b.)⁹ Instances in support of the Commissioners' second observation in their Report, relating to 230,731*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* claimed by Carteret as paid and deposited for security of interest, without any specification of dates to show how interest accrued. [Produced 2 Dec.]

(b.)¹⁰ Further instances in support of same, being a statement of moneys amounting to 98,882*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, allowed for interest on Carteret's accounts with the goldsmiths, without specification of the time or moneys for which the same are so allowed. [Produced 2 Dec.]

(b.)¹¹ Observations of the Commissioners on a Privy Seal of 11 Sept. 1665, produced by Carteret as his warrant for depositing moneys for security of interest for sums borrowed, and on a warrant of 2 Sept. 1669 to Sir G. Carteret from the late Lord Treasurer. As for the privy seal, they conceive that it gives no such warrant as alleged. The payments authorised are limited to the assignments on the royal aid, &c., without respect to subsequent ones. Interest is expressly required to be paid half-yearly, which Sir G. Carteret has not done; it was also limited to the expenses of the expedition of 1665, whereas the sums deposited include large sums lent since that expedition. It was the mortality of the time that induced His Majesty to favour Carteret in this matter. As to the warrant of the 2nd Sept. 1666, they observe that Carteret, so far from paying the interest on moneys borrowed, as therein directed, has deposited the said moneys, to the producing of much inconvenience. [The Privy Seal above referred to was read by the Committee on 2 Dec., and these observations were then produced.]

(b.)¹² Reasons why no judgment can be made how the interest claimed by Sir G. Carteret accrues, founded on an examination of part of Alderman Backwell's books, time not having allowed an examination of any of the accounts of the other goldsmiths.

(b.)¹³ Answer of the Commissioners to first question of the Lords Committee, asking how the King is damaged by Sir G. Carteret's not expressing the true times of the delivery of the tallies. They answer that they cannot in consequence compute the commencement of interest for moneys lent on the credit of those tallies. Should the lenders thereby charge the receipt of tallies before they were de facto delivered, His Majesty might suffer by a proportionable excess of interest. The auditors also are left in uncertainty, or misled in their calculation of interest. It cannot be ascertained when a sum lent on former tallies is satisfied by payment of a subsequent tally, and so the King may be charged with interest for sums actually paid; nor can it be seen what credit Sir G. Carteret has from the goldsmiths.

(b.)¹⁴ Answer of same to second question of the Lords Committee, asking what damage the King may receive from a greater estimate being entered for interest than appears really due when the auditor has calculated it. They answer that until the accounts of interest are stated money cannot be applied with certainty to the discharge of the respective accounts. By depositing an estimated sum the King is deprived of his money paid on tallies. Part of the interest charged on the King has been calculated by the goldsmiths' own accounts, one of whom appears to have charged more than is due.

[The above two papers were produced on 7 Dec., being answers to two questions arising out of the Commissioners' second observation, and asked by the Committee on the 4th.]

(b.)¹⁵ Copy of affidavit of John Philips, one of the Auditors in the Exchequer. Sworn 10 Dec.

1669. States that being ordered to compare some accounts of Carteret's with his own former accounts of interest, to see that none was twice charged, he never received either from Carteret or Fenn any account of the days of receipt of the moneys borrowed by them, nor any cash book, &c. to show the interest allowed or stated by them, save the books and papers delivered by him to the Commissioners through Mr. Auditor Aldsworth. [From the Minutes (c.) of 7 and 10 Dec., it appears that this arose out of the first question of the Committee to the Commissioners on their second observation.]

(b.)¹⁶ Same of John Winch, of St. Giles, Cripplegate, sworn 10 Oct. 1669. Deponent as Clerk to Sir Thos. Player, Chamberlain of the City of London, has been privy to the loans advanced to Carteret, and has from time to time stated the accounts of interest due thereon, and received principal and interest as they became due. No more interest than 6 p.c. was ever demanded or paid on such loans, but Fenn once gave him a gratuity of 10*l.* for procuring two loans.

(b.)¹⁷ Same of John Colville, of London, goldsmith, sworn 21 June 1669. No officer of the navy had any share or benefit with him in any account of interest or rewards for any moneys lent by him to the King since 1 Sept. 1664, or by any bills bought by deponent, save only that he gave Fenn about 200*l.* on the latter paying him some money for matters relating to the navy, but whether before or since 1 Sept. 1664 he cannot remember. At Fenn's desire he went with him to one of the auditors to swear to an account of interest, but on seeing the account could not remember all the advances therein mentioned, nor could he find from his books he had made all those advances.

[This and the preceding affidavit were read on 10 Dec., and appear to relate also to the second observation.]

(b.)¹⁸ Instances in support of the Commissioners' third observation in their Report. After quoting the 9th and 6th General Instructions to the Navy, the first for bidding any officer to trade in any commodities used in the navy, and the second for bidding them to pay any bill or allowance where either the King or the party to whom the same is due may be damaged, they state that, notwithstanding this, great sums, amounting to 79,064*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*, have been paid by Carteret to several officers of the navy for commodities so used and served in. Samuel Pepys figures as the recipient of 757*l.* 17*s.* 5½*d.* for flags and cork. [Produced 4 Dec.]

(b.)¹⁹ Instances in support of their fourth observation. No particulars being given of large payments to clerks and inferior officers, the Commissioners cannot judge whether any or what part thereof are chargeable to His Majesty's account. Endorsed, Agreed on 22 Nov. 1669. [Produced 4 Dec.]

(b.)²⁰ Same in support of their sixth observation, being part of 126 instances of the same kind, stated to amount to 47,785*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* [Read 10 Dec. See also Minutes (c.) of 2 Dec.]

(b.)²¹ Same in support of their seventh observation, being part of 92 instances of the same kind, amounting to 593*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, and collected from about one-third of the Sea-books, the rest not being yet examined. [Read 10 Dec.]

(b.)²² Same in support of their eighth observation, being part of 65 instances of the same kind, amounting to 74*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* collected as in preceding. [Read 10 Dec.]

(c.) MS. Minute Book of the Proceedings of the Lords' Committee.

[Both the Commissioners and Carteret were heard before this Committee, counsel being allowed the latter, but the Commissioners declining such assistance, as having no need of it, being judges as to matters of fact, which they stated they were ready to prove. With regard to the Patent of 19 July 1660, the Committee (23 Nov.) resolved by 26 votes to 1 in favour of Sir G. Carteret, viz. :—That as the first clause of the patent is a warrant to the Treasurer for payment of arrears vouched as therein is expressed, so the second clause is a warrant to him for allowance for all such moneys as he shall be any way charged to disburse about marine causes, if vouched as in the said clause is expressed. With regard to the observations of the Commissioners in their Report, the Committee resolved as follows:—Observation 1. Resolved by 10 to 1 (Dec. 2), that it has not been made to appear to the Committee by the Commissioners of Accounts that Sir George Carteret has assumed to himself a liberty to make use of the King's treasure for other uses than directed by justifiable warrant.—Observation 3. Resolved by 11 to 1 (Dec. 4), that Sir George has not paid any moneys contrary to instructions of Treasurer of the Navy.—Observation 4. Agreed to resolve (Dec. 4), That Sir George Carteret has done nothing contrary to his duty as Treasurer of the Navy.—Observation 5. Agreed to resolve (Dec. 7), That the observation is true in fact, but it has been and is the usual and constant practice of the Navy, and doth not appear to be of any damage to the King.—Observation 7. Agreed to resolve (Dec. 10), That it not having been made appear that Sir George Carteret hath made any of these payments without sufficient vouchers, the Committee see no cause to conclude him faulty upon the 7th observation. The proceedings of the Committee came to an end with the prorogation on 19 Dec.]

214. Oct. 26. De Vaux v. Colladon.—Petition of Sir Theodore de Vaux, stating that being the surviving executor of the estate of Edward de Pleurs, in trust for his daughter Hester, and having occasion to go abroad, he committed the care of the said Hester and her estate to Sir John Colladon, who on the return of De Vaux, refused to restore them to him, and made unreasonable claims in respect of his care of them. Thereupon they sued each other both at Common Law and in Equity, and in a suit before the Master of the Rolls, the Registrar drew up a decretal order, and Colladon got it signed and enrolled before petitioner could object to it. The enrollment of the order prevents a bill of review lying. The order directed him to pay 2,841*l.* on an account alleged to be a stated account, which petitioner denies, and a further sum on account of an estate in Isleworth, though this is not mentioned in the Registrar's book. There is no error in law but only error in fact, but the Court of Chancery cannot relieve him as the decree is enrolled. Petitioner does not appeal from the Court of Chancery, but prays that the said enrollment may be set aside and the cause re-heard by the Lord Keeper, the petitioner offering to pay Colladon the costs of the rehearing if he be not relieved thereupon. See L. J. XII. 264-281. See also 265.

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of report of the Lords' Committee for Petitions. L. J., XII. 264. In extenso. See Pet. Book, 2 Nov., for arguments before the Committee.

(b.) 13 Nov. Answer of Sir John Colladon, the respondent, traversing and supplementing the statements in the Petition of Appeal. He states that the decree complained of was enrolled thirty-three days after it had been pronounced, and then only after having been passed and amended by petitioner's counsel; and that the petitioner alleging surprise, obtained a rehearing before the Lord Chancellor, who passed the several minutes of the three Registers and confirmed the decree. Respondent further submits that, though the House of Lords may rehear the cause, they cannot, without having so reheard it, order the Court of Chancery to take so unprecedented a course as to set aside the enrollment. He therefore prays to be dismissed in peace. L. J., XII. 266.

(c.) 4 Dec. Copy of order of the House dismissing the appeal. L. J., XII. 281. In extenso.

215. Oct. 28. Decay of Trade, &c.—Minutes of proceedings of the Committee appointed to consider of the causes and grounds of the fall of rents and decay of trade within these Kingdoms. This Committee was appointed on the 25th (L. J., XII. 254), and their minutes extend from 28 Oct. 1669 to 9 March following. Dr. Worsley, Mr. Child and other members of the Council of Trade gave evidence before it. Mr. Child attributed the prosperity of the trade of the Dutch to their fidelity in their seal, encouragement of inventors (whom they reward while they make the invention public instead of granting a patent, as here), thrift, small ships, low duties, poor law, banks, mercantile law, easy admission of burghers, inland navigation, low interest, fisheries, colonies, religious liberty, education. English trade had increased in gross. Persecution abroad had brought us in several trades, such as Milan and jean fustians.

Comfit makers brought in by one that escaped the Inquisition. Maidstone thread is carried all over the world. Silk throwing and dyeing maintain 20,000 in London. The drawbacks to English trade are dishonest aining, dishonest packing of fish, statute of bankruptcy, taxes on home manufactures, statutory obligation to serve apprentice, export of coin, trade bye-laws, bad poor laws, scarcity of labour, the Fire and Plague, and the heavy land taxes which preceded them; usual plenty of corn, racking up of rents 51 and 52, high bank rates, anticipation of revenue, improvement of Ireland, which exports to the colonies in Dutch ships. The Irish Cattle Act ineffectual. The Eastland, Norway, Russia, Greenland, and Scotch trades much impaired by the exclusiveness of the Companies' high duties, or free trade without reciprocity. The way to promote trade is by increasing the capital of the nation, and by the use of Bills of Exchange and Registers. Perfect free trade is an advantage. Increase the stock of labour and capital. Dr. Worsley, being examined on the fall of rents, said the consumption of home produce and consequent high rents depended on the prosperity of the manufactures. These have decreased. We export scarce one-fifth of the cloth exported 40 years ago. Traders should be encouraged. We have lost 900,000L worth of woollen manufacture, and not replaced it with linen and cordage. Bounties to trade are given in France. Mr Papillon said capital was much impaired by the fire, being taken up in rebuilding. Some 100,000 people were lost by the Plague. Labour therefore scarcer. Money wasted in lawsuits. Foreign artisans should be encouraged. The Dutch have beaten us out of the Irish trade. Sir H. Blunt deplores high interest and emigration. Interest should be at 4 per cent.—The Committee then agreed to consider these subjects, (1), Interest; (2), Negligence and deceit in our manufactures; (3), Litigation; (4), The Want of Registers; and (5), Liberty of Conscience. On the subject of interest, Mr. Child advocates a low interest as tending to enrich the country, and wishes it established by law, as in Italy. In Holland the interest is low without a law. It is objected that low interest is the effect, not the cause, of riches. Interest was once 8 per cent. Labourers wages are the test of a nation's wealth. Labour cheap in Scotland. Mr. Grey says interest is low in Holland because they have much money and little land. The reverse the case in Scotland and Ireland. Mr. Titus says, if interest is lowered, the usurers will call in their money, and mortgages will be foreclosed, and traders ruined. Money will then be scarcer, and the law evaded. Land now at sixteen years purchase. Gentlemen would have to pay high interest and receive only the legal rate. In all monarchical and aristocratical governments the first pulling down thereof has been lowering of interest. Mr. Lome says there is little difference in Italy between interest and exchange of money, which costs them at least 10 per cent. In Turkey money is at 40 per cent., never under 12 per cent. Turkey is full of money in transitu, which is not wealth. Money may be brought lower by prosperity, but not by law. Dr. Worsley says there is great scarcity of money in Ireland. The Dutch gain much by their East India Company. Mr. Child says 3,000L now is no more than 2,000L twenty years ago. London trade was on long credit, now in ready money. Act of Navigation has improved trade. A law will lower interest as it has done thrice already. Here you take up money on real security for 100L per ann., whereas in Ireland you cannot under 400L. Mr. Titus says a great part of the money used in trade and for the building of London is Dutch money. Mr. Child does not believe there is 10,000L of foreign money here. Mr. Lome says there is more trade, but a tumultuous trade. Much money is sent to the Indies. Dr. Worsley says this is not the proper time to lower interest, as there is not enough money in the country. Money scarce in Ireland because there are few manufactures there. Mr. Child says it is because of the high interest, and because the profit of the country goes to persons absent. Exports, however, exceed imports.—The Committee then voted by 13 to 1 for the introduction of a Bill to reduce interest to 4 per cent. (disagreed to by the House. L. J., XII. 280). On the 13th Nov. the Committee took up the question of Registers, and Sir Robert Murray delivered in a paper [Annex (c.) hereto]. He believes land in Scotland sells better by reason of the system of registration. Near Edinburgh it sells at 20 or 22 years' purchase, and money rents sell at 25. Land in the highlands is worth 20 years' purchase.—The Committee then agreed to report in favour of a Bill for Registers to remedy the uncertainty of Titles of Estates (the House gave leave for the introduction of such a Bill, L. J., XII. 284, and subsequently a Committee for that purpose was appointed, but the matter dropped, L. J., XII. 381); and also of a Bill for the Naturalization of Foreigners (See 318), to remedy the defect of population. With regard to the deceit in manufactures, Mr. Child says Colchester baize was sold by the credit of its seal; but since the siege of Exeter it is not so good by 15 or 20 per cent. Mr. Titus thinks the law cannot be too strict against the export of wool, which is the destruction of the manufacture. The existing law is not sufficient. Mr. Papillon thinks every manufacturer ought to have a particular Trade Mark. The bulk of the Irish wool should be brought in, and the exportation thereof abroad prohibited and discouraged by burning ships exporting it.*—The Committee then voted by 8 to 1 in favour of some ease and relaxation in Ecclesiastical matters. [For reports of Committee see L. J., XII. 273, 284. On receiving the first report, the House proceeded to consider the question of reducing the rate of interest, and on the 1st December several persons were examined before a Committee of the whole House. Against the reduction were Capt. Titus and Mr. Clayton, while in favour of it were Mr. Child, Mr. Gold, Mr. Papillon, Sir Henry Blunt, Mr. Buckworth, and Mr. Hobland. These against the reduction maintained that usurers would foreclose their mortgages, that mercantile credit would be ruined, and foreign money withdrawn; that widows' and orphans' incomes would suffer, and that money would not be forthcoming on public emergencies. Money is a commodity, and would become scarce if a rate is put upon it. The nation was more prosperous and land dearer when interest was 10 per cent. When money was at 8 per cent. land sold for 18 and 20 years' purchase, but now at 16 and 17. English money is sent to Venice, where it brings 12 per cent. On the question of what foreign money there is in England, it is stated that Alderman Bucknoll had above 100,000L in his hands, Mr. Meynell above 30,000L, Mr. Vandeput at one time 60,000L, Mr. Dericost always near 200,000L of Dutch money, lent to merchants at 7, 6, and 5 per cent. when money was at 8 per cent. On the other side it is said that Dutch merchants, who are the usual lenders of Dutch money, say there is no considerable quantity of Dutch money in England; and on the general question of the reduction it is contended that trade has increased since the withdrawal of foreign money and the lowering of interest from 8 per cent., that we must be put on the same footing as the Dutch; that there is more money now in England, owing to the portions given with daughters, and great sums with apprentices, the increase of the customs, and the rise of rents, and the costly building in London. We have near a hundred times the shipping we had within these seven years. Goods are sold for ready money. A 10 per cent. rate of interest precluded all but capitalists from trading. Land was at 14 years' purchase when interest was at 10 per cent., at 16 when 8 per cent., and at 18 now, when it is at 6 per cent. Usury is only one of the causes of the depression. By a reduced rate of interest the King may command all men's money. Large individual profits are a national loss. (MS. Minutes.) The House was prorogued 11 Dec, but the Committee was appointed 17 Feb. in the following session, and revived on the 28th. No further report was made.]

[The minutes of the Committee contain an order of 8 Nov. for the farmers of the customs to bring in an account of the importation and exportation of all commodities with the several species, quantities, and measures distinguished as much as may be by the several countries and places from whence they are carried, for seven years ending at Michaelmas last; on the 3rd of March following the farmers were ordered to bring in as much of the account as they had finished, and accordingly on the 5th Sir John Westenholme delivered an account of all goods imported and exported for 1663 and 1669. A list of exports and imports from Michaelmas 1668 to Michaelmas 1669, containing the items marked in the above papers with an asterisk, but with their values attached,† is given by Davenant, the Inspector-General of Exports and Imports, in his report of 1713 to the Commissioners for stating the Public Accounts, (Works p. 405), as forming the principal articles of our trade with Holland. Davenant (p. 351), states that he took his items from an old manuscript then remaining in the Custom-house, which gave an account for the years 1663 and 1669 of the exports and imports from the City of London only, but took no notice of re-exports or of the out-ports. He adds that it appeared to be an authentic copy of what had been offered to the House of Commons, but in what year he could not find.]

† The above two papers leave the column headed "Value" blank. The farmers state in their evidence that when goods were rated at 1s. per pound, it was easier to estimate their value, which is now uncertain. Davenant relates that he took his valuation from the most trustworthy sources of the day. No official valuation was settled till 1697, when the office of Inspector-General of Exports and Imports was created. Macpherson, iii. 340.

(c.) Paper headed "A short account of Registers of lands in Scotland," describing the formalities connected with the tenure and transfer of land, the registration of deeds, &c. relating thereto. [Delivered in to the Committee by Sir Robert Murray on 13 November in pursuance of an order of the 8th.]

216. Oct. 29. Middleton et al. v. Jacob et al.—Petition of Symon Middleton and John Blackwell, Esquires, executors of Thomas Smithsby, Esquire, deceased, and others, for reversal of a decree in Chancery made in 1667, concerning 10,000*l.* lent by Thomas Smithsby in 1640 to Sir Paul Pindar, Sir John Jacob, Sir Nicholas Crispe, and others, late farmers of the customs. The decree ordered that certain sums repaid as interest should be deducted from the principal, whereby petitioners have been deprived of their interest. Petitioners pray that Sir John Jacob, John and Thomas Crispe, and Dame Harrison and Richard Harrison, executors of the aforesaid late farmers of the customs, may be ordered to answer. L. J., XII. 258. [See also Cases in Chancery, I. 105.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 Oct. Case of the petitioners.

(b.) 4 Nov. Joint and several answers and pleas of Sir J. Jacob, J. Crispe, and T. Crispe. The third executor of Smithsby, Hezekiah Heynes, should be a party to the suit. He gave respondents releases of the residue of their debt, and these are binding on his co-executors. Will enter into the merits if the House wishes. [Read 19 Nov.]

(c.) 17 Nov. Petition of above appellants that their co-executor, Hezekiah Heynes, be made a party respondent, and ordered to answer.

(d.) 19 Nov. Answer of Hezekiah Heynes, in obedience to the order of the House of the 17 Nov. Smithsby's estate owed him more than the sum due to it from the respondents. He therefore received the money from the respondents, and gave them releases, and he is quite ready to come to a true account for the money with his co-executors.

(e.) 23 Nov. Draft order for the Committee for Privileges to consider how notice to answer is to be given to Richard Harrison, a member of the Commons, and one of the respondents. L. J., XII. 272. In extenso. See Priv. Book under 25 Nov.

(f.) 2 Dec. Joint and several answers of Sir J. Jacob and the two Crispes, entering into the merits of the question. They deny the amount of the original debt. The money was lent to the King in his need, and charged on the customs. [Appeal dismissed 6 Dec. 1669. L. J., XII. 281.]

217. Oct. 29. Affidavit of John Prosser, servant to the Lady Elizabeth Dowager Abergavenny, that he has been arrested and imprisoned, contrary to privilege, by Griffith Gwilliam and others. L. J., XII. 258.

219. Nov. 9. Information that John Filewood sues Richard Hollins, Lord Byron's servant, saying he cares not for Lord Byron's protection. L. J., XII. 264.

220. Nov. 10. Thomas v. Dagnall.—Petition of Anthony Thomas, of Chobham in the county of Surrey, Esquire. Prays for the reversal of a decree and other proceedings in Chancery concerning money advanced upon security of mills called St. John of Jerusalem Mills, in Horsey Down [Horsleydown] in Southwark, in a suit between Samuel Thomas, deceased, and Richard Dagnall, deceased. L. J., XII. 265. [This Petition was at first offered to the Committee for Petitions by Lord Dover, but withdrawn, petitioner preferring to present it to the House. See Pet. Book, 26 Oct.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 15 Nov. Joint and several plea and answer of Ann Dagnall, relict and executrix of Richard Dagnall, deceased, Thomas Owen, Esq., and Mary his wife, Richard Stephens, gent., and Frances his wife, the daughters, heirs, and also legatees of the said Richard Dagnall. L. J., XII. 267.

221. Nov. 15. Copy of Judges order for the hearing of a cause at Sergeant's Inn in Fleet Street, in which the Earl of Anglesey is concerned against Sir Maurice Eustace, and in which the Earl complains as a breach of privilege. L. J., XII. 267.

222. Nov. 18. Petition of Arthur, Earl of Anglesey. By letters patent dated 2 July 1667, petitioner obtained a grant from the King of the office of Treasurer of the Navy for the term of his life, and accordingly executed the same; but, by other letters patent dated 2nd November 1668, petitioner was required to cease from the exercise of his office, by colour of which, and pretence of later grants, divers persons, some unknown to him, have dispossessed him of the exercise of his office without any form or due proceeding at law, and this in time of privilege of Parliament. The Earl prays their Lordships to take his case into consideration and afford him relief. L. J., XII. 269. Comp. Pepys' Diary, 31 Oct. and 5 Nov. 1668; and 15 Jan. 1668-9.

Annexed:—

(a.) 19 Nov. Draft order referring the above to the Committee for Privileges to consider whether it is a breach of privilege. L. J., XII. 270. In extenso. [The Earl subsequently forbore further proceedings upon his petition, and desired it to be suspended. Priv. Book, 24 Nov. 1669.]

223. Nov. 23. Draft of an Act for settling certain charitable uses devised by John, late Bishop of Rochester. [Read 1st, 2nd, and committed; no further proceeding. L. J., XII. 272, &c. A Bill with the same title received the royal assent the following year. 22 Car. II. c. 2. in List of Private Acts, 8vo. See 240.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments made in Committee. See Com. Book, Dec. 2 and 6.

(b.), (c.) Clauses added in Committee. See Com. Book, March 3 and 7.

224. Nov. 24. Affidavit of Richard Wade, that John Clifton, one of the Sheriff's bailiffs of the County of Warwick, drove away some cattle from lands of the Earl of Northumberland for a distress for a fee farm rent due to the King.

Annexed:—

225. Nov. 25. Squibb v. The King.—Transcript of record, &c. in the writ of error. L. J., XII. 274. Comp. 181.

226. Dec. 2. Lady Read v. Sir John Read.—Appeal and petition of Dame Allismon Read, now the wife of Sir John Read, of Brocket Hall, in the County of Hertford, Baronet, formerly the widow and relict of the Hon. Francis Pierrepont, Esq^r. Petitioner in 1662 married Sir John Read, bringing with her a portion of 8,000*l.* or thereabouts, but as soon as he had possessed himself thereof, he cruelly turned away all her servants, obliged her to lie in a wool chamber, and then turned her out of doors, upon which she was forced to fly to the Court of Arches for alimony, and there obtained an order for 30*l.* a month, which was confirmed upon appeal by the Court of Delegates; but her husband, who threatens to starve her though he lie in prison for it, refuses obedience to the order, and obscures himself so that she cannot serve any process upon him. She therefore appeals to their Lordships to order the 30*l.* a month to be charged upon some of her husband's lands, as she is undone and wearied out, tossed from court to court for the space of three years in prosecuting for relief. L. J., XII. 279. [Received 26 Oct. See Pet. Book of date, and 2 Nov.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 2 Dec. Answer of Sir John Read. He absolutely denies his wife's charges of cruelty, or that he received with her the sum she states; on the contrary, her lying in the wool chamber was her own doing, that she might the better dispose of the plate, jewels, and household stuff belonging to him. She has also appropriated money due to him; she refused his offers that she should live with him in conjugal affection, and brought a trooper into his chamber with his sword drawn to challenge him on her account; and in all suits her design has been to have allowance out of his estate and to live apart from him. L. J., XII. 279. [Received 16 Nov. See Pet. Book of date.]

(b.) 2 Dec. Reply to Sir John Read's answer, reiterating the statements contained in the petition, and denying his counter statements. L. J., XII. 279. [These papers were read in the House this day, and the petition was dismissed. See also Pet. Book, 23 and 26 Nov., when, after debate, the 227. Dec. 3. Lady Audley's Privilege.—Deposition respecting the arrest of the Countess of Castlehaven (Lady Audley) at her lodging at Covent Garden, at the suit of Thomas Langrish, who told the bailiff to pretend that he had a letter for her Ladyship from Lord Bridgewater in order to gain access to her chamber. L. J., XII. 280.

Annexed:—

(a) 8 Dec. Petition of Thomas Langrish. Petitioner arrested the Countess of Castlehaven for a debt due seven years since, being altogether ignorant of her privilege, but ordered the officers to release her as soon as he knew her to be a peeress of the land. He is heartily sorry for his ignorant offence, and being at a far greater charge than the debt amounts to, prays for his discharge. L. J., XII. 283.

A bill with the same title received the royal assent in the following year 22 Car. II. c. 19., in List of Private Acts, Svo. See 254.]

229. Dec. 8. Draft of an Act to make debts for goods sold assignable. Forasmuch as the transferring and assigning Bills of Debt for wares and commodities sold would be of great advantage to commerce, by supplying thereby the defects of ready money, the Bill enacts that such Bills or Writings Obligatory may be assigned and transferred again and again if endorsed with a short assignment, the first endorsement being to the effect that the Bill represents a true debt, and that and all subsequent endorsements attesting that no part of the money has been received. Inland Bills of Exchange are to be in like manner transferable, like Foreign Bills of Exchange. This Bill not to affect Orders in the Exchequer. [Read 1st this day, 2nd, and committed, but dropped with the close of the session. L. J., XII. 283.]

230. Dec. 8. Complaint that John Manby has made a ditch upon lands of Lord Lucas, at Shenfield, Essex, and taken some part of the lands into his own, contrary to privilege. L. J., XII. 283.

Annexed:—

(a.) Interrogatories for witnesses in the case.

(b.) Copy of proceeding.

231. Dec. 8. Draft order referring to the Committee for Privileges to consider the manner of entering reasons upon protests. L. J., XII. 283. In extenso.

232. Dec. 10. Draft of an Act for enabling Robert Bellamy to sell lands for payment of his debts. [Read 1st this day; no further proceeding. L. J., XII. 285. See also 268.]

233. Dec. 10. Petition of Sir John Ayton, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. He has diligently attended the House for eight sessions, and executed carefully the orders of commitments of sundry peers with great trouble and charge. He is informed that his predecessor, James Maxwell, and his assistant, by former custom had one half of the fee of the Lieutenant of the Tower; but there is no mention thereof in the Parliament Roll of fees, and it is worn out of use and practice. Petitioner prays the House to "ascertain" it as other fees are, or to discharge him from the trouble of that service. L. J., XII. 285.

234. Dec. 10. Sherley v. Fagg.—Petition of Thomas Sherley, Esquire. Petitioner claims the manor of Weston and other manors and lands in the county of Sussex, so the yearly value of more than 3,000*l.*, as his male under a settlement made by his great-grandfather Sir Thomas Sherley. He complains that in the late calamitous times divers persons have got into possession of the manors, and have combined to defraud him, and especially that Sir John Fagg, who has got into possession of the chief manor, has for 10*l.* and a horse or mare worth 6*l.* procured delivery to him by Francis Whacker of the deed of settlement, without which petitioner cannot recover his estate. When petitioner sued Sir John Fagg in Chancery for the deeds, Sir John pleaded that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration, but derived no title from any of petitioner's ancestors. The Earl of Clarendon allowed the plea, and dismissed petitioner's bill, by which he is ruined and left without remedy in law or equity. He implores their Lordships to cause the deed of settlement to be produced before them, that it may be restored to him, and to do him what other justice they shall think fit.

236. [1669.] Draft of an Act for establishing agreements made upon the marriage of Sir Greivill Verney with the Lady Diana, daughter of the Earl of Bedford. In consideration of the marriage and 7,000*l.* portion Sir Greivill agreed by articles dated 28 August 1667 to settle 1,200*l.* per annum jointure, and that lands in the counties of Lincoln, Hertford, and Cambridge should be the present jointure; but when the Lincolnshire lands by determination of estates in being should amount to 1,200*l.* per annum, then the lands in Cambridgeshire and Hertfordshire should be discharged. Sir Greivill also agreed to settle the manor of Compton Verney in the county of Warwick to himself for life, and to his first and other sons by the Lady Diana in tail, remainder to Richard Verney, Esq^r, and his first and other sons, in tail, remainder to his own right heirs. Sir Greivill died under age without making the settlement, leaving William his only son, who is now about seventeen months old. The Bill is to settle and confirm the jointure and the lands agreed to be entailed according to the articles, and to bar the lady of dower in all other lands of Sir Greivill.

Annexed:—

(a.) Breviate of the Bill.

237. [1669.] Petition of several poor people, creditors of Mrs. Elizabeth Nevill, lately deceased, sister of the Lord Abergavenny. Some two years since John Lord Abergavenny was empowered by Act of Parliament to sell lands for payment of portions, and debts, and thereupon promised to give his sister 1,000*l.*, and paid her 300*l.* promising her security for the rest; but before this was done John Lord Abergavenny died, leaving his sister in great necessity, inasmuch that petitioners trusted her to her death in meat, drink, lodging, and other necessities for her subsistence to the value of 280*l.*; and if this is not paid it will be the ruin of them, their wives, and children for ever. Having been refused payment by the now Lord Abergavenny and the Dowager, they pray the House to order them payment. [For the Act herein referred to see 43.]

238. Feb. 14. Wool Bill.—Amended Draft of an Act for preventing frauds in exporting wool, woolfells, mortlings, shorlings, woolflocks, or any yarn made of wool, contrary to former Acts of Parliament on that behalf made. [This draft, without the amendments, is a duplicate of the Bill with the same title of the previous session, as amended in Committee. (See 209.) Read 1st this day, and rejected upon the question whether the Bill should pass, on 24 January 1670-1. L. J., XII. 288, &c. (See also 358.) The words of the title, printed above in italics, were struck out in Committee on 12 March.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 2 March. Copy of report of the Council of Trade to the King concerning wool. In obedience to the order of reference from the Privy Council, the Council of Trade have taken into their consideration the proposals of Mr. William Carter for preventing the exportation of wool, and have discoursed with him and such other persons as they thought capable of giving good information touching this matter. They find that the exportation of wool is of destructive consequence to the trade of the kingdom, and that the practice has grown through the doubtfulness of expression and other defects in the statute passed in the 12th year of His Majesty's reign. By that Act it is made felony to transport wool, and the Council conceive that the greatness of the penalty has rather deterred men from informing and prosecuting offenders than the offenders from committing the act. The defects in the execution of the laws are,—the remissness of the Custom House officers in not keeping due watch upon all suspected creeks and places from whence wool has usually been shipped off; the want of taking sufficient security for wool transported to Guernsey and Jersey, and from one port to another in England; the admitting of false certificates or returns for the discharge of the wool at the places at which it is pretended to be shipped, and the using of force to beat off His Majesty's officers in making seizures of wool designed to be transported. For prevention of all which for the future the Council offer to His Majesty their humble opinion and advice that His Majesty should issue a proclamation commanding the strict execution of all the laws now in force, and that the defects in the present execution be for the future carefully avoided and prevented. And because what is commanded to all in general is not so much regarded nor so carefully executed as it ought to be, the Council suggest that the care and inspection into this affair should be specially recommended to the President and Governors of Christ's Hospital, and that a Commission should be granted to them for that purpose, giving to them a part of all fines and forfeitures and confiscation of all wool seized by those in their employ, and the benefit of all forfeited bonds relating to the exportation of wool, to be employed by them for the use of the poor children brought up in the Hospital. The Council recommend them as the fittest persons for the management of this affair, because the charge of employing persons effectually to prevent this growing evil is too great for any private person, and they would have no private interest in the ill- or over-doing or neglecting of this work, and would therefore be free from scandal and imputations, and they would have a common interest to look carefully after the business because they are also Governors of Blackwell Hall, which is the common market for woollen manufacturers. Many of them are persons of leisure, of competent estate and past middle age, and have withdrawn themselves from their callings. There is a court already formed, and rooms, officers, methods, and conveniences which others would be at much charge before they could be settled in. The Council conceive that this arrangement would give great content and satisfaction to all His Majesty's subjects in city and country; but if it should not succeed, they cannot foresee any evil from the granting of the Commission, no considerable sum of money having been accounted into the Exchequer out of the forfeiture of wool since His Majesty's most happy restoration. [This Report was read at the first meeting of the Committee on the Bill on 2nd March 1669-70. Mr. Carter was a witness before this Committee.]

(b.) Memorandum of William Carter. The observations he has made upon the progress of the Bill which has been more than twelve months depending, provoke him to the presumption of giving an account of what is already provided for, which may save much of their Lordships' time in going over what has been done, and in answering such objections as have been or may be produced.

(c.) 9 Nov. 1670. Paper endorsed, A supplement to the Bill against transporting wool. Read at the Committee 9 November 1670, delivered in by Mr. Carter. He objects to a limit being fixed within which wool found shall be liable to be seized as intended for export, giving instances in which wool had been brought long distances to the sea. He then proceeds to suggest that wool-growers and fellmongers should be responsible for the destination of their wool; that store-houses should be erected near the seaside, especially in Kent; that Irish wool, which causes the greatest mischief, should be exported only from Dublin, Drogheda, Waterford, Youghal, and Cork, and imported only into Liverpool, Chester, Bristol, Milnehead, and the river of Barnstaple; on the ground that wool shipped from any other Irish port, though nominally entered for England, goes in fact to Amsterdam, Flushing, and St. Malo, and that this restriction will not bear heavily, owing to the cheapness of land carriage; that shipping in any foreign bottoms should be prohibited; that responsible security should be given by bonds, and no certificate for their discharge be valid unless the mayor or civil officer of the port where the wool is landed certify with the officer of the Customs that the wool is actually landed; that care should be taken for weighing both in importation and exportation; that there should be a shorter way for trials and some means adopted to make the escape of offenders more difficult; and that the statutes already in force should be made known often by public reading in every parish church, and also by the sheriff or proper person four times a year.

(d.) Short abstract of preceding paper.

(e.) 11 Nov. 1670. Draft order on report from the Committee, appointing Mr. Justice Twisden and Mr. Baron Turner to assist the Committee. L. J., XII. 362. In extenso.

(f.) Heads of three proposed clauses ordered by the Committee on the 11th Nov. 1670, to be submitted to the above-named Judges, to be put into a legal form, viz. :—(1.) Whosoever ships any wool without first gaining a certificate of the entry thereof at the Custom House of that port within the precincts whereof the ship lies when it takes in its lading, and giving bond in the value of the wool not to transport beyond the seas, shall forfeit the wool so shipped; and all wool found on board any ship at sea without such certificate shall be forfeited, whosoever the same shall be. (2.) That if the Customers connive at wool being transported without entry, they shall forfeit the value of the wool transported, and lose their places; this to be on proof of two witnesses or confession of the party. (3.) That if any person carry wool to the sea out of the body of any county without such entry made as aforesaid, it shall be taken for a conviction, and he shall forfeit his wool.

(g.) Draft (marked A.) of proposed clauses, being the above heads as worded accordingly by the Judges. Agreed to on 25th Nov. 1670, and amended on the 29th.

(h.) 26 Nov. Order of the Committee desiring the above-named Judges to put into legal form the clause underwritten, viz. :—That upon landing wool from one port in England to another, the person so landing shall receive a certificate from the officer of the Customs of the port where he so lands his wool, upon producing and leaving of which certificate at the port where the bond was given, if it be not returned into the Exchequer, or, if it be returned into the Exchequer, upon the producing the said certificate in the Exchequer, the bond shall be restored.

(i.) Draft (marked B.) of preceding clause, as worded accordingly by the Judges. Agreed to 29 Nov.

(k.) Similar draft (marked C.) of another proposed clause, to follow the first clause in annex (g) above. It provides that if any owner or master of a ship permits wool to the quantity of one tod of 28 lb. to be shipped, taken in or laden before certificate of entry made and produced and bond given, his ship shall, on his conviction by the oath of two witnesses, be burnt, and all its guns, tackling, &c. forfeited to the informer. Magistrates or Justices neglecting to burn the ship within fourteen days after such conviction, shall forfeit for each day's default 100*l*, half to go to the King and half to the informer. Endorsed, The clause for burning Boats, worded by Mr. Baron Wyndham. [The Com. Book states that this clause was offered by the said Judge, and agreed to on 6 Dec., and that on the 3rd the Committee had ordered the Earl of Winchelsea and the Bishop of Salisbury to draw up a clause to the same effect.]

(l.) Paper of amendments. These extend only to 29th Nov. 1670.

(m.) Amendments to the Bill. [These contain the above-mentioned clauses,* together with a proviso at the end, saving to Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark their former rights of having uncombed wool transported thither. For every two sacks of pinions that those islands bring back yearly to Southampton, they are to be allowed to transport in exchange one sack of uncombed wool. This proviso appears to have been offered by the Earl of Anglesey and agreed to with amendments on 10 December 1670, a proviso against transporting pinions to Jersey offered by Lord Hatton on the 9th having been rejected.]

(n.) Draft of proposed clause that the counterfeiting of a bond or certificate should be felony.

(o.) Parchment proviso. No ship shall be burned unless the owner shall appear privy and faulty in the transportation of wool prohibited by this Act.

(p.) Draft of an additional Act for prohibiting the planting, setting, or sowing of tobacco in England and Ireland, and to prevent the exportation of wool. Endorsed, Offered to the Committee to whom the bill against exporting wool is committed, March 1669. This Bill is not mentioned in the Journal, but the provisions respecting tobacco, with the exception of those giving powers of search and imposing penalties for the sale of English or Irish tobacco, are embodied in the Act 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 26. ss. i.-vi., viii., x., xi., and xiv. Then follow certain clauses against the exportation of wool, reciting the frequency of the offence from the difficulty of proving intent to transport, and enacting that any ship in which any wool, wool flocks, fullers earth, fulling clay, or tobacco pipe clay shall be laden with intent to export shall be forfeited, and every master and mariner fined. Wool above 1 lb. in weight found within a certain distance of the sea coast, without a Custom House certificate, shall be deemed intended for exportation. Wool shorn within those limits shall be entitled to certificate without fee. No one shall be accountable for any wool for more than twelve months after it has left his custody. The burden of proof, in cases of alleged intention to export, shall lie on the defendant. Any person claiming any wool confiscated shall be judged guilty ipso facto of intent to export the same. Fines to go half to the King, half to the informer. Custom House officers may search places where wool is suspected to be lying for exportation.

(q.) Memorandum stating object of preceding Bill. The clauses against tobacco are intended to protect the plantation trade, and those against wool the revenues of the King and the welfare of the kingdom. It is His Majesty's desire it may be taken into speedy consideration. The paper concludes with an instruction to hasten the first and second reading of the Bill, so that it may be considered in Committee together with the pending Wool Bill.

241. Feb. 17. E. Rutland's privilege.—Affidavit of Durant Allsopp, respecting the arrest of Henry Gregory, servant to the Earl of Rutland, contrary to privilege. See L. J., XII. 290.

242. Feb. 17. Sandys r. Phinney.—Petition of William Sandys, Esquire. In 1654 petitioner married Dame Anne Dorrell [Darrell] who had buried three former husbands, the last being Gilbert Nevill. Petitioner, as executor of his wife, prays for reversal of a decree of the late Lord Chancellor Clarendon, dismissing a bill in Chancery for recovery of jointure from Gilbert Nevill's son Edward, himself since dead, leaving a son Edward, and having made Edmund Kidderminster and Edw. Phinney his executors. L. J., XII. 290. See Pet. Book, 3 Nov. 1670.

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 April 1668. Duplicate of preceding.
(b.) 22 March 1669-70. Answer of Edward Phinney, gent., the surviving executor of Edward Nevill, deceased, and of Edward Novill, an infant, his son and heir, by Henry Champion, his guardian, to the petition of William Sandys. They rely upon a general release given by the late Dame Anne Darrell to Edward Nevill, in which was no fraud as alleged by the petitioners, and pray that the case may be dismissed.
(c.) Printed case of William Sandys.

243. Feb. 21. Roll of the Peers of the Kingdom of England, according to their births, creations, and offices.—Garter's Roll. Signed Edward Walker, Garter Principal King-of-Arms. (Parliament Collection).

244. Feb. 22. Comport v. Jones.—Petition of Richard Comport of Eltham, in the County of Kent, Yeoman. Petitioner, having a lease of lands in Lambeth from Sir Samuel Jones, assigned it to Lord Loughborough, after whose death Sir Samuel sued petitioner for 210l. pretended arrears of rent, and got judgment, Lord Loughborough's acquittances not being forthcoming. He then obtained another judgment upon a penal bond of 300l., both judgments being in fact for the same 210l.

Though petitioner proved in Chancery that the alleged arrears had been paid, his Bill was dismissed on the ground that he might have proved payment at law, which however he could not do, for want of the acquittances. The Master of the Rolls had ordered him to bring the 210l. into Court within a week; he appeals to the House to hear him. See L. J., XII. 384, and Keble's Reports III. 386. See also Pet. Book, 26 Nov. 1670.

Annexed:—

(a.) 29 Oct. 1670. Answer of Sir Samuel Jones. See Pet. Book, 5 April and 3 Nov. 1670.

(b.) Case of Sir Samuel Jones. He denies that the two judgments were for the same 210l. of rent. If such complaints are countenanced it will prove mischievous to landlords recovering their rents from bad tenants. He had spent in the several suits more than the amount of rent recovered, besides 400l. in repairs.

(c.) 10 Nov. 1670. Order of the Lords Committees for Petitions setting forth that, in pursuance of their Lordships' order of the 8th of November instant, the parties had met to try to come to an arrangement, but had failed; and directing a report to the House that the cause should be heard by the Lord Keeper if the parties had not come to an arrangement before the 19th of November instant. See Pet. Book, 8 and 10 Nov.

(d.) 22 Nov. 1670.—Petition of appellant that above order may be made absolute, and the cause heard by the Lord Keeper in Chancery, as the parties had not come to terms. See Pet. Book.

(e.) 22 Nov. 1670.—Petition of respondent that the rehearing should be confined to the question of the penalty of the bond, upon which he had a judgment at law. See Pet. Book.

245. Feb. 22. Wallye v. Cutler.—Petition of Robert Wallye, of London, Brewer, and William Cutler, jun., complaining of a Decree in Chancery respecting a claim of rent made by Wm. Cutler, senr., father of the petitioner Cutler. Petitioners cannot comply with this decree, and Wallye has been committed to the Fleet in consequence. They cannot bring a bill of review until the decree is complied with. Their only remedy is to appeal to the House of Lords. See L. J., XII. 382. See also Pet. Book, 31 March.

Annexed:—

(a.) 8 March. Answer of Wm. Cutler, the elder, to the above petition, traversing the statements made therein. The decree could be complied with by a counterpart of a new lease being sealed. The proper remedy is by bill of review. He prays to be dismissed. See L. J., XII. 382, 433. [See also Pet. Book, 15 Nov. 1670, when it was decided by 8 votes to 4 to report the matter to the House.]

246. Feb. 23. Draft of an Act for the confirming of certain articles of agreement tending to the settling of the customs of the manor of Thornbury, manor or tithing of Oldbury, manor or tithing of Mars of Falfield, in the parish of Thornbury and county of Gloucester, made and concluded the first day of October, 1669, by and between the Right Hon. William Lord Viscount Stafford, and the Right Hon. the Lady Mary his wife, Lord and Lady of the said manors or tithings in the right of the said Lady Mary, on the one part, and Richard Addams, gent., and all and every the customary tenants of the manors aforesaid on the other part. [Read 1st this day, but not further proceeded with. L. J., XII. 293. See also 311.]

247. Feb. 23. Petition of Nicholas, Earl of Banbury. Prays that he may receive a writ of summons to Parliament. L. J., XII. 293. In extenso.

248. Feb. 23. E. Rivers' Privilege.—Affidavit of William Hyde, menial and immediate servant unto Thomas. Earl Rivers, that he is sued and prosecuted by Robert Ridge and others, for some affairs relating to the Earl in the time of session of Parliament, contrary to privilege. L. J., XII. 293.

Annexed:—

(a.) 17 March. Another affidavit of same, respecting his arrest. L. J., XII. 312.

(b.) 17 March. Another affidavit of same that Richard Wallye refuses to appear in compliance with their Lordships' order of the 23rd pliance ruary last. L. J., XII. 312. of Feb.

249. Feb. 26. Barker v. Deane.—Transcript of record, &c., in the writ of error. L. J., XII. 294.

250. Feb. 26. E. Derby's Privilege.—Complaint of Charles, Earl of Derby, against Mary Gorsuch, and others, for arresting James Houghton, his Lordship's housekeeper at Lathom. L. J., XII. 294.

Annexed:—

(a.) 26 Feb. Affidavit of John Savage respecting Houghton's arrest. L. J., XII. 294.

(b.) 26 Feb. Similar affidavit of Edward Halsall. L. J., XII. 294.

(c.) 26 March 1670. Petition of John Mosse, Mary Gorsuch, and William Ellisoun. Petitioners are in the custody of the Sergeant-at-arms for taking upon execution James Houghton, not knowing that he was a servant to the Earl of Derby; they are all very poor, are heartily sorry, and pray to be discharged. L. J., XII. 327.

251. Feb. 26. L. Audley's Privilege.—Petition of James, Lord Audley, and Earl of Castlehaven, in the kingdom of Ireland. Petitioner's affairs being at Court, whilst he remains in England he has taken a lodging in King Street, Westminster, to be as near Whitehall as he could; but, the house being full of lodgers, he was compelled to take another lodging in the same street for his servants, where he has a kitchen and place for washing and drying his linen, and where he is himself for most part all day, as well in respect of his eating there as that his trunks and papers are there. He complains that on the 25th inst., about one o'clock in the morning, Samuel Nurse and Erasmus Drayton [Dreydon], pretending to be constables, with ten or twelve beaules and others, came to this house, threatening to break down the door if not let in; came into a room where one of his servants lay, and where his trunks and boxes with his clothes, Parliament robes, and other things were, and without showing any warrant laid hands on the person in bed, and had they not thought her dead by continual soundings, would have dragged her to the watchhouse, though she cried whilst she could speak that she belonged to petitioner, and that they were his lodgings, and that all in them was his. Petitioner prays that the constables and their crew may be sent for and have such punishment inflicted upon them as may deter others from the like insolencies, secure the liberty of the subject, and preserve the rights and privileges belonging to peers. See L. J., XII. 307.

252. Feb. 28. Amended draft of an Act concerning the disposing of a house and lands belonging to the sisters and co-heirs of Margaret Strode. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11 April 1670, 22 Car. II. c. 13, in List of Private Acts. 8vo. L. J., XII. 295. See next paper.]

253. Feb. 28. Engrossment of preceding. Imperfect. (Parliament Collection.)

254. Feb. 28. Amended draft of an Act to enable John Bill, Esquire, to sell certain lands in Kent and Surrey. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11 April 1670, 22 Car. II. c. 19, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 295. See 228.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments made in Committee.

255. Feb. 28. Slingsby v. Hale.—Petition of Henry Slingsby, Esq^r, and Anne his wife, daughter of Sir Anthony Coge, deceased, co-executors of his will and testament. Pray for reversal of a decree in Chancery under which a conveyance by way of mortgage by Sir Anthony to Rose Hale in 1639 was made absolute, Sir Anthony having been prevented by sequestration and imprisonment for his loyalty from paying the interest and following his cause in Chancery. The property is now enjoyed by William Hale, who insists upon the decree. Prays that Hale may be summoned to appear. L. J., XII. 295, 348.

Annexed:—

(a.) 7 March. Petition of same. Petitioners, after search in the registry office in Chancery, find that the decree dismissing his suit, being that against which he appealed, was not entered in the lifetime of the defendant, and cannot be entered now. Petitioners, who can therefore have relief in Chancery upon a new bill, pray leave to withdraw their former petition. L. J., XII. 301. See Priv. Book, 14 March.

(b.) Copy of decree of dismission in Chancery of 6 March 1668-9, referred to in preceding.

(c.) Certificate of deputy register that the decree has not been entered. 22 Oct. 1669. Appended to preceding.

256. March 1. Draft of an Act for the relief of Richard Pearle, of the Haywood, in the County of Hereford, gent., to set aside a recovery suffered by John Pearle, an idiot, to the use of Sir John Bridges and Dame Mary his wife. [Read 1st, 2nd, and rejected after a hearing by counsel at the bar. L. J., XII. 296, &c., and MS. Minutes, 21 March.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 7 March. Petition of Sir James Bridges, Bart. Petitioner understands that Richard Pearl, brother of John Pearl, is endeavouring to obtain the passing of a bill to defeat petitioner of the manor of Dewsall and other lands in the county of Hereford, to which petitioner has as good title as common recovery, fine, or other assurance can give, the only pretence being that John Pearl at the time of such assurance was an idiot, so found by inquisition, and that the inquisition was embezzled by petitioner's ancestors. Such a fraud, if true, which petitioner denies, is relievable in law or equity, and it would be of dangerous consequence to pass the proposed bill, which would tend to shake the foundation of all common assurances, as the lands were purchased for valuable consideration, and have been enjoyed for twenty-three years without opposition. Petitioner prays that if the Bill be retained in the House, he may be heard by counsel against it. L. J., XII. 302.

(b.) 7 March. Order for Sir J. Bridges to be heard against Pearl's Bill. L. J., XII. 302. In extenso.

257. March 1. Draft of an Act to enable Richard Beckham and others to sell lands to pay his father's debts, and to raise portions for his younger brothers. [Read 1st this day; royal assent, 11th April following, 22 Car. II. c. 18, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 296, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments made in Committee, 12 March.

258. March 1. Draft of an Act to enable Robert Hotchkin to sell lands and raise portions for daughters. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11th April following, 22 Car. II. c. 21, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 296, &c.]

259. March 1. Barker v. Gerrard.—Petition and appeal of William Barker and Thomas Pearle. In 1657 petitioners borrowed 500*l*. of Lady Molson on a bond for 1,000*l*., given to her cashier, Edward Radcliffe, to whom they repaid 400*l*. with interest, and upon the death of Lady Molson offered the remaining 100*l*. with interest to Sir Gilbert Gerrard, her executor, and desired to have the bond delivered up, but he refused to allow the 400*l*. paid to Radcliffe, and put their bond in suit at common law, whereupon petitioners in 1664 exhibited their Bill in Chancery against Sir Gilbert, but the then Lord Chancellor, contrary to evidence and common justice, decreed petitioners to pay the 400*l*. over again. They pray that the decree may be reversed, and that Sir Francis Gerrard, executor of Sir Gilbert (now deceased), may be ordered to answer the premises. See L. J., XII. 307. Endorsed, Read at the Committee. Dismissed the House, 27 Oct. 1670.

Annexed:—

(a.) 12 March. Another petition of same. Sir Francis Gerrard having on the 1st inst. been ordered to answer petitioner's appeal, but pretending himself not ready, because his father was so lately dead, that he had not had time to prove his will, obtained three weeks longer time to answer. This time was gained by false information (as he had proved the will six days before, as appears by the register's certificate) and in order to keep the cause from hearing, in hopes that Parliament might have a recess, and petitioners being ancient, it might so happen that they might never be heard, and that he might thus reap the benefit of the unjust decree. Petitioners pray that a short day may be appointed for hearing their cause. See Pet Book, 22 March.

(b.) Copy of preceding.

(c.) Certificate of the register of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury referred to in preceding.

(d.) Printed case on behalf of Barker and Pearle, repeating the statements contained in their petition.

(e.) 30 March 1670. Answer of Sir Francis Gerrard. Denies generally the allegations of the appellants.

(f.) Printed case of Sir Francis Gerrard. Lady Molson, though old and infirm, was of clear understanding, and generally managed her business by her own directions. She kept her own cash, bonds, &c. herself. Radcliffe was employed to see her securities sealed or delivered up, as occasion required, but had no general commission to put out or receive her money. Respondent, as her executor, finding the bond of Barker and Pearle for 1,000*l*., several times demanded the 500*l*. principal of them, who never then pretended any previous payments in part, and only alleged such payments afterwards, though there was no endorsement on the bond, or mention in her ladyship's account books, to confirm their statements. The debtors here might have secured themselves by insisting on the bond being endorsed.

260. March 2. Outer sheet of "Act of Parliament for Lord Strangford" (22 Car. 2. c. 6, in List of Private Acts, 8vo.), noted. This copy was delivered to Mr. Gambledon, July the 29, 1675, to be used at the assizes at Maidstone the same day.

261. March 2. Draft of an Act to enable Dame Elizabeth Routh, mother and executrix of the last will and testament of Dorothy Farewell, widow, deceased, late the relict and executrix of John Farewell, late of the Inner Temple, London, Esquire, to sell certain lands for the payment of debts. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11th April following, 22 Car. II. c. 10, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 297, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Printed case of Dame Elizabeth Routh. [Counsel heard hereon in Committee, 10 March.]

262. March 2. Fane's Bill.—Draft of an Act for settling the manor or lordship of Firbeck, in the county of York, and other lands therein mentioned, on trustees to enable them to sell the same for the payment of debts. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11th April following, 22 Car. II. c. 11, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 297, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill.

(b), (c.) Rough drafts of clause contained in preceding. Two papers.

263. March 5. Draft of an Act for John Manners, called Lord Roos, to marry again.—To enable John Manners, commonly called Lord Roos, eldest son of the Duke of Rutland, formerly married to Lady Ann Pierpoint, from whom he has been divorced by sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court for adultery on her part, to marry again during her lifetime. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11th April following, 22 Car. II. c. 1, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 300, &c. See Com. Book, 22 March. See also 20 and 135.]

264. March 7. L. Vaughan's Privilege.—Petition of David Morgan, gent. In July last William Davies and others riotously and by force turned petitioner's miller and servant out of possession of a mill at Carmarthen, for which petitioner has brought an action against them, and is now ready to proceed to trial at the next Hereford assizes, but he hears that Davies is protected by the Earl of Carbery [Lord Vaughan], and, therefore, though he understands that as Davies is resident in Wales, and no restraint is intended of his person, he might lawfully proceed against him, he yet desires the leave of the House for so doing. L. J., XII. 301.

265. March 7. De Vaux v. Colladon.—Petition and appeal of Sir Theodore De Vaux, Knt. Complains, as in his former appeal (see 214), of a decree in Chancery, directing him to pay 2,848*l.* to respondent, under an agreement which was only conditional, and of which the conditions were unfulfilled. The decree was made chiefly upon the evidence of Peter Belon, a Frenchman, a referee in the matter, who did not understand the interrogatories put to him. Prays for a hearing, and that the decree may be reversed. L. J., XII. 302.

Annexed:—

(a.) 7 March. Copy of deposition of Peter Belon in answer to certain interrogatories. See MS. Minutes of 24 Nov. 1670.

(b.) Note of order of the Court of Chancery decreeing an account.

(c.) Note of proceedings and of order of Lord Keeper confirming the account.

(d.) 12 March. Petition of Sir John Colladon, Kt. The case was heard and dismissed in the last session of Parliament, but Sir Theodore has not paid the costs as ordered. Petitioner prays that the case may be again dismissed, or that, if the House think fit to retain it, he may have further time to answer, as his counsel have gone on circuit. L. J., XII. 330.

(e.) 5 April 1670. Plea and answer of Sir John Colladon. The case was decided in the Court of Chancery after a full hearing, and the appeal was dismissed last session. The care of Hester Depleurs was not committed to respondent merely as an agent, but she was affianced to his son by a solemn contract made up at the request of De Vaux and other friends three years before De Vaux went to travel, who agreed that if the marriage should not be consummated by the infants at their respective ages of consent, he would allow the respondent for all manner of charges that should happen to him for her education and maintenance; and respondent thereupon took her into his own house and bred her as his own child, and managed all her suits and troubles concerning her estate at his own charge, and thinks, therefore, that he deserves a liberal allowance from De Vaux for his costs, trouble, and pains after De Vaux has withdrawn the allegations of the said Hester from respondent's son. He denies other statements of De Vaux, and prays that the petition may be dismissed with costs. [Judgment was given in this appeal on 24 Nov. 1670. L. J., XII. 372.]

266. March 8. Portbury v. Ledgingham.—Petition of Warwick Ledgingham, Esq^r. Prays that the proceedings upon a writ of error between Roger Portbury and himself may be revived. L. J., XII. 303. See also 212.

Annexed:—

(a.) Order of 6 Dec. 1669, appointing a day for hearing.

(b.) Order of 8 Dec. 1669, appointing a further day for hearing.

267. March 9. Draft of an Act for the making navigable all or any the rivers and watercourses in the county of Cornwall into the sea. This bill is similar to the one of 17 Feb. 1664-5. (See Calendar under date.) It recites the advantage of cheap water-carriage of sea sand, thereby easing the extraordinary charge of carriage on wheels and horses' backs. Read 1st; no further proceeding. L. J., XII. 304.

268. March 9. Amended draft of an Act for enabling Robert Bellamy to sell lands for payment of his debts [Read 1st this day; rejected on third reading. L. J., XII. 304, &c. See also 232.]

269. March 9. Engrossment of preceding. (Parchment Collection.)

270. March 11. Note of an action brought by Thomas Price against John Colles, servant of Lord Newport. L. J., XII. 306.

271. March 12. Admiralty Jurisdiction Bill.—Draft of an Act for declaring and ascertaining the jurisdiction of His Majesty's Court of Admiralty in marine causes. Provides that the jurisdiction of the court shall extend to all suits respecting contracts made and other matters done beyond or upon the sea, concerning shipping or goods shipped, freight, mariners' wages, breach of charter parties (except where the suit is for the penalty in the charter party, or as to the fact of the making or discharge of the charter party when the cause shall be tried in the King's Court at Westminster); suits for building, mending, saving, or victualling ships, when brought against the ship and not against a party by name; and suits connected with the navigation of navigable rivers below bridges. There shall be a right of appeal to Chancery. [Read 1st and 2^d, and committed, but not reported. L. J., XII. 307, &c.] The bill was opposed before the Committee on March 15, 19, and 24, by Lord Chief Justice Vaughan, the Lord Chief Baron, and Mr. Justice Twisden, who denied that the Admiral had any inherent right of jurisdiction over foreign causes, charter parties, or contracts. If the bill passed it would reverse a hundred or more judgments; the common law had trials by witnesses vis à voce, which were far better than taking evidence by an Examiner or Commissioners. On March 16 the Judge of the Admiralty, Sir Leoline Jenkins, delivered his opinion in support of the bill, and gave further evidence on the 19th in answer to the Lord Chief Baron. The notes of his evidence on the 16th, given in the Committee Book, correspond with the full report of his speech in Vol. I. of his Life. p. lxxvi. sqq., ed. 1724. This bill is the same as the bill of 1661-2 (see Calendar, seventh report, p. 155, Feb 2) as amended in Committee on 15th March of that year, in pursuance of an agreement between the judges and the Admiralty, of 15th Feb. 1632-3. (See Com. Book, 15th March 1661-2.)

272. March 12. Draft of an Act for settling of part of the estate of Dame Susan Belasyse [Bellasis], widow, late wife of Sir Henry Belasyse, deceased. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11th April following, 22 Car. II. c. 4, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 307, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of an additional clause to the bill, vesting a fourth part of the estate in Dame Susan Belasyse at her sole disposal. Endorsed, "Not admitted." [The notes of proceedings of the Committee on this bill are contained in the paper relating to the next bill. See 273 (b).]

273. March 14. Amended draft of an Act to enable Anthony Ashley, Esq^r, son of the Lord Ashley, to acknowledge fines and suffer recoveries of lands or hereditaments whilst he is under the age of twenty-one years. [Read 1st this day: royal assent 11th April following. 22 Car. II. c. 3, in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 308, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Later draft of same, embodying the amendments. The preamble only of the original draft is retained. See Com. Book, 21 March.

(b.) 16 March. Notes of proceedings of the Committee on this and the preceding bill.

274. March 15. Writ of summons to Parliament to William, Earl of Marlborough.

275. March 17. Affidavit of Hugh Bowring, coachman to Lord Holles, stating that, being on his way with one of his Lordship's coach-horses to a farrier at Kensington, he turned aside by Newport House from the highway, the same being very dirty, when Isaac Simball, with a long staff, assaulted and beat him, and took away from him and pounded his Lordship's horse. L. J., XII. 312.

276. March 18. Prisoners' Transportation bill.—Engrossment of an Act against transporting English subjects prisoners into parts beyond the seas. The bill enacts that no person being His Majesty's subject born within the Kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, shall be sent prisoner out of the kingdom of England into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or any other part beyond the seas. Every such imprisonment is declared to be contrary to law, and persons so imprisoned may maintain actions for false imprisonment in any of His Majesty's courts, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover his treble costs and damages, which damages shall not be less than 500l.; and no delay, injunction, protection, or privilege whatsoever shall be allowed in such actions. Any person so committing, imprisoning, detaining, advising, or contriving, or aiding or assisting therein, being convicted by indictment, or information or by any other lawful means, either at the suit of the King's Majesty or the party grieved, shall immediately after such conviction be ipso facto utterly disabled and incapable to bear any office of trust or profit. The Bill provides for the removal of convicted persons from one part of His Majesty's dominions to another. Any person convicted of felony within the clergy, consenting to be transported, or any person attainted of felony who shall obtain His Majesty's pardon under condition of transportation, may be transported beyond the seas. (Parchment Collection.) [Brought from the Commons this day and read 1st; rejected on the 25th of March. L. J., XII. 313, 325. The Bill passed the Commons only by 100 votes against 99. C. J., IX. 142.]

277. March 18. Fee Farm Rents Bill.—Draft of an Act for advancing the sale of fee farm rents and other rents. [Presented this day by Lord Ashley, by direction of the King, whose signature appears on this draft. L. J., XII. 313. The House, "finding many difficulties" in the bill, referred it to a select committee, who largely altered it, and defined the rents at the King's disposal. The only portions retained, and those with amendments, were being sections ii.-v., inclusive, of the Act. The last two provisos were added by the Commons, the remainder of the Act by the Lords, assisted by the Judges. Royal assent 11 April. 22 Car. II. c. 6.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft, with corrections, of amendments to the Bill. See Com. Book, 21 March.

(b.) Draft of proviso added by the Lords, being Section xi. of the Act.

(c.) Paper containing rough draught of section x., and instruction 10 of the Act.

(d.) Minutes of Committee on the Bill, 31 March.

278. March 18. Petition of William Hayes, Gent., to the Duke of Richmond and Lenos [Lennox.] Petitioner is heartily sorry for his offence in arresting Mr. Paine, the Duke's steward, for which he is in the custody of the Sergeant-at-arms, and prays the Duke to move for his discharge. See L. J., XII. 300.

279. March 18. Morris v. Dove.—Petition and appeal of John Morris and Robert Clayton. Pray for reversal of certain decrees in Chancery obtained by Thomas Dove, or that the Lord Keeper may be directed to rehear the case. [Petitioners claimed an interest in Sir John Pretymann's estate, on a conveyance alleged by him. The point in dispute was whether this or another alleged conveyance giving a life interest to Anne, the wife of John Dove, was the true one.] L. J., XII. 315.

Annexed:—

(a.) 21 March. Petition of Thomas Dove. Prays for further time to answer, as his solicitor, who managed the causes, which have continued about ten years, between Morris, Clayton, and Sir John Pretymann, and petitioner's father, and then himself, is lately dead, and his now solicitor is at Worcester with all the papers. L. J., XII. 318.

(b.) Affidavit in support of preceding.

(c.) 28 March 1670. Answer of Thomas Dove, executor of John Dove, to the petition and appeal of Morris and Clayton. See J. L., XII. 330.

(d.) Application of Morris and Clayton for a short day for hearing. They reply to some of Dove's statements.

(e.), (f.) Two printed copies of Dove's case.

280. March 19. Writ of summons to Parliament to Peter, Bishop of Chichester.

281. March 21. Falmouth Bill.—Letter from inhabitants of Truro and Penryn to Richard, Lord Arundel, Baron of Trerice, at the Parliament. They are accidentally informed that Sir Peter Killigrew endeavours to get a new Act for explaining or re-enforcing a former Act for making the town of Falmouth, with some adjoining lands, a parish, which Act was obtained by misinformation that it was for the public good, though now it proves otherwise, especially to the parishes of Gluvias and Budock. The new Act comprises the erecting of a new quay at the further end of the town of Falmouth. This in itself is useless, as the harbour is one of the best and safest in the kingdom, and already sufficiently accommodated with quays, wharves, and cellars; and it would be of great prejudice to the owners and tenants of lands adjoining the harbour, and to those who have already built cellars and quays, a great discouragement to merchants, no little loss to His Majesty in his customs, and a nipping in the bud of the growing trade in those parts. They pray that the persons concerned may be heard, and that they may have a copy of the bill, the better to enable them to make objections. See L. J., XII. 330.

Annexed:—

(a.) 27 Oct. 1670. Order of the Lords Committee on the Bill to explain the Act concerning Falmouth, summoning parties concerned to be present.

(b.) Affidavit of Giles Draper, of Falmouth, that he had served the above order on the Mayors of Truro and Penryn. Sworn 7 Nov. 1670. Produced 14 Nov. 1670.

(c.) 14 Nov. Lords' amendments to the Bill.

282. March 22. Draft of an Act authorizing certain Commissioners of the realm of England to treat with Commissioners of Scotland for the weal of both kingdoms. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 11th of April following. 22 Car. II. c. 9. L. J., XII. 320, &c.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Report of Amendment to the Bill. Made in Committee 25 March.

1670.

283. March 25. Writ of summons to Parliament to Isaac, Bishop of St. Asaph.

284. March 26. Conventicles Act.—Lords Amendments to the bill to prevent and suppress Seditious Conventicles. 22 Car. II. c. 1. L. J., XII. 325-326. Reported this day. [An abstract of the bill as it came from the Commons is given by Marvell, I. 142-4. These amendments are mainly to omit reference to the Act of 35 Eliz. in the preamble; to reduce the penalties by more than one half, and to abolish imprisonment; to limit the liability to 10l. on any one attending a conventicle; to restrict the offence to indoor meetings; to give appeals from penalties above 10s.; and to divide the penalties into three parts, giving one-third to the poor. The amendments not accepted by the Commons relate to the date of the commencement of the Act, the number of persons constituting a conventicle, and the privileges of peers in reference to search of their houses. The last proviso, concerning the ecclesiastical rights of the Crown, was altered by the Commons. C. J., IX. 148. Compare Ralph, I. 180. and note, and Marvell, I. 146.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Rough draft of amendment redistributing the proceeds of penalties as in section 2. Made 22 March.

(b.) 24 March. Draft Order nominating a Sub-Committee to prepare clauses (1) for providing appeals, (2) for limiting the liability, as above, (3) for construing the Act in the largest sense, and (4) for exempting peers from imprisonment.

(g.) Parchment copy of a proviso that neither the Act, nor any pains, penalties, or forfeitures therein contained, shall continue in force for more than three years from the 24th of June 1670.
(h.) Parchment copy of a proviso that if any person or persons shall happen to be at the doors or under the windows where any such meeting shall be (the number of those so meeting not being above nine persons besides the family) the same shall not render the owner of the house, or him that takes upon him to preach, or any other present within the house, an offender against the Act; but the person or persons so present at the doors or under the windows shall upon conviction incur the penalties inflicted on persons present at unlawful meetings.

285. March 26. Amendments and additions to the bill for the naturalization of Capt. Christopher Gunman and others. [The bill was brought from the Commons 18 March. Royal assent 11 April following. 22 Car. II. c. 24. in List of Private Acts, 8vo. L. J., XII. 313, &c. See also 296.]

Annexed:—

- (a.) Portion of preceding, leaving out two names, being the amendments reported 23 March.
(b.) Remaining portion of same, giving five names, as below, added on 25 March.
(c.) Paper giving the five names above referred to. These persons took the oath on 24 March. L. J., XII. 323.
(d.) to (h.) Certificates that the above five persons have received the sacrament according to the Church of England, they are (d.) George Barons, (e.) Peter De La Hay, (f.) John Legendre, (g.) Simon Francia, (h.) John Jacob Berlu.
(i.) Similar certificate for Capt. Christopher Gunman. [This, and the papers (d.) to (h.) are dated 25 March.]

J., IX. 151.]

286. March 29. E. Strafford v. Wandesford.—Petition and Appeal of William, Earl of Strafford. Prays for reversal of a decree made in two causes in Chancery, directing petitioner to pay 1,500*l.* to William Wandesford, the plaintiff; the error being in fact, no remedy lies but to their Lordships. L. J., XII. 330.

Annexed:—

- (a.) 4 April. Answer of William Wandesford. The 1,500*l.* was awarded, to him under an amicable reference of the claim to Sir George Ratcliffe, who, as the late Lord Chancellor said when hearing the case, would as soon have picked the Earl of Strafford's pocket as have made this award if he had not been well satisfied of the justness of the debt, &c. L. J., XII. 340.
(b.) 9 April. Reply of William, Earl of Strafford, L. J., XII. 346.

287. March 30. Imposition on Brandy Bill.—Petition of several merchants of London, importers of brandy, on the behalf of themselves and other merchants in the outports. By the bill that has come up from the House of Commons, brandy is declared to be, and to have been under the two Acts of the Excise passed in the 12th year of the King's reign, "a strong water perfectly made," and subject therefore, when imported, to a duty of 8*d.* per gallon, instead of 4*d.* only per gallon by the said Act set and imposed upon spirits made of wine and cider imported. By this retrospective law petitioners will be utterly undone, and defeated of the benefit of many judgments and verdicts obtained against the farmers, who have endeavoured by undue practices to enrich themselves, to the prejudice of His Majesty, and the oppression of the subjects. Petitioners pray to be heard at the bar before the passing of the Bill. See L. J., XII. 333-348, 22 Car. II. c. 4. [Counsel were heard and evidence was taken at the bar on this petition on 31 March, the King being present. L. J., XII. 334. The MS. Minutes of the day give a summary of the proceedings.]

(b.) Rough draft of section 4 added by the Lords Committee. [Agreed to with amendment on Report 8 April. L. J., XII. 343.]
(c.) Parchment copy of same, as amended. [Accepted by the Commons. C. J., IX. 156. The Bill received the royal assent on 11 April.]
288. March 31. Highways Bill.—Rough draft of Amendments to the additional Act for the better repairing of highways and bridges. 22 Car. II. c. 12. L. J., XII. 334-341.

Annexed:—

- (a.) Fair copy of preceding.
288.* April 2. Great Yarmouth Bill.—Lords Amendments in Committee. Reported this day. L. J. XII. 337.
Annexed:—
(a.) Parchment proviso authorising a payment of 50*l.* a year to the City of Norwich for improving the navigation of the river. Disagreed to by the Commons. See J. L. XII. 340.
289. April 27. Child-stealing Bill.—Amendments to the Bill to prevent stealing and transporting children and other persons. [See L. J., XII. 340. The Bill finally dropped in the Commons.* See Com. Book 28 March.]
Annexed:—
(a.) Proviso to the Bill that no one shall be punished for transporting beyond the seas any person above the age of sixteen years who has consented and agreed to be transported, such consent being certified by officers appointed by His Majesty, nor for transporting any person under sixteen with the certified approbation of such officers. (Read in Committee 29 March.)
290. April 8. Nugent v. Talbot.—Petition and Appeal of Sir Robert Nugent, Bart. L. J., XII., 362, 401. See also Carte's Ormonde, II., 425. [After full argument before the Committee for Petitions, agreed, by 11 votes to 6, to be reported to the House. See Pet. Book, 10 Nov.]

Annexed:—

- (a.) Two copies of the printed case of Sir Robert Newgent. His father Sir Thomas had an estate in Ireland in 1641, which was sequestered by the late usurpers. After the restoration Sir Thomas and his son, the petitioner, set about recovering their estate. At the instance of one John Talbot, who represented that his brother Colonel Richard Talbot was a man of great influence, they agreed with the Colonel that he should prosecute their claim at his own expense and, if successful, be paid 3,000*l.* in the event of possession being obtained before the father's death, or 2,000*l.* if after. Talbot spent about 10*l.*, for which Sir Robert paid him 100*l.*, and then Talbot took no further trouble in the matter, but left Nugent to prosecute his claim himself, who spent above 400*l.* in so doing, whereupon Talbot demanded 2,000*l.* and ultimately obtained a decree in Chancery for part of that sum. From this decree, because among other reasons it was maintenance in Col. Talbot to make such contract as aforesaid, which is punishable by law even if Talbot had punctually performed the articles aforesaid, which he did not, Sir Robert appealed to the House of Lords, and prayed that proceedings might be stayed in the meantime. Talbot was ordered to answer, and hath ever since prosecuted

* Marvell, writing 12 April 1670, speaks of this Bill as having then received the royal assent. It passed the Commons on the 15th of March, but was not returned from the Lords till the 10th of April 1671, after which it dropped in the Commons.

Sir Robert more vigorously, and laid wait for him in all sea ports to prevent his coming into England to prosecute his appeal, threatening to clap him up, so that he dare not adventure over to attend the House, though he is ready to be heard. He prays to be heard at the bar, and that he may be protected from any attachments and arrests while he is attending the House to prosecute his appeal.

- (b.) 3 Nov. Answer of Col. Richard Talbot. He states that the decree complained of cannot be reversed, as, by having made deductions in the sum claimed, having stayed proceedings at law, and having awarded a perpetual injunction against him to sue Nugent upon a bond for 6,000*l.* to pay his claim, it was wholly in favour of the appellant, who should have first proceeded by bill of review. He repudiates the allegation that he had any influence over the Commissioners of Ireland, an allegation so dishonouring to them. If the petitioner or his father overvalued his industry upon a secret opinion that he had such influence, which he believes no man living ever had, those honourable persons being never swayed, in his belief, by any considerations but those of justice and equity, yet, if petitioner had a mind to think otherwise, that can be no reason to avoid his bond for payment of the respondent's pains.

291. April 8. Petition of the sixteen Sergeants-at-Arms attending His Majesty. Petitioners have never received the 10*l.* a piece awarded to them for their attendance on the House every session for the first five sessions, nor anything for the last five sessions. They pray to be rewarded for their services, not having received a penny since the Restoration. L. J., XII. 344. See also 46, and 338.

Annexed :—

- (a.) 8 April. Petition of the six under Marshals belonging to His Majesty's Household. Pray the House to move His Majesty to direct the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to pay 40*l.* among them for each of the five previous sessions during which they have attended at the door of the House both here and at Oxford, for prevention of disorders, without any consideration for the same. L. J., XII. 344.

292. April 8. Colt v. Colt. Petition of Thomas Colt and Henry Hall, stating that George Colt, brother of the petitioner, Thomas Colt, caused certain lands to be conveyed to the latter and his trustee, Henry Hall, in consideration of a lease and release of 2,700*l.* George Colt's son, John Dutton Colt, the respondent, pretending that the lands were still in trust for his father and his heirs, obtained a decree in Chancery for their recovery, the said lease and release not being forthcoming; but, the deeds being afterwards found in the hands of the counsel who drew them, the petitioners brought in a bill of review upon this new matter, but were put upon a prejudicial issue to be tried at law, not pertinent to the matter in question. The case was decided against the petitioners, and a decree in Chancery was made accordingly. The petitioner, Thomas Colt, not conceiving himself obliged to perform this decree, the same being contrary to justice and equity, was committed to prison, and Hall threatened with like punishment for contempt. As the decree complained of was made upon a bill of review, the petitioners have no remedy but in the House of Lords. They therefore pray that John Dutton Colt may be summoned to answer, and that meanwhile Thomas Colt may have his liberty to attend his cause. [See Pet. Book of date. The cause was dismissed by the Committee for Petitions on 29 Nov. (see Pet. Book); but on the 8 Dec. the House, on the motion of E. Anglesey, ordered the cause to be heard at the Bar, the petition being certified by Counsel as fit for relief, and having been dismissed without a hearing. See MS. Min. of date, and L.J. XII. 384. It appears from MS. Min. of 26 Jan. 1670-1 that the King's reprimand to the House (L. J., XII. 413) was given on the occasion of this cause being called on for hearing.]

Annexed :—

- (a.) 3 Nov. Demurrer of John Dutton Colt to the above petition, on the ground that it is imperfect in not stating what the alleged "prejudicial issue" was. [See Pet. Book under date. Apellant was ordered to amend his petition accordingly.]
(b.) 8 Nov. Amended petition of the Appellants, repeating more fully the statements of their first Petition of Appeal, and adding that the prejudicial issue, not pertinent, as alleged, to the matter in question, was whether the petitioner,

Thomas Colt, did not acknowledge that he did not claim the premises in his own right, but for the benefit of his brother George, his wife or children; and this issue, upon the testimony of one exasperated person, passed against the petitioner. They appeal against the decree of Chancery as before. L. J., XII. 384. Endorsed Read in the House, 8 Dec. 1670. See Pet. Book 8 Nov.

- (c.) 15 Nov. Answer of John Dutton Colt, the respondent, to the above petition, denying that any money passed between his father and uncle for the lands, as alleged, or that his father owed his uncle any money, and declaring that the conveyance of the lands to Thomas was only in trust for George and his family. He impugns the genuineness of the pretended lease and release, which were never mentioned in the Court below at the first trial, though that took place three months after they are said to have been executed; and their genuineness is moreover discredited by the acknowledgment of Thomas Colt himself, after the date of the pretended lease and release, that he claimed not for himself, but as a trustee, this confession being the ground of the issue that was settled to be tried at law. It is true that Thomas Colt is in prison for contempt of the Court of Chancery, and also for drawing his sword and threatening to kill the respondent when he came to serve him with an order of the Court. The matter has been settled by three decrees of the Court of Chancery and a verdict at the King's Bench. Petitioners have offered no new matter, and the respondent prays to be dismissed with costs. Read in the House 8 Dec. 1670. L. J., XII. 384, 428. See Pet. Book.

- (d.) 23 Jan. 1670-1. Petition of the Appellants, praying that Master Brampton, of the Court of Chancery, may be ordered to attend at the hearing of the cause and produce certain deeds in his hands. See L. J., XII. 411.

293. April 8. Rebuilding of London Additional Bill.—Amendments to the additional Bill for rebuilding the City of London, uniting parishes, and rebuilding the parochial and cathedral churches within the City. 22 Car. II. c. 11., folio edition. [The Bill was this day reported from Committee, with amendments, alterations, and provisos. L. J., XII. 344.]

Annexed :—

- (a.), (b.) Notes of proceedings of the Committee on the Bill, showing that on the question whether there should be a power to put the churchyards, given to the City of London with the consent of the Archbishop and Bishop and his Majesty's approbation, to any other uses than burying places, the Committee divided, the numbers being Content 7, Not Content 6. [No clause, however, to this effect was embodied in the Act. See § 58.]
(c.) Paper entitled "Memorandums to be added to 'the City Bill,' recommending a river quay on the north side, according to a design to be approved by the King, with first or second rate buildings, fronting the Thames, and of uniform range and level (see § 38), also that in the clause for carrying the water in fronts of houses to be laid from the roofs in pipes, it be added that the same shall be done from all houses already built, and none permitted to cast water into the streets by spouts from the roof (§ 8); also that all models and designs for all public buildings shall be first brought to the King for approbation; also that the way at Holborn Bridge may be raised as much as possible on each side, with regard to the old and new buildings, for breaking the steepness of the way; and also, that all new dwelling houses within the limits of the Bills of Mortality shall be built of one of the sorts prescribed in the Act for rebuilding the City of London [18 & 19 Car. II. c. 8.], and according to the rules therein contained. [Written on the back in pencil are these "words, Our King knew nothing of the marriage intended in Denmark, but the Prince Elector's 'envoy in our Court is concerned' in the 'Prince Rupert's appanage,' and other notes almost illegible.]
(d.) Paper stating that as the Act levies 3*s.* a chaldron for 17 years on coals coming into the Thames, the one half going to the building of churches (see § 34), and the suburbs pay half of this; it is humbly desired that so much as shall arise in one year, except the fourth part appointed for St. Paul's (see § 36), may be disposed of for building new churches at St. James', St. Giles-in-the-Fields, St. Andrew Holborn, and St. Giles-Cripplegate, the churches in those parishes not being able to receive half, and some of them not the third part of their parishioners.

(e.) Draft of clause, being part of § 32 of the Act, introduced by the Lords. Com. Book, 31 March.

(f.), (g.) Rough drafts of portions of preceding.

(h.) Rough notes containing an outline of § 34 of the Act, and a proposed amendment for giving satisfaction to proprietors whose ground has been laid open or taken for public uses. See § 37.

(i.), (k.) Drafts of clause forming first half of § 37. Compare 82 (b). See Com. Book, 31 March.

(l), (m.) Drafts of amendment in § 41 (viz., "And that all buildings . . . in the said Act.") Added 5 April.

(n.) Paper containing (1) rough draft of amendment giving satisfaction to the Corporation for payments by them in respect of ground taken for enlarging the streets (Comp. § 50), and (2) proviso relating to penalties for irregular building, not inserted.

(o.), (p.) Drafts of clause (being § 51) confirming St. Paul's School, newly built, to the Mercers' Company, offered by the Dean of St. Paul's, and added 5 April, in place of parts of Skins 35 and 36.

(q.) Part of Skins 35 and 36, with regard to St. Paul's School, replaced by above clause.

(r.) Draft of amendment in § 54 (viz., "And one year's rent . . . lease thereof.") Added 5 April.

(s.) Draft of first part of § 56. Added 5 April.

(t.) Note explaining § 71 of the Act, viz., at the end of the Bill an enacting clause is added to enable tenant for life in possession to make leases for fifty years at the improved value, to bind tenant in tail. The reason is, because, where no lease is in being, the judges cannot decree a lease to be made, and, if the land be not built upon, it is forfeited, and none will build for a life; for it is for the benefit of the tenant in tail as well as for the tenant for life.

(u.) Skin 45 of Commons Engrossment, left out 6 April, extending to forty-one years, the duration of a trust established for eighteen years to provide a minister for the parish of Saint Gregory.

(v.) Top of Skin 20 of Commons engrossment left out of the Bill between §§ 29 and 30, being a Proviso empowering the judges to deal with questions about Serjeant's Inn.

(w.) Last Skin (No. 50), left out of the Bill, being a clause requiring the Dean and Chapter of York to grant a lease of Serjeant's Inn to the Judges and Serjeants, and the last section of the Act.

(z.) Proposed clause embodying the above two clauses with regard to Serjeant's Inn. Not inserted in the Act.

(y.) Parchment clause with regard to Serjeant's Inn, substituted by the Lords for above. It forms § 72 of the Act.

(z.), (aa.) Two parchment copies of a clause to preserve the parish or precinct of St. Anne's, Blackfriars, as a distinct parish, as it consisted of above 300 families that paid to the maintenance of the rector until the time of the late Fire, the endowment being 120*l.*, besides a very good dwelling-house, the church standing out of any street, so that it can be no hindrance to the passage of coaches, &c., there being no other church convenient to be united with it, and the parishioners being willing to rebuild it at their own proper charge. [By § 55 of this Act the parishes of St. Andrew Wardrobe and St. Anne Blackfriars are united, and the church of the former is made the parish church. The clause was considered on 5 April, but laid aside.]

(ab.), (ac.), (ad.) Three parchment clauses, marked D, G, and H respectively, being §§ 73, 74, and 75, added by the Lords on 6 and 7 April.

(ae.), (af.) Rough drafts of (ac.) and (ad.)

(ag.) Draft proviso for converting so much of the sites of the churches and churchyards of St. Magnus, Bridge Foot, St. Michael, Queen Hythe, St. Buttolph, Billingsgate, All Hallows the Great, and All Hallows the Less, as are not already appointed to be set out for enlarging streets, into public store-yards for coals and other fuel.

(ah.) Reasons "humbly proposed," for passing an additional clause to the City Bill for a registry of the unfree artificers, &c., employed in rebuilding the city, the same to be had and kept by Commissioners nominated and appointed by His Majesty. (See 18 and 19 Car. II. c. 8, s. 15.) The reasons given are—(1.) The benefit that will arise to the city itself in not being imposed upon by such unfree persons as shall not have wrought the due time limited by the former Act. (2.) The good of the unfree persons themselves, that they be not at the expiration of the time by the Act limited frustrated and excluded from the benefit thereof for want of proof at what time they were first entertained in the building, in case their first employers happen to be dead or elsewhere removed at that time. (3.) The same no infringement of the city liberties, they being barred by that clause in the former Act, "any usage or custom of the city to the contrary notwithstanding." (4.) Such a registry is not in prudence to be left to be managed by the city or their chamber, lest the city, being both parties and judges, render the benefit by the Act intended ineffectual to the unfree persons, who (5) being turned out of work by the freemen (as it is notoriously known many hundreds already are) become chargeable to their friends or parishes in the country, who have not whereupon to set them to work, or else fill the roads with beggars, if not thieves and robbers.

(ai.) Parchment copy of proposed clause.

(ak.) Draft of a proposed clause to empower the Lord Mayor and aldermen, with the advice of the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of London, to dispose of so much of the money appointed for the building of churches, as shall be sufficient to purchase burial places situate at such convenient distance from the city and adjacent buildings as they shall judge most useful for the respective churches to which they shall appropriate the same; and that, to make this provision more effectual for the health of the inhabitants, all persons who shall cause any dead body to be buried in the city or liberties, shall, over and above the duties due and payable to the minister and parish, pay for the same a certain sum, whereof one-third part shall go to the use of the minister and two-thirds to the churchwardens of the respective parishes for and towards the building and repairing of the churches.

(al.) Case of Sir Ralph Freeman, Kt., concerning his several grounds in White's Alley in Coleman Street, London. A proviso to exempt his alley, which is not a thoroughfare, from enlargement, has been admitted by the Commons, and is now in the bill before their Lordships. (See § 53.)

(am.) Message from the Commons agreeing to Lords amendments with an amendment. L. J., XII. 346.

294. April 9. Petition of John, Lord Lovelace. Prays that proceedings at law against him, brought by William Thorowgood (who claims, under a precedent mortgage, part of certain lands in Bedfordshire, conveyed to petitioner as security for his wife's marriage portion by the late Earl of Cleveland), may be stayed by order of the House until petitioner can procure an injunction in Chancery. L. J., XII. 347.

295. April 9. Importation of Brandy Bill.—Petition of the Company of Distillers of London. A bill has been brought up from the House of Commons for laying a duty of 2*d.* per gallon on low-wines, a commodity not drinkable, nor worth above 5*d.* per gallon. There are also provisions in the bill that tend to ruin many hundred families of the distillers of England, and to carry the trade into foreign parts, to the hindrance of the consumption of corn and fruits of the growth of this kingdom. Petitioners pray to be heard on several clauses of the bill. L. J., XII. 346.

Annexed:—

(a.) The case of the distillers in reference to a bill intitled, An Act to prevent the importation of foreign brandy, and to give a recompense to His Majesty for his duty thereupon. By two Acts of 12 Car. II., strong waters and aqua vite are charged with the duty of 2*d.* per gallon excise, viz., by each Act one penny. The distillers make strong water thus:—From wort and other materials they distill a small spirit called low-wines, which is worth about 5*d.* a gallon, and is not drinkable, nor sold but from one distiller to another, to redistill into a stronger spirit called proof spirit or English brandy, and such proof spirit distilled with ingredients becomes strong waters, upon which the duty is laid. Four gallons of low-wines will make but one gallon of proof spirit or English brandy. If 2d. per gallon duty be laid upon low-wines, which amounts to 8d. per gallon on proof spirit, the trade of the distillers of England will in a short time be totally lost, for other nations will undersell them. The importation of brandy is as prejudicial to the brewers as to the distillers, and it is very hard that the distillers should be charged with a duty equivalent to what brandy hath brought in for three years last past, whereas formerly (accounting the medium of any five years before the late fire) there was not brought in above one-third part of what hath been in any the three years last past. The bill is preferred by the brewers or others in prospect of a benefit to accrue to them thereby, and yet the whole compensation given in lieu of the supposed total prevention of the importation of brandy is laid upon the commodities alterable by the distillers, while, as the bill is penned, they can expect nothing but disadvantage thereby; and though by the bill the importation of brandy into England, Ireland, Wales, Berwick, or the Isles of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark is to be prohibited, yet it is not possible that anything should hinder its importation into the plantations and other ports abroad; and the Dutch or French may lie with their ships in the Downs laden with brandy and furnish all ships outward bound therewith, while it is feared that many ways will be found to bring the same into this kingdom. If an imposition of 2d. per gallon or thereabouts, besides the duty already payable, be laid upon brandy, to be paid by the merchant importer before the goods were landed, and no allowance upon exportation thereof, there will not be brought into the kingdom (as the company conceive) above a fourth part of the quantity that now is or hath been, and then the distillers of England will be in a capacity to sell English brandy much cheaper than foreign can be afforded; and thereby the consumption of corn and the trade will be very much increased, and the duty arising by foreign brandy will be the same as it is now. That which has brought foreign brandy into such repute and the English strong waters into disesteem, has been the unskillfulness of the persons who have undertaken to make them, not having served as apprentices, so that mariners and others have refused to buy English strong waters; and if liberty be given to all persons to use the trade (as by the bill is intended), there will be more bad waters made than ever; and if the bill pass as now penned, it will not only prove most burthensome and insupportable to the distillers of England, and particularly to the Company of Distillers of London, but will be fruitless and unpracticable to the ends thereby designed. [See Com. Book, Jan. 12, 1670-1, Feb. 3, 8, 11, 14, and March 11. The Distillers, Brewers, and Farmers of Excise were heard before the Committee. Among other evidence, the distillers state they can sell English brandy at 2s. a gallon if no imposition is laid upon it. The bill was returned with amendments to the Commons on 17 March (C. J., IX. 220), where it was laid aside on the 24th (ib. 224) on the ground that the Lords amendments, being for laying an imposition on the people, were a breach of the privileges of the House of Commons. Its provisions reappeared in the "Brandy clause" of the Bill for Prohibiting the Importation of Foreign Commodities, which was omitted by the Lords in consequence. L. J., XII. 473, 482.]

296. April 11. Certified parchment copy of Gunman's Naturalization Act (22 Car. II. c. 24 in List of Private Acts, 8vo.), naming only Gunman and Bevil Skelton, Esquire. (Parchment Collection.) See also 285.

Annexed:—

(a.) Similar parchment, naming only Gunman and Symonah Carey.

297. Oct. 21. Writ of summons to Parliament to Henry, Lord Howard of Castlerising. L. J., XII. 351. Introduced this day.

298. Oct. 21. Same to John, Lord Lovelace of Hurley. L. J., XII. 351-2 Took his seat this day.

299. Oct. 21. Same to James, Duke of Monmouth. L. J., XII. 352. Introduced this day.

300. Oct. 21. Same to Christopher, Lord Hatton of Kirby.

301. Oct. 21. Same to Charles, Lord Mohun of Okehampton.

302. Oct. 27. Petition of Charles, Duke of Richmond and Lenos, stating that he had been ousted from the possession of four tenements, parcel of certain derelict lands called Sutton Marshes, in the County of Lincoln, by the tenants thereof, namely, Robert Reeks and his representatives, William Delamore, Thomas Jefferyes, James Harryman, and Lodowick Bartindale, in combination with Mr. William Cressy and under the protection of the Earl of Newburgh; and that these men had also by force entered upon and expelled him from other parts of the said marshes; and praying that the said tenants may be brought to answer the premises and receive condign punishment, and that the petitioner may be restored to possession of the premises until a legal determination may be had. L. J. XII. 354.

303. Oct. 27. Fry v. Porter.—Petition of Anne Fry, widow, and Mountjoy Fry, her son, praying to be relieved against an order of the Lord Keeper, assisted by other judges. The case is fully reported in Cases in Chancery, I. 138; Ventris, I. 199, and Reports in Chancery, II. 26. Petitioners allege that the Lord Keeper dismissed the Bill on the ground that there were not full precedents on the point, and he thought it fitter for a higher judicature. L. J., XII. 354-377.

Annexed:—

(a.) (b.) Two copies of printed case of the petitioners.

(c.) 31 Oct. Disclaimers of Francis Lund (named as a party below in the petition), stating that he had no interest in the cause, and praying to be dismissed therefrom.

(d.) 4 Nov. Petition of appellants, praying that proceedings of ejectment by Porter in the King's Bench might be stayed pending the hearing of the appeal. See L. J., XII. 359.

(e.) 7 Nov. Answer of George Porter, denying the ground alleged by the petitioner for the Lord Keeper's decision, and stating that the petitioner, Anne Fry, had been provided for under her mother's marriage settlement. L. J., XII. 359.

304. Oct. 31. Lady De La Warr's Privilege.—Petition of Isabella, Baroness Dowager De La Warr, stating that one Thomas Tanton, a tailor, on her refusal to pay his unreasonable bill of 26*l.*, sued her to an outlawry, in execution whereof one Briscoe, an attorney, and one Prinehard, a bailiff, with more of his rabble of pretended officers (being about ten persons), the 21st of July last, the outward gate of petitioner's house by Clerkenwell Close being open, rushed in violently, seized upon her porter forcibly, took the keys from him, the house door being shut, broke in at the hall window with swords drawn and pistols cocked, and broke open two other doors, and in a frightening manner presented their swords and pistols to petitioner's servants, swearing they were dead if they resisted. On being told that petitioner was a peeress, and moreover now privileged, the Parliament sitting, in point of law, they replied that "they knew privilege well enough, and if they escaped punishment, would issue out forty writs more against most of the peers of England." They then took an inventory of the goods, and threatened to carry them away, and even to carry off her ladyship dead or alive. Thereupon petitioner was forced to send for Mr. Hastings, the under-sheriff of Middlesex, and to give a warrant of attorney to appear for her in the said action. Petitioner prays that the officer who made out the process, as well as the said Tanton, Briscoe, Prinehard, and the rest of the bailiffs and pretended officers may be summoned and punished for this breach of privilege. L. J., XII. 355-397.

Annexed:—

(a.) 11 Nov. Petition of Thomas Truelock, messenger, stating that he has in his custody Henry Wilson, a bailiff, who so misbehaves himself in swearing, cursing, and rude behaviour towards all the household where he is lodged, and to the disturbance of the neighbourhood, that petitioner cannot undertake the safe custody of him in any ordinary house. He therefore prays that Wilson may be sent to the Fleet prison. See L. J., XII. 362. [Wilson had been committed to the custody of Black Rod, as having been concerned in the breach of privilege against Lady De La Warr.]

De la Warr, and Briscoe to be struck off the roll. L. J., XII. 353. In extenso.

(c.) 16 Dec. Petition of Walcot Briscoe. Petitioner was in ignorance of Lady De La Warr's privilege of peerage. On learning his error he immediately stopped all proceedings, since which time he has been forced to keep his chamber through sickness. Prays leave to be heard in his defence at the bar, and to have his offence remitted.

(d.) 4 Jan. 1670-1.—Petition of same. He has been in custody for a month, to the danger of his life, being a sickly man. Prays their Lordships to remit his crime and to discharge him. L. J., XII. 397.

305. Oct. 31. Amended draft of an Act to enable Christopher, Duke of Albemarle, to recover several manors and lands mortgaged to George, late Duke of Albemarle, his father. [Read 1st this day: royal assent, 6 March following. L. J., XII. 355, 446. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 1, in List of Private Acts, Svo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of proviso to the Bill. Added 12 Nov., and reported on the 15th. L. J., XII. 365.

(b.) Amendments to the Bill. Made in Committee 12 Nov. L. J., XII. 365.

(c.) 8 Nov. Letter from John, Earl of Bath, at Bideford, to Sir Thomas Charges, M.P., one of the trustees named in the Bill. Lord Bath consents to be made a trustee. See Com. Book, 12 Nov.

(d.) 24 Nov. Note of proposed amendment and Proviso introduced in the Commons, and passed. C. J., IX. 170.

306. Nov. 3. Writ of summons to Parliament to Edward, Lord Ward de Bermingham. L. J., XII. 380.

307. Nov. 4. Lord Fitzwilliam v. Humberston.—Motion paper that the record should be brought up into the House of Lords by the senior Judge of the Court of King's Bench, the Chief Justice being sick. L. J., XII. 357.

308. Nov. 4. Petition of Dame Katherine Howard, widow of Sir Robert Howard, Knight of the Bath, stating that she was the daughter of a peer, and had a considerable portion at her marriage, but that owing to a dormant entail, unknown to her and her friends at the time of her marriage, of the lands upon which her jointure had been charged, and her minors of age refusing to make her an allowance, she was unable to enjoy her dower or thirds. Prays to be allowed to introduce a short Act to enable her to enjoy her dower. L. J., XII. 357. [On 8 Nov. the committee for Petitions appointed the Lord Steward and E. Sandwich to compose the difference. See Pet. Book.]

309. Nov. 4. L. Byron's Privilege.—Petition of Richard, Lord Byron, complaining of a breach of privilege by Sir William Juxon and his agents in collecting the tithes, tithes, and profits of the rectory and parsonage of Rochdale, and chapels of Saddleworth and Butterworth, in the counties of York and Lancaster, which should of right have been paid to petitioner. Prays that the persons complained of may be punished, and petitioner restored and continued in possession of the premises. L. J., XII. 357-8. Almost in extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 2 Dec. Petition of Sir William Juxon, Richard Holt, Thomas Buckley, Jeremiah Hargreave, Francis Colles, Henry Whitaker, and James Ashworth, servants and agents of Sir Wm. Juxon. Petitioners, who are in custody of the serjeant-at-arms, live at a great distance from London, and now remain here at great charge. Pray that a day may be assigned to all of them for their appearance at the bar. L. J., XII. 378.

(b.) 9 Dec. Petition of Jeremy Hargreaves, of Rathdall [Rochdale], in the county of Lancaster, and Henry Whittaker, of the same, labourer, now in custody of the House for arresting Abraham Scholefield, servant of Lord Byron. Petitioners confess the breach of privilege was done merely through ignorance; beg pardon of the House, and pray to be released on payment of fees. L. J., XII. 385, 389.

(c.) 4 Feb. 1670-1. Draft order of the House concerning the Lord Byron and Sir Wm. Juxon. L. J., XII. 420-1. [The last clause, omitted on 6 Feb., ordered Sir William Juxon to forbear to break the Privilege of Parliament.]

310. Nov. 7. Salmon v. The Hambrough Company.—Printed case of the particular members of the Fellowship of Merchants Adventurers of England (commonly called the Hambrough Company) upon the appeal of

Dr. Peter Salmon. In 15 Car. II., Dr. Salmon sued the Company and several members thereof in Chancery for 2,100*l.*, lent to the said Company upon their common seal, and in 1666, his bill having been dismissed (see Cases in Chancery, I. 204), he has appealed to the House (L. J., XII. 348). Wynor, Dogget, Collier, and Lethulier (particular members of the Company being summoned), answer and insist upon their demurrer. The reasons why particular members are not chargeable with the debts of the common seal of the said Company are:—
1. The Company never took up any monies on their common seal whereby to drive on any trade, for it never traded in joint stock. 2. No single member of the Company ever derived any private benefit from money borrowed on the common seal. 3. Whatever advantages any member enjoyed by the Company's privileges beyond the seas, were never due to money so borrowed. 4. The debt arose from a loan of 50,000*l.* to King James in 1617. All lenders to the Company should have ascertained that it had neither common stock nor any lands. 5. The Company was already 170,000*l.* out of purse for 47 years' interest on this debt. 6. The Company has no estate in common stock, nor lands beyond the seas, or in England. 7. To give over now every member singly to the mercy of every creditor would at once bring about the destruction of the trade and traders. 8. And would do what the stranger had been plotting ever since the death of Queen Elizabeth. 9. And all the privileges of this nation in foreign parts would be lost. 10. No person hereafter would enter in any "governed trade," if individual members were held responsible for the debts of a corporation. 11. It would be impracticable to force present members to subscribe to pay off the debts of their predecessors, while a creditor has every member at his mercy, and could suspend the business of a Company by imprisoning all its members. 12. The English cloth trade would not be able to compete with that of Germany and the Netherlands if further duties were charged upon it. 13. The Company propose an import duty on foreign goods. 14. No one could object to this proposal, as the "unfreemen" are already strictly excluded from the cloth trade by charter, and would be paying only the same dues as the Company, and foreigners ought not to object, because they have already deprived this nation of half its sale of English draperies, and is intent to swallow up the whole. See L. J., XII. 359, and MS. Minutes of date.

Annexed:—

(a.) 10 Nov. Petition of William Whitmore, administrator of the estate of Charles Whitmore, deceased, praying that his claim of 2,000*l.* against the Company on a bond for the repayment of 1,027*l.* 10*s.*, lent by Charles Whitmore to the Company, may share in the benefit of a vote of the House (L. J., XII. 214) on the petition of Dame Dorothy Drummond and others, creditors of the Hambrough Company (L. J., XII. 198), that the said creditors should be relieved against the said Company, and stating that his case is altogether the same with that of the said creditors. L. J., XII. 361.

(b.) 20 Jan. 1670-1. Order of the Lords' Committee. L. J., XII. 409. In extenso. [This order was reported and agreed to this day, and formed the judgment of the House. It appears to have been sent to the Committee, on recommendation, by the Lord Keeper (Com. Book, 19 Jan.). The Committee had previously reported another draft order, offered to them by the solicitor, and amended by the counsel for the creditors, Serjeant Maynard, which was disagreed to, however, by the House on the 14th (L. J., XII. 404.) This rejected order is set out in the Com. Book, 12 Jan., and ran as follows, the portion in italics only being ultimately retained:—"Order that the dismission for so much as concerns the Company and Governor, Deputy, and Assistants for the time being, in their respective capacities, be and do stand reversed, and that the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England for the time being, do retain the Bill so far as the same concerns the said Company and the Governor, Deputy, and Assistants for the time being in their said respective capacities, and do compel such of the Company as shall have power to act for the Corporation to put in execution all powers and authorities that they have by any of their Letters Patent of incorporation for the raising and satisfying the petitioner his just debt and such damages as the said Court shall allow, and 311. Nov. 7. Draft of an Act for confirming agreements between the Lord Viscount of Stafford and his Lady and their customary tenants and copyholders. Confirms an agreement of 6 June 1670, relating to the manor of Thornbury, and the manors or tythings of Alebury upon Seaverne, and of Mars and Falfield, alias Mars of Falfield, in the county of Gloucester, settling disputes for and concerning several supposed forfeitures of divers copyhold lands, and supposed breaches of divers customs and other matters concerning the said estates; and adds a provision that on the surrender of a reversion or remainder to any person other than the wife, child, or next heir, such person shall pay a fine of a year's value; and there is a proviso that a copyhold should not be altered into a freehold without the consent of the lord of the manor. Read 1st this day; royal assent, 6 March following (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 3, in List of Private Acts, Svo.) L. J., XII. 359-446. See also 246.

Annexed:—

(a.) Commons Amendments. C. J. IX. 194.

312. Nov. 8. Hemings v. Phillips.—Petition of Richard Hemings and Alice Sheffield, claiming the remainder in tail of certain lands under a deed of 1 June, 19 Eliz. (1577). These lands were leased to one Halford for 100 years by way of mortgage, and this mortgage was assigned to the children of the widow of Francis Stevens, a former remainderman. These assignees unsuccessfully sued the remaindermen, but afterwards discovered a decree of 1637 for enjoyment of the lease, and petitioners obtained admittance in forma pauperis to review and reverse the decree. Ultimately the Lord Chancellor, after consulting the six clerks on an incidental point, confirmed the decree in regard of its antiquity only. Petitioners appeal against this decision, and pray that Edward Phillips and Ralph Horne may be ordered to answer. Endorsed, Received 8 Nov., read 10 Nov. [The Petition was subsequently laid by, on application of Appellant's Counsel, with Respondent's consent, pending a trial in Chancery.] See Pet Book, 22 Nov.

Annexed:—

(a.) 19 Nov. Answer of Edward Phillips. Denies there was ever any deed of entail. When the decree of 1637 was obtained, and the then defendants alleged the existence of this deed, without being able to give proof thereof, the Court declared there was a pack of knavery among them. Moreover, petitioners had by articles of agreement conveyed to respondent all their interest in the estate, and their present prosecution in forma pauperis is only a vexatious attempt to ruin him.

313. Nov. 9. Draft of an Act for the rectifying a mistake of dates of deeds mentioned in the Act of Parliament entitled an Act to enable John Bill, Esq., to sell certain lands in Kent and Surrey. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 6 March following. L. J., XII. 360, 446. 22-23 Car. II. c. 14. in List of Private Acts, Svo. See also 228 and 254.]

314. Nov. 10. Cavell v. Ostendorph.—Petition of William Cavell and Mary his wife. Petitioner's uncle, William Cavell, died of the plague in 1665, possessed of an estate of eight or nine hundred pounds, consisting of money, plate, and jewels, and two-thirds of a show called the Opera or Paradise in Shoe Lane; and he left a will leaving, among other legacies, one half of his share of the show to petitioner. At the uncle's death, the will not having been discovered, his brother took out letters of administration and gave petitioner, in consideration of his having made the greater part of the show and of his repairing it, 95*l.*, and to his wife 33*l.* 10*s.* The show was destroyed in the fire of 1666, and then the executrix of the will, Katherine Ostendorph, produced and proved it, and, on the testimony of one witness only, got a decree in Chancery ordering petitioner to return the money he had received, and account for the proceeds of the show, and not making him any allowance for having repaired it. Petitioner would be ruined if not relieved against the decree, and therefore appeals to the House of Lords, and prays that the said Katherine Ostendorph may be called as respondent. [See Pet. Book, 10, 22, and 26 Nov., when the cause was ordered by the Committee to be reported as fit for relief: but no entry appears in the MS. Minute or Journals.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 19 Nov. Answer of Katherine Ostendorph, spinster. The appeal is informal, as being per saltum without bill of review. Petitioners had not objected to the account taken by the Master; her uncle, the testator, was possessed of over 1,000*l.* of property, and petitioners, living in his house, took his keys out of his pocket when he was dying, and rifled his trunks.

315. Nov. 10. Yarwood v. Robery.—Petition of Randolph Yarwood, Clerk, and Thomas Francklin, executors of James Warner, deceased, appealing against a decree in Chancery as to the alleged wrongful payment of 100*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, for debts of the deceased, instead of paying it to the behoof of his stepchildren, whose guardian was John Robery, the respondent. See L. J., XII. 378. See also Pet. Book, 10, 22, and 26 Nov.

Annexed:—

(a.) 17 Nov. Answer of John Robery. Appellants had already wasted great part of his wards' estate in litigation, and are in contempt of the Court of Chancery. Prays that their appeal may be dismissed.

316. Nov. 11. Draft of an Act for reinvesting the Manor of Newington Barrow in His Majesty. Recites that Sir Allen Apsley, one of the Surveyors General of the Navy Victualling Department of Charles I. had contracted a debt of 20,000*l.* for provisions supplied to the Navy on credit. To pay off this debt the King granted to trustees of Sir Allen the Manor of Newington Barrow alias Highbury, in the county of Middlesex, which was then conveyed to Thomas Austin of London, cheesemonger, for a pretended valuable consideration, supposed to have been paid for the same to Sir Allen, but in truth never really paid nor any part thereof. Apsley's creditors, however, remained unpaid, though Apsley had otherwise received from the King enough money to have paid them, which money remained in his hands unaccounted for. Apsley then died, and left the creditors remediless. They therefore besought the King to have them paid in some other way, and to take back all their equitable rights over the manor, and the King accepted their offer. Enacts therefore that the said manor shall be vested in His Majesty against Thomas Austin and his heirs, &c. and all other persons claiming any interest therein; Austin to account for all rents and profits since the conveyance to him. [Read 1st this day. L. J., XII. 362. Counsel were heard, and witnesses examined at the bar on the 21st, when the bill was dismissed, (ib. 369). Sir Dennis Gauden proved the furnishing of the provision, and the payment of 500*l.* in gold, as part of the purchase, and 2,500*l.* allowed, which he should have received out of the forest of Gualters. MS. Minutes 21 Nov. Comp. Lyson's Environs III. 135.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Printed Reasons for passing the Bill. The King not relievable in law or equity, because of his own grant, which seems to be upon a valuable consideration, and no averment is good against a Record. The creditors not relievable against Apsley, as not being parties to the grant, and barred by the Statute of Limitations. Neither King nor creditors relievable, because Apsley has transferred his interest, and the trustees were not trustees for the sale of lands for the use of the creditors. There is no other grant of the same nature, because the King owed nothing to Apsley, to whom he granted the lands. No consideration given to the King by Apsley for the lands, yet Apsley transferred them, and left the King 20,000*l.* in debt to his creditors. The King parted with a manor worth 20,000*l.* for nothing. The manor was granted upon trust and confidence to pay the creditors and not Apsley, to whom nothing was due. This cannot prejudice Austin, as his ancestor was privy to the trust between the King and Apsley, and paid nothing for the manor.

317. Nov. 16. Lady Peterborough v. E. Peterborough. Petition of Elizabeth, Countess Dowager of Peterborough, stating that she had for above 26 years been enjoying the rents of a jointure of 1,200*l.* in the counties of Bedford and Bucks, that her tenants had lately failed in payment of their rents, and she was suing them at law to recover the same; but that when the case was ripe for judgment, her son, the Earl of Peterborough, had sent to stay proceedings, alleging that he was concerned in the case, and that it would be a breach of his privilege to prosecute it. The petitioner is informed that the Earl can have no privilege in the case, as she is in possession; but her agents dare not proceed without an order from the House. The petitioner therefore prays for such order, giving her full liberty to proceed, so that she may not lose the benefit of this term. L. J., XII. 366, 375.

Annexed:—

(a.) 12 Nov. Earl of Peterburgh's Paper sent to Lady Peterburgh's Counsel, addressed to Mr. Weston, warning him not to prosecute the actions in the King's Bench during that Session of Parliament. Referred to in preceding.

(b.) 18 Nov. Answer of Henry, Earl of Peterborough. His father had by a deed of 9 Car. I. entailed most of the estate on respondent and heirs male of his body, leaving himself tenant for life thereof. As this settlement did not extend to part of the estate in Northamptonshire, by a further deed of 14 Car. I. he left himself the life-rent thereof, with remainder to petitioner for her life, and then to respondent in tail male. This deed recited the former deed. Respondent was then so young that he was not made acquainted with these settlements, and he conceives that afterwards his mother industriously concealed them from him. Moreover, when his father was grown old and infirm, she prevailed upon him to make subsequent deeds, the 16th and the 19th years of Charles I., to the disherison of respondent; and by the latter, executed, if at all, not many hours before his father's death, when he was on his death bed, his mother claims the Manors of Chillingdon and Stagisdien in the county of Bedford. These last-mentioned deeds are both void in law, the estate having before been entailed. At his father's death, respondent was a minor and in the late King's service, for which heavy compositions were imposed upon him, in the payment whereof he was greatly hampered by his mother's concealment of the deeds of entail; and it was only about two years ago that he was induced to make search, and at last found evidence which occasioned him to exhibit a Bill in Chancery against his mother and his brother Viscount Mordant, and force her to produce the deed of the 14th year. She however pretended that the other deed was burnt, and that it contained a power of revocation. A copy, however, was brought to light, which controverts this allegation. He had intended to proceed in this matter with all duty and respect, but finding that his mother and brother did everything to hamper him during the legal proceedings, by concealment, and by alleging their privilege, and that his mother was all the time enjoying an income of 1,500*l.* a year from manors which she had obtained by indirect practices, he entered into possession of the same, long before the present session of Parliament, and brought his privilege to protect the tenants thereof against her. If, however, she will waive her privilege, he will waive his, in the hope of speedily settling the family differences by course of law. L. J., XII. 367.

(c.) 19 Nov. Second Petition of Lady Peterburgh. She wishes to explain that the jointure settled on her, and referred to in the deeds of the 9th, the 16th, and the 19th of Charles I., was in consideration of 2,000*l.* a year of her own which she sold to pay her husband's debts; that she had never concealed any deed from her son, but had even given him a copy of the deed of the 14th of Charles I. (which did not mention her jointure, as it concerned only the lands in Northamptonshire) before any suit was commenced in Chancery; that the deed of the 19th was made by her husband when of perfectly sound mind; that she had surrendered to her son above 700*l.* a year of her jointure, besides ready money; that her son is displeased with her simply because she stood neuter in the unfortunate discussions in the family, and would not join him in suffering a recovery whereby to dock the remainders to the heirs male of the family; and that she was willing to waive her privilege and go to trial with him when he pleases; and finally she prays to be heard by counsel at the bar and for redress on account of the breach of privilege against her. L. J., XII. 369.

(d.) 25 Nov. Answer of Respondent to preceding. He says his mother only sold a manor worth 1,000*l.*, which moreover had been covenanted to be conveyed to his father as long before as the 19th of James I., and could not have been the consideration for a deed of 19th Charles I., which deed, he repeats, was made when his father was not of a disposing memory. His mother's claim on the estate left him only about 300*l.* a year. She could not found upon the deed of the 9th year, for she declared it was revoked. Her gift to him of 700*l.* a year was made when he had to pay away 500*l.* a year; whereas, if she had not concealed from him the extent of his possessions, he might much more easily have relieved himself of his embarrassments. She did not voluntarily send him a copy of the deed of the 14th year, but was ordered by the Court of Chancery to do so. Her refusal to join in a recovery has not been the cause of any difference, for he never asked her to do so. He never disturbed her in her possession beyond asserting his privilege. He would readily accept the proposal to waive privilege if he could proceed in the suit without Lord Mordant being a party. And finally he proposes they should all waive their privilege.

(e.) 6 Feb. 1670-1. Earl of Peterborough's statement of his proceedings in Parliament, and complaint of breach of privilege. After reciting previous proceedings, he complains that, contrary to his notice and to his privilege of peerage, the counsel, attorney, and solicitor of the Countess proceeded in suits in the King's Bench against his tenants, and have obtained Rules of Court against them. He prays their Lordships to order the Clerk of the Rules and Papers of the Court to stop all proceedings, and that the said Counsel, &c. may be taken into custody and punished for breach of his privilege. [Proceedings were ordered to be stayed on the 7th. L. J., XII. 422.]

(f.), (g.) Rules of Court, referred to in preceding, calling on defendant to show cause why judgment should not be entered against him.

(h.) 6 Feb. 1670-1. Affidavit of service of notice and admonition, in the Earl's behalf, on the counsel, &c., of the Countess, warning them not to proceed against his tenants. Sworn 2 Feb. 1670-1. See L. J., XII. 422.

(i.) 8 Feb. 1670-1. Petition of the Countess Dowager of Peterborough. She claims possession of the manor as part of her jointure, and prays that counsel may be heard at the bar on her behalf, and that their Lordships will discharge their order staying proceedings in her suits against the Earl. L. J., XII. 423, 431.

318. Nov. 16. Naturalization Bill.—Amended draft of an Act for Naturalization. Whereas it is advantageous to the country to have foreigners here to teach English manufacturers, any foreigners, being Christians, who shall take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy before the Mayor or Chief Magistrate of any city or town corporate, or before any two or more justices of the peace, shall, upon recording a certificate to that effect, to be recorded by the Clerk of the Parliaments, be naturalized as fully as if by Act of Parliament. Provided that this Act shall not affect §. 1. of the Act for the encouraging and increasing of Shipping and Navigation (12 Car. II. c. 18.) which provides that no ship shall be esteemed an English ship unless she be navigated by a master and three-fourth parts of the mariners English. [Read 1st this day, and passed the Lords (L. J., XII. 365, 378.) but thrown out on first reading in the Commons. C. J., IX. 186.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill. Made in Committee 19, 22, and 23 Nov. [A proviso was tendered, but laid aside, concerning conformity to the Church of England.]

(b.) Draft of clause proposed but not inserted in the Bill, providing that yearly returns of all certificates given under the proposed Act, should be sent to the Clerk of the Parliaments, to prevent fraud by tendering forged certificates.

319. Nov. 17. Cusack v. Usher.—Motion paper for order that some other judge of the Court of King's Bench (the Chief Justice being sick) should bring up the writ of error to the House of Lords. The appeal was on an ejectment for lands in Ireland, brought upon the title of Lord Dungannon. See L. J., XII. 366.

Annexed:—

(a.) 8 Feb. 1670-1 Copy of the writ of error, &c. brought up accordingly. L. J., XII. 423, 458.

320. Nov. 18. Amended draft of an Act for the better payment of the debts of Sir Clifford Clifton, Knight, deceased, and raising portions for his daughters. Sir Clifford Clifton set aside two-thirds of his estates to pay debts contracted by his father Sir Gervase, but died before being able to do so. This Act appoints William Sacheverell, Sir Robert's widow, Lady Frances Clifton, and his kinsman Gervas Holland, guardians of William Clifford, Sir Robert's son, and trustees for the paying off of these debts, and the raising of portions for the two daughters Katherine and Arabella Clifton, out of the said two-thirds of the estate, during the minority of his son, William Clifton. [Read 1st this day: royal assent 6th March following. L. J., XII. 367, 446. 22-23 Car. II. c. 9 in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill, made in Committee 7 Dec. [Evidence was also taken on 23 Nov.]

(b.), (c.) Two copies of printed case of Dame Frances Clifton and William Clifton and Catherine and Arabella Clifton, Sir Clifford's widow, son, and daughters respectively, in support of above Bill, setting out the circumstances as above stated, and signifying the consent of all parties to the passing of the Bill. L. J., XII. 384.

321. Nov. 18. Pitt v. Pelham.—Petition of Robert Pitt of Blandford Forum, William Major of London, Jonadab Savage of Blackworth, Roger Higham of Shapwick, and Richard Harris of Winchester. Appeal against a decree of the Lord Keeper of 4 July 1669: pray that Mary Pelham and Mabel Still, and their respective husbands, may be ordered to answer, and that proceedings below may be stayed. L. J., XII. 367, 392, 397. Fully reported in Reports in Chancery, I. 253, and Cases in Chancery, I. 176. See also Levinz, I. 304.

Annexed:—

(a.), (b.) Printed case of the appellant Pitt. (Two copies.)

(c.) 29 Nov. Answer of Robert Pelham and Mary his wife, and John Still and Mabel his wife, to the above petition. They allege that Pitt took advantage of a lawsuit between them and the other heirs named in the will, namely the other petitioners, and brought the reversion of the share of these latter at much under its value, in order to bring his wealth to bear against the respondents in their dispute. The matter was very carefully and fully argued before the Lord Keeper, and the respondents pray that after the 4 or 5 years of costly litigation the appeal may be dismissed. See L. J., XII. 384, and Pet. Book, 22 and 29 Nov. and 6 Dec.

322. Nov. 18. Message from the Commons to remind the Lords of their Bills about Foreign Brandy, the Relief of Sufferers from the Fire, and Child Stealing. L. J., XII. 367. In extenso. [A Bill for better regulating the Collection of Hearth Money had been included in this draft and then struck out. This Bill had been ordered to be read in the Commons (C. J., IX. 132) but not further proceeded with. The Commons entry of this Message (C. J., IX. 166, in extenso) contains the Bill here struck out.]

323. Nov. 21. Worcester Gaol Bill.—Draft of an Act for the rejoining of the Gaol of the County of Worcester to the body of the said County. Whereas a great building and inclosure adjoining the city of Worcester had for hundreds of years been used as the county gaol, and the house of correction had been moved into the inclosure at the expense of the county; and whereas during the late unhappy troubles one John Collins, by the confederacy of one Edward Harris, then gaoler, obtained the possession of the said gaol and house of correction under a pretended title no ways warranted by law, and he and those who now claim under him (knowing that all the evidences showing the right of the county to the said castle and premises are all burnt or plundered) have ever since kept possession of the said castle and house of correction and placed such gaolers and officers therein as they from time to time have thought fit, whereby several prisoners have been suffered to escape; enacts that the said castle, &c. shall be re-joined to the body of the said county under the custody of the sheriff. [Read 1st this day and committed the next. L. J., XII. 369, 370. The proceedings given in the Com. Book extend from 23 Nov. to 14 Dec., when counsel were heard on both sides; Mr. Offley being "checked" by the Committee for reflecting on those who brought in the Bill, on the ground that every Bill was brought in by a peer. For the county a patent of 17 May, 4 Car. I., was produced, to show possession before the civil war, and it was urged that an Act of Parliament was necessary to recover possession, as the county, not being a body politic, had no remedy at law. The opponents of the Bill stated that the gaol and land adjoining was their freehold, having been granted originally by patent of Charles I. to one Clinterbuck for 200l., who parted with it to Collins, who again leased it to Harris. The county had only the custody of the gaol, not the propriety, which belonged to and might be disposed of, by the King. If the sheriff had a right, he might bring an assize, a proposition, however, contested by the counsel for the Bill, on the ground that the sheriff held office only for a year. After hearing witnesses on the point of possession, the Committee reported that it was desirable to have the assistance of two Judges and King's counsel. (L. J., XII. 389.) On the 14th Dec. Mr. Baron Littleton and Mr. Baron Turner stated their opinion that the county could not sue for recovery, but that the Attorney-General might bring an information if the patent were void. Finally, both counsel agreed on an issue to be tried in Exchequer, viz., whether Giles has a legal estate in the soil of the castle and gaol mentioned in the patent. The cause to be "Bagnell v. Giles," and possession to go with the verdict. The Bill accordingly dropped.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Paper giving names of three witnesses.

324. Nov. 22. Herris v. Tayte.—Petition and appeal of Thomas Herris, to be relieved against a decree of the Court of Chancery ordering him to pay, with costs, a fine of 110l. which he had agreed to pay the respondent Margaret Tayte, on taking a house of her. See Pet. Book.

Annexed:—

(a.) 26 Nov. Petition of Margaret Tayte, widow, respondent, for a week's further time to answer. See Pet. Book.

(b.) 1 Dec. Answer of Margaret Tayte. The decree was made after a full hearing. Appellant did never apply to the Court of Chancery for relief. Prays to be dismissed. See Pet. Book 17, 19, and 31 Jan. 1670-1.

325. Nov. 23. Draft of an Act to enable the Right Hon. Thomas Lord Leigh and Thomas Leigh, Esq., his grandson and heir apparent, to sell the manors of Hampstall Ridware, with the appurtenances, in the county of Stafford, and all other the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of Sir Thomas Leigh, deceased, lying in Ridware aforesaid or elsewhere in the said county of Stafford, for raising of portions for the daughters of the said Sir Thomas Leigh, and for the payment of his debts in this Act mentioned. Sir Thomas Leigh, of Ridware, the eldest son of Thomas, Lord Leigh, contracted sundry debts in the King's service, and after having made an entail of the manor of Hampstall Ridware, died, leaving one son, Thomas, a minor, and three daughters Honora, Mary, and Jane. The Bill proposes to vest this estate in his father, Lord Leigh, and Thomas, Lord Leigh's grandson and heir-apparent, in fee simple, to enable them to sell it and raise portions for the three daughters and to pay off the debt. L. J., XII. 371-8. [Read 1st this day. The Bill was opposed in Committee and not proceeded with. Com. Book, 6 Dec.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 23 Nov. Petition of Thomas Lord Leigh and Thomas Leigh, Esq., his grandson and heir-apparent, in support of the bill.

(b.) 23 Nov. Petition of the creditors of Sir Thomas Leigh, late of Hampstall Ridware, deceased, in support of the bill.

(c.) Letter addressed, For William Andrews, Esq., at Lambeth, Steward to his Grace of Canterbury, London. Dear Brother,—I understand my son Leigh has put in a petition in Parliament for the sale of land, which I desire you to oppose with what care you can, as my counsel shall advise you, for my Lord Leigh by himself and his steward assured me all things should be let alone until my son and daughter came to age; at which time, if my Lord please to stop all proceedings, we shall agree, I doubt not, in all as may satisfy him and the honour of his family, until when I am resolved to oppose it to the utmost, which am your sister to serve you.—Eli. Temple, Nov. the 24th, 1670. [See Com. Book, Dec. 3rd and 6th.]

326. Nov. 24. Earl of Westmorland, (Privilege) v. L. Holles.—Statement informing the House that the breach of privilege consisted in Lord Westmorland being dispossessed of the manor of Aldenham, and giving a list of the persons concerned therein. L. J., XII. 372.

Annexed:—

(a.) 5 Dec. Answer of Denzell, Lord Holles. Denies the Earl of Westmorland's title to the lands in question, and humbly refers himself to the House. L. J., XII. 382. [The matter was heard at the bar on 15th Dec., the Earl of Westmorland appearing by counsel, and Lord Holles in person. L. J., XII. 390. The MS. minutes of 16 Dec. add that, on a motion for rejecting the Earl's paper, as aspersing Lord Holles, being agreed to, the paper was taken from the table and torn by the Lord Newport, and the pieces of it taken away by the Earl of Anglesey.]

327. Nov. 26. Noell v. Nelson.—Copy of the writ of error brought into the House. See L. J., XII. 374, 339.

Annexed:—

(a.) Case of Sir Martin Noell, Thomas Noell, and George Robinson, executors of Sir Martin Noell, against William Nelson. Defendant sued plaintiffs for a debt on bond for 100*l*. They pleaded that they had fully administered the estate, and had none of it remaining in their hands. Nelson acknowledged this, but obtained a judgment against any of the testator's goods that might hereafter be in plaintiffs' hands. Plaintiffs now plead that Nelson ought to have taken issue and tried whether they had fully administered the estate, and that the law is in favour of executors. L. J., XII. 374. For report of case in Court below, see Ventris, I. 94; and Levinz, I. 286.

328. Nov. 26. Ayscough v. Anton.—Petition of Henry Ayscough, stating that the respondent, John Anton, had by surprise obtained a decree in Chancery (reheard when petitioner was unable through sickness to attend, and confirmed) for 564*l*. against him, and the petitioner, being unable to pay it, was barbarously dragged out of bed while sick, and hurried in a cart to the Fleet gate, where he lay some hours upon the stones (being not able to remove himself), but at length was received in thither and had been prisoner there ever since 1631. He had brought his bill of review, but, being in contempt for nonpayment of the 564*l*., could have no relief. He had already petitioned the House of Lords, and prays their Lordships to reverse the said decree, to stay all proceedings thereupon against him, and to set him at liberty.

Annexed:—

(a.) 26 Nov. Order of the Lords Committees for Petitions on the above Petition, that if any counsel will certify that there is equity in the petitioner's case, and any credible person will make affidavit that the petitioner is really too poor to obey the decree, their Lordships will desire the directions of the House how to proceed upon the petition. See Pet. Book.

(b.) 10 Jan. 1670-1. Certificate by counsel of reasonableness of appeal, given 2 Jan. 1670-1.

(c.) 10 Jan. 1670-1. Affidavit of poverty sworn by appellant 7 Dec. 1670. See Pet. Book.

329. Nov. 28. Boughey v. Ramsden.—Copy of writ of error and transcript brought up to the House of Lords. See L. J., XII. 375.

330. Nov. 28. Irwin's Act.—Draft of an Act for the empowering Edward, Earl of Manchester, Sir Henry Stapleton, Baronet, Henry Slingsby, and George Townshend, Esquires, the executors and trustees of Henry, late Lord Ingram, Viscount Irwin, in the kingdom of Scotland, deceased, to sell certain lands for the payment of his debts and legacies. Henry, late Lord Ingram, conceived he had, upon the settlement of his lands on his marriage with the Lady Essex Montagu, daughter of Edward, Earl of Manchester, reserved to himself the disposition of the profits of his lands, in case he should die during the minority of his son, for his own use, and had bequeathed such profits to his executors named in the title to the Bill, for the payment of his debts, legacies, &c., whereas he had not the disposition thereof otherwise than on the behalf of his son. The Bill was brought in to vest part of the late Lord Ingram's property in his said executors in trust for the aforesaid purposes, in order that the present Lord Ingram's estate may not be further impoverished by accumulation of interest during his minority. One of the burdens on the estate was the support of an hospital erected at Bootham, in York, by the late Lord's grandfather, Sir Arthur Ingram. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 6th March following. L. J., XII. 374, 446. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 6. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

331. Nov. 29. Bisse v. Richardson.—Petition of Elizabeth Bisse, Spinster, who claims the remainder in tail of certain lands, from which her family had been ousted at the instigation of Robert Richardson, a convicted forger of deeds. She cannot discover the true tenant of the land, in order to bring her formidant in remainder against him, as Richardson baffles her by forged conveyances, so she prays that he may be ordered to appear before their Lordships and make his defence.

Annexed:—

(a.) 21 Dec. Affidavit of John Lecke that he had served an order of the Lords Committees for Petitions upon the said Robert Richardson at the Castle of Lincoln, to answer the above petition.

(b.) 31 Jan. 1670-1. Affidavit of same that he had served a further order on the said Richardson, commanding him peremptorily to answer, he having disregarded the former order. Sworn 25 Jan. 1670-1.

(c.) Peremptory order referred to in preceding, dated 17 Jan. 1670-1. See Pet. Book.

332. Dec. 1. Draft of an Act to enable the making conveyances, by James, Lord Norreys, during his minority. Empowers Edward Cooke, Esq^r., the surviving trustee, to raise a yearly sum of 2,500*l*. for Lord Norreys, in case he marries during his minority; 1,500*l*. a year to be a jointure for his widow, in case of his death; and also to raise 4,000*l*. to increase his sister's portion. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 6th of March following. L. J., XII. 376, 446. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 4. in List of Private Acts, 8vo. See also 73 and 76.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of general saving clause to the Bill. Added 10 Dec.

(b.) Draft of clause settling Nutley on Henry Bertie, Lord Norreys' younger brother. Added, on recommitment, 13 Dec.

(c.) Amendments to the Bill.

(d.) 12 Jan. 1670-1. Letter of Col. Cooke to Lord Norreys, consenting to amendment in the bill, extending the settlement from 2,500*l*. to 5,000*l*. per annum. [The Act contains this amendment, which was evidently made in the Commons. See C. J. IX. 191.]

333. Dec. 1. Greene v. Cole.—Copy of the writ of error and transcript of record. L. J., XII. 377.

Annexed:—

(a.), (b.) Two copies of the printed case of Henry Greene. Certain old premises belonging to Cole had been leased to Greene, and had been pulled down and rebuilt. Thereupon Cole sued Greene, alleging waste in law, and having, by connivance with the clerk of the Hustings Court, falsified the record, obtained a final judgment to recover the place wasted and 600*l*. treble damages. Plaintiff humbly offers that this judgment, if taken as a precedent, may prove fatal to many thousands of men who, having taken long leases of ruined houses, have at vast charge taken the same down and made great improvements. Reported in 1 Levinz, 309, and 2 Saunders, 251 sqq.

334. Dec. 2. Lady Gerard's Privilege.—Petition of Dame Jane Gerard, relict of Charles, Lord Gerard, of Gerard's Bromley, deceased, and of Digby, Lord Gerard, his son and heir. Complaints of a breach of her privilege of peerage committed by John Ward and William Spencer, who sued her upon bonds for 700*l*. and 106*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. Prays that by an order of the House its privileges may be asserted, and punishment inflicted on the violators thereof. L. J., XII. 378.

Annexed:—

(a.) 19 Dec. Petition of William Spenser, Gentleman. Prays to have his non-appearance at the bar, in obedience to summons, excused by reason of his extreme age and sickness, not having intended any contempt, and craves leave to submit his case and answer in writing, instead of appearing in person. L. J., XII. 383.

335. Dec. 5. D. Albemarle's privilege.—Petition of Samuel Rich, one of the Duke of Albemarle's domestic chaplains. Petitioner was, at the suit of one William Wolley, of Misarden, in the county of Gloucester, arrested, with a warrant granted from John Cox, deputy to the under-sheriff of that county, by Thomas Beard, a Londoner, and Richard Bydle, in an action of trespass, notwithstanding that he showed them a manifestation of his being the Duke's chaplain, under his hand and seal. He was much beat and evilly intreated, and compelled by force, although he offered to give sufficient bail for his appearance, to go ten miles on foot to the county gaol, where he was kept until the sheriff of the county came to Gloucester. Having no means to obtain relief but by the favour and goodness of their Lordships' House, he prays that the said persons may be caused to appear before the House and punished according to law, and that he may be relieved for his great wrong and injury.

336. Dec. 5. Knight's Bill.—Amended draft of an Act for the settling the Manor of Portwood and other lands, late of John Knight, Gentleman, in the County and Town and County of Southampton, in John Parker, Serjeant-at-Law, Mr. William Morgan, and William Blennerhasset, of London, Gentlemen, to be sold for payment of debts. [Read 1st this day; royal assent, 6 March following. L. J., XII. 380, 446. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 16., in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

HOUSE OF

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments made in Committee. See Com. Book, Jan. 9 and 14, 1670-1.

337. Dec. 6. Petition of Ann Angell, widow, against a decree of the Court of Chancery of 12 November 1662. Prays their Lordships to commiserate her condition, and appoint a day for the hearing of all parties concerned, Endorsed. Nothing done in it. See MS. Min. of date.

338. Dec. 7. Petition of His Majesty's Serjeants-at-Arms, attending the House. Complain that they have not been paid for the last nine years for their attendance. Pray to be recommended for payment to the care of the Lord Ashley and the Lord Arlington. L. J., XII. 383. See also 46 and 291.

339. Dec. 8. Servants Bill.—Commons engrossment of an Act to prevent certain frauds and abuses committed by servants. Servants order goods not required, or receive money to pay for goods which are never ordered; no tradesman to be able to sue for goods above 20s. value ordered by a servant, unless the tradesman have the master's authority for trusting such servant; no tradesman's claim for goods supplied under 20s. value to be admissible, unless notice of debt be given to master within 20 days after delivery; Act not to prevent merchants and tradesmen from being bound by the act of their servants. [Brought from the Commons this day, (L. J., XII. 383,) and dropped after recommitment.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill, made 19 Dec. A note adds "The Bill reported with these amendments on Tuesday 10th January 1670, and the 'amendments not agreed to.' See Com. Book, 10, 15, and 19 Dec. L. J., XII. 400.

340. Dec. 10. Amended draft of an Act for the erecting of the manor or lordship of Haslington, in the County of Chester, into a parish. Whereas the parish church of Barthomley is not large enough for the inhabitants, and there have been several suits between the Vernons of Haslington and the patrons of Barthomley, the Bill enacts that the chapel of ease at Haslington shall be erected into a parish church, with the manor of Haslington as a distinct parish, with perpetual rectory. George Vernon and John Crew to be patrons, with right of alternate presentation. Haslington Hall and its demense lands to be charged with an annuity of 25*l.* to the rector. In exchange, Vernou to have the tithes of the Hall, &c., and all the tithe-corn in the manor; the rest of the tithes of the manor to go to the parson, who is also to have a glebe, on which Vernon is to build a parsonage. [Read 1st this day. Reported with amendments on 18 Jan. following, and passed after long debate. (MS. Min. of 17 Feb. 1670-1.) Second reading in the Commons negatived. C. J., IX. 216. L. J., XII. 386, 432, and Com. Book of 13 Jan. 1670-1. Comp. Ormerod's Cheshire, III. 172.]

341. Dec. 12. Prisoners for Debt.—Petition of the poor prisoners for debt, in and about the city of London and elsewhere. Many thousand miserable creatures are languishing and perishing in prisons and holes, being almost starved and eaten up with vermin, through the cruelty of their creditors. Pray that a Bill may be brought in for their relief. L. J., XII. 387. [The above was referred this day to a Committee, specially appointed, who reported 20 March 1670-1, by offering a Bill [Annexes (b.) and (f.)], which ultimately passed into law, 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 20. For proceedings, see Com. Book, Dec. 17; Jan. 4, 31; Feb. 3, 4, 13; and March 3, 13, 20. A proposal was made in Committee that those persons who had actually served the King, or who could make it appear that they suffered upon his account, should be set at liberty.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Printed Petition of many Poor Distressed Prisoners for Debt (addressed to both Houses). Sheweth: 1. That many, by adhering to His Majesty and Royal Father in the late time of Rebellion, lost their Estates real and personal, are become Paupers, and in a starving condition in Prison. 2. That many who are the children of such persons, are in the like miserable condition, and thereby many of their wives and children are become burthensome to their parishes. 3. That many are in prison upon mere feigned actions, in the names of unknown persons, where no just debt is due or cause of action. 4. That divers are sureties for other men's debts, the principals at liberty, and able persons, yet suffer the sureties to lie in prison. 5. That divers prisoners have estates lately fallen to them, and are held from the same by unlawful intruders, executors, and fraudulent administrators, who with the rents and profits thereof have and do maintain insupportable suits at law and in Chancery, and by false actions do continue prisoners in custody, that they cannot have liberty or means to recover their own estates and debts from them, well knowing such prisoners to be poor, and not able to prosecute suits for relief. 6. That many are prisoners upon absolute false obtained judgments, and charged in execution, where nothing at all is due, the principals dead, and the executors will not administer the said judgments and discharge the said prisoners. 7. That many are utterly ruined by Statutes of Bankrupt, their estates being seized and sold by those Commissioners, and still the persons concerned detained in prison, contrary to that Statute; taking advantage of such prisoners' poverty and disability to wage law for remedy. 8. That by the Plague, the late dreadful Fire, and the Dutch war, many families are ruined and become prisoners. 9. That many thousands of prisoners are absolute paupers, not able to pay one penny, and ready to starve, being defrauded of the charities given by benefactors to sustain them with necessary food, 10. That several miserable wretches lie prisoners in the nasty jail of the Marshalsey, when about 40*l.* will pay all the real debts they were first charged with. 11. That many married women are prisoners for debt, their husbands being at liberty. 12. That sundry poor prisoners have pawned and sold to their utmost abilities, and thereby satisfied their creditors, yet still are detained for their fees. 13. That many, whom their creditors (of charity and pity) have released, are likewise prisoners for their fees. 14. That many prisoners are in very deplorable conditions, daily extorted and exacted upon by the gaolers, their officers and servants, put in dungeons, ironed, and locked up close prisoners; their trunks, writings, wearing apparel, moneys to sustain them with, many times detained from them, only to enforce extortions, fees, bribes, bonds, and absolute judgments, without defences, for excessive chamber rent and lodgings, and other most sad enormities; from whence they cannot be relieved, without some charitable Act of Parliament. 15. That this hard and uncharitable custom of keeping poor prisoners for debt, even ready to perish, is not practised in any Christian country but England (from whence comes that cruel proverb, that they will make Dice of their Bones, and the Marshal of the King's Bench, upon the death of any prisoner in execution, returns a bale of dice into the Exchequer). For the custom of Spain is, that on every Saturday a Judge comes into the prison, examines creditors and debtors, and if the debtor be not able to pay his debts, and give satisfaction to his creditors, the judge sets them at liberty. In Holland if the prisoner be not able to pay his debts, then such creditor or creditors shall maintain the said prisoner in prison according to his or their quality. In Scotland, the process is made out against their estates, and not their persons detained in prison to be starved. 16. That the House of Commons have sent up to this most Honourable House several engrossed Bills for enlargement of poor prisoners, yet such is their hard fortune, there is yet none of them passed, to the ruin of many persons and their families. We most humbly therefore pray, that your Honours would take into your pious and charitable considerations the most sad and deplorable condition of so many distressed wretches, prisoners for debt, and no longer let them live in a languishing and starving condition, who, if they were at liberty, might in some time satisfy their just creditors, and be serviceable to their King and country. And the prayers of many thousands will be daily offered up for a blessing on all your Honours actions. [Endorsed, The Poor Prisoners Case.]

(b.) 3 Feb. 1670-1. Amended draft of an Act for the relief and release of poor distressed prisoners for debt. [This draft, without the amendments was the Bill offered by Mr. Phillips, counsel for the prisoners, to the Committee on the 3rd Feb. (See Com. Book). (c.) 13 March 1670-1. Draft of proposed clause, that if the creditor will continue the prisoner in gaol after his oath, it shall be at the creditor's charge. Noted, "Whether it will not be a better law, "that no man shall be arrested in any Court "under five pounds debt, but in the Sheriffs "Courts in their respective limits." [Added by order of Committee of 3 March, being with later amendments §2 of the Act.]

(d.) 18 March 1670-1. Petition of the poor prisoners for debt in the King's Bench prison, signed by Ja. Beament and Will. Whitley. Since their petition was committed, being the 10th of December last, nearly 40 persons have perished there through want and hardship, amongst whom were many loyal indigent officers, and in particular Col. Weekes; and Col. Lindsey is yet there alive by the daily charity of other prisoners. Petitioners pray their Lordships to call for their Bill lying in the Clerk's hands to be read.

(e.) 24 March 1670-1. Petition in similar terms to preceding, signed by Jo. Beaman, Will. Wheatly, and Robt. Wayne, and addressed to the Lords of the Committee appointed for the relief of poor prisoners for debt. Pray their Lordships to commiserate their sad condition. See Com. Book.

(f.) 27 March 1671. Amended Draft of the Act, being the previous draft (b) with amendments. Offered by the first Committee to the House and read 1st 20th March, and reported with amendments this day. Royal assent 22 April 1671, (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 20. L. J., XII. 464, 470. See Com. Book, March 23, 24, and 27.

(g.) Paper of Commons Amendments to the Bill, embodied in the Act. L. J., XII. 491, 502. [They limit the maintenance of the prisoner detained at the creditor's expense to 1s. 6d. a week, and omit the proviso, making the Act expire in 1674.]

342. Dec. 14. Amendments to the Bill for improving the navigation between the town of Boston and the River Trent. Made in Committee 12 Dec., and agreed to on report this day. L. J., XII. 389. [Bill brought from the Commons on 22 Nov. Royal assent 22nd April following. L. J., XII. 370, 515. 22, 23 Car. II. c. 25. in List of Private Acts, 8vo.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 13 March 1670-1. Report of the Conference on the Bill, stating the agreement of the Commons in all the amendments but the clause in the parchment marked a. L. J., XII. 455. In extenso. [This paper does not contain the Commons reasons, which are set forth in the Journals.]

(b.) Parchment clause marked a. referred to in above, disagreed to by the Commons and left out of the Act. It proposed to vest the powers of the Commissioners of Sewers in the Commissioners appointed under this Act.

343. Dec. 16. Privilege of Parliament Bill.—Draft of an Act concerning Privilege of Parliament.

"For the better security of the Estates and fortunes of all Your Majesty's Liege people, and to the end by the long sitting and continuance of any Parliament (which of late hath been beyond the usage of former times) the subjects may not be aggrieved, nor the due course of Law obstructed or delayed by Privilege of Parliament. Be it enacted by, &c.—That by virtue or colour of any Jurisdiction or Privilege of Parliament, no member, assistant, or attendant of the Lords House or Lower House of Parliament, or Convocation of the Clergy, or their menial servants, shall be protected otherwise than in the freedom of their persons from Arrest and Imprisonment, and the House or Houses wherein they and their families are ordinarily resident, with their goods therein, their coaches and horses, and such other their proper goods as they and their menial servants shall make use of for their own persons, and that only from the date of the writ of summons in the beginning of every Parliament, and during each session of Parliament, and twenty days before and after, but shall in all other respects be liable, even in time of Parliament, to be implicated, sued, and proceeded with according to the due and ordinary course of law, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. Provided always, that neither this Act nor anything therein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to the taking away or abridging any personal or other privilege which the peers of this kingdom have heretofore usually had, exercised, or enjoyed, out of the time of Parliament, anything herein contained to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding."

[The Bill was read 1st this day, and after long debates was thrown out on the question to commit it, several peers protesting. L. J., XII. 391, 425, 448.]

344. Dec. 19. L. Berkeley's Precedence.—Petition of George, Lord Berkeley of Berkeley, to the King, concerning his precedence as a Baron, with His Majesty's reference thereof to the House endorsed thereon. L. J., XII. 393. In extenso. [M.S. Minutes of 14 Feb. 1670-1 state that L. Lucas laid claim to the first barony on behalf of the E. of Kent as L. Hastings.]

Annexed:—

(a.) 14 Feb. Pedigree of L. Berkeley and copies of Records, &c. L. J., XII. 429.

1670-1.

344*. Jan. 5. Commons Engrossment of an Act for settling the boundary and extents of the manors of Ramsey and Wardboyes, in the County of Huntingdon. The suppliant, Sir Henry Williams, lord of the manor of Ramsey, prays for a rectification of the boundaries settled by the Commissioners appointed under the Bedford Level Act, which placed Wardboyes Fen within the boundaries of Sir William Leman's manor. (Parchment Collection.) Read 1st this day and rejected.

345. Jan. 4. Draft of an Act to enable Edward, Earl of Lincoln, to settle a jointure. The earl being about to marry Dorothy, daughter of John Ferrers, Esq., who is to bring a portion of 7,000l. from her father, and certain lands in Holland, to which she is entitled through her mother, and being under age, the Bill provides that certain property in Lincolnshire shall be held by him, after his marriage, for life, to go to, his widow, if he die first, together with an annuity of 600l. out of the rest of the estate. Read 1st this day, reported, and to be engrossed. No further proceeding. L. J., XII. 397, 404. Com. Book, 13 Jan. [The marriage never took place.]

346. Jan. 10. Hobart v. Eure.—Petition of Anthony Hobart, a very poor, distressed, and undone gentleman. Petitioner and one Jane Doe, widow, have been wrongfully dismissed out of the Court of Chancery, and applied in vain for relief to the Lord Keeper. He prays their Lordships to give him relief, and summon the defendants to answer, and assign him Mr. Ayloffe, of Gray's Inn, for his counsel, the petitioner being unable to pay fees, as by his affidavit of poverty appears. See L. J., XII. 453.

Annexed:—

(a.) Affidavit of petitioner that he is not worth in all the world the sum of five pounds. Sworn 3 Dec. 1670. See L. J., XII. 453, and Pet. Book, 10 Jan. 1670-1.

(b.) Paper describing a short summons against certain parties who are in town, and for his protection by the Committee until his hearing.

(c.) Case of petitioner as administrator of Prudence, his late wife, the daughter of Edward Eure, deceased, and late plaintiff in Chancery against Francis, the heir of the said Eure, and Samuel Trotman, a lawyer. The late Edward Eure made a lease for a term of years of the manor of Odington, in the County of Oxford, to two trustees, one of them being his son Francis, in trust to pay, besides other payments, 1,500l. to his daughter Prudence within five years, and confirmed the said lease by his will, leaving Francis administrator. Petitioner sued the trustees and Trotman, a mortgagee, to be admitted to pay Trotman his mortgage money, and have the benefit of the said lease of trust with interest, for raising the money to pay him. Francis Eure, in answer, pleaded that his father settled the property in question upon him under a marriage settlement, and irregularly obtained a verdict against the petitioner. Trotman has since assigned the lands to Mr. Lenthall and his sister, Lady Pezly, and petitioner is totally ruined. Endorsed, Read 10 Jan. 1670-1. See Pet. Book of date.

(d.) 4 April 1671. Answer of Samuel Trotman, Barrister-at-Law, one of the respondents, denying the validity of the lease upon which the petitioner claims, inasmuch as it was made, if at all, at a time when the lessor was being sued and expected to be fined, in order to exempt the estate leased from the fine; and inasmuch as it contained impossible provisions, such as the stipulated raising of 1,500l. in five years, besides a payment of 35l. a year out of an estate worth only 80l. a year. Moreover, the lessor himself outlived the five years limit of this impossible provision. The will also, which is alleged to have confirmed this lease, was made when the testator was non compos mentis, as is proved by the incongruous provisions it contains. The respondent goes on to criticise the remaining statements of the petitioner, and accuses him of having taken advantage of his position as a captain under the Commonwealth; and whereas the petitioner has not attempted to proceed by bill of review, the respondent prays that the appeal may be dismissed. See Pet. Book.

(e.) 11 April 1671. Plea and answer of Dame Katharine Pasley, widow. The petitioner's proper remedy is by a bill of review; the lease for years for raising 1,500*l.* is fraudulent, and has been so found at law; but even were this not so, it is not proved that petitioner has any claim thereto, being neither executor nor administrator to his late wife, Francis Eure, being indebted to respondent's father, Sir John Lenthall, conveyed his estate and equity of redemption in the premises in trust for the said Sir John. She prays their Lordships not to divest her of her rights as a purchaser under the decree of dismission. See Pet. Book.

(f.) 14 April 1671. Answer of Francis Eure, Esq., close prisoner in the Counter prison, Wood Street, London. Petitioner can only answer by memory, having no paper or writing by him that he can come by. The pretended lease for years is a fraudulent deed, and void as against Trotman's mortgage, who was a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and against respondent's marriage settlement. The verdict which decided against the said lease was quite properly obtained, and petitioner was unable to get a certificate from the Judge to the contrary. Respondent hopes that those who have really paid for the estate, may peaceably enjoy the same, the mortgage of the manor of Odington being lately redeemed by Lady Katherine Pasley, by a payment of 950*l.* to Samuel Trotman, under respondent's deed, in obedience to the award and decree, and as he was bound in conscience to do, the said lady and her father having paid great sums to respondent and his late father, whereby respondent has been kept from starving.

347. Jan. 10. Bowen v. Jones.—Petition of Griffith Bowen, gentleman, plaintiff in a suit against Philip Jones. Petitioner purchased, in 1654, of defendant, a collector then against His Majesty, some property in the County of Pembroke, the defendant alleging that he had bought it as Crown lands. Subsequently, in 1657, the City of London obtained an order from the then powers for the possession of the premises, they having purchased them of the late King. Thereupon petitioner applied to Jones for relief, and obtained a promise of a reprice to reimburse him his purchase money. Not obtaining this money, he sued Jones for it, but was nonsuited, and a second action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Petitioner, being destitute of relief, prays that Jones may be convicted before their Lordships, and that the petitioner may have his purchase money again with interest. Endorsed, Rejected. See Pet. Book.

348. Jan. 10. Petition of Ann Eaton, widow of Gerard Martin, deceased. Petitioner was deprived, during the rebellion in Ireland, of certain lands in the parish of St. Patrick, Munster, which were possessed in the war by the then Parliament. The King, in 1657, being at Brussels, promised her relief through the Earl of Bristol, as soon as he was established in his dominions, and again, in 1660, referred her petition to the Lord Deputy of Ireland, under the hand of G. Holles, one of His Majesty's Masters of Requests. Failing to obtain relief from the Lord Deputy, who required a stronger order, and being kept out of her estate by one Thomas Sodwell, or Southwell, who can show no right to the same, but pretends he was put into it by the late tyrant Oliver Cromwell, she appealed to Parliament, and on 18 December 1667, the Lords Committees for Petitions reported that her petition be recommended to His Majesty, the order being still in the clerk's book of the House. (See Pet. Book 17 Dec. 1667, and 18 Feb. 1667-8.) She prays their Lordships to grant some effectual order for her relief as shall seem meet, according to His Majesty's gracious intentions so long signified, as by the annexed may appear, which are affixed to the said recited petition still in the custody of their Lordships' clerks. Endorsed, Dismissed. See Pet. Book 26 Nov. 1669 and under date. [The "annex" here referred to is not among these papers.]

348.* Jan. 10. Fitzjames' Bill.—Lords Amendments, reported this day. L. J. X. 11. 400. See Com. Book, 13 Dec. 1670. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 11, in List of Private Acts, 8^{vo}.

349. Jan. 11. Bishops of Bangor and St. Asaph's Lead Mines Bill.—Amended draft of an Act to enable Robert, Lord Bishop of Bangor, and Isaac, Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, and their respective successors for ever, to let for three lives, or one and twenty years, all lead mines in their soil. [Read 1st this day; royal assent 6 March. L. J., XII. 401, 446; 22-23 Car. II. c. 5. in List of Private Acts, 8^{vo}.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments to the Bill. Made in Committee 20 Jan. and 1 Feb. (re-commitment.) A note states that the Bill being reported, with amendments, and some additional amendments being offered at the table, the Bill was recommitted.

(b.) Another paper of amendments. Incomplete.

(c.) Paper containing three further amendments. Probably those referred to in above note. [These amendments are all in the concluding portion of the last proviso, which gave the Bishops power to dig for lead ore in any lands in lease without the consent of the lessees, on their paying damages as assessed by a jury. This clause was finally struck out on recommitment.]

350. Jan. 12. Ross Vicarage.—Printed case of Ross, in Herefordshire. States that the town contains two chapels, with only a very inconsiderable maintenance for their minister and curate; but there is also a rectory, a sinecure. The predecessors of the present incumbent leased out the great tithes for three lives under a rent of 44*l.* per annum, payable to the rector and his successors, and this lease is still in being. The rectory, as well as the vicarage, is in the donation of the Bishop of Hereford, when void. Prays that the rectory and rent thereof may be united to the vicarage by Act of Parliament, after the death of the present incumbent or other legal avoidance of the rectory; the Bishop of Hereford having consented thereto. [A Bill for the above purpose was brought from the Commons this day, and received the royal assent on 22 April. L. J., XII. 402, 515.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Duplicate of preceding.

351. Jan. 14. Petition of Katherine, Lady Mohun, Relict of Warwick, Lord Mohun, deceased. Complaints of breach of Privilege of Parliament by the arrest of her domestic servant Eleanor Burford for a debt, at the suit of Anne Chapman, widow. Prays their Lordships to make the offenders answer the contempt. L. J., XII. 404. The Journal of this day states that this, together with other similar petitions, was referred to the Committee for Privileges.

352. Jan. 14. Assault on the Duke of Ormond.—Draft order appointing a Committee to examine the matter of fact committed in the late barbarous assaulting, wounding, and robbing the person of the Lord Steward of His Majesty's Household and to make report thereof to this House. L. J., XII. 404. In extenso; except that the name of Lord Grey, who is given as one of the Committee in the Journal, is not in this draft.

[The assault on the Duke took place on Tuesday the 6th Dec. 1670. On the Thursday a proclamation appeared in the London Gazette, offering a reward of 1,000*l.* for information that should lead to the detection of the offenders; and, after a preliminary investigation before the Lord Mayor and Mr. Justice Hooker on the 9th, a number of persons were examined before Lord Arlington at Whitehall. The House of Lords took up the matter first on the 14th January, by appointing a Committee to inquire into the matter, when the depositions previously taken were produced. One of these only, containing the attestation of Pretty, the "drawer" at the Bull Head tavern, Charing Cross, where the supposed offenders spent their time whilst waiting for the Duke, and of his boy Wilson, relates to the occurrence itself. These two gave evidence that five men on horseback, all in long cloaks and with swords, between 6 and 7 o'clock on the evening of the 6th stopped at the tavern to drink, saying they were graziers, and that very shortly after the Duke's coach, preceded by a linkman, passed by, they rode off hastily, not waiting for change, towards the Haymarket or Pall Mall. One of them is described as a "tall, lean, pale faced man with short black hair and a periwig," who rode a "reddish dark horse with a bald face." The Duke himself, who appeared in the House on the 17th Dec. for the first time after the assault, gave an account of it to the Committee on the 16th Jan., but his statement is not set out in the Minutes.* His coachman deposed that a man on horseback bade him stop the coach, saying there was a dead man before him, upon which he stopped and the horses were seized. The Duke's footman stated that two of the men "set pistols to his breast behind the coach," swore they would kill him, and kept him where he was. Thomas Brooks, the porter at Clarendon House deposed. "The footman came and called, and not seeing the coach, I looked out and heard a noise, and ran, and finding my Lord, endeavoured to bring him home. They cried kill the rogue, but I got away from them with my Lord within the gate in my arms." The design of these men is stated by Lord Arlington, on the authority of a person who gave him their names, to have been "not to rob or kill the Lord Steward, but to carry him to some obscure place and oblige him to ransom himself at ten or twenty thousand pounds."*

The Committee, after referring the previous depositions to a Sub-Committee, and taking fresh evidence, reported against Thomas Hunt, Richard Halliwell, alias Holloway; and Dr. Allen, alias Aylett, alias Aylloffe, alias Aleck (one witness gives him a further alias of Elyott);† and the House, in accordance with a further recommendation, ordered the Committee to prepare a Bill, enacting that if the suspected persons did not come in by a certain day they should stand convicted. The Committee referred the matter to the Lord Chief Baron, but beyond this nothing appears to have been done. It was found very early in the inquiry that these three men were associates, and they are all described as "Fifth Monarchy men and desperate." The report of the Committee (L. J., XII. 447, in extenso) contains the leading points of evidence relied on against them; but the MS. papers throw some light upon their antecedents and relations.

Suspicion appears to have lighted at once on Hunt. A sword, belt, and pistol marked T. H. were picked up and taken to Clarendon House, where they were identified by Drayton, a constable, and one Partridge, who had taken them from Hunt on a hue and cry against him about the previous May. Three horses also were captured and kept at Clarendon House, one of which was described as a "chestnut mare with a blaze down the face."‡ Hunt's lodgings were searched on the 9th Dec. by Sir Robert Vyner, who learned his address at Clarendon House.§ He is stated to have lived some time in Ireland||, though not born there, and to have passed under several names. One witness, who knew him, describes him as a "young, tall, ruddy man"; another as "a lusty proper young man, full faced, about 21 years of age."¶ Nothing is known of his father beyond that he was believed to be a "desperate man," and was stated by Sir Robert Vyner to be "living in town." His mother originally kept an apothecary's shop in Shoreditch, but was living at this time with one Jonathan Daveys, a schoolmaster at Mortlake, who gave evidence of her sudden disappearance from his house on the morning after the assault. A sister of Hunt is also spoken of, who could not be found. The so-called Dr. Allen is mentioned by one witness as his uncle, and in the information given to Lord Arlington as his father. About three years before the assault Hunt was apprenticed to one Holmes, a Scotch apothecary in Southwark, and formerly an army surgeon, to whom he had been recommended by his mother; but after serving him for six months Hunt set up at Romford as a grocer.‡ Holmes, who judged him to be a Presbyterian, speaks of him as very poor in clothes, but afterwards very fine, and as leading a debauched life after he left his employ. Holmes' sister, Mrs. Price, represents him as "worth 500l." but other witnesses depose to his being deeply in debt. The hue and cry already mentioned was for an assault with intent to rob one John Constable, and led to Hunt's arrest at Lambeth, and his conviction (4 July 1670) at Guildford, before Chief Justice Keeling and Judge Morton. He was fined 100 marks and imprisoned in the Marshalsea until August, when he managed to find the two sureties†† required for his good behaviour for seven years, and had his pistol and sword returned to him in October.

The facts reported against Hunt by the Committee were the discovery and identification of his sword, belt, and pistol, and the sudden disappearance of his mother from Mortlake.

Halliwell, alias Holloway, the second person implicated, was a tobacco cutter in Frying Pan Alley, Petticoat Lane, Bishopsgate Street, who was stated to be a Baptist, and to have served as a cornet in the late armies.* His own "Letter to the Church," which was found in his lodgings by the Lord Mayor, shows him to be a Fifth Monarchy man, and, if his own quaint statements are to be believed, an influential member of that sect. From whom, however, he declares his intention to withdraw on account of their apostasy and subservience to the Monarchy, and who were equally disposed to disavow him and his associates. At two o'clock in the morning of the 10th December his house, which was the frequent resort of the persons suspected, was searched by the Lord Mayor and Sir Robert Vyner, who went thither, among other places in quest of Hunt. Halliwell escaped out of a garret window, but his Letter to the Church, reported to the House as being full of treasonable matter, was seized, as well as two letters from Allen, one of which asks for the loan of Halliwell's pistols; a wet cloak was also found at his house. His niece, Margaret Boulter, whose evidence forms part of the report, stated that he had been at home that night since 8 or 9 o'clock, and had charged his wife, before escaping, to say that he was not in town. Halliwell kept out of the way, but he wrote a letter to the Lord Mayor justifying his escape by the ill usage inflicted on those who were apprehended, and saying that Allen's letter about the pistols was an old one, and that the pistols had been required for an adventure at sea. The cloak belonged to a boy, and had been casually left at his house. A futile attempt was made to discover his whereabouts from Mrs. Perry, who was alleged to have carried a cloak to him from his wife, and the matter was dropped; the Committee reporting the grounds of suspicion against him. Evidence however was given of his having been at home at the time of the outrage.

The evidence reported against Allen was that of Michael Beresford, a clergyman, who met him and had a conversation with him in the Piazza, Covent Garden, on the evening of the 6th, just before the assault. He passed under several aliases. One Bloxton, a tailor in Southwark, speaks of him as Dr. Alec, and states that he asked him to be one of Hunt's sureties in the robbery case. Buxton says he wrote his name, Allen, Eylett, and Aylloffe, and another witness calls him Elyott. Beresford describes him as a "very fine man, with a brown periwig," who had been a footman of Sir Michael Livesey, had lately come from Ireland, and had relations in the Isle of Sheppey. Other evidence speaks of him as practising physic,† and, according to the information given to Lord Arlington, he was really the notorious Colonel Blood. Mumford, one of Hunt's sureties, speaks of him as a kinsman of Hunt's, and another witness makes him his uncle. Suspicion appears to have been first directed to him by the discovery of some letters of his at Hunt's and Halliwell's houses, showing him to have been on intimate terms with these men. Boulter states that Thomas Hunt, a tall slender black man, wearing a flaxen peruke, who very often resorted to Halliwell's, sometimes went by the name of Doctor Allen.

Four other persons, Hurst, Holmes, Washwhite, and Dixey, were arrested, but were not reported against to the House. One John Hurst was mentioned in the proclamation, but the evidence seems to refer to three distinct persons of that name. Of one we are told that he lodged at the Fleece, in Tothill Street, before January 1669-70, and had also been living with John Jones, the master of the White Swan, in Queen Street, Drury Lane. Jones saw this Hurst on horseback at his own door, about the end of October, when he said he was employed by Lord Howard. We next hear of him as going to see his brother Owen, "a desperate fellow, and of ill life" at Lord Howard's, at Arundel House, on the 7th Dec., the day after the assault. On the 19th and 20th he slept at Done's at the Fleece, and during the 20th and 21st was seen drinking at the tavern called "Heaven," in the palace of Westminster, whence he wrote a letter to Done. On the 20th he sold Done his brother's horse, and stated he was soon going to Jamaica with a commission from his brother to receive slaves. One witness, Crow, speaks of him as living "towards Staines." This Hurst was born at Cambridge, being the son of a minister, and had been 6 or 7 years with Sir § Drayton, the constable, states that he lived "about London Wall." A note in another hand, added to a letter of Allen to Mrs. Hunt (q.v.), states that he lodged with one John Anderson, an apothecary, near the Plough in Bishop's Street.

|| One of his acquaintances, Buxton, believed him to be an Irishman; another, his former employer, took him for a Laneshire man.

¶ Compare Gazette 8-12 and 15-19 Dec.

‡ This appears from the evidence of two witnesses, Smith and Danvers, who had dealings with him. Holmes, on the other hand, speaks of him as a druceist, and Drayton, the constable, a robber.

†† One of these was a brewer named Mumford, who states he was "drawn into it" by one Bloxton, at whose house Allen lodged.

Francis Leake in Nottinghamshire. He was arrested on the 13th Jan. by Washwhite, for a small debt, and lodged in the Marshalsea, whence he was brought before the Committee on the 1st Feb. The wife of the Hurst next mentioned, who was most suspected, proved this one was not her husband, and he was not the Hurst seen at Halliwell's. He is described as short and reddish haired, and a wild fellow, but honest. He knew, he said, another Hurst, a big man, who had lost an ear. See evidence of Hardwicke, Humphreys, Hinton, Williams, Broune, Jones, Done, Sutton, Crow, and Washwhite.

The second Hurst is described as a Yorkshire man, a lawyer, who had been married seven years, had gone to Ireland about Sept. 1669, leaving his wife behind him, then to Scotland, and had lately come back and was going to marry a widow at Deptford. He was pretty tall (or middle sized), with yellow hair, and had lost one ear in the pillory. He was a "great cheat." He had raised troops for Portugal. He had been seen (probably with Holloway) on Dec. 14 or 15 at the Exchange; and was perhaps the Hurst whom Margaret Boulter had seen at Holloway's on the 9th. See evidence of Mrs. Hurst, Trishaire, Tayler, and Boulter.

The third Hurst was a Sussex man, a mariner, who had come four months before 17 Dec. from Mevis in the West Indies, where he had been eight years. He was examined before Lord Arlington on the 17th Dec., when he brought evidence to prove an alibi on the day of the outrage, and to show his respectability. He had been married four months. See evidence of Hurst, Mrs. Elizabeth Hurst, Capt. Iles, Mrs. Iles, Capt. Lawrence, and Isaac Lawrence.

Samuel Holmes, the apothecary, and former employer of Hunt, was also arrested on suspicion. He was examined for the first time on 9 Dec. before the Lord Mayor and Mr. Justice Hooker, but forfeited his recognizance to appear the next day on the plea of business. Buxton suspected him because he had a correspondence with the supposed chief actors, and had been a surgeon in the old army, and also because he denied all knowledge of Buxton, though knowing him very well; and there was a question whether he had sent his servant to put his sister, Mrs. Price, on her guard, which, however, was satisfactorily explained. On the 12th Dec. his depositions were taken before Lord Arlington, but the Committee, after hearing his evidence about Hunt, on the 23rd Jan., discharged him from prison on his giving security to appear when required.

John Washwhite was accused by Wybourne and Baker of having spoken against the Duke of Ormond, and was imprisoned in the Gatehouse at Westminster. The Committee ordered him to be brought before them on the 23 Jan., when he denied the charge, and stated that he did not know Hunt, nor anything about the matter until he arrested Hurst. He had lived at Lazy Hill, near Dublin, for seventeen years, and had been about town for two years. He had been a soldier in England under the usurpers, and was a cook by calling. He also served the bailiffs. In his defence he accused Wybourne of being set on by one Jones, whom he had apprehended in Ireland. The Committee ordered his chains to be taken off. Fletcher, a bricklayer, one of the informants against Dixey, mentioned below, speaks also of Washwhite, who had been one of his labourers, as having used threatening language against the Duke, and having said he wished he had lost his leg as well as his boot when he laid siege to Dublin.

Thomas Dixey, a butcher, living on the Bankside in or near Southwark, between the bank and the "sawmills that saw by the wind," was also informed against before Sir William Morton on the 3rd Feb., for using abusive language against the Duke of Ormond, and, on one of the informants suggesting that he was implicated in the outrage, Dixey is reported to have answered, "What is that to you." Judge Morton, in forwarding the examination to the Duke's steward, remarks, "I do suspect this fellow the more, because he is a bold, impudent fellow, a butcher, and lives in Southwark, whither those that assaulted the Duke did retire." Dixey was examined before the Committee on the 8th and 10th Feb., when the constable who arrested him stated him to have said, "All they can say is that I said the Duke of Ormond was a knave, and I will justify it. I think I shall be hanged, but I care not." He is also reported to have declared that he would be rescued by Cherrybounce (his brother John) and Capt. Careless. The whole thing appears to have been a paltry quarrel between Dixey and the informants, and after hearing evidence in Dixey's favour, the Committee recommended that he should be released on giving security for his good behaviour.

Evidence was also taken about two other persons, named Humes and More. The former was mentioned as lodging with Holmes. He was believed to be an Independent, and known to be acquainted with Hunt. All that came out about More was that he lodged in Gray's Inn Lane, the supposed hiding place of the suspected persons, and that he once owned the pistol identified as that of Hunt.

The following is a list of the witnesses examined:—

Concerning the assault itself.—The Duke of Ormond himself, and his servants, Henley, the coachman; Esby, the footman; and Brooks, the porter, who were eye-witnesses of the occurrence. Minutes, 16 Jan.

Pretty and Wilson, of the Bull's Head, Charing Cross, who spoke of some suspicious persons drinking there before the assault. Min. 16 Jan. and (b.)

Drayton and Partridge, who identified Hunt's sword, belt, and pistol. Min. 16 and 18 Jan., (c.)

Johnson, with whom lodged More, who once owned Hunt's pistol (c.) and (l.)

Holmes, Hunt's former employer, and Holmes' wife and servant (c.), (c.), (c.), and Min. 23 Jan.

Mrs. Price, sister to Holmes (c.), (c.), and Min., 23 Jan.

Buxton, with whom Mrs. Price had lodged (c.), and Min. 20 Jan.

Davies, with whom Hunt's mother lived (g.)

Gant and Mumford, who were sureties for Hunt (c.), (c.), and Min. 20 Jan.

Bloxton, who introduced Hunt to Mumford (c.)

Weyer, Danvers, and Smith, who had dealings with Hunt. (Allen mentions Smith to Beresford. Min. 20 Jan., 13 Feb., and (c.)

Mrs. Halliwell (c.), and Min. 23 Jan. and 6 Feb.

Margaret Boulter, Halliwell's niece (c.), and Min. 26 Jan. and 1 Feb.

Mrs. Perryqu, stated to have taken a cloak to Halliwell from his wife. Min. 6 Feb.

Mrs. Somes, Halliwell's niece, who proved an alibi for Halliwell. Min. 26 Jan.

Mosely, his daughter Honor, and Fisher, who were concerned in conveying Halliwell's letter to the Lord Mayor (h.), and Min. 16 and 20 Jan.

Beresford, who knew Allen, and had spoken to him on the day of the assault (c.)

Dope, at whose house Hurst had lain on the 19 and 20 Dec. (c.), and Min. 31 Jan.

Jones, with whom Hurst had lodged in Jan. 1669-70 (c.)

Williams, Broune, Hardwicke, Humphreys, and Hinton, who had seen Hurst at "Heaven" (c.), (c.), and (c.)

Lee, with whom lodged Cloberry, a merchant, who had come from Tangier with Lord Howard, the master of Hurst's brother (c.)

Sutton and Crowe, who knew Hurst as being in the Marshalsea. Min. 31 Jan.

Mrs. Hurst, wife of the second Hurst (c.), and Min. 3 Feb.

Trishaire and Tayler, who knew this Hurst (c.)

The third Hurst (d.), and Min. 1 and 3 Feb.

Mrs. Hurst, his wife, Capt. Iles, Mrs. Iles, and Capt. Lawrence, who knew this Hurst, and proved an alibi for him (f.)

Isaac Lawrence, who also knew him (f.)

Wybourne and Baker, witnesses against Washwhite (n.), and Min. 23 and 24 Jan.

Fletcher and Ellery, witnesses against Dixey (n.), (n.), and Min. 6 and 10 Feb.

The constable who arrested Dixey. Min. 8 and 10 Feb.

Judge Morton, before whom Dixey was brought, and who had tried Hunt at Guildford (n.), and Min. 8 Feb.

Fayry, witness for Dixey. Min. 10 Feb.

Page. Allen mentioned a Dr. Page to Beresford. Min. 15 Feb.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Minutes of evidence and proceedings of the Committee. These extend from 14 Jan. to 16 March.

(b.) The attestation of Mathew Pretty, a drawer at the Bull Head tavern, and William Wilson, a boy, sometimes attending thereabouts. Taken this 17th of December 1670 at the Bull Head. That upon Tuesday, the 6th of December, the day the Prince of Orange dined in the city, that between the hours of 6 and 7 of the clock at night, there came to the door of the Bull Head tavern at Charing Cross five men on horseback with cloaks, and they having drunk about six pints of wine, as the drawer remembers it was canary, sherry, and white wine, two pints of each, and one of them spake to the drawer to draw good wine, for they were graziers. Then the drawer asked them if they knew one Mr. West, a grazier, who is dead, and if they knew one Mr. Pountney, a grazier of Blackwall. They said, yes, they knew them. The drawer remembers that one of their horses was a reddish dark colour with a bald face, and the man that rode upon that horse was a tall, lean, pale-faced man, with short black hair; but he thinks he had a periwig on, and he said that he would not take ten pounds for his old bald horse yet. The drawer says that two of the men were young men, about 26 years of age, and three of them were middle-aged men. The boy took especial notice of him that rode on the bald horse, and says he was a tall, lean, pale-faced man, with short black hair, and that he had a periwig on, and he did believe him to be very like a Portuguese that he had formerly lighted to his lodging, and he had beaten him and gave him nothing. The drawer and boy both testify that near the hour of seven o'clock there came a man on foot in a cloak, and said as he passed between the door and the horsemen that sat drinking, "Make way here for the Duke of Ormond," and at the same time they both saw the Duke of Ormond's coach go by. And immediately after, the drawer says it was near a quarter of an hour after, they paid for two pints of white wine, which was all that was unpaid (for they had paid two reckonings before, as the wine came in), and having called also for three pipes of tobacco, they carried the tobacco with them, and rid a good pace away from the door up towards the Hay Market or Pall Mall. The boy says he believes it was not above half a quarter of an hour after the man had said "Make way here for the Duke of Ormond," that these horsemen rode away on a great pace towards the Haymarket or Pall Mall, and that they left some of the wine behind them, which the drawer says also, and that he gave it the boy to drink.—This we are ready to testify.

Witness hereunto to this examination—

Robert Joyner,

Margery Joyner,

The master and his wife of the Bull Head Tavern.

[Endorsed, "Given by my Lord Chamberlain to my Lord, the 17th of Dec. 1670. For evidence before the Committee, see Minutes of 16 Jan.]"

(c.) Information of William Done, of Westminster, concerning one Hurst, who had lain Monday and Tuesday nights (the 19th and 20th Dec.) at his house. [See Minutes of 31 Jan.]

(c.) Information of John Jones, victualler at the White Swan, in Queen's Street. Hurst was brother to a servant of Lord H. Howard, and son of a minister in Cambridge.

(c.) Examination of the wife of Hurst (another Hurst), taken before Lord Arlington, 12 Dec. 1670. Her husband was a Yorkshiraman, a lawyer, about forty, pretty tall, fair haired; does not know whether he had his ears. [See Min. 3 Feb.]

(c.) Information of Tho. Trishaire, W. Taylor, and Mich. Beresford, taken before Ld. Arlington, 12 Dec. 1670. Trishaire says Hurst was a great cheat, and had lost one of his ears in the pillory. Taylor mentions having seen him at the Exchange with Holloway. Beresford's evidence is set out in the report, L. J., XII. 447. [See Min. 18 Jan.]

(c.) Information of Thomas Williams and John Browne, 23 Dec. 1670. They met Hurst [the one mentioned above (c.) and (c.)] at the St. John's Head, otherwise called Heaven, in the Old Palace, Westminster, on the 21st. He said he was going to Jamaica.

(c.) Information of Thomas Hardwicke and Joseph Humphreys. 23 Dec. 1670. Corroborate preceding evidence about Hurst, who used to live at John Jones' house at the White Swan in the high end of Queen Street.

(c.) Information of Dr. John Hinton, lodging at Mrs. Martin's in the Palace near the Dog Tavern, taken 24 Dec. 1670. Met Hurst at "Heaven" on the 21st. His cousin, Wm. Hinton, a suspicious character, lodges at one Hunt's.

(d.) Examination of John Hurst (a third Hurst) taken before Ld. Arlington 17 Dec. 1670. He is a mariner just come from the West Indies, from Mevis. Was at Capt. Lawrence's on the night of the assault. Is known to Lady Lawrence at Chelsea.

(d.) Examination of Elizabeth Hurst, wife of the Hurst mentioned in preceding paper, Mes, Mrs. Mes, and Capt. Lawrence, taken 18 Dec. They corroborate the preceding evidence, and prove an alibi for this Hurst.

(e.) Deposition of Thomas Drayton, a constable of Lambeth, concerning the pistol and horses taken to Clarendon House. [For his evidence taken before the Committee see Minutes of 16 and 18 Jan.]

(e.) Same of John Buxton, of Bell Alley, Coleman Street, taken before Lord Arlington 10 Dec. Mrs. Price was at his house a fortnight ago, and told him that Hunt had dined with her four or five months since.

(e.) Same of Margaret Boulter, aged 12 years, niece of Richard Halliwell. Taken before Sir Richard Ford, Lord Mayor, 10 Dec. The portion respecting Halliwell is set out in the Report of the Committee. L. J., XII. 447. Had lived at Halliwell's house for two years. Often saw Hunt there, a tall, slender, black man, wearing a flaxen peruke, who sometimes went by the name of Dr. Allen. Three men were there with Halliwell last night about 6 o'clock, one of them being Hurst, a man of middle stature and no employment. [Read 26 Jan. See her evidence this day and 1 Feb.]

(e.) Same of John Buxton, taken before Lord Arlington, 11 and 12 Dec. Mrs. Price brought him acquainted with Hunt, Holloway, Ayloffe, &c. and always knew where to find Hunt when he lay close. Believes that Holmes, Mrs. Price's brother, is in the business, as he corresponds with the affected persons, and was a surgeon in the old army. Saw Ayloffe in Gray's Inn, and believes Hunt, Holloway, &c. are there also. These three are Fifth Monarchy men and desperate. Ayloffe writes his name Allen, Eylett, and Ayloffe. Believes Hunt has a father, a desperate man, and that Mrs. Price has confessed to know him. [Buxton had a warrant from Ld. Arlington to apprehend Hunt. See Min. 20 Jan. for his evidence before the Committee.]

(e.) Same of Elizabeth Price, taken before Lord Arlington, 11 Dec. Has known Hunt two or three years; last saw him in the Marshalsea. Has not seen or heard of Aylett since the assault. Is sister of Holmes, an apothecary, who took Hunt as his apprentice. Explains difference in previous evidence. Had lived with Buxton. Mentions a young gentlewoman to whom Hunt was a servant. Knows Holloway; his address is in Petticoat Lane, at the Frying Pan. [See Min. 23 Jan.]

(e.) Same of Samuel Holmes, taken before Lord Arlington, 12 Dec. Hunt lived with him six months and then set up at Romford to sell drugs. His mother kept an apothecary's shop in Shoreditch. Knows Dr. Aylett or Eyllott; but has not seen him or Hunt for six months. Judges both to be Presbyterians. Holloway is a Baptist, and was a cornet in the late armies. Has not been at his house for two years. Knows nothing of Hunt's father; has never heard of Blood. [See Min. 23 Jan.]

(e.) Same of Holmes' servant, taken 12 Dec. Hunt was at his master's house about six months ago. Witness was sent to Mrs. Price last Saturday to tell her that Holmes had been in trouble about this business. Hunt was very poor in clothes while he lived with Holmes, but afterwards very fine. His master lay abroad on Saturday night; he fetched him by his wife's orders from one Sharpe's, in Moorfields.

(e.) Same of Mrs. Holmes, taken before Lord Arlington, 13 Dec. Explains her husband's absenting himself; he "came in" afterwards at her advice. Has not seen Hunt since his trial at Guildford.

(e.) Same of Thomas Weyer, taken before Lord Arlington, 13 Dec. Was once a tailor, but now keeps two grocery shops. First knew Hunt at Romford, where witness went to find employment, and placed himself with Ayloffe, uncle to Hunt. These two discharged him. Last saw Hunt in Southwark, about ten weeks ago. Hunt used to be sometimes at Holloway's, and there he first saw Ayloffe.

(e¹⁰.) Same of William Gant, taken before Lord Arlington, 15 Dec. Lives at Wapping. Last saw Hunt six months ago in prison; was formerly bail for him when his horse was seized.

(e¹¹.) Same of Mrs. Price and William Mumford, taken at Whitehall, 9 Dec. Mrs. Price has not seen Hunt since the Guildford trial. Knows nothing of Buxton; has not seen him of late. Mumford, a brewer, was drawn into being security for Hunt. [See Min. 20 Jan.]

(e¹².) Same of Katherine Halliwell, taken before Lord Arlington, 10 Dec. Sent a cloak to her husband by one Mrs. Perryn. Refuses to say where Mrs. Perryn dwells. [See Min. 23 Jan. and 6 Feb.]

(e¹³.) Same of Bernaby Bloxton, tailor, living at Winchester House, Southwark, taken 10 Dec. Dr. Alec lodged at his house, and asked him to be surety for Hunt. He refused, but got Mumford to be surety. Has not seen Dr. Alec for a fortnight. Supposes he lives at Romford and professes physic.

(e¹⁴.) Same of Mathew Pretty and John Lee, taken before Lord Arlington, 17 Dec. Pretty knows not Hurst. Mr. Cowling has in writing all that he can declare. Lee knows not Dr. Alec. One Cloberry lodged with him a month since, who was a merchant and at Tangiers with Lord Howard. Cloberry is pretty tall, near 50; he lives now at Romford.

(f.) Summary of previous depositions relating to Hurst. [Prepared by a Sub-Committee. Min. 16 Jan.]

(f¹.) Answer of Isaac Lawrence to an inquiry if Lady Lawrence at Chelsea knew Hurst now in custody, and what account she could give of him. States that Hurst dined yesterday with Lady Lawrence. Witness has known him 14 or 15 years, and knows no evil of him. (Undated.)

(g.) Summary of previous depositions relating to Hunt, prepared by Sub-Committee, together with evidence of Jonathan Davies, schoolmaster at Mortlake, with whom Hunt's mother lived. See L. J., XII. 447, and Min. 19 Jan.

(g¹.) Letter of Judge Morton to the Duke of Ormond, dated 31 Dec. Has taken care, since His Grace's command, to inquire after Hunt and his bail, wherof he encloses an account. Has sent after Blood and Moore, who were outlawed in Ireland; hears they are in or about London. [See Min. 18 and 20 Jan.]

(g².) Copy of Warrant of Justices of the Peace, dated 12 August 1670, discharging Hunt on bail. Some notes of Judge Morton's are underwritten, including a copy of part of the next paper. [Enclosed in preceding.]

(g⁴.) Receipt of Thos. Hunt, dated 17 Oct. 1670, for a sword, belt, and pistol from the custody of Thos. Drayton. Witnessed by Edmund Hunt. [See Min. 18 Jan.]

(g⁵.) Letter from John Buxton to Thos. Hunt. Complains of not hearing from Hunt where he is. Tells him he may have his things if he sends his brother for them. (Undated.)

(g⁶.) Letter from [Thomas] A[llen] to Mrs. Mary Hunt, dated Nov. 17 1670, and addressed to Mr. Dayves' house, at Moreclack [Mortlake] as follows:—"I would have Thomas to come unto mee to my lodging on Fryday morning; let him bring his cloake with him, we thinke about the begining of ye weeke if God give an opportunity to signe the agreement, which is all at present from Beneath, in another hand, is written—

" John Anderson, Apothecary, neare the Plow in Byshoppstreet. T. H. lodges there."

(h.) Summary of previous depositions relating to Halliwell. Prepared by Sub-Committee. [See Min. 16 Jan.]

(h¹.) Letter from [Thomas] A[llen] to Mr. Holloway. Complains of not having heard concerning a certain coat and hose. Wishes to meet him. (Undated.)

(h².) Letter from same to same. Prays Holloway to lend him with his coat, his pistols and sword, and hopes he may see a happy return of them. Asks to see him to-morrow. (Undated.)

(h³.) Letter from Rich. Hammond to his esteemed and loving friend Richard Halliwell, at his house in Frying Pan Alley, in Petticoat Lane, dated Bocking, 12th Oct. 1670. He asks Halliwell to send him some tobacco, which must be good that his credit be not stained. Begs him to send him any news, together with a pipe for his own taking; desires the Lord to keep him faithful in this evil day, and to preserve him from the hands of beast of prey.

(h⁴.) Paper endorsed "Fifth Monarchy. Halliwell's Letter to the Church." Halliwell, who signs the paper, rebukes the "brethren" for their coldness, and for obeying the "filthy proclamation forbidding the churches to meet together." Speaks of his having been to Flanders and Virinea [Virginia?]. Laments the apostasy of the churches after "those Jacob-like covenants" when "the cause of the Lord was stated at Newmarket, Tripploe [Trepow] Heath, and more clearly at Musselburgh," as also "that serious engagement for the government of this nation without single person or House of Lords." The churches have waxed fat and kicked, transgressing the Covenant, and with Cromwell have become "persecutors of the faithful, consenting to the persecution of their brethren at Abingdon, Major-Gen Harrison, and Cornet Day." They neglect their assembling together in the midst of the week. Reproaches them for praying for the "beast, the persecutor of the saints." He is constrained to withdraw from the church till her sins are repented of. [For the allusions to Abingdon and Cornet Day, see Thurolo's State Papers, ed. Birch VII. pp. 5, 18, and 184, &c., and Lndlow's Memoirs, II. p. 605. This paper is endorsed as presented by Sir Robert Vyner 16 Jan. 1670, and was found by him in a coat pocket with other papers (no doubt the three preceding, and probably also the next) at Halliwell's house. The Committee reported that it was "full of traitorous matter and shows him to be a dangerous person." See L. J., XII. 447.]

(h⁵.) Letter, with no signature, addressed "Deare Sister." Warns her against these apostatizing times or last days, as they are truly called, when people are apt to be lulled to sleep by Satan and grow secure in a Laodicean temper. The whole letter is to the like effect, being mainly composed of texts, and concluding with various scriptural injunctions for the conduct of life.

(h⁶.) Letter from Rich^d Halliwell "to his friend Howell, a Weaver, in Half Moon Alley." Understands he was the constable who searched his house with the Lord Mayor. Requests him therefore to deliver the enclosed letter to the Lord Mayor, to vindicate the writer's character. Assures him there is nothing unbecoming in its contents. Dated 27 Oct. 1670.

(h⁷.) Letter from Rich^d Halliwell to the Lord Mayor (enclosed in preceding). Wishes to undeceive his Lordship as to his being an actor in the prodigious attempt against the Duke of Ormond. He was only concerned with Hunt in trade. The letter desiring a case of pistols was found in an old coat of his, not worn since last spring; and the pistols were for an adventure at sea. The cloak belonged to a young boy, and was accidentally left at his house. He can prove by several witnesses that he was at home all the day of the assault. Complains of his wife and young child being taken prisoners without legal process, and terrified with hard usage and want of food. It was to avoid such severity that he absented himself, being also under prejudice in respect of his religious principles, and of his former being in arms, notwithstanding the Act of Indemnity. Will readily surrender if he is granted a trial, but not otherwise. Beseeches his Lordship to prevent his inevitable ruin. Dated 27 Oct. 1670. [For the letter here referred to, see above (h²).]

(h³) Depositions of William Mosely and his daughter Honour Mosely, of Blue Anchor Alley, Bunhill, respecting delivery of Halliwell's letter to Howell (h²). [This and the above two papers were presented by the Sword Bearer to the Committee on the 16th Jan. See Minutes 16 and 20 Jan.]

(h³) Petition of Katherine Hallywell, wife of Richard Hallywell, Tobacco Cutter. Her husband being under suspicion of the late attempt against the Duke of Ormond, she was apprehended and examined above six weeks since by the Lord Mayor, in order to the discovery of the horrid attempt, whereof she praiseth God she is altogether innocent, and hopeth her husband is so also, though he absents himself, for what reason she is utterly ignorant. After her examination she was committed to a messenger's custody, and none of her few friends are suffered to come to her. And not long since she was examined before their Lordships, and it seems did not demean herself as she ought to have done, for which she craves their Lordships' pardon. She prays their Lordships to call her once more to be examined, and though she cannot discover anything of the said wicked attempt, yet what she knows concerning her husband's flight she will freely discover, and hopes that their Lordships will give some order for her enlargement. [Endorsed, Presented by James Soame's wife, Jan. 26, 1670. The prayer of the petition is read that day, nothing done with it.] The misconduct referred to was that she refused to give the address of Mrs. Perry, who took a coat from her to her husband. See Min. 23 and 26 Jan.

(h³) Petition of same. She was examined about seven weeks since before the Lord Mayor. The rest of the petition is identical with the preceding. [Endorsed, Presented, and read 1 Feb. 1670-1. [Mrs. Halliwell attends before the Committee on the 3rd, and gives Mrs. Perry's address, but says she delivered the cloak to her husband herself. She was released next day. See Min.]

(i) Summary of previous depositions relating to Allen. Prepared by Sub-Committee.

(i¹) Paper giving address of Michael Beresford, a witness. [See Min. 18 and 31 Jan.]

(k) Draft report of the Sub-Committee, stating the material things taken notice of against Hunt, Halliwell, and Allen. It is the groundwork of the Committee's Report to the House. [See Min. 20 Jan.]

(l) Examination of Francis Johnson, a pretended Minister, living in Gray's Inn Lane. 19 Dec. 1670. Was a Fellow of All Souls, Oxford. Now lets out lodgings. More has lodged with him three years, but stayed out on the night of the 7th Dec. Sir Thos. Prestwich, now a lodger with him, knows More, who is the son of Sir W^m More in Scotland. Noted, Sir Thos. Prestwich, a very honest gentleman, has charged himself to find out this More. The endorsement states that More had once the pistol (Hunt's). [See Min. 16 Jan.]

(m) Information of John Wybourne and George Baker respecting John Washwhite, together with Washwhite's examination. Taken before Lord Arlington 20 Jan. 1670-1. They accuse Washwhite of having said the Duke of Ormond would not die in his bed. Washwhite denies this. He had had a quarrel with Wybourne about a periwig. [Read 23rd Jan. See also Min. 24 Jan.]

(m¹) Petition of John Washwhite. He has been apprehended for speaking suspicious words against the Duke of Ormond, of which he is absolutely guiltless; is kept close prisoner in the Gatehouse, his wife not being admitted to bring him sustenance. His accusers are associate with one whom petitioner apprehended and caused to be brought before Judge Morton, and try to keep him in prison to hinder his serving His Majesty. Prays to be allowed to make his defence before their Lordships, that he may not be detained in prison and his wife and family perish. [Undated.]

(m²) Petition of same. Their Lordships were pleased to say that he should have liberty to speak with anyone whilst in gaol, and be put into some employ to find out Hurst and other persons concerned in the attempt; but his wife is not admitted to bring him victuals, and Lady Broughton has, for want of money, taken away his cloak and confines him to lie on the boards. Prays for discharge to preserve him and his family from perishing, promising to use his utmost endeavours to find out the said persons. [Undated.]

(n¹) Information of Robert Ellery, of Little Drury Lane, Carpenter, taken before Sir W^m Morton, 3 Feb. 1670-1. Relates abusive words spoken by Dixey against the Duke of Ormond. [See Min. 6 and 10 Feb.]

(n²) Same of Thomas Fletcher, of Knockfergus, in the parish of Whitechapel, Middlesex, Bricklayer, taken before Sir W^m Morton, 3 Feb. To same effect as preceding. [See Min. 6 and 10 Feb.]

(n³) Examination of Thomas Dixey (named in the information John Dixey), taken before Sir W^m Morton 6 Feb. Denies having spoken the words alleged against him. [See Min. 8 and 10 Feb.]

(n⁴) Letter from Judge Morton to Mr. James Clarke, Steward of the Duke of Ormond, for presentation to the Duke. The letter is dated 6 Feb., 8 at night. The judge encloses the above copy of the examination of Thomas Dixey, whom he has committed without bail. He desires to learn his Grace's pleasure, whether he would have Dixey before the Lords Committee on the following day, and whether he should be kept in prison or let on bail. [See Carte's Ormonde, II. 420 for Mr. Clarke. See also Min. 8 Feb.]

(o) Paper endorsed. An information given to the Lord Arlington concerning the persons that assaulted the Duke of Ormond. Read at the Committee 1 Feb. 1670-1. It runs as follows:—"Jones, who wrote 'Mene Tekel,' * Blood, called Allen, Allec, &c.; Young Blood, his son, called Hunt, under which name (Hunt) he was indicted last year; Halliwell, Moore, Simons. He conceives them all to be desperate men, who shelter themselves under the notion of Fifth Monarchy men [Compare (e¹).] Offers to consideration whether the exposing their names thus by an Act of Parliament will not make them hide themselves with more care, as they do now in the country. Says further that those congregations of Nonconformists which they have formerly frequented abhor this fact, and would be glad to bring them to punishment if it were in their power. [See Minutes 16 Jan.]

353. Jan. 17. Stapilton v. Heron.—Petition of John Stapilton, Esq., son and heir of Sir Philip Stapilton, K^t, deceased. Petitioner inherited, when an infant, the site of the priory of Warton in Yorkshire, which had been purchased by his father, subject to the reservation of a yearly fee-farm rent to the King. Sir Philip during his lifetime obtained an order from the Court of Exchequer, directing the several owners of the lands, &c. purchased from the site of the priory to pay their apportionments, as made by a former decree of the Court in the reign of King James. Petitioner, after his father's death, being an infant and ignorant of the said apportionments, was forced to pay the whole fee-farm rent himself. On having notice later of the apportionments, he exhibited a bill against John Heron, to whom a conveyance had been made of a messuage in Beverley, calling upon him to pay his portion of the fee-farm rent. But his bill being dismissed, and the dismissal signed and enrolled, petitioner is prohibited from the benefit of the former decree, and barred from relief upon the apportionment. He appeals to their Lordships against this dismissal, and prays that proceedings thereon may be stayed meanwhile. See L. J., XII. 468, 474, 483, and Pet. Book 21 Feb.

Annexed:—

354. Jan. 17. Petition of John, Lord Lovelace, complaining of a breach of privilege, by the driving away of his cattle at the instance of one Higden for debt due by one of his Lordship's servants. Prays that the offenders may be summoned. L. J., XII. 407. Almost in extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 31 Jan. Petition of Richard Clements. Petitioner states that he had attached the goods of Lord Lovelace, not thinking they were his, but belonging to another, one Mr. Batts, whom the attachment was against. Prays their Lordships to order his release, being very sorry for his transgression, and his Lordship having already been pleased to remit and acquit him. L. J., XII. 417.

355. Jan. 20. Maiming and wounding Bill.—Minutes of Sub-Committee on the Bill to prevent malicious maiming and wounding. These minutes contain some of the amendments which the Committee afterwards reported to the House. (See annex. (a.)) Among them are two clauses, prepared by Lord Chief Justice Vaughan: the first of these, with later alterations, being embodied in sect. vii. of the Act, and the second, for the repeal of 5 Henry IV., being subsequently abandoned by the Lords, in deference to the Commons.

Annexed:—

(a.) Draft of Lords Amendments in Committee of the whole House. L. J., XII. 412 See MS. Min. 21 Jan.

(b.), (c.) Drafts of same, including further amendments on report. Two copies. L. J. ibid.

(c.) Rough draft of second amendment.

[The above amendments, as sent to the Commons, were eight in number. All but the sixth are set out in extenso in L. J., XII. 414. The sixth amendment proposed to make sect. vii. of the Act read as follows:—

Be it further enacted, &c., that if any person or persons from and after the four and twentieth day of June, which shall be in the year of our Lord God one thousand six hundred seventy and one, on purpose and of malice forethought and by lying in wait, and not by chance medley, affray, or misfortune, shall unlawfully cut out, or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, or cut off or disable any limb, member, or joint of any subject of His Majesty, with intention in so doing to maim or disfigure in that special manner such His Majesty's subject, &c.]

(e.) Draft of Commons Amendments to Lords Amendments. L. J., XII. 414 in extenso.

(f.) Rough draft of Lords Amendments to preceding. L. J., XII. 416-8. (The Lords Amendments in this paper were made on consideration of the report of the first conference with the House of Commons.)

(g.) Fair copy of same. [On the 1st Feb. a debate arose in the House as to whether the words proposed by the Lords, whereby twenty-five days after the recording of the royal assent on the Journals was made the date for the accused to render themselves, was a sufficient specification as a matter of record. The Lord Keeper was called upon for his opinion, and after stating that this was a private Act, which must be exemplified by certiorari, and that the Journal of the House would not be exemplified in Westminster Hall, he owned he could not decide the point, which was moved to be referred to the Judges. A definite day, the 10th of March, was finally adopted as a compromise. The question also was raised whether the House could rescind a previous vote by which they resolved to "adhere" to their amendments.]

(h.) 4. Feb. Rough draft of Lords reasons for insisting on certain of their amendments. L. J., XII. 419. In extenso.

(i.) Fair copy of preceding.

(k.) Report of Conference, giving Commons amendments to Lords amendments in (f.) L. J., XII. 422. In extenso.

(l.) Rough draft of Lords amendments to Commons amendments in preceding paper. L. J., XII. 423.

(m.) Fair copy of same.

(n.) Report of Free Conference, giving Commons amendments to Lords amendments in preceding paper. L. J., XII. 427. In extenso. [These final amendments of the Commons were agreed to on the 11th February, and concluded the controversy between the two Houses on the Bill.]

356. Jan. 23. Duke of York's Privilege.—Affidavit of William Foakes, of Brightlingsea, Essex, concerning the Duke of York's oyster layings. L. J., XII. 411. Almost in extenso.

Annexed:—

(a.) 23 Jan. Paper giving the names of the four persons ordered to be attached this day. See L. J., ut supra.

357. Jan. 23. Burrell v. Ellis.—Petition and appeal of Rebecca Burrell, widow of Redmaine Burrell, Esquire. Her husband conveyed as jointure to her, on her marriage, the reversion of an annuity or rent-charge issuing out of certain manors, after the death of one Lidin Ward, such annuity to be for her use during life, and the remainder to her children in tail. Her husband, without her consent, sold this rent-charge for a consideration of 2,400*l.* to Sergeant Ellis, who obtained with it all deeds and papers connected therewith. After her husband's death, petitioner, upon the tenants refusing to pay her the rent-charge, distrained on the manor, but on a replevin brought by them, she was unable to avow at common law, for want of the original deeds. She therefore preferred a bill in Chancery for the delivery of the deeds against Ellis, who refused to answer her bill, and put in a plea that he had purchased the rent-charge for a valuable consideration, and without any notice of any incumbrances thereon, and that he was lawful possessor of the deed in question. The court having allowed the plea and dismissed her bill, she prays their Lordships to compel Ellis to deliver up the said deed and enable her to recover her rent-charge. L. J., XII. 411.

Annexed:—

(a.), (b.), (c.) Other copies of same, apparently drafts, and differing only in point of form.

(d.) Indenture executed 11 Jan. 1649-50, by Redmaine Burrell, settling a rent-charge on his wife at her marriage.

(e.) Appellant's bill of complaint in Chancery. Dated April 1667.

(f.) Respondent's plea to bill. Dated 4 May 1667.

(g.) Order and direction of the Court of Chancery, allowing plea. Dated 14 Nov. 1667.

(h.) Printed case of appellant before the House of Lords.

(i.) (k.) Rough drafts of same; two copies. The second is endorsed with a note of the deeds of Mrs. Burrell in Sergeant Ellis's hands.

(l.) 28 Jan. Answer of William Ellys, Sergeant-at-Law, to the said petition and appeal, stating that he had purchased the reversion of the rent-charge in dispute for a valuable consideration, viz., 2,400*l.*, which was its full value, as it was only a reversion. He had had no notice of any incumbrances thereon. Prays to be dismissed, without being ordered to deliver up his title deeds, as such a precedent would unsettle many hundreds of estates of purchasers. L. J., XII. 416.

(m.) Printed case of respondent, as also an answer to some of appellant's objection to his plea.

(n.), (o.) Draft of appellant's reply to answer of respondent. Two copies.

(p.) Brief of counsel for appellant.

(q.) Rough draft of same.

(r.) 16 Feb. Petition of appellant for a hearing. She has had, according to their Lordships' order, a copy of the respondent's answer, and she prays their Lordships to assign her a short day to be heard by her counsel at the bar. L. J., XII. 431, 453.

(s.) Paper, evidently a cover of some of above papers, marked "These papers belong to Mrs. Burrell," and dated 1654.

358. Jan. 24. Wool Bill.—Engrossment of an Act for preventing of frauds in exporting wool, woolfells, mortlings, shortlings, woolflock, or any yarn made of wool, contrary to former Acts made in that behalf. Parchment Collection. L. J., XII. 412. See also 238.

359. Jan. 27. Petition of Dame Elizabeth Harby, one of the Privy Chamber to Her Majesty; complains of arrest upon pretence to search for goods that had not paid His Majesty's customs. Prays their Lordships to grant her a writ of habeas corpus, to bring her from the Fleet prison to the bar of the House. L. J., XII. 415.

360. Jan. 31. Stanton v. Holgate.—Petition of Penelope Stanton, widow, the administratrix de bonis non of Philip Cage, Esq., deceased, the administrator of Dame Anne Wade, deceased, grandmother of the petitioner. Complains of breach of trust on the part of defendant, in connection with a mortgage on certain property in Belsize and St. John's Wood, which he had lent money to redeem, but he had retained more of the rents and profits of the estate than was necessary, under the trust, to repay him. Prays to be relieved against the dismission of her Bill in the Court of Exchequer.

Annexed:—

(a.) 14 Feb. Plea of John Holgate, defendant. The late Philip Cage having exhibited a Bill against defendant in the Court of Exchequer, an account was directed, but before it was perfected Cage died. On his widow reviving the suit against defendant the cause was further heard, and it appeared that upon the balance of the said account the sum of 335*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* was due to him, which the petitioner was unable to pay. Whereupon both parties were discharged, by consent, from all demands upon each other, and an order was drawn up to that effect. The petitioner therefore is barred by her own free consent from any further demands.

(b.) 22 March. Report from Lords Committees on Petitions (endorsed, The Earl of Dorset's paper). The plaintiff alleges that the order of dismission, pretended by consent of both parties, was only so in part, and not in the whole, and calls counsel as a witness to swear that it was consented to no further than the payment of a particular sum mentioned. The defendant, on the other hand, refers to the fact that the order itself is signed by three Barons, then in court, and attested by the attorneys on both sides to be by consent, which he considers sufficient evidence thereof. Their Lordships conceive that inasmuch as the decree signed by the said three Barons was a final judgment, and fully excluding all parties from any review or rehearing, it is their duty to present this case as fitter for their Lordships' determination or directions than their own. [See Pet. Book, 14 March. The House after hearing counsel on the 26th, affirmed defendant's plea and dismissed the appeal. L. J., XII. 467, 471, and MS. minutes.]

361. Jan. 31. Turton v. White.—Petition and appeal of Robert Turton, William Roper, and Richard Greves. The petitioners Turton and Roper were purchasers of certain lands belonging to Greves, but alleged by Samuel White, the respondent, to have been mortgaged to him. They had purchased with a covenant that the lands were free from incumbrances, when after several years quiet possession these incumbrances came to light. Thereupon, to save the covenants, and in consideration of a large sum, Greves conveyed the lands in question to the other petitioners, but intrusted them with a part of the purchase money to pay precedent debts and discharge the incumbrances. White and one Thomas Hunt, who is alleged but no way proved to be White's trustee, disturbed the petitioners by subsequent incumbrances. The latter exhibited a cross bill, and after a hearing in Chancery, the petitioners were decreed to account before a master, who made a report ex parte, ordering the petitioners to pay White 369*l.* 7*s.*, or else confirm White's and Hunt's estate in the lands in question, which report was confirmed by a decree, and that decree was afterwards confirmed by the Lord Keeper. The petitioners pray for its reversal, and that White and Hunt may be ordered to answer, and proceedings meanwhile stayed. Pet. Book of date.

Annexed:—

(a.) Case of the appellants.

(b.) 21 Feb. Answer of Samuel White and Thomas Hunt. It was proved in the court below that not a penny of the pretended consideration for the conveyance by Greves to the petitioners was ever paid, so that the petitioners are mere trustees for Greves, and their conveyance fraudulent as to the respondents. Hunt had already declared himself ready to take back his purchase money and recovery if the money decreed were paid to White. Respondents pray that the petition may be dismissed as frivolous, with costs. Pet. Book of date.

(c.) 28 Feb. Order of the Lords Committees of Petitions that it be reported to the House as their opinion that the petition, being frivolous, should be dismissed. [See Pet. Book of date. This report was agreed to, 7 April. L., J. XII. 481.]

362. Feb. 1. Petition of the creditors of Philip, late Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. The late Earl, being indebted to several tradesmen in and about London to the value of 3,000*l.* and upwards, provided by his will for their payment out of his personal estate, and left as his executors the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Pawlett in trust to sell some of his goods for that purpose. His heir, the present Earl, detains the same and refuses either to buy them or permit them to be sold, and the executors are unable, through his privilege of peerage, to perform the trust in the will and satisfy the creditors. They pray their Lordships to interpose and find some expedient to prevail upon the Earl to remit the goods for sale, or if the Earl has any pretence of title thereunto, that he will waive his privilege and permit a legal determination thereof. L. J. XII. 418. [The petition was dismissed as contrary to privilege.]

362.* Feb. 3. Smith's Bill.—Commons message agreeing with Lords' amendments, with an amendment. L. J. XII. 418. 22 & 23 Car. II., c. 10, in list of private Acts, Svo.

Annexed:—

9 Dec. 1670. Lords' amendments.

363. Feb. 8. Countess of Northumberland's privilege.—Petition of John Harrison, bailiff to the Countess of Northumberland. Complains of having been arrested at the suit of one John Withby; a declaration has been delivered to him and a plea required from him whereby to try the cause at the next assizes. Prays for relief. See L. J., XII. 423, 435.

Annexed:—

(a.) Paper containing names and addresses of the three persons ordered to appear at the bar. L. J. ut supra.

364. Feb. 8. Edmonds v. the King.—Writ of error &c. brought in this day. L. J., XII. 423, 436.

365. Feb. 9. Yelverton's Bill.—Amended draft of an Act for provision to be made for Mr. Nevill Yelverton, born after the death of his father, Sir Henry Yelverton. Sir Henry Yelverton died suddenly, leaving his widow, Susanna, Lady Grey of Ruthyn, enceinte, and with no provision for any child that might be born. This Bill was brought in to make a provision of 2,000*l.* for Nevill Yelverton, the posthumous son, on his coming of age. L. J., XII. 424. [Read 2^d and debated (ib. 426). Reported from Committee (ib. 455.), and finally laid aside after being committed in the Commons (C. J., IX. 222).]

Annexed:—

(a.) Amendments in Committee. 23 Feb. and 11 April. [Lord Mandeville is substituted for Lady Grey of Ruthyn, as suppliant for the Act.]

366. Feb. 10. Petition of Charles, Lord Mohn, Baron of Okehampton, son and heir of Warwick, Lord Mohn, deceased. Petitioner's father having died while petitioner was in his minority and beyond the seas, his mother, who was possessed of a jointure of about 1,000*l.* yearly, got into her hands all deeds, evidences, and writings properly belonging to petitioner as his heir, and, taking advantage of these, brought a writ of dower. Being deprived of these deeds, &c., the petitioner cannot make the said jointure to appear, whereby to defend himself against the writ of dower; so that, after many dutiful applications to his mother, and the mediation of friends not prevailing, he has been forced, very unwillingly, to exhibit two bills in Chancery against his mother. Owing to many delays, the bills being extended, he cannot proceed, and is unable to pay the great debts contracted by his father by his service and sufferings for his gracious Majesty and for his late royal father, or to recover the rents detained from him by his tenants, for want of the counterparts of the leases, and is in danger of losing part of his inheritance. He prays that this being a case between peers, and the very great extremity of the case on the petitioner's part considered, their Lordships will be pleased to hear and determine the same; and that petitioner's mother may appear to answer. [The MS. Minutes of this day state that this petition was debated, but nothing was done in it. No entry to this effect appears in the Journal. Compare L. J., XII. 17.]

367. Feb. 11. Reresby v. Farnesworth.—Petition of Sir John Reresby, Baronet. Petitioner's great grandfather, Sir Thomas Reresby, Knight, mortgaged the manor of Reresby, in the county of Derby, to Sir Samuel Trion for 200 years, in consideration of a loan of 800*l.*; and afterwards granted certain other property to Sir Francis Wortley and others, in trust to discharge the said debt and to raise 1,500*l.* a year for his two daughters, Bridgett and

Mary, of whom the former afterwards married one Isaac Scott and the latter one Steward. After Sir John's death, suits in Chancery were brought against his son, Sir George Reresby, by the executors of Sir Samuel Trion and the said Scott and Steward, to have the manor and lands sold for raising money for the debt to Sir Samuel Trion and provision for Bridgett and Mary; and it was decreed that so much as should be requisite for those purposes should be sold. Petitioner's father succeeded to the property soon afterwards, on the death of Sir George, and Scott and Steward, taking advantage of his infancy at the time, combined to make private gain out of the sale, and sold the property to the several tenants for only 3,000*l.*, whereas it was worth 15,000*l.* at the least, leaving the petitioner's father still liable to various payments which they should have defrayed out of the purchase money. Petitioner's father, Sir John Reresby, died without obtaining redress, being prevented by the unnatural war in this kingdom, during which he was sequestered for his loyalty to the King. Petitioner, after his father's death, having learned of the fraud on attaining his majority, brought a bill of complaint in Chancery against John Farnsworth and others, the tenants and owners of the premises fraudulently sold; but the Court allowed their plea and dismissed his bill. Petitioner submits that the dismissal is erroneous, but he cannot be relieved in the Court of Chancery by reason that the defendants refuse to sign and enrol the same, and yet make use of the cause to obstruct and hinder his farther suit in the said Court. He appeals to their Honours, being the highest and Supreme Court of Judicature of this kingdom, and prays that the decree may be reversed, and the persons mentioned in the petition ordered to answer. [The endorsement states that the petition was read in the House and dismissed upon report this day. L. J., XII. 427. See Pet. Book, 6 Dec. 1670 and 31 Jan., and Reresby's Memoirs, ed. 1875, p. 85.]

368. Feb. 14. Dickinson v. Dean and Chapter of York. —Petition and appeal of Thomas Dickinson, Esquire. Petitioner is possessed of the manors of Kirby Hall and Thorpe Underwood in Yorkshire, formerly belonging to the abbot and convent of the dissolved monastery of Fountains, which he inherited under the will of his father, Christopher Dickinson, and which was originally purchased from the Crown free of rents and charges. In 1660 the Dean and Chapter of York brought a bill in Chancery to recover from the petitioner a supposed rent of 48*l.*, chargeable on the said estate, but their bill was dismissed. They brought a second bill in 1664, but did not proceed with it. In 1667 they applied to the Lord Chancellor Clarendon, alleging that a decree in Chancery, dated 12 May, 15 Jacob. (1617), declared the said rent chargeable on the estate; but that the docket and enrolment of the decree, in the six clerks' office, were burnt by the great fire, that the defendants in that cause being now dead, they did not know against whom to revive the decree; and prayed leave to sign and enrol the same, and his lordship ordered accordingly. This decree, thus procured by surprise, is grounded on allegations which had been already dismissed, viz., that the rent claimed, though originally charged on the tithes of the rectory and glebe of Topleff, was always paid out of the manor till the dissolution; that, after that, when the manor and tithes were both in the Crown, the lands were charged, and that the purchasers had an allowance for rent, and that after the dissolution, all the possessions of the Abbot being vested in the Crown, there was a decree made in the Augmentation Court ordering the said rent of 48*l.* to be paid out of the said manor. The Dean and Chapter having signed the decree on the allegation that part of the said manor had descended to the petitioner as son and heir of Wm. Dickinson, one of the defendants to the alleged decree, a scire facias was awarded to the petitioner to show cause why he should not be bound thereby. Petitioner answered that he was not son and heir of the said Wm. Dickinson, but a purchaser from one Christopher Dickinson, in no way related to Wm. Dickinson, but the Lord Chancellor disallowed his plea and ordered the petitioner to be examined upon interrogatories. Petitioner thereupon further disputed his liability, contending that the rent, if payable at all, was payable out of the rectory; and that the decree of 15 James I. was grounded on a mis-information by the Dean and Chapter, and was not absolute but only to continue until better matter showed; and that, the execution thereof having been suspended for 50 years, petitioner ought not to be bound thereby. His examination, being first referred to one of the Masters of Chancery, came finally before Lord Keeper Bridgman, who ordered that petitioner should be bound by the said decree of the Court of Augmentations, and pay arrears. He appeals to their Lordships to reverse the said decree and subsequent orders, and meanwhile to stay all proceedings thereon. Endorsed, Dismissed upon report from Committee, 22 March 1670. L. J., XII. 467. See Pet. Book, 16 March.

Annexed:—

(a.) 7 March. Answer of the Dean and Chapter of York, showing how the fee-farm rent of 48*l.* payable for the tithes of Topleffe became chargeable on the manors of Thorpe Underwood, Kirby Hall, and Widdington, and had been paid out of those manors until 1637, when the Dean and Chapter were dispossessed of their property during the civil war. On the 23rd of Nov. 1669, the Lord Keeper declared that if the petitioner claimed the lands under a grant thereof by Philip and Mary to Sir John Gage, in which grant the lands were burdened with this rent, he was liable for it; but this declaration was made subject to the disclaimer of the petitioner that he claimed under that grant. The petitioner made no such disclaimer, and a decree was passed accordingly. Subsequently the petitioner's liability for rent and arrears was fixed at 1,136*l.* Petitioner ought to have brought a bill of review. Though the respondents' receivers have from time immemorial entered this rent as coming from the tithes of Topleffe, the entry is purely formal and they receive no rent for these tithes; and they cannot conceive how the petitioner saw the entry in the rental, unless improperly, while he was a Commissioner of Sequestrations at York during the civil war. They further state that the petitioner had had made over to him the lauds of Thorpe Ings in consideration of his paying this rent. The respondents therefore pray to be dismissed, with some exemplary reproof to the petitioner, and with costs. L. J., XII. 467.

368.* Feb. 15. E. Shrewsbury's Bill.—Commons' amendments. L. J. XII. 429. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 2, in list of private Acts, 8vo.

Annexed:—

(a.) Parchment copy of another amendment by the Commons.

369. Feb. 16. Sherley v. Hawles.—Petition of Thomas Sherley, Physician in Ordinary to His Majesty, and of Elizabeth his wife, executrix to the Lady Hyppesley. Respondent, who was solicitor to the late Lady Hyppesley, and receiver of her moneys, owed her 400*l.* at the time of her death, the right to which came to Elizabeth Sherley as her executrix; but respondent refused to pay unless an abate was made of 100*l.*, which he pretended he was bound to pay to one Mr. Stedman, on demand, on the lady's account. He obtained a trial on the issue whether the 100*l.* were part of the 400*l.*, and petitioner being ignorant in these affairs, and loth to be diverted from his profession, respondent got by surprise an order that the 100*l.* should be taken pro confesso, and had costs and use allowed him amounting to 300*l.*, though against an executrix, contrary to the custom of the Court. Afterwards respondent obtained a final decree, and imprisoned Sherley in the Fleet, he being a privileged person, till their Lordships were pleased to release him. Petitioners pray leave to appeal to their Lordships, and that the decree may be set aside. L. J., XII. 431.

Annexed:—

(a.) Answer of Thomas Hawles. He had given Stedman a note to repay the 100*l.* on demand, on the lady's promise to save him harmless against Stedman, whereupon he gave her a bond for debts amounting to 400*l.* Her executrix, though she renewed this promise, send respondent on this bond. She has been ordered to reimburse him the 100*l.* paid by him to Stedman, and brings this appeal merely for delay. Prays to be dismissed with costs. L. J., XII. 441.

370. Feb. 17. Petition of William, Earl of Pembroke. Complains that divers husbandmen named, of the parish of Alborne, Wilts, by the connivance and instigation of one Thomas Hawles, Esq., have taken possession of the warrens and lodges on his estate in the said parish, and take the profits thereof. Prays that the offenders may be summoned to answer at the bar. Endorsed, Read 17 Feb. 1670 and dismissed. See also 143. [From the M.S. Minutes, giving the proceedings at the bar, it appears that the Earl had ousted the Gilberts (who held the land for Hawles) for non-payment of rent, and put a man in possession, who was turned out in a few hours. No entry appears in the Journal.]

Annexed:—

(a.) Statement of the Earl's case. The offenders have destroyed his game, and made utter waste of his estate, the damage being more than 2,000*l*. If it should be objected that he hath not the present right of possession, it can be proved that he hath as well right to the possession as to the inheritance.

371. Feb. 17. Sir J. Colladon's Privilege.—Complaint and Petition of Sir John Colladon, Knight, ancient servant and physician in ordinary to His Majesty. Petitioner in 1668, at the importunity and for the debt of Doctor Poleman, became bound with him to one Edward Neltrop in the sum of 80*l*. for the payment of 40*l*. The bond being forfeited by the neglect of Poleman, who combined with Neltrop and one Mr. Cox to clap the whole debt on petitioner, the petitioner was sued and judgment entered against him at the suit of Neltrop, and execution was taken out. Petitioner was made to deposit 68*l*. in the hands of one of the sheriff's bailiffs, who refused him his liberty, although he showed him, under the hand of the Lord Chamberlain, that he was physician to His Majesty. All which being done during the sitting of Parliament and against the privileges of their Lordships' House anciently allowed to his Majesty's servants in ordinary, the petitioner prays that, according to many precedents of their Lordships' House in such cases, he may be relieved and the proceedings upon the rest made void and the money deposited restored, and that Neltrop, Cox, and one who appears as attorney for Neltrop, and delivered the execution to the sheriff, may be punished. L. J., XII. 431, and MS. Min. of 21 Feb.

Annexed:—

(a.) Statement of case on behalf of Neltrop and Cox. Sir John Colladon, upon a private agreement with Dr. Poleman, promised him large sums of money for some secrets in medicine and chemistry which he had imparted to him, and, pretending he had not the money at hand, desired Cox to borrow 40*l*. for Dr. Poleman, Sir John giving his bond for security. Cox procured the money, part whereof was borrowed of Neltrop, a merchant. Sir John, failing to pay, was then sued on his bond, and taken in execution, but discharged on repaying the loan. He pretended only to be the Queen Mother's servant, and, after her death, alleged that his privilege lasted two years longer. He never said he was His Majesty's physician in ordinary, neither was he even so reputed, nor is he mentioned as such in the "State of England." Had he been so, he might have sent to the Lord Chamberlain, who has cognizance of breaches of privilege against His Majesty's servants. Those who arrested him had strict orders to treat him with respect. Pray that the petition, if presented, may be referred to the Lord Chamberlain, or otherwise that the parties complained of may be heard before any order is made to send for them in custody.

372. Feb. 18. Lady Wortley v. Stareshmore.—Petition and appeal of Dame Frances Wortley, widow, late wife of Sir Francis Wortley, Bart., deceased, setting forth that one Edmund Stareshmore and his late father borrowed 2,000*l*. of petitioner and her late sister, and after paying back 100*l*. offered to redeem the mortgage with 300*l*. alleging that the Committees for compounding had directed him to pay 1,200*l*. into the Treasury and 300*l*. to Sir Francis Wortley in full discharge of the debt. 900*l*. of the 1,200*l*. was directed to be paid to Col. Sydenham and Col. Bingham, and the other 300*l*. to Dr. Staines (who was Commissary General under the usurpers), and alleged by Stareshmore to have been so paid. On the refusal of the Wortleys to be satisfied with the 300*l*. Stareshmore obtained a decree in Exchequer against them in 1664, against which petitioner appeals, on the grounds that the debt was 2,000*l*. and not 1,600*l*. as stated by the Committee of Advance; that no order of any Committee ordering the payment of the 1,200*l*. to Staines and the others was produced at the trial, no money was paid to Sydenham and Bingham, and there was collusion between the respondent Stareshmore and Staines; and that a bond of the petitioner's in the hands of Stareshmore, forming part of the debt, was good when given to Stareshmore, though now valueless, owing to his neglect in not suing upon it in time. The petitioner alleges error in fact in the decree, and can have no relief by a bill of review, but only by an appeal to the House of Lords; and she prays that the said Edmund Stareshmore may be ordered to answer. L. J., XII. 433.

Annexed:—

(a.) 25 Feb. Petition of Sir Robert Vyner, Knight and Baronet. The respondent, Edmund Stareshmore, has absolutely parted with his interest in the decree appealed from, his estate having been bought a year ago by the petitioner, and is not therefore concerned to make defence against the appeal. The papers, &c. necessary for the defence are very many, and not at present in petitioner's custody. He requires time for their perusal, and prays that he may be admitted before their Lordships to defend his right, and to have some reasonable time to make his defence. L. J., XII. 437. [See also 379 (a).]

(b.) 14 March. Answer of Edmond Stareshmore and Sir Robert Vyner, Bart., to Lady Wortley's petition.—The respondent Stareshmore had sold the mortgaged property to Vyner after the decree was made, and before the appeal was brought, and Vyner, who held, moreover, in right of his wife, a prior mortgage on the property, had bought it for full and valuable consideration, having spent nearly 4,000*l*. in freeing it from encumbrances. They maintain that the appellant ought to have proceeded by a bill of review, and pray to be dismissed with costs. L. J., XII. 461-474.

373. Feb. 21. Loyal Officers' Poor Widows.—Petition of divers commission officers' widows, who have long attended the Parliament Committees and persons authorised to give them relief, setting forth that they had suffered greatly through their husbands' services in the King's late wars, and that the Act 14 Car. II. c. 8. for the relief of loyal and indigent commission officers had not been carried into effect, and praying for relief. L. J., XII. 434. See Pet. Book, 23 Feb. and 14 March, when Mr. Heath, the petitioners' solicitor, was ordered to bring in a petition with the names of the treasurers complained of. See next paper.

Annexed:—

(a.) 16 March. Petition of the loyal officers' poor widows, complaining of the non-distribution of the money raised in pursuance of the Act 14 Car. II. c. 8. namely, 900*l*. a year in the City of London, in the hands of W^m Hickman and Samuel Mann; 600*l*. a year in Middlesex, in the hands of Sir Reginald Foster, Sir W^m Bateman, Sir W^m Bowles, and George Walsh, Esq.; and 700*l*. a year in Surrey, in the hands of Sir W^m Green, W^m Mason, and W^m Trapps (nothing having been raised in the City of Westminster); and praying that the above-named treasurers of the fund may be summoned to appear before the House and account for the money, and that the petitioners' great necessities may be speedily relieved. See Pet. Book.

(b.) Statement to the Lords Committees for Petitions of several of the complaints and grievances of the loyal indigent officers' widows, setting forth that in the Act of May 1662 provision had been made that some allowances should be paid them by the treasurers of the fund: that these allowances have been paid to women not entitled thereto, they having been pensioners at Ely House, or their husbands never having borne arms for the King; that the widows of private soldiers and field officers and others have shared alike, receiving not more than 40*l*. a year apiece for those in London, and since the first three payments of 40*l*. 20*l*., and 10*l*., many widows getting nothing at all; that Mr. Mann had been treasurer in London for six years, though the Act provides that there should be a new treasurer every year, and that yearly accounts should be rendered, which had not been done; that Elizabeth Fies declared, that when she asked Mann for money he had threatened her with Bridewell, and that the death of a great many of the widows, especially during the plague, ought to have increased the pensions of the remainder.

(c.) 21. March. Answer of Daniel Mann to the above petition (a.) before the Lords Committees for Petitions, stating that, as treasurer of the fund in the City of London, he had received, since 1665, the sum of 1,321*l*. 5*s*., and had paid to 160 persons selected by the Lord Mayor and Justices of the Peace, in sums of 52*l*. and 40*l*. per annum, the sum of 1,416*l*. 9*s*. 6*d*., the excess of 95*l*. 4*s*. 6*d*. having been advanced to him by the Chamber of London for that purpose upon the credit of the rate. Dated 20 March. Endorsed, Read this day. See Pet. Book.

(d.) 21 March. Answers of W^m Mason and Sir W^m Green to the said petition. Mason states that he was appointed treasurer to the fund for the County of Surrey by order of the Surrey Quarter Sessions in 1669, and had collected 347*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*, and distributed that sum as directed by the Surrey Justices of the Peace, and his account had been rendered and allowed. Sir W^m Green states that he is the treasurer for the current year, duly appointed; that he is to receive the like sum, and has paid out all the money he has received, and is to render his account at the next Easter Sessions. William Apps, called in the petition W^m Trapps, answers that he is only concerned in the matter as the deputy of the above-named persons, and has faithfully fulfilled his trust for the past two years. [This paper is signed by Apps.]

(c.) 21 March. Answer of George Walsh, Treasurer of the Hundreds of Ossulton, Ednuntton, and Gore, in the County of Middlesex, to the above petition before the Lords Committees for Petitions, stating that he is the treasurer to the fund for the said hundreds, duly appointed for the current year, and cannot therefore account for the year until the following Easter Sessions. The petitioners have misinformed their Lordships in other particulars also. For instance, they state that the County of Middlesex pays about 600*l.* per annum, whereas it pays only 431*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* They state that the City of Westminster pays nothing, whereas it pays 36*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Petitioners could only be entitled to relief out of the surplus, if any, of the fund after certain pensions have been paid to such as had faithfully served His Majesty; there was no such surplus in his hands, and, moreover, some of the petitioners have several times been told by the Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions that they were not within the relief of the Act as the case stands. As for his having made improper payments, he can only pay by direction of two Justices of the Peace under their hands.

(f.) 21 March. Proposal of the widows, in order to the settlement upon the said Act of May 1662, proposing that only those officers' widows should be entitled to relief who had duly obtained certificates in the former inspections before the Committee for Indigent Officers in the Star Chamber, and the inspections made in the City, in pursuance of the Act, and likewise the persons who shared with the petitioners in the collection of both Houses of Parliament in 1666; and that no persons who were pensioners at Ely House, or had served the late usurped powers, or revolted from the King, should be entitled to such relief. That persons who, as officers' widows, are already receiving relief from other sources be barred. That such certificates may be registered, and that the certificates produced by Mr. Heath, attending this business, of the services of the petitioners' late husbands, may be received by the Committee. That an explanatory Act may be passed to clear up doubtful points, and that returns of warrants issued, and sums collected and paid since May 1660, may be ordered; and that the surplus funds in one county may go to the relief of starving widows in another. See Pet. Book.

(g.) 5 April, 1671. Copy of foregoing paper, with a marginal note to the effect that Lord Arlington had paid 1,200*l.* to some widows, and others had nothing; and another, naming "Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Essex, Kent, &c." opposite the expression "the Associated Counties Treasury," occurring in the document. Endorsed, Mr. Heath attends. [The Committee for Petitions reported to the House this day on the above matter (L. J., XII. 478), and the report was referred to the Committee on the Bill for taking the account of money given to loyal indigent officers, which had been read 2^d and committed on the 3rd April. L. J., XII. 474, 476. The Bill was reported with amendments and recommitted on the 15th April (ib. 490), and again reported with amendments, and then read 3^d and passed on the 18th (ib. 500). Royal assent 22 April. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 21.]

(h.) First draft of some of the amendments made in Committee to the Bill for taking the accounts of money given to the loyal indigent officers. [The first three amendments were made after the first commitment, and the last on 17 April, after recommitment. See Com. Book.]

(i.) Paper of amendments to the Bill. Comprises the contents of preceding paper, with the rest of the amendments made on 17 April. See Com. Book.

(k.) Proviso (marked A.) to the Bill, being § 12 of the Act. See Com. Book, 17 April. [On this day the Committee decided, by 3 votes to 2, that Mr. Birch should not continue treasurer.]

374. Feb. 21. Growth of Popery.—Petition of both Houses to the King, declaring the causes of the growth of Popery, and suggesting remedies. L. J., XII. 451. In extenso. C. J., IX. 205. [This petition, which originated with a Committee of the Commons, appointed on the 6th Feb. to consider the subject, and prepare a Bill, was finally agreed to by the Lords without alteration (10 March), after having been referred to a Committee, and three conferences having been held to determine matters of fact. See C. J., IX. 135-205, and L. J., XII. 434-449. With regard to Plunkett, Roman Catholic Primate of Ireland, and Peter Talbot, Archbishop of Dublin, against whom information was given in the petition, papers were produced by Lord Anglesey in the House, as also an order of council (9 Nov. 1670), "showing His Majesty's care in this particular." MS. Minutes, 2 March. The King's proclamation, made in answer to this petition (Annex (e.) below) was considered by the Lords Committee to whom the Popery Bill, brought from the Commons 13 March, was referred. The Judges produced a list of statutes relating to recusants, and Chief Justice Vaughan gave evidence as to the power of the King to remit penalties after conviction. A test was proposed in Committee, to be taken by those papists in whose favour the King (L. J., XII. 454) drew a distinction; and a Sub-Committee was appointed to prepare it. Com. Book April 1, 4, 6, and 13. The Bill and further proceedings dropped with the session.]

Annexed:—

(b.) Extracts from Lords Journals of 10, 11, and 13 March, stating the proceedings as to presenting the said petition to the King, and His Majesty's answer thereto. L. J., XII. 452. In extenso.

(c.) 23 March. Printed proclamation by the King, prayed for in the petition and promised in the King's answer. See Parl. Hist., IV. 479.

375. Feb. 25. Petition of George, Lord Enre; prays that further proceedings upon a Chancery bill against him may be prohibited during the present session of Parliament. L. J., XII. 437.

376. Feb. 27. L. Arundell's Privilege.—Case of Lord Arundell of Trerice. About nine years ago he obtained from the King a lease, for a yearly rent of 45*l.*, of the water and pool of Sutton and the soil thereof, lying in Plymouth, and forming parcel of the Duchy of Cornwall. The Mayor and Commonalty of Plymouth, who had rented it from His Majesty's predecessors till the last unhappy war, purchased the inheritance of it from the usurped powers, and leased part of it to one Olyver Ceely, claiming it as their own by virtue of long possession. Thereupon the Attorney-General brought an information in the Court of Exchequer against them and the said Ceely, and an issue was directed to be tried by a jury of persons of quality of Devonshire, whether the soil of the said pool, within the high-water and low-water mark, was the King's inheritance. Their verdict being for the King, the Court decreed accordingly; notwithstanding which, Ceely retained possession of the cellars and yard thereon until petitioner got a verdict upon an action for trespass and ejectment, and obtained a writ of possession. Petitioner has since let the cellars and yard to one Samuel Hayne, merchant, who built a dwelling-house there, having taken the estate for a term of years, with a deed covenanting for quiet possession; but Ceely has sent a declaration of ejectment to Hayne, through Henry Watts, an attorney. Petitioner therefore offers this case to their Lordships, whether this commencing a suit, sitting the Parliament, for trial of his Lordship's title, be not a breach of privilege; and he has sent his tenant Hayne to London to make oath against Ceely and Watts. L. J., XII. 438. [Watts was ordered this day to appear, but nothing further seems to have been done in the matter.]

377. Feb. 28. Draft certificate of the naturalization of Mark le Pla and John de Beauverne by Act 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 32. in List of Private Acts, Svo.

378. Feb. 28. Petition of Dame Theodosia Prettyman, wife of Sir John Prettyman, of Loddington, in the county of Leicester, Knight and Baronet. The petitioner in 1664, being then the wife of Sir John, was taken in execution at the suit of one John Marshall, an attorney of the Court of King's Bench, upon a judgment of 100*l.*, entered against her for a pretended debt to him, which she never owed him, and ought not to have been molested, being a femme covert to his knowledge. was kept prisoner in the Fleet till the fire, when she was discharged; but afterwards she was assaulted by the servant of the Warden of the Fleet, and again taken into custody upon the old execution, without any new process, as is directed by the late Act for indemnifying the Warden of the Fleet. She remained prisoner in the Fleet till removed to the King's Bench; and, since Marshall's death, his executors still detain her in custody, without suing the seire facias against her, as the law requires. She can obtain no relief either in King's Bench or Chancery, because her husband gives releases to all actions she brings both in law and equity. She prays their Lordships to consider her sad condition and injuries, and in compassion to release her from her illegal confinement. [This Petition was withdrawn by leave of the Committee for Petitions this day.]

379. Feb. 28. Subsidy Bill.—Draft of Lords' Amendments in Committee of the whole House, Feb. 22-27. MS. Min. L. J., XII. 438-9. [Reported this day; Bill brought from the Commons, 20 Feb. Royal assent, 6 March. 22 and 23 Car. II. c. 3.]

Annexed:—

(b.) Draft of provisos to the Bill. L. J. ut supra. Agreed to on report (L. J., ut supra) and sent to the Commons. Two of them, Nos. 1 and 3, were agreed to by the Commons. (C. J. IX. 210-11.) No. 2, touching distresses in Lords houses, was disagreed to, and not insisted on by the Lords. (L. J., XII. 441-2.) It runs thus—

"And further, that no dwelling-house of any Peere of this Realme where they or their Families doe ordinarily reside shall be broken open for the levying distresses for the non-payment of any of the sums to be collected by virtue of this Act, unless it be done in the presence of one or more of the Comiss^{rs}, to be authorized by his Ma^{ty} for the executing of this Act, any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding." MS. Min. of 25 and 27 Feb. [A note on the paper containing these provisos gives a minute of business for the 25th February 1670-1, being the further consideration of the bill in Committee, and Starsmore to answer Lady Wortley's petition. See 372 (a).]

(e.) Draft proviso concerning the draining taxes charged on the Adventure Lands in Bedford Level. [Offered 27 Feb. MS. Min.].

(f.) Draft proviso that deer parks should not be rated above their clear yearly value.

(g.) Another draft proviso to the same effect. [Negatived on 27th Feb. MS. Min.].

SUPPLEMENT.

Skinner v. East India Company.

Entries in the MS. Journal relating to this cause (expunged by order of the House, 22 Feb. 1669-70), supplemented by extracts from other MS. records of the House.

1666-7. Jan. 19. "The Lord Privy Seal acquainted "this House that His Majesty commanded him to tell "their Lordships' House that one Thomas Skinner, a "merchant, had presented a petition to His Majesty, "which His Majesty recommends to their Lordships "to do the petitioner justice, according to the merits "of his case. The petition to His Majesty was read, "complaining of great losses and damage sustained by "the East India Company in East India, upon which, "this House gave the said Thomas Skinner leave to "present his petition to this House concerning this "business."

Jan. 21. Petition of Skinner read. (See Calendar, 66 g.) The Governor and Company ordered to have a copy, and to bring in their answer by the 25th inst.

Jan. 25. The Company ordered peremptorily to answer to-morrow. [The Company put in a plea on the 26th, and a further plea on the 28th. See Calendar, 66 (h.) and (i).]

Jan. 26. Order for hearing the cause on the 29th inst., the petitioner to give timely notice to the Governor and Company.

Jan. 29. Order postponing hearing till 1 Feb.

[The MS. Minutes of 1 Feb. contain an order further postponing the hearing till the 5th inst., but no entry of it occurs in the MS. Journal.]

Feb. 5. Order postponing the hearing, appointed for this day, till the 7th inst.

[The MS. Minutes state that the cause being called on, counsel for the Company, who had not had notice, did not appear. No entry for the 7th occurs either in the MS. Journal or MS. Minutes. Parliament was prorogued on the 8th till the following October.]

Oct. 30. Petition of Skinner read; the Governor and Company ordered to answer on 6 Nov. [See Calendar, 66 (k).]

Nov. 7. Plea of Governor and Company read. [See Calendar, 66 (l).] Counsel ordered to be heard on both parts at the bar on the 28th inst. on the petition and plea.

Nov. 23. Order postponing hearing to 2nd December.

Dec. 2. Order of reference to all the Judges to "consider the petition of Skinner and report to the House "on Wednesday next whether the petitioner be relieved upon the matters therein mentioned in law or "equity, and if so, in what manner, upon the several "parts of the complaints of the said petition." [Counsel on both sides were heard this day, Mr. Solicitor, in support of the Company's plea of demurrer to jurisdiction, says the judicial power of every court is limited; the petition is no appeal from any other court; has no reference to the legislative power of this House; non est utendum imperio ubi legibus uti valet. Non curritur ad extraordinaria, nisi deficient ordinaria, 2 Ric. II., No. 18, a rule that Parliament relieves only where other courts cannot. 28 Ed. II. fol. 665, case of John a Birds, who on coming to Parliament was answered, Sue at law. 35 Ed. I. Lifford's petition against Bishop of Carlisle was answered, Sue in Chancery. 13 Ric. II. Complaint against Sir Rob. Knowles answered, Sue at law. Matters of Skinner's petition relieviable below by action à tort and conversion, by action of the case for damage, by action of assault or false imprisonment; Chancery will help him where the law will not. The disseisin of his island not relieviable by way of an assize, but he can get damages below. The Court of Constable and Marshal wont to relieve for wrongs done beyond seas. 13 Ric. II., that court restrained to faults of arms. Secondly, liberty of subject injured by the House taking cognizance of cases relieviable below; trials should be by jury. Thirdly, an appeal is denied by cases being brought here in the first instance. Fourthly, Skinner either has or has not relief below; if he has, let him seek it there; if he has no right or equity he should not be relieved here. E. Suffolk's case in 1642. Judgment, if given against respondents, could not be executed, they having privilege of Parliament.—Mr. Jones followed on the same side.—Mr. Aylyffe, for Skinner, says the matters are not relieviable at law, the principal one, on which the others depend, being his dispossession of the island. The Lords have relieved in cases relieviable below, 51 Ed. III. rot. 72, and where ordinary courts cannot or will not relieve. Otherwise this Court would only have power to rectify errors of other courts. 1 Hen. IV. rot. 82, the King and Lords declare that all judgments belong to the King and this House.—On debate whereof the House made the above order. MS. Minutes of date.]

Dec. 4. Report of the Judges, stating how far Skinner is relieviable by the ordinary courts of law. State Trials, VI. 719. In extenso.

Dec. 13. Order for hearing counsel at the bar on the 16th inst. upon the whole matter contained in the petition of Skinner against the East India Company, and Maurice Thompson and Sir Andrew Riccard. [The MS. Minutes add that this order was made on reading the report of the Judges.]

Dec. 16. Order postponing the hearing of the cause till the 17th inst., before which time the Governor and Company are to answer.

Dec. 17. The counsel for the Governor and Company praying for time to call a court and put in an answer, upon consideration thereof it is ordered that the cause be heard on the first Tuesday after the meeting of the House next after Christmas; the Company to deliver their answer to the Clerk of the Parliaments seven days before the hearing. [The MS. Minutes add that the answer of Sir Andrew Riccard and Maurice Thomson was read this day. See Calendar, 66 (m.) and (n). The answer of the Governor and Company (o.) was put in on 4 Feb. The House adjourned on the 19th inst. to the 6th February 1667-8.]

1667-8.

Feb. 11. Order postponing hearing (appointed for this day) to the 18th inst.

Feb. 18. Ordered that the further hearing be proceeded with on the 20th inst., and that the Company may have copies of such affidavits and papers as were this day produced and read in the House on behalf of Skinner. [The MS. Minutes statethat Sir Wm. Scroggs, counsel for the Company, prayed that the cause might not be heard inconsulto Rege, who was concerned in the matter, and pleaded further the Statute of Limitations. The House deciding to hear the matter of fact before the matter of law, the depositions of Skinner's witnesses were read, a summary of which is given in the Minutes.]

Feb. 20. Whereas counsel and witnesses should have been heard this day on the part of the East India Company, the said counsel praying a longer time, they alleging they could not have copies of the affidavits used by Skinner until yesterday at eleven o'clock [See Calendar, 68 (p)], on consideration thereof it is ordered that the said Governor and Company, paying 20*l.* costs to Skinner, shall have time till Saturday, the 22nd inst., to make their defence, in which, if they shall make use of any of their books, letters, or affidavits of evidence, they shall cause to be given to Skinner due notice thereof, to the end he may have copies of the same to-morrow. [Compare MS. Minutes for affidavit relating to delay in obtaining copies.]

Feb. 22. Ordered that the House will proceed further in hearing counsel on the 26th inst. [Evidence was taken this day on behalf of the Company to rebut the affidavits of Skinner's witnesses. To prove the fact that trade to the Indies was not, as alleged in Skinner's petition, open in 1657, the Patent of King James is produced, as also an Order of Council of 10 Feb. 1656, giving a monopoly to the Company, and an order of the Company thereupon of 13 Feb. 1656. MS. Minutes.]

Feb. 26. Order for proceeding further in the hearing on the 28th inst. [Further evidence taken on behalf of the Company, for which see MS. Minutes.]

Feb. 28. Ordered that the House will proceed in further hearing of counsel on the 3rd of March next, by which time Sir Matthew Andrews, late president for the Company in the Indies, Sir Thos. Chambers, Peter Treveze, Henry Cooke, and — Young are required to give evidence on behalf of Skinner. [Further evidence taken on behalf of the Company, for which see MS. Minutes.]

March 3. Whereas counsel and witnesses were this day heard in the cause, and the summing up of the whole evidence by the counsel for the defendants; it is ordered, &c. that the House will hear counsel in reply on Saturday, the 7th inst. [For further evidence taken this day see MS. Minutes.]

March 7. Ordered that on the 12th inst. the House will take into their consideration what judgment to give. [Counsel for Skinner heard in reply this day, as also Mr. Solicitor. See MS. Minutes.]

March 12. "The House took into consideration what judgment to give in the cause of Thomas Skinner, Merchant, upon his petition against the Governor and Company of Merchants of London, trading to the East Indies; and, after a serious debate thereof, the question being put, whether Thomas Skinner is to be relieved by the House, it was resolved in the affirmative. Then it is ordered that these Lords following are appointed to consider what damages Thomas Skinner, Merchant, hath sustained from the Governor and Company of Merchants of London, trading to the East Indies; and have power to send for such persons as they shall think fit, to inform them therein, and to report their opinion, what recompence is fit to be given to the said Thomas Skinner for the same:—

April 11. The Lord Say and Sele added to the Committee concerning Thomas Skinner.

[This Committee, after a detailed investigation and frequent divisions, reported on 29 April, awarding a total of 28,522*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.* damages to Skinner. (MS. Minutes). Their proceedings are given in Com. Book March 17 and 30, and April 7, 11, 13, 18, and 20. The above total includes, among other items, damages for the ship 2,500*l.*, for the island 10,000*l.*, and for goods 9,884*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.* with interest. The rupee was valued at 5*s.*]

April 29. "Upon hearing counsel and witnesses several days at the bar of this House as well upon the Petition and complaint of Thomas Skyenner, Merchant, against the Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading to the East Indies, and Sir Andrew Riccard and Maurice Thompson; and also upon the answer of the said Company thereunto, concerning many losses and injuries sustained by, and done unto, the said Thomas Skyenner by the said Company of Merchants and their Agents, Factors, and Servants in the East Indies, as in the said Petition are set forth; upon due and serious consideration had of the whole matter, which hath been opened in the cause; It is Ordered and Adjudged, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled do Order and Adjudge, That the said Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading to the East Indies shall, in lieu of all the losses and damages sustained by the said Petitioner, Thomas Skyenner, mentioned in his Petition, pay or cause to be paid unto the said Thomas Skyenner, his Executors or Administrators, the sum of Five thousand pounds of lawful money of England in such manner, and at such times or days of payment as are after in this judgment particularly directed and set down, that is to say, one thousand pounds of lawful money of England, part of the said five thousand pounds before mentioned, within two days after the service of this judgment, and two thousand pounds more of like lawful money at the end of three months next ensuing the day of the payment of the thousand pounds first mentioned: And two thousand pounds more of like lawful money in full of the said sum of five thousand pounds at the end of three months next ensuing the day of the payment of the two thousand pounds first mentioned: And that the said Thomas Skyenner, his Executors and Administrators, and every of them, shall give unto the said Governor and Company particular acquaintances upon his or their respective receipts of the aforesaid sums of one thousand pounds and two thousand pounds first above mentioned for so much respectively received in part of the performance and execution of a judgment of the House of Peers dated the 29th day of April 1668, made in the case between Thomas Skyenner and the East India Company. And upon the receipt of the two thousand pounds before mentioned by the said Thomas Skyenner, his Executors or Administrators, he, the said Thomas Skyenner, or his Executors or Administrators, shall sign and seal and deliver a general release or general releases unto the said Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading to the East Indies, and to such other persons as the said Governor and Company shall reasonably desire, in respect of all or any of the losses and damages sustained by the said Thomas Skyenner, mentioned in the said petition. And lastly, that the leaving of a copy of this judgment with the Governor or Deputy Governor of the said Company of Merchants shall be a sufficient service thereof, in order to the obedience which the House expects shall be given thereunto."

[Marginal Note not expunged, (See L. J., XII. 238.) Scandalous Paper against the House of Peers.]

"This House was this day made acquainted with a written paper [Calendar 66 (p)] dispersed about by several persons in diverse places, pretended to be signed by one Robert Blackborne, Secretary to the East India Company, by their order, much derogatory to the honour and justice of the House of Peers. The said paper was read, and after serious consideration thereof, the question being put, whether the same is a scandalous libel against this House, it was resolved in the affirmative, namine contradicente. Ordered, That it is referred to the Lords Committees for Privileges to examine who was the publisher and disperser of a paper which was this day

"Ordered, That Robert Blackborne, Secretary of the East India Company, be and is hereby required to appear before the Lords Committees for Privileges at five of the clock this afternoon in the House of Peers, to be examined concerning a scandalous libel dispersed abroad against the House of Peers."

May 1. "The Duke of Buckingham reported that the Lords Committees for Privileges have, according to their Lordships' order, examined who were the contrivers, publishers, and dispersers of a written paper scattered abroad in sundry places and to divers persons, derogatory to the honour and judicature of this House, which is voted by their Lordships to be a scandalous libel against the House of Peers.—The first person that was examined was Robert Blackborne, Secretary to the East India Company, who being showed the scandalous paper and asked whether he had seen a paper to the same effect and contents, he (upon reading thereof) did confess he had seen a paper to the same effect and contents, which was intended to be delivered to the House of Commons, and he did sign the same by the directions and command of the Committee of the East India Company, but he knows not who drew it, and that the same paper was brought to the Committee by Mr. Moses, their solicitor. Being asked to whom he delivered the said paper, and by whose directions; he answered he did deliver it to the Subcommittee of the Court of Committees, and the Deputy Governor, Sir Samuel Barnadiston, was then present, being the 17th day of April 1668. He being asked whether the said paper he signed be entered into any book, he said it was entered into a book. He further said that on the * * * * *

"to attend the House."

[A leaf at least of the MS. Journal is missing, but the remainder of the Report may be gathered from the Priv. Book as follows:—Blackborne "further said that "on the" 14th of April the new Governor and Deputy-Governor, Sir William Thompson and Sir Samuel Barnadiston were chosen. Being asked who keeps the books, he said he keeps them, and that he is under the command of the Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Court of Committees. As to showing of the books, the Deputy-Governor's authority is sufficient. He afterwards said (in his examination the following day), that on his acquainting the Governor with their Lordships' order to produce the books of entries of the Court of Committees of the Company from the 14th of April, the said Governor told him that there was a standing order of the Committee that no books could be delivered out without a special order of the Court of Committees. Blackborne further said his oath did not relate to the books, but to copies. The next person that was examined was Mr. Moses, who denied having seen or read the particular paper in question. Having to manage the Company's business against Skinner, he went to Mr. Vaughan, of the Temple, a member of the House of Commons, by command of the Committee of the Company, to show him the Lords' proceedings in the case. Mr. Vaughan gave him a paper, the petition, which he showed to the Governor of the Company, whom he met at the door of the House of Commons, and by his directions he sent it in a letter to Mr. Blackborne, the Secretary, who signed it. Contrary to his own advice, he was pressed by the Committee to draw a petition, which he did, but, disliking it, afterwards burnt it. That petition, a copy of which he produced, was not like the one before the Committee. When the petition was committed in the House of Commons, he was sent for to bring papers concerning Skinner's business. Mr. Blackborne then stated that the petition sent him by Moses, who had submitted it a week before to the Court of Committees, was referred to a sub-committee, at which were present Sir Andrew Riccard, Sir William Ryder, Mr. Rowland Wynn, and others he could not remember.

The MS. Minutes proceed to set out the evidence taken at the bar to the following effect: Blackborne states that he had thought the petition had been entered in the Book of Petitions, but on looking this day he could not find it, and the Governor told him he would not let it be entered. He gave the rough draft of the petition to the Court of Committees. He says the petition was entered into a book. On his telling the Governor that the House wanted to see this book, the latter answered that he had the book and would have no copy or entry of it seen by anyone. He carried the book into another room, where Blackborne afterwards saw it with a leaf taken out. Sir A. Riccard, Sir W. Ryder, Sir S. Barnadiston, Mr. Jolliffe, Mr. Wynn, and Mr. Boone directed the fair writing and signing of the petition. Mr. Moses admits having brought to the committee another draft, besides the one he tore up, and that he saw no more of it till he received it from Mr. Vaughan. Then an order was made for the debate to be resumed to-morrow, all the Lords "to attend the House."]

"Ordered, that it is referred to the Committee for Privileges upon this occasion to consider of whatever relates to the privileges of the House of Peers, for which purpose their Lordships are to meet to-morrow morning at eight of the clock and make report thereof to this House."

"Ordered, that Sir Samuel Barnadiston, Deputy Governor of the East India Company, Sir William Ryder, Sir Andrew Riccard, Mr. Rowland Wynn, and Mr. Boone, members of the said Company, Mr. Robert Blackborne, Secretary, and Mr. Moses, Solicitor to the said Company, be and are hereby required to attend this House to-morrow at ten of the clock in the forenoon; and that the said Sir Samuel Barnadiston shall bring with him the book belonging to the said Company in which the copies of petitions are usually entered, and hereof they may not fail."

May 2. [A leaf is wanting in the MS. Journal at the commencement of this day's proceedings, which can be gathered however from the MS. Minutes. The Committee for Privileges, after examining several early precedents (Priv. Book, 2 May), report that they have been upon the point of judging causes originally, upon which they have very many precedents cited out of records, but, not having the originals by them, they have proceeded no further. The House ordered these originals to be sent for and produced to the Committee. After another order that no business should intervene in the House till the privileges of the House be fully vindicated, Sir S. Barnadiston and Sir A. Riccard appear at the bar, and produce the book of petitions. The MS. Journal begins with the concluding portion of the examination thereupon.]

"The book of entries of petitions of the East India Company being showed him, and being asked whether he did see a petition of this effect, now showed him, entered into the said book, he answered he had, but it is not there now, but who tore it out he knows not. He being showed the several entries of 10th, 11th, and 13th of April 1668, in the books of the transactions of the Committee of the East India Company, and having read them, he said they were truly entered. "Ordered, that this House will resume the further examination of this business on Monday morning next."

Order committing Sir Samuel Barnadiston and Sir Andrew Riccard to the custody of the Black Rod, with power to take bail of each in the sum of 2,000*l.* for their attendance on Monday next.

Order for the Sergeant-at-arms to attach Mr. Rowland Wynn and Mr. Christopher Boone and bring them to the bar on Monday next, with leave to take bail of them in 2,000*l.* for their attendance that day.

"The question being put whether Sir Samuel Barnadiston and Sir Andrew Riccard shall be now called to the bar upon their knees, it was resolved in the negative."

May 4. Order for the Sergeant-at-arms to secure the attendance of Wynn and Boone de die in diem, with same power as above regarding bail.

Similar order for Black Rod as to Barnadiston and Riccard.

[For other proceedings arising out of this business, and not expunged, see L. J., XII. 240.]

May 5. "A message was brought from the House of Commons by Sir Robert Carr and others, who said he was commanded to desire a conference with their Lordships upon a petition which they had received from the merchants trading to the East Indies."

"The answer returned was, that the Lords have taken the message into consideration, and will give a conference as is desired; as for the time and place, they appoint it to be presently in the Painted Chamber."

"The House nominated the Lords following to report this conference."

HOUSE OF LORDS.
Supplement.

- HOUSE OF LORDS. Supplement.
- "Next the Lord Ashley and other Lords who were appointed to report the conference with the House of Commons this morning, reported the effect of the said conference as follows:—Sir Robert Atkins began the conference, who said he was commanded by the knights, citizens, and burgesses of the House of Commons assembled in Parliament to communicate to their Lordships a petition which they had received from the East India Company, concerning Thomas Skinner, merchant, and, having read it, delivered it to the Lords; then the said petition was read as foll.:—"
- [Here follows the petition [Calendar No. 66 (p)], which is set out in State Trials, VI., 721-2, in extenso.]
- "He told the Lords the Commons had examined it, and found the allegations of the said petition to be true; that the Lords have had such proceedings, have acknowledged the plea, and since that have adjudged five thousand pounds to Skyner for all his losses, and ordered a release upon the payment of the last two thousand pounds. The House of Commons thought these proceedings to be of so very high concernment to the right of all His Majesty's subjects, that they have passed these votes following, which were read accordingly."
- [Here follow two votes passed by the Commons on 2 May, Nos. 1 and 2 in Hatsell, Vol. III. p. 373. In extenso.]
- "The next that spoke was Mr. John Vaughan, who began that, for the Lords' further satisfaction, he was appointed to give their Lordships the reasons of these votes. He said that, by the laws of England, Pleas were of two natures, Common Pleas and Pleas of the Crown. That in this particular case, they did not intermeddle with any part of their Lordships' judicature concerning pleas of the Crown, and therefore no precedents of that sort would be of any use in this matter, for that this case was of the nature of the first, which is Common Pleas, and that Common Pleas did consist either of real actions or personal actions, in both which all proceedings must be by the King's original writ, and that this particular case was a case between a person and person, and so, clearly a Common Plea, ought to be proceeded in in the ordinary way by the King's original writ: He said that freeholds were never examined in Parliament, but always left to the remedy at law. Then he began to cite his precedents, but with this preamble: That, when the party never pleads to the jurisdiction of the Court, it is ordinary for the Courts to proceed, though in cases not within their jurisdiction. The precedents he cited were out of Placita Parliamentaria."
- [Here follow four precedents taken from Ryley's Pleadings, ed. 1661, viz.:—
- 18 Ed. I. fol. 33. Johannes de Insula v. Bishop of Winton.
 - 18 Ed. I. fol. 43. Henry de Edelingthorpe v. Hug. de Louth.
 - 18 Ed. I. fol. 44. Isabella la Mareschal v. William de Valentia.
 - 18 Ed. I. fol. 51. Roger de Somerton v. Prior of Buthele.
- They are quoted somewhat more fully in State Trials, VI. 731.]
- "By these precedents he said it did appear that in cases of freehold there is no proceeding without the King's writ, and therefore it did appear necessarily and demonstratively that the Lords cannot judge in this case, for there was never heard there was an original writ to the Lords House returnable coram Dom. Spiritual' et Temporal': there is no such found in the book of Registers or Fitz-Herbert's Natura Brevium; the reason is the same for personal actions as for real and those that concern freehold; Magna Charta and the Stat. of 3 Edw. III. provide for a trial by peers. He then went on with other precedents, and cited that of," &c. &c.
- [Here follow six further precedents from Ryley's Pleadings, viz.:—
- 14 Ed. II. fol. 408. William le Rous.
 - 14 Ed. II. fol. 408. Bishop of Winton.
 - 14 Ed. II. fol. 409. Jean Ffoulkes.
 - 14 Ed. II. fol. 409. Mariote, wife of Robt de Carle.
 - 14 Ed. II. fol. 410. Robert le Saussor.
 - 14 Ed. II. fol. 411. Ralph de Draiton.
- Comp. State Trials, VI. 732.*]
- "The next that managed this conference was Serjeant Maynard, who began that this case is the case of every subject of England, as well Lords as Commons, and said that precedents are not of force where the jurisdiction is not insisted upon, and that there never was any one case of this nature where the jurisdiction of the Lords House was insisted on and overruled."
- HOUSE OF LORDS. Supplement.
- "He cited that Commentis placita non sequantur nostram curiam. He said that they spoke not of cases which concerned the King, but such as concerned membrum et tuum: And that in these cases where there is an ordinary remedy, an extraordinary ought not to be tried."
- "That it is all men's interests not to be put by their juries or be put off from their indifferent trial (where he made an apology for the word (indifferent), meaning thereby the trial by our equals, and such as they had exceptions against even on bare suspicion.)"
- "One great reason of the law was that people might rest satisfied in the public justice. If any judge unjustly overrule me in my case, I have my remedy by bill of exceptions, as if a judge should admit of affidavits to be evidence, which ought not to be allowed, for they may be made behind a door, and they cannot be cross-examined nor the judge ask the witness any questions; or if a master should be questioned for the fact of his servant, where the servant should be beaten but not the master punished in his purse, what remedy, in either of these cases, should your Lordships be the judges?—how should your Lordships see further beyond the seas than other men?"
- "He said Skyner hath an ordinary course by taking a Commission out of Chancery to examine witnesses. This is not only contrary to the reason of law, but statutes themselves."
- "Then he cited Magna Charta, where he observed that lex terra, being a general word, is expounded by several subsequent laws, as the 5th of E. III., where he observed that, if you look in the Parliament Roll of that time, you might see by the provisos there what were the occasions of this statute, that Magna Charta should be observed."
- "He quoted the statute of 5 E. III., where he observed that our franchises were the right of trial by jury, and that none were to be taken by petition or suggestion to the King or his Council (which he interpreted the Lords House), unless it were by indictment or presentment of his neighbourhood, or by process on original writ."
- "The next statute he cited was the stat. of 42 E. III., where he observed that, though the preamble was extended only to accusations, yet it was enacted in general that no man should be put to answer without original writ by due process."
- "He said the law had provided a remedy against wilful juries by attain, but there is no remedy in this case, nor no appeal."
- "He observed that in proceedings upon petitions the evidence is not extant, nor the matter special, but the petition always general, and in English; and in English proceedings never anything was reversed; so, if the law be mistaken, the party hath remedy by writ of error."
- "It was preposterous for Skyner to begin where he should have ended, the Lords being the dernier resort, where it might have come regularly after trial below. The reason of original writs is the respect and acknowledgement that all justice flows from His Majesty; and no judge proceeds without a warrant under his seal, for which a fine was paid to the King, which anciently was much more considerable than now."
- "Then he offered the great charge of attending the Lords, counsel being put off by reason of the Lords' great affairs, and witnesses summoned from the remotest part of the kingdom; and beside, he did observe that the Lords sent their summons in their own name, and not in the King's name."
- "He further said that, in the courts below, there were statuti dies and terms when businesses were appointed, so that the greatness of the charges and inconveniences did argue against their Lordships' judicature."
- "He did acknowledge that writs of error were clearly in the Lords' jurisdiction, and as the dernier resort, but desired their Lordships to observe that no writ of error lay from the Common Pleas to the Lords House, but from the King's Bench only, nor could the Lords bring a cause from the King's Bench without the King's writ, though judged and had past all the formalities below; so that, if the Lords could not by a writ take a cause to themselves before it had past all the courts, nor without a writ take a cause to themselves that had finished the course below, then much less could they take a cause originally. He said it is true that, for misdemeanours, bribery, and corruption, they might be tried before the Lords at first instance; then he said, Oportet ut res certa sit in judicio—no such in petitions; and that a change in jurisdiction makes a change in laws."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Supplement.

"He added one reason concerning the King, which he explained by a question: Are the Lords bound to receive all petitions or not? If bound, you may refuse none, for in Magna Charta it is said Nulli negabimus justitiam, and the King is debitor justitie. If not, you may be partial, and receive or dismiss which you please. Then he propounded a second question. If a man begin in the Lords House, and have judgment for him, upon the Parliament's rising where shall he have execution, and how shall the defendant be sufficiently discharged? And he concluded with this, That there was not a man in England, Lord or Commoner, nor anything that he had, but was concerned in this question.

"The next manager was Mr. Solicitor, who said his part was to give reasons for another part which concerns the second vote, which was that the Lords could much less give relief where there was no remedy at law at all than where there was; that this was a new way of introducing laws; there was but one law in England, and that is the same both below stairs and above, and where that is defective it ought to be explained by a law; for if new remedies may be introduced without the legislative power, the House of Commons will sit to no other purpose than to repeal antiquated laws, and to give subsidies.

"He cited the case of an inheritrix (suppose allied to a great peer) disinherited by her husband's default, and yet relieved by an Act of Parliament of Westminster, cap. 2., which recited Durum est to suffer by her husband's default, and yet was not relieved by the Lords.

"The second precedent was the case of the Hospital of St. Leonard's, who having a clear right to corn rent from several lands in Yorkshire, was not relieved by the Lords, but enforced to have an Act of Parliament.

"All proceedings ought to be in Latin, as well as the writs, and no record to be in English, but from originals in Latin; and that proceedings without originals made, tended to make the laws independent from the Crown.

"He said that nothing can be a record which cannot be exemplified under the seal, and nothing can be exemplified but where there is an original writ, or is drawn up into an original writ.

"That in the 13 R. II., in the case of the Bishop and City of Lincoln, there was an original writ framed by Act of Parliament. He said further, that no person can be sued at the same time in two courts for the same thing, but one may be pleaded as a bar to the other, which in adjournment may happen in the Lords House in this case; and he never remembers that a plea of a petition depending in the Lords House was ever allowed in Westminster Hall; the law trusts no court with the reversal of their own judgments, but where they have some clear way to come off. The King's Bench reverse not their own judgments in point of law, but where the matter of fact was mistaken.

"He said the House of Commons did acknowledge the Lords to be the dernier resort and greatest judicature, but not to be applied unto in the first place, and that the Bishop of Norwich, in the 50th of Ed. III., was dismissed out of the Lords House and sent into Westminster Hall.

"He said that the Lords had given relief for the island, and cast it into the bargain, though it ought to have been done by Act of Parliament only, for no Court of His Majesty can give remedy where His Majesty's writ cannot run, for where His Majesty's sovereignty cannot come, the jurisdiction of the peers can have no place. By these proceedings the subject shall lose the benefit of Magna Charta and of the stat. of 25 Ed. III. for original writs, and the relief of the 42 Ed. III. against petitions.

"He did acknowledge that writs of error did properly belong to the Lords, and appeals where they were brought before them by the Commons.

"And he concluded that they must not leave the deposition of the liberties of the people without asserting and vindicating them by this claim.

"Then Mr. Vaughan desired to offer a few words more, lest there should some objections remain concerning the explanation of Lex Terro in Magna Charta, concerning which he desired the Lords would peruse the arguments concerning the Habeas Corpus in 3^o Caroli, where we should find the King's counsel did interpret, 'by the peers or law of the land,' to be by their peers or the pleasure of the King, which both Houses then thought was to make Magna Charta signify nothing.

"He desired the Lords to consider whether in this case it would not be the same, to be by their peers or the pleasure of the Lords.

HOUSE OF

Supplement.

"The report being ended, it is ordered that the Committee for Privileges do meet presently."

May 6.—"The House entered into debate of the business of the privileges of this House, and resolved that the Committee for privileges do meet at two of the clock this afternoon, and prepare what they think fit to offer to the House as previous votes to be passed in order to be offered concerning judicature, before this House desire a conference, and any other matters concerning the vindication of the privileges of this House."

[The judges were ordered to attend this Committee. For this and other proceedings relative to this matter, and not expunged, see L. J., XII. 243.]

May 7.—"Then the Earl of Essex reported that the Lords Committee for Privileges, according to the directions of this House, have searched for records and precedents to maintain the rights and privileges of the House of Peers on the point of judicature, as well as their proceedings in taking cognizance of original complaints that have been brought before the House of Peers, whereupon they have given judgment, and the Lords Committees have found many ancient and modern, and many more might be found, if they had more time.

"The Lords Committees also have framed a draught of an introduction to the intended conference with the House of Commons; and also have prepared some previous votes in order thereunto, which are offered to the consideration of this House.

"Then the Lord Holles, who had taken pains in perusing the ancient records, gave the House an account what he had found, that so the House might resolve which to make use of in this business, to justify their present proceedings in the case of Thomas Skyner against the East India Company, as being most proper for that occasion.

"The first Precedent was that of 1 Ed. IV., No. 16." [This case, the Tenants of Eastmain v. Bishop of Winchester, from the Rolls of Parliament, is given more fully in State Trials, VI. 756.]

"The next Precedent was in 4 Hen. IV., No. 19, where it was brought up by the Commons before the Lords in Parliament, that Sir Thomas Pomey [Pomeroy] and Jane his wife, complained that John, son and heir of Sir Phillip Courtney and Jeanne, late wife of Sir John Chandley, had forcibly by the maintenance of the said Phillip, entered into divers lands and manors in Devon and Cornwall, being the inheritance of Thomas Pomey, and pray remedy.— Upon examination by the King and Lords, it was adjudged that Thomas should re-enter, if his entry be lawful, or else to have his assize without all delay to be tried with jurors at the election of the said Thomas.

"Another Precedent was in 4 Hen. IV., No. 20, where the Abbott of Newnham in Devon complains before the Lords against Sir Phillip Courtney for imprisoning the said Abbott and two of his monks with force. Sir Phillip, demanded thereof in Parliament, could not deny it, whereupon the Lords did adjudge he should no more have to do with the Abbott nor his monks, nor any things of theirs, but to be bound to the good behaviour, and committed him to the Tower."

[Then follow fourteen more precedents, also taken from the Rolls of Parliament, and given in State Trials, pp. 736, 747 and 753-6, viz:—

4 Hen. IV., No. 21. Nicholas Pontington v. Sir Phillip Courtney.

1 Ric. II., No. 30. Sir John Cobham's case.

15 Ric. II., No. 20. Thos. Harding v. Sir J. Sutton and an^r.

15 Ric. II., No. 21. John Shadwell [Shodwell] v. Archbishop of Canterbury.]

"Another Precedent was in 20 Ric. II., No. 24, where the Bishop of Llandaff prayeth before the Lords in Parliament restitution of the manor of Bishopston in Wales, parcel of his Temporality, which Thomas

" Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, since the death of the last bishop had kept. He desired it might be seized for the King and delivered to him. The Earl being present was demanded thereof, and could not deny it, whereupon it was adjudged that the manor should be seized into the King's hands, and the issues taken by the Earl to be answered.

" His Lordship further reported several precedents which are recorded in the Black Book in the Tower, which is printed by the name of Placita Parliamentaria.

" The Precedent of 18 Edw. I., fol. 16, where William de Wastull by his petition complains to the Lords in Parliament of Matthew del Exchequer, how that there having been an agreement between them about a grant of some land to the said Matthew, and a fine to be acknowledged for it, an Attorney, whom Matthew procured by a conspiracy between them, put other lands in besides, which the said William had no thought nor intention to grant, yet did that by fine, and by that means was deceived and cozened of his land. The business was examined, the parties heard. It was resolved that the record of all that had passed in Parliament concerning this business, viz., Wasthull's petition, Del Exchequer's answer, and all the proceedings thereupon, shall be sent down to the Clerk of Common Pleas, and be there cancelled, and that upon this Record, and what other things did appear unto them concerning Matthew del Exchequer, they should proceed to judgment and do speedily and due justice in it.

" He also noted in this case, that after a fine levied in the Common Pleas, complaint of what was done in that Court comes up immediately into the house of Peers, and is there entertained. Now either this was relievable below, or it was not? If it was relievable, and that the King's Bench could have given remedy, accordingly to what is generally received, that errors in the Common Pleas are only to be remedied in the King's Bench, and errors in the King's Bench to be remedied in Parliament, then there is a check to that rule, and a business may come per saltum into the Lords house, when they think fit to entertain it so; and if it be not relievable in the ordinary way, yet it was to be relieved here, and it was relieved here, contrary to that doctrine lately delivered; that what the standing settled law of the kingdom, in the ordinary usual forms of the execution thereof, cannot relieve, neither can the house of Peers relieve it. This doctrine is by this Precedent disproved.

" The Precedent in 33 Edw. I., fol. 266, where Nicholas de Segrave was summoned to appear in Parliament before the King, Earls, and Barons, and others of the King's Council. It was laid to his charge by Nicholas de Warwick, who followed for the King, that the said Nicholas, being in the wars of Scotland with the King upon a quarrel he had with John de Crumwell and a challenge in Court for a combat to be between them, withdrew himself from the army, and left the King among his enemies, and desired John de Crumwell to fight with him before the King of France, for that purpose. Segrave confesses this, and submits himself; whereupon the King demands the judgment and opinion of the Earls and Barons, the great men and others of his Council who, Habito super hoc diligenti tractatu et avisaamento, consideratis et intellectis omnibus in dicto facto contentis, declare him worthy of death.

" Another Precedent was in 30 Ed. I., fol. 231, where Sir W^m Pannell [Paynell] and Margaret his wife petitioned in Parliament the 28 year of the King to have the thirds of a manor which had belonged to her first husband, John de Camoys. It was objected that she ought to have none, because she lived in adultery with the said William in the lifetime of her husband John de Camoys [Cameys]. They reply that John de Camoys had by his deed granted her unto the said Sir William Pannell, and renounced all his interest in her; that therefore she had not lived with the said Sir William in adultery, seeing it was with the will and consent of the said John. The deciding of this business was referred to the next Parliament which was in the 30 of the King. To this Parliament they came, the former proceedings are repeated, and a Statute urged against them which makes a wife that elopes from her husband and not reconciled to him before his death, incapable of suing for her dowry. They then crave a trial by their country whether or not it was adultery in her living as she did with Pannell with the consent and by the grant of Camoys. This was denied, and the judgment is: Videtur Curia quod non est necesse contra tantas tamque manifestas eviden- tias, presumptiones, probationes, et prefatorum Willielmi et Margarite concessionem ad aliquam inquisitionem patrie capiendam, procedere in forma predicta, qui dictus Willielmus et Margarita eam protulerunt. Immo quod predicta Margarita per formam Stat. predicti. ad dotem suam petendam admitti non debet seu audiri rationibus predictis. Et ideo consideratum est quod predict. Willielmus et Margarita nihil capiant per petitionem suam predictam, sed sint in misericordia pro falso clamore, &c.

" The House approved of these precedents as very suitable and agreeable to the case in question.

" Then the Earl of Anglesey reported what modern precedents were found in the Journals of this House, which he cited as follows:—

[Here follow seven modern precedents, viz.:—

43 Eliz. 18 Dec. Comp^y of Painters v. Comp^y of Plasterers. L. J., II. 258.

19 Jac. I. Fludd's case. L. J., III. 110, 119, 128, 132-4.

" And because at a free Conference lately between the two Houses upon a great occasion, the House of Commons seemed to be best pleased with new precedents, therefore his Lordship reported several the precedents of the years 1640 and 1641."

[Here follow twenty-three precedents, viz.:—

" The House approved of these Precedents as fit to be offered to the House of Commons at the Conference, they being original complaints, and the proceedings of the Lords thereupon never questioned for any irregularity.

" Then a Petition of Thomas Skynner was read as follows:—

" To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled.

" The Humble petition of Thomas Skinner :

" Sheweth, that whereas your Lordships were pleased to order the East India Company on the 29th of April 1669 to pay the Petitioner five thousand pounds,

"whereof one thousand pounds to be paid within two days next after serving the Governor or the Deputy-Governor with a copy of the Lords' order.
"The said order hath been served upon the said Deputy, Sir Samuel Barnadiston, with a copy thereof left with his servants, and the said thousand pounds demanded at the East India Company's house accordingly, but the payment refused, as the Petitioner is ready to make appear before your Lordships upon oath.

"Wherefore he humbly prays your Lordships' farther justice therein; and in preventing that his person be not apprehended by order of the House of Commons for serving your Lordships order, their warrant being issued out to that effect.

"THO. SKYNNER.

"The House resolved to take this petition into consideration, and for the present made the order following:—

"Upon reading the humble petition of Thomas Skynner, showing that he had served the Deputy Governor of the East India Company with an order of the House, made the 29th of April last past, to which the said Deputy Governor hath refused to yield obedience, which he, the said Petitioner, is ready to make appear before their Lordships upon oath, if he may have liberty to attend them and not be apprehended upon an order of the House of Commons, made (as he is informed) for his apprehension for serving the aforesaid order of the 29th of April made by this House. It is therefore ordered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that he the said Thomas Skynner have the protection of this House for his free attendance on it, in order to the satisfying of their Lordships of the matters contained in his said petition. And hereof all Sergeants, Bailiffs, and other His Majesty's officers whatsoever, are to take notice and yield obedience hereunto, as they will answer the contrary to this House."

[The House, before making this order, examined Frederick Skynner at the bar, who stated that had served the order of the 29th April on one of Sir Samuel Barnadiston's servants, who refused to accept it, and it was left on the ground at the door. See MS. Minutes:—From the Priv. Book it appears that the Judges were called on by the Committee of Privileges (2 May) to furnish them with precedents. Of those submitted by the Lord Privy Seal, most but not all appear in the report; all precedents since the Restoration were also ordered to be furnished to the Committee, but none were reported. Sub-Committees were appointed to examine ancient records, and to inquire what new encroachments had been made by the House of Commons in the last hundred years. Some precedents on this point were brought in on the 5th. On the 6th the Committee met, as ordered by the House, to prepare previous votes. Their Minutes contain the following notes:—"If a man shall be tried for his life without a jury, much more for his lands. The H. C. complain of the Lords making new laws, yet make new laws themselves. The Lords are first to assert their own authority, and then to answer the objections of the Commons. The H. C. have brought up several causes without trying by juries, in particular the impeachment of Sir William Penn." The Committee then proceeded to consider their report and rebut various allegations in the Company's petition (See explanatory entry below.) They referred the petition itself to the L. Chief Baron, then present, to consult the other judges and state their opinion the next day whether the matter of complaint in the petition be a mere common plea determinable in the Court of Common Pleas. The Minutes here add:—"The Parliament ever known to be the King's counsel; 13 Ric. II. c. 18; 2 Hen. VI. 17, mention is made of the Privy Council by the name of Council only, by which it is observed that by Council is not meant the Parliament." Then it is agreed that the Earl of Anglesey and Lord Holles should prepare previous matter for votes and protestation to be offered to the Committee the next day. The Duke of Bucks to make the introduction, the Lord Howard to open the petition, and the Lord Privy Seal, Lord Holles, and E. of Anglesey to answer what was offered at the conference by the H. C.—On the 7th the E. of Anglesey offers his draft of an introduction for the intended conference, together with the previous votes, which are agreed to be reported to the House. The precedents cited in this report are read in the House the same day, and "spoken to as they are read." (MS. Minutes.)]

HOUSE OF LORDS.
Supplement.

7 May. "The Lords took into further consideration the report made of the last conference with the House of Commons, and caused the said report to be again read over, and made observations, and gave their sense upon the several particulars as were of most concern, and deserved to receive some answer, that so those Lords that should be appointed to manage the conference might be the better enabled to shew the irregularity of the House of Commons in this business and to maintain the justice and regularity of their Lordships' proceedings therein.

"The petition of the East India Company delivered to the House of Commons was read, which Sir Robert Atkins told the Lords at the conference the Commons had examined, and found the allegations thereof to be true, for the disproving whereof the Lords observed the many falsities in matter of fact which were expressed in the said petition and reflections upon the honour and justice of the Lords' proceedings in the case of Thomas Skynner, merchant.

"First, the Lords observed the unusualness of the title of the petition to the House of Commons, not anciently attributed to them.

"Also they observed that the allegation in the petition concerning Mr. Skynner's island is not according to the report of the Judges. For whereas the Judges say that for his house as well as his island he is not relievable in the ordinary courts in Westminster Hall, the petition mentions only the island.

"And whereas the petition saith that the island is parcel of the dominions of a foreign prince, and only determinable there, the said island was purchased by and belongs to a subject of England.

"And whereas the Petition saith that the case concerns commoners only, that is not so, for the Lord George Berkeley, a peer of this realm, is a member and one of the Adventurers of the East India Company.

"And concerning the allegation in the Petition, that the Lords have denied to grant the petitioner a commission to examine witnesses, &c., these expressions are not true, for the demand of a commission was conditional if the members of the Company here might not be heard (who were heard), and only urged by the counsel cursorily, but not insisted on, and so proceeded in the defence. And no denial appears in the records of this House, which would have been if such a thing had been resolved.

"Where the Petition says (All which proceedings are against the laws and statutes of this nation, and custom of Parliament) that is not a true assertion, although the other matters alleged therein were true.

"Concerning the expression (In tender consideration thereof, forasmuch as the unusual and extraordinary proceeding of their Lordships is not only grievous to your petitioners, but may be a precedent of ill consequence to all the Commons of England, &c.), Here the petitioners take upon them the cause of all the commoners of England. This is one of the untruths of the petition for which the Lords have censured it.

"And whereas the petition says (That the petitioners have no way of relief otherwise than by making their address to the House of Commons). This not true, for they have an appeal to the next Parliament, and can have no relief by appeal to the House of Commons, before whom no appeal lies by law or course of Parliament.

"The Lords further observed the irregularities expressed in Sir Robert Atkins' Introduction, how unsuitable and unwarrantable a proceeding it is for the House of Commons to take cognizance of any matter depending in this House before the Lords have given any judgment therein and communicated the same unto them, and to examine and proceed to censure by vote the proceedings of the House of Peers, which the Commons cannot do, because they are not a Court of Judicature in any case, but less of the House of Peers, the highest Judicature, nor have the Commons power to give an oath, and so they have not the means to come to the knowledge of the truth especially when they hear but one side, and not the party concerned, Mr. Skynner, nor could not know the grounds and reasons upon which the Lords proceeded.

"Then the Lords proceeded to consider of that part of the Report where the precedents are cited by Mr. Vaughan.

"The first was the case of Johannes de Insula against the Bishop of Winton, 18 E. I., which precedent the "Lords held not to be pertinent to the case in question; and the judgment in that case was only a dismissal ad præsens.

HOUSE OF

 "The Lords do acknowledge that many causes have been and are dismissed by the Lords, not because the Lords could not hear them as not having cognizance of them, but because they would not trouble themselves with multitude of businesses, having the greatest affairs of the kingdom upon their hands.
 "The second Precedent was that of 18 E. I., the case of Henry de Edlington, which was a case the Commons most relied on, therefore the Lords made a serious inspection into it, and upon a mature consideration their Lordships were of opinion that the Precedent was not so material in the case as to overbalance the multitude of precedents to the contrary, and it was libera tenementa, which is not the case of Skynner.
 "The third Precedent was that of 18 E. I., the case of William de Valentia, and the Lords upon consideration thereof did hold it not to be pertinent in this case, and there was only a dismissal ad præsens.
 "The 4th Precedent was that in 18 E. I., the case of Roger of Somerton against the Prior of Buthill, which the Lords held not to be of any consideration in the matter in question, and the judgment being only a dismissal ad præsens.
 "Other Precedents were cited by Mr. Vaughan, as that of William le Rouse, 14 E. II., which was only a dismissal, and so not pertinent.
 "Also a Precedent of the Bishop of Winton's case, 14 E. II., where the judgment was only a dismissal.
 "Likewise the Precedent in 14 E. II. in the case of Joan Foulkes, where the judgment was a Dismission to the Common Law.
 "Another Precedent was that of Marriott, the wife of Robert Carle, in 14 E. III. [II.], where the judgment was only a dismissal.
 "A like Precedent, in 14 E. II., the case of Robert le Sanser, where the judgment was only a dismissal.
 "Another Precedent was in 14 E. II., the case of Ralph de Drayton, where, the petition consisting of three parts, the judgment was a dismission for relief several ways. The Lords held the case not pertinent to the case in question.
 "Having considered Mr. Vaughan's part, the Lords came to make some general observations upon some particulars spoken by Serjeant Maynard.
 "He said that Precedents are not of force, where the jurisdiction is not insisted upon, and that there was never any one case of this nature, where the jurisdiction of the Lords' House was insisted on and overruled.
 "The Lords thought this to be a very strange and impertinent argument, that because the power of the Lords' House was never questioned, therefore it had no power at all.
 "Whereas it is objected where there is an ordinary remedy, an extraordinary ought not to be tried.
 "The Lords say, their proceedings are not such extraordinary means as the Commons take them to be, where the case is so difficult and sad as in the case of Skynner. The dispute was not what was inconvenient, but whether there be such a judicature settled in the House of Peers or not, and not to please the people.
 "Whereas it is objected that it is the interest of all men in England to be tried by juries.
 "How comes it to be a greater prejudice to be tried without peers a jury for a man's estate than for his life and liberty? The House of Commons are not a jury, they being not sworn, and yet the Lords proceed on the accusations without a jury.
 "Whereas it is said, How should the Lords see further beyond the seas than other men?
 "The House of Peers may very well see so far if the Chancery could, when the Lords' House hath more means to see further than the Chancery.
 "But Skynner hath an ordinary course by taking a commission out of the Chancery to examine witnesses?
 "Their Lordships' proceedings herein is not only contrary to the reason of law but statutes themselves.
 "Quære, whether such a commission as they would have to be issued out of the Chancery, was according to Magna Charta?
 "The precedent of 2 H. VI. N. 14. answers this clearly.
 "Whereas it is said that Magna Charta should be observed:
 "Observe that Magna Charta says that no man shall be tried but by his peers or by the law of the

HOUSE OF LOEDS.
Supplement.

"land; by which words it is implied that it may be done by the House of Peers, whose judicature is according to ancient custom and the law of the land.
 "Whereas the Commons allege the law had provided a remedy against wilful Juries by attainr, but there is no remedy in this case nor appeal; and that petitions and proceedings before the Lords are in English?
 "Quære, What attainr lies against the Chancery for the same grievances there? Are not all Acts of Parliament and many Parliament Rolls in English?
 "Whereas it is alleged that the greatness of the charge and inconveniences of attending causes in the Lords' House argue against the judicature of it.
 "Observe that the Court of Chancery is much more chargeable than to have a cause heard in the Lords' House. There hath been one hundred orders made in one cause in Chancery.
 "As to what is said by way of question, Whether the Lords are bound to receive all petitions or no? If bound, they may refuse none? If not, they may receive what they please?
 "Observe, From the very beginning of Parliaments the House of Peers received all petitions by Committees for that purpose, and appointed Triers of Petitions.—All causes are not of the like nature. The Lords may refer ordinary causes to other courts, and retain any causes they think fit. A superior court may remit to an inferior.
 "Whereas it is objected, How shall the Lords' judgments be executed after the rising of the Parliament?
 "Ans. The Lords seek no assistance from the House of Commons, but have power sufficient of themselves to require obedience to their own judgments, and they find not any of their judgments unexecuted.
 "Whereas it was alleged by Mr. Solicitor that the proceedings ought to be in Latin, and no record to be in English?
 "To this the Lords observe that many records are in French, and most Acts of Parliament, which are records, are in English. And the impeachments brought by the House of Commons are all in English, and without juries.
 "Whereas it is objected that the Lords' proceeding deprives the subject of the benefit of Magna Charta; and the 25th of E. III. for original writs, and that of 24 E. III. against petitions?
 "The Lords observe that the King's writ doth not originally run in the Counties Palatine, and yet the power and authority of the Peers in Parliament assembled runs and takes place there.
 "As to Magna Charta, the Lords are of opinion that it is no more hurt by this cause in question than by the common practice of the Parliaments of England. If it had been a breach of it, it is a wonder that so many discerning eyes, as have been in all ages and now are in the House of Commons, never discerned it until upon this occasion.
 "These were short heads as the sense of the House, whereupon the Lords that were to manage the conference were to observe, and accordingly enlarge their discourses, as they thought most conducive to the service of this House.
 "The House after this took into consideration the two previous votes reported from the Committee for Privileges, which being read, and after debate thereof;
 "It was resolved upon the question, That the House of Commons entertaining the scandalous petition of the East India Company against the Lords' House of Parliament, and their proceedings, examinations, and votes thereupon had and made, are a breach of the privileges of the House of Peers, and contrary to the fair correspondence which ought to be between the two Houses, and unexampled in former times.
 "Then the second vote was read; and the question being put whether the question shall be now put, whether to agree to the said vote, it was resolved in the affirmative.
 "Upon this it was resolved upon the question that the House of Lords taking cognizance of the cause of Thomas Skynner, merchant, a person highly oppressed and injured in East India by the Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading thither, and overruling the plea of the said Company, and adjudging Five thousand pounds damages thereupon against the said Governor and Company, is agreeable to the laws of the land and well warranted by the "law and custom of Parliament, and justified by many parliamentary precedents, ancient and modern.

"Ordered, That to-morrow morning this House will assert and vindicate the rights and privileges of the Lords assembled in Parliament, and consider what to do therein.

[The MS. Minutes supply rough notes of this afternoon's debate, some of which are as follows:—According to their votes the House of Commons make themselves a higher court of judicature than the Lords. They should have reasoned first, and if they could not convince, should have brought up a bill for remedy. The precedent of Paynell's case is a sufficient answer to Mr. Vaughan's argument. When the cases were doubtful the Lords sent down their causes, when clear they judged them.—'Twas proper for Skinner's cause to be tried before the Admiralty, because the injuries were done him by sea.—The Lords sit here by writ, and what is done here is done by writ. Causes of great value come originally in the Exchequer. The argument is weak to say, you cannot do that which you never pretended to do, therefore you cannot do that which you always have done. The House of Commons takes jurisdiction over Lords and Commons both. The King is debitor justitiae and can give remedy in Parliament where there is no other remedy. The cases Mr. Solicitor cited are where there is a general rule. Magna Charta cannot intend the proceedings of Parliament.]

[From the Priv. Book this day, it appears that the arrangement made was as follows:—D. Bucks to begin, E. Essex next, L. Howard Charlton to the truth and falsehood of the Petition, L. Lucas to answer Mr. Vaughan, L. Holles to ancient records, L. Howard Charlton, L. Anglesey to modern records.]

Post Meridiem.

"The Earl of Essex reported a draught of an Introduction to the intended Conference to the House of Commons, which being read, was agreed to, viz:—

"The House of Peers have desired the Conference to impart unto you, that having received a message for a Conference concerning a petition presented to the House of Commons by the East India Company, they were surprised to find at that Conference that the House of Commons had entertained a Petition from that Company which was an accusation of the House of Peers, and an arraignment of their proceedings: And that they had proceeded to examinations and votes thereupon, without so much as acquainting the House of Peers with it, which the Lords never have done, nor would do to the House of Commons or to any particular member thereof.

"The Lords are also very sensible of the nature of those votes, since thereby the House of Commons have judged and condemned the House of Peers (which they themselves do and must acknowledge to be the highest judicature in the kingdom), a manner of proceeding that shakes the very foundations and constitution of Parliament, and of the ancient government of this kingdom.

"Therefore the House of Peers (who admit no dispute of their jurisdiction and judicature) to preserve the same inviolable, have further commanded us to declare that they have ordered the entry in the records of Parliament of the last Conference and this with a salvo to their rights and privileges, and caution that neither the one nor the other shall at any time hereafter be drawn into precedent to their

"prejudice, or to introduce or occasion dispute concerning them: And for the asserting and vindicating thereof, their Lordships have passed several resolutions expressing their judgment thereupon, which they have commanded us to impart to you, and leave in writing with you."

May 9. "The Earl of Anglesey gave the House an account that those Lords that were appointed to manage the Conference with the House of Commons yesterday, did perform their duty according to the directions and command of this House."

[Here follows a message from the Commons, after the few lines not expunged in L. J., XII. 246. This message is given in Hatsell, III. 376, in extenso. See also Calendar 66 (q.)]

"To this message they desire their Lordships' concurrence. The answer returned was that their Lordships will take the message into consideration and will send an answer by messengers of their own.

"The Lords taking the aforesaid message into consideration, the question being put whether this House agrees to the message sent from the House of Commons, it was Resolved in the negative, nonne contradicente.

[The King's speech, which follows, takes notice of this matter. L. J., XII. 247.]

"Sir Samuel Barnadiston, Deputy Governor of the East India Company, was brought to the Bar of the House as a delinquent, and having kneeled until the Lord Keeper had him stand up, his Lordship told him there hath been delivered to the Lords a paper, voted by this House to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers, and asked him what he could say for himself, that he was not one of the contrivers of that Paper, which being showed to him, he said he was one of the East India Company, and being alarmed at the proceedings of the Committee about Mr. Skynner's business, the East India Company prepared a petition, which by order of the said Company he did deliver to the House of Commons; but whether the copy now showed unto him was a true copy of it he knows not.

"Next, Sir Andrew Riccard was brought to the Bar as a delinquent, and kneeled until he was bad to stand up. Then the Lord Keeper asked him what he could say for himself that he was not one of the contrivers of that scandalous paper which this House hath voted to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers, or one to that effect. The paper being showed him, he said there were three Petitions in consideration before the Committee of the East India Company concerning Mr. Skynner's business; two of them were framed while he was a Governor, wherein he did act: but unto this petition which was delivered to the House of Commons he gave no concurrence therein nor had anything to do in it.

"He further said he was very sorry he had offended this House, and humbly begged their Lordships' pardon.

"After this Mr. Rowland Wynn was brought to the Bar as a delinquent, and having kneeled until he was bid stand up, the Lord Keeper asked him what he could say for himself, that he was not one of the contrivers of the paper which this House hath voted to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers, or one to that effect. The paper was showed unto him. He said he was no contriver of that paper, nor did go to any Counsel about it, or present it to the House of Commons nor consent to it. He said he was one of the Committee of the East India Company, where the 13th day of April last there was a petition presented to the said Committee concerning Mr. Skynner's business, but he never read, but heard it read in the Committee, and it was directed by the Committee that some amendments should be made therein by Counsel, but afterwards he never saw it nor did anything further in it. He said further he was heartily sorry that he should give this House any offence, and begs their Lordships' pardon.—[Here should have been entered what begins in the latter end of the next page concerning Christopher Boone at the mark*.

"Then Sir Samuel Barnadiston being called to the Bar again, the Lord Keeper asked him what he could say why the Lords assembled in Parliament should not proceed to give judgment against him for contriving the scandalous paper which the Lords have voted to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers, which hath been proved by two witnesses upon oath, and partly proved by his own confession that he had a hand in the contriving of it.

"He said that matters had been misrepresented in this House behind his back. He had no design "against their Lordships' jurisdiction in delivering the petition to the House of Commons; he was commanded to do it. And he is very sorry if he hath offended their Lordships, and begs their Lordships' pardon.

"Hereupon this House upon mature consideration of what hath been proved against Sir Samuel Barnadiston, doth adjudge and declare him to be guilty of the contriving of the scandalous paper voted by this House to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers; and for the same do order and adjudge the said Sir Samuel Barnadiston.—

"1. To pay the sum of three hundred pounds of lawful money of England to the King's Majesty by way of fine.

"2. That he shall stand committed as a prisoner to the safe custody of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod attending this House, and there to remain without bail until he pay the said three hundred pounds.

"Sir Samuel Barnadiston being again called to the bar, and he kneeling, the Lord Keeper pronounced the aforesaid judgment against him in the name of this House.

"Then the House took into consideration what to do with Sir Andrew Riccard. Ordered he should be called in again; and he, kneeling, the Lord Keeper told him that the Lords have considered of his offences, and though he hath not appeared as guilty as others, yet something he hath been found guilty of, for which he is to receive the reprehension of this House, with an admonition for the future: And upon his humble submission that he hath made to this House, and craved pardon for the same, the Lords do remit his offence, and discharge him of his present restraint.

"Also Mr. Rowland Wynn was called in again, and kneeling, the Lord Keeper told him that the Lords have considered of his offence and his answer, and do perceive he hath had a hand in a petition against this House, for which he is to receive the reprehension of this House and an admonition for the future: And their Lordships, upon the good character that hath been given of him, and also his submission which he made to this House, acknowledging his offence and asking pardon for the same, this House doth discharge him from his present restraint.

"* This, which follows concerning Mr. Boone to the word (withdraw) should have been entered in the beginning of the precedent page at this mark.†

"* Next Mr. Christopher Boone was called to the Bar, as a delinquent, and after he had kneeled, being asked what he could to say for himself that he was not one of the contrivers of the scandalous paper which this House hath voted to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers; the said paper being showed him, he by his petition (which was read) denied the offence he stands charged with; and was commanded to withdraw; and House made the order foll.—

"A petition [Calendar 66 (v.),] being read in the House for Mr. Christopher Boone, wherein he denied the offence, the House made this order following:

"Whereas Mr. Christopher Boone, now in the custody of the Sergeant-at-arms attending this House, being this day at the Bar, hath denied the offence whereof he stands accused of having had a hand in the contriving a petition voted to be a scandalous Libel against the House of Peers, which was proved by the testimony of two witnesses, this House having not now time to proceed thereupon; It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, that the said Mr. Christopher Boone shall give bail to the value of two thousand pounds to attend this House on the eleventh day of August next, and be thereupon discharged of his present restraint, paying his fees."

Order committing Sir S. Barnadiston to the custody of Black Rod, until payment of the fine of 300*l*. Orders discharging Sir A. Riccard and Mr. Rowland Wynn from custody.

[The MS. Minutes of 11 Aug. 1668 contain a certificate of "John Walker" that Mr. Boone had duly presented himself and his bail that day to the Lord Keeper, who ordered a memorandum thereof to be made, that Mr. Boone and his bail might not be prejudiced, in that there was no notice taken of his appearance while the House was sitting.]

1669-70. Feb. 22. "The Lord Keeper reported in effect what His Majesty said this morning to both Houses of Parliament in the Banqueting House at Whitehall

"That His Majesty did very earnestly recommend to both Houses the other day, that they would not suffer the differences between themselves to be revived; and he did think it of so great importance that he had sent for them again upon the same subject.

"He said further he remembered very well, that the case of Skinner was first sent by him to the Lords, and therefore he thought himself concerned to offer to both Houses what he did judge the best and safest way to put an end to this difference; and indeed he found no other. His Majesty would himself give present order to raze all the records and entries of the matter both in the Council Books and in the Exchequer, and did desire them to do the like in both Houses, that no memory may remain of this dispute between them. And then His Majesty said he hoped all future apprehensions would be secured.

"For the better debate of this business the House was adjourned into a Committee during pleasure. The House being resumed, the question was put, Whether their Lordships do agree that all the records and entries in this House concerning Skinner's business and the dependencies thereupon be razed. It was resolved in the affirmative."

[The MS. Minutes add that the previous question was first put and carried; and that the Sub-committee for the Journals was ordered to see this vote performed.]

Feb. 23. "Ordered that the Archbishop of York, the Lord Steward of His Majesty's Household, the Lord Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household, the Earl of Berks, Earl of Craven, Bishop of Rochester, Lord Chandos, and the Lord Widdington, or any three of them, are hereby appointed a Committee to see the vote of this House, passed yesterday, put into execution; and are to meet on Friday morning next at eight o'clock, in the Prince's Lodgings, and at such other times as their Lordships shall think fit."

LORD
EMLY.

CORRESPONDENCE AND PAPERS OF EDMUND SEXTEN PERY, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS IN IRELAND FROM 1771 TO 1785.—COLLECTION OF LORD EMLY, TERVOE, COUNTY LIMERICK.

Edmund Sexten Pery was born in 1719 at Limerick, in which town his ancestors had for many generations held important positions. In 1745, he was called to the bar in Ireland, and acquired much reputation as an acute and upright lawyer. He was elected in 1751 to serve in the Parliament of Ireland as one of the representatives for the town of Wicklow.

In the ensuing Parliamentary contest, relative to the appropriation of the surplus in the Irish Exchequer, Pery took the side of Government. He acted as teller for the "Ayes" on the 17th December, 1753, when the vote was taken on the altered Money Bill. The "Patriots," headed by the Speaker, Henry Boyle, and Anthony Malone, Prime Sergeant, carried the rejection of that Bill by a majority of five; Pery is said soon after to have partially quitted the Government Parliamentary ranks.

Some of the proceedings in the Parliament at Dublin, and the election, in April, 1756, of John Ponsonby as Speaker in succession to Boyle, who was created Earl of Shannon, were described as follows, at the time, in letters ascribed to Pery, purporting to have been written by an Armenian to his friends at Trebizond:—

"I went yesterday with my friend to see the manner of doing business in the assembly of the Commons, which, as I told thee, has the care of all the liberty left to this kingdom: After we had waited two hours, an holy priest prayed in their form for a blessing on the work of that day and then retired. The House was very full, but the Chair in the midst of it was empty, which led me to ask who was expected to fill it; that, said my friend, is to be the business of this day; the man who filled that chair these twenty years, quitted it yesterday for an annual bounty of two thousand pounds, and a title of a Lord [Earl of Shannon]. That gift, I said, must be for services which he hath done to the Court: No, answered my friend, but for services done to the people:—Methinks that makes it still more generous, and a great encouragement for men to serve their country. Do not, he said, mistake it for an act of generosity; because he served his country once, the Court gives him this pension that he may never act the like part again: I understand you, said I, and now the people are met to chuse some man who has courage enough to love his country, and yet be poor.

"Before I had finished these words a young man arose, and in words quicker than I could understand, told the House that it was the pleasure of the Governor they should elect a new Speaker, the last being called by his King to the House of Lords. After him arose a grave composed gentleman, whose syllables were not so rapid, and enumerated the qualities necessary for the man who was to fill that Chair, a catalogue of more virtues than I am able to remember, but not more than fill the breast of our venerable Achmet. I was looking around me for some reverend person whom these qualities inhabited, when he pointed to a young man of goodly appearance [John Ponsonby], who sat near to me; I looked on him with admiration, and was still more pleased to find that he declined the honour intended him with a modesty that seemed to make the other virtues ascribed to him more lovely; he thanked the House for the honour which they had done him, confessed himself unequal to the task, and decently desired they would elect a person better qualified for so important a place. This young man, said I, has acquired the love of this House by his sincerity, and justly, since he retains it even when they are courting him with offices of honour; he, who has honesty enough to confess his inability for a great office, will be virtuous in the discharge of that for which he is fitted. Be not hasty to conclude, said my friend; that young man has been soliciting many years, publicly and privately, for this office; and the annual bounty of two thousand pounds was given, not more to remove the late Speaker, than to substitute this man in his place; it is the custom to refuse the offering of this Chair, when it is most desired, and you shall see that young man overjoyed when he is in possession of it, though now with seeming modesty he declines it. What, said I, is it a custom to tell lies in your grand assembly? On these occasions it is.—But if lies are established on some occasions, what security have you that men will speak truth on any occasion, or how do you know when the truth is spoken? We never look, said he, for any security of that kind, for it is not to be had; nor is it possible for us to know when truth is spoken; we expect every day to be deceived, and he who can deceive us with the best grace is sure to rise highest in the State. One of our orators will come into the House, and, with fear and concern for us and our families, inform us that he has received intelligence that all the troops of France are on their shore embarking for this Island, and unless our forts are put into a state of defence, we and our children will in a few days be no more. When he has got all the money we have, the French are no more heard of, and our forts are left defenceless as ever. That quick speaking man [Henry Courtenay, Esq.] who rose first to-day has been employed several times to frighten us out of our senses and our money, and has always succeeded.—How?—When a man has deceived you once do you believe him a second time?—What can we do? A Secretary will tell us he has received secret intelligence from England, if we do not believe it, he will represent us as disobedient and factious; if we do believe it, he will in consequence thereof ask us for our money.

"How blessed, Abdallah, are the sons of the Prophet, whose manners are simple and whose language is the truth.

"I was induced to go a second time to the House of Commons, having before seen nothing but form, and heard nothing that was true. Some important business was expected to employ that day, and my friend promised me that I should hear learned speakers, a promise which was sufficient to carry me much farther than the remotest part of this city is from my dwelling. I had scarce seated myself in the gallery of the House, when a middle-aged man [Robert French] arose, and with a becoming solemnity, talked of the great happiness of having a Constitution, by which the powers of the King, the Nobles, and the Commons were so properly balanced, that one could not infringe the rights of the other; by which the people had free access to the Prince for redress of evils, and the Prince to his people for subsidies to support his Government; that he apprehended the Constitution under which he lived was such, and, while he found it so in effect, he would be content and happy; but while another body, distinct from the three estates, assumed a power superior to theirs, and rendered their acts invalid, which he feared had been lately done by the Privy Council, he could not think himself under a free Constitution, and under any other Constitution he could not be content. Therefore, that it might appear, whether the Council had exercised a power superior to that of the King, the Lords, and the Commons, he proposed that the proper clerks should lay before that House all the bills sent by the Commons to the Council, and the bills sent by the Council to the King, by which means it would be known, whether the King had seen the grievances of his people or not.—Immediately up rose [Anthony Malone], a grave, manly figure, with wisdom and dignity in his aspect; the silence and attention of the House seemed to proclaim him the champion of whatever cause he undertook; he explained with great simplicity and majesty of words the Constitution of this kingdom, exposed the weakness of those who thought that all power was in the three estates, or that it ought to be in them; he shewed that the Council was the most essential part of this Constitution and deserved to have the greatest power, as the members of it are sworn to do justice; and that it was little less than a capital crime to attempt to take this power from them. In the conclusion he proved, with great eloquence and strength of assertion, that the King in his Privy Council was absolute, as our mighty emperor in his Divan.—While he spoke, I thought I was at Constantinople, and was going to prostrate myself before him, for maintaining the justice of our government; surely, I said, Mahomet is great and his religion shall prevail.—But a young man arose, and with sedateness, mixed with a species of wit, which they call irony, so confuted and ridiculed what the other had said, that he soon convinced me I was in another country, and under different laws from those of the East. Tho' the former had spoken wisely, yet the young man seemed to have spoken more pleasingly, for almost the whole House assented to what he said, and when the voices were to be taken on each side of the question, even the grave man, whom I was going to reverence, appeared in a few minutes entirely of another mind. What, said I, is it usual for men of his age and wisdom so quickly to change their sentiments of such important matters? You see, answered my friend, the force of truth, when it comes upon men unprepared, unschooled, they cannot resist it: This question was sudden and unexpected, and the justice of the young man's assertions so evident, that all the eloquence of that grave pleader, unassisted by other arts, could not prevail against them: He, who in the last session of Parliament was the idol of the people, whose image was revered, who led the nation by his voice, and the power of truth, is so weak when he opposes a young man, pleading for his country's freedom, that he cannot lead a single senator, and to avoid the shame of standing alone against the rest of the House, joins with them and hides his confusion in the crowd."

The following elaborate and hitherto apparently unknown historical statement, embodying details not elsewhere recorded, in connexion with the conductors of Government in Ireland, was addressed, in the form of a letter, by Pery to the Duke of Bedford, about the period of his appointment as Lord Lieutenant in 1757:

"My Lord, This letter is addressed to your Grace by one, who has not, nor ever expects to have, the honor of being known to you, by one who is not tempted to this undertaking by any prospect of preferment, or instigated to it by an aversion from or an attachment to any party. His intention is to give your Grace a clear and just idea of the present state of parties in this kingdom, and by that means to warn your Grace of the dangers to which you and the kingdom are exposed from the intrigues of ambitious men. His only motive is the advantage which may result to the public from a wise, impartial, and virtuous administration; if this letter can in any sort promote that good end, the design of the writer will be fully answered.

"This kingdom had for several years been governed by a Cabal of a few private men, whose views were very different, but who all agreed in this that the Chief Governor should not be permitted to interfere in the domestic administration of the kingdom.

"They had established their power among the Commons principally by two methods, the appointment of sheriffs and the conferring of militia titles, the one as infamous as the other is ridiculous. By the former the power of oppression was lodged in the hands of those who could seek it only for wicked purposes. By the latter they flattered the vanity of weak men, who being incapable of deserving any real honors were satisfied with imaginary ones.

"By these arts the Cabal ruled the Lower House of Parliament without control for I cannot call the feeble efforts of a few men without spirit or abilities an opposition. At length their power became so formidable that into their hands the successive Lords Lieutenants were obliged to remit the whole authority of the State, and they in return undertook (for that was the phrase of the times, and these men were from thence called Undertakers) to do what was called the King's business, which was no more than procuring the supplies which were thought proper to be demanded by the English Minister, and to prevent the Parliament from examining into the accounts of the preceding years.

"It is true some of the Lord Lieutenants submitted with unwillingness to the disgrace of acting such a part, but what could they do? There was no other power to which they could resort for support, most of them were appointed to the Government to repair their shattered fortunes, and all of them had rapacious secretaries and servants, who could not fleece the people but under the protection of the Cabal.

"In this situation were affairs when Dr. Stone,* in the prime of his youth, was promoted to the Primacy, a station to which none before him had been exalted but in the decline of life.

"The Cabal were surprised but not offended at the promotion of this gentleman, with whom they were well acquainted, but from whose capacity they had no apprehensions of danger.

"It is not to be wondered at that the rapid success of this young Prelate, now at the head not only of the Church but of the State, should soon inspire him with motives and the Cabal with suspicions each had hitherto been strangers to; but it was some time before they discovered his ambitious views through the veil of moderation, youthful entertainments and connections; his courtesy, affability, and hospitable table recommended him to everybody, and the Cabal were not alarmed at his growing popularity, so long as he pretended not to interfere in the business of the House of Commons.

"By degrees this young statesman insinuated himself into the affections of many of the young and some of the old members of the House of Commons; he privately encouraged the murmurs of the people against the Cabal, and secretly supported a faint opposition to their measures in the House; as he found his strength increase daily, he ventured to open his intention of forming a party in the House, at first to a few, and being encouraged by them, to all whom he had any hopes of drawing to his party.

"These attempts to undermine the power of the Cabal could not long remain concealed from the penetrating eyes of these experienced veterans, and their indignation, which soon broke out into action, convinced the young adventurer that his schemes were discovered.

"It could then answer no purpose to keep further measures with the Cabal, the mask was thrown off, war was proclaimed in form between the contending powers, and a standard was publicly erected to which all who expected preferment in the Church or State, or were disgusted at the proceedings of the Cabal, of which there were not a few, might resort.

"But there were several things which hastened this event before it was yet ripe for execution.

"Carter,† who was then Master of the Rolls, and aged and infirm (though it is suspected he was not so much as he affected to appear), applied to the Primate (over whom he vainly fancied he had such influence that he could not refuse him anything) to procure a grant of the reversion of that office for his son; but the Primate, who had already swallowed that profitable office in his imagination, thinking the Master much nearer his end than by fatal experience he found him to be, with more clearness than is usual in a statesman, but which in him is excusable as he has never since laid himself open to the same objection, absolutely refused to comply with his request.

"Enraged at this disappointment, the Master, whose experience or age have not yet subdued his passions, vowed vengeance (and upon such occasions his veracity is never to be doubted) against the Primate; his only hopes were in the Cabal, of which he himself was a member, but he in vain endeavoured to stir them up to action. There were two things which principally restrained them. The Speaker, who was the first name, though not the principal person, of the Cabal, being advanced in years and tired of business, had for some time before formed a design of retiring, provided he could do it with honour and profit. This he hoped to effect by the assistance of the Primate, and therefore was unwilling to break with him. Upon the same principle, Mr. Malone‡, without whom the Cabal dare not stir, was immovable. He had for some time observed with pleasure the declining state of Carter's health, upon whose office he had fixed his eye, and found a secret satisfaction at Carter's disappointment, making no doubt that it was for his sake the Primate had rejected Carter's suit, for he had not yet the least suspicion that the Primate would venture to act without him, much less against him, he had also formed a scheme of procuring the Solicitor-General's place for his brother, which the Primate, when Bishop of Derry, had promised him. These motives for some time kept Mr. Malone, and consequently the Cabal, quiet.

"The Primate's views were very different, he grasped at no less than the whole power of the State; but above all he had a mighty desire to be thought a man of business, of which he was not incapable. He acted the statesman in everything, it is said sometimes even at the expense of his sincerity.

"Mr. Malone's carriage towards him gave him much offence. The consciousness of his superior talents made him untractable and overbearing in business, and [made him] treat the understandings of others with contempt.

"This was not a man for his purpose. The man for his purpose must be one whose abilities should not eclipse his own, one not fettered by the rigid rules of morality, in short one who should act whatever he should be commanded.

"In these respects, he could not chuse a person more suitable to his purpose than Mr. Tisdal,* who at that time was making the closest application to him for the Solicitor's place. The only difficulty which stood in the way of his promotion was the promise made by the Primate to Mr. Malone. But that was easily surmounted by the same prelatial distinction which persuaded Charles the First to consent to the execution of Lord Strafford. 'At the time he made the promise he was' but Bishop of Derry, and in a private station. His 'affection to Mr. Malone in his private capacity had' induced him to make that promise; but now he was 'at the head of the State he was to consider himself' in his public character, in which he ought to be 'actuated by his affection to the public and not to' individuals, and ought not to be governed, and was 'therefore bound in conscience to break that promise' which he had made without any view to the public, and thus for conscience sake Mr. Tisdal was made Solicitor-General.

"This step being taken, it was plain the Primate intended to keep no measures with Mr. Malone, who in truth was become the object of his hatred.

"The Master's place, which the Primate knew to be the principal object of Mr. Malone's ambition, and therefore had held in his view to keep him quiet, was now promised to Mr. Ponsonby, though it is suspected that it was not intended [for him any] more than for Mr. Malone.

"The Earl of Beshborough, beholding with an envious eye the profits which the Cabal daily drew from their influence in the Lower House, had long labored to establish an interest there in opposition to that of the Cabal; but he had been hitherto baffled by their superior subtlety and power.

"An opportunity now offered of forming a connection by which he hoped to effect his purpose. Agreements are soon concluded between parties whose mutual interest it is to be united. Reciprocal vows of perpetual friendship passed between him and the Primate. All efforts were to be made to place Mr. Ponsonby in the Chair of the House of Commons, and by that means to give him a share in the Government, which, when effected, everything would be at his and the Primate's absolute disposal.

"It must not be supposed that motives of friendship were the bond of this union. The Earl was too far advanced in years, and too much experienced in life, to depend upon so weak a support. The Primate was too much of a statesman to be held by such feeble ties.

"The former, thinking the latter more attentive to power than to riches, fed himself with the hopes of drawing all the profits of this union to himself. The latter, inordinately ambitious of power, made no doubt of governing the intended Speaker (of whose incapacity and levity he had sufficient experience) as he pleased, and by that means of getting the whole power of the State into his own hands.

"To make way for the intended advancement of Mr. Ponsonby, it was necessary to render the Chair of the House of Commons uneasy to the Speaker. This it was thought would make him desirous to quit it, and lower his terms for doing so.

"The Speaker was no longer taken into consultation at the Castle, except for form sake, when everything had been previously resolved, and there was an affectation of carrying on all the public business without his assistance or even interposition.

"A report was also industriously spread about at this time that a secret treaty was carried on between the Castle and him about the resignation of the Chair. This was done for two purposes: to sound his intentions upon that subject, and to create a jealousy of him in his friends; but it had a very different effect from what the young politician expected.

"Enraged at these indignities, the Speaker summoned all his friends together, assured them that he had never entertained the least thoughts of quitting the Chair, showed them with what views that report had been spread, and laid open the whole plan of those who had conspired against him.

"Carter, who had lain by for some time, under pretence of age and infirmities, thought it was now high time for him to appear upon the stage; but though he did not do it sooner, he had not been in the meantime unemployed.

"Knowing (though not from his own experience) of what consequence the character of integrity and virtue is even to a statesman, and that there is no surer method of destroying the man than by destroying his character, he with great industry and secrecy spread about libels against him, representing him not only as devoid of all principles of religion and honor but even as a monster swayed by unnatural appetites; to the first of these charges it must be confessed he gave some countenance by a conduct perhaps a little too free for a person at the head of his profession, having had a liberal education himself and having always lived with those who had he could not confine himself within the narrow limits of his episcopal function. There was perhaps more foundation for the second of those charges than for any other. He was not always as cautious in his promises as prudence required; but even if he did not promise, his answers from a fear of offending, and a desire of uniting every body to him, were expressed in such a manner as drew in the persons to whom they were given to guess at more than he meant—a practice often used by statesmen, but which seems as little agreeable to good policy as it is to morality. By this means every body, it is true, left him contented, and assured of his friendship; but then they construed all his expressions of kindness into so many promises of what they solicited: it is not then to be wondered at that he should be charged with many breaches of faith, and that the truth of those libels in that particular should be attested by many. To the last abominable charge his virtue gave rise, whether from a coldness in his constitution, or what is more probable, out of respect to his episcopal character, he totally abstained from women. It is not surprising that, in a country which piques itself upon its attachment to the fair, this should be taken notice of and become the subject of conversation. His enemies laid hold of this opportunity to blacken his character with a vice the more easily credited the more abominable, and to which some of his connexions, for which people could not account, did not a little contribute.

"By these acts, in which Carter was afterwards assisted by the Cabal—at length united against the Primate by their late disappointments, for their common interest accommodated their present union—the nation was inflamed, the most scandalous pamphlets were daily published unpunished, and the Primate was at length rendered the most odious man in the kingdom.

"A little before this period, the Duke of Dorset had [in 1781] been appointed to the Government of this kingdom. Of him it was well known the Primate had the entire possession, and to whom principally he owed his promotion; and there was no expectation that the Cabal could during his administration recover their influence over the Castle, but by exerting their power in some signal instance, and shewing that none could act with safety but under their protection.

"For this purpose they could not fix upon a more proper subject than Nevil Jones, whose haughty carriage had made him many enemies. Through his hands, as Surveyor-General, much of the public money had passed, most of the barracks had been fraudulently, and all of them unskillfully, executed. Mr. Nevil himself was generally reputed an honest man, but his ignorance and self-sufficiency rendered him the dupe of every man he dealt with, by which the public had been great sufferers; and it was therefore thought a popular object of enquiry. But what principally determine the Cabal against this unhappy victim was his connection with the Primate (by whose interest principally he had been brought into Parliament), and his being related to the Primate's first favorite.

"As had been foreseen by the Cabal, the Primate, unfortunately for Nevil as well as for himself, undertook his defence. This only served to draw on a stricter enquiry and a severer punishment upon the latter, and to render the former unpopular by endeavouring to screen the guilty from public justice. But the Cabal did not as yet determine to proceed to extremities. The two principal members of it were still desirous of leaving room for a reconciliation upon advantageous terms for themselves. They meant not to make things desperate, but only to shew what they could do if they should be reduced to extremities.

"For that reason this prosecution, in which the expectation of the public was much engaged, ended for the present in several severe but (as was even then thought by most) hard resolutions against the wretched Nevil. The Cabal, however, were determined not to part with him thus easily, by a resolution that Mr. Nevil should make good the contents at his own expense, they reserved a power to themselves of resuming this affair at any future time, as occasion should require.

"The Primate, who was more apprehensive of Mr. Nevil's expulsion than solicitous for the character of his friend, submitted without opposition to resolutions he in truth had not strength to prevent, and exulted as upon a victory that matters had not been pushed farther.

"The Cabal were not satisfied with this single instance of their own power and the Primate's weakness. The Commons in an address to His Majesty, for which there did not seem to be the least public occasion, glanced at the Primate in a manner that could not be mistaken, and at the conclusion of the session took their leave of the Duke of Dorset with unusual coldness.

"The Primate, though mortified, was still happy that he had got over the sessions with so few disasters, and made no doubt but that before the next meeting of Parliament he should gather strength sufficient not only to resist but to overpower the Cabal.

"The Primate was now vested with the whole power of the State. Unavowed by Parliament, he governed the Church and State without control.

"But, notwithstanding all these advantages, contrary to his own and the expectations of others, he gained but little strength. The Cabal counteracted everything he did, and with infinite industry and malice painted him in the most odious colours to the people.

"To the Presbyterians, ever jealous of ecclesiastical power, the Cabal paid much court, and by means of one Bruce, who had gained an unaccountable influence over that sect, drew them to their party.

"Mr. Malone was the person the most respected and entrusted by the Papists of any in the kingdom. He directed their counsels and supported their interests, even publicly when occasion required. Thro' him the whole strength of that body was united to the Cabal.

"They likewise drew into their party, and seemingly into their confidence, the Earl of Kildare,* a nobleman of the first rank and fortune in the kingdom, whose family had long been much respected by the people, and who had himself received a personal disobligation from the Primate, whose intrigues had not long before prevented him from being admitted to a share in the Government to which he had aspired. The name of this nobleman drew much respect, and his connexions in England added much strength to the party.

"During this time the Primate made not those advantages of his power which might have been expected.

"He advanced into his confidence men of moderate abilities and less reputation, whose chief recommendation was the betraying the secrets of professed friends, and an abject resignation to his will. He rewarded the best services with receiving them ignominiously, and his regards were still more turned towards those who were likely to do than those who had done services,—a common mistake of statesmen. It must be confessed he sometimes sacrificed his affections to the superior motives of interest. He was accessible and courteous to all, but then his civilities were not proportioned to the persons, and were therefore the less regarded. But what principally offended several good men, who were well inclined to him, was that he often affected to talk too lightly of the Constitution, and with some ridicule of public spirit. By these means he rendered some of those who were most capable of serving him at least Inkewarm in, if not totally regardless of, his interest; and whilst he made but slender acquisitions upon his adversaries, and those at immoderate expense, offers injudiciously made and haughtily rejected, lessened the opinion of his powers as it increased that of the party.

"What wonderfully recommended the Cabal to the public, in a country where drinking is the prevailing vice and principal occupation, was the extraordinary abilities of its members in that strange qualification. So agreeable and so suited to the taste of the people was this vice, that Mr. Malone was not more respected for his talents in the Senate than for those at the table, though his constitution was too phlegmatic to contribute much to the entertainment of society, but this was amply made up by the wit, vivacity, and archness of Carter, to which his figure, the picture of Heracles ridens, did not a little contribute.

"To him is ascribed the ingenious invention of conveying libels in toasts, of which such wonderful use was afterwards made. Thus, drinking answered two purposes, it united the company and sharpened the wit or malice of the individuals against the common enemy; and these toasts, with great additions, were soon afterwards published in newspapers and dispersed thro' the kingdom.

"As the revenues of the kingdom were considerably increased by vast importations of foreign commodities, and a great redundancy in the Treasury, fears were industriously instilled into the minds of the people that an attempt was to be made the following session of send all this treasure out of the kingdom, which was to be only a prelude to some attack upon their liberties.

As the time of opening the session approached, the spirits of the Cabal, or rather of the people, for now they were one, rose higher, and the spirits of the Primate and his party became more depressed.

"The Primate was so apprehensive of danger that he took some steps towards accommodation, but which served only to inflame matters more.

"At length the wished for time arrived. The session was opened, but not with that warmth or vigor which was expected, and in truth intended till the day before the meeting. The Cabal grew doubtful of success. A defeat might be fatal, and therefore it was thought more prudent to try their strength upon ground they had already tried with success. The favourite prosecution was again revived, and Nevil, after several unsuccessful attempts in his favour, expelled, but by a small majority.

"This victory was, however, far from being decisive. The Cabal saw with concern their strength was not so much superior as they had represented it, and in truth believed it to be, and thought it expedient not to push matters further then, but to wait for some favourable opportunity which time might offer.

"The strength of both parties, as by mutual consent, was tried upon an election victory (to which accident did not a little contribute) declared for the Primate, and gave to the House a member who is an honour to it,—Mr. Brownlow.

"This was the first defeat of the kind the Cabal had ever met with. This was attacking the very foundation of all their greatness, and disclosing to the people their weakness notwithstanding their boasted strength.

"Something must done to repair this loss. The bolder it should be the more likely to please the people. Extremities are always dangerous, but they are wise measures when they are necessary. If the Primate should be able to hold out that session, his success would be infallible. The interval between the sessions would give him, who was armed with all the powers of Government, sufficient time to establish himself, and put it out of their power ever to remove him; besides most of their troops were necessitous and must feed. The Cabal were but little able to support those expenses, which they found even then very grievous to them and submitted to only from necessity; but they were necessary and therefore submitted to.

"From these motives, it was resolved by the Cabal to start a question about prerogative, in which they were sure to have the people on their side. The majority of the Committee appointed, according to the ordinary course of proceeding, to draw up heads of a Bill for applying part of the redundant money in the Treasury towards payment of the remainder of the National Debt were either members of the Cabal or under its influence; so they had it in their power to make such report to the House as they thought proper.

"There had been some grumbling the preceding sessions about a preamble which had been inserted by some of His Majesty's principal officers in Great Britain in heads of a Bill sent over for the like purpose; but that Bill, notwithstanding such amendment, had passed without a negative, as the Cabal were not at that time reduced to such extremities as at present, and for permitting which they were much condemned by the public. They had it now in their power to repair that step, and accordingly reported the heads of this Bill to the House without such preamble, foreseeing that it must become the subject of a future debate.

"The Primate upon this occasion summoned a few of those he most depended upon to consult what was to be done.

"The only question was whether an attempt should be made, upon the report of these heads of a Bill to the House, to insert the preamble by way of amendment, or whether to let it pass in the shape it was brought in and leave the amendment to be made at the other side of the water.

"The latter of these was followed for these reasons.

When the amendment should be made at the other side of the water and the Bill returned, the Cabal must be reduced to this dilemma, either they must pass the Bill with the amendment, by which they must inevitably lose all their interest and esteem with the people; or by opposing it forfeit their employments, which they held during the pleasure of the Crown, and which, if they should be so desperate, the Primate hoped afterwards to turn to good account.

"But though this resolution was pursued, and had the immediate effects which had been foreseen, yet it produced in the end very different consequences from what he who advised it expected.

"The Bill, though attended by a letter to the Privy Council, signed by most of the officers of State of Great Britain, and ordered to be registered in [the] Council Books, that it was a point of prerogative from which His Majesty would never depart, was rejected by the Commons by a majority of five.

"This was followed in a few days by an Act (till this time unheard of in this kingdom) the most unconstitutional as well as the most dangerous which could be attempted, the removal of four of the Cabal from their employments, for their behaviour in Parliament.

"Exalted by this disgrace they became the idols of the people, and were adored as their protectors and as martyrs for their liberties.

"In this temper, it was dangerous to let the Commons, who had been adjourned for a few days, meet. The Parliament was suddenly prorogued, and by that means several Bills, equally useful to the Crown as to the subject, fell to the ground.

"The Primate was considered as the author of all these measures, and detested as the most infamous tyrant.

"Despairing to gain the affections of the people, he determined to awe them into subjection by still more violent measures.

"He pressed the Duke of Dorset to remove all who had opposed him from their employments, but he had not courage or vigor of mind for such an undertaking. He dreaded the tumults of the people. Every shout of the mob threw him into panics. He would not venture to incense them more by new sacrifices, but promised to do whatever should be desired of him as soon as he should be out of danger and landed in England, which he wished for with the utmost impatience.

"In the meantime, the Primate used every expedient of reasons, menaces, and promises, to break their obstinacy.

"In the meantime, several attempts were made by the Primate to corrupt the affections of those who had opposed his power towards the Cabal. But in vain. Threats would not terrify those who had so bold an example set them, and were so sure of being protected by the people. Rewards could not seduce those who foresaw the downfall of the Primate, and expected much greater and more permanent from the exaltation of the Cabal, which they looked upon as certain. But what principally kept these men steady was the resentment of the people, of which they were sensible they should become the objects, if they became apostates from those principles now equally dear to them as those of their religion; the dishonor as well as distrust attending renegades made them resolve at all hazards to adhere to the party.

"The injudicious filling of the vacant employments, in which the Primate shewed more inclination to gall his adversaries than attention to serve himself, made the wounds much deeper.

"Upon this principle alone the advancement of Mr. Hill* to the Chancery of the Exchequer can be accounted for.

"Mr. Singleton† was equally obnoxious to the person he was appointed to succeed, but what contributed most to his promotion was that it was not then expected he could live many months; and so the office would again be at the disposal of the Primate, who had another in his eye for it.

"Mr. Stannard, a man of more vanity than ambition, was prevailed upon to undergo the odium of succeeding to Mr. Malone, by being told that His Majesty had himself nominated him to that office, and that he insisted upon his accepting of it, to oblige him.‡

"By these promotions no new strength was acquired, or old confirmed. The first shewed what kind of merit would have most weight with the Primate, if his power came to be established. The two others, whose understanding had been much impaired by years and labor, were put into those employments only for the present, that their names might sanctify the action.

"As the Primate every day became more odious, so all who opposed him became more popular; for, in such times, it is not difficult for those who are ill at Court to gain the character of merit. It was with the utmost difficulty that the Duke of Dorset, under the protection of his guards, and a mob hired and made drunk for the purpose by a man who was amply rewarded by a pension on the public for his merit in that way, escaped out of the kingdom. All expedients were then tried by the Primate. But in vain. The wounds were too deep to be healed by common remedies. The clamors of the people at length became so outrageous that the Constitution itself became threatened with some convulsion. The Duke of Dorset was removed from the Government, and the Marquess of H.§ appointed to it.

"The Earl of Bessborough, whose natural sagacity is much improved by the lights of experience, invariably attentive to his own interest, had a long time before foreseen the downfall of the Primate and determined not to be buried in his ruins. He made the best use he could of the Primate's power, so long as it lasted, to enrich himself and establish his family interest, perpetually complaining and expressing jealousies if anything was refused him; and the Primate was generally obliged to comply, for fear of being suspected of intending, what in truth he wished, to form a separate party; but to carry on this farce the better, though it is impossible that either could be a stranger to the intentions of the other, every body who was promoted either in Church or State took the oaths of allegiance to both, as if their union was indissoluble.

"Nothing could be more favourable to the politics of this sagacious Earl than the appointment of the Marquess of H., through whom he hoped to reconcile himself to the Cabal, by whose assistance he expected to raise his son to the Chair of the House of Commons, though they had been the very persons who had inflamed the nation against him and his family, whose downfall they had sworn to.

"The spirits of the Cabal were much raised not only by the victory they had now gained over the Duke of Dorset, but by the appointment of the Marquess of H., justly supposed to be under the influence of Mr. Fox, by whose intrigues he had been appointed. Through him, and by means of the Earl of Kildare, a treaty was carried on, and, it is generally believed, concluded, between the Lord Lieutenant and two of the members of the Cabal, before his arrival in this kingdom. To this treaty the Earl of Bessborough was certainly privy and probably consenting; but, to remove all suspicions, he renewed all his engagements with the Primate, and most solemnly protested he would stand or fall with him, adding to his vows a flood of tears, which he had at command, as a proof of his sincerity.

"This treaty was kept as secret as possible. It was the interest of all the parties concerned that it should be so. The divulging it would defeat the ends proposed by each. At length the Lord Lieutenant arrived. Everyone hastened to pay their court to the new Governor, and to watch his motions.

"His Majesty's first servant received graciously, talked to, and caressed those who had most violently opposed his predecessor; whilst he treated with coldness and even contempt those who had courageously withstood the popular current, in defence of those rights which His Majesty had most solemnly and most publicly declared he would never depart from, a policy that did not seem to suit well either with the interest or the honor of his Master, though possibly some present advantage might be reaped from it.

"It is not surprising that this conduct should be suspected. It appeared to those who had been in opposition as a feint only to amuse them, whilst his intentions, to which they did not doubt his actions would correspond, were to favor his own family, with whom they supposed the Primate inseparably connected. In these suspicions they were confirmed even by those of the Cabal who were in the secret, and to conceal what was intended the better, they encouraged the grossest abuse against the family of the Ponsonlys.

"On the other hand, the Primate persuaded his friends, and possibly was so persuaded himself, that the Lord Lieutenant's intention was only to gratify the Cabal for the present, by that means to break and disunite the party, which he should no sooner have done than he would take those by the hand whom at present he was obliged to discontinue, for fear of discovering his design. In this belief, and under this dishonorable treatment, the Primate's friends rested, quite satisfied that he would from time to time give them notice of the real situation of affairs.

"The Cabal, in the meantime, fermented the clamor against the Primate. Nothing was talked of but impeachments and expulsions.

"This answered two purposes. It prevented the public from suspecting what was really intended, and terrified the Primate.

"The leaders of the Cabal well knew he would rest contented with the loss of his power, happy if they stopped there; such is the condition of the most innocent statesman, that his actions cannot bear the right.

"The Lord Lieutenant, on the other hand, assured the Primate of his friendship and protection; told him he had with great difficulty prevailed on the Cabal to consent to drop the violent measures which they had intended against him, provided he would submit to their power, and keep his friends quiet; that, for his part, he was obliged to yield to the fury of the times and countenance men whom he detested; that as soon as their party was broke, which he could effect only by compliance, he should be at liberty to restore the Primate to his former power, which would be increased instead of lessened by his fall.

"It was in vain for the Primate to struggle. Besides the danger to which he should expose him, it would discover his weakness to the public; for his boasted strength was in truth made up principally of placemen and pensioners, men dependent on the Court, who were too fond of their places to part with them upon mere principles of gratitude.

"The Primate therefore thought it advisable to yield with a good grace, and accordingly promised to support all the Lord Lieutenant's measures, which he accordingly did with (as was thought by some) more zeal than was necessary, or perhaps prudence.

"The situation, however, of the Primate with respect to some of his friends was delicate. If he should inform them of what he had agreed to, it would endanger the secret, and perhaps, after all, they might not submit to act so dishonorable a part. On the other hand, he ran the risk, by concealing it, of losing their affections, if they should afterwards discover it.

"At length he determined to trust to his dexterity (in which, it must be allowed, he excelled) in amusing them. He affected to be very open, to tell them all that passed between the Lord Lieutenant and him; that the demands of the Cabal were so high, it would be impossible for the Lord Lieutenant to comply with them, and [he] would at last be obliged to recur to the old interest, to which he was much inclined, but was desirous first to try every expedient to bring about a reconciliation, which he knew would be impracticable; that, for his part, he was determined not to enter into any measures without the knowledge and concurrence of his friends, and in the advantages of which they should not be included; that he would stand or fall with them; and that he was ready to pursue any measures they should agree upon, let the dangers to himself be what they might. At times, he said, he found the Lord Lieutenant more reserved, at others more communicative, in proportion as the Cabal was more or less tractable; that in his opinion it was better to wait the issue of the affair with patience than to embark precipitately upon measures which might throw the Lord Lieutenant entirely into the hands of the Cabal.

"Thus, most of the Primate's friends were amused and prevented from taking those steps, which might at least have secured them from the disgraces they afterwards suffered.

"The session of Parliament drew near. The Primate must take some part. The day before he summoned his friends together, not to inform but to keep them in the dark. He said the time was not yet come when vigorous measures were to be attempted; that to oppose would be to act inconsistent with themselves, who have hitherto supported Government measures; that it would be in vain, as the Cabal had sufficient strength to overpower them; that, if they opposed, the Cabal would have the sole merit of doing the business; but that, by concurring in the measures, they would share the merit with the Cabal; that he was confident as soon as the King's business was done, all fears from the Cabal would be over; the Lord Lieutenant would take part with them, whom at present he was obliged to discontinue.

"While the Primate thus lulled his friends to rest, Mr. Malone and the Speaker were not less industrious to engage their party in pursuits which might divert their thoughts from others which they dreaded.

They had, as has been said before, concluded a separate treaty with the Lord Lieutenant, in which they had consulted nothing but their own interest. It was necessary that something further should be done for some of those who had acted with them, to prevent the general clamour which would arise against them.

"What was expected by everybody, and indeed was reasonable, was that the displaced members should be restored to their employments; but that would not answer the scheme of Mr. Malone, who had never lost sight of the Master's place. Carter, grown vigorous and, as it were, young, from his activity, seemed to promise as long a life as Mr. Malone's. Singleton, old, infirm, and worn out, seemed ready to drop into his grave. For this reason, Mr. Malone privately prevailed upon Lord Lieutenant to propose giving Carter the Secretary's place, which was vacant by the death of Mr. Southwell, with an additional salary, which seemed something like an equivalent for the place which was taken from him, telling the Lord Lieutenant, at the same time, that "it was enough for the fellow." Carter by no means liked the proposal, but being told by the Speaker and Mr. Malone, to whose honor he had been so incantious as to entrust the conduct of the treaty, that better terms could not be had for him, he perceived clearly that they had made their own bargain, and that he must be contented with what they pleased to assign him. Thus was the principal and most useful engine of the faction rewarded for his services. However sensible he was of the affront, he accepted* what was offered with a good grace, resolved to take the first opportunity, which he did not think very distant, of revenge. But in this he was also overreached by the same friends who had treated him too ill to have any confidence in him. He was sensible that they had made the most advantageous terms for themselves: in return for which he made no doubt they were to do some signal service for the Lord Lieutenant, and that, he was satisfied, was to place Mr. Ponsonby in the Speaker's chair. But, though he believed they had agreed upon this measure, he did not think they would venture to attempt carrying it into execution without imparting it to him. In this he was also deceived.

"Nothing remained now but to keep up some appearances with the public. Impeachments and expulsions had been talked of, but these were now represented as too violent measures. It was sufficient to deprive the enemies of their liberties of the power of making any further attempt upon them. It had been expected that at least the privilege of the people, with respect to the disposal of the public money, in opposition to the prerogative which had been insisted upon, the last session, and had inflamed the people almost to acts of rebellion, would have been fully and explicitly vindicated by these patrons of liberty, who had now no longer any to oppose them. But this they thought had been sufficiently done by rejecting the Bill; it was not prudent to push things too far; His Majesty had condescended to remove the persons, who had advised those measures, from all power, and would restore those whom he had displaced, which was implicitly acknowledging the privilege of the people. Besides, the Lord Lieutenant, who had declared privately his opinion with them, had assured them that it was a point that should never again be stirred (and it must be acknowledged that if all his promises could have been executed, there never could be any occasion for such a question at any future time).

An address was prepared by the Cabal, containing a few reflections upon the last Lord Lieutenant, to gratify the people, and many encomiums upon the present, to gratify him. But so mean were they that to their everlasting disgrace, they consented to send it to England to be approved of there before it should be moved in Parliament.

"This measure was agreed upon but a few days before the meeting of the Parliament. The return of the messengers (for many were sent different ways for fear of accidents and for greater despatch) was expected by the Lord Lieutenant with the utmost impatience. Luckily (for otherwise the Parliament must have been prorogued for a few days) this important address arrived with a few alterations, to which the Cabal with equal servility immediately agreed.

"At length the Parliament [assembled,] and the address passed without a single negative. One gentleman only expressed his indignation that an address framed in private by a few designing men should be crammed down the throats of the nation. It may seem extraordinary that the storm which had been conjured up to such a height should with such ease be laid, but it may be easily accounted for, without attributing to the Cabal any extraordinary influence, or to the Lieutenant any uncommon dexterity. The safety of the Primate depended upon the silence of his friends, and their bearing with patience the indignities with which they were treated. This he had the address to reconcile them to. The exaltation of the Bestborough family depended upon the success of those measures, and therefore their whole power was exerted to support them. The Speaker and Mr. Malone were gratified in everything that they desired, and had not yet lost the confidence of the people, who were as yet ignorant of the infamous treaty they had concluded. The members who had been used to fight under their banners, and had heard them make such professions of patriotism, could not think they would so soon change those principles for private advantages, and doubted not but that something would yet be done for the public, but that some concessions were necessary to be made in order to appease the storm which became dangerous by its violence. However, there were not a few who saw the game that was playing, but not having any leader, and fearing to appear in a small body, the constant terror of weak minds, dare not give the least opposition. In this disposition of minds, it is not surprising that the Castle business should be carried on without the least difficulty. Notwithstanding the immense sums in the Treasury, the same taxes were continued, and nothing which had the least opposition to the Court would be hearkened to. Some things, which were of use to the country, were attempted, but in vain. Had Mr. Malone had the least spark of that patriotism for which he had been extolled, this was the time for him to have shewed it, nothing could have been refused him. But he privately discouraged, embarrassed, and opposed every measure which could be of the least service to the public, and yet had not courage to do it openly.

"To employ the minds of the public, and draw off their attention from the game that was playing, elections were carried on with the most violent spirit of party, and after the greatest part of the session had been thus wasted, the plot was ripe for execution. Mr. Ponsonby solicited votes for the Chair. The Speaker's intention of resigning was publicly declared. The unfortunate Sir Arthur Gore* was the last person that heard of it. Flustered at the news, he ran to Mr. Malone, who, prepared to receive him, told him he was ready to give him his assistance, but said he was sure it would answer no purpose, and recommended it to him to make a compliment of his pretensions to the Lord Lieutenant, which without further consultation he immediately did; and thus the poor knight was persuaded to resign his pretensions, by the same persons, with the same facility and weakness with which he had been at first persuaded to aspire to it, and exposed himself to equal ridicule for both.

"Many hours did not pass before he repented of this hasty step. People were so enraged at this unexpected turn, that it was generally believed that if he had stood firm he would have run Mr. Ponsonby hard, notwithstanding the promises, which were privately as well as publicly combined to support him, not from any affection they had to him, but out of a desire to disappoint those measures to which the interest of the kingdom had been sacrificed; but by this hasty step he rendered himself the object of contempt and not of pity.

"Thus, Mr. Ponsonby was without opposition elected Speaker, rather by the weakness of his opponent than by his own strength, and the late Speaker was rewarded with a peerage and a pension.

"It was also declared that the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, of which the late Speaker was in possession, was to be conferred on Mr. Malone, and not denied by him. This nobody doubted was the reward of his treachery to his simple friend and relation.

"Enraged at being the dupes of two such men, many waited only an opportunity of shewing their resentment in action.

"Mr. Malone, at whose approach all used to rise to offer their places, now in vain sought one. Covered with confusion, and a conscious look of guilt, he was obliged to court the conversation of those whom he formerly kept at the greatest distance. He was avoided for some time as a man polluted with some infectious distemper. He found it dangerous at once to pull of the mask, and shew to the people in full light the whole deformity of his conduct.*

"Shocked at this reception, and not having courage to stand the clamors of the people (in this shewing a modesty of which he was not suspected), but at the same time unwilling to part with so beneficial an office, he determined to make use of an artifice unworthy of such a man.

"To save appearances and Mr. Malone's popularity, it was agreed between the Lord Lieutenant, the late Speaker, and him, that the Speaker should continue to hold the office until another should be appointed, but that Mr. Malone should privately receive the profits.

"This being settled, Mr. Malone declared to his friends that he would never have consented to accept of office if he had not believed it would have been agreeable to them; that he thought their friendship of more consequence to him than either the honor or the profits of the office, and to convince them he thought so, he would not accept of the office until they were satisfied in what they wished for themselves and desired him to accept of it.

"This artifice, if it did not restore him to the favor of the people, at least suspended their resentment to him. However, they were not free from suspicions that his intentions were only to amuse them till the session was at an end.

"During this time great industry was used to keep the members quiet. The expectation of almost every man was raised to the highest pitch. It was thought nothing could be refused by the Government, who had already made such large concessions to the leaders.

"The Lord Lieutenant, who had learnt just so much of the statesman as to think promises of little consequence, promised all that was asked, without the least intention of performing any but to a few particular people.

"By these means, most of the members were kept quiet, except a few who saw through the thin disguise. But an accident, which happened three days before the close of the session, opened the eyes of many, and, if the sessions had continued many days longer, would probably have produced consequences of an important nature. Mr. Malone had, with great caution, during the session, avoided appearing in any unpopular question, to the no small dissatisfaction of the Lord Lieutenant. But now the session was so near a close, he did not think it necessary to keep the same managements, and was desirous of recommending himself to the Lord Lieutenant before his departure. Some of the members had been much offended at the Privy Council's stopping some of the best bills that had ever passed the House of Commons, and were desirous that the House should vindicate its own privileges and shew some sign of resentment at the exercise of a power, if not unconstitutional, at least against the manifest good of the country. To ground a motion upon, for this purpose, it was necessary to have some materials laid before the House, and a motion was made for that purpose, which Mr. Malone opposed with all his force, most unfortunately for himself and those to whom he meant to recommend himself by it. His zeal carried him much beyond his usual discretion. Not content to oppose the bringing in of those papers, he asserted powers to be in the Privy Council never before attempted to be exercised by the most tyrannical of our Governors. He threatened those, who should even in a constitutional way attempt to limit that power, with the severest punishment—no less than that of death—and advanced facts notoriously false to support that assertion. The spirit of liberty was not yet quite extinguished. The House took fire at hearing such doctrine uttered within their walls; the question was put, and the Speaker, by the directions of the Secretary and Mr. Malone, declared the majority to be against the motion, though upon a division but eight voted against the motion, of which number the Secretary was one, though he skulked behind the Chair to hide his shame; and Mr. Malone, covered with confusion, voted for what he had taken so much pains to oppose. This victory would have produced consequences very disagreeable to the Lord Lieutenant if the session had not been so near an end; and, late as it was, the meanest artifices, most disgraceful to Government, were obliged to be made use of to prevent them. The papers that were called for were purposely detained.

"It had been always usual for the House to address the Lord Lieutenant at the conclusion of a session, to thank him for his administration, and to express their gratitude in proportion to the sense of the favors conferred on the country. An address was accordingly prepared by some of the courtiers, containing some of the most extravagant praises that ever had [been] given to any Lord Lieutenant. But some of the wise ones, who doubted much whether the House could be prevailed upon to pass it, and whether, if it did, it would not turn the whole into ridicule, reduced the address to a very moderate one. And yet it was opposed, and one gentleman, with unusual bitterness, expressed himself against the Lord Lieutenant, which was not displeasing to the majority of the audience; and though this was a liberty never before taken in that House with the character of a Lord Lieutenant, it passed without reprehension.

"Alarmed at these symptoms of a rising storm, the Lord Lieutenant resolved to allow no time for mischief. The Speaker, by his directions, did not take the Chair till 3 o'clock, the time appointed for the House to wait upon his Grace with the address. A motion was [made] to adjourn for an hour, and, though opposed by the whole strength of the Court, was very near being carried.

"The next day still meaner artifices were used to prevent the House from coming to any resolution against the power exercised by the Privy Council, which it certainly would have done, if there had been sufficient time for the purpose. Some of the Court, with an impudence not to be paralleled, insisted upon reading several papers to waste the time till the Usurber of the Black Rod should summon them to the Upper House.

"And thus ended this session as ignominiously for the Lord Lieutenant as it had commenced unfortunately for the people."

In 1757 and 1758, the following letters were addressed by Pery to William Pitt and Lord George Sackville:

"To the Right Honorable William Pitt, late Secretary of State.

"Sir, Dublin, April 26th, 1757.

"Though the honor which has been done to your excellent but short administration by the city of London, that great metropolis of liberty, can receive but little addition from the approbation or applause of any body of men, much less from that of an individual in a private station, yet permit me, Sir, to reverence that generous, that disinterested, that patriot spirit which has and ever must endear you to the remotest subject of the British Constitution who deserves the blessings he enjoys from it, and at the same time to lament the fate of those noble principles of reformation, with which your administration commenced, and by which it ended.

"In this I may without presumption say I speak the sentiments of all my countrymen, that is, of all that are not influenced by power or misled by faction.

"But the next degree of honor to being applauded by the virtuous is to be condemned by the vicious. In this, Sir, you share the fate common to all great and good men.

"To prevent your receiving from this city the same distinguished mark of affection as you have so deservedly been honored with by the city of London, the liberty of the press, that invaluable privilege and great security of the British Constitution, has been attempted, an attempt as unprovoked as it is dangerous. A plain narration of the facts will suffice to shew it in its proper colors.

A printer of this city, in his newspaper of Saturday, the 16th of this month, published the following paragraph:—

"We hear that the Common Council of Dublin, following the example of London, intend voting the freedom of the city in a gold box to the Right Honourable William Pitt, Esq. (lately dismissed), for his great integrity in office and regular attempts to restore the spirit and vigor of the British Constitution, and to lay open the causes of the late losses and disgraces of his country."

"This paragraph was published by the printer at the desire of some gentlemen who thought their country could not be too early in the praise of virtue, who thought that it could not follow a nobler example than that of the city of London.

"For this the printer was summoned to attend, and did attend, before the Lord Mayor, who informed him that his publishing in his newspaper a report that the Common Council of the city of Dublin intended to present the freedom of the city to Mr. Pitt, on account of his great integrity, was the occasion of this summons: that it was not of his motion, but came from another quarter; and then ordered him to attend the next day, with this threat, that, if he did not, he should be prosecuted at the expense of the city.

The printer, according to the directions he had received, attended the next day before the Lord Mayor, Recorder, and five or six of the Aldermen (the Commons neither having met nor knowing anything of the summons). By these few he was examined, and, upon his own confession censured for daring to report that the Common Council of Dublin would give to Mr. Pitt the freedom of this city on account of his great integrity in office, his regular attempts to restore the spirit and vigor of the British Constitution, and to lay open the causes of the late losses and disgraces of his country. And he was threatened with further proceedings unless he published such paper as they should send him. The poor man expressed much concern at their having such an aversion to Mr. Pitt, and retired. The same night, the following paragraph was sent to him by them, which he published in his next paper, thinking his safety and bread depended upon it:—

"The paragraph inserted in some of last Saturday's papers, relative to an intention of complimenting a certain Right Honorable personage with the freedom of this city, proves to have been a mistake."

"Not content with this, the newspapers of other printers, in which the unfortunate paragraph, which had given such offence, was inserted, were suppressed with much industry, and others of the same date published.

"It would not be difficult to trace this proceeding to its source, but that lies too high, and discretion requires silence upon this head.

"Is it then become a crime to applaud the virtuous? Is it an offence against the Government to express our gratitude to him who has attempted to release us from the bonds of corruption? To forbid men to love those who protect them is a degree of tyranny not inferior to that of forbidding men to groan when they are hurt, and not less cruel than that famous edict, which, amidst the ravages of slaughter and proscription, commanded all men to be merry, upon pain of death.

"Though separated from Great Britain by our situation, we are but one nation. We have the same interest, the same friends, and the same enemies. We are animated with the same spirit, and have the same principles of safety and of danger. But, being far removed from the city of London, the centre, the very soul of liberty, we are more exposed to public rapine, and, what is still worse, to the baneful influence of private corruption. 'Our treasury,' to use the words of the great Burleigh, 'swells, like a disordered spleen,' whilst all the other parts of the kingdom are in a consumption. Prodigious pensions for long and unusual terms are granted upon our establishment to persons we never heard of till they were quartered upon us, and, what still terrifies us most, roversionary grants are made of our most profitable employments to the most determined enemies to virtue and to you.

"Thus oppressed he not surprised, Sir, that the city of Dublin has not yet had courage to follow the great example that has been set them. But doubt not that it will, as soon as it can, shake off these shackles with which it is encumbered. The spirit of liberty is not yet extinguished, though it is depressed. The first symptom of its revival will certainly be the paying you that honor which is due to your merit.

"I am, Sir, etc.,

"A Member of the Common Council of the City of Dublin."

LORD
EMLY.

"SIR, Dublin, 20th Dec. 1757.

"The enclosed is a copy of heads of a Bill which were intended to have been brought into the House of Commons in this kingdom, had the House been pleased to permit it. I have taken the liberty of sending it to you, lest any suspicion may be entertained that the gentlemen who promoted that measure intended in any sort to weaken that union which at present subsists between Great Britain and this kingdom, and to secure which the Act called Poyning's Act was made. Before that statute, the Lord Lieutenant, being invested with the regal authority, could, and frequently did, pass Acts, not only prejudicial to the English interest in this kingdom, but even to the Crown: to restrain this power, Poyning's Act was made, by which it was provided that no Act should be passed in this kingdom, of which the King and his English Council should not be fully apprized, and to which they should not be consenting. That this was the intention of the Legislature appears, not only from the history of those times, but from several Acts of Parliament, and particularly from the Statute 11 Eliz. Cap. 8.

"But another use has for several years past been made of this Act. Our own Privy Council have taken upon them to reject several bills which have passed the Commons unanimously, and to alter others in such a manner as to render them at least useless. This abuse of the law, if I may be permitted to use so harsh an expression of so respectable a body, has been most justly complained of, and is what was intended to be remedied by the heads of the Bill I send you, by which the communication between His Majesty and his Parliament, upon which the welfare of both depends, would be opened.

"I am sensible it is a delicate point to attempt any alteration in Poyning's Act, and that those who do are looked upon with a jealous eye. For this reason I have taken the liberty of laying before you the scheme that was intended, and which, probably from the spirit which appeared upon this occasion, will sometime or other be carried into execution, that you may see there was no intention to make any alteration whatsoever in the material part of Poyning's Act, which is that which relates to Great Britain.

"The desire I have that my conduct should appear in its true light to you, not only as the first servant of His Majesty, but as the great supporter of the rights of the people, has occasioned you this trouble.

To Lord George Sackville.

"MY DEAR LORD, Dublin, 5 Jan. 1758.

"I RECEIVED yesterday your Lordship's most obliging letter of the 29th December, which gave me much satisfaction, as it assured me that I have still some share in your Lordship's esteem, which I have ever earnestly wished to deserve and shall endeavour to preserve.

"Though no one will be a greater loser than I shall by your absence from this kingdom, yet I cannot wish you removed from that noble scene in which you act and are so distinguished. If I have the least Parliamentary merit, it is owing to the instructions I received from you, and a desire to imitate what even your enemies admired. The very name of Secretary was so revered by me, after your departure, that nothing less than the extraordinary genius of your successor could have removed such strong prejudices.

"There never has been a period of time, since I have been capable of knowing anything of this country, when more good might be done than at present. Those who were so lately adored by the people are now sunk into the abhorrence of most and contempt of all; the most solemn assurances given in the view of the public, and in three days after as publicly violated; and what is ridiculous, though this sacrifice has been made to the Duke, his Grace has as little reason to be satisfied with those gentlemen as the public. However, his Grace seems determined at all hazards to adhere to those engagements he entered into before his arrival in the kingdom. What might be the consequences of this resolution, if two persons would determine to act with vigor, would not be difficult to foretell; if they do not, be assured they will be of the same importance at this close of this session as they were at the commencement of it. Much will depend upon the advice you shall give before our next meeting. It is reported here, I suppose to intimidate, that new powers have been demanded, and probably will be granted. Though the choice of the Select Committee shews the temper of the House, yet I think little is to be expected from it. The affection for one person is stronger than the resentment against the other.

"The apprehensions of some of our friends here were alarmed lest our attempt upon Poyning's law should give any umbrage at your side of the water, for which reason I took the liberty of enclosing to Mr. Pitt a copy of those heads of a Bill, to prevent any misrepresentation of our intentions. I hope there is no truth in the report which prevails that you are to go to America. There can be but little honor acquired by fighting with a parcel of barbarous Indians who lurk in the woods, and much may be lost.

"I return your Lordship many thanks for your kind intentions in favor of my friend Mr. Baylee.

"We hear much of a scheme which has been proposed in your House for regulating the assize of bread. As we have the same subject under our consideration, I must beg the favor of your Lordship to enclose it to me.

"I should sometimes trouble [you] with accounts of our affairs here, were I not certain that you have them from much better hands, and that I fear to take up any of your time, which I am sensible must be much engaged.

"I am, etc."

At the general election in 1761, consequent upon the death of George II., Pery was unanimously elected to represent Limerick, his native city, in the House of Commons in Ireland. Of his speeches in this and the preceding period the following memoranda, in his own handwriting, are preserved in the present collection:

"THE CALAMITIES which have been so sensibly felt in this Kingdom, and particularly in this city, during the course of the last year, from a scarcity of corn, make it necessary to provide some law to prevent the like misfortune for the future.

"It were to be wished that the same principle of humanity which has so justly distinguished our present Governor had influenced former councils. If it had, we should not now regret the loss of that Corn Bill, which passed this House the last session with the approbation of the whole nation; we should not now lament the fate of those unhappy wretches who perished for want, and whose deaths must be imputed to those who deprived us of that Bill.

"If we needed anything to spur us on to remedy these evils, the Lord Lieutenant's speech would do it. His Grace not only recommends it to us to provide laws to prevent future misfortunes of the like nature, but also tacitly condemns those who have been the authors of the past. For, what else could his Grace intend by his assuring us of His Majesty's readiness to consent to any laws which may conduce to the welfare of the kingdom? Could his Grace imagine that we doubted of His Majesty's justice or goodness? No, Sir, that could not be his Grace's meaning, but his Grace plainly meant to point out the secret cause of all our misfortunes, that fatal barrier which separates His Majesty from his people, which prevents him from knowing and consequently from redressing our grievances. In this sense, Sir, our address to His Majesty shews we understood his Grace's speech. What may we not then expect from a Lord Lieutenant, who is so sensible of our grievances and so desirous to redress them? The time, Sir, I hope approaches when, if we act like men, we shall see that power abused which was originally intended for the security of the King, but has been abused to the destruction of his people.

"Thus much, Sir, I could not avoid saying against the abuse of a power, which has been so often and so fatally exercised, and in no instance more remarkably than in the suppression of the Bill I am now going to move you for leave to bring in."

"THAT THE proper officer do lay before this House an account of the quantity of corn and flour imported into the city of Dublin for four years from the 25th day of March 1753 to the 25th of March 1757, distinguishing each year and the different sorts and places from whence the same have been imported."

"It is with much pleasure I now congratulate this House and the public that the Bill for supplying the city of Dublin with corn and flour has at last surmounted all difficulties and obtained a passage through the several branches of our Legislature.

"There are but few laws of an extensive nature, though never so beneficial to the public, to which objections may not be raised. There are but few men, be their intentions never so honest, who escape the charge of acting from private motives and upon principles of self-interest. This law, and the gentlemen who promoted it, have met with the like treatment. However, I think nothing need be said in defence of a law which has been received with such universal approbation, and I hope nothing is necessary to be said in defence of those gentlemen who supported it. Were they disposed to cast reflections, they might at least with equal justice retort the charge upon those who opposed it. But they have too much charity to impute the actions of gentlemen to such ungenerous, such base motives.

"The passions and follies of men are frequently sufficient of themselves, without any criminal intentions, to make them resist what is right, and are often attended with consequences as prejudicial to the public as real guilt.

"For instance, the pride of one man may persuade him, or at least make him endeavour to persuade others, that no scheme can be well laid, but what is of his own projection, that none can be well executed but by his own hand, though perhaps the success of his own works may not have afforded any just reason to entertain an high opinion either of his judgment in planning or of his abilities in executing.

"Another, whose temper may perhaps have been soured by disappointments, and whose understanding may be impaired by years, spurred on by resentment against those who have been more successful than himself, may become clamorous against a measure which he sees adopted by those whom he hates. Passion, however indecent in such a character, may supply the place of reason, and invective of argument.

"A third sort of man there may be, who, indeed, deserves rather pity than resentment, whose rickety understanding may not be capable of digesting its own ideas, much less those of other men, who may act the man of consequence and become more ridiculous by his imitation of the great, as the ape is more deformed for its resemblance to man. Such a man, I say, may recite his labored follies, against a measure he does not understand, to the grinning multitude.

"Thus, Sir, the best attempts for the service of the public may sometimes happen to be defeated by men who do not mean any ill to it.

"This Bill is now past all danger, thanks to our gracious Governor, through whose mediation it has been returned to us. Let us then with grateful hearts acknowledge his goodness to us, and return our unfeigned thanks for the benefits we have received from him. Let us not wait till the end of the session to make the accustomed compliment of thanks, the usual tribute paid to all Lord Lieutenants, without distinction. As he has distinguished us with singular marks of his favor, so let us distinguish him with particular marks of our gratitude.

"But, before I move for the address I propose, give me leave to rejoice in the happiness of this country, as well as of Great Britain, that the present administration is founded upon the principles of virtue and of public spirit, not upon those of corruption and of private avarice, and that a gentleman is at the head of it, whose enlightened understanding discovers to him what is for the general good, and who acts upon the enlarged principles of universal good, not upon the narrow and mistaken notions of provincial advantages. Give me leave likewise to . . ."

"THERE is a Bill upon the table, bearing the same title with one lately sent from this House, but in every other respect totally different from it. I mean the City Bill. By whom this Bill has been dressed up into its present form perhaps it is easier to guess than proper to mention. But by whatever ingenious head it has been contrived, by whatever hand it may be supported, I hope we shall reject it with that indignation which must naturally arise in the breast of every honest man who sees a work, not only useful but necessary to the public, almost brought to perfection by great labor and industry, and at last defeated by the low intrigues and mean artifices of a few designing men. The Bill sent from this House was a Bill to restore the city to its ancient constitution, to restore to the citizens the rights that have been usurped from them, and to preserve order and peace in the city. The Bill upon your table, Sir, is to confirm the present corrupted constitution of this city, to establish

EMLY.

the usurpation of the rights of the citizens, and to leave the city exposed to tumults and riots and all the dangers of civil discord. And here I cannot but observe that all the Bills which have passed this House this session relative to this city have not met with that reception they deserved in another place. In what has this city offended, that two Bills almost necessary to its very being should be rejected, and a third so modelled as to be entirely different from the Bill sent from this House. The Bills I mean, Sir, are the Bills for supplying the city with corn and flour, and for preventing combinations to raise the price of coals. If the first had passed, it would have put a stop to that trade, which is so painful to a few English merchants and so destructive to this kingdom, of importing unwholesome flour with which this city is daily poisoned. If the latter had passed, it would have lessened the profits of some English colliers, who are not content with the lawful gains of a most profitable trade, but must double them by their fraudulent practices. I cannot, Sir, avoid expressing my concern, my indignation, at the loss of these two Bills and of the City Bill, but we must bear with patience our present wretched condition and expect with firmness for better times. A time I hope will come when we shall act with that spirit that will give force to all our proceedings and remove those calamities under which we at present labor."

"THE CUSTOM of addressing Chief Governors at the conclusion of a session is not of a very ancient date. This custom (as most civil precedents have good beginnings) was introduced at first upon very laudable principles. It was at first the tribute of grateful hearts offered unsolicited to a wise and impartial Governor, not the purchased incense of servile flattery. It was at first, Sir, the honorable reward of real services done to the kingdom, not a return for places and pensions lavished away upon those who had first sold themselves and afterwards their country. But, in process of time, (as it often happens that though the reason of the thing ceases yet the thing continues) this, which was at first the reward of virtue and justice, became the constant offering to every Lord Lieutenant, though he had not the least pretensions to either (and as those Princes and Governors are sure to be flattered most who deserve panegyric least) the highest encomiums were bestowed upon those who took the largest strides to destroy the liberties of the country.

"It were to be wished, Sir, that this custom were wholly laid aside, or at least not used but upon very extraordinary occasions. But, if we must continue this custom because it is a custom, if we must address, let us address in general terms, let us not descend to particular facts which we may censure and cannot approve. Let us not, like servile hirelings, flatter our Governors for qualities they do not possess, for virtues they are unacquainted with, for actions they have never done.

"Truth alone can make our praises of any value. When they are founded on truth, they will do real honor to the person to whom they are given; otherwise, they become the severest satire upon him.

"If we observe this conduct, Sir, every Governor will endeavour to deserve our praise by conferring benefits on the country, not rewards upon those who are ready to betray it. He will endeavour to deserve it by serving his royal master and the country with fidelity, not by sacrificing the honor of the one or the interest of the other. He will endeavour to deserve it by protecting the country from its foreign and domestic enemies, not by terrifying it into his measures by exaggerated dangers, at the expense of the trade and credit of the nation. If this be our conduct, Sir, we shall do honor to ourselves as well as to him whom we praise.

"Thus far, Sir, I have spoke of addresses in general. I shall now mention my objections to the one immediately under your consideration.

"I have no objection, Sir, to an encomium upon his Grace's wisdom. He has given us a sufficient proof of that in his judicious choice of the person to whom he has been pleased to entrust the execution of his measures, though some of them have not been attended with all the honor they deserved. Much less, Sir, have I any objection to praising his Grace for his justice, though persons inclined to evil might make a distinction between moral and political justice.

"Thus far I would go, Sir, but very little farther. I would take no notice, Sir, of the laws that have been passed this session, because that will naturally lead people to enquire, what is become of the City Bill, the Coal Bill, the Bill for supply the city of Dublin with corn and flour, without which we scarce can live? But, above all, what is become of that inestimable Bill, the Habeas Corpus Bill, without which we ought not to live, because without it we cannot live in freedom? All, all, are lost. Is this, then, a time to boast of making good laws, when those which are necessary to our very being, nay, what is more, to our liberty, have been so ignominiously stifled?

"I think, Sir, we should likewise avoid saying anything about the restoring of peace and concord to this kingdom. Look round this kingdom, Sir. Are the people less discontented than they were? Are they less apprehensive than they were of attempts upon their liberties? Have they less reason for suspicion when they see places and pensions distributed in such profusion amongst the guardians of their liberties? These fears, Sir, I hope, are groundless, but still they subsist. What room have we then to boast on quiet being restored to this kingdom?

"The only part of this address which remains for me to take notice of is that where we express our wishes for his Grace's return. This, I think, had better likewise be omitted. However agreeable his Grace's return might be to us, yet I believe his stay in England would be much more advantageous, as we shall then be sure of having a most powerful advocate near His Majesty.

"This, Sir, is my opinion upon the several parts of the Address proposed, but as I do not think it will be so consistent with our respect for his Grace to make the alterations I have hinted at in the House, because they will then appear upon the votes, as in the Committee, I shall propose to you to recommit this address."

Memoranda at end:—"Let us speak like men, not like persons hired to commend.—It is easier to struggle even with a great prince who stands on prerogative than with a weak but a profligate minister, if he has the means of corruption in his power, and if the luxury and prostitution of the age have enabled him to bring it into fashion.—Economy is the only virtue not mentioned.—Advantages ought to be seen or felt before they can properly be acknowledged.—Compliments by being exaggerated are weakened."

"THAT THESE heads of a Bill which we have now agreed to should pass into a law is, I am sure, the earnest wish of every man that means well to this country; but, Sir, experience may convince us that our wishes will avail us little if we sit still and neglect taking those steps which our Constitution allows to render them successful.

"If these heads of a Bill are sent from this House in the ordinary and private manner of a common Bill, we may expect they will be treated with the neglect, perhaps the contempt, which we have heard others of the greatest importance have met with.

"The method, Sir, I am going to propose in order to prevent this will not, I hope, be liable to any of the objections which were the occasion of rejecting what I presumed some time ago to offer to the House in relation to the Habeas Corpus Bill. I then moved, Sir, for an address to His Majesty to recommend that Bill. It was thought such a step would be disrespectful to our Lord Lieutenant (which was far from my intentions), as it would be passing him over, and supposed a neglect in him.

"The address I now propose to move for is to my Lord Lieutenant himself, and consequently is not liable to the same objection as the former.

"It was thought, Sir, this was an unseemable time, when we were threatened with a war, to press for the Habeas Corpus Bill; but this, Sir, is the strongest reason why we should press for the present Bill, because to depend upon other countries for our food in the time of war must be precarious: the interrupting our communication but for a few weeks must be our destruction.

"It was thought, Sir, that an Address for the Habeas Corpus Bill might lay my Lord Lieutenant under difficulties or distress him, as it was expressed, but that cannot be the effect of the Address I am going to move for, because this Bill will not weaken the hands of the Government, but will strengthen them by protecting its subjects from famine.

"As I have now, I think, Sir, removed the only objections to this Address, I shall take the liberty of offering some reasons why this Address must give particular satisfaction to his Grace. It will show his Grace that we have given due attention to what he most graciously recommended to us from the Throne, the improvement of our commerce, for the increase of our tillage is, as you, Sir, most truly and elegantly expressed it in your speech at the bar of the House, upon presenting the Money Bills, the vital source of every branch of our commerce. It will give his Grace an opportunity of completing the work he has so happily legun, and his Grace will, I hope, have the satisfaction and the honor not only of restoring peace but plenty to this kingdom.

"The present Bill, as I have heard, was returned to us once from England, in the Duke of Ormonde's time, and if we had not then been misled by the spirit of party it would have been passed into a law. The private history of that affair is said to be this: the same Bill had been sent on to England before, in the time of the Duke of Ormonde's predecessor, but he had not weight or influence sufficient to get it passed in England. Upon the Duke of Ormonde's coming to the Government, he piqued himself upon showing that he had the interest of the country more at heart than his predecessor, and superior power to advance it, and therefore applied all his force to get it passed in England, in which he succeeded; but the House of Commons here, who were jealous lest he should become too popular by procuring a Bill of such advantage to the country, rejected it. I think, Sir, if an emulation between two Lord Lieutenants shall ever offer us the same advantage we shall not be so blind as not to lay hold of it. I hope, Sir, it will not be understood that I mean to draw any comparison between our present Lord Lieutenant and the Duke of Ormonde. It is far from my intention. But if such an advantage was procured for this country either from the pride or ambition of the latter, what may we not expect from the virtue, from the patriotism of the former.

"I therefore move you, Sir, that a humble address be presented to his Grace the Lord Lieutenant to acquaint his Grace that, in pursuance of his Grace's recommendation, we have considered of such laws as may be necessary for the improvement of our commerce, and that we cannot think of any which will answer that end more effectually than such as will encourage tillage in this kingdom, which is the vital source of every branch of our commerce; that we humbly beg leave to lay before his Grace the distressed condition of this kingdom by the frequent scarcity of corn, and our poverty occasioned by the great drains of money we are obliged to send out of this kingdom to pay for corn imported into it; that we have prepared heads of a Bill for the further encouragement of tillage, which we hope will redress those evils, and humbly presume to offer the same to his Grace, hoping that his Grace will complete this good work that has been begun upon his Grace's recommendation, and to beseech his Grace that he will be pleased to recommend the same to His Majesty as a Bill not only of great advantage to this kingdom, but necessary to the very being of it."

"There is no precedent that I know of upon our journals for the motion I am going to make you. This, I believe, must be attributed to the extreme poverty of this kingdom, till within these few years. Formerly it was not in the power of a minister to corrupt our Parliament, because there was nothing to distribute amongst its members. It was not in his inclination, because there was nothing to be got by it. But now our Treasury is grown rich it becomes necessary to be upon our guard, and to provide laws against the corruption of our members, who are the guardians of our liberties.

"It is not, Sir, that I can entertain the least suspicion of our present members. All their actions show that the public good has been their only aim. They have shewed they would not sacrifice their duty, as members of this House, to any private consideration. But, Sir, the law I am going to propose can never be obtained but in a time of such virtue and chastity as the present.

"The law I mean is a Place Bill, but the one I mean is not of such a nature as to disable such as are honored with His Majesty's favor from serving their country as members of this House. That, I think, unreasonable.

"On the other hand, I think it would be equally unreasonable that a person who has accepted of such favors should continue longer entrusted with the liberties of the people, unless they shall think proper to continue him in that trust by a re-election."

"This session seems now to draw near a conclusion. The business is almost finished. The Money Bill is passed. A general vote of credit has been given for building and repairing our fortifications. Our standing army is increased, and you, Sir, are happily placed in that chair. Little more remains for us now to do but to return thanks to our Governor for his unbounded generosity to us. That we may have materials for such an address, it will be right, Sir, that we know what has been given. The public seem anxious to be informed who are their benefactors, to whom they are indebted for the protection of their rights and liberties. The surest way of coming at that knowledge will be to know who has been rewarded. Rewards distributed by the hands of so judicious, so discerning a person are the surest signs of merit in the person rewarded, and if the merit of such persons be in proportion to the reward, we are happy, if report speaks true, in having many very meritorious persons in this House. We have already twice called for the list of pensions upon the Civil Establishment of this kingdom, but we have been as often disappointed of the knowledge we expected from it, because the account has not yet come into the Auditor-General's Office. This, Sir, I think can only be attributed to the modesty of the persons to whom the pensions have been granted, who are unwilling to have their merit published to the world. For to what other cause can it be attributed?"

"I wish what I am going to offer had come from a person of more weight, because I am certain it is of the utmost consequence to this kingdom that it should be agreed to. But since others who have raised the expectations of the public may have private reasons for being silent upon this occasion, I shall venture to propose what might have been expected from some of those who have distinguished themselves or have been distinguished by others with the most glorious of all titles, that of patriots, and which I should have been much better pleased had come from them, because I am sure it would then have come with much more force than from me.

"I am encouraged in this undertaking because I think it requires no abilities to recommend it, and because I think it cannot be suspected that I do it from a spirit of party, if any now subsists, from which I always have been, and ever shall be, averse, though I am sensible many have entertained a different opinion of me. The proposal I am going to make it is likely may neither be agreeable to one party or the other, and therefore may not be supposed to be made at the instigation of either. It is that we should grant the supply to His Majesty for one year instead of granting it for two. The necessary consequence of this must be visible to everybody, that our Parliament will be annual, instead of being called together only once in two years.

"The history of the past and the experience of the present times may convince us that the necessity of frequent supplies is the best assurance we can have of frequent Parliaments.

"While the estate of the Crown was sufficient to support its dignity, and there was no occasion for calling Parliaments to supply the expenses of the Prince, Parliaments were seldom called. This grievance was intended to be remedied by an Act made in the reign of Edw. 3d, by which it was enacted that they should be held once in every year, and oftener if occasion required. But this Act was little regarded so long as the Crown was possessed of such revenues as made applications to the people for money unnecessary. But when the prodigality of Princes had squandered the revenues of the Crown and the expenses of the Government had increased, the necessities of the Prince became a much more effectual cure for that mischief than the Act of Edw. 3rd., and the frequent calls for supplies produced frequent meetings of Parliament.

"In Charles 2nd's reign, the hereditary revenue was settled upon the Crown. From that time Parliaments became useless to the Crown and dangerous to the Ministers, and therefore were not called for a long series of years until the expenses of the Government exceeded its revenues, and then it became necessary to revive the long disused method of Parliament. Our ancestors then plainly saw the error of theirs in granting the duties for ever, and prudently granted the additional duties only for two years; and from that time, as it became necessary to have a supply granted every two years, it became necessary to call a Parliament every two years. This, we find from the experience of all ages, is an infallible secret to make the Minister advise and persuade the Crown to comply with the wishes of the people to have annual Parliaments, since we have it then in our power to have annual Parliaments or not, as we please.

"The only question, if it can be a question, is whether annual Parliaments would be of service to this kingdom. That it would have been for the advantage of this kingdom at all times that the Parliaments should have been annual, I believe cannot be doubted by any person in this House. But at present it seems to be absolutely necessary that it should be so. The increase of commerce and riches, the growth of our manufactures, the improvement of the country, all at present require our constant attention, and require frequent alterations in our laws. This House is engaged in a much larger circle of business, and therefore more frequent meetings of Parliament are necessary. If our Parliament be annual, our chief governors and officers will be obliged to reside more among us, and to spend the wealth they draw from us among us, and not abroad from whence it never can return to us. We shall then be under no obligations to our Governor for being graciously pleased to come to us. He will find himself under a necessity of doing it. But what makes this measure at present absolutely necessary is the great redundancy in the Treasury, which, if we continue the old additional duties and they produce as much in the next two years as they did in the last, will produce a prodigious sum, a dangerous weapon in the hands of a wicked minister.

"Frequent meetings of Parliament are always dangerous as well as troublesome to Ministers, and therefore they are for having them as seldom as possible. When the supplies are granted, we are not sure of being permitted to continue, we are usually called together so late that we have but barely time to pass the Money Bill before the duties would expire. Regularly, the redress of our grievances ought to precede the grants of money."

"If we shall be so happy as to prevail in getting these heads of a Bill passed into a law, the liberty of the subject will be effectually secured from the dangers to which it is at present exposed, from the ambition or tyranny of a weak or a wicked minister. This is the famous Habeas Corpus Act, for which England so long contended, the darling of the people, the strongest bulwark of their liberties.

"It is with the utmost reluctance the English Parliament ever consent to a suspension of this Act, and then never but for a few months in [the] intervals of Parliament and during the time of an actual war or the terrors of an immediate rebellion, for, with the greatest justice, they consider a suspension of this Act as a suspension of their liberty.

"Till we have the same law passed in this kingdom, we cannot be called a free people.

"Whilst it is in the power of an arbitrary or corrupt Governor (for such it is possible we may have) to imprison the subject, and to detain him in prison as long as he thinks proper without bringing him to a legal trial, our Constitution is not better than that of the most despotic Government.

"Under the present mild and just reign, we do not feel the dangerous effects of such a power, nor is it from the least distrust of His Majesty that I wish it taken away. I am fully convinced His Majesty will never make an idle use of it. The justice and clemency with which he has hitherto governed us is the strongest assurance that he will use it only for our safety. But as we cannot promise ourselves that so good and so just a King will always fill the throne, it is prudent, it is necessary, to guard against the dangers to which our liberties may be exposed in a succeeding reign by a law which we can never hope to obtain but in the reign of so wise and so just a Prince, to whom the liberties of his people are as dear as his own prerogatives.

"Several attempts have already been made by us to get this most excellent law passed, but in vain. It is our misfortune to be removed at such a distance from His Majesty, and the nature of our present Constitution is such, that we are not certain that His Majesty is always informed of the laws we desire to have passed.

"This most excellent Bill, which has so often passed this House without a single negative, has never yet, if we may believe public report, reached His Majesty's hands. If it had, I have little doubt it would have passed long before this into a law.

"I am unwilling to mention where it is said this Bill has been constantly stopped, but as I think it necessary to do it upon the present occasion, [and] as I think I shall not transgress the rules of this House in doing it, because I am warranted in it by many entries in our Journals, I shall take the liberty of doing it, and hope it will not be considered as any disrespect to the Council Board. It is there we are told this Bill has been constantly stopped. For what reasons that wise and respectable body have thought proper so often to reject that Bill, I have never yet been able to learn.

EMLY.

"The only Parliamentary method we can take to prevent these Heads of a Bill from meeting with the same fate as the many we have already sent from this House, is to recommend them to His Majesty in an Address and to beseech His Excellency our Lord Lieutenant to transmit such Address and these Heads of a Bill, to His Majesty at the same time. If we do this, it is probable the Council will no longer think proper to stop this Bill, but if it should, we shall be certain that His Majesty will be informed of our just desires, and if he is, I make no doubt that we shall obtain from His Majesty's goodness and justice this law, which if we purchased at the expense of half our property, we should be prodigians gainers by the bargain.

"I, therefore, move you that an humble address be presented to His Majesty to acknowledge His Majesty's paternal care of this kingdom in his mild, wise, and just government of it, to assure His Majesty of our firm persuasion that he will on all occasions protect the rights and liberties of his subjects, in the most humble manner to acquaint His Majesty that we have prepared Heads of a Bill for better securing the liberty of the subject, the passing of which into a law we humbly conceive will effectually secure the liberty of his subjects of this kingdom, and that therefore we presume in all obedience to lay the same before His Majesty, and to beseech His Majesty that the same may be passed into a law, and to assure His Majesty that we will upon every occasion exert our most steady zeal for the honor and security of His Majesty's Government."

"THAT His Majesty's paternal care of this kingdom deserves the warmest return of gratitude, of duty, of affection that it is possible for subjects to express to their Sovereign; that the present dangers which threaten his dominions demand the strongest assurances of our inviolable attachment to his Royal person and family; that we have the greatest reason to rejoice at his happy return to his British dominions, and at the choice he has made of a person of such uncommon abilities to govern us, will, I am sure, be allowed by every member of this House.

"But, Sir, we have no less reason to rejoice that we are at this day assembled together, when we had so much reason to apprehend the contrary. We have no less reason to rejoice that we have now an opportunity of justifying our conduct to His Majesty, and of removing those impressions, if any still remain, which have been made to our disadvantage. We have now an opportunity of punishing those who made them, and of deterring others from following their example. The voice of the nation demands this from us. I hope we shall not disappoint their just expectations.

"It is not my intention, Sir, to inquire whether the speech has been made for the address or the address for the speech, or to criticise on the speech by whomsoever it was penned. I shall leave such matter to persons of more curiosity and greater abilities. My intention, Sir, is only to point out such parts of this address as I think deserves our approbation, and such as I think require some additions, without proposing any particular amendment. I shall leave that to be done by any gentleman, if any such there be, who shall think there is any weight in what I say.

"From my heart, Sir, I approve of that part of the address which expresses our duty, our affection to the best of Kings.

"I have no objection, Sir, to that part which contains a panegyric upon our Lord Lieutenant. I have no doubt, Sir, that he will proceed during his whole administration with the same impartiality and candor, with the same respect for the privileges of the people, and regard to the honor of his Royal Master, with which he set out. I am pleased, Sir, that we express our approbation of his conduct, that His Majesty may understand in what manner and by what acts we are to be satisfied; that His Majesty may be convinced we have not been struggling for places and employments, but for what we esteem our fundamental rights and privileges.

"For the same reason, Sir, I think we shall do right to assure His Majesty that we always have been and ever shall be careful of his prerogative. But this, Sir, I think is not enough. To stop here would be to stop short and leave half our work undone.

"I believe, Sir, no body doubts in his private mind that our conduct in rejecting a certain Bill on the 17th Dec. 1753, a day so much celebrated in bumpers through this kingdom, has been represented to His Majesty in colors not to our advantage, for to what other cause can we attribute the late sudden and unusual prorogation, by which so many public and private bills, of much consequence to this kingdom, have been lost? What other reason can be assigned for removing so many gentlemen who had distinguished themselves upon that occasion from their employments? I confess, Sir, while that Bill was depending, I was of opinion it ought to have passed. The majority of this House thought otherwise. Upon the fullest consideration, its judgment has been approved of by the universal voice of the nation and acquiesced in, if not submitted to, by those who were supposed to have been the chief supporters of a contrary opinion. I can no longer doubt therefore that I have erred in judgment, and am not ashamed to confess it, especially since such great personages have set me the example. But let my opinion of that Bill be what it may, I shall ever think that punishing of Members for what they say or do in Parliament is destructive of our most valuable privileges. I shall ever think that prerogatives, which are marks of displeasure and prevent the necessary business of the kingdom from being carried on, are of the most dangerous consequence to the Constitution, as they interrupt that intercourse between the King and his people, which always ought to subsist, and upon which our Constitution depends; and therefore I shall always wish, and as far as in my power contribute, to discover the advisers of such destructive measures, that they may be brought to the punishment they deserve.

"Upon these principles, Sir, and to deter others from such desperate attempts for the future, I hope we shall humbly entreat His Majesty that he will be graciously pleased to name the advisers of those measures. By this, Sir, we shall let His Majesty see how ungrateful such measures are to his people, and put him upon his guard against such advice for the future. By this, Sir, we shall convince the nation that we are influenced by general principles and not by private motives.

"There is another reason, Sir, for taking this step, which, however trifling it may appear to some, has great weight with me. It will convince the nation that there is no foundation for a report which has prevailed for some days past, and which is highly injurious to the honor of this House. The report I mean, Sir, is, this, that an address had been prepared some eight or ten days ago, and had been transmitted into Great Britain for the approbation of perhaps the very persons who were the advisers of the measures we have so justly exclaimed against, and that if it should be agreeable to them it should be crammed down our throats.

"We heard of nothing but of expresses and extraordinary precautions taken against accidents of contrary winds, lest this important address should not be returned before the meeting of this House.

"We were told that it was drawn up with such art as to amuse the people and persuade them that they had obtained what they were in pursuit of, and at the same time not give offence to those with whom it may now be the private interest of some to stand well.

"In short, Sir, we were told that it was calculated to preserve the popularity of some who had reason to apprehend the loss of it, and to acquire for others the favor of the great, which was not to be purchased at any other price.

"For my part, Sir, I never gave credit to such reports, because I could not think that any set of men could have the presumption to answer for this House, and pass their sentiments for that of the nation.

"But, Sir, I cannot help saying that the address which has been moved for squares but too well with the report. It does not vindicate in explicit terms, as I think it ought, the privilege of the Commons in the point which has been the subject of so much debate in this kingdom and in the next. It passes over in silence the late prorogation, and the removal of the members from their employments. These are points of the utmost consequence to us, and affect our most valuable privileges, and, therefore, cannot be passed over by us in silence without a breach of that trust which the people have placed in us. What more seasonable time can we expect for asserting those rights than the present. The present time seems marked out for the redress of all our grievances.

"This House is at present composed of members of capacity, integrity, and resolution, who are not to be biassed by any private profit, or awed by any power. The people are ready to second every effort in support of our just privileges. We have an indulgent Governor, disposed to grant us everything we can ask in reason, and we have a just and gracious King, who will not protect an unworthy minister.

"Let us make use, then, of so favorable an opportunity."

Lord
EMLY.

"THOUGH it does not appear to us yet what number of forces have been drawn out of this kingdom, and of consequence we do not know the number of forces proposed to be raised, yet I doubt not we shall be unanimous in our resolutions that the number of forces in this kingdom should be in this time of public danger increased to 12,000 men complete.

"The manner, Sir, in which those forces should be raised requires some consideration, but the time for which they are to continue demands our most serious attention. On the one hand, we should spare no expense which prudence may require either for guarding us against a foreign enemy or for securing our domestic tranquillity. On the other, we should not waste in military preparations more than is necessary of that treasure which ought to be employed in the improvement of [the] country and in promoting our manufactures. But, above all, Sir, we should take care that those troops, which in the present conjuncture we desire to be raised, should not be continued longer than the cause for which they are raised subsists. When that ceases, the troops should also cease.

"With respect to the manner of augmenting our troops, there are three methods in which it may be done. The first is by raising new regiments; the second is by increasing the number of companies in the regiments which are at present subsisting; and the third is by increasing the number of men in each company. The first, which is that of raising new regiments, is by much the most expensive of the three, because of the increase of officers. The second, which is that of increasing the number of companies, will be less expensive than the first, but much more than the last, because the expense of field officers will be saved, but there will be the same number of other officers as if new regiments were raised. The third method is to increase the number of men in each company, which is of all others the least expensive, because by that the number of officers will not be increased. Therefore, if we were to consider nothing but the expense, there could be no doubt but that the last of these three methods would be the most eligible. But we must look farther and consider which will be the most advantageous.

"If we consider the advantage of the minister, whoever he be, there can be no doubt but that the first of these methods, the raising of new regiments, will be by much the most advantageous for him, because the officers' commissions will be at his disposal. What use may be made of this power will be unnecessary, perhaps improper, for me to point out.

"But if we consider the safety of the country, the last of those three methods has much the advantage of the other two. The danger that threatens us is immediate, and consequently the steps that we should take to guard against it should be such as should be the most likely to have an immediate effect. If we raise new regiments or new companies it will be a considerable time before they can be disciplined, and how little dependence there ought to be upon raw troops the histories of all ages and all countries may teach us. But by the third method, the new levies will be incorporated into the old regiments, and associated with veterans already acquainted with discipline, and of consequence will learn their duty more expeditiously. The only objection that can possibly be made to this method is where the number of men to be raised is so great, that the officers may be charged with more men than they can superintend, but I believe no body will say that is the present case.

"Thus, Sir, I think it is clear that the adding to the several companies, instead of raising new regiments, will be not only the least expensive, but the most advantageous method, especially where the danger is immediate, and they may be easily disbanded. But this, Sir, is not the principal object of my concern. My concern, Sir, is for the Constitution. In the times of danger, Sir, we should take care to augment our forces to such a number as may be sufficient to guard us against any foreign force. But we should take at least the same care that in times of peace the number of our forces should not be such as to endanger our liberties at home. At present, Sir, a standing army seems to be, as it were, part of our Constitution; for ever since what is called the Disbanding Act, in King William's reign, we have kept on foot 12,000 men, including commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and probably as long as this Government subsists we shall keep the same number on foot.

"We should be cautious, Sir, how we increase this body, which is now considered as a body to subsist as long as our Constitution. We should never do it but when some danger threatens us, and should take care that it should be reduced as soon as that danger was over.

"Part of our troops, Sir, have been drawn out of this kingdom. The present exigency of affairs requires that we should supply their places by new levies. But, surely, Sir, it is reasonable, it is just, that when those troops which have been drawn from us may be restored to us, the new levies which are raised to supply their places should be disbanded.

"If the intention of the resolution on your paper be to increase our military establishment from 12,000 to 14,000, as well in time of peace as in time of war, I am absolutely against it. But if the intention be only to guard against the present danger, and that the new levies shall be disbanded as soon as the danger is over, and our troops are returned to us, no man will concur in it more heartily than I shall. But, Sir, we should be explicit in our words and not leave the least doubt of our intentions."

"This House, Sir, was pleased some time ago to appoint a committee to inquire into the present state of the public credit of this kingdom, the causes of its decay, and how it might be restored. The committee accordingly made some progress in that inquiry, and probably, if it had not been stopped, would have made some discoveries which might have been of use to the public.

"This interruption, Sir, was occasioned by some doubts they were conceived lest such an inquiry might be attended with dangerous consequences to public credit, and a Right Honourable gentleman was pleased to express his wishes that the nature of the inquiry which was intended to be gone into might be explained, and seemed to think that this House would not have made an order for such an inquiry if it had been fully apprized of the consequences of it. Upon which, Sir, the Committee was adjourned to Monday, in order, as I understood, that before its next meeting the sense of the House might be taken upon this subject.

"As I was the person, Sir, who moved for this Committee, and as it is expected from me, I shall take the liberty of laying before this House the reasons that induced me to do it, and the advantages I then thought, and still think, the public may reap from it.

"That the trade of this kingdom, not only foreign but internal, has been for some time past in a decaying state, that the interest of money has risen, and the value of lands fallen; and that exchange, which is properly called by writers upon that subject the barometer of trade, has been till very lately against us, cannot be denied.

"Though this may, and probably does, arise from many other causes, yet the most obvious as well as the most immediate cause is the failure of that general credit which is necessary to the carrying on of an extensive trade, and which I call public credit.

"That it has arisen principally from this cause is probable from this, that our trade immediately after the failure of Dillon and Farrell's bank began to decay, that it languished for some time afterwards, and seemed almost totally destroyed upon the failure of the other two banks.

"These misfortunes, Sir, succeeding each other in a short space of time, struck such a general panic into the minds of the people, that no man thought his money safe in the hands of a banker.

"This occasioned an immediate run upon the banks, and of course obliged them to call in all the cash they could, which they have never since ventured to part with. The necessary consequence of all this has been a stagnation of the little cash which remained in this kingdom, which is the greatest misfortune that can happen to the commerce of any nation, for it is this quick circulation of the cash of any country which promotes the industry and consequently the commerce of it. The general discredit cast by the misfortunes, not only upon the notes of bankers, but also upon bills of exchange, was such that it is well known that the common transactions of fairs and markets cannot be carried on but by the voluntary associations of gentlemen in their respective counties.

"In this melancholy situation we have been for some time past. In this melancholy situation we at present are, and are likely to continue, unless the Legislature thinks proper to interpose by some remedial law.

"That these misfortunes have been brought upon us by either misconduct or fraud, or both, cannot be doubted.

"If by the former, it is our duty to reform it. If by the latter, it is not only our duty to punish it, but to guard against it for the future.

"But it is said that particular committees have been already appointed to inquire into the transactions of two of the banks that have failed, which renders the present inquiry unnecessary. Gentlemen will please to consider that the purposes for which those Committees and the present have been appointed are very different. The end proposed by those Committees is to give relief to the creditors of those particular banks, and to redress misfortunes which have already happened. The end proposed by the present Committee is to find out methods to prevent the like misfortunes happening for the future. The wisdom of prevention is far preferable to that of remedies.

"But it is said, Sir, that the public credit of this kingdom is in a flourishing condition, because our Treasury is full. It is from thence, Sir, I fear the greatest part of our misfortunes flow. The whole specie of this kingdom is computed, by those who are most skilled in that kind of knowledge, not to amount to more than 500,000*l*. By the last account returned to us from the Treasury, the sum then actually in the Treasury amounted to above 440,000*l*. Consequently there remains at most but a stock of 60,000*l*. for this whole nation to trade upon. The rest is swallowed up in that great gulph, the Treasury.

"All writers upon the subject of trade agree that good policy requires that the cash of a kingdom should be kept, if possible, increasing, because by that means a spirit of industry is kept alive, and the stock of labor, wherein consists all real power and riches, is increased. If this be true, the opposite conduct must produce an opposite effect, and that is the case in this kingdom, for it is demonstrable that the cash of this kingdom is in effect diminished in proportion as the wealth of the Treasury increases.

"If the money that ought to be in the Treasury is locked up in it, so much as is locked up is, for so long as it continues so locked up, the same thing to the nation as if was annihilated. For it is not the absolute quantity of money that is in any nation that makes the riches of it, but the quantity of money which circulates.

"If the persons concerned in the management of the Treasury venture to lay out any part of the public money for their own private profit, they must for their own safety lay it out upon such security as is the least subject to failure, though it produce less profit, and that is in some public fund. But as there are no public funds in this kingdom, they are under a necessity of sending the cash to another where there are. If this be so, it is evident the more money there is in the Treasury, the more may be exported, and consequently the more the nation will be impoverished.

"It is true, Sir, our bankers at home must get some share of the cash, otherwise they will not be ready to support the Treasury by their credit in case there should be any sudden demand upon it. But then, Sir, such cash circulates but through a few hands who make a monopoly of it, and become the only rich persons in the kingdom.

"I hope, Sir, it will not be supposed that I mean in what I have said the least disrespect to the gentlemen who at present have the direction of the Treasury. It is far from my thoughts, but one or other of the consequences I have mentioned must follow from a full Treasury, let who will have the direction of it.

"That this House has a right, nay, that it is the duty of this House to inquire into everything which relates to trade, and consequently into the public or general credit of the kingdom, without which trade cannot be carried on, I think cannot be doubted. We are the proper guardians of public credit, but the chief objection to this inquiry is that it may disclose secrets, which instead of supporting may destroy public credit.

"This is an objection, Sir, which would hold equally to any inquiry of this nature, and there is no difference between denying that the House has a power of inquiring and making use of an argument which, if allowed, would render that power altogether ineffectual.

"But Sir, I must say this tenderness for the bankers does not do them much honor. It betokens a jealousy that this inquiry might produce something to their disadvantage. How injurious the propagating such suspicions may be to their credit, and consequently to their business, is visible to everybody.

"But, Sir, in my opinion this inquiry will be so far from hurting that it will be of the greatest service to such of the bankers as have acted with honesty to the public, and such as have not I am sure it is not the intention of any gentleman in this House to protect. At present, Sir, people are so suspicious of bankers that they will not let money lie in their hands. This inquiry will remove those suspicions and restore them to that credit upon which their profits depend.

EMLY.

"From such an inquiry there is nothing to be dreaded by any but those who are guilty. This inquiry can give no just ground of apprehension to any but such as are afraid to let secrets come to light, from the knowledge of which they draw mighty profits at the expense of the public.

"Some of our best writers upon the affairs of this kingdom are of opinion that bankers are a prejudice to its commerce. For my part, Sir, I cannot concur in this opinion; but certain I am that banks unless under proper regulations are so.

"That some regulations are necessary, we needed not the experience of our late misfortunes to convince us. What those regulations should be it is impossible to point out without going into the inquiry proposed. The knowledge of the disorder is generally the knowledge of the cure, and that is the principal object of this inquiry."

"THE DANGERS with which this kingdom has been threatened for a considerable time past from a foreign enemy have been so often and so forcibly represented to you in this House that it is unnecessary for me to say anything to awaken your fears upon that subject. His Grace the Lord Lieutenant was so sensibly affected with our distress, that immediately after his appointment to this Government, he repaired to this kingdom, resolving to share the same fate with us. The event has answered his and not the kingdom's expectations. His presence alone has hitherto secured us from the impending storm. But the danger is not yet over. It is nearer us than ever. The enemy are now much better prepared and much more inclined to attack us. Should he leave us at this time, it is in vain that he has come to us. He will leave us in a worse, a much worse, condition than he found us, and if it should happen that those who are to succeed him in his high station, for it seems it is not as yet thought proper to be made public who they are to be, should not be equally knowing in military affairs as his Grace, what must become of us in case of an invasion? I tremble to think of it. To avert this danger, we should offer up our prayers to his Grace to continue a few months longer among us. As his Grace came here for our interest merely, we cannot doubt his complying with the request of those for whom he has shewed such singular affection."

Between 1762 and 1770, the following letters were addressed to Pery by William Gerard Hamilton, Chancellor of the Exchequer in Ireland, Member of the Privy Council there, Secretary to the Earls of Halifax and Northumberland, and known as "single speech Hamilton."

"Hampton Court,
Ang. the 16th, 1762.

"MY DEAR PERY,
"You cannot yourself be more convinced than I am of the illegality and indiscretion of the late proceedings in Council with regard to the Embargo, nor more heartily concerned at the ill effects which may possibly have arisen from so ill understood a conduct. I am neither surprised nor displeased that you have expressed yourself with warmth upon so very interesting an occasion. But the sense of the injury will not, I hope, carry you so far as to make you direct your anger against those who are by no means the proper objects of it. We are not the channel through [which] applications of this nature have ever passed, and so far were we from being instrumental in taking off the Embargo from Corke, that I did not know it was petitioned for till I knew the petition was granted. Though I may justly disclaim any share in procuring a partial immunity for Corke, I shall take to myself the whole merit of remedying this evil in some degree by getting Limerick admitted to an equal privilege. In the light of justice I was immediately struck with the ill tendency of such a preference, and in the light of favour, no city in Ireland could stand before Limerick, every indulgence to which had been fully merited, and every application in whose favour we considered as long since virtually made by the disinterested service, by the open, candid, and very honorable conduct of the person who represents it. The truth is, Corke was early surreptitious, and therefore successful in its application. When the Limerick petition was presented, the Council saw what they ought to have seen sooner, that they were reduced to this alternative; they must either retract the permission they had given to Corke, or, by extending it to every other city which applied, entirely defeat the purpose of the Embargo. In my opinion they were at last very wrong in their determination, and at first very slow in their discernment. But this, my dear

Pery, was the real state of the transaction, all of which was carried on not only without our solicitations, but even without our privity.

"The doctrine of Embargoes is a subject I have been at the pain of considering, and I am clear that it ought to be practised as moderately and as seldom as possible. That you distress your own trade is certain, that you distress the enemy is disputable, and I believe it would be difficult to produce an instance of success on our side, or of failure on theirs, that could be fairly attributed to this precaution. But these are acts of State, upon the particular propriety of which it is not possible for those who are not in the first digestion of affairs to judge clearly, and not prudent therefore to speak decisively.

"You do me no more than justice, though I am sensible at the same time you do me honor, in entertaining the most favourable sentiments of my regard for the welfare and prosperity of Ireland. Whether I may ever have it again in my power to co-operate with you in reducing those sentiments to practice, though I am solicitous to know, I am unable to determine. My good wishes and my endeavours you may be sure you shall always have in whatever sphere it may be my fortune to act. I am not ashamed to own that my conduct in public will always be in some degree influenced by my private obligations and affection, and nothing can be in my opinion more profligate or absurd than to ground one's pretensions to public virtue by disclaiming every private feeling. I shall never forget Pery either in his candid and sincere support or in his generous and open opposition. I consider them both in the same light, because I know they both flowed from the same principle, and believe me that as long as you and Andrews and Hutchinson* are in being and in business, Ireland will never want attractions sufficient to make me prefer it to a situation of more splendor and of greater influence. Were it not for these inducements, an Irish employment would never be an object of my ambition, because I should no longer enjoy the assistance of those who made it a pleasure or the approbation of those who made it a credit to me.

"As soon as your commands are obeyed, which the Secretary of State assured me will be in a day or two, I will inform you of it. By my diligence in the affair I think I shall deserve, and remember that I bespeak, all your future commands. You must take it as a small earnest of my zeal and cordial inclinations in favour of every cause which you espouse, and of my earnestness to promote everything which has the remotest tendency to advance or support the credit and consideration which is justly due from every body to your character, and which is very particularly so from, dear Pery, your most faithful and affectionate friend.

W. G. HAMILTON."

"Hampton Court,"
Sept. the 25th, 1762.

"MY DEAR PERY,
"You will be pleased to understand that this letter is addressed at least as much to your gardiner as to yourself, for as I have been informed that the great Statesmen in your neighbourhood have of late taken a turn of improvement, I consider a gardiner as a sort of minister, and it is natural for a Secretary to think that a minister ought to be treated with at least as much respect as his master. I shall take care to send you by Mason a great variety of American seeds, and there is no danger of our being hereafter deficient in this sort of commodity, since the report is that we are to acquire still more largely in North America by this peace than was proposed upon Mr. Pitt's plan. In spite, therefore, of all your ingratitude in Ireland, you must be highly obliged to the Duke of Bedford in two very material points, in concluding a peace which will provide for your stock of trees, in which you are much stinted, and for the diminution of your people, in which you so much abound.

"I am much obliged to you for your very kind expressions and still kinder intentions, in case I should have the good fortune to return to Ireland. I had not before the receipt of your letter been informed of the opinion which it seems you could not give, and for which you are so kind as to apologize. Be assured that your friendship calls for no compliance which your honor can refuse, [or] imposes any opinion inconsistent with the most unbounded freedom. I value your good opinion and that intercourse of friendship which subsists between us in consequence of it, more even from the pleasure than from the advantages which attend it, though they have been so constant that I am neither insensible enough not to feel, nor ungrateful enough not to acknowledge them. Be always as you are now, my friend. Treat me always as you did in your last letter. Over-rate any good quality I may happen to possess, and only laugh at any folly of which I may happen to be guilty. Wish to find me in the right, and oppose me when you have not attained your wishes. I desire your friendship on no other footing than that of deserving it, and this will, my dear Pery, be the constant and earnest endeavour of your most faithful and affectionate friend.

"W. G. HAMILTON."

"Privy Garden,
Nov. the 6th, 1762.

"MY DEAR PERY,

"OUR friend Hutchinson, who knows that everything which promotes your happiness must necessarily contribute to my pleasure, has by this last packet informed me of your marriage.* It did not surprise me, because it is just that match which they [who] wish your happiness the most, which are those who know you best, have long predestined for you. Permit me, my dear Pery, to congratulate you both, and to assure you that no one ever can, upon this occasion, join more sincerely, or partake more largely, in the general joy of your friends. It is needless for any of us to entertain the least degree of solicitude for your increase of happiness: that mutual affection and mutual merits have infallibly secured to you for the present, and left those who are the most anxious for your welfare nothing to wish you but the long and uninterrupted continuance of it.

"You must not, however, think that my regard for you has stifled all my humanity for others; or that, with so much reason for congratulation, there is no cause for condolence. I cannot help compassionating the poor Macartney, who must now add you to the long list of her unfaithful lovers, and who might really be tempted to do something desperate, if, at the marriage from Lucan as at the marriage in Gallilee, the water was turned into wine, and the Liffey only rolled with Madeira.

"In the meantime, I am endeavouring to draw something selfish from the subject of your joy and her sorrow. I flatter myself that taking a wife is a prelude to taking a place, and I think that Mrs. Pery, after having [got] the better of your private continence, may soften perhaps the rigours of your public virtue, instead of imitating the example of Mrs. Crooke Percival, as Lord Clarendon says it was she and not her husband gave judgment against the King in the case of Ship-money. Whether Mrs. Pery would act like the Lady may be uncertain; but I think it rather clear that you would have decided like the judge.

"In short, there is something that tells me that you will be always a little untractable abroad and always extremely pliable at home. There have been certain times of my life in which I have not been always without thoughts of the same marriage. But, often as I have strove, I could never bring my mind to it. I am now determined to defer it till we meet, if that is ever to happen. Then we will compare notes, and, in the meantime you, my dear Pery, shall solicit happiness in constancy, and I will court in variety. Whatever may be my situation, you will always have, what you must always be entitled to, the warmest good wishes and esteem of—

"Your most faithful
Affectionate friend,
"W. G. HAMILTON."

"Hanover Square,
March the 7th, 1765.

"MY DEAR PERY,

"THAT I, who have been Secretary to two Lord Lieutenants, should be abused in every company in Dublin has nothing in it either very new or very mortifying; but that you should join in that abuse is both. I will, however, give you, notwithstanding this ill treatment, all the information in my power upon the two particulars you desire, and concerning which I believe you to be as sincerely anxious as any man living—the situation of your country and the conduct of your friends."

"That there is not at present, whatever there may be in prospect, the faintest idea of taxing Ireland by the authority of the British Legislature I think I know to a demonstration. But when you are apprized of everything which has passed in Parliament upon this subject, you will be able to form your own judgment.

"When the proposal for imposing a stamp duty in America was first made, Alderman Beckford, the Dr. Lucas of the English House of Commons, apprehended he should increase considerably the number of opponents to that measure, if he could contrive to convey an impression that the taxation of America was not desired merely for its own sake, but as a preliminary also to the taxation of Ireland. This idea, though not altogether ill-conceived, was so very unably and miserably executed, that instead of creating terror it was productive of nothing but a great deal of laughter; and had the matter terminated there, the most anxious friends to Ireland could not, I suppose, have entertained a serious apprehension. But in some subsequent stage of this question, both Mr. Grenville and Mr. Yorke, I profess I thought very unnecessarily, took an opportunity of asserting strongly, and without any reserve, the power of the British Legislature to impose taxes upon Ireland. But while they maintained that, in point of mere right, the jurisdiction of the British Parliament was the same over Ireland as it was over America, they not only admitted but explained very much at large that in point of policy and propriety they were very different questions. This is the whole of what passed upon that subject; and even this was, I am persuaded, taken up in the course of debate, merely incidentally, without the least concert before, and without the least view to anything after. Though no one knows, or wishes to know, less of the particular measures of this Administration than I do, it is impossible to be ignorant of this general situation. That security, which might be endangered by their inclination, you may rely on from their want of power. And instead of forming schemes for the oppression of your country, or for the relief of their own, I am to believe their plans extend no further than how to continue themselves in situations which, though they are unfit to fill, they are unwilling to relinquish, and which they are sensible they hold by a very precarious tenure.

"I little thought till I received your letter that any argument could have been offered which would induce me to vote for taxing Ireland in the English Parliament, and I still less apprehended that you was the person who would offer it. But if the consequence of this measure is to be your removal from Dublin to London, and your exchanging Edmundsbury possibly for Hampton Court, I have been too long a Secretary not to know the force of bribes upon others, and too long a member of Parliament not to know the weight of them with myself, to suppose I could withstand so very powerful a temptation.

"As to my own conduct, which your partiality alone can make you consider as a thing of any importance, before you can form a judgment of the propriety, you must have patience to hear the principles of it. In the course of last summer, I received proposals from the Administration, and professions, the only thing they had to offer, from the Opposition. With the Administration I was determined not to engage; and it was, I believe, Mr. Pitt's opinion that, upon a plan of activity, the Opposition could not be effectual, and that it would serve only to connect the Administration, who possess the principal offices, with Lord Bute, who possesses the principal power; but that, if left to themselves, an unexpected event from abroad, or even without it, their mutual detestation of each other would infallibly break out, and probably disunite them. This opinion, going to a total want of union between the several branches of the Opposition, and to no man's repose half an hour's confidence in another, had been the occasion why this session has hitherto gone on quietly, but yet not prosperously for Administration, and why, through the course of it, the friends of Mr. Pitt have pursued this studied plan of inactivity. It is, however, my opinion clearly that possibly before the breaking up of the Parliament, but more probably before the next meeting of it, the whole system of Administration must necessarily undergo a very material change. In this situation, it is my own wish to steer between that Parliamentary profligacy which is so general, and your extreme stoicism, my dear Pery, which is so particular. I am neither for accepting an employment under every Administration, or for refusing one under all. Till I can unite the influence, the rank, and the emolument of office with public character and public good opinion, I will take no situation,—and when I can do that, it will be indifferent to me what situation I take. You judge perfectly right in thinking that it requires but little fortitude to deliver any opinion in the English House of Commons. There are a few, and but a very few, men of extraordinary talents. The herd are wretched beyond conception, and Parliamentary abilities were upon the whole, I believe, never at a lower ebb. And I sometimes wish you would take a view of our Parliament, you would return so very highly satisfied with your own. Should I, which I think is very unlikely, have any degree of partiality either for the next Lord Lieutenant or his Secretary, I will give them a very strong proof of my friendship, by recommending them very earnestly to yours. If I should be particularly disinclined to them, which I think still less likely, I will in that case likewise recommend them to your attention, though with a very different view. And if I am totally indifferent about them, which is most probable, I will be totally silent about them.

"I have delayed my acknowledgment of your letter for some time, that my answer might reach you by a private conveyance, and Lord Newcastle has promised he would deliver it to you. Adieu, my dear Pery, and as often as you wish for information with regard to what is going forward in this part of the world, or have any commands which fall within my compass to obey, let me entreat you to have recourse to me. I value myself much upon having acquired your friendship. It would mortify me much to be deprived of it. I now rejoice at what I have often lamented, that we were not embarked together in the same system, and I recollect with pleasure that though our situations inclined us to be opponents, our dispositions led us to be friends. In this stage of our acquaintance, and after having been indebted to you for so many obligations, both of a public and of a private nature, I need not, I hope, repeat my acknowledgments, or explain the sense I entertain of them. In every instance, and in every profession of esteem and affection, no one has been more uniform or can be more sincere than,

"Your most faithful, obliged, and unalterable

"Hamilton to Prime Sergeant Hutchinson.

"St. James's Street, Dec. the 2nd, 1769.

"MY DEAR HUTCHINSON,

"I HAVE within this half hour received information that Colonel H—, who is set out for Ireland, has left a servant in town, who is to overtake him at Chester, and who will deliver to him there the short letter I have now an opportunity of writing to you, relative to either Irish or English politics, since Mr. Smith's departure for Dublin.

"The report you have heard of Lord Gower's having been desired to accept the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland is true. The King, as an inducement to him, made him an offer of the vacant Garter. But his disinclination to any office of trouble, and to that office in particular, joined to the advice of the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, of Rigby, and of all his friends, have induced him to resist the temptation. He has, likewise, some certain partialities which make him wish not to go as Lord Lieutenant, to the full as much as they ever made any one wish to go as Secretary.

"But, notwithstanding all these circumstances, I am far from thinking it certain that he will not be compelled to resign the office of Lord Chamberlain which he holds. Lord Bute wants it to become vacant, in my opinion, to take it himself. As he has been the occasion of the Duke of Devonshire's being removed from it, he thought it invidious to be put into that office while the Duke of Devonshire was alive. But that objection being over, this I believe will be his first step back again to public employment. But it is not his intention to stay long in so inactive a situation. You know I concluded that if Lord Gower was to be Lord Lieutenant, Wood is the man for Secretary. For about two days it was supposed that this arrangement had actually taken place. And I had the entertainment and, whatever malice there might be in it, I must confess, likewise, the pleasure of knowing that, in three or four companies of Irish gentlemen, more objections were raised to Wood's mean birth, to his public and private character, upon the mere supposition of his being Secretary, than I had ever heard against those who had been two sessions of Parliament in the country, and who had got one of the best employments out of it. The idea of a Secretary not in Parliament meets with universal approbation, and it is thought a great master-stroke in politics to leave you Irish gentlemen to quarrel amongst one another, without sending a person from England, who shall engross to himself the whole abuse of the session. In vain I declare everywhere that in the course of the two winters I sat in Parliament in Ireland, I never had a single offensive thing said to me, but, on the contrary, many flattering ones. Lord Halifax and Lord Northumberland agree in asserting that there never would or ever could be any confusion if the Secretary was out of Parliament. And what is extraordinary, Rigby is very sanguine in supporting the same opinion. The Primate's friends begin to flatter themselves that he will recover. But his physicians, whose opinion I have accidentally the opportunity of knowing very authentically, think it is impossible. From what cause it proceeds I cannot pretend even to conjecture, but I am very well informed that Lord Northumberland speaks of the Primate's death rather with pleasure than regret, and that even her Ladyship is far from shewing any signs of concern at it. I conclude that they have found him out in a thousand tricks, and that his Excellency suspects he does not make a very respectable figure in being beset and directed by her Ladyship's favorites and by the Primate's gang. The conversation of my Lord Lieutenant's family is in some particulars very amusing, and in others very mortifying, to me. You will scarce believe that the language which they hold is, that business will go on much better when the Primate is dead, and when my Lord Lieutenant takes every thing under his own management. As to that, however, you may imagine, I am very indifferent. But it is a constant topic with them to talk of the engagements which you entered into when you was last in England to support their Government, in case they returned to Ireland, and to ridicule the idea of any friendship subsisting between us, when your abilities are no longer necessary for my support, and my influence could be no further serviceable to your interests. I am as sensible, my dear Prime Sergeant, of the injustice they do to your feelings, as my conduct shall ever prove to you they do to my affection."

"DEAR PERY, Sep^r the 22nd, 1770.

"You are, I believe, too conversant with the Treasury in Ireland not to know that in every transaction, and particularly in every pecuniary transaction, Mr. Clements* is a gentleman very narrowly to be watched. I have passed over unnoticed a variety of little impositions, because, though they were disagreeable enough, and sufficiently provoking, I did not think them of a magnitude which would justify my coming to anything like a serious explanation with him. But as he has adopted, and for two or three years regularly pursued, a plan, by which I apprehend myself to be defrauded of no inconsiderable part of my income, I must now beg that, through your friendly interposition, the matter in dispute may be settled between us, and the moment that you are satisfied, I shall be contented.

"The whole of the case I have stated in the enclosed letter, with as much plainness as I was able, and with as much perspicuity as a head-ache would permit. I avoid therefore to trouble you with a repetition of it, and have only to desire that you would seal up and send my letter to Mr. Clements, as soon as, by an attentive perusal, you are become master of the contents of it. You will then be at the further trouble of conversing with him upon the subject of it, as soon as you are at leisure.

"Though it would be needless to explain in this letter all the particulars of our dispute as much as large as they are stated in the inclosed, it may perhaps be necessary, even here, just to mention what is the point in disagreement between us.

"My charge is, that since the 4s. tax has been laid, a greater sum has been deducted from the income of my office than the law required, and than he, of course, was authorised to detain. For the manner in which I maintain and make this charge out, I must refer you to the letter to Mr. Clements.

"Another method, however, suggests itself by which you may soon become a perfect master of this matter, and a complete judge of the merits of my claim. I have ordered the materials to be laid before you. They will be, what very seldom happens, both short and satisfactory. All my demands upon Mr. Clements arise from a salary of 1,200*l.* per annum, and from such fees as he has received from Hyndley, the Deputy, upon my account. These are the two articles which make the charge. The two articles which will make his discharge are "Receipts" under my hand for "Money remitted," and the payments he has made in satisfaction of the 4s. tax upon my accounts.

"I must observe, however, that if Mr. Clements should actually and bona fide have paid in to the Public Account all the money he has deducted from my income, he and not I am to be responsible, provided it turns out that the deduction made is unjust, and he will find it no great difficulty to re-imburse himself, provided this should turn out to be the case. But I suspect the contrary, and think it not impossible, but that you will find a very material difference between what I have paid to him, and he has paid to the public. If this should be the case, you will easily detect it by an examination of the paper laid before Parliament, which states how much all the Offices (and mine therefore inclusively) pay on account of the 4s. tax. If 396l. is the sum paid in, on the deductions from my office, then Mr. Clements will have dealt fairly by the public. But still, he will have dealt unfairly by me, that sum being more than I ought to pay, as I have explained at large in the inclosed letter to which I refer you. In order to judge how far Clements has paid in the money he deducted, it is absolutely necessary that before you see him the paper I mentioned should be consulted. I have ordered by this post my Deputy to send you an account of all the money he has paid to Clements since the commencement of the tax. I have only to apprise you that in adjusting the account the thing is to be attended to. As he detains the money in his hands some months after it is become due, before he remitted it, regard must be had not so much to the time at which it was actually paid, as to the periods at which it became due and was payable. As all this embarrassment has arose from the confusion between the two Accounts of the Fees and the Salary, I wish much that for the future they may be separated—that Mr. Clements should continue to remit the Salary, but my Deputy remit the Fees. If this came as a proposal from you, it would relieve me exceedingly. The object may truly be represented an inconsiderable one, and the motive as truly a wish to avoid confusion. You will perceive and approve my having studiously avoided saying anything disrespectful to Clements. I make no apologies to you, my dear Pery, for all this trouble. Apology for making use of your friendship might seem to imply a diffidence of it; and after so long a trial, and so many, it would be as inexcusable to doubt as to forget it."

John Ponsonby, in 1771, resigned the Speakership on the ground that he would not officially be the instrument of presenting an address from the Commons to Lord Townshend, whose Viceroyal administration in Ireland had met with his disapproval and had been censured by protests of that House. A considerable number of the members were in favour of selecting the Right Hon. William Brownlow, Member for Armagh, as successor to Ponsonby, while others advocated the promotion of Pery to the vacant Chair. The question came before the House on the 7th of March 1771, and on that and the next day the following proceedings took place, in connexion with the Speakership:

"The Right Hon. Sir George Macartney informed the House that his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant having been acquainted that the Right Honourable John Ponsonby, Speaker of this House, had resigned the chair, and requested the House to elect another Speaker, he, Sir George Macartney, was commanded by his Excellency, to acquaint the House that it was his Excellency's pleasure that the House do forthwith proceed to the election of another Speaker, and present him to his Excellency to-morrow morning.

"Accordingly the Right Honourable Sir George Macartney did name and recommend to the House Edmond Sexton Pery, Esq., as a fit person for his abilities for that employment, which was seconded by John Fitz-Gibbon, Esq., and the Right Hon. James Fortescue* also said he seconded the motion.

"Then the Clerk put the following question:

"As many as are of opinion that Edmond Sexton Pery, Esq., take the chair of this House as Speaker, say ay, when many ayes were said; as many as are of the contrary opinion, say no; and many noes being said, the Clerk, according to his duty and the practice, named the Right Honourable James Fortescue, teller for the ayes on the right, and Mr. William Brabazon Ponsonby, teller for the noes on the left.

"And the tellers having counted the House, reported that the "Ayes on the right were 118.

"Noes on the left were 114.

"Then the Clerk declared Mr. Pery duly elected Speaker.

"And then Mr. Speaker elect was taken out of his place by Sir George Macartney and Mr. Fitz-Gibbon, who led him from the bar of the House up to the chair, where, upon the first step to the chair, he made a short speech to the House, and thanked them for the honour they had done him, and afterwards sat down in the chair; and then the mace, which lay before under the table, was laid upon the table.

"And the House adjourned until to-morrow morning, ten of the clock.

"Veneris, 8^o Die Martij, 1771.

"A message from his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant by Bowen Southwell, Esq., Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod:

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"It is his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant's pleasure that this House attend him immediately in the House of Peers.

"And Mr. Speaker elect, with the other Members present, went up to attend his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, where he spake to the following effect:

"May it please your Excellency,

"The Commons in Parliament assembled have, in obedience to your Excellency's commands, proceeded to the election of a Speaker, and have elected me, and now attend to present me to your Excellency. It would give your Excellency no favourable impression of my sincerity, if I were to pursue the usual form, and affect to decline this important office. I confess it is the highest point of my ambition, and if I have the honour of your Excellency's approbation, I shall endeavour to prove by my conduct that I have not been more solicitous to obtain, than I shall be anxious to discharge the duties of it."

The following letters were addressed to Pery, in 1771-74, by Francis Andrews, Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, and William Gerard Hamilton:—

"Yesterday I rec^d yours of the 6th, rejoice at Shiels' success exceedingly. He is prudent and won't lose his time in hunting after popularity unless as a commodity to dispose of. You see I consider you as one of us, or should not have sported such a profane sentiment. Had his Excy. read you my letter, you would find that I lamented without complaining. If Gamble's preference depends on the Excise scheme being carried into execution, he will continue unplaced a great while to his no small mortification. I am not surprised he is a little impatient, for the promise is four years old, which is more than half the purchase of his life, and it must be confessed he is a worthy sitting member. His Excy. is as mysterious in his love as in his State intrigue, and perhaps it would be better for his friends and his mistress he was a little more explicit in both. I think the Chancellor's over-ruling the plea is of no consequence in the determination of the merits. I am glad the plea was an English measure. This is the finest weather and the sweetest place, and the house and style of living do honor even to a paymaster. My love attends the family of Edmondsbury, where I hope to pass many days, as pleased as our time of life admits of.

"Yesterday I received yours of the 19th at Caversham, a seat of Lord Cadogan's. To-day I arrived here, a seat of Lord Barrington's from whence Rigby and I shall proceed to Lord Weymouth's, where I shall stay some days, and hope to reach Ireland the 12th of next month. I never knew Rigby in better health, and he desires me to assure you that he most sincerely condoles with you. I intend visiting Averell this summer, and Vesey's company and yours will be no small inducements. That the Chancellor applied for the 500l. is extremely probable, and that you would have refused is certain. I shall try to submit the paper to Garrick. I had entertained hopes of seeing Swau in England, but I believe I shall find him in Ireland. I am just come from the Installation, which was truly royal.

 "Next Sunday I leave this and hope to have the pleasure of meeting Mr. Hancock and Ellison at Tours that night. I had a letter from Ellison from Angers, where they now are. I shall write to you from Bordeaux and give you my opinion of the young gentleman. Lord Harcourt* is gone to England, I hear, and does not mean to return. Rigby's account agrees with Forrester's as to the time of Lord Townshend's return. I have just received a letter from his Excellency, but he says he cannot speak with any degree of precision about the time of his leaving Ireland. I heard of poor Mrs. Hill's death. How many people could I have served had I not made a bishopric for Averell my great point, and of how little use was it either to him or his friends. One advantage I have derived from it, a thorough conviction of the futility of human projects and the absurdity of our extreme solicitude about their success. You see, my dear Pery, I begin to moralize, and if I return to Ireland I shall reduce my speculations into practice. For one who neither wanted nor wished for himself, I have misspent my time abominably, but to know and confess one's error is half way towards amendment (vous verrez).

"I hear Gore is making the most of Limerick, but he is poor, has a large family, and his life is precarious. My best compliments to Tisdall and his family, to Forrester and all other friends, and love to Madam.

"Bordeaux, Aug. 21st, 1772.

"I arrived here yesterday and received a most friendly letter from Lord Grantham. By his advice I shall not go the usual route to Madrid, but pass through Burgos and visit St. Ildefonso, where the Court now is, and where he will have an opportunity of presenting me. From thence we shall go to the Escorial, and so to Madrid. He has assured me he will do everything in his power to make my stay in Spain as agreeable as possible, so that I flatter myself I shall make a favourable report of a Spanish tour.

"I expect to reach St. Ildefonso about the 20th of next month, and consequently must leave this about the 10th. I met Ellison at Tours, and as he chose to ride from Angers (out of economy) Mr. Hancock did not come with him. He gives me a very favourable account of the young gentleman's disposition. Not the least propensity to any vice—a principal point that. Application is not his forte, but he is more attentive and makes a greater progress at Angers than he has hitherto done; and if he learns to speak French fluently, to ride, fence, and dance gracefully, and escapes free from the vices which disgrace the present times, his mother ought to be extremely well satisfied. I gave Ellison my best advice on the occasion.

My health improves daily. Love to Madam, but compliments to Tisdall, etc.

"MY DEAR PERY, Barcelona, January 21st, 1773.

"I ARRIVED here the 19th instant, where I received yours of the 12th ultimo, and am exceedingly obliged to you for the circumstantial account of Lord Townshend's departure,† and Lord Harcourt's reception. It is rather odd that a man who had so many great things to give away, and gave them all to the people of the country, should not leave a friend behind him. He had his oddities, but he had also many virtues not often found in men of his station. He has done many things which have disobliterated me exceedingly. These I shall endeavour to forget; but in other great points he acted with an honour and firmness that I never can forget; but somewhat too much of this. I believe we shall have an odd session of it, there are fine inflammatory materials for opposition. So Lord Harcourt has as yet shown a leaning to no party, and hopes by that means to win them all. The Duke of Bedford at first proceeded on that principle. You know what was the consequence. I had a letter from Lord Townshend relative to that cursed affair of Lough Swilly, in order, I suppose, to explain it, but it has only served to confound it. He talks of having received a fresh application from the excise board about it. What, have they petitioned for a landing place? Whether there is any foundation for the other cause which has been supposed to operate, I will not take upon me to determine, but from my letters, both from England and Ireland, the report seems to have gained ground; but yet, my dear Pery, why this point should be carried against Derry, I cannot see any substantial reason. I had an account of the Pension story before, I am convinced she never made any such request. As cool as Tisdal! How like Townshend that was. Dublin has acted a very foolish part, but then it falls short of London in point of folly, as much as it does in point of size. How I shall laugh to see Flood supporting. Let me bring home but health, etc. (thank God, I have a fair prospect), take my word for it, I shall never hurt by too close an attendance on Parliament. I rejoice to hear that you and your sweet wife are well, and long may you continue so. I really consider my own happiness as much interested in that point. As I am now almost within call of post horses, I look upon my Spanish adventure as happily achieved. The most disagreeable circumstance in the whole is the many tedious hours you must pass upon the road, which cannot be avoided, but by proper precautions you may in a great measure supply the want of accommodations.

"However, the fine climate has made me sufficient amends, and I think I may craze one winter out of the calendar of my life. I shall reserve the narration for some of our evenings at Edmondsbury.

"In the affair of the Commissions, Sir William's behaviour was manly. Will Ponsonby never have done playing the fool? I hear Lanesborough has entertained Lord Harcourt. Undoubtedly you were a guest. I wish my friend was back in his old place. I hear French has paid Herts the money, it was more than I expected; I am sure I should not have called for it till it was convenient for him. I never find any want of money but when my friends want it. I hope to be at Bezières with Burton about a fortnight hence, where I shall stay to repose. I do not think of seeing England till the sun has made some progress in the northern signs. My family inform me you are kind enough to visit them, for which I thank you.

"Yours ever,
 "F. ANDREWS."

"William Gerard Hamilton to Pery.

"DEAR PERY, September the 8th, 1773.

"NEITHER having at present, nor being likely to have, any more confidential channel of communication, I write to you again by the post. Upon a further recollection of everything that passed between Blaquiere* and me as to my office, it is my clear opinion that he was better pleased with my refusal than he would have been with my acceptance of the offices which were made to me. It is matter of mere conjecture, but from his conduct I am persuaded that the fear of disobliging more than one person who wanted it, was his inducement to treat with me, and that the apprehension of offending Hutchinson made him pleased that the treaty ended in nothing. Had my employment been at the disposal of Lord Harcourt, the many competitors for it might have created more difficulties to Government than it would have removed. But that it can not be obtained is an answer equally satisfactory to them all. I might have known for what particular person it was intended, but I desired expressly that no such secret might be communicated to me; being unwilling that my refusal should be ascribed to my dislike of the person destined to be my successor, about whom, independent of my very sincere wishes that the Prime Serjeant may be pleased in everything, I am and must be perfectly indifferent. Assure him that I shall on all occasions be happy to pay the most friendly attention to his interests, his feelings, and his very punctilios; but that in return I hope he will not require me, if any future occasion should occur, which I must repeat I think extremely improbable, to sacrifice the solid and substantial interests of myself and of those who are to come after me; for the tendency of what was proposed pointed to a security for three lives. I need not repeat the request of my former letter to communicate with no one but the Prime Serjeant on this subject, or desire you not to transmit to me any proposal by whomsoever you may be applied “ Aix, Decr. 28th, 1773.

Provost Andrews to Pery.

“ Why trouble you, my dear Speaker, with a tedious detail of crosses and disappointments? I have not had one pleasant day since I left England. I, that never used to meet with a difficulty, find them everywhere; which is saying, in other words, I have not the same strength of body or mind, and, prithee, why should I expect to escape the common lot of humanity. After a disagreeable journey, I arrived here the 18th ult., and, as I was setting out for Aix, the next morning early, I tumbled over the shafts of [the] carriage, and received a violent cut and contusion on my shin bone. As for some days the appearances were favourable, I avoided sending for a surgeon, who, I was told, would make a job of it. But, after a month's confinement, I was obliged to have recourse to one, and he assured me I shall be able to set out for Nice next Friday. Captain Carey, whom I knew at Gibraltar, seeing my distress gave me up the only tolerable chamber he had, and he and his good little wife shewed me every mark of attention. But still I am confined to one room to sleep, eat and drink in, with some disagreeable et ceteras which our frail nature renders indispensable. Cleanliness and fresh air are great blessings. Want of exercise does not agree with me, but I am in hopes Nice will set everything to rights. And what is it I am pursuing? A phantom. I flatter myself it is health, but I fear it is long life. I am running away as hard as I can from Death. If ever I return to you, I shan't quit you in haste. But somewhat too much of this.

“ I congratulate you on the hurry of the session being over, and I hope the country will soon feel the good effects of your deliberations. I am glad that the Stamp Act is past. I had strong doubts about the rectitude, or even the utility, of the Absentee Tax, and much stronger about its passing.

“ I have promised Rigby to be in England in May, and I mean, Deo volente, to keep my word.

“ What is the present price of Apostasy? I want some anecdotes.

“ F. ANDREWS.”

“ MY DEAR PERY, Antibes, January 2nd, 1774.

“ I was so impatient of confinement, that, though my leg was not quite healed, I left Aix last Friday. I made short journeys and arrived here to reach Nice to-morrow about ten in the morning, where I have a good house secured for me. I wanted exercise and fresh air exceedingly, and I already perceive the advantages of them. Just before I left Aix, I received a packet of letters (which by my directions had been transmitted from Nice) in which were yours of the 20th and 26th of Novr., for both of which I am much obliged to you. Gamble informed me you spoke like an angel in favour of the Absentee Tax. Your account of the conduct of several members squares with the opinion I had conceived of them. The Castle seems to me to have managed matters very well, and, as a Patriot, I have always wished and drank a happy and easy Administration. You know, my dear Speaker, that many of the grievances and the greatest part of our debt are owing to Oppositions, founded on personal motives. Whether the Country may have derived any advantages from those Oppositions, which overbalance the inconveniences, I shall not pretend to determine.

“ So Flood has declared himself, and has submitted to take his place in the “ Freeman's Journal,” in order to get a better from the Castle. There is nothing our little friend the Prime [Sergeant] would not do to prevent Flood's having the conduct of affairs. I have often thought that the too great solicitude of Government to secure individuals has defeated their intent. The reason is obvious.

“ By the accounts I have received of the Duke of Leinster's will, I fear his son's present income will be narrow. I am not surprised that few are ambitious to represent the city of Dublin. I congratulate you seriously on the prospect you have of a quiet session. I wish to hear from you as often as you have leisure. Direct to me at Monsr. Le Clerc & Cie. à Nice.

LORD
EMLY.

“ And now a few words as to my own health, as I am perfectly persuaded you are kind enough to be interested about it. Though my tedious confinement has prevented me from reaping all the advantages I expected from this climate, yet I may venture to pronounce myself much better than when I left Ireland. The weather has for some time past been uncommonly bad, but I expect better on the other side of the bar, and from the regimen I intend to follow, I flatter myself [I] shall pass some pleasant days at Edmondsberry.

“ Yours ever, etc.

“ F. ANDREWS.”

“ MY DEAR PERY,

Febry. 1st, 1774, Nice.

“ I HAVE just received yours of Decr. 30th, with the Stamp Bills. When the Parliament have done the needful and granted the supplies liberally, Administration should not be captious in quarrelling either with the mode or the phrase, but rather extremely cautious in making any alterations. Seventy alterations! It is impossible they would have been necessary, and, of course, were absurd. But still not more absurd than the Castle supposition. Had the Bedford party any intention ever to affront Lord Harcourt, I think I must have found it out, some way or another, even though they intended to conceal it from me; but, on the contrary, I have all the reason in the world to believe they wished him success. Nay, I have letters from Rigby highly approving the manner in which the King's business had been done, not without an encomium on the Secretary's conduct.

“ I am extremely pleased with your account of the Triumviri. That Hutchinson should conduct measures suggested by Flood under the orders of Blaquiere, I am almost ready to cry out,—Rem prodigiosam et prorsus incredibilem! But I have more than once seen the wonderfull effects of interest. The Attorney's retreat whether voluntary or involuntary, is not unbecoming. I am not surprized that the city of Dublin have preferred Morres* to Geale, because he was clearly the unfittest person. They are now completely represented.

“ I wrote to you from Antibes with an account of my situation. My leg is quite healed, and I can use it as well as ever. The only disagreeable symptom that remains [is] that towards night my ancles swell, but in the morning they appear of their usual size. This is certainly a fine climate, though the weather has been uncommonly bad this season. When it rains here, it pours, and continues for a long time. After a rain of 56 hours, it began to clear up this morning. Though my house is not above two hundred yards from the gate of the city, yet a few hours rain makes the roads so dirty and slippery, that I dare not venture out in my chair (the chairmen being extremely awkward) without risking an overturn.

“ You will easily imagine there are no persons of any great consequence here, when the Bishop of Clogher† and I keep much the best tables. Whoever thinks this a cheap place (provided they live well) will find themselves mistaken.

“ I live very temperately, take a good deal of exercise when the weather permits, and drink very little wine unmix'd with water. If I return in good health and find you and your family so, we may still hope to pass some pleasant years together.

“ F. ANDREWS.”

“ MY DEAR PERY,

Nice, Febry. 23rd, 1774.

“ I HAVE received yours of January 27th, and intreat you to banish all your gloomy apprehensions about me. I really have none about myself. I flatter myself I shall return to Ireland with a sufficient share of health and spirits to discharge the duties of my place and to relish the conversation of my friends; and unless I turn out a very disagreeable dog indeed, I am sure my good friend Mrs. Pery will always be glad to see me at her fire-side. I wrote you an account of my health. It remains in statu quo—my leg is quite healed, no symptom remaining but a swelling in the ancle towards night. I have bathed twice. It was extremely agreeable. If there is the least wind, the swell is so great and the breakers so troublesome that it is difficult to find a tolerable bathing place. Gamble informs me that you were obliged to adjourn for want of numbers. A thin attendance is a sure proof of a strong Administration. I do agree with you that Government frequently lessens its members by the manner of bestowing employments, but I am sure it would be much weaker if it had not those places to give away. Sir Archibald Acheson's* son was seized with a fit, and vomited a great deal of blood. We were very solicitous about the event, but he has quite got the better of it.

"I should have written to his father upon the occasion, but so many wrote him an account of it, that a letter from me was quite unnecessary. I am exceedingly glad that Belvedere's† mind has taken so happy a turn. Had he carried his resentments into the other world, he must have been always one [of] the Perturbed Spirits. How does our friend Lanesborough relish his being past by on these occasions, especially when it is so difficult to find out a place which he will accept of, and to make a new one for him is totally inconsistent with the present scheme of economy.

"So Blaquiere gives the word, and the P[ri]me[S]tergeant marches and halts as commanded. What strange events are produced, quotes voluit Fortuna jocari. I have a letter from Lord Ely, with an account of Lady Ely's miserable state of health, but he still seems to entertain strong hopes of her recovery. If she should make a vacancy, he cannot possibly find a more amiable successor. I return home with a full intention of retiring from all business but of my place, and the loss of any little importance I might have had will be more than compensated by the tranquillity I shall enjoy. General Sheppel and young Hale are now with me, and in a month I expect a visit from Sir Wm. Lynch.

"Yours ever, etc.

"F. ANDREWS."

"April 6th, Nice, 1774.

"The last courier brought me yours of March. From every circumstance that has come to my knowledge, I must highly approve of your conduct in regard to the explanatory Tontine Act. Indeed, I never had the least doubt of your taking the honourable part, and with what was suitable to your situation, and that you would support it with spirit and ability. Will. Gamble had given me a very particular account of the occurrences of that day, of the prodigious effect your speech had upon the members, and the very high compliments which were paid you by all parties. I don't think the Castle have gained much by this victory, and whoever lives to see the next session will find them involved in difficulties which they are not now aware of, and which will cost them promises, places, and pensions to get over. And yet the operations of this session, so important, so liable to popular objections, carried with such an amazing superiority and without the usual means, make it presumptuous to speak decidedly on the events of any future one.

"I shall leave this next Sunday, pass through Toulon and Marseilles, and stop two or three days at Lyons. My present intention is to go through Champagne, and not to take Paris in my way, so that I may probably reach the Pay Office early in May, where I hope to receive a letter from you with an account of the time you imagine the Parliament will be up, and when you think you can be in London, as that may have great weight in determining my motions.

"Exclusive of the accident I met with at Aix, I have got through the winter very well. My stomach does not digest animal food as well as formerly, but I am convinced that change of air, exercise, and great temperance will enable me to enjoy my friends for a few years longer with a reasonable degree of satisfaction. Politics I have totally done with, and I must give up all business which requires any intense application; but I flatter myself I shall be able to discharge the duties of my place with propriety. The loss of my little importance gives me no uneasiness, as I am sure I shall not lose a friend that is worth keeping by it.

Pery appears about this time to have been the first to conceive the project of obtaining freedom of trade for Ireland, and of procuring a public disavowal of the supremacy of England over the Irish Parliament. When presenting the Money Bills in 1774, Pery, in addressing the Lord Lieutenant, dealt upon the injustice inflicted on Ireland by the restrictions imposed upon her trade. He described Ireland as being then a kingdom destitute of resources, and he expressed a hope for the remission of the restrictions which the narrow and shortsighted policy of former times, equally injurious to Great Britain and Ireland, imposed upon the Irish manufactures and commerce. Pery observed that it aggravated the sense of the misfortunes of the people of Ireland to see the rivals, if not the enemies, of Great Britain, in the undisturbed possession of those advantages to which the Irish think themselves entitled, upon every principle of policy and justice. It is, he added, the expectation of being restored to some, if not to all, of those rights, and that alone, which can justify to the people the conduct of their representatives in laying so many additional burdens upon them in the course of this session.

On the assembling of the new Parliament in Ireland on the 18th June, 1776, Pery's re-election as Speaker was proposed by Sir John Blaquiere, Secretary to Earl Harcourt, Lord Lieutenant, and seconded by the Right Hon. James Fortescue. Pery was elected by a majority of 43 votes, although opposed by the friends of Ponsonby, the former Speaker.

The following correspondence of Speaker Pery serves to illustrate many circumstances connected with the serious political and industrial questions in relation to Ireland which embarrassed the English Government from this period to 1779. At the close of that year, the Parliament in Dublin declared that it was by a free trade alone this nation was to be saved from impending ruin. The correspondence includes letters from Lords North, Townshend, Longford, Hillsborough, Bristol, Nugent, Lucan, Buckingham, Beauchamp, Edmund Burke, George Germaine, J. Jenkinson, W. Knox, Thomas Waito, W. G. Hamilton, and T. Monck Mason. Among these may be specially mentioned a contemporary letter of Lord Townshend, descriptive of Lord Chatham's sudden illness in the House of Lords in 1778; proposals from the eccentric Earl of Bristol, Bishop of Derry, for Governmental arrangements with the Roman Catholic Clergy in Ireland; Edmund Burke's letter on Irish political affairs in 1778; and the correspondence between the Prime Minister, Lord North, the Marquis of Buckinghamshire, Viceroy for Ireland, and Pery.

"Lord Townshend to Pery.

"DEAR SIR, Portman Square 25 March, 1778.

"I HAVE taken occasion upon some very melancholy deliberations, or rather altercations in our House of Parliament touching America and the state of the nation, to suggest, and indeed strongly recommend, a due and timely attention in both Government and the Legislature to Ireland.

"It is not popularity I seek. I know its value. It is generally a very capricious mistress, treated by and treating its admirers as such. But I shall always be happy to do any essential service to Ireland. However, I am convinced that a man will always be more respected by Government for distressing than assisting it, and I should be happy for your opinion upon any fair and probable measure, or system of measures, which may contribute to the mutual advantage and affection of both countries. The times may favour—I am sure require it. However, it has been the invariable system to trifle and procrastinate, whoever has been in power.

"Favor me with your thoughts frankly, for I think you have no doubt but you may trust me.

"We are at a sad crisis here, and whether it be that our stamina is really wore out or that our management is perplex, we feel and look as if we despaired,—nay, as if we dared not even be informed of our situation.

"I hear it is reported, and with much pleasure, that you are to have troops sent over to Ireland; indeed, we owe you them. Who is to command these I know not, but the first stroke may be expected there.

"I know the state of your forts there well; but they, though dilapidated, are not so weak and contemptible as our own. Besides, you have strong positions there and we have even wisdom enough to attack Ireland. They are an active and hardy people, which, in such case, always affords a resource.

"With truest regard,

"Dear Sir,

"Your most faithful friend,

"TOWNSHEND."

P.S.—Since writing the above, I hear the French have stopt all our ships, packets excepted, and we may expect the same from Spain to-morrow."

LORD

"DEAR SIR, Portman Square, 3 April, 1778.
"I AM happy since I wrote to you to find that the good work of affectionate correspondence is begun in the House of Commons, and that the prudent opinions and warnings are not lost at this critical hour to our rough, hardy, and, I think, affectionate brethren of Ireland.

"It had been better and I wish it had originated from Government, and chid the Administration of Lord Buckinghamshire. But, alas! what Government has for many years past seen or considered any measure before the exigency impelled, may I add alarmed, and brought it into existence.

"Now, my worthy friend, let us wish devoutly that our well meant though tardy presents to Ireland may be cordially received. If such communication accords with what I hear to-day of their generous efforts at this crisis (which seems to reproach the pusillanimous latitudes of English reservations), it will be happy for this country, and may the uncouth Irish retrieve what the red heeled luxurious rascals of this pampered hermaphrodite nation were on the point of losing.

"Governor Johnson succeeds to-day to Mr. Jackson. The Commissioners have kissed hands, and why not? for God knows it is all nonsense, as it has all been a long time past. Why not add three more chamberlains to my friend Hoslar? or make fourteen more Irish Bishops? I'm afraid the first would not defend Ireland, nor peradventure the fourteen new sees occasion more Protestants. But the best joke of all is that Johnson thunders against the independence of America longer than half his friends are for it. The Ministry wish some rash patriot would propose it, and they would be happy to avoid a war with France by submitting to America in the wholesale way, and yet they sent Governor Johnson, who execrates the idea. Charming inconsistency, delightful half measures, political poitroons, is there not such a thing as a hermaphrodite in politics? Centaurs and Minotaurs have been allowed. Are ministerial hermaphrodites less fabulous, when war and peace, supremacy and submission, chastisement and negotiation, execration and embassy, and lastly provocation and insult are followed by indiscretion and suspense?

"As soon as I can hear what the heads of our Bill are I will send them you.

"You have spoke out in Ireland with a spirit worthy of yourselves. If you see my friend Mr. Gardiner, show him this letter.

"I am,
"Dear Sir,
"With truest regard,
"Yours faithfully,
"TOWNSHEND."

"DEAR SIR, April 7th, 1778.

"I AM this moment returned here from the House of Peers, and found your letter on my table, and in return inclose you what I have picked up from a member of the other House, on my return from our own, where Lord Chatam has been at the point of death just as he was preparing to rise, as it seemed to me, who was opposite, to reply a second time to the Duke of Richmond.

"Lord Chatam came into the House very feeble, seemingly to me, who met him as he came in, and spoke to him. His first speech was very short and spoke in great pain, and he appeared to me to sink under the oppression of his disorder. However, there was much animation and decision. He lamented the critical and wretched situation of the British Empire; but he reprobated and disdained the indecision of the ministers, and the degrading and degenerate language of the Houses of Parliament, and of the motion, hoping that every man who retained a spark of British spirit would oppose the disinheritance of the House of Brunswick (and then went to the descendants of the Princess Sophia—to the King's sons, brothers, etc.) of their territories.

"This, after some pause, he particularized by a dismemberment of one-third of their dominions, viz.—America—and reprobated the idea of offering independence. His voice sank afterwards.

"The Duke of Richmond replied, and, as some think, he made some allusions to the good state [in which] he found the Treasury, in Mr. Pelham's time, which enabled him to obtain the great advantages this country experienced under his administration.

"In the course of the Duke of Richmond's reply, I observed him [Lord Chatam] particularly animated upon other points, and he appeared to me preparing to rise, when a deadly convulsion strack him. Many crowded round him. I ran for water, which I procured immediately. The House adjourned, which was very full, to give him air, and, indeed, very properly, out of respect to him and themselves, and adjourned to to-morrow. In about a quarter of an hour, he was carried out with little expectation of life. His physician was soon found, and in about an hour he began to know people, and was at 8 o'clock much better. It was a melancholy scene, with all his sons and friends around him at the instant.

"It would have been a great and interesting day for the country, if it had not been prevented, and I yet hope to hear him again upon it, for he seemed to be on right ground and we want animation. It would have been a fine day, if it had been pursued. You Irish vote and act nobly, enough to shame us. I hope the enclosed will please you. Adieu. You may read this to Scott.

"Yours faithfully,
"TOWNSHEND."

Viscount Lifford, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, to Pery.

"MY DEAR SIR, Dublin, 9th April, 1778.

"SOME things have happened since you left us which I think you ought to have a knowledge of, and though I doubt not but you will hear something of them, yet I am not sure that you will be told of them with precision, and, therefore, recollecting what passed when we parted, I sit down, though straightened in time, to give you some account of them.

"I know your zeal for this country (to say nothing of our friendship) and I wish you to be possessed of facts, so as to shew that you are conversant of the movements that happen here in your absence.

"On Monday, Mr. Mitchell's house stopped here. I do not call it a bank, because I do not know that it assumed that name, and yet report may speak of it as such. That day, or the next, Mr. Birch (the Mr. Birch, for how otherwise to describe him I do not know) also stopped, and published an advertisement: one of them I enclose to you. Others, of less note have fallen, or are falling, as is said with him; not because they are concerned in public credit, but because they are concerned in the private credit and particular concerns of Mr. Birch. In this predicament, according to some, Mr. Mitchell falls; but how that is I do not know any more than I do the other. Mr. Underwood, who is said to have received some shock, has been affected by Mr. Birch.

"Such failures as these will not, I suppose, create any convulsion in the publick, or much alarm you, and I should not have thought it necessary to have troubled you if this had been all. But it has happened that there has been a great run on Finlay's bank; such that they found it expedient to confine their payments on Tuesday last to notes of 10 pounds or 10 guineas only. Old Hercules Rowley, and others of great worth, stood forth in the shop and put their names upon notes of a higher value as a guarantee. On that evening, as I understand, there was a meeting of the merchants and others, and the result was to lay the matter before Government in the morning, if the run continued. The run continuing, it came before us at the Council Chamber, where a committee being entering upon Bills, my Lord Lieutenant came in, and the matter became the subject of serious discussion.

"It was proposed by some that whatever should be done as a declaration of credit should be general to all the banks. I thought this injurious to banks who did [not] desire it. Nay, I thought it injurious to publick credit, because it supposed a weakness which did not appear to us, and which I conceived did not exist, and it made that general which was only particular.

"Others thought in the same way. It was proposed to send to the banks of Messrs. La Touche, Gleadowe, and Co., and Lawless and Co., and it was done. Messrs. La Touche and Co. came: they declared they wanted no assistance. They were prepared for any run which could come upon them, and that they should think any declaration to support them was injurious to them and would hurt publick credit. They declared themselves ready to stand forth as supporters of the bank run upon, but would not be in the predicament of the supported, they wanted no support.

"A very little discussion soon settled what was fit to be done. Finlay's bank being one that deals, as I understand, diffusively in the notes and in the discounting of mercantile paper, and the fortune and substance of the bank being understood to be above all doubt or suspicion, it was thought politic and wise to make a declaration in favor of this particular bank, and, as you will see in what I send to you, which, as was understood, would be perfectly satisfactory to a great body of the Honorables who wanted to see the Castle take the lead.

"The declaration wished for was even called [for] and signed. It had, I believe, an immediate good effect, and to-day, as I understand, the run has subsided, and everything is perfectly quiet.

"... I asked the bankers whether they perceived anything tending to shake public credit. They answered that at present they saw no appearance of it.

"In this matter my Lord Lieutenant conducted himself most becomingly.

"Tell me what we are to hope or fear.

"My dear Sir,

"Your affectionate and faithful

"humble servant,

"LIFFORD."

"Earl of Bristol, Bishop of Derry, to Pery.

"DEAR SIR, Rome, May 15th, 1778.

"I was made very happy this morning by reading in the public papers that you were arrived in London upon business of a publick nature: the interests of Ireland and of humanity could never be placed in abler hands, nor under the auspices of a warmer heart or of a cooler head, and I will venture to say upon my own knowledge they never were attended with a more important crisis.

"Ireland, if the war with France takes place, must almost inevitably be thrown into the greatest confusion. The first blow will certainly be directed there, and the Roman Catholics, exasperated by repeated disappointments, are ripe for an almost general revolt.

"Whether this disposition originated here, or was only stimulated and encouraged here, I cannot say; but of this I am very well informed that no encouragement is wanting, and that, some few prudent persons excepted, the hopes of the remainder are as sanguine as their exhortations are animated.

"The real intention is to render Ireland independant, and to establish, as in the Swiss Cantons, a reciprocal toleration of religions, to abolish all tithes except such as are to be paid by the Roman Catholics to their own clergy, and to throw themselves under the protection of France and if possible of Spain.

"If this attempt should not succeed, their project is then to make as general an emigration as possible, and to settle in that part of Spain which was offered to them some years ago, or else in a part of the Pope's territory which is within 40 miles of Rome, and now actually preparing for some very extensive colony, and, if my friend is not egregiously misinformed, this colony will be from Ireland.

"The disgust which prevails here upon the baffling every attempt to relieve their countrymen is better conceived than expressed. Their case seems now to be desperate, and I much fear their conduct will be equally so. No one knows better than yourself the disadvantages arising to Ireland from the opprobrious solecism of our Penal Laws against Papists, and I flatter myself no one is more willing, as I am certain no one is more able, to rescue us from this impolitic tyranny. A reasonable concession in time might secure that allegiance and that fidelity which the fate of war may perhaps hereafter totally deny us.

"I have wrote very copiously to Lord Hillsborough* on this subject, as I flatter myself his Lordship's sentiments are as liberal as I know yours to be, and the noble use which he makes of his great property in Ireland shows that he has no interests distinct from those of his country.

"Could you, at this perilous crisis, obtain a legal exercise of that silly but harmless religion which they now exercise illegally, and a revocation of that impolitic statute called the Civil Act which has so reduced the list of the Popish nobility, that all the influence [of] the Popish people and gentry is thrown into the hands of the clergy, I am very well persuaded the French upon their landing could not procure an insurrection of fifty Papists.

"Nothing can be more reasonable than their demands, and in my opinion nothing more politic than our acquiescence. This toleration should at least be granted to such as have taken the new oath of allegiance, were it only to create a schism among them, and hereafter confined to such as are educated in the French seminaries in preference of Portugal, Spain, and Italy, where the Four Propositions of the Gallican Church are not taught. Such a measure would necessarily divide the Papists at present, and render them perfectly harmless hereafter. Whereas by not attending to that manifest distinction among them of disciples of the Church of Rome and abettors of the Court of Rome, we have united against us two very contrary parties and confounded under the same penalties the most harmless sect with the most dangerous faction. Policy as well as justice call upon us at this perilous crisis to make the distinction, and, by the stroke of a pen, to baffle the most alarming efforts of our common enemy. I hope we shall be too wise to act the second part of the American tragedy, and wait till our enemy compells us to terms of moderation. Their disappointments have certainly rendered them desperate, and their despair will, I hope, render us prudent.

* Wills, first Earl of Hillsborough, in the County of Down.

"In the mean time, 'Cave ne quid detrimenti Respublica capiat,'—for if ever Ireland was on the brink of a precipice, it is now tottering. But a steady head like yours can rescue us.

"Since I have been writing, intelligence has been brought that overtures had been made to the Chevalier to persuade him to go on board the Toulon fleet, which is to join that at Brest. But, although the information comes from his brother's family, I have reason to believe it is not founded, but that what is truly and unalterably so is the perfect esteem and attachment with which I have long been, and still am, your most sincere friend and servant.

"If you wish for any additional intelligence, my banker will transmit your letter to me here."

Earl of Bristol, Bishop of Derry, to Pery.

"MY DEAR SIR, Rome, July 21st, 1778.

"I LITTLE expected to be under the necessity of troubling you again upon the subject of our fellow citizens of the Popish communion, but the unfortunate omission made by Mr. Gardiner, and the extraordinary triumph of this Court upon the occasion, who plumes itself upon the preservation of its dearest prerogatives since the Test Act has not been forced upon their clergy, renders this application to you necessary, and indeed to whom should a well wisher to the interests of Ireland address himself, but to him whose zeal for her interests can be equalled only by his great ability to promote them. 'Tis the exertion of these abilities which I now implore to rescue us from the fatal effects of that mutilated Bill which Mr. Gardiner presented to the Commons last month, and which by this time is become a Statute.

"As soon as Sir G. Saville's motion in the English House was known here, and the notice of it arrived by an express, two more were immediately dispatched to prevent the effects of a similar Bill in Ireland, and above all to command the Popish clergy to decline a toleration which was to be purchased by a subscription to the Test Act passed in the year 1774; it seems, and you may rely that I received my information through the very purest channel, that on the passing that memorable Act, Doctor Carpenter, the Popish Archbishop of Dublin, applied immediately to Rome for instructions to regulate his conduct.

"The affair was agitated in a certain Council, composed of seven Cardinals, and here called the Congregation de Propaganda Fide, in which all matters relating to Ireland are ultimately regulated, and it was here determined almost unanimously not to allow a subscription to the Test. The Secretary to this Council, a man with whom I have been particularly connected ever since my arrival, was directed to express their dislike of such a subscription in the strongest terms, and to omit no arguments or threats which might deter the clergy from acquiescing. But before this rescript of Papal authority could reach Ireland, Dr. Butler, a man of family, and titular Metropolitan of Cashell, one educated in the principles of the Gallican[s] and strongly attached to the liberties of the Irish Church, had, after a strong contest with Dr. Carpenter, in a national synod held in Dublin, not only persuaded his own suffragans of Cashell, with all their clergy, to subscribe the oath, but had even induced the titular bishops of Meath and of Wexford, two suffragans of Dr. Carpenter's, and many private priests of that diocese to follow their example.

EMLY.

"This refractory behaviour was immediately notified to Rome. In the answer, Dr. Carpenter was commended and thanked for the steadiness of his conduct, and Dr. Butler, with his followers, were proscribed as schismatics: Test or no Test has ever since decided upon the promotion of every Popish ecclesiastic in Ireland, and a friend of mine who had long been soliciting the coadjutorship of Armagh, has been excluded hitherto upon the supposition of being a subscriber.

"From the time of Dr. Butler's taking the oath to the opening of the present sessions, great alterations had passed between him and Dr. Carpenter on that subject, both in manuscript and in print, of which it will be easy to provide yourself with a sample.

"Butler is now stigmatized as a schismatic, whilst Carpenter, with more reason, has been twitted with disaffection to Government.

"The objections to the Test are founded on two points. First, the injury done by it to the Stuart family, most of whose friends at this Court would readily swear allegiance to the Parliament King, as they call him, but cannot be induced to abjure the lawful one. The next but most powerfull objection derives from the irreparable injury brought upon the Pope's supremacy, who being stript by this Act, as he is by the four propositions of the Gallican Church, of all his dearest and his only formidable prerogatives remains like Pompey in his decline, 'Magni nominis umbra.'

"You may easily conceive that all the Irish Friars and ecclesiastics, who looked up to the Court of Rome for that promotion which we continue so supinely and so injudiciously to let them receive from it, make a merit of supporting her in privileges without which she could not support them; and therefore as a very great man told me here one day, 'Rather than permit an abridgement of her privileges, Rome would forego a toleration of her religion.' Here, Sir, is the secret but true history of the Irish Parliament not keeping pace with the English in their indulgence to her Roman Catholic subjects.

"Dr. Butler and his loyal party have unwittingly been sacrificed to the powerfull intrigues of Dr. Carpenter and his adherents, whose interest it must ever be to prevent Government from distinguishing their friends from their foes, till that critical and perhaps not very remote day, when we shall feel to our cost how ignorantly we deserted the one and how supinely we have been deluded by the other. But I flatter myself that both English and Irish Governments will discover their error in time, and not let slip this most critical moment for emancipating finally the Catholics of Ireland from the dominion of the Court of Rome. It is, indeed, of the greatest consequence at present, because all the benefices of any value in the Irish communion are now obtained through the influence of the Court of France, and I leave you to judge whether policy or only humanity has the greatest share in the exertion which that Court makes of her influence at Rome upon every vacancy in Irish benefices.

"The usual channel for such promotion was through the Nuncio at Brussels, but France finds it a more usefull policy at present to fix one brother in a bishopric in Ireland, whilst another remains in an Irish regiment in France.

"The Popish bishoprick of Limerick has been lately bestowed on Dr. Butler,* Lord Cahir's brother, entirely through Cardinal Bernis, in opposition to two very powerfull candidates.

"The see of Meath is actually filling up under the same auspices, and a friend of mine, after failing in his solicitations for the coadjutorship of Armagh, has at length had recourse to some friends at Versailles; [he] is to be presented by me to the Cardinal de Bernis, and is now sure of success.

"To permit his Majesty's subjects to owe their subsistence, their honors, and their dignities to the influence of France and the protection of Rome, is a solocism in politics that nothing but the greatest supineness could tolerate. The King of Prussia in his territories of Silesia and of Poland, and the Dutch in their three Popish bishopricks of Utrecht, etc., etc., allow of no such intrusion, but wisely themselves appoint to so important an office as the inspection of their clergy, subjects on whose allegiance they can rely and whose interests they do not permit to separate from that of the State.

EMLY.

"The methods to remedy effectually this evil are in my opinion simple and feasible. After the very first prorogation let Parliament be assembled, that the nation, by so extraordinary a measure, may be alarmed at its danger, and let a Bill be introduced to legalize the exercise of the Roman Catholic religion in such ecclesiasticks as have already subscribed the Test Act, or shall subscribe it within one month after passing the statute. I limit the subscription within this period that no time may be left for despatching consultants to the Court of Rome. Matters, being previously concerted with the proper persons, may be hurried through the forms of the House with all possible dispatch. It will be a thunderbolt against the Popish faction, and such a triumph to the loyal Dr. Butler and his party as will both multiply his friends and confirm their courage.

"When the sting is once taken out of Popery by means of the Test Act, and nothing remains but the harmless speculative opinion of transubstantiation, and the seven sacraments, I would propose a second Bill which should immediately follow the first, and without which the first, though useful, would yet be imperfect.

"This second Bill should empower the King or his Lord Lieutenant in Council to appoint all archbishops, bishops, and priests of the Romish communion to their respective benefices. This is the practice of the King of Prussia in Silesia and in his new acquired territories of Poland. This is also the practice of the States General in their three bishopricks of Utrecht, etc., those wise Calvinists seeing no inconsistency, but much policy, in the privilege of appointing inspectors over the clergy of a different communion from their own. Each diocese, upon the vacancy of a see, presents to the King of Prussia the names of three priests, out of which the King chuses one to succeed in the diocese, and vice versa, upon the vacancy of a parish, each bishop presents the names of three priests, except when there are lay patrons among the nobility, and the King equally chuses one. I would add to this practice, if adopted among us, that each of the three candidates should produce a certificate of his good behaviour from the Protestant bishop of the diocese, or from his Vicar-General, and a memorandum that he had taken the oath of allegiance prescribed by the test before such bishop or his Vicar-General, and that every such archbishop, bishop, or priest should be registered according to the statute of Queen Anne.

"In order to give this clergy an attachment to Government as well as a dependence upon them, I would propose, in imitation of the practice at Heydelberg, Francfort, Oppenheim, etc., etc., that every priest should be obliged to receive for himself and his successors an endowment in land to the amount of 25 acres, and each archbishop and bishop, 40. No priest unappointed by Government to be capable of such endowment or of suing for it.

"Your sagacity, my dear Sir, will see at one glance the benefit of such an endowment, how much it will benefit tillage, and how greatly the providing such a subsistence for the priest will relieve the poor Papist who now maintains him, so that if the quantity was increased from 20 to 40 acres in each parish, and the quality of the land stipulated to be boggy, moorish, etc., ascertained by the Protestant rector, ever jealous of his tithes, and determined by a map to be lodged in the bishop's registry, perhaps the benefit would be more essential.

"If Parliament consents to such a regulation, and I fancy it must be at least as beneficial to Ireland as to Holland and the King of Prussia, I would then venture to go a step further in order to complete my code of Popish laws, and propose one more.

"In order to perpetuate the political orthodoxy of our Irish priests, I would establish in each province a convent of any friars but mendicants, to be endowed ad libitum by any persons whatever. This convent should serve as in the Venetian State, and as among the Jesuits, for a seminary of young priests to be no longer reared abroad in foreign and exotic principles of we know not what nature, but in the sound Low Church principles of the Gallican church, this seminary to be under the inspection of the Protestant Metropolitan by himself or his Vicar-General, who shall prohibit the teaching of any books inconsistent with the new liberties of the Irish Church as expressed in the Test Act.

"This idea I submit to older and wiser heads than my own, observing only that it seems necessary, when we have built a fine pinery and furnished it, to be provided with a succession house.

* John Butler declined the promotion, and in 1779 the see was filled by the appointment of the Vicar-Capitular, Denis Conway.

"I will not add to your trouble by an ill-placed apology for it. The matter is too important to need one, and if I have penetrated a little further into it than the rest of my brethren, my information arises from an uninterrupted attention to the subject during ten years, and because I have spared neither time, nor pains, nor money to ascertain practices which I only suspected, and to see executed regulations which I always thought practicable.

"I am certain there is no other method of emancipating Ireland from the Roman yoke but by discriminating the harmless member of the Church of Rome from the dangerous partisan of that ambitious and wily Court.

"Reduce Popery, as [France and Holland have done, to a sect of speculative dogmas, and you will render an Irish Papist as innocent as a Dutch or French Papist.

"How feasible this measure is, I beg you to read in the third vol. of Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, at the Article Jansenist, which you may peruse in ten minutes at Faulkner's shop [in Dublin]. There you will see and may show others how Catholics may cease to be Papists and become loyal and excellent subjects to Protestant legislatures, and if we do not achieve the same great work in Ireland, it is not owing to the greater malignancy of the disease, but the greater unskillfulness of the physician. Popery is the same malady in both countries, but if in the one you will use balsams, and in the other cansticks, you must expect sound flesh in the one, and scars and sores in the other.

"Policy and gratitude demand of us an immediate toleration. The firm and exemplary allegiance of Dr. Butler and his clergy require some." *

Earl Nugent to Pery.

"MY DEAR SIR, Gosfield, July 23rd, 1778.

"You will forgive me when I inform you that prest by the necessity of the occasion, I ventured to communicate your letter, inclosed in one from myself, to Lord Gower, who I thought was in London. But unluckily he was at his seat in Staffordshire. However, he immediately forwarded both letters to Lord Weymouth, who presides at Council in his absence. I find by Lord Gower's answer, which I received yesterday, that the equalizing Bills will, as I apprehended they would, undergo a very minute discussion. I heartily wish that the documents attending them may prove sufficient to answer every objection that may be started against their various provisions, and that the measure I proposed will be proved unnecessary. I think with you that were Ireland to be heard by counsel, it would be very humiliating and intolerably improper. If what I writ conveyed such an idea, it was far beside my meaning, which was confined to a wish that whatever of that kind was necessary should be done in the name of the merchants of Ireland concerned in interest. I tremble with you for the event of those distresses which probably must drive your starving manufacturers into desperation. The cause which you assign for the sudden ruin which has burst upon them from the immense imports of coarse woollens is, past all doubt, the true one, although it escaped the observation of all those with whom I have conversed upon the subject. This renders the case of your manufacturers most desperate, as they can only be relieved by opening a vent for the manufacturers of Great Britain as well as for those of Ireland. Under these circumstances, a free export of Irish woollen cloths to Great Britain would be of no avail; and, without a vent, every encouragement to manufacture will increase the evil by clogging warehouses with still greater quantities of unsaleable goods. Your miserable home market, where the multitude are uaked and feed on potatoes, must continue glutted.

"The idea of offering a paper currency under the authority of Parliament, and secured by deposits of superior value, which has appeared in the newspapers, although I fear very ineffectual on the present melancholy occasion, may, in my poor opinion, be improved and applied, as a general medium of commerce, to eke out the scanty supplies of sterling money in Ireland, and to supersede the necessity of trusting to the precarious security of bankers' notes, which by late failures have brought ruin upon many and occasioned distress to all.

"I wish the experiment would be fairly tried, at first in a narrow compass, and if it be found to succeed in deposits of goods, subject to much trouble, difficulty and fraud in the execution, why may it not be hereafter employed to immovable effects mortgaged to the public at a lower interest than that [which] depresses the trade and drains the cash of Ireland in remittances to English creditors. I am now in correspondence with a very ingenious man, and not ignorant in the affairs of Ireland, upon that subject. I wish you would start the difficulties and objections which occur to you in the execution of such a plan. Many have presented themselves to me which I think may be obviated, and that what is now in a great measure dead and unwieldy stock may be brought into a circulation of small sums, for which lauded property and public faith will be a tolerable security.

"I have the honor to be, dear Sir,
"Your ever faithful and most obedient servant,
"NUGENT."

Edmund Burke to Pery.

"MY DEAR SIR,

"It is high time that you should rest from your labours. I most sincerely congratulate you upon the fruits of them. Your prudence, your steadiness, and your perseverance have well seconded your public spirit; and altogether have produced their natural effects. May what you have done be as beneficial to the country as it is honourable to yourself. Indeed, I have no doubt that it will, as soon as the removal of the general calamity of the times will suffer the causes of internal prosperity to operate.

"I have not had means as yet to send you a detailed account of my transactions in consequence of the advances and intimations I have had the honour to receive from you. They have not been neglected by me; nor been wholly without effect with regard to others. In that I speak within measure; and it may excuse with you whatever errors I may have fallen into, from my great anxiety for the success of the business, now, I take it for granted, brought to so happy a conclusion.

"The Irish House of Commons has done itself infinite honour. Its longest session has been its best, as somebody has said of the performances of a great man of antiquity. It gave me great pleasure to find, as I do from many accounts, that, without derogating from the talents of the gentlemen who dissented from the Toleration Act, the far greater weight of the abilities and eloquence of the House was on the side where eloquence and ability ought ever to be, on the side of liberty and justice. You are now beginning to have a country; and I trust you will complete the design. You have laid the firm, honest, homely rustick of property; and the rest of the building will rise in due harmony and proportion. I am persuaded that when that thing called a Country is once formed in Ireland, quite other things will be done than were done whilst the zeal of men was turned to the safety of a party, and whilst they thought its interests provided for in the distress and destruction of everything else. Your people will begin to lift up their heads, and wait and think like men; and the effects will be answerable.

"Adieu, my dear Sir, let your success encourage you to complete the great work—the redemption of your country. I can do little but by my good wishes, but them you will always have most sincerely.

"I am, with the highest esteem and regard,
"Your most faithful,

"And obliged humble servant,
"Beconsfield, August 12, 1778. EDM. BURKE."

Lord Nugent to Pery.

"MY DEAR SIR,

"WHEN I was honoured with your letter, I had received information which I could absolutely depend on, that the Bill in favour of the Roman Catholics was to drop in Council here, and that the equalizing Bill would be reported with such amendments as would, if agreed to, certainly damn it in your House. Thus circumstanced, I found myself in the hard dilemma of suppressing means which I was sure would act most powerfully towards an alteration of councils necessarily productive of greater discontents in an already discontented Parliament, and of despair in a starving multitude chiefly composed of Papists, or of communicating your letter without your consent, which it was impossible to obtain in time. I read it over and over before I yielded to the necessity of violating the sacred rights of a private correspondence, and every repetition impressed me with deeper apprehensions of the most fatal catastrophe, while every word did you honor. Had you managed your expressions more, you would have weakened what could not be too strong to inform and rouse Administration. Had they been confined to my eye only [we] should have trembled together without averting the evil; and the very circumstance of a private correspondence communicated to the minister rendered the information less suspicious than if immediately directed to him by the author. Yet I meant your letter only for Lord Gower, who is my particular friend. But unluckily as was at Trentham in Staffordshire, and did by me just as I did by you, compelled by the same necessity.

"I have dwelt long upon this point as I am deeply concerned in your conviction that I have not rendered myself unworthy of your correspondence. But whether I succeed or not, for God's sake depart from your resolution of waiting in silence for events which you foresee not far distant. You are the mouth of the people of Ireland. You know the affairs of that kingdom, and you are known and respected in this. Your testimony and opinions have weight. It has been proved in the subject of this letter. They may have failed of doing the service you intended, and may again fail in other instances, from various causes. But reason and truth, though for a time neglected, will prevail, at least for the advantage and honor of the adviser. The timid counsels and time-serving policy of some courtiers of favor, have concurred with opposition to undo this country, and sink their own characters.

"You forgot to enclose Mr. Daly's motion. If it was for an address to the Crown, such as he first mentioned in the House, it was a repetition of an American measure; and I am glad it failed, although I have a high respect and personal friendship for him. Whatever the event of the Roman Catholic Bill may be in the House of Lords, the friends of the Protestant Dissenters in Ireland have surely much to answer for. God defend their brethren here from such friends, although I sincerely believe them very honest men, and, short of the repeal of the Test, that which would set both kingdoms in a flame, I wish them everything they can desire.

"I expected no opinion from the Lord Lieutenant concerning my hint of a national bank for landed securities. It may possibly be impracticable, but of this I am sure that without some more solid [security] for money than bankers' notes, Ireland can never be a trade country.

"I have, I am afraid, tired you, but upon such subjects and writing to such a correspondent, it is not strange that I should scarcely leave room for the sincere respect with which I have the honor to be,

"Dear Sir,

"Your faithful and obedient servant,

"Gosfield, August 12th, 1778.

W. KNOX.

W. Knox to Pery.

"Dear Sir, Whitehall, 9th October, 1778.

"Soon after I received your very obliging letter, our friend Sir Lucius repeated his visit to this metropolis, and as he seldom travels in vain for his country's advantage, an opportunity offered, while he was here, of liberating Irish butter from the embargo, and he did not suffer it to slip. The beef is still wholly subject to it, and I find, by a letter I have received from him since, that its being so is of very mischievous consequences to Ireland. The Attorney-General, who is now here, tells me the same thing. And as I never can suppose Government mean to do mischief, though they often do it, I wish to be able to show the evil and point out a remedy.

"There are two objects to be attended to in any proposition that we make them—the securing a sufficient supply for our own forces, and the preventing the French availing themselves of our beef to victual their ships and colonies. The embargo effectually secures both; and if we cannot show some other way of doing it, I fear the embargo will not be removed.

"You are able to give Government the best information upon this subject, and I very willingly offer my best endeavours to have your advice listened to. The present is a season of recess, and any matter of this kind can now be easily brought into consideration. The sooner, therefore, that you make your proposition the better.

"I am not afraid that we should not prevail to have the small beef sent at large, if we could draw an effectual line between it and the kind our own people are supplied with, for I think the first object I mentioned is of much greater importance than the second; and if that could be obtained, the other might be less regarded.

"I am going to Bath to drink the waters the remainder of this month, and hope to be honoured with your

"I AM commanded by my Lord Lieutenant to acquaint you that His Excellency hath very lately received intelligence that a person, stiling himself to be Monsieur Sturler and pretending to be of a good family in the Canton of Berne in Switzerland, is lately come over from France to this kingdom, and, by the account of the person who gives the information, spends a great deal of money, which he could not do without some considerable support, and is understood to be particularly ingenious in making artificial flowers. And there being strong reasons to apprehend that he has been sent to Ireland to be employed in some very dangerous business, His Excellency has commanded me to signify to you his wishes that you would cause enquiry to be made, in as secret manner as possible, whether any person answering that description has lately made his appearance at Limerick, or in that neighbourhood, and in case that he has that you would employ some trusty person to watch his motions and connexions, and to give you an account of his and their proceedings, which my Lord Lieutenant desires you will be pleased to communicate without loss of time.

"I AM favored with your letter of this day's date, and return you my best thanks for your obliging attention.

"On the 28th past, I received a private letter from Lord Weymouth signifying that, according to the intelligence which his Lordship had received, Cork was one of the objects of the invasion said to be projected by France, on account of the provisions and victualling transports, and the distress that must arise to those kingdoms, in case of their success, from the want of supply of provisions to our fleets and armies; to which was added that Kinsale is deemed to be the more proper port for landing a force, as it is the better harbour, and more easy to get into and out of it.

"This intelligence I sent in a private manner on the 29th to Lord Shannon, requesting his Lordship to make such use thereof as he should judge advisable for the public service; and on the same day signified it in like manner to the Commander-in-Chief, with directions to him to communicate the same to General Mocher, who commands his Majesty's forces in Munster, for the like purpose. And being satisfied that, in consequence of these communications, every proper precaution would be taken by his Lordship and the General, it did not seem to me to be advisable to divulge this intelligence in a more public manner, having no commands from His Majesty thereupon, least it should occasion a general alarm,

"Right Hon^{ble}. the Speaker."

Pery to Lord North.

"MY LORD, Dublin, 14th July, 1779.

"It is my duty, though not in my department, to inform your Lordship of the desperate state to which this kingdom is reduced.

"If it is attacked in its present state, it will certainly be lost, perhaps without a blow. I have some reason to believe that very tempting objects will be held out by the enemy, which many, from resentment at the conduct of Great Britain, from fear, as well as other motives and connections, will be disposed to accept.

"There is, however, in this kingdom a sufficient fund of loyalty and attachment to the British Constitution to preserve it; but that spirit is not only not encouraged but depressed, which has produced general discontent. The Treasury is exhausted, as was long foreseen and foretold. There is no money to enable the army to take the field. Even if that could be provided, which I am persuaded cannot be done without the assistance of Great Britain, 7,000 regulars are the utmost which can be brought to act against an enemy, though, I confess, upon paper, you have an army of near thirteen thousand. How insufficient this force is for the protection of a kingdom, the coast of which is so extensive, and where there are so many places in which a landing may be effected without danger, your Lordship will judge.

"If Great Britain cannot spare troops from its own defence to protect Ireland, it seems reasonable to allow Ireland to defend itself. The people of all ranks are ready to do so. The restraining them is imputed to suspicions of disaffection, which may produce real disaffection.

"I submit it therefore to your Lordship whether it is not more advisable to arm the people of this kingdom under his Majesty's authority than to suffer them to arm themselves without it, for which they have so fair an excuse, and which they have already in part executed. None will then be entrusted but those in whom the Government can confide, and who will take the oaths of allegiance to his Majesty, whereas there are some now in arms, I hope the number is not considerable, who I am well informed will not take those oaths.

"If the measure I have mentioned should be thought expedient, no time should be lost in carrying it into execution. In what manner that should be done, whether under the last Militia Act in this kingdom, or under the general authority of the Crown, your Lordship is the best judge.

"Your Lordship will perceive, from the nature of this letter, that it is intended only for your own private eye. I may perhaps be considered as officious for meddling in this business. If I am, I shall comfort myself with the full persuasion that I have done nothing but my duty.

"Lord North."

"I am, etc.

Lord George Germaine* to Pery.

"DEAR SIR, Pall Mall, July 15th, 1779.

"I do not wonder Lord Buckingham is cautious of giving any direct encouragement to the raising an armed force without the immediate authority of the Crown, as many remarks have been made upon that measure in Parliament here. In my humble opinion, if the measure is wrong, it has taken too deep a root to stop it in the present situation of Ireland.

"I hope and trust that much benefit will arise from this extraordinary army, if either France or Spain should invade Ireland; and I think it ought to be the wish of Government to see such an armed force under the command and direction of the friends of the Constitution. I should therefore be sorry if you declined putting yourself at the head of your friends, when called to it by them, for in truth the safety of the country will principally depend upon the zeal and exertion of individuals, as the regular troops are by no means equal to the supplying of garrisons and to the duty in the field.

"If our fleet is successful, there will be no invasion. But if any misfortune happens to us at sea, the enemy will probably lose no time in attacking us at home.

"I am, dear Sir,

"With great truth and sincerity,
"Your faithful humble servant,
"GEO. GERMAINE."

Pery to Marquis of Buckinghamshire, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

"MY LORD,

17th July, 1779.

"YESTERDAY I received a letter from the city of Limerick, acquainting me that the Roman Catholic inhabitants there are ready to raise a considerable number of men, to be incorporated with such regiments as Government shall direct, and for that purpose to follow the same plan and to give the like bounty as I had proposed to do.

"Your Excellency will remember that the plan I mentioned to you was, that the men were to list upon the conditions of not serving out of the kingdom, and of being discharged at the end of the year, at which time they were to receive three guineas from me over and above what they may be entitled to from Government.

"Upon these terms, I am confident, a very considerable number of men will immediately be raised in the city of Limerick, and I think it very probable that the example will be followed in many other places, and the deficiencies in the army filled up in a few days.

"But I cannot venture to promise these conditions to the men without your Excellency's authority, which you were pleased to tell me I should have. It will likewise be necessary that your Excellency should direct to what places the men should be sent as they shall be attested.

"It is a very pleasing circumstance to see the spirit of loyalty so strong in the people of property among the Roman Catholics. It should not be permitted to languish for want of some marks of the approbation of Government.

"Ld. Buckingham."

"I am, etc.

Pery to W. G. Hamilton.

"SIR,

Edmundsberry, 20 July, 1779.

"I HAVE received your letter of yesterday, containing his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant's directions upon the subject of my letter to him of the 17th instant.

"I must observe to you that no notice is taken of one most material circumstance in my letter, which is that the men are to be enlisted upon condition of not being removed out of the kingdom, without which I am confident it will be very difficult, if not impracticable, to prevail on the men to enlist. I have talked to some of the military gentlemen upon this subject, and they tell me it will not be attended with any prejudice to the service, for if it shall happen to be necessary to remove any of the regiments in which such men shall be incorporated out of the kingdom, there will be no difficulty in exchanging those men for others not under the like circumstances, who are in regiments which are to remain in the kingdom. I beg the favor of you to communicate this matter to my Lord Lieutenant, and let me have his Excellency's directions upon it.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient humble servant,
"EDM. PERY."

Lord North to Pery.

"SIR,

Bushy Park, Aug. 3, 1779.

"I AM much obliged to you for your very friendly letter, and important information.

"I am sorry to think that the Irish should conceive that they have any motives for resentment either against his Majesty's servants, or against the British nation at large. If they will look back to the transactions of this century, they will find more attention paid to the interests of Irish individuals, and of the kingdom in general, within these last ten years than in all the rest of it. Both the Legislative and Executive powers have been disposed to favour Ireland; but, because the system which has prevailed for ages is not entirely overturned at once, they listen to the suggestions of the enemies of both countries, who wish as ill to Ireland at the least as they do to Great Britain.

* Secretary of State for the Colonies, Clerk of the Council in Ireland, &c.

EMLY.

"I have no doubt but France and Spain will accompany any attempt they may make upon Ireland by a manifesto full of as tempting promises as possible. Entire liberty of trade, entire liberty of religion, and independency, will be the subject of it. But I cannot think it possible for any sensible Irishman to wish for a separation from Great Britain, or to suppose it possible for Ireland really to enjoy the other advantages, or indeed any political blessings, when unconnected with this country.

"I do not myself, nor do I believe any of his Majesty's servants, harbour a suspicion that the gentlemen who have armed themselves have any hostile intention against the common cause of Great Britain and Ireland. I speak in general, for it is possible there may be some disaffected associations, but I cannot think that they are in the least considerable. I wish, however, that every armed [man] in the country were under the authority of the Crown. That all armaments whatever should be under that authority is, I conceive, one of the most important and essential principles of the British Constitution; and, though I expect much benefit from these Associations, in the present moment, I am not [satisfied] that the precedent is [not] dangerous.

"I understand that the Lord Lieutenant intends to grant commissions to such of the associators as are desirous of it, and would have before this time proposed a more regular and constitutional defence for the kingdom if he had not been prevented by the want of money. You will find that we have endeavoured in part to remedy that evil. The proposition of applying British money to the support of the Irish army is so new and unprecedented that I could not immediately come into it. Nothing certainly deserves so sacred a regard as the appropriation of Parliamentary grants; and, therefore, it was natural that I should pause before I consented to apply any public money to a service to which none had ever been applied before. But, upon a full consideration of the matter, I think myself well justified in the step I have taken, and hope that what we send will at least be sufficient to put your army in motion. Whatever reports are spread to the contrary, Ireland may be sure that we have her protection and welfare sincerely at heart.

"I have the honor to be,
"With the greatest respect,
"Sir,
"Your most faithful and obedient servant,
"NORTH."

Perry to Lord North.

"MY LORD, Limerick, 13th Aug^r 1779.
"I AM honored with your Lordship's letter of the 3^d instant, which I must not omit acknowledging, however unwilling to take up one moment of your Lordship's time.

"The proposition of applying British money to the support of an Irish army is certainly new and unprecedented; but I cannot avoid expressing my fears that it is a precedent which must be followed or the army reduced.

"Whether this subject has as yet undergone any investigation I know not; but it is full time that it should, for I am persuaded it will be found a most difficult one, let the disposition of Parliament be what it may.

"The body of this nation is sincerely attached to the British nation, and still more to the British Constitution. I trust it will ever continue so, and I have the satisfaction of telling your Lordship that the late Act of Parliament passed in this kingdom for the relief of the Roman Catholics has had most salutary effects, of which there is a strong proof in the subscription made by the Roman Catholics of this city for recruiting his Majesty's army, which example I hope will be followed by many other parts of the kingdom.

"I am, etc."

Lord Lucan to Perry.

"Hampton Court, 21st Aug. 1779.

"MY DEAR SPEAKER,

"I HAVE been in the country ever since my arrival in England, else I would have wrote to you before, but I imagined that your friends resident in London would have anticipated anything I could have informed you about.

"At present, we stand in a very critical situation. Every moment is full of expectation—a battle expected at sea, a decision of everything worth fighting for. The fleets are certainly looking out for each other, and the French only wait the event to follow their object, which, happily for Ireland, is an attack upon this kingdom. The 'Ardent' is thought to be taken in endeavouring to join Sir Charles Hardy. The 'Ramilies, though there is no account of her, is supposed to have joined him before now.

"If anything is new in London, I will make Sir Ralph Payne, who dines with me, write it to you this night from town.

"They would not believe me, upon my return from France, that there was any intention of invading England, that Ireland was not their object, and that Plymouth and Portsmouth would certainly be attacked. I had it from good authority in France, but here it could not be credited. Last week our people began to talk with their usual fierte, thinking it was all at an end, and laughed at every idea of an attempt either upon our fleet or coasts. At present, countenances are greatly changed, even the highest, and they are in the utmost despondency.

"If Administration have time and leisure, this next session of Parliament, I understand from the best authority that an union between Ireland and England is to be agitated and settled if possible, and that the first step for this purpose to be taken is the naming of deputies by each House of Parliament to consider of such union, or incorporation, which is the word now made use of.

"They say that the time is come for this measure, for if it be not carried this year into execution, that there must be a free trade given to Ireland, without any terms made for England; that Ireland will, it is feared, insist upon all restrictions on trade being taken off, and, if opposed, may become very troublesome, considering the present circumstances. It is said that such advantages will be offered that it will be impossible for Ireland to refuse such union. What those advantages are I cannot draw out, nor can I learn from anyone, who has thought of the plan, or if anything of this matter has been digested. You are the person, I find, they consider much upon this business, and they think that you will expect too great terms for Ireland—all which is much to your honor.

"Ever yours most affectionately, etc.

"LUCAN."

W. G. Hamilton to Perry.

"DEAR PERY, Oct. the 4th, 1779.
"By a variety of accidents your letter did not reach me so early as it might have done by a week. I received it, however, this evening, and I thank you for it as it found me alone, and at leisure; and as the particulars it mentions may probably be a subject of conversation, and possibly of treaty, I shall now once for all communicate to you my sentiments upon that matter. I make no apology for this trouble, from the very affectionate and friendly part which I know you will always take when my interests may be nearly concerned.

"Sir Charles Bingham having intimated to me the jealousies conceived, I profess I think a little unreasonably, by Hutchinson, and the impropriety of which I hope you will endeavour to explain to him, I thought it necessary to desire that he might be made acquainted with the two letters which I wrote to you at the beginning of the last month, but I apprehend that such communication for the future may not only be unnecessary but improper.

"The language held to you by Blaquiére is a conclusive proof of his intentions, but rather a presumptive one of the contrary. The manner in which I have always felt, and therefore always expressed myself, when your conduct and character were, as they have very frequently been, the subject of our conversation, must have induced him to suspect, and I hope with great reason, that a very free and friendly intercourse was likely to subsist between us. To repose a sort of false confidence, to tell you, not what was really intended, but what he would have me think was intended, was exactly the degree and species of cunning in which he is by no means deficient, and I am persuaded you will agree with me that his last conversation was, in many parts of it, meant rather as a disguise than an explanation of his real sentiments. For I know authentically that those unreasonable terms which Lord Harcourt could never venture to mention to his Majesty, in fact and in reality, have already been mentioned to him. But, though I know they have been stated, my intelligence does not go as far as to say they have been recommended. My persuasion is that, during the course of the session, the Castle will circulate everywhere that all thoughts of my employment are at an end, but that they will again negotiate at the close of it, after having given all secret encouragement to the old and silly expedient of raising objections against my patent. If any proceedings of this sort should fall within your observation, you will be kind enough, both to them and to me, to intimate how disingenuous a part they are acting, and that they will infallibly not accomplish by it, but defeat their own designs. Lord Mountmorris lately told me, without the least knowledge or suspicion of what had passed, that Bush (who once lived in close confidence with Flood) had frequently assured him that the attaining my employment was the great pursuit of Flood's politics, and the first object of his ambition; and at the end of the session, with two years intervening before Parliament will again meet, the Castle will, I think, disregard Hutchinson's discontent; and Flood, the unpopularity of burthening the establishment. From your narrative of the conversation with Blaquiere there is one thing which appears a little unaccountable. He seems to have mentioned only his offer of a pension for life, and to have omitted entirely the intimation he gave about a pension for three lives, or for years, which seems the rather extraordinary, as the impression I know he has laboured to convey is, that the negotiation ended from the exorbitance of the terms demanded. But that I could not accept of a pension for life, which is in a degree disreputable, in exchange for an employment for life, which is extremely honorable, will, I apprehend, be understood in general, not as instance of my unreasonableness, but a proof of my understanding. What induced him, therefore, I suppose, to suppress the latter circumstance was a disinclination to trust you with the secret of their having been willing, if their end could have been obtained, to place this additional charge upon the establishment, the knowledge of which would have brought on a degree of odium, in which Flood and the Castle would have been equally involved.

"In all negotiations, where it is the object of one man to have what another is in possession of, and where he happens to be not the proposer, but the person applied to, it is, I think, fully sufficient to specify distinctly the compensation expected, without descending into the reasons upon which he makes that demand, for which, under the circumstances I have mentioned, no one, I think, has a right to call on him. But as I desire a compensation which is honorable, and do not wish for one that is extortionary, I shall beg leave to explain to you why I have refused, and shall continue to refuse, the proposals which have been made, and why I form those expectations of which you are already apprized.

"The first proposition of an equivalent by way of pension for life, proceeds upon suppositions which are, in my judgment, evidently false. For upon this subject I entertain two, I am sure very well considered, and I think I can upon any occasion prove, two very well grounded opinions. The first is, that the grant of Chancellor of the Exchequer is clearly legal. The second is, that pensions for life, and for years, are clearly not so. By this proposal, therefore, according to my idea, my legal title instead of being strengthened would be weakened, and I say nothing can be more reasonable [than] that you should increase in point of value, where you diminish in point of security. In fact, however, I think I can shew that I do not desire a shilling more even in value than what I am strictly entitled to, and that my single condition is a longer tenure and not a better income. For, my dear Mr. Speaker, in whatever view the Absentee Tax may be considered in Ireland, where, it must be confessed, nothing can be more natural than the prejudices which are entertained, there is in England but one opinion upon that subject, and that is, that on the part of the Crown, it was a gross and most notorious breach of faith with its grantees, having neither of the only two possible apologies for its defence, the merit of generosity, or the plea of necessity. Upon my stating this matter fully to De Grey, who was then the Attorney-General, he thought it impossible that the Crown should give its consent, and reported strongly against it. It was not through design, but merely through neglect, that it was permitted to pass into a law. When the Crown, therefore, condescends to ask a favour, and Government desires that you would accommodate them, is it not unreasonable for a person who conceives himself injured, to say, I am willing to comply with your request, but in the negotiation upon this matter restore what your violence took from me, reinstate me in the situation [in] which you yourself had put me. But first to seize a part of your property, and then to propose a treaty for the remainder only, appears to me to be adding a mean thing to a wrong one, and grafting an ingenious proposal upon an unjust action.

EMLY.

"When the matter then is thus considered, and I apprehend it is very fairly considered, you will see what it is that I ask, and what it is that I sacrifice. In consequence of a proposal made, not by me, but by them, I desire what may be, but observe at the same time what possibly may not be, a better security, I mean to say a longer tenure than what I already have; for if I survive my two nominees, the addition of their lives would in that event be neither of any advantage to me, or of any expense to Government. What I apprehend I sacrifice is, in the first place, the possession of a very honorable office; in the next, a small increase of income certainly, and possibly a very large one. The fees of my employment have been gradually augmenting, though not in any considerable degree, for these last seven years, and if Government would nominate an able or a popular lawyer, or, what would be still better, one who was both, to be Chief Baron; or if you had been, as I intended, at the head of the Exchequer, instead of being Speaker, every man conversant with that Court will admit that the produce of my office would rise to a very considerable amount. Whereas a pension is a thing fixed, incapable on any events of an increase, though liable perhaps in many to a diminution.

"I have now stated with the utmost plainness and simplicity everything that was either material or unimportant upon the subject, and my letter is grown into the size of a memorial. I did it, however, for two reasons. First, that our correspondence, for the future, should not, unless something new arises, be embarrassed with this transaction. And, next, that you may be in full possession (to use as occasion shall require and as your friendship and discretion shall direct) of the reason which I hope likewise you will think the justification of my claim.

"I cannot help adding to the length of this letter by mentioning that you would have been much delighted could you have been a witness to our interview. It was opened with a very long prepared speech. Hints were thrown out about my patent, and about the impossibility of obliging Jephson, or of complying with another very frivolous request which I had made, and the whole was in my opinion managed without the least apparent frankness, or the least real dexterity. But as I did not intend to be seduced by his address, I was not at all disgusted by his want of it. Nothing will explain to you more clearly how little qualified he came to the conduct of such a negotiation than that one of the propositions, a pension for years, by the acceptance of which he did not know that I should have been incapable of a seat in the British Parliament. A pension for lives likewise he conceived not to be a grant for three concurrent lives, but that the second life was not to be nominated till the expiration of the first, nor the third till the determination of the other two. I said little, for where it is difficult to explain, it is unpleasant to converse.

"In most points of conduct, I believe, we generally act upon motives by which we ought not to be influenced, and which we are ashamed to disclose. I for a long time felt, what I feel no longer, a principle (if it deserves so respectable a name) of this sort, which weighed much with me against the acceptance of any compensation whatsoever for my employment, and that was the vanity of being, what no man ever was, Chancellor of the Exchequer in both kingdoms. This sort of frivolous ambition, though not strictly justifiable, is extremely natural; and it is a weakness which has at some times laid hold of very great minds, and is to be defended by very high authorities. Lord Hardwicke valued himself exceedingly, not on having been both Chief Justice of England and Lord High Chancellor, but upon having presided in both Courts upon the same day; and I heard him own that he wished to retain the seals three weeks longer that he might have had the satisfaction of holding them a few days beyond Lord Ellesmere, the only predecessor by whom he was exceeded.

"I shall now, my dear Pery, dismiss you more tired I am persuaded with reading, than even I had been with writing, this letter, and requesting only that you would suggest as your own advice both to Hutchinson and to Sir Charles Bingham that the less they say with regard to my office, and the less they appear to know of anything that has passed, the more discreetly they will act themselves, and the more kindly towards me. But if this should become a general topic of conversation, and they are laid under a necessity of speaking upon it, I wish it may be industriously declared by them that they speak their own sentiments, and not mine, and that what they say proceeds not from knowledge but conjecture. One impression, I profess, I should not be sorry to have conveyed, that they who carried on the negotiation could certainly never mean it should succeed, and that when a nation was treating with an individual, to propose as a compensation what should be barely the same in point of income and inferior in point of dignity, was an undoubted evidence that their object was not the attainment of the office, but only an evasive performance of their promise to the person who wanted it. Upon the whole, I may perhaps wish to continue in my employment till accident or opinion may lead me to take part with Government, when I shall have the power of prescribing, without the least objection, exactly my terms, though there is nothing of which I am more satisfied than the fairness and propriety of everything I have maintained in conversation with them, or in this letter to you, which, narrowed to a point, I take to be only this, 'That a pension for life, for lives or for years, is more illegal than my office.' 'That from the Absentee Tax I have a right to be indemnified by the Crown.' 'That by desiring the addition of two lives on a proposal made by Government for its own accommodation, I ask only a thing, to be sure, of possible but of dubious advantage.' 'That the income of a pension never can, and the emoluments of my office certainly will, increase.' I think if you and I had the liberty of being heard as counsel for the very worthy gentleman concerned upon the present occasion, from this brief we could contrive to make out a very tolerable case, to the satisfaction of any jury—Patriots alone excepted.

"You have frequently, during the course of our acquaintance, complained of my aversion to writing. After the receipt of this letter, which has grown to so immeasurable a length, I shall be much flattered if you continue against me the same reproaches. I wish you a peaceable and a prosperous session, and that you may have health enough to go through it, for your own sake—leisure enough to let me hear from you frequently for mine.

"Yours most faithfully and affectionately,
"W. G. H."

Lord North to the Earl of Buckinghamshire, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

"MY LORD, Bushy Park, 14 Nov. 1779.

"I HAVE never been so distressed in my life as at the receipt of your Excellency's two letters of the 4th and 8th of this month. You judge it right to give me information concerning the state of affairs on your side St. George's Channel; but the information you are able to give is by no means clear and distinct enough for me to venture with confidence to give either advice or instructions; and when I read your Excellency's letters to his Majesty's confidential servants, I found them under the same difficulty as myself.

"Ever since I had the honor of a share in his Majesty's councils, I have made it my constant rule to give every possible support to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and to this I believe your Excellency will bear testimony as well as your predecessor. I would readily give advice as well as support, if by any information I have received I were enabled to judge of the proper remedy to be applied to the present disorders of that kingdom.

"Your Excellency wishes that something may be done by Great Britain satisfactory to Ireland, but acknowledge you do not know what will satisfy them. Your Excellency exhorts us to provide an adequate remedy for their distress; but your Excellency does not give any opinion as to the origin and cause of that distress, which it is necessary for us to know before we can propose an adequate remedy. But what lights can we obtain from the declarations of the Irish Parliament? Give us, they say, a Free Trade. Those two words, unexplained and unaccompanied as they are, seem calculated to throw the two nations into a flame. To ask a free trade, without any limitations, conditions, or regulations, is to ask that Great Britain shall consent to put Ireland on a better footing with respect to trade than herself.

"Your Excellency, and others, seeing how unreasonable such a demand would be talk with more justice of an effectual enlargement, a material extension of trade, and of equalizing duties. But no person can as yet say with certainty whether Ireland will submit willingly to any limitation or regulation of their trade whatever.

"Neither the Irish House of Lords or Commons thought proper to inquire into the extent or cause of their present distress. It would, therefore, be rash in me (although I have heard very probable conjectures) to pronounce upon those points. Thus much, however, I will venture to say, that as the Irish trade has within these last ten years been in many cases encouraged and in none restrained, it is highly improbable that the present distress of Ireland proceeds from restrictions upon trade, and I may add, that it is totally impossible that a free trade can save Ireland, or any other country, from impending ruin.

"From hence your Excellency will judge of the embarrassment of the British ministry and Parliament, who are, I believe, well disposed to give every reasonable satisfaction to Ireland, but instead of the necessary information as to the most probable manner of giving it, receive only a vague and unexplained demand, which, in its full extent, will revolt the whole kingdom of Great Britain.

"Perhaps I may be too gloomy; but I much fear there are some persons at the bottom of these violent proceedings, and whose designs go much further than a free trade, and who have had the address to draw in the bulk of the nation most certainly better intentioned, but who do not see the precipice to which they are led. There are, I fear, in Ireland some emissaries of France and America, and some others, whose designs are less mischievous, but who act in concert with the opposition in England and set Ireland in a flame, in order to embarrass and turn out the present administration. All these join in availing themselves of a moment of distress to drive the people to madness, and by clamor, misrepresentation, and terror, force along with them many men who do not see the tendency of their measures, or are from fear of unpopularity deterred from acting according to their better judgment. To the arts of designing men alone I can attribute the very unjust cry of unkindness, neglect, and oppressive tyranny of Great Britain, when every man, who will cast his eye on the Statute Book will see, that, during the present reign, more has been done in favor of Ireland than for a hundred years before. The present Parliament has produced more instances of British attention to the welfare of Ireland, and your Excellency knows how much regard has been paid to Irish claims in the distribution of favors.

"Your Excellency seems aware of the dangerous consequence of a short Money Bill, and very desirous to prevent it; but at the same time very doubtful of your success. You will, however, I dare say, exert yourself to the utmost. If it should pass, the mischief would be great to England and greater to Ireland. Your Excellency will not be able to form a permanent plan for the defence of the country upon so precarious a revenue, and may be driven to the disagreeable, perhaps fatal, necessity of reducing both your civil and military establishments, with the enemy at your door. I hope that the serious and well intentioned people in Ireland (who at this moment are ninety-nine in a hundred) will not suffer a factions few to hurry them on from one step to another till they are irrecoverably plunged in misery, anarchy, and confusion.

"I really think that the good sense and moderation of the Irish themselves can alone save them from the evils with which they are threatened. They must dare to be a little unpopular, and they must take all prudent measures for checking this turbulent spirit betimes, or it will rise to a height of which they have no idea, and they will find themselves in the end totally unable to quell it.

"But, though I think the peace of Ireland and the harmony between that kingdom and this depend principally upon the good sense and moderation of the Irish themselves, I shall be very ready to promote any measure which she can justly or reasonably expect. The two Houses of the British Parliament have already addressed the King upon the subject of Ireland. His Majesty will, in his speech, mention that part of his dominions in terms of affection, which will, I dare say, be returned in the same language by the two Houses of Parliament, who will probably undertake to enter into the consideration of the state of Ireland with all convenient despatch. If a Committee of the House of Commons is appointed immediately, the report may be made at the first meeting after the recess at Christmas.

"I believe the disposition of the nation is not unfriendly to Ireland, and that it will continue so, unless it is irritated by repeated menaces and insults. What we do, we must do upon full consideration, solemnly and discreetly, and we must be able to shew to our constituents that what we grant to Ireland is just and reasonable, and not likely to be prejudicial to them.

"This is all that it is possible for me to say at present. Nobody can positively assure your Excellency what Parliament will do. The language of the addresses at the opening of the session will probably be kind and affectionate; but it will certainly be inconclusive and general, and it is obvious that any other language in an address would be highly improper.

"Your Excellency may be assured that the apprehension of a short Money Bill in Ireland was not the reason for calling the Parliament of Great Britain later than last year. Our Parliaments have been often assembled in the third and last week of November, and if we had met in the first, no business respecting Ireland would have been completed before Christmas.

"I hope and trust that the friendly disposition shewn by the British Legislature will prevent the Irish from running to extremities, hurtful to Great Britain, but destructive to themselves.

"Whatever we do here will be of no consequence unless the principal persons in Ireland begin from this moment to check by every prudent means the furious spirit which has been raised in Ireland, which will in a short time become too strong for them to control and involve them and their country in misery and ruin.

"I have, etc.
"NORTH."

J. M. Mason to Pery.

"MY DEAR SPEAKER, 16th November, 1779.
"As I cannot venture to go down to the House without the manifest danger of my life, and cannot foresee how long this prohibition may continue, since the House has not thought it necessary to take any steps towards vindicating the freedom of its members, I must request that you will appoint some other person more agreeable than I am to the present ruling powers to take the Chair in the Committee of Accounts, lest any inconvenience should arise to the publick from a further delay in the proceedings of that Committee.

"The report will give my successor but little trouble, as I have prepared the whole of it, except that part which states the debts of the nation, with which it is usual to conclude it.

"Be assured that it is with much reluctance I resign a Chair which I have hitherto considered as an honor and as a proof of your regard.

"I must also request that, if you think it necessary, you will make my apology to the House for not attending in my place this day, according to their order. You will do me the justice to acknowledge that, while we possessed freedom of debates, no member in the House attended his duty more constantly than I did. But the attendance of members is now of little consequence, since they must either vote for measures that they cannot approve of, or hazard their lives and the peace of their families by a fruitless opposition.

"I am, my dear Speaker,

"Your most faithful and affectionate servant,
"JOHN MONCK MASON."*

Lord Lucan to Pery.

"MY DEAR SPEAKER, 25 Nov. 1779.
"I SEND you the King's speech. They are now ding-dong at it in both Houses; a cold has prevented me from going down. Lord North is determined to stick by the vessel, sink or swim. Those that have quit are much [to] blame. They have brought things to the terrible situation they are in, and now retire, thinking to save themselves from the rage of the publick, in case of confusion in this country. Lord Beauchamp and Lord Hillsborough serve as temporary servants till better can be got. It is a patched affair, and unless the affairs of Europe take some turn in our favor, I cannot see how we can go on —.

"Ever yours,
"LUCAN."

Lord Beauchamp to Pery.

"MY DEAR LORD,
"MANY thanks for your kind note. I have long, very long admired and esteemed the Irish Speaker, and am happy to know his sentiments on the present confused state of Ireland, and the means of restoring it to peace and harmony with this country.

"The plan he has suggested accords entirely with my ideas, and I will do everything that depends on me to carry it into execution. He may depend on it that I shall make no improper use of his confidence, and that whatever he shall be pleased to represent to me in futuro shall be received with the respect which is due to him from every point of view.

"I have much better hopes of seeing these unhappy differences accommodated than I had some time ago; and we really wanted only to know what line of conduct would probably give satisfaction in Ireland to regulate our proceedings. In the last phrase you will understand the declared friends of Ireland here, and particularly

"My dear Lord,

"Your affectionate servant,
"Stanhope St., 26th Nov. 1779. BEAUCHAMP."*

Lord Lucan to Pery.

"MY DEAR SPEAKER, 29th Nov. 1779.
"NOTHING can come more in proper time than your last letter to me, which, as I informed you, I sent immediately to Lord B., etc., and whose letter I sent to you. At the moment they were deliberating on Irish affairs, and they did not know how to proceed upon them, as they were, I believe, totally ignorant of what your letter so fully informed them. The time also pressed hard upon them, as the House in general are for going into this matter as soon as possible. Lord Hillsborough said in the Lords that when he was in Ireland, he could never meet with anyone who could explain to him what was meant by a free trade; and Lord Littleton (who is since dead) said that he did not meet with anyone who had not the distinctest idea of it, which was a free export and import, subject to such regulations as the Parliament should please to settle. Your letter has, I believe, convinced them of the necessity of being expeditious in this business, and also that it must not be trifled with.

"I find Lord B. a most sanguine and active friend, and everything we wish will be done; in what method is not as yet determined, but I should not be surprised if there were to be Commissioners sent over to treat with Commissioners named in Ireland about the trade of the two countries. Perhaps this mode may be adopted, and to-morrow or next day some proposition in regard to our affairs will be made by the Ministry in the House of Commons.

"Equalizing duties does not alarm me; duty on the West Indian imports will give us an additional revenue; and as the woollen and cotton manufactures are not subject here to any duty upon being exported, they do not think of having them made subject to any in Ireland.

"The affair lies within a very narrow compass. They were alarmed at the word free trade, and never considered the many articles that we are allowed to export already, and that those we wish mostly to export cannot be taxed, as they are not taxed here.

"I cannot say everything I wish to say to you, but in a few days I will write to you by a private hand. In the meantime enjoy the satisfaction that you have been chiefly the means of settling what will certainly take place, and that you stand here in a most respectable light.

"Charles Fox has this morning fought a duel with a Mr. Adam, nephew of the architect, who is member for Galton. Mr. Adam has, since he has been in Parliament, taken a line, which was beyond his ability, to abuse the Ministry, and to vote for their measures, until this session, when he has spoken and also voted for them. Mr. Fox, on the first day, took his speech to pieces, but was far from being personal. The performances of both these gentlemen [appeared] in all the papers the following day, and as accurately inserted as the debates generally are. Yesterday, Mr. Adam called upon Fox to know whether he had inserted his speech in the papers, which Mr. Fox assured him he did not, that he never wrote for newspapers, and had not even seen the speech alluded to. Mr. Adam went away seemingly satisfied, but in some time after he sent a Major Humberston to him with a paper, desiring Mr. Fox to sign, which paper was a declaration that Mr. Fox had not sent the paragraph to the printer. Mr. Fox refused this, and said he would declare to any person or persons the truth, but that he would not sign such a paper, upon which a message was delivered to him, and they met this morning at break of day, Fitzpatrick second to his friend Fox. Mr. Adam fired and hit Fox in the belly, but only slightly, upon which Fox fired and missed him. Fitzpatrick then slipped in between them, and said he hoped that Mr. Adam was satisfied, who replied that he was not, and that if Mr. Fox would not sign the paper, he would fire again. Mr. Fox said it was impossible, upon which Adam took a most deliberate aim, his arm stretched out for at least a moment, fired and missed Fox, who fired his second pistol in the air, and so ended this extraordinary affair. Fox's courage is applauded by every one. As to the other, you may judge of it from the account, which is exactly as it is related.

"Lord Lyttleton died suddenly of a cramp in his stomach. He was seized when seemingly he was as well as ever he was, and before the servant could bring in a glass of peppermint water he was dead. He has died rich, and I hear his money goes to Lady Valentia,* and his estate and Hagley to Lord Westcote.

"I believe the Ministry are not sorry that his Money Bill has passed for only six months, as the country gentlemen, whom they were afraid would oppose Ireland, will now see that the matter has become serious, and that the full amount of what we demand must be granted. I hope Ireland will exert itself now, and reap all the advantages possible from the trade we shall have and from our situation. If our merchants and manufacturers do not, we shall be as low as ever, as the manufactures of this country will pour in upon us when the non-importation associations cease, which probably they will do, as it will be perhaps thought ungenerous of us to continue them, when all our demands are complied with. I think it would be vain to raise the duty on French wines in Ireland, and to import as much as possible from Portugal to encourage that country to take our cottons and woollens.

"LUCAN."

Lord Lucan to Pery.

"MY DEAR SPEAKER, 7th Dec. 1779.

"By last night's debates I see that our affairs will go on well next Thursday, which is the day appointed for the Irish business. It was a warm debate and well supported on each side, and I should think that the quantity of inflammatory matter thrown off the minds of those who generally speak will be of great advantage to the Irish cause on Thursday, as the House will enter upon the business with more coolness and consider it with less prejudice from understanding it better.

"Lord North did not let out his plan, and very few know the proposition he is to make, but I am assured it goes even beyond your ideas. What you last mentioned in regard to the Act relative to hops will be revised and rendered inoffensive to Ireland.

"The House laughed very heartily at Fox's recollecting what Wedderburn had once said in the House when he called the Congress one Hancock and his Crew. He said, will the honourable member call the Irish Parliament one Pery and his Crew?

"Lord Shelburn's speech in the House of Lords on the same motion was highly blameable. He saw that the free trade we demand is likely to be given us, and he is afraid that Ireland will be so satisfied that it will serve no more as a tool to overturn administration here and get him and others into place. He, therefore, endeavoured to stir up constitutional grievances, which, he said, we now insisted upon being adopted. He mentioned the manner Bills are brought into the House; the illegality of pensions and King's Letters; that the people in the north had opened a commerce with America, and that the Presbyterians had complained of paying tithes and glebe to absentee clergymen.

"I hope that our people will take no notice of such speeches, and that the speeches in our House of Commons will disapprove of the designs of men here who were the foremost in asserting the legislative authority of England over Ireland until this year. Until this year this same Peer never moved a finger for Ireland, and declared upon his legs often and often that he never would give up the right of England's binding America and its other dependencies.

"It is shocking how far party and faction will carry men, and how very few on either side are worthy of public regard. I thank God that there is more virtue in our country. The moderation, good sense, and firmness the Irish House of Commons have shewn has put them in the most respectable light in the minds of every one here. I assure you their conduct this session is admired by every one who speaks of it either publicly or in private.

"People now give it as a reason for having opposed the advantages in the last session, which were proposed for Ireland, that they opposed them merely because they were insufficient and that they would not satisfy us, and that they waited until things were ripe to give us all we wanted. It is excellent! I am glad they did refuse them last session. If they had been granted, we should probably never have succeeded in procuring a free trade.

"Ever yours, &c.

Pery to Lord North.

"MY LORD, Dublin, 13th Dec. 1779.

"THOUGH I did not think it prudent to declare any opinion upon the subject of the resolutions relative to this kingdom intended to be proposed by your Lordship at the meeting of Lords and Gentlemen, to whom my Lord Lieutenant thought proper to communicate them, yet I think it my duty to express to your Lordship my entire approbation of everything contained in them.

"My silence at that meeting did not proceed from any doubt I had entertained upon the subject, but from an apprehension that any opinion I should give, considering my present station, might admit of some misconstruction, and that it would have less weight, when delivered on a sudden and without any previous deliberation. Besides, some things had passed at that meeting, which made it necessary for me to be silent, but though I was so then, I will not be so when occasion requires, and your Lordship may be assured I never will miss any opportunity, public or private, of promoting to the utmost of my power mutual confidence and affection between Great Britain and Ireland, upon which the prosperity, if not the existence, of both depends.

"Give me leave, at the same time, to mention to your Lordship some particulars which may deserve your attention. Hops are by a British law prohibited from being imported into Ireland from any country but Great Britain, and yet considerable duty is laid upon them when imported from thence. It may deserve consideration whether the laws laying those restraints should not be repealed, and Ireland left to make similar laws for herself, which would certainly prove more effectual; and also whether it would not be advisable to take off the duties upon the export of hops from Great Britain without any condition of laying on the like duties in Ireland, as the breweries here are in a wretched state and require assistance.

"It likewise deserves consideration whether the British laws which prohibit the importation of sugars and rum of foreign plantations into Ireland should not be repealed upon the same principles, and whether it is for the interest of the British colonies that the same duties which are payable upon importation into Great Britain, should be charged upon those commodities when imported into Ireland, in which case either clandestine importation would be encouraged or all importation prevented.

"Your Lordship will perceive that I think it an object of the utmost consequence that no restraints should be continued upon the trade of this kingdom but what are imposed by its own legislature. I am persuaded it will itself do what Great Britain can in reason desire upon that head. Liberality and confidence on one side will produce it on the other. I presume not to question the right, but it is certainly impolitic to let it be agitated in the present temper of the times and circumstances of both kingdoms, when too many are disposed to encourage it. The only certain method of disappointing them is to remove the cause of complaint before any complaint is made, which can never prejudice Great Britain, but may be made use of as an engine to injure her.

"I write, perhaps, with too much freedom upon what I know to be a delicate subject. I have done so upon others. I do not repent of it, though I am not uninformed or insensible that it has been of prejudice to me. The event has proved that I was not mistaken, and I have the inward satisfaction to reflect that I have acted an honest though not a politic part.

"I am, etc.

Lord North to Pery.

"SIR, London, Dec. 13, 1779.
"I TAKE the liberty of enclosing to you a copy of the resolutions which I received to-day in a committee of the whole House, and which passed without a division. If they give satisfaction in Ireland, they will probably pass here without much opposition, and they will, I trust, lay the foundation for the re-establishment of perfect harmony and good humour between the two countries. Should they fail of giving satisfaction, I am afraid that it will be worse with us both than if they had never been made. Many persons will, I am afraid, endeavour to keep up the discontents of Ireland, but I trust that they will be counteracted by the discreet and real lovers of their country. There is no person in either kingdoms more able and more willing to promote every good consequence which may be expected from these measures than you are, and therefore I need not press you to do your utmost upon this occasion to remove any jealousies and discontents that may defeat the good effects of them.

"Your friend and relation, Lord Lucan, has very honorably determined upon a journey to Ireland in order to do everything in his power that may tend to the conciliation of the two kingdoms. If any ideas should occur to me that may promote the end we all wish for, I will trouble you with them through him, always submitting them to your better judgment.

"I have the honor to be, with great respect, Sir,
"Your most faithful humble servant,
"NORTH."

Lord Beauchamp to Pery.

"SIR, "As Lord Lucan left London this morning, and will probably have had the pleasure of waiting on you before this letter reaches Dublin, I need not enter into any particulars which you will learn with more satisfaction from him.

"The business of Ireland is in a very happy train, and I am confident the propositions now before Parliament will meet in every stage with a very general concurrence. I do not, however, think enough has been done. I wish to remove, if possible, the grounds of future discontents, and close the very disagreeable dispute with Ireland for ever.

"In this task, your House will, I dare say, be very ready to meet us half way, and on this presumption I trouble you now.

"The trade in woollens will be entirely opened by the law to be presented this day, but you will observe that the obnoxious statutes still remain in force which restrain the export of wool from Ireland. It was thought hazardous to include these provisions in the repeal, as the woollen manufacturers of England would have said, 'Is it not enough to give the Irish the free trade of their woollens, and must you also legalize the exportation of the raw material to our rivals in the trade?' From the moment the trade is opened to you, you are equally interested in preventing the clandestine export of wool. I would, therefore, suggest to you the necessity of an Irish Act containing such penalties as you think necessary to prevent this contraband trade, to which I suppose the principal temptation will be removed by the measures now taking here. After which we may do away all the odious and offensive provisions, such as that an acquittal in Ireland shall not be pleaded against any action grounded on the 5th of George 1st; the subjecting wool near the sea coast (even on a gentleman's own demesne) to a forfeiture; and the establishment of a marine guard to watch the Irish ports; and several others which I do not at this moment recollect. Fuller's earth and tobacco-pipe clay are, I believe, also used in the woollen trade, and the export of them forbid from Ireland by English statutes, for the same reason, and therefore ought to be comprehended in the Act which I presume to recommend to you.

"The same principle applies to the materials used in the manufacture of glass. I think you ought and may safely lay on heavy duty on foreign glass, in which case we may repeal our statute forbidding the import of glass from any other country but England.

"With respect to hops, both our acts appear to me exactly in the light you represent them to me. I believe Ireland will never supply herself with hops, and I believe she will always find her interest to receive her hops from hence. If you will lay a very heavy duty on foreign hops, our Act will fall to the ground, and Lord North gave notice yesterday to the House of Commons that he should after Xmas move for a repeal of the other Act, which operates in its consequences as a tax on the Irish brewery.

"I have thrown my thoughts upon paper for your consideration in a very incorrect form, which I hope you will excuse, as I am writing in a very large company.

"Allow me to assure you of the very high esteem and respect with which I am,

"Sir,

"Your most faithful and very obedient servant,

"BEAUCHAMP.

"Stanhope St., 15 Dec. 1779"

Pery to Lord North.

"MY LORD, Dublin, 17 Decr. 1779.

"I HAVE this morning received a letter from Mr. Keere, in which he informs me that your Lordship wishes I should communicate my ideas freely to you in the course of the business now depending with respect to Ireland.

"I am pleased I have already in part anticipated your Lordship's desire by my letter of the 13th instant, and it is with much satisfaction I can now add that I find the temper and disposition of the leading men in this kingdom such as you could wish.

"These gentlemen have excellent hearts and sound understandings, and, however fond of popular applause, will not, I am persuaded, do anything wrong to acquire or preserve it.

"They well know the value of the British Constitution, and will not hazard the loss of it; and their loyalty to his Majesty and his royal family is untainted; nor are they unacquainted with the difficulty of your Lordship's situation, or insensible of your merit towards this kingdom, which I make no doubt they will manifest in their conduct.

"I must, however, acknowledge to your Lordship that there is nothing I dread so much as stirring any question relative to constitutional powers. I have endeavoured to the utmost of my power to suppress everything tending that way, and shall continue to do so.

"Under these impressions I took the liberty of mentioning the subject to your Lordship, which I should not otherwise have meddled with. It is unfortunate that the extent of the sovereignty of Great Britain has ever been defined. It should have remained a mystery, and never called forth but upon the utmost necessity to save the empire, and then it would have been submitted to without reluctance. Upon less occasions I am certain it never will.

"I know my own presumption in writing this, but as your Lordship wishes me to write my thoughts freely, I do it without reserve, and the rather as my fears of some disaster upon that head are still very strong, and, of consequence, my anxiety is great that every cause of jealousy between the two kingdoms equally dear to me should be removed.

"There is another subject which I think necessary to mention to your Lordship. Heads of a Bill have passed our House to repeal a clause relative to Dissenters in the Statute of Queen Anne to prevent the further growth of Popery. It goes no further, as some wished it should and I took pains to prevent. According to the history of the times in which that law passed, that clause was added in England to a Bill to which it had no relation, in order to defeat it. But zeal against Popery prevailed, and the Bill passed with the clause. The Dissenters in the north and in this city now consider this clause as very injurious to them, and if there are no reasons of State against it, it is much to be wished that they should be gratified. This measure would certainly produce much good humour amongst people who are perhaps too much disposed to complain without reason, and deprive men of ill intentions of an instrument with which they may do much mischief."

Endorsed: Copy of letter to Lord North.

— Thomas Pownall to Pery.

"Richmond, Surrey,

Dec. 23, 1779.

"SIR, "I RECEIVED this day from the Chairman of the Meeting of Deputies of the Woollen Manufacturers in Yorkshire a letter, of which the enclosure is a copy.

"This meeting was some years past, instituted upon my advice and recommendation to the agents of these manufacturers then in London. Upon their meeting they came to a resolution that their Chairman should commence and keep up a correspondence with me, and this letter, written on this occasion, is in the course of this correspondence.

EMLY.

"As I have always thought that a good understanding between two people will go farther in business and do more good than the most ascendant understanding, which assumes to take a lead, I think the point of business to which this letter refers may be best settled by the two countries coming to a right and good understanding about them. I have therefore taken the liberty of an acquaintance, which I always esteemed an honor to me, of sending the letter to you just as I receive it.

"As I never deceived this body of people in the accounts of facts which I have had occasion to communicate to them; as I have been always very explicit in my opinions given to them without disguise or reserve; I have always found the pleasing result of their deferring a good deal to my judgment.

"If any communications on these points which you may venture to make or (if your situation renders such improper) any other communications which at your recommendation I may receive as authentic, shall enable me to keep matters quiet now they are so, and to cultivate still more the good temper which you see our manufacturers are in, I shall be happy.

"Having no communication with Government, I write this intirely as [an] individual, a 'Correspondent of a Meeting of the Deputies of the Woollen Manufacturers of Yorkshire and part of Lancashire.'

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your most obedient and most humble servant,
"The Right Hon^{ble} E. Pery, Esq., T. POWNALL.
"Ireland.

"P.S.—I have long meditated writing to you on the subject of Paper Currency for Ireland on the plan of the Pennsylvania Loan Office, drawn up by Ben Franklin and myself."

Lord Hillsborough to Pery.

"Sir, St. James's, 23rd Dec. 1779.
"THE King is this moment returned from giving his Royal Assent to the Irish Woollen Bill, and I take the liberty to enclose to you a printed copy of it thus early, that you may not unnecessarily lose a moment of that pleasure which I am sure it will give you.

"I most sincerely congratulate with you upon this happy event for Ireland, as I flatter myself I shall very soon after the recess have the pleasure of doing upon the Export and Import Act to and from the Colonies, etc.

"It is a very agreeable circumstance in the passing this Bill that there was not the least opposition in either House of Parliament, and that His Majesty, to whom a Commission was proposed, was pleased to say he would go to the House in person, upon an occasion of so much importance to his faithful kingdom of Ireland.

"I am, with great truth and respect, Sir,
"Your most obedient humble servant,
"The Rt. Honble. HILLSBOROUGH.
"The Speaker of the House of Commons, Ireland."

In another Report I hope to bring under the notice of the Commission the correspondence and papers of Speaker Pery subsequent to 1779.

Esq.

THE MANUSCRIPT OF RALPH BANKES, ESQ., OF KINGSTON LACY, DORSET.

The earliest and most valuable of the MSS. now in the possession of Ralph Bankes, Esq., are those which have come down to him from his ancestor Sir J. Bankes, the Chief Justice of King Charles' time.—Amongst these papers are found the many letters which passed between the Parliamentary leaders and Sir J. Bankes in the year 1642, of which the greater part have been published by the Right Hon. J. Bankes, in the story of Corfe Castle, in the year 1853; those which are not noticed in that book will be found in the following report, together with a letter of Archbishop Laud's, and a notice of the very interesting volumes which contain the Minutes of the Meetings of the Parliamentary Committee for the county of Dorset for the years 1646-1650.—It may be noticed also here, that, among the documents in the muniment room, there are a large number of MS. books (some 250 in all) descriptive of the proceedings in Parliament about the latter part of the last century; and that among the many valuable books in the library, there are some 376 tracts, ranging from the year 1612 to the year 1681, bound up in 22 volumes.—All Mr. Bankes' papers are in an excellent state of preservation, both those in the muniment room, as well as those which have been arranged in volumes in the library.

A MS. without date, probably of the 16th century, entitled "A Perticuler of the Castell and Manor of Corfe. A very fayr Castell with a gatehouse, with 'fayr' rooms, &c., inclosed with a great stone wall with ground cont. about 6 acres for gardens and walks. At the foote of the Castell is a Towne, being a Borough called Corff; the fireholders whereof holde theyr lands by Castell garde and law, to wayte on the Lord of the Castle when he comes to or goeth from the Castell to the Church."

The Lord has the fishing of the Wareham river, and free warren and free chase over the island of Purbeck; and hath in the island a fayr game of redd deer, and "upon the river a fayr game of swans, &c."—Wrecks, fines, &c. belong to the Lord. He has also "the patronage and advowson of the Church of Corfe, with the Chappell of Kingston, and episcopal jurisdiction." He has also flotsam and other casualties, &c. "with Admirall jurisdiction."

He hath also the Lieutenants, Captaynes, and Muster Masters, see that the islanders are not to goe or serve out of the island; but, if cause should be, 200 men out of the countie are to assist the islanders, &c. The Lord has all felons' goods, deadbands, &c., and all the profits of Greeneway in the island and hundred of Ronsberghe, Haselhere, and Rismore. The Lord hath the libertie of two Boroughs within the island, w^{ch} answer at the law dayes, and where he hath the choice of Burgesses and Parliaments.

A MS. folio of 520 pages entitled "Wars of England, with all matters thereunto relating, from K. John to Henry VII."

The book contains the general musters for the kingdom, and very many details about the land and naval forces; as, e.g., that in the time of H. III. the counties of Worcester, Stafford, Salop, and Warwick, provided a man and arms for every two hides of land; that in the time of Ed. II. the wages of an English archer, infantry, were 3*l.*, and of a Welsh archer 2*d.* per diem; that in the 48th year of H. III. "A notable order was made for the people of the land to be always in redynes to withstand the invasion of any enemy upon the sea coasts." It also enters into some of the details of military discipline, rules about the capture of prisoners in battle, obedience to superior officers, penalties for breach of discipline, as, e.g., "whosoever 'not being a priest shall presume to touch the body of the Lord,' or whosoever 'shall cry havock' and 'cause a riot shall be hanged and drawn,' and many more similar orders.

A MS. book by Chief Justice Bankes, entitled "Of the King and Kingdom, with proofs from Acts of Parl^t and History," divided as follows:—

"The Kingdom of England is an absolute Empire and Monarchie."

"The King hath a natural and politique body."

"The King never dyeth."

"King James was absolute king before coronation; the crown was but a royal ornament."

"The ligeance of the subject is due both to the natural part and politique capacite of the king."

"The King is Vicarius Dei."

"The King is Persona Mixta, and hath supreme ecclesiastical jurisdiction."

"He is Supreme Ordinary and Head of the Church."

"The King may grant an Ecclesiastical High Commission at the Common Law."

"The King is Defensor Fidei, and divers other appellations of the king."

"Of the Laws of England."

" " " of Marque and Reprisal."

" " " of Merchants."

" " " of the Stauneries."

" " " of Guernsey, Man, and Jersey."

"Laws and Rights of the Crown."

"Dignity and Prerogative of the King's Person."

"Of Parliament."

"Of Convocation."

To our trusty and well-beloved

Sir John Bankes, K^t, our Attorney-General.

1628, Aug. 8th. Order in Council. Lady Elizabeth Hatton to have charge of Brownsea Castle in the Isle of Purbeck.

A prophcy of Mr. Warmwell; in Dorset, in the year 1661 :—

That there should die of plague so many thousand in London :

That London should be burned, and St. Paul's tumble down;

That we should have three sore fights with the Dutch : That three small ships should come to land in west of Weymouth, and put all England in an uproar, but it come to nothing;

That in 1688, there would come to pass such a thing in the kingdom as all the world would take notice of.

The above was spoken to the writer of the account, Cuthbert Bonnd, minister of the same parish, yet alive in 1698.

1636, May 18th. Order of Council. Sir John Bankes, his Mat^{ty} Attorney Gen., to have charge of Brownsea Castle.

1642, May 4th. The King to Sir Jo. Bankes, Chief Justice. Sign mannal. Desiring him to come to York.

1642, Jan. 12. Same to same, desiring him to come to Oxford not later than Jan^y 21st.

1639, Jan. 7th. The King to Sir Jo. Bankes. Sign manual. Order to prepare a Bill for our Royal signature carrying a Commission to Thomas, Earl of Strafforde, to be Lieutenant General of Ireland and general governor there, and also to be general of the army, giving him power also to make lawes and ordinances for the government of the army, to appoint marshalls and use marshall lawes as there shall be cause. Further authorizing him from tyme to tyme, as to him shall seeme meete, in his absence to appoint any fit person to be his deputy there; but that such person shall not have power to issue any of our moneyes there, upon his own warrant, without the hands of our trusty and cancellors, &c.

July 14th, 1637. From the Archbp. of Canterbury to Sir Jo. Bankes, from Croiden. "Wee at the High Commission can doe no more than the Coms. of that Court and y^e power given us can reach to. That is, wee can but suspend mye L. of Lincolne ab officijs et beneficijs, soe far as belongs to ecclesiastical things and causes. And I thinke you will not doubt but be certain that this will not operat for the Temporalls of a Byshop. And you know (being present at the debate in the Imer Star Chamber) that all the Lords agreed upon soe little fynne because they tooke away all y^e rents and proffits of his Bp. and Deanerye, els three tymes as much would have been layd on him. Therefore I doe not conceive but the sentence must be drawn full according to the meaning and expression of y^e Lords. And as I know you love your master's service well and heartilye, soe, out of that confidence, let me deale plainlye with you. I doe much doubt whether this sentence will give the Kinge satisfaction or not. Sure I am it will not, unless you make it full as was intended. Therefore, in anye case be careful that noe defect lye on y^e side. I hope to meet you at Oatlands. Thear I must expect the sentence may be readye, if the Kinge call for speedye execution, which is certainly fitt. I will bring thither with me a list of the printers, and consider with you of their complaints. In the mean tyme I send your papers safe back againe and sealed, and desyre you to be confident I shall ever rest y^e very loving frend.—W. Cant.

1635, June 11th. Order to Sir Jo. Bankes from Denmarke House, that no lands reclaimed from the sea near her Majesty's manors in Norfolk and Lincoln, "especially those w^{ch} her Majesty hath lately made suit for to the King" be passed away. Signed, Savage, Jo. Finch. Tho. Hatton, Ro. Acton.

Words spoken by William Wakelyn, of Bewers in the county of Suffolk, Esq. (Endorsed The Original):—"He tolde the churchwardens (as they were asking counsell whither they should raile in the altar) noe, that they should look to it for that was but a dounce before popery; and being rebuked by some who were present he had them say what they would, the King had a wife and he loved her, and she was a papist and we must be all of her religion, and that was it the thing the bishops aymed at; and many other words tending to that purpose w^{ch} are readye to be deposed by Tho. Bayly and Hugh Roberts."

1587, July 19th. Letter from Sir J. Monson to Sir J. Bankes from Broxburne. "I thought to have presented you with at London an account of his Mat^{ty} great acceptance of your last servis to him in the Bp^{ts} cause, but your absence from London gave prevention to it. And longe before this I presume the Kinge hath given you his thankes, for soe he assured me he would when I gave him an account of that business. Wherein though I could not ascribe so much to you, I did not any waies lessen of your desert in it. Sir, your worth hath forbid me presenting you with any thinge of vallue, soe as I must study some other way of cancelling my debt to you, only if you please to appoint the place and time I will send you the best buck my Lord of Salisburie can kill."

1640, Nov. 3rd. Names of the Lords Committee deputed to take the preparatory examinations of witnesses in the accusation by the H. of Commons against the E. of Strafford, with the oath to be taken by them.

1646-1650. The Minutes of the proceedings of the Parliamentary Committee for the county of Dorset, sitting at Dorchester, from the years 1646 to the year 1650.

These are contained in two volumes, which together come to about 960 pages (the latter part of the 2d. vol., probably about 60 pages, being missing). They give a vivid picture of the summary method in which the government of the country was carried on during those years. The entries consist, for the most part, of such things as orders for the arrest of malignants; for the sequestration of properties; for compensation out of such properties, to those who have served the Parl^t, or who have suffered for the Parl^t in person or goods.

The Parl^t, e.g., sends down an order to raise 2,000*l*. upon the estate of Mr. G. Penny, of Toller, for the relief of the town of Beaminster "burnt by the enemy," and this order is carried out by the local committee. In the greater number of cases, however, the County Committee seems to act independently.—Another subject which engages a very great part of their attention is the regulation of parishes, ministers, and churches, "scandalous ministers," "ill affected to the Parliament" (apparently synonymous terms), are removed to make way for others who can satisfy an examining body of three that they possess the opposite qualifications. The Committee, however is careful that the families of the ejected ministers should receive their proper allowance out of the tithes of the parish.—In some cases the churches in small parishes are closed, and the parishioners are ordered to attend service at some other church, which is named. The necessary repairs of churches are also cared for, and the churchwardens receive orders to attend to their duties.—The Committee also watches over the theological views of the army, as, e.g., Jan. 6, 1646, the following order is sent to a Mr. Burges. "Forasmuch as the parish of Rodipoll is committed to your charge, and complaynt is made unto us, that of late one Mr. Stapleton was admitted to preach in the Church of Rodipoll, who is no ordained minister, to y^e great disturbance and hazard of the garrison of Weymouth, through the flocking of officers and souldiers out of towne, you are hereby ordered to inhibit any man to preach, that shall not be able to produce sufficient proof of ordination."

1662, Dec. 4th. Instructions to Sir R. Bankes, to take an account of the value of all estates in the Isle of Purbeck for assessment according to the Militia Act, and to make a return of all volunteers. An insurrection being probable, he is to have a diligent eye upon all the Republick party. 10*l*. a year may be accepted in lieu of personal provision of a horse and horseman.

1667, June 19th. The Council to Sir R. Bankes. His Mat^{ies} enemies have actually invaded this kingdom and burned many houses and destroyed some of his Mat^{ies} ships, you are therefore to draw together the yeomanry, &c. and make a report of what you have done.

1669-70, March 2nd. L. Arlington to Sir R. Bankes, to send in a list of the names of the Deputy Lieutenants, Isle of Purbeck

- R. BANKES, Esq. 1667, Jan. 28th. The King to Sir R. Bankes. Sign manual. To press for a voluntary liberal advance of money by such as are in a capacity of lending, in this time of publick danger.
- 1661, Dec. 11th. The Council to Sir R. Bankes. All officers to enforce the proclamation which banishes to a distance of 20 miles from London and Westminster, and forbids to carry arms, all who had served in the armies of the late usurped powers.
- 1663, Sept. 4th. Rd. Browne to Sir R. Bankes. Enclosing an Order of Council touching the militia.
- 1663, Aug. 5th. Order of Council concerning the militia; no company to be kept together above 14 days in one year.
- 1666, July 10th. The King to Sir R. Bankes. Sign manual. Rendezvous to be appointed for all soldiers in case of alarms of foreign invasion.
- 1690, Aug. 2nd. Order of Council to — Bankes, Esq., Lieut. of the Isle of Purbeck, to make a return of the numbers of the militia, horse and foot.
- 1690, July 22nd. The Council to the same. The French fleet seen yesterday off Portland, militia to be called together at once.
- 1690, Aug. 8th. The Council to the same. The French fleet is standing off from the English coast, and their Mutin^e fleet being ready to put to sea, it is left to your discretion, it being harvest time, to dismiss the militia.
1664. King Charles II. to Ralph Bankes, Knt., our Governor of our Island of Purbeck. Act Manual. Order to remit monies collected under the Act for y^e Militia, 1662, deducting 14 days' pay in the year to the commissioned officers of horse and foot in y^e lieutenantancy, at the rate of 10s. per diem to a captain, 6s. to a lieutenant, 5s. to a cornet, to a quartermaster, 4s.; to a captain of foot, 8s. per diem; to a lieu^t, 4s.; to an ensign, 3s. And out of the weekly pay ordered by the Act providing the trophies and paying the non-commis. officers, 2s. 6d. per diem to a serjeant, 2s. to a corporal and drummer.
1666. Same to same. Sign manual. Since "it is too probable that nules^e our enemies perceived a greater strength than is hitherto prepared, they would be encouraged to attempt to land in some part of this "our kingdom," therefore three regiments of horse, of 500 each, are to be raised and placed under the command of Ld. Lindsey, Northampton, and Cleveland; to be disbanded towards winter.
1666. Same to same. All popish recusants, or such as being suspected to be so, shall refuse to take the oath of supremacy, to be so disarmed as to remove all apprehensions from our good subjects.
1666. Same to same. Warning to guard against invasion, and to watch carefully suspected traitors, especially those who keep horses or arms above their ranke. No quarter to be given to any enemies who may attempt to land.
1668. The Council to Sir R. Bankes. Order to account for monies received by him.
- The King to Sir R. Bankes. Sign manual. Order to levy assessment under the Act of 1662.
1664. The same to same. As above.
- From Wm. Morrice to Sir R. Bankes, enclosing a copy of the King's 2nd letter to all the maritime counties, to draw out the militia.

- 1645, Sept. 7th. Hereford. The same to the P. of Wales, p. 332.
- 1642, May 16. Sir J. Bankes to the E. of Northumberland. (Copy.)
- "Here be impressions and fears that there bee endeavours to alter the forme of the Government. . . . That there be such intrusions upon his prerogative as cannot stand with monarchy. Justice is not done for the King against those who scandalise the King's person and government by speeches, sermons, and pamphlets. That in 18 months' time nothing hath been effectually done about settling the revenue of the Crowne. That the peace of the Church hath been, and is, daylie disquieted, and the liturgie and discipline thereof scandalised, and endeavours to bring in a Presbyteria government as an introduction to a Commonwealth. These things do very much perplex his M^y, and make him look after guards to secure his person. . . . I do not discern that the differences between his M^y and the Houses are so great in substance, but if there be a willingness on all parts, they may be reconciled."
- 1642, June 20th. The same to the same. (Copy.)
- " . . . I am very confident that whatsoever both the Houses of Parliament shall devise as an establishment for that purpose (security to the laws and liberties of the nation), the King will give his royal assent thereunto. As to the 19 propositions, some things therein will be granted, and the rest will bee left in the same condition as they have beene in the time of his predecessors' kings of England."
- 1641, May 8. Sir J. Bankes to Sir Jacob Ashley. The two Houses of P^r have resolved to offer an indemnity and reward to such of the army as will give information concerning the secret attempt to excite the army against the Parliament. They will also pay all arrears due, and attend to the present and past wants of the army. "This declaration to be communicated to "all officers and members of the army under your "command."
1610. John Dickenson, his Ma^y Agent with the Princes Possesseurs of Cleves and Juliers, humbly craveth allowance for his dietts at xxx. per diem, for 3 months, Feb., March, April, 89*l*. —Signed, R. Salisbury.

- No. 1. "The business of Hall and Sir J. Hotham "much troubles the King, and His M^y desires satisfac- tion rather in point of honour than revenue. If "propositions were made by both the Houses what "the same of their desires bee touching the Church "and the Commonwealth, and what shall be done for "settling the King's revenue, his Ma^y might then be "pleased (I speak but mine own judgment) to expresse "himself what he expects to be done for him. . . . "for things to be brought into a right frame it must "be effected by calm and moderate, not by violent "ways. The guard for the King's person, and the "adjourment of this next Trinitie Term were resolved "on before my coming downe." &c.
- No. 2. "There is much notice taken of some words "w^h you used in the House of Commons, that you "liked not the word accommodation, and it were well "in my opinion that some occasion were given or taken

R. BANKES,
Esq.

"to explain yourself in that place, because some make an ill construction of it to your disadvantage. I do not see that the King recedes from what he hath declared himself in his declarations. . . . Not that he resolves to come nearer to his houses of Parl^t untill they come nearer to him in substance of things, &c. . . . It will sooner come to a good conclusion by short propositions expressing the sum^arie desires of both, than by long declarations. I am bound to give you this intimation, and tell you my opinion upon my observations heer and at London," &c.

No. 3. "If you please to cast your eye upon my letter w^h I sent you in May last, you will find that those advices offered by me unto your Lordship would have prevented these calamities into w^h wee are now falling concerning Hull and Sir J^o Hotham. The wisdom of the Houses might easilie have found out some expedient to have given his Ma^y satisfaction when he required reparation onlie in point of honour, and offered a pardon or other acquittal to Sir J. Hotham and others heer at York in the presence of my Lord Ed. Howard and the Committee of the Commons House. Now your Lords^s sees the state of that business, the towne encompassed with horse and foot, canons planted to hinder the coming in of ships, upon which will follow the effusion of Christian blood and the innocent townsmen may suffer in their lives as they already have done in their trades, their corn, grass, and hay, being drowned by Sir J. Hotham letting in the water, &c. I was told also to advise that remonstrances and declarations might be spared, and that the Houses would be pleased to make some short propositions unto his Ma^y, who was then verie well inclined to anie honorable accomodation, but since that time the Remonstrances of the 19th of May, the 26th of May, the three votes concerning the King's intending to make warro against the 2 Houses of Parl^t, &c. have been published in print, and this being premised then comes the 19 propositions. Theis preparations being sent before, what answers could be expected? . . . all effects have ensued from their high wayes of proceeding. . . . The King is ready to grant and establish by Act of Parl^t whatsoever is petitioned for or demanded of right either concerning the ecclesiastical or temporal state, &c. But that may not be extorted, and the King is now in a condition not to have anything inforced from him . . . touching theis rents and divisions in the Church I was bound to speke with your Lords^s and L^d Mandeville before Christmas, that they might be composed, &c., but if that partie intend to take away the liturgie and set forme of prayers I find manie reasons heer to think they will labour in vaine. . . . Notwithstanding there bee set formes of prayer, yet everie minister in the pulpit and other persons privatelie may use those gifts w^h God hath given them, &c. . . . Why may not a bill pass to settle a fitting power in the King and be derived from the King by comission grounded upon that Act . . . for the deciding theis questions it will be necessarie there should be a meeting between the King and the Houses, which your Lordship may perceive by the declaration will not be at Westminster, and what great inconvenience can happen to the Houses by consenting to adjourne to some other place. It being contained in the bill of adjournment that the meeting shall be without guards, and that an Act of oblivion may then pass," &c.

1658, Nov. 1. Sir A. Ashley Cooper to Ralph Bankes, Esq. Legal matters.

July 7. Same to same.

No date. Notes and draught of a letter by Sir J. Bankes to my Lords.

1642, June 8. Sir J. Bankes to Lord Willoughby by his Ma^y command. "I am to certifie your Lordship that I have delivered noe opinion touching the militia, neither was my opinion demanded in the Lords House, &c."

1650, July 12. Order by the Commissioners for advance of money, &c. to Sir Jervase Clifton, Sir James Thynn, and Sir Christopher Hatton, to pay the residue of a debt of 1,000*l*. to one Timothy Carter of which Lady Bankes has paid 100*l*.

1686, July 10. The Duke of Ormond to Sir R. Bolstrode. Thanking him for despatches.

1661, July 4. Cockpitt, Duke of Albermarle to Sir Ed. Turner, about Sir Arthur Hazelrigg. He had the command of Berwick, Carlisle, Newcastle, and Tynemouth, had great influence in the army, had had the chief hand in modelling the regiments before my coming into England, "he was very jealous of the intended Revolution of "Government to his Ma^y advantage" (but) "I promised him if he would engage to go home to his own house and live quietly there I would undertake to secure his life and estate, whereupon he did so engage. The Duke had been induced to do this by his unwillingness to hazard his Ma^y restitution by engaging in blood," and had "ventured further in this than perhaps some may think well of, but I knew in matters of so great importance second counsell would be too late, and therefore I chose to leave as little as I could to the uncertainty of event."

1660, Dec. 24. An order for 100*l*. to be paid out of the Exchequer to Lady Anne Graham.

1630, April 17. An order for the payment of 85*8l*. 10*s*. 8*d*. to Wm. Leechlands for wines supplied to his Ma^y, to be levied upon the rent of the swete wines due at Lady Day, as there is more assigned upon the rents of the Ffrench and Gascoign wines than the same will bear.

1647, Sept. 20. An order by the Lords and Commons Committee to pay to Mr. Mathias Rowe 50*l*., bestowed upon him for his paines and expenses in his journey.

An order to pay to Thomas Porter, Esq., late Envoye Extraordinary to ye Duke de Villa Hermosa, Governor of the Spanish Netherlands, for his extraordinary expenses, 24*l*.

1662. "The King's letter to the Lord Treasurer concerning those that lent money to his father at Oxford." Such as will accept the terms proposed in y^e certificate are to receive their money.

1678, April 7. A Mons. Le Chavertier Bolstrode, Envoye de sa Majeste le Roy de la Grande Bretagne, a Bruxelles; from the Earl of Ossory. Thanks for his rare present, which I shewed the Prince, who will "this night be regaled with it, &c. and for your care in sending my books, &c."

1708, May 3. Leeds Castle. (Lady Fairfax)? to Lord Fairfax. Domestic.

1646, Aug. 2. Sir Wm. Fleming to Lord Digby. Had met Lord Montgomery near Goudrick Castle, who is much concerned that a letter addressed to him (from the King?) had been discovered; it begat suspicion, and is "now turned to an accusation." Giving him the letter "I was desirous to have it opened before him, but hee wished me to forbear, in respect it concerned others as well as himself; soe far as I could remember I told him the substance of it, and particularly concerning the nomination of those his Ma^y would send; after I had remonstrated to him that this was the only way for begetting a better understanding betwixt his M. and them, and the surest way of introduction to a treaty: but it did now concern them to give an answer correspondent professions, for if they did refuse this offer all their former offers would bee taken to bee but very shewes; hee told mee that hee and others did thinke to quit their charge, for that they had done, but they would meet me the next day, being Snday, &c."

No date. Probably Lord Digby to Lord Jermyn. "Never was there so unhappy a relapse into desperate condition again as the most dishonorable delivery up of Bristol by P^r Rupert, hath given us . . . the conduct of our military affairs will now, perhaps, fall into more fortunate hands since the K. hath commanded P^r Rupert to goe traville; he hath likewise thought fit to secure Will Legge, the Gov^r of Oxon, and to put Sir Tho. Glenham in his place. Now I fear all is lost heer in England, Wales is all revolted already . . . the Marquis of Montrose assures us very shortly of 20,000 men to march into England, leaving all that kingdom (of Scotland) secured."

1572. Sir Peter Wentworth's speech in Parliam^t. Commencing "Speech uttered by me the Weddensdaye, Thursdays, and Saterdays in the Whitson Weeke, and in the 14th yeare the Queens Ma^y raygne, 1572, upon a message sente by her Ma^y in the parliament house, whereupon two of the house made a motion that the speaker and certen of the house shoulde goe to her Ma^y and give her thanks in the behalf of the whole House for the good opinions conceived of us, the which for my part I did not think her Ma^y had deserved, soe that my speech was to staye thanks, and to other ends, as shall appear hereafter when the effect of her Ma^y's message shall be declared. The speech uttered on the Wednesday."

1681, Feb. 21st. Humphrey Wynn to Ed. Lloyd, Esq. "My request is, you will cause a letter to be prepared for his Ma^y's subscription to y^e L. Bishop of Oxford, wishing him to confer upon my son (who is said by his master to be a good scholar) John Wynn, a student of Christ Church place, or such other place as to him shall seem meet, whereby I may

THE MANUSCRIPTS OF GEORGE WINGFIELD DIGBY, ESQ., OF SHERBORNE CASTLE, CO. DORSET.

Some years ago Mr. Wingfield Digby placed in the hands of Mr. S. R. Gardiner the valuable 17th century documents at Sherborne Castle. These papers were examined and made use of by Mr. Gardiner in his histories, and at the same time were very carefully arranged and bound up in two handsome volumes, and transcripts made of many of them, under the supervision of Mr. Burt, and deposited in the Public Record Office.

The first of these two volumes contains the correspondence and despatches of Lord Digby, while Ambassador at the Spanish Court, including two holograph letters from James I. and four from Prince Charles. Two of the latter of these letters are printed in Mr. Gardiner's History of the Spanish Marriage. The greater part of the rest of this volume is taken up with the charges against the Earl of Bristol and his answers and trial.

From 1641-1650 is blank, and then follow, in Vol. II. some correspondence of the Earl of Bristol while holding a command in the French army; letters relating for the most part to military details and private affairs. There are also some letters and documents of the reigns of Charles II. and James II.

Mr. W. Digby has also allowed me to report upon a third volume which has not been examined before. This volume contains a very interesting correspondence between the Right Hon. H. Fox, Lord Ilchester, Lord Digby, and H. Digby in the years 1753-1757 during the time of the political rivalry between Henry Fox, and the Duke of Newcastle, and Mr. Pitt.

The letters are noticed in this report in the same order as they are arranged in the volume.

1588. Six lists of quarterly subscriptions for the pay of the schoolmaster.

Lord Knollys to Sir Clement Fisher.

1605. Account of the losses of the merchants interested in the "Vineyard" taken by the subjects of the King of Spain.

1606. Feb. 1st. Instructions to Juan de Equiluz for the march of troops from Italy to the Low Countries.

1606. March 23. Edward Brabazon to Sir Robert Digby, concerning a right of fishing at Whittaker.

1608.(?) The Spanish Ambassador to the Emperor Rudolf II.(?)

1611. Sir John Digby to the Cardinal of Toledo. "I have received by the agent a message from your Lordship, the which by his reference divided itself into four parts."

1. Greetings.

2. Concerning my bookes, your Lordship doubting, as it would seem, that I was not observant of my promise to burne such as I should fynd repugnant to the State here & brought with any intent of being dispersed. It is true I burnt none, because I brought none of that quality, as was supposed, but only for myne owne studies & use of my religion. But the cause why I denied my bookes should be searched was no other but to preserve the immunities of an Ambassador, which I will never do my master the dishonour to loose in the smallest particular.

3. The third poynt was your Lordship saith that you are informed that there is great resort to my service & preaching, the which your Lordship desires that I should restrayne to mine owne familie, & not to give admittance to strangers. I desire your Lordship to knowe that this is no true report, there hath never been at my service any other to my knowledge, but the king, my masters subjects, to whom I am bound to give not only willing admittance, but all the protection I can. I come as a King's Ambassador to maynteyne love & good correspondency betwixt this King & the Kinge my master, & not a preacher to meddle in converting. Yet I must let your Lordship knowe that this King's Ambassador useth another kynde of proceeding in England, giving not only admittance to strangers of other nations, not subjects to the Kinge of Spayne, but likewise to the King my Master's owne subjects, of different religion to what is there in the State established; &

4. The last part of your Lordship's message was that you understood that in my House there was shortly to be celebrated the Blessed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at which there was a great scandal taken, whereat I much wonder, especially that y^r Lordship should except against it, since those that understand my religion knowe that there is no libertie of that without the use of the sacraments. I am sorie that these occasions are sought to take offence, knowing how regardful I have been, and am, to give no just cause of any. I am very desirous that both your Lordship & the King's minister should not be mistaken in me; there could not have come into this kingdom any man that more earnestly desired to do all good offices; but withall I desire to be understood that I shall as exactly looke to be complied withall, & to enjoy all immunities, privileges, honours, & rights that any ambassador ever did, for such is my master's pleasure likewise. I will leave no means unassayed for the increasing of love & good will betwixt the two Kings. But in this my desire I will expect to be mett half way with a like disposition from hence, of which I can no way doubt from so pious & just a Prince, & so prudent ministers, &c.

1611, Nov. 29. The merchants interested in "The Vineyard," to Sir John Digby, Ambassador resident in Spayne. "If your servant M^r Simon Digby, or some other by your appointment, may follow that suit without our further charge, & procure for us satisfaction" to the value of above 10,000*l*. sterling, we are contented that he or they reserve to his or their own use one third part as a recompense.

Pleadings & instructions in the case of "The Vineyard."

1612, March 28. Spanish translation of the treaty between James I. & the princes of the Union.

1612, Nov. 27. Lady Abigail Digby to Sir Robert Digby, concerning the erection of a school in Coleshill. Taliaferro to Sir John Digby.

1616, Sept. 18. Copy of a letter written by Sir John Digby to the Duke of Lerma, with a note of approval by James I. "Touching the marriage & those articles to which your excellency in your letter required answer, I have had many conferences, both with Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña, both concerning them & likewise of the present estate of Businesses here, whereof I am certain he will give you an ample & full account. Yet I shalbe bold to add to his relation that I may now fully give y^r ex^{ty} assurance that his Ma^y is free from all treatyes in other parts, that he really desirith a match with Spaine, & meaneth to proceed to a direct treatye & propounding of the busines in case he may first understand that the King of Spaine doth likewise desire it, and that in those difficulties that may occur in point of religion, he will on his part endeavor to accommodate them as far as possibly may be with Honor & Conscience, as the King my master will sincerely perform on his part. So that it may appeare playnely to the world, in case the match should not take that success as is wished, that there is no other desert or cause that hath hindered the effecting of it, but the impossibilitie of the Busines itself, by reason of the irreconcilableness of the differences in Religion, &c., &c. So that what will first be expected from thence will be in general the assurance of that King's inclination to meet the King my master half way, both in his desire of the match and in his endeavors of accommodating the difficulties."

1620, Aug. 11. Sir Francis Nethersole, from Prague, to Sir George Calvert. He has carried out the instructions of his Ma^y and has represented to the King, upon the delivery of the Lord Digby his letters to his Ma^y, that the King my master having found my Lord Digby mistaken by some of his owne people at home, by occasion of his being by him employed in the affayres with Spayne, & having therupon conceived a jealousy that the same noble lord might be also misreported hither to their Majesties, had in that respect given me a particular commandment to assure his Ma^y that he had none more nor more truly affectionate servant in England; the proof whereof is, that of the three great poynts obtained for his Ma^y's service, to witt, the loane of money from the K. of Denmarke, the contributions in England of the city & country, and the sending of Am^b to the contrary party, that the Lord Digby had been the first propounder of all these to the King my master, before his Ma^y's Am^b or any other of his servants in England, although his Lordship had been contented that others who were but sett on, should carry away the thanks & prayse, because his Lo. being knowne to be the first mover therein, might possibly weaken the credit he hath in Spayne, & so render him the more unable to serve both his owne master & his Ma^y; in which respect I humbly prayed his Ma^y also to keepe this to himselfe. His Ma^y's answer was that, "if he would have given belief to common report he should long agoe have blotted my L^d Digby out of the list of his friends, but that he was, if not more wise yet, more charitable than to ground his judgment of any man upon vulgar fame. If Lord Digby is so highly trusted by his owne master, he had no reason to mistrust his good affection to him who had the honor to be the King his sonne in law. Moreover, L^d Digby, if he were so great furtherer of the Spanish match as he was held in the world to be, yet is so wise a man as that he must know that in case his Ma^y should be rejected out of this kingdome, the true religion must inevitably follow with him out of Germany, & then the King of Spaine having no further need of the King of England, his friendship, would disdayne to marry his daughter to a heretick, &c."

1621. A discharge to — Digby by the merchants interested in the "The Vineyard."

1621, May 23. Instructions to Lord Digby for his embassy to Spaine. Signed by the King.

"The occasion of our employing you now at this present into Spaine is to resume that great businesse of the marriage of our dear son the Prince with the Infanta Maria, sister unto the now King, &c."

1621, Sept. 21. The Council of the Palatinate to Lord Digby.

1621, Feb. 21. Agreement with Lord Digby, that for 20,00*l*. allowed him by his Ma^y, & 6*l*. per diem, he shall transport himself & his company into Spayne, & be at all extraordinary charges for 6 months after his arrival at the Court; but for all the charges and preparations, eyther for the Desposits, Marriage, or rewards belonging thereunto, as likewise for his journey homewards, they shall be allowed unto him by his Ma^y upon his account.

1622, June 3. Copy of letter from James I. to the Elector Palatine. Complaining that he had mispent the money which was to maintain the K. garrison, &c., &c.

1622, June 3. Copy of letter from James I. to Lord Chichester, commanding him presently to return if the Prince Palatine be not conformable to his advice. "There is no way now but to use plain language & plain dealing. You do in our name deale with him speedily & effectually, to give over thinking of any other way or course to compass his peace, but first by a present truce, if he expect the continuance of our assistance, &c., &c."

1622, June 3. Copy of letter from James I. to Sir Horace Vere, commanding him to withdraw King's troops, if his son-in-law persist in following his own courses.

A list of Lord Digby's letters to the King & to Mr. Sec. Calvert, from June 6th, 1622, to March 3rd, 1623. And an index to a letter book. 24 letters mentioned, with the beginning of each one.

1622, Oct. 1. James I. to Cardinal Farnese. Copy.

1622, Oct. 25. James I. to the Earle of Bristol. Holograph. "Right trustie & well beloved cosen and counsellor, we greet you hartlie well. You are desirous to have our pleasure signified unto you under our own hand whether we will be contented or not to grant a month's longer time for the coming of the dispensation from Rome than wee have already limited unto you, in case they shall there conclude all things else to our contentment, with a resolution to send the Infanta hither the next springe; we doe hereby declare unto you that in that case you shall not break with them for a month longer delay. Wee also wish you not to trouble yourselfe with the rash sense of other men, in case your busines should not succceede, resting in that full assurance of our justice and wisdom that we will never judge a good & faithfull servant by the effect of things so contingent and variable, and with this assurance wee bid you hartlie farewell." From Huntingdon.

1622, Nov. 24. James I. to the Earle of Bristol. (Holograph. "We have seen yo^r letters of the 21st Oct., both those directed unto ourselfe as also to our Sec^{re} Sir Geo. Calvert, and in them doe observe your discrete proceeding, both in yo^r business concerning yo^r restauration which we expect to be made unto yo^r Prince Palatine of some-in-lawe, as also in yo^r treatie of yo^r marriage for o^r deere son yo^r Prince of Wales.

"Touching yo^r first, we p^lease what p^lessions the king and his ministers have againe made unto you of a resolution to assist us with his armes, in case by a fair mediation and treatie the restitution may not be obtained, and how much he hath in that kind engaged his ho^r and his word unto you. And howsoever yo^r order given unto the Infanta for yo^r release of Manhem arrived too late, and after the town was yielded into the hands of Tillie, yet must we acknowledge it to be a good effect of your negotiation, and an argument of that King's sincere and sound intention. . . . You shall now doe well (in our name) to press him [the King of Spaine] to a final and effective resolution, representing to him and to his mynisters, how much it concernes us in ho^r & in reputation (besides yo^r interest of o^r son-in-lawe) not to admit any further delaye. And as touching yo^r two poynts in yo^r treatie of the marriage wherein you desire our farther direction & resolution, you have by this time understood by yo^r dispatch w^b Geo. Gage carried you, how wee were contented to p^lmitt yo^r breeding and education of the children, under yo^r government of theyr mother untill yo^r age of 9 yeares, w^b wee doubt not wyl give good satisfaction seeing what they demand is but untill ten, yet seeing it is but one yeare more, in case you shall nott be able to draw them to be contented with nine, we will not stryke at it. And for yo^r other poynt, w^b concerns the exention of the ecclesiasticks from secular jurisdiction, we shall be contented that the ecclesiastical superior doe first take notice of yo^r offence yo^r shall be committed, & according to yo^r merit thereof eyther delyver him by degradation to yo^r secular justice, or banish him yo^r kingdome, according to yo^r qualitie of yo^r delyct, w^b we conceive to be yo^r same that is practised in Spaine and in other parts. . . . We are well pleased with the diligent and discrete employing of your endeavors in all that concerns our service, & soe are we likewise with yo^r whole proceeding of our Embas^s S^r Walter Aston. Thus we bid you hartely farewell." From Newmarket.

1622, Jan. 7th. James I. to the Earle of Bristol. Signed by King. "You will see by that w^b we have subscribed unto yo^r articles you sent us, & by the letters w^b we & our sonne have both written unto our good Brother the King of Spaine, how well we approve of what hitherto hath bene done, and what you have promised and undertaken in our name, w^b being, as we hope, the period of all their demands in that kinde, we wish you to proceede unto yo^r temporall articles, & to conclude & consummate the whole businesse now according to the commissions you have, as soon as possibly you may, that there may be no further delay. Concerning that other unfortunate knotty affaire of the Palatinate, to say the truth as things stand, we can not tell what you could have done more than you have "already, and w^h was you write that the King of Spaine & his principall ministers there did find our last propositions somewhat strange. You shall understand that the cause why we sent you such strict & peremptory instructions was, for that the Chancellor of our Exchequer found nothing but palpable & grosse delays at Brussels, whilst in the meantime Heidelberg was besegged and afterwards taken, Manheim beleagured, and all hostility used that might bee. . . . In your last dispatch you advertize us that the King of Spaine hath written again very effectually unto the Emperor about those affaires of the Palatinate. We do much desire to knowe what the particulars of that letter were, & to what effect, and what other endeavors that King intends to use for procuring us satisfaction."

1622, March 4. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. "Amazement & feare for these two weekes past, whereof God knowes we are not yet freed, for the Prince's precious safety, of whom I neede not tell you the story now, hath been the occasion of my long silence. Since Sunday the 23 of the last month, on which day they sett forth from Paris, we have until this hour heard nothing. This gentleman will tell you the face of our Court what it is upon this accident pensive enough, yet thanks be to God, all is in quiett expecting and praying for some comfortable news."

The King desires a "list of all those great men or inferior ministers who have been favorable parties to this great busynesse, & your lordships are to give your opinions what proportions are fitt for him severally to present them withall You are to look with an equal eye as well upon the present condition of his treasury as his honor, & avoyde as much as possible an unnecessary number or valew. There is a ship of the King's appointed that will be ready to set sayle within these 10 days for transporting divers Jewells together with the greatest number of the Prince's servants. There be a great many of other sorts who gett leave to go I wrote plainly unto his Mat^e & tell him how great a burden they will be to that place, & a dishonor to his Highnesse."

1622, March 19. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. The cammells, the great asses, and the Barbary horse are to be embarked on board "The Adventurer." Lord Montague's son may have leave to serve the King, his Mat^e takes it kindly that the King would not receive him without this permission. "No English, or as few as may be, to serve the Infanta."

1623, March 24. A relation of the Prince, his arrival and reception at Madrid. 9 pages.

1623, March 24. The Countess of Bristol to Lady Offaly. "The 7th of March being Friday, about 8 of the clock at night, the Prince his Highness, and my Lord Admerrall came to our hous under the names of M^r Smith and M^r Browne, but when the knowledge of their being in the hous came to our ears we could not but feare and admire the strangenes of the enterpris and the danger the Prince had put himself into in coming thorow France and much of Spaine so slenderly attended, and our being altogether ignorant of any intention that the Prince had of coming hither made the sight more wonderful to us, &c., &c."

1623, March 29. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. (Copy). Upon a letter which he hath lately received from the Emperor " (whereof herewith shall you receive a copy) his Mat^e would have your Lo^{ps} to take this occasion to declare there the Emperor's proceedings towards him, & what breaches of promise he hath made with his Mat^e, &c. The other command w^h I have received from his Mat^e is that you are to charge all such English, Scottishe, or Irishe as have been drawn to Court of Spaine, out of respect to the Prince or by the novelty of his being there, to depart the Court & Madrid within four & twenty hours, except such as have leave in writing." "Notwithstanding such persons may travel in Spaine to see the country, but by no means to go & come to the Court."

1623, April 3rd. Lord Bristol to Lady Offaly, from Madrid.

1623, May 3. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. "The articles of our new treaty about the suspension of arms with the Emperor, I doubt will be very displeasing to the Prince Palatine, who in the general I perceive is dissatisfied with all talk of a suspension, &c."

1623, May 11. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. His Mat^e hath been pleased to take care that arrears of salary shall be paid.

1623, May 11. James I. to the Earle of Bristol. Autograph. That he is to remain as Ambassador Extraordinary at the Court of Spain after the departure of the Prince & the Marquesse of Buckingham.

1623, July 17. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. "That which was required in M^r Gresley's dispatch is now fully agreed unto by his Mat^e with the advice of his whole Councill, & shall have upon Sunday next the full consummation. The articles are now engrossing for the Great Seal. The greatest difficulty being now passed over, I hope there will be no further impediment or delay on that side, but that the marriage will instantly follow, & that we shall have his Highness, with his Princely Bride, here in England without longer stay, for w^h all honest men heere are in great pain, for there is nothing but these incertitudes that hitherto hath plagued us. If the business were once dispatched all men's hearts & thoughts would be settled, & there would be no further practise, as I am verily persuaded, &c. P.S. The Dunkerker that hath been so long besieged by the two Holland shippes in the Port of Aberdene in Scotland since the firing of the other at Lite the continuance still, for whose enlargement his Mat^e hath sent two of his owne shippes of late, but notice hereof being taken in Holland, they have sent foure other shippes of theirs to make good their Leager. His Mat^e being provoked beyond all patience with this insolent affront, hath given order for foure more of his shippes to goe to Scotland for ayd of the first two, & are to be taken out of my Lord Rutland's fleet. What this may come to God knows."

1623, July 23. Secret instructions to the Duke of Buckingham & the Earle of Bristol. James I. autograph. Endorsed, His Mat^e's pleasure to be first known. "Having now brought the main & principal businesse w^h is the matter of our sonne to a happie conclusion, as we have lately understood both from himself & by your dispatches, there resteth two other particulars of great importance as you know. The one public, viz., the restitution of our son-in-law & his posteritie to the Palatinate & dignity electoral. The other private concerning the transposing of some part of the Netherland Provinces & annexing them to our Crown, both which will now fall fittly to be treated on." &c.

1623, Aug. 7. Sir G. Calvert to the Earle of Bristol. Mr. Killegrew was stayed here to bring the newes of execution of all those particulars w^h his Mat^e hath promised in favour of the Roman Catholiques, the delays have been in no way his Mat^e's fault but that of the cautioners of t^e ambassadors, &c."

"Here is newes of a great overthrow given lately by Tilly to the D. of Brunsvick."

1623, Oct. 8. The Prince of Wales to the Earle of Bristol. Holograph. From Royston. "Bristol. Your letters to the King & me concerning the doubt I made after I came from St. Lorenzo hath so satisfied us both that we think it fit no longer to stick upon it, but leave it to your discretion to take what securitie you shall think sufficient. The King lykwise has thought good, in this interim of expectation for my Mistris, to give you a command to try what the King of Spaine will doe concerning the business of the Palatinate before I bee contracted, & his reason is (which I could not repleie to) that having but two children he would be loath that one of them should have cause to weepe when the other had reason to lafe, & I was the rather induced to yield unto it because the king may verrie well have a positive answer of this before Christmas, so that it will loose no time in that business I desire so much. Although this be a needles office because I am sure you will understand this more amply by the King's owne letters, yet I have written this that y^e may know from me as well as from the King my father the intent of this direction which I assure you is no waie to breake the marriage but (in this dull interim of looking for my Mistris) to put an end to the miseries of my sister & her children which I should have done if I had stayed this winter. I have no more to say at this time but to bid you commend my service to my mistris & to assure that King I shall never forget the favors he did me while I was in his Court. So farwell. Your loving friend,

"CHARLES P."

1623, Oct. 27. From London. Lord Robert Digby to his mother Lady Offally. Describing the Princes' return from Spain. The prince had been in great danger from a storm at the time of embarkation. On the voyage the English ships had parted the squadrons of Dunkerker & Hollanders. Great joy in London at the prince's return.

1623. The Earl of Bristol to Sir Fr. Cottington. Concerning the scruples raised by the Prince. "A message from the Prince hath much troubled and perplexed me. I had by my letters let him understand that I conceived there would be no cause to insist upon that scruple which was made of the Infanta's entering into religion after the contract. You will remember that Prince was pleased on the — of August to accept of the marriage in the form that was sett down, &c. . . . the conditions he accepted of & to these he signed & afterwards took his oath, &c."
"That now which much afflicted me first is that by his manner of proceeding there might be a doubt made of his inclination to the match, &c."

1623, Nov. 13. Sir Ed. Conway to the Earl of Bristol. He is to fix a period of 15 days, then to press for a categorical answer in 5 days, any further delay he is to consider a denial & to return home. A note added in another hand, written hurriedly "Your Lordship may be pleased to know that the limitation of 15 days is only for your owne knowledge but not to be communicated to them that they may not think it the wish or and shift to approve it."

1623, Nov. 14. Still Vett. The Prince of Wales to Earl of Bristol. (Holograph.) "Bristol, the false interpretation of the King's & my directions concerning the not delivering of my proxie, has made me in such haste to send away this bearer, that by this I can onlie give you a command without giving anie reasons at this tyme, which is not to deliver my proxie until you heare farther from the king and myselfe; make what shifts or faire excuses you will, but I command you as you answer it upon your perill, not deliver my proxie till you heare farther from hence. So hoping that you will obey this command punctuallie, I am your frend, 1623, Nov. 15. Whythall. The same to same. Holograph. "Bristol. Yesterday I had no more tyme than to send you a peremptorie command, leaving the reasons for this day, the which you will fynd at large in Mr Sec. Conwa's dispatch; but because I see you have need of paraphrase upon the text, I have thought fitt to wryte to you this letter. My father's meaning & myne is that 15 dayes after the receipt of these you shall press with all faire meanes to have a spedie answer, & if you gett none in that tyme, at the 15 dayes end, ye shall tell them that if within 5 dayes ye gett not an answer ye must account that delay all ill as a denyall, & if at those 5 dayes ende ye gette no answer, then ye shall take your leave and come away, and leave Wat Aston behind you. . . . But whatsoever answer ye gett ye must not deliver the proxie till ye make my father & me jage of it. As for the whole business ye must deal freelic with them, in as civil termes as ye will, that except that king will promise sum way under hand to helpe my father with his armes (in ease mediation fail) to restore my brother-in-law to his honors and inheritances, then can neither be marriag nor frendshippe; & as the breeding up my nephew in the Emperors court avoide it as

1623, Nov. 14. Sir Ed. Conway to the Earl of Bristol. Endorsed "The King's care for the renovation of the powers, by which it appears that he desired to have the match proceed after the Prince his coming home."

1623, Dec. 18. Sir Ed. Conway to the Earl of Bristol. "The letters coming from the Pope, as they are not letters of credence, had best be received by his Ma^{tie}'s ambassador in France. The King has been indisposed, but is better, the Prince & the Duke are well, & practise the maske diligently every day."

1624, Jan. 14. The offer from the Conde of Olivares to the Earl of Bristol of a royal order signed in blank to the end that the Earl of Bristol might fill in for himself, as a present from the King, whatever he might please. The offer declined by the Earl.

1622. Speech of James I. at the opening of Parl^t.

1624. Extract from the Roll of Parliament.

1624, May. The Earl of Bristol to the Prince of Wales. (Copy.) He does not presume to come into the Prince's presence, as he has been forbidden to present himself to the King. He has always sought to further the match with Spain, "as judging it much desired by his Ma^{tie}" & your Highness. For the Treatie of the Palatinate I never wrote word, but that which was said unto me."

1624, May 6, London. The Earle of Bristol to Mr Sec. Conway. Copy. "By your letters which I received this day, I understand how much I am bound unto you for the procuring his Ma^{tie}'s direction in the poynt of admitting the Spanish ambassador's visite, which I should no way desire, but that I know not what interpretation may be made of the refusal of so ordinary a courtesy, especially of the ministers of the Prince from whence any amb^r returneth."

1624, June 1. The Earle of Bristol to Sir F. Cottington. (Copy.) "As for my action, I take God to record, I do not know that in any thing I have offended him (the Prince) in all my life, neither can I conjecture at any thing whereby I may have displeased him, if it be not by having expressed so much zeale to g^t which I understood to be much desired both by his Ma^{tie} and himself, &c. . . . My humble suit is that, in the first place, his Ma^{tie} will be truly possessed of my case, & afterwards, according to justice, afforde me his assistance, for otherwise he will not know how to mesure or proportion his favour towards me, &c. . . . Assure the Prince that if I may know his will I will do nothing that shall not be conformable, &c."

1624, July 10. The Earle of Bristol to the Prince of Wales. (Copy.) From London. Begs his grace and favour.

1624, July 13. Humble petition to the King from the Earl of Bristol, that he may be allowed to attend in person & answer any questions.

1624, July 22. Sir F. Cottington to the E. of Bristol. Has leave to go to Sherborne until September, & new articles have been procured, "in order to do you a favor" thereby, giving you tyme to work & procure some fayre accomodation." These not sent, but shall be at once if he desires it.

1624, July 21. The E. of Bristol to Mr Sec. Conway. (Copy.) Is disappointed that he has not been allowed to kiss his Ma^{tie}'s hand, & begs the new questions may be sent.

1624, Aug. 10. Copie of petition to the King from the E. of Bristol, desiring that the 2nd questions may be sent if his Ma^{tie} is not satisfied with his answer to the 1st.

1624, Sept. 21. From Sherborne. The E. of Bristol to Mr Sec. Conway. (Copy.) Desires leave to go with his family to Bristol. "My lodg at Sherborn is very proper for a winter habitation." Desires also that Mr Sec. would be his mediator with the Duke for his favour.

No date. The same to the same. (Copy.) Touching his going to Bristol & to London, desires to know wherein by an ill relation he hath been traduced to Mr Sec. Conway.

Jan. 13. The E. of Bristol to the Duke of Buckingham. Begging the Duke to deliver an enclosed letter to the King.

Feb. 8. The E. of Bristol to the D. of Buckingham. (Copy) by Sir K. Digby. Asks the Duke to reconcile him to the King's favour.

Letters to the Prince & Duke upon the death of the late King.

G. W.
DIGBY,
Esq.

1625. Lady Day. Acquittances for the E. of Bristol's pension 2,000*l.* per annum.

1625. May 27. Sir Kenelm Digby to E. of Bristol. Has seen the King, who is much concerned to hear of the Earl's sickness, and protested in the deepest manner that he had no personal ill will to him. The King does not consider him to be a delinquent, but he is in disgrace because "in the treatie of the Spanish match (he thinketh) you was so desirous of it and so passionate for it (as he confesseth himself was also after he had seen the lady) that you trusted more to the Spanish ministers, & promises than was fitting in discretion; & although your Lordship on the other side carried it so judiciously that you can be taxed for nothing in public court, but can justify yourself & make the Spaniards appeare to be dishonest, and so free yourself, yet between him & you, he doubted not but y^e Lop will acknowledge you were too forward & confident in it; & if y^e Lop do live & do make acknowledgement of unto him, you shall then without more adoe kisse his hande, and live in peace & with honor . . . he said you had been as free with him as ever any man had been, but protested that he had never communicated to any bodie anything that y^e Lo. ever spoke to him in that way of freenesse & privacy; he did not take this in evil part, but loved you for this honestie, he approved of all you ever said to him, but only once, which he never had told to anyone but to me then, & you would remember it by these tokens, your Lo. showed him a letter, a little before his going out of Spaine, wherein you writ of the D. of Buckingham, w^h he misliked, and told y^e Lo. you expressed much spleen against the Duke, & therefore he would have you alter it. He discovered much ill will in you to the Duke. The sum is that his Ma^{tie} personally hath a good affection towards you, & the least acknowledgement of your error shall expiate it."

1625. Acquittance for pension.

1625, July 14. The E. of Bristol to the D. of Buckingham. (Copy.) Earnestly seeks the Duke's favour.
