LADYKIRK, anciently called "Upsetlington," is a parish and village in Kelso poor combination and the small debt court district of Duns, with a railway station at Norham, about 1½ miles distant, on the North Eastern system; the soil of the district, which is naturally good, has been greatly enriched by careful cultivation, and the parish is celebrated for its breeds of cattle and sheep; the parish lies on the north bank of the Tweed, with that of Hutton on the north-east and Whitsome and Swinton on the west, and it has a breadth of from one to two miles; a stone bridge, constructed at the expense of the Tweed Bridges Trust, here spans the Tweed between Ladykirk and Norham. The church, a venerable building, standing near the Tweed, is said to have been erected by James IV. (1489-1513) in gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood when fording the river here at the head of his army, and dedicated by him to "Our Lady;" hence it was denominated "Ladykirk," a name subsequently extended to the village, in which stands a fountain given by Lady Marjoribanks, in commemoration of the fiftieth year of Her Majesty's reign, 1837. The small village of Horneadean belongs to this parish. Ladykirk House is the seat of Watson Askew-Robertson esq. D.L., J.P. The Hon. Mrs. Askew-Robertson, Berwick J. Black, jun. esq. and Alex. Wellwood Rattray esq. are the principal landowners. The area comprises 3,380 acres; rateable value, £4,872; the population in 1891 was 339, and in 1881, 438.

The parish church, locally in Gavinton, and standing on an eminence, has a tower with spire, and was restored in 1873, at a cost of about £2,000; there is also a Free church. LAUDER.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh and the capital of the district of Lauderdale, and a parish, in Kelso poor combination, 6 miles from Stow station and 7 from Earleston station, both on the North British railway, 25 south-east of Edinburgh, 35 west of Berwick, 21 north of Jedburgh, 22 south-west of Coldstream, 20 south-west of Duns, 17 south-west of Kelso and 12 west of Green-

law. The town is situated in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso, and consists principally of a single thoroughfare, at the west end of which is the town house, and it is lighted with gas by a company. The charter constituting Lauder a royal burgh was renewed in 1509, and the government vested in two bailies and seven councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. A justice of the peace court is held as occasion requires, and sheriff small debt courts on the last Wednesday of February, first Wednesday of July, and on the Saturday before the first Monday of October. By the Reform Act of 1832, Lauder was joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh in returning one member to Parliament, but, under the provisions of the "Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885" (48 and 49 Vict. c. 23), the representation has been merged in that of the county. The trade is chiefly local and domestic, and there is a branch here of the Bank of Scotland. The principal inns are the Black Bull and the Eagle. The Established church, a cruciform building standing on the south of the town house, was erected in 1673, when John (Maitland), first and only Duke of Lauderdale, removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence. Thirlestane Castle, a massive and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine woods, is the seat of the Earl of Lauderdale; the castle, which stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, is fitted and decorated in the style of the time of Charles II., and contains a number of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces and a collection of valuable paintings, chiefly portraits. The parish of Lauder contains 34,898 acres; rateable value, £16,441; the population in 1891 was 1,588, including 763 in the royal burgh, and in 1881 was 1,940, including 1,014 in the burgh.

MERTOUN is a parish in Berwickshire abutting on Roxburghshire and extending 6 miles along the banks of the Tweed, and is in Jedburgh poor combination and in Duns small debt court district. Clintmains is a small village in the parish, and about 2 miles from St. Boswells village, and 3 from St. Boswells station, on the North British railway. The parish church and manse are locally in Clintmains. The famous ruins of Dryburgh Abbey, situated in this parish, are much frequented by tourists as being the burial place of Sir Walter Scott, who was here interred 26 Sept. 1832. There was a monastic house here in the 6th century, but the later structure was built during the period 1150-52, by Hugh de Maville, constable of Scotland, and Beatrice his wife, for Premonstratensian, or White Canons, and was colonized from the abbey of St. Mary, at Alnwick; the original Norman is intermixed with Early English and Early Decorated work, and there remain portions of the cruciform church, the chapter house, the chapel of St. Modanus, and fragments of the domestic buildings, including a fine gable of the refectory. At a short distance from the abbey is a temple of the Ionic order, built by David, 11th Earl of Buchan, about 1817; surmounting the dome is a bust of James Thomson, the author of the "Seasons," who was born at Ednam in 1700; here also is a colossal statue of Sir William Wallace, erected by Lord Buchan in 1814. The modern Dryburgh Abbey, the property of George O. H. E. Biber Erskine esq. J.P. is at present occupied by Lady Orr-Ewing; Bemersyde House by Walter Farquhar esq. and Dryburgh House by the Misses Baillie. Mertoun House is the seat of Lord Polwarth L.L. who is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The area comprises 6,374 acres; rateable value, £7,233; the population in 1891 was 622, and in 1881, 632.

MORDINGTON is a parish and village in the south-eastern part of the county, and about 1 mile from Foulden. In the mansion house here, Cromwell established his quarters on passing the Tweed for the first time. At Lamberton, on the boundary of the parish and within the liberties of Berwick is a hamlet in which, but within the Scottish border, marriages were solemnized in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principles, as at Gretna. Edrington Castle is the name given to a camp situate on the top of a steep rock; on the "Witches' Know," an eminence 649 feet in height, several unfortunate women were burned for witchcraft in the last century. Ironstone has been discovered in the parish, and coal on the estate of Robert Charles Campbell Renton esq. J.P., D.L. of Mordington House, who is lord of the manor and also the chief landowner. The area comprises 2,939 acres; rateable value, £4,641; the population in 1891 was 324, and in 1881, 367.

PAXTON, see HUTTON.

POLWARTH is a parish and village, in the district of Merse and in the small debts court district of Greenlaw; the village is 1½ miles from Marchmont on the North British railway, 40 south-east from Edinburgh, 4 south-west from Duns, and about 3½ north-east from Greenlaw, on the road between Greenlaw and Edinburgh. On the green of Polwarth is in the centre of the village, an ancient custom prevailed for every newly-married pair, with their company, to dance round an old thorn tree, and the custom is still kept up to a great extent. This place now gives the title of baron to the Hepburne-Scott family. The parish church, an ancient building, stands about a mile south-east of the village, and on the front is a Latin inscription, affirming that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In a vault below the church Sir Patrick Hume, or Home, of Polwarth, created in 1697 Earl of Marchmont, and sometime Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum from the fury of his persecutors, when a price was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair, of Hermandout, whose family, so far back as the 15th century, terminated in two co-heiresses, who married two brothers of the Home family, and the lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes. The manor, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir John Home-Purves Hume Campbell bart. of Marchmont, who is lord of the manor and the chief landowner. Area, about 3,000 acres; rateable value is £3,008 9s.; the population in 1891 was 203, and in 1881, 227.

BUTESHIRE.

BUTESHIRE is composed of the islands of Bute, Arran, Great and Little Cumbrae (or Cumbrae), Holy Isle, Pladda, and Inch-Marnoch, covering about 219 square miles, or 140,037 acres. In point of size it ranks as the twenty-ninth, and in population as the thirtieth of Scotch counties. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. Bute, the most northerly of the islands, lies in a bay formed by the lower end of the district of Cowal, Argyllshire, from which it is separated by the narrow straits known as the Kyles of Bute, its southern part lying between the northern portions of Ayrshire and Cantira. Arran occupies the southern part of the Firth of Clyde, south-west of Bute and opposite to the east coast of Cantira, from which it is divided by the Kilbrennan sound; the Greater and Lesser Cumbrae lie between the island of Bute and the coast of Ayr. Inch-Marnoch is off the west coast of Bute and Holy Island and Pladda off the coast of Arran. The coast line is for the most part rocky, and has comparatively few harbours. The population of the county in 1891 consisted of 8,311 males and 10,193 females; total, 18,404, and in 1881 of 17,657; the inhabited houses in 1891 were 4,001 and in 1881, 3,870.

Early History.—The islands formed part of the Norwegian kingdom until 1263, when Alexander III. recovered these islands and Ayrshire from Haco, whom he defeated at the battle of Largs. Robert Bruce came to Arran from Ireland previous to his descent on Ayrshire. Robert II. created his eldest son Duke of Rothesay and James II. conferred Arran with the title of Earl on his favourite Lord Boyd, and afterwards transferred it to Sir James Hamilton, his daughter's second husband. Bute gives the title of Marquess to the family of Stuart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquess of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stuart, a son of Robert II., who by his father's grant became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in 1703. The island of Bute at one time contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but three parishes, and the shire altogether only seven. The soil is chiefly red sandstone and trap, the former showing along the coast, where it is surrounded by a belt of gravel.

The climate of Buteshire is eminently salubrious; neither mists nor noxious fogs, so prevalent in the east of Scotland, infest it; snow rarely lies on the hills, and the only qualification to its general genial-character is a liability to severe and sudden rains. In the interior, in a secluded situation, the celebrated tragedian, Edmund Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from public life. The island has for many years been the place of summer resort for sea-bathing.

The interior of Arran has a lofty chain of hills, but Bute is more flat in surface.

The chief crops, as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain, 1898," are—oats, 4,972 acres; barley and bere, 141; rye, 103; the total corn crops being 5,301 acres; turnips and swedes, 1,469 acres; potatoes, 961 acres; total green crops, 2,521 acres; hay, 2,616 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 6,555 acres; permanent pasture, 8,304 acres; bare fallow, 230 acres. Total land and water, 140,307 acres, of which 53,241 are mountain and heath, used for grazing; 3,261 acres of woods and 545 of plantation. The live stock in 1898 included 1,038 horses, used solely for agriculture and brood mares; 245 unbroken horses; 3,775 cows and heifers in milk or in calf; 6,053 of other cattle; 19,658 ewes, kept for breeding; other sheep, 29,403; 66 sows, kept for breeding; other pigs, 647. The only minerals raised in 1897 was 3,199 tons of basalt and 5,379 of sandstone. Some portion of the inhabitants are employed in fishery, 181 boats, equal 378 tons, being registered at the port of Rothesay, December 31, 1898, and employing 325 men and boys, but the pursuits are mainly pastoral.

The rivers are none of them of any magnitude, the largest being the Iorsa and Machry in Arran, both debouching on the west coast after a course of five or six miles; the principal fresh water lochs are Loch Fad in Bute and Lochs Iorsa and Tanna in Arran; there are no railways, but there is regular communication by steamer with Glasgow.

The shire comprises six parishes, and there are nine ecclesiastical parishes; there is only one town, the Royal burgh of Rothesay. The parliamentary representation consists of one member for the county. The parliamentary constituency for 1898 was 3,387. The valuation of the county for 1897-8 was £139,903.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN is divided into two parishes, Kilbride and Kilmory; it embraces an area of 106,084 statute acres; and contained in 1891 a population of 4,824, and in 1881, 4,730. Arran is lofty and mountainous, some of its peaks exceeding 3,000 feet in altitude. A small portion of the lower grounds is cultivated, but the whole is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves; and one on the west, opposite to Campbelltown, called "the King's Cave," is 120 feet in length, 60 in height and 48 in width, and afforded shelter to Robert Bruce before he discomfited Balol and ascended the throne of Scotland. The island is noted for its herring fishery, but this industry is pursued by only a comparatively small portion of the inhabitants, and chiefly at the north end. The staple industry of the island is agriculture, which, under the care of the Arran Farmers' Society, has attained to a degree of comparative excellence. The majority of the inhabitants are occupiers of small plots of land, but a considerable moiety have holdings rented at from about £400 to £800. The smaller tenants find house letting a ready source of income during the summer season. As a summer resort the island is held in high reputation, for, besides possessing a highly salubrious climate, it presents ample opportunities for boating, sea and trout fishing, botanical and geological researches and kindred outdoor pursuits. All the streams, many of which afford tolerably good sport to the careful angler, are free to all comers, except two in the neighbourhood of Dubhgharadh Shooting Lodge. Game is abundant, being scrupulously preserved by the Duke of Hamilton, but excursionists are allowed to ramble and prosecution for trespass is unknown on the island. A good road runs along the shore for the whole circuit of the island, a distance of 55½ miles, and two roads run across from shore to shore—one from Lagg to Lamash and the other from Shiskine to Brodick; of the shore road 24 miles are within the limits of Kilbride parish, and the remaining 31½ miles within Kilmory parish. Plantations of considerable extent and growth, created by the Duke of Hamilton, form a special feature of attraction in various localities, the beautiful and wooded glen of Lagg, in Kilmory parish, and other sequestered spots, presenting a combination of varied and attractive scenery. The island is copiously watered by the numerous streams issuing on either side from the great rocky range extending from north to south. The parish of Kilbride occupies rather less than one half of the island, on the east side, extending 19 miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, derived their designation from Saint Bride, or Bridget, a saint whose fame extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride still remain, but the present parish church is locally in the village of Lamash, and was erected in 1874, and rebuilt in 1885 at the cost of the late Duke of Hamilton K.T. Lamash Bay is one of the best in the west of Scotland, and affords a secure anchorage to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish Channel. The haven forms a natural basin, protected by the rocky islet of Holy Island lying at its mouth. The village lies on the inner side of the bay, and has a good inn, called the Lamash Hotel. In the parish are some tall mounds, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles. Fairs are held here in the months of April and October. The area comprises 38,985 acres; rateable value, £13,141; the population in 1891 was 2,331, and in 1881, 2,176.

Brodick is a village and a quoad sacra parish, separated for ecclesiastical purposes from that of Kilbride. A new pier has been erected, and in the village is a good family hotel, built by the late Duke of Hamilton and facing the pier; it has spacious grounds, and affords a splendid view of Brodick Bay, Goatfell mountain (3,000 feet), and Gleanrosa, together with the coasts of Ayrshire and Argyllshire. Brodick Castle, the property of the trustees of the late Duke of Hamilton K.T. (d. 1895), stands on a rocky bank, which rises from the north side of the bay, but is at present unoccupied; this bank forms a part of a peninsular elevation, or shoulder, projecting from the base of Goatfell mountain. The trustees of the late Duke of Hamilton are superiors of the island. Fairs are held at Brodick on the first Tuesday after the 20th of June. The population in 1891 was 1,055.

The parish of Kilmory ("Cill Muire," i.e. "Mary's Church,") occupies fully more than half the island of Arran on its western side. The land in this parish is extremely productive. Dairy produce is abundant, and fair crops are obtained from large fields well laid out with good fences. The hills are of moderate height, and so accessible to culture that every spot is convertible to use. The church was a few years ago stripped and rebuilt by the late Duke of Hamilton K.T. at a cost of £1,300. There is a good inn called the Legg Hotel. The Island of Pladdu, which lies off the south of Arran, and has a lighthouse on it, is in this parish. Area of the parish comprises 67,099 acres; rateable value, £13,119; the population in 1891 was 2,519, and in 1881, 2,586.

ASCOG, see ISLE OF BUTE.

THE ISLE OF BUTE.

THE ISLE OF BUTE consists of the parishes of Kilmory, North Bute and Rothsay, the latter of which is the royal burgh of Rothsay, the capital of the island and county; the island lies south of the main portion of Argyllshire, a little below the mouth of the Clyde, and is bounded on its eastern side and southern point by the Firth of Clyde, on the west by the mouth of Loch Fyne; the length of the island is about 18 and its breadth averages 5 miles. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous, but in the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable of being cultivated, as to produce fine crops of barley, oats &c. The parish of Kilmory occupies the southern and south-eastern portion of the island, and extends about 9 miles from north to south, by 4 in breadth; it is in the small debt court district of Rothsay and contains the village of Kilchattan and the hamlets of Ascog, Kerrycroo and Kingarth. Mount Stuart, about 5 miles south-east of Rothsay and 4 north from Kilchattan, is the seat of the Marquess of Bute K.T. who is the principal landowner.

Kilchattan, or Kilchattan Bay, is a village, beautifully situated on a bay, in the parish of Kingarth and in the Rothsay small debt court district, about 8 miles south of Rothsay. The parish church of Kingarth was built in 1826 and has sittings for 450 persons. Half a mile from the east shore are the remains of a Druidical circle, and towards the west shore, and also near the north-east shore of the bay, are several other interesting Druidical remains. In the neighbourhood of Kilchattan is the curious promontory of Garrochhead; about a mile to the south of this, in a quiet romantic dell, stand the remains of the church, or chapel of St. Blane.

Ascog, situated on a fine bay, about 3 miles south-east from Rothsay and in the parish of Kingarth, contains many elegant mansions and villas, and on a point of rock jutting out into the water stands a Free church, in the burial ground of which rest the remains of Montague Stanley, the painter. At the extreme south end of the island, above Dunnagoil Bay, 1 mile south-west from St. Blane's chapel, there stands an extensive vitrified fort.

Kerrycroo is a hamlet 4 miles south-east from Rothsay, pleasantly situated on Scoulag Bay, the village forming a crescent round the strand. The entrance to Mount Stuart policies commences here, and between the village and Ascog is a Board school.

The area of the parish comprises 8,995 acres; rateable value, £10,471; the population in 1891 was 1,061, and in 1881, 1,256; these figures include 340 in 1891, and 343 in 1881 in the village of Kilchattan.

NORTH BUTE. This parish occupies the northern portion of the island, bounded by the Kyles of Bute, and extends 7 miles from north to south, by 3 to 4 in breadth; it contains the village of Kamesburgh, or Port Bannatyne, and the hamlet of Kilpatrick, and also the small island of Inch Marnock.

Port Bannatyne, the popular name for Kamesburgh, is a fish curing station, port and village, in the parish of North Bute, and 2½ miles north from Rothsay. The port possesses a small quay and pier, and there are several furnished houses, occupied principally by families who make this place a summer retreat. Half a mile distant is the ancient castle of Kames, the property of the Marquess of Bute. The church of North Bute, nearly a mile west, was erected in 1836 at a cost of £1,000, defrayed by the late Marquess of Bute; and there is also a Free church, erected in 1843. St. Ninlan's chapel of ease, in connection with the Established church, was opened in July, 1886, at a cost of about £5,000. The Marquess of Bute K.T. is the principal landowner. The area of the parish comprises 14,756 acres; rateable value, £15,028; the population in 1891 was 1,385, including 753 in Port Bannatyne, and in 1881 was 1,218, with 651 in the port.

NORTH BUTE, see ISLE OF BUTE.THE ISLES OF CUMBRAE.

THE ISLES OF GREAT AND LITTLE CUMBRAE. These islands lie off the coast of Ayrshire, in the Firth of Clyde, between the parishes of West Kilbride in Ayrshire and Kingarth in the island of Bute, and comprise the parish of Cumbrae. Millport, in Cumbrae parish, is a burgh, constituted in 1864, under the Act 23 and 24 Vic., cap. 96. It is chiefly resorted to for sea bathing, being charmingly situated on the south side of the greater Cumbrae, about 4 miles from Largs, in Ayrshire, between which town communication is maintained by means of a regular service of steamers. There is an excellent harbour here and a good pier, affording complete facilities for the landing or embarkation of passengers. The village is lighted with gas, and is governed by commissioners and a senior and two junior magistrates. A sheriff and small debts court is held in March and September. The Established church here is plain in style, but has a fine square tower. The Episcopal Cathedral and College of the Holy Spirit, situated on an eminence overlooking the town and bay, were founded and endowed by the Earl of Glasgow, and opened in 1850-51; the college is not now used as such, the students attending at Edinburgh University. The small Episcopal church of St. Andrew, in George street, is served from the cathedral. Millport Marine Biological Station, Keppel pier, built and opened in 1897, has been erected and equipped at a cost of about £1,800 for the study of marine biology; the Station contains a suitable working laboratory for the use of students and a museum to illustrate the invertebrate fauna of the district, formed by the late David Robertson LL.D. of this parish, and presented to the Station by his widow. Pleasantly situated on the shore is a beautiful marine pavilion, in the Pointed style, belonging to the Marquis of Bute. The inhabitants of these isles are chiefly fishermen and owners of their own boats. Some parts of the greater Cumbrae are well cultivated, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the lesser Cumbrae is a lighthouse. The greater island of Cumbrae belongs to the Marquis of Bute K.T.; the smaller island is the property of the Earl of Eglinton and Winton. The area of Cumbrae parish comprises 3,514 acres, including 673 acres in Little Cumbrae; the population in 1891 was 1,785, including 1,668 in the burgh of Millport, and in 1881 was 1,856, with 1,749 in the burgh; rateable value, £20,583.

KILCHATTAN, see ISLE OF BUTE (Kingarth).

KINGARTH, see ISLE OF BUTE.

MILLPORT, see CUMBRAE.

PORT BANNATYNE (KAMESBURGH), see ISLE OF BUTE (North Bute Parish).

ROTHESAY is a modern frequented watering place on the Firth of Clyde, also a royal burgh, parish and town, and the head of a small debts court district, 96 miles west from Edinburgh (by Mid-Caldar), 40 south-west from Glasgow, 18 south-west from Greenock, 22 north from Lamash, in the Isle of Arran, 12 northwest from Cumbrae, and 9 north-west from Largs. The first mention of it in history is in 1228, when Rothesay Castle was besieged by Hnshac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Msn, and taken after a stout resistance. Although recovered from these northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1253, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs, 3 Oct. 1263, in which Alex. III. finally defeated Haco of Norway. During the reign of John Balliol it was seized by the English, but in 1311 surrendered to Robert Bruce. In 1334, Edward Balliol retook the castle, and fortified it; but soon afterwards it capitulated to Bruce, then steward of Scotland. King Robert II. visited the castle in 1376, 1381, and 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David,

Duke of Rothesay, and this has ever since been the principal Scottish title of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales; the Marquess of Bute K.T. is hereditary keeper of the castle. The town, finely situated at the head of Rothesay bay, is on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire; the bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground excellent. A good esplanade has been constructed; the pier, erected in 1882, has been since enlarged, and the harbour also much improved and deepened at considerable expense. The herring fishery has long been active here, and during 1898 181 boats were registered here, with a tonnage of 378, and employing 325 hands. The Bute Farmers' Society has done much for the agriculture and farm stock of the island, premiums and prizes for excellence in which are awarded at the annual show of the Society, held at Rothesay in May. Rothesay was constituted a royal burgh by Robert III. by a charter dated 12th January, 1400; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI. in 1584. The government of the town is now vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff and commissary courts are held every Thursday, and quarter sessions on the first Tuesday in the months of March, May and August, and the last Tuesday in October, and all criminal cases for the circuit court jurisdiction are tried at Glasgow. The Town Hall and County Buildings, rebuilt at an expense of about £12,000, form a handsome pile, and include an elegant embattled tower, containing a bell and a clock, with four illuminated dials, prevented by the late Marquess of Bute. The edifice comprises a spacious court room, in which the sheriff, burgh, and justice of peace courts are held, the town and sheriff clerks' and procurator fiscal's offices, and other apartments. At the east end of the court room is a painting of the late Marquess of Bute K.T. (d. 1848), by Mr. Graham Gilbert. The public halls form a block of buildings facing Prince's pier, and are used for concerts, lectures and meetings; the rooms will seat upwards of 1,350 persons. The Norman Stewart Institute, in Montague street, opened 4th July, 1885, by Provost Sharp, was erected at a cost of £10,000, derived partly from funds bequeathed by the late Mr. Norman Stewart, of Richmond, Virginia, but mainly contributed by his nephews, Messrs. John, Daniel, and Bryce Stewart, of America, and natives of Rothesay. There is a large refreshment room on the ground floor, and on the other floors are amply-supplied reading and waiting rooms, a billiard room and recreation and smoking rooms. The Working Men's Club, the Bute Women's Temperance Prayer Union and the Rothesay Young Women's Christian Association, with other similar organisations, hold their meetings here. The Rothesay Royal Aquarium, near Mount Stuart road, occupies the site of a battery, constructed at the beginning of the century to resist anticipated invasion. In front of the east pier stands an elegant fountain, erected as a memorial to H. R. H. the late Prince Consort, who died 14 Dec. 1861, and another fountain stands in Guildford square. The Rothesay Academy and Thomson Institute, in the Public park, was erected and partially endowed by the trustees of the late Duncan Thomson esq., Ardbeg, Bute, and is a structure in the Gothic style. It is now under the control of the School board. There are branches here of the Bank of Scotland, the Clydesdale Bank Limited and the Royal Bank of Scotland; also several good hotels. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the first Wednesday in May, third Wednesday and the following Thursday in July, the last Wednesday in October, and Tuesday before Kilturban December fair—all chiefly for cattle. Three newspapers are published here—the "Buteman," the "Rothesay Chronicle," and the "Rothesay Express." About a mile to the east of the town is a salutary mineral spring; near this is Glenburn House Hydropathic Establishment. On an eminence, called "Chapel hill," rising above Argyll street, once stood an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Bride. The Marquess of Bute K.T. is the principal landowner. About 2 miles south-west, and at the end of the Chapelton road, is Woodend, or (as it is more generally denominated) "Kean's Cottage," from having been built by that eminent tragedian; the house stands in a retired spot, a little above the western shore of Loch Fad. The parish of Rothesay extends over an area of 6,083 statute acres; rateable value, £63,970; the population of the parish in 1891 was 9,306, including 9,108 in the burgh of Rothesay, and in 1881, 8,538, with 8,329 in the burgh.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded on the east and south-east by the German Ocean, on the south-west and west by Sutherlandshire, while on the north the Atlantic Ocean, bringing with it a portion of the Gulf Stream, after passing along two-thirds of the coast, sweeps at the rate of ten miles an hour through the Pentland Firth, the strait dividing the eastern portion of the coast from the Orkney Islands, and forms to the west of Duncans Bay Head the whirlpool known as the Bears of Duncansby. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, being from the Ord of Caithness to Dunnet Head, the northern cape, about 37 miles, and from near Reay to Auchingill on the east coast (its widest part) about 27, the entire coast line being 100 miles; altogether it comprehends an area of 681 square miles, or 446,017 acres. This county in point of size ranks as the thirteenth, and in population as the twenty-second, having in 1891 a population of 17,472 males and 19,705 females, or a total of 37,177, against 38,865 in 1881; the number of inhabited houses was 7,444.

The county contains a large number of forts or castles (chiefly ruins now) along its coast, it having been from an early period subject to the attacks of the Northmen and other enemies coming seaward.

The Early History of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the "Catini," from whom the present appellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places and the monumental remains indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Girnego, the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date. Caithness is an earldom in the family of Sinclair. This peerage is of remote antiquity; before the year 1450 it was enjoyed by three successive families, who lost it either by forfeiture or extinction. At length it was renewed in the person of William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, a great-grandson, by the female line, of Robert II.; he was made Chancellor of Scotland in the reign of James II., and received a grant of the earldom of Caithness. The earldom of Orkney having been derived from the King of Norway, though confirmed by a Scottish monarch, was resigned to the Crown in the reign of James III. After a long period the title was revived, but not in the family of the Sinclairs of Caithness.

Soil, Surface, Produce, Climate &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is chiefly devoted to tillage, and in the centre and along the sea border is moderately fertile. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few enclosures are but of a rude quality. The greatest elevations in this county above the level of the sea are, Morven, 2,313 ft.; Maiden Pap, 1,580 ft.; Scarry Ben, 2,054 ft.; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 ft. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809 a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads throughout the county has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county; clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated; the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and barley. The chief crops, as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain, 1898," are oats, 34,138 acres; barley or bere, 1,105 acres; rye, 129 acres; the total corn crop being 35,409 acres; turnips and swedes, 13,566 acres; potatoes, 1,633 acres; vetches or tares, 437 acres; total green crops, 15,698 acres; hay, 10,836 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 23,000 acres; permanent pasture, 26,864 acres; bare fallow, 305 acres. The total area of land and water is 446,017 acres, of which 243,484 are mountain and heath, 813 woods and 139 plantations. The live stock in 1898 comprised 4,483 horses used solely for agriculture and brood mares; unbroken horses, 1,284; cows and heifers in milk or in calf, 7,843; other cattle, 14,482; ewes kept for breeding, 46,009; other sheep, 76,961; sows kept for breeding, 215; other pigs, 1,209. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation; the imports being foreign timber, coal, salt, flour and general merchandise. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game, and the district throughout with hares, rabbits, grouse, plovers &c. In the caverns along the coast seals form their harbours; the hunters enter in small boats, with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, which they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. This county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat. The chief mineral production is flag-stones, useful for flooring, pavement &c. these stones being well known for their durability, and in the quarrying and dressing of which many men are employed. Ironstone and freestone of excellent quality are also found. The white and herring fishery is prosecuted with success, and the curing of fish is another branch of trade in which many persons are engaged. The number of fishing boats registered December 31st, 1898, at the port of Wick, under Part IV. of the "Merchant Shipping Act," 1894, was 539, with an aggregate tonnage of 7,706, and employing 2,916 men and boys, besides 959 other persons who are occasionally employed. The climate, though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude (fifty-ninth degree), where the duration of the night at one period of the year is nineteen hours.

Rivers, Lakes, Railways &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets and some waters of greater magnitude; the principal being the Inauld, Fors and Thurso rivers on the north-west, the latter formed by the junction of the Moore and the Beg which rise on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and the Wick, Dunn and Berrydale on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Watten, a fine sheet of water, about 3 miles in length, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. The only bays of note are Sinclair Bay, on the north-east, and Dunnet Bay on the north. The Highland Railway, which after running close to the east coast of Sutherlandshire as far as Helmsdale has to make a detour of nearly 25 miles to the north before it can find a way through the hills which form the border of Caithness, passes into the county a little east of Forsinard station, and runs north-east to Georgemas junction, north-west of Spittle Hill, where it divides into two branches, one running north to Thurso, the other east to Wick.

Divisions, Representation &c.—Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the 12th century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—Wick, and a burgh of barony—Thurso. The county sends one member to Parliament, and Wick, joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty, elects another representative. The parliamentary constituency in 1898 was 4,174. The valuation of the county for 1897-8 was £145,454.

HALKIRK is a parish adjoining that of Thurso on the south, with a village of same name, 6 miles south of Thurso town, in the poor combination and small debt court district of Thurso. The parish extends 20 miles from north to south and 13 from east to west at its widest part (Ben Chaitag to Balach Begg); it contains 24 small lakes,
abounding in trout, and has the Thurso
water running through nearly its entire length. Besides the station of same name,
a mile south of Halkirk village, there are three other railway stations (Altnabreac, Scotscaider and Georgemas Junction) in this parish, all on the Highland line. There is an Established church, two Free churches, a Free Presbyterian church, and nine public schools. The Caledonian Banking Company Limited has a branch here.
The parish contains several ruined towers
and camps, and a few lofty hills—Cnoc Cromall being 1,200 feet above the sea level, and Cnoc Na Gall, 900. Sir John G.

LYBSTER IN LATHERON.

LYBSTER is an ecclesiastical parish and village at the mouth of the Reisgill burn, in the parish of Latheron, in which poor combination it is included, and is in the small debt court district of Wick and 14 miles south-by-west from that town; it was at one time a place of some importance and the centre of a fishery trade, which its safe harbour encouraged, but this has unfortunately become choked up. The "Brothers Port," the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the 8th and 10th centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these "sea-kings," or pirates. On an eminence here stand the ruins of an ancient chapel. A sheriff court is held here 10 times a year. Wick is the nearest railway station. The population in 1891 was 740, inhabited houses, 175.

The parish of Latheron extends along the coast from the Ord of Caithness to Bruan, in the south angle of Wick parish, and is 27 miles in length with a breadth varying from 10 to 15, and has a good road along the coast for its whole length. It contains the villages of Berriedale, Bruan, Dunbeath and Lybster, and had in 1891 a population of 5,875, against 6,675 in 1881, and its area comprised 119,539 acres; rateable value, £16,710. The parish church stands about half way between Lybster and Dunbeath, and there is also one at Lybster and four Free churches in the parish. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the second Tuesday in November, and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th July. Cattle fairs are also held at Dunbeath in March, June, August and November, dates not fixed, but usually on the second Tuesday in the month, and auction sales at Lybster. Dunbeath Castle, garrisoned by Montrose in 1650, formerly belonged to a branch of the Sinclair family, now represented by Sir John R. G. Sinclair bart. J.P. of Barrock house, Wick. Forse House is the residence of Edward William David Baird esq. The Duke of Portland G.C.V.O., P.C. is the principal landowner.

It is 11 miles from north to south and about 8 miles wide, and contains some hills (Ben Latha, 793 feet, being the highest), besides several lochs, of which Shurrery is the largest; from this flows the Forse water, the other rivers being the Reay and Sandside. THURSO is a parish, market town and burgh of barony, situate on the bay of same name, 20 miles across the county from Wick; it is the head of a poor combination and seat of a small debt court, and has a terminal station on the Highland railway. The bay, sheltered from the north-east by Dunnet Head and to the west by Holburn Head, is commodious, but near the town becomes very shallow, so that the larger vessels and steamers have to discharge and load in Scrabster Roads, about 2 miles down the west side of the bay; vessels of any burden may find shelter in the bay in all weathers. A promenade has been constructed facing the sea, at the expense of the inhabitants of the town; it is upwards of 300 yards in length. The town is situated on the left bank of the Thurso river, here crossed by an elegant stone bridge, erected in 1887, and large quantities of salmon are sometimes taken. Near the harbour are the ruins of the ancient church of St. Peter, built about the 14th century, and half a mile north-west are the remains of the old palace of the bishops, destroyed by fire in 1223, when the bishop, Gilbert de Moray, was burnt by the populace because he had displeased them in reference to tithes. The original name of Thurso, and that by which it is still called in the Gaelic language, is "Inverhorsa;" inver signifying the mouth of a river, and the latter word being a modification of "Thor," so that Thurso is "Thor's river." The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caithness. Torfaens, the Danish historian, mentions that in the beginning of the 11th century Count Moddan quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms "The Town of Caithness," and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel; he adds that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it, may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II. King of Scotland, about the year 1005 resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchanan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes in Moray, which in those times comprehended Caithness and all the northern counties of Scotland. We find, by one of the statutes of King David of Scotland, that the weights and measures of Caithness, or Thurso, were made the standards for Scotland. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair bart. as superior. The government of the burgh is vested in a provost, two bailies and six commissioners, under the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892. There is a Justice of Peace Court held every alternate Wednesday, and a Sheriff Court ten times a year. The town is well supplied with water from the Loch of Calder. There is an Established parish church, an Episcopal church, two Free churches and chapels for the Original Seceders, Reformed Presbyterians and Congregationalists. The church of the Establishment is an edifice in the Gothic style, with a tower containing a clock, presented by the late Henry Miller esq. of London, a native of Thurso. There are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland Limited, the Commercial Bank Limited, the Town and County Bank Limited, the British Linen Co. Bank and a Savings Bank. At the top of Sinclair street is an institution endowed by the late Alexander Miller esq. of Thurso, and erected for the purpose of affording education to boys. The Public Free Library and Reading Room, in the Town hall, was opened in 1872, and contains upwards of 6,000 volumes. A considerable trade is carried on in May and June in connection with the herring fishery, but the boats employed are not on a separate register, but come under that of Wick. The main export of the place consists of "Caithness pavement," an article the manufacture of which is carried on to a great extent; the peculiar excellence of this material is its durability, resistance to moisture and its retention of an unbroken surface; specimens may be seen in the Houses of Parliament, London, and many public buildings throughout the United Kingdom. Nowhere in Scotland has agricultural progress been so rapid as in Caithness. Immense tracts of heath land have been subjected to the plough, whilst many thousands of acres of bog and swamp have been drained. Dunbar's Hospital was erected at a cost of about £6,000, the necessary funds for this purpose having been bequeathed by the late Mr. Dunbar, of Scrabster; the foundation stone was laid by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh in 1881, and the building opened for the admission of patients in May, 1885; there are 12 beds for the reception of incurable persons who have not been in receipt of parochial relief, and also six cottages adjoining for the accommodation of 12 aged persons who have been in better circumstances, preference being given to natives of Thurso. The Thurso Combination Poorhouse is situated at Hal Kirk. In Sir John square stands a finely-carved ornamental stone drinking fountain, erected in 1894 by his son, the present baronet, to the memory of Sir George Sinclair bart. of Ulbster, and formerly M.P. for Caithness, d. 1868. A little to the east of the town stands Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair bart. of Ulbster, which has been greatly enlarged and modernized. Scrabster House is the seat of John Miller esq. D.L., J.P. Richard Oswald esq. one of the plenipotentiaries from the Court of St. James for settling the peace of 1783, was a native of Thurso parish, as was also the late Sir John Sinclair bart. M.P. of Ulbster, born here in 1754, and whose name is associated with the "Statistical Account of Scotland," collected and published by his exertions; he died 21 Dec. 1835, and to his memory a very elegant monument of freestone, presented to the town by the late Alexander Miller esq. has been erected on a square piece of ground fronting the Established church. The late Robert Dick, an eminent botanist and geologist, was a resident of this town, and his collection now forms an important part of the Thurso Museum. A newspaper, "The Caithness Courier," is published here weekly on Friday. A cattle market is held on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month, and the annual fairs on the second Tuesday in July and the first Friday in September. The area of the parish comprises 28,049 acres; rateable value of landward, £12,654; population in 1891, 5,838, against 6,217 in 1881; these figures include for the burgh—rateable value, £11,326; population 1891, 3,930, and population 1881, 4,055, and it contained in 1891, 799 inhabited houses.

WATTEN is a parish and a village, in Thurso poor combination and Wick small debt court district, situated about 8 miles west-north-west of Wick; the parish is bounded on the north by Bower and on the east by Wick, on the south by Latheron and on the west by Halkirk, and has a station on the Highland railway, 1 1/2 miles from the village. In the north-west part of the parish, which measures 11 miles north to south by 6 broad, there is a fine sheet of water, about 3 miles in length, called Loch Watten, from which issues a branch of the river Wick, which also receives the Acharole Strath and Curmaster Burna which flow through this parish. There are Established and Free churches, and three Board schools. Sir R. W. Anstruther bart. of Baleskirk, Fifeshire, and the Duke of Portland P.C.; G.C.V.O. of Langwell, are the principal landowners. WICK,

WITH LOUISBURGH AND PULTENEYTOWN.

WICK is a parish and royal burgh, situated on the east coast of Caithness, in Latheron poor combination, and the seat of a small debt court. The town, which is the largest in the county and in a flourishing state, is 290 miles from Edinburgh and 20 south-east from Thurso, and is one of the terminal stations of the Highland railway; it is divided into three parts, viz. Pulteneytown, Louisburgh and Wick, Wick and Louisburgh being on the north side of the river and bay and Pulteneytown (which is a separate police burgh) on the south. The old town, or rather Wick proper, is composed of the High street and Bridge street; the former runs from the bay along the curvature of the river, and is flanked on either side by several lanes.

Wick was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1529.
 The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a parliamentary burgh and the returning station at elections; it joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty in returning a member to the Imperial Parliament. The government of the town is vested in 15 councillors, from whom are chosen a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild and a treasurer; their jurisdiction, however, is confined to narrow limits, and the amount of their revenue inconsiderable, being confined to the rental of market dues and some curing stations.
 The town has a good supply of water, which is conveyed from the Yarrow Loch, the works for that purpose having been finished in 1882, at a cost of £7,500.

 The port of Wick consists of two harbours of fair dimensions, which are being greatly improved by dredging, so that the fishing fleet can enter at all states of the tide. A breakwater was constructed at a cost of about £120,000, but this magnificent erection is now no longer to be seen, having been demolished by the fearful storms which sweep across the North Sea from the north-east and spend their force upon the Caithness coast. Owing to the excessively perilous nature of the east coast fishing ground, a deep sea harbour is imperatively needed here to prevent the frequently recurring disasters which take place along the coast. The harbours, which were formerly under the care of the British Fisheries Society, were, in 1879, handed over to the Wick Harbour Trust, by special Act of Parliament.

The herring trade must be taken as the staple, and in the season commencing in July and ending in September the home fishery is prosecuted to a very large extent. From May to July the fishermen are busily engaged with the summer fishing at Stornoway and other places in the Western Hebrides. During the home fishing the population is increased by a large influx of Highlanders, men and women, who come as "hired hands." About 400 boats, manned by six men each, set sail every evening for the fishing ground, the distance to which varies from 1½ to 60 miles, and return next day. The gutting and curing of the herring gives labour to hundreds of men and women, and on a busy day the quay presents a scene both animated and picturesque. The winter herring, cod and ling fishing is carried on extensively; it brings to the town fish buyers from the principal towns in England. The value of fish exported from Wick during a year is computed at about £200,000, the benefit from which is diffused over a wide district. The railway transports the whole winter catch to the southern markets, while the vessels belonging to the port and a large contingent from other Scotch ports, and also foreign vessels, are busily engaged taking the summer fish to Dantzic, Hamburg, St. Petersburg and other places on the continent, and various ports in Ireland. The number of vessels employed in the general coasting trade that entered the port in 1898 was 1,005, of 103,237 tons; the number cleared was 947, of 100,573. In the British trade 976 entered of 97,757 tons and 968 cleared of 97,640 tons. The number of fishing boats registered at this port under Part IV. of the "Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," in 1898 was 539; aggregate tonnage, 7,706, and employing 2,972 men and boys, besides 955 extra hands. Fishing boats and their implements are to be distinguished by the letters "W. K."

The Customs collection extends from Meikle Ferry to Cape Wrath, with substations at Thurso and Helmsdale; the amount of Customs revenue collected in 1898 was £987. Different foreign states are represented by resident vice-consuls.

Ship building has entirely ceased, but the business of boat building is carried on, and with the manufacture of herring barrels and nets is the principal source of employment for the non-fishing class.

Six banks have branches here, namely, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, the Town and County Bank Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Co. and the North of Scotland Bank Limited. There is also a National Security Savings Bank, which is well supported.

The local Chamber of Commerce consists of the principal business men in the district, and meets on the first day of January and also in August every year.

Two newspapers, the "Northern Ensign" and the "John o' Great Journal," are published here every week.

There is a Justice of the Peace Court and a Sheriff's court, the former sitting on the first and third Mondays of each month, the latter every Tuesday, with power to appoint a sitting when and where required within the county.

The Free Libraries Act was adopted in the parish of Wick in 1887, and a library and reading room was opened in Union street, Pulteneytown, November 16th, 1888, but is now in Sinclair terrace; the library contains over 7,000 volumes.

The Town and County buildings, in Bridge street, are of freestone and have a turret with cupola containing a public clock. The Town Hall, a spacious apartment, contains portraits of the late Sir John Sinclair and other local celebrities, and is used both as a council room and for the meetings of the Commissioners of Supply for the county; here also are the town clerk's and other offices. The County Court House is also in Bridge street. The Temperance Hall is used for public meetings and entertainments, and will hold 1,200 persons.

There are Established churches in Wick and Pulteneytown, and one Free church in Wick and two in Pulteneytown, besides others for United Presbyterians, Independents, Evangelical Union, Baptists, Roman Catholics and Episcopalians.

Cattle markets are held at Wick on the 2nd and 4th Thursday of each month, but the ancient markets and fairs held here have been discontinued. The Caithness Agricultural Society holds an important annual cattle and sheep market at Geogemas, on second Tuesday of August, and an annual show in Aug. at Wick and Thurso alternately.

The principal residence of the Earls of Caithness was at the strong castle Girnegoe, situated about 2 miles north of Wick, on Sinclair Bay, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. Adjoining is Sinclair Castle, a structure of almost equal antiquity; and near by stands Ackergill Tower, which has been recently restored. Another interesting ruin in the vicinity is Wick Castle, known as the "Old Man of Wick," which, as well as the lighthouse on Noss Head, forms an excellent landmark to seamen. There are numerous remains of Pictish dwellings in the district; five stone coffins and a number of weapons and a collection of pottery have been found in different parts of the parish.

The principal seats are Ackergill Tower, the seat of Sir George Dufl Sutherland Dunbar bart. and Stirkeke Esq. the seat of Edward William Horne esq. D.L., J.P. The area of the parish comprises 17,264 acres; rateable value, £18,569; population in 1891, 13,105, against 12,822 in 1881; the burgh (parliamentary, including royal) rateable value, £26,843; population in 1891, 8,464, against 8,026 in 1881. The number of inhabited houses in 1891 was 1,380. The royal burgh in 1891 had a population of only 2,962, and the ecclesiastical parish, 6,513.

The number of electors on the Wick parliamentary register in 1898 was 1,130, and in the district of burghs, 2,603.

Staxigoe, Boathaven and Sarclat are suburban villages, populated principally by fishermen, and had each a separate harbour.

PULTENEYTOWN, part of the parliamentary burgh of Wick, contains the harbours, and may be reckoned the seat of the manufactures, commerce and fisheries of Wick; it was purchased when a mere waste by a society formed in London for extending British fisheries, and various means were adopted to carry out the objects of the society. In 1892 the estate of Pulteneytown was purchased from the society by Sir John Usher bart. of Norton, who is the present proprietor. Pulteneytown was in the same year created a police burgh, the government consisting of 12 commissioners, including a provost and two bailies. Pulteneytown has been from the first laid out on a settled plan, and has regular streets, squares and terraces. The cooperages, net, rope and woollen manufactories, saw mills and a distillery, employ two-thirds of the whole population. The place is supplied with water from the Loch of Hemphiggs. The Wick Public Library and Reading Room is situated in Sinclair terrace and Francis street, Pulteneytown. The Pulteneytown Academy, founded and endowed by the British Fisheries Society, is now under the control of the Burgh School Board. There are also other public schools. Population, 5,550.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland in point of size, and the twenty-sixth as regards population, is bounded on the south-west and west by the Firth of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire; and on the south-east it joins the county of Fife. Its figure, which is five-sided, and is extremely irregular, does not exceed ten miles at its greatest length, nor more than eight at its extreme breadth, and it has an area, which in 1891 was increased by the addition of the parish of Alva, of about 55 square miles, or 35,160 statute acres. The population, including Alva, in 1891 was 16,058 males and 17,599 females, total 33,657; against 30,641 in 1881. Inhabited houses, 6,910, against 6,299 in 1881.

Anciently the whole of the valuable territory lying between the rivers Forth and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil Hills, was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided among the shires of Fife, Kinross and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the town of Culross. Among the ancient structures of the county are three old towers; one of them, near Clackmannan, is said to have been erected by Robert Bruce; another, contiguous to Tillicoultry, is supposed from its similarity of architecture to have been built by the same person, or about the same period; the third, or the Alloo tower, is more particularly noticed in the description of that town. At Dollar are the ruins of Castle Campbell, standing on a lofty eminence, which are also particularised in the description of the village.

Soil, Climate &c.—From the shores of the Forth the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil Hills, the highest of which, Benclough, attains the height of 2,360 feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts adjacent to the Forth are rich, arable, and beautifully enclosed.

Manufactures, Produce &c.—The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings, tartans, &c. has been for many years established in the parishes of Tillicoultry and Alva with complete success, and the towns belonging to them have become thriving places in consequence, and furnish employment to many hundreds of persons. At Alloo and Clackmannan wool spinning is carried on very extensively, the former place being likewise noted for the excellence of the ale brewed there and also for the distillation of whisky. Throughout the whole county coal is worked, and at various times valuable ores of silver, lead, copper &c. have been found in the Ochils. The produce of coal in 1897 was 341,798 tons, valued at £98,267, and fireclay was extracted to the extent of 3,771 tons, valued at £566; other minerals raised was basalt 7,200 tons, and sandstone 12,000 tons. The chief crops, as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain, 1898," were—oats, 3,064 acres; beans, 488 acres; barley or bere, 428 acres; wheat, 355 acres; the total corn crops being 4,337 acres; turnips and swedes, 795 acres; potatoes, 327 acres; total green crops, 1,166 acres; hay, 2,379 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 1,903 acres; permanent pasture, 5,678 acres. Total area of land and water, 35,160 acres, of which, 11,650 are mountain and heath, 2,968 woods and 58 plantations. Of live stock there were 678 horses; 4,124 cattle; 14,672 sheep and 1,901 pigs. There is a small fishery industry, 30 boats of an aggregate of 257 tons, and employing 60 men and boys, being registered at Alloo, December 31, 1898.

Rivers, Railways &c.—Besides the Forth the county is watered by two other streams, namely, the Devon and the Black Devon, and there is one large loch, Gartmore. Four branch railways centre at Alloo, one coming from the south-west from Larbert, on the Caedonian line, another from the south-west from Dunfermline, via Clackmannan; a third proceeding to the north-east, passing through Tillicoultry and Dollar to Kinross, and the fourth which runs direct east to Stirling, with a branch to Alva. These three latter lines belong to the North British railway.

This shire contains five parishes and two portions of parishes; its only towns are Alloo, Clackmannan, Dollar, Tillicoultry and Alva. The county possesses neither royal nor parliamentary burghs, but it unites with Kinross-shire in returning one member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency in 1898 was 6,274. The valuation of the county for 1897-8, which includes the addition of Alva, was £157,078.

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE COUNTIES OF CLACKMANNAN & KINROSS.

ALLOA.

ALLOA, a town of considerable commercial importance, the leading one of the county, and in Stirling poor combination, is 30 miles north-west from Edinburgh, 32 south-west from Perth, 7 east from Stirling, 6 south-west from Dollar, 3 west from Clackmannan and 10 north from Falkirk. The North British railway has a junction here of lines to Stirling, Dunfermline, Kinross and Kincardine, the line crossing the river by a bridge constructed in 1882, which is opened for traffic of vessels. The word "Alloa" is supposed to be a corruption of the Celtic words "Aull waeg," signifying the way to the sea, or the seaway. It is situated on the north bank of the river Forth, at the point where the river ends and the Frith begins. At this spot, and for 10 miles above it, the water is deep enough to admit vessels with 10 to 11 feet draft. The quay stretches along the bank, and large vessels or steamboats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, to the great convenience of passengers, and this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. A dock was constructed in 1863, which is 600 feet long and 195 feet broad, with 21 feet depth of water on the sill. Till 1854 Alloa was a burgh of barony, under the management of trustees, but in February of that year the inhabitants adopted the Burgh and Police Act, and in 1863 the Commissioners under that Act unanimously adopted the General Police (Scotland) Act of 1862, known as "Lindsay's Act." The burgh of Alloa is now governed by a board of 12 commissioners, constituted agreeably to the provisions of the above Act, one of them acting as chief and two of them as junior magistrates. An ordinary meeting is held on the second Monday in each month, and statutory meetings on the second Monday of the months of January, April, July and October. The ordinary and small debt courts for the county are held weekly, a sheriff court twice a week, and a justice of the peace court at stated periods, and fairs court annually.

The town is supplied with gas, the Alloa Gas Works, which were up to 1887 in the possession of a private company, being now the property of the Commissioners, having been acquired at a cost of £23,250. Until 1822 the town was very badly supplied with water, but in that year a supply was obtained from a large artificial loch, known as Gartmorn Dam, which covers 160 acres of ground; and in 1867, the supply being again inadequate, two large filtering beds were constructed in addition; the total cost of the water works up to the present time is £30,000.

The parish church, erected at a cost of £8,000, and opened 24 June, 1819, has a tower with spire, containing a bell and clock presented by the Earl of Mar: the church was renovated in 1895. St. Andrew's church, in Mar place, an edifice in the Early English style, was opened 26 Nov. 1852. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, a Baptist chapel, the Episcopalian church of St. John the Evangelist, erected in 1869, and having a tower with a peal of bells, a Roman Catholic church, and one for Swedeborgians. At the east end of the town a cemetery has been laid out, covering an area of six acres.

The County Court House, in Mar street, a building in the Flemish style, erected at a cost of £8,700, was opened Dec. 8, 1865. The Corn Exchange, in High street, used also as a public hall, was built in 1862, at a cost of £1,150, and is the property of a joint-stock company; the corn market has been discontinued. The Archaeological Museum and Hall, in Bedford place, erected in 1874, at a cost of about £2,000, contains a collection of antiquities, a library and meeting room, and is also used for public meetings. The Burgh school occupies the site of the Old Assembly Rooms and Parochial school; it was built at a cost of about £5,000 and opened in 1876, and will hold 600 scholars. In Greenside street is the Paton school, erected in 1865 from a trust fund left by the late Alexander Paton esq. of Cowden Park, for educational purposes, and suitably endowed, but is at present (April, 1899) closed. The Greenside chapel was built by D. Paton esq. and placed by him under trustees for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association. The Municipal buildings, in Bank street, erected in 1872, at a cost of about £4,000, are in the Classic style. Adjacent to these is the Post Office, a building in a similar style, opened 13 Nov. 1882. The Town Hall and Free Library, in Mars hill and Church street, was the gift of John Thomson Paton esq. of Norwood, and is a structure in the Gothic style, designed by Mr. Alfred Waterhouse K.A. of London, the large hall being capable of holding 1,000 people. Mr. Paton has also presented an organ, at a cost of about £1,700, and given £1,000 for the founding of the library, the ratepayers having adopted the Free Libraries' Act, 22 June, 1886; the building also contains two reading rooms and reference and lending libraries, with 10,276 volumes.

The Public Baths and Gymnasium, in Primrose street, erected 1895-8, is a building of stone in the Scottish style, and was also the gift of John Thomson Paton esq. J.P.; it comprises five distinct departments, consisting of swimming bath, plunge baths, Turkish and Russian baths and gymnasium and billiard room. The swimming bath hall has a spectators' gallery, holding 500, on three sides over the dressing boxes; the bath itself is 75 feet long by 32 feet wide and from 3 to 7 feet deep.

Alloa has an increasing trade. In 1871 an Act was obtained giving powers for the construction of new works, and under these powers the Harbour Trustees greatly extended the dock, and also obtained a powerful steam dredger. The harbour has now been acquired by the North British Railway. Beside the brewing and yarn trades, for which the town is so noted, many other articles of industry are produced. There are several foundries (iron, copper and brass), extensive bottle works, a pottery (to which has been added a department for glass engraving), machine works, cooperages, saw mills, a dry dock, brick and tile manufactories and a dye-wood works. The collieries around Alloa are very numerous, and the export trade of the port depends to a large extent upon them. In 1897, 50,670 tons of coal was shipped from this port; in 1898, 579 foreign vessels, aggregating 115,739 tons, were entered inwards, and 635, aggregating 126,403 tons, were cleared outwards. In the same year 339 British ships entered, 61,235 tons, and 421 cleared, 75,173 tons; there were also 425 coasting vessels, 67,542 tons, entered inwards, and 386, 54,772 tons, cleared outwards. There is a small fishing trade, 30 boats of an aggregate tonnage of 257, and employing 50 men and boys, were registered at Alloa, Dec. 31, 1898, under the "Merchant Shipping Act, 1894." Fishing boats and their implements are to be marked with letters A. A. Large quantities of whisky are manufactured here, and the quantity of ale brewed here exceeds that of any other town in Scotland. The exports comprise ale, whisky, glass bottles, coals, wool and woollen goods; the imports are timber, oak bark, hides, butter, cheese and large supplies of grain for malting. Communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns of the Forth is afforded by steamboats throughout the year, and the ferry steamboat crosses every hour to South Alloa, on the opposite side of the Forth, to the terminus of a branch of the Caledonian railway. A free shipping tidal port is formed at this part of the Forth through the great depth of water, together with the facility of railway transit. The Clackmannan County Hospital, founded, Oct. 1868, mainly through the liberality of the late Earl of Kellie, is designed for the medical and surgical treatment of persons in the county of Clackmannan suffering from disease or accident; it is under the management of a committee, who are annually appointed from the subscribers, and is supported by voluntary subscriptions. A new building, the gift of Miss Forrester Paton, was erected in 1898-9, at a cost of £10,000. The Clackmannanshire Combination Fever Hospital, situated to the north of the town, near Sauchie, was erected in 1895, and has 36 beds, but is available for 50 patients if necessary. The Alloa Day Home, formerly a ragged school, was instituted 29 Jan. 1884, to aid in securing the elementary education of poor and neglected children in Alloa, by providing superintendence and one or more meals a day: since 1894 the children have been educated at the Ludgate school. There are four schools under the School Board, viz.: the Burgh school, the Sunnyside school, the Ludgate school, and the Academy, besides which there are also Roman Catholic and Episcopal schools, and the Paton Endowed school previously mentioned. In 1894 a secondary department was established in the Academy, and a new building, the gift of A. P. Forrester Paton esq. was opened in 1897; it is thoroughly complete, and the curriculum is intended to meet the requirements of the leaving certificate of the Scotch Educational Department, in the lower, higher and honours grades, and also the preliminary examination of the Scottish Universities; two laboratories for science work, and chemistry and physics are attached. In the town are branch establishments of the Clydesdale Bank Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, the National Bank of Scotland Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland Limited and the Royal Bank of Scotland, together with a bank for savings. Four newspapers are published in Alloa weekly—the "Advertiser," the "Circular," the "Journal," and the "Weekly News." In winter three curling clubs meet on their respective ponds.

The town is extending principally to the north, at Greenfield and Claremont, and eastward along the Clackmannan road. Villas are also rising to the west in rapid succession. Norwood, the residence of J. Thomson Paton esq. J.P. is a mansion in the Scottish Baronial style; Arnsbrae House is the residence of James Younger esq. J.P.; Ingiewood, on the Tullibouy road, is the residence of Alexander Paton Forrester Paton esq. J.P.; Greenfield House of David Thomson esq. J.P.; and Schaw Park of Col. John B. Harvey J.P. In 1877 land was acquired by the Commissioners, as a feu from the Earl of Mar and Kellie, which has been laid out as a public park. It extends over 20 acres, is triangular in shape, and generally level, with the exception of a slight elevation at the north-east corner; it was opened on the 1st May, 1878.

Alloa, in its immediate neighbourhood, presents scenery at once beautiful, bold and picturesque. On the north side is the range of the Ochil hills, covered with verdure to their very summits, and which are, perhaps, unrivalled in Scottish landscape; whilst the south displays the Forth with Stirling Castle on the west, and the Alloa and Clackmannan Towers on the east. The noble and ancient family of Erskine, Earls of Mar, have long been the proprietors of this place. They forfeited the earldom by their participation in the rebellion of 1715, but the title and privileges were restored in June, 1824; and in 1885, in order to remove doubts as to whether the ancient dignity of Mar had not been by some means surrendered or merged in the Crown, an Act of Parliament was passed confirming the old title to the present Earl of Mar, as fully as if no such supposed surrender had taken place. Alloa Tower, anciently the residence of the Erskine family, was a quadrangular building, destroyed by fire in 1800, and the square tower now standing is all that remains of the ancient structure, though it is still a place of great strength. The walls are 11 feet thick, and the highest turret is 89 feet. It was built by the sovereigns of Scotland previous to the 13th century, and is a stately remnant of feudal grandeur. The beautiful and unfortunate Mary here spent a portion of her youth and maturity; her son James also passed many of his youthful days in this place, under the care of John, 17th Earl of Mar, and his son, Prince Henry, received a part of his education in this building under the celebrated George Buchanan. The prospect from the summit is beautiful and extensive. The Tower is now uninhabited. Alloa House, now the residence of the Earl of Mar and Kellie, who is the holder, not of the ancient title, but of an Earldom of Mar said to have been conferred in 1565, stands a short distance eastward from the Tower, and was erected in 1834, but has since been much added to and improved. Alloa market was formerly held on Saturday, but is now discontinued. Cattle fairs are held on the second Wednesday in February, May, August and November, all new style; and a hiring fair on the second Saturday in October. The parish of Alloa is in the presbytery of Stirling, and embraces an area of 5,499 statute acres; rateable value, landward £30,567, burghal £51,938; with a population in 1871 of 9,940, and in 1881 of 11,628, the burgh at the latter period containing 8,812; in 1891, population of the parish was 15,862, and in the burgh, 10,754; the inhabited houses being 2,347, against 2,051 in 1881.

Cambus is a small village, situated on the Forth, in the old parish of Tullibody, 2 miles west from Alloa and 5 from Stirling. It is also a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British railway, and the branch line to Alva here joins the main line. The river Devon at this point discharges itself into the Forth, and there is a pier where small vessels are enabled to discharge and load. Brewing and distilling are extensively carried on here.

Tullibody parish was united to that of Alloa about the time of the Reformation, and the village is situated 2 miles west from that town. The nearest railway station is at Cambus, as above. The ancient kirk of Tullibody, the date of which is 1549, was unroofed under circumstances of a peculiar character. In the year 1553 the roof was made to serve the purpose of a bridge across the Devon for the French troops when they retreated before the English. The church continued in a dismantled condition for upwards of two centuries, when it was again covered in by George Abercrombie esq. of Tullibody, and services are now held in it. There is also a Free church, erected in 1845, adjoining the old kirk. Tullibody House, the property of Lord Abercromby D.L., J.P. is now the residence of Mrs. Forrester. Population in 1881, 694; in 1891, 686; the rateable value is included with that of Alloa.

ALVA.

ALVA, a thriving burgh in the parish of same name, Stirling poor combination and small debt court district of Alloa, is a station on the Alva branch of the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British railway, 7 miles north-east from Stirling, 3 1/2 north from Alloa, 2 west from Tillicoultry and 5 west from Dollar; situated at the foot of the Ochils, whence issues a stream that turns several mills, and forms, in its course through the romantic Glen of Alva, three beautiful cataracts. The largest of these falls issues from an aperture in the rock above and tumbles from a height of 40 feet in one unbroken mass into a naturally formed basin below. An excellent pathway has been formed through the glen. This parish, formerly connected judiciously with Stirlingshire and physically with Clackmannanshire, has been enlarged by the Boundary Commissioners of Scotland to nearly double its former size, and is now wholly situated in the county of Clackmannan. It affords excellent pasture, is well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, such as silver, copper, iron and lead. Sir John Erskine, of Alva, about the year 1715, assisted by some miners from Leadhills, discovered a very rich vein of silver in a romantic glen, about midway between Alva House and the town; some of it was so rich that 14 ounces of ore yielded 12 ounces of silver, and during the space of a little more than three months it is said that ore was obtained from which Sir John drew from £40,000 to £50,000. After this was exhausted the ore became scarce, and hence the enterprise was abandoned. In the year 1767, Lord Alva, nephew to Sir John Erskine, caused a pair of communion cups to be made, for the use of the church of Alva, from some of the remains of that ore then in his possession. On these the following inscription is engraved: "Sacris in Ecclesia S. Servani, apud Alveth, A.D., MDCCLXVII., ex argento, indigena, D.D.Cq.—Jacobus Erskine."

The manufacture of woollen goods, consisting of shawls, tweeds, tartans &c. is carried on in the town and its neighbourhood very extensively, and numerous hands find busy employment in the different mills; these, with their tall chimneys, exhibit an interesting contrast with the lofty Ochils and the surrounding plain. In 1876 the inhabitants adopted the Police and Improvement (1862) Act, and in 1880 the Burgh Gas Supply (1876) Act. The Town Hall, a plain structure erected about 1840 by public subscription, and enlarged in 1871, will accommodate about 1,000 persons. In the town is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland Limited, and there is also a Savings Bank. In 1874 Public Baths and Washhouses were erected at the west end of the town, at a cost of about £4,000, the gift of the late Laird of Alva, James Johnstone esq. who also, about the same time, presented the inhabitants with a public park; and in 1873 a tastefully laid out cemetery was provided by the Parochial Board. The House of Alva, the residence of the Johnstone family, stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Woodhill, about 220 feet above the bed of the Devon, which flows westward to join the Forth in the valley below, and 1,400 feet below the apex of the mountain. From the summit, which rises to an elevation of 1,770 feet above the sea level, the eye sweeps over an immense range of picturesque scenery, stretching from the German Ocean on the east to the Campsie Hills on the west, and including the Lammermoor Chain, the Bass Rock, Edinburgh, Arthur's Seat, the Pentland Hills, and the lovely windings of the Forth. The most interesting object, from an antiquarian point of view, is the well of St. Serf, or "Servanns," the tutelary saint of the district, which is situated in the minister's glebe at a little distance from the parish church.

There are Established, Free, United Presbyterian and Baptist churches. The parish church originally built in 1631, retains a stone in the west side of the church bearing a coat of arms with this date above it: in 1815 it was wholly rebuilt, and in 1854 it was considerably extended at the cost of the late James Johnstone esq.; the belfry contains one bell, with the inscription:—"They who me giveth are David Johnkin; William Bell to Alva Kirk; ours'd he that wretch who me perverteth from sacred use or else doth sell. Anno 1633." Miss C. E. M. Johnstone, of Alva House, is lady of the manor and sole proprietress of the land. Alva parish is in the presbytery of Stirling, and contains an area of 5,458 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 5,113, the burgh containing 4,961 of that number; the rateable value, landward £9,336, burghal £11,883; in 1891 the population was 5,360, the burgh containing 5,225, and 1,112 inhabited houses, against 1,009 in 1881.

CLACKMANNAN,

WITH THE HAMLET OF KENNET.

CLACKMANNAN, the capital of the county and pari-h of that name, in Stirling poor combination and small debt court district of Alloa, was at one period a town of some consequence, but since the improvement of Alloa, and the superior facilities for commerce possessed by that place, it has sunk into comparative insignificance. The name is probably derived from the Gaelic "Clachan-Mannan," i.e. the stone circle or hamlet of the district called "Mannan." It is 32 miles north-west from Edinburgh, 10 east from Stirling and 2 south-east from Alloa, situated on an eminence gently rising to a height of nearly 200 feet above the level of the Forth. It has two stations on branches of the North British railway. The surrounding scenery is very fine, and is viewed to great advantage from Clackmannan Tower, which occupies a commanding site a little west of the town. Tradition states that this tower was built by King Robert Bruce, close to which he had his palace, not a vestige of which latter now remains. The tower is 80 feet high, and contains a variety of apartments, reached by means of a newel stair. The sword and helmet of Bruce were formerly kept in the tower, but in 1796 they were bequeathed to the late Earl of Elgin by the widow of Henry Bruce, of Clackmannan, and are now preserved at Broomhall, Fifeshire. This venerable lady, who was a devoted adherent of the Stewarts, with the sword of King Robert in her hands, was wont to assume the privilege of conferring knighthood, and when Burns the bard visited her he was honoured in this way, the old lady observing that "she had a better right to make knights than 'some folks.'" She died at the advanced age of 95 years. In the centre of the town is a square tower, and a portion of the west gable of an old building, which was formerly the county court-house and gaol. It was fast going to ruin, but in 1865 was restored and furnished with a new clock having transparent dials, through the liberality of the late Francis

Horne esq. and is now an ornament to the town. Close to the tower is the market cross, which is in a good state of preservation; near it is a whinstone, upon which King Robert Bruce is represented to have frequently sat. To save this stone from spoliation, a number of gentlemen were at the expense of placing it on a stone pillar 10 or 12 feet high. A public hall capable of accommodating 450 persons was erected in 1888, at a cost of about £1,500. The principal trade of Clackmannan is that derived from the coal mines worked by the Clackmannan Coal Co. which find employment for a large number of the inhabitants. A large woollen factory, employing about 200 hands, has been erected near the river Devon by Messrs. John Paton, Son and Co. of Alloa. Tun and vat building is also carried on here, and at Kilbagie, a short distance from the town, is a paper mill. The soil of the parish in the carse is considered the richest arable in the shire, and under the best state of cultivation. Kennet House, the residence of Lord Balfour of Burleigh P.C., M.A., D.L., J.P. a short distance east from Clackmannan, is a fine modern mansion occupying a commanding site. There are two ports, one at Clackmannan and the other at Kennetpans, where coals are extensively shipped. Clackmannan has a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline branch and another on the Alloa and Kincardine branch of the North British railway, both which lines pass close to the town. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church and one for United Presbyterians. The first mentioned, erected in 1814, at an expense of £4,500, is a spacious and handsome structure, accommodating 1,200 persons. The Marquess of Zetland P.C. who is lord of the manor, Lord Balfour of Burleigh P.C. the Earl of Mar and Kellie (lord-lieutenant), and John Hutcheson Kerr esq. of Harviestoun Castle, Dollar, are the principal landowners. The parish of Clackmannan is in the presbytery of Stirling. Acreage, 9,427; rateable value, landward, £5,129; burghal, £8,293; population of the parish in 1881, 4,518; of the town, 1,503; in 1891, parish, 5,072; town, 1,807; ecclesiastical parish, 2,931; inhabited houses in town, 313.

Kennet is a hamlet in this parish. Post, Telegraph & Money Order Office & Savings Bank; Miss Mary Wilson, sub-postmistress. Letters through Alloa. DOLLAR.

DOLLAR is a burgh and parish in Stirling poor combination and in the small debt court district of Alloa, situated at the base of the Ochil hills, near the eastern extremity, on the road from Stirling to Kinross, 8 miles north from Clackmannan, 7 north-east from Alloa, 12 north-east from Stirling and 12 south-west from Kinross; it has a station on the Devon Valley branch of the North British railway. The climate is very mild and salubrious. The burgh is under the control of a provost, two bailies and six commissioners. A great proportion of the importance of this place is to be ascribed to its Academy, which was erected and endowed by the munificent bequest of John Macnab, a native of the parish, who, though originally a herd boy, acquired by industry and perseverance a large fortune. He died in January, 1802. By his last will he directed that one half of that fortune (about £90,000) should be vested in the public funds, or some such security, in order that it might yield an annual income "for the endowment of a Charity or School for the Poor of the Parish of Dollar." The bequest was made to the minister and elders of the parish, for the time being, as trustees. The sum thus bequeathed so far exceeded the requirements of the case that the trustees wisely laid the foundations of the institution on a broader basis. After a protracted litigation in Chancery a very handsome edifice was erected in 1819, and masters appointed to give a classical and modern education. The building, designed by Mr. W. H. Playfair, architect, and to which extensive additions have subsequently been made, is in the Classic style, with a pedimented portico, supported by six massive columns of the Doric order. In the centre of the building is a large hall, containing a library of upwards of 6,000 volumes, lent to pupils and residents in Dollar free of charge. The number of pupils at the present time (1899) is about 400, a considerable portion being boarders from various parts of the United Kingdom. Many pupils have risen to eminent positions in life. The scheme of education is regulated so as to prepare either for the universities, for commercial pursuits, or for civil engineering, and the general administration of the institution is carried out in accordance with a scheme prepared under the Education Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882. There are separate departments for boys and girls. Bursaries of various amounts are awarded annually by competitive examination. The Board of Governors consists of 11 representatives—viz., one elected by the minister and kirk session of the parish of Dollar; two by the County Council of Clackmannan; one by the County Council of Kinross; three by the School Board of Dollar; one by the Senatus of Edinburgh University; one by the Senatus of St. Andrew's University; one by the School Boards of Alloa burgh and Tillicoultry, alternately; and one by the School Boards of Clackmannan and Alva, alternately. The session commences in September and closes at the beginning of July; the principal is George Thom M.A., LL.D. There are also board schools and private educational establishments, for younger children, which prepare pupils for the course of instruction at the institution.

There are Established, Free, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian churches. The parish church was erected in 1841, and is a neat edifice with a square tower rising from the main gable. There is a commodious Mission Hall. There is a branch of the Clydesdale Bank Limited, and also extensive bleach works, the property of William J. Haig esq. J.P. About a mile from the village are the venerable ruins of Castle Campbell, once one of the chief residences of the Campbell family, Dukes of Argyll, and captured in 1645 by the Marquis of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock, and in the hill itself is a remarkable chasm, called "Kemp's Score," which still bears some marks of a stair. Originally called "Castis Gloom," the name was changed by Act of Parliament in 1489 to its present designation. The view from the top of the ruins is singularly beautiful and extensive. Though the castle stands upon an eminence, it is surrounded on all sides, except the south, by some of the loftiest of the Ochil hills, which rear their summits to a height of over 2,000 feet above the sea level. The name of John Knox, the Scottish reformer, is intimately associated with Castle Campbell, and a ruined archway, formerly one of the out-works of the castle, is popularly, though erroneously, known as "John Knox's pulpit." In 1864, by permission of the late Sir Andrew Orr, then proprietor of the estate, a new footpath, making access to the ruins more easy, was constructed at a cost of £300, and opened in May, 1865. It is fully a mile and a half in length, and affords views of several fine waterfalls. Half-yearly fairs are held here on the second Monday in May and third Monday in Oct. The parish of Dollar, which has an area of 4,773 acres, is bounded on the north by Glendevon, on the east by Muckart and Fossoway, and on the west by Tillicoultry; a portion of this parish forms ecclesiastically a part of the quoad sacra parish of Blairingone; rateable value, burghal, £8,293; landward, £5,129; in 1881 it contained a population of 2,500, and in 1891, 2,221; ecclesiastical parish, 2,176; there were 468 inhabited houses in 1891, against 519 in 1881. The principal landowners in the parish are William H. Dobie, of Dollarbeg; William J. Haig, of Dollarfield; Mrs. Millar, of Sheardale House; J. Hutcheson Kerr, of Harviestoun, and James McArthur Moir, of Hillfoot.

MENSTRIE is a village, situated at the base of the Ochil hills, on the road from Stirling to Dollar, 5 miles north-east from the former, 5 east from Bridge of Allan and 2 west from Alva, in the small debt court district of Alloa, and having a station on the Alloa and Alva branch of the North British railway; it was originally in the parish of Logie (Stirlingshire), but on the transfer of Alva parish from Stirling to Clackmannanshire, this village was, by Boundary Order No. 124, transferred into Alva parish, where it still continues for civil purposes. The Established church here was erected in 1837 and the parish was then constituted a quoad sacra parish. There is also a United Presbyterian church. Here is a large distillery. The County Council are constructing a reservoir here, at a cost of over £16,000, for supplying the villages of Tullibody, Cambus, Fish Cross and Upper Sauchie with water. An old house in the village is pointed out as having been the birth-place of Sir William Alexander kt. statesman and poet during the reign of James VI. subsequently created by Charles I. Viscount Canada, and first Earl of Stirling, at the coronation of Charles I. at Holyrood, in consideration of his services and of having been the founder of the colony of Nova Scotia; the estates at a subsequent period passed into the possession of the Abercrombie family, and here in 1738 was born Maj.-Gen. Sir Ralph Abercromby K.B. who died of wounds received at Alexandria, Egypt, 28th March, 1801, his widow being subsequently raised to the peerage as Baroness Abercromby of Aboukir and Tullibodie. Lord Abercromby D.L., J.P. is the principal landowner. The population in 1891 was 1,006, and in 1881, 918; realisable value, £5,755.

SAUCHIE (New and Old) are populous villages immediately contiguous to each other, in the parishes of Alloa and Clackmannan, nearly 2 miles north of Alloa, on the road to Alva, with a station locally in Fishcross, on the Stirling and Kinross branch of the North British railway. There is an Established church here, which was built in the year 1844, and the district is now formed into a quoad sacra parish. A number of colliers, employed by the Alloa Coal Company, reside in these villages, and there is a Sunday school for their children, maintained by an endowment known as Lady Charlotte Erskine's.

Fishcross is a village adjoining Sauchie to the east, and contains Sauchie railway station and a United Presbyterian church.

Holton is a hamlet at the other end of the district.

In the three villages of Sauchie, New Sauchie and Fishcross, the population in 1891 was 2,373, and in the quoad sacra parish of Sauchie, 3,370.

TILlicOUNTRY, WITH COALSNAUGHTON.

TILlicOUNTRY is a parish and police burgh, in Stirling poor combination and in the small debt court district of Alloa, on the road from Stirling to Kinross, south-east of the Ochil hills, 5 miles north-east of Alloa, 2 east of Alva, 9 north-east from Stirling and 13 south-west from Kinross, with a station on the Stirling and Kinross branch of the North British railway, half a mile distant from the town. Ben Clach, the loftiest of the Ochil range, rises to 2,369 feet above the sea level, a few miles to the north of the town, and the view from the summit of this mountain is one of the most extensive in Scotland, stretching from the German Ocean on the east, to Goat Fell, in the Isle of Arran, on the west, and including the Lammermoor Chain, the Bass Rock, Edinburgh, Arthur's Seat, the Pentland Hills and the river Forth. The Devon river winds along the north border of and through the parish. The inhabitants adopted the "Police and Improvement Act (1862)" in 1871, and the town is governed by a provost, two bailies and six commissioners; it is well supplied with water from a stream which comes from the hills to the north of the village. The name of the parish is supposed to be derived from the Gaelic, "Tullich-Cnt-Tiz," signifying the hill at the back of the land. The town is rapidly rising into a place of considerable importance from the woollen manufactures established here, and likewise at Devon-side, chiefly for making shawls, fancy plaids, clan tartans, tweeds &c.; in these branches the town and its neighbourhood furnish employment to a large number of the inhabitants. The parish abounds in coal, and the hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals, and about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London company; but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank Limited and the Union Bank of Scotland Limited are established in the town. In 1878 the late James Archibald esq. presented to the Commissioners the sum of £1,500 for the erection of a tower and spire to the Poplar Institute, which is situate on the north side of the town, to which have now been added an illuminated clock and bell. An orphanage was founded by the liberality of the late James Paton esq. who bequeathed £5,000 towards the endowment of such an institution. The building, which is situated at the north side of the town, was opened on the 21st March, 1879, and is capable of accommodating 30 inmates. The principal antiquities are the ruins of a circular building on a steep and rugged basaltic eminence which rises to the north of the town, and the remains of a Druidical circle on the south end of a rising ground lying to the east of it, called Cunnighar. In 1862 two urns, each about 18 inches in diameter and the same in height, containing human bones, were found in making excavations within this circle; and again in 1894 a very complete grave of the Stone period containing a food urn. There is a church of the Establishment, Free and United Presbyterian churches, a Baptist church, and others for the Evangelical Union and the Congregationalists. Board schools were erected in the centre of the H.g. street, in 1875, at a cost of about £3,000. The principal landowners in the parish are Robert G. Wardlaw Ramsay esq. J.P. of Tillicoultry house; John Hutcheson Kerr esq. of Harviestoun; and Charles Blair esq. of Glenfoot.

Coalsnaughton is a small hamlet in the parish of and about a mile from Tillicoultry, and has a United Presbyterian church and Board schools, erected in 1873. The population in 1891 was 888.

Devonside is a hamlet in the parish. Population in 1891, 687.

The parish of Tillicoultry is in the presbytery of Dunblane, and comprises an area of 6,946 acres; rateable value, burghal, £11,247; landward, £7,880; in 1891 it had a population of 6,635, the burgh containing 3,939, and 927 inhabited houses.

DUMBAR T O N S H I R E,

ANCIENTLY designated Lennox, and subsequently Dunbarton shire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. From Inver-snanon Hotel, Perthshire, in the north, it runs trending eastwards from near Dumbarton to Maryhill, a little north of Glasgow, being a length of 39 miles, by a breadth varying from 2 miles at Arro-char, between Lochs Long and Lomond, to 9 between Dumbarton and Kilmarnock; its boundaries are, north, Argyllshire and Perth-shire, west Loch Long, south the Clyde, east and north-east Stirlingshire and Loch Lomond; the parishes of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling. This severed portion of the county is twelve miles long by from two to four and a half broad, and was annexed to the district in the reign of Robert I. The entire shire embraces an area of 267 square miles, or 170,762 acres. The population of the county in 1891 consisted of 46,930 males and 47,565 females; total, 94,495, and in 1851 of 75,333; the number of inhabited houses in 1891 was 18,309. In point of size this county stands as the twenty-eighth, and in population as the tenth.

Name and Early History.—In ancient times the name of the shire was "Levanach," signifying "the county of Leven," which was corrupted in the course of years to "Levenax," and more latterly to "Lennox." Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the "Attacottie" or "Eithacacti," a word importing "dwellers along the extremity of the wood." The descendants of this people were not enslaved or expelled from their hunting grounds by the Romans, who erected a wall or dyke from near Dunglass Point, in this county, to the Firth of Forth, some remains of which can be traced at Cumbernauld and in the town of Kirkintilloch; they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde, and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbar-tonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying "the hill of the Britons." This region, until the early part of last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior, and were finally extirpated or reduced to quiescence and subordination only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom, called Alwyn, the son of Arkil, was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion, and his descendants for several centuries were at once heritable sheriffs of the county and chief possessors of its lands. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1672, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, developed upon Charles II. as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

Soil, Produce &c.—The soil is various, consisting in the north and west of mountain and moor, and south and east of Loch Lomond of deep black loam, clay, gravel and loess and peat. The climate generally is good, along the vale of the Leven and the Clyde it is mild, but on the Kilpatrick Braes and among the mountains of Arrochar and Luss the cold is rather severe, and stormy weather is experienced. A large part of the county is planted with wood, the soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber. The chief crops, as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain, 1898," are oats, 8,896 acres; wheat, 1,123; the total corn crops being 8,426 acres; potatoes, 2,308 acres; turnips and swedes, 1,503; total green crops, 4,172 acres; hay, 8,690 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 8,684; permanent pasture, 21,506 acres. Total area of land and water, 170,762 acres, of which 74,446 are mountain and heath, 8,514 woods and 258 plantations. The live stock in 1898 comprised 1,496 horses, used solely for agriculture and brood mares; unbroken horses, 360; cows and heifers in milk or in calf, 8,555; other cattle, 6,756; ewes kept for breeding, 32,161; other sheep, 46,126; sows kept for breeding, 218; other pigs, 1,371. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the county. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved of late years. A century has elapsed since the manufacturing industry was introduced into this part of Scotland—bleachfields about that period making their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven. About 1768 the first printworks were established on the Leven, but now calico printing and Turkey-red dyeing are very extensively pursued at several places. Ship building, both iron and wood, is a branch of some importance, as is also the manufacture of chemicals. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous minerals, but it has some sandstone, limestone, coal, iron ore and basalt. The production in 1897 was fire clay, 30,082 tons, value £4,888; brick clay, 62,699 tons, value £1,949; coal, 499,975 tons, value £139,576; iron ore, 60,008 tons, value £24,003; limestone, 12,811 tons, value £2,562 and basalt, 74,992 tons, value £22,534.

Mountains, Lakes, Railways &c.—Of hills, most of which lie in the northern part of the county, between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, the chief are those of Arrochar, Luss, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough, and abound with moors, mosses and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are of much less height, Ben Voirlich, adjoining Perthshire, having the greatest altitude, rising 3,300 feet above the level of the sea. The other principal elevations are Ben Vane, 3,004 feet; Ben Eich, 2,302 feet; Ben Breach, 2,233 feet; Ben Reoch, 2,168 feet; and Tullich, 2,075 feet. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amidst the clouds; some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton Castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs, among which are Loch Long and Loch Gare, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive is that of Loch Lomond. It lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque. On Inch Calloch (or the island of Nuns) are the remains of a conventual church, and on Inch Murrins (or the island of St. Murrinus, two miles long, and converted into a deer park) are the ruins of a house once belonging to the Lennox family. This Loch is thirty miles long, in some places eight broad, and covers a surface of 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms. It abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district. The Forth and Clyde Canal, about 35 miles in length, extends from Bowling on the Clyde to Grangemouth on the Forth. The North British railway enters the county from Glasgow, a little west of Maryhill, throwing off a branch to Bearsden and Mingsavie, and continuing on to Dumbarton, where it divides, one branch going north to Balloch on Loch Lomond and north-east to Drymen, the other passing on to Helensburgh, where it joins the West Highland line; this latter runs by Garelochhead, Arrochar and Ardlui (head of Loch Lomond) to Fort William; the two detached parishes of Kirkintilloch and Cumbernauld, lying north-east of Glasgow, are traversed by the North British and the Caledonian railways, and the last named have also commenced to make a new line by the north of the Clyde to Dumbarton &c.

Divisions, Representation &c.—Dumbartonshire is divided into 12 parishes, 10 of which are in the presbytery of Dumbarton and 2 in that of Glasgow; it contains but one royal burgh—Dumbarton—and four burghs of barony. The only contributory burgh belonging to the county is Dumbarton, which unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock and Port Glasgow, styled the Kilmarnock Burghs, in returning one member to the Imperial Parliament. The parliamentary constituency for 1898 was 13,192. The valuation of the county for 1897-8 was £640,820.

ALEXANDRIA is a town and quoad sacra parish in the parish of Bonhill and in Dumbarton small debts court district and poor combination, on the west side of the river Leven, here crossed by a fine girder bridge, erected in 1897-8 by the County Road Board, at a cost of £8,000, in place of the former suspension bridge of 1836, and opened 2nd July, 1898. The town is 3 miles from Dumbarton, 17 from Glasgow and 64 from Edinburgh; it contains several well-built streets, and has a station on the Dumbarton and Balloch joint railway. The trade consists largely in the printing and dyeing of fabrics, and there are several extensive print works on the banks of the river. There are Established, Free and United Presbyterian and Episcopal churches, a Roman Catholic church and various chapels. The Public Hall is centrally situated at the bridge end. The Ewing Gilmore Institute, presented to the town by W. Ewing Gilmore esq. at a cost of about £12,000, consists of library, reading and recreation rooms. The Scottish Girls' Friendly Society occupies premises erected, with an endowment, at a cost of upwards of £20,000, entirely defrayed by W. E. Gilmore esq. of Woodbank, and opened 21st May, 1891. The public drinking fountain in Main street was erected in 1870, in honour of the late Alexander Smollett esq. of Bonhill, by his friends and tenants. The Vale of Leven Young Men and Women's Christian Association has premises in Bridge street. The area comprises, with Bonhill, 8,373 acres; gross rateable value, £55,330. The population of the town was in 1891, 7,796, and in 1881, 6,173, and that of the ecclesiastical parish was in 1891, 8,260.

CLYDEBANK. a rapidly increasing district in the parish of Old Kilpatrick, was constituted a burgh 21st Dec. 1886, and includes Dalmuir, Kilbowie and Yoker; a small portion of the town is in Renfrewshire. A branch line of the North British railway from Clydebank to Partick was opened in Dec. 1882, and continued to Yorkhill, Feb. 1885; at Stobross junction this line joins the underground railway for Glasgow (Queen street). The station here on the Caledonian railway was opened in Oct. 1897. The large ship building yard and engineering works of the Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co. Limited, covering 54 acres of land, are situated here, and give employment to over 6,000 men. The municipal government is vested in a provost, 4 bailies, and 8 commissioners. There is an Established church, the Hamilton Free church, erected in 1884, the Clydebank United Presbyterian church, built in 1887, a Roman Catholic church and a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1886. The public hall, opened in Sept. 1884, will hold 1,000 persons, and has an attached public library and reading room.

Radnor Park is a village about three quarters of a mile from Dalmuir and Kilbowie stations, on the North British and Caledonian railways. Population in 1891, with Dalmuir Hill, 1,581, and rapidly increasing.

At Kilbowie are the extensive works of the Singer Manufacturing Co. which cover 46 acres of ground, and employ about 8,000 persons. Kilbowie cemetery of 8 acres was opened in January, 1897. The population of Kilbowie in 1881 was 1,593, and in 1891, 3,593.

Yoker is a village about 4 miles southeast from Old Kilpatrick, and 6 north-west from Glasgow, with stations on the North British and Caledonian railways; the eastern portion of the village is in the county of Renfrew. Here is a distillery and ship building yard. Population in 1891, 1,823.

CUMBERNAULD.

CUMBERNAULD is a parish and ancient village on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh, in a detached portion of the county and in the small debt court district of Dumbarton, 33 miles west from Edinburgh, 29 east from Dumbarton, 14 north-east from Glasgow, 13 south from Stirling, 9 west from Falkirk, 7 east from Kirkcaldy and 7 north from Airdrie, with a station on the Caledonian railway, and from 2 to 3 miles from Croy, Dullstair and Castle Cary stations on the North British railway. The staple business of the district is mining, there being several coal and lime works and many quarries of good freestone in the neighbourhood, as well as two fire-clay works. The parish church stands on an eminence embosomed in trees, and at the west end of the village: there is also a Free church, erected in 1826, a good Public Library and a subscription news room. Cumbernauld House, the property of John W. Burns esq. D.L. J.P. of Kilmahew, Carrross, is at present (1899) occupied by Major Vans-Agnev. The annual fair is held on the second Thursday in May, for cattle, horses &c. John W. Burns esq.; Alexander Whitelaw esq. D.L., J.P. of Gartshore; The Carron Company; John Motherwell esq.; Walter Stewart esq.; Matthew Rankin esq.; John Duncan esq.; Thomas Duncan esq.; George Campbell esq.; Hamilton Brown esq. and Alexander B. Cleland esq. are the principal landowners. The population in 1891 was 4,283, including 960 in the village, and in 1881 was 4,270, with 1,064 in the village. The parish has an area of 11,635 statute acres; rateable value, £29,085.

Condorrat is a small village in this parish, and about 3 miles west from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the coal and ironstone mines and quarries here, but hand-loom weaving is also carried on to a very small extent. The population in 1881 was 715, and in 1891, 606.

Dullatur is a hamlet in this parish, on the borders of Stirlingshire, with a railway station.

Castlecary is a small hamlet in this parish, about 2 miles north-east of Cumbernauld, but in the county of Stirling. Crov is a small village in this parish, and distant from Cumbernauld about 3 miles: each of these two places has a station on the North British railway.

DUMBERTON.

DUMBERTON ("dun Bretann," the Welshmen's fortress) is a town and royal burgh, the capital of the county, head of a poor combination and a parish, 59 miles west from Edinburgh, 15 north-west from Glasgow, 8 south-east from Helensburgh and 3 south from Alexandria, with a station on the Dumbarton and Balloch joint line of the North British and Caledonian railways, and another at the east end of the town on the Caledonian railway. The town is principally built on low ground, nearly encompassed on its western quarter by the river Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening of Dumbarton rock, a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Frith, and about half a mile from the town. From 1675, Dumbarton gave the title of Earl to a branch of the Douglas family, but it became extinct on the death of George, 2nd Earl, some time after 1716. The present town, which stands at a short distance up the river Leven, is chiefly composed of one main street, disposed in a semicircular form around the head or north end of the peninsula, there are, however, some beautiful avenues lined with detached houses, and an extensive suburb on the west side of the Leven leading to Renton, which is connected with the town by a good stone bridge of five arches, 300 feet in length. The waters of the Leven form a commodious harbour, and an excellent quay and public dock have been constructed. The pier, which belongs to the corporation, was erected at a cost of £12,000, and opened in May, 1875. It extends 765 feet from the base of the castle rock, southwards, towards the channel of the river Clyde; the gangway is 640 feet in length and 15 feet broad, and the pier head is 90 feet long and 25 feet wide. The depth of water at the extremity of the pier head is ten feet at low tide, so that steamers can lie alongside at all times. The Clyde Navigation is controlled by a body of trustees. The principal trade, and that on which the prosperity of the town now chiefly depends, is comprised in shipbuilding and engineering, both of which are carried on extensively, and in ordinary times about 5,000 men are employed at the different works. Brewing, tanning, ironfoundry, and sail and rope making are also pursued to a limited extent, but the manufacture of crown glass, once an important craft here, ceased in 1848. Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II. in the year 1222, and its privileges (including the right of fishing in the Leven) were confirmed by a charter of James VI. The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer and eight councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Tuesday and Friday during session, the sheriff small debt court every Tuesday during the session, and on vacation court days. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May and August, and last Tuesday in October. Dumbarton, together with Kilmarnock, Renfrew, Rutherglen and Port Glasgow, forms the Kilmarnock parliamentary district, returning one member; the boundaries of the district were extended under the "Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885" (48 & 49 Vict. c. 23). Kilmarnock is the returning burgh. The town is lighted with gas, from works in the hands of the corporation. A plentiful supply of water is obtained from the Long Craigs and Loch Humphrey, and the drainage of the town is being gradually completed. The County buildings and Court house, completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £5,000, were reconstructed and two spacious wings added in 1863, at a cost of £5,170, in 1896 a sum of £2,200 was expended in enlarging the court house, and in 1898 a further sum of £6,000, for additions to County buildings. The buildings comprise court rooms, various offices, and a gaol, but prisoners are now sent to Glasgow. The Sheriff and Commissary Courts, and the meetings of the Commissioners of Supply and County council are all held here; and here also is the Justice of the Peace office. The County Police offices, in rear of the County buildings, were completed in 1896, at a cost of £2,700. New Municipal and Police buildings are now (1899) in course of erection, at an estimated cost of £20,000, exclusive of the site, which has been presented by Lord Overton. The present burgh police offices are in Quay street. The William Denny Memorial Institute, in Church street, a fine edifice of stone, was opened on the 25th January, 1892, at a cost of upwards of £7,600, as a memorial to William Denny esq. who died at Buenos Ayres, 17th March, 1887. The Dumbarton Public Free Library and Reading Room occupies the ground floor of this edifice; the library comprises about 7,000 volumes. The Mechanics' Institute and the School of Art occupy portions of the Burgh buildings; there is also a Literary and Philosophical Society. In High street are branches of the British Linen Co.'s Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, the Clydesdale Bank Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland Limited. The principal hotel is the "Elephant," and there is also a Temperance Hotel. Two weekly newspapers are published here—the "Dumbarton Herald," and the "Lennox Herald." The New Joint Infectious Diseases Hospital for the County and Burgh, now in course of erection at Havock, at an estimated cost of £20,000, exclusive of site, will, when completed, take the place of the present temporary combination hospital; there is also a Cottage Hospital at Braehed. The combination poor house, at Townend, was completed in 1865, at a cost of about £7,000, and is situated on the outskirts of the town, in a healthy and pleasant locality. The C Company, 1st Dumbartonshire Rifle Corps has its head quarters at the Drill hall, in McLean place, Church street, and the 5th and 6th Garrison Companies, Renfrew and Dumbarton Volunteer Artillery, have a Drill hall in Risk street. The parish church, at the east end of High street, erected in 1811 at a cost of £6,000, is a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock. There are also two Free churches and two United Presbyterian churches; the Episcopal church of St. Augustine, in High street and Church street, is an edifice of stone, and was erected in 1873. The mission hall, in Church street, was built at a cost of £1,500, and there are also Wesleyan Methodist, Evangelical Union and Baptist chapels and a Roman Catholic church. Of the ancient collegiate church, founded in 1450, by Isabella, Duchess of Albany and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to St. Mary, all that now remains is one of the tower arches, which has been removed and placed at the entrance of the late Burgh school, in Church street; the Dumbartonshire railway now passes over the site of the church. The Burgh Academy, an institution of long standing, has been rebuilt in the French Gothic of the 13th century, and has a frontage of 132 feet, with a central tower, 140 feet high. The upper floor is in part assigned to the Dumbarton School of Art, inaugurated Nov. 25th, 1884, and in the rear is a large public hall, capable of holding about 750 persons. The interior of the school building was entirely destroyed by fire in 1882, but has since been refitted and furnished. The cost of both buildings was about £6,000. There are four Board schools, including the Burgh Academy, and a Roman Catholic school. Levensgrove Park, covering about 35 acres, was presented to the town by the late Peter Denny esq. of Helenslee, and the late John Macmillan esq. of College Park, and was opened as a public park, 30 May, 1885. It is pleasantly situated, and bounded by the Clyde and Leven, and the grounds have been tastefully laid out at a cost of about £20,000. A cattle market is held on Monday, and is well attended; a large cattle fair is also held on Curran Moor on the first Wednesday in June. The rock of Dumbarton, the most striking and famous feature of this town, is an isolated mass of basaltic rock, on the margin of the river Clyde, a mile in circumference at its base, but diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cloved into two summits, one higher than the other; these are almost perpendicular, and rise to a height of more than 300 feet above the level of the stream. It has been occupied by defensive works of varied character for many centuries, but of the ancient castles no remains now exist. In Bede's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and in 1291 was surrendered to Edward I.; John Balliol retained it in 1292, and Bruce held it in 1309; in 1481 it was besieged by the English, and having been taken, was annexed to the Crown in 1485, in 1540 it was visited by James V., and in 1547-8 served as a place of refuge for Queen Mary; in 1571, May 2, it was invested and captured by the troops of the Regent Lennox; from 1639 to 1640, it was alternately held by the Covenanters and the king, but in 1652 fell into the hands of Cromwell. On the union of the kingdoms in 1707, it was named as one of the four fortresses agreed to be kept in repair. The buildings now forming what is called the Castle comprise a guardhouse and lodging for the officers, from whence there is an ascent by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides; here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, other necessary buildings, and two large tanks always kept filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde; these defences are kept in constant repair, and there is a small garrison. The governor's house, a modern structure, is placed in the cleft of the rock, some parts of which are magnetic. Overton is the seat of Lord Overton D.L., J.P., F.R.G.S.; Dalmeak Castle is the seat of James Aiken esq. and Strathleven of Col. Alexander Crum-Ewing J.P., V.D. Mrs. Denny, of Helenslee; Lord Overton, of Overton, and Col. Alexander Crum-Ewing J.P., V.D. of Strathleven, are the principal landowners. The area of the parish comprises 8,291 acres; rateable value, landward £3,271, burgh £41,135; the population in 1891 was 14,065, including 13,137 in the town and 699 in Burnside, and in 1881 was 10,902, with 10,304 in the town and 386 in Burnside. The population of the town (part of which is in Cardross parish) was 17,626 in 1891 and 14,172 in 1881. Dalreoch is a quoad sacra parish, formed from that of Cardross, within the burgh of Dumbarton, but separated from it for ecclesiastical purposes, and has a station on the Dumbarton and Balloch joint railway. The parish church was erected in 1873 at a cost of £2,000, and there is a public hall, built at a cost of £1,400. Population in 1891 was 3,979. Knoxand is a quoad sacra parish within the burgh of Dumbarton, but separated from it for ecclesiastical purposes. The parish church, erected in 1883-4 at a cost of £1,500, is an edifice in the Gothic style, and will seat 800 persons. The Rev. John Smith has been minister since 1886. Population in 1891 was 3,870. DUNTOCHER is a considerable village and quoad sacra parish in the civil parish of Old Kilpatrick, 2 miles north from Kilpatrick, 52 west from Edinburgh and 9 from Glasgow. The principal part of the village is lighted with gas supplied by the corporation of Glasgow and is governed by a landward committee of parish council of Kilpatrick. Here is an ancient bridge over the Dalnuir Burn, a small river issuing from Loch Humphrey; the bridge is said to have been built under the auspices of the Emperor Hadrian by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant, and was restored by Lord Blantyre in 1772, and near it is a stone with a Latin inscription recording these things. The Established church here was erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,700. The population of the town in 1891 was 2,154, and in 1881, 1,572; that of the ecclesiastical parish in 1891 was 3,233.

HARDGATE, see KILPATRICK.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony, police burgh and seaport in the civil parish of Row, 22 miles west-north-west from Glasgow, 9 south from Luss, 5 from Greenock and 8 north-west from Dumbarton, with a terminal station on the North British Railway, and one half a mile north of the town, on the West Highland section of the same system. The town, which lies on the Firth of Clyde, and is a perpetual fien from the trustees of the late Sir James Colquhoun bart. of Luss, was commenced in 1777, and is now the most agreeable watering place on the Clyde; it affords good accommodation for visitors resorting thither in the summer. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of a burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in 12 police commissioners, being three for each of the four wards into which the town is divided. A Police Court is held every Monday, and at other times when required. The town is lighted with gas and supplied with water from works the property of the corporation. The original pier is now called the Old pier, another having been erected by the North British Railway Co. in 1882, at Craighendran, about one mile east of the town, in connection with the station there, which is the starting point of the West Highland railway, opened in 1893, to the Western Highlands. The quay, erected in 1817, was greatly enlarged in 1872 and reconstructed in 1893, and extends from the centre of the town into the river for a considerable distance. The Municipal Buildings, in East Princes street, form a handsome modern edifice, embracing a court hall, council chamber, and general public offices, with police station and cells in the rear. There is also a Fire Brigade. The Victoria Hall, in Sinclair street, was built at a cost of £6,000, and there are Town Mission, Masonic and Oddfellows' halls, reading rooms and circulating libraries. Helensburgh was created a quoad sacra parish in 1863, and a west quoad sacra parish was formed in 1873. The Infirmary and Hospital are both in North King street; the latter, built at a cost of £3,000, contains under one roof a hospital for infectious diseases and one for non-infectious cases, each having a separate entrance and distinct airing grounds. There is also a Children's Convalescent Home in Glasgow street. No. 4 Garrison Company, 1st Renfrew and Dumbartonshire Volunteer Artillery, is stationed here, and has a Drill hall in Lomond street; Helensburgh is also the head quarters of the 1st Dumbartonshire Rifles, whose Drill hall is in East Princes street. The Bank of Scotland, in West Clyde street, is a fine stone building in the baronial style, and was erected at a cost of £23,000; the Union Bank Limited, in Colquhoun square, and the Clydesdale Bank Limited, in James street, are also both substantial buildings of stone. In the vicinity and near the banks of the Clyde are several elegant seats and residences. The Imperial Hotel is opposite the old pier, and some distance east of the town is the Queen's Hotel. On the Esplanade stands an obelisk, erected as a memorial to Henry Bell, the engineer, mentioned subsequently. Kidston Park, presented to the town by William Kidston esq. and the late Sir James Colquhoun bart. is situated at the foot of the Garra Loch and commands an excellent view of the surrounding scenery. There is also a public park and recreation grounds in East King street. In the neighbourhood of Helensburgh resided for 25 years the celebrated Henry Bell millwright and engineer, to whose fertile and persevering genius Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels. The first trip made by steamboat in this neighbourhood was made by the Comet from Fort Glasgow to Helensburgh, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was born in the parish of Torphichen, county of Linlithgow; April 7th, 1767, and died at his house (now the Queen's Hotel), in Helensburgh, Nov. 14th.

1830, and was interred in the parish churchyard of Row, where there is a memorial to him. Rateable value, £66,154; the population of the ecclesiastical parish of Helensburgh in 1891 was 5,213, and that of West Church (Helensburgh), 3,196; the population of the town was in 1891, 8,409, and in 1881, 7,693, that of the police burgh being the same.

KILPATRICK (Old, or West) is a parish and village in Dumbarton poor combination, 53 miles west from Edinburgh, 10
north-west from Glasgow, and 5 east-southeast from Dumbarton, with stations on the North British and Caledonian Railways.
The water works at Cochna, constructed in 1874, supply Duntocher, Dalmuir and Clydebank, the area of the water district being 2,560 acres. The parish church, a neat edifice of stone, erected in 1812, has a square tower with a clock. Auchintorlie is the seat of George J. Fergusson-Buchanan
esq. D.L., J.P.

Bowling is a small village about three-quarters of a mile west from Kilpatrick,
with stations on the North British and Caledonian Railways, and a landing stage
for passengers and goods on the Clyde.
The Forth and Clyde canal (now owned by the Caledonian Railway Co.) begins at Bowling Bay, and extends along a course of 35 miles to the Forth at Grangemouth.
The canal, begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th July, 1790, is available for vessels drawing 8 feet of water,
having a 19 feet beam and a 73 feet keel.
An outer basin, admitting vessels drawing 19 feet of water, has been constructed for the discharge and shipment of cargoes for transit by the canal or rail. The Trustees of the Clyde Navigation have also a harbour
here, for vessels laid up during the winter,
or for sale. The Free church in Bowling was erected in 1869. The Buchanan Institute, presented to the village by the late Andrew Buchanan esq. of Auchintorlie, at a cost of about £1,000, and opened December 13th, 1884, comprises a library and reading and recreation rooms.

At Little Mill is a distillery and shipbuilding yard.

At Dungleass, half a mile west of Little Mill, are the ruins of some defensive works known as "Dungleass Castle," and in the grounds stands a memorial column, erected to Henry Bell, the eminent engineer, who ran the first steamboat on the Clyde in 1812.
Hardgate is about a quarter of a mile east
from Duntocher, and Fairley about the same distance north.

Milton and Dumbuck are places on the road to Dumbarton. Milton House, the residence of Henry M. Napier esq. is pleasantly situated on a declivity, commanding an extensive and beautiful view of the Clyde. Population of Bowling,

NEW (or EAST) KILPATRICK is a parish ad town in Dumbarton poor combination, formerly partly included in Stirlingshire, but in 1891 wholly transferred to the county of Dumbarton; it is upwards of 6 miles in extent from north to south, with a breadth of from 2 to 4 miles, and has a station, called Bearsden, on the Glasgow and Milngavie section of the North British railway. KIRKINTILLOCH is a burgh of barony, a parish and an ancient town, situated in a detached portion of the county, 40 miles west from Edinburgh, 20 south-south-west from Stirling, 16 east from Dumbarton, 16 west from Falkirk, 7 north from Glasgow, 7 west from Cumbernauld, 5 south-west from Kilsyth, 4 south-east from Campsie and 5 south-east from Campsie Glen, with two stations on the North British railway. The town is situated on the verge of a ridge by the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin, and is lighted with gas from works originally erected by a private company, but acquired by the town under the Burgh Gas Supply Act, 1876. The Forth and Clyde canal, which passes through the town, affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coast of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch Railway, which extends to Airdrie and joins the Ballochnie Railway about a mile from that town and also unites with the Garnkirk and Glasgow Railway, has a terminal station here. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line passes over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, a mile south of the town, and near this is Lenzie Junction station. The weaving of lappet muslin is still carried on here, but is gradually dying out, the inhabitants being now chiefly employed at the different chemical and iron works on the canal bank. The iron foundries are now the principal industry of the district, and are steadily being enlarged. There are also nickel works, where the ore brought from New Caledonia is melted, and in the vicinity are coal and ironstone mines. Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony, its first charter, dated from Forres, having been conferred by William the Lion (1165-1214), when it was granted to William Cumyn, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and his charter was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town was formerly governed by a senior and a junior magistrate, otherwise bailies, ten councillors, treasurer, and town clerk, but in 1871 the inhabitants adopted the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862, and their affairs are now administered by a body of 12 police commissioners. Burgh police courts are held fortnightly, or more frequently if occasion requires. The magistrates act also as dean of guild; justice of the peace courts are held only as may be required, and the sheriff's small debt circuit court on the fourth Mondays of January, April, July and October. The Court House and Gaol, which form a substantial building at the cross, is ornamented with a tower and spire, containing a clock with four dials. The police office is in Cowgate street, and there is a Fire Brigade station in Broadcroft. There are branches here of the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, the National Bank of Scotland Limited, and a local Savings Bank. The K Company, 1st Dumbartonshire Rifle Corps is stationed here, and has a Drill hall in Cowgate street. The Broomhill Home, for the relief of incurables in Glasgow and the West of Scotland, besides maintaining about 100 patients in the home, affords relief to many others at their own residences; the original building, formerly the residence of the late R. J. Bartholomew esq. has been enlarged from time to time, and will now hold 100 patients, and a nurses' wing has recently been added, and was opened in May, 1895, by Her Grace the Duchess of Montrose. At Westermains is also a private asylum, with every necessary requisite for those mentally afflicted; Mr. James Lawrie, proprietor. On the bank of the Luggie, and near the bridge, stands a monument of red Aberdeen granite, erected by public subscription, to Mr. Hazleton Robson, of Glasgow, who, in endeavouring to save the life of a child who had fallen into the river, failed in the attempt and lost his own life; on the monument is a suitable inscription. About a mile to the east of the town, on the Inchbilly road, is the Martyrs' stone, erected as a memorial to John Wharry and James Smith, two Covenanters, who having been captured at Stevenson Wood, Inchbilly, and taken to Glasgow, were there tortured and then executed and their remains afterwards carried to Inchbilly Wood and buried in the moss. The parish church, built in 1644, is a cruciform structure, and stands near the centre of the town. St. David's is the church of a quoad sacra parish and there are also two Free churches, United Presbyterian and Original Secession churches, and Methodist, Baptist, and Roman Catholic chapels. The Vallum Antonini, or wall of Antoninus, a rampart of earth and turf, now called Graham's or Grime's dyke, was constructed about A.D. 140 by the Proprietor, Lollius Urbicus, in the reign of Antoninus Pius, 138-161, on the line of an earlier series of defences raised by Agricola; it passed through this town, and one of the principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little west of the parish church; the site of this fort, now commonly called the "Peel," is still traceable by the deep moat which surrounded it, this was in 1897 converted into a public park. In 1893 (Aug. 28), a workman at the Lion Foundry, which stands near the line of the wall, while engaged in digging sand, at a depth of about 15 feet from the surface, came upon a number of over 50 Roman coins of the Emperors Augustus (B.C. 31 to A.D. 14), Vespasian (A.D. 69-79) and Hadrian (A.D. 117-138), the whole being in a remarkable state of preservation; on further search more were discovered and also the steel head and part of the shaft of a spear. Alexander Whitelaw esq. D.L., J.P. of Gartshore; James Dalrymple esq.; the trustees of the late Capt. William McFarlane; Alexander Falconer Wallace esq. 20 Hyde Park gardens, London W.; James Wallace esq.; Charles G. H. Kinnear esq. of Edinburgh; James Duncan esq. and the trustees of the late William Burt Wright esq. are the principal landowners. The boundaries of the burgh were a few years ago extended. The entire parish of Kirkintilloch comprises an area of 7,146 statute acres; rateable value, £55,060; the population in 1891 was 12,427, including 9,390 in the burgh, and in 1881 was 10,591, with 7,456 in the burgh.

KNOXLAND, see DUMBARTON.

LENZIE is a residential district and quoad sacra parish, 8 miles north-east from Glasgow, and about 1 mile south of Kirkintilloch, with a junction station on the main line of the North British Railway, which divides it into two parts—North and South, the northern portion being in the parish of Kirkintilloch and county of Dumbarton, and the southern portion in the parish of Cadder and county of Lanark. The northern portion of Lenzie forms part of the police burgh of Kirkintilloch. The Episcopal church of St. Cyprian, built in 1873 at a cost of £4,000, is an edifice of stone in the Early English style, from designs by Dr. Alexander Ross, architect, of Inverness, and consists of chancel and nave, under a single roof, south porch and a tower on the south side, with pyramidal broach spire, and an octagonal turret at one angle surmounted by a spirelet; the stone altar was presented by the Rev. Francis Patrick Fleming LL.D. rector 1872-4, and the font, of Caen stone, by Lady Edmonstone, of Duntreath Castle, Stirlingshire; several of the windows have been filled with stained glass by members of the congregation; the church affords 200 sittings. The value of the living is £200, with a house, situated at a short distance from the church; the Rev. Henry Williams Kirby, the present rector, was appointed by the vestry in 1876. The Barony Parish Lunatic Asylum, at Woodlee, Lenzie, in connection with the Barony Parish, Glasgow, erected in 1874-5 at a cost of £150,000, and opened 22 Oct. 1875, is a structure in the Elizabethan style, from designs by Messrs. James Salmon & Son, architects, of Glasgow. The buildings include a recreation hall, about 90 feet square, with a ceiling panelled in Kauri wood, and a stage for musical and dramatic performances, a dining hall, recently enlarged, 120 single rooms, dormitories for 730 patients, an administrative department, and a chapel with a stained window, and an elegant niche on the roof, and seating 400 persons. The estate, comprising 382 acres, was purchased in 1852 by the Barony Parochial board, for a sum of over £30,000, and the various additions and improvements made to the buildings have brought their total cost up to £250,000. The Glasgow Convalescent Home, situated here, about half-a-mile to the south-east of the railway station, is available for 85 patients, 30 of whom are received from the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, 45 from among residents in Glasgow and neighbourhood and 10 from the Western Infirmary of Glasgow: the board of management consists of members selected by the subscribers and various public and charitable bodies in the city of Glasgow. Lenzie Academy is under the management of a combination board, the members of which represent the two parishes of Kirkintilloch and Cadder. The population of the portion of Lenzie within the police burgh of Kirkintilloch in 1891 was 918, and of that without the burgh 76 in this county and 922 in Lanarkshire; total of the village, 1,916, and in 1881 the figures were 648, 95 and 573; total, 1,316. The population of the ecclesiastical parish in 1891 was 1,645 in Kirkintilloch parish and 1,160 in Cadder parish (Lanarkshire); total, 2,805.

LITTLE MILL, see KILPATRICK.

LUSS is a parish and small village, in the Dumbarton small debts court district, 69
 miles west-north-west from Edinburgh, 28
 north-west from Glasgow, 13 north-northwest from Dumbarton, 10 north-north-west
 from Bonhill, 9 north-north-east from Helensburgh, 8 from Tarbet (the nearest) station on the West Highland section of the North British railway and 8 from Bal-loch station on the Dumbarton and Balloch joint railway. The village is delightfully situated on the western margin of Loch Lomond, and during the summer is much visited by tourists and pleasure parties.
 A fine view of the loch, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Strone hill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. Steamboats sail every day (Sunday excepted), from the south end of the loch, calling here for Ben Lomond, Invernaid &c. and returning the same afternoon. The only business of any importance carried on here is the quarrying of slate at Camstraddan and Luss slate
 quarries, from which considerable quantities of both blue and green slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country by means of steam lighters on Loch Lomond to Balloch, and thence by rail. The parish church was dedicated to Saint Mackegosh, a native of Lennox and a bishop and confessor, who suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below
 Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large
 cairn of stone was raised to his memory.
 He is said to have been buried in the church. Here resided the learned Alexander Stewart D.D. Gaelic scholar, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic
 language, and died in May, 1821. Rosshu House, about 2½ miles south of Luss, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun bart. L.L., J.P.
 is a beautiful building, with a fine portico,
 seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The trustees of the late Sir James Colquhoun
 bart. (d. 1873) and the present Sir J.
 Colquhoun bart. Lord Lieutenant of Dumbartonshire, are the principal landowners.
 The area comprises 24,206 acres; rateable
 value, £6,551; the population in 1891 was 633, and in 1881, 719.

ROSENEATH is a village and parish, in Dumbarton poor combination, occupying the peninsula of Roseneath, and extending for about 7 miles from east to west, and from one to four broad. It is about 3 miles west from Helensburgh station (by ferry across Gare Loch) on the West Highland section of the North British railway. The parish church, a small modern edifice, stands within a quarter of a mile of the ferry and pier. There is also a Free church in the neighbourhood, and a United Presbyterian church at Clynder, which latter place and Rahane are districts in this parish, the former one mile and the latter 3 miles north from Roseneath village. The mansion of Roseneath, the property of the Duke of Argyll K.G., K.T., P.C. and residence of his eldest son, the Right Hon. the Marquess of Lorne K.T., G.C.M.G., P.C., V.D., M.P. and Princess Louise, is the principal object of interest. Kilcreggan is a village about 2 miles distant from Roseneath, over the hills. Cove is a village a mile further west, at the entrance to Loch Long; both are resorted to for sea bathing, and consist of a series of villas and mansions extending for 4½ miles along the shore; at each is a pier for the convenience of passing steamers. These two villages were formed into a police burgh in 1865, and are ecclesiastically in the quoad sacra parish of Craigrownie, which is separated from Roseneath and includes the whole burgh of Kilcreggan and Cove; the parish extends about 3 miles beyond Cove. There is an Established church. The area of Roseneath parish comprises 8,461 acres; rateable value of landward, £10,038; the population in 1891 was 2,064, and in 1881, 1,994; the population of the ecclesiastical parish of Craigrownie in 1891 was 1,164. The police burgh of Cove and Kilcreggan has a rateable value of £11,579, and in 1891 had a population of 946.

ROW is a parish and small village, in Dumbarton poor combination and small debt's court district, about 2 miles west from Helensburgh, with a station on the West Highland railway. The parish of Row is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character, and the low grounds are fertile and beautiful. Ardencaple Castle, on the north-west bank of the loch, was the birthplace (30 April, 1823) of the present Duke of Argyll K.G., K.T., P.C. A portion of the castle is of ancient date, but the greater part is comparatively modern; it commands a good view of the Clyde and the Gare Loch, to a distance of 7 miles into the mainland, and is now the residence of Sir William Orr-Ewing bart. J.P. The parish, exclusive of a narrow strip on Loch Long, is about 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth, bounded by Luss on the east, Helensburgh on the south-east, on the west by Gare Loch, and its south-east is washed by the Firth of Clyde. The parish church stands in the village, near the ferry across the Gare Loch to the peninsula of Roseneath. Acreage of the parish, 20,126; rateable value of landward, including Shandon and Garelochhead, £24,436; population of the parish in 1881, 9,972, and in 1891, 11,172.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

This is a large and important county in the south of Scotland, bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk, on the north-west by Ayrshire, on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcubright, and on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Firth, and its south-eastern base is skirted by Roxburghshire and the English county of Cumberland. The length of the county, from north-west to south-east, is nearly 55 miles, and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peebles-shire on the north, is nearly 30 miles. According to the latest and best surveys it embraces an area of 1,075 square miles, or 688,057 acres of land. The population in 1891 consisted of 34,885 males and 39,336 females; total, 74,221, and in 1881 of a total of 76,140; there were 15,626 inhabited houses in 1891 and 15,635 in 1881. In size Dumfries is classed as the eighth and in population as the fourteenth of the Scotch counties.

Early History.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the "Selgovee," who spread themselves as far as the banks of the river Dee, in Galloway. These people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries. During the lapse of this time, however, numbers of adventurers from Ireland and Cartyre effected a settlement, and from these intermixtures sprung the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cumbria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother, David, who encouraged many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the county was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursions and feudal hostility. When the civil war broke out in the reign of Charles I. the common people entered heartily into the covenant, and the shire was disturbed by the exertions made by loyal noblemen and gentlemen in quelling the insurrection, and attachment to the house of Stuart ruined several of the great families. The Maxwells were completely ruined by the attainder of the Earl of Nithsdale, in 1715. The Douglasses of Queensberry and the Johnstons of Annandale have merged in other families, and out of the general wreck the noble house of Scott, Dukes of Buccleuch, has risen to great influence. From being thus so frequently subjected to early invasion and predatory warfare, the shire exhibits, to this day, the remains of some important castles and places of security. It gives the title of Marquess to the family of Scott.

Soil and Surface, Produce, Manufactures &c.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow or white sandstone, with dips generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The limestone of the shire has been of great value in improving the land; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions; marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes, and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanlockhead, there are inexhaustible mines of lead. As in most districts in the south of Scotland, there is a general mixture of arable and pasture land. The soil is of great variety, that in the south being a light covering over a rocky and gravelly subsoil, producing thin crops; but in the north, where the subsoil is peaty, vegetation is rank. This county is famed for agriculture, its capacities in this respect being highly developed. The land is well tilled and drained, strongly fenced, and produces good crops of oats, potatoes, turnips and hay. About 216,130 acres are under cultivation. Though changeable and moist, the climate is upon the whole mild and salubrious. The principal hills are Hartfell (near Moffat), 2,629 feet; Etterick, or Phawsho Penn, 2,220; Cair-Kennow (near Drumlanrig), 2,080; Queensberry hill, 2,250; Black Larg (border of Ayrshire), 2,890 and Lowthers (near Wanlockhead), 3,150. The chief crops in 1898, as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain," were—oats, 43,937 acres; barley or bere, 783; the total corn crops being 44,921 acres; turnips and swedes, 18,949 acres; potatoes, 3,523; cabbage &c. 1,076; total green crops, 23,773 acres; hay, 36,132 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 64,937 acres; permanent pasture, 89,034 acres. Total area of land and water, 688,057 acres, of which 370,152 are mountain and heath, 30,220 woods, and 1,311 plantations. The live stock in 1898 comprised 5,809 horses, used solely for agriculture and blood mares; unbroken horses, 1,632; cows and heifers in milk or in calf, 20,272; other cattle, 40,110; ewes kept for breeding, 233,246; other sheep, 333,737; sows kept for breeding, 1,410; other pigs, 8,384. In Annandale the improvement in the breed of cattle has been most apparent; at the Highland Society's meeting some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers and bullocks are exhibited. The miners raised in the county in 1897 were—lead ore, 1,813 tons, producing 1,423 tons of lead and 9,971 ozs. of silver; limestone, 14,900 tons; sandstone, 171,112 tons; brick clay, 9,100 tons; zinc ore, 112 tons, value £392. The number of fishing boats registered at Dumfries, Dec. 31, 1898, was 71, aggregate tonnage, 281, and employing 109 persons. Of other classes of vessels there were 18, with a tonnage of 382. As regards trade the number of oxen, sheep and pigs reared in this county is usually more than adequate to the demands of its population; and exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place; and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides and skins. Dumfries-shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county; the principal branches under this head are the production of hosiery goods and tweeds, the chief seat of these being its capital. There are also distilleries, agricultural implement works, dye works, tanneries &c. This county is also noted for bacon curing, a large number of carcasses of pork being cured annually.

Rivers &c.—The chief, indeed the only, rivers of consequence are the Nith, the Annan, and the Esk. From these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the waters that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale and Ewesdale. The Nith, 80 miles in length, rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsoncone hill, in the parish of Kirkconnel, and descends into the valley of Sanquhar; having forced its way through the hills which surround this valley, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchar from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith a little above Dumfries, a short distance southward from which the latter river empties itself into the Solway Firth. Near to Jarborough Castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds called "Bow-butts," where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practise archery. The river Annan, the length of which is 40 miles, takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of 23 miles; in its course it receives the Ewan and the Moffat waters and the Wamphrey stream, which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name. Passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Lochmaben it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous. The Esk, in its progress through the district, is joined by the Black Esk, the Maggot, the Ewes, and the Wauchope. After reaching Broomholm the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Firth; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddal from Roxburghshire, and the Lina water from the county of Cumberland; its entire length is about 43 miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries receiving in Scotland the appellation of "Firths;" its waters are shallow, and have long, sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and that is particularly the case during the spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the south-west, and borderers have, in numerous instances, been overwhelmed and drowned when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary—the most experienced persons being liable to be overtaken by the tides even when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety. The navigation of the Solway Firth is closed above Bowness and Annan by the Solway Viaduct. Railways from the south enter the county at three points from Bowness, across the Solway Firth to Annan (Caledonian line), with a branch to Kirtlebridge, from Carlisle to Greta Junction (Caledonian line), whence it runs through the county northward, via Lockerbie and Beattock, where there is a branch to Moffat, one from Lockerbie, going to Dumfries, and thirdly a short line on the North British system from Riddings via Canonbie to Langholm. From Greta Junction a line leaves the Caledonian system and runs on the Glasgow and South Western line via Annan to Dumfries and on to Thornhill and Sanquhar to Ayrshire, the line of the same railway to Castle Douglas, Wigtown, Stranraer and Port Patrick leaving the county at Dumfries.

Divisions, Representation &c. The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—Eskdale on the east, almost the whole of which belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch; Annandale in the middle, and Nithsdale on the west. It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a sheriff in the 13th century, at which period it included the stewartry of Kirkcubright. The district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewartry from the period when it merged in the Crown by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdiction. Up to the era of the Reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocese of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses 47 entire parishes and parts of two others, the whole being included in the five presbyteries which form the synod of Dumfries. There are four royal burghs in the county—Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar, and Lochmaben; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerbie, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill, and Moniaive. The county is formed of 43 entire civil parishes. The shire at large sends one member to Parliament, and the royal burghs before named join with Kirkcubright in returning another representative. The parliamentary constituency for 1898 numbered 9,217. The valuation of the shire was in 1897-8, including royal and parliamentary burghs, £623,459.

ANNAN is an ancient royal burgh, a parish and town and the seat of a presbytery, 79 miles south of Edinburgh, 87 south-east of Glasgow, 43 north-east of Kirkcudbright, 27 south of Moffat, 16 south-east of Dumfries, and 6 from Ecclefechan, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, and another about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the town, on the Caledonian system, situated on the east bank of the river Annan. The old bridge, consisting of five arches, was removed in 1826 and a new and substantial one erected on the same site, towards which a grant of £3,000 was obtained from Government, and the remainder supplied by the county. Annan was a Roman station, and is supposed by some to have been identical with the northern station, Veromum. After the departure of the Romans, it seems to have been held by the Britons, till they were subdued by the Saxons of the Northumbrian kingdom. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben to the ancestors of Robt. Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, and in part used as a church, but this fortress afterwards went to ruin, some fragments of its walls being incorporated with the gaol and the old town hall. Upon the death of David II. 22 Feb. 1371, the castle of Lochmaben and the lordship of Annandale came to Agnes, sister of John (Randolph), 3rd Earl of Moray, whom she succeeded as Countess of Moray, and having married Patrick (Dunbar), 10th Earl of Dunbar and March, carried it into that family; after their forfeiture it was bestowed upon the Douglases, Archibald Douglas, 3rd son of the 7th Earl of Douglas, being created Earl of Moray; he fell at Arkinholm, 1st May, 1455, and was attainted, and his possessions thereupon reverted to the Crown; this lordship was subsequently granted to Alexander, Duke of Albany, 2nd son of James II. who, for rebellion against his brother King James III. and for plundering the fair of Lochmaben in 1484, also forfeited it; the castle thereupon again reverted to the Crown, and became the great key to the western border. In September, 1547, the town was attacked and partially destroyed by Thomas, 1st Baron Wharton, who, with Lord Dacre, had marched a force into Scotland to effect reprisals. The port, or harbour, of Annan is free, and vessels of 250 tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burthen can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, rather more than a mile from the town; at this place are wooden wharves, or jetties. The local industries comprise stone quarrying, nursery work and corn milling, which furnish employment to a large number of hands; there is also a distillery situated about a mile north of the town. Limestone and freestone are abundant in many parts of the parish, and are worked at the Corsehill Quarries by Messrs. J. Murray and Sons, and at Millbee by Messrs. J. and G. McDowdie. Palmer's Nurseries, situated just outside the town, cover a very extensive area. The town was constituted a royal burgh on the accession of Robert Bruce to the throne at the beginning of the 14th century. The existing charter, dated July 10th, 1612, was granted by James VI. of Scotland, and confirms previous charters, particularly reciting one conferred by James V. dated 1st March, 1538, which stated that Annan had with other towns been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, especially in 1298, when they entered Annandale and burned the town with its churches. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies and nine councillors, a treasurer, a deacon of guild and town clerk. Together with Dumfries, Sanquhar, Lochmaben and Kirkcudbright it forms the Dumfries parliamentary district, constituted in 1708, and returning one member to Parliament. A small debts court is held four times in the year. The town is lighted with gas, and supplied with water from a reservoir on the farm of Purdomstown, in the parish of Middlebie, about 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Annan, with a capacity of 27,000,000 gallons. The filter bed and supply tank are behind Landheads toll bar, 2 miles from the town, and are capable of passing 150,000 gallons per day. The waterworks, built and laid out at a cost of about £12,000, were opened by Lady Augusta Noel, wife of Ernest Noel esq. then M.P. for the Dumfries district, July 21st, 1881. The Town Hall, in High street, erected at a cost of upwards of £4,000, occupies the site of the former hall. The Post Office, in Bank street, was erected in 1838. The Victoria Hall, Bank street, is licensed for dramatic performances. The Masonic Hall, in Church street, is the meeting place of the Caledonian Lodge, No. 238. The parish church is a fine building of stone with a tower and spire, and there are Episcopal, Roman Catholic, Free and United Presbyterian and other churches. The Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, the British Linen Company's Bank, and the Bank of Scotland have branches here, and there is also a bank for savings. An excellent newspaper, the "Annandale Observer," is published every Friday by Messrs. William Cuthbertson and Son. The Rev. Edward Irving M.A. the founder, in 1832, of the Catholic Apostolic Church, was born here, 15th August, 1792, and a marble statue has recently been erected to his memory in front of the Town Hall; he died at Glasgow, 6th December, 1834. Hugh Clapperton, the African traveller, was also born here in 1788; he died on his second expedition at Sacatoo, 11th April, 1827. Mount Annan is the property of Patrick Alexander Pasley-Dirom esq. J.P. and the residence of John Bell-Irving esq. William Dalziel Mackenzie, of Fawley Court, Henley-on-Thames, Oxon, is the chief landowner. The market is held on Friday, and at the two cattle marts large quantities of stock are sold. Fairs are held on the first Friday in May, the first Friday in August, and the third Friday in October. The area comprises 10,915 acres; rateable value, burghal, £15,973; landward, £23,024; the population of the parish in 1891 was 5,941, including 4,864 in the town, and in 1881, 5,516, of whom 4,530 were in the town. The number of electors on the Parliamentary register in 1898 was 592. Greenknowe is a quoad sacra parish, formed from Annan; population in 1891 was 1,430.

BRYDEKIRK is a village in the small debt court district of Dumfries and Annan,
 3 miles north of Annan, on the west bank of the Annan river, and was constituted a quoad
 sacra parish in May, 1836, from the 3 parishes of Annan, Cummertrees and Hoddum.
 The remains of the old parish church are still extant, but a new church was built in 1835 by the late Mrs. Magdalen Dirom, wife of Lieut.-Gen. Alexander Dirom: she died 23 Oct. 1853. At Coraehill is a quarry, originally opened by Mrs. General Dirom,
 and now giving employment to over 200

men. Patrick Alexander Pasley-Dirom esq.
 J.P. of Mount Annan, and Alexander
 Pearson esq. J.P. Luce, are the principal landowners. Rateable value, £3,535: the population of the village was 318 in 1891,

CAERLAVEROCK is a parish, occupying a kind of peninsula formed by the Sol-
 way Firth, the river Nith and Lochar
 water, and is 7 miles south-east of Dumfries, the nearest railway station. The magnificent ruins of Caerlaverock Castle,
 which stand on a level plain, between 8
 and 9 miles from Dumfries, form a massive and picturesque triangular structure, including the gate-house, flanked on either side by drum towers with machicolated
 battlements; in Murdoch's tower, a princ-
 pal feature of the ruins, Murdoch Stewart, 2nd Duke of Albany and Earl of Lennox,
 was confined in 1425; a wet ditch still encompasses the site. The castle anciently belonged to the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, Earls of Nithedale and wardens of the western Marches. It was besieged and captured by Edward I. in July, 1300; a metrical and contemporary account of the siege was written in Norman-French by Walter, of Exeter, a Franciscan friar who accompanied the English army, and contains, inter alia,
 the blazonry of the arms of about 100 of
 the knights engaged in this expedition,
 forming the earliest roll of arms at present
 known. The poem was edited and published by Sir Harris Nicholas in 1828. Sir Roger Kirkpatrick, of Closeburn, was murdered
 in his bed in the castle in 1357 by Sir James Lindsay; Cromwell took it in 1651, after which it was allowed to fall into decay.

Bankend is a pleasant village about 7
 miles south-south-east from Dumfries.
 Glencleugh Quay is a small village on the banks of the Nith, and about 5½ miles south from Dumfries, where in former times
 numbers of coasting traders discharged and took in their cargoes, and passengers from Liverpool usually landed here. It is now chiefly frequented as a bathing place, and
 for its salmon fishery.

Kelton is a small seaside village on the Nith, and about 4 miles south from Dumfries.
 Lord Herries D.L. owns nearly all the parish. The soil is a light loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are oats, potatoes, roots and pasture. The area comprises 5,664 acres; rateable value, £6,977; the
 population in 1891 was 921, and in 1881, 1,051.

CLOSEBURN is a parish and village, about 2 miles south-south-east from Thornhill, in the district of Nithsdale, and in Upper Nithsdale poor combination, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway: it includes the parish of Dalgaroo, and is about 10 miles in length by about 1½ in breadth. The ancient church, an edifice of the Norman and later periods, is still standing within its churchyard, though now ruinous, and includes a tower in which hangs a 16th century bell: near the church is the mortuary of the Kirkpatricka, of Closeburn, over the entrance to which is their crest, a hand holding a dagger dripping with blood, and the motto "I mak siccar;" here is buried Sir Roger Kirkpatrick, whose murder of John (the "Red") Comyn, at Dumfries in 1305, gave rise both to the motto and crest: his 2nd son, of the same name, was murdered in his bed in Caerlaverock Castle by Sir James Lindsay in 1357. The present church, which adjoins the old churchyard, was erected by the heritors in 1878, at a cost of nearly £5,000, and is a building in the Gothic style. Closeburn Hall is a large and splendid mansion in the Classic style. The ancient Castle of Closeburn, the property of the late George Baird esq. and now in the hands of the trustees, forms an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls. Near Closeburn Castle is a strong sulphurous spring, of the same character as that of Moffat Well, and there is another called "Townslough Well," which is chalybeate. Crichevoe Linu, in this parish, is a very singular ravine worn out of the soft sandstone by a small rivulet. In the writings of Sir Walter Scott it is described as the hiding place of Ralfour of Burleigh. This spot, as well as almost every glen in the district, has associations connected with the times of the persecuted Covenanters.

Auldgrith is a small hamlet in the parish of Closeburn distant 8 miles north-north-west from Dumfries, and 6 south from Thornhill, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway.

The Closeburn Estates Trustees, viz. the trustees of Mrs. Villiers and the Countess of Enniskillen, the Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T. and Miss Come-ard, of Collieston, are the principal landowners. The area comprises 23,102 acres: rateable value, £17,776: the population in 1891 was 1,333, and in 1881, 1,505.

CUMMERTREES is a parish and village, 4 miles west from Annan, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. The parish, which is about 4 miles in length by 3 in breadth, is bounded on the north-east by the river Annan, and on the south by the Solway Firth. It is a flat, fertile and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed. The parish church stands in the village. The new Public Hall was erected in 1895, on a site given by the Marquess of Queensberry, at a cost of £500. About a mile south-east of Cummertrees is Powfoot, a fishing hamlet, situated on the shore of the Solway, and now the property of Edward Brook esq. of Hoddam Castle, by whom the place has been much improved. Glen Stuart is the residence of Sir Alexander Beaumont Churchill Dixie bart. The area comprises 9,466 acres; rateable value, £12,027; the population in 1891 was 1,105, and in 1881, 1,094.

DALSWINTON, see KIRKMAHOE.

DALTON is a parish and small village, about 6 miles south-south-west from Lockerbie and 4 north-east from Ruthwell station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. The parish, which now includes the ancient parishes of Meikle Dalton and Little Dalton, is 4 miles in length by 3 in breadth; its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moora and commons. The parish church, erected in 1895, in part by a grant from the Baird Trust, is an edifice in the Norman style, from designs by Mr. J. M. Dick Peddie, architect, of Edinburgh, and consists of chancel, nave, north porch and a low square tower on the north side with an octagonal spire; the lower stage of the tower also forms an entrance: the site was the gift of Mr. Arthur J. Steel, of Kirkwood. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones to the Ross family, descendants of the ennobled house of Ross, Barons Ross, of Haikhead, in Renfrewshire, who were long residents in this parish, but the title became extinct on the death of William, 14th baron, 19 Aug. 1754. Dormont House, beautifully situated within a deer park on the banks of the Annan, and about a mile from the village, is the seat of W. F. Carruthers esq. but now (1899) occupied by John J. J. Keswick esq. Rammerscales is the seat of Major William Bell Macdonald J.P. Carruthers town is a small village in this parish, about 2 miles south-west from Dalton and the same distance north-east from Ruthwell station. Area, 6,886 acres; rateable value, £5,103; the population in 1891 was 563, and in 1881, 579.

DORNOCK is a parish and small village, on the high road from Annan to Carlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Firth, in the district of Annandale, and small debts court district of Annan and Dumfries, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, and is 84 miles south of Edinburgh, 18 south of Langholm, 17 south-east of Dumfries, 12 south-east of Lockerbie, 7 south of Ecclefechan and 2½ east of Annan. The parish, which is about 2½ miles square, is washed on its southern border by the Solway. Robgill Tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings of Rohgill, is now the property and residence of Robert Paterson esq. Stapleton Tower, an ancient structure on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish, is now the residence of John A. Critchley esq. J.P. At a short distance from the village are the remains of a Roman military road and a Druidical circle. In Dornock churchyard are two coped gravestones, each 6½ feet long and two broad, with hitherto undeciphered inscriptions. The Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T.; the Earl of Mansfield; Sir Frederick John W. Johnstone, bart. of Westerhall, Langholm, and Capt. E. A. Critchley are the principal landowners. Area of the parish, 4,626 acres; rateable value, £6,270; population in 1891, 810, and in 1881, 814.

DUMFRIES WITH MAXWELLTOWN.

DUMFRIES (Gaelic, "dún Fris," the Frisians' fortress) is a town and royal burgh, the capital of the county and the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, also a parish, 338 miles from London (via Manchester), 71 south of Edinburgh, 72 south-east of Glasgow, 180 south-by-west of Aberdeen, 60 south-east of Arr. 32 north-west of Carlisle, 15 north-north-west of Annan and 8 south-west of Lochmaben, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, forming an important junction as connecting the Midland system from Glasgow to London, the Caledonian main line at Lockerbie for Glasgow, Edinburgh and the north of Scotland, and the London and North Western for London. It is also a junction for the Castle Douglas, Newton Stewart, and Stranraer railways, worked in connection with the mail steamers from Stranraer to Larne, on the east coast of Co. Antrim, which is the shortest sea passage between Scotland and Ireland, and at the goods stations of the G. and S. W. and Caledonian railways are bonded stores for spirits &c. supervised by the excise officers. This port is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about 9 miles above its confluence with the Solway Firth, and is navigable for vessels of light tonnage, the tide flowing as high as the old bridge. It was undoubtedly a place of considerable size long before the days of William the Lion, and in his reign (1165-1214) it was erected into a royal burgh.

Three bridges connect the town with Maxwelltown, the New bridge, built in 1795, a foot suspension bridge opened in 1875 and the "Old Bridge": this last was built towards the end of the 13th century by Devorgilla, daughter of the Lord of Galloway and wife of John Balliol, who also about the same time founded a Franciscan monastery in the town and New (or Sweetheart) Abbey, at the base of Criffell on the Kirkcudbright side of the Nith; this old bridge is a narrow steep structure of stone, suitable for pack-horses, and consists now of 6 arches, though formerly, when it spanned part of either shore, it is said to have had 13. It is now only used by foot passengers.

Along the river Nith are quays at which vessels trading here load and discharge; those at the town have a depth of water of 8 to 9 feet at high water, while New Quay, 1½ miles lower down, has 10 feet and Glencaple Quay, 4½ miles below the town and 7½ from the mouth of the river, has 15 feet.

Under the provisions of the "Customs Act, 1846" (9 and 10 Vict. c. 102) the port of Dumfries was limited in Sept. 1847 so as to extend from Kirkandrews Burn to Southern Point, and then to the river Sark. The Customs District was constituted a Court of Survey District in October, 1876, and a Wreck Receivers' District was defined in October, 1876, under the "Merchant Shipping Act, 1854" (17 and 18 Vict. c. 104). The amount of customs revenue received in 1898 was £1,279. During the year 1898 fishing boats equal to 281 tons, and employing 136 hands, were registered as belonging to the port, besides 18 other vessels, with an aggregate of 982 tons. Fishing boats and their implements are distinguished by the letters D.S. The number of British vessels that entered the port in 1898 with cargoes and in ballast was 472, of 25,150 tons, and cleared 484, of 25,658 tons. In the general coasting trade 434 vessels entered, of 22,817 tons; cleared 459, of 24,428 tons.

The principal imports are agricultural produce, coal, slate and iron; the exports being wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool and freestone, the latter worked at Lochabriggs, 3 miles distant. The manufacture of woollen tweed is very extensively carried on here, and considerable business is also done in hosiery. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for hareskins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of home fur in England; and it is still regarded as the arbiter of prices in this respect. The numerous nursery grounds lying near the town also afford employment to the working classes. The town is lighted with gas from works now belonging to the Corporation and purchased by them in 1878 from the Dumfries Gas Light Co. for £21,000. Various additions have since been made, and the total cost up to 1895 amounted to £41,866. A copious supply of pure water is obtained from ample sources about 5 miles from the town; the offices are in Loreburn street.

The municipal government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nineteen councillors. Dumfries, together with Annan, Lochmaben, Sanquhar and Kirkcudbright, comprise the Dumfries Parliamentary District, formed in 1708, and returning one member to Parliament. Circuit courts of justice are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewardry of Kirkcudbright and Wigtonshire; there are also ordinary and small debt, sheriff's and justiciary burgh courts. There is a Burgh police force, with offices in Buccleuch street, and a Fire Brigade. The Court house and County buildings are large, elegant erections, in Buccleuch street. There is also a Court house and Bridewell in Teregless street; H.M. Prison is in Maxwelltown.

The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Observatory, on Coroerry Hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, was erected by a local scientific society, at a cost of about £1,050, from the designs of Mr. Newall, architect, and is a building of four storeys—the lower for the keeper, three others furnished with globes and mathematical instruments; and an upper storey containing a camera-obscura and prism. The grounds, extending over an acre, were enlarged in 1897, and are laid out with much taste, and planted with flowers and shrubs.

The County Club, in Assembly street, formerly the old Assembly rooms, is now in the possession of the Dumfries and Galloway Club.

The Mechanics' Institution and Library is at 23 Nith place. Dumfries and Galloway Infirmary, founded in 1776, is still the only one in the south of Scotland, and in 1897 a new fever house was added to commemorate the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. Medical advice and medicine are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions &c. and is under the management of governors.

The Crichton Royal Institution, Hospital and Southern Counties Lunatic Asylum was endowed by the late James Crichton esq. of Friar's Carse, and incorporated by Act of Parliament, dated 3rd July, 1840, as a hospital for the insane and a home for mental and nervous invalids of the higher and middle classes. The grounds, about 750 acres in extent, are pleasantly situated on an elevation overlooking the valley of the Nith, and have a south-western aspect and an extensive and varied prospect. The first or old house of the institution is devoted to the reception of patients of the wealthier classes; the second house, another large building within the grounds, is appropriated chiefly to the care and treatment of patients at lower rates of board and of pauper lunatics belonging to the district; the total number of patients is about 750.

Moorhead's Hospital, in St. Michael street, founded in 1753 by Messrs. J. & W. Moorhead, merchants, is intended for the support of the aged and indigent poor. It is governed by a body of directors elected from the magistrates and town council, and is supported by benefactions, donations and annual subscriptions.

Carruthers' Almshouses in Brooms road, founded by Mrs. Carruthers. The Johnstone Almshouses, in Johnstone park, were erected by the trustees of the late David Johnstone, solicitor, for ladies in reduced circumstances.

St. George's Hall, Buccleuch street, on the site of the old prison, was erected by the congregation of Free St. George's church, and will hold 700 persons. There is also a Freemasons' hall, in George street, and in Irish street are Greyfriars' hall and the Mechanics' hall; Dickson's hall is in High street, St. Mary's hall in English street and Shakespeare hall in the street of that name.

There are branches here of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Co. Bank, the Clydesdale Bank Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, the National Bank of Scotland Limited and the Union Bank of Scotland Limited.

The Theatre, in Shakespeare street, erected in 1790, is a neat building of stone. It was here that Edmund Keau first emerged from obscurity to fame, and he never forgot the early patronage of the people of Dumfries.

The Post Office, in Buccleuch street, is an edifice of Dumfriesshire red stone, and was opened in 1839.

The Public Baths and Washhouses, in Greensands, were erected in 1898, at a cost of £3,800, as a gift to the Corporation, by Miss McKie, of the Moat House, Dumfries.

St. Michael's, the mother church of Dumfries, was rebuilt in 1745 on the site of a pre-Reformation church, and is a rectangular structure with a massive and lofty tower and spire: the interior has stone arcades dividing it into nave and aisles, and many of the windows are filled with stained glass: under the entrance and on the walls there are numerous marble monuments, including one to Allan Cunningham, author, biographer and poet, who died 29 Oct. 1842: the pew in which Burns sat is distinguished by a brass tablet. The cemetery attached to the church contains numerous elegant and curious monuments, and particularly the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of Robert Burns, who died at Dumfries on the 21st July, 1796, aged 37 years; the design for the mausoleum was by F. Hunt esq. of London, and the sculptured work by Turnerelli; here is also the ruined monument of Provost Corone, and tomb of Francis Irving, M.P. for the burgh in 1617. Near the gate is buried Bailie Paterson, to whom the Dumfries Academy is indebted for its endowments: within an inclosure surrounded by iron rails, lie the remains of more than 420 inhabitants of Dumfries, who died of Asiatic cholera, from 15 Sept. to 27 Nov. 1832: in the churchyard are also inscribed stones to William Grierson, William Welsh and James Kirk, three martyrs who suffered death on the Whitesands—the two former on Jan. 2nd, 1667, and the latter June, 1686—and there is a lofty pyramid of granite, erected in 1834, to these and other Nithside martyrs.

Greyfriars is a parish formed from that of Dumfries. The church, originally erected on the site of the old castle during the period 1722-7, and then called "the New Church," was built from the Burgh funds, and is the property of the town: in 1866-8 it was rebuilt, at a total cost of over £7,161, in the Decorated style, and renamed "Greyfriars' Church;" it has a tower with spire, 164 feet in height, and a fine entrance doorway, copied in part from a doorway in Melrose abbey; there are memorial windows to Robert Scott and Jane Lindsay, his wife, placed in 1867; William H. Cairns M.A. late rector of Dumfries Academy, erected in 1872; William Gordon, c. 1890; and to Mr. Barker, erected by his wife: the colours of the 2nd Batt. 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, carried during the period 1858-78, were deposited here 10 Sept. 1878, and are now suspended in the church: there is also an inscribed brass erected by Col. John Talbot Coke, commanding 2nd Batt. the King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th foot), to his comrades who died in Egypt during 1888-9: the church will seat 1,000 persons. Population of the parish, 3,746.

The church of St. Mary, on the north side of English street, has an attached cemetery containing several well executed monuments. St. John's Episcopal church, erected in 1867-8, is a fine building in the Gothic style, from designs by Mr. W. Slater and Mr. R. H. Carpenter, architects, of London, with tower and spire 120 feet high.

This town is the head of the Roman Catholic diocese of Galloway, comprising the counties of Dumfries, Kirkcubright and Wigton, and most of Ayr. The Roman Catholic Pro-Cathedral, in Shakespeare street, is a large and handsome edifice, and has schools in connection in Broeke street.

The Dumfries Academy, in Academy street, established under its present designation in 1804, superseded the Grammar school and the Commercial school. The date of the foundation of these schools is unknown, but mention is made of the Grammar school in the sessions clerk's records for 1688. In 1722 the masters in both schools were endowed by Bailie Paterson, of Dumfries, who bequeathed 15,000 merks to the magistrates and ministers of Dumfries for the benefit of the teachers; and in the following year by John Rainey, of Norwich, to the extent of £500. The Bell bequest of £100, left in 1789, is given to the English master. The present structure was built in 1803, mainly by private subscription, and for some years the subscribers took a share in the management of the academy, but in 1814 it was handed over to the town council, and in August, 1872, by the operation of the Education Act, it was transferred, as a high class public school, to the management of the Dumfries Burgh School Board. The new building, erected in 1896-7, at an estimated cost of £14,000, and opened in 1897, is an edifice in the Classic style, with a dome 62 feet in height, surmounted by a figure emblematic of Learning; there are detached blocks providing technical workshops and a gymnasium. A School of Art, partially endowed, is also carried on in the same building. The academy is available for 600 pupils.

The Industrial school, available for 120 boys, drawn from many different parts of Scotland, is under efficient management, and the boys are taught shoe making, tailoring, net making, wood turning &c. Attached to the school is a band of pipers, known throughout Scotland, and often engaged to play in the large centres, by which a considerable addition is often made to the revenue.

The Militia Barracks are occupied by the 3rd Batt. King's Own Scottish Borderers; the 3rd Volunteer Batt. K.O.S.B. has its head quarters at the Drill hall, Newhall terrace, erected from designs by Mr. A. B. Crombie, architect, of Dumfries, and seating 3,000 persons. F and G Companies of the Galloway Rifle Corps (attached to the Royal Scots Fusiliers) have an armoury and orderly room at Maxwelltown.

The Queensberry memorial consists of a fine Doric column raised by the county of Dumfries to the memory of Charles, 3rd Duke of Queensberry, who died 22 Oct. 1778. In Church place, close to Greyfriars church, is the fine statue of the poet Burns, unveiled by Lord Rosebery 6th April, 1882; the figure, of Sicilian marble, was executed at Carrara, from a model designed and prepared by Mrs. D. O. Hill, and is placed on a plain pedestal of dark grey granite, at a height of about nine feet from the ground.

The ancient monastery of Greyfriars, in this town, was the scene of a remarkable tragedy about the middle of the 14th century, when John Comyn, known as the "Red Comyn" (a powerful chieftain who formerly held the regency of Scotland) was assassinated by Robert the Bruce and Sir Roger Kirkpatrick, of Closeburne, and Lindsay, two of his adherents.

Two newspapers are issued weekly, viz.—the "Dumfries and Galloway Courier and Herald," and the "Dumfries and Galloway Standard," both of which have a large circulation.

The principal hotels are the King's Arms, the Commercial, the Station, the Queensberry, the Waverley, and the Globe, commonly known as Burns' Hauf; here Burns spent many of his leisure hours and numerous relics of him are still preserved.

The Market hall is in Irish street; the butter and egg market in Loreburn street. Wednesday is the market day. The two principal half-yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and Road fairs. Besides the usual commodities that change hands at these periods, many thousand head of cattle are bought and sold, and vast quantities of pork also find purchasers in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February. The principal fairs are held on the 12th and 13th of February if Tuesday and Wednesday; if not, Tuesday and Wednesday following; hiring, 13th if Wednesday, if not, Wednesday after; in March, hiring, last Wednesday; April, hiring, last Wednesday; May, horse, Wednesday before 26th; hiring, Wednesday 26th or first Wednesday after; June, horse, Wednesday after 17th (O.S.); September, horse, 24th if Tuesday, if not, Tuesday after; horse and hiring, 25th if Wednesday, if not, Wednesday after; October, hiring, third Wednesday; November, horses, Wednesday before 22nd; hiring, 22nd if Wednesday, if not, first Wednesday after; pork every Wednesday in months of January, February, March, November and December.

There are two auction marts for the sale of cattle, sheep, &c., through which pass very large quantities of stock every week, and are frequented by dealers from all parts of England and Scotland; Dumfries being the centre of a large agricultural district.

The principal landowners are the Right Hon. Aretas Akers Douglas P.C., M.P., D.L., J.P. of Craigs; the Directors of the Crichton Institution and John Howat esq. The soil is a light loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are oats, roots and potatoes.

The parish of Dumfries comprises an area of 10,032 acres; rateable value, burgh £103,149, parish £72,889; the population in 1891 was 17,878, and in 1881 16,841; in 1891 the town had a population of 13,076, and Maxwelltown had 4,975, while the royal burgh showed 16,675, and the parliamentary, 17,821.

The number of electors on the Dumfries parliamentary register in 1898 was 2,317, and of the whole district of burghs 3,640.

Maxwelltown is a burgh of barony, police burgh, and small debt court (held on the last Thursday in each month by the sheriff of Kirkcubright), in the parish of Troqueer, in the stewardry of Kirkcubright, and is connected with Dumfries by three bridges across the Nith, one of these (erected in 1795) in continuation of Buccleuch street, Dumfries, was widened and greatly improved in 1892-3 at a cost of over £4,000, defrayed by Miss McKie, of the Moat House, Dumfries. The charter for the creation of the burgh was obtained from the Crown in 1810, and since that time it has considerably improved both in character and population; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, and councillors, distinct from Dumfries, of which it is virtually an extension and is comprised within that parliamentary burgh. Among the trading establishments are saw mills, tweed and hosiery factories and dye works. The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Observatory, which stands on Corberry hill, in this burgh, was erected by a local scientific society, and is a building of four storeys, the uppermost of which has a camera-obscura. About a mile along the Maxwelltown bank of the Nith are situated the ruins of Lincluden Abbey, locally in the parish of Tereggies, and county of Kirkcubright (which see). Her Majesty's prison for Dumfries and Galloway, situated here, is a large and handsome building, opened August 15th, 1833. Rateable value of the burgh, £21,369.

DUNSCORE is a parish and village, in the district of Nithsdale and in Upper Nithsdale poor combination and Dumfries small debt court district, 4 miles south-west of Auldgrith (the nearest) station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, 9 north-west from Dumfries and 7 south-east from Moniaive, is bounded by Glencairn and Keir on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcudbrightshire on the south, and is 12 miles in length and from 1 to 4 miles wide. A light railway is about (1899) to be constructed from Dumfries to Moniaive, and will have a station here about half a mile from the village. In the parish are stone quarries. The land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and cattle are reared off these lands for the southern markets. Thomas Welsh, an eminent person, and son-in-law of John Knox, was a native of Dunscore, and Robert Burns at one time held a farm here called Ellisland, and also took charge of the village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddell esq. Mrs. Frank and William Hamilton Walker are the principal landowners. The soil is light sandy; sub-soil, gravel. The chief crops are oats, potatoes and turnips. The area comprises 14,815 acres and rateable value, £11,201; the population in 1891 was 1,260, and in 1881, 1,405.

DURISDEER is a parish and village, in Upper Nithsdale poor combination, and in the Dumfries small debt court district; the parish is bounded on the south and south-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is 8 miles in length and 6 in breadth. The village is about 6 miles north of Thornhill and 2 from Carronbridge (the nearest) station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. Drumranrig Castle, the noble mansion of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry K.G., K.T. who is the principal landowner, is beautifully situated about 4 miles from Thornhill, on the right bank of the river, and occupies an elevated site overlooking the whole district. The castle was rebuilt by William, first Duke of Queensberry, between the years 1679 and 1689. Within the last half century the woods around the castle have been greatly extended, and now cover a large portion of country. The beautiful gardens and pleasure grounds of the castle are kept with great care, and are free to the inspection of visitors on Tuesdays and Fridays. In 1776, when Mr. Pennoant visited Drumranrig, there existed in the woods a breed of wild cat described as being of a milk-white colour, with black ears and finely curved horns. They were removed, it is said, to Chillingham Castle in Northumberland, the seat of the Earl of Tankerville, where the breed still exists, and is also found at Hamilton. Adjoining the parish church is the burial place of the Douglas family, Marquesses of Queensberry and Viscounts Drumlanrig; above it rises a splendid marble monument, with effigies, executed in Rome, representing James, second Duke of Queensberry

K.G. d. 1711, and Mary, his Duchess; about a mile from the church are traces of a camp. The area comprises 19,717 acres; rateable value, £12,355; the population in 1891 was 1,076, and in 1881, 1,107.

Post Office, Durisdeer; Miss Agnes Weir, postmistress. Letters received through Thornhill. Delivery, 8.30 a.m.; dispatch, 2.30 p.m. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at Thornhill, 6 miles distant.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable village and principal place in the parish of Hoddam and in the small debts court district of Dumfries and Annan, 71 miles south of Edinburgh, 75 south-east of Glasgow, 20 north-west by rail from Carlisle, 12 east of Dumfries, 6 north of Annan, and 14 west-south-west from Langholm, lying in a fine situation near the foot of Annandale, and on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, with a station 1 mile distant on the Caledonian railway. A few of the inhabitants find employment in weaving woollen skirting goods for the Glasgow manufacturers. The established church at Hoddam is a small edifice of stone, consisting of nave and north aisle, with a turret and one bell. There is a branch here of the Royal Bank of Scotland. Fairs are held for cattle &c. on the Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the Tuesday after the 20th October. Hoddam Castle, finely situated on the river Annan, about 2½ miles west from Ecclefechan, is the seat of Edward Brook esq. who, as principal landowner and superior, claims certain customs for all standings and for all cattle exposed for sale. Here was born, 4 Dec. 1795, Thomas Carlyle, now world renowned as a moral philosopher and historian. His father, James Carlyle, was by trade a mason, and sent him first, in 1805, to the Grammar school at Annan, and afterwards, in Nov. 1809, when only 14 years of age, to the University of Edinburgh. Carlyle subsequently became mathematical tutor at Annan school, and in 1816 was appointed master of the school at Kirkcaldy, on leaving which in 1818 he went to Edinburgh, and in 1822 was tutor there to the sons of a Mr. Butler; in 1825 he took a farm at Hoddam hill, and in 1826 married Jane Baillie Welsh, daughter of the laird of Craigenputtock, to which place he removed in 1828, but in the summer of 1834 he established himself at the now famous house, 5 Cheyne row, Chelsea, where he resided until his death, 4 Feb. 1881, and here several of his works, including his "Life of Frederick the Great," completed in 1865, were written; in 1866 he was chosen Lord Rector of Edinburgh University, but in the same year lost his wife, a blow from which he never rallied. The remains of the great philosopher were brought from London, and interred in the parish churchyard here, and both the cottage in which he was born and his house in Chelsea are now religiously preserved, and are open to the inspection of visitors. Within a short distance of the village are the remains of two camps, one of which is said to be one of the most complete in Scotland. The land in Hoddam parish is of the best quality, and is under a superior system of cultivation. The area of the parish of Hoddam comprises 7,514 acres; rateable value being £12,742; the population in 1891 was 1,533, including 746 in the village of Ecclefechan, and in 1881, 1,548, with 768 in the village.

GLENCAIRN is a parish, in Upper Nithsdale poor combination, and in the Dumfries small debt court district, and is 11 miles in length, by from 3 to 5 in breadth, and distant 9 miles from Thornhill station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. The western and northern divisions are mountainous and pastoral. Several small rivulets meander through the parish; on the south-west verge of which is Loch Urr, whence issues the river of that name.

Moniaive, a considerable and pleasant village in this parish, 16 miles north-west from Dumfries, and 8 south-west from Thornhill, is a place of some antiquity, and was created a burgh of barony by charter in the reign of Charles I. On an eminence near the village stands a monument erected by subscription in 1828, and inscribed to the Rev. James Renwick, the last person who suffered death in Scotland as a Covenanter; he was born at Moniaive, 15th February, 1662, and executed at the Grass Market, Edinburgh, 17th February, 1688. The Union Bank of Scotland Limited has a branch in the village. There are also two respectable inns, the Craigharroch Arms and the George.

Dunreggan, now a suburb of Moniaive, is situated on the north bank of the Dalwhat water, here crossed by a bridge. Thornhill, the nearest railway station, is 9 miles distant.

Captain George Laurie Walker, of Crawfordton; the Rev. Sir J. R. L. Emilins Laurie bart. B.D. of Maxwellton; Captain Robert Cutlar Ferguson J.P. of Craigharroch; James McCall esq. of Caitloch, and James Walter Ferrier Connel, of Anchencheyne, are the principal landowners. The area of the parish comprises 30,083 acres; rateable value, £14,747; the population in 1891 was 1,647, including 650 in Moniaive and Dunreggan, and in 1881 was 1,737, with 699 in the villages.

GRAITNEY (or Gretna) is a parish and
village in the south part of the county,
small debt court district of Dumfries and Annandale, and poor combination of Kirkpatrick-Fleming, and on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish comprehends the old parishes of Graitney
and Bedkirk, which were united in 1609.
The village of Graitney, or Gretna Green,
is on the road from Annan to Carlisle, 8 miles east from the former and 9½ from the latter town, with a station on the Glasgow
and South Western Railway. The Caledonian railway passes through the parish. The river Esk, which flows to the south, discharging itself into the Solway Frith, is now
spanned by an iron bridge erected from the designs of Thomas Telford, the eminent engineer; previously the Solway was crossed by a ferry boat. An extensive salmon fishery is carried on in the Solway. This place was long noted for the celebration of clandestine or runaway marriages. Any person could perform the ceremony, which merely amounted to a declaration before witnesses,
that the parties were man and wife, such an acknowledgment being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland,

and on a certificate being subscribed by the person officiating and by the witnesses the union became quite indissoluble. The fee charged varied according to circumstances
and the social position of the parties—from half a guinea to £40, or even £50. The first person who celebrated these marriages is said to have been one Coulthard, a fisherman, who also conveniently owned the ferryboat; another was John Paisley, a tobacconist, though termed a blacksmith; he officiated from 1760 at Megg's Hill, but in 1782 removed to Springfield, and died in 1814; later, the officiating priest was a man named Elliott. During the period 1850-55, the average of marriages here
amounted to 747 yearly, but under the provisions of an Act of Parliament passed 29th
July, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 96), these marriages were declared illegal, unless one of the persons married had been resident in Scotland for 21 days previous to the marriage. The following was the form of the marriage certificate, which, if required, was furnished:—

"KINGDOM OF SCOTLAND, COUNTY OF DUMFRIES, PARISH OF GREтна.

"These are to certify to all whom these presents may come, that A. B. from the parish of _____, in the county of _____, and
C. D. from the parish of _____, in the county of _____,
being now here present, and having declared themselves single persons, were
this day married after the manner of the laws of the Church of Scotland, and agreeable to the laws of Scotland.

"As witness our hands at Gretna Hall, &c.
&c."

HOLYWOOD is a parish and village, on the road from Dumfries to Glasgow, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, about 3½ miles north from Dumfries. The parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for 10 miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from 2 to 3 miles, and is in the small debt court of Dumfries. The district derives its name from a sacred grove, to which, it is said, the Druids resorted to perform their rights. Here was once a monastery of the Premonstratensian order, founded at the beginning of the 12th century, by an Irish recluse, named Congal, and the ruins still standing in the churchyard are supposed to be the remains of the buildings. The church, a much admired edifice, stands in a delightful part of the country. William Johnston J.P. of Cowhill Tower; William Glen Airston; Peter Carruthers, of Portrack; John Henry Gilchrist Clark, of Speddoch; Henry Lamont, of Gribton; James Henry Douglas, of Newtonairs, and Maxwell Hyslop Maxwell, of Princes Park, Liverpool, are the principal landowners. The soil of the upper part of the parish is clay, lower part light loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops, oats, potatoes, roots and pasture. The area comprises 8,805 acres; rateable value, £12,851; the population in 1891 was 1,011, and in 1881, 1,078.

Post Office, Holywood; Matthew Lorimer, sub-postmaster. Letters through Dumfries. Delivery, 7.40 a.m.; dispatch, 4.5 p.m. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at Dumfries, 4 miles distant

KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA is a parish, formerly partly in Lanarkshire, and village, in the upper district of Annandale, bounded on the north by Moffat, on the east by Wamphray. At Beattock, in this parish, is a station on the Caledonian railway, about 17 miles north from Dumfries. The parish church is a plain building of stone with a tower. In the parish is the celebrated Garpel Linn; and here also is the ruined castle of Auchencastle, the remains of which cover a considerable extent of ground. It was erected by Randolph, Earl of Murray, during the minority of David Bruce, and was subsequently held by Douglas of Morton. The old tower of Loch-house is supposed to have been rebuilt by James Johnstone, of Corehead, chamberlain to Walter Whiteford, bishop of Brechin (1635-43), whose daughter he married, and thus obtained possession of extensive lands in Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Moffat. Loch-house is now inhabited by a cottier or herd. Queensberry, 2,270 feet in height, lies to the west of the parish. A little to the north-west of Moffat is an ancient chapel said to have belonged to the Knights Templars and the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Beattock House, on the Evan, is a modern mansion, the residence of T. G. Bishop esq. The modern mansion called Auchencastle, the residence of William Younger esq. M.P. is a large house situated on rising ground, near the Evan water. John James Hope-Johnstone esq. J.P., D.L. of Rachills, is the principal landowner. About one-third of the land is under tillage; the larger portion is unimproved and pasture, though it is being rapidly subdued to the plough. Craigielands and Hoppertoolie are hamlets in Kirkpatrick-Juxta. The area comprises 22,335 acres; rateable value, £12,272, and the population in 1891 was 976. The small portion in Lanarkshire was transferred to Dumfries since 1889 by Local Government Board Order No. 2.

KIRKTON, see KIRKMAHOE.

LANGHOLM is a town and police burgh and parish 'n Hawick poor combination and the seat of a presbytery, 73 miles from Edinburgh, 80 south-west from Glasgow, 30 east-by-north from Dumfries, 21 north from Carlisle, 18 north-north-east from Annan and 12 north from Longtown, Cumberland, with a station on the North British railway; the town is delightfully situated on both sides of the Esk, over which there is a suspension bridge, and also a stone bridge of three arches, affording a view of the confluence of the Ewes and the Wauchope with the Esk. The local industries comprise the making of blankets, tweeds and other fabrics, both for home markets and for exportation, and there are now six factories, giving employment to many hands, besides which there are distilleries, dye-houses and a tannery. The town is supplied with water from a copious spring known as "Whita Wells," and lighted with gas from works the property of a company. The government of the town is vested in a provost, two bailies and six commissioners. Sheriff small debt courts and justice of peace courts are held as required. The Town Hall, in the Market place, has a tower with spire and a well-lighted clock. The Public Library, richly endowed by Thomas Telford esq. the celebrated engineer, a native of the district (d. 1834), occupies a substantial building in High street, erected at a cost of about £2,900, of which sum £1,000 was a bequest of the late Alexander Reid esq. The Hope Cottage Hospital was erected in 1898, after designs by Messrs. Wood and Ainslie, architects, of London, from a bequest of the late Mr. Thomas Hope, of New York, a native of Langholm, who left the residue of his estate, amounting to over £100,000, for this purpose. On the hill behind the town stands a monument to General Sir John Malcolm G.C.B. who died in 1833, erected at a cost of £1,300; near the Post Office stands a monument to his brother, Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm G.C.B., G.C.M.G. a distinguished naval officer, d. 20 July, 1838. The H Company, 3rd Vol. Batt. K.O.S.B. has its head quarters here, and a drill room in the Temperance Hotel buildings. There is a Masonic hall, at which the meetings of the Eskdale Kilwinning lodge, No. 107, are held. There are branches here of the National Bank of Scotland Lm. and the British Linen Company. A newspaper, the "Eskdale and Liddesdale Advertiser," is published in the town. The market day is Wednesday; fairs are held on the 1st Wednesday in March (for the lambing season), 16th April (for seeds), the last Tuesday in May (old style), 26th July (for lambs and wool), 18th September (for sheep), and 6th November (for cattle); there are also two hiring days—one in May and the other in November. A sale of cattle, sheep &c. is held fortnightly, and the Eskdale and Liddesdale Agricultural Society hold their show of stock generally in October, at which premiums are awarded. The parish church, a modern structure, contains a splendid organ, provided at a cost of £1,200. The border house or tower of Langholm, formerly the property of the Armstrongs, is now in a state of ruin. Wauchope Castle, the earliest seat of the Lindsay family, which stood in the immediate neighbourhood, was another example. The tower of Gilnockie, still standing about four miles below Langholm, on the right bank of the Esk, was renovated by the late Duke of Buccleuch, and is now open for the inspection of visitors. Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, a border chieftain, whose name was associated with many incidents belonging to this locality. He was eventually executed at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss Paul, on the road between Langholm and Hawick, together with some of his companions, by order of James V. and the graves of the whole band are to be seen in a deserted churchyard at Carlenrig, Roxburgh. Alexander Peden, one of the most famous of Scottish worthies, is also associated with this neighbourhood, and "knows" or small hill, commanding a delightful view of the valley, is still named "Peden's View," and at its foot is "Peden's Well." Langholm was the birthplace, 29 Sept. 1734, of William Julius Meikle, or Mickle, translator of the "Lusiad" of Camoens (1775), and author of the song "There's nae luck about the houses;" he died at Forest Hill, Oxon, 28 Oct. 1788. In the neighbourhood of Langholm is a copious mineral spring, called "Bloch Well," which is efficacious in the cure of cutaneous diseases, but owing to the limited accommodation which exists in its immediate neighbourhood, it is less known than it should be. Langholm Lodge, the residence of the Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T., stands just outside the town, in a beautiful park, and in the grounds is a private Episcopal chapel, to which the public are admitted. The area comprises

16,971 acres; rateable value, of landward £6,458, burghal £12,758; the population in 1891 was 3,970, including 3,643 in the town of Langholm, and in 1881 was 4,612, with 4,209 in the town.

LOCHMABEN is a town, royal burgh, parish and the seat of a presbytery, with a station on a branch from Lockerbie of the Caledonian railway, 65 miles south from Edinburgh, 70 south-east from Glasgow, 33 south-east from Sanquhar, 30 north-west from Carlisle, 31 south-east from Thornhill, 15 south from Moffat, 13 north-west from Annan, 10 west-north-west from Ecclefechan, 8½ north-by-east from Dumfries and 4 west from Lockerbie; it is rural in character, and in the summer months is a popular place of resort for tourists and other visitors, and it is lighted with gas by a company. Lochmaben was constituted a royal burgh at a very early period; its present charter was granted by James VI. and dated 16th of July, 1612; it states that it is a renewal of charters granted by his predecessors; from this charter it also appears that the town was more than once destroyed during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records &c., totally lost. The municipal government is vested in a provost, one baillie, a dean of guild, a treasurer and five councillors. Lochmaben, together with Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Annan and Sanquhar, form the Dumfries parliamentary district, constituted in 1708, and returning one member to Parliament; it is in the small debt court of Dumfries, but occasional courts are held at Lockerbie. The Town Hall, which stands in the middle of the principal street, has a tower with a clock, and above the entrance is a statue, placed by public subscription, to the Rev. William Graham, a former minister of Newhaven, who died in 1877; opposite the Town Hall is a statue of King Robert Bruce. A Freemasons' lodge meets at the Masonic Hall and Club, in High street, and there is also a curling club, a bowling green, and various associations. The National Bank of Scotland Limited has a branch here, and there is a Savings Bank for the town and neighbourhood. The Parish church, erected at a cost of £3,000, is a building in the Pointed style, with a bold square tower, containing 2 bells; the foundation stone was laid April 10th, 1813, and the church opened for divine worship in July, 1820; it will seat about 1,400 persons. The previous church stood in the centre of the old churchyard, and the burial ground is still used for burial purposes. The Free church, built in 1844 at a cost of about £800, has 700 sittings. There is also a United Presbyterian church and a Free church at Hightae, about three miles from Lochmaben. Lochmaben Castle, a fortress of great strength, was the chief residence of the Bruces, Lords of Annandale, till the end of the 13th century; it was built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the same loch, and this edifice, with its outworks, covered about 16 acres. In 1487 it was annexed by Parliament to the Crown, and is now the property, or in the keeping of Capt. J. J. Hope Johnstone J.P., D.L. of Rachills. Some of the existing walls are of great thickness, and the whole presents a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins overshadowed by fir trees. In 1897 a bridge was erected over the moat by public subscription, to commemorate the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. The Castle Loch, which flows very near the south side of the town, is about three miles in circumference; the Mill Loch, of somewhat less dimensions, lies on the north side of the town, and at times extends up to the doors of the houses. Both these lochs contain a fish called the vendace, or vendise, which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with anywhere else in Britain, although not uncommon in Sweden. It is of the salmon family, is delicately formed and about six inches long. How it came here is not exactly known, but some suppose it to have been brought from La Vendee, in France, when Bruce's castle was a royal residence, and hence they derive the name "vendace." Each loch has its vendace club, composed of gentlemen of the county, who meet once a year, about the end of July, to have a day's fishing and recreation. These lochs, as well as four others of considerable extent, are much resorted to by boating and fishing parties, and they afford agreeable recreation both to the inhabitants and to many tourists and visitors.

Within the parish of Lochmaben are four villages known as the "Four towns," viz.: Smallholm, Greenhill, Heck and Hightae, and remarkable as holding their lands by a peculiar tenure. The proprietors of lands in these baronies are called "the King's Kindly Tenants," and by successive Royal warrants and protections granted in 1592, 1602 and 1664, have the right to continue in undisturbed possession of their respective holdings at the old rent, so long as they continue to pay the same. These baronies are said to have been conferred on the retainers of the Bruce, and many of the present holders can trace back their ancestry for centuries. Son succeeds father, and the title is completed by the entry of the name in Lord Mansfield's rental book, and the usual solemnities of service and infeftment, otherwise common to the law of Scotland, are here unknown.

Sir Robert Jardine bart. of Castle Milk, Lockerbie; David Jardine Jardine esq. of Corrie Lodge, Lockerbie; Andrew J. S. Johnstone esq. and William Bell Macdonald esq. are the principal landowners. The soil is a light loam; sub-soil, gravel. The chief crops are oats, roots, potatoes and pasture. LOCKERBIE WITH DRYFESDALE.

LOCKERBIE is a small market town and police burgh in the parish of Dryfesdale, 67 miles south of Edinburgh, 12 east of Dumfries, 11 north-west of Annan, 6 north-west of Ecclefechan, 4 east of Lochmaben, 72 south-east from Glasgow and 26½ north-west from Carlisle, with a station on the Caledonian railway, which is also the junction of a branch to Lochmaben and Dumfries. There is an active trade in articles of general and domestic consumption. The town is well lighted with gas from works at Townfoot. The municipal body consists of a provost, two bailies, town clerk, treasurer, and 3 commissioners. The Town Hall, erected at a cost (inclusive of site, £1,500) of £3,650, is an edifice in the conventional Scottish style, containing committee rooms and a lesser hall, and in the basement is a large market hall, for the use of farmers and others attending the markets. The Mechanics' Hall, High street, erected with a considerable sum of money left by Mr. George Easton, of Chester, for this purpose, is a building of stone. There is a subscription library at the Town Hall buildings. Connected with the town is a Masonic Lodge, and there is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor. The Parish church stands near the High street, and is centrally placed in relation to the parish generally. The Free church is a good building in Bridge street and there are United Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Roman Catholic churches. There are branches here of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited and the Clydesdale Bank Limited and also a bank for savings, opened in 1824. The "Anandale Herald and Moffat News" is published here every Thursday, and in Moffat every Friday. The following fairs are held here: January, every Thursday, pork market; February, pork market on each Thursday and Candemas horse fair; March, pork market 1 and 2 Thursday, last pork and seed market 3 Thursday; April, fair for hoggits on 2 Thursday and for hiring on 3 Thursday; May, Fast day, 1 Friday and cattle market Thursday; June, merchants' holiday 2 Tuesday, cattle 4 Thursday; July, merchants' holiday 2 Tuesday, cattle 4 Thursday; August, annual holiday 2 Friday, lamb fair and hiring 2 Thursday; September, cattle and sheep 4 Thursday, merchants' holiday 3 Friday; October, cattle and sheep 3 Thursday counting from the September market, hiring 4 Thursday; November, Fast day 1 Friday, Martinmas fair and the first pork market of season on 4 Thursday; December, pork market every Thursday during the month.

Dryfesdale is a parish in the district of Anandale, and includes the town of Lockerbie. The extreme length from north-east to south-west is about 7 miles, the average breadth of the upper part is about 3 miles, and of the lower half about one and a half; about two-thirds of the parish is lowland and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of bolm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dryfe. Of the whole extent of the land in this parish, about 8,000 acres are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder being in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Quhytewoollen hill, an old heacon, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea.

The area of Dryfesdale parish is 10,231 acres; rateable value, landward £12,020, burghal £11,918; the population in 1891 was 9,233, and in 1881, 2,971; these figures include the population of the town of Lockerbie, in 1891, 2,391, and in 1881, 2,029.

MAXWELLTOWN, see DUMFRIES.

MIDDLEBIE is a parish and small village in the small debta court district of Dumfries and Annan, and poor combination of Kirkpatrick-Fleming, on the road between Langholm and Ecclefechan; the village is about 2 miles east from Ecclefechan, 12 south-west from Langholm, and 2 from Kirtlebridge station on the Caledonian railway; the parish is about 7 miles in length by 4 in breadth, and abounds in red freestone; it is also valuable for its lime quarries, but much of the land is of rather poor quality. In October, 1895, a Roman altar, erected by the 2nd Cohort of Tungrians, was found at the Roman camp of Hircens, in this parish, at the bottom of a well 16 feet deep; it weighs 17 cwt. and bears an inscription and various carvings; another altar, erected by the same cohort, to the goddess Minerva, and discovered here many years since, is preserved at Burnfoot House. The 2nd Tungrian Cohort was also stationed at Castledsteads, in Cumberland. The parish church at Middlebie is a small building of stone, with turret and one bell. Sir Frederick John William Johnstone, bart D.L. of Westerhall, is the principal landowner. The area comprises 17,545 acres; rateable value, £15,319; the population in 1891 was 1,806, and in 1881, 1,927.

Kirtlebridge and Eaglesfield are small villages in this parish, the former 3 miles south-east, and the latter 2½ south from Ecclefechan. In the immediate vicinity are the famous salmon and trout fishings of the Annan, the Esk and the Kirtle. At Kirtlebridge is a station on the Caledonian railway. Kirtlebridge church, built in 1840 and restored in 1897, consists of nave, chancel, and tower containing one bell.

Waterbeck is a village in this parish, about 4 miles north-east from Ecclefechan, on the road to Laogholm, and sends large supplies of wool, cured bacon and cheese to the different markets. Kirtlebridge, 3 miles distant, on the Caledonian line, is the nearest railway station.

MOFFAT is an inland spa, town and police burgh, and a large parish in the district of Annandale, 51 miles south of Edinburgh, 57 south-east of Glasgow, 14 1/2 north of Lockerbie, 41 north-west of Carlisle and 21 north of Dumfries, with a terminal station on a branch of about one mile and a half in length, constructed in 1882, from Beattock station on the Caledonian railway. A small part of the parish is in Lanarkshire. Moffat is an ancient town, being named in documents of the 13th century, when it was a manor held by the Bruce, Lord of Annandale, and ancestor of King Robert I. The town commands a fine and extensive prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, and interspersed with hedge-rows, meadows and corn fields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan. High Street, the principal street of the town, is a wide and spacious thoroughfare, laid down upon the principle recommended by the late J. M'Adam, and is lined with excellent shops. It is lighted with gas by a local company. Moffat was instituted a burgh on the adoption, in 1864, of the Police Act, and now possesses a commission invested with powers for sanitary improvements, the holding of monthly courts and other matters. The Public baths, in High street, include a hall, used for concerts and lectures, and during the summer a band plays here; attached to the premises is a small tennis lawn and a billiard room. Near the town is a large hydropathic establishment; the building is of red sandstone, and was erected in 1875-6, and contains dining, billiard, smoking and sitting rooms and swimming and turkish baths. The Proudfoot Working Men's Institute, founded by the late William Proudfoot esq. of Craigherburn, is an elegant structure in the Scottish style, with reading and recreation rooms, baths and an excellent library of 4,000 volumes; over the entrance is placed a bust of the founder. There is also a town subscription library, and a Freemasons' Hall. An ornamental drinking fountain, consisting of a pedestal of rough sandstone surmounted by the figure of a ram cast in bronze, was erected in the centre of the town in November, 1875, at the cost of the late William Colvin esq. of Craigielands. The established church was built and presented to the parishioners in 1796 by James, 3rd Earl of Hopetoun, inheritor of the Annandale estates, on the site of one of the churches of Annandale transferred to the Bishop of Glasgow, and was constituted one of the prebends of that see, but the present structure, the foundation stone of which was laid in August, 1835, was opened for public worship in September, 1837; it is a cruciform building, Gothic in style, and consisting of chancel, nave, transepts and a tower 107 feet in height. The pulpit, of carved pitch pine, is set on seven pillars of polished red sandstone, and some of the principal windows are filled with stained glass. At the west end of the church is a hall, with a vestry on the south and a session house on the north. The church and hall, together with an adjoining manse, cost between £12,000 and £13,000, £4,000 of which was subscribed by the congregation, and the remainder provided by the heritors of the parish. The church will seat 1,150 persons. The Free church, erected at an expense of £6,000, is a building of red sandstone and blue whinstone, in the Decorated Gothic style, and has a fine barrel roof. A hall has since been added. The Episcopal church is an iron structure erected in 1872. The United Presbyterian church, erected at a cost of about £3,000, was opened in July, 1862, and a Church hall was added in 1895. The Roman Catholic church, open for worship only during the summer season, is of wood.

Moffat has long been a fashionable summer resort, for the medicinal virtues of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number, one sulphurous and two chalybeate. The sulphurous spring, distinguished by the name of "Moffat Well," is about a mile from the town, and during the summer is reached by omnibuses. The "Fons Moffatensis" was described by Matthew Mackale in 1659 as a spring possessing great healing virtues; it is said to have been first made known by Rachel, daughter of Walter Whiteford, bishop of Brechin, who married the Laird of Corehead (1633), and it was first analysed by her descendant Dr. Milligan Johnstone, in the last century. During the period which has elapsed since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, as well as by visitors from England and Ireland; in all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs are not diseased; it is also eminently successful in the removal of bilious complaints, as well as in creating an appetite and promoting digestion, and is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism, but is so volatile that it can only be drunk in perfection at the fountain. Hartfell spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson. The spring issues from a rock of alum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat, and is bottled and sold by local chemists. It is a potent restorative, and highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the female sex. The other chalybeate is obtained in a very curious manner—namely, by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a dell, near the town, called "Garpel Linn." The surface of this rock being strongly impregnated with sulphate of alumina and iron, the water is much more powerful than that of Hartfell, and is consequently taken in smaller quantities. The Linn, or valley, has been laid out in walks by the Hon. Butler Johnstone, and is freely open to the public. Loch Skene, on the mountain range, north-east of the town, at an elevation of upwards of 1,500 feet above the level of the sea, contains the finest trout in the south of Scotland. The waters of this lake are discharged over precipitous rocks in a lofty and magnificent cascade called the "Grey Mare's Tail," computed to be about 300 feet above the level of the vale, and which appears from the opposite side of the glen to be one unbroken fall; the stream is thence known as Moffat water, and flowing through a narrow pass, sweeps through the domains of Dumfries, the property of Lord Rollo, and falls into the Annan. About four miles north-west is a petrifying chalybeate spring, and there are others attracting less attention. The principal inns are the Annandale Arms, the Buccleuch Arms, and the Star. The "Annandale Herald and Moffat News" is published here on Friday, and contains a visitors' list. During the season omnibuses ply from the Annandale and Buccleuch Arms hotels to St. Mary's loch on the Selkirk road, and are met at St. Mary's Cottage (L'hoie Shiel's) by conveyances from Innerleithen and Selkirk, where there are railway stations. There are branches here of the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland Limited and the British Linen Co.'s Bank Limited. The weekly market is on Friday. There are two half-yearly hiring markets; the first is held on the last Friday in March, the second on the last Friday in October. A fair for lambs is held in July, on the Friday after Langholm. There is also an annual sheep and cattle market called the tup fair, in September, on the Friday after the Falkirk tryst, at which time a flower, sheep, cattle &c. show—or rather a combination of shows, is held, to which by its excellence great crowds are attracted. The district is noted for the breed of chevriats. Moffat House is the town residence of the superior, John James Hope-Johnstone esq. D.L., J.P. of Raehills, Lockerbie. John Loudon M'Adam, well-known as the inventor of a system of road-making, and born at Ayr, 21 Sept. 1766, died in this town, 26 Nov. 1836, in his 81st year; a great portion of his early life had been spent in this neighbourhood, to which he was much attached, but it was as a magistrate of Ayrshire that his attention was first directed to the question of road-making; for his public services in this respect he received from Government £10,000, in two separate instalments, and was offered the honour of knighthood, which he declined on account of age and infirmities, and it was, instead, conferred upon his son, Joseph Locke F.R.S. an eminent engineer (born at Attercliffe, near Sheffield, in 1805), and the assistant and pupil of George Stephenson, and from 1847 to 1860 M.P. for Honiton, died here 18 Sept. 1860. Nicholas de Moffat, Bishop of Glasgow (1268-1270); Robert Johnstone LL.D. author of "A History of Scotland," &c.; Walter Boyd, banker, of Boyd, Benfield and Co.; William Dickson, a writer on slavery; William Murray, the chronometrist, and Dr. D. Welsh, moderator of the first Free Church Assembly, and author of the "Life of Dr. Thomas Brown, a Church History," were all born at Moffat. Dr. William Caruthers F.R.S. late of the Nat. Hist. Dept. British Museum (1871-95), is also a native (1830). John James Hope-Johnstone esq. is the principal landowner. The area comprises 42,972 acres; rateable value, burgh, £15,589; landward part, £14,976; the total population of the parish in 1891 was 2,377, which included 2,291 in the police burgh and 870 in the landward part in this county and 16 in Lanarkshire; in 1881 it was 2,930, with 2,161 in the burgh.

MORTON is a parish about 12 miles north-west of Dumfries, bounded on the north and north-west by Durisdeer, east and south by Closeburn and south-west by Penpont, and extends 7 miles from north to south by 3 in breadth, and contains the village and railway station of Thornhill, which see; it is in the Upper Nithdale poor combination and Thornhill small debt court district; it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, it is well inclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and the Cample streams pass through the parish, nearly the whole of which belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T. Morton Castle, about 3 miles from Thornhill, and now in ruins, was held during the minority of David Bruce, by Sir Thomas Randolph, 1st Earl of Moray, as Regent of Scotland, and guardian to the king. Of the House of the Hassock, an ancient building, on the site of which the present castle was erected, some remains may still be traced. Traces of Roman camps and, in the high grounds, of ancient British camps, are very numerous over the whole district, and at one time there were many cairns of stones. The parish church, erected in 1781, on a site about a mile and a half from Morton Castle, was taken down in 1840-1 and the present edifice erected at Thornhill, by the 6th Duke of Buccleuch K.G. (d. 1884), at a cost of £3,550, and will seat 1,200 persons.
 At Gately Bridge, about 2 miles from Thornhill, is the Union Poorhouse, which serves for the ten adjoining parishes.
 Carron Bridge is a village in the parishes of Morton and Durisdeer, on the river Carron and on the road from Sanquhar to Dumfries, about 2 miles south from Carron Bridge station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, and 13 north-west from Thornhill. This area comprises 8,036 acres; rateable value, £13,256; the population in 1891 was 1,855, including 1,128 in Thornhill, and in 1881 was 2,118, with 1,289 in that village. Post Office, Carron Bridge; Mrs. Grace Wallace, postmistress. Letters received through Thornhill. Deliveries, 6.45 a.m. & 8.15 p.m.; dispatches, 3.50 & 8.30 p.m. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at Thornhill, 2 miles distant.

MOUSWALD is a parish and village on the road from Dumfries to Annan, about 6 miles south-east from Dumfries, 10 north-west from Annan and 2½ from Ruthwell and Racks (the nearest) stations, both on the Glasgow and South Western railway. It is in the small debt court district of Dumfries. The kirk, which stands on an elevated site close to the village, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, a former laird of Mouswald. At Mount Kedar, about a mile from Ruthwell, but in this parish, stands a monument erected to the Rev. Henry Duncan D.D. sometime minister of Ruthwell and founder of the system of savings banks; he was born in 1774, and died in 1846, after being minister of Ruthwell parish for 44 years. The memorial, which is of stone, consists of an arched base, surmounted by a pyramid 40 feet in height. In 1887, William F. Carruthers esq. of Dormant, provided a supply of water for the village by a system of gravitation. The heirs of Lady Reid; Sir Alexander Davidson Grierson bart. of 1 South row, Blackheath, London S E, and Captain Francis John Carruthers are the principal owners. The soil is light loam; subsoil, gravel. The chief crops are oats, roots, potatoes and pasture. The area comprises 5,389 acres; rateable value, £5,385; the population in 1891 was 500, and in 1881, 558.

Post Office, John Tweedie, sub-postmaster. Letters through Ruthwell S.O. Delivery, 8 a.m.; dispatch, 4.30 p.m. week days only. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at Ruthwell, 3 miles distant of irregular form and uneven surface, the only low land being found chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through the parish; the village is about 2 miles south-west from Thornhill and 3 from Thornhill station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. The church, rebuilt in 1872, is a handsome edifice of sandstone, and has tower with spire and a clock. Tibber's Castle, the ruins of which stand within a mile of Drumlanrig Castle, were excavated by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch K.G. (d. 1884); this fortress, referred to in Blind Harry's metrical history of Sir William Wallace, appears to have been destroyed during the reign of King Robert the Bruce (1306-29). The Glenquharen Craig, which rises to a great height, is in this parish, and there are likewise remains of Roman encampments, causeways &c. The Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T. owns nearly the whole of the parish. The area comprises 21,961 acres; rateable value, £8,983; the population in 1891 was 1,063, and in 1881, 1,176, the population of the village being 407 in 1891, and 437 in 1881.

RUTHWELL is a parish and village about 7 miles west from Annan and 10 south-east from Dumfries, in the small debt court district of Annan, with a station about 2 miles distant on the Glasgow and South Western railway; the village being also a barony, is privileged to hold markets and fairs, but it is long since the inhabitants availed themselves of these rights. The kirk and manse of Ruthwell stand about a quarter of a mile from the village. In 1887 the ancient and famous Runic monument here, formerly in the grounds of the manse, was removed and placed in the church. About a mile from the station is Comlogon Castle, in part an ancient border keep, and now the residence of Arthur Henry Johnstone-Douglas esq. D.L., J.P., C.C. Clarencefield is a village in this parish, about a mile from Ruthwell station. The Public Hall was erected in 1891, by subscription, in memory of the late Rev. McFarland, and enlarged in 1899 by Robert Halliday Gunning esq. M.D., LL.D. The area comprises 8,693 acres; rateable value, £6,582; the population in 1891 was 858, and in 1881, 866.

SAINTE MUNGO is a parish in the district of Annandale, about 3 miles west from the village of Ecclefechan and about the same distance south from Lockerbie station on the Caledonian railway. The Established church, erected by Sir R. Jardine bart. at a cost of £5,000, and opened 7th Jan. 1876, is an edifice of stone in the Gothic style. Castlemilk, the seat of Sir Robert Jardine bart. D.L. is a fine mansion romantically situated in the bosom of a delightful valley and surrounded by beautiful grounds. This house was originally the seat of the ancient lords of Annandale; much later it belonged to the Maxwells and to the Douglas family, but was eventually purchased by the Jardines from George Armstrong esq.; during the minority of Edward VI. it was besieged by the Duke of Somerset, and some of the balls fired on that occasion were found in 1771, on a spot afterwards called "The Cannon Holes." The area comprises 4,897 acres; rateable value, £6,170; the population in 1891 was 603, and in 1881, 653.

Post & Telegraph Office - Robert Irving, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Lockerbie, 8.5 a.m.; dispatched, 2.45 p.m. week days only. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid. Lockerbie is the nearest money order office

SANQUHAR is a town and royal and parliamentary burgh on the left bank of the river Nith, and a large parish in the district of Nithdale and in Upper Nithdale poor combination, 56 miles south-west of Edinburgh, the same distance south-east of Glasgow, 32 east-south-east of Ayr and 26 north-north-west of Dumfries, with a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway. The town consists chiefly of one main street, and in respect of trade is the principal coal mart in the county, large quantities of coal being supplied to Dumfries and other parts. The coalfield is 7 miles in length and 2½ in breadth, and the veins are from 3 feet 8 inches to 4 feet 6 inches in depth. There are apade and shovel manufactories at Crawick and near the railway station, and two brick and tile works in the town. It is lighted with gas and supplied with water from works belonging to local companies. The town was made a burgh of barony in 1481, advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh in 1596 by charter of James VI. and is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and four councillors. Sanquhar, in conjunction with Dumfries, Annan, Kirkcudbright and Lochmahon, forms the Dumfries parliamentary district, constituted in 1708, and returning one member. The Town Hall stands at the end of High street, and has a tower with a clock. In 1862 a handsome Public Hall was erected at a cost of £1,500. There is a Subscription Library at the Town hall. The Parish church, erected in 1823 on the site of the former edifice, has a square tower. The Free school, founded by a bequest of £2,000, left by the late James Crichton, of Friar's Carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, was discontinued in 1855, by an order of the Educational Endowment Commissioners, and the net proceeds of the endowment are now applied, through the School Board, to the purposes of higher education. The British Linen Company and the Royal Bank of Scotland have branches here, and there is also a District Savings Bank. The Castle ruins, which stand on a high bank overlooking the river Nith, a short distance south-east, were excavated by the late Duke of Buccleuch, and many interesting objects were then found, including several human skeletons and a well of great depth with a bucket suspended in it. The fortress, originally a building of great strength, had towers at the angles, and was surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Crichton, ancestors of the Marquess of Bute and Lords Crichton of Sanquhar, a title still held by the present Marquess, by whom the castle was acquired from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1894. A drinking fountain of marble was erected at Townhead in 1897, by public subscription, as a memorial of the Queen's reign. Elicock is the residence of the family of Veitch, who gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim to the honour of being the birthplace, in 1661, of James Crichton, generally known as the "Admirable Crichton," who was assassinated at Mantua in 1583. Fairs are held on 1st Friday after the 12th of February and November (old style); and there is one for lambs, sheep and wool on the 17th July, or the first Friday after. The Sanquhar Farmers' Society's show for horses, sheep and cattle is held annually on the second Friday in May. Crawick and Mennock Bridge are small hamlets in this parish. The Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T. is the chief landed proprietor. The area of the parish comprises 40,846 acres; rateable value, landward £16,123, burghal £4,543; the population in 1891 was 2,910, including 1,315 in the town, and in 1881 was 3,103, with 1,339 in the town; the population (1891) of the royal burgh was 1,241, and of the parliamentary burgh, 1,315.

The number of electors on the parliamentary register in 1898 was 237.

WAMPFRAY is a parish adjoining Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Johnstone, 8 miles in length by 3½ in breadth, and has a station on the Caledonian railway. The parish church stands in a deep wooded recess, by the side of Wampuray water, and over the belfry door is a fine sculptured stone, probably part of an ancient cross, which has been imitated in a monument erected to Mr. Charteris, late teacher here, by his son, Professor Charteris, of Edinburgh. Wampuray water, a tributary of the river Annan, brawls and thunders through a most romantic and picturesque glen, formed on both sides either by high steep banks clad with thriving plantations, or by lofty basaltic columns, mantled with ivy, and saplings of ash springing from their interstices. Sir Robert Jardine hart of Castle-milk, is the principal landowner. The area comprises 13,133 acres; rateable value, £5,964; the population in 1891 was 458, and in 1881, 455.

Thomson Donald, Westerkirk Mains

EDINBURGHSHIRE

THE county of Edinburgh (or Mid-Lothian, a name which occasionally is applied to a small portion, being that part, excluding the burgh, which is represented by the county member) lies in the southern division of Scotland, bounded on the north by the Firth of Forth (an arm of the German ocean), by Lidlithgowshire, or West Lothian, on the west, by the counties of Lanark, Peebles and Selkirk on the south, and by Haddingtonshire, or East Lothian, with small portions of Berwickshire and Roxburghshire, on the east. The length of the county, from east to west, is about 36 miles, and its breadth, from its extreme apex on the south, to near Musselburgh on the north, where the eastern extremity of the county abuts on Haddingtonshire, is about 24 miles. In figure it is very irregular. Its sea coast only extends for about 17 miles, and has no bays or lochs. The area of the county is about 370 square miles, or 236,538 acres; the population in 1891 consisted of 205,638 males and 228,461 females; total, 434,159, and in 1881 of 389,164 persons; the number of inhabited houses in 1891 was 85,164, and in 1881, 72,581. This county in size ranks as the twenty-third, and in population as the second, mostly due to it containing the capital.

Early History.—In common with other portions of the country, the part now forming Edinburghshire was under the control of the Picts and other Celtic tribes, and it was not until A.D. 81, when the Romans under Agricola, who 2 years previously entered the country by the Solway Firth, having constructed a wall across the isthmus between the Clyde and the Forth, took possession of what was for many centuries known as part of Northumbria, though then called by them the province of Valentia, which appears to have extended from the Forth southward to the Tyne, and this district was held by the Romans until 120, when they fell back to the line of the Tyne, returning in 139 and holding the country until about 410, when they evacuated it, leaving behind them many indications of their occupation. Shortly after this the Saxons seem to have pushed forward from the north-east of England and to have sustained for nearly a century a fierce struggle with the ancient inhabitants, to whom the Romans had handed over the country, a struggle which in 547 was decided in favour of the invaders, who under Ida, a Scandinavian chief, obtained a firm hold over a district extending from the Tees to the Forth, and called by them "Bernicia," while the portion now including Lidlithgow, Edinburghshire, Haddingtonshire and part of Roxburghshire and Stirling became Loathian, or subsequently Lothian, a name even now called by the natives Loathian, and it is not until 617 that we meet with any designation resembling Edinburgh, when Aethelfrith, grandson to Ida, having been slain by his nephew Eadwine, a prince of Deira (or Yorkshire), the latter founded on the rock, on which a Pictish castle had already stood, a town and castle, to which he gave the name of Eadwicesburgh and as King of Northumbria ruled the country from the Humber to the Forth, and it was only in the reign of Malcolm II. 1057 to 1093, that Lothian became an integral part of the Scottish kingdom. In the struggle which Edward III. maintained for the restoration of the Baliol dynasty, one of the most sanguinary battles was fought on the Boroughmoor of the metropolis. In 1385 Mid-Lothian was subjected to the horrors of pillage and conflagration, in the expedition of Richard II.; and a century and a half later it suffered much from the invasion of the English, on account of the treaty of marriage between the son of Henry VIII. and the young Queen of Scots. The county was, soon after, the scene of many of the insurrectionary movements against the authority of Queen Mary, and in 1650 Cromwell passed through in pursuit of Charles II. but falling back to Dunbar, fought there, in September, the well-known battle in which he defeated General Leslie, and in 1745 Prince Charles Edward passed through to his victory at Prestonpans.

Surface, Soil & Climate.—The greater portion of the county is, if not mountainous, hilly, and in many places wild and pastoral; the portion under woods and plantations is only 12,000 acres. The most prominent hills are the Pentland Hills in the centre of the county, and the following, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—Blackhope Scar, 2,136 feet; Dodlaw, 1,550; Blackhill, 1,628; Moorfoot Hills, 1,850; Caerketton (Pentland range), 1,555; Spittal Hill, 1,360; Arthur's Seat (from its base, 700); 796; House of Whim, 884; Woodhouselee, 724; Dalmahoy Hill, 680; summit of Braid Hills, 630. By the close of the 11th century, agriculture had made some progress in the district of Mid-Lothian. During the last and present century much has been accomplished in this part in rearing plantations; but it is to the society of "Improvers," formed at Edinburgh about the year 1723, that this county is mainly indebted for its advancement in agriculture. In 1744 potatoes were first raised in fields, and in about thirty years afterwards their cultivation was completely established in the county. Agriculture is vigorously prosecuted in the valleys of the rivers; the upland districts being unsuitable for agriculture, thus causing more attention to be devoted to sheep farming. The system of leases here, generally for nineteen years, gives the tenant farmers of Scotland an independence which tenants at will, or from year to year, cannot have, and encourages them to expend money on the land. The climate is, upon the whole, salubrious, and not unfavourable to vegetation, its greatest drawback being its variability. The chief crops, as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain," 1898, are—Oats, 23,241 acres; wheat, 5,053; barley, or bere, 4,739; the total corn crops being 33,269 acres; turnips and swedes, 11,774 acres; potatoes, 5,125; cabbage &c. 910; total green crops, 18,539 acres; hay, 14,888 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 19,189; permanent pasture, 47,999 acres; small fruit, 283 acres. Total area of land and water, 236,538 acres, of which 66,315 acres are mountain and heath, 11,213 acres woods, and 904 acres plantations.

The live stock in 1898 comprised 3,954 horses used solely for agriculture and brood mares; unbroken horses, 702; cows and heifers in milk or in calf, 12,340; other cattle, 9,159; ewes kept for breeding, 68,324; other sheep, 122,872; sows kept for breeding, 1,359; other pigs, 6,423.

Minerals, Manufactures and Commerce.—The county abounds in several valuable minerals, especially coal, sandstone, limestone and whinstone. The production in 1897 of fireclay was 61,614 tons, value £9,242; basalt, 98,354 tons, value £19,447; of coal, 1,144,541 tons, value £343,353; of iron ore, 53,310 tons, value £19,991; oil shale, 718,270 tons; limestone, 224,237 tons; gravel and sand, 5,274. To the western part is an extensive coal field, and the eastern contains inexhaustible and rich beds of this valuable mineral, extending from the shore at Musselburgh, on both sides of the North Esk, about fifteen miles inward, to the head of that stream at Carlops, on the confines of Tweedale. In the parish of Calder are extensive beds of rich bituminous shale, from which paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted. Mid-Lothian possesses sandstone of different kinds, and of an excellent quality. The quarries of Edinburghshire have long enjoyed a pre-eminence which cannot be so effectually indicated by anything as by the appearance of the New Town of Edinburgh. The works of Craigleith and Hailes, near the city, are objects of curiosity. Almost all the houses of the New Town, besides other buildings, have been reared from the former mine. There are several other quarries of inferior note throughout the county. Lead was, in former times, found at the head of the North Esk, on the south side of the Pentland Hills. A vein of copper is said to exist in the parish of Currie, but it has never been worked. The manufactures of Edinburghshire cannot be traced to a remote date, and have ever been remarkable for their extent. It is but little more than a century since that the fabrication of linen was known in the county. In Edinburgh, Leith, and Musselburgh there are now numerous manufactories of goods of different kinds. The principal articles manufactured in the shire for exportation, either by out-ports or inland, beside linen, are glass, soap, salt, candles, refined sugar, ale, whisky, leather, bricks, tiles, pottery, iron, chemical preparations, printing ink and materials, paper and books. The manufacture of paper became first known in Scotland in this county, and the district still possesses large establishments employed in this industry, chiefly at Penicuik, and in the neighbourhood of Colinton and Lasswade. Paraffin oil has also become an important manufacture at Mid and West Calder. The maritime traffic of the county, which is very considerable, is concentrated at Leith, the only port suitable to the entrance of large vessels, and indeed the only one of any kind except those of Fisherrow, or Musselburgh, Newhaven, and the rising port of Granton. The number of fishing boats registered in 1898 at the port of Leith was 339, with an aggregate tonnage of 4,084, employing 1,091 men and boys and 140 extra hands, besides 10 steam fishing vessels, aggregate tonnage, 182 tons, while 193 other vessels, aggregate tonnage, 112,831 tons, were registered at the same port; 18 steamers, net tonnage, 8,981, were built at Leith. The number of fishing boats registered at the port of Granton in 1898 was 35, of 1,114 tonnage, and steam fishing vessels, 32, of 1,076 tons. Of other vessels, 46, of 1,602 tons, were also registered.

Rivers and Railways.—This county does not possess any large rivers. This deficiency however, is of little or no importance, in consequence of being placed on the margin of a broad and navigable firth. Next the Forth, the Esk may be said to be the chief river; it is composed of two streams, which unite their waters below Dalkeith, and glide into the Forth at Musselburgh. The Leith, a valuable small river, takes its rise on the north side of the Pentland Hills, and after receiving several rivulets, discharges its waters, after a course of nineteen miles, into the Forth. The Almond, the most westerly stream, rises in the high grounds on the borders of Lanarkshire; it is joined by the Brierly Burn, in its way to the Forth, which it enters at Cremond. The Union canal, 31 miles in length, proceeding to the west from Edinburgh, conveys large quantities of coals and various kinds of goods to the city. Several railways centre in the county; beginning of the north-east we have the North British line, from Berwick, via Dunbar, entering it at Wallyford, a little east of Musselburgh, joined after a few miles at Inveresk by the branch from Macmerry, and proceeding thence by Joppa and Portobello to Edinburgh; the next line towards the south is that known as the Waverley route, North British railway, entering the county at Bowland station and running north to Millerhill, Portobello and the city, with branches to Leith, Arthur's Seat and Murrayfield; another branch of the North British from Glashiels enters the county on the south at Leadburn, where a line from Dalpington joins it, and proceeds north to Bonnyrigg and Portobello into Edinburgh, and there are branches to Dalkeith, Glencorse, Pelton and Penicuik. The Caledonian railway enters the county from Carlisle at Cobhishaw station and runs through Meadowbank, where the Glasgow branch joins it, to Edinburgh. The lines of the North British from Airdrie and Linlithgow come into the county at Rathie Junction, and are joined there by the line from the Forth Bridge, while small branches from Leith and Granton run into the north of the city.

Divisions, Parliamentary Constituency &c.—The county is divided into 27 complete civil parishes, including 3 in Edinburgh city and 2 in Leith, and parts of 2 others, and for judicatory purposes is divided into 6 districts. This district became subject to the government of a sheriff prior to the reign of David I. The office of sheriff of Edinburgh seems to have been at all times an appointment of great trust and dignity; and from the 13th to the 18th century was filled by the heads of families of note in the shire and its vicinity. Besides Edinburgh, the shire does not comprise any royal burghs, but possesses three of regality, namely, Musselburgh, Camongate and Portsburgh and the town of Leith. Its only burgh of barony is Dalkeith. The contributory burghs belonging to this county represented in Parliament are Leith, Musselburgh and Portobello. The county at large sends one member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency of the county numbered in 1898, 10,008. There are 71 ecclesiastical parishes (including 34 in the city and 2 in Leith) and parts of 4 others, the whole being in the presbyteries of Edinburgh and Dalkeith and synod of Lothian and Tweeddale. The valuation for 1897-8 was £3,617,071.

BORTHWICK is a parish in Dalkeith
poor combination and small debt court
district, about 12 miles south-south-east from Edinburgh, on the Carlisle road, and has stations at Gorebridge and Fushie Bridge, both within the parish, on the North British railway. The village of Gorebridge (which see) is in this parish. Borthwick gives the title of baron to an ancient family of the same name, and though no official record of its creation exists, this peerage, certainly in existence before 1455, is stated to have been bestowed by James II. of Scotland, in 1452, on William Borthwick, son of Sir William, mentioned below. This parish was the birthplace, in 1721, of William Robertson
D.D. author of the "History of Charles V."
& other works; principal of Edinburgh
University in 1722, and in 1764, histori-ographer for Scotland; he died 11 June.
1793; here also was born in 1685, Robert Dundas, an eminent Scottish advocate, raised to the judicial bench in 1737 as Lord Arniston, and in 1748 president of the court of session. In the parish and about 2 miles west from Crichton are the ruins of Borthwick Castle, erected in 1430 by Sir William Borthwick. It is an imposing battlemented structure, 90 feet in height, with walls of lawn stone, varying in thickness from 13
feet at the base to about 7 feet at the top,
and still bears traces of its siege by Cromwell. The mills of James Pendreigh and Soa, which have been established here for over a century, are famed for the production of oatmeal, pearl barley, split
peas and all feeding meals. The Arniston Colliery Library was founded by Sir Robert Dundas bart. of Arniston. Arniston House,
the residence of Sir Robert Dundas bart.
J.P., D.L.; Vogrie, of Captain James Cummings Dewar J.P.; Borthwick Hall, of David J. Macfie esq. J.P. and Currie
House, of Walter Brown esq. are in this parish.

Fushie Bridge is a village about one mile
from Borthwick and 5 south from Dalkeith,
with a station on the North British railway.
About a mile to the north is the village of Stobbs' Mills, also lying in Borthwick
parish.

The area comprises 9,806 acres; rateable
value, £20, 872; the population in 1891 was 3,102, including 849 in the village of Gore-bridge, and in 1881, 1,741.

A portion of the parish of Newbattle,
with an estimated population of 80, was transferred to Borthwick by an Order of the Secretary for Scotland, dated Sept. 18, 1895.

EAST CALDER is a village, 1 mile from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It was originally a parish of itself, but is now united to Kirkcaldy. The nearest railway station is Caledonian system. St. Cuthbert's church, now an ivy-clad ruin at the west end of the village, was built by Randolph de Cere in the 12th century. The barony was given in 1306 by Robert Bruce to James Douglas, an ancestor of the Earls of Morton.

The population in 1891 was 974, and in 1881,
734.

MID-CALDER is a parish and village
in the small debt court district of Edinburgh; the parish is bounded north and
north-east by Uphall, east by Kirkcaldy,
south and west by West Calder and northwest by Livingstone. The village, pleasantly situated on an eminence between the water of Linnhouse and the river Almond,
on the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, is 12 miles west-south-west from Edinburgh, and 8½ east from Whitburn, and has a station about 2½ miles distant, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the Caledonian railway. Calder wood, which is of considerable extent, overhangs the village. The soil in the northern district is light, dry and fertile, in the southern the surface undulates towards the Pentland hills. About one-third of the entire area of the parish is under tillage; in the remaining portion
there are several beds of rich, bituminous shale, from which a large quantity of paraffin
oil and other chemical products are extracted at the different works. Coal abounds
in the parish, and on the estate of Calder House, the property of Lord Torphichen, is an extensive bed of freestone of excellent quality. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in March, and on the Friday after the second Tuesday in October. The parish church, originally founded by Duncan, Thane of Fife, in the early part of the 13th century, was rebuilt on the ancient site
by Peter Sandilands, a scion of the noble family of Torphichen, in 1541, and has since been enlarged and restored at a cost of over £3,000. Calder House is the seat of Lord Torphichen J.P.; John Knox,
in the hall of this mansion, first dispensed
the sacrament of the Lord's supper after the Reformation, and his portrait hangs in it.
The house of Greenbank, in the vicinity,
was the birthplace, in 1565, of John Spettin-woode, Archbishop of Glasgow (1603-15),
and of St. Andrew's (1615). The Earl of Buchan, Lord Torphichen and Lieut.-Col.
James Hare J.P. are the principal landowners. Pumpherston is a village in the north of this parish, in connection with the Shale Oil works. The area comprises
12,294 acres; rateable value, £28,275; the

COLINTON, or Collington, is a village and parish about 4 miles south-west from Edinburgh, with a station on the Balerno branch of the Caledonian railway, and in the Edinburgh small debt court district; the parish lies at the base of the Pentland hills, part of which it includes, and is traversed by the water of Leith, the scenery on the banks of which is delightfully wooded. There are two Established churches and the Episcopal church of St. Cuthbert. The Established church at Craighlockhart was originally built in 1890 as a Chapel of Ease to Colinton parish, but in 1897 the chapel with certain lands in the parishes of Colinton and St. Cuthberts was erected by the Court of Teinds into the church and quoad sacra parish of Craighlockhart. The building was completed in 1898, and a handsome tower, erected by Alexander Oliver Riddell esq. of Craighlockhart and his wife. The new parish includes the villages of Slateford, Jnglis Green, Angle Park and Longstone (near Slateford road), and also the villages of Gorgie and Delhaig (near Gorgie road). Within the parish are the Edinburgh Hydrophatic, the Edinburgh City Poorhouse, A. & J. McNab's dyeing and bleaching works, Cox's glue and gelatine factory (Gorgie mills), and Saughton Hall Asylum for the insane (Sir John Batty Tuke M.D.). The population of the parish is about 3,600. The late R. L. Stevenson, the well-known novelist, spent many years of his youth at the manse here, which was the birth-place of his mother. Eastwards, on the lands of Coniston, are vestiges of an extensive encampment, near which is a rude and massive block of whinstone, called "Camnustone," said to indicate the burial place of a Danish chieftain. Logan House Hill is a considerable eminence, rising upwards of 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. Bonally Tower is now the residence of Mrs. E. J. Simson, and Dreghorn Castle of Thomas Ford esq. The manufacture of paper is carried on extensively, and the district abounds with limestone and freestone. Sir Thomas David Gibson Carmichael bart. M.P. of Castlecraig and Skirling, is the principal landowner. The area comprises 5,659 acres; rateable value, £43,414; the population in 1891 was 4,549; in 1891, 4,347, and in 1898, 4,650.

By the Secretary for Scotland's Order, No. 34, dated Dec. 17, 1895, that part of Edinburgh, landward, adjoining Colinton, was annexed to it May 15, 1898.

Post, Telegraph & Money Order Office & Savings Bank (Railway Sub-Office. Letters should have R.S.O. Midlothian added); Miss Jane Johnston, postmistress. half a mile distant, on the North British railway. A new line is now (1899) in course of construction, and the station, at present
very inconveniently situated, will be removed to the centre of the village. The church, attached in 1429 to a provosty or college, was founded and endowed by Sir Adam Forrester, his widow and their son, Sir John Forrester; it bears their arms on the outer wall in several places,
and within are several life-size stone effigies
of members of th's family, occupying niches
in the chancel. At the Public Hall is a good subscription library of over 2,000 volumes. Millburn Tower is the seat of Sir William Liston-Foulis bart. J.P. John H.
Dickson and W. Traquair Dickson who are lords of the manor, the Earl of Morton and Miss Ramsay Gibson Maitland, of Barnton, are the principal landowners. The area comprises 3,654 acres; rateable value, £28,000; the population in 1891 was 2,332,
including 1,152 in the village, and in 1881,
2,156, with 552 in the village.

Gogar, formerly an independent parish, is
a pleasant hamlet in this parish, on the banks of the Gogar burn, a tributary of the water
of Leith, and 5 m's south-west from Edinburgh, with a station, three quarters of a mile distant, on the North British railway.
The present church occupies the site of a church existing here previous to the Reformation.

CRAMOND is a parish and village, 4 1/2 miles from Edinburgh, and has a terminal
station on the Edinburgh & Cramond Brig
branch of the Caledonian railway: it is in the small debt court district of Edinburgh;
the parish, which contains a small portion of Leith parliamentary burgh, lies on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, and is bounded on the west by the river Almond;
the village of Cramond, on the east side of the creek into which the river falls, is known to have been an important Roman station. Opposite the mouth of the Almond, at a short distance from the shore, is Cramond Island, the property of the Earl of Rosebery K.G., K.T. which rises with a gentle slope into a hill of moderate elevation, and part of it is cultivated. This place, from 1623, gave the title of baron to the Richardson family, of Norfolk, of which Sir Thos.
Richardson kt. lord chief justice, and
speaker of the House of Commons (d.
1834); the peerage is supposed to have become extinct on the death of William, 5th
baron, 28 July, 1735, but this is quite open to doubt. The parish contains the villages of Cramond, Davidson's Mains (which see)
and the part of Granton, which is included with Edinburgh. Cramond Bridge, where is the terminal station of the Caledonian
railway, is situated on the Almond river,
here crossed by a fine stone bridge, connected with a road from Edinburgh to South Queensferry, 5 miles from the city. Silver

Knoce is the residence of the Right Hon.
Lord Young; Barnton House, of Miss Ramsay Gibson Maitland; Lauriston Castle,
of Capt. Thomas Macknight Crawford J.P.
and Muirhouse, of William Davidson esq.
Mr. William Davidson, of Muirhouse, Miss
Ramsay Gibson Maitland, Capt. Macknight
Crawford, Lieut.-Col. J. C. Craigie Halkett
and Earl of Rosebery K.G., K.T. are the principal landowners. The area of the entire parish is 5,277 acres; rateable value, £39,247; the population in 1891 was 3,168,
including 91 in the county of Linlithgow
and 719 in the village of Davidson's Mains;
in 1881 the parish contained a population
of 3,004.

By the Secretary for Scotland's Order, No.
34, dated Dec. 17, 1897, that portion of Edinburgh landward adjoining Cramond was annexed to it, May 15, 1898.

CRICHTON is a parish, in Dalkeith poor combination and small debt court district, 5 miles south from Dalkeith and 3 miles from Tynehead (the nearest station on the North British railway. Ford and Pathhead (which see) are villages in this parish. Crichton Castle is a ruin situated on the right bank of the Tyne, the oldest part remaining being the keep, probably built by Thurstans de Crichton, one of the witnesses to the charter of the foundation of Holyrood Abbey (1128). One of his descendants, Sir William, 1st Lord Crichton, High Chancellor of Scotland during the reigns of James I. and II. extended the Castle, having built the south and west wings, by far the largest additions; the north wing is attributed to one of the Earls of Bothwell, probably the first Earl Patrick, 1490. Within its hall Queen Mary feasted on the occasion of the marriage here of her natural brother, Sir John Stewart. The Castle was purchased by Alexander Callender esq. in 1786, and is now the property of Henry Callender esq. of Westerton and Preston hall. Sir Walter Scott in "Marmion" refers to this castle. The area comprises 4,821 acres; rateable value, £7,265; the population in 1891 was 946, and in 1881, 1,094.

CURRIE is a parish and village, in the small debt court district of Edinburgh, bounded by Corstonphine and Ratho on the north and Colinton on the west, while the Pentland Hills skirt it on the south. The village, situated on the north bank of the water of Leith, is 6 miles south-west from Edinburgh, with a station on the Balerno branch of the Caledonian railway, and is also a quarter of a mile from Currie Hill station on the Glasgow line. The manufacture of paper is largely carried on, and snuff is also manufactured. The water of Leith was purified about 3 years ago, and is now a favourite trouting stream; the Edinburgh Corporation ponds, also in the parish, are well stocked with trout, and liberty to fish may be had from the Corporation, or from Lord Rosebery. The Baberton Golf club, founded in June, 1893, has an excellent course of 18 holes, opened by Sir J. H. Gibson-Craig bart. on Christmas day, 1893; the club house, built in 1895 at a cost of £1,200, from the designs of Messrs. MacArthur and Watson, architects, is a building with gabled wings, and contains a club room, dining and ladies' rooms, kitchen and lavatories. Lennox Tower, on the estate of Maleny, beyond Currie, was anciently the seat of the Lennox family, as well as the occasional residence of Mary Queen of Scots. At a short distance from it, on the opposite bank of the river, are the ruins of another ancient edifice, once the mansion of the Skenes of Currie hill. The house of Baberton, also in this parish, was used as a hunting seat, first by James VI. of Scotland, previous to his accession to the English throne, and secondly by Charles X. of France, after his expulsion from his dominions in 1830. The area comprises 11,103 acres; rateable value, £33,042; the population in 1891 was 2,580, and in 1881, 2,390.

Balerno is a village in the parish of Currie, on the water of Leith, and about 7 miles south-west from Edinburgh, with a station on the Caledonian railway. In the village are paper mills. Hermiston, Glenbrook and Maleny Mills are hamlets in this parish. Population in 1881, 479, and in 1891, 694. At Maleny Mills a considerable industry in wood turning, and the making of bungs for barrels, is carried on.

Sir James Henry Gibson-Craig bart. D.L., J.P. of Riccarton, the Earl of Morton and the Earl of Rosbery K.G., K.T., P.C. are lords of the manor and the principal landowners.

DALKEITH is a parish, market town, a burgh of barony and the head of a poor combination, 6 miles south-east from Edinburgh, with a station on a branch from the Waverley section of the North British railway; there is also a station at Eskbank on the same section. It occupies a dry and exceedingly pleasant site, in a fertile district, diversified with hill, dale and wood, with the North and South Esk flowing around it. This place gives the title of Earl to the Douglas-Scott family, Dukes of Buccleuch. The immediate locality abounds with coal of excellent quality, which is worked to a great extent. Messrs. Henry Widnall & Stewart Limited, of the Eskbank Carpet works, give occupation to upwards of 300 hands. Mallothian is famous for the excellence of its oatmeal, and Dalkeith mills have long been identified with its production. There is also Messrs. Dawson's brush factory, Messrs. Hope's brass and iron works, Messrs. A. & W. Douglas's corn mills and Messrs. McLennan and Erquhart's brewery. The town is lighted with gas from works belonging to a company, formed in 1827. An ample supply of excellent water was obtained in 1888, within the burgh bounds by boring, the yield amounting to 65,000 gallons every 24 hours. The municipal body consists of a provost, two bailies and twelve commissioners, constituted under the Police Improvement (Scotland) Act, who have the power to assess and regulate local taxes. A sheriff court is held in the Foresters' Hall, for cases under the Small Debt Act and Certain Debts Recovery Act, on the third Thursday of every month (September excepted), and a police court at the Police barracks, on the second and fourth Mondays of every month, and other days, as cases may require. There are branches here of the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, opened in 1810; the National Bank of Scotland Limited in 1825; the Royal Bank of Scotland, in 1836; the Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank, merged in the Clydesdale Bank Limited, in 1858, has also a branch here. In 1839 a National Security Savings Bank was established, and there is also a Penny Bank. The Dalkeith Union workhouse was erected in 1849 at a cost of £4,058, for the poor of four parishes, but there are now twelve parishes in combination. The building is available for 120 inmates. The Market Hall, a fine covered building, opened in 1854, is 172 feet long, 50 feet wide and 45 feet high, and was erected at a cost of nearly £4,000. The corn market is held weekly on Thursdays. Fairs are held annually on the first Thursday after Rutherglen (in May), for horses, &c., on the third Tuesday in October for cattle &c. last Thursday in February, first Thursday in April, and second Thursday in October for hiring. A newspaper, the "Dalkeith Advertiser," is published here on Thursday. Dalkeith House, the seat of Hs. Grace the Duke of Buccleuch K.G., K.T. the principal landowner, stands on the south bank of the Esk adjoining the town and occupies the site of an ancient castle, long in the possession of the family of Douglas, and afterwards the frequent residence of the Regent Morton during the minority of James VI., when it was commonly and significantly called "the lion's den." The present edifice, erected by the Scott family, about the close of the 17th century, is a substantial mansion in the Classic style, consisting of a centre with wings, the ornamental features being of the Corinthian order. The hall, the grand staircase, and the several suites of apartments within are spacious, elegantly furnished, and enriched by a valuable collection of paintings. George IV. sojourned here; and her present Majesty, Queen Victoria, has likewise repeatedly honoured the house with her presence. The park contains about 800 Scottish, or 1,000 English acres, surrounded by a stone wall; it is adorned with much fine timber, and traversed by the streams of the two rivers Esk. The parish area is 2,344 acres; rateable value, £29,969; the population in 1891 was 7,704, including 6,953 in the town of Dalkeith and in 1881 was 7,707, of which 6,835 were in the town. Post, Telegraph, Money Order, Telegraph Money Order, Express Delivery & Parcel Post Office, Savings Bank & Annuity & Insurance Office, 100 High street; Miss Jane L. McPherson, postmistress. Deliveries, 7 & 12.30 a.m. & 4.45 & 6.55 p.m.; Sunday (to callers only), 9 to 10 a.m.; dispatches, 7.30, 9.25 & 11.35 a.m. & 3, 5.10, 6.50 & 9.30 p.m.; Sunday, 5.50 p.m. Town Sub-Post, Telegraph, & Money Order Office & Savings Bank, Eskbank, Fredk. DUDDINGSTON is a parish, in Inveresk pook combination and the small debt court district of Edinburgh and containing a portion of the burgh of Edinburgh, and is bounded by the parish of Canongate, a part of the metropolis on the west, South Leith on the north, the sea and part of Inveresk on the east, and Liberton on the south; Duddingston and Craigmillar station on the Edinburgh Suburban and Southside line of the North British railway, is near the southern border of the parish. Superiority of the barony of Doddestoun, with the church, was granted to Kelso Abbey, founded by David I. in 1128, and remained in the possession of the abbey till the Reformation, when the barony came into the possession of the Thompson family, the last of whom was made a baronet by Charles I. in 1636. The barony of Duddingston became, in 1674, the property of the notorious John (Maitland), Duke of Lauderdale, from whom it passed with his step-daughter, Elizabeth (Tollemache), to her husband Archibald, 1st Duke of Argyll. In 1745 it was sold by his successor to James, 8th Earl of Abercorn, whose present representative, the Duke of Abercorn K.G. still holds a large portion of it. Easter and Wester Duddingston are both villages in this parish. Wester Duddingston is charmingly situated near the base of Arthur's Seat, and at the east end of Duddingston Loch and round Arthur's Seat is a noble thoroughfare, known as the Queen's Drive. The church, which stands on a small eminence rising from the verge of the water, is an edifice of Norman origin, built in the first part of the 12th century, but has been modernised externally. Duddingston House is the residence of General H. A. Cockburn. Duddingston Loch, a beautiful sheet of water, is about a third of a mile in length, and not more than half a mile from the southern outskirts of Edinburgh. There is an excellent road between Duddingston and Portobello. The Duke of Abercorn K.G., P.C. is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The area comprises 1,731 acres; rateable value, landward £17,185, hurchal (Edinburgh) £51,188; the population in 1891 was 9,643, including 52 in Edinburgh and 8,519 in Portobello.

Post Office, Duddingston, Thomas Hay, postmaster. Letters received through Portobello, which is the nearest money order office, at 8 a.m. & 3.30 & 7.30 p.m.; Sunday, 9.30 a.m.; dispatched at 9.30 a.m. & 4.45 & 8.5 p.m. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid; the telegraph office is at the railway station

debt court district, 10 miles in length and 6 in breadth; it is 16 miles south-south-east
from Edinburgh, and has a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North waters are two streams which take their rise in the Muirfoot hills here, and afford sport to the angler. In the neighbourhood

are remains of several ancient fortifications, chiefly circular. A fair is held at the head of Gala water on the first Friday after Whit Sunday for sheep and lambs. The area comprises 15,038 acres; rateable value, £6,983;

the population in 1891 was 443, and in 1881, 429.

The portions of Hangingshaw and Kirk-
lands farms, including the hamlet of Stage-bank, were transferred from Stow to this parish for all purposes, Dec. 6, 1898, by the Secretary for Scotland's Order No. 34,

INVERESK is a parish and village and the head of a poor combination, in the small debt court district of Edinburgh, and has a junction station on the North British railway. There is also a station at New Hailes in this parish. The pleasant village of In-veresk consists chiefly of mansions and villas, surrounded by attractive grounds.
The parish church, which occupies the summit of the hill of Inveresk, is a large square
edifice in a plain style, and has a tower with a lofty and elegant spire. In the churchyard is the grave of David Macbeth
Moir, surgeon, poet and litterateur, born
at Musselburgh 5 Jan. 1798, died 6 July, 1851. Pinkie House, long the country residence of the Abbots of Dunfermline, and
the residence of Sir Alexander Hope bart.
J.P. is delightfully situated in extensive policies, with fine old trees. Its turreted tower and much admired Gothic fountain
are, perhaps, the portions of greatest antiquity and interest. The site of the battle of Pinkie, 10 Sept. 1547, is about a mile south of Pinkie House, and overlooking it, a mile and a half further off, is Carberry Hill; celebrated for the surrender
of Queen Mary to the confederated nobility 15 June, 1567, and her final parting with Bothwell. Near is the fine mansion of Carberry Tower, the seat of Lord E. Phisstone.
New Hailes, a fine mansion half a mile
south-west from Fisherrow, now the property
and residence of Sir Charles Dalrymple bart.
M.P., J.P. was the seat of Sir David Dalrymple bart. who was in 1766 appointed a lord of session, as Lord Hailes; he was distinguished as the great restorer of Scottish history and antiquities, and died in this mansion 29 Nov. 1792, where his valuable library is carefully preserved. In this parish are found limestone, freestone, and coal, the latter particularly in abundance.
From the higher grounds to the south very extensive views are to be obtained, reaching from Ben Lomond, Ben Ledi and Ben Voi-lich on the west to the German Ocean, and from the Grampians, Ochils, and Lomonds

to the Pentlands, Moorfoots, the Lammermuirs, the Firth of Forth, and Fife coast, forming the foreground of the panorama. Monkton Hall is a small village and Brunstane, or Brunstane M.S., a hamlet, both in the parish of Inveresk, the latter being about a mile from Musselburgh. New Craig Hall, or Niddrie, is a mining village, 1 mile west from Fisherrow, and has a station at New Hailes and a goods station on the North British railway at Niddrie. At New Craig Hall is a reading room, supported by the miners and the Colliery Co. The colliery works of the Niddrie Coal Co. Limited are near here. Deantown and Cowpits are colliery villages further south. The area comprises 5,155 acres; rateable value, including Musselburgh, £56,847; the population in 1891 was 11,509, of which 8,888 were in Musselburgh.

Post Office, New Craig Hall; John Wilson, postmaster. Letters received through Musselburgh. Dispatches, 8.45 a.m. & 8 p.m. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid. The nearest money order & telegraph office is at Fisherrow, 2 miles distant.

LASSWADE is a town and police burgh and parish in Dalkeith poor combination and small debt court district. The burgh, which extends into the parish of Cockpen, is 6 miles south of Edinburgh and 2 south-west from Dalkeith. There are five railway stations in the parish, viz.: Lasswade and Polton (the terminus) on the Polton branch, and Hawthornden, Rossllynlee and Pomathorn, on the Peebles and Dalpinton section of the North British railway. The North Esk runs through the whole length of the parish. The town has been greatly improved by the erection of many substantial dwellings, and the opening of various manufactories, including several paper mills. The parish church is an ancient structure, and in the attached cemetery lie the remains of William Drummond, of Hawthornden, the poet, who died 4 Dec. 1643, and to whom a memorial was erected in 1893: one aisle contains the burial vault for the noble family of Dundas, and here was interred Henry (Dundas), 1st Viscount Melville P.C. and secretary of state during the administration of Mr. Pitt; he died 29 May, 1811: the stained east window was erected in 1898 by Mrs. Moffat, of Eidin, in memory of her husband. The organ was built in 1897. There are traces in the village of two religious foundations, St. Ann's and St. Leonard's. Melville Castle, on the bank of the Esk, is the seat of Viscount Melville. Near here, on the same river, is Polton, once the residence of Constable, the printer and publisher, and now the seat of Gordon Caldwell esq.; here also is Hawthornden, the home of Drummond, the poet and historian, and now the seat of Sir James Hamlyn Williams-Drummond bart. D.L., J.P. Pittendreich is the seat of Cyril Herbert Dunderdale esq. Sir Walter Scott spent the first years of his married life in a neat cottage a little apart from the village. John Clerk, of Eidin, author of a famous work on naval tactics (d. 10 May, 1812) and his son, also John Clerk, a learned lawyer, appointed a lord of session, as Lord Eidin, in 1823, both resided in Lasswade; and Thomas de Quincey, the author of the "Life of an Opium Eater," and many other works, lived in a cottage at Mavis Bush, near Polton, during 1840-41. Below Hawthornden are three caves, which in troublous times afforded shelter to fugitives; the largest, 90 feet in length, 12 feet wide at the entrance, gradually tapering inwards, and 6 feet in height, with a shaft cut for the admission of the light and air, and in a recess there is a well, several fathoms deep. Broomnicknoo, a hamlet in this parish, forms part of the town and police burgh of Bonnyrigg, which see. The area comprises 10,678 acres; rateable value, £59,315, which includes Loanhead burgh and parts of Lasswade, Bonnyrigg and Penicuik burghs; the population in 1891 was 10,455, including 3,244 in the village of Loanhead.

LIBERTON is a parish in the small debt
 court district of Dalkeith, including three villages of its name—Upper (or Over) Liberton, Liberton Kirk and Nether Liber-
 ton, with Gilmerton (which see), and Green-
 end. The kirk town is about 3 miles south from Edinburgh, 3 north-west from Dal-keith and Lasswade. Duddingston and Craigmillar station on the North British Suburban railway, which encircles the outskirts of Edinburgh, is near the northern border
 of the parish, and Gilmerton, on the Roslin
 and Glencorse line, is close to the southeastern boundary. Water is supplied by the Edinburgh and District Water Trust.
 The old church of Liberton was removed in 1815 on the erection of the present structure, a building in the Gothic style, with turrets and pinnacles; the manse adjoins.
 The inhabitants are engaged in agriculture and the adjacent collieries. Greenend village is about 4 miles north from Lasswade,
 on the road to Edinburgh. Large quarries of limestone are worked at Burdhouse
 and Straiton, and the freestone and whin-
 stone quarries also employ many persons.
 There are three breweries, a malting, a creamery and a margarine factory. Maj.

 Robert Gordon Gilmore, of The Inch,
 Maj.-Gen. Henry Trotter D.L. of Morton
 Hall, and Maj.-Gen. Andrew Gilbert Wau-choppe C.B., C.M.G. of Niddrie Marischal, John Nisbet, of Moredun, and John L.
 More Nisbet, of Drum, are the principal landowners. The celebrated cave here,
 dug by George Paterson, a blacksmith,
 out of the solid rock, and finished in 1724,
 after five years' toil, contains several apartments with bedsteads, and a table with a large punch bowl, all hewn out of the same material, and also includes a smith's forge, a well and a washing house. Here Paterson lived for several years, and here
 he died about 1737. Craigmillar Castle, sometime a favourite residence of Queen
 Mary, stands on rising ground of moderate elevation, and commands a beautiful and extensive prospect over the surrounding country. The area comprises 6,342 acres;
 rateable value, £66,373; the population
 in 1891 was 6,229.

MUSSELBURGH is an ancient town and a burgh of regality in the parish of Inveresk, and in Inveresk poor combination and Edinburgh small debt court district, 2½ miles east from Portobello, 4 north from Dalkeith, 5 east from Leith and 6 east from Edinburgh, with a station on a branch from Inveresk Junction of the North British railway. The town occupies a level expanse upon the south shore of the Firth of Forth, generally acknowledged to be an ancient sea level. The river Esk flowing through, divides it into nearly two equal parts, that on its western bank being known, up to 1896, as Fisherrow, but now all is included in the one designation, Musselburgh. The town consists of two streets, lying nearly due east and west along the eastern bank the main or High street, extending from the bridge over the Esk on the west to Loretto and Pinkie on the east, and being on the great road from Edinburgh to Berwick and London. The approach to High street from the station is through a fine avenue of trees called the Mall. The streets generally are of good width and well paved with whinstone blocks, and the two portions of the town are connected by six bridges across the Esk. The old bridge, a venerable structure of three arches, was built by Lady Janet Hepburn, wife of George, 3rd Baron Seton and grand-aunt of the notorious James Hepburn, 4th Earl of Bothwell, so unhappily associated with the history of Mary Queen of Scots. Upon the top of one of the buttresses may still be seen the iron fastenings to which the gateway was attached. The roadway is high and narrow, and is approached by a flight of steps at either end, being now used only by foot passengers, although in ancient times it was the chief thoroughfare to the south. Across it the Scottish army passed after the battle of Pinkie (10 Sept. 1547), when Lord Graham, eldest son of the Earl of Montrose, and others were killed on it by cannon shot from the English fleet anchored at the river mouth. Victoria Bridge, near the mouth of the Esk, erected in 1888, in commemoration of the jubilee of Queen Victoria, is for foot passengers only. There is also a stone bridge of five elliptical arches, designed by John Rennie F.R.S. the famous engineer; an iron girder railway bridge for the North British railway, a stone bridge carrying the main line of the North British railway, and two iron bridges, and the Cowpits wood bridge for foot passengers only. The small harbour on the western bank of the river is under the control of commissioners. A large sum has been expended in erecting and improving the piers, but the access to the harbour is shallow, and does not admit vessels of any considerable tonnage. The custom house, connected with that of Leith, is now at Prestonpans. A portion of the inhabitants around here are fishermen, and the produce of their industry is conveyed by rail to Edinburgh and disposed of by their wives and daughters. Contiguous to Fishery Links are the public slaughter houses, constructed upon the most approved plan. An effective system of drainages has been carried out, and the water supply, derived from the Moorfoots, is ample and excellent. The town is lighted with gas by a company established in 1831, whose works are at the north-west corner of the Links, near the river mouth. Thomas, 9th Earl of Mar, in 1340, granted to the town its first charter. After the disastrous battle of Pinkie, in 1547, this charter, and the whole of the burgh records, were ruthlessly destroyed by the Duke of Somerset K.G. lord protector, but in 1562 Robert Fitzcarr, commendator of Dunfermline, executed another, affirming the ancient rights and privileges of the burgh. This charter is still extant, and has been ratified and confirmed by various subsequent charters and Acts of Parliament, more particularly by one from John, Duke of Lauderdale K.G. lord high commissioner in Scotland, dated 1670, in which all former grants in favour of the burgh are acknowledged. In 1632, Musselburgh was erected into a royal burgh by charter under the great seal, an act which excited the jealousy of the magistrates of Edinburgh, who contrived to obtain a reduction of the charter in the same year. The burgh is, however, still represented on the convention of royal burghs, founded in 1150. Musselburgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a treasurer and seven councillors, elected according to the provisions of the Burgh Reform Act. The magistrates hold a court of record, and to grant enforceable. Their jurisdiction extends two and a half miles along the shore, from the Magdalen bridge rivulet on the west to Ravensbaugh streamlet on the east, which at that locality is the boundary with Haddingtonshire; but they possess no jurisdiction over Inveresk village, which is included within the county. Musselburgh, together with Leith, Newhaven and Portobello, forms the Leith parliamentary district, constituted under the Reform Act, 1832 (2 and 3 Wm. IV. c. 45) and returning one member. The Town House, which occupies an angle in the High street, is a substantial edifice, including an Assembly room, council chamber, offices for the town clerk, town chamberlain, burgh surveyor, and quarters for the constabulary. Attached to the building is a tower with a slated spire of quaint Flemish design, and containing a clock, presented to the town by the Dutch States in 1496, and its working parts are still in wonderful preservation. Connected with the Town House is the gaol, said to have been erected about 1590, from the materials of the ruinous chapel of Loretto, but used since the passing of the Prison Act, only as a temporary place of confinement for petty offenders. The Town Cross, which stands opposite the municipal offices, consists of a square base, supporting a disused part or basin, from the centre of which rises a stone pillar surmounted by the figure of a unicorn bearing a shield with the borough arms, viz. three anchors, one in the centre chief, and two in fess, or, and as many muskells, two in the dexter and sinister chief points respectively; and one in base, ppr. A drinking fountain was erected in 1895, at the top of High street, at a cost of over £500, by Mr. David T. Wright, merchant, of Riddle's close, Leith, and a native of Musselburgh, who has presented it to the town; the fountain, which stands on a circular base of two steps, is an octagonal structure in the Renaissance style, four of the sides having arched recesses with basins of grey granite: it is finished above with a frieze and cornice, and a ribbed ogee shaped dome, and also bears the arms of the town, of the Regent Bannochburn, Earl of Moray, and those of the donor, and another shield, charged with the emblem of St. Michael; the total height is 18 feet. In the same street, and opposite the fountain, is the memorial erected to David Macbeth Meir, the celebrated poet and literateur, best known by his contributions to "Blackwood's Magazine," under the name of "Delta"; he was born here 5 Jan. 1798; died 6 July, 1851, and was buried at Inveresk. At the east end of Musselburgh, near the Links, are the scattered buildings and fields belonging to the new well-known school of Loretto. The school house occupies the site of a manastery, originally an offshoot from the castle of Our Lady of Loretto in Italy, and became a cell to the abbey of Dunfermline during the 12th century; subsequently the property fell into the hands of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, whose monogram may still be seen over the door of an old vault, and it was afterwards bought by the celebrated Lord Clive, who created a considerable part of the present building. In 1829 it was converted into a preparatory school by the late Rev. Dr. Lainghorne, but gradually changed its type, and eventually took rank as a public school, being especially noted for its proficiency in athletic games and choral singing. The school choir is probably the most powerful in Scotland, and is now heard to advantage in the beautiful chapel, erected in 1893 by past and present scholars, from designs by Mr. John Honeyman R.S.A. and containing a fine organ. There are branches here of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland Limited. The manufactories here include the Patent Fishing Net Works of Messrs. Stuart; in addition to which this firm has another large factory of the same kind at Buckhaven, Fifeshire. Adjoining this establishment are the very extensive paper mills of the Inveresk Paper Company, which give employment to a large number of hands. Besides these industries there are two large breweries, maltings and seed crushing, tanning and leather currying works, and the manufacture of confectionery, potteryware, salt, skin mats, bricks and tiles, and boat building are all carried on. There are several literary, benevolent and religious societies; and golf, bowling, cycling, tennis, cricket and football clubs. A battery of the Mid-Lothian Volunteer Artillery, and a company of the 6th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots, have their head quarters in the town.

The extensive common, known as Musselburgh Links, has long been in deserved repute as a golfing ground, and the Royal Musselburgh Golf Club, the Musselburgh New Golf Club and the Sports Golf Club Limited have erected club-houses adjoining it. The Royal Company of Archers also come here once a year to compete for the Musselburgh silver arrow. This competition is said to have been instituted in the 16th century, and is an event of great local interest. Attached to the arrow are many gold and silver medals, added by successive winners, and it is annually returned to the town that it may again be offered for competition. The Edinburgh race meeting is also held here annually, and the races of the Royal Caldonian Hunt at intervals of three years. A race meeting and horse and cattle show is also held annually on fair day, in August, under the auspices of the Fair Day Association Limited. Cromwell, before the battle of Dunbar in 1650, quartered his infantry on Musselburgh Links, his own tent being pitched on an elevated spot nearly opposite Linkfield House, and his cavalry quartered at Inveresk. Skirting Musselburgh Links on the south are the attractive residences known as Linkfield, Woodside and Linkfield House; and at the eastern extremity is the suburb of Levenhall, including Buccleuch Park, Hope Place and West Pans, now a popular seaside resort. The Romans, after their invasion of Britain, established themselves in this locality, planting a colonia upon the rising ground at Inveresk. Where the church now stands an altar was erected to Apollo, and various buildings once stood in the adjacent grounds of Inveresk House. Towards the close of the last century the remains of a Roman villa were discovered here. Musselburgh, in the Saxon chronicle, is mentioned as the "Eskmuth" of the Northumbrians, whose territory extended from the Humber to the Forth, and this name is the exact equivalent of Inveresk, i.e., mouth of Esk, the present name of the parish. In the earliest Scottish records mention is made of the two manors of Little Inveresk and Great Inveresk. Malcolm III, surnamed Canmore or Canmore, 1058-93, and his consort, Queen Margaret, gifted the manor of Little Inveresk to the monks of Dunfermline, and their son, David I. confirmed this, and gave in addition Greater Inveresk, which included the burgh and port of Musselburgh. In 1206 the Scottish nobles assembled at Musselburgh to take the oath of fidelity to Alexander II., infant son of William the Lion. Until the Reformation it contained a burgh of regality, belonging to Dunfermline Abbey; Lord MacLellan, of Thirstane, and lord chancellor of Scotland, then became the Superior, and the burgh still pays a small annual sum in name of feu duty to the Duke of Buccleuch, whose ancestress, Anne, Duchess of Moonth, acquired rights thereto about the beginning of last century. The latest attempt to extort feudal homage from the magistrates, as representing the townspeople, in 1702, at the instance of Sir Robert Dickson, of Smerton, was successfully resisted upon the ground that the charters granted to the burgh freed them of any such acknowledgments. Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught have at different times honoured Musselburgh with their presence, and the Princes have played golf upon its links. In 1888 the rateable value of Musselburgh was £29,000, and at the present time is £35,531. The population of the burgh in 1891 was 8,800, and in 1881, 7,880.

NEWBATTLE is a parish and small village, in Dalkeith poor combination and small debt court district; the village is situated about a mile to the south of Dalkeith, where there is a station on the North British railway, and is watered by the South Esk. Newton Grange is a village in this parish. The parish church is a plain building, but several of the windows are stained. In 1895 it was enlarged and restored, when an ancient aisle, for many years walled up, was re-opened, and named "Lord Ancram's aisle," as a memorial to Walter William Schomberg (Kerr), Earl of Ancram, who died in June, 1892. Robert Leighton, afterwards Bishop of Dunblane and Archbishop of Glasgow, was minister of Newbattle from 1641 to 1652, and the pulpit in which he preached is still in use. In the church is a mural tablet, erected in memory of the archbishop, who died 1 Feb. 1684. The parish abounds in valuable coal mines, worked by the Lothian Coal Co. Limited. Newbattle Abbey, the seat of the Marquess of Lothian K.T., P.C., LL.D. who is also Baron Ker of Newbattle, occupies part of the site of the ancient Cistercian abbey, and it is surrounded by grounds containing some of the oldest and largest trees in the kingdom, including a beech of extraordinary dimensions. The mansion has a collection of valuable paintings, both ancient and modern. The abbey of Newbattle, or Newbottle, was founded in 1140 by David I. for the monks of the Cistercian order. The buildings were burnt by Richard II. of England in 1385, and again by the Earl of Hertford in 1544. The architecture is chiefly Early English, and has been assigned to the middle of the 13th century. The foundations of the Abbey Church, accidentally discovered, have now been disclosed throughout, and show that it consisted of a long nave with aisles, choir and a central tower. In 1892 some workmen in digging, came upon the foundations of the north transept and side chapels; the excavations were continued in 1893 and 1894, and revealed the bases of piers, in line with those now remaining in the crypt, and connecting them with the south transept. An immense open chimney (12 ft. 6 in. by 6 ft.) was also discovered. The piers of the crypt are octagonal, the plain shafts measuring 3 ft. 6 in. in height, and carrying circular arches; some finely carved bosses were also found, one of which is placed in the crypt, which, so far as at present opened, is 100 feet long by 27 ft. 7 in. wide. The Great Hall and the Chapter house have also been examined, and from the east end of the church towards the south, the foundations of other buildings were met with, including a portion of the stair from the dorter (dormitory), and an entrance to the cloisters; the walls are of ashlar, and on the south of this entrance was a grained chamber with the bases of four columns, and, extending east and west, a stone built arched culvert of ashlar work; the line of the walls and position of the piers of the church have been carefully marked with brown glazed fire-clay edging, specially made. In course of the work a number of stone coffins were found, principally outside the choir and north transept, and one of polished stone near the entrance to the church from the cloisters. The area of the parish comprises 5,225 acres; rateable value, £15,941; the population in 1891 was 3,560 and in 1881, 3,346.

A portion of this parish, with an estimated population of 80, was transferred to Borthwick by an Order of the Secretary for Scotland, dated Sept. 18, 1895.

PENICUIK is a parish and police burgh, on the borders of Peebles-shire, in Peebles poor combination, and in the small debt court district of Dalkeith; the parish is from 11 to 12 miles in length and 6 in breadth, and is watered throughout by the North Esk. The town, seated on high land, on the north bank of the North Esk, and on the road from Edinburgh to Peebles, is about 9 miles south-west from the former, 13 north from the latter, and 9 south-south-west from Dalkeith, and has two stations on the North British railway, one in the town, the terminus of the Penicuik line, and another at Esk Bridge (half a mile north-east) on the same section. Along its northern border, the parish includes a considerable part of the Pentland Hills, on which are pastured numerous flocks of sheep. The southern portion is more level, and the soil is various, but dairy farming is carried on to a considerable extent on several of the farms. The town is governed by a provost, two bailies, and commissioners. The principal industry is the manufacture of paper, carried on at Valleyfield Mills by Messrs. A. Cowan & Sons Lim. and at Esk Mills by Messrs. J. Brown & Co. Lim. At Valleyfield Mills, the largest in this part of the country, both printing and writing papers are manufactured. In the beginning of this century these mills were acquired by Government for the reception of 5,000 French prisoners of war, of whom 300 died here and were buried in the grounds, and in 1860 a handsome monument was erected to their memory, near the spot, by some of the inhabitants. The Esk Mills, the first mills in Scotland devoted to the manufacture of cottons, were afterwards used as cotton and paper mills, but are now paper mills only. There is abundance of coal and limestone, the latter occasionally so hard as to admit of a fine polish, and containing a variety of petrifications. Whinstone and freestone are also plentiful, and in Carlepe Hill lead and iron ore have been discovered.

Ironstone mining has also become an important industry. The Cowan Institute, in the High street, erected in 1894 by the late Alexander Cowan, at a cost of £4,500, is a handsome building containing a library of 2,600 volumes, reading and billiard rooms, a public hall and a gymnasium. "Habbes How" is a romantic glen here, and there is another of the same name in the adjoining parish of Glencorse. There are several chalybeate and petrifying springs in this district, and on the banks of the North Esk, near Spittal Hill, is a well, the waters of which have a bitter taste, and are drunk by the country people for bowel complaints. In the locality are several ruined castles and vestiges of encampments. Penicuik House, built about 1761 by Sir James Clerk, 3rd bart. (d. 1782), is now the residence of Col. Sir George Douglas Clerk bart. J.P.; the mansion contains a good collection of paintings, including Ossian's Hall, by Alexander Runciman, who was employed by Sir James Clerk to decorate the house with scenes from Ossian. Sir James also collected here a considerable number of Roman antiquities. South of the house is an obelisk erected to Allan Ramsay, the poet, who frequently resided here, and died in 1758, and the grounds of New Hall, another mansion in the parish, are supposed to be the scene of his fine pastoral comedy, "The Gentle Shepherd," published in 1728. The area comprises 18,880 acres; rateable value, £29,813; the population in 1891 was 4,934, and in 1881, 5,309; the police burgh in 1891 had a population of 3,002.

POLTON, see LASSWADE.

PORTOBELLO, a fashionable watering place on the Firth of Forth, has now been included within the borough of Edinburgh, which see.

PUMPFHERSTON, see MID CALDER.

RATHO is a parish and village, in the small debt court district of Edinburgh; the parish is about 4 miles long and 3 broad, and lies midway between the Pentland Hills and the Firth of Forth; it is bounded on the north and north-west by Kirkliston, on the north by Kirkliston and Corstophine, south-east by Currie, and south-west by Kirknewton; the village is about 8 miles west-by-south from Edinburgh, and has a junction station on the Edinburgh and Glasgow section of the North British railway. The country in the eastern part of the parish is flat, and the soil fertile, but the ground rises gradually towards the south. The parish church, originally erected in the 12th century and restored in the 17th and again in the earlier part of the present century, is an irregular structure, incorporating work of each of these periods, but is not without features of interest. The Roman Catholic church was erected in 1883. Dalmahoy, the property of the Earl of Morton, and Hatton House, formerly belonging to the Maitlands, Earls of Lauderdale, now the property of James McKeivie esq. are in this parish. Hatton is one of the oldest and most substantially built houses in Scotland, and its massive walls contain hiding places used in the old troublous times. William Wilkie D.D. a poet, sometimes called the "Scottish Homer," and formerly professor of philosophy at St. Andrew's, was born here, or at Dalmhoy, 5 Oct. 1721. Robert Liston F.R.S. an eminent surgeon, is said to have been born here, 28 Oct. 1794, but Ecclesmachan, co. Linlithgow, has also been assigned as his birthplace. Sir W. Fettes is also believed to have been a native of this parish. There are vestiges of two Danish camps, one on Kaimes Hill, and the other on South Platt Hill. The Earl of Morton is the principal landowner. The area comprises 6,147 acres; rateable value, £20,862; the population in 1891 was 1,839, of which 821 were in the village.

ROSLIN is a small village and quad sacra-parish in the civil parish of Lasswade, and in Dalkeith small debt court district, 7 miles south from Edinburgh, 23 south-west from Lasswade and 2 south-west from Loanhead, with a station on the Edinburgh to Gencorse branch of the North British railway, called Roslyn Castle and Roslin Lee, on the Dolphinton and Peebles line of the same system, but on the other side of the valley. Rosebank House is the seat of John Wharton Tod esq. and Woodhouselee of James William Fraser-Tyler esq. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in agricultural pursuits, but there are also gunpowder mills and extensive carpet works. Roslyn chapel, which stands on an eminence at the east end of the village, overlooking the remains of the castle and the romantic valley of the Esk, was founded in 1446, by William St. Clair, or Sinclair, 3rd Earl of Orkney of that family, as a Collegiate church, and dedicated to St. Matthew the Apostle. It was, however, left incomplete, and the existing structure represents only the eastern arm of the projected building, the nave and transepts of which, uncovered in 1881, were found to have been carried nearly to the floor level. At the period of the Revolution, the chapel was attacked, 11 Dec. 1688, by a fanatical mob, who destroyed much of the external ornament, including the numerous figures of apostles and martyrs, which adorned the canopied niches of the exterior; the fabric is, nevertheless, in a singularly perfect condition, and the judicious restorations and repairs carried out by the later Earls of Roslyn have to a large extent removed the traces of its former maltreatment. It consists of a lofty choir with clerestory, a lady chapel beyond, and continuous aisles, supported by bold pinnacled buttresses; behind which are tall square pinnacles, rising from the aisle wall, and carrying the flying supports of the choir. Architecturally, this famous edifice is confessedly unique as an example of the Gothic style, for it combines the massive character of Norman work with even more than the elaborate and profuse ornamentation which distinguishes that of the Tudor period. The choir and aisles are divided by arcades having seven clustered piers on either side; two others standing in the centre at the east end; the clerestory has five large windows on either side, and the lofty roof is divided into as many compartments by ribs springing from the arcade below; the lady chapel, only 15 feet in height, opens by arches to the side aisles, and has a groined roof of florid design. One of the most interesting and striking features of the interior is the celebrated "Prentice's pillar," a clustered pier, wreathed round diagonally with bands of varied and finely sculptured foliage, and several of the arches bear inscriptions or symbolical figures. Beneath the east end is the lower chapel, erected by the Lady Elizabeth Doug-ias, wife of John (Stewart), Earl of Buchan; it is reached by a descent of 24 steps at the south-east angle; it is 36 feet long, 14 wide, and has a height of about 15 feet; the grained vaulting displays the arms of St. Clair—arg. a cross engrailed, sa.—and at the east wall is an altar. In the north aisle is a monument to George (Sinclair), 4th Earl of Caithness, and hereditary justiciar of Caithness, who died at Edinburgh 9 Sept. 1582; on the floor of the same aisle is a large flat stone, incised with the figure of a man in armour, his feet on a greyhound, and on each side of his head a small shield, charged with a rampant lion; this stone is supposed to indicate the burial place of Sir William St. Clair, of Roslyn, an ancestor of the founder, who lived during the early part of the 14th century; there is also on the north side a large slab said to cover the entrance to the vault of the Sinclairs, lords of Roslyn, ten of whom, previous to 1690, were here interred, and according to the ancient custom of the family, in complete armour and without any coffin, a traditional practice alluded to by Sir Walter Scott in his "Lay of the Last Minstrel." James, 3rd Earl of Roslyn in 1861-2, effected a considerable restoration of the chapel, and Robert, 4th and late Earl, in 1879, erected a new baptistry with organ loft over, from designs by Mr. A. Kerr, architect, of Edinburgh, enclosing it with screen work and providing a font; he also renewed a number of the destroyed figures formerly adorning the interior, and filled many of the windows with stained glass, including the east window, a memorial to his sister, Harriet Elizabeth, wife of George Herbert, Count Munster of Dernburg, and German ambassador to England; she died at Dernburg, Hanover, 29 Nov. 1867. In the burial ground attached to the chapel is a memorial of various coloured stone, erected in 1893 by his countess, at a cost of £1,000, to Robert Francis, 4th and late Earl of Roslyn, who died in 1890; the monument, 19 feet in height, includes six figures emblematical of certain Christian virtues, and is surmounted by a cross. Roslyn Castle, now a ruin, stands on a lofty and almost isolated cliff overhanging the wooded and picturesque glen through which flows the river Esk. It is believed to have been originally erected by one of the Norman St. Clairs, an adherent of the Conqueror in the 12th century, but in 1447 was partly destroyed by fire, and afterwards rebuilt by William St. Clair, the founder of the intended collegiate church: in Sept. 1544, it was again burnt by an English force, under the command of Sir Edward (Seymour), 1st Earl of Hertford, but must have been subsequently repaired, for in 1650, when Cromwell crossed the Tweed (22 July) with an army of 11,000 men, it was held for the Royal cause by commission from Charles II. who had previously landed in Scotland, June 23rd. After the battle of Dunbar (3 Sept.), in which the Scots, under Gen. David Leslie, afterwards Baron Newark, were signally defeated, Gen. Monk invested Roslyn Castle, which shortly surrendered and was plundered by the Roundheads, and in 1688 it was much injured by the same mob that attacked the chapel; the ruins, now considerable, are reached by a bridge thrown across a deep ravine; some fragments of the north side of the fortress, with walls 9 feet thick, are standing, and to the south is a mansion of the Early 17th century, erected on the site of part of the ancient structure, which includes several vaulted chambers; the dining room of this has a panelled ceiling, with ornamental work in plaster, enclosing shields of arms of the St. Clair family, and over the principal entrance are the initials S.W.S. 1622. Near the castle are the remains of the ancient chapel and cemetery of the village, close to which is a copious spring of excellent water called St. Matthew's well. Omnibuses ply during the summer from Edinburgh, and the walk by the valley of the Esk to Hawthornden is exceedingly picturesque. The population of the village in 1891 was 730 (and ecclesiastical parish 1,630) and in 1881, 611.

STOBHILL, see GOREBRIDGE

STOW is an extensive parish and village, in the southern extremity of the county, nearly 16 miles in length and 8 broad; it is partly in Selkirkshire, and in Dalkeith poor combination and small debt court district. The village is 24 miles south-east from Edinburgh and has a station on the North British railway. The village is well lighted with gas, supplied by the County Council. An augmented water supply has been provided from Sell Moor hill, at a cost of over £1,200, the villages of Stow and Killochyet having been constituted a special district alike for water supply and drainage. The Town Hall is in part devoted to a literary institute and library, and also includes a large room for lectures and public meetings. There are two woollen manufactories here. Hirings for servants are held on Friday before the last Monday in February and the second Tuesday in March. The last days are Wednesday before the first Sunday of May and the second Sunday of November. Caitha is a small hamlet in this parish, 4 miles south-by-west from Stow village and near the Bowland station on the North British railway. Fountainhall is also a hamlet in this parish, about 4 miles north-west from Stow village, with a station on the North British railway. Bowland is the residence of William Ramsay esq. J.P.; Crookston, of John Barthwick esq. J.P. and Torsonce House, of Miss Milroy; Ashiestiel, the residence of the late Sir Walter Scott, previous to his removal to Abbotsford is now occupied by Miss Russell; Laidlawstiel is the property of Lady Reay. The area comprises 36,843 acres, of which 9,969 are in Selkirkshire; rateable value, £19,827; the population in 1891 was 2,201, 442 being in Selkirk.

The portions of Hangingshaw and Kirklands farms, including the hamlet of Stagebank, within the parish of Stow, were transferred to Heriot, for all purposes, Dec. 6, 1898, by the Secretary for Scotland's Order, No. 34, dated Dec. 17, 1897.

TEMPLE is a parish and village, in Dalkeith poor combination and small debt court district; the parish is bounded on the east by Bordwick, on the south by Heriot, on the west by Edleston and Penicuik, and on the north by Carrington. The village, situated on rising ground on the banks of the Gleadhouse water, which falls into the South Esk, is about 10 miles south from Edinburgh and 3 miles from Gorebridge (the nearest) station on the North British railway. The land is chiefly hilly, but contains a good deal of moor and pasture land. The old church, an edifice in the Gothic style and now in ruins, was founded by King David I. for the Knights Templars; the new church, also in the Gothic style, was built in 1830. Sir Robert Dundas bart. of Arisnton House, is the principal landowner. The area comprises 14,257 acres; rateable value, £18,968; the population in 1891 was 1,646, reduced by the transfer of 1,191 persons to Borthwick parish, to 455. Post Office, John Currie, sub-postmaster. Letters received through Gorebridge R.S.O. Midlothian. Delivery, 9.30 a.m.; dispatch, 2.15 p.m. Postal orders are issued here, but not paid. ELGINSHIRE,

So designated from the name of its capital, Elgin, and sometimes Morayshire, from being the central division of the "Province of Moray," is one of the northern counties of Scotland; bounded on the north-east by the North Sea, and on the north-west by the Moray Firth, on the east and south-east by Banffshire, on the south and south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the county of Nairn. It has about 30 miles of coast line indented by several small harbours. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries; with Nairn it is so intimately connected that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description. Thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of a triangular figure—with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county comprises 485 square miles, or 308,499 statute acres of land, and extends from north to south 30 miles, and from east to west 25 miles. In point of size Elgin ranks as the eighteenth and in population as the nineteenth amongst Scottish counties, having a population in 1891 of 20,381 males and 23,072 females, or a total of 43,453 against 43,788 in 1881. It had, in 1891, 8,838 inhabited houses against 8,611 in 1881.

History.—In ancient times the limits of the county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beauld on the north-west, and in the northern confines of Argyleshire on the south-west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the Bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardine, the estates of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the "ann" of Relugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as "cairns," monumental pillars &c. &c. The "Province of Moray," anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin) and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea, designated from it the Moray Firth. So late as the time of Charles I. the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant, and, as Montrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both their opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Inverlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

Soil, Surface, Climate, Produce &c.—The soil of this county, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly 40 miles, but of unequal breadth, from about 5 to 12 miles or more, measured in a straight line from the hills to the shore; this plain, however, is diversified over its whole extent by ridges of lower hills in general nearly parallel to the shore; beyond these are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the river Spey, Lossie and Findhorn, with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district the country may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the country is popularly termed "the Brae of Moray," and is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. Agriculture is pursued in a spirited manner, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires; and the greater portion of the waste land is now either brought into cultivation or planted with forest trees. In the lower part of the county the Duke of Fife and other proprietors formed plantations to so great an extent that almost every part of the land inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. The only mineral raised in 1897 was 3,300 tons of basalt and 56,585 tons of sandstone. The south of this county produces principally oats, but in the north is unsurpassed for the quantity and quality of the crops of turnips, potatoes, barley and wheat. The chief crops as shown by the "Agricultural

Returns for Great Britain," 1898, were: oats, 19,645 acres; barley or bere, 15,194; rye, 676; the total corn crops being, 36,925 acres; turnips and swedes, 15,621 acres; potatoes, 1,709; vetches or tares, 470; total green crops, 17,776; hay, 5,838 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 32,720 acres; permanent pasture, 8,306. Total area of land and water, 308,499 acres, of which 50,908 are mountain and heath, 46,752 woods, and 1,936 plantations. To the breeding and rearing of cattle much attention is devoted, the polled Aberdeenshire and the pure shorthorned being the breeds most highly prized. The live stock in 1898 comprised 3,897 horses used solely for agriculture and brood mares; unbroken horses, 1,146; cows and heifers in milk or in calf, 6,997; other cattle, 16,901; ewes kept for breeding, 28,452; other sheep, 42,092; sows kept for breeding, 453; other pigs, 2,081. Little can be said respecting manufactures; woollen stuffs are made to a small extent, which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood and whiskey, comprehend the principal exports; the chief imports being coal, iron, timber and manures. There are also ship and boat building yards, breweries, tanneries &c. Herring fishing is prosecuted at several villages on the coast, and fine salmon fishing at the mouths of the Spey and Findhorn, and all along the sea coasts. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate; the harder kinds of fruit, all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum, by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; whilst flowers and fruit of the more rare species are brought to perfection in the gardens and orchards of this county. With respect to the winds, the most prevalent gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels inasmuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that in the lower parts of the Moray the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district in Scotland; in the higher quarter the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation and the inherent warmth of the soil.

Rivers, Lakes and Railways.—The principal rivers are the Spey, the Findhorn and the Lossie, all flowing in a northerly direction and each teeming with the finest salmon; the Spey and Findhorn rise in Inverness-shire, and reach the sea at Garmouth, the end of an estuary on the east of the county and Findhorn Bay on the west near Forres, and the Lossie, which is smaller than the former rivers, rises in the hills near Dallas and Strathspey and debouches at Lossiemouth. There are many delightful lakes, of which Loch Spynie is most deserving of notice; it is three miles in length and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground. In accordance with this appearance, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea shells (particularly those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie produces several kinds of fish, but none in such abundance as the perch and the pike. The railways in this county are the Great North of Scotland and the Highland lines, the former entering the county a little east of Garmouth from the coast branch via Banff, Cullen, Buckie &c. and runs to Elgin, where it is joined by a branch from Keith via Craigiehallachie junction, and Rothies, the branch from Craigiehallachie to Boat of Gartan, running through the south-east of the county from Elgin; there is also a branch to Lossiemouth. The Highland railway enters the county from Keith via Muibeu and Orbiston, from which place there is a branch to Fochabers, runs to Elgin, thence to Alves, with a branch to Burghhead and Hopeman on the north coast, and turning west proceeds to Forres, and north-east to Nairn, and south to Grantown and Kingussie, Perthshire.

Divisions, Representation &c.—Elginshire comprises nineteen parishes; it contains two royal burghs—Elgin and Forres; the former uniting with Cullen, Banff, Inverurie, Kintore and Peterhead in returning one member to Parliament, and the county in conjunction with Nairnshire returns one member. The parliamentary constituency for 1898 was 5,172. The valuation of the county for 1897-8 was £241,065.

BURGHEAD,

DUFFUS PARISH, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, NEW DUFFUS AND ROSEISLE.

BURGHEAD is a police burgh, situated on a bold headland jutting out into the Moray Frith, in the parish of Duffus, 9 miles west from Elgin and about 10 north-east from Forres, in the Morayshire poor combination and Elgin small debt court district, and has a station on the Alves and Hopeman branch of the Highland railway. It was constituted a burgh in 1895 under the Burgh Police of Scotland Acts, 1892-93. It possesses a pier and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam or other vessels may enter with perfect safety. Burghead was anciently a Roman as well as a Danish station; the remains of a fort are still visible, and there is a well dug out of the solid rock, known by the name of "The Roman Well." The inhabitants are chiefly employed in fishing, but a good many find employment in the chemical works. There is a coasting trade for the supply of the neighbourhood. In 1891 the population was 1,662, against 1,428 in 1881, and the inhabited houses numbered 312.

Duffus parish extends along the shore of the Moray Frith to the north of Elgin, from which the church is about 5 miles distant. Hopeman railway station is 2 miles from the village. The parish is about 9½ miles in length, by about 4 in breadth, and includes beside Burghead, the villages of Cummingston, Hopeman, New Duffus and Roseisle. It is a flat district, chiefly agricultural. Duffus House is the seat of Sir Archibald Hamilton-Dunbar bart. D.L., J.P. and Gordonstown House the seat of Sir William C. Gordon-Cumming bart. Sir Archibald Hamilton-Dunbar bart. Sir William Gordon-Cumming bart. George Ross Mackessack, of Ardyre, and Ed. Mortimer, of Invergie, are the principal landowners. tillery of the Balmenach-Glenlivet Distillery Co. Limited. The area of the entire parish comprises 70,120 acres; rateable value £19,640 (including Grantown burgh); the population in 1891 was 3,026, against 3,200 in 1881.

EDINKILLIE is a parish south of Forres and Rafford parishes, in the Nairn poor combination and Forres small debt court district. The river Divie, a tributary of the Findhorn, flows through the parish. The Dorch, which unites with the Divie before its junction with the Findhorn, rises in Loch an Dorch in the south of the parish. The Highland railway passes from north to south through the parish, with stations at Dava and Dunphail, and crosses the Divie by a viaduct of seven arches, the height from the surface of the water to the rails being about 110 feet. There are several hills on the east side of the parish ranging about 1,500 feet. The woods of Darnaway on the west, and Altyre and Logie on the east, are very extensive. The church, which is in the centre of the parish, and about 9 miles south from Forres, stands on the banks of the Divie. Dunphail House, the residence of Earl of Elgin G.C.S.L. G.C.I.E., P.C., D.C.L. stands a little north of the church, and near the ruins of the old castle. The ruins of a castle also occupy an island in the loch. The Earl of Moray, Sir W. G. Gordon-Cumming bart. of Altyre, Forres, Mrs. Cumming of Logie, the Scottish Equitable Life Assurance Co. (as proprietors of Dunphail) and Mrs. Smith, of Kelzgas, are the principal landowners. The area comprises 32,467 acres; rateable value, £8,460; population in 1891 was 983, against 1,175 in 1881.

ELGIN.

ELGIN is a royal burgh and capital of the shire, parliamentary burgh, a parish and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray, and is the head of a small debt court district, and within the Morayshire poor combination, 189 miles north of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen and Hantly and 153 by way of Perth and Forres, 33 north of Brechin, 64 west of Aberdeen, 39 north-east of Inverness, 12 east-by-north of Forres and 9 west of Fochabers; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the river Lossie, about 6 miles above its mouth, and surrounded by hills clad with pine, beech, oak and elm trees. Railways from five different points meet here, viz.:—from Rothes on the south, Keith and Banff on the east, Lossiemouth on the north and Forres on the west; the lines from Keith and Forres being part of the Highland railway, the others Great North of Scotland. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about the year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross and Moray, and it is said that from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word "Helgyn" is still used in the inscription upon the seal of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence called Lady hill, on the north-west side of the town. A monumental column, erected by public subscription, in memory of the last Duke of Gordon, now stands on this hill.

The royal burgh consists of parts of the parishes of Elgin, St. Andrews, Lhanbride, and New Spynie. The government is vested in a lord provost, four bailies, and 12 councillors, and the burgh, together with those of Banff, Cullen, Inverurie, Kintore and Peterhead, form the Elgin District of Burghs, constituted under the Reform Act of 1832, returning one member to Parliament. The water supply, under the control of the Council, is obtained from Logieburn, 5 miles distant, and Easter-town, 2 miles.

The cathedral of the Holy Trinity, Elgin, now a majestic and beautiful ruin, belonged to the see of Moray, founded by Malcolm III. surnamed "Canmore," and for many years seated at Spynie, but in 1224 transferred to Elgin, which by that time had become a place of importance; in the same year also the cathedral was dedicated, but about 1240 received some damage, and in 1270 was injured by fire, and the necessary repairs involved various additions; in 1390 the fabric again suffered by fire at the hands of Alexander Stewart, Earl of Buchan, known as "The Wolf of Badenoch," and in 1402 was plundered by another chieftain: portions of the building were subsequently restored or rebuilt, but in 1658 the work of spoliation began, and the lead was stripped from the roofs in order to provide ammunition for the Scottish soldiers then campaigning in the Low Countries; in 1594 it was only in partial use, but up to 1640 services continued to be held within the ruins. The church, when complete, consisted of a choir of seven bays, with aisles of five bays, an octagonal chapter-house, approached through a vestibule from the north choir aisle, transepts, nave of six bays, with double aisles, south porch and central and western towers; the total length is 300 feet; the width across the nave, 98 feet, and through the transept, 114 feet. The earliest existing portions are the ends of the transepts, now only fragmentary, but representing the Transitional church of the 12th and early 13th centuries; the choir and the earlier part of the chapter-house date from 1270; the former is an extremely elegant example of Early English, the dog-tooth ornament being very freely employed; the chapter-house was restored in 1462, and still retains its clustered central pier and vaulting and the flamboyant tracery of one window: the central tower was begun during the period 1397-1406, but in 1506 it fell, and its re-erection was not completed till 1538; in 1711, owing to the weakness of the later piers, it again fell, destroying or seriously injuring the north transept and the nave arcades adjoining: of the nave nothing is left but some of the bases of the piers, most of which have been restored; the western towers are now reduced to the helmy stage, and reach a height of 84 feet; between them is the western entrance, a fine and deeply recessed portal of eight orders, with much carved work, and enclosing a double doorway of later date with a vesica panel in the tympanum, the whole being highly enriched; over the entrance are three panelled gables, and the great west window above is an insertion of the early 15th century: another striking doorway is that of the south transept; in the choir and transepts are remains of a number of tombs of bishops and others, some of which retain more or less mutilated effigies; the sedilia are almost entirely destroyed, but piscina exist in several parts of the fabric, and in the choir stands part of the shaft of a Celtic cross, discovered in the town in 1823. In the graveyard to the south are the steps and shaft-base of a cross, and to the north-west stands the episcopal palace, built c. 1535-73, and till lately (1899) almost intact. The remains of the cathedral are now in charge of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests and are well cared for.

High street is about a mile in length; in the centre stands the Established Church, a building in the Classic style, with a lofty tower at the east end: it will seat nearly 2,000; west of this, on the market pavement, is a fountain; there are several other places of worship.

Anderson's Institution, constituted under the bequest of Major-General Andrew Anderson H.E.I.C.S. who left between £70,000 and £80,000 to found and endow an institution in his native town, for the support of old age and the education of youth; the existing structure, a fine building of stone in the Classic style, was erected at a cost of nearly £12,000, including furnishing; the school is now under the control of the School Board. Gray's Hospital, a fine building of stone with portico and dome, was founded under the will of Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, at a cost of £20,000, and was presented, about 1896, with £1,000 by Mr. John Munro, of The Knoll, Bishopmill. Another fine building is the Elgin Club House, in Commerce street; this is in the Italian style, and contains some good rooms.

The "Muckle Cross," originally erected in 1650, destroyed in 1790, and rebuilt at the cost of William Macandrew esq. of Westwood, Essex, in 1888, is hexagonal, with a centre shaft. In North street are several fine buildings, including Trinity (Episcopal) chapel, a neat Gothic structure, and the Trinity Lodge Rooms. On the south side of the town stands the Town Hall, a building in the Jacobean style, with lofty tower, erected from plans prepared by Mr. A. Marshall Mackenzie, Aberdeen. The Free Library, within the same building, was formed in 1892, Mr. Andrew Carnegie presenting £500 for the purchase of books. The Library now contains over 6,000 volumes, and the reading room is commodious and well furnished. The Academy, a building in the classical style, with Roman-Doric portico, from the plans of Messrs. A. and W. Reid, Elgin, was built in 1886, at a cost of £5,000. The leading hotels are the Gordon Arms, in High street; the Station Hotel, facing the Great North of Scotland railway station; the Palace Hotel, in High street, and Anstin's Grand Hotel. Two newspapers are published here, the "Elgin Courant and Courier," and the "Northern Scot and Moray and Nairn Express." In High street are branches of the British Linen Company, Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, Bank of Scotland, North of Scotland Bank Limited, Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, Union Bank of Scotland Limited, Royal Bank of Scotland, Town and County Bank Limited, and a Savings Bank. The old and new court houses, also in High street, were built at different periods, the former about 1843, and the latter about 1864. On the south and west of the town fine new villas continue to be built, and new streets to be laid out. The church and convent of the Greyfriars, long in ruins, are being rebuilt by the Marquis of Bute K.T. The Victoria School of Science and Art, so called from having been built as a memorial of Her Majesty's jubilee, is a building in the late Romanesque style, from a design by Mr. George Sutherland, Elgin, and cost about £2,000.

The trade of Elgin has been greatly increased by the opening up of railway communication. There are two woollen manufactories, which employ many hands, and two iron foundries and saw mills. Of the other branches, a trade in corn, wool and timber is of some consequence, and there is a large tannery, while in the neighbourhood are the famous distilleries of Milton Duff, Glenlossie, Glen Moray, Coleburn, Linkwood and Longmorn, also several stone quarries. Alexander II., in 1224, granted to the burghes of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good; connected with the guldry there is a flourishing charity fund from which decayed members and their families derive substantial pensions. There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin. The weekly corn markets are held on Friday; cattle auctions are also held every Friday. The feeing markets are 26th May, if Friday, if not, Friday before, the first Friday in July (harvest) and the Friday before the 28th November. The area of the parish comprises 19,166 acres; rateable value, £50,218; population in 1881, 8,741, and in 1891, 9,285, of which 6,468 were in the burgh; the total population of the burgh drawn from three parishes (Elgin, St. Andrew's, Lhanbryde and New Spynie) was 7,646, and the number of inhabited houses, 1,846. The rateable value of the burough is £38,323. The number of electors on the parliamentary register in 1898 was 1,082. The land in the city is chiefly freehold. In the parish and about 6 miles south-west of the town, on the left bank of the Lochy or Black Burn, are the ruins of Puscarden Priory, now being restored by the proprietor, the Marquis of Bute.

FINDHORN, a small village seaport, lying on the northern headland of Findhorn bay, in the parish of Kinloss, Morayshire poor combination and Forres small debt court district, is virtually the port of Forres, from which it is distant in a northerly direction about 5 miles; it is the centre of the fishery trade of this portion of the coast, and has also a small coasting trade, chiefly in pit props, which are shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland. The harbour is well sheltered. Kinloss station, on the Highland railway, is distant about 3 miles, the line constructed from that station to Findhorn is now closed. There is a Free church in the village, and also a Public library. The population in 1891 was 562, against 605 in 1881; number of inhabited houses, 171.

Kinloss is a parish on the Meray Firth, 3 miles from north to south, and the same in width, with a station on the Highland railway, and is in Morayshire poor combination and Forres small debt court district; the village is 2 miles north of Forres, and has an Established church and a school. Here, a short distance from the church, are the scanty remains of the Cistercian Abbey of Kinloss, founded in 1141 by King David I., and confirmed to the monks by papal bull in 1174; it was colonised by monks from Melrose in 1303, and the abbot was mitred and sat in Parliament. King Edward I. once stayed at the abbey for nearly a month. Sir George Macpherson-Grant burt., of Ballindalloch Castle, the Rev. John Archibald Dunbar-Dunbar M.A., of Seapark, R. C. Munro Ferguson esq. M.P. of Nover, John Mackessack esq. of Kinloss, Alexander Bredie esq. of Lethen, Alexander Mathieson esq. of Doon Park, Wm. Mathieson esq. of Muirton House, James Grant-Peterkin esq. of Grange, and R. H. Mackessack esq. of Woodside, are the principal landowners. The area of the parish comprises 5,184 acres; rateable value, £7,423; population in 1891 was 958, against 1,072 in 1881.

FOCHABERS.

FOCHABERS is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Bellie, Morayshire poor combination and Elgin small debt court district, 52 miles east of Inverness, 12 south-west of Cullen, 9 east of Elgin and 8 north-west-by-north of Keith, with a terminal station on a branch of the Highland railway from Orbiston, and another at Fochabers Spey, locally in Banffshire, and 2 miles north-east, on the Great North of Scotland Railway; situated on the north road from Aberdeen to Inverness, and lying in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town, and is crossed by a stone bridge. The streets diverge from a square, on the south side of which stands the parish church. The water supply to the burgh was provided at the sole expense of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and the inhabitants have erected a fountain in the square to commemorate the gift. The burgh is governed by a baren bailie appointed by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. There are Episcopalians, Free and Roman Catholic churches. A new Free church is now (1893) in course of construction at a cost of about £3,000, left for the purpose by the late Wm. Pringle esq. of Inverness, a native of this place. At the west end of the town is a gate leading into the policies of Gordon Castle, the seat of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon K.G., P.C. The Castle is a fine modern mansion, standing in an extensive deer park of over 1,200 acres; the present building is grafted on to the old tower of the Earls of Huntly, who held it from 1450 to 1684; it then stood in a gloomy morass (known as Bog of Gight), over which a stone causeway was the only means of access: this tower, which is 90 feet in height, now forms the most conspicuous feature in a large quadrangular building of four storeys, flanked by lower wings which are connected to the main building by long galleries; the interior contains many valuable pictures and some statuary. The Public baths here were the gift of the late Duchess of Richmond and Gordon. The Free school at the east end of the town, founded by Alexander Milne esq. a native of Fochabers, is a building in the Elizabethan style, erected at a cost of £4,338; by his will, dated New Orleans, 17th October, 1836, the founder bequeathed to the parishes of Bellie and Ordiquish the sum of 100,000 dollars for establishing a free school; and a balance of about £17,000 was eventually invested in heritable security, and yields an annual income of £740, by means of which 500 children are educated. Cattle markets are held on the third Thursday in every month, and a horse market on the third Thursday in March, June and September. A fountain in commemoration of Major Wilson, slain during the Matabele war of 1893, was erected in October, 1895. The population in 1891 was 1,101, and number of inhabited houses, 257.

Bellie parish was formerly partly in Banffshire, but by an Order of the Boundary Commissioners, it is now wholly in Elginshire; it is a flat agricultural district, bounded on the west by the river Spey, and extends about 5 miles from north to south and 3 from east to west; it is in the Morayshire poor combination. The Duke of Richmond and Gordon K.G., P.C. and the Countess of Seafield, of Cullen House, are the principal landowners. The area of the entire parish comprises 13,212 acres; rateable value, £10,670; the population in 1891 was 2,210.

FORRES.

FORRES is a royal burgh, in Morayshire poor combination, the head of a small debt court district, capital of the parish of its name and the seat of a presbytery; 201 miles north-by-west from Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, 105 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 75 north-west of Aberdeen, 27 north-east of Inverness, 21 west of Fochabers, 20 east of Fort George, 12 west of Elgin and 11 east of Nairn, with a station on the Highland railway. It is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground; at a distance of about 5 miles is the village of Findhorn, which is its seaport. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks of ancient date in Britain; this interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm II. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the 11th century; it is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of 20 feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a highland broadsword; the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the assaults of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town, on an eminence, once stood a castle, wherein Baffus, one of the early Kings of Scotland, was perfidiously killed by Donald, governor of the fortress, which circumstance, it is said, Shakespeare has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on the waste in the neighbourhood that that hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians) met the "weird sisters," who gave him so many fatal promises. The exact spot on which that meeting is asserted by the country people to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about 200 yards north from the post road between Forres and Nairn, near the toll bar, 5 miles from the former of these places, 1 1/2 miles from Brodie station and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn. The country has now been brought under cultivation and can no longer be described as a rugged heath. On the castle eminence is a granite obelisk to the memory of Dr. Thomson, who sacrificed his life by over exertion in his attention to the wounded Russians after the famous battle of Alma. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower, erected by the inhabitants of Forres in honour of Lord Nelson, he walk to which, as it winds round the hill, is extremely pleasant; from its elevated situation, a fine view is hence obtained, and the tower is conspicuous for a considerable distance. Sloping to the north, where the river Findhorn sweeps round from the south-west through the Forest of Darnaway, is a modern mansion, the seat of the Earl of Moray; adjoining it is the old Castle of Darnaway, in which is a fine hall, built by Earl Randolph, regent of Scotland during the minority of David Bruce, capable of containing 1,000 men under arms. Here Mary Queen of Scots held her court in 1566. Altyre is the residence of Sir William G. Gordon-Cumming bart.; Brodie Castle, of Lieut. Jan. A. M. Brodie J.P. and Grange Hall, of James Grant-Peterkin esq. D.L., J.P. About 2 miles below the castle, the river, which debouches into Findhorn bay, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, which was erected by a joint stock company, in shares of £10 each. Forres, as before stated, is a royal burgh, and governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and 11 councillors, and unites with Nairn, Portrose and Inverness in returning a member to Parliament, the present representative of the Inverness burghs being Robert B. Finlay. A sheriff small debt court sits once in every two months for the recovery of debts not exceeding £12. The trade of Forres is not of an extensive character. Dye works, manufactories for woollens, artificial manures, boots and shoes and bobbins, chemical works and flour mills being the principal branches. Three-quarters of a mile from the centre of the town is situated the Leanchoil Hospital, erected in 1891, at a cost of between £6,000 and £7,000, for the burgh of Forres and the six adjoining parishes. The North of Scotland Bank Lim. The British Linen Co. the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited and the National Bank of Scotland Limited have branches here. In the centre of the High street stands the Town House, a substantial structure, with a tower in the Scottish Baronial style surmounted by a spire; the building comprises the gaol, a court house, a council room &c.; and near to this stands a handsome Gothic market cross of four storeys, the lower one having eight pointed arches with angle buttresses surmounted by finials. A newspaper, the "Forres, Elgin and Nairn Gazette," is published every Wednesday. Owing to the configuration of the country round about Forres, the burgh enjoys a remarkable immunity from rain, the rainfall for the past few years having been ascertained from accurate observations to be about the lowest in Scotland, and this circumstance, and the soil being porous, mark out Forres as an excellent health resort. Gluny Hill House, on one of the eminences in the vicinity of the town, was built for a hydropathic establishment. There are two masonic lodges in the town. There is an Established church, a Free church, a Roman Catholic church, and others for Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, the Evangelical Union and Baptists. Anderson's Institution, founded by Jonathan Anderson esq. a native of Forres, for educating children of the humble class from the parishes of Forres, Bafford and Kinloss, was built in 1824, and adjoins the institute; this school is now placed under the Forres School Board. The Forres Public school stands opposite. The Mechanics' Institute, also in High street, a fine building, the property of the burgh, possesses a library, a reading room and two public halls; the large hall is of recent erection, and is capable of seating 1,000 persons. A corn market is held every Tuesday, and a cattle market every alternate Tuesday; cattle sales are also held in the auction mart every Tuesday. Feeding markets for hiring servants are held on the Saturday before the 23rd of May (called Whitsunday market) and the Saturday before the 28th of November (called Martinmas market). The area of the parish comprises 5,440 acres; rateable value, of landward, £5,440; burghal, £16,842; the population in 1891 was 4,801, against 4,752 in 1881; these include the population of the burgh, 3,972

In 1891, and 3,691 in 1881; the number of inhabited houses being 827. The Earl of Moray, Sir William G. Gordon-Cumming bart. James Grant Peterkin esq. of Grange. George Grant esq. of Invererne, Mrs. Roney Druyatt, of Ratio, and the representatives of Mrs. Fraser Tytler, of Saunquhar, of C. Macpherson Grant esq. of Donneduan, and of R. D. Grant esq. of Thornhill, are the principal landowners of the parish.

GRANTOWN-ON-SPEY.

GRANTOWN is a burgh and modern village in the parish of Cromdale, with a station, 1½ miles distant, on the Great North of Scotland railway; it is the head of a small debt court district; it was made a police burgh in 1899, and is situated in the district of the parish called "Inverallan," on the north bank of the Spey, rather more than a mile south of Castle Grant and at the distance of 35 miles south-east from Inverness, 22 south from Forres, 8 north-east from Duthill and 6 north from Abernethy. Grantown was begun about the year 1774, under the patronage of the Grant family, who have been its continued benefactors; and a large number of the inhabitants retain the name of Grant to the present day. Large numbers of visitors from Edinburgh and Glasgow come here during the summer months. Branches of the National Bank of Scotland Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland and the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited are established in the town, and there is also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. There are also three excellent and commodious hotels—the Grant Arms, Palace and Strath-spey. The Established church for the quoad sacra parish of Inverallan is an edifice of stone, built in 1884 by Caroline Stuart, Dowager Countess of Seafield; there is also a Free church, an Episcopalian church and a Baptist chapel. A sheriff small debt circuit court is held on the first Wednesday after the 16th of January and the first Wednesday in May and September. The Cottage Hospital was built in 1884 by the Dowager Countess of Seafield, in memory of Ian Charles, 8th Earl of Seafield (d. 18 Feb. 1881). The Young Men's and Women's Christian Association Hall, erected in 1897, is a building of stone, containing lecture and concert room, tea rooms and reading room; there is also an Orphan Institution. Castle Grant, a modern mansion, with which is incorporated an ancient structure called "Comyns Tower," is a seat of Caroline, Countess Dowager of Seafield.

Fairs are held on the Tuesday after the 12th and Monday before third Wednesday in January, Monday before third Wednesday in February, Monday before third Wednesday in March (cattle, horses, sheep and hiring), Thursday before third Wednesday in April (sheep), Monday after third Wednesday in April (horses, cattle and sheep), Monday after second Wednesday in May (horses, cattle and sheep), Monday after Beany (for horses, cattle and sheep) and first Friday (Figgat Fair) in June, Monday after third Thursday in July (horses, cattle and sheep), first Wednesday (shearers') and Monday after third Tuesday (horses, cattle and sheep) in August, Monday after third Tuesday in September (horses, cattle and sheep), Monday after third Tuesday in October (cattle and sheep), Monday after second Wednesday (horses &c.), and Wednesday preceding term week (hiring). A halfpenny newspaper, "The Grantown Supplement," is published every Saturday. Caroline, Countess of Seafield, is the principal landowner. The population in 1891 was 1,423, against 1,374 in 1881; number of inhabited houses, 270; rateable value, £7,668.

Inverallan is a quoad sacra parish formed from that of Cromdale, and a hamlet about 3 miles from Grantown, the church being, however, in the latter.

LHANBRYD.

See ST. ANDREW'S LHANBRYD.

LOSSIEMOUTH, which is composed of the districts of Branderburgh, Lossiemouth, Seatown and Stotfield, and was created a burgh in 1890 under the Lindsay Act, is in the parish of Drainie, 5 miles north from Elgin, situated on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx into the Moray Firth, in the Morayshire poor combination and the small debt court district of Elgin; it has a station on the Great North of Scotland railway (Elgin and Lossiemouth branch), is the seaport of Elgin, and is fast advancing into importance. Most of the town is regularly laid out, and is a resort for sea-bathers. Several gentlemen residents in Elgin have erected villas which they occupy during the summer months. The harbour was opened in 1839, and has since been improved, so as to render it a safe and commodious haven for shipping; the cost of this erection amounted to £20,000. In 1891 a grant of £20,000 was obtained from the Government for deepening the harbour to admit vessels of larger tonnage. The improvement of the harbour, and the facilities of railway communication which this place has now enjoyed for several years, has given a stimulus to trade which has rendered it one of the most important seaports north of Aberdeen. There is a chapel of ease here to the Drainie Established church, and a Free church, erected, at a cost of £2,400, in place of one destroyed by fire; it is in the Early English style, with an octagonal tower and spire, which serve as a landmark to mariners. The Town Hall, erected at a cost of about £1,100, was opened 2 Feb. 1885, by Sir George Macpherson Grant, of Ballindalloe, and Mrs. Dunbar-Brander, of Pitcairney.

Drainie is a parish on the shore of the North Sea, bounded east by Urquhart parish, west by Duffus and south by New Spynie; it is 5 miles from east to west, by 3½ from north to south, and is nearly devoid of hills. The parish church is 2 miles south-west of Lossiemouth.

Sir William Gordon Gordon-Cumming bart. of Altyre, Forbes, and Capt. C. B. Dunbar-Brander are the principal landowners. The area of the parish of Drainie comprises 6,348 acres; rateable value, landward £5,921, burghal £7,459; the population in 1891 was 3,922, against 3,991 in 1881. The population of Lossiemouth in 1891 was 3,486. There is a fine golf link.

FIFESHIRE.

FIFESHIRE is an extensive and populous maritime county in the east of Scotland; it is a peninsula, having the Firth of Forth on the south, the German Ocean on the east, and the Firth of Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire. Its western border is very irregular; commencing at Newburgh, on the Tay, it follows that of Perthshire south to near Auchtermachty, turning west as far as Damhead, whence it extends with Kinross south to the Leven and west nearly as far as Rumbling Brig, when the Perthshire border again crops up and is continued southwards to the Firth of Forth at Torry. The coast line is about 80 miles in extent; the breadth from its eastern apex to its western point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about 35 miles, and a line direct south from Newport on the Tay to Earlsferry is about 17 miles, or one from Newburgh to Kinghorn 20 miles; towards the west, however (from Burntisland to the verge of Kinross-shire), it is not more than 10 miles across; the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is fully 40 miles. The regularity of its figure is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. The area comprises 507 square miles, or 324,489 statute acres. In regard to size, this county is sixteenth, and in population the seventh. In 1891 the population was 89,135 males, 98,211 females, total, 187,346, against 171,931 in 1881; the inhabited houses being 40,636 in 1891 and 36,854 in 1881.

Early History.—At an early period the district of Fife included Kinross-shire, Clackmannanshire, and part of the counties of Perth and Surling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered.—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name "Fife" has much troubled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon the subject. The monkish chroniclers assume its derivation from one Fyfus Duffus, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the country essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity. Its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and towards the close of the 9th century the King of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the 11th century the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a succession of "thanes" of the title of Macduff; one of these, Duncun Macduff, was created Earl of Fife by Malcolm III., about 1057; and from this time till the family honours were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After a lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Kilbride, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The Duke of Fife, who was raised to a dukedom in 1889, is the lineal descendant of this person, and now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

Soil, Surface and Climate.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps, and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size; it is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V., who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soil, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of the country. Along the braes facing the Firth of Forth the composition of the land is for the most part excellent, being deep, rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin rock, and produces good crops of wheat, barley, oats, beans, turnips and potatoes; north from the waving line which bounds this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrews on the east to the western parts of the county, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor sand very wet clay; the tract of the "Howe of Fife," which comprises both sides of the river Eden as far as Cupar, is very productive; it consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay and gravel. The peninsula of Fife exhibits on its surface a series of vales, stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions; these vales, which from the undulating character of the country are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Firth of Forth or St. Andrew's Bay. Extending in a north-easterly direction to the Tay, the Ochil Hills penetrate the county, forming a ridge of moderate elevation, upon which many cattle and sheep are pastured. The other eminences of greatest altitude in Fife are Kellie Law, 800 feet; Norman's Law, 850; Largo Law, 965; East Lomond Hill, 1,470; and West Lomond Hill, 1,713 feet above the level of the sea. The climate is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south; the fogs, which formerly were continually exhalings from the lochs and marshes, have been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands, and the general spread of cultivation. Altogether Fife is a most important district; its agricultural prosperity and capabilities, its manufactures, its fisheries, and its mineral treasures, its bairns, seaports, and fine harbours, and its domestic and foreign commerce, form a combination of advantages that most favourably distinguish this shire.

The chief crops as appears from the "Agricultural Returns for Great Britain," 1898, were—Oats, 39,044 acres; barley or bere, 21,341; wheat, 10,450; beans, 1,255; rye, 1,145; the total corn crops being 73,278 acres; turnips and swedes, 27,479 acres; potatoes, 14,264; vetches or tares, 714; cabbage &c. 427; total corn crops, 40,237; hay, 31,653 acres; clover, sainfoin and grasses (not for hay), 41,425 acres; permanent pasture, 68,637 acres; bare fallow, 590 acres; small fruit, 166 acres. The total area of land and water is 324,489 acres, of which 8,987 is mountain and heath, 22,181 woods, and 1,949 plantations. The live stock in 1898 comprised 7,738 horses, used solely for agriculture and brood mares; unbroken horses, 2,189; cows and heifers in milk or in calf, 12,567; other cattle, 40,181; ewes kept for breeding, 39,301; other sheep, 88,276; sows kept for breeding, 1,046; other pigs, 4,001.

Produce and Manufactures.—The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. In 1897, 4,077,818 tons of coal were produced, valued at £1,172,373; 41,116 tons of fire-clay, value £6,168; brick clay (from quarries), 12,589 tons, value £2,187; 33,239 tons of iron ore, value £12,465; 78,173 tons of limestone; basalt, 83,691 tons. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. In 1897, 111,730 tons were raised. Marl is abundant in some places, so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles and pottery. From the possession of the above, and the exuberant produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it has a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kemback; pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places, with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple manufacture of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which many towns, villages and hamlets are busily employed without intermission; fine diapers and shirtings and the most elegant table linen are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy are the principal seats; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Iron founding and machine making are prosecuted with success at several places, and the manufacture of fishing nets, floor cloth, fire clay and terra cotta goods and linoleums and floor cloths are likewise branches of importance. The fisheries are also a source of wealth to this county, shoals of herrings during the spawning season visiting its coast, in the capturing and curing of which many of the population are employed. Turbot, soles, plaice, cod, haddock and ling are also found in abundance, the three first-named being taken in the shallow waters on the east coast. The fishing industry is centred at Kirkcaldy, under which place full particulars will be found.

Rivers and Railways.—Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of river, except the Eden and the Leven, which both abound with excellent salmon; the first rises in the Lomonds and flows through the town of Cupar, and debouches at Guardbridge in St. Andrew's Bay; the Leven rises from a loch of the same name in Kinross-shire, passes eastward through the centre part of the county and reaches the Firth of Forth at the town of Leven. Fife cannot boast of many lakes, and those that it does possess are but of small extent, the principal being Lndores, Killoquhar, Lochelly, Camilla and Fitty lochs. The North British railway, branching at Alloa to the east and north-east, enters the county with the former branch at Oakley and proceeds to Dunfermline, whence there are branches north to Saline, Cowdenbeath and Kilty, and thence into Kinross, and south to Inverkeithing and North Queensferry; the main line continues through Lochgelly to Thornton, where a branch leaves it north to Marckinch (with a branch to Leslie), Ladybank and Newburgh, where it turns westward to Moncrieff and Perth; from Thornton there are two branches southward, one turning to the west runs through Dysart and Kirkcaldy to Burntisland, and the other sweeping eastward passes through Wemyss and Buchhaven to Methil, opposite to Leven. The main line continues by Cameron Bridge, through the coast towns of Leven, Largo, Pittweem and Crail, to St. Andrews; from this latter city the line passes through Leuchars Junction to the Tay Bridge, for Dundee, with a loop line to Leuchars, Tayport, Newport and the Bridge;

the north-eastern branch after leaving Alloa passes through Kinross-shire and Auchtermuchty, and, crossing the Newburgh branch at Ladybank, continues through Cupar to Leuchars Junction, where it joins the Tay Bridge line.

Divisions, Representations &c.—This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute; in these two districts are comprehended the four sub-divisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith and May, in the Firth of Forth. Fifeshire comprises sixty-two parishes; it contains seventeen Royal burghs (out of the 70 contained in all Scotland), and of these thirteen are burghs with parliamentary representation; these, conjointly with Queensferry in Linlithgowshire and Stirling in Stirling-shire, return three members. The shire formerly returned but one representative, but is now separated into the Eastern and Western divisions, each of which sends a member. The parliamentary constituency for 1898 was: Eastern Division, 9,641; Western Division, 11,148. The population of the entire shire in 1881 was 171,931, and in 1891, 187,320, exhibiting an increase of 15,389. The valuation of the county for 1897-8 was £1,213,480.

ABERDOUR.

ABERDOUR is a parish and a village seaport and burgh of barony, on the north shore of the Firth of Forth, extending 3½ miles from north to south by the same in breadth, 12 miles north-west from Edinburgh (across the Firth of Forth), 9 south-west from Kirkcaldy, 8 south-east from Dunfermline and 3 west from Burntisland, and within the Parliamentary division of West Fife. There is a station here on the North British railway, opened in 1890, and connecting Inverkeithing and Burntisland. Burntisland parish bounds it on the east, Auchentoul and Beath on the north and Dalgetty on the west. The small island of Inch-Colm belongs to the parish. A small ridge of hills runs from east to west. Aberdour is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged in the 12th century to the family of Eupont, from whom it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, afterwards to the Douglases, one of whom, in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, and whose castle, which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident in 1745, while occupied by a detachment of troops. The Mortimers appear to have bestowed Wester Aberdour upon the Abbey of Inch-Colm, and it was made a burgh of barony under the abbot in 1500; Easter Aberdour, which was retained by the family, being made a burgh of barony in 1643. Aberdour is a place of summer resort for the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing grounds here, and a warm aspect. Ready access is obtained by steam vessels and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore. The ruins of the church, dating from before 1178, lie to the south-east of the castle. In the village are Established, Free and Episcopal churches; there are also two board schools in the parish. The island of Inch-Colm lies in the mid-channel of the Firth of Forth, about 2 miles south of Aberdour, and contains the extensive remains of an Augustinian Abbey, founded about 1123, by Alexander I.; the buildings, of grey stone, consist of the ruins of the octagonal Chapter House, with groined roof and a monument room above it, half of the Lady Chapel, a short massive square tower, and some remains of domestic buildings and of a small square chapel supposed to be the original cell first founded in the island. The hamlet of Donibristle Colliery and the fine policies of Donibristle Park, a seat of the Earl of Moray, lie to the west (the house being in the adjoining parish of Dalgetty); part of Fordel village is also in this parish. The Earl of Moray, the Earl of Morton, Charles Grey Wotherspoon esq. and Patrick Hill Normand esq. are the principal landowners. The area comprises 5,974 acres; rateable value, £18,500; the population in 1891 was 1,977, and in 1881, 1,736; these figures included 748 persons in the burgh of Aberdour in 1891, and 610 in 1881, and 618

persons in the hamlet of Donibristle Colliery in 1891, and 502 in 1881.

ANSTRUTHER,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ANSTRUTHER EASTER AND ANSTRUTHER WESTER.

ANSTRUTHER is a seaport on the north shore of the Firth of Forth, about 20 miles north-east of Kirkcaldy, 10 by road and 15 by rail from St. Andrews, and is composed of the royal and parliamentary burghs of Anstruther Wester and Anstruther Easter, together with the seaward portion of the royal and parliamentary burgh of Kilkenny; this portion, which constitutes a full half of the port and contains the harbour, is principally composed of the fishing village of Cellardyke or Nether Kilkenny, which, though really a suburb of Anstruther Easter, is itself in Kilkenny parish and burgh. The two Anstruthers are separate royal burghs and civil parishes, the dividing line being the small Dreef Burn. The port is the market town for the surrounding district, and there is a station here on the Thornton Junction, Leven and St. Andrews section of the North British railway. The town is lighted with gas by a private company. This place was of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; fish curing is the staple trade. There are now (1899) about 150 boats from 50 feet long, as well as 13 steam line fishing vessels, 88 feet keel. The harbour has been enlarged at a cost to the united burghs of about £80,000; the present harbours (inner and outer) give a space of 13½ acres, and will hold 500 fishing boats, and the inner harbour affords about 13 feet of water at full spring tide. In addition to fish curing, a considerable amount of business is done in the exporting of potatoes &c. the refining of cod liver oil, and the manufacture and the importing of ice, of fishing gear, &c. There are branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Ltd., and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, in the town.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER is a royal burgh and parish (included in the Port of Anstruther), bounded on the south by the Firth of Forth, west by Wester Anstruther and north and east by Kilkenny; the burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and six other councillors, elected under the Scotch Burgh Reform Act. A sheriff's small debt court is held here quarterly for the parishes of Anstruther Easter and Wester, Elie, Kilkenny, Kilkenny, Newburn, Pittenweem, St. Monance and Crail. A weekly corn market is held on Friday. This burgh, together with St. Andrews, Cupar, Crail, Kilkenny, Anstruther Wester and Pittenweem, forms the St. Andrew's parliamentary district, constituted under the Reform Act of 1832, and returning one member. Dr. Thos. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and Professor William Tennant F.R.S., linguist and poet, and author of "Anster Fair, and Professor Goodsir, of Edinburgh University, were all natives of this place. There is an Established church, a Free church, called "Chalmers' Memorial Church," erected at a cost of nearly £10,000, a United Presbyterian church, and Evangelical Union and Baptist chapels. The Manse of the Established church dates from 1590. The chief educational establishment here is the Waid Academy, opened September 6th, 1886, and endowed mainly from funds mortified by Andrew Waid, Lient. R.N. a native of Anstruther Easter, who died in 1803. By his will, dated 1800, he founded the building as an academy for orphan boys and seamen's boys in indigent circumstances, and for their maintenance, clothing and such education as would instruct them in the great principles of the Christian religion, and fit them for serving in the British Navy with reputation; the amount of the trust estate at his death was about £5,000, but at the time of the transfer to the governors of the academy, it had increased to about £15,000, and it is administered under a scheme promoted by the Trustees and by the School Board of Anstruther Easter and approved by the commissioners under the Education Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882, and sanctioned by Order in Council, August 11th, 1884; Stephen Williamson esq. of Glenogil, M.P. for the St. Andrew's district, 1880-5 has contributed £1,000 towards the funds: the school, which is built of stone, with a tower in the centre, has a fine commanding appearance.

William Baird esq. of Elie, is the principal landowner for Anstruther Easter, the area of which is 25 acres; rateable value, £3,501; the population in 1891 was 1,033, and in 1881, 1,248.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, included in the Port of Anstruther, which adjoins Anstruther Easter, is also a parish and royal burgh, and holds its charter of incorporation from James IV. in 1587. A bridge connects the two burghs. It is bounded on the north and west by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, and on the east by Anstruther Easter and Pittenweem; in the small debt court district of Anstruther. This burgh was disfranchised in 1853, when three managers were appointed by the court of session. In 1869 it again recovered its municipal status, and is now governed by a chief magistrate, two bailies, a treasurer and six other councillors. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last 40 years; it is now supplied with water, and the streets have been lighted and drained.

Walter D. Irvine esq. of Grangemuir, and Sir Ralph W. Anstruther bart. of Balcaskie, are the principal landowners of Anstruther Wester, the area of which comprises 911 acres; rateable value, £4,919; the population in 1891 was 593, and in 1881, 673.
