PREFACE

THIS volume, containing a part of the first Protocol Book of an Edinburgh notary public, being the earliest one preserved, was prepared for publication by the Rev. Walter Macleod and printed.

It has lain for many years unfinished and unbound, but some time ago the Town Council resolved to complete the volume and to present it to the Scottish Record Society for distribution to their members. An Introduction and an index have been provided by Miss Marguerite Wood, Keeper of the Burgh Records.

The book itself does not require anything to commend its publication. It is the first of a long series which throw much light on the Edinburgh of the past, and indeed on the kingdom in general, and serves to augment the already published records of the city with many details as to inhabitants and topography.

The original MS. is now in H.M. Register House.

INTRODUCTION

THE Protocol Books of the Edinburgh Notaries and Town Clerks are not the least interesting of the old records of the Town, although not a part of the actual Council Records. Of these books the oldest extant is that of John Foular, a portion of whose first volume is here given.

The office of notary public, which is of great antiquity, was held up to the time of the Reformation by clerks in holy orders. In an Act of Parliament of 1540 laymen are mentioned as also eligible for office. The power to appoint them was a subject of frequent dispute between Popes and Emperors on the Continent, in England, and apparently in Scotland as well. This vexed question was dealt with by an Act of Parliament of James IV. in 1469, by which he asserted his right to appoint notaries, subject to their examination by their Ordinaries, or judges in ecclesiastical courts, as to their qualifications, good fame and loyalty. By this Act papal notaries were allowed full recognition, while imperial notaries, present and future, were to be examined by the Ordinaries, with power to dismiss or to make them royal notaries as circumstances should dictate. Each properly appointed notary bore his qualifications on the docquet with which he ended his various instruments, and owned a sign manual and motto of his own. The docquet of John Foular bears that he was a clerk of the diocese of St Andrews and a notary apostolic.

A Notary Public received upon his appointment a Protocol Book, in which he was bound to enter all instruments drawn by him. Each new book had to be signed by the Lord Clerk Register. It is perhaps worthy of note that in 1622 an Act of the Court of Session relieved the Town Clerks of Edinburgh as notaries public from that obligation, due, as was explained, to inconveniences caused by dishonest notaries. The reason given was that such inconveniences had been prevented by the Magistrates' appointment of such "famous, honest and unsuspect persons" that no abuses need be feared. Thereafter, only the first books after their appointment required to be signed.

The books of the Edinburgh notaries are valuable as registers of burgh sasines earlier than the official registers, though latterly they were found not to be sufficiently complete to take the place of such a record. Those of the early notaries, however, are not limited to sasines. Edinburgh, as the recognised capital, and the usual residence of the King, became more and more a place to which people resorted, and consequently a place suitable for the transaction of business. So we find in Foular's first Protocol Book sasines of land both within and without the burgh, even in far parts of Scotland, documents recording trade agreements and others referring to cases summoned before the King, his officers of State or the Lords of Council.

It appears to be accepted that the Town or Common Clerks of Edinburgh acted as notaries public in all infestments of burghal property. This was the case in the seventeenth and following centuries, indeed in the latter part of the sixteenth century. But whether John Foular and other early notaries occupied permanent official positions with regard to the town cannot be stated. Foular acted as notary, according to the evidence of his books, from 1501 to 1534. For parts of that period the books of three other notaries are also preserved—those of Vincent Strathauchin for 1507 to 1524; of Thomas Strathauchin for 1513 to 1517; and of Adam Otterburne for 1515 to 1519. Otterburne, so far as can be ascertained, was Town Clerk from 1507 to 1522; Foular held the clerkship as a temporary post, jointly with Vincent Strathauchin in 1522, and again alone in 1530 and 1531; Thomas Strathauchin apparently never held office under the Town Council. There is also evidence in their books and elsewhere of the existence of other notaries in the burgh, although the four mentioned are the only ones whose books have been preserved. Although there is a certain diversity in their entries, the bulk of the entries concern burghal property. After the appointment of the first of the three Alexander Guthries—father, son and grandson—as Common Clerks, most of the sasines were recorded by them as notaries public, but it was not till 1602 that such work appears to have been done exclusively by the Clerks.

The Protocol Books of the Edinburgh notaries public, besides being the earliest record of the transfer of lands within burgh, were till 1617 the only ones. At that date a public register of sasines was ordered to be kept under the charge of the Lord Clerk Register. It was not till 1681 that the burgh register of sasines was established, and with its establishment the protocol books diminished in value, being in great measure superseded by the public register, though the books of the Town Clerks or their deputes are available till 1746.

The value of the books of the Edinburgh notaries public was therefore great in their time as recording all instruments of sasine, with the names of the owners and the bounds of the properties. Now these bounds are in large measure indefinite because they are given, as was the practice, by referring to the names of the owners or occupiers of the adjoining lands. In so small a town as Edinburgh was practically till the middle of the eighteenth century, where everyone knew his neighbours, the custom was apparently sufficient.

John Foular, during his thirty-three years as notary, filled four volumes with the instruments recorded by him. In that time there are only two gaps of several months. As these occur at the end of volumes, it is probable that it is merely a case of a few pages having been lost.

The entries are for the most part in Latin, but a few are in Scots. Some idea of the work represented by these volumes is seen in the present printed book, which contains the text and summaries of two hundred and eighty-five deeds, which filled only sixty pages of Foular's first volume, approximately 606 pages, and cover roughly a period of three years.

The contents of these sixty pages of the old manuscript give a fair idea of the scope of the rest. As has been indicated, the actual value of the boundaries given by him is little as regards the determining of the situation of the properties with which he dealt. But a considerable amount can be gathered about their situation by the grouping of the names of the better-known burgesses. The book also shows, though very approximately, the number of the inhabitants of the burgh possessing property, among those being not only the men who made the actual transfers, but also the witnesses, who apparently were those persons who had an interest in adjoining property.

Some of the documents recorded are interesting as illustrating the topography of the town or as presenting problems to be solved concerning the bounds. Several entries raise questions about the line of the town wall. This, in Foular's time, was the King's Wall, for the building of which a charter was granted to the Town in 1472 by James III. In the first place, Foular seems to differentiate between the wall west and east of the port at the Over Bow. The portion proceeding eastward, about midway between the High Street and the Cowgate, is for him the King's Wall,¹ and presents no difficulty. With the wall proceeding westward it is different: that portion usually seems to be known to him as the Castle Wall,² murum castri burgi. The name suggests a closer connection with the Castle than the line given by Maitland. In his History of Edinburgh he traced the wall from the Wellhouse Tower across the north slope of the Castle Hill to a port or gate at the top of the street, then down by Currou's Close, which turned east and west on a part of its course, when the wall formed its northern side, meeting the eastern portion, Foular's King's Wall, at the Bow Port. In the recent excavations of David's Tower a piece of wall was discovered going southward towards the Grassmarket, supposed to be part of the Flodden Wall. But if the old wall had started at David's Tower, and ran eastward across the southern slope of the Castle Hill, it would account for the name better than the line suggested by Maitland. If it were possible to identify some of the other bounds given by Foular, this might be established. It is known that the High Street continued past the Over Bow, and that the Grassmarket, so far as the West Port, was alluded to as the High Street. Foular, in several places, mentions lands bounded on the north by the Castle Wall and on the south by the High Street. If the only line of wall running east and west was that of Currou's Close, with the wall on the north side, it might be difficult to account for all the lands mentioned, but, if the wall ran from David's Tower, as suggested above, they might be placed west of that close, till now considered the westmost boundary of the first town wall.

One of these entries is specially interesting. It concerns "the land of old called Ladyland,³ which the late Sir John Trale, chaplain, had in support of the service of the Blessed Mary, lying under the Castle Wall, on the north side of the King's High Street between the lands of the late . . . vicar of St Cuthbert's on the east and . . . the Almshouse on the west. . . ." Neither of these places has been identified so far, but possibly Ladyland might have been an endowment of the chapel of St Mary at the Barras, which lay close by, built by James IV., if it were not of one of the many altars of that name in the church of St Giles or elsewhere.

² Nos. 110, 111, 117, 148, etc.

For those interested in the streets and wynds of the old town, Foular gives some unsolved problems. He mentions a close named Winton's,¹ not otherwise known. The only other time the name is seen in the records is in the mention of Robyn of Wintoun, one of the "great dusane" of 1403.² Another, in giving the bounds of a property on the south side of the High Street, mentions the passage to St Giles, or Kirkheuch, on the west, and publicum pratum regium on the north.³ The name of the King's public "meadow" suggests that there was an open space to the east of St Giles. It is known that the Council had a garden in some place near the Council-house, but the place is not given. But this entry seems to point to a place east of the cemetery of St Giles somewhere near the Market Cross.

He also supplies explanations for names found in later records. One instance of this is the tenement called Magdalene's Land, at the top of the west side of Peebles' Wynd. A sasine of the year 1501 describes it as belonging to the altar of St Mary Magdalene in the Collegiate Church of St Giles, showing how the name arose.⁴ Another slighter example may be given. One instrument refers to Goddis Kirk land in Berwick's Close.⁵ Failing explanation, it would be possible to find almost any fantastic derivation for the name, but a subsequent sasine gives a simple one, for it was part of the lands of a John Goddiskirk.

Here and there are to be found phrases which add to the picture of the old town and its inhabitants. The troubles to which the town had been liable by frequent fire or enemy invasion had left their mark on it. This is seen by the occasional references to "waste lands," or lands destroyed which had never been rebuilt. The small extent of Edinburgh is also brought home to us by details such as that found in the bounds of a house in the Cowgate.⁶ The south side of that street rising towards the Kirk of Field was not completely built over, for the bounds on the south and west are given as a ditch and rig of land, and a croft or piece of arable land. Other sasines record that, behind tenements on the north side of the High Street, land not built on stretched down to the North Loch.¹

In more than one of the entries, reference is made to the size or capacity of the houses. Several seem to be what we would now term flats.² An old mansion, a self-contained house, consisted of a hall, chamber and kitchen, with two lofts above, three cellars and a small garden. This seems to have been a usual size of house for merchants and other well-to-do inhabitants.³ A property of George, Lord Seton, comprised a tenement and kiln.⁴ Readers of the Abbot learn that the Setons possessed a house in the Canongate in the time of Queen Mary, but the present volume shows that they had a house in Edinburgh. Whether they possessed one in each burgh, further research may show. Gardens, large and small, are mentioned, and on one occasion an orchard. That the Edinburgh houses were poor enough is known, but it is interesting to find tiled ones so rare that the fact was thought worthy of special mention.⁵ The furniture of a house is detailed in one deed, the assignation by the rector of Scraling to his nephew in satisfaction of a debt of 20 li. These are given in Scots, and consisted of "a doubill counter, a strek bed, a pres, a covertour almerly, a chimney" and other articles not named.⁶

Before passing to other points of interest in John Foular's book, it may be worth noting that the names found there are those which are repeated in later times. Several persons of the name of Merlyon are mentioned, and Marlyeon's Close once lay between Peebles' Wynd and Niddrie's Wynd, while tradition makes one of the name, a Frenchman, the first Edinburgh paviour. In 1501 a Michael Mequhon witnessed a deed: it was probably a descendant of his who began to build the Magdalene Chapel. Alexander Lauder, Provost, who fell at Flodden, witnessed important deeds. John Mosman, ancestor of many Mosmans, had trouble with tenants of his lands outside the burgh, and owned more than one land in it. George Touris of Inverleith is named and others of his numerous family. The Unicorn Pursuivant, William Neven, is also mentioned once or twice, and once an interesting person, Thomas Lummysden, alias Zeland herald of the King of Denmark.

What so obvious a Scotsman was doing as envoy of the Danish king did not seem to need explanation. A probable namesake of Carrubber's Close, William Carribris, witnesses a sasine. Cuthbert Littil, ancestor of Clement, founder of the College Library, and of William, merchant and Provost of Edinburgh, possessed land. Various Cants, of the Cants of St Giles Grange, already lived in the town. An interesting point to be noted is the fair number of persons who possessed aliases, indicating the presence of others of the same name in the town.¹

The different crafts found in the town are mentioned as they occur. The list is far from complete, and the crafts which are named have no proportion to the importance which they relatively held. One thing becomes evident, that there was no tendency for men of a like craft to congregate in the same part of the burgh as became usual in later years when shoemakers and fleshers were found in their own particular streets. Bakers are mentioned once or twice, dyers also and furriers.² Smiths, including some goldsmiths, a locksmith and a cutler are found.³ A lathamus, translated lather, but probably a mason, is mentioned once. Symon Law, carnifex, is noted as possessing a land in the Cowgate. Though rendered here and elsewhere as "executioner," the word carnifex in this case at least means flesher, for Law is mentioned in the Burgh Records as such.⁴ A curious trade is that of pannulator or rag merchant,⁵ found nowhere else in the town's records, although, in the charter of James III., in 1477, provision is made for a market of "ald graith and geir" on Fridays beside the Greyfriars. A more inexplicable trade is that of William Broun, carbonarius, rendered collier.⁶ He could not have been a worker in a coal heuch, for they were practically serfs; also, so far as is known, no retailer of coal ever existed in the burgh, for coal was brought direct from the place where it was mined or from the port of Leith. Another possible rendering, that of charcoal burner, seems to be unlikely, for that was not a kind of work likely to be pursued within the burgh.

Some entries in the Protocol Book record judgments which must have been given in the Dean of Gild Court, which dealt with disputes regarding "neighbourhood." In Edinburgh it was always a vexed question how far one neighbour might utilise the buildings of another for support of his own, how much space must be allowed for his eavesdrop without inconveniencing others, and how far he might build on to the streets and closes. Possibly the cases given by Foular were of special importance, so that the parties felt the need of the confirmation given by the record of a notary public. One entry gives an agreement made between Edward Boncle and John the Brus "by the mediacion of tender frendis," by which the former allowed the latter to use his gable wall for certain buildings.¹ A more serious matter, in which a complaint of neighbourhood had been investigated by "liners," ended with the verdict that one burghess had built his gable encroaching farther north on the High Street and on his neighbour's land than the bounds marked by the master mason, and that that part of his building must be "distroit," and that he, having no right of "ische," must close the door made by him opening on Liberton's Wynd.²

The formalities necessary in documents of the period are interesting. Sasine was given by actual presentation of the earth and stone of the land, or of the hasp and staple of the buildings, and occasionally by both; in the case of estates outside the limits of the town, by staff and baton. If a sasine was challenged, this was done by throwing out earth and stone or by the breaking a cup or dish. Several entries show the importance of seals in a day when few could write. A woman and her daughter took instruments that they had delivered their seals to a clerk for the signing of various documents in favour of the daughter's husband. One man, sealing his procuratory for resignation of certain lands, recorded that his seal was made specially for that purpose. One woman found necessary to state that she had borrowed a seal in order to set it on a document in her name.

The part of Foular's book now printed gives two documents dealing with the trade of the burgh. It is a matter for regret that there are not more, for too much is not known about early Edinburgh ventures. There is a protest by the procurator of William Duncane in Wester Kinghorn anent a contract for the delivery of certain goods.³ He protested that, by an act of the "court of the Water of Leith," a certain day had been assigned to the procurator of other parties to prove that goods claimed by them were due. The day being past, he pressed for judgment by default in favour of his client. Apart from the question of trade, the constitution of and relations with Edinburgh of the "court of the Water of Leith" would be most interesting if more information were forthcoming, for the exact position of the town of Leith as port and the burgh was liable to be a subject of dispute. The use of the name "Water of Leith Court" is unusual, for the words "Water of Leith" were used generally of the buildings on the bank of that stream nearest the town, those on the farther side being known as the village of Dean, but here it obviously refers to the port of Leith. The other document, which, unfortunately, is much defaced, gives fragments of a contract between John and Nicholas David, described as Breton merchants and mariners, and John of Dalrympill, bearing that, in return for certain merchandise, he had to deliver twelve lasts of herring, packed in barrels.¹ Mention is made of the "Laird of Lacht" as being concerned in the contract, and of the lochs of the "wester sea," giving rise to the conjecture that the herring may have been of the Loch Fyne variety. A certain Naper, presumably one of the merchant family of that name, was surety for payment.

A document of considerable interest is the one which gives one stage in the recurring dispute between the magistrates as Sheriffs of the Burgh and the Lord High Constable.² Dated the 30th July 1501, it gives the settlement of a dispute between the parties. The Provost, bailies and treasurer, with some of the influential neighbours, paid the Constable a sum of money for their fault in withholding from him the Barras, or tilting ground, beneath the Castle, and promised to uphold him in his office of Constable in future. This last concession refers to the difficulty touching the conflicting jurisdiction of the Constable and the Sheriffs as to the offences committed in the burgh, which the magistrates claimed by right of their charter from James III. in 1482.

By that charter the magistrates of the burgh were made judges in criminal and civil cases, with the exception of the four pleas of the Crown. But the Lord High Constable had jurisdiction in criminal cases over a certain area round the place where the King might be in residence. The Regiam Maiestatem, calling it the chamber of peace, gives it as two leagues; a MS. in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, quoted by Miss

Mary Bateson, gives it as twelve miles, but seems to exclude burgesses. Professor Rait states that the Constable "asserted an exclusive jurisdiction, superseding that of the ordinary law courts, over certain criminal offences committed within four miles of the royal presence or within four miles of a meeting of Parliament in which the King was present, at all events by commission." He also states that the claim was contested by the burgh of Edinburgh, though its legality seems to have been admitted. The document recorded by Foular goes to prove that the magistrates of the early sixteenth century thought well to come to an agreement with the Constable to act as his deputies in his jurisdiction. The Burgh Court Book of 1507 shows that, when dealing with criminal matters, the court was described as the Constabulary Court. In 1511, the Town Council Minutes state that the Constable's Court was held by the Provost and bailies. In 1515 they apparently tried the case of an offence committed in "My Lord Governoris chalmre and palace of peace." In 1520-21 an entry refers to the sum of 100 li. paid to the Constable for the office of Constabulary-Depute. Some considerable importance appears to have been attached to the transaction, for it was decided not only by the Council, but by the community.

No settled arrangement was ever arrived at, and the matter was still in dispute in the middle of the seventeenth century. Also, since there are no books of records of criminal trials by the Magistrates till 1689, it is impossible to ascertain how far they ever exercised their power.

In addition to recording the transfer of burghal property, John Foular's book gives information about the Church and Church lands. A considerable amount of land and annual rents from land were the property either of the Collegiate Church of St Giles, of hospitals in the town, or of ecclesiastics, held by virtue of their office or as private individuals. In the latter case, when the sasine concerned one of the regular orders, the proceedings were carried through by permission of the Abbot of the convent. Some of these entries are here noted briefly. Sir William Fraynche, described as the curate of the Collegiate Church, received an annual rent of 20 shillings resigned in his favour, in name of the Provost and canons, for the celebration of an anniversary.¹ The altar of the Gild of the Hammermen, St Eligius or Eloi (the patron of smiths), received an annual rent of 16s. 8d., in trust to their master of the kirk-work, payable from a land in the High Street.¹ The allusion to the "waste land of St Michael" points to an endowment to that altar in the church.² The Magdalene land has been noted already. On the 20th November 1501 George Touris, Provost of Edinburgh, "charitably warned" the prebendaries of St Giles to attend to their services due in the church according to the foundation charter, under the pains which might be laid on them by himself, the bailies and council of the burgh.³ That this may not have been an empty threat can be seen from many of the charters of donations of chaplainries, which particularise the number of absences from duty which justify dismissal. One document narrates the resignation of Mr Clement Currou, chaplain of the chaplainry of Pitray, at the altar of St Nicholas, by delivery of a ring.⁴ The Provost, bailies and council, as patrons, gave a like office to Sir George Newton, and the Provost went to the altar and gave him institution by delivery of the "horn of the altar, book, chalice and vestments." The altar of St Sebastian is mentioned as receiving the gift of certain lands. Mr William Foular, who may have been a priest, resigned a land in Forester's Wynd to support a chaplainry, not otherwise named, founded by himself. Sir James Bigholme, chaplain, resigned the waste land on the east of the cemetery of St Giles in favour of a brother chaplain, Sir Matthew Dowele, with the stone chimney and other "easments" belonging to him.⁵ From this it would seem as though the chaplains had their houses at the east as well as at the west side of the cemetery, though, in later days, the ministers' houses were at the west side in the place where the Parliament House was built. Sir John Rynd, another chaplain, had land, as heir to the late Henry Rynd, on the north side of the High Street, descending so far as the North Loch.⁶ Except the last named, most of these lands probably belonged to the priests by virtue of their chaplainries.

There were, however, many churchmen, not belonging to Edinburgh religious foundations, who held property in the burgh, as well as churches or convents. The altar of St Blaise in the parish church of Haddington was endowed by its patron with a tenement in Edinburgh, which was burdened with an annual rent payable to Sir William Cockburne of Scraling, Kt.⁷ David, Abbot of Arbroath, owned a land in

Blackfriars' Wynd, which he resigned in favour of Sir John Ogilvy of Fingask, Kt.¹; the Bishop of Dunkeld owned one on the north side of the High Street.² Robert Blacater, canon of Glasgow, by his procurator, Robert, Archbishop of Glasgow, resigned a "mansion" on the south side of the same street.³ The Abbot of Cambuskenneth also owned land there, as did the Archbishop of Glasgow.⁴ Sir Thomas Flucare, chaplain, had land in the town.⁵ Lands belonging to the Trinity College are noted in such a way as to imply property in the burgh, not the actual buildings of the College.⁶ Sir John Ramsay, monk regular of Newbottle, by permission of his Lord Abbot, resigned a land on the Castle Hill, inherited from his father, an Edinburgh burghess.⁷ Two documents note endowments of the chaplainry founded by Mr Archibald Quhytlaw, Secretary of the King, in the parish church of Curry.⁸ An instrument of resignation deals with the chaplainry of the altar of Our Lady of Pity and St Nicholas in the parish church of Dunfermline.⁹ The chaplain of the altar of the Holy Trinity in the parish church of Corstorphine, with consent of his patron, Archibald Forester of Corstorphine, resigned his land, with half of his garden, situated in the Grassmarket.¹⁰ The Abbot of Jedburgh held land near the Kirk of Field Wynd, of which sasine was given to his cousin and heir.¹¹ The sister and heir of Mr John Scot, rector of Rankilburne, inherited his land in the Kirk of Field Wynd.¹²

One document records a gift ad pios usus. Sir William Talyfer, chaplain of the monastery of the Holy Rood, resigned a merkland at the head of St Mary's Wynd for the sustentation of a wax candle before the Sacrament in the parish church of St Cuthbert, the gift being vested in one of the masters of the fabric of the church.¹³

One entry records a proceeding which became a practice with the clergy. The instance is the case of Sir Patrick Hall, chaplain of Halliburton, who set in tack to Adam Hepburne of the Crag and his tenants his lands of Mervinstoun for three years for a payment of 20 li. a year.¹⁴ Not only the lesser clergy, but also the great convents like the Abbey of Kelso, found increasing difficulty in collecting their dues, and, for that reason, gave tacks of their lands to the laity, who had more means of, or possibly fewer scruples in, collecting dues by force.

As has been suggested already, persons, not inhabitants of the burgh, took advantage of their stay in the capital to register deeds of various kinds with the Edinburgh Notaries. Some of these seem worthy of note.

An inserted page, dated 1496, possibly from a missing book, narrated that Mr Richard Lauson, Sheriff of Perth, created certain officers to serve a brieve of inquest of the Chancery.¹

Sasines, resignations and agreements were recorded for places as distant as Rothomay, Drumry in the county of Lennox, the lands of Dunbug and Contrahillis in the barony of Balinbreich, Keirhill in the barony of Ratho, Little Lochquhorwort and Hakbra in the barony of Creichton, Blackbarony in the Sheriffdom of Peebles, and Scraling in the same sheriffdom, in favour of persons not belonging to the town, such as Sir William Preston of Bynning, Kt.; Robert Menzies of that Ilk; William, Lord Carlile; Hugh, Lord Montgomery; Sir Robert Levingston of Drumry, Kt., whose superior was the Earl of Lennox; Adam Creichton of Rothendavy, Kt., whose superior was the Earl of Rothes; William, Lord Borthwick, and his sons, the Master of Borthwick and Alexander Creichton; Sir James Creichton of Frendraucht; George, Lord Setoun, and many others.

A curious contract was recorded by Foular on the 21st February 1502-3, between Archibald, Earl of Argyll, and Ninian M'Culloch of Cardones.² By the terms thereof M'Culloch was bound to go to the Earl in the island of Bute before Pentecost of that year, taking with him certain moneys. A reckoning was to be made between them, in accordance with a royal summons, of the money claimed by the Earl according to the obligation made by the late father of Ninian. If he was found to owe the Earl anything, he was to make payment there, if not, he might carry back his money in safety. Though that is the end of the story, it may be permissible to wonder how much money M'Culloch, so far from home, was allowed to bring back.

Since the work of a notary required the recording of all deeds drawn by him in his Protocol Book, although in later years these tended largely to refer to transactions concerning land, Foular's book contains documents referring to criminal cases. One concerned the protest of William Vaiche of Kingiside, who appeared at the Tolbooth for trial before the King's Justiciar for the murder of Guido Ewart.¹ Neither the Justiciar, his deputy, nor the prosecutors being present, Vaiche took instruments that he had appeared and that his caution, John Murray of Afflehill, should be free of his caution. On the same day John Gillaspie protested that the non-compearance of Donald Crum to answer for the murder of Thomas Gillaspie, his father, should not prejudice his case.²

Another criminal case is noted on the 27th July 1503, when, in presence of the King and his Justiciar, Lord Gray, for the pursuer, for the slaughter of Andrew Tynto, declared John Charteris, grandson of Robert Charteris of Amysfield, to be innocent and that he was not willing to prosecute.³

One of the few entries in Scots is also interesting. Janet Stewart, wife of Stevin Duddingston of Sandfurde, fearing compulsion to renounce a heritage to which she was to succeed, protested that whatever she might do might not prejudice her or her heirs, "and hereupon, Schir notar, I aske at you ane Instrument, and this writt to be insert therein." Her sister, Cristine Stewart, wife of Edward Bruce of Kynmaird, protested in the same form.⁴

These are only a few extracts from a collection of cases, but they show the matters with which John Foular was called upon to deal. A part of the interest lies in the fact that it is only the earlier books in which so great a variety is found. This was due probably to a better and more systematic arrangement, but does deprive the later records of the charm of unexpectedness.

ABSTRACT.

On 27th May, the third hour, in the year of the Lord one thousand five hundred and first, the fourth Indiction, and ninth year of the pontificate of pope Alexander VI. William Todrik, bailie, entered, by earth and stone, Alison Reidschaw, as daughter and heir of the late William Reidschaw, in and to a certain land, with the pertinents, lying in the burgh of Edinburgh, in the Frere Wind, on the east side of the transe thereof, between the land of the late John Stewart on the south, and the land of the late Thomas Stanlie on the north: and incontinently swore that her son was never in seizin of the same land: and also, Thomas Carkettill renounced, specially and expressly, his right and interest which he had or might have in the said land, as son of the sister of the said Alison. These things having been said and done, the same Alison, in her pure widowhood, resigned the same land, in the hands of the said bailie, who gave heritable seizin to Agnes Cotis, spouse of the late Thomas Brown, according to the tenor of the charter to be made thereupon: Witnesses, Master Thomas Allane, Thomas Carkettill, William Adamson, Thomas Turnour, Alexander Aldhoch, George Atkinson, Alexander Naper, Sir Robert Stawear, chaplain, and William Thomson, serjeant. With the oath of Alison in court, not to revoke.

ABSTRACT.

On the 27th of May, the twelfth hour of the day, Robert Charteris of Amisfeld, bailie of Jonet Heris, Elizabeth Carmychel, Beatrix Heris, and Agnes Carmychel, literally constituted, as was clearly known to the notary, executed a distraint of the booth of John Broun, within the land and tenement of the late William Preston of Bynning, Knight, lying in Edinburgh, on the north side of the King's Street thereof, between the land of the late Thomas Bynning, on the east, the land of the late William Purro on the west, the land of Robert Brus on the north, and the King's Street on the south : for an annual rent of ten merks, due to him, as was asserted, for the terms of three years last past : which distraint Andrew Bertram, as tutor of his son, as he asserted, and the spouse of the said Robert Brus, took from the hands of the said Robert, with burden : For which reason he protested for remede of law where and when it concerns.

The same day and hour, John Charteris of Lochtoun, procurator, literally constituted, for the said women, resigned the said annual rent of ten merks, by a penny, in the hands of John Williamson, bailie, who gave heritable seizin of the same to Robert Charteris of Amysfeld, according to the tenor of the charter of the said women made to him thereupon.

[The page ends here, and the notary has written, "Laird of Amysfeld, turn the leaf."]

And there, incontinently, the said Andrew Bertram, and the spouse of the said Robert Brus, and each of them, protested that the said seizin should not yield prejudice to them nor to their heirs; and for remede of law. To all the premises the witnesses are, John Adamson, bailie, Edward Maxwell of Tynwald, Robert Wardlaw, Thomas Pringil, Master James Henrison, Master Thomas Strathauchin, Jaspas Mayn, John Inglis, and William Thomson, serjeant, with many others.

ABSTRACT.

On the 18th of November, about the third hour after noon, in a full court held before William Goldsmith, bailie, Jonet Bunclie, spouse of the late John Quhitheid, of her own proper will, as she asserted, and not forced, renounced, overgave, and resigned by earth and stone, in the hands of the said bailie, her conjunct fee of the lands and annual rent underwritten; that is to say, of a land lying on the south side of the King's Street, at the head of the Vennel called Peblis Wynd, on the east side of the transe thereof, between the land of the late David Yrland on the south, and the land of S. Marie Magdalene on the north; with oath not to revoke. Which having been done, the bailie cognosced and entered Agnes Quhitheid, spouse of William Currou, as a daughter and one of the heirs of the said John Quhitheid, investing and seizing her heritably, in and to the said land.

Also, he cognosced in like manner, and entered Alison Quhitheid, another daughter, and one of the heirs of the said John, to the same land. Whereupon the said Alison, of her own will, as she affirmed, not compelled, resigned her part of the same land, that is to say the third part, in the hands of the said bailie, who then gave seizin of the same third part of the said land, to William Currou and Agnes his spouse, in conjunct fee, and to the heirs gotten or to be begotten between them; which failing, to the nearest heirs whatsoever of the said Agnes.

The same thing, in all respects, was in like manner done concerning the land of the said late John Quhitheid, lying within the vennel called Halkerston's Wynd, on the west side of the transe thereof, between the land of the late Thomas Halkerston on the south, and the land of the late Thomas Zhar on the north: and concerning the land of the said late John in Liberton's Wynd, on the west side of the transe thereof, between the land of the late Alan Richartson on the north, and the waste land stretching down therefrom on the south: And also, of an annual rent of two merks to be uplifted from the land of the late Fergus Bartilmo, lying on the north side of the King's Street, between the land of Andrew Hervy on the east, and the land of the late William Brown on the west; with oath in all the transactions of not revoking.

Further, the aforesaid Jonet and Alison, of one consent, appointed the said William Currou, and others whom he might be willing to nominate and choose, their procurators, for pursuing, exacting receiving and recovering in judgment or outwith the same, all their goods due and heritable, moveable and immoveable, belonging to them by whatever right, and to convert the same to their own use, and dispose thereof, as to the said William shall seem expedient ; whereupon the latter craved instruments. These things were done in the dwelling-house of the said William : Witnesses, Thomas Wod etc.

ABSTRACT.

On the eleventh day of February, about the tenth hour before noon, William Carmychel, bailie, gave seisin in conjunct fee, of the land of the late John Tuedy, now pertaining to Agnes Tuedy his daughter and heir, by her resignation first made of the land aforesaid, lying in the said burgh, on the north side of the King's street thereof, as in the preceding protocol of her entry, to the said Agnes Tuedy herself, and Alexander Elphinston her future spouse, and the longer liver of them, and the heirs to be lawfully procreated between them, which failing, to Henry Levington and the heirs of his body lawfully procreated or to be procreated, which failing, to revert freely to the true lawful and nearest heirs of the said Agnes: Reserving the frank tenement to Margaret Levington her mother, for life. The said Alexander and Henry craved instruments.

The said Agnes resigned 13/4 from the land of George Edwardson, in the hands of the said bailie, by one penny; who gave seisin in conjunct fee thereof, to the same Agnes and Alexander her future spouse, and the heirs to be lawfully procreated between them, which failing, the true lawful and nearest heirs whatsoever of the said Agnes.

Thereafter, the aforesaid bailie entered Agnes herself as heir of the late Henry Tuedy, son and heir of the said deceased John her father, to 40/ from the land of David Qulitheid, lying in the said burgh, on the north side of the King's street thereof, between the land of the late William Knox on the east, and the land of the late James Cowis on the west, which she herself resigned in the hands of the said bailie, who gave heritable seisin in conjunct fee to the said Agnes and Alexander her spouse aforesaid, as above.

Moreover the said Agnes resigned 40/ from the land of Thomas Smyth, and in like manner seisin is given in conjunct fee to the said Agnes and her spouse.

Also of both tenements of the said late John: Reserving the frank tenement to her mother of the east tenement.

The said bailie also entered the same Agnes as heir of her said brother Henry Twedy, to two merks of annual rent from the tenement of John Crainstoun, lying on the north side of the King's street of the said burgh, between the land of the late Henry Rynd and the late Thomas M'Clellan on the east, and the east tenement of the late Henry Foulis on the west: which she likewise resigned, and the like seisin is given in conjunct fee to her affianced spouse Alexander Elphinston.

In like manner she also resigned 27/ from the land of the late Henry of Foulis, and conjunct fee was given as above to the same Agnes and her future spouse.

In like manner it was done anent 2 shillings to be uplifted from the land of the late John Bell at the over Bow, as in the foregoing protocol: And anent 6 shillings from the land of John Stewart under the castle wall: Also anent eleven shillings from the land of William Frost in the Cowgate.

All these seisins, as above, except the first, are given to the said Agnes and Alexander her spouse, and the heirs to be lawfully procreated between them; which failing, to the true, lawful heirs whatsoever of the said Agnes.
